From M. S. Mason, Rogersville, Mo., June 4: "Since writing, I have visited regular appointments, and found everything doing nicely. I was at Mastus, in Cedar County, last Lord's day, and will be at Crisp, Dade County, next Lord's day. Brother Packer, whom I mentioned in a previous correspondence, preached at Flint Hill on last Lord's day. I would advise jealous preachers not to have Brother Packer to go into communities where they preach. The brethren are too likely to pull feathers out of their (the preachers') caps and put in his. I will begin my protracted meeting work on July 1, to continue till January 1, 1919, if the Lord wills, Let us all pray and work together for a harvest of souls."

From R. E. L. Taylor, Decherd, Tenn., June 6: "It has been some time since I reported my meetings. I preached on the fourth Lord's-day night in April at Center Grove, and on Monday and Tuesday nights. I baptized one man, Missionary Baptist. I preached a few nights at Oak Grove, in Franklin County, beginning on the first Lord's day in May. One was baptized. I preached on the second Lord's day in May at Fairview Schoolhouse. One was baptized. On the third Lord's day I began at Dunlap, in Sequatchie County, and continued two weeks. Two were baptized, one from the Baptists who was satisfied with his baptism took his stand with us, and one confessed his On Monday night following I was at Bethel. One was baptized. On Wednesday night I was at Daus. E. G. Collins was with me at Dunlap, also at Bethel and Daus. He is a good singer as well as a good worker."

From T. F. Colvin, 2536 Eleventh Street, N. W., Washington, D. C., June 12: "With almost doubled membership since the war began, the work here is progressing nicely. E. E. Joynes, of Philadelphia, Pa., preached for us last Sunday. He is a faithful and zealous missionary in this Eastern field. Six days per week he is engaged in clerical work, and every Sunday finds him preaching somewhere. The Masonic Hall, Eighth and F Streets, N. E., continues to be our meeting place, and Christians coming here should bring this address with them, as it will enable them to find the church without delay and confusion. having Christian friends coming here should keep in touch with them until they enlist with the congregation here. A good letter from home has more persuading power than strangers in a distant city. With increased membership, the congregation is about strong enough to support a preacher, and there is a general call for one. I would like to correspond with a preaching brother who could take up the work here relative to employment. If you cannot come, please write me of some one who can; your kindness will be appreciated. We have some as fine young people here as can be met anywhere, and it affords pleasure to know that they continue to come."

From T. W. Phillips: "Phænix is the capital of the baby State—Arizona. The meeting included four Sundays, closing on the first Sunday night in June. Fifteen precious souls confessed faith in the Lord and were baptized in his name for the remission of sins, and more than that number were otherwise added to the fellowship of the church of Christ on the corner of Eleventh and Grand Avenue. was indeed a great meeting. I am now in a fine meeting at Lubbock, Texas, and am making my home with Brother Liff. Sanders. The Lubbock church is one of the best in the State of Texas. Liff. Sanders has lived here for eighteen years and labored in word and doctrine with these brethren. He is loved by all the truly faithful ones, and is, Indeed, one of the strongest preachers in Texas. My work for the next few weeks is as follows: I go from here to Osceola, Hill County, Texas, to include the fifth Sunday in June and the first Sunday in July; then to Troupe. where Isaac Tackett is minister, to include the second and third Sundays in July; then to Hallville for the annual camp meeting, to include the fourth Sunday in July and the first Sunday in August; thence to Charley and Burk-burnett, which runs me up into September. The work is great and more than I am able to do—that is, my calls are more than I can fill."

47,000,000 People Give $170,000,000 to the Red Cross.

BY J. C. M'Q.

Forty-seven million people, nearly one-half the population of the United States, gave $170,000,000 in the last Red-Cross drive. The encouraging feature about this is that all classes of people gave. The poor as well as the rich helped to donate this amount. This war is awaking our people from their selfishness, and they are learning to give as never before. Nashville's quota for the last drive was $150,000. She gave $375,000. Nashville has given far more than her quota in every call made upon her.

I have been asked a number of times if it were unseriptural for Christians to support and encourage the Red-Cross work. Some have said that they would cheerfully aid the Red Cross, provided they could do it through the church; but if not that way, that they preferred not to help. No one doubts the scripturalness of doing this humane work, authorized and managed by the government, through the church. Brother Elam gives us a timely article urging the churches to heartily support this work, but also holding out the view that individual Christians can and should contribute to the support of the Red Cross. It is not a mistake to encourage people to give through the church of the Lord Jesus Christ, but it is a sin to contend that Christians cannot give as individuals, and do it in the name, by the authority, of the Christ. Such contention binds Christians where Christ has not bound them, for the Holy Spirit authorizes individual Christian giving as well as giving through the treasury of the church. The man who leads people to give only through the church treasury rejects the wisdom of God that requires individual Christian giving and living. Such teachers and leaders are creating confusion and hindering the gifts of some. "And if the blind guide the blind, both shall fall into a pit." (Matt. 15: 14.)

In the light of the Bible, it is hard to conceive just how any one can conclude that individual giving in the name of Christ is without reward. Christ says: "And whosoever shall give to drink unto one of these little ones a cup of cold water only, in the name of a disciple, verily I say unto you he shall in no wise lose his reward." (Matt. 10: 42.) Little acts of love and deeds of kindness drive away the clouds and brighten the whole world. How dreary and dark would the world be if we could not give and receive sympathy! A tender, affectionate word spoken in the name of Christ is not in vain.

It should be noted that the giving of the cup of cold water was not through the church treasury, but in the name of a disciple. Our eternal destiny depends on our daily living. If we have fed the starving and warmed the cold, it will be glorious with us at the judgment. How inexpressibly sweet and precious are Christ's words to those who have relieved the suffering and dying: "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of these my brethren, even these least, ye did it unto me!" To those who have fed the hungry and who have ministered to the famishing and dying, Christ will give the glories, raptures, and spiendors of heaven.

Our standing before God and in the church depends on our individual efforts and devotion to the truth. The Holy Spirit, through Paul, tells us the character of a widow that shall be enrolled for the church to support. Read carefully: "Let none be enrolled as a widow under threescore years old, having been the wife of one man, well reported of for good works; if she hath brought up children, if she hath used hospitality to strangers, if she hath washed the saints' feet, if she hath relieved the afflicted, If she hath diligently followed every good work. . . . If any woman that believeth hath widows, let her relieve them, and let not the church be burdened; that it may relieve them that are widows indeed." (1 Tim. 5: 9-16.) Here it is made the duty of the Christian woman who has widows to relieve them and not to burden the church with their support. The widow was not to be enrolled unless she had relieved the afflicted. This was her individual work, something demanded of her as an individual. The Christian who feeds the starving, gives the thirsty to drink, and clothes the cold is glorifying God through the church, and such devotion will influence people to praise God in all assemblies where Christ is preached.

Paul remembered Onesiphorus in his prayers because of his repeated ministrations unto him. He entreats: "The Lord grant mercy unto the house of Onesiphorous: for he oft refreshed me, and was not ashamed of my chain; but, when he was in Rome, he sought me diligently, and found me (the Lord grant unto him to find mercy of the Lord in that day); and in how many things he ministered at Ephesus, thou knowest very well." (2 Tim. 1: 16-18.) If the Spirit, through Paul, thus commends the individual ministrations of Onesiphorus, will not the same Spirit commend our individual sacrifices for the saving of lives? Most assuredly he will. For the same reason Paul speaks in words of approval of Phæbe's ministrations to many and also to himself: "I commend unto you Phæbe our sister, who is a servant of the church that is at Cenchrea: that ye receive her in the Lord, worthi y of the saints, and that ye assist her in whatsoever matter she may have need of you: for she herself also hath been a helper of many, and of mine own self." (Rom. 16: 1, 2.)

It is not always convenient to gain access to the church treasury. Suffering and affliction demand immediate help. A man may die of his wounds while we are getting in touch with the church treasury. The Christian who relieves suffering is not supplanting the church, but is establishing it more firmly. The Christian who uses the Red Cross to forward help to the suffering, wounded, and dying is adding to the glory of the church instead of detracting from it. He is simply using the means at his disposal to do the work that God requires him to do. Paul acted on the same principle when he traveled on ships in order that he might preach the gospel to those who were calling for help. As God controlled the winds to bring him at the right time to the desired destination, so he may govern the elements to render our help to the wounded and afflicted more effective. God nowhere tells a Christian to wait for a church treasury to relieve distresses, famines, and afflictions. One Christian alone in a place is the church there. Jesus, in giving us the example of the good Samaritan, teaches Christians to do good whenever the opportunity presents itself. The Samaritan was not commanded to wait to call the church together. Humanity, mercy, and goodness all pleaded help right now. The poor, wounded man will die if help is delayed for a church treasury. The rich man did not care for Lazarus. He passed by unheeded his calls for food and relief. The duty was his. He could not unload on the church or others. The child of God has an individual responsibility. He may not heed the cries for help, but in the next world his cries for mercy will go unheeded. The best way I know to advance the church of Christ is to let your light shine as a Christian, to lead a holy life of self-denial, to meet cheerfully the demands for help that come to you, and to have fellowship with the church in every good work.

How the Church Can Help the Sick and Wounded Through the Red Cross.

BY E. A. E.

Everybody understands that the work of the Red Cross is to nurse the sick and wounded and to care for the suffering in every way on fields of battle and elsewhere.

Everybody knows that it is right to feed the hungry, clothe the naked, administer to the sick, help the helpless, and comfort the sad and sorrowful. To do this in the name of Christ is to feed, clothe, and visit him and to administer to him. All this, when so done, he receives as service to himself.

Whatever Christians do, in word or deed, they must do all in the name of Christ.

Without exception, all Christians desire to help the variously afflicted and suffering of all nations of earth—the starving, the naked, the sick and wounded, the widows, the homeless, and the poor and pitiful and helpless babes crying for bread. But they want to help in the name of Christ and so as to give God the glory through the church. How can this be done?

One may help the poor, needy, sick, and distressed as an individual in different ways through the week, not letting one hand know what the other hand does, as a Christian and, as we shall learn later, as the church. As Christians have opportunity they are commanded to "do good toward all men, and especially toward them that are of the household of the faith." (Gal. 6: 10.) Christians work as the church in all such individual service.

The United States mail service is a complete national organization or system through which all citizens may transact business, a channel through which all mail is conveyed to its destination—through which the church sends contributions to various quarters of the earth for various righteous purposes. To use this department of the government for this purpose is none the less the church doing the work. So the Red Cross, if I do not misunderstand its purpose, is a national organization, with Woodrow Wilson president, or a channel through which the government guarantees a safe passage of all funds contributed to the relief of the suffering, and, as we shall see presently, the safe passage of the funds to the place and for the special purpose for which it has been contributed. The Red Cross is neither a political nor denominational or religious institution—that is, it is in the interest of no political party or religious denomination. Then, can we not use the Red Cross as such a channel as we use the post-office department?

Looking at it thus, we at my home have been cheerfully contributing all along through the Red Cross to the relief of the suffering. We have tried to do so quietly and in the spirit of Christ, and hence without show and display. Thousands of church members have done the same.

Yet if this work can be done any more directly through the church and as the church, then let it be so done. Thinking that it can be so done to the satisfaction of all, and knowing that the church should do all in its power to help the suffering and wounded and distressed, I presented the matter first to Mr S. W. McGill, and he most kindly placed it before Mr. Guy E. Snavely, of Atlanta, Ga. I now have the following encouraging and cheerful communication from Mr. Snavely to present:

Atlanta, Ga., May 31, 1918.—Rev. E. A. Elam, Lebanon, Tenn.—Dear Mr. Elam: Mr. S. W. McGill, recently on our staff on the war fund drive for Tennessee, states that your church would like to make Red Cross contributions as a church. As we have every county in our division covered by Red Cross chapters, the only way for your church to do would be to contribute to the chapter in whose jurisdiction it may be and receive a receipt therefor. These receipts may be sent to some one of your central offices where a compilation may be made of the total amount collected for the Red Cross through your churches.

If you desire to support the expenses of a hospital bed, or something like that, in a ward in France, we shall be glad to receive donations here and send them as you desire. With cordial appreciation of your desire to help the great cause of the Red Cross, I am

Very sincerely yours,

Director, Bureau of Development, Southern Division, A. R. C.

This communication offers two ways in which the church as such can contribute to this work and preserve its identity as the church. (1) The church as a whole, or congregation, can make the contribution "to the chapter in whose jurisdiction it may be and receive a receipt;" and, as Mr. Snavely kindly points out, the whole amount contributed by all congregations in this way can be kept as given by the church. (2) One congregation, or several together, can support "a hospital bed, or something like that, in a ward in France," and the contribution be sent directly to the place intended and for the purpose for which made. Why cannot one congregation undertake to support continually "a hospital bed?" Or if one congregation is not able to do so much, let two or four cooperate to support "a hospital bed." Then the money goes directly from the church to the good work for which it was contributed. I shall be able shortly to report the amount necessary to support "a hospital bed." Churches by cooperation can support a hospital itself and can help to furnish the nurses.

I know I voice the sentiment of the editors of this paper when I say the Gospel Advocate will be glad to assist any church and all churches in thus working. I think, too, the churches will be glad to do this work in this way.

Again, I say I am grateful that our great government respects the consciences and various ways of work of religious people and guarantees religious liberty to all.

We shall be pleased to know what congregations can do in this way.

Fruits of Speculative Teaching in Louisville.

The following letter is self-explanatory:

Louisville, Ky., June 12, 1918.—Dear Brother Lipscomb: In response to your suggestion, kindly made after your recent ineffectual effort to bring about a reconciliation among the members of the Highland church of Christ, we, the undersigned, send you a statement of facts embracing the principal events preceding and culminating in the withdrawal from us by a part of the church. We are painfully sensible of our imperfections and cheerfully acknowledge them on all proper occasions; but if we have uttered a word or done a deed that makes us unworthy of the fellowship of Christians, or that justifies the church's action in withdrawing that fellowship from us, we are wholly unconscious of it, and we respectfully deny that any such word or deed can be justly alleged against us. Just as the committee which was called together at your request and was rigidly questioned by you proved itself unable to specify a single thing that we had said or done to justify the church's withdrawal from us, so we here unhesitatingly maintain that any one else would be unable to find any such thing in the entire record; and, as the matter has now come before the public and we are called upon to speak, we deem it proper, and that both truth and righteousness demand, that we make known the facts.

In the spring and summer of 1915 certain preachers, led Brother R. H. Boll, began to publicly press and feature their speculative theories on unfulfilled prophecy, and Brother E. L. Jorgenson promptly became a most ardent advocate of these views. For a year or two before attempting to publicly propagate these views, the leader of them had been privately inculcating them in the minds of such young preachers as he could induce to attend some classes he was teaching. When these false and absurd theories first made their appearance in the Highland Church in the teaching of Brother Jorgenson, some of us could not conscientiously lend them our support, and he was kindly advised of the fact and was warned that to persist in pressing such theories would, for that very reason, cause trouble in the church. These entreaties were coolly ig-Then, in 1915, when the time came for action on his annual resignation, we made no open opposition, although it was known that we opposed him, and we did not join in the vote for his recall. Following this, early in 1916, a paper, called "Word and Work," a part of the propaganda of this coterie, was moved from New Orleans to Louisville to aid in forwarding this factious movement; and, significantly enough, Brother R. H. Boll, at the same time, became its editor in chief, and Brother Jorgenson became its associate editor. True to the evident purpose of its change of locality and editorship, this magazine has persistently pressed these factious teachings in the face of the known fact that they were disturbing the unity and peace of the church, and they have since caused as complete a division in the church in Louisville, as far as it has gone, as was ever caused by pressing the organ and the

In the fall of 1916, when Brother Jorgenson presented his annual resignation, seventeen members actively opposed him and voted publicly to accept it, presenting a written statement setting forth conscientious reasons why they could not support him; but their protest was ignored, and, being recalled by a majority, he continued to stay. Again, in 1917, when his annual resignation was voted on, twenty-three members voted openly against his recall, this time not only opposing him on doctrinal grounds, but because of his manifest insincerity and autocratic course, on personal grounds as well; but again the members yielded to majority rule, and, strange to say, Brother Jorgenson still continued to stay—and this, too, in the face of the fact that those opposing him at the last two elections include all the charter members of the church (5), all the trustees (3), three of the brethren who preside at the Lord's table, and nine of the oldest members in point of years of attendance.

When we who could not conscientiously support Brother Jorgenson endeavored to induce the church, both in 1916 and 1917, to accept his annual resignation, it devolved on us to make the public statements both for ourselves and for the others who stood with us, setting forth the reasons for a change in our leader. This made both of us more unpopular with Brother Jorgenson than any of the others who opposed his recall; and we believe that he deliberately conceived and executed an unprincipled political scheme to get rid of the two members who he believed stood, more so than the others, in the way of the success of his plan to hold the Highland Church for the special purpose of using it to propagate and press his peculiar views on unfulfilled prophecy. This view is confirmed by the fact that the final action of withdrawal, contemplated by his scheme, embraced nobody but us two, although many others in the church not only stood with us and encouraged us in all we did, but did the same things themselves. Both common sense and justice ask, if some should be withdrawn from because of pursuing a given course, why not withdraw from all others who pursue the same course? The answer to this question and the reason for the difference here is that the scheme in process of execution in this case did not contemplate justice, but getting rid of men who stood in the way.

This scheme to get rid of those who had the temerity to oppose him was based largely on the results hoped to be obtained by sending out a letter under date of March 26, 1918, purporting to come from the "Membership Committee" of the church, but which was actually written by Brother Jorgenson himself and was sent to a list of members prepared by him without either knowledge or consent of a single other member of the so-called "Membership Committee." This letter was sent under the pretext of clearing the membership roll for a new directory, and, under the existing circumstances, it was extremely offensive to those members opposed to him, and a joint reply was prepared for presentation to the regular monthly business meeting of the church on April 7, 1918. Though unusual for the preacher of a church to preside over its business meetings, Brother Jorgenson was chairman of this meeting, as he had also been of the business meeting the month before. When a brother arose to present the reply prepared by the twenty members who were offended by the letter they had received, Brother Jorgenson, in that autocratic spirit and manner which have marked his course throughout, ruled that no reply could be made to the church (though the letter sent to us was sent as coming from the church); but that all replies must be sent to the committee of which he was chairman. Two brethren arose to appeal from such an unjust, unparliamentary, and unchristian ruling, but Brother Jorgenson refused nize either of them and called for a motion to adjourn. One of his active supporters immediately moved to adjourn, another seconded the motion, and the majority forced an adjournment

Having failed, through the autocratic course of Brother Jorgenson, to get our reply to the members of the church, we then had it printed in the form of a booklet, under the title, "Autocracy versus Christianity in the Highlands," and mailed it to them, with a statement signed by R. O. Rubel, M. S. Jean, E. F. Tucker, and C. A. Taylor, giving a "synopsis of facts" showing what has been going on in the Highland Church during the past three years.

Promptly after Brother Jorgenson refused to permit the reading of our reply at the business meeting, he arranged, as the next step in the execution of his scheme, for committees to visit both of us. Brother Jorgenson himself being on every committee visiting R. O. Rubel, and he was also a member of, and acted as spokesman for, the committee that visited both of us the night before their action of withdrawal was taken.

Thursday, May 16, being prayer-meeting night, we attended services with no idea that any such action as was taken would be taken in our case that night, though we thought it possible that the committee that met us the previous night might make its report and that we might be notified when to appear before the church and make our However, there was no prayer meeting, but a defense. business meeting was in session, with Brother Jorgenson in the chair. The clerk presented a written report from the committee that visited us, which was to the effect that we had no apology to make for the course we had been pursuing. Brother Don Carlos Janes, an ardent supporter of Brother Jorgenson, moved that the church withdraw from us, charging us with being "factionists." Another one of Brother Jorgenson's supporters seconded the motion, and we were asked if we had anything to say. We were not prepared, on the spur of the moment, to make our defense before the church against the charge of being "factionists," and so requested time to prepare our defense, and that action on the motion be postponed to another meeting a day or two later. This reasonable and in every way proper request was coldly refused us. Brother A. Y. Malcomson, a visiting brother from Detroit, Mich., being in the city on business and having heard that it was prayermeeting night with the Highland Church, had come to the meeting: and seeing the evident disposition to ride over us without even granting us a proper hearing in answer to the charges against us, he arose and made an earnest and brotherly appeal in our behalf and pleaded, in the name or simple justice and fairness, to give us time to prepare our answer to the charges made against us; but he, too, was coldly turned down, some of the members speaking out loud in a most disorderly way and treating his appeal with marked disrespect, and we were informed that we would have no other opportunity to make our defense except to do so then and there. We were not prepared to do this at once and declined to attempt it, again requesting a short ielay until we could prepare our answer. But such fairness and justice, recognized and acted on in all courts of justice throughout the civilized world, had no place in the scheme then in process of execution, and again our request was ruthlessly refused, and a vote on Brother Janes' motion was called for and taken and a majority voted to withdraw from us. The reader should here be informed that only three of the members present and voting to with-(Brethren Jorgenson, Don Carlos Janes, and Logsdon) had ever heard one word of our defense, and of course they could not vote intelligently; but it seems that neither intelligent voting nor any other just thing had any place in the scheme that had been conceived and was being carried cut. The meeting was most disorderly, and after voting on the motion to withdraw it broke up in utter confusion without even a prayer of dismissal! As soon as the unjust action of that Thursday night became known, many members who were not present when the action was taken promptly notified the Highland congregation that they could no longer be identified with such a church and requested that their names be withdrawn from the church roll. Between thirty-five and forty have now left the congregation and worship with us in a public hall which we have rented.

The activities of Brother Don Carlos Janes, as unwise as they have been persistent, in encouraging and upholding Brother Jorgenson both in his false teaching and in his autocratic course, have aided materially in that direction and are largely responsible for the unfortunate condition in the Highland Church. He has been particularly active in encouraging the scheme to bring about our excommunication, a part of his course being to call us "disorderly" and then turn to the Scriptures and read where we are commanded to withdraw from the "disorderly." We do not doubt that among those voting to withdraw from us there are good members who were sincere in their action and were led, by Brethren Jorgenson and Janes, to really think they were obeying the Scriptures.

As was carefully explained to you when you were here, we respectfully deny the charge that we are "factionists" or that we have been in any other way "disorderly." The head and front of our offending is that, in common with many of the other members, we have opposed, and still oppose, the false teaching and the autocratic course and methods of Brother Jorgenson, and we sincerely deplore the unhappy condition.

We feel glad and grateful to add that Brother L. T. Logsdon, a noble man and one of the best men in the church and a member of the committee which visited us, having been induced to vote for withdrawal from us, came to us a few days after the church's action, and in a most magnanimous and Christian way acknowledged that he had done wrong in taking such action against us. With equal frankness he said we had done things which he did not approve at the time and did not yet approve, but that they were not of a character to justify the action taken against us; and that while, for the moment, he thought he was doing right in voting for withdrawal from us, yet immediately after casting his vote he realized that he had done us a great wrong, and that, having been unable to rest over the matter since it occurred, he had come to undo, as far as possible, what he had done. Of course, we accepted his magnanimous apology and were glad to forgive him. We hope and pray that the others may repent R. O. RUBEL, SR. C. A. TAYLOR. of their act. Yours fraternally,

Several weeks ago the attention of the Gospel Advocate was called to the very sad and hurtful division in, the Highland Church at Louisville, Ky., described in the above letter. Being more anxious to reconcile than to expose, and in order that I might become better acquainted with the circumstances which have created this division, and acting upon the suggestion of Brother E. L. Jorgenson, its minister, that I might say or do something that would lead to a better understanding, and upon the assurance from Brother Jorgenson that he was willing to do his part, I made a trip to Louisville and consulted freely with representatives from both sides. It was stated to me at the outset that Brother R. O. Rubel and Brother C. A. Taylor had been withdrawn from on the charge of "factious conduct." From a long and intimate acquaintance with these two brethren during my stay in Louisville, I had found them to be honest, upright men, true to conviction, and so far from being factions in their disposition, were just the opposite. I therefore asked the pertinent question: "Of what did their factious conduct consist?" During two sessions of several hours each this question was pressed, with no satisfactory answer. They were repeatedly called upon to name or specify a single thing done by these brethren that makes them unworthy of Christian fellowship, but they failed to specify any such thing. I was more than ever convinced that the chief offense committed by these two brethren in the eves of those who had withdrawn from them had been their conscientious and steadfast objection to certain speculative teachings on unfulfilled prophecies as featured by Brother Jorgenson. After hearing his testimony and noting the willingness of Taylor and Rubel to settle any little personal differences where the question of doctrine was not involved, it was plain to me that the withdrawal action had been wholly unjust and unscriptural and that justice demanded it should be rescinded. This I urged to

The situation as I found it stands as follows:

- (1) About thirty-five members object to Brother Jorgenson on account of his teachings and cannot conscientiously indorse or support him. This number includes all the charter members of the church (men and women who established the work and procured the church property), all the trustees, three of the brethren who preside at the Lord's table, and nine of the oldest members in point of years of attendance. These members have borne patiently with the situation for the space of three years, making the best of it, in the hope that Brother Jorgenson would eventually leave for the sake of peace and harmony in the church.
- (2) Brother Jorgenson, notwithstanding the conscientious objections of these brethren, persisted in remaining, when he must have known that his course would only serve to widen the breach and perpetuate the division in the church.

In view of this sad situation, I further urged that the only possible remedy would be for Brother Jorgenson to sever his connection as minister for the congregation. He expressed a willingness to do this, provided it met the approval of the majority who voted for his retention. Irrespective of what either the majority or the minority thinks, Brother Jorgenson should do his duty. Since he knew he had the majority with him, his attitude is equivalent to saying, "I will not do it." It occurs to me that not only a love for souls and a sincere desire for peace and harmony, but proper self-respect and a proper regard for one's future usefulness, would have prompted a different course.

It is fair to state that Brother Jorgenson proposed as a unity basis that in the future he would teach on the controverted points only that for which he could give his authority in the words of the Bible. This is exactly what Brother Jorgenson claims to have done in the past, but brethren good and true and competent to judge know that what he claims to have found in the Bible on these points are his own deductions and opinions, which the word of God demands should be held as private property. What assurance, therefore, have they that Brother Jorgenson would change his manner of preaching? To all candid minds this proposed unity basis would leave the matter in the same condition that caused all the trouble.

It is not pleasant, by any means, to comment upon this unfortunate affair, and we would not do so did we not feel that duty demands a defense of the innocent and a warning to the churches concerning these speculative doctrines. It has been my observation that in all the churches where these peculiar doctrines have been featured ill feeling and alienation among brethren have resulted.

Article 14.

Enter Into the Play Spirit of Your Boys and Girls; Teach Them that Sometimes Work Can Be Made Into Play.

The play instinct is inborn in all children the world over. It is nature's own method for developing the senses, the muscles, and all bodily growth. Play is even more than this: it is the outlet of expression of the child's inner life. Many faults, as well as virtues, may be discovered while watching children at play. Perhaps a mother will find that her child is selfish or rude, and it is easy to discover a generous disposition and a good temper in the course of a play hour.

Games are the expression of the play spirit, and toys are the instruments necessary for the expression of this activity of child life. As a farmer needs garden tools to do his work, so a child needs toys for his play, or work, which play really is to him; and if toys are not provided readymade, he will invent them, in order to be able to express his play spirit.

All play depends upon the physical condition of the child. A normal, healthy child plays all the time, is easily interested in his toys, and as he grows older invents games with them. If a child plays but little, cannot easily be interested in his toys, will not play alone, and is cross, look first to his physical condition, then begin a course of training, or directed play. Start with a suggestion, "Why not build a high steeple?" or, "Make mother a train of cars with your blocks." Often, especially in the case of an only child, if mother can enter into the play spirit and play hide and seek, or march and sing, or even build with the blocks, it is such a treat, and often a real help in promoting a readiness to play alone when mother must go back to her work

Almost every child wants to help mother sweep, dust, make beds, wipe the silver, or run errands. Make play out of the work, and yet let the little one feel he is really doing something. With tiny babies too little even to walk, a mother can make play out of work. Have the high chair or the bassinet or carriage in the room where you are working and keep baby busy with toys. For instance, if you are working in the kitchen, let the baby have a big spoon, clothespins, tin covers, or anything new and safe; but always keep these things for the kitchen. If he is allowed to have them all the time, they soon lose their interest and he becomes restless and unhappy.

A sense of newness even with old toys makes them desirable to a child. Children need change and variety, because their power of concentration is not fully developed. This is the plan I use with success with my own little girl: Her box of dominoes, her nest of blocks, and her box of building blocks (composed of sixteen cubes), I keep on a shelf in a closet out of sight. I also keep some picture books and toys out of sight. Then when the time comes, as it does so many times a day, when Little Girl says, "What I do now, muvver?" I go to the closet for a surprise. If I give her the blocks, it is always with a suggestion for making something with them. She now comes to me and asks for "a s'prise, muvver." When she tires of the blocks, I have her pick them all up, ready to put away, before she can have another "surprise." Sometimes, days at a time, she does not ask for a surprise, and then when I do bring out the dominoes, for instance, she is as delighted as if they were brand-new. Her dolls

I separate in groups. If she has four, I put away two, and at the end of a week I bring out these two and put away the two she has been playing with. If you follow this plan with all toys, grouping them and keeping one set put away, you will always keep the little ones interested and happy. 0 0 0

Near the Dividing Line.

BY J. C. ORSBURN.

"Where shall we go to work to-day?"
I heard the devil's angels say. "What kind of help our work best suits? What kind of men for our recruits? What shall we tell them you will pay For good, skilled laborers per day?

"Just keep near the dividing line, Where it's hard to tell the Lord's from mine." I heard the crafty devil say.

"Don't mention me, don't mention pay, Just lead them gently on by treats-Dance, idleness, and passing sweets; For serve me well, I give my word, They who are not strong for the Lord. You've heard the Lord say, have you not, He would that they were cold or hot? His meaning was that the lukewarm Were doing him and his cause much harm. The best servant I ever had Did nothing very good or bad; His plus and minus signs he wrought In such a way they equaled naught, When summing up what he had done In net results for the Holy One. Just keep near the dividing line, Where it's hard to tell the Lord's from mine; Don't mention me, don't mention pay, We'll take that up some future day, $ $ $ Law Inexorable.

The unpreventable fraction of disease is not as great as one might suppose; it is steadily growing less. While there are ninety causes of mortality, seven only are responsible for more than half of the shortening of life. We bring these wees upon ourselves by disobeying the laws of God. He does not maliciously thrust them upon us. We should live out a disease-free life for something like one hundred and fifty years, and finally die from the decline of our vital powers.-Dr. Daniel Morton, in Methodist Re-D D D

A Den of Thieves.

BY J. J. VANHOUTIN.

Jesus found the house of prayer in a very filthy, deplorable state. I do not claim that oxen and sheep were kept in there for sale, but men had established their offices in there, and were selling stock and exchanging money at a discount in place of praying and worshiping God in the "beauty of holiness." The Lord required the Jews to bring their ox or sheep from their home farm, but they concluded it would be so much easier for them to sell the ox and carry the money than it would be to drive the ox so far, as they could buy one after they got there. Different nations had different money from the Jerusalem standard, and it would not pass on the same ratio; so some, seeing a chance to speculate, established money exchange offices where they could give Jerusalem money and discount the foreign money at perhaps about onehalf, so the man could have Jerusalem money with which to buy his sacrifice which he should have brought from home. Jesus said to these men, "Take these things out of here," or words to that effect. They knew they were wrong; so they got out in a hurry when he quoted the scripture in Jer. 7: 11, which reads: "Is this house, which is called by my name, become a den of robbers?" And from the statements given by Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John, it appears to me that he also quoted from Isa. 56: 7, and especially verse 11, which reads: "Yea, they are greedy dogs which can never have enough, and they are shepherds that cannot understand: they all look to their own way, every one for his gain, from his quarter." The house in which the worshipers met was designed to be a house of prayer, but it was being used as headquarters for robbing the Almighty of the offerings which the people were required to bring. No wonder that the house of prayer had become a den of thieves. To-day the true church of Christ is a house of prayer, a spiritual temple in contrast with the court of prayer in Solomon's great earthly temple. "Ye also, as lively stones, are built up a spiritual house, a holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God by Jesus Christ." (1 Pet. 2: 5.) Christians should heed the warning which Jesus gave, and be very careful about making merchandise of the singing, praying, preaching, and all other spiritual sacrifices which might be placed upon a money basis, for what money they can make out of it by selling their spiritual sacrifices.

Rhoton.

The church at Corinth, Monroe County, Ky., has lost one of its best members-Sister Nancy E. Rhoton, aged eighty years, ten months, and twenty-three days. She was born on July 6, 1837, and died on May 29, 1918, about 9 P.M. She became a member of the church in the fall of 1856. She was a devoted Christian from that time until she died. She was a light and pattern of good works in the community in which she lived, her example unexcelled. Her seat was always filled as long as she was able to go to church. She leaves seven children and many friends to mourn their loss. May we all strive as she did and meet her in the eternal rest to which she has gone.

A. N. HALL. has gone.

Larimer.

Reva Veru, the little daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Larimer, of Tulare, Cal., was born on July 13, 1917, and crossed the silent stream on May 27, 1918. Though this dear little one was never strong, yet the last six weeks of her life was so full of pain that this mother could say, in this hour so try-ing to us all, that she felt glad to know that suffering is all over. She leaves a father, mother, one little brother, and a grandmother. Everything was done for her that loving hands could do; but she could stay no longer, for God saw best to take her away. Her stay on earth was short and it was hard to give her up; but weep not, dear ones, as those who have no hope, for little Reva is safe in the arms of Jesus. She will never return to you, but you can go to her. We admonish that you so live and so teach the little brother to do the will of God that we may all meet together in that happy home where sad partings never come. L. MEADE WILLIAMS.

Funderburk.

The home of Brother and Sister Walter Funderburk was made exceed-ingly sad on June 7, 1918, by the sud-den and unexpected death of their only child, Edwin Bernard, a sweet little baby boy almost four months old. Bernard was a most lovable baby and the source of much happiness to his young parents. He was sick only a few hours, but suffered intensely. He died of bronchial pneumonia after medical aid had exhausted every effort to bring relief. Funeral services were conducted in the home of Brother David O. Griffith. The remains were quietly laid to rest in the beautiful cemetery in the presence of friends and loved ones. Bandy.

The death angel visited our neighborhood and claimed for its victim our dear brother, W. J. Bandy. He was born on August 28, 1845, near Denson's Landing, on the Tennessee River, in Perry County. He obeyed the gospel in the year 1874, under the preaching of Cain Land. He was married to Miss Linda Terry on October 29, 1874. To this union were born three boys and four girls, all of which survived him. I would say to the be-reaved family: Grieve not for the dead that die in the Lord; only live the life that is well pleasing to the Lord, and you all will meet your dear father in the world where there will be no more sorrowing nor sad parting, but where we can live for evermore in the beautiful home not made with hands. would say to the mother and wife: Weep not as one that has no hope; when the Lord comes to gather his jewels home, only be ready to meet him. My heart goes out in sympathy for the bereaved family. We all miss Brother Bandy. Let us all work and pray together. L. W. HINSON.

Maupen.

On April 22, 1918, I was called to Manchester, Tenn., to conduct the funeral of Brother James S. Maupen, whose life reached much beyond that allotted to man. He was born on April 15, 1826, and died on April 21, allotted to man. 1918-aged ninety-two years and six days. He was a man of vigorous constitution and, until feebleness from age came on, was blessed with the best of health. I had known him for many years, and from the beginning of our acquaintance had the highest conception of his honor and integrity as a man. In deportment, he always acted the gentleman. In his young manhood he united with the Mission-ary Baptist Church, but some twenty years ago he united with the church of Christ at Lynchburg, Tenn. always firm in the faith, The current of his religious life flowed on smoothly like the majestic river, not like the turbulent, noisy brook. He leaves a widow, Sister Rice Maupen, who deserves to have a place in the ranks of the faithful women because of the faithfulness with which she cared for him in his enfeebled condition. A generation of a noble type of men has about passed away. May the new generations coming on be as true to duty as they were. J. D. FLOYD.

Croom.

On May 10, 1918, I was called from the field to receive from the arms of my wife the lifeless form of my darling boy, Paul Jett Croom. His death was by accident, He had climbed upon a fence, and, trying to go through, his feet slipped off the lower plank, and, his head catching in the crack, his neck was broken. He was dead when found. He was our only living child, and in his short life of just a few days over two years he had made many friends. "There was never a sweeter child." "Knowing what wonderful things you have al-ways had in store for little Paul, I feel that a life that might have been grand has been cut down in infancy. Brother Bsaid he thought Paul so bright, such a fine prospect for a brilliant man." "Not an hour passes that I do not think of you all, how you are bereft of the bright little sunbeam." The above are some of the many expressions from sympathetic friends and relatives. I give them because language is not strong enough to express my own estimate of his worth and loveliness. He is gone, but not forgotten, and though our hearts still ache, we realize he is with One who said: "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not: for of such is the kingdom of heaven." We are preparing to meet our dar-lings where there will be no more death in the "sweet by and by." T. W. CROOM.

How Many Are Buried by Baptism?

BY WILLIAM J. MILLER.

Have not all baptized people been "buried by baptism?" According to · the sacred Scriptures, they have. Jesus was buried in the ground and raised from the burial. Applicants for baptism are buried in the water and raised from the burial, like as Christ was raised from the burial in the ground. If a corpse in a ship is thrown overboard into the water, it is thus buried.

"Or are ye ignorant that all we who were baptized into Christ Jesus were baptized into his death? were buried therefore with him through baptism into death: that like as Christ was raised from the dead by the glory of the Father, so we also might walk in newness of life." (Rom. 6: 3, 4.) According to the quotation, every one that was baptized was buried by baptism. Paul included himself. It cannot mean that Paul was speaking of any burial in the ground, except that Jesus was buried therein. If it were a burial in the ground that Paul was speaking of, it would be that every one that has died and been buried in the ground has been thus baptized. Who is ready to admit that all dead people that have been buried have thus been baptized? Baptized people have been buried in the water. "Having been buried with him [Christ] in baptism, wherein ye were also raised with him through faith in the working of God, who raised him from the dead." (Col. 2: 12.) Having obeyed the command, as in Acts 2: 38, to be baptized by being buried or immersed in the water, there was no need of sprinkling.

Paul set this example to others, and said: "The things which ye both learned and received and heard and saw in me, these things do: and the God of peace shall be with you." (Phil. 4: 9.) Are you following the example Paul set for his followers? If not, you are not safe. Though Paul was writing to people that had been baptized, they who had not been baptized were not exempted from the necessity of walking in Paul's ways. If aliens were to be followers of the law of Moses (Acts 13: 39), they should be sprinkled with water mixed with the ashes of a red heifer (see Num. 19: 2, 9; Heb. 9; 13). As they are to be followers of the law of Christ (Gal. 6: 2), they are to be baptized by being buried with Christ by baptism (Rom. 6: 4). In John 3: 5 Jesus speaks of the necessity of undergoing the action of being immersed, informing us that unless a man thus comes forth from the water he "cannot enter into the kingdom of God."

Dear Sir: I was suffering with indigestion, stomach and liver disorders, and all its train of horrifying phenomens for several months. I had lived on milk, soft-boiled eggs, shredded wheat—a very insufficient diet for an active working man—and, of oourse, from disease and starvation was in a very low state of nervous vitality and general debility. I ordered ten gallons of your mineral Water, which I used continuously, reordering when necessary, and in four months gained twenty-nine pounds, was strong and perfectly well, and have worked practically every day since. It acts as a general renovator of the system. I prescribe it in my practice, and it has in every linstance had the desired effects. It is essential to use this water in as large quantity as possible, for its properties are so happily blended and in such proportion that they will not disturb the most delicate system. It is purely Nature's remedy.

Our Comfort.

BY S. WHITFIELD.

God's children have always needed comfort, and always will. There is always lots of trouble in the world. Sin is the cause of it. We are likely to look on the dark side of questions. If we always had the faith in God that we could have, we would look at things in a different way. If we would remember that God has always overruled things for the good of his cause and of his people, it would keep us from a great deal of worry.

Jesus told the disciples that he was going away, and that it was for their good that he was going; yet when he went they were troubled, disappointed, and discouraged. They even said that they would go back to their fishing. Could they have seen the great blessings that would come to them by Jesus' going away, they would have rejoiced. In their darkest hour the greatest of all blessings was coming to them. Jesus must die that salvation might come to them and to us. The darkest hour is often just before light comes. "The darkest hour is nearest the dawn" is an old saying that is worth remembering.

"And now, brethren, I commend you to God, and to the word of his grace, which is able to build you up, and to give you an inheritance among all them which are sanctified." (Acts 20: 32.)

Paul was addressing the elders of the church at Ephesus for the last time, and he commended them to God and to his word. These are our refuge and comfort in time of trouble. To these we can go at all times and find the very comfort that we need. God is the same as he always has been. Men may fail and do, but God never fails. He has always stood by his people, and he will, if we put our trust in him. Blessed are all those that put their trust in Jehovah.

The word of the Lord is sure and abiding. It will endure forever. Its promises are the same as they always have been. There are exceeding great and precious promises to all who will do God's will. We need to read the word of God much and notice these promises, for we need them now. They will give us the very encouragement that we need. We need a kingdom that man cannot overthrow-one that will stand. The kingdom of Christ is just such a kingdom. If we continue to be faithful members of this church to the end, all will be

SUFFERING CATS! GIVE THIS MAN THE GOLD MEDAL

Let folks step on your feet hereafter, wear shoes a size smaller if you like, for corns will never again send electric sparks of pain through you, according to this Cincinnati authority.

He says that a few drops of a drug called "freezone," applied directly upon a tender, aching corn, instantly relieves soreness, and soon the entire corn, root and all, lifts right out.

This drug is a sticky ether compound, but dries at once and simply shrivels up the corn without inflaming or even irritating the surrounding tissue.

It is claimed that a quarter of an ounce of freezone obtained at any drug store will cost very little, but is sufficient to remove every hard or soft corn or callus from one's feet. this out, especially if you are a woman reader who wears high heels.

to the left, that thou mayest prosper whithersoever thou goest. This book of the law shall not depart out of thy mouth; but thou shalt meditate therein day and night, that thou mayest observe to do according to all that is written therein: for then thou shalt make thy way prosperous, and then thou shalt have good success." (Josh. 1: 7, 8,)

Surely these are days in which we need to be strong and have lots of courage. We need to meditate upon the word of God both day and night.

"From that time many of his disciples went back, and walked no more with him. Then said Jesus unto the twelve, Will ye also go away? Then Simon Peter answered him, Lord, to whom shall we go? thou hast the words of eternal life." (John 6; 66-68.)

We cannot afford to go back: and, if we did, where would we go? To go ahead and be true to God means nothing but eternal gain. To go back means to be lost. Onward in the Lord's work and service is the only thing we can do.

"For I am persuaded that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord." (Rom. 8: 38, 39.)

Not even war should separate us from God and his goodness and love. These are trying times we are passing through, but God is able to bring good out of all this trouble. Would not Jesus say to us, "Let not your heart be troubled?"

Thorp Spring College Notes.

BY W. F. LEDLOW.

Prospects for another year are good. We hope to have a new dormitory ready to use not later than Christmas, and shall do our best to complete it much sooner. The management has several other important improvements under consideration, and we see no reason why the school should not have a most prosperous year.

We have secured some very excellent men as new assets to our faculty. A definite statement will be made soon relative to the faculty. We are sure that it will be stronger than ever, and the present standing will be maintained.

Next year will be the best year in your life to go to college. There never was such an opportunity for young people. The country calls on every hand for the boy or girl who is prepared. You must not neglect your education. We mean to make every possible effort to adjust ourselves to present needs and help boys and girls prepare for the greatest usefulness in Pure' New Testament Christianity will be one of the main features of the college; all bad habits will be discouraged and everything good will be stressed. The world needs wise men, but it needs good men as well. Combine the two, and you have the best people in the world.

The college will remain a first-class junior college and will retain all the rights and privileges such schools have. Work done with us will be fully credited at State institutions.

I should like to hear from every boy and girl who intends to attend college next year, and who prefers to attend a Christian college. Let me send you our new catalogue. A post card will bring it. Address W. F. Ledlow, President, Thorp Spring, Texas.

Roseville, June 11.—Our services were well attended at Fairview last Sunday. I am now at this place, beginning a meeting. Pray for me.—Emmett Creacy.

Monticello, June 10.—Brother Price Billingsley has just closed an eight-days' meeting here. There were seven additions during the meeting, six of whom were baptized. Brother Billingsley preached sound, gospel sermons, and we feel greatly blessed by his labors. The prospects for "greater things for God" in Monticello and Wayne County are, indeed, very encouraging. The faith of our brethren here has been greatly strengthened by the persecution which they have had to suffer.—Eugene Pearson.

Roswell, June 10.—We are entering the second week of our meeting, with good interest. Thus far there have been fourteen confessions. I will close here next Sunday night and return to Tennessee for two meetings before taking up the work at Cleburne, Texas, August 1.—G. Dallas Smith.

Oklahoma.

Gracemont, June 10.—I came to Gracemont last Saturday and began with a good audience and splendid interest. The people here seem anxious to hear the truth to such an extent as is encouraging. I will remain here this week, and hope for a splendid meeting. As this is a mission meeting, I would very much appreciate any assistance that any brother might send by way of contributions. Wife is with me. Send any contributions to me at Comanche, Okla.—U. G. Wilkinson.

Tennessee.

Gassaway, June 10.—I went to Auburn yesterday to church meeting, and preached. Had one confession and baptism.—L. L. Melton.

Dunlap, June 13 .- I have been here a few days, and baptized the leading father here yesterday. I am at the Last week two girls came mines. down from Dunlap to Daus and were baptized by me. These girls were baptized by me. Baptists. The old man I baptized was sprinkled when he was a small boy by a Methodist. I am anxious to keep going. The first letter of each of these characters spells the word "watch." Watch and pray.-J. C. Mosley.

Brownsville, June 10.—We bought a lot close to the Square last year and paid for it. We are having preaching once a month, at the courthouse, by Brother W. S. Long, and have raised a church fund from our small crowd of members to the amount of about fifteen hundred dollars, and the people in town and county have given us about five hundred dollars. We have made a note of fifteen hundred dollars with the bank and have ordered enough material to start a nice house of worship. The total of these amounts will get it up so we can worship in it, but we will need about two thousand dollars more to finish it and seat it. We have only about thirty members, and nearly all the financial part of the work falls on four families. I will say frankly, if you are the person or church that wants to help a small, worthy congregation whose members are doing their best, you will make no mistake in helping the cause here. As proof of the worthiness of the cause here of your financial support, I refer you to W. S. Long, Jack-son, Tenn.; John T. Smith, Sparta, Tenn.; and Prof. N. B. Hardeman, Henderson, Tenn. We have received some of the material already and will start on the building about the middle of July. We aim to build a nice, sub-stantial house, and it is a big and We aim to build a nice, subworthy undertaking for a small and financially weak congregation, as we have to begin and shoulder the responsibility; but we are going to ask you to consider our position these hard times and send us a contribution you will be proud of, and I pledge you it shall be used wisely and to advantage. May God bless you in the fel-lowship of the cause. Send contributions to Walter L. Brummett, Brownsville, Tenn., Route 1.

Huntland, June 12 .- On the third Lord's day in May, Brother R. E. L. Taylor and I began a meeting with the brethren at Dunlap, and closed it on the first Lord's day in June, with good interest, but about two weeks too soon. as is frequently the case. Two were baptized; one wandering child re-turned to the fold; and one, who had been baptized by the Baptists, placed his membership with the church there. The brethren at Dunlap did what would be a good thing for the brethren everywhere to imitate when they want to give to Red-Cross work. Instead of giving way to a concert for Red-Cross purposes, we had meeting as usual, and a good crowd, too. Then on Sunday night we took up a collection of twenty-six dollars and fifty-four cents, a little more than half the amount realized from the concert. This collection was contributed to the Red Cross in the name of the church. On Monday night following the meeting we went up the valley to Bethel and preached to a good audience. On Tuesday Brother Taylor baptized a young man who was convinced of the truth in one of his former meetings, and on Tuesday night we held services in his home at Atpontley. Wednesday night we came down to Daus and preached to a good audience. This is the home of Brother J. C. Mosley, who is doing a good work in the valley and on the mountain. Throughout I was more and more impressed that what we need to-day is the pure, simple gospel preached uncompromisingly, as strong to saint as to sinner; and as Brother Floyd said, "Brother Taylor knows no better than to preach the gospel." While at Dunlap, I was in a conversation with a Russellite, and he told me that the last of the seven stars which John saw in the right hand of the Son of man represented Pastor Russell, and that he was the angel (messenger) of the church at Laodicea. Of course no one but a Russellite could explain (?) how Pastor Russell, living in the nineteenth and twentieth centuries, could carry a message to a church which became extinct hundreds of years before Russell was born. If this feat had been done, it would equal that of Christ "preaching to the spirits in prison." I was with the brethren at Garth, Ala., last Saturday and Sunday and preached to three interested audiences.-E. Gaston Collins

Texas.

Terrell, June 10,-Our meeting of one week's duration closed last night, with a good attendance. The meeting was interfered with some on account of rain and the rush of crops and the harvesting of grain, but the attendance was fair. I have a little time left for meetings in July or August. My first meeting will be with the church at Lewisville, beginning on the third Sunday in July .- R. D. Smith.

Cleburne, June 9 .- After continuing seven days, the Godley meeting closed There were fourteen baplast night. I trust that there was other good done that shall bear fruit later. I leave Friday for a mission meeting at Somerville, I go in answer to a Macedonian call uttered by Sister Mc-Queen. I trust it shall be as prolific of good as the one to which Paul responded. Brethren, pray that there may be an open door for the word.— F. L. Young.

Dallas, June 12.-I have the first and second Sundays in July, including all the week between and two or three days before the first Sunday, I shall gladly serve those who may want me in a meeting at this time or any part of this time. All my other time is promised till the second Sunday in September. These two Sundays mentioned were engaged in monthly work, but they will gladly release me to hold a meeting. I am busy all the time. Address me at 401 Montreal Avenue, Dallas, Texas, if you need me.—J. C.

Henrietta, June 10.-The mission meeting near Tulia was rained and stormed out so many nights that we never got a good interest waked up till we had to stop; but the people who heard and gave attention were pleased with our work, and saint and sinner hoped we would get another chance at the devil in their community. of the brethren at Tulia spoke of having me hold a meeting for them next year. I have booked three meetings for next summer since I saw them; so if they want me they must say it quick, for I cannot wait. I began at Bluegrove last Saturday night, and we are having a good meeting. Brother C. R. Taylor, of Burkburnett, is with me in this meeting, and he is a noble fellow worker. He will preach next Sunday night at Henrietta. I will begin at Nocona on the night of June 22, and at Comanche, Okla., on the first Lord's day in July.-Tice Elkins.

It is certainly a pity that so many people suffer year after year the intense pains of rheumatism when it can be so easily expelled from the system by the simple treatment of taking Renwar Rheumatic Salts Rheumatism is caused by uric acid in the blood; and in order to effect a complete cure, it is necessary to entirely eliminate this acid from the blood. These City Physicians Explain Why They Prescribe Nuxated Iron

To Make Healthier Women and Stronger, Sturdier Men

NOW BEING USED BY OVER THREE MILLION PEOPLE ANNUALLY

By enriching the blood and creating thousands of new red blood cells, it often quickly transforms the flabby flesh, toneless tissues, and pallid cheeks of weak, anaemic men and women into a glow of health. Increases the strength of delicate, nervous, run-down folks in two weeks' time in many instances.

IT is conservatively estimated that over three million people annually in this country alone are taking Nuxated Iron. Such astonishing results have been reported from its use both by doctors and laymen, that a number of physicians in various parts of the country have been asked to explain why they prescribe it so extensively, and why it apparently produces so much better results than were obtained from the old forms of inorganic iron.

Extracts from some of the letters received are given below.

Dr. Ferdinand King, a New York Physician and Medical Author, says: "There can be no vigorous from men without iron. Pallor means a n a e-iron. Pallor means a n a emia.

"A n a e m i a means iron deficiency. The skin of annemic men and women is pale;

the flesh flabby. The muscles lack tone, the brain fags and the memory falls and weak, nevous, firitable, despondent and melancholy.

When the iron goes from the blood of women the roses go from their cheeks.
"In the most common foods of America, the starches, sugars, table syrups, candles, polished rice, white bread, soda crackers, biscults, macaroni, spaghetti, taploca, sago, farina, degerminated corn-meal, no longer is iron to be found.
Refining processes have removed the iron of Mother Earth from these impoverished foods, and silly methods of home cookery, by throwing down the waste-pipe the water in which our vegetables are cooked, is responsible for another grave iron loss.

"Therefore you should supply the iron deficiency in your food by using some form of organic iron, just as you would use salt when your food has not enough salt."

en through my own tests of it to excel any preparation I have ever used for creating red blood, building up the nerves, strengthening the muscles and correcting digestive disorders."

Dr. James Francis Sullivan, formerly physician of Bellevue Hospital (Outdoor Dept.) N. Y., and the West-ester vue Hospital (Outdoor Dept.) County Hospital, New York, and the West-said: "I have thester county Hospital, strongly emphasized the great necessity of physicians making blood examinations of their weak, anaemic, run-down patients. Thousands of persons go on year after year suffering from physical weakness and a highly nervous condition due to lack of sufficient iron in their red blood corpuscles, without ever realizing the real and true cause of their trouble. Without iron in your blood your food merely passes through the body, somewhat like corn through an old mill with rollers so wide apart that the mill can't grind.

"But in my opinion you can't make strong, vigorous, successful, stardy iron men by feeding them on metallic iron. The old forms of metallic iron must go through a semi-digestive process to transform them into organic iron—Nuxated Iron—before they are so ready to be taken up and assimilated by the human system.

"Notwitten on this subject by well-known nhy-system. "Notwithstanding all that has been said and written on this subject by well-known physicians, thousands of people still insist in dosing the mselves with metallic iron simply, I suppose, because it costs House Surgeon, Jefferson Park Hospital, Chica-go, in commenting on Nuxated Iron, says: "It has been my partion for orticular duty during the past six years to assist in keeping Chica-go's five thou-

If you have taken preparations such as Nux and Iron and other similar Iron products and failed to get results, remember that such products are an entirely different thing from Nuxated Iron."

Do you ask to be the companion of nobles? Make yourself noble, and you shall be. Do you long for the conversation of the wise? Learn to understand it, and you shall hear it.-

Dr. Schuyler C. Jaques, formerly Visiting Surgeon of St. Elizabeth's Hospital, of New York City, said: "I have never before given out any medical information or advice for publica-tion, as I ordinarly do not believe in it. But any medical information or advice for publication, as I ordinarly do not believe in it. But in the case of Nuxated Iron I feel I would be remiss in my duty not to mention it. I have taken it myself and given it to my patients with most surprising and satisfactory results. And those who wish quickly to increase their strength, power and endurance will find it a most remarkable and wonderfully effective remedy."

Dr. T. Alphonsus Wallace, a physician of many years' experience in this country and abroad, says: "I do not make a practice of recommending advertised medicinal products, but I have found Nuxated Iron so potent in nervous, run-down conditions, that I believe all should know of it. The men and women of today need more iron in their blood than was the case twenty or thirty years ago. This because of the demineralized diet which now is served dally in thousands of homes and also because of the demineralized diet which now is served dally in thousands of homes and also because of the demineralized diet which now is served dally in thousands of homes and also because of the demand for greater resistance necessary to offset the greater number of health hazards, to be met at every turn."

If people would only take Nuxated Iron when they feel weak or run-down, instead of dosingthemselves with habit-forming drives stimwith habit-forming drugs, stim-ulants and alco-holic beverages, ing drugs, stimulants and alcoholic beverages, there are probably thousands who might readily build up their red blood corpuscles, increase their physical energy and get themselves into a condition to ward off the millions of disease germs that are almost continually around us. It is surprising how many people suffer from iron deficiency and do not know it.

If you are not strong or well you owe it to yourself to make the following test: See how long you can work or how far you can walk without becoming tired. Next take two five-grain tablets of ordinary Nuxated Iron three times per day after meals for two weeks. Then test your strength again and see how much you have gained. Numbers of nervous, run-down people who were alling all the while have most astonishingly increased their strength and endurance simply by taking from in the proper form. And this, after they had in some cases been going on for months without getting benefit from anything. Many an athlete and prizefighter has won the day simply because he knew the secret of great strength and endurance which comes from having plenty of fron in the blood; while many another has gone down in inglorious defeat simply for lack of iron.

Renew Your Health At Nature's Fountain

Without the Expense and Loss of Time Necessary for a Visit to the Spring

THE CRISIS

There comes a time in the life of practically every man and woman when their digestive or eliminative organs, or both, fail to respond to drugs prepared by human skill. In fact drugs seem to do them about a much harm as good for their systems 1 bel against all drugs. These are the cases which physicians call "stubborn" and "chronic" for the reason that they persist in spite of drug treatment. I do not refer to incurable diseases such as cancer and consumption, but to that larger class of functional disorders which we meet every day, where the organs of digestion and elimination are impaired.

For this class of cases our best physicians and our big city specialists send their wealthy patients to the mineral springs where, in the great majority of cases they are permanently restored or decidedly benefited. But what about the poor man who has not the money or the busy man or woman who cannot spare the time to spend several weeks or possibly months at a health resort? Shall circumstances deny them the restoration to health which Nature has provided? Read my answer in the coupon at the bottom of this page.

I have the utmost confidence in the Shivar Mineral Spring Water for to it I owe my Restoration to Health and probably my Life. It has made me tens of thousands of friends in all parts of America and even in foreign countries, whose faces I have never seen. Yet I count them my friends for the Shivar Spring Water has bound them to me by lasting gratitude.

t ask you to read their letters, a few samples of which I publish below for your benefit, and if you find among them any encouragement as to your own health do not hesitate to accept my offer which has no limits or conditions except those shown on the coupon. If you could read the letters that come to me daily, numbering about ten thousand a year, and the vast majority of them similar to those printed below, you would not wonder that I make this offer displaying my absolute confidence in the restorative powers of Shivar Mineral Water.

INDIGESTION

Eavannah. Georgia.

I was suffering with indigestion, stomach and liver disorders and all its train of horritying phenomena for several months. I had lived on milk, soft eggs, shredded wheat, a very insufficient diet for an active working man, and, of course, from disease and starvation was in a very low state of nervous vitality and general debility. Fordered ten gallons of your Mineral Water which I used continuously, reordering when necessary, and in four months gained twenty-nine pounds, was strong and perfectly well, and have worked practically every day since. It acts as a general renovator of the system. I prescribe it in my practice, and it has in every instance had the desired effects. It is essential to use this water in as large quantities as possible, for its properties are so happily blended and in such proportion that they will not disturb the most delicate system. It is purely Nature's remedy.

I feel it my duty to suffering humanity to make public announcement of the benefits I have derived from Snivar Spring Water. I have been a sufferer for the past twenty-five years from indigestion and dyspepsia. After one week's trial of Shivar Water I commenced to improve, and after drinking it for four weeks I gained afteen pounds. I feel better and stronger than I have in twenty-five years. I strongly recommend this Water to any one with stomach trouble of any character, and truly believe it will cure ulcer of the stomach. I am writing this voluntarily and trust it will fell in the hands of many who are so unfortunate as to be afflicted with indigestion and nervous dyspepsia.

DYSPEPSIA

Baltimore, Md., April 30, 1914.

For many years I suffered with stomach trouble as a direct result of asthma. I consulted the very best specialist in this country, and spent quite a large sum of money in my endeavor to get relief. However, I had about come to the conclusion that my case was hopeless, but by accident I happened to get hold of one of your booklets, and decided to try Shivar Spring Water. After drinking the water for about three weeks I was entirely relieved, and since that time have suffered but little inconvenience from my trouble. I cheerfully recommend the use of your Water to any one that may be suffering from stomach trouble.

RHEUMATISM

Leeds, S. C.

I have tested your Spring Water in several cases of rheumatism, chronic indigestion, kidney and bladder troubles, and in nervous and sick headaches, and find that it has acted nicely in each case and I believe that sick headaches, and not that it has acted incerty in each case, and I believe that if used continuously for a reasonable time will produce a permanent cure. It will purify the blood, relieve debility, stimulate the action of the liver, kidneys and bladder, aiding them in throwing off all poisonous matter.

BILIOUSNESS

Greenville, S. C., Feb. 26, 1914.

For over two years, following a nervous breakdown, I have suffered with a liver so torpid that ordinary remedies were absolutely powerless. Under such circumstances, I came to Shivar Spring, and began drinking the Water. Upon advice however, the first night I took a laxative; the second night a milder one. Since then I have taken none at all. The effect of the water has been remarkable—its action on my liver most marked, and my health and spirits greatly improved. I am satisfied that the laxative, followed by the Water, was the proper treatment in my case. My condition is now perfect, S. A. DERIEUX.

GALLSTONES

Shivar Spring Water cured my mother of gallstones, or, I might say, it snatched her from the short of an operation would do her any good, after drinking the Water she was able to get out

Edifying as the Need May Be

The Hidden Man of the Heart.

Is it not an awe-inspiring thing for a thoughtful man to consider that there is in his make up, not one man only, but two men? There is his external self, which the world sees and sometimes appreciates; there is his inner self, or what Peter calls "the hidden man of the heart," which sometimes only God knows and appreciates. It is important to know that God loves this hidden man more than any other. That is the chief thought in Peter's admonition. Outward apparel and adorning may catch the eyes of men; but in order for a woman to please God, she must wear "the incorruptible apparel of a meek and quiet spirit." Now this meek and quiet spirit may not have any money value in men's eyes, but in the sight of God it is of great price.

I also get the idea from the Bible that God never intended that we should make a display of the hidden man of the heart. He would keep this as his own peculiar possession, and it serves his purpose best that it shall be hidden. We are reminded of a word that has recently come into vogue. "Camouflage" is a French word of military usage which denotes clever concealment. A long cannon is painted so as to resemble a fallen tree—that is camouflage. A listening post is converted into the shape of a cow innocently browsing in the meadow—that is camouflage. Ships are painted so as to be hardly distinguishable from the waves over which they sail or like the fleecy clouds above them—that is camouflage.

Camouflage Not a Modern Invention.

Camouflage is not a modern invention by any means. I think you will find its first appearance in the garden of Eden, where Satan in the form of a serpent pretended to be the friend of man. Joseph, one of the purest and strongest characters in the Old Testament, was an adept in the art of camouflage. I refer to that period in his life when Pharaoh had given him a place second only to the sovereign. The brothers, who years before had sold him into slavery, came from their famine-stricken home into the land of Egypt seeking sustenance, never thinking for one moment that it was in the power of their long-lost brother, Joseph, to give or to deny. How strange and yet how suggestive is the manner in which Joseph conducts himself in these several interviews with his brethren! On the one hand, he speaks roughly to them; he charges them with being spies and casts them into prison. Then we read in Gen. 42: 24 that "he turned himself about from them, and wept." There you have the true Joseph. His heart is that of a woman and his strong frame is shaken with convulsive weeping. But reading the same verse further, we find that Joseph "returned to them, and spake to them, and took Simeon from among them, and bound him before their eyes." There you have another Joseph who appears to be a tyrant, harsh, resolute, and pitiless.

Patriarchal Camouflage.

Some time later Joseph's brethren, driven by the stress of famine, came a second time to Egypt to buy corn. Benjamin, his own mother's son, is with them. Joseph had not seen him for more than twenty years. Their eyes met—these two sons of Rachel—and Joseph's heart goes out to the younger brother, like a mother's to her child. He can scarcely resist the impulse to throw his arms around him and weep upon his neck. But the time has not yet come. So "he entered into his chamber, and wept there. And he washed his face, and came out; and he refrained himself." What an interesting and beautiful instance of patriarchal camouflage!

Self-Respect Demands Concealment.

The part that Joseph played is suggestive of what many a man must do to-day under circumstances equally difficult and sometimes equally pathetic. No man who would retain his self-respect can afford nowadays to "wear his heart upon his sleeve." Conditions are admittedly such that men who are normally cheerful are tempted to think that the nation is trembling in the balance, that the church is on the retrograde, and that all good human society is about to be disrupted. Recently I have heard some evangelists who have given the best part of their lives to preaching the gospel say that they did not know whether or not it was best to arrange for protracted meetings. The minds of the people were all so completely occupied with the war and its exigencies that it seemed a hopeless task. But the time when the sheep are most afraid and about to be scattered is the time when they most need the shepherd. Jesus Christ, in giving the great commission, made no provision for a lull or a respite from duty. The message must be sounded out till the end of time and in the face of the greatest obstacles. Paul wrote to the Thessalonians: "We ourselves glory in you in the churches of God for your patience and faith in all your persecutions and in the afflictions which ye endure." (2 Thess. 1: 4.) If we are tempted to quit, let us read that lesson and go on.

Commendable Camouflage.

No one denies that conditions are the worst with which we have ever had to deal. To stay at home and do one's duty here demands a self-possession and self-control, a courage and heroism, as great as any displayed on the battle field. All honor to the people who are doing it! I know a brave little woman—and God knows there are many such in these sad days—whose husband has gone to the war, leaving her with the sole responsibility for the home, and sometimes she cannot help having a good cry; but when the children come home from school, she has washed her face and is as bright and cheerful as if life were without a care. The men and women who, in these anxious and critical and tragic times, can conceal their grief and keep their tears for God, and can go among their fellows with a hopeful spirit and a cheerful word, are rendering a service which only the ages can tell. It may be camouflage, but it is a camouflage that God and right-thinking people will commend. This was the way with our Lord himself. Christ was not without sorrow. He "was a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief." Paul says that "in the days of his flesh" he "offered up prayers and supplications with strong crying and tears unto" God. (Heb. 5: 7.) But most of his crying was done in the secret chamber, under the cover of night, on the mountain side, in desert places, in the garden of Gethsemane, while his disciples slept and only God and the stars looked down. When he came to the multitudes, the tears were gone; his words were full of hope and cheer; his joy was contagious. He had washed his face and refrained himself.

Reply to R. H. Boll's Criticism.

BY J. E. THOMPSON.

In the April number of Word and Work an article appeared, written by R. H. Boll, its chief editor, purporting to be a partial review of my book, "The History of the Fall and Dissolution of Christendom." This review was such a flagrant and wicked misrepresentation of the book that I asked the privilege of making reply in Word and Work. This was denied me. On that account I have asked the editors of the Gospel Advocate to print my review of Boll's criticisms in their columns.

He says: "In endeavoring to explain the Bible expressions which imply the nearness of the Lord's return, the author falls into the error popularly called 'soul sleeping' (though that term may not describe the position accurately). He thinks that the departed Christian is not aware of the duration of the dreamless sleep, the unconscious interval between death and the coming of Christ."

The author thinks nothing of the kind, and his book does not teach it. On page 371 the author says: "Let us realize that at the hour of death we may [and not "we will"] enter upon a state of dreamless sleep." We use the word "may" at this point in our book to show that even if the doctrine of soul sleeping is true, it would not invalidate the teaching of the great apostle Paul, who teaches that "to be absent from the body [or, to die] is to be at home with the Lord." Read pages 370 and 371 and see that the author does not assume responsibility for that doctrine, as he is here accused. He does not pass upon it; he leaves it an open question for future light, if there be any; and we do not like to be misrepresented by our reviewer or any one else and put before the public as a teacher of that theory, for it "may" be untrue, and the book clearly shows its author does not teach it or assume any position in regard to it.

He says again: "But Dr. Thompson's book interposes stretches of unmeasured centuries and long terms of peace and world conversion between the Christian and his Lord's return; so that whatever is uncertain as to the time of his coming, this much is certain, according to the Doctor, that none of us need to look for him in our lifetime."

This statement coming from Brother Boll, who claims to have found it in the book, is surprising, is astonishing, and I might say that it appears to me to be inexcusable, for there is no such statement in the book; neither is there a sentence from which such an idea can be legitimately inferred as my product.

He then says: "This is so different from the doctrine of the New Testament on the subject that this point alone refutes Dr. Thompson's theory." If this was in the book, it might do so; but not being found therein, and being nothing but Brother Boll's statement and adjunct thereto, it is without effect, because it is not taught in the book.

The following is the only positive teaching as to the coming of Christ found on any of its pages: "But of that day and hour knoweth no one, not even the angels of heaven, neither the Son, but the Father only.' (Matt. 24: 36.)" (See last paragraph on page 21.)

On page 380 the reader will also find this positive and clear statement as to the coming of Christ: "We have no theory upon this subject. The Bible itself is absolutely silent prior to this beginning. We doubt not that every scene in the whole Apocalypse is in the future and that they are grouped with the coming of Christ. We know as well as we know we have correctly read these symbols and that the Bible is true that Christ will not come to earth in the next seven years. We know this as well as we know every event revealed in the Apocalypse will transpire before and with his coming, and that they cover a period of little over seven years. They have not yet begun, and they may not for centuries.

This is the position and teaching of the whole of my book-that is, that Christ will not even be due to come, and, therefore, cannot come, before the prophecies which the Bible places before his coming have been fulfilled. It may be but a short time or it may be long years and centuries; no one can tell, and we do not attempt to say. Thus the reader can see that the author of that book claims that Christ is not yet due to return to earth; but he believes he will come the very day and the very hour he is due to come. This places the book above the accusation of Brother Boll as to its teaching a delay in Christ's coming. There can be no delay in his coming before it is due; yet in the face of this clear statement he says: "One point alone I would mention: the whole purport of the book goes (without such design, of course) to confirm and justify the view of that evil servant, a view against which our Lord has especially warned us-to wit: 'My Lord delayeth his coming.' (Matt. 24: 48.)" How he could write such a plain piece of misrepresentation without absolutely knowing it was untrue, I cannot conceive. While we dislike to have our book paraded in false garments, garbled, misquoted, and leaded with extrinsic position and heretical doctrine before an unsuspecting public-those who have not read it-yet this is a small sin when compared to the promulgation of his doctrine of the imminent coming of Christ, as he presents and defines it himself, along with his mental squint at my book. Brother Boll's position, as he states it himself, makes him the exact personification of that evil servant whom he presents above as my symbol. He claims that the Bible teaches us, and has taught all Christians who have lived since and in the days of the apostles, to look for and expect the coming of our Lord each day. In other words, he claims that Christ is due and has been due to come to the earth for eighteen centuries, and, like that evil servant, claims, "My Lord delayeth his coming," and has been delaying from day to day and from century to century. Their teaching is exactly the same along this line, while my teaching is in striking contrast with his, for it clearly states that his coming is not yet due and will not be due until every prophecy and event is fulfilled which the Bible places to transpire before his coming. He says in his article that the Scriptures "set forth the coming as imminent, rather than immediate" (using a word not found in the Bible), and he defines it in a very flexible way. He makes it first mean "always near, always about to transpire, at the door." Then he gives the word another twist and brings out an entirely different meaning. He says: "However, it may tarry." That is, according to his theory, it does tarry and has tarried for eighteen centuries after his coming was due, and therefore he advises all Christians to patiently look for the coming of Christ "while my Lord delayeth his coming." That evil servant referred to will doubtless be glad to back this position. I say with the greatest kindness, and in love of justice and truth, that his theory is the purest seeds of infidelity. It is an outrage upon the Author of Christianity and the God of the Bible; it is a blasphemy against his hely character and name; it is a wicked and vicious doctrine, because it presents God to his disciples as a deceiver, a dissembler, and a fraud. It does so in that it presents him as having taught his servants (and is now teaching them) to look for the coming of Christ every day for the last eighteen centuries, when he (God) knew perfectly well that Christ would not come during all those ages. Does God practice fraud, imposition, and deception on men and women to make them righteous and good? Does he become a dissembler and a concealer of the real truth for the salvation of the world? Does he practice premeditated daily deception to reconcile his servants and keep them patiently waiting "while my Lord delayeth his coming?" Brother Boll tells us he does. If this is God's character, why did he slay Ananias and Sapphira for lying? This doctrine is not true; it is, of course, out of harmony with every statement in God's word; it is a reproach to the infinite wisdom and greatness of our Creator, and all Christians should resent it and condemn it. What character of man would be guilty of promising a great and good gift to a credulous neighbor, and repeating the promise from day to day, when he knew perfectly well that he never intended to deliver the goods or fulfill his promise, but that he had already bequeathed it to a distant generation? This doctrine degrades the God Brother Boll asks people to worship to a level beneath Mohammed, Buddha, or any of the gods of the nations of old. He could not analyze this doctrine and show what it really means and attempt to teach it to any congregation of Christians in the land that would not shut their doors against him. No Christian could or would accept a theory which has been teaching us that God has been telling and is now telling men and women to look for the imminent or immediate coming of Christ, when he absolutely knew it would not take place, and that by his own decree Christwould not be due to come and would not come during the great expanse of time embracing now nearly nineteen centuries. The most charitable way to regard his theory is that he does not know himself what he teaches; and if he did know its vicious character, he could not believe it and would not teach it. I cannot think he would.

Not a real position in my book has Brother Boll criticized or called in question in his alleged review, but everything presented by him has been something not to be found on any of its pages.

I have herein used the kindest, the softest, and the gentlest, as well as the most forceful, expressions at my command in presenting my views of his obnoxious theory of God teaching the imminent or immediate coming of Christ for eighteen centuries, when God knew all the time it was an untruth and that he would not come, and I have done so in tenderness to him, and that he might in justice feel impelled to give this article in full to his readers. I take pleasure now in inviting him to come inside my book, pick out any scene in it and show that it is not in harmony with every scripture in both Old and New Testaments. It places the metallic image of Daniel, as well as all the beasts of the Apocalypse, with their surrounding scenes. which includes most of the book of Revelation, in the future, and to transpire before the coming of Christ. If this position is correct, then why should he not learn the truth, and let it free him from waiting while "my Lord delayeth his coming," as he says? If these prophetic revelations have been fulfilled in the past, then let him show what any one of them represents and at the same time stay in harmony with God's word and point us to the page of some authentic history showing its fulfillment. He will not do this; for I do not believe he can define them or tell us what they are, and stay within God's meaning of the words he has used in describing them, without accepting the posttions of my book. I offered him one hundred dollars to find such error in my book; he did not accept it. I now offer him, whether he renders this service or not, and without his asking, my free and full forgiveness for attempting to put his own ideas and deducements up as the teaching of my book, and then upon a false premise unjustly condemn it. But I must not and cannot avoid holding the sin of his attempt upon the character of our holy, true, and allwise Creator against him until he brings forth fruits meet to show his repentance from so great a sin. I say with the great apostle Paul: "Let God be found true, but every man a liar." (Rom. 3: 4.)

I have endeavored to show the real gravity with which I regard, as well as with which all thinking Christians should regard, this baneful and deadly doctrine. There are many Christians all over the land who, not understanding his position, have felt that there might be some persecution against Brother Boll by some of our best brethren. But this is the first time that his theory of "the imminent coming of Christ" has been seen by me, or was ever defined by him to my knowledge, and it exonerates any one from opposing him and attempting by any legitimate means to break down his theory. I have stated his own theory, in his own language, and have done so to make it plain and that no injustice be done him.

The price of the book is $1.50 and not $1, as stated by our reviewer.

EDITOR'S NOTE.

In view of R. H. Boll's past conduct, for which he has made no amends, the Gospel Advocate prints nothing that would give him recognition in its columns, and our only reason for admitting, at this time, an article which deals with him personally at all is that we may counteract, as far as possible, his misrepresentation of Dr. Thompson's book, and thus do justice to a brother whom he has wronged. He not only misrepresented the Doctor, but, when reminded of it, refused the latter space in his paper to correct the misrepresentation.

The Doctor not only corrects the misrepresentation of his book, but he makes a scathing exposure of the brother's speculative doctrine on the imminence of Christ's second coming and how that doctrine reflects on the character of God himself. We heartily commend the Doctor's exposure of this doctrine.

Wisdom, the Better Part of Valor.

BY F. W. SMITH.

Brother Moore exhibits wisdom in steering clear of the difficult problems placed before him in response to his attack upon my preaching in Fulton, Ky. Note his effort at reply:

Yes, you are right, Brother Smith, we went to get a bene, and verily we were not disappointed, for Campbellism, pure and simple, has nothing else but bones. They have the form of godliness, but deny the power that gives life and gospel meat. Therefore, we could not expect any more.

I am sorry that I upset all your good resolutions favorable to Baptists; but good resolutions for Baptists and preaching a gospel contrary to truth would never do you nor the people any good, and maybe it's the best for all concerned that you examine your resolutions to let Baptists alone. When one turns away from Baptists, he turns away from a people with whom, only, the Lord left his commission to preach the gospel, and evangelize the world. You, Brother Smith, should examine the motives you had in making good resolutions to let the Baptists rest.

No, no, my dear Smith, I did not want to hinder the gospel, but that that you preach is not the gospel of Christ, but a message from some human brain which deceives you and the people who hear you. Did you not tell the sinner that night that it was his own actual transgressions that made him a sinner to begin with? Then do you not tell him his life of obedience will save him from sin and finally save him in heaven? Hence the gospel you preach proclaims a salvation by law and is no akin to the gospel Jesus and the apostles preached.

Yes, I believe in depravity—first, hereditary; second, total; third, universal. A man is by nature, or birth, depraved. Man in his entirety and all men are included in the fall.

You ask me: "What caused Adam and Eve to sin?" It was the tempter who beguiled Eve, and she caused Adam to fall with her.

This first pair was put under law, and by obedience to said law they were to continue in their created happy state; by disobedience was the death penalty. They disobeyed and fell under the death penalty. Their descendants inherited from them just what they were. Our Father, being all-wise, had before he created man made provision for his reclamation. He, Jesus, stood as a lamb slain from the foundation of the world. (Rev. 13: 8.)

I understood you to say that God breathed your soul into you at birth. If this is true, and you did inherit your real self directly from God, and all men were thus given souls, then the race is not corrupt. But this introduces a new subject into the discussion—the origin of the soul.

There are three theories held by theologians: (1) "The preëxistent theory—that the souls of all were in existence from all eternity. (2) The creative theory—which is Brother Smith's theory. (3) The traducian theory—that our souls, like our bodies, are derived from our parents by natural generation."

This last theory is the only reasonable one and the one we accept. The child partakes of the nature of the parents, both mental as well as bodily likeness. We cannot account for this in any other way only that it derives it from its parents.

If this last theory is true, then the child cannot be more pure than its source or head. If your theory is true, every child born of righteous parentage is as pure as God could ask; hence Methodism is true in teaching that such need no regeneration and no Savior. Jesus Christ came to seek and to save the lost, only. Therefore our Lord did not die for infants. "He was made under the law to redeem them who were under law." The infant of righteous parentage is not under law; therefore Christ did not die for him, if your theory is true.

Meaning of the word "nature" in this Eph. 2: 3: "Phuol—the nature, inborn quality." (Liddell & Scott Greek-English Lexicon, page 772.) The inborn is not anything we attain by practice, and you are left again, Brother Smith. Whom shall we believe, you or Liddell & Scott? As you are only a theologian, and this lexicon is non-partisan, I am forced to his definition instead of yours.

No, the writer would not have to say by your hereditary depravity, for it is stated more briefly—children of wrath by nature.

Why do all the inhabitants of heaven have on garments washed and made white in the blood of the Lamb? (Rev. 7: 9-14.)

He confesses that he went for a "bone," knew beforehand that he would get nothing but a bone, and, consequently, was not disappointed. If in this he does not pass a sad commentary upon himself, then it would be difficult to see how one could thus injure himself. Think of a man working hard all day at his desk, writing editorials, and attending to the heavy correspondence entailed upon a newspaper man, and then walking a long distance at night. depriving himself of a much-needed rest and sleep, simply and solely to get a "bone!" Hooverism must have played havoc with Brother Moore's home, necessitating his prowling after "bones;" and the case becomes more desperate when we see him with a "Campbellite" bone in his mouth, a thing he detests and loathes with all his soul. Well, I venture the assertion that he got more rich juice, more spiritual pabulum, out of that "Campbellite" bone, as he terms it, than out of anything that has come his way in many a day. My attention to Baptist editors and scribes has been due to the fact that, like Brother Moore in his attack upon my preaching and his ugly thrusts in this article, they delight in abusing and misrepresenting those who desire to be known simply as Christians. As I had seen nothing of late in the exchanges coming to this office demanding my attention, I decided to say nothing until the attack was renewed. But as Editor Moore, tired and weary, came a long distance to snatch one of my "hones" (?), labeling it "Campbellism" and thrusting it in his paper to growl over before the public, I determined that he should have more "bones."

He says that which I preach is "a message from some human brain." Well, here is what I preach to the alien sinner: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." (Mark 16: 16.) "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." (John 3: 5.) "Repent ye, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ unto the remission of your sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit." (Acts 2: 38.) "And now why tarriest thou? arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on his name." (Acts 22; 16.) "Which also after a true likeness doth now save you, even baptism." (1 Pet. 3: 21.) To those in the kingdom I preach: "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling." (Phil. 2: 12.) "Denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly and righteously and godly in this present world." (Tit. 2: 12.) "And having been made perfect, he became unto all them that obey him the author of eternal life," (Heb. 5: 9.) Brother Moore will not preach these scriptures without note or comment. Why? Because he is afraid to risk the people with them. He is afraid they will believe just what they say, thus becoming "Campbellites."

Our friend shows himself to be an artist at dodging, as is evidenced by the way he treats my question: "What caused Adam and Eve to sin?" He says: "It was the tempter who beguiled Eve, and she caused Adam to fall." This is a complete surrender of his cherished doctrine of "total, hereditary depravity." Here is his predicament: Adam and Eve sinned, not because they possessed "total, hereditary depravity;" but their offspring sin because they do possess this "total, hereditary depravity," in consequence of which they cannot help sinning! The fact is, Adam's children sin from the same cause that he and Eve sinned; and if "total, hereditary deprayity" be the cause in the one case, it must be the same in the other. No wonder he dedged my question, for the logical and inevitable consequences of his doctrine were too much for him to swallow. Hence he runs away from it rather than charge God with creating Adam and Eve "totally depraved," which depraylty they bequeathed to their offspring. But he has Adam begetting souls or spirits. He thinks to escape from his entanglement upon the principle that like begets like; but this can furnish him no relief. A body of flesh and blood in which resides a "regenerate soul" could hardly beget a soul "totally depraved," or depraved without the total. But one statement from the Son of God knocks my friend's theory into smithereens: "That which is born [or begotten] of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born [or begotten] of the Spirit is spirit." (John 3: 6.) This plainly says that flesh cannot beget spirit. again: "Furthermore, we had the fathers of our flesh to chasten us, and we gave them reverence: shall we not much rather be in subjection unto the Father of spirits, and live?" (Heb. 12: 9.) Here is a clear distinction between the origin of our flesh and our spirits, and it destroys friend Moore's doctrine. Once more: "Thus saith Jehovah, who stretcheth forth the heavens, and layeth the foundation of the earth, and formeth the spirit of man within him." (Zech. 12: 1.) "For I will not contend forever, neither will I be always wroth; for the spirit would faint before me, and the souls that I have made." (Isa. 57: 16.) Yes, my friend, God made, or created, my soul or spirit within me; and he did not weight it down with your "total, hereditary depravity," either.

Editor Moore treats the lexicons like he does the Bibleviz., misuses them. The word for "nature" in Eph. 2: 3 is from "phusis," and, according to J. H. Thayer's Greek-English lexicon of the New Testament, is as follows: "Phusis-C. A mode of feeling and acting which by long habit has become nature." This noted lexicographer, which my friend will admit is the best in the world, says they were by habit, or practice, the children of wrath, and not, as the Baptists claim, because of "total, hereditary depravity." Young, in his Analytical Concordance, gives the same word for "nature" in Eph. 2: 3, and cites 1 Cor. 11: 14, "Doth not even nature itself teach you, that, if a man have long hair, it is a dishonor to him?" as parallel in meaning to Eph. 2: 3. Whom shall we believe-Brother Moore or J. H. Thayer and Robert Young? He is only a theologian, and these lexicographers were nonpartisan. Say, my friend, what becomes of the infant full of "hereditary total depravity" dying in infancy? Will you, like Jeter, say that God regenerates dying infants by a direct, immediate work of the Spirit? If so, please cite the scripture that so teaches. Please do not ignore this question as you did in your reply.

A Letter from Camp Sevier.

BY JOHN E. DUNN.

In these days when the entire world is in turmoil and strife—world upheaval—and when all the nations of the earth are in travail and experiencing terrible convulsions, stirring things may happen at any moment without warning.

I have been in this camp six months. Every day has been filled with new and intense activities. During the month of May your "Uncle Sam" did things the like the world had never seen done in so short a time. In thirty days three hundred thousand American soldiers were moved from the camps of the United States across the Atlantic to be hurled against the monster beast of barbarism who in his mad onslaught is threatening the lives and liberties, the peace and happiness, of the whole world.

All of a sudden, like a clap of thunder from a clear sky, at about 1:30 P.M., April 27, a beautiful Saturday afternoon, quarantine was put on Camp Sevier and the entire machinery of the Thirtieth Division, U.S. N. G., was set in motion making ready to entrain for some port to embark for overseas service. Such a stir of nearly forty thousand men, and yet without any confusion or disorder, I had never seen before.

Our unit was the center of the busy scene. Thousands of men streamed through our building sending telegrams, telephoning, mailing parcel-post packages and special letters, and in every way making ready to depart at a moment's notice. For days and nights, almost without rest or sleep, we quietly toiled, rendering all kinds of service to our dear boys.

Before daylight next morning (the following Sunday morning) the folks from back at home were pouring into camp to bid their boys their last good-by. They came by thousands—mothers, fathers, wives and babies, sisters, sweethearts, and other friends—to say their last farewells to those who were as dear to them as their own lives. O, the torn and bleeding hearts! And this is what war is The boys went about their duties, obeying orders caimly, coolly, and determinately. I think practically all of them were ready and anxious to go. Within three days the companies began to entrain. By the twenty-fifth of the month the division was gone. I made two trips to concentration camps at ports of embarkation.

At times like these there is an unlimited amount of service a Christian can render. He can comfort the sorrowing, give advice, pray with and speak words of cheer. Sometimes he is called on to arrange and hastily baptize some one, help them make their wills, and in every conceivable way help the boys quickly to wind up their affairs.

Before the Thirtieth Division was out of camp the Eighty-first Division was coming into camp. Eight thousand new draft men from Alabama and two thousand from New York City came. This is a new and strange experience to these young men just from home and into army life.

We have Sunday school at our building every Sunday at 9 A.M., followed with preaching. I usually preach on Sunday nights: We have a religious service again every Wednesday evening at eight o'clock. We have the Lord's Supper every Sunday afternoon at half past three o'clock.

Let any one who has friends in Camp Sevier, who desires them to get in touch with me, notify them to call on me at Y. M. C. A. hut, Unit 85. It is just across the road from the Divisional Stockade, near 162nd Brigade (General McFarland's) Headquarters. A number of the new men have come to see me. I am anxious to do them all the good I can. My post-office address is Army Y. M. C. A., Camp Sevier, S. C., Unit 85.

I intended to have gone home in May and be at the commencement of David Lipscomb College; but when the movement of our division came at that time, I could not get away. I am now promised a furlough of ten days, embracing the third and fourth Sundays in June. I hope to be at Cookeville one Sunday and at my home church (Lawrence Avenue) the other Sunday.

I hear of some others of the brethren going into the work among our soldier boys. I do not know how you view the matter, but from my own experience and my conception of duty as a servant of the Lord Jesus Christ, I consider it the greatest call to service of my day and generation, and perhaps the greatest opportunity to serve mankind since the apostolic age. I should rejoice to see thousands more Christian men and women going to these millions of our own young men, our own flesh and blood. They need our ministrations unto them physically, mentally, and spiritually.

Training Little Children

(Suggestions by mothers who have been kindergartners. Issued by The United States Bureau of Education, Washington, D. C., and The National Kindergarten Association, New York, N. Y.)

Article 15.

Every one knows that a normal child has an active mind; but many parents do nothing to strengthen or train this vital part of their child's life, leaving all mental development to the teachers in the schools. Those parents are indeed fortunate who have kindergartens in their town or city, for the kindergarten gives systematic mental training to children as early as the fourth year.

The easiest way to teach a child to think is through play. The mother can begin to sing "Mother Goose" rhymes to the mere infant in her arms; as the child grows, he recognizes the words and often the tunes. Later he will ask for his favorite songs or rhymes and then begin to sing or recite himself. Up to this point the mother has accomplished three things-strengthened the memory, cultivated an ear for music and the ability to carry a simple tune, and enlarged the child's vocabulary.

Be sure to use only the best grammar when talking to a child. Baby talk is funny for the grown-ups for a while, but the difficulty the child faces in overcoming this is tremendous.

As the child grows older, a story hour should become a part of each day. This is really a lesson in language. The mother should begin with the finger plays when the child is eight or nine months old, such as, "This is the church and this is the steeple," "Pat-a-cake," and the counting lesson: "The thumb is one; the pointer, two; the middle finger, three; ring finger, four: little finger, five; and that is all you see." "What the child imitates, he begins to understand." That is the great purpose of the finger plays.

As the child grows, other stories can be added to the story hour. A normal child, from about two years of age on, loves the stories of "The Three Bears," "The Three Pigs," "Little Half Chick," "Little Red Hen." and other similar simple tales, a list of which will be found at the conclusion of this article.

In telling stories to children, especially to very young children, avoid the element of fear. Children love best the stories they have heard before. A good rule is to let the child choose his own story. Mother can introduce a new story when she deems best. Another good plan is to have the child tell mother a story sometimes, as this will aid self-expression and be a lesson in language.

To teach counting, make use of the play spirit again. In bouncing a ball, repeat the old-time jingle: "One, two: buckle my shoe," You will be surprised at how quickly the little ones will begin to count. Again, in building blocks, make a game of counting by saying: "Give mother one block;" then, "Give mother one, two, three blocks," etc. It is unwise to teach a child under three numbers higher than ten. They are well started if they are able to count as high as this correctly.

To develop the power of concentration, without which no human beings can be successful in life, there must be a certain amount of directed play each day. Children are given this in kindergarten, and the mother can also give it to them in the home. When mother sews, the opportunity to direct play is at once afforded by having the child sit close by and sew a piece of loose-woven cloth, such as canvas or serim. A big, blunt-pointed needle should be chosen for the purpose and tied securely to a heavy thread. When the child shows evidences of fatigue, the work should be laid aside for another day.

Large, colored, wooden kindergarten cubes and spheres, one inch in size, with a hole through the center to string on shoe laces, are also fine for a lesson in concentration: This occupation should be permitted only when mother is close by to watch and help..

(Kindergarten materials can be secured either from E. Steiger & Co., 49 Murray Street, New York, or from Milton Bradley Company, Springfield, Mass.)

For a child of three, or older, kindergarten sewing cards, which are perforated and to be worked in colored worsteds, are interesting and instructive. An economical way to procure such cards is for the father or mother to cut squares or oblongs out of cardboard, lightly trace an apple, ball, or some other object on one of the pieces, and then perforate the outlines every half inch, making the holes as large as the head of a pin. These outlines can then be sewed by the child in bright colors, working up and down in the holes. Be sure the outlines of the object to be sewed are large, as small objects are too trying for young hands and eyes.

I also received sixty cents in postage this month, which was very much appreciated.

One sister wrote that the drought in her part of the country was the worst that she had seen in many years, yet she found it in her heart to send something for the missionaries. Another sister explains that she has a cow; that she cares for it, milks it, and sells milk and butter, and in this way earns the money which she gives to the mission cause. A brother writes that he is sixty-five years old, makes his living from a dairy, has preached every Lord's day since 1892, and that he tries to give as much to the Lord as he pays taxes to the government. Another brother writes that the churches at Del Rio, Texas, has adopted the percentage system, and that five per cent of their collections will go to foreign missions. Although the membership is only about forty, they gave $13.56, which represented five per cent of March and April collections. These are only a few of the many interesting ways in which churches and individual Christians may give. How are you giving?

Contributions sent to Miss Nellie Straiton, 1030 South Lake Street, Fort Worth, Texas, will be promptly forwarded.

Peculiar Customs in Japan.

BY NELLIE STRAITON.

I have very interesting letters from Sister Sarah Andrews and Sister Lillie Cypert, both in Tokyo, Japan, in which they acknowledge receipt of the money I forwarded in January. Among other things, Sister Cypert says: "I am now in school learning the language. It is very necessary to know something about the language and the customs of the people before one can do very much effective work. The people are very different from those at home, but are, indeed, very interesting. Japan in general is very interesting. The ways of the people, many of them, are very much like those of old Bible times. The temples and their forms of worship are in many ways like those mentioned in the Old Testament."

Sister Andrews says: "For various reasons Miss Cypert and I decided it would be better to move into a Japanese house, and acted upon our decision, and are now comfortably situated in a real Japanese house with sliding doors and windows and mats on the floors. The house is a new one and is so easy to keep clean. The rooms in a Japanese house are made so many mats large. The mats are six by three feet, and about two inches thick. This thickness causes the floor to be real soft, and until one becomes accustomed to the softness he has a sensation while walking across the room that he is on dangerous ground. At any rate, that was my experience. We remove our shoes at the entrance and wear soft bedroom slippers in the house. The strangest thing I think about a Japanese house is that the prettiest part of the house and yard is at what we would call the back, and the kitchen, etc., is alongside the entrance. We have great fun sitting on the floor on receiving our guests. We are both very fond of Japanese food and have it quite often. I love Japan and love the work, but find the language quite difficult, although it is easier now than at first. I have two private teachers now, and am beginning to do some direct work-that is, without an interpreter-and find it much more satisfying. I do some work among the English-speaking Japanese, and enjoy it. I am to begin an English Bible class on Sunday, and am looking forward to it with joyful anticipation.

Japan is ready to receive the gospel. Will you help send it there? Brother I. B. Bradley has been very faithful in sending funds to Sister Andrews, but Sister Cypert has not been receiving sufficient to meet all expenses. Will you send a gift for her now, and who will plan to send something, whether much or little, once each month? Address Miss Nellie Straiton, 1030 South Lake Street, Fort Worth, Tayas.

Mr. W. A. Gorski, Secretary of the Polish Victims' Relief Fund, sends the following acknowledgment: "On behalf of the starving women and children of Poland, we acknowledge with deep gratitude receipt of your generous contribution of $503.12. Will you forgive me for being so bold as to allow myself to congratulate you upon the splendid results which have been achieved by your paper on our behalf? May I also be allowed to express to you, on behalf of our committee, our very heartfelt and sincere thanks for all you have done and are doing for us?"

Here is another acknowledgment from Edward J. Williams, Assistant Treasurer of the Commission for Relief in Belgium: "The commissioner begs to acknowledge with many thanks your generous donation of $76.87, representing contributions from the readers of the Gospel Advocate."

On the same date we sent a check for $1,172.64 to the American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief and await their acknowledgment, which will appear later.

Brother John H. Arms writes from Celina, Tenn.: "Permit me to give you a little scheme that Brother W. T. Roberts (the leader) and I have worked out for the Pine Branch congregation. He suggested to me that he thought it a good plan to have a once-a-month meeting instead of a protracted meeting, and asked me to visit them once a month, with the understanding with the people that this plan had been adopted for the remainder of this year. This suggestion was made in the spring. I told him that I would accept the plan on one condition—to wit: That all the monthly contributions on the days that I was with them were to go to relief of war sufferers, thus turning the amount which otherwise would go to defray the expenses of the protracted meeting over to this God-ordained and blessed work of—like our Lord—relieving human suffering in His name. May God help us all to see and do our duty in this hour of calamity, and more fully realize what a blessed privilege it is to be able to serve as He served."

In sending contributions, be sure and state whether they are intended for the Armenian and Syrian Fund or the Poland Fund. Make all checks and money orders payable to A. B. Lipscomb, who will forward them to the proper commissioners.

"A Correction of T. B. Larimore" Corrected.

BY J. W. CHISM.

In the Gospel Advocate of June 6, on page 531, 1 note a criticism, called "A Correction of T. B. Larimore," by H. L. Walling, in which the corrector is the one needing correction. He contends that there is a difference in the word "bread" and "loaf," and thinks Brother Larimore should follow the words as used in the Common Version of the Bible. He says: "In feeding the five thousand it is 'loaf' -five loaves. Not so in the passover supper. In the passover supper it was 'unleavened bread.' . . . A loaf of bread is leavened, massive. So Jesus used unleavened bread, and he and all inspired men called it 'bread.' I am greatly surprised that Brother Larimore has never seen the difference. Matthew called it 'bread,' Mark called it 'bread.' . . . I am going by the Bible, and it says 'bread' all the time when speaking of the cake in the Lord's Supper. Paul speaks of the 'bread.' See 1 Cor. 10: 17: 'For we being many are one bread, and one body: for we are all partakers of that one bread."

Permit me to say, Brother Walling, that the mistake is yours all the way through, and not Brother Larimore's. For in Matt. 14: 17, "five loaves," Greek "artous;" Matt. 26: 26, of the supper, "bread," Greek "arton; "1 Cor. 10: 17, for "bread," Greek "artos" and "arton." The only difference in these Greek words is the difference in case, and one is plural. So the same Greek word is used by both the Lord, Matthew, and Paul for the common loaf, or bread, and for the unleavened loaf, or bread. The only distinction not being one is bread and the other loaf, but the word "unleavened" is used to qualify and tell what kind of loaf or bread was used in the passover. Now, I suppose Brother Campbell, being a scholar, said in the Greek it was the same word. I did not see his statement, so I cannot say. But Brother Campbell was a scholar, and knew that there was no difference in the words given in the Bible, and only a difference in the Common Version. Permit me to say that corrections based on the Common Version may not be well taken, because it does not at all translate the same word the same way every time.

I hope Brother Walling will get his Greek Testament and look this up, or, if he cannot himself, go to some brother and have him look it up for him.

The Tennessee Orphans' Home, Columbia, Tenn., is moving on splendidly. A good work is being done in a quiet way. No one is now employed to solicit funds for the Home, so we have decided to ask the churches to make a contribution for the Home on July 7, the first Lord's day in July. The funds for feeding and clothing the orphans are running low.

AT HOME AND ABROAD

Brother McQuiddy has returned from a brief stay at Red Bolling Springs, Tenn.

Do not overlook the offering for the Tennessee Orphans' Home the first Sunday in July.

I. B. Bradley, of Dickson, Tenn., is in a good meeting at Riverside, Tenn. There were two confessions at last report.

James A. Allen is conducting a meeting at the mission on Twenty-second Avenue, North. Services every night this week.

Brother Elam was called home from his Texas meeting on account of sickness. The prospects for a successful meeting were very bright.

C. R. Nichol has severed his connection with the school at Thorp Spring, Texas, and will be in the field from this time forward for meetings.

From L. M. Ward, Poplar Bluff, Mo.: "I wish to express my heartfelt thanks to you for continuing the paper to me, for it certainly is a welcome visitor to our home."

A. B. Lipscomb has gone to Dallas, Texas, for a meeting, and will be absent from the office until July 16. The indulgence of correspondents is asked pending his return. And he also asks for the prayers of the saints.

W. A. Austin writes: "I have been a subscriber to the Gospel Advocate for twenty-seven years. I intend to continue such as long as I live. As the old brother said in a recent issue, "my family need it," and I will add that I also need it. Long may it live to uphold the truth!"

The Gospel Advocate learns with sorrow of the death of Sam P. Pittman's father, aged eighty years. He died at Jacksonville, Fla., June 17, and was buried at Bells, Tenn., June 20. We hope to print a longer notice of this departed saint. To all the bereaved we extend loving sympathy.

From P. C. Rankin, Monticello, Ky., June 11: "On account of the sickness of Brother Billingsley and the coming of the Chautauqua, our meeting closed on Lord's-day night, with six additions and the church greatly strengthened. Brother Eugene Pearson was with us also during the meeting. He is making a great many friends."

From Isaac C. Hoskins, Florence, Ala., June 17: "Please kindly state in your valuable paper that the church of Christ in Florence meets in a large, red, brick house with a spire, at the corner of Tombigbee and Poplar Streets. I mention this because 'The Central Christian Church,' a digressive organization, is but two blocks away from us. Many visitors are coming here."

To any church or person who will send us six new subscribers to the Gospel Advocate, accompanied by twelve dollars, we will give one dozen copies of our new hymn book, "Praise Him." Add postage for parcel or transportation. Act promptly while this liberal offer is good. Address the McQuiddy Printing Company, 317-319 Fifth Avenue, North, Nashville, Tenn.

Brother Larimore writes: "We are pleased with California, and are getting along very nicely. While we are now staying in Berkeley, I am preaching in San Francisco each Sunday and every night, the round trip from here to our preaching place being twenty-five miles, across the bay. We expect to leave Berkeley for Nashville on July 9 and reach Nashville about July 20. We will spend a week or ten days in Nashville."

T. H. Young and Mrs. Susie S. Fulmer each have a farm for sale, about eight miles from Florence, Ala., near the nitrate plant that is now under construction by the United States government. Their reason for selling is to locate near a good Christian college and a congregation of loyal disciples of Christ. The farms join each other, consisting of one hundred and twenty-two acres. Three farms can easily be made out of the tract.

From J. P. Lowrey, Senatobia, Miss.: "I had a fine meeting at Paragould, Ark., with six additions. I spent two days in Memphis with Brother Hardeman in the Harbert Avenue meeting last week, and saw Sister Neely for the first time since she moved to Memphis. I appreciate your favorable comment on my appeal in the interest of the church at Senatobia. We must have some help here that we may be able to push this work."

Mrs. Jennie Clarke writes from the Belle Haven Orphans' Home, Luling, Texas: "Within the next ten days we are planning to start the erection of our church house at the Belle Haven Orphans' Home, and we earnestly request that you send liberal offerings during the progress of the work, so that we may be able to settle in full by the time the building is completed, which is to be of hollow tile, a more substantial building than the one we lost in the cyclone."

From U. G. Wilkinson, Comanche, Okla., June 20: "The mission meeting at Gracemont, Okla., closed last Sunday morning with fine interest and good attention. It was well supported in every way, for which we are very thankful, We start soon for Arkansas and Missouri for summer and fall meetings, beginning at Bristow, Okla., and proceeding northward into Arkansas and then into Missouri. I hope that all places where I am booked for meetings will do their best to be ready."

From Mrs. T. J. McRae, San Francisco, Cal., June 16: "T. B. Larimore began our meeting, preaching to good congregations morning and evening. There were a number of visitors present. We thank God and take courage, trusting that much good may be accomplished through this meeting of four weeks, every evening except Saturday, at our new address, 222 Van Ness Avenue, near the City Hall. We would be glad to have all who can to come and enjoy these meetings with us."

From H. B. Young, Windrock, Tenn.: "I am preaching again on Sundays. I will visit my family next Saturday and Sunday and preach on Saturday night and Sunday evening. I am to do some baptizing Sunday morning. A word of explanation is probably in order in regard to my visiting my family. I am working at Windrock, in Anderson County, some fifty miles from my home, near Evensville. I think I will quit here about the first of September. After then I think I will be so situated that I can devote one-third of my time to preaching in destitute places at my own charges."

From John R. Weathers, Washington, D. C., June 16: "The church of Christ worshiping at the Masonic Temple, near the corner of F and Eighth Streets, Northeast, this city, is increasing nicely in numbers, the congregation having grown from a few to perhaps more than seventy-five souls. We are greatly encouraged and feel that the Lord is blessing the effort here to establish a congregation of faithful disciples of the apostolic type. Christians of this character coming to this city at any time will find a sincere, brotherly welcome at our place of worship. The elders of our congregation are T. F. Colvin, 2536 Eleventh Street, N. W., and J. W. Gibson, 2500 Pennsylvania Avenue, S. E."

We sincerely hope that our readers will consider carefully and respond liberally to the appeal in behalf of Miss Sarah Andrews' mission work in Japan. Concerning this work I. B. Bradley writes: "The Sarah Andrews' mission fund is running pretty low, and as treasurer of this fund I make this appeal to all those who have formerly had fellowship in this work to send me a contribution for this work right away. The June remittance is due to go forward the 30th inst., and the amount is short about onethird at this writing. Can you not send again to the work, and do it right away, so that I can start the usual amount on the accustomed time? Do not lay this aside and forget this reminder and request, but write me that note and inclose me your contribution now. Do this, and then at the end of next month do not forget that we will need your fellowship again. The workers, Miss Sarah Andrews and Miss Lillie Cypert, are not complaining, but they require a certain amount each month or they must be embarrassed for lack of the necessary funds to meet their expenses. Can we afford to let our workers be humiliated for lack of the small amount that we ought to give to assist in this work? They have left their comfortable homes and loved ones and are making great sacrifices to teach the Japanese the word of God. Shall we not fellowship them in this noble work? Yes, and we will. Send by check (bank or private), money order, or currency. 'I thank God for your fellowship in the gospel from the first until now.' The Lord loveth a cheerful giver.' 'He that giveth, let him do it with liberality.'" Brother Bradley's address is Dickson, Tenn.

The Sad Case in the Highlands and the Duty of the Hour.

BY M. C. K.

One of the saddest chapters in Louisville religious history culminated in the wholly unscriptural and almost unprecedented action taken by the Highland church of Christ in its withdrawal of Christian fellowship from Brethren R. O. Rubel and C. A. Taylor on the evening of May 16, 1918. In last week's issue of the Gospel Advocate, our readers, in the statement placed before them by Brethren Rubel and Taylor and by the comments of my editorial colleague, were introduced to some of the details of that unique chapter. As this most regrettable culmination of unwise teaching and methods has not only occurred right in my own home city and field of labor, but is concerned directly and personally with two men whose unassailable business and Christian characters are minutely known to me and to hundreds of others to be stainless and above reproach, some kind of statement, on the merits of the case, is expected from me, and I shall try to make that statement in the fear of God.

First of all, on account of the well and widely known character and high standing of the two men singled out and made the hapless victims of the unholy proceedings described in our columns last week, good and intelligent people of our city, who know the two men thus dealt with, are thoroughly indignant over the action and do not hesitate to pronounce it an outrage. They could not bring themselves to believe, until forced to such belief by facts, that a church could ever become so blinded and misled. even under unwise leadership, as to be guilty of such a deed against such men.

In my statement and discussion of facts concerning the sad affair, I shall speak, not only in the light of the speculative opinions which have been so unnecessarily and so unwisely pressed in our city and elsewhere in recent years, and which, at least in some of the positions advocated, are merely a revamp of Russellism, but I shall speak especially in the light of my personal knowledge of the two men dealt with in this action; and I think it not improper to say that if, under the circumstances which I shall name, I have not been able to find out these men and to know their characters, then it would be impossible ever to find out and know the characters of men. I have known R. O. Rubel over thirty-two years, and have had unbroken association with him of more or less intimacy during all of these years, and there has never been a day during that period when, on the roll of sterling integrity and spotless Christian character, any man stood higher in either the business or the religious community; and I have known C. A. Taylor over twenty-five years and have been similarly associated with him during all of this time, and there has never been a day throughout that long period when, on the same honorable roll, he did not occupy the same high position. When I was called to the Campbell Street Church in February, 1886, Brother Rubel was one of its deacons, and remained in that capacity for about twelve years, when there came an opening to establish a new congregation in his neighborhood in the Highlands. Then he and a number of other noble men and women of the Campbell Street Church, and some from other places, united in forming the new congregation; and from that bright and auspicious day on without a break, until Brother Jorgenson's ministerial administration came, there was the sweetest friendship and fellowship between the two congregations. That happy condition is now destroyed.

Brother Taylor is a son of the lamented and venerable preacher, George G. Taylor, a model Christian gentleman and one of the most pious of men, and it was by that noble father and an equally noble mother that he was brought up to a life of rigid piety and the strictest reverence for the word of God and for the church. Endowed by nature with more than ordinary talent and speaking ability and equipped with a good education, including a knowledge of the word of God, he is more than a match for any man in the pulpit who dares to depart from that word. In addition to this splendid equipment, it would be difficult to find a man in whom the qualities which constitute high Christian character are more evenly poised or more prominent than they are in Brother Taylor. He is not only a cultured and polished Christian gentleman in all the walks of life, but particularly in his church life, in contending for what he believes to be the truth and opposing what he believes to be error, he is calm, deliberate, and gentle in his manner and methods, exhibiting the power of self-control in an eminent degree; and even in critical situations and under strong provocation, when his positions are under fire and he is bitterly opposed, the same calm and unruffled manner marks his conduct. In short, I know of no two men in the church of God to-day, either in Louisville or anywhere else, more worthy of Christian fellowship than are these two men, and scores of witnesses would gladly testify that they have this character. I would be inexcusably remiss, when I know these things to be true of them, if I did not state them at an hour when they are made the victims of cruel injustice. Hence, anybody who knows them knows that there was something wrong somewhere in some way and for some reason on the part of those who managed to bring about the church's withdrawal from them.

Hence, let us look into the merits of that action. Aside from any consideration of the speculative opinions which have been pressed in that congregation to the point of alienation and division, some things occurred at that withdrawal meeting which, even if we did not know the splendid Christian life and character of the two men withdrawn from, show plainly and conclusively that, for some reason, those carrying out the program were determined not to be just, but to carry their point in spite of justice. We need no further proof of this than the following, which, having occurred the moment before the withdrawal, is a complete demonstration of it:

"We were asked," say Rubel and Taylor, "if we had We were not prepared, on the spur of anything to say. the moment, to make our defense before the church against the charge of being 'factionists,' and so requested time to prepare our defense, and that action on the motion be postponed to another meeting a day or two later. sonable and in every way proper request was coldly re-fused us, . . and we were informed that we would have no other opportunity to make our defense before the church except to do so then and there. We were not prepared to do this at once and declined to attempt it, again requesting a short delay until we could prepare our anand again our request was ruthlessly refused, and a vote on Brother Janes' motion was called for and taken and a majority voted to withdraw from us.'

As our readers were informed last week, Brother A. Y. Malcomson, a prominent business man of Detroit, Mich., who is not only a very intelligent and well-informed man in both business matters and in religion, but is every inch a Christian gentleman, was present at the meeting. As the air in Louisville was thick with rumors of what had occurred and he was the only disinterested person present, he was subsequently asked to kindly give his impressions of the meeting and its action in such a statement as he would be willing to have given to the public. Complying with this request, he makes the following statement:

610 Congress Building, Detroit, Mich., June 5, 1918.-To the Brotherhood: I have been requested by some of the brethren of the Highland Church at Louisville, Ky., to relate my recent experience at a meeting held there Thursday evening, May 16, 1918. I happened to be in Louisville to keep an appointment with a gentleman from Chattanooga on Thursday morning, and expected to leave for home on the noon train of the same day. Before noon I received a wire asking that I remain in town until Friday, as my party had not received word from me in time to keep our original appointment.

Learning that there was a regular midweek prayer meeting at the Highland Church on Thursday evening, I went out to meet the brethren, and to enjoy that fellowship which, to me, is always inviting. When I arrived, I found that the meeting was largely of a business nature, called to dispose of several matters of interest, which were soon laid before the meeting. It was quite evident that an underlying spirit of unrest, of uneasiness, pervaded the meeting, and the developments of the evening showed that the very peace and integrity of the congregation were at stake. Many gravely important questions came up which called for the wisdom and best judgment of the brethren for safe guidance and prayerful direction. Brother Jorgenson, their preacher, acted as chairman of the meeting.
It appears that certain charges had been brought against Brethren Taylor and Rubel, and that many conferences had been held in relation to the matter, apparently without A committee had been appointed, of which Brother Jorgenson was a member, and had arrived at a definite conclusion based on which they were prepared to take action at once. Consequently, a report was read, recommending withdrawal of fellowship from Brethren Taylor and Rubel, and the congregation was asked to vote on it. Before the question was formally put, however, Brother Taylor arose and stated that he did not wish to speak for or defend himself, but he did want to see Brother Rubel receive a fair trial, and that, if Brother Rubel so desired, he would speak for him. Brother Taylor. therefore, suggested a postponement of action until Monday or Tuesday following, enabling him and Brother Rubel to get their bearings and present their case to the congregation in a more intelligent and clear-cut manner. This request seemed reasonable, but, after much discussion, was overruled in favor of the following action. Brother Rubel was given the privilege of having Brother Taylor speak for him right then and there, or, if postponement for a few days be granted, he would have to speak for himself, and then submit the substance of his defense, preferably in writing, to the committee before he would be allowed to Both propositions were declined.

Brother Jorgenson then called on me to address the meeting at the request of Brother Don Carlos Janes. cepted his invitation to say a few words, and in substance said I was glad and sorry to be present-glad to meet the brethren and sisters of Highland, but sorry to learn of the disturbance. I emphasized the fact that Brethren Taylor and Rubel should be granted their request, and that as brethren they were entitled to a fair hearing. know the merits of the case-in fact, I had never seen Brother Rubel before-but I did know Brother Taylor. No matter what the circumstances, however, the principle of a fair trial is sound and based on universal legal experience. I further offered to send Brother Campbell from Detroit, at my own expense, to advise with the Louisville brethren and try and straighten the matter out for the best interests of the church. My suggestion was resented and, from many expressions which I heard, was taken as a matter of interference.

The motion to withdraw fellowship was then voted on and passed. (Personally, I have always been opposed to church voting on matters of this kind; such action seldom brings anything but unsatisfactory results.) I regret to say that, to me, the whole atmosphere of the meeting was arbitrary and unchristian, and I cannot but feel that if the brethren and sisters fully realized the seriousness of the situation, some other solution would have been found. The meeting broke up in disorder, and without even a prayer of dismissal.

Deeply regretting the situation, and hoping that right-coursess may yet prevail, I am, Yours fraternally, ALEXANDER Y. MALCOMSON.

Exactly so. And thus it is seen that the testimony of Brother Malcomson, an intelligent and wholly disinterested witness, is in perfect harmony with that of Brethren Rubel and Taylor and confirms their statement touching the character of the proceedings. It is not surprising that a meeting which "was arbitrary and unchristian," and called for the purpose of dealing in such a manner with such men, "broke up in disorder and without even a prayer of dismissal." Neither order nor prayer would be appropriate to its purpose; and every right-thinking Christian who knows the facts, as stated by Brother Malcomson, would be ashamed not to look upon such gross injustice to men as a piece of high-handed wickedness. It is to be regretted that his generous offer to send Brother Campbell to advise with the brethren was not accepted instead of being "resented." What a pity that either he or some other good and wise man, outside of the local field, could not have been permitted to advise the Highland brethren and thus, perhaps, save the church from the stain and guilt of such action as now lies at its door! It is universally conceded among all civilized peoples that even the basest criminals, brought before courts of civil justice, are entitled to be heard in their own defense; but here is a church of the living God trampling the sacred principle underfoot and refusing two of its accused members time to answer charges that are made against them! Why this hasty action? Even granting, for argument's sake, that they were "factionists" and much else besides, why such haste? Why not give them time to prepare and present their answer to the charges against them? Such proceeding carries on its very face its own condemnation, and that church will stand in this light until it rights the wrong.

There are gray-haired men and women in the Highland Church who I cannot believe indorse such proceeding, and they owe it to Brethren Rubel and Taylor, to their own congregation, and to the church of God at large, to bring the leaders and instigators of the crime to a strict account and to demand of them to undo, as far as they can, the great wrong that has been done. I, am glad to see that Brother Logsdon, one of the best men among them and who was induced to vote for the wrong action, has already acted the true and noble Christian that he is by magnanimously going to Brethren Rubel and Taylor and acknowledging that he had wronged them by taking part in such action, and proposing to do anything within his power to right the wrong.

I spoke advisedly when I said that this case was "almost unprecedented." In 1892, now twenty-six years ago, another case, exactly parallel to this one, occurred in one of the Louisville churches in the controversy over the organ and societies. Brother John T. Frazier, of blessed memory, who was the brother who took the lead in opposing these innovations, was charged with being "disorderly," but the only specification in the charge brought against him, according to that church's own statement of the case, was that he made "public announcement in the congregation of dissent from a position taken by the preacher." These are the exact words of that church in its statement of the charge brought against him; and not only upon this charge alone was he withdrawn from by the majority of that part of the church that was induced to attend the meeting to act on his case, but in the face of his earnest plea, and the plea of some of his friends, to be allowed to be heard before the church in his own defense, they refused to grant the request and turned him out without a hearing! Thus he was gotten out of the way of the "progress" the church wanted to make, and it continued its support of the societies and in a short time introduced the organ. The following Sunday morning Brother Frazier applied at the Campbell Street Church for membership, and, of course, we received him cordially and gladly into the fellowship of the church. The scene is still fresh and vivid in my mind as we received him amid tears of both joy and sadness. We treated him as Jesus treated the blind man who was unjustly turned out of the synagogue-we "found him" and stood by him.

And again, on Sunday morning following the withdrawal from Brethren Rubel and Taylor, the Campbell Street brethren, having been notified that they and others of the Highland Church would come to worship with us that day, held a conference and, among other things, unanimously authorized me to read from the pulpit the following statement: "In view of the unmitigated outrage committed by one of our city congregations against some of its best members, some of whom, we are glad to note, are in our audience this morning, we deem it proper to say, and are sure that it voices the sentiment of this entire church, that, while they have under consideration the matter of deciding on what course they will pursue, they will be cordially and entirely welcome in our worship here on Sunday morning, and we shall be glad at all times to see them."

Here are two strange and sad coincidences. One of the men who stood by Brother Frazier and assisted and upheld him in his brave and manly course was Brother George C. Taylor, the father of C. A. Taylor; and some of the members of the church withdrawing from Frazier, who left that church with him and came to the Campbell Street Church, are now with, and standing by, those who have withdrawn from Brother C. A. Taylor. The latter church has done to Brother Taylor precisely what the former church did to Brother Frazier and in precisely the same way. It would be interesting for them to explain the logic by which they turn away from one church for doing a thing to Brother Frazier, and then stand by another church in doing the same thing to Brother Taylor.

To all well-informed persons the duty of the hour in such a situation is plain. Such usurpation and abuse of power as is disclosed by this case is an outrage upon New Testament church polity, and the churches and preachers everywhere should look upon it as such. Whatever differences may exist and may even continue to exist, it is an established fact, beyond all controversy, that a most unwise and unchristian course has been pursued and a great injustice done, and I hope and pray that the brethren who ought to be in control in the Highland Church will yet realize the true nature of their unfortunate act, and that they will make proper amends for it. May the Lord overrule and lead them to do so.

BY E. A. E.

WE MUST BELIEVE THE SCRIPTURES.

My kind readers, without "any ifs or ands" and "buts," without any speculations and theories of our own, without any hobbies or dodging, and regardless of the failure of the many or the few to practice them, do you believe with all your heart the scriptures quoted last week and all the rest which could be quoted on the fact that Christians are the house of God, the family of God, the building and temple and church of God? Do you believe with all your heart "that the temple of God is holy;" that your "body is a temple of the Holy Spirit which is in you, which ye have from God;" that you are not your own, but have been bought with a price; and that you must "glorify God in your body?" Do you really believe that each one is a living stone built "unto a spiritual house," fitly framed together" by the divine Architect "for a habitation of God in the Spirit?" Do you know that you cannot abuse in any way your body, because it is a temple of God? Do you know that God declares that if any man destroys the temple of God, him will God destroy?

Paul was not an extremist, but he teaches all to keep their consciences void of offense toward God and men, and points out the great sin of influencing the weakest child of God to violate his conscience. He teaches that the men whose consciences are seared as with a hot iron cannot be moved by the gospel of Christ or any principles of justice and mercy, righteousness and true holiness. There is no salvation for the man without a conscience. Paul teaches us to follow him because he followed Christ. (1 Cor. 11: 1.) Paul kept his body under; we must keep ours under. Paul kept a conscience void of offense toward God and men: so must we.

Neither was Paul a hobbyist; yet he determined to know nothing "save Jesus Christ, and him crucified"—that is, he preached Christ crucified at all times and in all places—"in season, out of season"—and determined to preach nothing else.

Let me ask again in seriousness and in earnest and in view of the judgment, what right has the preacher of the gospel to preach anything else? What blessing has God bestowed on the preacher who preaches anything else?

The greatest preachers in the world to-day are the ones who in the spirit of Christ and in reverence for God do not shrink from declaring "the whole counsel of God," who "preach the word," who are "not ashamed of the gospel," who determine to know nothing else, and who are afraid to go "beyond the things which are written" (1 Cor. 4: 6).

It is not difficult to learn what "the whole counsel of God" is when preachers determine to preach nothing else. It is "all things that pertain unto life and godliness" (see 2 Pet. 1: 3, 4); all things that are "profitable for teaching, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness: that the man of God may be complete, furnished completely unto every good work" (2 Tim. 3: 16, 17).

Whosoever goeth onward and abideth not in the teaching of Christ, hath not God: he that abideth in the teaching, the same hath both the Father and the Son. (2 John 9.)

It is a most fearful thing to teach more than the word of God or to shrink from teaching, or to fail, and especially, to refuse, to teach, the whole of the word of God. Paul determined not to teach more, not to teach less, and not to know anything else.

The covetous and false prophet, Balaam, "who loved the hire of wrongdoing" (2 Pet. 2: 15, 16), knew he could not go beyond the word of God "to do more or less." To the messengers of Balak, who had "the rewards of divination in their hands" to pay him, and who requested him to only name his price, if they had not offered him enough (see Num. 22: 7, 16, 17), he replied:

If Balak would give me his house full of silver and gold, I cannot go beyond the word of Jehovah my God, to do more or less. (Num. 22: 18.)

He wanted the money, he coveted and loved it, and would have cursed and betrayed God's people in order to get it, but he knew he could not change the word of God. He would have changed it for money if he could have done so, but he knew he could not; and yet, after God's refusal to allow him to go and God's strong reproof, he went and made three efforts to curse the people God had blessed.

I devoutly wish that all preachers to-day knew as much as Balaam—namely, that they cannot "go beyond the word of Jehovah . . . to do more or less." Knowing that we cannot do this, we must know it is foolish to attempt it.

Paul asked the Corinthians, who were disturbed by the worldly-wise (see 1 Cor. 1: 18-31; 2: 6-9; 3: 18-22), if the word of God went forth from them, or, at least, if God spoke through them alone, or if to them alone the word of God had been revealed (see 1 Cor. 14: 36). "No prophecy of scripture is of any private ["special"—margin] interpretation." (2 Pet. 1: 20.) No one man, no one congregation, no earthly ecclesiasticism has any "corner" on the word of God, to give it some "private" or "special" interpretation or denominational twist, or to say, as in the Dark Ages, who shall study it or teach it to others, and when and where.

Let us study anew Paul's speech to the elders of Ephesus. (Acts 20: 17-38.) He first emphasized the fact that they knew his manner of life "from the first day" he had "set foot in Asia until his departure"-namely, that he had served the Lord "with all lowliness of mind, and with tears, and with trials" which befell him "by the plots of the Jews." He set a good example, even working with his own hands in order to show the church that so laboring they should make something to give to the needy. He did not preach the importance of work while he himself with soft hands stood aloof from it and refused to do it. For the purpose of showing the church how to help the weak and that they ought to work, he worked with his own hands. With all the persecution of the Jews upon him, he did not shrink from declaring anything profitable to the church; but he taught "publicly, and from house to house," the things which aroused prejudice and brought upon himself persecution. With bonds and afflictions awaiting him at Jerusalem, he was on his way to that city, not holding his life dear unto himself in order "to testify the gospel of the grace of God." He was "pure from the blood of all men," because he had not shrunk "from declaring" unto them "the whole counsel of God," and for "the space of three years" had "ceased not to admonish every one night and day with tears." He warned the elders to first take heed to themselves-to set the church a good example, as he had done-and next to feed the flock. He then commended all to God and to the study and guidance of "the word of his grace."

No preacher has any right to spend any of his time—not an hour—in preaching his private interpretations, riding his hobbies, and giving his views; he must "preach the word," "first, last, and all the time," and he must teach all to worship God "as it is written" "in spirit and truth," must not go "beyond the things which are written," and, if he would resist Satan, he must say as did Jesus so often, "It is written." (Matt. 4: 4, 7, 10.) Were it not for that which "is written," we would have no "sword of the Spirit," no word of God, no guide, and no light.

What God has "written" is no man's view, speculation, hobby, theory, or private interpretation. That Christians must not love the world, must come out from it and be separate, must keep unspotted from it, must not have its spirit, and must not be governed by its wisdom, but must love God, must love men—neighbors, brethren, and enemies—are not the views and interpretations of men, but the commands of God, which all must obey or be lost. God's word cannot be set aside by saying it is some man's view, or hobby, or speculation. People worship God to-day either "as it is written" or according to the doctrines and commandments of men. The latter is vain worship. We must preach "as it is written," practice "as it is written," live "as it is written," die "as it is written," be judged "as it is written," and be saved "as it is written."

Just "as it is written" we are endeavoring to learn what the church is, what the world is, what "church work" is, and the difference between the church and the world.

The year's work was well done by both students and teachers. Friday was farewell day. Every train was filled with trunks and eager, anxious boys and girls to see home, some as far away as Texas and Iowa. Henderson is now quiet. The college bell is silent. The halls and classrooms are deserted. Many homes are sad. But all have turned their eyes toward the opening again in September.

A Message from Isaiah to the People of To-Day.

BY MORGAN H. CARTER,

"Cry aloud, spare not, lift up thy voice like a trumpet, and declare unto my people their transgression, and to the house of Jacob their sins. Yet they seek me daily, and delight to know my ways; as a nation that did righteousness, and forsook not the ordinance of their God, they ask of me righteous judgments; they delight to draw near unto God." (Isa, 58: 1, 2,)

Why should a people thus described be condemned? Have we to-day measured up to this standard-seeking God daily, delighting to know his ways. asking of him righteous indements. and delighting to draw near unto him. even as a nation that did righteous ness? Yea, furthermore, they fasted, and afflicted their soul; yet God did not hear them. "Wherefore seest thou not?" they asked; "and wherefore takest thou no knowledge of us?" Then comes Jehovah's reply: "Behold, in the day of your fast ye find your own pleasure, and exact all your labors. Behold, ye fast for strife and contention: . . . ye fast not this day so as to make your voice to be heard on high."

To bow down as a rush, to afflict their soul, to put on sackcloth and sit in ashes-this was their idea of a fast. They were ritualists. Having a form of godliness, they denied and forsook the power thereof. Having the letter of the law, they disregarded the spirit. The outward form, and not the God-given purpose, became the chief thing with them. Therefore God's messenger was commanded to cry aloud and "spare not." God hates callous indifference, dead forms. For even if they offered just the sacrifice God commanded, at the time he directed, what if love for Jehovah was not the supreme motive?

God had made the fast to loose the bonds of wickedness, to undo the bands of the yoke, and to let the oppressed go free. But they misused the fast. They went through the outward form, but did not obey the spirit of the holy command.

Furthermore, it was to deal bread to the hungry, to clothe the naked, to help the poor and outcast. They neglected these things, and God refused to hear their prayers and bless them. They said, "Wherefore?" So do men and churches to-day wonder at God's refusal to hear them. They see the church in their community drying up, the audiences decreasing and the worldliness increasing. They ask why And may we not well reply, in the light of this message, that there is form without the spirit, empty ritualism without Christ?

"But," you say, "we were baptized: we confessed Christ; we eat the Lord's Supper: we give of our means to God's work, and about as much as the average church; we are not extremists; we haven't gone wild about missions, but we do well, considering our ability." O, you do? And so did the Israelites flatter themselves in not only being as good as the average, but somewhat better, they thought, than those about them. Yet Jehovah said: "Ye make not your voice to be heard on high." And James said: "Ye ask, and receive not, because ye ask amiss, that ye may spend it in your pleasures '

Let God counsel us to-day, as he did Israel through Isaiah, that we put away from us the yoke of injustice and wicked speaking (for impure, unclean gossip and vulgarity are used by many claiming to be of Christ, and this is a great and inexcusable

Let your Christianity express itself in something worth while. "Draw out thy soul to the hungry, and satisfy the afflicted soul: then shall thy light rise in darkness, and thine obscurity be as the noonday; and Jehovah will guide thee continually, and satisfy thy soul in dry places, and make strong thy bones; and thou shalt be like a watered garden, and like a spring of water, whose waters fail not." secret of a living, giving, growing, going success is loving, faithful obedience to the whole program of the Christian as practiced and commanded by our Lord.

Some will give and pray long prayers to be seen of men; some will rob God and escape for the moment, and will say to the hungry, "Be warmed and filled," and will not give them the food and clothing essential; but the end of all such is certain and their destruction lingereth not. It shall come as a thief in the night. And they need not call for the mountains to fail upon them; for though they dig down to hell, yet they must meet their God, and in that day he shall say: "Depart from me, ye cursed, into the eternal fire which is prepared for the devil and his angels: for I was hungry, and ye did not give me to eat; I was thirsty, and ye gave me no drink; I was a stranger, and ye took me not in; naked, and ye clothed me not; sick, and in prison, and ye visited me not." They can mourn long and loudly, but it will be of no avail. A rejection of the wants and needs of our fellow men is a rejection of the wants and needs of God.

This is a day of grave responsibility and great opportunity. Unto those who, in their selfish, callous, ritualistic indifference, reject the call of God to serve and suffer and sacrifice, God will come as a burning fire, and will leave neither root nor branch. But unto those whom Jesus shall set upon his right hand, for whom the kingdom of heaven is prepared, his coming shall be for healing, and they shall enter in to dwell with the King. Which shall it be for you, my friendburning or healing? As you sow, so shall you reap. "Prepare to meet thy God."

McMurrien.

Ellis Key McMurrien was born on July 12, 1916, at Daisy, Ark., and died on June 11, 1918, at Buena Vista, Ark. Little Ellis was the grandson of Brother W. R. Key. He was sick but a few days. He was the life and joy of the family, and his calling away has cast a gloom that time alone can dissipate. He was such a bright, sweet little boy. May our God comfort and bless the parents and grandparents of this angel J. A. Cook.

Robinson.

On May 15, 1918, the angel of death visited the Robinson home at Bluff Springs, Ky., and claimed as its victim the wife of G. A. Robinson, de-Mary Elizabeth Robinson, ceased. daughter of Joseph W. and Mary Gosler Scates, was born on May 20, 1838. and was baptized into Christ in 1853 or 1854 by Alexander Campbell. She was married to G. A. Robinson on May 7, 1861, and to this union were born eight children. Sister Robinson leaves her children, ten grandchildren, two great-grandchildren, and a host of friends to mourn their loss. The writer was called to conduct funeral services at the Robinson graveyard.

Boyte.

The home of P. G. and Dockie Boyte has been filled with sadness. On March 26, 1918, death visited this home and took from them their only child, Margaret Ethridge. She was born on October 2, 1917. Little Marga-ret's life in this world was not long, she being permitted to live with her beloved parents only a few short months; but God always knows best. She was such a bright, sweet child, and we loved her so much. It is so sad to live here without her; but we have the sweet assurance that she is safe in the arms of Jesus, where nothing can harm her. The little darling has been permitted to enter into the joys without the sorrows of world. We cannot bring her back to us, but by following Jesus faithfully we can go to her. She leaves a heartbroken father and mother and a host of relatives to mourn her departure. To the sorrowing I would say: Listen to the words of Jesus: "Suffer little children, and forbid them not, to come unto me: for of such is the kingdom of heaven." Brother Lum Hall conducted the funeral services, after which her little body was laid to rest at Cane Creek cemetery, to await the resurrection morn. HER AUNT.

Black.

It is my purpose in writing this to bear some tribute to the memory of Alexander Black. He was born and reared in Warren County, Tenn., and was a soldier in the Confederate Army during the Civil War. He was born on August 22, 1846, being about sixteen years old when he entered the service. After the war was over, he married, on September 15, 1868, Miss Martha J. Luck, near Alexandria, Had he lived till September 15. 1918, they could have celebrated their golden wedding. He leaves his wife and his widowed daughter, Mrs. Alice Allen, with her three sons, to mourn their loss. I first knew Brother Black at Leiper's Fork (Hillsboro), where, after the war, he engaged successfully in the mercantile business. I have known him for thirty years, and for several years worshiped with him at the Hillsboro Church, where he maintained the reputation of a good, Christian gentleman. His integrity was unquestioned. Several years ago he sold out his business at Hillsboro and moved to Nashville. With constantly failing health, he passed away at his home in Inglewood on Saturday, May 12. 1918. A warm-hearted, genial, friend he was to all with whom he came in contact; a loving, loyal husband and an indulgent father; a member of the body of Christ. Let all of us mourn his loss to us, but hope for his gain in heaven.

Churchgoing and Matrimony.

City people are learning what has been known to the way-back country folks from time immemorial-that churchgoing leads to love and matrimony.

The institutional church scheme is proving wonderfully productive of marriages. One church, with its large Sunday school, its gymnasium, athletic clubs, sociables, picnics, and its hundred other interests, is averaging about a dozen marriages a month. The big choir of one hundred and fifty members has been keeping cupid and the parson on the jump. Fortunately, the law restricting marriages of teachers does not hold in Sunday schools, and several have taken advantage of the privilege.

Human nature is much the same in all grades of life the world over. The bashful young man of the country whose soul is in his gaze across the meetinghouse at the girl of his choice in her Sunday best, and who at last generates enough courage to wait for her at the door and ask to see her home, is not different either in instinct or in temperament from the more polished and more bold young man of the big city. Love levels us

In the country and the small towns the church is the center of social intercourse; and to thousands of young men and young women who have gone into the cities to work, and have few connections or acquaintances there, the church serves the same social purpose. The young women in city boarding houses who have no opportunity to meet young men of their class, nor any place to receive them, find both in the institutional church.

"The club and social life for the city's young people," says a Brooklyn superintendent, "is most beneficial. While I would not say that it is a necessity for church existence in a large city, I must say that it is very helpful to our work in the church and helpful as well to the young."

In these times of hasty, reckless marrying, the church courtship exerts its beneficent influence. The truest and most perfect unions are contracted through the wholesome friendships begun in the churches.—The Christian Herald.

Nearly everybody is born righthanded; and vet two, and some authorities say four, out of every hundred are left-handed. In a test of two thousand school children, it was found that four and one-half per cent of the girls and five and one-half per cent of the boys used the left hand in preference to the right. The popular impression has been that to be born lefthanded is a misfortune and to a certain degree a hindrance, to be cured as soon as possible by teaching the children to use the right hand in preference. This is a mistake. Nature made no slip at all. She intended to make the person left-handed by making the right lobe of the brain larger, throwing the emphasis on the muscles of the left arm. Hence the time and labor in curing the person of lefthandedness is lost, and makes only a moderately efficient right hand at the cost of the left. If any boy ever played snowball with a left-handed schoolfellow called a "southpaw," he knew that he would get it in the face, breast, or legs, as the thrower intended. Or, if the test were made as to who could knock a tin can off the top of a stick a certain number of yards away, with a stone, it would be seen that the left-handed boy would be far in the lead, thus illustrating the fact stated in the Bible that it takes a left-handed man to hit a mark with a stone. Here it is: "Among all this people there were seven hundred chosen men left-handed; every one could sling stones at a hairbreadth, and not miss." (Judg. 20: 16.)-F. C. Iglehart, in The Christian Herald.

Calomel Salivates and Makes You Sick

Abilene Christian College Notes.

BY J. P. SEWELL.

Abilene Christian College has just closed her best and most pleasant year. In spite of drought and war, our attendance was larger than ever, the students did better work, and our faculty was stronger. Forty-seven did the work entitling them to first-grade State teachers' certificates and there were nine graduates. The commencement exercises were very nice, and more of our friends and patrons attended them than in the past.

Our students accepted Christ up to the very close. On Sunday night before the programs were to begin on Thursday night there was a confession, and this was repeated each night until the programs began. And after it was all over and almost every one had gone, one fine girl came and asked to be baptized before she went home.

Without being urged, but because of the teaching and influence, several of the best boys in school determined to preach the gospel.

Prospects are fine for next session. A majority of our rooms are engaged now before our campaign begins.

We are extending our Bible work by adding many courses of practical work for preachers and others who desire to become efficient church workers. We are making our Fine Arts Department as strong as the very best. We are adding much to our College Department. We have twentyone strong teachers in our faculty for

We are thankful for the blessings of the past and are looking to the future with hope.

Minneapolis Mission Report.

BY IRA B. HENTHORN.

I here give a report of the Minneapolis mission as of June 5:

Receipts: From Sophie Wiley, California, $3; Highlands congregation, Louisville, Ky., $5; A. M. Burton, Tennessee, $10; "A Brother," Indiana, $2; E. H. Martin and wife, Minnesota, $4; Minneapolis contributions, $41.65; balance on hand, April 1, $143.51. Total, $209.16.

Disbursements: Supplies, song books, etc., $8.75; rent on building for meeting, $45; advertising meeting, $32.77; evangelist for meeting, $79. Total, $165.52.

Balance on hand, June 5, $43.64.

The above statement leaves us with a few unpaid items of expense of small amounts. We had great difficulty in finding a hall which we could secure every night and Lord's day also, and finally had to take a building formerly used as a moving-picture theater in a Catholic neighborhood.

In spite of wide advertising and many personal calls on the people of the locality, we were unable to get out a great many. The net visible results were two baptisms and a strong impression on a number of both friends and strangers who heard the gospel preached in its purity probably for the first time.

Brother Maple and wife went on to Huron, S. D., for a meeting, and will stop on their way east about July 1, and we plan a few-days' effort in a different location if one can be found.

We found Brother Maple a true and fearless workman, declaring the whole gospel and denouncing error in a firm, friendly fashion that Impressed all who heard him. He and Sister Maple were tireless in their personal efforts to get people out. What a needy field this is, and how small the interest! Brethren, we ought to have enough help thrown into this nucleus started here to keep an evangelist busy here every day for a campaign of months. A few are helping regularly now. Ten times as much ought to be put into this radiating point and a strong church established here. If you will help, write me. My address is 4409 Xerxes Avenue, South, Minneapolis, Nature's Law.

BY J. J. VANHOUTIN.

A noted man who tried to disprove God's creation said: "All things exist by nature's law." He was a lawyer and should have known that back of nature's law was a Lawgiver. There certainly was a beginning of everything. Even those who teach that this earth was thrown from the sun two hundred billion years ago admit there was a beginning. Then, after the earth cooled off, how came life and the first of everything in creation? Take the oak tree as a first product by nature's law. If you say the tree was first, you set aside the law of nature; for it is nature's law for the oak trees to spring from the acorns, and there were none. If you say the acorn was first, you set aside the law of nature; for it is nature's law for acorns to grow upon trees, and there were none. Which was first, the acorn or the tree? No man can answer this question without admitting the existence of an intelligent first cause, God, who created the first acorns or the first trees. And this proves the divinity of the writings of Moses. "And God said, Let the earth bring forth grass, the herb yielding seed, and the fruit tree yielding fruit after his kind, whose seed is in itself, upon the earth: and it was so." (Gen. 1: 11.) Here was the establishment of the law of nature after the creation of the first

Former Health Commissioner Says Nuxated Iron

Should Be Used in Every Hospital and Prescribed by Every Physician—Attributes His own Great Physical Activity Today at Over 60 Years of Age Largely to His Personal Use of Nuxated Iron

WHAT FORMER HEALTH COMMISSIONER KERR SAYS

"As Health Commissioner of the City of Chicago, I was importuned many times to recommend different medicines, mineral waters, etc. Never yet have I gone on record as favoring any particular remedy, but I feel that in Nuxated Iron an exception should be made to the rule. I have taken Nuxated iron myself and experienced its health-giving strength-huliding effect, and in the interest of the public welfare, I feel it my duty to make known the results of its use. I am well past my three-soure years and want to say that I helieve that my own great physical activity is due largely today to my personal use of Nuxated Iron, and if my endorsement shall induce anaemic, nervous, run-down men and women to take Nuxated Iron, and receive the wonderful rune benefits, which I have received. I shall fedice greatly gratified that I made an exception to my life-long role in recommending it. From my own experience with Nuxated Iron, I feel that it is such a valuable remedy that it ought to be used in every hospital and prescribed by every physician in this country."

Former Health Commissioner, City of Chicago,

Manufacturer's Note—Nuxated Iron, which has been used by Former Health Commissioner Kerr with such surprising results, is not a secret remedy, but one which is well known to dringsists everywhere. Unlike the older inorganic fron products, it is easily assimilated, does not injure the teeth, make them black, nor upset the stomach. The manufacturers guarantee successful and entirely satisfactory results to every purchaser or they will refund your money. It is dispensed by all good druggists and general stores.

Former Health Commissioner Kerr has given years of his life fighting for public health in his own and other cities. It was he who introduced Anti-toxin for Diphtheria in Chloago's Health Department. He purified the milk for the Consumers and thereby helped to save the lives of thousands of babies. He introduced the anti-spitting ordinance which has been copied all over the country and also took care of the sewers and garbage in the Interest of public health. He is positive that the widespread use of Nuxthed Iron would greatly lessen the worries and froubles of Health Commissioners in keeping up a high standard of public health.

of everything. So back of nature's law was the great intelligent first cause, God. And he is the God of the Bible. "Lord, thou hast been our dwelling place in all generations. Before the mountains were brought forth, or ever thou hadst formed the earth and the world, even from everlasting to everlasting, thou art God." (Ps. 90: 1, 2.) David was not an atheist. He also said: "The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament sheweth his handiwork." The whole constellation of heaven is governed by law. As far back as we can trace the history of man, the sun has risen on time and the moon has kept up its changes; the seasons come and go; the north star keeps its place; the great Dipper makes its circuit; and all nature moves in one harmonious song of praise to Him who created all things, then established nature's law.

With the Fingers! Says Corns Lift Out Without Any Pain

Sore corns, hard corns, soft corns, or any kind of a corn can shortly be lifted right out with the fingers if you will apply directly upon the corn a few drops of freezone, says a Cincinnati authority.

It is claimed that at small cost one can get a quarter of an ounce of freezone at any drug store, which is sufficient to rid one's feet of every corn or callus without pain or soreness or the danger of infection.

This new drug is an ether compound, and, while sticky, dries the moment it is applied and does not inflame or even irritate the surrounding tissue.

This announcement will interest many women here, for it is said that the present high-heel footwear is putting corns on practically every woman's feet.

First Steps in Breaking Bad Habits.

The first thing necessary in breaking a bad habit is to want to break it. Some people do not. They fancy that they would like to stop smoking, or whatever it may be, but in reality the thing that they want to do is the thing that they do.

The same is virtually tru of many other habits. There is often the feeling that-O, well, it is not so bad after all! It is only when one arrives at a strong conviction that the practice, whatever it may be, is truly, seriously detrimental, and the desire for selfbetterment is sufficiently intense to dominate one's course of action, that the breaking off of any bad habit becomes possible.

The second great requirement is to substitute something in place of the habit that you expect to abandon. This is absolutely indispensable. Remember that nature abhors a vacuum, and that this applies to time as well as to space. If a certain space or a certain time is occupied by one thing, that means that something else will be crowded out. This, of course, applies to your mind as well as to space and time. If your mind has been occupied with a certain practice that you wish to abandon, it will never do for you to try to forget it without, at the same time, putting something in its place to occupy your mind. This should be the fundamental philosophy of all habit-breaking methods.-Hugo Masters, in Physical Culture.

Manufacture of Gluten Flour Stopped.

The manufacture of gluten flour from the 1917 wheat crop has been closed down tight because sufficient stocks are now on hand to supply meritorious demands.

The largest manufacturer of gluten flour in the United States ordinarily consumes ten thousand barrels of good standard wheat flour in making seven hundred and fifty barrels of gluten flour; the other nine thousand two hundred and fifty barrels is utilized as wheat starch or absolutely lost. The best record at hand is of a barrel of flour (196 pounds) making eighteen pounds of gluten flour. The average saving is eleven pounds of gluten flour to a barrel of ordinary wheat flour.

Medical opinion is divided as to the necessity of gluten flour for diabetics, but a preponderance of opinion now seems to be against its use.-Exchange.

Further Meat Restrictions in England.

Still further restrictions against the use of meat have been put in effect in England. Only two coupons for butchers' meat can be used per week, instead of three as has been done since the country was rationed and distribution put under the card sys-

Another coupon may be used, but only for bacon, fowl, or other food not classified as butchers' meat. Four coupons are included on each card. As originally planned, three of them could be used for butchers' meats which entitled the holder to a ten-cent purchase, while the fourth was for meats under other classifications. The new restrictions provide that after May 5 all may still be used for bacon. fowl, rabbit, venison, horse flesh, etc., but that only two may be used for beef, pork, mutton, and other meats of that character.

The British meat shortage is being felt more severely than at any time since the war was started. That the shortage is not confined to meats, however, is shown by the fact that effective control of the milk supply is already being considered in order to meet a possible greater shortage later in the year, and that some sections of English labor are favoring extensions of the compulsory rationing system of bread, cheese, and tea. There is a marked difference of opinion as to the efficacy or desirability of such a move, however.

Feterita Flour.

Of all the cereal substitutes for wheat flour, feterita flour and meal have created the most numerous inquiries, especially in sections where this sorghum crop is unknown. When this cereal substitute was first announced, even, many food officials in the East, Middle West, and Northwest were unable to answer the inquiries which poured into their offices. These inquiries were later followed by requests for the product itself.

Many milling concerns in the Southwest report that since they began to grind feterita meal it has been almost impossible to fill orders. According to the Price Current, feterita is equal to corn meal in food value and can be ground finer and bolted for mixing with other products in bread. Feterita and kafir corn, ground midway be tween corn meal and flour as to fineness, have been found most satisfactory. Some time ago a miller in Kansas experimented with finely ground feterita flour milled like wheat flour, but it was not satisfactory for baking unmixed with wheat, as it lacked gluten.

Maintenance.

For the continuous and abundant maintenance of the Christian life, obedience to the Lord is a necessity. On our part that obedience expresses our love for Christ, and that is the very center and indispensable condition of a real Christian life. Such loving obedience rendered insures the approval and presence of God. On this our happiness and power alike depend. In Ps. 103: 17, 18 this blessed assurance is made, that God's loving-kindness shall be the everlasting possession of the obedient. In 1 John 2: 3-6 obedience is made the condition of a real and vivid consciousness of God and his love; and in verse 17 of that same passage the abiding blessing of the obedient soul is contrasted with the passing pleasure of the world. In John 14: 22-24 our Lord clearly and tenderly asserts the principles we have been discussing. In answer to a question as to how he will make himself known in the believer's experience, he replies that loving obedience on the part of the disciples is the way. Love makes obedience, and the two attract the Father's love.-Exchange.

Historic Lessons in Food Conservation.

The Hotel Monthly recently carried the following:

"Four thousand years ago Food Commissioner Joseph, in the land of Egypt, commandeered one-fifth of the wheat crop of Egypt each year for seven years and stored it in the cities nearest the wheat fields. His drastic action at that time saved the world from starvation.

"Two thousand five hundred years ago Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon. instructed that certain men whom he wished to have attached to his court be fed on king's food and wine to give them a well-nourished look. One of these men, named 'Daniel,' persuaded his caterer that himself and friends could be better nourished on pulse and water, and requested that he make a test covering a sufficient length of time; the others to be fed on king's food and wine. The test showed that those who lived on pulse (lentils) and water were better nourished than these fed on the king's food (luxuries) and wine.

"Two thousand years ago Bible history records the miracle of feeding five thousand with a few barley loaves and fishes. The people were commanded to sit in rows of fifty to the row, and the servers passed before each and gave to every one his portion, so that all were served. It was an instance where a little food went a long way, and the fragments that remained were gathered up so that no food was wasted."

Are Here Told the Best Remedy for Their Troubles.

Freemont, O.—"I was passing through the critical period of life, being forty-six years of age and had all the symptoms incident to that change — heat flashes, nervousness, and was in a general run down condition, so it was hard for me to do my work. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was recommended to me as the best remedy for my troubles, which it surely proved to be. I feel better and stronger in every way since taking it, and the annoying symptoms have disappeared."—Mrs. M. GODDEN. 925 Napoleon St., Fremont, Ohio.

North Haven, Conn.—"Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound restored my health after everything else had failed when passing through change of life. There is nothing like it to overcome the trying symptoms."

Notes from Camp Jackson.

The work at Camp Jackson is going on nicely. Our average attendance is about fifteen. We have located about twenty-five members, though some are not with us regularly. We hope to increase the number. Sometimes some of the boys are on duty and cannot attend. Most of the boys are taking great interest in the work.

We noticed in the Gospel Advocate of May 23 an appeal to help the people at Poplar Bluff, Mo. Each one of us having known Brother Laird personally and believing him to be a worthy gospel preacher, we have decided by consent of the boys to contribute five dollars to the cause at Poplar Bluff. We are also sending five dollars for mission work at some other place, and you may place it where you think it is most needed.

We would like for those who know of any who are not yet meeting with us to give us their names and addresses, and we will do our best to get them out with us. We need them among our number, and we are sure they need us, "for in unity there is strength." If all the relatives of the boys in Camp Jackson who read this will, in writing to the boys, encourage them to be faithful about meeting upon the first day of the week, it will not be long until we can have a large attendance here.

Time Will Prove It.

Regardless of the merits of the case, no statements in regard to the merit of any article can be so clearly proven as through time itself. If the article has no value, it cannot live. If it has merits, it will be everlastingly on demand. It is just so with Gray's Ointment, for ninety-seven years a family word in every household. Almost a century ago the same claims were made of its merits as to-day: that it is healing and antiseptic, the very best aid in cases of burns, scalds, bruises, cuts, sores, stings, and other skin infections. It has won on its merits. A ninety-seven-year record is ample proof. Write to W. F. Gray & Co., 818 Gray Building, Nashville, Tenn., for a sample.—Advt.

The True Basis of Judgment.

Because it is difficult to know the hidden man of another's heart, we should not be quick to judge him. Unless we do know the secret as well as the open life of a man, we are really in no position to form a just estimate of his character. If we had no other portrait of Joseph than that which presents him as a hard despot with steel eyes and accusing speech in dealing with his brethren, how difficult an opinion of him we should be holding of him today! But since we are told about his weeping in the privacy of his room, we know that his imperious bearing, that false accusation of theft and espionage, that binding of Simeon and all the rest of the frightful conduct, was nothing more or less than harmless camouflage.

I heard of a man recently who was an ordinary mechanic, who had a reputation for being the meanest man in the workshop. He was never known to give anything away, not even a penny. "I can't afford it" was his answer to every appeal. He didn't buy a single Liberty bond, not even a thrift stamp. Consequently he was held in contempt for a while by his fellow workmen. He never drank with them, he never smoked with them, he never joined them in an outing, and they despised and boycotted him. You can understand how their opinion of him changed when they learned through accident that his only brother had died, leaving a widow and several children, and that he by saving every penny was keeping the little home together. "Judge not," the Savior says, "that ye be not judged." And if we do judge, he says again: "Judge not according appearance, but judge righteous judgment." (John 7: 2

Despicable Camouffage.

But this lesson would not be complete if we did not mention the camouflage in men's lives, which, so far from being commendable, is despicable hypocrisy. We find an example in the scathing denunciations that Jesus hurled at the Pharisees. He likened them to "whited sepulchers, which indeed appear beautiful outwardly, but are within full of dead men's bones, and of all uncleanness." They were concerned with the outside of the cup and the platter. They fasted and prayed and gave alms to be seen of men. It did not trouble them that the man in the secret chamber was a serpent, a spoiler of widows' houses, if only they received the salutations in the market places and were praised of men. It was what they seemed to the public eye, and not what they were in the eye of God, that mattered. 0 0 0

The Hidden Man Should Be the Best Man.

It is a serious thing when the hidden man of the heart is a poorer man than the man of public life. Whatever he may appear to be before men, he is what he is in the secret chamber where there is only God to see. And what a man is in the secret chamber will sooner or later appear in the open life. Joseph could not go on playing the part of a heartless despot forever. He found a limit to the power of self-suppression and self-concealment. Thus we read in the next chapter but one: "Then Joseph could not refrain himself before all them that stood by him; and he cried, Cause every man to go out from me. And there stood no man with him, while Joseph made himself known unto his brethren. And he wept aloud." Thus we see it is the real Joseph, the Joseph of the inner chamber, that is disclosed at last. It was said of Jesus: "He could not be hid." The supreme consideration, therefore, is not camouflage, but character. "Look well to the hidden man of the heart, and you can leave the man on the street to look after him-0 0 0

Camouflage in the Judgment.

One of the most vivid pictures that Jesus gives of the final judgment shows how the evil camouflage of men shall be brought to light. "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father who is in heaven. Many will say to me in that day, Lord, Lord, did we not prophesy by thy name, and by thy name cast out demons, and by thy name do many mighty works?" (Matt. 7: 21, 22.) Yes, I have no doubt but what there will be some in that day who will seek to remind the Savior that they bought Liberty bonds and did many other things for humanity's sake during this present crisis. Some of these Jesus will honor, but to others whose motive was bad he will say: "I never knew you: depart from me, ye that work iniquity." Let us understand once for all that in this world we may practice camouflage that is admirable dissimmulation and put it over with men, but no man can ever fool God. And the worst bit of camouflage that the human being ever perpetrated upon his own heart and upon the lives of others is that foolish belief that he can stay out of the church and be saved without the gospel if he is a respectable citizen. I readily admit that you may get by with this specious sophistry in this world, but after a while you will open your eyes to the fact that your soul is lost beyond recovery. Your sad disillusionment will come "at the revelation of the Lord Jesus from heaven with the angels of his power in flaming fire, rendering vengeance to them that know not God, and to them that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus."

O, no, that is not the thought of your better self. The hidden man of your heart bids you hear the gospel and obey it while it is called to-day. Be true to your better

Two men, diverse, there are in me— One hidden, one open for all to see, Both of them, Lord, are known to thee, Yet I would that the hidden the better may be.

Alumni Address.

BY S. P. PITTMAN.

Ladies and gentlemen of the Alumni Association, and all who are assembled here to-day—friends and patrons of the old Nashville Bible School, the new David Lipscomb College: I congratulate myself for the honor you have bestowed upon me to-day, realizing, however, that the responsibility is far greater than the honor. If interest in a cause alone capacitates one for service, then your chosen speaker is eminently fitted for the task before him; but since other qualifications are essential, I fear he may not do justice to the subject and the occasion. My task is, indeed, a difficult one, for I am to play the rôle of "Historian" and "Biographer." I am called upon to do the work of a critic—an unenviable position to fill. You will expect me to lift the veil that hangs between the present and the future and prophesy of days to come.

I congratulate you, most of all, for the noble efforts you have made and expect to make in behalf of the institution so dear to our hearts—an institution whose influence for good has been felt for more than a quarter of a century, and whose influence is to-day more potent and more potential than ever; but whose influence you wish to increase as the days and years and decades pass, till the sun grows dark with mystery and moons shall wane and wax no more.

First, let me say, we have never claimed for our school perfection. We are open, always, to friendly criticism. One of Paul's graces was that he was ever sensitive to his own imperfections. To be blinded to my own wrongs is a proof of my own deep guilt. If I have a high moral standard for my fellow man, let me erect a still higher one for myself. If I wish to pull the mote out of your eye, let me first cast the beam out of my own eye. If I discipline you, let me discipline myself more rigidly; but if I am lenient with myself, let me be more lenient with you.

Were all the criticisms that have been made against the Bible School compressed within the narrow compass of this chapel hall, an explosive would be formed that would blow this institution to atoms. On the other hand, were all the commendations that have been given, the beautiful things that have been said, compressed into an essence of sweetness, the whole atmosphere would be redolent of its fragrance. For the conscientious objector to Bible-School work, I have no counter criticism. For the chronic objector, the iconoclast, the one who invidiously opposes the work of the school—for him I have no sympathy, with him I have no patience. Had the school been a dog, it would long since have died of the wounds inflicted by its enemies —men and women who should have been its friends.

Perhaps the "unkindest cut" of all was a thrust made by a preacher—a well-known preacher, too—when he spoke of one of the teachers of this institution as wasting his time and talent with that "measly little Bible School." I would that he who uttered those words were here to-day. I would that he were better acquainted with the work of this school and its influence.

It has been hard to satisfy everybody. It is hard to please even the brotherhood. One objects to the Bible School on the grounds that it is a theological institution—a "preacher factory" (pardon me for using the term; it grates upon my ears, and I trust it does on yours, too); while another complains that it is too much of a secular institution. One thinks we lay too much stress upon the teaching of the Bible; the other, too little.

To locate our school—to find just what its place is among the educational institutions of the land—has been a momentous problem. If it be classed as a purely religious institution, its position is vulnerable. If, on the other hand, it be classed as a worldly institution, it is subject to severe criticism. If it be just like other institutions, then there is no room for this. If it be entirely different, then it is so out of harmony with the times, so eccentric, so isolated, that its influence is lost.

Well do I remember a crisis in the school. It was on Spruce Street many years ago. A literary society had been organized. There were objections urged. The hour of decision had come. Shall we yield to the objectors? Shall we apply to them the principle of eating meat and causing my brother to offend? The future of the school was then in the balances, being weighed. It was a most fortunate thing, to my mind, when it was decided, after much heated discussion, to retain the society. Not that a school could not exist without a literary and debating society, although it is an important adjunct; but because it taught us to discriminate between a religious auxiliary society and a school literary society. Had the decision been the reverse, the school would likely have drawn itself back into its mossy shell of fanaticism and been lost to the world, till to-day it would have existed only in mem-

But the most puzzling problem is to know when to be conservative and when to be aggressive. Some say we are going too fast, and some say we are going too slow. Perhaps some good brother can furnish us with a speed-ometer. When Dædalus had made his son Icarus some wings with which to fly, he gave him this advice: "Icarus, my son, I charge you to keep at a moderate height; for if you fly too low, the damp will clog your wings, and if too high, the heat will melt them. Keep near me, and you will be safe." So, in the midst of uncertainties and extremes, I hear Jesus say: "Keep near me, and you are safe."

One young man came to school once, very enthusiastic. He mapped out a very long course—perhaps a nine-years' course. His highest ambition was to prepare himself in school so thoroughly that he would be able to "fight the Baptists" successfully. It was told that whe the question of laying on of hands was being discus this young man said: "I don't believe in laying on hands. I've seen the Baptists do that." He didn't remain his nine years. I don't know where he is now. I understand that since he left school he has been both a backslider and a Russellite. If this young man's ambition represents the spirit and purpose of the school, better would it be had it never been established.

This is an age of monuments. It may be the plain slab that marks the spot where a loved one lies, or a tall marble shaft to commemorate a Confederate hero. It may be an institution of learning or of mercy, endowed by a multi-millionaire, or a fund set apart for the cradication of some malignant disease. On a peak of the Andes, in the lofty Cordillera of South America, on the boundary between Chile and Argentina, there stands a colossal bronze statue of Christ, erected by those two republics as a monument to the settlement of a dispute by arbitration and a guarantee of perpetual peace and friendship. O that the nations of earth to-day would set up upon their frontiers, not a bronze statue of Christ, but the Christ himself, as the Guardian and Emblem of international and universal and perpetual peace!

I wish every boy and every girl in the land could see Washington Monument. I wish they would stand and gaze at it. It is not only a monument erected to the memory of our first Chief Executive; it is symbolic in its grandeur and simplicity of the ideal life of the American people. As we look upon that plain, massive shaft, let us endeavor to make our lives as simple and sublime.

Did you know that each of us is erecting a monument? Do you remember the only perfect physique mentioned in the Bible? Strange to say, it was a man-not a woman. From the sole of his foot to the crown of his head there was no blemish to be found in him. Though his face was as fair as a lily and his hair was like a fairy's, his heart was black as night. During his life he had "reared up for kimself the pillar, which is in the king's dale; for he said, I have no son to keep my name in remembrance; and he called the pillar after his own name; and it is called Absalom's monument unto this day." So reads the record. That pillar has, no doubt, long since crumbled; but in the base character that Absalom formed, he has left us an imperishable monument. Can we ever forget how he stole the hearts of the people, how he drove his own father from the throne, how he went out to do battle with his father's forces? Can we forget how he hung in the thick boughs of the oak tree with a dart thrust through his heart? Can we ever forget his father's lament: "O my son, Absalom, my son, my son Absalom! would I had died for thee, O Absalom, my son, my son!"

I have already intimated to you the purpose for which this institution was founded. It is to help young people build their monuments—their characters. May I discuss this question of character building briefly? I hold before you the apostle Paul as an ideal character—the greatest product, perhaps, as well as the greatest exponent, of the Christian system. What entered into the formation of his character? By nature and talent he was extraordinary. But talent is not character. Little does it matter whether I have one talent or a hundred; but how I use what talent or talents I have means much.

By training, Paul was a learned man; but in the formation of his character, what is generally called "education" was but an incidental. It is in our character. Knowledge is power, but it is not the key to success. With education, you can make a signal success or a dismal failure. The ax may be used to fell the tree and chop the wood to make the fire to cheer and bless humanity, or it may be a sharp instrument with which to strike down our fellow men. So with education.

Paul was an inspired man, but inspiration is not character. Judas Iscariot had power to heal the sick and raise the dead. "If I speak with the tongues of men and of angels, but have not love, I am become sounding brass, or a clanging cymbal. And if I have the gift of prophecy, and know all mysteries and all knowledge; and if I have all faith, so as to remove mountains, but have not love, I am nothing."

Again, Paul was a courageous man. Courage is a part of character. It matters not how the war terminates or whether it goes on forever, you will need courage—moral and spiritual courage. The world will never become so ideal that courage will cease to be a cardinal virtue.

But I have not struck the leading note of character yet. I have been but fumbling over the keyboard. Paul struck the leading tone of his own character when he said: "I have lived before God in all good conscience until this day." He pulled aside the curtain and let us look into the inmost sanctuary of his soul when he made that statement before the Sanhedrin. This institution stands for the education of "a conscience void of offense toward God and men always." To the young people it says: "If you keep your hands clean, keep your conscience cleaner, if you keep your cuticle tender, keep your conscience tenderer; if you keep your eyesight clear and accurate, make your moral and spiritual vision clearer and more accurate."

This, then, is the work of the Bible School—to combine literary training with the training of conscience—in other words, to build character.

What we need is not so much broader education, but better; not so much higher, but deeper; not so much an education of the head, but of the heart. An educational system that teaches us the laws of nature, but drives us away from the God of nature—that teaches us to analyze the colors of the rainbow, but not to read the mystic token of that bow—is a defective system.

There are features of the school that deserve special attention. First, it is a mixed institution. Brother Harding used to say that the Bible School had young ladies in it every year but one, and that was the most unsatisfactory session in the history of the school. I can bear testimony to the truthfulness of that statement. I was there. Deliver me from the place where there are no women' Heaven will be more attractive because we expect to find so many women there. The coeducational system needs no defense. In after life we mingle; why not in college life? The complex problems of practical life can better be worked out by those who have been trained in coeducational schools.

Another feature of the school is that it has no separate course for "ministerial students." Those preparing to give their lives to the work of proclaiming the gospel may find opportunity to lay stress upon those branches of study most needed in their life work; but the gulf that already exists between clergy and laity, between priest and people, should be bridged, and it is the work of the Bible school to hasten that.

We are here to-day to recall the past. In France there are some rough stones the stranger sees as he approaches that look like sentinels. Probably they were placed there by some prehistoric race or by the Druids, who built their stone temples open to the sky. The peasants call them "memory stones." Memory, O blessed memory! What treasures are stored up within thee! The mind is a paradise or a pandemonium. In the midst of war, it can bring peace and quiet to our troubled souls. In grief, it can bring consolation. In the dead of winter, it can have the showers of springtime, the sunshine of May, and Lowell's beautiful rare day in June. It can transform the world of crime without into a world of righteousness within.

As we recall the past, there come before our mental vision four pictures. These are the successive locations of the school. There are those here to-day who remember these places well. Perhaps there are representatives here to-day of every year's work since the school began.

The first location was in a rented building on Fillmore Street, in South Nashville. It was here that the half dozen or more of young men were seated upon the front steps, waiting to welcome the president as he stepped up, ready to assume his duties and responsibilities.

The next year the school was located at 614 South Cherry Street (now Fourth Avenue, South). This was an undesirable location, and, fortunately, a new home was bought for the school—a residence with two acres or more of grounds. Here more desirable quarters were had for a number of years. We learned to love that sacred spot on South Spruce Street (now Eighth Avenue, South), and were loath to give it up.

But the next move was to our present location on Granny White road. Here our progress has been sure, our tendency onward and upward. Surely the mustard seed planted more than twenty-five years ago has become a tree with spreading branches.

I now recall the founder of our school. Let others today do justice, if they can, to his memory; I cannot. I must frankly confess that there are a few of us who cling tenaciously and lovingly to the old name-" Bible School." It brings up pleasant memories-just the name, "Bible School." But since it was thought expedient to change the name, let me say that, to my mind, no human name of the nineteenth or twentieth century deserves to be perpetuated more than his. When God made man, his masterpiece, he "breathed into his nostrils the breath of life." He put a part of himself in man. When Raphael painted his Sistine Madonna, he imparted to his masterpiece a part of his own life. Milton infused his own soul into his inimitable "Paradise Lost." When Brother David Lipscomb founded the Nashville Bible School, he imparted to it some of his own noble life. It is his product-his masterpiece. Many of us to-day look upon his picture with a mingled feeling of happiness and regret-happiness, because for years we sat at the knees of that venerable man and learned life's greatest lessons, lessons of humility and loyalty; regret, because we did not learn those lessons better, and now he is gone. One lesson I learned from him was so deeply impressed I will never forget it. He taught me to say, "I don't know." Why, what that man "conjectured" was worth more to me than what most men "know," I heard some one (G. C. Brewer) tell here in this chapel hall once of the little fellow who learned to say: "Twinkle, twinkle, little star; how I wonder what you are!" By and by, after he had been to college, he said: "Twinkle, twinkle, little star; now I know what you are!" But, after years of experience, after his soul had been made still larger, he said once more: "Twinkle, twinkle, little star; how I wonder what you are!"

Now to that colaborer of his—Brother J. A. Harding. How can I forget him—my father in the gospel? The lesson he taught was the lesson of trust. He taught us the true philosophy of life. The Stoic and Epicurean philosophies of old were but vain attempts of the human mind to solve the problems of life. Christ was the "Great Philosopher." "Be not anxious for food, for raiment, for the morrow, for your life," he exclaimed; and Paul reëchoed, "In nothing be anxious." It is epitomized in Rom. 8: 28. How often have I heard him quote it! The sentiment seemed to run through every fiber of his being. "And we know that to them that love God all things work together for good, even to them that are called according to his purpose." What greater lessons than those emphasized by these two God-fearing men?

Time would fail me to tell of all who have been associated in the work with these, but I must mention four other men.

Brother William Anderson, whose faithfulness and devotion to duty brought the school through the inevitable crisis, upon the departure of Brother Harding for Potter Bible College, is entitled to special mention. Stalwart in body and character, he wielded an influence over the young people that few men can. To my mind, we have never paid the tribute to him that we should. When the shocking news came of his sudden taking away, entailing an irreparable loss and leaving the presidency vacant, the question arose, "What can be done?"

Dr. J. S. Ward was chosen to serve as "acting president," which position he filled for several years. If you want to know how well he filled the place, ask the students and see what a warm place he has in their hearts.

Then came Brother E. A. Elam, perhaps the widest-known man in the brotherhood. His writings you know. His ability as a preacher you know. His loyalty to truth and honesty you know. We were glad when the board of trustees selected him as our president.

And after several years the school fell into the hands of the present administration, with Brother H. Leo Boles at its head. I trust the administration speaks for itself.

In 1844, when Morse connected Washington and Baltimore with telegraphic wire, the first message flashed across the wires was: "What hath God wrought?" Contrast with that message the words of the king of Assyria: "By the strength of my hand I have done it, and by my wisdom; for I have understanding." Let that first message go forth from David Lipscomb College! Let it ring in the primary department. Let it be heard in the department of science, of literature, of history, of philosophy, of music, and of art—"What hath God wrought!"

When this institution ceases to be a temple of justice and becomes simply a temple of learning; when it ceases to be a palace of peace and becomes instead a hall of fame, then let it go down amid the wreck and ruin of secular institutions.

The Kingdom of Israel. No. 3.

BY F. W. SMITH.

"Judges and officers shalt thou make thee in all my gates, which the Lord thy God giveth thee, throughout thy tribes: and they shall judge the people with just judgment." (Deut. 16: 18.) When God, by the hand of Moses, brought the Israelites out of Egypt, he formed them into a nation, with laws and a system of worship. The laws were to regulate all their matters, either of a religious or a civil import. By these laws all matters were to be adjusted. While journeying in the wilderness, Moses was at first their only judge, who settled their questions of difference; but Jethro, Moses' father-in-law, suggested that he appoint other judges to assist him in the matter, which Moses did. (Ex. 18: 13-24.) This was evidently God's will; for, in addition to the absence of any objection at this time, we find that, when giving directions concerning other matters when they reached the promised land, God gives directions concerning the rule of his people, naming The was the divine judges as the order. (Deut. 16: 18.) arrangement,

THE QUALIFICATIONS AND DUTIES

E JUDGES.

"Moreover thou shalt provide out he people able men, such as fear God, men of truth, nating covetousness; and place such over them, to be rulers of thousands, and rulers of hundreds, rulers of fifties, and rulers of tens." (Ex 18: 21.) In this we have clearly set forth the kind of judges that God ordained to rule his people. (1) They were to be "able men"—that is, men of wisdom and experience, who could weigh matters aright and make the right application of the law in each case. (2) They were to be men that feared God, those who reverenced God and his holy law and who believed in the supreme rulership of Jehovah. (3) They were to be "men of truth"-such as were truthful and loved the truth-men who hated falsehood and deception of every character; they were to be judges who would render no decision, only upon the clearest evidence, and such as were free from winking at wrongdoing. (4) They were to be men who hated covetousness, not being susceptible of bribery or of being influenced by the glitter of gold, and they were to be no respecters of persons. (5) They were to judge "at all seasons," and not postpone the matters of the people. Trouble and expense have resulted in many instances from the postponement of cases in our courts. Many of the lynchings that occur in this country are due to fear upon the part of the people that such cases will be postponed from time to time until justice is in a measure defeated. Much trouble arises in the congregations because matters that call for prompt and immediate attention are left to drift along until they become aggravated in the extreme. If it be true that the judges were typical of the elders in the churches, may we not learn a lesson from what was demanded of the rulers of God's people anciently? Are able men-such as fear God, love the truth, hate covetousness, and are attentive to the business of the church-ruling in the congregations of disciples? Better by far to have none than those who do not meet these requirements; for such are not, and cannot be, God's elders. Many churches are suffering to-day from men imposed upon them as elders who are wholly unfitted for such high and responsible duties. Matters of the gravest import, in which the peace and prosperity of Zion are involved, are allowed to drag along, growing worse each day.

ISRAEL'S REJECTION OF GOD.

As we have seen, the judges were God's appointed agents for the government of his people; and when Israel turned from these, demanding a king, it was a clear rejection of God. "But." some one says, "the judges became weak, took bribes, and perverted judgment." Yes, that is true, as shown by these words: "And his sons walked not in his ways, but turned aside after lucre, and took bribes, and perverted judgment." (1 Sam. 8: 3.) Upon this failure of the judges to minister justice the people based their claim for a king. (Verses 4, 5.) Now this question presents itself: Did this state of things justify Israel in asking for a king, in which event the divine order would be exchanged for a purely human one? No, indeed. The existing system was all right, but the trouble lay with those claiming to operate it. The people made a serious blunder in demanding a new order of things. They should have appealed for purer and better judges, leaving the divine arrangement to stand. God's order now is that elders shall rule in the churches. (Acts 20: 28; 1 Tim. 3: 4, 5.) When these become corrupt or prove to be inefficient, what is to be done? Shall we set aside elders and institute another method? Shall we let a lot of women manage affairs or adopt the voting system and settle matters in that way? Many do this, and in so doing they as certainly reject God as Israel did. The proper thing to do under such circumstances is to seek a better and more efficient eldership. Again, the church is the divine organization for feeding the hungry, clothing the naked, and doing other kinds of benevolent work, as well as spreading the gospel and saving the world. Now, when the church becomes weak and fails to do this Heaven-appointed work, what must Christians do? Must they turn aside to human institutions through which to do their acts of benevolence? No; a thousand times, no. They must hold on to God's plan and seek to bring the church up to the full measure of its duty. Brother, put the same earnestness into the church that you put into the human institution, and see how it will work. The church is failing to do missionary work. Must I turn from it to a human society through which to accomplish this work? Never. We should stir the church up to her duty, and not exchange the wisdom of God for the wisdom of men. How foolishly Israel acted! Nevertheless, multiplied thousands of professed Christians are following in Israel's footsteps.

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

- 1. The only safe way is to follow God's plan, although it may seem foolish to us. Surely, in the light of revelation and the recorded experiences of the Israelites, we should learn that "the wisdom of this world is foolishness with God." (1 Cor. 3: 19.) God has not sought the aid of man's wisdom in devising and executing his scheme for the world's redemption. Then why should man seek to thrust it upon him?
- 2. God can be honored and glorified only through his own appointments and agencies. Every effort to honor him in any other way leads the soul away from God. "Unto him be the glory in the church and in Christ Jesus unto all generations forever and ever." (Eph. 3: 21.)

Some Practical Thoughts Drawn from the Study of Adam.

BY H. LEO BOLES.

It is likely that Adam did not intend to become such a sinner as he did become. I do not think that he saw into the future and beheld the results of his sin. It is likely that he would not have made the fatal mistake that he did, had he been able to have seen the result and extent of his sin. This is true of the sins of the children of men to-day. No man intends to become the sinner which he does become when the sin is committed. If people could see or would see the consequences of their sins to-day, it would restrain them from indulging or engaging in sin. Many sorrows, disappointments, and afflictions of this life would be averted if we would only stop and count the cost of the sin before we engage in it; but we, like Adam of old, blindly engage in sin for the brief moments of pleasure that it affords, and do not see the intense woe, suffering, and sorrow for a lifetime that it may bring upon us.

When it was said to Adam and Eve, "Thou shalt not eat" of a certain fruit, some think that this became the occasion or possibly the invitation to sin. To forbid one's doing a thing sometimes incites in that one a desire to do that thing. We are familiar with this thought. But it may be in our degenerate state that such an expression as "Thou shalt not" excites a desire on our part to do that. But I do not think that Adam and Eve, in their state of perfection and purity, would be tempted to do a thing by the command, "Thou shalt not;" so I conclude from this that it is not a natural state of mind or heart, but an acquired one, which we now possess. The question has frequently been asked and discussed as to why God gave Adam entire control of everything in Paradise and yet restricted him to a single tree and the fruit upon that. We do not wish to attempt to go into the realms of a divine mind and inquire why he has done things. We rather, by faith, accept that what he did was the very best thing that should have been done. I think that it is true in regard to the restrictions that he placed around Adam. We can see that if God had not restricted or limited his rights, that Adam would not have been taught the lesson of dependence upon God. It may be that this one restriction was to remind him that he was dependent upon God and that there was an authority higher than his that he should respect. As all things were placed under him and he had authority over them, so he is to remain subject to his Creator and must prove himself worthy of the lordship that has been committed to his care. This view makes this restriction a test of his allegiance to God. It is a well-recognized principle with us to-day that the best rulers are those who themselves are most obedient to the authority which is above them. No one can discipline others who has not first been disciplined himself. He cannot command the respect of those who are beneath him if he has not first learned to respect the authority which is above him. Man needed to be taught the two great lessons of dependence and obligation upon God. He should never lose sight of this relationship to his Creator. This restriction, in a measure, veiled the mysterious from the holy pair in the garden of Eden. It is wise for man to-day to let the mysterious alone. The revealed things belong unto man. This thought was afterwards expressed by Moses, in Deut. 29: 29, where he said: "The secret things belong unto Jehovah our God; but the things that are revealed belong unto us and to our children forever, that we may do all the words of this law." It has been difficult for man to stop and halt on the border land of the mysterious. It seems that man is prone to go beyond that which has been revealed to him. It is a fine lesson to learn to be satisfied with what God has given us and not attempt to go beyond.

True manhood is developed by choosing the good when evil is present. If no restriction, no evil, were present in this life and one was forced to pursue the good all the time without any exercise of judgment or will power in selecting the good, that one would never become a very strong character. Oftentimes one is only negatively good. I mean by this that one is good because there has not been an opportunity to be otherwise. The strongest men that we have are examples of men and women who have chosen the good and persistently and patiently pursued the good in the presence of evil, with strong temptations to accept the evil. We admire most that character which, in the face of opposition and obstacles, chooses the good and follows it. I think that this helps us to appreciate the character of Adam.

Adam's sin brought shame to him and Eve. When they heard the voice of Jehovah, walking in the garden in the cool of the evening, they hid themselves. When Jehovah asked, "Where art thou?" he replied: "I was afraid, because I was naked; and I hid myself." (Gen. 3: 10.) A knowledge of sin brought shame unto him, and he flees from the presence of Jehovah and tries to hide himself. Shame is a characteristic of sin. And the more sensible we are to sin and the more penitent we become of it, the deeper the shame. Shame may be used as preventive in committing sin. I verily think that many have been kept from sin because they were conscious of the shame which it would bring. Adam did not have this experience or observation to act as a warning to him, but all of his descendants have the benefit of such an experience. We note further that Adam tried to hide himself. This was impossible. No one can hide himself from the presence of God. Sinful men have been trying ever since Adam's affort to imitate him in hiding sin. It seems natural for impurity, ungodliness, unfaithfulness, and sin to flee from the presence of purity, righteousness, and holiness as seen in the attributes of Jehovah. Guilt and shame cannot dwell in the presence of innocency and holiness in this life or in the life to come. Adam tried to hide his nakedness with garments of leaves, but this proved impossible, because the piercing eye of Jehovah can see through the vain efforts of man to hide himself from God. One has said that Jehovah looked through the leaves and saw Adam, and now man has to look through leaves of holy writ to see Jehovah. Just as Adam's excuse and attempt to hide from Jehovah proved futile, so must every effort of man prove useless in trying to escape the gaze and condemnation of the God whom he has outraged. Through mercy and sympathy, Jehovah took the skin of animals and made garments for the sinful, shameful, wretched pair. We see the wide contrast in man's efforts and God's works. Sin cannot be hid or atoned for by any mechanical effort on man's part. It must be atoned for by pain, suffering, and bloodshed. "Without the shedding of blood there is no remission of sin." Adam has the distinction of being the first of the patriarchs to live and also the first to die a natural death. This emphasizes the fact that when man sins he has brought death upon himself and the human family. "For in Adam all die."

The Publisher's Relationship.

BY C. R. NICHOL.

There logically exists a relationship between the publisher of a religious journal and the readers of the journal.

The man who launches a religious journal does so with a definite end in view. If he is the character he should be (and let us not question the fact that he is), his desire is to advance certain doctrines which he believes for the betterment of the world. He goes before the world avowing these principles, and pledges himself to advocate them in his journal. He is regarded as the exponent of certain doctrines, and I subscribe for the journal with the expectation as well as desire to find in its pages editorials and contributed articles advocating such doctrines.

The publisher gives his time and money to the work, and often pays some one to write articles advocating the principles avowed by the journal. If he finds he has in his employ a contributor who does not believe nor advocate what the publisher believes and what the paper announced it would stand for, what is he to do? The publisher is wholly responsible, financially, for the bills incident to publishing the paper. The man he has employed does not furnish the character of articles which reflect the views of the avowed policy of the paper. What should the publisher do?

It appears to me that the publisher is clearly within his rights to dismiss such person from his employ, and in doing that he does the man no injustice. Not only so, but I think it a duty the publisher owes his readers to dismiss from his employ and exclude from the columns of his journal a man who does not accord with the principles of the paper.

Suppose the Gospel Advocate should employ me to write for the paper, paying me a monthly stipend for writing articles for its columns. Certainly they employ me with the understanding that I accord with them in doctrine and polity. For a time all goes well. But after some years I come to believe that sprinkling or pouring water on a person is baptism. Such a view is clearly out of harmony with the doctrine the Advocate was founded to propagate, and, too, it is not in keeping with the things the subscribers of the Advocate are paying to find advocated. should be the course of the publishers of the Advocate? Clearly, I should be dismissed from the paper, and the publishers would be under obligations to his subscribers to dismiss me. I may have personal friends who have come to accord with my views, and they may protest against the action of the publishers in dismissing me, but it would be an unjust protest.

Should I agree not to write on the points of differences, even then the Advocate would be morally obligated to dismiss me, unless I would agree not to advocate my views in any way at any time; for so long as I am recognized as an editor of the Advocate I have all the prestige such position could give me, and those who have confidence in the management of the Advocate would give car readily to what I taught.

Is it not strange that when I have read a religious journal for some years I come to regard it as in a measure belonging to me, and am incensed should the publisher refuse to publish an article I send him?

The publisher owes it to his readers that he has as editors of the paper only such men as believe the doctrine the paper has espoused.

Training Little Children

(Suggestions by mothers who have been kindergartners. Issued by The United States Bureau of Education, Washington, D. C., and The National Kindergarten Association, New York, N. Y.)

Article 16.

Allow your child to have company and playmates as often as you can. When possible, have playmates near his own age. Naturally out of this social intercourse will spring valuable lessons in courtesy, generosity, and patience. Always be fair in settling disputes among children. Do not favor your own child's story entirely, for though he may never have told an untruth, there is always the possibility of a sliding from grace. Sometimes it is very difficult to get a correct account from excited children. If the quarrel is over a doll or a train of cars and you cannot discover who is in the right, take away the toy, remarking quietly that if they cannot play nicely with it, they will have to do without it.

I do not think that there is a better opportunity than in play to teach lessons in honesty; play is so vital a part of child life and the child takes his play so seriously. In teaching a child to be honest in word and action, the parents first must be honest in all their dealings with the child. Never make a promise that you cannot keep or that you do not intend to keep. For the same reason never threaten, "Son, if you do that again, I'll spank you;" for if he does it again you will have to spank him, or in a short time he will come to laugh at your authority.

Do not confuse the workings of an imaginative brain as evidence of untruthfulness, but enter into the spirit of the "make-believe." In the case of the little tot who says, "Muvver, I went out in the garden and I saw some Indians," enter into the spirit of the play and say: "Just make-believe Indians, dear, you mean?"

My little two-year-old daughter quite startled me one day by insisting that she saw lions and tigers and great big elephants out in the yard. She was kneeling on a chair looking out; so I came at once to the window, not expecting to see a zoo in the yard, but wondering what there was to make her imagine such things. There was nothing at all in sight but grass and flowers; so, after thinking it over for a second, I said in reply: "O, yes; I see some monkeys, too -just make-believe, like yours." She looked up at me and laughed delightedly, and at once we were entered upon a new game.

Cheerful obedience is another lesson to be learned from play. A child should not cry or fuss when mother says, "Time to put up your toys," or: "Come to me, dear; I want to dress you." The average parents demand obedience, but usually exercise their authority only at such times as disobedience means inconvenience to the parents themselves. It is the teaching of constant obedience which requires the greatest patience and tact in all child training. You cannot let your vigilance flag for one moment, nor can you allow an offense to pass unnoticed.

This brings up the question of punishments. I have said that children are naturally sociable. An effective form of punishment for most offenses, therefore, is isolation from the rest of the family, and no reinstating to favor until pardon has been asked and given. Make your punishment fit the offense. Children are so active that to make them sit still on a chair alone is a sufficient punishment for rudeness, whining, and the like. The child who persists in touching things which are not his to touch can be punished by having his hands tied behind his back. I used this form of punishment, or "cure," successfully in breaking the nail-biting habit also.

The Things That Count.

Now, dear, it isn't the bold things, Great deeds of valor and might,

That count the most in the summing up of life at the end of day.

But it is the doing of old things Small acts that are just and right,

And doing them over and over again, no matter what others

In smiling at fate when you want to cry, and in keeping at work when you want to play-Dear, these are the things that count.

And, dear, it isn't the new ways, Where the wonder seekers crowd, That lead us into the land of content or help us to find our own.

But it is keeping to true ways, Though the music is not so loud,

And there may be many a shadowed spot where we journey along alone;

In flinging a prayer at the face of fear and in changing into a song or a groan-Dear, these are the things that count.

My dear, it isn't the loud part Of creeds that is pleasing to God-Not the chant of a prayer or the hum of a hymn or a jubilant shout of a song. But it is the beautiful proud part

Of walking with feet faith shod, And in loving, loving, loving through all, no matter how things go wrong;

In trusting ever, though dark the day, and in keeping your hope when the way seems long-Dear, these are the things that count.

Religion, as it beholds the transcendent majesty of God, prompts the soul to a thousand acts of adoration, praise, and thanksgiving; it summons the angels and the saints and the whole world of sentient and even inanimate creatures to sympathy and cooperation in the work of praise; it bids the soul offer all that it has and is to his service and his glory; it congratulates him that he is what he is, and rejoices that any other creatures exist to set forth his praise; it desires that all all may be brought to know and love him; it is full of zest for the advancement of his kingdom and the doing of his will.-H. P. Liddon.

There is always the self-discipline needed to correct errors of the imagination or of the will; and, at the same time, at no period of life are we incapable of the inspirations of devoted love; though, as we advance in self-discipline and moral effort, we become the more fitted to receive the higher gifts of grace. The supernatural power of conformity with the all-holy will of God, in the love and obedience of Jesus Christ, finds its true support in moral virtue.-T. T. Carter. 000

Religion, the bond between the soul and God, lives in the habits, or acts, whereby the soul adheres to, and communes with, the Infinite Source of life. It is made up of faith, hope, and love, pouring themselves forth at the feet of the invisible King; it is by turns aspiration, worship, resolve; it expends itself in a thousand unheard, unuttered acts, whereby the human spirit holds converse with its Creator. -H. The War Sufferers' Fund.

"Whose stoppeth his ears at the cry of the poor, he also shall cry, but shall not be heard."

In acknowledgment of our last remittance we have received the following letter from the American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief:

Dear Mr. Lipscomb: We 'are pleased to inclose the treasurer's official receipt for the recent contribution from the readers of the Gospel Advocate covering contributions to the amount of '$1,172.64.

These gifts mean more, since they are a continual expression of good will and contain a deeper realization of the needs in Western Asia.

You will notice from the bulletin which will be mailed to you within three or four days that we have adopted a new method of disseminating news from the Near East, and in which news of additional aid will appear. Soon after the conference in New York we will make full acknowledgment of all large contributions received during the month of June, and proper credit will then be given to the generous contributors who gave through the Gospel Advocate. Most sincerely, H. C. JAQUITH.

The following cablegram has been received by the government authorities from Constantinople:

Report received. Greatly encouraged that American people are doing so nobly for relief. Much accomplished, but prices enormous. Despite your large appropriations, funds are not enough. Our agents forced to curtail credits to women, many of whom die for the lack of nourishing food. Large number in absolute destitution and beggary. All centers plead earnestly for larger appropriations. Deported Armenians in Damascus district are not touched because funds are insufficient,

In sending contributions, be sure and state whether they are intended for the Armenian and Syrian Fund or the Poland Fund. Make all checks and money orders payable to A. B. Lipscomb, who will forward them to the proper commissioners. He is absent from the office, being engaged in a meeting at Dallas, Texas; but due acknowledgment will be made of all contributions upon his return.

The Primitive Gospel Proclaimer's Subscription List.

This list is now turned over to the Gospel Advocate, of Nashville, Tenn., which will fill out the time of all unexpired subscribers. The Gospel Advocate is not only a larger paper than the Primitive Gospel Proclaimer, but it is also a weekly paper, while the Primitive Gospel Proclaimer was only a monthly; hence when the Primitive Gospel Proclaimer's readers get copy for copy of the Gospel Advocate for the Primitive Gospel Proclaimer, they are getting their own in quantity of issues and more than their own in size.

The Gospel Advocate is not only the oldest paper published among the disciples of Christ, but it is as ably edited as any religious paper in the world, and as true to the gospel of the Son of God as the needle is to the pole.

My hope is that all of the Primitive Gospel Proclaimer's readers who are not now taking the Gospel Advocate will now become subscribers to the Gospel Advocate, and I hope the Primitive Gospel Proclaimer's writers will both write for the Advocate and work to extend its circulation everywhere.

You will not be disappointed in the Gospel Advocate, but you will find it full each week of good and wholesome matter both for believers and unbelievers.

The Gospel Advocate stands for all that is grand and pure and noble. In a word, it stands for the gospel of Christ in all of its length, breadth, height, and depth.

Help us to push its claims. We would cease publishing the Primitive Gospel Proclaimer with overmuch sorrow and regret were it not for the thought that it is being taken over by such a grand and noble religious journal as the Gospel Advocate.

Long may the Gospel Advocate live to do battle for King Jesus!

PUBLISHERS OF THE PRIMITIVE GOSPEL PROCLAIMER.

Welcome to New Readers.

This week the Gospel Advocate will begin to enter the homes of several hundred new readers. We have taken over the list of the Primitive Gospel Proclaimer, a very helpful monthly which has been ably edited by our very esteemed brother, A. A. Bunner, of Cleveland, Ohio. Unexpired subscriptions on the Primitive Gospel Proclaimer list will be taken care of by the Gospel Advocate. We will also send several sample copies to those whose subscriptions had expired, in the hope that they will be so greatly pleased with the Gospel Advocate that they may send us the price of a year's subscription. Brother Bunner informs us that he will become an earnest worker in our behalf, and requests his many friends to show an equal interest. We hope that he and his contributors will write frequently for the Gospel Advocate. By all working together, we may accomplish much in the name of our Welcome, thrice welcome, new readers, into the circle of our love and friendship. AT HOME AND ABROAD

Price Billingsley has just closed a very interesting meeting at Dickson, Tenn. Six were baptized.

James A. Allen closed the meeting at the mission on Twenty-second Avenue, North, last Friday night. One person was baptized.

Eph Smith, of Martin, Tenn., made us a pleasant call last Monday. He had recently closed a good meeting at Dillton, with four baptisms and two restorations.

The brethren appear to be united in the view that E. S. Jelley should be brought home from India. The funds required to bring him home are coming in slowly.

J. S. Darnall writes from Denton, Texas: "Our mission meeting at Roanoke, conducted by M. L. Vaughn and T. S. Teddlie, closed last night. There were two confessions and one restoration the last night. I will have to go there next Sunday to baptize them. I hope there may be others."

"I am in the training camp at Camp Gordon, and I wish to locate all the members of the church of Christ. So if any one knows of such a one, I will appreciate it if he will let me know his name and his whereabouts." So writes Chisley Grady, Fortieth Company, Tenth Training Battalion, 157th Depot Brigade, Camp Gordon, Atlanta, Ga.

To any church or person who will send us six new subscribers to the Gospel Advocate, accompanied by twelve dollars, we will give one dozen copies of our new hymn book, "Praise Him." Add postage for parcel or transportation. Act promptly while this liberal offer is good. Address the McQuiddy Printing Company, 317-319 Fifth Avenue, North, Nashville, Tenn

From Wilbur H. White, Thornton, Texas, June 28: "I am booked for Tennessee and Kentucky the latter part of the summer and until late in the fall. I have had two meetings called in on account of war conditions—one for the last two weeks in July, the other for the first two weeks in August. Who is anxious for a meeting and can fill up these two dates for me?"

R. P. Cuff writes from Macon, Ga., June 28: "I am now in a tent meeting in South Macon. Splendid interest is being manifested. Three souls have been added to the Master's cause. All of them came from the Missionary Baptist Church. Hundreds and thousands of people are dying without a knowledge of the word of the Lord. Brethren, let us work more and pray more."

George W. Farmer writes from Cleveland, Tenn., June 28: "I am spending a few days with the church at this place. This congregation is young and weak numerically and financially, but there are some good workers here. They have a nice, new, little house of worship, and, with a good preacher helper working with them and in the field, there is promise of much good being accomplished."

C. E. Barrick, 1235 Rutland Street, Houston, Texas, writes: "Please publish in your paper the location of the church of Christ in this city, so the parents of the boys in Camp Logan and Camp Ellington can write them and help us to get in touch with them in that way. We have not been able to find many of the members so far. We meet in Chickering Hall, on the third floor of the Goggan Building, 708 Main Street."

R. E. L. Taylor writes from Decherd, Tenn., June 27: "I have just closed a good meeting at Dixie, in Coffee County, with twelve additions. One of those baptized was a deaf-dumb girl about sixteen years old. I made my home with Brother and Sister Joe Davis during the meeting. They are faithful workers in the church and have made great sacrifices for a meetinghouse. Brethren, send them a contribution to help to pay off the debt of about one hundred dollars."

From O. E. Phillips, Stephenville, Texas, June 25: "The older I get and the more I read the Gospel Advocate, the more I appreciate the high-class articles and the admonitions given in the Advocate. No human mind is able to comprehend the good it has done and will yet do for humanity. Our work in Stephenville continues to bear fruit. I feel that we have a church here second to none in Texas, in benevolence, kindness, faithfulness, and deeds. G. A. Klingman will hold our meeting this summer. I am off for two and one-half months for meetings in this State."

From G. A. Dunn, Mineral Wells, Texas, June 27: "The Ennis meeting closed with twenty-five or twenty-six added to the congregation. There have been twenty-two added to date here. This has been considered a hard place. After the preaching last night, thirteen little girls, all dressed in white, were baptized. It was a beautiful sight. W. F. Ledlow, of Thorp Spring, and Jesse P. Sewell and family, of Abilene, have all attended the meeting, besides Brethren Cook, Fowler, Middleton, and other good preachers. Brethren Ledlow and Sewell report well for the colleges. I begin at Broncho, Texas, on July 3."

W. D. McQueen writes from Somerville, Texas, June 26: "F. L. Young, of Cleburne, has been here in a mission meeting for about two weeks. Eight have been bapfized and several reclaimed. The meeting will continue over next Sunday. In answer to our appeal for help we received contributions as follows: From Lott, $12.50; Killeen, $10; Brother Clark, of Conroe, $5. We expect from this time on to meet every Lord's day for worship. We hope to have several Bible classes and thus make our meetings interesting for old and young. It means great sacrifice to establish the cause here, but we are willing to do our part, Brethren, pray that we may be faithful."

Thomas E. Milholland writes from Denison, Texas, June 26: "We are in a good meeting here, with five baptisms and one from South Side Christian Church. This is strictly a railroad town. Seventy-five per cent of our members are railroad people. I have held several meetings here before I moved here and since I came. From a little band of poor, struggling, houseless disciples, perhaps forty or fifty, we have reached near the two-hundred mark. Indeed, we expect to reach it, by the grace of God, before this meeting is over. I shall begin at Collinsville on the third Lord's day in July. I could give the intervening time in a meeting. We thank God, take courage, and press onward and upward. Two more baptized last night."

The following note of cheer comes from Mrs. Thomas B Tefft, of Erin, Tenn.: "The church of Christ at Erin is now free from debt. On the fourth Lord's day in June, S. F. Morrow, of Nashville, came to Erin and preached two fine sermons for us, and while here he presented the congregation the meetinghouse which they were struggling to pay for. A year ago last April I mortgaged my home to buy the meetinghouse and give the congregation three years' time to pay for it; but, to our surprise and delight, Brother Morrow, who is one of the purest, best Christians I have ever known, and so generous, gave it to us. We wish to thank him for his generosity, and our prayers shall go with him until he is called to the great and beautiful beyond—to heaven."

The following from J. E. Hoffman, of Gamaliel, Ky., is submitted for the consideration of brethren who can give assistance: "We are trying to find a high, dry place in the West or Southwest for my wife, who is tubercular. We would like to find a place where I can find work to do. I farm, teach in public schools, teach some high-school branches, sing, work in church, and can write upon moral and religious subjects. I enjoy leading in song service, and think I might enjoy doing some church work in which I could sing quite a little. But I can do any of the things mentioned above. I can furnish recommendations. My first object is to locate my wife where she may have better health, the Lord willing. My desires in the matter are secondary. Can you help me in any way? I hope I may hear from some one within a week."

Lacy H. Elrod writes from Roswell, N. M., June 24: "The church of Christ at this place has just had a series of meetings, conducted by G. Dallas Smith. Brother Rigney, of Fort Worth, Texas, led the song service. Brother Smith did some excellent teaching and much interest was shown. Thirty-one were baptized and four reclaimed. Others have expressed concern over their spiritual condition. The church here is blessed with the services of Dr. Wood, who is doing a good work. Eugene V. Wood is a first-class dentist, and I am told that he never loses an opportunity to speak a word for the cause to every person who gets into his dental chair. He is now making an earnest effort to enlist the new members in the service of the Master. His sermon on last Lord's day was addressed especially to the new members. Although this congregation may be considered weak in this world's Although this goods, yet it does possibly more work than many that are considered strong. It looks carefully after the poor and to teaching others. Dr. Wood preaches one Sunday each month at Dexter. I understand that many have been converted because they were impressed by the earnestness with which the church members look after the distressed."

"CHURCH WORK."

We have learned that all Christians, all disciples of Christ, all saints, all the children of God, all citizens of the kingdom of heaven, all who do the will of God (see Matt. 12: 46-50) in a given place—a house, a town or city, a section of country, the whole earth-are "the church of God" or simply "the church" in that place.

We have learned that the New Testament teaches the church to meet (on the first day of the week) "together to break bread" (Acts 20: 7) and to worship God otherwise "in spirit and truth" "as it is written;" also, not to forsake their "own assembling together" (Heb. 10: 25).

We have learned, therefore, that "the whole church" in a given place at times assemble together. (See 1 Cor. 14: 23; 5: 4; 11: 18, 20.) Acts 15: 6 says "the apostles and the elders were gathered together to consider this matter;" and verse 22 says "it seemed good to the apostles and the elders, with the whole church." Then "the whole church" "were gathered together."

We have learned that when "the whole church" assemble together this assembly is called "the church," or rather "the congregation," as in the margin at 1 Cor. 11: 18, 22. (See 1 Cor. 14: 33, 34, 35.)

Now, let us ask, WHERE is the church when not assembled together? The answer to this question will help us to see what the church is and the work God commands the church to do. Acts 15: 6 says "the apostles and the elders were gathered together." Where were the apostles and elders when not "gathered together?" Did the apostles and elders not exist when not assembled together? Are there no elders now except when assembled together? Do the elders not exist, and are their duties not binding, all the time? Then, does the church not exist all the time? Is there no church in a given place except when the Christians or children of God in that place have assembled together? There was "a great persecution against the church which was in Jerusalem; and they [the church] were all scattered abroad, . . . except the apostles." The apostles were all of the church left in Jerusalem, "Saul laid waste the church" in this persecution. How did he do it? Did he wait until all were assembled? Did he tear down some house, called "the church?" He entered "into every house"-shop, store, office, dwellingwhere there were Christians, "and dragging men and women [out of these houses] committed them to prison." The church, thus scattered, "went about preaching the word." (See Acts 8: 1-4.) After Saul's conversion "the church throughout all Judea and Galilee and Samaria had peace, being edified; and, walking in the fear of the Lord and in the comfort of the Holy Spirit, was multiplied." (Acts 9: 31.) What was multiplied? The people of God, the disciples of Christ. Christians, increase, have peace, are "builded up," walk "in the fear of the Lord and in the comfort of the Holy Spirit," and therefore are "multiplied." They do this all the time and everywhere. Then, the church exists at all times-day and night, three hundred and sixty-five and one-fourth days in the year, from year to year, and from generation to generation; and wherever the disciples of Christ, Christians, the people of God, are—at work on the farm, in shops, in stores, in offices, in schoolrooms, in sick rooms, in kitchens and nurseries and wash rooms and parlors and otherwise in homesthere the church of God is. Whatever these good people are doing, the church of God is doing, whether right or wrong. But we shall come to that later,

With these facts and this teaching of the New Testament before us, we should most readily see what work God commands the church to do; yet nothing seems to be so misunderstood as that which is called "church work" or "working in the church." This comes partly from a general failure to study the New Testament in order to learn what the church is and what work God teaches the church to do. This general failure to investigate the New Testament in order to learn what the church is and what the work God commands the church to do may come from cold indifference; or from self-satisfaction with present knowledge and self-congratulation, as in the lukewarmness of the Laodiceans; or from a partisan spirit, which endeavors to justify itself at the sacrifice of truth and right and duty to God and men.

Kind readers, do not be surprised at the following statement: the expressions, "church work" and "work in the church," are not found in the New Testament. Why not? Because these expressions represent ideas, and the ideas they represent are not in the New Testament. They imply that there is a difference and distinction between some kinds of work, called "church work" or "working in the church," and other kinds of work Christians should do or may do, which is not "church work." In other words, some work Christians or the children of God do is not done in the church, or they do not do it as parts of the church or as "church work;" and other work they do is in the church or is done as parts of the church or as "church work." The New Testament makes no such differences and distinctions. Are not Christians, or children of God, in the church, and in the church at all times? What work can they do, not as Christians, not as children of God, not as the church?

With many—not with the Bible—nothing is "church work" except the work done in the congregation or in a public way, and no one is a "worker in the church" except one who works in a public way. An example: A lady said recently she would have to give up all her "church work" and devote her time to helping her daughter in the home in caring for her daughter's sick baby. The woman who teaches in a public capacity or operates otherwise in a public capacity, and, it may be possible, in a way God forbids, is called a "church worker;" while the woman who is a worker at home, keeping the house in order, preparing wholesome meals, economizing in submission to the powers that be, and therefore to God, and rearing her children in the fear of the Lord, or nursing a sick baby, is not looked upon as a "church worker."

Since the church exists all the time, whether assembled together for public worship or engaged in private work, and since Christians, the disciples of Christ, the children of God, are the church, then, wherever they are-in their homes, in their shops and offices, on their farms doing their daily work in obedience to God, or going about preaching the word, or doing anything else God teaches them to do-there is the church at work. All is Christian work-that is, all work God commands Christians to do. whether done in the congregation and in a public way or in the home and in a very private way-following some honest occupation through the week, praying in secret, helping the needy, nursing the sick, giving to the poor without show and display (Matt. 6: 2-4), etc. Christians, the children of God-the church-are commanded as they have opportunity to do "good toward all men, and especially toward them that are of the household of the faith" (Gal. 6: 10); and as they do this quietly and "as individuals," as it is said, the church is at work.

All Christians are, first, "living stones" in a "spiritual house;" next, priests "to offer spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God through Jesus Christ." (1 Pet 2: 5.) Many of these sacrifices must be offered in the home and among the poor day by day. (See Heb. 13: 15, 16.) Is praying, giving thanks, teaching the word of God, contributing, etc., in the assembly on the first day of the week, any more "church work" than praying daily, giving thanks always, teaching the word of God diligently in the home, and nursing the sick and giving to the poor through the week, when one hand does not know what the other hand does? Certainly not. (To be continued.)

Who Can Have Full Assurance of Eternal Life? BY E. G. S.

There are doubtless many that think they have assurance of heaven that are really not on the narrow way at all. Thousands are trusting the wisdom and the doctrines and commandments of men instead of trusting what the Lord says in his holy word. In fact, very many really reject the plainly expressed will of God, calling it a "dead letter" with no power to convert and save the soul. They think religion something to be got, and not something to be done. Such an idea is in open conflict with the plainly expressed teaching of God's word. Those who follow such teaching have no assurance of salvation, for they are following what uninspired men say instead of what the word of God says; and the words and wisdom of uninspired men have no power to save.

Why did Jesus say to his disciples, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature," if the word of God is a dead letter? To show that the word of God is not a dead letter, Jesus said: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." He also said: "He that believeth not shall be damned." How could he say all that, if the word of God is a dead letter? If men have nothing to do with saving themselves or others, why did Jesus give this command and make this promise? Every time men say that the word of God is a dead letter, they dispute that word as expressed by Jesus himself in his divine commission to the apostles. Thus uninspired men are presuming to dictate what men must do to be saved instead of teaching and impressing what the word of the Lord says. If preachers everywhere would spend their time in sounding out the word of God instead of giving their opinions about what it teaches, they would accomplish a much greater amount of good. All the opinions of the whole religious world can never save a single soul, but the plain word of God as preached by inspired men will save all who believe and obey it. The great effort of all preachers should be to preach the word of God as on record in the New Testament. That word as preached by the apostles has saved hundreds and thousands of people, is saving thousands to-day, and will continue to save millions more, if men will continue to preach it as did the apostles

There should be no hesitation on the part of preachers to-day in preaching the plain word of the Lord as Paul. Peter, John, and others preached it in New Testament times. If any are afraid or ashamed to preach it thus, it would be better for them to stand aside and let those have the front who preach it as the Lord gave it. There will be a terrible reckoning at the day of judgment with those who leave out the word of the Lord and preach their own opinions. Paul gave to Timothy this solemn charge: "I charge thee therefore before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom; preach the word; be instant in season, out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort with all long-suffering and doctrine." (2 Tim. 4: 1, 2.) He assigns as a reason for it: "For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine." (Verse 3.) time has long since come. A very large number of preachers spend more time in preaching their opinions about the word than they do in preaching the word itself. If all who claim to be preachers of the gospel to-day would preach the plain word of the Lord as the apostles preached it, and the people would accept it and live it out on that line. divisions would cease and the whole church would again become a unit as in the days of the apostles. Denominationalism would at once cease if all would preach as Peter, Paul, James, and John preached. There were no divisions then, because the apostles preached as the Holy Spirit gave them utterance. There were no denominations till uninspired men began to preach and build them up. There was no division on the action of baptism in the days of the inspired apostles; but when uninspired men began preaching, they soon began to preach their opinions instead of standing by what inspired men had preached. Hence divisions soon arose and denominations began to be established, and it seems that there is to be no end to it. When a denomination is once established, it is a very difficult matter to break it down. They generally go on and multiply when they once get a start. Hence all Christians should guard persistently against division and everything that is likely to cause division. Prosperity is generally impossible where division exists. Hence all Christians should strive against it and pray to be delivered from it. Divisions generally result from prejudice and strife, and, therefore, are generally hard to subdue when once inaugurated. It is very pleasant for brethren to dwell together in unity, but divisions are generally very unpleasant. It is much easier to prevent divisions than it is to put them down after they come up. Christians should always strive to live together in peace and harmony and in the joys of brotherly love.

"What Must I Do to Be Saved?"

BY J. C. M'QUIDDY.

No one can doubt the love of God for fallen man. When man sinned, God resolved to redeem him. "And I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed; he shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel." (Gen. 3: 15.) "For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have eternal life." (John 3: 16.) If the love of God only were to be consulted, no one would be lost, and no one would ever even get sick and die. But man's will must be consulted, otherwise he would be no more than a machine. "Behold, I stand at the door and knock; if any man hear my voice and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me." (Rev. 3: 20.) Christ will not break open the door, but the sinner must open it. "For I have no pleasure in the death of him that dieth, saith the Lord Jehovah: wherefore turn yourselves, and live." (Ezek. 18: 32.) "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me: for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light." (Matt. 11: 28-30.)

After Christ had died and risen from the dead, just before his ascension he commanded the apostles: "Go ye therefore, and make disciples of all the nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I commanded you: and lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." (Matt. 28: 19, 20.) From this it is clear that those of the nations who were taught and received the teaching of the apostles were to be baptized into the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit. The commission as recorded by Mark (16: 15, 16) reads: "And he said unto them. Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to the whole creation. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that disbelieveth shall be condemned." Where Matthew has "teaching," Mark shows that we are to teach by preaching the gospel. In addition to baptism, he gives us faith. Salvation is affirmed of the man who believes and is baptized. Lake (24: 46, 47) says: "And he said unto them, Thus it is written, that the Christ should suffer, and rise again from the dead the third day; and that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name unto all the nations, beginning from Jerusalem."

Luke names the additional condition, repentance, and also gives Jerusalem as the beginning point from which it should be preached. "And behold, I send forth the promise of my Father upon you; but tarry ye in the city, until ye be clothed with power from on high." (Verse 49.) They were forbidden to tell any man that Jesus was the Christ until they received the Holy Spirit. "But ye shall receive power, when the Holy Spirit is come upon you; and ye shall be my witnesses both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea and Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth." (Acts 1: 8.)

At Jerusalem, on the day of Pentecost, the apostles were baptized in the Holy Spirit. "Peter, standing up with the eleven," preached of the death, burial, and resurrection of Christ. He showed them that the things transpiring were the fulfillment of prophecy. He reminded them that Jesus of Nazareth was a man approved of God by many mighty works, as they well knew. While he had been delivered up by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God, they by the hands of lawless men did crucify and slay him. "This Jesus did God raise up, whereof we all are witnesses. Being therefore by the right hand of God exalted, and having received of the Father the promise of the Holy Spirit, he hath poured forth this, which ye see and hear." (Acts 2: 32, 33.) He then closes that matchless and powerfully convicting sermon with a positive command for faith: "Let all the house of Israel therefore know assuredly, that God hath made him both Lord and Christ, this Jesus whom ye crucified. Now when they heard this, they were pricked in their heart, and said unto Peter and the rest of the apostles, Brethren, what shall we do? And Peter said unto them, Repent ye, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ unto the remission of your sins; and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit." (Verses 36-38.)

It is clear that salvation is not unconditionally promised to any one. The conditions, as learned from Matthew, Mark, and Luke, are faith, repentance, and baptism in the name of Christ unto the remission of sins. As these conditions are all contained in the commission, we naturally expect to find them all in force at Jerusalem on the day of Pentecost.

Those assembled at Jerusalem were leaders in the Jewish religion. They believed they had done right in crucifying the Christ. It was impossible to convict them of sin until they had faith in Christ. So long as they believed him an impostor they would never be sorry for nailing him to the cross. The very fact that they were cut to the heart and asked, "What shall we do?" is evidence conclusive that they had faith. Furthermore, if they did not have faith, they were promised the remission of sins without faith, which cannot be. "And without faith it is impossible to be well-pleasing unto him; for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that seek after him." (Heb. 11, 6.) "But he that doubteth is condemned if he eat, because he eateth not of faith; and whatsoever is not of faith is sin." (Rom. 14: 23.) As no further evidence is needed of their faith, the Holy Spirit commands these believers, through Peter: "Repent ye, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ unto the remission of your sins; and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit." Thus it is seen as clearly as a mathematical demonstration that the Penteeostians believed, repented, and were baptized in the name of Christ unto the remission of their sins.

What is true of the Pentecostians is true of every other example of conversion. The Philippian jailer "brought them out and said, Sirs, what must I do to be saved? And they said, Believe on the Lord Jesus, and thou shalt be saved. thou and thy house." (Acts 16: 30, 31.) Practically the same question was asked by Saul of Tarsus: "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do? And the Lord said unto him, Arise, and go into the city, and it shall be told thee what thou must do." (Acts 9: 6.) The Lord appears to Ananias and sends him to Saul to tell him what he must do to be saved. He said: "And now why tarriest thou? arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on his name." (Acts 22: 16.) The question is substantially the same in all these cases, but in each case receives a different answer. If we can determine the reason for this, we shall at the same time, and by the same process, obtain the full, exhaustive answer to the question, " What must I do to be saved?"

According to all laws of interpretation, friends of the Scriptures should try to interpret them harmoniously. Every statement of the Bible on a given subject should be so interpreted, if possible, as to admit of the truth of every other scripture upon the same subject. We would so interpret the statements of a letter from a friend. We would not, if we could, put a possible interpretation on any statement that would make it contradict other statements of the same letter, while we could put another most natural interpretation on those words which would harmonize them with the rest of the language in the letter. Enemies of the Bible may not do this; but friends of the Bible should apply this rule of harmonious interpretation to each and all the Bible answers to the question, "What must I do to be saved?" If we all will do this, we shall construe all these answers consistently and harmoniously.

I shall begin with the answer of Paul and Silas to the jailer: "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved." It is freely conceded that it is possible to interpret this as a full and complete answer to the sinner under all conditions; but to so interpret it is to contradict the answers given to the Pentecostians and to Saul of Tarsus. Shall we thus make the Scriptures falsify themselves? We want no such falsification, neither are we willing to interpret any part of the word of God entirely away; so we will look for another interpretation of "believe on the Lord Jesus Christ." We will say it is not an exhaustive answer to the question, "What must I do?" but a proper answer to a person in the condition of the jailer. Indeed, it is a proper answer to all persons in the same condition; but as it was supplemented on this occasion, so it is to be supplemented on all similar occasions. We will conclude that though Paul and Silas, immediately on his asking the question, commanded him to believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, they afterwards, when they had enlightened him, commanded him to repent and be baptized in the name of Christ unto the remission of sins.

This at least harmonizes the two answers. The context not only justifies, but actually demands, this interpretation. Immediately following the answer, "Believe on the Lord Jesus, and thou shalt be saved, thou and thy house," we read as follows: "And they spake the word of the Lord unto him, with all that were in his house. And he took them the same hour of the night, and washed their stripes; and was baptized, he and all his, immediately." When the apostles told him to believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, they did not wait for the jailer to ask who the Lord is or how to believe, but they immediately "spake the word of the Lord unto him." This was to enlighten him, as there is no evidence that the jailer had even heard of Christ. "So belief cometh of hearing, and hearing by the word of Christ." (Rom. 10: 17.) It is essential to bear in mind the condition of the lailer. He was not a believer in Jesus. He must hear the word of the Lord to believe on Christ as he is commanded to do. As repentance and baptism are a part of "the word of the Lord," it is clearly inferable that the jailer repented. It is stated that he was baptized. The same speaking the word of the Lord that taught him he should be baptized "the same hour of the night" would also teach him that he must repent.

We have already seen that Saul asked the same question. Why was he not told to believe? Because he had already believed. He had seen the Lord and heard the truth for himself. He was not in the same condition as the jailer. Why was he not commanded to repent and be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ unto the remission of sins, as were the Jews at Jerusalem? Because Ananias had sufficient evidence that he was a penitent man. He was so penitent that he refused to eat and drink for three days. Without sight, he was praying and waiting to be told what he must do. As Ananias would not command a believing penitent to do what he had already done, he commands him to arise and be baptized, and wash away his sins, calling on the name of the Lord. Thus we see perfect harmony in the answers when we consider the different conditions of those asking the question.

We now come to the complete answer to the question, "What must I do to be saved?" If an untaught, unbelieving person, as the jailer, should ask the question, we should reply, as did Paul and Silas: "Believe on the Lord Jesus." But when believers ask the question, as at Jerusalem, the answer should be: "Repent ye, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ unto the remission of your sins." When a praying, believing penitent asks the question, he should receive the same answer as did Saul: "Arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on his name." All travel over precisely the same road, but are answered differently because they ask the question at different points on the way.

Let us illustrate. We will suppose three persons three miles from Nashville, when one of the party inquires how far it is to the city. They are informed correctly, "Three miles." They travel a mile nearer the city, when another of the party inquires how far it is to Nashville. The correct answer, "Two miles," is given. They travel another mile toward the city, when the third member of the party inquires the distance to Nashville. He is informed, "One mile." The same answer to each person would have been wrong. So it is not always right to give the same answer, "Believe on the Lord Jesus," regardless of the condition of the person making the inquiry. This answer would have been wrong to the Jews at Jerusalem and to Saul of Tarsus.

Let me encourage those who have never believed the truth to believe the gospel, to repent of their sins, and to be baptized in the name of Christ. Let me exhort those who have only believed to repent and be baptized. And I would encourage the believing penitent to be baptized. And then I would encourage all who would wear a crown in heaven to "war a good warfare" and to "fight the good fight of faith." "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee the crown of life." (Rev. 2: 10.)

Cleansing the Temple.

Lamar, Mo., May 29, 1918.—McQuiddy Printing Company.—Dear Sirs: I am writing you for some continued information if you will be so kind as to render the same to me, which I would appreciate very much. It is in regard to the explanatory notes of the Sunday-school lesson of May 19, 1918—"Jesus Exercises Kingly Authority." In your Advanced Quarterly you say, in the "Explanatory Notes," commenting on the cleansing of the temple, that it was the second cleansing of the temple by Jesus, the first cleansing being recorded in John 2: 13-17 and occurring during Jesus' first visit to Jerusalem after his public ministry began. Now, here is the point: I want to find out how you get two cleansings of the temple, when Matt. 21: 12; Mark 11: 1, 2; Luke 19: 28-41; and John 2: 13-17 record them almost identically the same. I would be pleased to have a full explanation on this subject.

MAURY L. LAYNE.

Since I write the Quarterlies, the above query has been handed to me for reply. I am glad to render to the querist any assistance possible.

The only "full explanation" I can give is to cite the scriptures which state that Jesus cleansed the temple on his first visit to Jerusalem, and again, or the second time, on his last visit to Jerusalem before his death, and that, too, only a few days before his death. It makes no difference how much alike the two occurrences were, they were as far apart as the beginning and the end of Jesus' public ministry. John 2 shows when Jesus cleansed the temple the first time-that it was during his first visit to Jerusalem after his public ministry began. Chapter 3: 22 says "after these things"-Jesus' visit to Jerusalem, cleansing the temple, conversation with Nicodemus, etc .- Jesus and his disciples went "into the land of Judea; and there he tarried with them and baptized." Almost all that occurred in Jesus' public ministry occurred after he cleansed the temple the first time. After he cleansed the temple the second time, he never left Jerusalem before his death, never baptized any one, but was betrayed and crucified a few days thereafter, as Matt. 21-26; Mark 11, 12, 13, 14 (especially Mark 14: 1, 2); and Luke 19: 28 to 23: 56 show. These scriptures give the information sought.

A Sister's Need.

BY NELLIE STRAITON.

1 here give an extract from a letter from Sister Armstrong-Hopkins, written on April 15:

Expenses have been unusually heavy; the moving, together with freight charges, demurrage charges, tickets, etc.—all, of course, exceedingly large. Then our hospital expenses and the funeral expenses, together with my drug bills, some of which have not yet been paid. The rent for my three rooms is seventy-five rupees per month, which is exceedingly small, as rents go during these excessively expensive war times.

On April 4 occurred the twenty-fifth anniversary of my marriage to Mr. Hopkins. During all these twenty-five years we were never separated more than one week at a time, and even that happened a few times only. His loss is a crushing blow to me. I am utterly desolate, brokenhearted and crushed. I cannot think of the future. It seems impossible to me. We lost every one of our children—the three of them. That seemed a very hard trial, a thing which neither of us could well get over; but now that seems as nothing compared to this. Indeed, all my friends have gone. I am alone in India and alone in the world. This is an overwhelming blow which I do not seem able to bear. I know you will pray for me.

Contributions sent to me for Sister Armstrong-Hopkins will be promptly forwarded to her. Address Miss Nellie Straiton, 1030 South Lake Street, Fort Worth, Texas.

From Across the Pacific.

BY C. G. VINCENT.

Four letters just received from Japan are filled with encouraging reports. Brother Hiratsuka is still holding meetings in the post office and in private homes in addition to the regular meetings. Literature is freely used. The brethren in the country, at Shiodamura, meet regularly for worship and Bible study. Brother Ishiguro is still "plugging away" as faithfully as ever. One baptism is reported. Miss Togo writes favorably of her work among the children and women. Miss Andrews is doing good work among the students by teaching a Bible class in English. Some of the best work ever done by the late William J. Bishop, C. C. Klingman, or the writer was in our own tongue. Scores of our most faithful members have been led to Christ in this way. Wonderful opportunity, indeed! Another raid was made on error and sin at Katori by Hiratsuka, Ishiguro, Nagami, and J. M. McCaleb, led by Fujimori. Katori is a shrine near Brother Fujimori's work in Chiba province. For several years our brethren preached the gospel at the very doors of idolatry. This work is carried on from early in the morning until late in the evening. These faithful workers are zealous and earnest, and they have a right to expect of us that we stand behind them and support them in their great work against sin in all forms. Are we doing it? We are not as we can and ought. Let us do better.

The following churches and brethren made up the check that went forward on June 1: Misses Buchanan and mother, C. C. Merritt, W. J. Campbell, Earl M. Hodson, "two friends to missions;" College Grove, Tenn.; Crandall, Texas; Blackwater, Mo.; Dayton, Ohio; Mrs. George W. Webb, and a gift through the Leader. Who will send in their offering now for the July remittance? Let me urge you not to "wait until—" "Do it now" is a good business policy that gets things done. Put that check in an envelope right now while it is on your mind.

I want to add my indorsement to what Brother McQuiday wrote in a recent issue of the Gospel Advocate regarding our duty in bringing Brother Jelley and his family back home. It should be done. One thousand dollars will get them to our shores easily, as they can travel a good part of the way second-class. First-class all the way would cost twice as much. I feel certain that if we send him one thousand dollars, he will get home on it. Try it and see. The way to do big things these days is for everybody to do his or her "bit," and do it quick. I further suggest that our gifts for this purpose be combined—that is, instead of each mailing a check or money order directly to Brother Jelley, let us send our offerings to the Gospel Advocate and let it all be sent at once, preferably by cable. You ean count on the one-hundred-per-cent Christian band in Dayton, though few in number, giving at least ten dollars. Until we find something better we will continue to meet in our room at 137 East Third Street, at which place please address me, adding Dayton, Ohio.

What Must We Do to Be Saved?

BY WILLIAM BRADFORD.

I desire to call your attention to the greatest question of the age, a question which all should deeply consider: Are you a Christian? It does not matter how busy you are, you should stop long enough to think about this question. You must know that if you die in your sins you will be lost. Do not answer, "I hope so." If you are not a Christian, you surely know it.

Have you any reason why you should not serve God? You have been blessed with food and raiment and possibly good health. Why not serve God to show your gratitude? If you have children or any loved ones whom you have been good to, would you not like for them to show you their appreciation? How much more so ought you to show your appreciation to God for your blessings!

Just stop and think how Christ gave up his life in order that we might be saved. What have you done for him? I suppose you have taken care of yourself in this world; but are you doing anything worth mentioning toward providing for yourself a home in Remember, Christ said: heaven? "But seek ye first his kingdom, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you." (Matt. 6: 33.) That is positive proof that God in his goodness and mercy has provided a way for sinners to be saved. Listen to more proof: "Be not anxious for your life, what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink; nor yet for your body, what ye shall put on. Is not life more than the food, and the body than the raiment? Behold the birds of the heaven, that they sow not, neither do they reap, nor gather into barns; and your heavenly Father feedeth them. Are not ye of much more value than they?" (Matt. 6: 25, 26.) These verses prove that God has provided a way and is willing to save all who wish to be saved.

But we must not try to have our own way while worshiping God; for if we are not willing to be directed by God's holy word, we are in rebellion. Christ said: "Not every one that saith unto me. Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father who is in heaven." (Matt. 7: 21.) Now, do you not see that all who desire to be saved must do God's will? Do not think that you will be saved by repenting on your deathbed, as that is a very risky business. Do you not know that the longer you put off becoming a Christian, the harder it is to become one? Too many people are pulled down by the cares of this world. Let me call your attention to what Christ said in his sermon on the mount: "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon the earth, where moth and rust consume, and where thieves break through and steal: but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth consume, and where thieves do not break through nor steal: for where thy treasure is, there will thy heart be also." (Matt. 6: 19-21.) Do you not see that you should strive harder to be a Christian? It will certainly be worth more than riches.

Now the question arises, how are we to become Christians? To find the answer, we should study God's holy word. The Bible says: "Search the scriptures: for in them ye think ye have eternal life: and they are they which testify of me." (John 5: 39.) It also says: "The wayfaring men, though fools, shall not err therein." (Isa. 35: 8.) With that assurance, even if we are not very wise, we ought to be able to find out what we must do to be saved.

So let us turn to the New Testament; for we are under the "new covenant" now, as the eighth chapter of Hebrews will explain. I call your attention to what Jesus said to his apostles just before he ascended to heaven: "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." (Matt. 28: 19, 20.) Thus, do you not see that baptism is very important? For Christ commanded it just before he ascended to heaven. if it had not been Important, it would probably not have been commanded during his last appearance to his apostles. The most of people understand that Christians should be baptized, but few approve of immersion for baptism. However, I think I can prove that it is immersion. Take the baptism of the Ethiopian. "And he commanded the chariot to stand still: and they both went down into the water, both Philip and the eunuch; and he baptized him. And when they came up out of the water, the Spirit of the Lord caught away Philip." (Acts 8: 38, 39.) There we have very conclusive proof that baptism is not sprinkling; for, if Philip had wanted to sprinkle the eunuch, it would not have been necessary for both to have gone down into the water; they could have stood on the outside of the water and the act of sprinkling could have been done. The context makes the proof doubly sure by saying they came up out of the water."

said: "The term 'baptism' is a Greek word; it may be rendered into Latin by 'mersic:' when we immerse anything in water-that is, may be entirely covered with water." Hastings' Bible Dictionary says: "The rite is nowhere described in detail, but the element was always water, and the mode of using it was commonly immersion." I could quote many others. but it is not necessary. However, let me call your attention to the sixth chapter of Romans, which speaks of baptism as a "burial," which is a figure of speech; but how could sprinkling fit the figure? Being put under water does fit. Baptism is also compared to death; that is, when we have repented of our sins and have been baptized, we are dead to past sinsthat is, they have been forgiven. It is not the custom to bury live people, and it is not necessary to baptize live sinners-that is, sinners who have not repented and who have no desire to serve God.

Baptism is also compared to the resurrection of Christ. I will quote from the Bible: "We were buried therefore with him through baptism into death: that like as Christ was raised from the dead through the glory of the Father, so we also might walk in newness of life. For if we have become united with him in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection." (Rom. 6: 4, 5.) Now, as baptism has been compared to the resurrection of Christ, the baptized person must rise out of water. And, again, how are we going to be saved if we are not raised out of the water in baptism? Listen: "For if the dead are not raised, neither hath Christ been raised: and if Christ hath not been raised, your faith is vain; ye are yet in your sins." (1 Cor. 15: 16, 17.) Can you not see what a dangerous thing it is not to be raised out of the water in baptism?

Let us now consider "infant baptism," which is not taught in the Bible and is a relic of paganism. It was first practiced by the pagans of Norway. (See "Encyclopedia Britannica.") I call your attention to Acts 2: 38: "And Peter said unto them, Repent ye, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ unto the remission of your sins," I would like for some one to answer this: How can a baby sin, and how does a baby have a mind to repent? Of course, baptism was not intended for any one who does not know what he is doing. Therefore people who baptize babies are doing something which God has not ordained, and are just simply adding to God's word, which is a very dangerous thing to do. However, let us see what the Bible says: "For if we sin willfully after that we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more a sacrifice for sins. . . . A man that hath set at naught Moses' law dieth without compassion on the word of two or three witnesses: of how much sorer punishment, think ye, shall he be judged worthy, who hath trodden under foot the Son of God? . . . For we know him that said, Vengeance belongeth unto me, I will recompense. And again, The Lord shall judge his people. It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God." (Heb. 10: 26-31.) It does seem to me that people would hesitate about disobeying God after the study of these passages. However, I can give another reason why we should not baptize babies. The Book says: "Whatsoever is not of faith is sin." (Rom. 14: 23.) "So then faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God." (Rom. 10: 17.) There, now, if we cannot hear anything about "infant baptism" in the reading of God's word and can find no faith for it, it must be sin.

Now, I trust that all who read this and are not Christians will please get the Bible and study it faithfully and make up their minds to be Christians -that is, to repent of their sins and be buried with Christ in baptism, and rise to walk in newness of life, and endeaver to grow daily as Christians by being faithful until death, and they will receive the crown of life,

He says freezone is an ether compound which dries immediately and never inflames or even irritates the surrounding tissue or skin. Whitewright, June 24.—This leaves me in an interesting meeting at this place. I was surely glad to have the opportunity of meeting with these good people again. I held a meeting here in 1916. I will leave on Saturday for West, Texas, to sing in a meeting there, which is to be conducted by Brother George A. Klingman. I have never met Brother Klingman, but I am sure our association together will be pleasant and, I trust, beneficial to the church. Brother Sweeney will be here to continue the meeting at Whitewright a few days after I leave. My time is all engaged for meetings and school work up to October 15, and 1 am receiving calls for meetings I cannot fill. That is right, brethren; let us be up and doing while we have the opportunity. If there ever was a time in the world's history when the gospel should be preached, it is now. May God bless the faithful.—Will W. Slater.

Live Thoughts.

BY "AX."

A happy child is a beautiful sight. Our religion makes its professors

Please Christ, and you will please yourself.

One way to be rich is to lay up treasure in heaven.

Eternal life is a gift to all obedient believers, and also a reward to those who abound in good works.

It is seldom that a great talker wants enemies, and the man of sense speaks little and hears much.

Jesus saith: "My meat is to do the will of him that sent me, and to accomplish his work." (John 4: 34.)

The Holy Spirit has never withdrawn from the Scriptures, the hearts of the disciples, or the body of Christ, which is the church.

Do not neglect prayer, the study of the Scriptures, the assembly of the saints, the Lord's Supper, or to speak to your friends about their salvation.

No grace is more necessary to the Christian worker than fidelity-the humble grace that marches on in sunshine and storm, where no banners are waving and there is no music to cheer the weary soul.

"Nothing great is lightly won; Nothing won is lost Every good deed, nobly done, Will repay the cost Leave to heaven, in humble trust, All you will do; But, if you succeed, you must Paddle your own canoe."

Energetic, persevering, enthusiastic, self-sacrificing, godly ministers of the gospel are needed everywhere. Many new churches would spring up as monuments of their labors. The apostles went out under Christ's commission, trusting their own ability, the converts made, and providence of the Christ for support. We honor them. Let us imitate them.

Mission Meetings.

BY WALTER M'MURRY.

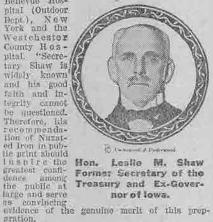

Brethren, if you want a protracted meeting this summer and are able and willing to pay a liberal support, I suppose you have already arranged with the preacher of your choice to hold your meeting. If you are unable to pay and have failed to secure a preacher to hold your meeting and have a good prospect of building up in your community, I can hold you a meeting free of charge, provided you are near enough for traveling expenses not to be too great; or, if you are willing to pay actual traveling expenses, distance need not be a hindrance, if you cannot get some one nearer you to do the work. I am well prepared with

Former Presidential Cabinet Official Recommends Nuxated Iron After Taking It Himself

Action of Hon. Leslie M. Shaw Former Secretary of the Treasury Highly Endorsed by Dr. James Francis Sullivan Who Explains the Value of Nuxated Iron as a Tonic, Strength and Blood Builder.

"There are thousands of weak, nervous, rundown folks who need just such a preparation as Nuxated Iron to help build them up but who do not know that to take and Secretary Shaw's endersement of this remarkable product will undoubtedly be the means of giving many people the very information they desire," says Dr. James Francis Suilivan, formerly physician of Bellevue Hospital (Outdoor Bept.), New York and the aration.

The Formula of the composition of Nuxated Iron is now being widely published and a careful examination of it by any physician or pharmacist should convince him that it is of great therapentic value, and one which we doctors frequently could prescribe with advantage to our patients."

Modern methods of cooking and the rapid pace at which people of this country live has made an alarming increase in fron deficiency in the blood of American men and women. For want of iron you may be an old man at thirty, dull of intellect, poor in memory, nervous, irritable and all "run down," while at 40 or 50 in the absence of any organic aliment and with plenty of iron in your blood, you may still be young in feeling, full of life, your whole being brimming over with energy and force.

As proof of this take the case of Former United States Senator Charles A. Towne, who at past 58 is still a veritable mountain of thre-less energy. Senator Towns says: 'I have found Nuxated Iron of the greatest benefit as a tonic and regulative. Henceforth I shall not be without it."

Then there is former Health Commissioner Wm. R. Kerr, of Chicago, who is past the three score year mark, but still vigorous, active, full of life, vim and energy. Former Health Commissioner Kerr says he believes his own personal activity to-day is largely due to his use of Nuxated from and that he believes it ought to be prescribed by every physician and used in every hospital in the country.

Former Secretary of the Treasury Leslie M. Shaw, says: "I have been taking Nuxated Iron for some little time and feel justified in recommending it as a very valuable tonic."

recommending it as a very valuable tonic."

Iron is absolutely necessary to enable your blood to change food into living tissue. Without it, no matter how much or what you eat, your food merely passes through you without doing you any good. You don't get the strength out of it, and as a consequence you become weak, pale and sickly looking, just like a plant trying to grow in soil deficient in Iron. If you are not strong or well you owe it to yourself to make the following test: See how long you can work or how far you can walk without becoming itsed. Next take two five-grain tailless of ordinary Nuxated from three times per day after meals for two weeks. Then test your strength again and see how much you have gained. Numbers of nervous, run-down people who were ailing all the while, have increased their strength and ondurance in two weeks' time while taking from in the proper form.

Red Blood and Courage!

(BY DR. W. C. LUCAS.)

What drives the men right up to the trenches in this war is courage, and it's red blood that "puts the heart" in the Did any one ever see a puny, thinmen. Did any one ever see a puny, timbolooded man ever rush into the fight with any chance of winning out? With rich, pure blood you can face any hardship, reach any goal. But you are handicapped in the race of life without it. Every tissue, bone, muscle, should take from the blood certain materials and return to it certain others. When the poisons accumulate in the blood, perhaps the face breaks out in pimples, or boils appear on the neck, and we feel languid, tired, our vitality is at a low ebb, and we easily catch cold.

It's time to take an alterative extract and blood-purifier, taken from Nature's forests. Such a one is made up of Golden Seal, Blood and Stone root, Oregon Grape and Queen's root—extracted with glycerine and made into sugar-coated tablets or liquid, and this has been sold by druggists for the past fifty years as Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery.

LENOIR, N. C.—"Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is a great medicine for me in building me up when I feel rum-down in health. It gives me strength and flesh. I have been using it at different times for thirty years or more. I began its use for catarrh, and it greatly relieved me. I can heartly recommend the 'Discovery' as a blood medicine."—Mrs. Lucy Beach.

A friend told me about Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. I had i'ttle faith at first but she persuaded me to try it. I have taken a little over four bottles of it and my stomach trouble has vanished. I can now eat everything and sleep like a lamb. OBITUARIES

Collins.

On the morning of May 6, 1918, the death angel came for our dear sister, Jennie Collins, beloved wife of Brother Ira F. Collins, and took her home to wear the glittering crown she had so richly won from the toils and cares of this life and the teaching of God's holy word to the little children. Her life was full of good works. Her devotion to the church of Christ and its interests was beautiful. Her daily burdens were heavy, but she was al-ways cheerful. She was a member of God's saving crew of the Lord's army, so willing to help the poor and needy, so interested in their souls. O, how sweet is her rest in that city "whose builder and maker is God!" We firmly believe that she sleeps the sleep of the righteous and is now basking in our Savior's love. We cannot weep bitter tears, for dear Sister Collins is in the care of a loving Savior. May God bless and be with Brother Collins and Earl. Funeral services were conducted by Brother T. C. Little, of Fayetteville, Tenn.

ONE WHO LOVED HER.

Killian.

I write this to report the death of Brother Lyman J. Killian, knowing that brethren will be interested in learning of his unfortunate death. Brother Killian was one of our best gospel preachers, a noble Christian character, and we should sorrow not as those who have no hope. The facts seem to be about as follows: Brother Killian, who lived at New Wilson, Okla., an oil town, at the time of his death, which occurred early last spring, was out walking at night, and seems to have been walking along the railroad track. He was very hard of hearing, and, it seems, did not hear an approaching train, and, as it had no lights displayed so that he could see them, he was run down by it and killed, his body being discovered next He leaves wife and several small children to mourn his loss, one child having come since his death. His widow and children are at present at Dixie, Okla., where they, as I understand, are engaged in chopping cotton for a living. Brethnen, let us remember Brother Killian's bereaved family in our prayers, and those who have known Brother Killian and have profited by his sacrificing labors in the past should send something to Sister Killian to assist her in bearing life's burdens. Brother Killian was one of the most self-sacrificing preachers of my acquaintance. His sacrifices and afflictions are ended and he has reached his eternal reward. May we all live faithful. I am writing this without the knowledge of Sister Killian and altogether on my own motion.
U. G. WILKINSON.

Compton.

Lucy J. Turner was born in Talle-dega, Ala., on October 23, 1831. She was the daughter of John and Matilda Turner. She became a Christian at the age of sixteen years, being baptized by Jesse B. Ferguson, at that time pastor of the Christian Church in Nashville, Tenn., and held her membership with that congregation for some years. She was married, on July 26, 1851, to Philip N. Compton, and soon afterwards went to live at the home of his father, Henry Compton, seven miles from the city, near the Granny White road. They resided at the old home for twenty-five years. rearing a family of two sons and three daughters, fifteen grandchildren, eight great-grandchildren—all of whom sur-vive their mother. The Compton home was known far and wide for its hospitality. Having many friends in the city, it was a common thing for guests to arrive on Sunday morning to spend the day. Sometimes they were met on the way to the meeting of the church by unexpected visitors. Sister Compton would never neglect the Lord's-day worship, but, giving her friends the key, would bid them make themselves at home till the return of the family. Captain Henry Compton had built a house on the road for a school and for preaching. A little band of disciples began to worship there soon after the close of the Civil With the help of occasional sermons by J. K. Blackman, David Lipscomb, and others, the congrega-tion grew in numbers, and eventually a meetinghouse was built, known as "Compton's Chapel." Philip Compton had become a Christian, and the children followed later, being taught and trained by their mother, whose zeal never faltered. The last twenty years of her life were spent nearer the city, and she was identified with the congregation now worshiping at Law-rence Avenue. She was very feeble and suffered much during these years, being confined to her home much of the time. She was always cheerful and patient and interested in the wellbeing of those about her to the last. She and her husband spent a long life together, having passed the sixtysixth anniversary of their marriage. Brother P. N. Compton, aged ninety-one years, died on January 17, 1918. and his wife died on June 8, 1918. Both of these saintly characters were lifelong friends to the Gospel Advo-cate. Their devotion to one another, to their relatives and friends, and, above all, to the Lord Jesus Christ, was inspiring to behold. We may not hope to live so long nor to present lives as faultless, but we pray that we may have our last days as were theirs, made sweet and comfortable by the loving, tender care of their children. May we join them in that city "without griefs or graves, without sins and sorrows, without births or burials, without marriages or mournings-a city which glories in having Jesus as its King, angels for its guards, saints for its citizens, whose walls are salvation and whose gates are praise.'

Rooster Victim of Big Drive in Missouri.

Early in June a "drive" against the rooster was launched by the University of Missouri. The poultry extension service of this institution wanted every rooster removed from laying flocks at that time.

The object of the campaign was to prevent the annual bad-egg loss. Five million dollars' worth of eggs are estimated to have spoiled in Missouri last year. Most of this loss comes in the summer time, and is due largely to fertile eggs being marketed in hot weather.

Fertile eggs spoil quickly when kept warm, due to embryo growth, and temperature conditions in summer make it almost impossible to keep the fertile egg cool enough to prevent damage. Ordinary roosters should be sold or eaten as soon as the hatching season is ended, to save feed they would eat during the summer. Those desired for next season should be penned up and kept away from laying hens throughout the hot weather.

The slogan of the campaign was "Can the rooster." Canning demonstrators showed how to can the rooster by the "cold-pack" method. Produce dealers will pay a premium during Rooster Week to have the males "canned" off the farm, County Food Administrators were urged to give their assistance to the campaign.

The Way of the Cross.

The way of the cross is an old way and a long way; for no one remembers its beginnings, and few have described its triumphant end. It is a hard way; for even the Lord of us all did not climb to its summit unaided, and it is seared by the treading of countless feet. It is a universal way; for the brave have passed the cowardly thereon, and prince and pauper have marched abreast, and little children have trudged by the mighty, while youth and love have walked with age and grief.

In a humanly hopeless spot, where lust, poverty, and mischance had surrounded a soul by squalor, a priest beheld dving eyes turned upon the cross of a city mission chapel. A lonely working girl in London found consolation for the monotony of her life in the effect of a great white cross cast athwart the sky by powerful searchlights. On Easter morning, in a camp on the Western plains, a company of American soldiers fixed a cross draped with the mourning flag of Belgium for their outdoor altar. Exalting valor and skill to a superhuman degree, a company of Italian soldiers gained an impassable ascent, and on the snow-capped mountain with the winds for a Te Deum knelt around a huge crystal cross erected from blocks of ice. Crucified herself, the Old World marks with crosses the very scars of her sacrifice and the wounds of her martyr-

Doubt and disaster may do their worst, toil may tyrannize, sorrow may overwhelm, and courage drain life's chalice, while death stalks the earth; but through the mystery and pain Faith clings with celestial fidelity to the Crucified and goes the way of the cross. We cannot fall so low but the cross attracts us. Our refuge from the commonplace is in that ransom. The valiant wrap their colors around the cross, and we cannot climb so high but we carry it with us.

Dante conceived of the first heaven that lies completely beyond earth's pale as having in the midst of it the cross. As it overshadows the graves of the heroic dead, is it unlikely that they rise in its grace and reign in its

Can Conservation.

Many people who have never raised vegetables and small fruits before are, as the result of war-garden propaganda, producing more than their families can consume during the summer. Others have increased the size of their gardens so as to swell the total production far above normal. This prospect for a large surplus, coupled with shortage of freight and express accommodations, makes it necessary for these people to buy their canning and drying outfits, cans, and other containers early in the season.

For jellies and jams, old jars and glasses may be used. No good containers of any kind should be thrown away, as they represent not only a possible saving of food, but also a saving of glass or tin and valuable shipping space.

Nichol-Payne Debate.

BY X.

The Nichol-Payne debate closed on the night of May 31. The propositions were as follows: (1) "The church of Christ, of which I (C. R. Nichol) am a member, is scriptural in origin, faith, doctrine, and practice." (2) "The church of God, of which I (T. S. Payne) am a member, is scriptural in name, origin, faith, doctrine, and practice." Two days of two sessions each were given to each proposi-

Brother Nichol took the Bible and ably and beautifully set forth the church of Christ in its origin, its faith, its doctrine, and its practice. The arguments he gave to sustain his proposition were wonderfully clear and profoundly true. The origin, Pentecost, the first Pentecost after the resurrection, at nine o'clock in the morning of the first day of the week, in an upper room in Jerusalem. Scriptural proof of this was unlimited. The faith, the doctrine, and the practice of the church to which Brother Nichol belonged were overwhelmingly sustained and proven to be exact with that of the New Testament church. Brother Nichol presented Mr. Payne with forty questions or more. all of which remain unanswered, and most of them untouched.

Payne spoke freely of his spiritual birth. Brother Nichol asked him who his spiritual mother was; but, though he pressed and gouged him for an answer throughout the entire debate, he failed to get an answer. Payne said God was his Father, the Holy Spirit was masculine, and that Christ had not been wedded to the church yet. So Brother Nichol said be could but conclude that Mr. Payne was an illegitimate child. Payne tried to get around answering the question on the grounds that they agreed to use only the Bible in the debate, and this question was an unscriptural question. Brother Nichol said he had a spiritual mother, and his Bible told him who she was. Payne called for the scripture, and Brother Nichol quoted Gal. 4: 26. Then Brother Nichol told Payne if he would read his Bible and not depend so much on revelations, he would know more about what is in it. Payne made but little effort to answer any of Brother Nichol's arguments, and literally failed in the efforts he did make, which could be seen by the ordinary pious mind.

When Payne took the lead in defense of the institution to which he belonged, which he ignorantly calls "the church of God," his first work was to establish the name of the church. He gave seven references wherein he said he found the name of the church. To this Brother Nichol replied that the name of the church was not found in either of these passages. Brother Nichol says the expression, "the church of God," as found in these references, does not name the church, but declares the ownership; as, "the horse of Nichol" The name of Nichol's horse is "Bill." Brother Nichol said all proper names begin with capital letters, but in these references to the church there are no capital letters except in Jehovah's name.

Payne said the church of God originated as an organized body when Christ sent out the twelve in Matt. 10: 1-7, and the church to-day must be just like that one was to be the church of God. Brother Nichol showed that up to the ascension these apostles were "unconverted," "hard-hearted," "unbelievers," denying the Lord with swearing and cursing. This did not suit their claims of sanctification.

Payne's efforts to set forth their claims in the work of the Holy Spirit, sanctification, miraculous gifts, divine healing, holy dancing, and foot washing were utter failures.

On the third night, just as Brother Nichol was concluding his last speech, some women among Payne's followers began jabbering in what they call the "unknown tongue." Two of them ran into the stand and gave Brother Nichol a short sermon in the "unknown tongue." One of them told him she saw the devil in his face, and the other smote him several times in the face and told him he would fall dead before morning. Brother Nichol told them the next evening that he did not know before that his face was a mirror. He also told them that these revelations that they were getting were false revelations; that this woman under the influence of the Holy Spirit (?) the night before had told him that he would fall dead before morning, but twenty-four hours had passed and he was yet alive. With this exception, we had perfect order, and both speakers conducted themselves toward each other in a very pleasant manner.

Brother Nichol has made for himself and the truth, for which he stands, many friends. Hundreds are expressing admiration of him and anxiety to hear him in a meeting.

The debate was well attended throughout.

If You Value Your Health

Read Every Word of This Remarkable Story

It is told by one who has himself experienced the regeneration in health which he encourages you to seek by the self-same means ..

The hardships of a traveling salesman's life had wrecked my health. My family physician diagnosed my case as chronic gastritis, brought on by disease of the liver and complicated by kidney trouble. I consulted specialists who confirmed his diagnosis. Months passed, I grew worse and was finally compelled to give up my work.

By chance I heard of some wonder-ful cures which had resulted from drinking the water of a little spring in the Mineral Belt of South Carolina, a the Mineral Belt of South Carolina, a picture of which spring appears on this page. In desperation I tried it. On the second day I thought that I could notice some improvement; at the end of the first week my appetite and digestion had returned and I was much stronger; at the end of the third week I felt that I was completely cured. That was six years ago and I still enjoy perfect health.

Knowing that it had restored my health and believing that it had saved my life, I bought the Spring.

I then determined to see whether the water would cure others as it had gured me. I shipped ten gallons absured me.

had saved their lives
I realized that I had discoved one of the world's greatest mineral springs, and I decided to devote my life to it and I decided to devote my file to it.
But how could I make the world listen; how could I make them believe my story? The precious water was running to waste while thousands were suffering. I said, I will make them believe me by showing my faith in the and in the greaters. in them and in the curative power of the Spring I will tell them that the water shall cost them nothing if it fails to benefit

Mr. N. F. Shivar, Shelton, S. C.: Dear Sir. As you are well aware, in 1909 I was suffering with indigestion, stomach and liver disorders and all its train of horrifying phenomena for several months. I had lived on milk, soft eggs, shredded wheat, a very insufficient diet for an active working man, and of course, from disease and starvation was in a vory low state of nervous vitality and general debility. I ordered 19 gallons of your Mineral Water, which I used continuously, reordering when necessary, and in four months from date I began drinking it gained 29 lbs., was strong and perfectly well and have worked practically every day since. It acts as a general renovator of the system. I prescribe it in my practice, and it has in every instance had the desired effects. It is essential to use this water in as large quantities as possible, for its properties are so happily blended and in such proportion that they will not disturb the most delicate system. It is purely nature's remedy.

The Evil Eye.

If ever you should be traveling in the Orient and should visit Hebron, the place where Abraham was buried, you would see many of the native Moslems wearing flat, green, glass beads. Upon inquiry, you would learn that these beads are regarded as charms to ward off the hurtful influence of the evil eye. There is nothing, of course, in this practice of wearing beads for such a purpose but superstition. But the evil eye in the Bible sense is not a myth. We are taught that such a thing can and does exist, and it is to be dreaded. It is certain that Moses gave a commandment against the evil eye. "Beware," he wrote, "that there be not a base thought in thy heart, saying. The seventh year, the year of release, is at hand; and thine eye be evil against thy poor brother, and thou give him naught." (Deut. 15: 3.) Solomon said: "Eat thou not the bread of him that hath an evil eye, neither desire thou his dainties." (Prov. 23: 6.) Jesus spoke twice of the danger of having an evil eye. "The lamp of the body is the eye," he declares: "if therefore thine eye be single, thy whole body shall be full of light. But if thine eye be evil, thy whole body shall be full of darkness." (Matt. 6: 22, 23.)

The evil eye the Bible recognizes is not the same thing the Mohammedan is afraid of or that which makes some of the old-time negroes shake in their shoes. It is not a thing to be kept off, but a thing to be put down. It is something that does not cast its curse outward, but inward. It is not the possession of another, but of one's own self. Jesus shows its working by saying: "Not that which entereth into the mouth defileth the man; but that which proceedeth out of the mouth, this defileth the man."

The Red Eye.

The red eye may stand for the eye of lust and unholy passion. Every sentence in the Bible that is uttered against these sins is a rebuke of this evil eye. In showing the superiority of his teaching over that of the Mosaic law, Jesus said: "Ye have heard that it was said, Thou shalt not commit adultery: but I say unto you, that every one that looketh on a woman to lust after her hath committed adultery with her already in his heart." (Matt. 5: 27, 28.) This simply means that an adulterous look is tantamount to adultery itself. Since this is true, there are a great many men whom we rub up against every day who have evil eyes. If you will observe closely when walking down a crowded street, it will not be hard to discover whom they are, these men with "eyes full of adultery." The sin they commit is not against the woman upon whom they look, but it is against themselves. It casts its curse inward rather than outward. Not long ago a man was arrested in our city on the charge of making seditious utterances against the government. When the evidence was completed, the prosecuting attorney summed it up by saying: "Your Honor, this man has an evil mind." How many there are who walk the streets of Nashville unmolested! How easy it is for one of us to join their company if we are not watchful! There is no greater curse than to have to look out upon the world through an eye of that color. It is a condition that makes all of life seem an inflamed and unholy thing. The light that comes in through such an eye wears a foul track across the brain and induces a fever in the heart which nothing short of a miracle can remove.

The Green Eye.

Another one of these evil eyes is green. It is the eye of jealousy. Shakespeare, you will recall, calls it the "green-eyed monster which doth mock the meat it feeds on." Jesus refers to this kind of an eye when he represents the householder in one of his parables as asking the question: "Is thine eye evil because I am good?" The green eye looks hatred and malice. It snaps with ill will. It distorts the image of him upon whom it is fixed, magnifying his faults, dimming his merits, and seeing defects and blemishes that do not exist at all. But, after all, the intended blight reacts upon those who give the look. Jealousy injures the person who is jealous far more than the one he is jealous of. Of all the traits to be hated and shunned, jealously is the chief. It has a terrible history. It is the mother of a foul progeny-murder and crime, calumny and blackmail are its offspring. It sears the conscience, warps the judgment, sours the spirit, and blunts all of the delicate sensibilities. The man who looks through such an eye bids an eternal farewell to happiness if he does not change his vision. "Jealousy is as cruel as the grave," declares the writer of Ecclesiastes; and it is more cruel to one's self than to any one else.

Accursed though it be, jealousy is as common as covetousness and as self-perpetuating and persistent as pride. Hundreds of society women are jealous of each other. The same is true of hundreds of women who are not "in society." There are fine-looking girls with blue eyes and brown eyes and black eyes who are cursed with green eyes. Milton, in "Paradise Lost," pronounces jealousy the hell of injured lovers. Merchants are jealous of their competitors. Preachers often fall an easy prey to its ravages. None of us are above it unless we are watchful and prayerful. Whatever our position or our work in life may be, God keep us from an evil eye that is green!

The Yellow Eye.

Another evil eye is yellow. It is the eye of greed and mammon. It comes from looking too long at gold or its reflection. Some of us never see any more than the reflection of big money, and yet we have the symptoms of the yellow eye. Blake, the artist, once said that when the sun came rising above the horizon he beheld the Lord God of hosts, but most of his countrymen saw only a golden sovereign against the sky. If the characteristic Englishman has this yellow eye, what must be said of us moneyseeking Americans? Now that the world's biggest powder plant has come to Nashville and such big wages are being paid that we might say the town is surfeited with money, there is great danger of hundreds of our citizens catching the yellow eye. It is more contagious than smallpox, and it is more debilitating than malaria. Peter likens it to myopia. He uses the expression "not seeing afar off," blinded by that which is near by and material and secular, so that the unseen, the eternal, and all of those things which come within the vision of faith, are gone completely out of men's lives. Solomon diagnoses this difficulty when he says: "He that hasteth to be rich hath an evil eye." The pauper is as subject to the temptation as the millionaire. Every ordinary workman who gets on the train to make the trip to Hadley's Bend with nothing upon his mind except the $3.60 per diem he is to receive is in danger. It is a desire for gain, a search for the seen, a passion for the things of time that is liable to flatten the soul and render all of the finer sensibilities sordid and coarse. We need to throw the safeguards of prayer and watchfulness around our own hearts and the hearts of others, lest this great enterprise that has come to our city may yet prove our greatest curse.

God's Eye.

Suppose we have an evil eye; suppose it is a bad case of red or green or yellow; is there a remedy? Yes, thank God, there is. "The blood of Jesus his Son cleanseth as from all sin." It will wash any hurtful color from our eyes and give us a clear vision again. "Thou seest me," said Hagar. Let a man live in the consciousness that the eye of God is upon him, and he will be adverse to jealousy. ashamed to be lustful, and afraid to be avaricious. Mitchell, the astronomer, used to tell an incident in his life which burned this consciousness indelibly upon his memory. One day as he was experimenting with his telescope he saw two boys climbing over the fence into an orchard four miles away. They looked in all directions to see if any one was in sight; and when they were fully reassured, as they supposed, they clubbed the apples off the trees, filled their bag, and sneaked away, little supposing that there was some one four miles away who saw the whole procedure. Our God does not need a telescope to become acquainted with our every thought and action. "His eyes are upon the ways of a man, and he seeth all his goings." 21.) Let a man become deeply conscious of this fact, and it will keep him from the evil eye. Moreover, God does not merely watch his children, but he has promised to set his almighty eye within us. "In my parochial rounds," writes John Balcom Shaw, "I was calling on one of our aged women, and upon inquiring about her health she told me, with great depression of spirit, that she was fast losing her eyesight. That was too much for the daughter who sat beside her, and, stroking her hand softly, she instantly broke in: "Never mind, mother dear; I will be eyes to you." That is God's assurance to us. "I will instruct thee and teach thee in the way which thou shalt go: I will guide thee with mine eye." (Ps. 32: 8.) If we get his view of life and death, of time and eternity, we shall no longer see with distorted vision. How can we get his view if we do not read his word, obey his teachings, and come into the blood-washed institution of Jesus Christ, his Son?

Destitute "Superannuated Preachers."

BY C. NETTERVILLE.

Brother Larimore recently told us of seeing a picture, somewhere in his travels, of an old horse which, because it was no longer of service to his master, had been "turned out to make his living as best he could." The poor creature was represented as standing at the pasture bars one dreary winter evening with wistful eyes longingly turned toward the barn where, in "better days," he had been accustomed to receive his daily rations from the ample stores therein contained, but from which he was now shut off by the wooden bars which blocked the pathway he had formerly trod when going to his former feeding place.

From this pathetic picture the transition is easy to the "superannuated gospel preacher" who has spent his life-preaching the unsearchable riches of the gospel of Jesus Christ to his fellow man, while failing to make provision for the time (which comes to far too many of them) when, by reason of age and failing strength, he can no longer serve mankind in that capacity, and by reason of that circumstance is compelled to take his place among those "laid upon the shelf." Being of no further use, in accord with the custom of this strictly utilitarian age, he, like the old horse of the picture, is "turned out upon the commons" to live as best he may.

When we see this pathetic picture of a veteran soldier of the cross in destitution feebly struggling to eke out an existence until the call comes for him to go up higher, the scene is too much, and one is almost forced to cry out In Indignant protest against the cruel fate that has thus befallen him who deserves so much better of his fellow man.

While one is constrained to hope and believe that the number overtaken by this misfortune is quite small, the fact that this number, or even one of them, should be subjected to this misfortune is just cause for serious concern. And the question, "Why is it thus?" calls for earnest consideration and a candid answer, as well as an honest endeavor to find and apply a remedy for this very deplorable condition in which we find these unfortunates.

It may be that blame attaches somewhere. It may be that there is neglect through carelessness, or this may simply be the result of indifference on the part of those responsible for such a sad spectacle as is thus presented to the world. It is not my purpose to censure any one, much less is it my province to "fix the blame where it belongs." I have great faith in the honest intention of a vast majority of the human family to do right. Consequently my aim in this effort shall be to endeavor to find a remedy and urge its application, so that such pathetic incidents shall cease to harass our souls.

A close observation of the manner in which the great Architect and Ruler of the universe operates, it seems to me, should make it clear enough for human comprehension that he is not the "author of confusion," but that the order and harmony manifested in all his works show that he works by certain well-established rules. Our God is not a deity concerned only with the things that pertain to this earth. The Jehovah who reveals himself to us through the Bible is the creator, ruler, and sustainer of the universe. He is infinite in wisdom and power. By the exercise of this power, directed by that unerring wisdom which pertains to him alone, he created all things and set in motion the machinery which runs this universe with such accuracy and regularity as to excite man's wonder and admiration. To accomplish this tremendous task, it was necessary that rules be made for the control of this tremendous system in every minute detail of its wonderful mechanism. In his incomparable wisdom he was able to do this. And we find it working as smoothly to-day as when the fiat, "Let it be done," first went forth and the wheels began their ceaseless revolutions. Whatever he wants done, there is machinery all ready to do it, and means provided for the operation of that machinery. Is it storehouses of grain he wants procured, there is the soil for the reception of the seed, moisture to start the germ of the future plant into life, food to nourish that plant stored up in the soil, with means provided for getting that food to the plant, which in due time matures the "full grain in the ear," and we have the result in the production of that which is wanteda crop of grain ready for the sickle of the husbandman. Thus, and thus only, works the God whom we honor and serve, except it be in some extraordinary case or circumstance when he suspends these laws temporarily and substitutes others, and we call it a "miracle." But that he does not use miraculous means in the ordinary affairs of this life "goes without saying." Jesus taught his disciples to pray their Heavenly Father to give them their daily bread. Could these disciples expect their prayer to be answered? Yes, upon the condition, and only upon the condition, that they comply with the laws governing the production of this bread. In this manner, and in this manner only, may we expect him to work for the accomplishment of the ordinary things pertaining to man and his wants.

Now, man stands related to God in two ways-as pertaining to matters in the material world and as pertaining to spiritual things. Analogous to the laws governing material things are the laws controlling spiritual affairsat least, in so far as obtaining blessings from his hands are concerned. If man wishes to obtain the remission of his sins, God has provided a way and furnished the means for obtaining this object, and it can be secured in no other way than by a strict compliance with his requirements. The same is true of every spiritual blessing. In strict obedience to his will and exact compliance with the plans he has devised may man expect blessings to be showered upon him from the munificent hand of Him who holds everything in the universe subservient to his will. In this obedience and compliance, man may expect and will receive rich blessings in the full fruition of his hopes based upon faith in the promises of Him who is able and willing to bless beyond anything man can hope to deserve.

Now, then, when a man who has given so much of time and service to God and his fellow man is permitted to be destitute of the necessaries of life in his old age, surely there has been a mistake made somewhere by some one. Sure am I that the great and good Being who has made such ample provision for man's comfort and well-being, and has devised means and instrumentalities whereby man may enjoy these blessings, did not design that it should be thus with any of his creatures; and we may rest assured that the fault lies not at his door.

Now, in all deference to these worthy men, I would suggest that it is just possible, at least, that; in so fashioning the manner of their lives as to produce so sad a result, they have made a mistake. Perhaps in the management of their affairs they have ignored the laws that the great Giver of all good has laid down governing such affairs.

I believe it is admitted by all thinkers that man is at least twofold in his nature—spiritual and physical. Now the same God who gave man laws governing his spiritual nature gave him laws governing his physical being, and he is just as exacting in his requirements of man concerning obedience to one set of laws as the other. Perhaps our worthy but unfortunate brethren have placed too little stress on the strict observance of laws whereby spiritual blessings are obtained, and not enough on the observance of those laws upon compliance with which, and only upon compliance with which, man may expect to secure temporal blessings. Perhaps it is as obligatory upon them to observe God's laws respecting temporal blessings as spiritual, and perhaps they have failed to observe the one as strictly as the other.

Is a man's obligation to preach the gospel so urgent, so obligatory, that he "must needs" ignore all things else, even to the providing the means for caring for that body with which God has provided him and in which his spirit must abide while in his Master's service upon this mundane sphere? If he thinks so, perhaps he is mistaken, know he is prepared to tell me that the Book of books says that "he that preaches the gospel should live of the gospel;" that if he devotes his time and energies to preach ing the gospel, he has a right to expect a support. I will grant him this. But when the support fails to come, what I take it that when a man gives his time and devotes his talents to preaching the gospel, those for whom he labors should compensate him for his labor; and when they fail to do this, their duty, what is his duty? Perhaps this is where some good brethren have made a mistake. Perchance when the Savior said, "Go ye into all the world. and preach the gospel to every creature," he meant to place as great an obligation upon him whose talent lies not in the preaching line as upon him who is capable of proclaiming the gospel of the Son of God; and perhaps it is the duty of the latter to teach the former his duty in the premises and to insist upon his bearing his part of the burden. When a man assumes the rôle of preacher, it seems to me it is incumbent upon him to "declare the whole counsel of God." If it is the will of God that the preacher of the gospel should be supported in his work by those with whom he is associated, it certainly is his duty to teach them that this must be done, and, moreover, to insist that it be done. If not, I would like to know why not.

Perhaps the Lord does not require of these who preach the gospel that they neglect their own well-being by failing to properly provide, not only for the present, but also for the future needs of that material body which is itself Godgiven. It may be that man is expected to provide for the maintenance of his physical being by obeying the Godgiven rules the observance of which is absolutely essential if a man succeeds in keeping his physical being up to the requirements of nature. The great apostle to the Gentiles says that he who fails to provide for his own has "denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel." Might it not be that the preacher who fails to provide for his own bodily well-being would come under this heading?

Now I know that some good brother is ready to quote: "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." I will cheerfully grant you this, too. But I want you, my dear brother, to tell me how these blessings are to be added. Do you suppose that Jesus meant that, without any effort on our part to obtain them, God would add unto us all temporal blessings? Has he ever done it, only in exceptional cases and for special purposes? Is it in harmony with his method of procedure? Does he bestow, or has he promised, in any age of the world or under any dispensation, to bestow, blessings, either temporal or spiritual, unconditionally? Rather, has he not, at all times and under all circumstances, made his blessings conditional on man's doing something? My brethren, I ask you to think on these things and see if you do not come to the conclusion that it is incumbent upon man to observe the laws God has made concerning the well-being of his physical as well as his spiritual nature.

I believe that if preachers will do their whole duty in teaching the membership their whole duty and insist that they do it, a support for them in their present wants and future needs will be assured. If it is the duty of the membership to provide a support for those who labor for them in teaching the word, is it not the duty of the teacher to insist that the membership do their duty? And when this has been done, there will be no pathetic instances of superannuated gospel preachers in want of the necessaries of life. Then, does not the fault lie at the door of those teachers who fail to declare the whole counsel of God on this subject?

"Teaching the Word of God."

BY D. S. LIGON.

Under the above caption, the reader will remember, no doubt, an article from the pen of Brother J. C. McQuiddy. I feel sure that Brother McQuiddy wants nothing but that which is in harmony with the good word of the Lord on this and all other questions, and, therefore, will appreciate a friendly review of his remarks for the good of all of his readers. I ask the reader to first look up the Gospel Advocate, May 30, and read all Brother McQuiddy has to say, and then read this review. In doing this you will get all before you at once.

Brother McQuiddy starts out by saying: "I have received a number of questions from brethren in regard to teaching the Bible by the class system." Then Brother McQuiddy goes on and says: "These brethren state that a few in their congregations object to the division of the church into classes for the purpose of teaching the Bible." It is evident from what Brother McQuiddy says that a number of brethren are concerned about teaching the Bible by dividing the church into classes and teaching the Bible by "the class system." I do not suppose Brother McQuiddy has ever received a single question from any brother asking if it is right, and therefore scriptural, to teach the Bible. You will note, then, that the question involves the "class system," and not teaching the Bible.

I am personally acquainted with one brother who asked Brother McQuiddy a question about "the division of the church into classes" where it was causing or would cause a division in the church over the matter, and this brother asked Brother McQuiddy if he would recommend the "class system" if it would divide the body of Christ. This question never was answered by Brother McQuiddy, and he does not answer it in the article above referred o. I. for one, brethren, have long since determined not to cause or help to cause a division of the people of the Lord over things not commanded by the Lord, though I may think it may or may not be done and do no violence to the Lord's word. If it causes division or would cause division, I say, to be safe, let it alone. (1 Cor. 8: 7-13.)

I am greatly surprised at Brother McQuiddy's remarks on the word "teach" in order to prove it is scriptural to "divide the church into classes" to teach the Bible. He says, "Those who make the objections do not understand the meaning or force of the word 'teach.'" and then gives his readers a definition from Mr. Webster as follows: "To make to know how; to show how; hence, to school, train, or accustom to some action; as, to teach one to read; to direct as an instructor; to guide the studies of, or to conduct through a course of studies; to give instruction to; as, to teach a child or a class." "Thus it is seen," says Brother McQuiddy, "that the word 'teach' means to teach a child or a class; hence, in the word 'teaching' inheres the idea of class teaching." It is just a little surprising how much some people can find in a word when they want to sustain a point or make an argument. Mr. Webster's meanings are correct so far as the English word is concerned, but Brother McQuiddy's conclusion is far from Webster's meanings given. I most positively deny that a "division of the church into classes for the purpose of teaching the Bible" is in the word teach. I may not "understand the meaning or force of the word teach'" as well as some men, but I confess that I do not "understand" the word "teach" to mean a division of the ones to be taught into classes. I grant that a teacher may teach one or a hundred, but a "division of this hundred into classes," I most emphatically say, is not found in the word "teach," as Brother McQuiddy tells us.

Listen at Brother McQuiddy again: "Clear distinction is made in the Bible between the words 'preach' and Preaching has its place in the church, and so has teaching." I may not understand just what Brother McQuiddy means here by "clear distinction between the words 'preach' and 'teach;'" but if he means the word "preach" and the word "teach" are from different words in the Greek, I agree with him; but if he means when a preacher preaches he is not to divide the taught into classes, and when he teaches he must divide into classes, or when the preacher preaches he does not teach, I must say again I do not "understand the meaning or force" of the words "preach" and "teach" to have such "clear distinction" in the good word of the Lord. I grant that some men may preach and not teach, but the trouble is in their ability, and not a "clear distinction made in the Bible between the words 'preach' and 'teach.'"

Brother McQuiddy next speaks of John the Baptist "always represented as preaching, never teaching." wonder in my heart if he means to teach his readers by this that John never taught the people by his preaching? Hear Brother McQuiddy again: "Jesus was both a teacher and a preacher." Now the brethren who provoked Brother McQuiddy's article by their questions may not "understand" meaning of words, but I am sure that those brethren should like to know if John and Jesus, when they were preaching, were not at the same time teaching. My conception is, when they preached, they taught. All teachers are not preachers, neither is all teaching preaching; but surely all preachers should be teachers and all preaching should be teaching, and therefore he who preaches without teaching something is in a poor business indeed.

Again, Brother McQuiddy says: "When we find Christ and the apostles teaching, we understand that they taught classes, for this is the meaning of the word 'teach." Let us examine the word "teach" and see about its meaning. Brother McQuiddy gives us a few New Testament texts with the word "teach" and "preach" to show his "clear distinction" between the two words. The word "teach" is from the Greek "didasko" in the passages given, and the word "preach" is from "keerusse." Thayer says "didasko" means (1) "to hold discourse with others in order to instruct them, deliver didactic discourses;" (2) "to teach one-used of Jesus and the apostles uttering in public what they wished their hearers to know and remember." And Thayer says the word "keerusso" means (1) "to publish, proclaim openly," and is (2) "used of the public proclamation of the gospel and matters pertaining to it, made by John the Baptist, by Jesus, by the apostles and other Christian teachers." Thus you can see the meanings of these two words as given by Thayer, who is standard authority on this matter. Dr. Thayer does not say the word "teach" means to divide into classes, neither does Mr. Webster. Division into classes is not in the word at all. Brother McQuiddy referred to Jesus' teaching in the temple. (Luke 2: 46.) Yes, Jesus taught in the temple: but did he divide into classes? "Furthermore," says Brother McQuiddy, "we learn that, after he had entered upon his public ministry, Christ is spoken of again and again as teaching in the synagogues, as distinct from his preaching there." Brother McQuiddy, you make a "clear distinction" (?) here that I cannot distinguish. Do you mean to teach us here that when Jesus preached in the temple, that he did not teach the people at the time he was preaching? I know very well that "Jesus went about all Galilee, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom" (Matt. 4: 23; 9: 35; 11: 1; Mark 1: 14, 21, 22, 39; Luke 20: 1); but will our good Brother McQuiddy be so kind as to tell us in which end of the word "teach" do we find the idea of "division of the church into classes for the purpose of teaching the Bible?" If, indeed, "in the word 'teaching' inheres the idea of class teaching," what part of the word "teach" contains the idea? Moreover, if the word "teach" means a division into classes, then no preacher or teacher of God's word obeys God without dividing into classes those to be taught. See? Brother McQuiddy says when Christ was teaching in the temple he "was using the class, or synagogue, method." I wonder how many classes the Master divided this crowd into, anyway? One had just as well say that when a preacher teaches a crowd of people, small or great, he uses the "class system." Let me ask Brother McQuiddy to give us the scripture where Jesus and the apostles divided their congregations into classes, or several congregations, with as many teachers to teach each class. Yes, Brother McQuiddy, "it is sad that some people get into a 'rut' and then strive to make everybody else get into the same 'rut.' The Bible does not give the least support to such conduct, but, on the other hand, condemns it. The binding of a method upon the church of God where Christ has bound none is condemned just the same as adding to or taking from the word of God. Of such Christ says: 'But in vain they do worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men.' Christians must not be guilty of binding their theories, opinions, and methods upon the church of God." Indeed, my dear Brother McQuiddy, this is all so sad it hurts my heart to know it is being done all over this fair land of ours. There are many of the churches of Christ getting into the "rut" of classes in teaching the Bible, and will force "everybody else to get into the same rut" with them or get out and let "us" alone. This is a bad spirit, but it seems to be the order of the day now.

In this review I am not saying whether it is right or wrong to divide the church into classes to teach the Bible, but I do most earnestly declare that the word "teach" does not contain the idea of a division of those taught into classes. If it did, then we would be compelled to do it, even if it did cause a division in the church; but as it is not in the word, I would not divide the church into classes and offend even the "least of these my brethren" (Matt. 25: 40) and divide the church of God-destroy the unity of the faith-at all, for in so doing I would give offense to my dear Master (see 1 Cor. 8: 12, 13). The "class or synagogue system" of teaching the Bible may be permitted or allowable where it causes no division among the Lord's people; but if it causes division and disruption in the church, he who does it and divides the church of God does it at his own eternal peril. O Lord, help us! God does command us to teach; but he does not command a "division of the church into classes to teach the Bible." Brother McQuiddy, for this meaning is not in the word "teach." Let us remember that the Lord has said, "Every plant which my heavenly Father planted not, shall be rooted up."

The War Sufferers' Fund.

"Whose stoppeth his ears at the cry of the poor, he also shall cry, but shall not be heard."

A representative of the American Relief Committee gives the following information relative to conditions in the Armenian and Syrian countries:

Looking to the future, there is little encouragement for those who think this thing is going to end soon. should the war end in the near future, we shall have to continue relief work in bulk over the winter of 1918 and 1919 and in smaller degree for some years to come. people of all classes are impoverished, the supplies of the country are exhausted, the trade of the country has disappeared, the farming cattle have diminished alarmingly; recuperation, therefore, will be long and tedious. Indications are that the harvests of 1918 will be much below normal. High prices and scarcity of grains are making a small sowing this fall. The fall sowing of this plain has not yet reached two-thirds of an ordinary sowing, and the large sections to the south from which so large a portion of supplies usually come have not been sown at all. We, therefore, cannot expect an ordinary crop, and extraordinary harvests are necessary now for recuperation.

The following is from a letter dated from Jerusalem, received by a Syrian in New York from a Beirut man, formerly a student of Syrian Protestant College, now escaped from Syria to Jerusalem:

"I am surprised to-day that I am still living to write friends and relatives. I am not sure whether friends and relatives are alive. I hope, my dear friend, that you and your brothers are well and that perchance you can tell me about my brother, George. I do not know where he is now. I am sorry to tell you that your wife died from typhus in April, 1917, and she is not the only one who died from typhus. About fifteen thousand died of typhus in Beirut alone. You will be sorry, too, that my brother, Elias, died also of typhus. I cannot tell the names of men you know or have acquaintances with who died of the same disease. wonder if after a year you can find ten thousand men left in Beirut. Hunger, poverty, disease, and the atrocity of Turkey will hardly leave men in the city. I am now under the English rule in Jerusalem, and am very happy that I got free.

In sending contributions, be sure and state whether they are intended for the Armenian and Syrian Fund or the Poland Fund. Make all checks and money orders payable to A. B. Lipscomb, who will forward them to the proper commissioners. He is absent from the office this week, being engaged in a meeting in Dallas, Texas, but will make due acknowledgment of all contributions upon his return.

When we speak of obedience, of the new man, of the True Light, the True Love, or the life of Christ, it is all the same thing; and where one of these is, there are they all; and where one is wanting, there is none of them, for they are all one in truth and substance. And whatever may bring about that new birth which maketh alive in Christ, to that let us cleave with all our might and to naught else; and let us forswear and flee all that may hinder it.-Selected.

Reserve in speaking about ourselves may make heavy demands upon buoyant and impetuous natures. Frequent retirement for communion with God is not natural to flesh and blood; it fails to satisfy the demands for excitement and human sympathy, which enter so largely into much of our modern religion. But let us be sure that it is a true note of the presence of Christ's resurrection power, that we should be thankful to be often alone with God .- H. P. Liddon.

The Kingdom of Israel. No. 4.

BY F. W. SMITH.

"And Saul cast the javelin; for he said, I will smite David even to the wall with it. And David avoided out of his presence twice." (1 Sam. 18: 11.)

The description of the king by Samuel was literally fulfilled in Saul. He was presumptuous, irritable, and cruel; he was extremely selfish in that he sought to promote his own glory at any cost. Faithful servants were respected by him no more than dogs. He thought only of Saul, caring naught for the feelings or interests of others. There are many people in the world to-day whose extreme selfishness leads them to disregard every tie and obligation in order to promote their own interests. Upon what other ground can you place the spirit that builds trusts, combines, and syndicates, which are deaf to the tears and sufferings of mankind? The vampires that are sucking the lifeblood of the nation were born of, and are fostered in, a spirit of selfish greed. This spirit led to the downfall of Israel's king, and it will lead to the ruin of any soul.

SAUL'S CONDUCT TOWARD DAVID.

- 1. Saul had acted so badly in presumptuously disobeying God that the Lord withdrew from him and permitted an evil spirit to come upon the king. "But the Spirit of the Lord departed from Saul, and an evil spirit from the Lord troubled him." (1 Sam. 16: 14.)
- 2. This develops the fact that when an individual reaches a certain stage in his rebellion and sin against God and is bent and determined on a downward course, God permits the devil to lead him on. "I also will choose their delusions, and will bring their fears upon them; because when I called, none did answer; when I spake, they did not hear; but they did evil before mine eyes, and chose that in which I delighted not." (Isa. 66: 4.) "And for this cause God shall send them strong delusion, that they should believe a lie." (2 Thess, 2: 11.) Thus it is clearly seen that when a soul is determined to pursue the wrong course, God will help it along in that direction. An example of this is found in the history of Ahab. "And the Lord said. Who shall persuade Ahab, that he may go up and fall at Ramoth-gilead? And one said on this manner and another said on that manner. And there came forth a spirit, and stood before the Lord, and said, I will persuade him. And the Lord said unto him, Wherewith? And he said, I will go forth, and I will be a lying spirit in the mouth of all his prophets. And he said, Thou shalt persuade him, and prevail also; go forth, and do so. Now therefore, behold, the Lord hath put a lying spirit in the mouth of all these thy prophets, and the Lord hath spoken evil concerning thee," (1 Kings 22: 20-23.) What a fearful thing it is to disregard the warnings and admonitions of the Lord! Saul did this, and he was helped onward by an evil spirit.
- 3. As has been shown heretofore, David was selected as the musician to stand before this wicked king; and more than once Saul attempted David's life. How cruel to thus treat a faithful and useful servant!

NOTE THE CAUSE OF THIS EVIL TREATMENT.

1. The spirit that prompted Saul in all of his evil treatment of David was one of envy and jealousy. David had slain the giant, and he went out to war wherever Saul sent him. Victory always crowned his efforts, and the people began to praise him for his mighty deeds, ascribing to David more honor than to Saul. "And the women answered one another as they played, and said, Saul hath slain his thousands, and David his ten thousands." (1 Sam. 18: 7.) This was more than Saul could stand, and hence he gave vent to his feelings: "And Saul was very wroth, and the saying displeased him; and he said, They have ascribed unto David ten thousands, and to me they have ascribed but thousands: and what can he have more but the kingdom?" (Verse 8.) Now comes an expression pregnant with the "green-eyed monster"—that is, envy: "And Saul eyed David from that day and forward." (Verse 9:) What scheming, plotting, venom, and destruction enveloped in that one short sentence! "Saul eyed David." This spirit of envy has cursed the world since man made his appearance upon its stage.

2. What is envy, and what has it done? "Wrath is cruel, and anger is outrageous; but who is able to stand before envy?" (Prov. 27: 4.) "Jealousy is cruel as the grave." (Song of Solomon 8: 6.) Anger and wrath will strike in the open daylight, face to face; but envy is secret, and plots in the dark. Death drags the body into the grave; but jealousy kills one, and yet one lives. It will rob one of the joys and sweets of life-yea, of sleep and of peace of mind. It strikes at one's character; it defames one's good name; it steals that which enriches not itself, but makes the loser poor indeed. It is lamentable to think of the homes, communities, and churches that have been wrecked by this spirit. The worst church trouble that I have ever known-or that, perhaps, I will ever knowowes its origin to a spirit of envy and jealousy. Many preachers are afflicted with this awful disease, and its influence is far-reaching in its destructive effects. Envy broke up Eden, killed Abel, sold Joseph, and crucified Christ.

CHARACTERISTICS OF A JEALOUS SOUL.

- 1. A jealous soul is an unhappy soul. Nothing is more calculated to disturb the soul and cast it into a restless sea than jealousy. Its night visions are filled with forebodings.
- 2. A jealous soul is a suspicious soul. It lacks confidence in every other soul and looks upon every one as false. Trifles unobserved by others are treasured as indications of evil intentions upon the part of some one.
- 3. Imaginations become undoubted facts. Saul saw mutiny in his court, himself slain, and David occupying the throne. O, how miserable this all made him! Yet David would not pluck a hair from his head. A good, pure, and devoted woman who has a jealous husband is to be greatly pitled; likewise, a man who loves his wife and is true to her, if she be jealous. People thus situated are living in a present hell, and to such death is a sweet messenger. The very foundation of civilization and society is man's confidence in man. Take this away and the whole fabric would go to pieces.

What They Say of Our Premium New Testament.

I received the Teachers' New Testament with notes, and, in so far as I have examined it, I am very much pleased with the book.—H. C. Shoulders, Sellersburg, Ind.

I received the Testament and want to thank you for the same. I think it is the finest thing out. The helps are fine in studying the lessons.—G. A. Covington, Oakman,

I have received the Teachers' New Testament that you sent me. I am well pleased with it, and thank you for sending it. I like it better than the King James Version. I wish you and the Gospel Advocate much success.—N. J. Hamblin, Ingomar, Miss.

I received the New Testament all right, and I am well pleased with it. I will recommend it to any one that will get a new subscriber to the Gospel Advocate; and I think it is the best paper I ever read. I would be glad if the Gospel Advocate would reach every home.—J. N. Wilson, Haydenburg, Tenn.

I received your most valuable Testament some time ago. I am more than pleased with it. I cannot write all I could tell about it. The helpful notes are worth the book in full. I never before could make out those big words in the Bible, but I can take yours and read it through and through and never misspell a word, the way the syllables are divided, and can tell when Christ is talking, the letters being black. That is helpful also.—J. J. Nelms, Corinth, Miss.

"The Gospel Advocate Indorses Societyism."

BY M. C. K.

Some one has directed our attention to the fact that one of the religious newspapers of the time has published, in a recent issue, an article using as its heading the affirmation placed in quotation marks at the head of this article. When men misrepresent an opponent's position, whether they do it willfully or from fixed habits of controversy which make it practically impossible for them not to misrepresent it, controversy not only fails to elicit truth and otherwise do good, but it almost always engenders strife and other regrettable results, and we have long since resolved to avoid it under all such circumstances. On the contrary, no matter how radical or vital may be our differences from others, we delight in controversy with them over such differences when it can be characterized by mutual respect and kindness and when we can have a sincere and fraternal exchange of thoughts and arguments, each being generous and Christlike enough to state and treat the other's position with entire fairness and justice. On all matters of difference and on all proper occasions we not only indorse, but court, such controversy, believing it to be one of the most powerful of all methods of eliciting truth and doing good; and it is a pity that even good men sometimes decry all controversy because they have seen instances of the unlovely and undesirable kind.

Hence, since the article in question is a gross misrepresentation of the Gospel Advocate, we not only respectfully decline any formal reply to it, but would not even make this much reference to it, except for the wish of some who think new readers of the Gospel Advocate, who read the other paper and have not been regular readers of the Advocate, may be temporarily misled by it. We are quite sure that even new readers of this journal will soon see that articles which represent it as indorsing the missionary society are a gross misrepresentation; but it cannot be amiss, and may do good, for the reason just stated, to record certain observations in this connection.

We wish to observe, first of all, that, in its opposition to the missionary society, the Gospel Advocate, throughout the whole history of the said opposition, has endeavored to keep before its readers, sometimes with more prominence than at others, the two following important facts:

1. That it regrets to have to wage such opposition against brethren at all, and that it does so only from its clear and well-grounded conviction that the missionary society through which they work contravenes the law of God and interferes with his order.

2. That, in waging this opposition, it desires not only its sympathizers, but the society brethren in particular, to distinctly understand that it very clearly sees, and wishes to make prominent in its columns, the very wise distinction between things, even in connection with missionary societies, that are right and things that are wrong, and that it wants it further distinctly understood that, however unhappy it may sometimes be in expressing itself, its aim, nevertheless, at all times, is to place its opposition exclusively against the latter, and never against the former.

In some such connection, we said, in our late discussion with Brother Z. T. Sweeney, that we did not "oppose the missionary society merely because it is some 'other association of Christians than that which is had in a local church," and that "when 'two or more brethren have' merely 'come together, agreed upon some plan, had some understanding,' no matter whether it be for 'the feeding and caring for orphans, to preach the gospel by pen through a religious newspaper, to forward funds to a missionary who goes to a foreign field, to teach the Bible in a school in connection with secular learning, to help Armenian, Syrian, and Greek refugees, or to do anything else which Christians may do at all, we shall make no objection." And so we say now, and we are glad now to somewhat enlarge on our former statement and make it read thus: "When 'two or more brethren have' merely 'come together, agreed upon some plan, had some understanding," for example, for conducting a protracted meeting, or a Bible reading, although they would both be "some other association than that which is had in a local church," yet they would not be such an association as the modern missionary society, and we assuredly would not oppose them. Since our opponent had the impression and, by implication, had incorrectly drawn the conclusion that we were opposing the society under discussion "because it is some 'other association of Christians than that which is had in a local church," we drew the vital and broad distinction that exists between it and various other permissible associations of Christians which all other Christians, as well as the Gospel Advocate, indorse; but we did not indorse the missionary society, nor did we say anything whatever from which even the most fruitful imagination could properly draw any such an inference, and our opponent at that time was too honorable, fair, and just to even intimate such a thing.

Moreover, we do not think it would be a crime even if it should be discovered that there is but "a short step between the Christian Standard and the Gospel Advocate on the society question," but no one knows better than both Brother Sweeney and the writer of these lines that there is an honest difference, though neither of us, we rejoice to know, permits that difference to prevent the kind of discussion which we had. We hope the "step" in question may become still shorter as we shall continue to study and investigate in the fear of God.

Is It a Sin to Teach the Bible to Classes?

BY J. C. M'Q.

On page 652 is an article from Brother D. S. Ligon calling attention to my article on "Teaching the Word of God," which appeared in the Gospel Advocate of May 30, 1918.

I cheerfully give his article in full, though I regret that he raises a false issue and attempts a refutation of that, and also shows that he is not well informed as to the method of teaching employed by the early church. I suggest that he write to Charles Scribner's Sons, New York, for a copy of "Yale Lectures on the Sunday School," by H. Clay Trumbull. While I am sure he will not accept all the book contains, I am equally certain he will find much in it that will be invaluable to him.

It should be observed that there is no issue as to the command to teach the word of God. We also agree that to teach means to teach a child or a class. Thayer makes the same clear distinction that the New Testament does between "teach" and "preach." All preaching should be scriptural teaching. All teaching is not preaching and should not be. The teacher who teaches mathematics does not preach. Neither Thayer, Webster, nor I say the word "teach" "means to divide into classes." The division into classes is done in order that we may obey the command to teach, which means to teach a class. When God commands us to teach, he authorizes and binds us to teach the truth in the most effective way, as he has given us no method of teaching to the exclusion of all other methods of teaching. It is evident that the most effective way of teaching elementary principles is the catechetical method, by means of questions and answers. Webster defines class: "A group of individuals ranked together as possessing common characteristics or as having the same status; as, the educated class; the lower classes. . . . A body of students in a school or college grouped together as pursuing the same or equivalent studies," etc.

The Holy Spirit makes it clear that, in order to obey the command to teach, we must first group into classes, when he demands that babes be fed on milk and the full-grown on solid food. Even in preaching, or the public proclamation of the gospel, the preacher must have a class. If the Holy Spirit has defined the exact size of that class or audience, I have never discovered it. Some preachers are able to preach to many more than other preachers. It is not a question of grouping into classes, for there must be some kind of division before there can be any effective preaching or teaching. It is evident that there must have been some kind of grouping on the day of Pentecost, for we read that "every man heard them [the twelve apostles] speaking in his own language."

Now, it is undeniable that in the synagogue worship the Jews grouped into classes and that the teaching in the synagogue was done by means of questions and answers. Schaff sums up concisely and makes it clear why so little is said of the services of the apostolic church. Partly, no doubt, because the synagogue services were simply adapted to the necessities of the church, and this was generally well understood. He says: "As the Christian Church rests historically on the Jewish Church, so Christian worship and the congregational organization rest on the synagogue, and cannot be well understood without it." (Schaff's History of the Christian Church, L. 456.) Fisher says, with like explicitness: "The synagogue served as a model in the organization of churches." (Fisher's History of the Christian Church, page 35.) It is a fact that the early church adopted the interlocutory method of teaching. It is also undeniably true that elementary teaching by continuous discourse to passive hearers has always been, and ever must be, practically impossible. There is evidence from various sources that the Christian fathers no more attempted this false method than did the Jewish rabbis before them. The fact that the religious teaching of the Jews, through whom the Christians received their religion, was mainly by the approved means of question and answer, renders it most improbable that a less effective method of teaching was adopted by the best Christian instructors without any good reason for the change. It is even pretty clear that the preaching, or sermonizing, or homilizing of the first two or three Christian centurics was largely in the nature of interlocutory conferences between the preacher and his congregation.

It will hardly be denied that the most approved method of teaching is the method of teaching a class by question and answer. In defining "didasko," the word from which we have "teach," the first scriptures that Thayer cites are Matt. 4: 23; 21: 23; both of which passages show a clear distinction between "teach" and "preach;" and the second shows that teaching was done by Christ by the approved method of question and answer. He never cites such passages in defining "keerusso," which is the word from which we have "preach." But here are the passages: "And Jesus went about in all Galilee, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom, and healing all manner of disease and all manner of sickness among the people." (Matt. 4: 23.) "And when he [Jesus] was come into the temple, the chief priests and the elders of the people came unto him as he was teaching, and said, [Question] By what authority doest thou these things? and who gave thee this authority? [Answer] And Jesus answered and said unto them, I also will ask you one question, which if ye tell me, I likewise will tell you by what authority I do these things. [Question] The baptism of John, whence was it? from heaven or from men? And they reasoned with themselves, saying, If we shall say, From heaven; he will say unto us, Why then did ye not believe him? But if we shall say, From men; we fear the multitude; for all hold John as a prophet. [Their answer] And they answered Jesus, and said, We know not. [Jesus' answer to them] He also said unto them, Neither tell I you by what authority I do these things." (Matt. 21: 23-27.) The chief priests and the elders composed the class and Jesus the teacher. The New Testament abounds in such teaching. I am wholly unable to see how a man can obey the command to teach who refuses to teach a class; neither can I understand how the most effective teaching can be done until the taught have been wisely grouped into classes.

When I find people who refuse to teach by question and answer as did Christ and the apostles, I do not decline to so teach, as does Brother Ligon, but I continue to preach and teach as did Christ and the apostles, ignoring such opposition, because it is right to hearken unto God rather than unto man. It is my duty to teach in the most effective way, and I shall continue to do so, though others turn from a method used by Christ and his apostles of teaching by question and answer and adopt a less effective method of teaching. It is a duty to teach the word of God, and it cannot be taught without a class. When men refuse to teach the truth and try to keep the church from teaching it, I have advised, and do now advise, the churches to ignore such opposition and to be active in teaching the truth by the most effective method. As God has not abrogated the method of teaching by question and answer used so effectively by Christ and the apostles, the man who seeks to drive this method from the church is a rebel against God and should be so treated.

Now let it be emphasized that the only issue is as to a method of teaching. In my teaching and practice, I hold that no specific method of teaching is revealed to the exclusion of other approved methods. Brother Ligon, in criticizing and opposing approved methods, holds that there is a revealed specific method that excludes all other methods and must be followed. It is incumbent on him to show the method, and I challenge him to the task, knowing he cannot do the impossible.

BY E. A. E.

Our readers will please refer to the article under this heading which appeared in this paper of June 20.

Through the kindness of Mr. S. W. McGill, of Nashville, Tenn., and Mr. Guy E. Snavely, Director, Bureau of Development, Southern Division, A. R. C., we were able to publish how the church can help the sick and wounded and other sufferers through the Red Cross-namely: (1) The congregation as a whole can make a contribution, or regular contributions, "to the chapter in whose jurisdiction it may be, and receive a receipt;" and the whole amount contributed by all congregations in this way can be kept as given by the church. (2) One congregation, or several together, can support or endow "a hospital bed . . in a ward in France," and the contribution be sent directly to the hospital bed endowed.

While we at my home have been doing all we can from the first appeal made by the Red Cross until now, and in all ways we can, and while thousands of church members have been doing the same, yet I am rejoiced to be able to present by study and prayer to God this definite way in which the congregation, as such, can directly engage in this good work and receive the credit as the church.

Too much cannot be done. There are millions of sufferers, and their suffering of different kinds is so horrible that no one and no congregation should fail to respond most heartily and liberally to their cry for help.

Now that congregations have this abundant opportunity to work as congregations, and to show their generosity and light and power, no congregation should fall to make regular and liberal contributions in one of the two ways given above. One congregation or two or more can endow a hospital bed, which will be a fine work. If not that, congregations can give directly as such to the Red Cross chapter in their vicinity, take a receipt, hold the receipts. and at stated times the different papers can publish the amounts and show what the church is doing.

The following letter, written in the kindness of Mr. A. D. Andrews, shows the cost per year of endowing a hospital hed:

Atlanta, Ga., June 11, 1918.-Mr. E. A. Elam, Lebanon, -My Dear Sir: Replying to yours of the 8th inst., I am able to inform you that, in a recent letter, we were advised from National Headquarters in regard to the en-dowing of hospital beds for one year. They figure that the cost of endowing one bed for a year would be seven hundred dollars. In reporting contributions of this kind, they should be sent to Mr. W. T. Gentry, Director, War Fund Collections, Division Headquarters, with a request that a specified amount be set aside as a restricted contribution to be used in the endowing of hospital beds.

Trusting that this will give you the information you re-nested, I remain, Very truly yours, A. D. Andrews, quested, I remain, Assistant Director, Bureau of Development.

Let one or two or three congregations agree to endow a bed and raise the seven hundred dollars, and then that can be forwarded to the person designated by Mr. Andrews; or the Gospel Advocate will gladly receive and forward the amount. Under the present need and distress a congregation or two or three near each other should gladly support a bed.

We shall be glad to learn that congregations are taking up this work at once.

My recent articles on the church show that Christians can work and must work "as individuals," as well as through the congregation; but in so doing they are working in the church, not out of it, and must glorify God "in the church and in Christ Jesus unto all generations forever and ever." (Eph. 3: 21.)

Let me say, first raise the seven hundred dollars and state the congregation or congregations which raise it: then that will be sent to endow one hospital bed for a whole year. The congregations will be informed in regard to where the bed is and the name of the nurse, etc. I am sure this amount can be sent by installments. Let adjacent congregations first confer and raise the amount, and then we shall be glad to lend all assistance necessary in sending it on.

It is encouraging to note the interest already manifested in this work.

Brother J. S. Darnall, of Denton, Texas, writes for six copies of the paper containing the article of April 20.

Brother R. F. Camp, of Munford, Ala., under date of June 21, writes:

I have just read your article in the Gospel Advocate in regard to giving to the Red Cross. If the plan suggested by you can be perfected, the church here is ready to give.

The following letter is of the same kind and spirit:

Gunter, Texas, June 23, 1918.—Dear Brother Elam: Several here would like to furnish a room in a war hos-pital. Brother J. S. Darnall, of Denton, Texas, tells us that you can give information as to how to perfect arrangements to that end. If you can, will you please do so at your earliest convenience?

Hoping to hear from you real soon, I am, Your brother in Christ, John R. FREEMAN.

A Little Song of Gladness.

- A little song of gladness as the day begins— A little song of gladness, for 'tis joy that wins! O, smiles can lighten burdens, and the day spring glows
- When songs of cheery hopefulness dispel life's woes. A little song of gladness as the day wears on,

For gladness fires the brain and gives the needed brawn. But if we let our vision dwell on pain and loss, The sunshine loses brightness, and all life seems dross.

A little song of gladness as the night draws near,

To light the evening shadows with content and cheer. It can a world of radiance and hope impart— A little song of gladness from a cheerful heart. -Lena B. Ellingwood.

Meditation is one way of handling the gospel history. Instead of a vague, half-remembered, less than half-comprehended story, the life of Jesus, steadily meditated on, passes into the life of the Christian by an insensible but real transfusion,-H. P. Liddon.

Training Little Children

(Suggestions by mothers who have been kindergartners. Issued by The United States Bureau of Education, Washington, D. C., and The National Kindergarten Association, New York, N. Y.)

Article 17.

Give Children Toys Which Answer Their Needs; Teach Them to Care for Their Toys, and This Will Tend to Make Them Neat and Orderly.

Most children have too many toys; consequently they are not stirred to make toys for themselves, and their powers of invention are retarded. There are two classes of toys-useful and useless. Those are useful which answer the needs of child life. A ball is a most useful toy, because it is about the first a child can play with. All mothers know how a babe, as soon as it is old enough to use its hands, loves a soft, bright-colored ball. From infancy practically through the whole of life the ball plays an active part. Tennis, golf, baseball, football-all sports of later life center around a ball.

Soon comes the building stage, with blocks. A ten-cent box of dominoes is excellent material for building and for making tables, chairs, beds, and soldiers in a row.

Then comes the imitative stage of toys. Every child, boy or girl, wants to do as father or mother does. A tencent sweeper and a ten-cent broom are always a joy to a child's heart and enable the little one to actually help mother.

The doll also plays an important part in children's lives, for it answers the instinct for nurture which is inborn in children. Good serviceable dolls, not too many at once. are most useful. Children also need sets of dishes with which to learn to set a table and to pretend to cook, and which they can wash and dry, again imitating mother. Imitating father, children can play with toys of construction, such as sets of stone blocks and trains, automobiles, and other tools of man's world,

Toys are useless which are easily broken, such as expensive mechanical toys. These are generally more interesting to grown-ups than to children. Huge hobbyhorses, large dolls, and too many toys are useless also. Every little girl longs for a big doll, which is right and good: but for bables of two years or younger such toys are not only useless, but lead to the bored child, which of all things is the most pitiable-a child to whom nothing is new, nothing interesting!

Through play the child should be taught the care of toys. A child who is taught to pick up his toys and put them away in their proper places becomes neat and orderly. Often children are careless with their toys, and, unless carefulness is instilled in them, they become wantonly destructive and have no respect for the property of others. If a little boy has a stuffed dog that barks and he is found investigating the reason for the barking, he is not destructive so much as he is curious, and it must be remembered that through investigation the great discoveries of the world have been made. A child with a mechanical mind will often take his toys apart "to see how they are made." But curiosity is strong in all children; therefore, before punishing a child for destroying a toy, be sure that he has been guilty of something more than pure thoughtlessness or curiosity.

Happy and contented-these are the two words which describe the condition of children in the kindergarten and should describe the condition in the home, too. You can accomplish so much more through love than you can through force. The busy mother in the home can have just as happy children as the kindergarten has, but she must devote a part of every day to them conscientiously.

Be reasonable with a child and he will be reasonable also. Remember that the desired results from child training depend first upon the physical condition of the child, and, secondly, upon the time, thought, and intelligent care which you give to them.

A dear old lady said to me once, after I had remarked with discouragement that all I seemed to accomplish in a day was to care for my baby's needs: "My dear, you are doing a woman's greatest work right now-the training of your child's mind and morals. The time spent may show no immediate results, but you are laying the foundation for a character that will stand as a monument to your work and wisdom in years to come."

In new ways God is speaking to the hearts of men, calling them to give up many prejudices, to accept new visions and hear him speak in new ways. We need to pray that our eyes may be opened that we may see, our hearts quickened that we may have larger sympathies, our minds enlightened that we may have greater wisdom, our faith increased that we may set ourselves to our work with new faith and new courage. A new world is coming in.-0 0 0 Bishop Lines

What we can do is a small thing, but we can will and aspire to great things. Georgia and the Far Southern Field

By S. H. HALL

The Adventists Answered.

For the past four or five months our Adventist friends have been making great sacrifices to extend their cause in this city. They have spent several thousand dollars in behalf of their work, renting uptown places for their meetings that cost them one hundred dollars a night. Quite a number of people got disturbed over the Sabbath question. I was asked to meet them in public discussion. Of course, to this I agreed; but when a committee called on our advocates of Saturday observance, they declined. For the last three or four years they have promised their friends some two or three times that they would debate; but when they saw that the man could be produced to meet them, we were informed that they had quit debating.

But the insistency for light on the Sabbath and Lord'sday questions was so great that we decided to have an uptown meeting and turn on the light. The Criterion Theater was rented for the night of June 23 and the meeting thoroughly announced. Above one thousand people were there to hear us, and about thirty dollars' worth of free iterature was handed out in addition to the address on the Sabbath question. The singing was fine, the attention almost breathless from the beginning to the end of an hour-and-twenty-minutes' address. We had special literature for those who were disturbed on this question, and announcements were made for it to be called for. More than one hundred asked for this special literature. At the close of the service a Baptist lady came forward to take her stand for a full return to apostolic Christianity. Two days after this meeting the son of one of our former sheriffs came forward at the tent and told me he had been a changed man from the night he heard the lecture, and asked to be baptized. His aged father had worried no little about him, and their meeting at the waters of baptism was indescribably beautiful. The building cost us seventy-five dollars for the one night; but we are already abundantly more than repaid for our efforts, and the fruit of the meeting we expect to continue to gather.

Brethren, think of the thousands and even millions of dollars being spent by the advocates of error to promulgate their false teaching, and think how hard it is to get the advocates of primitive Christianity to go down into their pockets and fork over the funds so sorely needed to give a full gospel to all the people. Even some of our members here said: "It is too much to pay for just one meeting." I am glad to say, however, that I do not believe that one of our members would say that now. We are delighted with the results. Christ gave his blood; why cannot we give our money?

The Work at Macon.

As many of our readers know, our faithful brother, C. E. Coleman, is doing his best at Macon and for the soldiers at Camp Wheeler. This good brother is not getting the support he should receive, and I would very much appreciate if some of the churches who seem to be so interested in e welfare of our boys would remember Brother Coleman i their prayers and with a liberal donation toward his W-k. His address is 200 Woolfolk Street, Macon, Ga. Sed directly to him.

other R. P. Cuff has been there for about three weeks helng Brother Coleman with the work in a tent meeting. The are using our large tent from this place. The following lines from Brother Cuff show that the work is being rowned with good results:

m June}$ 28, 1918.—Brother Hall: Last night three uls were added to the church of Christ. All three came from the Missionary Baptists. I have high hopes that two others whom I have in mind will give their hearts to Jesus ere the meeting closes.

One of those who came last night was a young lady with a fine alto voice for singing. She had been a Sunday-school teacher in the Missionary Baptist Church for years. I have done much talking to her personally. I believe I have taught her pretty thoroughly. I believe she will certainly be faithful. I believe that the others will, too.

The members here have been coming out well. Last night we had a large crowd—the largest since Sunday night,

This afternoon I have been requested to speak to an audience of about seventy-five ladies over in the city. It is the time for their regular Bible class, which they have every Friday afternoon. The "business" ladies attend.

God is blessing us here. Praise his name! Pray for the work.

R. P. CUFF.

May I ask that the congregation at the David Lipscomb College have the above letter read at one of their meetings, as they are helping to support Brother Cuff in this field? I want them to know that he is a power for good and is doing his best, and we all so much appreciate him.

Rockmart, Ga.

I am so glad to report that the work is taking on new life in every way at Rockmart. As stated before in this paper, it was my pleasure to deliver the commencement sermon at the high school about a month ago. I saw then that the time was ripe for a meeting at that place, so insisted that Brethren Carter and Traylor go there. We have already reported this meeting, but give the following letter from one of our sisters there, that you may better see the results accomplished:

Rockmart, Ga., May 11, 1918.—Brother Hall: I will write you a few lines while I am resting, to thank you for sending Brother Carter and Brother Traylor to us. We have had a glorious meeting. Brother Carter has improved wonderfully since he was here before. He felt that his meeting was a failure, comparatively speaking, before, and I am so glad he had a good meeting. He and Brother Traylor are both good, consecrated men. We love both of them. Ernestine and Ralph came into the church, and I am so happy. Last evening Hugh was in bed sick, Mr. McRae had retired, and Ernestine had company. I said to Ralph, "We must have prayer before retiring;" and after we had read a couple of chapters I asked Ralph if he would lead the prayer. He said he did not know whether he could or not, but he would try. I wish you could have heard him. He prayed God to bless our home, and to bless our soldiers in France, and to help them to speak the truth and read their Bibles, and to bless our enemies over there, and to give us the victory. I just pray for strength to help these young converts. They need help and encouragement much more than we can give. We must have a preacher. I pray that the enthusiasm and zeal that has been awakened in the members may not lag. Pray earnestly for us.

Thanking you again for your assistance and interest manifested from time to time, I remain,

Yours in His name,

Mrs. H. M. McRae.

Brother Carter is to go back to Rockmart next Lord's day (July 7) to do some more baptizing and help the brethren plan for regular preaching and a fall meeting.

Buchanan, Ga.

I am so glad to say the work at Buchanan is doing better. Some of the best members in Georgia are in this congregation, but they have ever, it seems, been handicapped for lack of leaders. If we had a few more men like some of the sisters, the work would be cared for. We think now, since some faithful brethren have moved near enough to this town to attend, that the work will go on and not have to stop at times for lack of leaders.

Brother A. C. Traylor was with them on the third Sunday in June. He does not allow himself to be called a regular preacher; in fact, he hesitated to come to this State and help this summer because he felt unequal to the occasion. His work has been mostly that of song leader. But he made a fine impression at Buchanan, baptized one young lady, and received more money for his visit than Brother Carter or any of the rest of us ever received just for a monthly visit. This was Traylor's first confession and baptism, but the brethren said he acted like an old hand at the business. We also ask that the Bible-School congregation take notice of this news item, as Traylor is one of their boys they have sent to this field. He was with the brethren at Dalton on the last Sunday in June, and reports fine services. He is helping with a tent meeting between Lord's days, and is doing his work well.

Two more souls were baptized into Christ at West End Church last Lord's day, and the services otherwise were a great success. May I ask all our friends to continue to pray for us? I feel my nerves giving way on me, and need so much to be remembered just now. There is too much work here for any one to rest or even think of trying.

Put the Loafers to Work.

It is a great notice that is served on the nation when the people are told that they are expected to engage only in those activities that are really useful, and are asked to spend their money for only those things that are essential. This is what some people have been doing all the time. When the wasteful and wanton and reckless and idle come to the proper method of living and follow the practical example of Christian people, this will be a stronger nation and a rescued world.—Herald and Presbyter.

President Wilson wants to put idlers to work, and why not? Idleness is a curse to any one. We will have little difficulty, by the help of the Lord, in raising enough wheat to feed the allies if we can stop loafing. Let us get all possible good out of this terrible war. It is sinful to spend time in idleness in war or in peace. Souls are perishing, so we should work while it is day to rescue them. How precious are the moments!

Church Membership Growing in America.

The Census Bureau has just given out its figures of churches and church membership for the decade ending on December 31, 1916. The number of churches increased in the ten-year period from 212,230 to 228,007; ministers from 164,830 to 191,722. Sunday-school scholars ran over the 20,000,000 mark by 569,000, and there were more than 15,000 more Sunday schools. The separate communions listed by the census were 201 in number-an increase of thirteen since 1906. Church membership in the United States increased from 35,000,000 to 42,000,000. Sixty-one per cent belong to the Protestant denominations and 37.4 per cent were Roman Catholics, the rest being made up of Oriental church members, Jews, Mormons, and various other small groups. The Jewish congregations included 359,000 and the members of the Oriental churches 250,000. This report covers a period of normal growth in an age when material interests were at their strongest in the nation. We are now at the beginning of a new decade, in which enormous overturnings must seriously affect the thought of the people and the growth of the churches. A year of the new opportunity has ended, but these figures of past growth are a challenge and call to make the most of the years of the new decade before the Census Bureau makes up its returns.-The Congregationalist and Advance.

The Brotherhood Stirred.

Many brethren, who have continued to hope that the Board of Trustees of the College of the Bible would get their bearings eventually and save the institution over which which they preside to the Restoration movement, are now convinced that, unless the real friends of the college resort to extraordinary measures, Lexington, Ky.—

erstwhile center of sound Restoration teaching—will go ahead of Chicago, and become the center of propagandism in the brotherhood.

As a result of the discourteous treatment accorded the statement read by Mark Collis at the annual meeting of the Board of Trustees, and the cold-blooded dismissal of Brother Collis from the board, eyes, hitherto blinded by camouflage bulletin statements, are now wide open Brethren who see clearly, for the first time, the situation at Lexington write us that they are utterly astonished at the effrontery upon the part of the Bible College trustees.

Numerous subscribers to the Men and Millions fund write to ask how they may keep their money from going to Transylvania. These inquiries are now so numerous that we are driven to the necessity of saying to the general public what we have said in private correspondence; As we understand it, every subscriber to the Men and Millions fund has the privilege of designating his pledge to the college he wishes to help with his money. Unfortunately, however, the designation plan will not solve the problem—it is a mere dodge. A little reasoning upon the part of any one will convince him that Transylvania will receive the original assignment of three hundred and fifty thousand dollars—even if brethren, in many places, designate their gifts to other colleges. The basis on which the Men and Millions Movement rests will make Transylvania, and other colleges in which rationalism is taught, independent for years. In other words, the manner in which the Men and Millions fund is handled will encourage the propagandists-the Christian Century has already proclaimed its own encouragement-and extend the unfortunate controversy perhaps five or ten years longer than it would otherwise have lasted.

The further fact that secretaries of our missionary societies are trustees of the College of the Bible is creating widespread dissatisfaction respecting our general work. This is extremely unfortunate, but how can it be otherwise? One brother—treasurer of a church—writes that his board voted to withhold the foreign missionary offering until F. M. Rains and J. D. Armistead make satisfactory explanation of their attitude as trustees of the College of the Bible.—Christian Standard.

AT HOME AND ABROAD

- A. B. Lipscomb is now engaged in a meeting at the Pearl
- and Bryan Streets Church, in Dallas, Texas.

 Dr. J. E. Thompson is spending some weeks at Sparta, Tenn., and has promised to do what he can to extend the circulation of the Gospel Advocate in that section.
- E. S. Jelley writes that he is in financial distress and earnestly appeals for funds to defray his expenses home. We would rejoice to see the funds raised immediately to bring him home. He is entitled to a rest.

From M. C. Kurfees, Louisville, Ky., July 5: "My arrangements are made to leave next Monday (July 8) for a meeting at my native home, near Mocksville, N. C. My address for the next two weeks will be Mocksville, N. C., Route 1."

R. L. Whiteside writes from Denton, Texas: "I have arranged to spend the last week in August and the first half of September in Kentucky. After that I can hold other meetings in Kentucky or Tennessee. Any one who would like to have me assist in a series of meetings may address me at Denton, Texas."

Charles Holder, of Bridgeport, Ala., sends us a check for five dollars to help defray expenses of Brother Jelley back to America (four dollars from Sister J. T. Walker, of Dunlap, Tenn., and one dollar from Brother Holder), and says: "I trust I can send more soon, and I pray that Brother Jelley may soon have funds sufficient to get home."

From F. L. Paisley, Camp Taylor, Ky., July 6: "I would like to get in touch with every Christian boy in Camp Taylor. We aim to conduct a Bible class in the Base Hospital. Will friends write the boys to come to the Base Hospital, Medical Detachment, or the Hospital Y. M. C. A., and inquire for me? We already have a number of Christians near enough to attend regularly."

F. L. Rowe, of Cincinnati, Ohio, sends the following for publication: "The trustees of the Potter Orphan's Home have decided to install a water and electric system at the Home. The water system is an absolute necessity because of the constant danger from fire. This improvement will cost twenty-five hundred dollars, and we request that donations be sent to Hugh-Potter, Route 4, Bowling Green, Ky."

The Gospel Advocate was mailed late last week by advice and request of the postal authorities. The new postage law went into effect on July 1. This is not working smoothly, and about all we know is that publishers are required to pay more postage. We were ready to mail the Advocate on time as usual. Our subscribers may expect irregularities on account of war conditions. Increased postage and zone rates are falling heavily upon religious publishers who have been and are now publishing their periodicals at a sacrifice.

J. H. Murrell writes from Tennessee City, Tenn., Box 24, July 5: "I am at home for a few days with my family after nearly six months' preaching in Florida. Almost everywhere I went on the trip the brethren urged me to move to Florida, but I have not decided about that yet. I do not expect to remain at home long this time, for I must keep busy. I have calls for several more meetings, but have not set dates for them, neither have I made definite arrangements for all of my time; so I will be glad to consider other calls, either for meetings or a new location."

E. S. Jelley, Dehra Dun, United Provinces, British India, in a card to J. C. McQuiddy, dated May 10, writes: "We gratefully acknowledge your remittance of eighteen dollars, sent on March 8, as follows: C. E. Jones, Maryland, $2; Mrs. Joe Rushing, Tennessee, $8; Brother and Sister Barbee, Kentucky, $1; C. C. Craig, Texas, $2; S. C. Merritt, Kentucky, $5. Brother Paulas Thokal reports nine baptisms in April. We are receiving ten per cent less on checks and money orders than formerly, and prices are away up and will shortly be higher, as the king has asked India to do its bit financially."

From Tice Elkins, Henrietta, Texas, July 5: "The meeting at Nocona closed last night, with seven baptized and three restored to the fellowship of the church. I baptized four before leaving and three confessed at the last service. I never hated to close a meeting more than that one, but was compelled to close in order to begin at Co manche, Okla. The Nocona church is composed of the best people I ever worked with anywhere. They co operated with me fully, sang and prayed, visited and worked, and paid me for my work. It was a great meet ing and was most enjoyable. I expect to assist them in another meeting not far away. Let the Anson and Hamiston churches get ready for their meeting and leave noth ing undone to make them successful in the saving of souls Brethren, do not wait till next summer to call a preacher to hold your meeting. You may get left, 'What thou doest, do quickly."

James E. Laird writes from Senath, Mo., July 5: "The meeting at Poplar Bluff closed last Wednesday night, after continuing over three Lord's days. There were three addi tions to the church. One was baptized and two came from the 'digressives.' One other young man wanted to be baptized the last day of the meeting, but his mother, a 'digressive,' objected. We received from other churches in support of the meeting seventy-six dollars and seventeen cents, for which we are very thankful. Brother Ward will report through the papers all that was sent us. We are trying to locate B. J. Lemon there to work with the church all the time; but to do this, the brethren there will have to have help to support him. The few brethren there will also need some help to pay for their house. We have only about fifteen members there, and they are all poor. They owe over two thousand dollars on their house. Let individuals and congregations send them a contribution to help them on their house, and also let them know how much you will send monthly on the support of a good man to labor with them all the time."

W. F. Ledlow, president of Thorp Spring Christian College, Thorp Spring, Texas, writes: "Prospects for the Thorp Spring Christian College are good. The war will affect all schools, but we hope to have a good enrollment and do most excellent work. The college is permanently located and will continue to grow and build. We are glad to announce that R. C. Bell, Batsell Baxter, J. O. Garrett, Isaac E. Tackett, Miss Lena R. Lewis, and Miss Blanche Wiley will each head an important department in the school. There will be other teachers in special lines. All the men teachers are Bible-School men. They have had experience in other colleges and come to us well prepared for the work. Brother Bell was president of our college for five years; Brother Garrett and Brother Tackett have each been president of Sabinal Christian College; Brother Baxter was dean of our college and also dean of Cordell Christian College; and Miss Lewis has been superintendent of a good high school for ten years. We are sure that our faculty has never been stronger. The spiritual feature of the college will be strong. In Christian education, heart power counts. Our school will stress the heart as well as the head in education. Write for new catalogue."

Fruit Canning in the New South Wales.

The question of evaporating quantities of fruit is being seriously considered in New South Wales, Australia, and the probability is that fruit drying and canning will become an important industry there, according to United States Consul General J. I. Machinery for equipping Britton. canneries will necessarily be purchased in the United States. A large factory now in the course of construction at Leeton, New South Wales, is being equipped with American machinery. It will employ, aside from other labor, about five hundred girls and will have a capacity of about five thousand tons of peaches this season. Experts have arrived from the United States to supervise the erection of the factory and the placing of the American machinery.

Two Unforgiven Sins.

BY J. J. VANHOUTIN.

There are two ways of committing the unpardonable sin, called the "blasphemy against the Holy Spirit." The blaspheming is one way and may be committed by an unbeliever; while the willful sin, being the same kind of an act, may be committed by any Christian in his wholesale rejection of the whole divine plan of redemption and does despite to the spirit of grace by counting the blood of Christ an unholy thing. And God will not provide any other sacrifice only that which the man once received, but now rejects, and that leaves the once redeemed man in a lost state looking upon Jesus as the illegitimate son of Joseph and Mary, and a man only, and no better than himself. John speaks of a "sin unto death." (1 John 5: 16.) That word "unto" means coming up to death. The sin of suicide takes a man out of this world where the gospel is preached into a world where there is no redemption offered. "Seek not death in the error of your life, and pull not upon yourselves destruction with the works of your hands; for God made not death." (Wisdom of Solomon 1: 13, 14.) An insane person may commit suicide in a frenzy of religion; but no sane man will do such until after he loses all sense of relationship to God and the perpetuity of the soul of man, and places himself on the common level with the beasts of the field with this materialistic idea that "death ends all." Why pray for a man who places himself outside of the bounds of the plan of redemption? There is a difference between an unbeliever and an infidel. Many unbelievers have never examined the testimony in regard to Jesus and do not know enough about

"During the winters of 1897 and 1898, I was so badly afflicted with catarrh of the head and thought I must surely die from it. After trying many doctors and all other recommended remedies made known to me, I was induced to use Peruna. I was cured entirely by using twelve bottles of Peruna and one bottle of Manalin.

Since that time, I have never been without Peruna. I use it for colds and as a general tonic during Spring and Fall months and find it the greatest human vitalizer."

the gospel to believe it, hence are unbelievers; but the blasphemer against the Holy Spirit is the man who claims to have examined all of the testimony in regard to Jesus being the Christ, the Son of God, and has found out that all the evidence is nothing more than fabricated falsehoods, and if there was such a man as Jesus, he was the illegitimate son of Joseph and Mary, and unworthy of his notice. If that is not the blasphemy against the Holy Spirit, why did Jesus declare it when they accused him of being born of fornication? (See John 8: 41, 45.) Jesus threw such protection around his devoted mother that the man who would deny the miraculous and set aside all divine testimony and sneeringly insinuate against the virtue of his kind and devoted mother should never be forgiven.

Faith in America's Food Saving.

The following from The Grocer, London, gives an insight into the implicit faith which the allies have in America's ability to solve the food problem:

It is believed that as the primary solution of the food problem every effort will be made in North America to insure greater production. will be an increased acreage shown in bread gains, and no care will be relaxed to insure a greater output of provisions. The situation is critical, and it is recognized that the successful prosecution of the war by the allies depends in a large measure upon the extent of food production and food conservation this year by our friends on the other side of the Atlantic.

This is a plain and a strong statement of our obligations.

"Keep the Camp Fires Burning."

BY HARVEY W. JONES.

During these "perilous times"-. this world-wide war-there is an increased danger of Christians' "falling away from their steadfastness." (2 Pet. 3: 17.) There are so many things of a worldly nature to attract and absorb the attention of mankind that the religion of our Lord Jesus Christ is liable to be pushed into the background of human consideration. How, then, it behooves all true Christians to keep the camp fires of God's eternal truth burning brightly in their hearts and lives. If, when things are normal, we are liable to "neglect so great salvation" (Heb. 2: 3), then how much more the danger during these awful times! The terrible carnage now taking place in the theater of this world war causes our hearts to almost bleed in contemplating such awful deeds; yet we hope this awful world catastrophe may result in good to mankind in general and, indirectly, benefit the church of our blessed Redeemer in ways we cannot now foresee. But be that as it may, let every child of God keep an abiding interest in the cause of our adorable Redeemer, and let us do what we can to keep others interested in pure Christianity as revealed in God's holy word, the Bible. Let us "keep the camp fires burning" in our hearts till the dawn of a better day!

Keeping Baby Fit in Summer.

BY MRS. MAX WEST.

Through the long, hot summer days it is a great task to keep children happy, well, and out of mischief, especially when the mother already has her hands more than full with the work of her house.

In the first place, children must be kept as cool as possible. In hot weather this is not an easy task, but it may be accomplished in some measure by clothing them suitably. Babies need only the diaper and one other garment, band or slip. Older children need only enough to cover their bodies. As far as possible, children should sleep out of doors at night, if screened porches are available, or, if not, with all the windows and doors wide open. A full tub bath in cool or tepid water will do much to make sleep comfortable, and a little plain talcum powder will help to allay the irritation of prickly heat.

Children must be provided, too, with occupations suited to their age. A play pen on a cool porch, or even under the trees in the yard where the mother can watch the baby, will give much pleasure. Sand piles, swings, and many other simple pieces of play apparatus which are easily made at home without any great expense will keep older children happy and out of mischief. Rainy days may be spent on the porch. Hints for mothers as to the selection of play and occupation for young children will shortly be published by the Children's Bureau. Very much of the annoyance of mothers and the fussiness of children would be done away with if the little hands and minds had plenty of occupation. Many a cross child is cross because he has nothing to do which interests him, and many a piece of mischief is only the result of the child's trying to find something with which to busy him-

Children's food must be chosen with special care in summer to suit the ages, and proper food habits should be established. The nursing baby will cause the least anxiety. If a baby is nursed at regular times, preferably three or four hours apart, and is clean and as cool as possible, he will not usually suffer harm even in very hot weather

Babies newly weaned from the breast and up to the end of the second year will need special care. Properly modified cows' milk will form the principal part of the diet of all such children, and must be as clean and as fresh as possible. Detailed directions for the feeding of children will be sent free from the Children's Bureau of the United States Department of Labor to all who care to send for the bulletins on the care of children.

Older children should be taught to observe regular habits also, and mothers must guard against the dangers of overfeeding or underfeeding, and especially against poor food materials, such as overripe fruit. Young children need to be taught to chew their food thoroughly and to eat slowly. Cleanliness of the body is necessary for health and comfort at all times, but is demanded in the summer time. These fundamental rules for health should be in effect in every family, and where carried out faithfully sickness should be largely done away with.

Gog and Magog. BY "AX."

Define "Gog" and "Magog." Gog was a prince or ruler near the Cautasian Mountains. His subjects were the people of Gog-that is, Magog. Before the days of Ezekiel they were known as Scythians. Ezekiel uses them as a symbol of earthly violence arrayed against the people of the Lord. He depicts their avarice and violence (Ezek, 38; 1-13) and the fearful vengeance executed upon them (verses 14, 23)-a massacre so tremendous that seven months would hardly suffice for the burial of the corpses in the valley, which should henceforth be named "Hamon-gog"-that is, the "multitude of Gog." The imagery of Ezekiel has been transferred in the apocalypse to describe the final struggle between Christ and Antichrist. (Rev. 20: 8.) Students of prophecy think this great battle draws nearthat it will be fought between 1926 and 1972. As to the battle of Armageddon, the saints will not be in it. They will be caught up with Christ, and only the wicked will destroy one another like the Kilkenny cats.

Jonesboro, July 1 .- While I am practically unknown through the Gospel Advocate, yet, being an editor of the Primitive Gospel Proclaimer and being informed that this paper has been turned over to the Gospel Advocate, I feel that I am due a few lines through your paper. I am now in Jonesboro, and will be confined here for at least four weeks, possibly longer. My wife has a bad case of appendicitis, and I am having her treated by a chiropractic doctor. I will begin taking treatments to-day under the same man for a kind of heart trouble which I have had since last April. On account of sickness I have missed two months of protractedmeeting work already, and now I must cancel another month's work. Besides this, I will have a very great burden to bear in the way of expense, I believe God will put it into the hearts of his people to help me bear this burden in this great time of trouble. Address me at Jonesboro, Ark .- W. Curtis Porter.

Reddick, Route 1, July 1 .- We wish to thank the kind friend who subscribed to the Gospel Advocate for us. We get it regularly every week. There are only three members at Fairfield. Brother John Prevatt will preach for us and Brother Copeland will help with the sing-Brother Prevatt has been with us here several times and the people know him, and we hope for a good meeting. Scriptural teaching is greatly needed here. There are Baptist, Methodist, and Presbyterian churches here, and only a few to each church. We came to Florida in November, 1910, from near Bradyville, Cannon County, Tenn., where we were brought up to go to church and Sunday school, and it surely is lonesome here with a church not nearer than thirty miles, at Gainesville, and we get to go very little. Petersburg, July 1.-We closed a fine meeting at Sewanee with seven baptized. I began at Petersburg yesterday, with Brother E. Gaston Collins in charge of the song service. J. D. Northcut.

Slayden, July 1.—We closed our meeting at Vanleer yesterday morning. The congregation has about nine loyal and faithful members. Denominational opposition and prejudice are strong. However, we succeeded in having the presence of members of all sects. One person made the confession and was baptized. We began our meeting at Slayden last night.-William P. Walker.

Sykes, July 1 .- As some churches, brethren, sisters, and friends have contributed to the building of the new meetinghouse at this place and nothing has been said about it in the Gospel Advocate, I will say that on the second Lord's day in last December we had our first sermon by Brother George W. Farmer, of Lebanon. Since then we have come together each Lord's day except one, with one more sermon by Brother Farmer, one by Brother O. P. Barry, also Brother R. W. Askew, all of whom encouraged us much. We have arranged with Brother Farmer to begin a series of meetings with us, beginning on the third Lord's day in this month. had help from churches and indi-viduals as follows: From the church at Alexandria, $50; Carthage, $5; Bethlehem, $25.75; Round Top, $10; brethren and friends at Alexandria, $16; Watertown, $10; Brush Creek, $16; brethren and sisters at Laguardo, We had a donation from an other church in Wilson County (I disremember the name) and many other donations from brethren and friends, For all these we extend our heartfelt thanks. We yet lack the painting and papering on our house. If any brethren, sisters, or congregations wish to give us any amount, however small, it would be thankfully received. Our number is small, only one or two male members and six or eight sisters. Pray for us and that much good may be done at this place.-W. A. Dowell.

Memphis, July 1.—Beginning on the second Sunday in June, Brother N. B. Hardeman, of Henderson, held a fewdays' meeting for the Harbert Avenue congregation, this city. The interest was good throughout and several were added to the one body. Brethren J. P. Lowery and Claud Hall were present at some of the services. While nei-ther of them preached, yet it was good to have them here. Brother Tate Ring recently closed a two-weeks' meeting at Raleigh Springs, during which he sowed the good seed. We hope to reap the harvest later. Harbert Av-enue Church, under the leadership of J. Paul Slayden, could not do other than prosper if they give heed to what he preaches. McKeller Street, High-land Heights, and Olive Avenue, where I labor each Sunday, morning, after-noon, and night, still have a mind to work, and we hope to be able to do much for the cause of the Master in this wicked city this year. Brother F. S. Vance, a very devoted, godly man from Idabel, Okla., preached for us yesterday morning at McKeller Street and at Olive Avenue at night. Both discourses were interesting and encouraging. The annual tent meeting with the Olive Church begins next Lord's day, with Brother Ring and myself to do the preaching. Brethren, pray for us, that much good may be the result. The meeting with the Highland Heights Church will be sometime in August, services to be conducted by the writer.—J. A. Cul-

Physician explains How to help Buildup Great Strength, Energy and Endurance

Cites Cases of Men Even 60 and 80 Years of Age Who Have Gained in Strength and Energy and Thereby Greatly Increased Their Mental Powers From Taking Nuxated Iron

Says a weak body means a weakened brain; weak nerve force means weakened will power, lack of sufficient iron in the blood has ruined many a man's nerves and cast him upon the rocks of Failure.

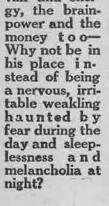

Commenting on the alarming prevalence of iren deficiency in the blood of Americas men and women, Dr. James Francis Sullivan, formerly Physician of Believue Hospital (Outdoor Dept.), New York, and the Westhester County Hospital, said: "I kave strengly emphasized the great necessity of shysicians making blood examinations of their weak, anaemic, run-down patients. Thousands of persons go on year after year suffering from physical weakness and a highly nervous condition due to lack of sufficient iron in their red blood corpuseles without ever realizing the real and true cause of their trouble. Without fren is your blood your food merely passes through your body something like corn through an old mill with the rollers so wide apart that the mill can't grind.

As proof of this take the case of General Horatic Gates Gloson, U. S. A. (Retired) who says that Nukated Iron has brought back to kim is a good measure that old buoyancy and energy that filed his veins in 1847 when he made his triumphant energy with General Scott into the City of Mexico.

While former Health Commissioner experience in kandling public health

Gatesville, June 29.—Acting upon the suggestion of Brother J. D. Elliot, of this place, I am here. Prospects are good. Gatesville is a nice little city, situated on the St. Louis and Southwestern Railway, fifty miles southwest of Waco.—J. Paul Kimbrell.

Canadian, July 2.-Our home meettanadian, July 2.—Our nome meeting began on May 26 and closed on Tune 16. We prepared well for this meeting by song practice, talking to the people, and advertising with both large and small cards. Wind and rain bindered a great deal. However, the word was preached to many of the people of Canadian. Brother J. B. Nelson, of Dallas, did the preaching, and he shunned not to declare "the whole counsel of God." In fact, most of Brother Nelson's sermons extra strong and were delivered with force and power. Having a pure heart and a clean record to back up such preaching made it effective. In all, there were twenty-five additionsfifteen baptisms, three by relation, and seven by restoration. Of this number, one was from the Baptists, two from the Methodists, and four from the Christian denomination. Brother Nel-son and I closed an eight-days' meet-ing with the faithful little band of Christians at Panhandle on the fourth Sunday in June. Two fine sisters took fellowship with the church, while quite a number of people attended and seemed to enjoy Brother Nelson's strong gospel sermons. We left under promise to return and assist in a meeting next year. I was at Miami and Laketon last Lord's day, preaching three times. One young man, who has now joined the navy, obeyed his Lord in baptism. I shall begin my third annual meeting at Dimmitt, Castro County, next Lord's day. What Tennessee Folks Say ABOUT A NEW DISCOVERY

Magur a new discovery

Many local people are glad to testify to the good results obtained from Anuric, the discovery of Doctor Pierce of the Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y., for kidney and bladder disorders, backache, rheumatism and all uric acid troubles. This is what Mr. E. W. Bagshaw says:

MITCHELLVILLE, TENN.—"This is to certify that I have used all, or nearly all, of Dr. Pierce's Medicines. Commenced using them yself and In my family over 30 years ago. The 'Favorite Prescription' saved the life of my wife and daughter 25 years ago, and I have scarcely ever been without Dr. Pierce's Remedies in my home since, Recently I had occasion to use An-n-ric, that God-sent remedy for kidney and bladder troubles, and I can truthfully say that it has done me more good than any remedy I ever used, and they are legion. No one will make a mistake in using any preparation sent out by Dr. Pierce. I have had many years' experience with his Institution and know whereof I speak."

When the kidneys are wealt or diseased, these natural filters do not cleanse the blood sufficiently, and the poisons are carried to all parts of the body. There follow depression, aches and maths, heaviness, drowsiness, irricability, honoches, chilliness and rhaumatism. In some people there are sharp pains in the back and loins, distressing bladder disorder and sometimes obstinated drousy. The uric noils sometimes forms into gravel or kidney stones. North Alabama Notes.

BY J. PETTEY EZELL.

Thus far, this year, with the exception of a very pleasant meeting of eleven days' duration at Charleston, Miss.; a brief visit to Mars' Hill, the home of Brother T. B. Larimore; and a visit of a week's duration to some churches through West Tennessee, my time has been devoted to the work of an evangelist with the churches at Albany and Mooresville, Ala., and Cool Springs, in Giles County, Tenn., and a visit to the church at Pulaski on each third Lord's day night.

The church at Albany has lost to Birmingham, Florence, Sheffield, and Montgomery seven splendid Christian families during the past year, and we miss them so much. Our loss, however, is the gain of others, and we hope that in these respective places each family may give a faithful account of its stewardship. While some have gone from us, others have come to us, and we shall hope for the hearty cooperation, in word and work, of each one who may come our way.

Decatur and Albany, with their more than twenty-one thousand inhabitants, many industries, and natural advantages, are worthy of the consideration of Christian farmers. farms can be had at reasonable prices. This would be, too, an ideal location for a good Christian physician, dentist, and especially some young man who is a preacher of the gospel or singer. No other field can excel it in the abundance of opportunitiesnot so much because the opportunities are rarer, but because the Christian laborers are few. The Louisville ad Nashville Railroad shops, with their sixteen or seventeen departments, furnish opportunities to all classes of skilled labor.

In spite of our obstacles, the work of the church is at its best. Our audiences are larger than ever before and the interest is better. We are of the same mind and judgment and speak the same thing, and, behold, how good and how pleasant to dwell together in unity!

Our weekly program, aside from the Lord's-day services, preaching on the second and fourth Lord's days, morning and night, and at some mission point in the afternoon, is a Bible reading at the church house of four chapters each Wednesday night; in West Albany on Thursday nights, a like study, from house to house; Friday afternoons, a like study, from house to house; and Friday night, in South Albany, a like study, from house to house. This work is interesting and supplies a much-needed impetus to the work.

At Mooresville we used to have a splendid congregation, but with age it has grown infirm; yet we have some splendid people here, and we hope and pray for a reviving of the spirits of men. Be it said to the credit of the few there, they are willing to try, and God will not be unmindful of their labors in the Lord. This is the prettiest farming section in North Alabama, and some good farms are now for sale.

The church at Cool Springs is a splendid one. The best of feeling prevails, not only in the church, but in the entire community. On Lord's days the house is full, and on the third Lord's day in June the house was packed; a number of brethren sat on the rostrum, some stood up, and four or five partook of the Lord's Supper from the doorsteps. Then a mission service had been arranged three and a half miles distant, over rough roads; vet the little schoolhouse was perhaps thrice full, and I counted forty-four of the Cool Springs brethren who were present to take part. Who would not enjoy a day thus spent? Then at night I preached to the church at Pulaski, the home of that very splendid soldier, J. T. Clark.

I am now in a meeting with the church at Anniston, which we planted here three and a half years ago. Since this work was begun, with the cause of the Lord foremost in heart, being not ashamed to suffer, devout men and women have gone forward with the work. They began at once the Lord's-day meetings and Wednesdaynight meetings and have not let up even for one week. They now have their house of worship paid for and have with them as an evangelist Brother Claude H. Woodroof, who is a most excellent young man. He is active, discrete, and devoted, and is loved and esteemed by all, but lavishly so by the little ones. He will do a good work here.

The Lord bless and sustain us in these times that try men's souls, and enable us to walk constantly and diligently in The Way.

PANAMA HATS HAND-WOVEN

New Discovery Brings Costly Panama Within Reach of All.

Within Reach of All.

New York, N. Y. (Special).—It is now proven that the stylish Panama, up to now only worn by the best-dressed people, can now be sold for $1. You don't have to be skeptical about the low price, as it gives service like the $5 and $10 kind, but not so fine a weave; and by this new discovery of weave one can hardly tell the difference. A Panama gives a man or woman distinction and at the same time comfort. Mr. George J. Bungay, 28 South William Street, of New York City, is backing up his discovery by sending a real hand-woven Panama, any size, trimmed, blocked, with slik band, to any one for $1, postpaid. Fitted with leather sweat band, 25 cents extra. Furthermore, his policy is that, if you are not entirely satisfied, he will return your money.—Advt.

A Friendly Letter.

We appreciate the following friendly letter from Brother G. F. Mills, of Midlothian, Texas:

I will say that I like some of the renderings of the texts of the Teachers' New Testament better than the King James translation, and some not well. 'I have gained some historical knowledge from the book, and its biographical sketches of the writers of the New Testament are enlightening. But I have the same objection to the book that Brother J. R. Bradley has, and I must take issue with you on the reason the commentators did not comment on the various texts where baptism is used. I do not think it was the evident plainness of the scriptures, but the desire to ig-nore them. The sectarian world looks upon baptism as a nonessential—in practice, if not in theory. They all "get religion" before they are bap-If an enlightened sinner could not be saved in the days of the apostles without baptism, he cannot now. Baptism has been the bone of contention par excellence between us and the sects ever since the beginning of the Reformation. It is said that human nature is the same in all ages; so the New Testament Scriptures mean the same thing in all ages and to all peoples.

Wife and I are still reading the Gospel Advocate; have been reading it the most of the time for fifty years. Mr. Kyle, our son-in-law, and our daughter live with us, and they take the Advocate. In its pages we frequently find encouragement to press on a few more days, when we will lay our armor by and rest from the conflict.

Bear with me a bit longer. Wife and I had the delightful privilege of hearing Brother T. B. Larimore last summer at Ferris, Texas. We had heard him preach long years ago in Mississippi, when we were younger than now, and to hear him again was like "refreshing showers from the presence of the Lord."

O, this world cataclysm of war! Where will it end? May we not hope that our Father will bring good out of it to a majority of the peoples of the earth?

Report of Meetings.

BY M. KEEBLE.

When I wrote my last report, I was at Bellbuckle, Tenn., in a very interesting meeting. On the last night of the meeting two were baptized.

I began a meeting in Louisville, Ky, on June 10, which continued about fifteen days, with three baptisms and one restoration. On the first night of the meeting we had no seats, through failure of the man who had promised to bring chairs; but the tent was located on a grassy lot, and we just asked the people to sit on the grass, which they did, and we had a glorious service. The chairs were secured by the time for the next service.

I am now (July 2) in a good meeting at Cookeville, Tenn. This is my third protracted meeting. I shall go from here to Latham, Tenn.

Brother Melton's Letter.

Brother L. L. Melton, of Gassaway, Tenn., writes as follows:

The two Teachers' New Testaments I received on the last two subscriptions I sent in. They are good, and I find them a great help in studying the word of God, and well worth one dollar apiece to any one that wants to learn the truth and teach the word of God anywhere, in church or Sunday school, at home—good for the family to study.

The Gospel Advocate I have read ever since I could read. My father subscribed for it when Brother Fanning first commenced publishing it and took it up to the Civil War, and then stopped a while; and after the war was over he subscribed for it again and took it some time; then I paid for it and sent it to him with the understanding that his son-in-law that lived with him would read for him, he got so old and could not see to read himself. I have been a regular subscriber for thirty-four or thirty-five years, and expect to take it as long as I can see to read it. I think the Gospel Advocate should be in every Christian home; for it makes better Christians, learns them more about their duty as Christians, makes them stronger in faith, and keeps them better posted, and they can have seven good sermons every week if they will read them, and every subscriber can get one new subscriber and get a Teachers' New Testament.

Not Well Enough Known.

We cannot accomplish much in the treatment of dyspepsia, however much we may temporarily relieve its symptoms, so long as the blood remains impure. It is a fact not well enough known by people generally that when the stomach, liver, and other digestive organs are supplied with impure blood, the digestive process is impaired, so as to cause faintness and loss of appetite and sometimes a deranged state of the intestines, and in general all the symptoms of dyspepsia.

Hood's Sarsaparilla is of great service in dyspepsia, because it purifies the blood, making it the healthy stimulus the digestive organs must have for the proper performance of their duties. Hood's Sarsaparilla, especially if taken in a little hot water, has "a magic touch" in dyspepsia. Get it to-day.—Advt.

New Calomel is Wholly Delightful

Calotabe, the new harmless and nauseaiess calomel, may now be obtained at almost any good drug store. As a liver cleanser and system purifier the new Calotabe are even more effective than the old-style calomel, yet there is not the slightest danger, nausea, or unpleasantness.

One Calotab at bedtime, with a swallow of water—that's all. Next morning you awake feeling fine, with a hearty appetite for breakfast. Eat what you please—fruits, acids, or anything. There is not the slightest danger nor interference with your work. Calotabs are sold only in original, sealed packages; price, thirty-five cents. Your druggist will refund your money if you are not delighted—he recommends them.

Tells how to loosen a sore, tender corn so it lifts out without pain.

Good news spreads rapidly and druggists here are kept busy dispensing freezone, the ether discovery of a Cincinnati man, which is said to loosen any corn so it lifts out with the fingers.

Ask at any pharmacy for a quarter ounce of freezone, which will cost very little, but is said to be sufficient to rid one's feet of every hard or soft corn or callus.

You apply just a few drops on the tender, aching corn, and instantly the soreness is relieved, and soon the corn is so shriveled that it lifts out without pain. It is a sticky substance which dries when applied and never inflames or even irritates the adjoining tissue.

The discovery will prevent thousands of deaths annually from locklaw and infection heretofore resulting from the suicidal habit of cutting corns.

Notes from Camp Bowie Christian Tabernacle.

BY J. H. LAWSON.

This is July 4, and while the bands are playing and the soldier boys rushing hither and thither in preparation for the overseas journey, I thought it might be of interest to give a few items from the camp. The Thirtysixth Division is expected to leave Camp Bowie at any moment, and yet no one knows the day or the hour of the departure. Orders are to be ready to entrain at any moment, and everything is packed and waiting the final order. The boys are sending farewell telegrams and letters, and at this moment there are many in the tabernacle writing farewell messages to loved ones at home.

My eyes fill with tears at the thought of the departure. Many are the sad hearts among the fathers and mothers who are here to bid farewell to their boys.

The boys are both glad and sad. They are anxious to go, yet they know that many of them will never return to the homeland. Many last sad farewells are being said, and to me it is especially sad, for I have formed many acquaintances among the soldier boys and have learned to love them. There are some as true and faithful Christians here as I have ever met. Our meetings have been fine, and these boys have helped me make the work the success it has been. They have helped me in every way possible. They sing, pray, talk, exhort, give, and cheer me with many kind words of appreciation. I shall never forget them, and shall expect to meet many of them beyond the valley of the shadow of death to greet them as fellow laborers. I am truly thankful that I have had the privilege of helping these boys in things spiritual. The many words of appreciation show that the work has been for good. Many have obeyed the gospel and many others have been restored to their "first love."

The band is now playing "Dixie," and it reminds me of my boyhood days and calls my mind to father, who so loved the grand old music, and my eyes fill with tears as I think what it meant to him and the people of the Southland. "Baby's Prayer" will bring to memory many of the scenes of this present conflict long after this terrible war has ended. It is played each evening near the tabernacle by the military band, and each time it seems to grow sweeter. There are some noble Christian boys in this band; and when these are gone and the new band plays the old marches, it will make my heart ache.

"O for a faith that will not shrink, Though pressed by every foe; That will not tremble on the brink Of any earthly woe.'

When the last sad farewells have been said here and these boys have gone from us, I shall give the readers a statement of the things I think will interest them. I shall be with them in their tents, go with them to the train, and with sadness turn to the work of helping the many thousands who are now ready to take the places of these boys. Sixty thousand is the number expected, and already thousands are in quarantine waiting to take the places of the ones now ready to leave. Shall we be able to do what should be done for them? The way is a little dark for me just at this writing. I cannot say what I would like to say, for I am by nature an optimist. I am hoping and praying for great things in this work. The work has been more than I had expected, and I am sure that we will have greater opportunities with the new men than we have had with the old ones.

We will be on the ground floor, so to speak, and will be in position to help from the beginning. I shall do all I can both by day and night. I live here with the boys, that I may do them service at any time. I have denied myself the pleasant association of home, my wife and children. This work is badly in need of more Godfearing and God-loving men and women who are not afraid to sacrifice for the right. We should greatly enlarge the work. I could not look my boy or my neighbor's boy in the face after this war is over, if I had not sacrificed for his spiritual welfare. I could not ask him to accept my religion, if my religion had not helped him in these troublous times. To me it is a serious thing. Yet many are taking the "I Would Not Part with it for $10,000"

So writes an enthusiastic, grateful customer, "Worth more than a farm," says another. In like manner testify over 100,000 people who have worn it.

An Appreciation.

Through a copy of the Gospel Advocate recently sent me I first learned of the death of Mrs. Eudora Lindsay South. The announcement came to me as a shock, because I had not known of her illness. You will permit a Baptist minister to pay his tribute in your columns to the noble woman who has passed to her reward. I was born in two miles of her home, in Gallatin County, Ky., and have, therefore, known her from my childhood. Although I have much of the time been far removed from the scene of her busy life, I have kept informed in a general way of her useful career. When she was a young woman in her native county, she was once my teacher. One mile I used to go daily to the little frame schoolhouse on the hill to sit under her instruction. Finally she went to Lexington to attend Hocker College. As I recall, she took her diploma in one year, having had only the training in county schools, supplemented by her experience in teaching. That was marvelous. Afterwards she went abroad. This was a great distinction for one so young as she. Her marriage came by and by, and that elegant gentleman who ever since has walked faithfully by her side, J. K. P. South, was the man to whom she gave her heart and her hand; and he won a prize indeed when she consented to become his wife. There followed in a short time the founding of Excelsior Institute, near Frankfort, Ky. Into that institution she doubtless put the crowning work of her life. In this enterprise she showed her ability in taking the initiative in meeting a crying need along educational lines. How many will rise up and call her blessed for the work she has done, not simply intellectually, for them, but for the work she has wrought in their hearts and lives! This Baptist pastor, sixteen hundred miles away from the sacred spot where his former teacher rests. desires to pay his tribute to her memory for her noble influence on his boyhood life. More than once in the last few years he has received from her a letter to be cherished in its warm expression of interest in one who had in childhood's hours sat at the feet to learn. The county of her nativity is small in area, but it has produced some of earth's true nobility. Among all the women who have shed luster on the little county that lies on the shore of the inland river, I know of no name that shines with brighter light than that of Eudora Lindsay J. FRANK WILLIAMS, South. Pastor First Baptist Church, El Paso,

Texas.

Be Courteous to All.

A Call from the Bell Haven Orphans' Home.

We have a laundry building, made possible by the birthday offering over a year ago, but no equipment has been added. Sister Jennie Clarke and I ecently visited a State institution at Austin, and we were shown the steam laundry, operated by the girls, and I noticed that they were a happy, jolly crowd, laughing and chatting while the clothes were being turned out rapidly and white as the beautiful snow, and their faces were free from the tired, worn look that is noticeable in those who do the work in the old, slow way, with tub and washboard; and I suggested to Sister Clarke that July 20 would be her birthday, and that I was going to make a special appeal for offerings and commemorate the event by investing the amount received in equipment for the laundry building. Motherlike, always anxious to lessen the labor of her large family of girls, she consented. It may take over fifteen hundred dollars for this purpose; but consider how important it is, when it takes so much hard work to keep these many children neat and clean. A small amount from the brotherhood in general would make the burden light. If not convenient to send before her birthday, it will be just as acceptable afterwards. Luling has no steam laundry, and we hope to do the work at Belle Haven, and we also desire to take work for the public, thereby making the laundry a profitable industry to the Home. Please keep this important need in mind and send Sister Clarke an offer-Your sister in Christ,

ANNIE PETERS,

Secretary, and for sixteen years an inmate of the Belle Haven Orphans' Home, Luling, Texas.

Where Drugs Fail.

Many chronic diseases fail to respond to drug treatment, even in the hands of the best physicians, whereas acute diseases usually respond readily. When a disease has become chronic, drugs often seem to do as much harm as they do good, for the system rebels against them. It is just this class of cases which derive the greatest benefit from Shivar Mineral Water. If you suffer from chronic dyspepsia, indigestion, sick headache, rheumatism, kidney or liver disease, uric-acid poisoning, or other curable conditions due to impure blood, do not hesitate to accept Mr. Shivar's liberal offer as printed below. His records show that only two in a hundred, on the average, have reported "no beneficial results." This is a wonderful record from a truly wonderful spring. Simply sign the following letter:

Resolutions of South Dakota Local Administrators.

following resolutions were The passsed by the County Food Administrators of South Dakota at a conference held at Aberdeen recently:

Be it resolved by the County Food Administrators of the State of South Dakota:

That in view of the present world need, the saving of wheat for human food be urged upon all citizens.

That a special appeal be made to all who can do so to use no wheat for food until after the next wheat harvest.

That the giving of banquets at un-usual hours be disapproved except where no foods are used that need be conserved, and that serving of light refreshments at all lodge and social functions be eliminated.

That the attention of the farmers be called to the rule forbidding the use of millable wheat for animal food:

That the appeal for food conservation be broadened into a general appeal for increased economy and the stoppage of waste.

British Food-Profits Bill.

Very slight opposition has arisen to the British food-profits bill as it has passed through its various stages in the House of Commons. The principle of the bill is that any food dealer who charges excessive prices shall forfeit the whole of such excess profits and as much again. The fines which at present can be imposed by any court of law must not exceed five hundred dollars on any one count. There has been cases where excess profits have been made by large firms to the extent of tens of thousands of dollars.

Five hundred dollars fine and six months' imprisonment—the maximum penalty under the old law-was not sufficient punishment, in the opinion of the food controller. The present law takes from the profiteer double the amount he has secured by his transgression. By dealing with serious or exceptional cases in this way there will be an effective check upon those who until now have been able to break the law and to pay the penalties out of their illicit profits.

Boat Movements Followed Minutely.

At present the movements of more than one thousand boats are being followed by the shipping branch of the British Ministry of Food. The ship intelligence section of the branch must constantly keep the changing positions of these vessels before the various purchasing committees. What this means may be realized when it is remembered that a boat coming from North America with a dozen different articles of food on board may interest a dozen different branches of the Food Ministry. The necessary information was afforded them by this branch The constant use of telephone and tele-typewriter enables the branch to keep in touch with all these buying branches and conditions, and instead of a hundred calls from these branches the shipping branch of the Food Ministry can settle the business in one call. This simplifies the work of the Ministry of Shipping in a remarkable manner. The fact that the shipping branch is made up of business men drawn from the shipping world insures the efficient conduct of the work.

On High Grade Pianos and Player-Pianos By Placing Your Order Through

Gospel Advocate Piano Club

The cub is the greatest money saving plan ever devised for the distribution of pianos, but the big saving in price is only one of the many attractive features which has made the club so popular and successful

Main Features of the Club.

1. By uniting our orders in a big club of one hundred buyers, we secure the lowest possible factory price for each club member, thereby, saving fully one-third the cost of high grade pianos and player-pianos. As the management secures the other ninety-nine members, all you have to do is to place your order. The management finances the club and your piano is shipped at once.

2. We secure for each club member the most convenient terms of easy monthly, quarterly or annual payments based on the lowest cash price and without the customary overcharge for time payments.

3. We furnish the club members with "High Art Pianos" made of the best material the market affords, by skilled workmen, on the most approved patterns. The quality and durability of the instruments are unsurpassed and they are fully guaranteed by the Associated Piano Clubs, and the piano manufacturers, representing a combined capital of over two million dollars. Thus buying through the club avoids the disappointment which so often results from dealing with unknown firms. The club member has the privilege of returning the piano and getting back every dollar he has paid on it, if a thirty days trial in his own home does not prove it to be exactly as represented, The club member incurs no expense whatever in connection with the trial of the instrument, and assumes no obligation to keep it or pay for it unless he is thoroughly pleased. As yet no instruments have been returned; but in case any are returned, freight both ways is paid by the factory.

Permanent Guarantee

Each instrument is permanently guaranteed both by the manufacturers and by the Associated Piano Clubs against all imperfections, workmanship and material. Everything connected with each instrument is genuine and is so guaranteed.

Write for your copy of the beautifully illustrated catalogue and further information on the club plan. After making your selection from the catalogue fill out the "Approval Test Blank" which accompanies the catalogue, and let us send the instrument freight prepaid, for your approval. Do not send any money until you have tried the piano or player-piano and have decided to keep it. The factory will prepay the freight, and there will be no charge for the trial. You can return the instrument to the factory, at the factory's expense, if you don't like it after thirty days trial. All this means that we insure your perfect satisfaction. Address the managers, Giving Is Scriptural.

How those who profess to be scriptural can fall short in the duty of giving is beyond comprehension. Nothing is more plainly seen from the study of the Bible than that giving is scriptural. The first recorded act of worship of the human face was accompanied by an offering of the fruit of the ground and the firstlings of the flock. The first act of Noah after he came out of the ark was a gift of animals to God as a sacrifice. Abraham, Jacob, and David each recognized the same principle. The first recorded act of worship in the New Testament was a gift to the infant Christ of gold, frankincense, and myrrh. In the Sermon on the Mount, Christ named giving before prayer and fasting. The first act of the church after Pentecost was a scheme of Christian beneficence which has never been equaled since.

Not only is it scriptural to give, but it is scriptural to give systematically. The standard of tithing in the Old Testament is so plain that it is unnecessary to give quotations. Paul states the New Testament standard of systematic giving as follows: "Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store as God hath prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come." (1 Cor. 16: 2.) This includes four things. It assumes that every one should give; gifts were to be stored beforehand; giving was to have reference to prosperity; this was to be done every Lord's day. F. B. Meyer said: "The patriarch gave a tenth, and surely the noon of Christianity should not inspire less benevolence than the twilight."

The First Battle.

In order to fight successfully against evil in the world about us, we must fight and overcome the evil within us. Many expressions in the Ephesian letter make this clear. The first thing for us to do, if we would conquer evil within ourselves and in others, is to see our own danger and our own need. This thought is well understood and powerfully expressed by David. In Ps. 139 he thus entreats the Lord: "Surely thou wilt slay the wicked, O God: depart from me therefore, ye bloodthirsty men. For they speak against thee wickedly, and thine enemies take thy name in vain. Do not I hate them, O Jehovah, that hate thee? And am not I grieved with those that rise up against thee? I hate them with perfect hatred: they are become mine enemies. Search me, O God, and know my heart: try me, and know my thoughts; and see if there be any wicked way in me, and lead me in the way everlasting." The psalmist expresses his perfect hatred of evil when it is embodied in the enemies of God. He asserts his purpose to count the wicked as his own personal foes. Then, aware of his own weaknesses, he pleads with God first to purge himself, to awaken within him the consciousness of his own sinfulness, and to put out of him every evil thought and thing. In line with this desire is that petition in the Lord's prayer which leads us to pray for deliverance from temptation from evil. How oftentimes the beam must be cast from our own eye before we can see clearly the mote in our brother's eye!

Saving Influence.

Two striking illustrations are employed by Christ to set forth the saving influence which his people should exert in the world about them-salt and light. We may say of both of these that they are penetrating, pervasive, wholesome, and preservative. This must be the character of both the individual and combined influence of Christ's people in this world. The salt common in the time of our Lord's teaching was not always pure, and so it might melt and leave a little refuse which was useless. This gives the point of his illustration about salt becoming insipid. If the Christian character loses its spiritual power, it is like salt without taste. The illustration of light is dwelt upon at more length. The great privilege of associating with Christ as the Light of the world is the Christian's. With regard to that light, it is, of course, derived from Christ himself. It is reflected light that shines through us. It must not be hidden, yet it need not be estentatious. The true Christian does not shine for show, but for use. He is not to make himself prominent, but to exhibit the grace and power of his Lord. He is not to shine for his own glory, but for the glory of God and for the salvation of men.

Rewards.

The rewards of Christian living come in this life as well as in that which is to come. They lie in both spheres, earth and heaven. They comfort the life that now is and crown that which is hereafter. In the Sermon on the Mount, when Jesus introduces the principles of his kingdom, he first deals with the character of its subjects. He teaches that to be good is to be happy. There is no true happiness without goodness. We are not to think of goodness as procuring salvation. We are not good enough for that; but that being provided for us in the work of our Savior, and accepted by us in humble faith, then we are to understand that being good on that basis is to be really happy. That is what "blessed" means—to be really and rightly happy. In the Beatitudes Jesus describes the true happiness that comes of character and disposition. It does not depend upon outward circumstances, but on the inner state of mind and heart. For example, the poor are happy, for they accept their poverty in the right spirit. Poverty is a thing not for discontent, or envy, or dishonesty, or pining, but a thing to be accepted, if necessary, with a spirit that corresponds to it. So far from being a cause of unhappiness, it is to have the kingdom of God. So the other beatitudes express in their different ways this true happiness.

The Kingdom of Israel. No. 5.

BY F. W. SMITH.

"And the men of Judah came, and there they anointed David king over the house of Judah." (2 Sam. 2: 4.)

The kingdom, under the reign of David, became strongly fortified and practically invincible to the surrounding nations; but the seeds of human wisdom do not bear the fruit of perfection. In the beginning David did not rule all of the people; for Abner, Saul's captain general, had made Ish-bosheth, Saul's son, king over a part of them This condition of things brought about strife, alienation, and war among the people of God, which continued for a long time, resulting in the supremacy of David. The house of David grew stronger, while the house of Saul grew weaker. (2 Sam. 3: 1.) Division among the people of God is always fraught with evil and retards the progress of truth and righteousness. The spirit of strife and division now rife among the churches of Christ, caused by some insisting upon unauthorized things in the worship and work, is doing its destructive and deadly work. Churches that were once alive and active seem paralyzed: brethren who once worked harmoniously together for the salvation of souls are now estranged, and many feel like hanging their heads in shame before the world. Finally, the division among the people ceased and David became ruler over all the people. (2 Sam. 3: 9-11; 5: 1-3.) Abner was a politician of the shrewd and unscrupulous type, He evidently saw that he could not maintain his cause, and, seeing the drift of popular sentiment, began to provide for himself. This same spirit characterizes politicians now, who, with fair speech, beguile the "dear people," making them believe that their interests weigh heavily upon the office seeker's heart. There is also a species of religious politics which is far more destructive of the vital interests of mankind. Churches are led away from the simplicity of the gospel into the corruptions of man's ways by these religious politicians. By shrewd methods, and often by dishonest methods, they work their way into the good graces of unsuspecting brethren, and, before it is discovered, seeds are sown that produce unholy strife, working ruin to the churches. The elders should demand of every preacher frankness and candor regarding things that are divisive; and if the preacher evades the issue, give him a wide berth.

DAVID'S REIGN OVER THE PEOPLE.

1. David's reign lasted forty years. This was a long time to occupy a throne without becoming like Nebuchadnezzar, who was lifted up in pride, ignoring the God who created him. David remained humble, recognizing God as being over all and the One before whom he would stand in the end. The people had no grounds to complain, for it is said that David executed justice to all.

2. David's reign was a stormy one, for he was much in war. Owing to the fact that he shed much blood, he was not permitted to build a house for God.

3. David's gratitude was shown in a marked degree by his taking the son of his old friend and bosom companion to his table and keeping him all the days of his life. The story of Jonathan and David is familiar to all Bible readers. How the hearts of these two men were knit together in love! At the death of Jonathan, David exclaimed: "I am distressed for thee, my brother Jonathan: very pleasant hast thou been unto me: thy love to me was wonderful, passing the love of women!" (2 Sam. 1: 26.) This remembrance of Jonathan's love and of how David was befriended by him caused the king of Israel to take Mephibosheth, Jonathan's son, to his bosom. Gratitude is one of the most beautiful of virtues, but-alas!-how little there is in the world! Kindness and deeds of love are soon forgotten by the masses. It is "Crown him!" to-day; it is "Crucify him!" to-morrow. We, too, soon forget or disregard the helping hand. Even those from whom we have learned the way of life and who have guided our feet along the slippery path of duty are lost sight of, and we fail to honor them. The aged, who have laid the foundation upon which we build and the fruit of whose labors we enjoy, find no place in sweet and loving memory. "Thine own friend, and thy father's friend, forsake not." (Prov. 27: 10.)

THE RESELLION OF ABSALOM.

The treatment that David received at the hands of Saul was nothing in comparison with the rebellion of his own son. On account of David's sin with the wife of Uriah, God said that evil should arise in his house. (2 Sam. 12: 11.) In addition to the grief caused by a rebellious son, the tortures of a smitten conscience, continually reminding him of one of the blackest crimes in the history of the world, was enough to run Israel's king mad. Any man or woman is to be pitied who has a stiff-necked and ungovernable son or daughter. I can scarcely conceive of a greater curse than a son or daughter who robs his or her father and mother of the comforts of life and the joyous anticipations of future usefulness which they saw in the babe upon their knees. Many homes have been draped in mourning and hereft of the sunlight of life because of wayward children. This is frequently the result of neglect upon the part of parents to teach their children to respect parental law and authority. Children who are allowed their own way will, nine times out of ten, bring grief to the hearts of their mothers and fathers and ruin eternal to themselves.

1. Absalom conceives the idea of usurping his father's throne, and hence one of the most adroitly laid schemes ever formulated in the brain of man for its consummation. (2 Sam. 15: 1.6.) While Abner was a politician of the meaner sort, Absalom was no less such. He very innocently insinuates that the people are not receiving justice at the hands of those in authority, affecting great sympathy for them and intimating that he will see that every man receives his just dues. In all of his speech and actions is clearly seen the "cloven foot" of the unprincipled office seeker, who, like the vampire, sucks the lifeblood of his vietim.

2. Absalom finds a willing and ready accomplies in the person of Ahithophel, David's closest friend and chief counselor. (Verse 31.) It must have been a crushing blow to the king when he saw that the man in whom he trusted and the one whose advice he sought had turned from him to aid a rebellious son. It was doubtless this act upon the part of Ahithophel to which David referred when he said: "Yea, mine own familiar friend, in whom I trusted, which did eat of my bread, hath lifted up his heel against me." (Ps. 41; 9.) To have one whom you love devotedly and in whom you have all confidence turn from you and seek to do you harm is scarcely less painful than death itself.

DAVID'S FLIGHT FROM JERUSALEM.

When Absalom finishes his well-laid plans, he has himself proclaimed king at Hebron, and he prepares to march to Jerusalem, the capital. (2 Sam. 15: 10.) David is notified of the coming foe and fiees from the seat of government. His flight is pitiable indeed. "And David went up by the ascent of Mount Olivet, and wept as he went up, and had his head covered, and he went barefoot: and all the people that was with him covered every man his head, and they went up, weeping as they went up." (Verse 30.) This is the great warrior, the man who in youth shrank not from the mighty giant and who was the victor of many a hard-fought battle. Why does he fiee from the presence of Absalom? Is it because of fear? Be it far from David. The power of a father's love constrains him to avoid a clash of arms with his son; and even when the battle is on, he gives special directions concerning the treatment of his rebellious son. "And the king commanded Joah and Abishai and Ittal, saying, Deal gently for my sake with the young man, even with Absalom." (2 Sam. 18: 5.) Notwithstanding Absalom's rebellion and his efforts to usurp the throne, David's heart still beats with tender affection and deep solicitude for his wayward boy. If the depth of an earthly father's love be so great, what must be that of the Heavenly Father's love toward his wayward children? We sin against him so often, and still he loves us and cares for us.

DAVID'S REFURN TO ISRAEL.

"Then said Joab, I may not tarry thus with thee. And he took three darts in his hand, and thrust them through the heart of Absalom, while he was yet alive in the midst of the oak." (Verse 14.) Thus ended the life of the ambitious and disobedient Absalom, and with it also ended the war, and David was permitted to return in peace to his throne. While the king of Israel is restored to his proper place and while peace once again reigns through the death of Absalom, yet David's heart is rent and he mourns the death of his son, even wishing that he had died in Absalom's stead. "And the king was much moved, and went up to the chamber over the gate, and wept: and as he went, thus he said, O my son Absalom, my son, my son Absalem! would God I had died for thee, O Absalom, my son, my son!" (Verse 33,) In contemplating the love of David for his wicked son and his willingness to have died for him, we are reminded of the love and sympathy of the One who died for us. While unmerited by us, still we are the recipients of the crowning act of divine love, which broke the heartstrings of the Man of sorrows, forever sanctifying Calvary with its crimson flow. All rebellious sons do not meet in this life the fate of Absalom; but unless reformation takes place on this side of the river of death, there awaits them an awful doom. David reigns until he is an old man, stricken in years; and then he goes out, leaving the world and all of its glory behind him. Notwithstanding the fact that he wore the royal robe and wielded the golden scepter, while before him bowed thousands of obedient subjects, ready to do his will, even at the cost of life itself, yet the humblest subject in his kingdom, fearing God, got more out of this life and will share equally with him in the world to come. Earthly power and glory cannot give the bliss for which the heart of man longs.

My Turning Point in Life.

BY J. D. FLOYD.

While not sure that it is just the thing to do, I write this for the Gospel Advocate. The space of the paper is too limited to be filled with matter that is not in some way instructive or helpful to the readers. With the hope that this will not push out something more valuable, I send it on its way.

From the first of February until the last of April, 1861, I was a student in C. R. Darnall's school at "New Hope," in Marshall County, Tenn. One of the branches I was studying was physiology and anatomy. In the advertising circular sent out, Dr. T. W. Brents was put down as lecturer on that branch. Sometime in March he gave the school an hour's lecture on the "Eye." While he bad preached much near me, I had never seen him before. As I was studying along the line of his lecture, I was deeply interested. My judgment was that he was the clearest speaker I had ever heard. While his subject was an abstruse one, he made it so clear, it seemed, a child could understand it. Suppose, after the lecture, some one should have said to him: " Doctor, you gave us an instructive lecture to-day; and, while not along that line, that lecture in a roundabout way will be the means of saving a young man from incipient skepticism, giving to him the joys of the Christian life for over fifty years and giving to the church of which you are a member a humble but active preacher for near a half century." Such a statement would have seemed incredulous to the Doctor; nevertheless, it would have been true.

Here begins the story of my life. A little over seventyeight years ago I was born in a humble home on a hilly and only partially uncleared farm in the southern part of Bedford County, Tenn. I was the youngest of a family of ten children-six sons and four daughters. My experience was that of the ordinary boy on a small farm in that day. I did my part in the clearing up the land, cutting out the undergrowth, piling and burning brush and logs, while older and stronger ones guided the plow. I did my part of cultivating the crop with the hoe. Being the youngest, for a long time I was the millboy of the family. Henry Clay has come down in history as the "Millboy of the Slashes." So I was the "millboy of Flat Creek." All the meal and flour for a large family for several years was brought in a sack from the mills, miles away. When the sifter began to strike the bottom of the meal or flour barrel, the sack was filled with wheat or corn, as the case might be; put across the back of "Kit," the old family mare; and I, astride on the sack, hied myself away to the water mill, six or eight miles. In summer I was barefooted; in winter, shod with homemade shoes; but at elther time my pants would gradually climb above my knees, giving the sun or the cold fair play on my bare skin. In that day there were no places for loafing; hence, when not at work, much of the time, including Sunday, was spent in the woods or on the creek. I knew just where to find the summer grape and the black haw, and when they would be ripe. I knew every chestnut tree and where the biggest ones were to be found. I knew all the fishing holes, knew just where to go to catch the "red chub," the yellow cat, and, in their season, to pull the hornyhead out of his den. Interject into the life here described about three months each year in an old-time school taught in an old-time house without windows and seated with backless benches, and by a teacher who only proposed to carry his pupils to the "rule of three," and you have my surroundings while growing into manhood.

My people were Baptists of the primitive stripe; hence, though at an early date I became interested in my soul's salvation, with my teaching, I could only wait the Lord's good time. O, the gloom and anxiety of those days! I pray God no one who reads this will ever have to pass through a like experience. After so long a time I put myself under other teachers and sought religion after the mourners'-bench method of that day. I did everything that my teachers told me to do, and still the manifestation of which they spoke did not come. I remember distinctly one Sunday night I spent perhaps an hour on my knees at the bench. Revival songs were sung and many prayers were prayed. The good men carrying on the work told me to give up everything and earnestly desire the blessing and it would come. I was advised to read the psalms of David. This was the only scriptural citation given. I left the altar as I went to it. On my way home I recalled my experience. I said to myself: "I was told that if I would give up and sincerely desire the blessing it would come; and now, if my salvation depends on my being morein earnest than I have been, I am gone; I cannot possibly be more in earnest than I was to-night." Then I said: "This thing is a myth or a mystery, I don't know which, and from this on I shall throw the whole thing off, make the best out of this world I can, and let the next take care of itself." I can now look back and see that from that time a state of indifference started that eventually brought me to the point where my feet, to say the least of it, were slipping into the cold, chilly waters of skepticism, if not open infidelity. The Civil War came, and experience as a soldier only hurried me on the journey I had started. The last of June, 1865, found me at home, penniless, almost naked, and without any definite plans for the future.

I have now gone around the circle and am back to the place where I started with Dr. Brents' lecture. A short time after I reached home I heard that he was to preach at Lynchburg on a certain Sunday. At once my interest was aroused. I felt no interest in the preaching, or any preaching, for that. If I had, I should have sought it in another quarter. But, remembering the lecture, I wanted to hear him "speak," not "preach."

Sunday morning, the appointed time, I was one of the audience that filled the meetinghouse. In the stand was Dr. Brents (my second sight of him), and a small, blackeyed man, slightly stooped, and plainly clad in a suit of homemade cloth. At the proper time this man opened the service by singing, reading a scripture lesson, and prayer, lining out the hymn according to the custom of that day. I thought he was simply introducing and the Doctor would preach. Great was my disappointment when he picked up the Bible and read a text-or, rather, texts; but as I was there, I determined to give him a hearing. I soon became interested and never gave a man better attention in my life. Though fifty-three years have passed since then, and I was a mere child in knowledge of the Scriptures, I can almost reproduce that sermon to-day. Acts 2: 38 and 8: 28 were his texts. He started out by saying that three things must be considered in order to understand any speech or writing-(1) the speaker or writer, (2) the purpose for which he spoke or wrote, and (3) the condition of the person spoken or written to. He then showed that the speaker was the same in both cases; that the end to be attained was the same; and that the things to be done were the same in some respects, but different in others; and he then raised the question, why different? In answering this he gave a history of the events of Pentecost (Acts 2) and the preaching of the gospel in Samaria (Acts 8). He showed that Acts 2: 38 was addressed to unsaved men who had asked to know what to do in order to be saved; while Acts 8: 28 was addressed to a man who was saved, but had fallen into sin. It was here that I saw the reason of my failure in my efforts to become religious. My teachers had wholly ignored the teaching in Acts 2, which was applicable to men in my condition, and applied the teaching in Acts S, which was intended for saved men who had yielded to temptation and sinned. That discourse was the turning point in my life. Skepticism yielded to faith; disobedience, to obedience; gioom, doubt, and despondency, to a lively hope in Christ. That preacher was R. B. Trimble, one of the best evangelists of that day. He was living on a farm at "Beech Grove," in Maury County. The churches, as a rule, had been torn and disrupted by the Civil War. Seeing this, the church there furnished a man to cultivate the farm and sent him out to try to revive the churches. He was out in this work when he, under God, was the means of changing my whole course in life,

What Is An American?

A list of "casualties in France," recently published by the War Department, opens with the names of O'Connor, Redmond, and Loehr, dead on the field of honor, and of Spiegel, severely wounded. Other names, taken down at random, with no thought whatever of proving a preconceived thesis, are Douglass, Hahn, Murphy, Brown, and Thill, "died in hospital," and Wilson, Kunz, Bedernicek, Cavazza, Ferde, and Rutledge, slightly wounded. A study of this roll of honor may give some answer to the question, "What is an American?"

Of these fifteen names, three—O'Connor, Redmond, and Murphy—are unmistakably of Irish origin. Brown and Wilson may furnish some grounds for controversy, since they might be either English, Irish, Welsh, or Scotch. Here they are classified, along with Rutledge, as probably English, thus bringing the Anglo-Saxon total to a precarious three. Douglass is as Scotch as "heather," Cavazza is plainly Italian, and Bedernicek is a representative of the Slavic races. The calculation thus accounts for three Irish and three English names, and three names traceable to Scotland, Italy, and Eastern Europe. But the palm of honor, it would seem, must go to the men whose ancestors sought these shores from Germany, for six names—Loehr, Spiegel, Hahn, Thill, Kunz, and Ferde—can be assigned to none but a Teutonic root.

What, then, is an American? Is he one who was born within the boundaries of the United States? Is he a man who prates of patriotism and spends the rest of his time in planning schemes to evade the income tax? Must he be a member of the Mayflower Society or a Son of the Revolution? It is not easy to state with precision what qualities are necessary to the making of an American, but a man who is willing to lay down his life for this country would seem to merit the name. One thing, however, is certain; he need not be an Anglo-Saxon. He may even be a naturalized German.

In these days of hysteria, which have already brought us the disgrace and humiliation of mob violence, that is a truth which should not be forgotten.—America.

OUR JAPANESE HOUSE.

The houses naturally drew my attention very early in my Japanese experience; and now that Miss Cypert and I are living in one, friends at home may enjoy a description of our "uchi," This house is Japanese in every respect, hence a pen picture of it will give information of houses in general.

The most impressive feature to me is the striking contrast in the arrangement as compared to a foreign house. For example, the nicest part of the house and yard is at the back; while the kitchen, etc., are alongside the entrance. The front and side fences are made of bamboo poles, tied in place rather than nailed. The yard is very small-only about twenty feet by ten in the largest part. The house is not a "paper house," as is sometimes thought, but has some very substantial timbers and mud walls; while the roof is of enormous weight, being tiled. Along the outer edges of the narrow porches, windows, and doors are sliding wooden sections which are closed only at night or during a storm. While closed the house has the appearance of a huge packing box. During the day these shutters are stowed away in small compartments made for the purpose. The sliding of these wooden walls makes an enormous slamming and grating noise, which is one terror to residence in a Japanese house. Inside these wooden doors are the paper slides made of light wood framework covered with white paper. The rooms are divided also by paper partitions, which can be entirely removed with the greatest ease. The floors are laid with a soft straw matting. These mats are always made six feet by three and a little more than one inch thick, being packed with straw, so that they are soft and springy under foot. One's first experience in stepping on them is rarely ever forgot, especially if it happens to be in an upstairs room as mine was. The woodwork of the house, both inside and out, is unpainted, and hence has a natural brightness and cleanliness which is very pretty. The little alcove in the corner, which marks the place of honor in two of the nicest rooms, is also an interesting feature, being constructed of a combination of woods of various kinds.

We are conforming to Japanese habits of living to some extent, but not entirely. We prefer beds and chairs to sitting and sleeping on the floor, and a stove during cold weather rather than a wee fire box, and these preferences have been granted, we are thankful to say, by the liberality of friends at home. We are glad, too, that we got these necessities before the heavy war prices were put on things. The prices of furniture, clothing, foodstuff, and house rent have almost doubled since I came to Japan, less than two and a half years ago. $\mbox{$\triangle$}$ $\mbox{$\triangle$}$

Plow Work.

"Our minister is always talking to us about sacrifice. I am getting tired of it. He expects us to give, give, give all the time. He seems to think the church is the greatest institution in the world."

"Perhaps he is right. But I agree with you that we cannot always be giving to the church. There are other things that we must think of. I am afraid our minister is visionary rather than practical,"

The first speaker was a wealthy business man, and the second was a successful lawyer. Both men had very large incomes; they lived not only in comfort, but in luxury, and denied themselves nothing that they felt it desirable to have. They were church members, and gave "generously," but neither of them really knew the meaning of the word "sacrifice."

A few months after this conversation the two men joined a party that was going around the world. Before they started, their "visionary" minister earnestly asked them to observe and to remember any unusual and interesting things that they might see in the missionary countries through which the party was to travel. The men promised—carelessly, perhaps—to do so.

In Korea, one day, they saw in a field by the side of the road a boy pulling a rude plow, while an old man held the plow handles and directed it. The lawyer was amused, and took a snapshot of the scene.

"That's a curious picture! I suppose they are very poor," he said to the missionary who was interpreter and guide to the party.

"Yes," was the quiet reply. "That is the family of Chi Noui. When the church was being built, they were eager to give something to it; but they had no money, so they sold their only ox and gave the money to the church. This spring they are pulling the plow themselves."

The lawyer and the business man by his side were silent for some moments. Then the business man said: "That must have been a real sacrifice."

"They did not call it that," said the missionary. "They thought it was fortunate that they had an ox to sell."

The lawyer and the business man had not much to say. But when they reached home the lawyer took that picture to the minister and told him the story.

"I want to double my pledge to the church," he said.
"And give me some plow work to do, please. I have never known what sacrifice for the church meant. A converted heathen taught me. I am ashamed to say I have never yet given anything to my church that cost me anything."

How much does the average modern church member ever sacrifice for his religion? How many that call themselves Christians ever sold the ox and then harnessed themselves to the plow?—Youth's Companion.

For thee to do that which every man may do, I hold it no mastery; but to love thy neighbor in charity and hate his sin can no man do, save only good men, who have it by the gift of God, and not by their own travall, as Paul saith: "Love and charity is shed abroad in your hearts by the Holy Ghost, which is given to you." And, therefore, it is more precious and more dainty to come by. All other good deeds without this make not a man good nor worthy of the bliss of heaven, but this alone, and only this, maketh a man good and all his good deeds to be medeful. All other gifts of God and works of man are common to good and bad, to the chosen and the reprobate; but this gift of charity is proper only to good and chosen souls.—Walter Hilton.

I believe there is nothing more wanted among our church people than the touch of service; not asking for public notice, but the simple belief that "I am among you as He that serveth."—Selected.

Cain.

BY H. LEO BOLES.

Cain is the third of the Bible characters that we have mentioned in sacred history. Adam and Eve are the only ones mentioned before him. It will be well for the reader to study Gen. 4; Heb. 11: 4; 1 John 3: 12; Jude 11. These are all the scriptures that directly give history, information, and instruction concerning this third Bible character.

It is possible that the Kenites, an ancient race of people, closely connected with the early history of Israel, came from Cain. Num. 24: 22: "Nevertheless Kain shall be wasted, until Asshur shall carry thee away captive." Some translate Kain as used in this scripture "Kenites." Also reference is made to Kain in Judg. 4: 11, where the word "Kenite" is used. It is probable that the city of Kain mentioned in Josh. 15: 57, included in the inheritance of the tribe of Judah, may trace its origin to the descendants of Cain. I believe that these are all of the scriptures that bear directly or indirectly upon this Bible character.

Cain has the distinction of being the first born of the human family: Adam and Eve were created. John Calvin thinks that Cain and Abel were twins. He gives as his reason for this conclusion that the same word in the original which refers to Jacob and Esau is used in regard to Cain and Abel, and that as Jacob and Esau were twins, so Cain and Abel were twins. I do not think that his reasoning is conclusive, as we find the same word used in reference to brothers which we know from the context and from history were not twins. He gives as further support to his conjecture the suggestion that children were born in pairs when the human family first began. There is no scriptural authority for this position, and yet it may be true. He thinks that the pair were male and female. this position be true, it would contradict the first position that Cain and Abel were twins. There may be some ground in the contention for an opinion, but there is no evidence upon which to found any degree of faith.

After the sin and transgression of Adam and Eve and their separation from the garden of Eden, the first thing mentioned in the epitome of history as given in Genesis is the birth of Cain. He was born under the very shadow of the fall of man, and the history of the human family and the history of sin began at the same point and coincide throughout the entire length of human existence on earth. Scholars have speculated on this question: "Does the Bible give a history of sin or a history of the human family?" An affirmative answer could be given to each member of the double question stated above, and still we would not have a contradiction nor a full and complete purpose of sacred history. The Bible gives a history of man, and in the history of the human family there is the history of sin. Sometimes the emphasis seems to be placed on man, and again the emphasis is placed on the sins of men. The Bible is also a history of redemption, and in order to give a history of redemption it is necessary to understand the voluminous history of sin. The history of redemption must begin with the history of sin and run parallel to it. It seems that redemption may be appreciated more when we see from what we have been redeemed.

For a clear, definite, and logical study of this biblical character, it seems best to divide the study into three divisions—first, Cain's sacrifice; second, Cain's sin: third, his punishment. The fourth chapter of Genesis gives a brief description of Cain's sacrifice. There are two kinds of sacrifices suggested here—vegetable and animal. Now Jehovah has approved of vegetable sacrifices; he incorporated the vegetable sacrifice in the law of Moses. The first grapes, the first barley, the first roasting ears, the first cakes baked, and the first fruit of the land were all specified in the ritual given by Moses to the children of Israel.

This shows that Jehovah was not averse to vegetable sacrifices. God accepted animal sacrifices also, and incorporated animal sacrifices in the Jewish economy. In the offerings made by Cain and Abel, we find that Cain offered a vegetable sacrifice and Abel offered an animal sacrifice. God accepts the animal sacrifice in this instance and rejects the vegetable. Why did he accept the one and reject the other? What is the difference between Cain's and Abel's offerings? I insist that the difference is not in the fact that one was a vegetable and the other was an animal. The writer of the Hebrew letter states clearly and pointedly the difference in the sacrifices: "By faith Abel offered unto God a more excellent sacrifice than Cain." (Heb. 11: 4.) Now Paul tells us that faith comes by hearing, and hearing by the word of God. (Rom. 10: 17.) God gave instructions to these two brothers concerning the sacrifices that they were to make. Abel followed devoutly the instruction given by Jehovah, and Cain rejected the counsel of heaven and followed his own inclination and judgment. Abel offered his by faith and Cain did not. Manifestly the difference between the two offerings is that of faith. This is the point of difference between all acceptable worship of God to-day and vain worship. It is the difference between pleasing God and pleasing man; it is the difference in serving the Creator and serving the creature; it is the difference between the church of God and all of its work and worship and the denominational institutions with all their creeds, disciplines, and confessions of faith.

We learn from this that the acceptance of an offering does not depend so much upon the nature of the thing offered as it depends upon the character and spirit of the one who offers it; not so much on the characteristics of the thing offered as upon following faithfully the instructions concerning the offering. People have made many mistakes at this point; they have thought that the great number of offerings commended them to God or to their gods. This is a common error made by idolatrous worshipers; they seem to think that the greater the number of the offerings, the more acceptable will be their service. King Saul made this mistake when he brought back the flocks of sheep and herds of cattle from the Amalekites. I think that Solomon made the same mistake. When the temple was dedicated, there was not room on the large altar for the multitude of offerings which Solomon made; so he hallowed the court of the Gentiles in order to offer the thousands of rams and bullocks. He thought that the greater the number offered, the more pleasing to Jehovah.

There is another very common error which worshiping people make. It is that the value or the cost of the sacrifice commends one to God. This is not necessarily true. While the value may be included, and is included when God so specifies, yet merely the cost of the thing does not within itself commend one to God. David would not offer a sacrifice that did not cost him anything. We are also reminded at this point of the widow's mite. Her mite was more acceptable to God than the wealth of the hypocrites who contributed bountifully. I think that the conclusion is logical as well as scriptural that its acceptance does not depend upon the number or the cost of the sacrifice.

Cain's offering was rejected. In what manner the divine approbation and displeasure were expressed by Jehovah, we are not informed. Whether it was by a celestial fire coming down from heaven and consuming the one offering and leaving the other untouched, or by a voice from heaven whispering the mind of God, or by a thunder from on high pealing forth the wrath of the Almighty, we are left to conjecture. One thing we are sure of, and that is that Jehovah expressed his rejection in such unmistakable and definite terms that Cain could not misunderstand.

God's promises are "from everlasting to everlasting," and he always stands up to them.—Beecher.

A Cry for Help.

BY J. C. M'Q.

Some years ago a number of our readers sent Brother E. S. Jelley to India as a missionary. The funds were easily raised for that purpose. Brother Jelley has been there seven years or more, engaged in the missionary work, and has been instrumental in baptizing many natives into Christ. We are now informed that his health is not good and that it is necessary for him to return to this country in order to recuperate and regain his health. card has just been received from him, which says:

Our situation is very critical. Unless some money is raised for me by the time you get this, it will be very bad If no money has been raised, could the Gospel Advocate possibly wire me one hundred dollars as a loan on interest? The brethren who sent us out owe us some consideration, but they do not give it. There is no employment in India to be had, except the army. Prices have risen about thirty cents per yard for cheap cloth, and vegatables are from four to look the state of the property of the state of the property of the state of the state of the property of the p etables are from four to eight times what they were before the war. Brother Janes has stopped our income. All I want is to get home.

For the information of our readers, I will state that one hundred dollars was promptly wired to Brother Jelley. It required sixteen dollars to pay for the wiring in addition to the one hundred. We have been requesting contributions for some time, to be devoted to bringing Brother Jelley home. The amount received so far is indeed discouraging, only about thirty-nine dollars having been received to date. The amount required to bring him home is all he requests.

While our readers are giving to the relief of the war sufferers liberally and also giving to the Red Cross, it seems that they are neglecting preachers of the gospel who are in distressing need of funds. It is not the purpose of this journal to discourage the churches in giving to the Red Cross or giving to the relief of the Armenian and Syrian sufferers, but it does seem necessary just now to emphasize the need of not neglecting our missionaries altogether. The church should be more active and more vigilant now than ever before. In the midst of so much darkness, sin, and rebellion against God, the light of the church should shine more brightly than at any other time. The greater the darkness, the greater the need of the light. Neither churches nor individual Christians can afford to neglect to make sacrifices for the relief of the suffering and also to be active in advancing the gospel of Christ. Here is a brother in need and crying for funds to come home. The Holy Spirit says, through the apostle John: "But whose bath the world's goods, and beholdeth his brother in need, and shutteth up his compassion from him, how doth the love of God abide in him?" (1 John 3. 17.) A greater than John has said: "And whosoever shall give to drink unto one of these little ones a cup of cold water only, in the name of a disciple, verily I say unto you he shall in no wise lose his reward." (Matt. 10: 42.) It may be that God is placing before our readers this insistent cry for help in order that they may bring themselves nearer heaven. The Bible abounds in the teaching that the strong should help the weak. This is as true in financial matters as it is in spiritual matters. When we were weak and helpless, Christ, who is mighty to save, took upon himself the form of a servant and came to our relief. If we are to walk in his steps, we must heed such calls as the one now made by Brother Jelley. Christ says: " In all things I gave you an example, that so laboring ye ought to help the weak, and to remember the words of the Lord Jesus, that he himself said. It is more blessed to give than to receive." (Acts 20: 35.) The man who receives may feel that he is under obligations to repay the gift, but the man who gives with a pure heart is made happier in the realization of the fact that he has relieved the suffering and made another soul happy.

The rich man was lost because he failed to improve the opportunity that he had of relieving the suffering. Instead of using our means for the oppression of the poor, we should use them for their relief and in order that we may advance the kingdom of Jesus Christ in the world. We must first give ourselves heartily unto the Lord. When we have done this and show a willingness to give, the Lord receives "according to what a man hath, and not according to what he hath not." I am calling attention to this appeal of our brother in the hope that our readers will not forget that "the Lord loveth a cheerful giver," and that it will not be necessary to again call attention to this matter. Those who furnish the money do so with the understanding that they will not be under obligations to return Brother Jelley to the foreign field unless they feel it to be their duty to do so. Brother Jelley gave up a good position in order to undertake the work in India. He now desires to return home, and it does seem that funds should be furnished him for that purpose.

After an investigation it was deemed wise to send him to India. Our responsibility ceases when we do our best to give wisely. We are not responsible for the use of our gifts when we have done the very best that we can do with the light before us. I do not say this because I think that Brother Jelley has squandered funds, for I do not so understand it. In this case all can understand that the funds to be raised are for the purpose of bringing him home. We should place ourselves in his position. He is not well, his health is impaired, his mother is sick, and he is anxious to come home to see her and also to regain his health. In responding to his appeal, remember the Golden Rule and do unto others as you would have them do unto you. Send your contributions for him to the Gospel Advocate. They will be forwarded to him in India.

BY E. A. E.

"CHURCH WORK."

Whatever Christians, the children of God—the church—do in word or deed, all must be done in the name of Christ, (Col. 3: 17.) It is certain they cannot work out of Christ, out of his body, out of his church, and at the same time in his name. Then, one cannot do privately and even in secret in the name of Christ anything which cannot be done in Christ, in his body, in his church.

Christians cannot justify or excuse a certain course by claiming that they follow such a course or do such work as individuals and not as the church, or do certain things as individuals and not through the church, when they themselves are the church. Some things must be done and some services offered to God by all together—that is, in the congregation; but many other things must be done and services rendered when not assembled; yet all constitute the church all the while.

When Christians dance, drink, cheat, defraud, slander, or otherwise wrong people, and are worldly in general, the church to that extent does these things, because all such professed Christians are considered as much the church as all others. Let them say: "Here we go dragging the white robes of the church through the dust and mire and filth of sin."

Much of that which some call "church work" is condemned by the Lord, and much of that which he commands to be done is not called "church work" by the many. For instance, raising money by appeals to the pride, vanity, and other appetites of the flesh through mock marriages, foot-and-ankle shows, other shows and entertainments, suppers, fairs, etc., is called "church work;" but God does not approve this. He teaches most clearly that giving to the poor, or helping the needy, or contributing to his cause in every way is a spiritual service, and the blessedness is in the giving-in the self-denial; whereas these things are frolic and fun, fleshly and worldly entertainments. Some are not necessarily and always wrong within themselves, but are of the world and manifest the spirit of the world and of the flesh. These are not God's ways of "raising money." On the contrary, God most plainly commands all his children to follow useful occupations for, at least, four reasons; (1) that they themselves may have need of nothing (1 Thess. 4: 11, 12); that they may support the ones dependent upon them-aged parents, grandparents, and others (1 Tim. 5: 4-8, 16); (3) that they may be useful and, therefore, not unprofitable (Tit. 3: 8, 14 "to maintain good works" means "to profess honest occupations"-margin); (4) that they may have something to give to the needy (Eph. 4: 28). People who are mentally and physically able to follow some "useful occupation," but do not, are unprofitable and not useful citizens of any country, and certainly not of the kingdom of heaven. All who are mentally and physically able to pursue some profitable occupation are commanded to do so for the four reasons just given, one of which is to have something to give to the needy. Since Jesus says, "The poor ye have always with you," we know there will always be needy ones to be helped. There will be widows, too, whom immediate relatives cannot support, but whom the congregation must support. (1 Tim. 5: 5-7, 9, 10, 16.) There are thousands of helpless widows, naked and starving children, maimed and mutilated men, and other needy ones to be helped now. Since we have this opportunity, we are as Christians to do "good toward all men, and especially toward them that are of the household of the faith." (Gal. 6: 10.)

In "working in the church," doing "church work," "working for Jesus," thousands of church members, it seems from their actions and sermons, pay no more attention to and regard no more the Scriptures on useful employment and the Bible reasons for following it than thousands of others pay to what the Bible teaches concerning baptism and the Bible reasons for being baptized. We must have the scriptural motives and designs for work. Is the word of God our guide and standard? Did our all-wise and merciful Father in heaven make a mistake in giving this command with its scriptural designs? If one command of the gospel is a nonessential, are not all? The man who ignores anything God teaches ignores God.

The Bible is the most practical book, the most useful book, the best business book, and the most wonderful book in the world. In this one particular it provides for all able-bodied people to have useful and profitable employment, and for all who are not physically or mentally able to support themselves to be cheerfully, comfortably, and happily supported by others. At the same time God through the Bible makes this the most blessed way to live here and the way to be saved hereafter.

If we will not, through faith in God, cheerful obedience to his will, and good conscience, engage in useful employment for Bible reasons, then he, through chastisement—the cold and rugged necessity arising from war and through the demands of the government—brings us to its blessings. It is better to be forced to be useful and profitable in life than to waste time and means in idleness, the pleasures of sin, and luxurious ease. God in his wisdom and power, mercy and love, will overrule this world-wide war to his own glory, the good of his people, and the betterment of the race. He makes the wrath of men to praise him.

Then, when, in obedience to God. Christians learn and follow some honest occupation or useful employment in order (1) to support themselves, (2) to support the ones dependent upon them, (3) to make money and other provisions to give to the needy, (4) to be useful and profitable, (5) not to be dependent themselves and meddlesome in other men's matters (see 2 Thess. 3: 7-15), and (6) to rear their children in industry and general helpfulness to others, they are "working in the church," are "working for Jesus," are "church workers"-are doing the very work God commands the church to do-as much so as when engaged in preaching the gospel in a public way or worshiping God in the congregation, and a thousandfold more so than when engaged in something God does not, teach. It is most encouraging to men in the field, the shop, the store, the office, the schoolroom, etc., making an honest living for themselves and families and rearing their children in self-dependence and independence, to know that they are at work in the church and doing the will of God as much so as when engaged in the public worship on the first day of the week. It fills the hearts of wives and mothers and sisters with cheer and happiness and their souls with womanly virtues to realize that when in the nursery and kitchen and parlor, guiding the house, making the home and place of rest and peace for husbands and fathers and brothers and filling it with the beauty of their presence, they are doing the very work—the "church work"—God has committed to their hands, and a work no others can do. In due season they will reap if they faint not, for God will own and bless their labor.

Christian homes are the great need and salvation of the country.

God commands children and grandchildren to "learn first to show plety toward their own family"—in the home—by requiting their parents. This Paul declares is acceptable service to God. All who do not obey God in caring for their own needy and aged relatives—that is, in rendering this service—have denied the faith and become worse than infidels, although they may make long prayers, occupy chief seats in the synagogue, and make themselves prominent in public places. Nothing can take the place of, and release children and grandchildren from, these home duties and this acceptable service to God. All children who do this honor father and mother, which commandment Jesus says the Pharisees broke by their religious theories of "church work." (1 Tim. 5: 4-16; Mark 7: 8-13.)

Leaving undone and really refusing to do that which God commands to be done and doing something he has not commanded to be done is not only not acceptable service to him, but is an abomination in his sight.

1 Tim. 5: 5, 10 shows some of the good works-not all, however-God commands women in the church to dosetting their hope on God, continuing "in supplications and prayers night and day," living discreet and pure lives, bringing up children, using "hospitality to strangers," washing "the saints' feet," relieving the afflicted, diligently following "every good work." Verses 6, 11, 12, 13 of the same chapter tell of certain things which God condemns. The widows or other women who neglect the good works specified above and give themselves to pleasure are dead-dead to God and the church-while they live, it matters not how much fuss and show they may make in the name of religion. God condemns waxing "wanton against Christ," "rejecting their first pledge" ("faith"margin), idleness, "going about from house to house," "tattlers and busybodies," "speaking things" should not be spoken, and neglecting the old and helpless ones at home. Verse 14 says, as a rule—that is, it is the normal rule, God's rule-"that the younger widows ["women"-margin] marry, bear children, rule the household, give no occasion to the adversary for reviling." Can it not be seen most plainly that when women refuse to obey God in these good works, it matters not what other "church work" they may claim to do, they give the adversary occasion for reviling? The refusal to discharge these duties and do this work in the church will bring ruin to the home, the church, and the nation.

Let us study and believe with all our hearts 1 Tim. 2: 9-15; Tit. 2: 1-5; 1 Pet. 3: 1-6. These scriptures give the will of God on the subjects they embrace. "The whole counsel of God" embraces these. Shall we in modesty and humility obey God, or shall we follow the wisdom and spirit and fashions of the world? All this good work which God commands the aged women to do in being "reverent in demeanor," "not slanderers," not "enslayed to much wine," and in training the young women to do-namely, to love their husbands, to love their children, to be "workers at home," discreet and submissive to their own husbands-and which he commands all women in regard to adorning "themselves in modest apparel" and with "shamefacedness and sobriety," not "with braided hair and gold or pearls or costly raiment, but with a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price."

may be called "drudgery" and may be termed as "buried alive" by many who do not intend to obey God, but it is a great work before God.

Home builders, working in the fear of God, are the greatest workers in the church and are accomplishing the greatest good possible for women to do.

In contrast with this, many women, fashionably if not immodestly dressed, out in the world organizing societies, managing religious clubs, directing suppers and plays in order to "raise money for the church," making public addresses to mixed audiences, are called "great workers in the church" and are sincerely sorry for the poor women who have so much "drudgery" at home and so many children they cannot get out to do "church work" (!).

When husbands are kind and true and faithful to their wives, loving them as Christ loved the church and gave himself up for it (Eph. 5: 28-33), and give "honor unto the woman as unto the weaker vessel" (1 Pet. 3: 7), they are doing a work which God teaches all husbands in the church to do, and which many selfish and gruff, or even worse, church members fall to do. How can preachers who are not kind and true and faithful to their own wives teach other husbands to be? Or do they consider this any part of the gospel, or of the will of God or of Christianity? Do they not set God aside?

When preachers treat the old men as fathers, the old women as mothers, the young women as sisters "in all purity," and make of themselves examples in all other good works (1 Tim. 5: 1-3; Tit. 2: 7), they are doing a work in the church which some preachers at present seem to disregard most shamefully.

When employers and the employed treat one another in the spirit of Christ as God commands they should, they, too, are doing a much-needed work in the church, a failure to do which will condemn them in the judgment.

I trust that all have seen from these articles that working in the church is not simply doing a few things in a public way.

In the next article we hope to learn something, at least, about what the world is. What is "the world," which none must love?

The substantial growth of the interior life depends on its advance in moral virtues. Holy Scripture teaches this when it speaks of growing in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ; and, further, it explains the nature of this growth when, as in the words of Peter, it exhorts you to "add to your faith virtue; and to virtue knowledge; and to knowledge temperance; and to temperance patience; and to patience godliness; and to godliness brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness charity. For if these things be in you, and abound, they make you that you shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ."—T. T. Carter.

Invigorate your feeble life, again and again, by that Divine Manhood which, reigning on the Throne of Heaven, can never more sink into the grave; and then, not in your own strength, but in his, "likewise reckon ye also yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord."—H. P. Liddon.

Finish every day, and be done with it. You have done what you could. Some blunders and absurdities, no doubt, crept in; forget them as soon as you can. To-morrow is a new day; begin it well and serenely, and with too high a spirit to be cumbered with your old nonsense. This day is all that is good and fair. It is too dear, with all its hopes and invitations, to waste a moment on the yesterdays.—Exchange.

TRAINING LITTLE CHILDREN By MRS. JOHN HENRY HAMMOND.

Article 18.

Do Mothers Want Their Children to be Healthy Little Animals, or to Develop Their Deeper Nature and Become a Power for Good?

The other day 1 was reciting to my little five-year-old son the old nursery rhyme:

> Here am I, little Jumping Joan; When nobody's with me, I'm always alone.

"What does that mean?" asked the child.

"Why, when nobody's with you, aren't you always alone?" I questioned.

"No," he replied, "because God is always with me."

How shall we measure the significance of this early realization of our Father's presence everywhere? For with the knowledge that God is present to help at all times, our children lose the sense of fear, and there is no greater lesson that we can impart to them. From earliest infancy we can begin to awaken in our children the sense of the all-presence of God.

Froebel, in his "Mother Play," a series of songs and games which he devised as illustrative of how a mother should play with her children, always seeks to make her look from the things which are seen and temporal to the things which are unseen and eternal; the father is to manifest so much patience and love toward his little ones as to make the transition of idea from the earthly to the Heavenly Father simple and natural. The child is to be trained to look upon himself as a necessary and responsible part of a great whole, and to be taught that the whole can only be as strong as the weakest link. This is the basic thought of all true community consciousness. And from this earliest infancy he is to be taught to show gratitude to all who aid in ministering to his needs.

In these days, when so much is written about sense testimony and so much is done to meet the physical and mental needs of our children both in the home and at school, there is a tendency to forget the teachings of Froebel and to give our children only a partial education, an education which stops short of their spiritual needs.

A momentous question, and one which all parents must answer individually, is: "Do we want our children to be merely healthy little animals with a certain amount of superficial learning, or do we wish to develop their deeper natures so that one day they may be able to take their place in the world, and through their spiritual insight into things become powers for good in the community?" For parents cannot turn over their own responsibilities to the teachers and expect them to lay the foundations of character. The home is the place where this must be done, and it is for us to prove to our children that it is only as we are good ourselves that we help those around us. Then, imitation being one of the earliest and strongest instincts of childhood, our little ones, taking knowledge of us, begin practicing in their own lives what they see in ours; and living in an atmosphere of love and harmony, they come early to understand that love is the greatest power in the world. 0 0 0

The Story of a Famous Hymn.

Of all the widely known hymns that have been incorporated into the religious life and literature of the world, none has carried a more tender and intimate appeal, and none, perhaps, has been more powerful in the winning and sustaining of Christian hearts, than Mrs. Anne Sherwood Hawks' "I Need Thee Every Hour." It has been translated into almost every foreign language and sung the world over. By popular choice it has long held a place alongside of such universal hymnal favorites as Toplady's "Rock of Ages," Watts' "When I Survey the Wondrous Cross," Wesley's "Jesus, Lover of My Soul," Sarah Flower Adams' "Nearer, My God, to Thee," Newman's "Lead, Kindly Light," and Henry Lyte's "Abide with Me," which may be said to be the Pleiades in the galaxy of religious songs.

That one song, like "Home, Sweet Home," will probably serve to perpetuate the author's memory through generations to come. Had she written nothing else, that hymn would have won for her a place among the world's greatest religious song writers, for it is a harmonic expression of the simple faith that is the balm Christianity offers to the troubled soul. Mrs. Hawks died recently at her home in Bennington, Vt., in her eighty-third year. She was little known in literary circles.

Born in Hoosick, N. Y., on May 23, 1835, she began to write poems for the newspapers when only fourteen years old-poems of such unusual merit that they attracted the attention of her pastor and friend, Robert Lowry, who first turned her attention to hymn writing. The music of the hymn, "I Need Thee Every Hour," was composed by Mr. Lowry, as well as that of most of her other religious songs. Among the best-known of her other hymns are "Wholly Thine," "The Cross of Jesus," "Good Night," and "Why Weepest Thou?" In 1859 she was married to Charles Hial Hawks and moved to Brooklyn, N. Y., where she lived until her husband's death in 1888, after which she established her home in Bennington, Vt., where she died. Her life was simple and uneventful. The even tenor of a Christian life devoted to her church and its charities was hers. Public life had no appeals for her. She was content to live her life in the seclusion of her library and among her church associations, "the world forgetting and by the world forgot."

A short time before her death, Mrs. Hawks told of the circumstances under which her famous hymn was written. The story is as redolent of simple faith and tendencies of religious feeling as the hymn itself. She said: "I remember well the morning, many years ago, when in the midst of the daily cares of my home I was so filled with the sense of nearness to the Master that, wondering how one could live without him, either in joy or pain, these words. 'I need thee every hour,' were flashed into my mind. Seating myself by the open window in the balmy air of the bright June day, I caught my pencil and the words were soon committed to paper, almost as they are being sung now. It was only by accident, as it would seem, that they were set to music a few months later and sung for the first time at a Sunday-school convention in one of the largest Western cities." The words are as follows:

> I need thee every hour, Most gracious Lord; No tender voice like thine Can peace afford.

I need thee every hour, Stay thou near by; Temptations lose their power When thou art nigh,

I need thee every hour, In joy or pain; Come quickly and abide, Or life is vain.

I need thee every hour, Teach me thy will, And thy rich promises In me fulfill.

I need thee every hour, Most holy One; O make me thine indeed, Thou blessed Son.

(CHORUS)

I need thee—O, I need thee!— Every hour I need thee; O bless me now, my Savior— I come to thee.

Brother McQuiddy: (1) Do the souls of the wicked die, or do they live forever? (2) Please explain Phil. 3: 11.

John E. Plummer.

(1) The same scripture that teaches that the righteous live forever teaches that the wicked do not cease to exist. "And these shall go away into eternal punishment: but the righteous into eternal life." (Matt. 25; 46.) The punishment is as eternal as the life. "And the smoke of their torment goeth up forever and ever; and they have no rest day and night, they that worship the beast and his image, and whose receiveth the mark of his name." (Rev. 14: 11.) (2) Phil. 3: 11 reads: "If by any means I may attain unto the resurrection from the dead." The apostle labored abundantly, made great sacrifices, and used every possible means in order to attain to a glorious resurrection to a heavenly life. To attain such a great and glorious consummation, he counted the glories of the world as worthless and suffered with Christ in order to be resurrected and reign with Christ. 0 0 0

Brother McQuiddy: In the Gospel Advocate of June 6, in answer to the query of J. M. Dennis, you say: "In the days of Jesus of Nazareth there was a system of Bible schools corresponding very closely to the Bible schools of to-day." I did not know that, and would like to know where to find out about the Bible schools of that day. You quote Luke 2: 47; but I fail to see anything there that would indicate that there were classes, as there was only one teacher. You also quote Matt. 9: 35, and no classes indicated there. Again, are the "babes" spoken of in Heb. 5: 13, 14 small children or babes in Christ? J. F. NEECE.

If Brother Neece will study carefully the New Testament, he can easily discover that Christ taught the people by question and answer. The word "teach" means to teach a class. No one can teach without teaching a class. Christ could and did teach more than one class. If history is not at fault, there were such schools. Concerning the influences that were about a Jewish child at the beginning of the Christian era, Edersheim says: "There can be no reasonable doubt that at that time such schools existed throughout the land." ("Life and Times of Jesus the Messiah," 1., 230; comp. "Sketches of Jewish Social Life," page 115.) Schurer says: "While the education of Jewish children in the teachings of the law was, in the first place, the duty and task of parents, it appears that, even in the age of Christ, care was taken for the instruction of youth by the erection of schools on the part of the community." Reuss says of the Pharisees in the days of Christ: "The most powerful lever of their activity was the school." Geikie declares: "It cannot be doubted that boys' schools were already general in the time of Christ." Figures are based on facts. As there are babes in the flesh, so there are babes in the Spirit. If there were not real babies, the apostle would never have used the figure. If there were not babes in Christ, I would not be feeding my critic on se much milk. 0 0 0

Brother McQuiddy: This question was asked in our Sunday school: "Were all the apostles speaking at the same time the different languages on the day of Pentecost, or did all hear the apostle Peter in his own language and by the power of the Holy Spirit understand in their own tongue?" I take the position that all had the power to speak in the sixteen different languages; but if I understand the Scriptures aright, Peter was the principal spokesman on this occasion. Now, was the preaching on this occasion done by Peter and by miracle all the people heard him in their own tongue wherein they were born, or did each one of the apostles have to preach to a certain class in order that the whole assembly might hear? I have always thought the hearing was miraculous. Verses 4, 18 show that all the apostles were speaking in some way.

Verse 18 says: "On my servants and on my handmaidens in those days [pointing to this occasion] will I pour forth of my Spirit: and they shall prophesy." Was this prophesying the teaching or preaching of the apostles at this time?

G. W. PARTEN.

The Lord either doctored the tongues of the apostles or the ears of the people. The apostles were not permitted to preach Jesus until they were baptized in the Holy Spirit. "And being assembled together with them, he charged them not to depart from Jerusalem, but to wait for the promise of the Father, which, said he, ye heard from me: for John indeed baptized with water; but ye shall be baptized in the Holy Spirit not many days hence." (Acts 1: 4, 5.) "And they were all filled with the Holy Spirit, and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance." (Acts 2: 4.) The Holy Spirit used them, did the speaking through them. "For it is not ye that speak, but the Spirit of your Father that speaketh in you." (Matt. 10: 20.) "For no prophecy ever came by the will of man: but men spake from God, being moved by the Holy Spirit." (2 Pet. 1: 21.) It is but reasonable to understand that whenever a person presented himself to one of the apostles the Holy Spirit immediately enabled that apostle to address the man in his own language, so that there was nothing miraculous about the hearing or the understanding. This wonderful occurrence was a fulfillment of the prophecy of Joel which had predicted that God's servants should prophesy. God baptized the apostles in the Spirit, and not the multitude. The very fact that the people were not baptized in the Holy Spirit on the day of Pentecost should give us to understand that the people are not baptized in the Spirit now. The evidence is clear that the Holy Spirit spoke through the apostles to every hearer in his own dialect, and it is also wholly unreasonable to suppose that the Lord worked a miracle on the hearing of the multitude. If he did this, there was no necessity for the baptism of the Holy Spirit. ☆ ☆ ☆

Brother McQuiddy: Please explain 1 Pet. 3: 19.
Mrs. R. A. Hogan.

The passage in its connection reads: "In which also he went and preached unto the spirits in prison, that aforetime were disobedient, when the long-suffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was a preparing, wherein few, that is eight souls, were saved through water: which also after a true likeness doth now save you, even baptism, not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the interrogation of a good conscience toward God, through the resurrection of Jesus Christ." (Verses 19-21.) Christ preached through the agency of the Spirit and not in person. The Spirit which raised him from the dead was not his own personal spirit. "If the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwelleth in you, he that raised up Jesus from the dead shall give life also to your mortal bodies through his Spirit that dwelleth in you." (Rom. 8: 11.) The Spirit that raised up Christ was the Holy Spirit. Christ controlled or directed the Spirit. "I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may be with you forever, even the Spirit of truth." (John 14: 16, 17.) Christ preached by the Spirit through Noah. Christ had the power to send the Holy Spirit and work or speak by and through whom he chose. Christ through Noah preached to the wicked antediluvians. The account does not say they were in prison when preached to, but it does teach that the spirits now in prison were preached to in the days of Noah when they were disobedient, "when the long-suffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was a preparing." . The result of the preaching was the salvation of eight souls and the destruction without excuse of the disobedient. I know of no scripture that authorizes the view that lost spirits will have the gospel preached to them in the next world.

Spirit of the Press

By J. C. McOUIDDY

We Should Not Find Fault With Inspiration.

A devout and wise minister was reading the word spoken by the psalmist David: "I have been young, and now am old; yet have I not seen the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging bread." Pausing a moment, he said: "Now perhaps some of you are ready to say that you have." His eyes twinkling, he added: "Well, if you say that you have, all I can answer is, 'You and David for it." We should reflect seriously before we discredit inspiration. We sometimes imagine that things occur, which, if they did occur as we imagine, would prove revelation talse. We must not in our opinions contradict the inspired word of God, but we should respect whatever the apostles say, remembering that inspired men spake as they were guided by the Holy Spirit.

This Is An Age of Trial.

Let no Christian be discouraged and imagine for one moment that God is not ruling the world. God is still with his people and is working all things together for their good. In the terrible darkness that is now hanging over us, we may not be able to discern the light of his countenance, but still he assures us that he will not leave us nor forsake us and that his grace is sufficient for us. One who has recently been passing through many trials writes: "I am living close to God. He has done so much for me in his own sweet way." Such resignation, submission, and faith should prove inspiring to us all. In our trials let us draw near to God in order that he may draw nigh unto us. So long as we are faithful in the service of God, nothing will be able to separate us from his love, mercy, and protection. The Lord is our refuge and our strength in every time of need. 0 0 0

The Kaiser Rules the Churches of Germany.

In view of the fact that the pastors of the established Church of Prussia must take this solemn obligation upon being admitted to its ministry, it is clear that the Kaiser is the controlling power of Germany: "I will be submissive, faithful, and obedient to his Royal Majesty, and his lawful successors in the government, as my most gracious king and sovereign; promote his welfare according to my ability; prevent injury and detriment to him; and particularly endeavor carefully to cultivate in the minds of the people under my care a sense of reverence and fidelity toward the king, love for the fatherland, obedience to the laws, and all those virtues which in a Christian denote a good citizen; and I will not suffer any man to teach or act in a contrary spirit. In particular, I vow that I will not support any society or association, either at home or abroad, which might endanger the public security, and will inform his Majesty of any proposals made, either in my diocese or elsewhere, which might prove injurious to the state. I will preach the Word as his gracious Majesty dictates." $ $ $

The Passing of Fads.

It looks as if the evil fad of Pastor Russellism has received its fatal blow in the sentencing to prison, for twenty years each, of six of its principal leaders, for seditious teaching. Evangelical Bible students have known the system to be full of error and evil, but groups of people all over the country have been duped and led away from the churches by its spectacular claims. Some of these sporadic groups will continue to assemble for a time, but the whole thing will eventually fade out of sight. Likewise the shallow and antichristian movement inaugurated by Mary-Glover-Patterson-Baker-Eddy, and still carried on by some of her well-paid and some others of her deluded followers, will fade away, or change its faith or its name.

No such fantastic conglomeration of scientific nonsense and religious error as this woman propounded can hold on its way among sensible people for very long.—Herald and Presbyter.

It is to be devoutly wished that the Herald and Presbyter is right in its predictions. It is to be hoped that all fads are passing away. There is no place for a hobby rider in the church. We need in the church men who take God at his word, believe what he says, obey his commands, and trust him for the fulfillment of his promises. May God speed the day when all hobbyists and men who love their own opinions more than the word of the Lord shall pass forever away.

Vacation Time.

The months that normally are identified with the term "vacation time" are at hand. Some fortunate persons will have their vacations as usual this year. A very great number will not. The grim business of war recognizes no dog days. Thousands and tens of thousands who otherwise would be enjoying restful outings according to their tastes are held to serious work in the general interest of the civilized world.

At this time, above all others, no wasteful vacation for any one is justified. Remember, you who are fortunate enough to get away from daily routine for a summer's outing, that your country and humanity still have a claim on your services. Do not give up the Red-Cross work that has interested you during the preceding months. Do not forget that there is unceasing work to be done for the boys "over there," and for the brave peoples who are bearing the most terrible part of the common burden. Wherever you are, a Red-Cross chapter or branch will be within visiting distance.

To all vacationers, then: Do some Red-Cross work while you are resting. Lend the rural chapter workers a hand. You will return from your vacation with a more peaceful soul if you do.—Red Cross Bulletin.

Christians should not take a vacation in the service of Christ. Christ's service is restful to tired, weary nerves. Christians, at work or taking a vacation, should always be busy in the service of the Master. We know of nothing that should prevent a disciple from breaking bread and drinking the cup on every Lord's day. If a disciple is on a vacation, he should go to the nearest communion. If there is none available, then he should have the service with his own family in his own cottage or home. If he is all alone or fishing with outsiders, then he should observe the Supper and have Christ present with him. However, he should be careful to find himself in more fitting company on the next Lord's day. If a disciple is sick and at home, he should ask the members of the church to break bread with him in his home. Christians who are now sufficiently blessed with means to take a vacation should certainly remember their brethren who are now in the perils of war suffering for them. They should not neglect those who are in the service of the government and who are battling for the principles that they believe are right. It is never time for a Christian to take a vacation in the service of the Lord. Every disciple should give his very best service to the Christ at all times.

The memory is intended to be the field on which God impresses the abiding vision of the truths which he reveals of himself, the Author and the Revealer of all truth, and whatever, through his grace, the mind has embraced and apprehended. It is endowed with its retentive capacity in order that the mind may be able to call up the different forms and features of eternal truth, so that the inward light infused by the Holy Spirit may allure us and draw us on to cherish and to love them.—T. AT HOME AND ABROAD

Cled E. Wallace writes from Pritchett, Texas, July 8: "I baptzed thirty-two in a ten-days' meeting here. I go next to lig Sandy, Texas."

E. M. Borden writes from Wildersville, Tenn.: "At this writing I am conducting a meeting at this place. Two have been added, and we are expecting others."

From J. L. Hines, Meaford, Ontario, Canada, July 8: "Our meeting at Griersville, Ontario, closed last week. Two persons were baptized. The church here is doing splendid work. We had two nice services yesterday. Pray for us."

W. A. Siso writes: "I wish to say to the Gospel Advocate readers that I have a little time not engaged in protracted-meeting work, and, having about finished my crop, I am ready to answer the Macedonian cry. Address me at Lyles, Tenn., Route 2."

From John A. Klingman, Lebanon, Tenn.: "A. B. Lipscomb will begin a protracted meeting at this place on next Lord's day. The church is looking forward to a feast of good things. Congregations near Lebanon are cordially invited to attend this meeting."

From Ben West, Ennis, Texas, July 8: "We had four good services resterday and one addition from the Baptists. Our Sunday school is growing, with two hundred and ten in the classes. Teachers are preparing better to teach, and we plan to have a fifteen-days' normal course for teachers."

G. S. Marsh writes from Pikeville, Tenn., July 7: "Our meeting at Red Hill closed last night, with twenty added to the one body. J. C. Mosley did the teaching and preaching. I am at Brayton for a few days, with very good crowds. Brethren, let us all wake up and get busy for our Maker."

A young soldier, a Christian, George W. Geaslin, Seventh Company, Veterinary Training School, Camp Lee, Va., which is three miles from Petersburg, Va., would like to know if there is a congregation of Christians near him. If any one can supply this information, kindly address him as above.

A. A. Jackson writes from Olney, Texas, July 10: "A nine-days' meeting, held by E. S. Fitzgerald, closed on Sunday night. There were six additions by baptism. Five of these were heads of families. One old grandfather of eighty-four years and two sons were of the number. This congregation was organized about a year ago by Brother Fitzgerald."

W. E. Daugherty writes from Chattanooga, Tenn., July 12: "I closed a five-days' meeting last Sunday night with the Ohio Avenue church of Christ, Etowah, Tenn. One was baptized and one united by statement. I am now en route to Gien Alice, where I shall begin a meeting to-morrow night. I am a sort of evangelist at large, as it were. If you want a meeting, write me at Glen Alice, Tenn."

J. G. Malphurs writes from Wilkinson, Miss., July 8: "I have just closed two short meetings in this community, with two baptisms at Corinth Church and three at Mars' Hill Schoolhouse. The brethren here are planning to do greater things, and they have a splendid opportunity. They are planning for me or some other preacher to locate here. I leave here to-morrow for London, Ark., for my next work."

A. W. Young, Box 464, Fort Worth, Texas, writes: "The meeting at Madisonville, Texas from June 26 to July 7, resulted in fifteen baptized, one restored, and one taking membership. Oscar Smith, who has been with that church three years and has done much good, led the singing and assisted in other ways. The Madisonville congregation is a good one. I have several other meetings to hold before returning to the work at home."

Mrs. W. K. Cunningham writes from Oilton, Okla., July 9: "O. L. Hays, of Ada, began a meeting for the few scattered disciples here on the third Sunday in June and continued it eight days, with five baptized. A little band of about twenty were brought together, who are now meeting regularly to break bread and study the Bible. Our little ten-year-old boy, who thoroughly understands his duty, was among those baptized. Brother Hayes is a splendid teacher of God's word. Brethren, pray that we may be faithful."

From J. C. Mosley, Graysville, Tenni, July 8: "I have been here two days, and the attendance is growing. I have just closed a meeting at Red Hill, Pikeville, with two withdrawn from, seventeen baptized, and six restored. Twenty-six have been added to the little band since I fired the elders who would not do their duty and put in some that are doing right. Since then they have built a new house and I painted it for them. Now see how a church that is clean and doing right prospers."

From J. O. Barnes, Lake City, Fla.: "I closed a ten-days' meeting with the Spring Head church of Christ on the night of July 4, in which the interest was good all the time. Seven were baptized; one came from the Baptists; and a man seventy-three years old, a 'prodigal son,' came back home and started anew the Christian life. This is the fourth meeting I have held at that place. I began there in a schoolhouse in May, 1917, and since that time many have come to Christ from various sources, and there is now a membership of about thirty. 'All praise to Him who reigns above.'"

A. D. Dies writes from Millport, Ala., July 8: "Our meeting at Glen Mary resulted in establishing a congregation of fifty members. Five of them were baptized by the writer; the remainder were people who had settled there and had never been aroused to a sense of their duty. We find so many like that in our travels. This is alarming. I hope preachers in passing that way will stop and give them encouragement. Our meeting at Millport began with interest and will continue three weeks. I will be in Tennessee in October, and would be glad to hear from any who can use me in a meeting."

J. Will Henley writes from Woodville, Okla., July 6: "I am in a great meeting here. Fifteen added to date and interest good. Fine audiences and a splendid outlook for a wonderful ingathering. Raymen began the meeting, and did it well. He is now in Konawa. He is at his very best and is moving things for God. My health is some better, thank the Lord, but still not able to meet the demands made upon me at this time. I never had as many calls for meetings in all my life, and never felt less like standing under the pressure. My friends are loyal, true, faithful, and firm, and God is using us for his glory,"

From I. B. Bradley, Mayfield, Tenn., July 12: "I am in a good meeting at Macedonia, four miles from here. The meeting began last Lord's day and two have been added to date. Large crowds and interest good. We hope for several more additions before the close of the meeting. I go from here to Hebron Church, near Lowe's Cross Roads, Ky., for my next meeting, to begin on July 17 and continue for nine days. Then I go back to Middle Tennessee for a meeting with the church at Hohenwald. Brethren, I need more funds for the Japan work to aid Miss Sarah Andrews. Send me your check for this work right away."

From George W. Farmer, Overall, Tenn., July 8: "The meeting closed at Cleveland last Thursday evening after running ten days. There were three baptisms, one of whom was the daughter of John Hayes, our preaching brother, and another was the son of Fred M. Little, another one of our preaching brethren. The church at Cleveland has some most excellent material in it, and, with a good, wide-awake preaching brother located with them and working in the gospel all the time, they will accomplish a great work up in that country. I want to suggest a more closely coöperative spirit among our East Tennessee congregations. The meeting began here yesterday with good audiences and good prospects."

From A. G. Freed, president of the National Teachers' Normal and Business College, Henderson, Tenn.: "The meeting with the church at Tuscumbia, Ala., closed on June 30, after running over three Sundays. We have many faithful brethren at that place. They have a neat house of worship, well located. The government nitrate plants have brought many thousands of people there from all parts of the land. The great mass of these care nothing for the Bible. The dance halls, theaters, and picture shows were in full blast even on Sunday evenings. There is great danger in the church's being swept away in this great whirlpool of worldliness. My stay with the church there was a pleasant one. I made my home with J. C. Walker and his estimable wife. They love the truth. A. D. Dies is in the State doing real missionary work. I made a talk in his behalf to the church last Sunday. I feel that the brethren will see that he is supported. We are now ready for the meeting with the church at Puryear, Tenn. The catalogues of the National Teachers' Normal and Business College are from the press. We are emphasizing our Teachers' and Business Departments. The calls for our students in these departments are many more than we can supply. Have you seen our catalogue? Write for one."

Letters of Commendation

I received the Teachers' New Testament given as a premium for one new subscriber to the Gospel Advocate, and I am well pleased with it. The notes and helps are so plain that almost any one can understand. It is just what you say it is.—W. C. Presley, Bono, Ark.

Your Teachers' New Testament is fine; it cannot be beaten. Every reader of the Gospel Advocate should have one. Any one will certainly appreciate as nice a gift as you are now offering. I would not take a dollar and fifty cents for the one I recently received.—Claud Shirley, Woodbury, Tenn.

I am more than pleased with the Testament. It helps me to understand the Word much better. I received the other book, "Fifty-two Bible Subjects Examined," and I am well pleased with it. I do not think I ever read anything that explained the word better.—Mrs. J. M. Snyder, Appleton, Tenn.

I am well pleased with the Teachers' New Testament. I think it is a great help on difficult passages of scripture. I think all who have not the American Revision should have one. It for one dollar and ten cents is cheap, and the Gospel Advocate and Testament for two dollars are a lot cheaper.—W. D. Roark, Huntingdon, Tenn.

The Teachers' New Testament with notes is received and highly appreciated. I think it quite a nice premium for only one subscriber to the dear old Gospel Advocate. I would pronounce the notes quite helpful to both teachers and students. I will endeavor to get other subscribers, that I may get more New Testaments and give them away.—Mrs. J. W. Grant, Nashyille, Tenn.

I received a copy of your Teachers' New Testament some time ago. It was a pleasant surprise to me, for I did not know new subscribers to the Gospel Advocate were entitled to a copy. It is simply fine, and the notes are so much help to me. I thank you very much for sending me a copy, and hope you will pardon my seeming ungratefulness in not writing you sooner. And I want you to know I enjoy reading every copy of the Gospel Advocate.—Mrs. J. E. Jensen, Millville, Ark.

The Teachers' New Testament is highly appreciated. It has been a great help to me as teacher of the Advanced Gospel Quarterly. It has helped me in many difficult passages. To all New Testament readers that have trouble with certain passages that do not seem to harmonize, I most heartily recommend this Testament with notes and helps. I have a brother "somewhere in France;" and when he gets to his destination, I want to send him one. I am still trying to induce my brethren to subscribe for the Gospel Advocate, for I am fully persuaded that it also is a genuine help to the Christian in these trying times, as well as in more tranquil times.—Cal Mitchell, Obion, Tenn.

Ever since I received my premium Testament I have been intending to write and thank you for it and tell you how very much it helps me in my scripture study. The "Introduction" to the different books gives valuable information; the notes on the verses, the chronology of the Acts and of the Epistles, all are so helpful; and the text being the American Standard Revision makes it the more to be appreciated. Since I know its merits, I certainly would not part with it, unless I could get another. I cannot tell you how much I enjoy the Gospel Advocate each copy seems to be better than the last one, and I hope I shall have its weekly visits while I live in the flesh. May God bless all its faithful workers.—Mrs. M. N. Waters, Electra, Fla.

The War Sufferers' Fund.

"Whose stoppeth his ears at the cry of the poor, le also shall cry, but shall not be heard."

The following cablegram was received by Dr. James La Barton, Chairman of the American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief, from Berne, containing nformation about the relief stations in the interior of Turkey. The American Committee have twenty-seven stations for relief of Armenian refugees within the interior of Turkey where American men and women are supplying he necessities of life. The cablegram brings an appeal for larger appropriations than those which the committee has been able to make to these relief stations:

"Relief administered to extent of funds avalable from twenty important centers greatly ameliorates distressful condition, but large numbers within reach are not affected. Many die because of prolonged underfeeding. Ration in some centers hundred grams of bread and soul once a day. It is pitiful to see gaunt figures clad in rags lassing from door to door begging for food in wailing tones. Hundreds of children are walking about the streets trying to pick up livings from dust heaps. Reduction and limitation of appropriation will add greatly to this number and sadly increase the awful wastage of life. This pitiful cry pleads for increased supply. Is it not possible to restore appropriation to original figure at least for saving life? (Chambers.)" William Philips, Acting Secretary of State.

In sending contributions, be sure and state whether they are intended for the Armenian and Syrian Fund or the Poland Fund. Make all checks and money orders payable to A. B. Lipscomb, who will forward them to the proper commissioners. In next week's issue he will give a full report of all contributions received during his absence from the office.

Thought.

Every day we are becoming more and more like our thoughts. What we are to-day is the outcome of the thoughts we have cherished in the past, while the thoughts that we are cherishing to-day are determining what we shall be in the future. If our thoughts are low and base and ignoble, then we ourselves are becoming low and base and ignoble; if our thoughts are pure and clean and Christlike, then we are becoming pure and clean and Christlike. If we could look into the chambers of your imagination and observe what is taking place there, the thoughts you carry about with you, the desires and ambitions of your heart, the stuff of which your dreams are composed, we could prophesy with the utmost confidence the kind of person you are becoming, and, therefore, the kind of person you shall be. It is in the light of such a fact as this that we see the significance of Paul's exhortation: "Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honorable. whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things." Think on these things, and we ourselves will become true and honorable and just and pure. It is particularly important that parents realize the truth of this; and yet, how few of them apparently do? How many parents there are who are careful as to the food their children eat and the water they drink, but who are indifferent to the books they read, the movies they attend. the companions with whom they associate! No doubt we should exercise due care as to what we take into our bodies, but it is infinitely more important that we take heed to the thoughts that enter our minds. Here, too, Christ's warning has its application/ "Be not afraid of them that kill the body, but are not plue to kill the soul; but rather fear him who is able to destroy both soul and body in hell." The Presbyterian.

We must humble ourselves before God; we must recognize how incapable we are by ourselves of welldoing, how without the help of God all cur actions would only be sinful,—Savonarola.

A SUCCESSFUL MEDICINAL COMBINATION

And one that had long been needed and had not seemed to be possible, is Hood's Sarsaparilla taken before eating and Peptiron after eating. These two great medicines supplement each other in purifying and enriching the blood, strengthening and toning the nerves, putting life into the body and color into the face. Taken in conjunction, they are the ideal remedy for the blood and nerves. If a laxative is needed take Hood's Pills. All druggists.

Better Than a Sheep.

BY J. J. VANHOUTIN.

"How much then is a man better than a sheep?" This question was never answered by those to whom it was presented. Materialism places man upon a common level with the beast of the field. And there was a man present who had a withered hand, and many were watching to see if Jesus would cure him upon the Sabbath day; then they could arrest him for working upon the Sabbath day, claiming that to heal a man by speaking to him would be manual labor. Jesus said to them: "What man shall there be among you, that shall have one sheep, and if it fall into a pit on the Sabbath day, will he not lay hold on it, and lift it out? How much then is a man better than a sheep? Wherefore it is lawful to do well on the Sabbath days," (Matt. 12: 12, 13.) Their decision appears to be that the sheep was worth more than a man; so they decided that Jesus ought to be killed because he cured the man by saying, "Stretch forth thine hand." How strange some people act toward a man who helps those whom he finds in distress! But materialism prevails when a man lifts a sheep from the mire, but would not lift a man. From the beginning day of man's existence the great Creator has considered a man better than a sheep. He gave man dominion over " all sheep and oxen, yea, and the beasts of the field." (Ps. 8: 7.) A man will hitch his horse to the carriage, get in and drive, and thus. (sometimes) ride to meeting. have never seen that reversed! sheep furnishes food for man as well as the material for his clothing. Hence man's superiority over all earthly creatures. The relationship which exists between man and his Creator is far greater than that of the beast of the field. While God is the Creator of all, he imparted to man an intellectual, spiritual soul of his own spiritual attributes and nature, which he did not give to the animal creation. and in this respect man is the offspring of God, and shows "how much then is a man better than a sheep." David asks: "What is man, that thou art mindful of him?" Then declares: "Thou madest him to have dominion over the works of thy hands." Man's near relationship to God was the reason why he visited him in the person of Jesus.

The Mother and the Problem of Child Labor.

Mrs. Max West, of the Children's Bureau of the United States Department of Labor, sends to mothers who are helping in Children's Year a word of reminder about children's work at

One is likely to think of child labor

as a matter concerning factories and legal enactments, but, as a matter of fact, many young children, well below the age at which they may go to work outside the home, are put at work too heavy for their young shoulders to bear, or are kept at work too long or too steadily, within their own homes. Free, unhampered play is essential to health and development in childhood, and children who are unduly deprived of their playtime by work at home may suffer just as seriously as those who work for pay. This condition of affairs, of course, comes about largely because there is so much work to be done and so few to do it that it seems necessary for each one to take some part in the work of the household. But it often happens that the young shoulders are given too heavy a load, the young muscles too great a strain, and youth is made toilsome and unhappy, rather than joyous, because parents do not realize what is happening.

The pathetic "little mothers" of our large cities, who have the care of their younger brothers and sisters, and the children, both boys and girls, carrying heavy bundles about the streets are common examples of children who have responsibility and heavy work which should not be placed on young shoulders.

In the country and on the farm children are often required to work in the field and gardens too long at a time, or to carry water and other weights too heavy for their strength, and often to work under a blazing sun. Such early work interferes with growth and development, which is the one great business of childhood. Many men and women, whose physical strength is impaired, might trace their ills to sickness, underfeeding, or overwork during the formative years of early childhood.

The tasks children are given to do should be suited to their years and varied by frequent opportunity to rest and to play. At the same time food should be good and plentiful and there should be long hours of sleep. The harm which heavy work can cause little children can be ill afforded at any time, and least of all now; for the children must be kept well and strong to meet the demands which will confront them when they come to maturity and face the tasks of reconstruction in the critical years to come—work which will demand physical well-being, as well as efficiency and character.

The Great Sea of God's Goodness.

Thomas Carlyle was found one morning in 1876 on the Chelsea embankment, gazing at the Thames. The person who saw him, and who relates the incident for the first time in "John Foster and His Friendship," says: "I should as soon have thought of assaulting as of addressing him. Happily, I was spared anything of the kind; for the old man, reserved as he was to the point of moroseness-surliness, his enemies called it-hoarsely flung a query at me. The tide was out, I may mention, the river being at its lowest. 'Where goes it? Where goes it?"

The wits of the person questioned were sharpened by the manner in which the question was asked, and he inferred that the author referred to the stream or what there was of it. Smilingly, therefore, he answered that it returned to the sea.

"Right, sir, right,' he snapped out. Then, relapsing into his meditative mood, he said softly, but impressively: "The great, great sea of God Almighty's goodness, and we are all returning that way. Don't forget that, sir; returning to the sea-the great illimitable sea!' With that he turned abruptly away and moved across the roadway toward Cheyne Row, with that curious slow shuffle habitual with

The thought that we are voyagers, sailing over the "sea of God Almighty's goodness," finds glad expression in a hymn by Augustus M. Toplady. The first stanza refers to the golden days of pleasant experience when all conditions are favorable, and life can be enjoyed to its full measure:

" If, on a quiet sea,

Toward heaven we calmly sail, With grateful hearts, O God, to thee, We'll own the favoring gale.

Such experiences there are in practically every life-days full of warm sunshine, while blue skies are overhead and smooth seas all around; or, in other words, days when we are free from trial-times when we have health, sufficient income for comfort, and a goodly circle of friends.

The contented life is not assured by the greatness of one's possessions. "Happiness depends not on the things the heart has, but on the heart that has the things." The one who, from force of habit, is ever "looking on the bright side" is always able to enjoy whatever bit of happiness there may be; and we have been reminded that there is something to be grateful for in every day. Thus it came to pass that a little girl was thankful for "that good hot potato at luncheon."

A day is never so dull that one cannot find a glimpse of beauty some-

Exchange Your Old Body for a New One.

You can do it in three weeks and thereby renew your health. This article is written by a physician who has seen it demonstrated in numerous cases and explains how it is done.

Listen! If your weight is one hundred and thirty-three pounds, your body contains eighty pounds of water, for, according to standard medical books, the human body contains sixtyseven and one-half per cent of water. Now, disease is invariably caused by impurities which we call "poisons," and these are readily dissolved by the right kind of natural mineral water. Drink ten gallons (eighty pounds) of Shivar Mineral Water (use no other water for twenty-one days), and you will have exchanged your old body for a new one, so far as the soluble part is concerned. The impurities will be dissolved and pass away. If you suf-fer from dyspepsia, indigestion, sick headache, rheumatism, kidney or liver disease, uric-acid poisoning, or other curable conditions due to impure blood, accept Mr. Shivar's liberal offer which appears below. Read the fol-lowing letter carefully, then sign and mail it:

Shivar Spring, Box 21J, Shelton, S. C.

Gentlemen: I accept your offer and inclose herewith two dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Water. I agree to give it a fair trial, in accordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send; and if I report no benefit, you agree to refund the price in full upon the receipt of the two empty demijohns, which I agree to return within a month.

I have personally derived great benefit from the use of the Shivar Mineral Water, and have knowledge of its beneficial effects in a great number and variety of cases."—Rey, A. McA. Pittman.

where, providing one is looking for such. But as Jean K. Baird has remarked: "A sunflower and a rose are marked by no difference to one who keeps his eyes shut. Half the people in the world go through life and see nothing more in a primrose than the primrose itself; while those who walk beside them find in every flower a thought, in every stone a science, in every bird's nest a religion and a philosophy."

Some folks I have been associated with on ocean voyages who have found some cause for complaint even when sailing over "on a quiet sea." For instance, the food or the service, they would intimate, were not satisfactory or the speed of the boat was not what they expected. Hence we need the spirit of gratitude to enable us to get out of life the richest possible experiences. Here is a suggestion which will surely prove a corrective for a complaining disposition: "Lat the man who has the blues take a map and census table of the world and estimate how many millions there are who would gladly exchange lots with him, and let him begin on some practical plan to do all the good he can to as many as he can, and he will soon forget to be despondent."

But there are days that are black with cloud and fraught with stormy winds—days of real trouble, conflict, and sorrow. Such were in the mind of Toplady when he wrote the second stanza:

"But should the surges rise,
And rest delay to come,
Blest be the tempest, kind the storm,
Which drives us nearer home."

Adversity, affliction, sorrow are also messengers of God; and they, too, serve a beneficent purpose in life when uncomplainingly accepted. "The change of seasons is a very great blessing in life," said a man, whose early home was in New York State, after he had spent three years in a tropical climate where the sun sent down its hot rays almost every day in the year. He is now come back to live in his native State, and does not even complain about the big snowstorms in winter. The cross is inseparable from the crown in Christian symbolism and in actual Christian experience. Sorrow, as well as faith, must have its perfect work.

"The wind that blows can never kill
The tree God plants;
It bloweth east, it bloweth west;
The tender leaves have little rest,
But any wind that blows is best.
The tree God plants

Strikes deeper root, grows higher still, Spreads wider boughs, for God's Spreads wider boughs, for God's good will Meets all its wants."

God supports the trusting soul. Faith gives the assurance that "the way of the cross leads home." Therefore the gifts of the loving Father, whatever they are, are cheerfully accepted by the soul who makes the will of God supreme in his life. Thus the other stanzas of Toplady's hymn should be carefully read:

"Soon shall our doubts and fears All yield to thy control; Thy tender mercies shall illume The midnight of the soul.

"Teach us, in every state,
To make thy will our own;
And when the joys of sense depart,
To live by faith alone."

A prayer which breathes just the same thought as is found in the hymn quoted is the following: "Our Father, we thank thee that we do know that every good and perfect gift cometh down from thyself, who art the Father of Lights, and that we know that in thee is no darkness at all; so that everything which thou dost send must be for our best if we can only take it as it is meant and use it for the purpose for which thou dost send it Help us, we beseech thee, by this an-

Light Shining in Darkness.

BY LEO H. THURSTON.

I am glad to report that Bollinger County is still on the map. While this is a much-neglected field, we are moving along as well as could be expected under peculiar difficulties. I preach at Cole's Chapel on the second Lord's day, at Cox's Chapel on the third, and at my home congregation (Antioch) on the fourth Lord's day in each month. I am proud of the effort the brethren are making at 11 these points.

At Cox's Chapel they are doing some splendid work, letting their light shine before men and contending earnestly for the faith. On my last trip there I was requested on Saturday night to announce meeting for the Evening Lights for Sunday night at a schoolhouse a mile and a half away, which I did; and when Sunday night came, I got about half of their crowd.

There is a good congregation at Cole's Chapel; and while there has been a drive made to get them to digress, the brethren are firm in the faith and will not receive anything but a "Thus saith the Lord."

Antioch has had a struggle for life. but the brethren who are here do not waver. They believe that the words, "Him shall ye hear in all things" (see Acts 3: 22, 23), is a strict command. Brother M. S. Mason will hold our meeting the first half of October, and we are looking anxiously forward to that date.

Outside of what I have mentioned above, the entire country seems to be given to denominationalism; and while I am here in this field by myself, sometimes I feel almost like saying with the prophet Elijah as he lay under the juniper tree: "They have forsaken thy ways, and I only am left, and they seek my life to take it away." Brethren, let us not only pray, but let us labor while it is day, realizing that the gospel is God's power unto salvation and that we must present our bodies a living sacrifice and proclaim the gospel to a dying world. "Faith cometh by hearing." (Rom. 10: 17.) "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have eternal life." (John 3: 16.) Why should we not do something for him?

They Are Filling the Shells.

This year we have had a surprising demonstration of the ability of the poultry industry to expand on short notice. Every day reports are coming in to the Food Administration which indicate that the hens are digging in with both feet and filling shells like high-geared munition plants. The storage houses now have about six million cases put away, which means that the high point of last year has been almost reached at this early

The anti-hen-killing rule, which stirred up a storm of protest at the time it was put into effect, has served the purpose of increasing our supply of concentrated food, and production is still going on at such a rate as to insure our people an adequate supply of eggs.

Farmers who were anxious to sell while the "no-kill" rule was in effect have been holding on to the hens that are shelling out the eggs, and many of them say they are glad the Food Administration prevented the reduction of flocks.

This unusual production is a big encouragement, as every egg and every fowl can be used to advantage in the present state of the world's food supply.

Worry Often Selfish.

To expect sorrow is to suffer from it before it arrives, and when it may not arrive at all; it is like throwing our gold into the sea because we fancy that the ship is going down. Perhaps there may be a great trouble awaiting us next year; shall we destroy the entire happiness and comfort of this year by anticipating it? The dread will not help us to bear it when it comes, Worry is a wrong that we do to ourselves, and it usually makes others suffer with us. Very often it is absolutely selfish. Let us resist it by all the means in our power, and give ourselves to the things that cheer and strengthen us, basing ourselves on the hope that when trial comes we shall be able to endure it bravely. There are reserves of strength which we too often ignore, whose help comes in the hour of need .- Exchange.

Burglar Observes Fifty-Fifty Ruling.

A Council Bluffs grocery store was robbed of five sacks of wheat flour one Sunday night. The next night it was robbed of five sacks of corn meal. The grocer's explanation is that the burglar upon finding that he had disregarded the 50-50 rule was so conscience stricken that he could not rest until he had conformed to the Food Administration's ruling that one pound of other cereals must be obtained with every pound of wheat flour.

Why Food Is Saved in England.

The real reason why we are taking all these food-control precautions in Great Britain is not to protect the civil population at all, but to see that the allied armies at the front get their full rations. I can imagine no greater selfishness on the part of a democracy than to eat its full while it is allowing its soldiers, in that dreary land in which they have been for three years, to go short. The very work of a soldier demands that he should be the best-fed man in the world.

And not only have we to protect the food of the soldier. You are all aware that since the beginning of the war the ships of the British Navy and those attached to it have increased tenfold. Sometimes we only think of the navy in terms of battleships, destroyers, and submarines. Added to these are thousands of small craft, trawlers, drifters, observation ships, and on every one of these, summer and winter-and do not forget that we have a very severe winter in the North Sea and North Atlantic-are men who must have their daily full ration to carry out their work.

Quite apart from our navy, which has prevented any German ship from appearing on the ocean for the last eighteen months, are the men in the air. Can you conceive a man going through that hellish life, eighteen thousand feet up, clothed in electrically heated clothes and supplied with oxygen to enable him to breathecan you image him doing that on half rations?

Can you imagine the boys in the trenches surviving a week if we had to cut down their pork and beans and the various things they have to eat? And can you imagine the men and women working in the factories and mines, here and in Great Britain, going short? These are some of the reasons to which we in Great Britain attach such enormous importance in the control of the food of the people. -Lord Northeliffe.

Just as when stone is laid upon stone, cornice upon cornice, the material fabric of a temple rises toward the heavens, so invisibly, but with equal and more enduring reality, the spiritual life, informed in knowledge, recollected in spirit, rises upward as we advance in the practice of what we have learned to be right and true, in the "obedience" as well as the "knowledge" of the character and mind of Christ .- T. Formation and Color.

The iridescence of nacre, or motherof-pearl, is a matter of form and not actual color. In fact, all "changeable" colors are more or less the result of form even where there is pigmentation beneath, such as in certain ribbed silks. When sunlight bears directly upon finely ribbed metal, as a file, there is the same play of colors.

In the case of mother-of-pearl an interesting experiment has been made. An impression of the pearl was taken upon pure white wax. It was then found that the apparently smooth surface of the pearl had still sufficient irregularities to impress upon the wax a surface that resulted in similar color manifestations.-Edmin Tarrisse.

Fiber Packages to Save Tin.

Many new uses are being found for fiber containers in packing food products commonly put up in tins, according to The Canner in a recent discussion on this subject. The following articles have been successfully marketed in fiber containers: Syrups that do not ferment, jellies, jams, marmalades, honey, salted nuts, marshmallow products, marshmallows, hard candy, chocolate-coated candies, malted milk, glace fruit, cocoa, and spices. Milk, cream, mincemeat, peanut butter, and oysters, sold in bulk, can be placed in temporary or carrying-out fiber containers.

The following articles may be packed in fiber containers for a short length of time: Cottage cheese and other soft curd cheeses, pickled fish, sausage meat, horse-radish, sauerkraut, and various delicatessen products and soda-fountain supplies.

Other uses for the fiber containers are as measures for dried products. such as crackers, small cakes, salted peanuts, and candies. One concern has reported that it has an order for fiber containers to hold a liquid chemical fire extinguisher.

PANAMA HATS HAND-WOVEN

Within Reach of All.

New York, N. Y. (Special)—It is now proven that the stylish Panama, up to now only worn by the best-dressed people, can now be sold for $1. You don't have to be skeptical about the low price, as it gives service like the $5 and $10 kind, but not so fine a weave; and by this new discovery of weave one can hardly tell the difference. A Panama gives a man or woman distinction and at the same time comfort. Mr. George J. Bungay, 28 South William Street, of New York City, is backing up his discovery by sending a real hand-woven Panama, any size, trinimed, blocked, with slik band, to any one for $1, postpaid. Fitted with leather sweat hand, 25 cents extra. Furthermore, his policy is that, if you are not entirely satisfied, he will return your money.—Advt.

It is only natural for any woman to dread the thought of an operation. So many women have been restored to health by this famous remedy, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, after an operation has been advised that it will pay any woman who suffers from such ailments to consider trying it before submitting to such a trying ordeal.

House of Worship Needed.

BY F. P. FONNER.

Since last report I have received help in my work as follows: From John F. Kemp, Senior, $1; J. S. Powar, $1; church of Christ at Huffman, Ark., $9.60.

I am very thankful for this help; but I need three or four times as much help as I am getting now in order to place this work upon a firm basis. The brethren at this point are not able to keep the work going without outside help. The fact is, we are struggling for existence, while many of our brethren, like the "prodigal son," are wasting their substance in "riotous living" without regard to future consequences. I see no reason why we should be burdened and others eased. I am never strong, and I feel the burden of souls. If I am driven from this field for lack of support before the cause of Christ is fully established, it will be a very unfortunate thing for the true cause of Christ. Therefore I ask my brethren for some liberal help in this work now. Please do send me some contributions at once similar to some that I see reported in our papers for other purposes. Brethren, I beg of you not to underestimate the importance of this work. This I ask of you in the name of Christ. In sending help to me, please state what it is for, whether it is for personal support or not.

Since last writing I have preached at many places, including Iven's Fork, in the Charleston district. I have kept up all my mission points, including this one, at a sacrifice of health and comfort. At this point we have no place in which to meet except our own private house, and it is too small for the crowds that gather here. For a while we had additions at almost every meeting, but they were mostly poor people. In fact, we are all poor. Many have expressed a willingness to obey God if we only had a house of worship in order to make the work permanent; but we are unable to build one without outside help. If we had a house, we could soon gather a large congregation at this place. I have fretted over this condition of things for the last two years. It is hindering my work. We are now determined to build that house at any sacrifice. We need about fifteen hundred dollars above what we can raise ourselves. If those who will help us to build this house will send me their checks now. I will deposit them in a safe place to be used as indicated.

Address me at Buffalo, W. Va., which is a money-order post office.

Piano Lessons Versus Musical Education.

There are thousands of systems of musical education in use in our country. Indeed, there are about as many methods of teaching piano as there are teachers. Every teacher has his or her own individuality, and it appears most prominent in his or her method of teaching. The American system of musical education is so complex, so incomplete, so lacking in uniformity, that it has been very difficult to secure in even the country's foremost colleges and conservatories a well-rounded musical education that takes up in a systematic and progressive manner the various necessary topics. Sad to say, the instruction has been so inadequate, as far as a well-rounded musical education is concerned, that most of our young folks have taken mere piano lessons. Merely their fingers have been trained, not their minds. They have learned to be skillful and brilliant players without ever realizing what they are playing, without appreciating the spirit, the rhythm, the soul of their music. And so there is a difference between a mere piano lesson and a musical education-a vital difference.

The difficulty has been in the absence in our public schools and colleges of a standard method, a complete textbook of music. There is, and always has been, at the disposal of the pupil the world's greatest music; but it is in scattered form and every piece separate. No subject of the importance of music should be studied in this disjointed manner.

Happy to say, the standardization of music teaching and school credits for music study are subjects receiving serious attention by educational authorities throughout the country. It will soon be the rule in the high school, rather than the exception, to give credits toward graduation for outside study of music. A number of the world's most music. A number of the world's most famous artists, including such men as Leopold Godowsky, Emil Sauer, Josef Hoffman, Stillman-Kelly, and others, have made this great work possible by the publication of what is known as the "Progressive Series of Piano Lessons." Covering as it does the theory of music and the fundamental principles of piano and the fundamental principles of piano playing in a correlated manner, it fully meets all the requirements of such a text. It will eventually mean that the individual private music teacher, by using this textbook and method of teaching and study, may enter her pupils into the high schools, colleges, and conserva-tories with full credit for all work done. It will eliminate the loss of a great deal of time spent in rambling unnecessarily over subjects already fully covered. It will furnish for the musical world a systematic form of piano study, with a thoroughly correlated study of each topic taken up progressively, and will furnish a basis by which all credits may be easily given, a standard on which the cause of musical education may be well founded.

These great artists deserve a great deal of credit for the tremendous effect of such a text. The "Progressive Series of Piano Lessons" has already been adopted by thousands of the country's foremost conservatories, colleges, high schools, and private teachers. Its influence is far-reaching, and it is hoped that the time is not far off when our boys and girls may safely begin their musical education in any part of the country with the assurance that all work done, either under private teachers or in schools, will give them full credit in the further advancement of their musical ucation.

Around Morganfield, Ky.

BY J. M. DENNIS.

I came to Morganfield on March 15, 1918, and accepted work with four congregations-three in Union County and one in Webster County. I preach each first Lord's day at New Liberty, in Union County, each second Lord's day at Poole, in Webster County; each third Lord's day at Walnut Grove, in Union County; and each fourth Lord's day at Kennedy, in Union County. The brethren at all these places are at peace among themselves, and all meet each Lord'sday morning for worship and for Bible study.

I will hold protracted meetings for all of the congregations I am serving. and I will hold meetings during this summer and fall at other places in Union County, Webster County, and Dixon County. I will be here till the close of this year.

Notwithstanding the fact that good and faithful men have labored here, the church of Christ at Morganfield is almost a thing of the past. Five members have gone away since March, which leaves so very few. With not one to take the lead, the three or four who are still here do not meet on Lord's day. I preached in the courthouse on the fifth Sunday in March. Since that time I have had no opportunity to meet with them.

Brethren, send your prayers to the throne of mercy and justice on high and ask God to help me in my humble efforts to honor him and help to save the people.

Teaching the Scriptures is the highest profession to which mortals can attain in this life. To do that well requires, in addition to native talent, discipline in the right direction and such aids as can be found in specially prepared helps. The teacher preaches the gospel. Many teachers constantly improve in their methods and in all good ways put the Scriptures and the Christ into the hearts of the rising generation.

Many religionists in these days must learn to unlearn what they have learned amiss. When this is done, they are prepared to receive the divine order in conversion and worship as presented in the New Testament.

In order to unity in the church, there must be a return to original Christianity.

The disciples of Christ protest against the claims and usurpations of Romanism; they protest against the mysteries and false teachings of denominationalism. They go back of the origin of Protestants and papists and accept original Christianity just as it came from the apostles and Christ. The New Testament guides them in all matters of faith. They hold common ground on which all Christians can be united without sacrificing any principle.

Fresh Eggs as an Advertisement.

As a means of increasing the sales of eggs, a live Western grocer set aside a small portion of the counter at the end of his store. On this counter was installed a small egg candler. He then arranged with a number of his farmer friends to secure all the fresh eggs possible. These were brought in daily and stamped with the date on which they were laid and placed in a basket on the egg counter. In the meantime the grocer had informed the public, by means of newspaper advertisements. show eards, and circulars, that he had installed an egg candler in his store so that they might test for themselves every egg before paying for it.

This small device attracted to his store a large amount of business in eggs; and as the egg counter was at the end of the store farthest from the entrance, those who came to purchase eggs often saw something else that they wanted before they left, and his sales of other goods increased accordingly.

Report from Poplar Bluff, Mo.

BY L. M. WARD.

I here give a report of the meeting at Poplar Bluff, also the contributions which we received for the work. The contributions were as follows: From the church at Dyer, Tenn., by J. N. Barr, $5; Murray, Ky., by T. B. Thompson, $2; Rodgers' Chapel, Arkansas, by A. B. Embry, $5; Norfolk, Va., by Mrs. H. B. Short, $5; Glass, Ark., by A. B. Glass, $6; Green Forest, Mo., $5; Stephen's Chapel, Missouri, by Clarence Tuttle, $20; Cox's Chapel, Zalma, Mo., by J. D. McKee, $7; Jonesboro, Ark., by J. H. Watson, $5; Bartlesville, Okla., by B. B. Young and Albert Skinner, $2; Milburn, Ky., by Cris Cate, $6.67; Dongola, Ill., by Randolph Karraker, $7. Total, $76.17.

Notwithstanding the fact that we found it necessary to close the meeting because of reasons over which we had no control, we feel that great good has been accomplished in bringing three souls to Christ, and we pray that they may continue on faithful until death. We wish to express our heartfelt thanks to all who have so generously contributed to the work here, and we pray that God will bless them for having done so. Brethren, pray for us, that we may be enabled to fight the good fight of faith and lay hold on eternal life.

Reply to J. W. Chism.

BY H. L. WALLING.

Replying to J. W. Chism's criticism of my article in the Gospel Advocate of June 6, page 531, I will say that I am sorry that he prefers Brother Larimore and Campbell and a few others to our King James translation. In speaking as the Authorized Version, I am speaking as I am commanded, as the Lord speaks; he is speaking as some men. Worcester's and Webster's dictionaries speak. They say a "loaf" is a massive, large lump of bread. See my illustration. Go to a restaurant; they bake loaves to feed people, They cut in slices. Then go to the church; they use unleavened bread made of a little flour and oil seasoned with salt. (See Lev. 1, 2.) They break bread. So Jesus broke it. You cannot break loaf bread. Repent, brother, and pray God to forgive you for wrong teaching. The King James Version has it right; teach as it says, then you obey God. Speak as the oracles speak. I love the truth and want it to stand though the world pass away in my day. The truth is better than gold, and I search for it as for a hidden treasure; yet it is not badly hidden. See Pentecost; also Acts 2: 42. They broke bread.

Please Help Brother Stribling.

BY C. W. SEWELL.

Brother F. E. Stribling lives at Clemville, a little oil town near Bay City, Texas. He and his wife spent all they had educating their two boys, only to see them die with consumption. Now his wife is down with cancer of the womb. They are absolutely helpless. There is no church there. but it is not his fault. He had me go there and preach fifteen days. The people gave a good hearing, but there were no conversions. He wrote for me a second time. I was not able to go. I sent Brother Keeney, who baptized one or two. Now he needs our help. The medicine needful to allay her pain costs five dollars or more each week, besides other expenses. Some of the churches here have been helping him some, but our country has been so blighted for two years with drought that we cannot do much. dress him at Clemville, Texas. Clemville is a money-order office. Please send him something at once.

Banish Idleness.

Idleness, rather than the love of money, is the root of all evil, and uncheerfulness is one of the shoots from the root. There is no such thing as idleness in nature. The worlds that glitter in the arch of the heavens are ever moving. The moon never stays in one place. The restless sea moans in and out over the harbor bar. The rivers gurgle and plash as they journey to the sea. The trees change their costume twice a year and grow a little every hour of every day in the year. The birds never roost at noonday, and man is the only animal who oversleeps himself. "A contented mind is a continual feast," and the worker, whether he labors with brain or brawn, who finds delight in his work, who sings as he cheerfully lifts the hammer or laughs as he pens the thought that comes to him, is happy and content.—Los Angeles Times.

Spruce Pine, July 8.—We closed a seven-days' meeting at Bear Creek last Saturday night, with five additions. The brethren and sisters seemed to enjoy this meeting. I preached for the Mountain Home church on Lord's day following. Two were restored.—J. H. Stone.

Arkansas.

Ash Flat, July 10.—The church of Christ on North Side, in Springfield, has just closed a good meeting. The church is composed of good people. enjoyed my labors with them very much. The meeting continued three weeks. We preached the gospel to many people. We had a tent in the grove by the meetinghouse. Ten persons were baptized and much other good was done. Brethren Stephens and Cox, with their faithful workers, stood nobly by me. Brother and Sister Cox took me into their home and made me as one of their boys. They won me over completely. It is an won me over completely. It is an ideal home. They take care of more preachers than anybody. I was loath to leave them. Brother and Sister Crimminger and a little niece whom they are rearing entertained me and showed me the surrounding country. Many prosperous farms I saw. The wheat is the finest I have ever seen. The brethren are planning to accomplish greater things for Christ.—O. E. Billingsley.

Georgia.

Macon. July 6.—We have just closed a tent meeting in South Macon, with Brother Roger P. Cuff, of the David Lipscomb College, doing the preaching. There were twelve additions. Four were baptized, seven came from the Baptists, and one brother from Florida put in his membership with the East Macon Church, where the last service was held. Brother Cuff is yet in his teens, but he is an able speaker and teacher of the word.—C. E. Coleman.

Maine.

Albion, July 9.—Since I began the work in Maine I have spoken sixty-eight times, visited seven points, and immersed nine persons. I hope to continue for some time yet in this State. We have some noble brethren here who are making a noble fight for New Testament Christianity. I feel that I owe a debt of gratitude to the brethren for their Christian fellowship, especially in my state of health. What need have I for membership in human institutions, when I am so kindly received by members of the church of Christ?—S. C. Burnett.

Oklahoma.

Comanche, July 8.—The meeting here started off last Saturday night with a good crowd, and the attendance is increasing. I am in as good preaching condition as ever in my life; while L. F. Martin and wife, of Elk City, are at their very best in the song work. If ever a congregation on this earth needed awakening and revival, this one needs it; and if ever one had it coming to it, this one has, for we will certainly stir them before we leave. Brethren, keep your eye on Comanche for the next two weeks and listen for a good meeting. Pray for our success. The meeting at Nocona resulted in nine baptisms (five after I left).—Tice Elkins.

Tennessee.

Burns, July 11.—Our meeting at Slayden, in Dickson County, closed on last Lord's day. There were four baptisms. I am now in a tent meeting three miles east of Burns. This is my fourth meeting for Dickson County this summer. The prospect is bright for primitive Christianity.—William P. Walker.

McMinnville, July 10.—I began a meeting at Liberty, seven miles north of McMinnville, last Sunday. The interest is growing from day to day. The house was filled last night. My next meeting will be at Bonner, three miles south of McMinnville, beginning on the third Sunday in July. I yet have time for two meetings the first of August and September. I would like to fill this time at once. Write me at my home address—Wartrace, Tenn.—R. E. Wright.

Decherd, July 10.—I have just reached home from Summerfield, in Grundy County, where I held a nine-days' meeting, preaching at night only. Twelve were baptized. Among this number was a man eighty-one years old, who had been a Methodist all of his life, and his wife, an invalid confined to her bed for about twenty years, who had also been a member of the Methodist Church since she was a girl. I made my home with Brother Marion Sanders' family during the meeting. There is a splendid congregation at Summerfield, and all seem to be of one mind. Brother J. D. Northcut established the cause there a few years ago. Brethren, let us work while it is day; for the night will come, when no one can work.—R. E. L. Taylor.

Texas.

Dallas, July 5.—I was called to Corsicana to finish a meeting begun by Brother E. A. Elam, of Nashville, Tenn., when he was called home on account of sickness in the home. He had a splendid interest, which continued to the last. There were nineteen accessions. The church there is a very good one—has no disturbing element in it. Brethren E. E. Shoulders and G. M. Pullias work in the city and county. They are doing a fine work.—A. O. Colley.

Denton, July 8.—I made a statement some time back about the ill health of my wife, saying that she was going to Mineral Wells for treatment. She has now returned home, but I do not see that she is much better, if any at all.

I have been at home since the fourth Sunday in May seeing after things while she was away. Thus I have lost much time, and our expenses have been great. We are trusting yet in the good Lord. I am sure that our two boys' being in the army has much to do with wife's condition, for it is about to get the best of me. I can hardly bear up under the awfulness of this war. One of the boys, L. H. Ligon, is at the Officers' Training School, Barrack B 23, Camp Pike, Little Rock, Ark. I give his address so that Christians in the city may call on him if they can do so. The other boy came home the other night to tell us good-by for the last time, as they were all packed up ready to go to some place, he knew not where. Brethren, pray for us. I will now be out in meetings, and will do all I can to build up the cause of the Master.—D. S. Ligon.

Renew Your Health At Nature's Fountain

Without the Expense and Loss of Time Necessary for a Visit to the Spring

THE CRISIS

There comes a time in the life of practically every man and woman when their digestive or eliminative organs, or both, fail to respond to drugs prepared by human skill. In fact drugs seem to do them about a much harm as good for their systems 1 bel against all drugs. These are the cases which physicians call "stubborn" and "chronic" for the reason that they persist in spite of drug treatment. I do not refer to incurable diseases such as cancer and consumption, but to that larger class of functional disorders which we meet every day, where the organs of digestion and elimination are impaired.

For this class of cases our best physicians and our big city specialists send their wealthy patients to the mineral springs where, in the great majority of cases they are permanently restored or decidedly benefited. But what about the poor man who has not the money or the busy man or woman who cannot spare the time to spend several weeks or possibly months at a health resort? Shall circumstances deny them the restoration to health which Nature has provided? Read my answer in the coupon at the bottom of this page.

I have the utmost confidence in the Shivar Mineral Spring Water for to it I owe my Restoration to Health and probably my Life. It has made me tens of thousands of friends in all parts of America and even in foreign countries, whose faces I have never seen. Yet I count them my friends for the Shivar Spring Water has bound them to me by lasting gratitude.

I ask you to read their letters, a few samples of which I publish below for your benefit, and if you find among them any encouragement as to your own health do not hesitate to accept my offer which has no limits or conditions except those shown on the coupon. If you could read the letters that come to me daily, numbering about ten thousand a year, and the vast majority of them similar to those printed below, you would not wonder that I make this offer displaying my absolute confidence in the restorative powers of Shivar Mineral Water.

INDIGESTION

Savannah, Georgia.

I was suffering with indigestion, stomach and liver disorders and all its train of horritying phenomena for several months. I had lived on milk, soft eggs, shredded wheat, a very insufficient diet for an active working man, zad, of course, from disease and starvation was in a very low state of nervous vitality and general debility. I ordered ten gallons of your Mineral Water which I used continuously, reordering when necessary, and in four months gained twenty-nine pounds, was strong and perfectly well, and have worked practically every day since. It acts as a general renovator of the system. I prescribe it in my practice, and it has in every instance had the desired effects. It is essential to use this water in as large quantities as possible, for its properties are so happily blended and in such proportion that they will not disturb the most delicate system. It is purely Nature's remedy. not disture s remedy, A. L. R. AVANT, M. D.

I feel it my duty to suffering humanity to make public announcement of the benefits I have derived from Shivar Spring Water. I have been a sufferer for the past twenty-five years from indigestion and dysopsis. After one week's trial of Shivar Water I commenced to improve, and after drinking it for four weeks I gained fifeen pounds. I feel better and stronger than I have in twenty-five years. I strongly recommend this Water to any one with stomach trouble of any character, and truly believe it will cure ulcer of the stomach. I am writing this voluntarily and trust it will fall in the hands of many who are so unfortunate as to be afflicted with indigestion and nervous dyspepsia.

Leeds, S. C.

I have tested your Spring Water in several cases of rheumatism, chronic indigestion, kidney and bladder troubles, and in nervous and sick headaches, and find that it has acted nicely in each case, and I believe that if used continuously for a reasonable time will produce a permanent cure. It will purify the blood, relieve debility, stimulate the action of the liver, kidneys and bladder, aiding them in throwing off all poisonous matter.

C. A. CROSEV. M. D.

I suffered with indigestion and kidney trouble, and a year ago was stricken with acute articular rheumatism; was helpless for months, and since using your Spring Water I am walking without any crutch and improving daily. Greenville, S. C., Feb. 25, 1914.

For over two years, following a nervous breakdown, I have suffered with a liver so torpid that ordinary remedies were absolutely powerless. Under such direcumstances, I came to Shivar Spring, and began drinking the Water. Upon advice however, the first night I took a laxalive; the second night a milder one. Since then I have taken none at all. The effect of the water has been remarkable—its action on my liver most marked, and my health and spirits greatly improved. I am satisfied that the laxalive, followed by the Water, was the proper treatment in my case. My condition is now perfect.

The Meeting at Dallas, Texas.

This meeting closed on Sunday, July 14. It was in some respects the most enjoyable meeting in which I have ever had a part. Upon my arrival I was immediately impressed with the fact that adequate preparations, including both prayers and publicity, had been made. It was not necessary, as in many cases, to first awaken the church members to the great and immediate responsibility in redeeming the time for the salvation of souls. They were obsessed with the idea before the evangelist arrived. A. O. Colley is the minister for this church. He is an active, earnest, and very humble worker, whose influence is being very widely felt. The congregation supports him liberally and he is kept busy all the time. The elders at Pearl and Bryan are H. C. Kitching, James Jackson, J. L. Pummill, and J. L. Ferguson. They are efficient and watchful overseers of the Lord's flock. One of their number, Brother Pummill, is a preacher of ability, but he is devoting most of his time to the home congregation. He told me that to be an elder meant to be an example, and to be the right kind of an example costs money. It was inspiring to note how he and the others were spending and being spent for the gospel's sake and the influence of such examples over about five hundred members of the congregation. The song service at Pearl and Bryan is a very attractive feature, and this is due in large measure to the splendid leadership of Andrew Davis, who, like Paul, sings "with the spirit and with the understanding."

Social Features.

The social features of the meeting were indeed refreshing. For the greater part of the time I was taken care of in the hospitable home of Brother and Sister Fred Davis. Dallas seems to be a convenient meeting place for the Texas preachers. During the meeting we were greatly encouraged by the presence of W. T. Kidwill, R. C. Bell, C. Netterville, A. L. Deveny, J. C. Estes, A. C. Karnes, and Brother Hines, all of whom live in Dallas. Among those who came from a distance were L. S. White and wife, of Sherman; Ben West, of Ennis; Thomas E. Milholland, of Denison; Foy E. Wallace, Jr., of Vernon; E. E. Shoulders, of Corsicana; E. M. Tackett, of Mount Vernon; W. E. Starnes, of Savoy; W. F. Ledlow, of Thorp Spring; R. D. Smith and P. C. Breeden, of Terrill; J. H. Lawson, of Fort Worth; A. B. Barret, of Cleburne; D. F. Draper, of Grapevine; and A. C. Miller, of Waxahachie. These are some of the busiest men to be found in the Master's service in the Lone Star State. I made a visit of a few hours to Fort Worth and was glad to meet Dr. I. L. Van Zandt and his family. At the close of the meeting there had been twenty-five additions, including thirteen baptisms.

In Jail.

While in Dallas I made three talks to young men in the county jail. On the first occasion I assisted Brother Colley in baptizing an Italian who gives promise of becoming a very useful Christian. There is a little hand of sisters in Dallas who deserve praise and commendation for their unflagging interest in the prisoners. They arrange for the Lord's Supper every week and cheer the hearts of the prisoners in other ways. This is a feature of evangelistic work that is generally neglected in our large cities. Yet Jesus spoke very plainly on the subject. In the day of judgment our interest or our lack of interest in the unfortunate will come to light, "Then shall they also answer, saying, Lord, when saw we thee hungry, or athirst, or a stranger, or naked, or sick, or in prison, and did not minister unto thee? Then shall he answer them, saying, Verily I say unto you, Inasmuch as ye did it not unto one of these least, ye did it not unto me. And these shall go away into eternal punishment: but the righteous into eternal life." (Matt. 25: 44-46.)

When Jesus comes to make up his jewels, I believe that there will be some stars in the crowns of these sisters because they visited Him in the Dallas jail.

A Soldier's Letter to His Mother.

Of course there are literally thousands of letters that come under this head, and every one of them has its particular heart message, revealing courage and pathos and sometimes tragedy. But while in Dallas 1 read one so beautiful, and yet so simple, that I asked the dear mother to let me have it printed. It follows:

France, May 12, 1918.—Mother My Dear: To-day is Mothers' Day. General Pershing has suggested that every member of his command write a letter to his mother to-day just to remind our mothers that even though engaged in the grim job of war we haven't yet forgotten some of the finer instincts which our mothers have instilled into us before we began our process of trying to imitate the primitive man and to depopulate Deutschland.

I believe our family is about as undemonstrative in showing their affections as any I have ever seen. tainly don't wear our hearts on our sleeves, and we have always more or less kept to ourselves just what we have thought of each other. Maybe we have been even too reserved, but I don't think so. I don't believe there has ever been any family the members of which are more devoted to one another than ours; only we have been con-tent simply to let the feeling exist and not be always tell-ing each other about it. So I suppose we have never really told you just how much we love you, and how much we think of you for all you have ever done for us—those things which not one other woman in ten thousand could ever have done. Yours have been circumstances to face, situations to master, difficulties to overcome such as test the strongest mettle. You have met them. Where the ordinary woman would have surrendered herself in despair, you have met the situation bravely, hopefully, and full of confidence in yourself and in the future, and, as Kipling says, "have so held on when there is nothing in you except the will which says to you, 'Hold on.'" When we think that all the pain you have suffered, all the superhuman energy that you have expended, has all been for the sake of us, it makes us feel small and niggardly indeed to think of the slight recompense we have ever made to show our appreciation.

And whether I ever come back or not (and I feel certain that I shall), I want you to know at least once that I love you more than I can ever tell or show; and no matter what experiences may come to me in this great experience of experiences, I shall never lose sight of the beacon light of your wonderful example, and I shall try to carry in my heart the indelible stamp of mother's love.

"If I were hanged on the highest hill, Mother o' mine, O mother o' mine! I know whose love would follow me still, Mother o' mine, O mother o' mine!

"If I were drowned in the deepest sea,
Mother o' mine, O mother o' mine!
I know whose fears would come down to me,
Mother o' mine, O mother o' mine!

"If I were damned of body and soul,
Mother o' mine, O mother o' mine!
I know whose prayers would make me whole,
Mother o' mine, O mother o' mine!

From Second Lieutenant William Lipscomb, Eighth Company, First Infantry Training Regiment, American Expeditionary Force.

We trust this letter will be encouraging to thousands of mothers whose sons are in the service of the country.

"Why Does Not God Stop the War?"

Questions like the following are heard with pathetic frequency: Why doesn't God do something? What is God doing? How can God allow the present frightfulness to continue? Why does not God stop the war? Many Christians find themselves in the condition of the psalmist when he cried: "My tears have been my food day and night, while they continually say unto me, Where is thy God?" The pulpit is challenged by the prevailing religious uncertainty to make known the ways of God and to offer light and leading to those whose faith has suffered eclipse. The feeling of many is voiced in the statement of a certain woman who said: "The world is terrible, and there is no one to help us." What has made the world so terrible, and is it true that there is no one to help? This woman's remark raises all the questions we have already suggested. and notably the question why God does not stop the war. It will be well to analyze the widespread feeling that God ought to stop the war. Perhaps we can best reach the heart of this question in relation to the war by first taking a situation of smaller size where the same elements are involved.

The daily papers recently recorded a disaster in this city caused by a runaway surface car. When the surface car on the crosstown line on 145th Street got to Amsterdam Avenue, where there was one of the steepest hills in New York, the motorman shut off the power and applied the air brakes. For some reason they failed to work, and the car, instead of slowing down, leaped forward and started at breakneck speed down the incline. The motorman threw on the emergency brake, but there was only a whir and rattle of chains, and the car's momentum was unchecked. By this time the numerous passengers, men, women, and children, had become alarmed, and, notwithstanding the orders of the conductor that no one was to leave his seat, a number made a rush to get out of the lurching car. The conductor kept the doors shut to prevent any one from leaping out. The motorman, when he realized that his car was beyond control and that nothing could stop its course down the hill, braced himself on the platform and kept sounding the gong. He also kept up a continuous shouting,

As the car shot down the hill, attaining a speed of more than eighty miles an hour, the motorman saw just ahead of him an automobile with one man in it. The man apparently did not hear the alarm until it was too late. He was going down the hill just in the track of the approaching car and his attention was fixed on the road ahead. With a tremendous crash the runaway car struck the automobile, turning it half around and throwing the man who was driving the automobile into the air. So great was the momentum of the street car that the man was thrown backward through the glass on the front platform of the car and into the car itself. He lay unconscious before the passengers. Another street car ahead, running on the same track and going in the same direction, was unable to speed up and get out of the way. This car was hit with such force that it shot ahead nearly half a block before it could be stopped. It was found that the man who drove the automobile had been killed. Seven others had sustained a fractured skull and fractured limbs. Many others were injured by broken glass. The motorman claims that he had several times reported the car as defective, but that nothing had been done about it,

To those who are asking why God does not stop the war we cite this typical disaster and ask, why did not God stop the trolley car? It is just as fair to ask this question with reference to the street car as it is to ask why God does not stop the war. Do we blame God for the runaway street-car disaster? No one of intelligence would dream of doing any such thing. It would soon be pointed out that it was the street railway company which built that track over a very steep hill and allowed passengers to be conveyed down that steep hill in a defective car. Then, why blame God for the war and expect divine omnipotence to step in and stop the results of man's sin and selfishness by some climacteric display of supernatural power?

The runaway street car may serve as a fit metaphor of the German nation. That nation, under the rule of a group of war lords, has become obsessed with the unholy ambition of subduing the world by brute force. From Kaiser to peasant they have become imbued with the will to conquer and the passion to lord it over the earth. The lust of empire, of gold, of territorial expansion, of commercial supremacy, had become such a mania that, when they deemed the hour propitious, they trampled upon treaties, upon the laws of man and God, and started out with uncontrollable fury to gain the base ends of their unrighteous quest. Language can never do justice to the horrible barbarities which have been perpetrated in the name of German Kultur. The German nation is, as President Wilson has pointed out, a nation which is running amuck in the earth; it is, like the runaway street car, beyond control, it seems, from within. But there is a bottom to the hill and there are other nations in the track. and, though the crash may be terrible, there is an end of the mad dash, and peace, however costly, beyond the crash.

Why does not God stop the war? For the same reason that God does not set aside the law of gravitation when a defective trolley car goes pell-mell down a steep hill. Had God set aside the law of gravitation when that trolley car dashed down the hill, we should all have traversed millions of miles of space together with the trolley car by now. Or if God had set aside the law of gravitation only as far as the defective car was concerned, it would put an end to all progress and development; it would kill the spirit of enterprise and inventiveness; it would render obedience and mastery unnecessary and life would lose its nobility and worth. Think it through and see what a blessing it is that God honors the law of gravitation and does not set it aside when men dishonor God in ignoring it. The law of gravitation keeps us from flying into space and so underlies the possibility of our dwelling in the earth. Its intention is entirely beneficent, and when it causes a defective street car to shoot down a steep hill we do not lose our faith either in it or in God. We have learned the necessity of obedience, carefulness, and conformity.

After the same manner must we reason about the war. God honors the moral freedom of men. It is because we are morally free that we are men and not machines. Were it not for freedom, for the power of choice, what use would we have for the finest gifts and faculties of personality? What place would there be for the exercise of reason or conscience or affection or will? Note how we value our freedom, what price we are willing to pay for its maintenance and increase, and what a worth and nobility it lends to life. Think of the life and treasure being poured out in lavish measure by the allied nations to prevent the world domination of Prussianism. Unspeakable is the gift of moral freedom, and it should not cloud our vision of God's goodness to see and experience the baneful effects of its perversion at the hands of a self-willed nation.

Why does not God stop the war? Because God is not a German Kaiser. God gave the Germans the same moral freedom as other men. God has given to all men alike the glorious and perilous power of measurable self-determination. Germany used this divine gift to foster national pride and ambition. Germany deliberately planned to rule the world with the rod of iron. All her energies were combined to encompass the aims of godless despotism. In utter defiance of God and man this proud race set out to conquer the world. And God did not step in to interfere, because God knows the end from the beginning-knows that a trolley car beyond control cannot go on forever. knows that in the long run and from the high perspective of the blessing of moral freedom it would not be well to interpose with a higher and more powerful despotism. God knows that there are other freemen who will rise to the defense of their inalienable birthright and that the cost of maintaining this treasure will in the long view be eminently worth while even in their judgment. God foresees the issue of our costly sacrifice. God is not inactive. God is on the side of moral forces, and these, harnessed, as they rapidly are being harnessed, to the larger battalions, will, with his favor, demonstrate that no mistake was made in intrusting to men such perilous prerogatives. Life in a world bathed in blood and tears is unspeakably solemn, but it is also unspeakably great and pregnant with far-reaching issues of moral wealth for all time to come.

Why does not God stop the war? For the same reason that God does not interfere when a man chooses to go out and get drunk and then returns to abuse his family. Such perversion of freedom is a challenge to other freemen to wipe out the saloon and to remove the omnipresent temptation from weaker men. Why does not God stop the war? For the same reason that God does not interfere when a man sets out in defiance of all self-control to indulge base lust or the greed for gold or the mania for degrading pleasures. Men so minded teach those of loftier ideal to labor for conditions and laws which lessen the possibility of sin and lawlessness. Why does not God stop the war? Because there are enough men of nobler mind to cowork with God to stop it, and in doing so to introduce new ideals and practices among nations in order to make this the last of all wars. Moral forces and men of moral force happily are numerous enough to vindicate God in his bestowal of moral freedom upon men and to win out of this world-wide furnace of affliction the refined values of a purified world.

Consider what life was given for, what God intends it to be, and it will appear how universal is the responsibility for the present condition of the world. The divine intention is that every human life shall illustrate the sovereignty of the spiritual over the natural. Vulgar egotism is to be subjected to the spirit of divine altruism. But from the very beginning man looked and lusted, and so the Bible declares: "By man came sin, and by sin came death." All the pain and bitterness of human experience is the fruit of disobedience. God did not leave man to his own evil way. In divers ways God revealed himself as slow to anger, abundant in loving-kindness, ready to pardon and mighty to save. In the fullness of time Christ came as the perfect embodiment of the divine intention and the full expression of God's saving purpose. The first message of Christ was: "Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." The summons called for a radical change of heart. Human life was wrong in its fundamental conceptions, in its basic motives and spirit. Christ appealed to men to accept him as pattern and dynamic of the ideal life. He called for followers to imitate his example, receive his forgiveness, and open their hearts to his spirit. He proved to be the Captain of salvation, the beginner of a new order of humanity, which should grow from more to more and finally embrace all mankind. The appeal was to the will of men. We all know the result, how mighty things have been done in and through Christian believers, but how for the most part the world prefers its own way of life and its own selfish standards. It was surely inevitable that the development of sin and selfishness should eventuate in some consummate calamity like the present world war, that the innocent and guilty should suffer the excruciating results of human folly, that God should allow m n to reap as they had sown, in order that the world should have this most painful object lesson that the wages of sin is death.

The world is learning in the crucible of suffering the cost of disobedience and the folly of unbelief. The world is reaping the inevitable consequences of ignoring and defying the moral character and spiritual meaning of life. The eyes of the world are being opened to the bane of selfishness and the awfulness of unbridled self-will. The natural conceit of man dies hard, and it is perfectly compatible with the love of God that men are allowed to experience the most frightful consequences of godless ambition. Surely it is the divine purpose that men's hearts shall be softened by the awful failure they have made of trying to run the world without God and that they shall come to Christ as penitent suppliants to be pardoned and to be fitted by the transforming of their minds for a life of obedience to God's will. The church of God, also, is learning the penalty of indifference and worldliness and is challenged as never before to realize the New Testament ideal of being coworkers with God. Why does not God do something? Indeed, God is mightily active, opening men's eyes, calling them to repentance, proffering mercy and pardon, and leading the moral forces of the world to victory over the beast. God is busy, having provided myriad ministries of mercy for body and soul for such a time as this, and inspiring enterprises in church and state which will prove to have been epochal in the perspective of after years. A Religious Spy.

BY F. W. SMITH.

Brother Moore confesses himself to have been simply a Baptist "scout" when he attended my meeting. The word "scout" is rather a military term, donating one sent out by a superior to spy out the land, locate the enemy, and determine, if possible, his strength. Our friend gives the word a religious turn, and says his purpose was to ascertain the "strength of error," or "the strength of a rival." But a former statement by him completely destroys this nice little claim to religious espionage, for he told us that he knew before he went exactly what he would get. Besides this, he has been killing (?) what he terms "Campbellism" for years through his paper and in his oral debates: therefore we must conclude that, with his perfect (?) knowledge of what "Campbellites" teach, he was prompted by some other motive to attend my meeting. Let us hear him in another effort:

It is necessary to know the strength of a rival if you prepare to meet him in the open before a misguided and falsely taught people, Brother Smith. Could I not have gone in the love of truth in learning the strength of error? Do you ever attend a Baptist revival? think so. what motive have you in so doing? If I did not think your system of faith was wrong. I would join you every such epportunity as I had here and help you spread your message. So, you see, I did just what you would do in attending one of our revival meetings. There is this dif-You willingly accept in your church material prepared by Baptists as good, but we can't return the com-pliment in accepting yours. Therefore you could attend pliment in accepting yours. Therefore you could attend one of our services in good faith; for you say our teaching in discipling is right, for you accept said disciples as genuine. I am glad to say we can't accept yours, for it is wrong.

You are wrong in preaching to sinners. You reverse the order by trying to get the sinner to believe before he repents. John the Baptist, Jesus Christ, and the apostles all taught that sinners should repent first and then believe.

You know you cannot name one passage in the Bible where faith in Christ ever preceded repentance toward God.

No, I'm not afraid to preach the scriptures you name, but I make a better application than you do of them. First, I call on all men everywhere to repent, then to believe, then be baptized. This order can be verified and yours cannot. (Matt. 3: 1, 2; Acts 20: 21; Heb. 6: 1.)

I fail to see where I dodged in the Adam and Eve case. Neither was saved at that time. Since the fall, you do not pretend to say that they were not prone to sin; for not only were they condemned, but the earth for their sake was cursed. Could their offspring be more pure than they or less sinful than they?

If God creates souls now, then his work of creating goes on. Was he mistaken when he rested from his work, or are you mistaken, which? If God created your soul at birth, or before, how comes that your intelligence partook, of your parents' intellect? The soul is the intelligent, the reasoning man. If your soul was not derived from your parents, why are you in intelligence like your parents? Did God make your soul in likeness to your parents? Answer these, please.

The scripture that you say knocks my view into smithereens does not contradict my view; in fact, it does not apply to it. Christ's language to Nicodemus: "That which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born [or begotten] of the Spirit is spirit." My brother knows that Jesus is talking about the new life, and not the beginning of life. Of course God made man of the dust of the earth, then he formed the spirit or soul within him by breathing the breath of life into him. But find another man since that he thus made.

Thayer was a theologian and gave us a lexicon of the New Testament Scriptures. It's right good, but like all theologians are—biased to their faith. Liddell & Scott is a standard used in all the schools and is not a theological work. "Phusis" and its cognates are used in the following scriptures: Rom. 1: 26; 2: 14, 27; 11: 21, and in verse 24 twice; 1 Cor. 11: 14; Gal. 2: 15; 4: 8; Eph. 2: 3; 2 Pet. 1: 4. Why should it mean "custom or practice" in Eph. 2: 3 and in 1 Cor. 11: 14, and not elsewhere, just to suit your view, Brother Smith? "Phusikos," natural, occurs only in Rom. 1: 26, 27, and in 2 Pet. 2: 12. Give us your reason for just selecting these two particular places to mean by practice one becomes sinful and neglecting all these others. Come, now, let me hear your reason, if other than to bolster up your own pet theory.

He says: "You willingly accept in your church material prepared by Baptists as good, but we can't return the compliment in accepting yours." He is very much mistaken. I neither accept one into the church nor reject one from the church. God does the receiving and rejecting, for "to his own Lord he standeth or falleth." (Rom. 14: 4.) Brother Moore is the one who sits in judgment on the souls of men, building a sectarian wall around what he terms "the Lord's table" and writing across it, "Thou shalt," and, "Thou shalt not." But if he means that I fellowship some who were formerly identified with the Baptist denomination, I plead guilty. I do this, however, not because such material was prepared by the Baptists, but because I believe it has been prepared by faith in, and obedience to, Jesus Christ. When one tells me that he or she was baptized in order to be saved, I believe that individual is in the body of Christ; but if one should tell me that he or she was baptized simply to get into the Baptist Church and did not regard baptism as having anything to do with his or her salvation, I could not bid him or her Godspeed in such an error. All such I regard as without the promise of salvation, but it is not mine to sit in judgment on his or her final destiny. I would not ask the Baptists or any other religious people to accept material prepared by me, for the simple reason that such material would be worthless. "Except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it." (Ps. 127: 1.) The gospel is the power of God unto salvation (Rom. 1: 16), and I can only preach that and let God through that instrumentality prepare material for his church.

My friend challenges me to find a passage where faith precedes repentance. Well, that is easy, Brother Moore, and I am surprised that in all of your Bible reading you have overlooked such plain passages. Listen: "And without faith it is impossible to be well pleasing unto him; for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that seek after him." (Heb. 11: 6.) Now, Brother Moore, will you tell us that you did not believe in the existence of God when you were seeking after him through repentance? Will you tell us that you did not believe the testimony God gave concerning Jesus Christ as the Savior of man when you were seeking after God through repentance? If not, please tell us what led you to repent. Here is our brother's predicament: He was deeply impressed that he was a sinner, lost and without hope in the world, became overwhelmed with a "godly sorrow," repenting toward God, and yet all this without faith! The passage says it is impossible to please God without faith; hence, if it were possible for one to repent without faith, that act would be displeasing to God. But again: "And the people of Nineveh believed God; and they proclaimed a fast, and put on sackcloth, from the greatest of them even to the least of them." (Jon. 3: 5.) Any one who cannot see that believing in God preceded the repentance of the Ninevites is safe without either faith or repentance. Once more: "Let all the house of Israel therefore know assuredly, that God hath made him both Lord and Christ, this Jesus whom ye crucified. Now when they heard this, they were pricked in their heart, and said unto Peter and the rest of the apostles, Brethren, what shall we do?" (Acts 2: 36, 37.) Now I want you to tell us this: If the people did not believe Peter's testimony concerning Jesus Christ, then what caused them to be pricked in their hearts? Again, if they did not have faith, what caused them to ask the question: "Brethren, what shall we do?" Mark you, up to this time they had not repented, for in answer to their question they were told to repent. Come square up to the issue, my brother, and let us have no beating around the bush. Either you or Peter is wrong in this matter, and I frankly say 1 prefer to stand with Peter.

Our friend tries to support his contention with Matt. 3: 1, 2. He should know that John was talking to people who already believed in God, but who, because of their sins, were in no condition to accept the message regarding the coming Messiah until they had set themselves right with God. They were the "lost sheep of the house of Israel," and sustained the same relation to God that an erring child does now. He thinks Acts 20: 21 helps his cause, but it avails him nothing. The "order" in which historic events are recorded does not always prove that such things occurred in the order given. Note this: "If thou shalt confess with thy mouth Jesus as Lord, and shalt believe in thy heart that God raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved." (Rom. 10: 9.) Here we have confession before faith; and I ask, will our brother contend, because of the order recorded, that confession comes before faith? To be consistent, he must, or else abandon his claim from Acts 20: 21. All that can be claimed from that passage is that it simply shows toward whom repentance and faith are directed. Faith is a principle of growth (2 Thess. 1: 3) with different degrees of development. There is a degree of faith leading to repentance which is the very eause of repentance, and still another degree leading to obedience in baptism. But the growth of faith does not end here; it leads to every act of worship and service, growing continually so long as we live.

Brother Moore rested from all the work he did yesterday, therefore he will not work any more. This is the kind of logic he uses with reference to God. He thinks because it is said that God rested from all the work he did, that, therefore, he works no more; and yet our friend has God continually working directly, immediately, converted sinners. God did finish the creation of the physical universe, for that is the thing under consideration. the soul, or spirit, is immaterial, and was placed in a created body as a separate act from the creation of the body. The same process continues, as I have produced scriptures to show. Animal life is not the soul, or spirit. If so, then sheep and oxen have souls; but Brother Moore repudlates such doctrine. Christ settled the question once for all as to what is inherited through flesh and blood. In answer to the question, "How can a man be born when he is old? can he enter a second time into his mother's womb, and be born?" Jesus said, "That which is born [begotten] of the flesh is flesh," which shows that nothing is begotten of the flesh but flesh. Will our friend contend that a soul, or spirit, begets souls, or spirits? In nature nothing comes from a seed except that resident in the seed. Is there anything more in the seed of man than fleshly or animal life? If so, and the seed of man begets souls, how can a man with a "regenerate" soul beget a depraved soul? Answer this, my friend. If spirits are transmissible through the medium of flesh and blood, then why did the Holy Spirit make the distinction between "fathers of the flesh" and the "Father of spirits?" Answer, will you? Christ said with reference to infants, "For of such is the kingdom of heaven;" and, "Except ye be converted and become as this little child, ye cannot enter into the kingdom of God;" and yet Brother Moore has them full of "total depravity!" He makes intelligence and souls equivalent. This is a new thing, and makes horses and dogs have souls; for will he deny that these have a degree of intelligence?

I am surprised that Brother Moore knows so little about J. H. Thayer and his lexicon. Thayer was a Congregationalist, and believed with my friend on the matter of "total, hereditary depravity," hence did not define "phusis" in Eph. 2; to suit his religious bias. The leading universities regard his lexicon as the best in the world. Adam Clarke, one of the most scholarly men that ever lived, believed with my friend, and yet he said that Eph. 2: 3 did not support the doctrine of "total, hereditary depravity," but assigned to "phusis" "custom or habit" as its meaning. Brother Moore knows that many words have more than one meaning, but never more than one meaning in the same place at the same time. The meaning of such words is determined by the context in which they are used. The very context in Eph. 2: 3 and 1 Cor. 11: 14 shows that "phusis" (nature) means "custom or practice." We speak of second nature-which is formed by practice. He says: "No one becomes a sinner by sinning; he is one, or he would not sin." Then Adam was a sinner when God made him, eh? This is his doctrine, pure and simple. He said Adam sinned because he was tempted, and now he says people sin because they are sinners. Say, my friend, what becomes of the little infant full of "total, hereditary deprayity," dying in infancy? Will you, like Jeter, say that God regenerates dying infants by a direct, immediate work of the Spirit? If so, please cite the scripture that so teaches. This is the third time you have been asked this question without an answer.

Music in the Apostolic Age.

The subject I am to discuss has been one over which a great deal of discussion has raged. The chief salient has been the question of instrumental music. The lexicons have been resorted to with great earnestness, and with doubtful results. One brother will array the lexicons to prove that the Greek word "psallo" excludes the idea of instrumental accompaniment to the human voice. Moreover, he can prove it, if you let him pick the lexicons and their definitions. Another brother will trace the same word through the lexicons and definitions and prove that

"psallo" demands the use of an instrument as a necessary element in singing.

The trouble is that these brethren do not always use the same lexicons and definitions. Lexical authority is pretty good in defining the meaning of a word, but not always good in establishing a practice. History must be appealed to for that. What is the voice of history concerning music? History says that it is one of the oldest primitive arts. It began with the infancy of the race. It probably arose by man trying to imitate the sounds made by birds and animals. It began as monophonic music. It was a crooning or droning sound. Mothers would lull their infants to sleep by a simple monotone melody. Then came antiphonic music. An individual, or choir of individuals, would chant all in monotone a sentiment, which would be answered by a similar individual or choir situated in another part of the temple or building. There is good reason to believe that antiphonic music was used in the temple worship of the Hebrews. Such passages as the 112th and 118th Psalms can hardly be understood in any other way. After the antiphonic came a musical style called contrapuntal; but this does not come within our purview. It did not exist in the apostolic age. Then came what we call polyphonic singing. This is the kind we use in the churches to-day. It embraces the harmony of different voices, such as soprano, alto, tenor, and bass into one melody. is the universal music of our hymnology to-day. There are a great many people who actually believe it is apostolic music. They think that the churches at Jerusalem, Antioch, and Ephesus came together as we do now, and some good brother "pitched the tune," and the congregation all sang, carrying the different parts as we do.

In the light of the above, it is pertinent to raise the question: What was the kind of music existing in the apostolic age? It could not have been polyphonic—the kind we use to-day-for the simple reason that that kind of music was not known in the apostolic age. It originated a thousand years after the apostolic age. It came into use about the beginning of the thirteenth century. It was introduced into common usage by Luther and the leaders of the Reformation. Is there any evidence to show that the apostolic church used antiphonic music? None whatever. There is not a hint in the New Testament or ecclesiastical history, so far as I can learn, that will justify the use of antiphonic music in the church of the first century. We sometimes have it in use to-day. When I was a boy, I used to attend the colored meetings in old Kentucky. An old colored brother would arise, and, in musical tones, ask the question: "Whar, O, whar am de good old Dani'l?" Repeating it several times, he would close with "Way over in de promis' land." The congregation would reply in unison, "He went up from a den of lions," repeating it three times, and close with "Way over in de promis' land." This would be repeated with "The good ol' 'Lijah," and the congregation would reply, "He went up in a chariot of fiah;" and so on ad libitum with Bible worthies. This was antiphonic music, and pretty good music to my boyish mind; but there is no evidence that the apostolic church ever used it. The contrapuntal style arose in the Middle Ages, and is, therefore, not apostolic.

Having eliminated polyphonic, antiphonic, and also contrapuntal music, we are shut up, necessarily, to monophonic music. This was a simple crooning or droning rhythm, to give force to the thought or teaching of the exhorter. They used the simple rhythm to accentuate their discourses as we sometimes use poetry to accentuate our thoughts. It was largely, if not entirely, an individual solo, and was sung either with or without instrumental accompaniment. That instruments were used early in the church is clear from the fact that some of the early Fathers opposed the use of them. They could not oppose such usage if such usage was not in existence. Clement of Alexandria, in the second century, forbade the use of the flute in the church, and instituted the use of the harp. He did not oppose instruments, but only a certain kind of instrument.

That the music of the apostolic church was an individual affair is confirmed by history. Pliny the younger was a contemporary of the apostles. He was an eminent lawyer of the Roman bar. He held successively the offices of tribune, prefect of the treasury, consul and proconsul, and died universally esteemed for his virtues. He was appointed by the Emperor Trajan to make a report upon the practices of the Christians in the apostolic age.

A part of that report says: "They convene at stated days, before sunrise, and sing each in turn, verses in praise of Christ as God." I have emphasized the words "each in turn," because they show the singing of the apostolic church to have been an individual matter, and not congregational singing. Confirming the report of the eminent Roman official to his emperor, I quote from Tertullian, an eminent Christian Father and writer, who lived as near, in time, to the apostles as we do to the Campbells. Speaking of the worship of the early Christians, he says: "When the water was passed around for the washing of hands. each one of the company was asked, in turn, to praise God in song, and the selection might either be taken from the Scriptures, or improvised, according to the taste or ability of the performer." We have here, then, both Roman and Christian authority that singing of the apostolic age was an individual act of worship. They use almost the same words. The Roman says "each in turn," and the Christian says "each one in turn."

We could buttress the above testimony with other quotations if it were necessary. History testifies that the abuses which accompanied paid singing began in the second century. "Singers found themselves sought after in proportion to their talents, and, therefore, sought to make those talents more conspicuous by an introduction of florid ornaments and cadenzas in their music; they gradually forgot or disregarded the old traditional style of singing, and sought only to excite the admiration of the masses by exhibiting to the best advantage the power and agility of their voices." Same old trouble we have to-day!

The individual singing gradually changed into congregational singing, and, to my judgment, for the better. Now, is there anything in the New Testament that contravenes the above view? I have examined the apostolic references to "songs and singing," and I can find nothing that demands congregational singing. The reader can easily test that matter for himself. The references are few. They are to be found in Rom. 15: 9-"And that the Gentiles might glorify God for his mercy; as it is written, Therefore will I give praise unto thee among the Gentiles, and sing unto thy name;" 1 Cor. 14: 15-" What is it then? 1 will pray with the spirit, and I will pray with the understanding also: I will sing with the spirit, and I will sing with the understanding also;" Eph. 5: 19-" Speaking one to another in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing and making melody with your heart to the Lord." Col. 3: 16-"Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly, in all wisdom teaching and admonishing one another; in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs singing with grace in your hearts unto God;" James 5: 13-" Is any among you suffering? let him pray. Is any cheerful? let him sing praise." These are all the scriptures that refer to songs and singing in the New Testament as a duty, and in not a single instance is there anything to show that congregational singing is required to carry out the meaning of the writer. I have omitted the passages in Revelation, as they are not acts of worship incumbent upon Christians.

From the above facts I draw the conclusion that instrumental music is not authorized in the New Testament—nor is it forbidden. The organ is an innovation. So is the congregational singing of our brethren that ban the organ. If we wish to be strictly apostolic in the method of our singing, we must give up the organ, and also our congregational singing as we have it, and return to the old droning and crooning of the apostolic age. But would such music suit a cultured and refined people who enjoy the improved art of singing as we now employ it? It is a question of culture and judgment, and not one of command.—Z. T. Sweeney, in Christian Standard.

The Good Work Grows.

BY S. H. HALL.

In my last report something was said about the good being done in Brother Cuff's meeting at Macon. I am glad to say that the meeting there resulted in twelve additions, all told, and the work greatly strengthened. The Macon church is delighted with the work of our young brother, and he is equally delighted with the faithful there. He fell greatly in love with Brother C. E. Coleman, who is giving his whole time to that section. Brother Cuff is now in a meeting at Dalton, and Brother Weaver reports that the work starts off well.

We had three more confessions at West End on the second Lord's day in this month, one of which was among the number of disturbed souls over Adventism. The lecture at the Criterion set him right on the Sabbath question, so he decided to learn more of the church of Christ, which he did by attending our meetings, with the result that he confessed his faith in Christ and was baptized into him. Others are expected from his family. In the afternoon of July 14 I visited the Grady Hospital, and was glad to listen to a young man's confession of his faith in Christ, and whom we are expecting to baptize so soon as he is able to be removed to his home, which will have taken place before this gets to the press, the Lord willing.

Brother Carter and others were at Camp Gordon on July 14, with the best service this year, one of the boys confessing his sins and reconsecrating himself to God and another laying aside human error and taking a stand wholly on the Bible. At this writing Brother Carter is conducting a revival at Fort McPherson especially for the interest of the boys at that place. The work grows in every way, but this writer's nerves are almost at the breaking point. I ask our friends to continue to pray for us.

Brother Traylor has just come in from Buchanan, where he preached three times yesterday (July 14), with five confessions and baptisms and one from the Baptists. Our readers will doubtless remember that I spoke in a recent report of his trip to Buchanan last month, at which time he had his first confession and baptism. This breaks the record in this State for additions for monthly visits. We rejoice with our young brother over his great success and with the church at Buchanan for the way the work moves gloriously onward there. God bless every member in that section, and may greater news still come from that place. Indeed, God is blessing us as never before, Going Back to Thorp Spring.

BY R. C. BELL.

I have spent the two years which have elapsed since I left Thorp Spring in school, and, of course, am better qualified than ever before to teach. I have spent more than a dozen years teaching in our Bible schools, and consequently know something about the work. I love the cause of Christian education, and I think there is no more inviting service for the Christian.

I am going back to Thorp Spring as a member of the faculty for the coming year, resolved to use whatever talents, native or acquired, I possess, in the interests of primitive Christianity. As I understand Christ, his disciple can do no less. I have been offered twenty-five per cent more money than I am to get at Thorp Spring to serve as principal of a high school; but since true education deals with the whole man, making him wiser, better, and happler, I prefer to teach where the door to the whole man is open, rather than where it is open chiefly to the intellectual and to the worldly man only. A Christian should desire to live and to work where there are no restrictions upon his teaching the whole counsel of God, as he can make opportunity every day in the week.

Some schools pride themselves upon the scholarly attainments of their graduates without much regard for their moral or religious life. Therefore when a scientist, a statesman, a warrior, or any famous man is found among their alumni, they make much of him. What does it matter if he is a debauchee or an infidel? Schools that really try to get things in right proportion and to put the emphasis of life where it belongs stress the spiritual and are capable of being ashamed of an alumnus even though he is possessed of worldly wisdom.

The Christian school does not think that only the intellectual faculties are worthy of development or even that they are of first importance in man-making. Rather, it thinks that, if sharpened intellectual powers are to be used in wrongdoing, they had better remain unsharpened, for then there can be less execution in wrongdoing. The Christian school stands committed to the principle that the heart desire to use the intellect aright determines the advisability of quickening and making it more efficient. It does not train the intellect for its own sake or as an end within itself, but that it may contribute its part in character building. This principle makes the Christian school different from others and affords a particular reason for its existence and for its being patronized.

Indeed, if the Christian school has no distinguishing features, why should it exist? There is no lack of other schools, and our faculty could get better-paying positions in some of these or at other work, if salary were their first concern. Nevertheless, such a school, no matter how many other schools there may be, has a place, is worth while, and is worth all it costs its faculty, board, students, and supporters, because it stands for something and does something too much neglected by others. It not only trains the intellect well, but also attempts the rarer and more vital task of teaching the Christian use of the developed intellect.

The Woman Spoke.

The Woman spoke to the Dove of Peace,
And "Your wings are white," she cried;
"Yet the battle grounds show a crimson stain,
And No Man's Land is dyed
With a scarlet dye, and the sun is red
On the broken fields of grain!"

The Woman spoke to the Dove of Peace,
And "Your wings are white," she said.
"White as snow on the trampled fields
Where a shattered host lies dead;
White as the face of the frozen fate
That a ghastly harvest yields!"

Then the Dove of Peace looked up and spoke,
And "My wings are white!" he thrilled.

"White as the roses that will blow
Where a million men were killed;
White as the grain that will spring once more
In the garden spot by each cottage door;
White as the love that will fragrant grow
In the hearts that God had led."
Ah, the Dove of Peace looked up and spoke,
And "My wings are white!" he said.

Contributions received for the past three weeks are acknowledged in this week's issue. The number and amounts are very gratifying. They indicate that our readers are deeply in sympathy with the suffering of other lands. More telegrams calling attenion to appalling conditions have been received, but we cannot print them this week for lack of space. Let us be content to say, "God bless all the donors," and, "Let the good work continue."

In sending contributions, be sure and state whether they are intended for the Armenian and Syrian Fund or the Poland Fund. Make all checks and money orders payable to A. B. Lipscomb, who will forward them to the proper commissioners.

AT HOME AND ABROAD

There was a good start in the meeting at Lebanon, Tenn. J. D. Walling is engaged in a tent meeting at Lexington, Ky.

M. C. Kurfees has closed a good meeting at his old home, Mocksville, N. C. He is now at Asheville.

H. W. Wrye came to see us last week. He had just closed an interesting meeting at Chapel Hill, Tenn., and is now at Verona.

There were three baptisms at Belmont Avenue Church, this city, Sunday. George R. Bethurum preached two forceful sermons.

J. W. Brents writes from Italy, Texas: "I recently held a good meeting at Delrose, Tenn., and am here in an interesting one."

Foy E. Wallace, Jr., of Fort Worth, Texas, writes: "The meeting at Eustace resulted in twenty baptisms and nine restored to fellowship."

W. N. Ferguson is conducting a tent meeting with the New Shops congregation, West Nashville. Eight baptisms to date: interest continues fine.

From J. Paul Kimbrell, Gatesville, Texas, July 11: "I am now located with the church here. Correspondents will please note change of address. I went to Mound on Tuesday night and heard Brother T. L. Kimmel, who is in a meeting there."

From Hal P. McDonald, Berry, Ala.: "Alabama Christian Colleges desires a teacher with a college education and some normal training, who is also a preacher of the gospel, or a Christian woman who could do some work in the college department and teach piano."

From J. Alonzo Williams, Wingo, Ky., July 17: "I closed a ten-days' mission meeting last night at West Union, Tenn., with four baptisms. The tent was well filled with attentive hearers each night. The brethren there are very active in 'sounding out the word' through mission meetings."

From John W. Hedge, Kilgore, Texas, July 14: "Brother D. C. Williams closed a meeting here last Lord's-day night. There were no additions, but much good was done otherwise. Brother Williams won the admiration of all. We are glad to have his consent to hold another meeting for us next year."

From Ben West, Ennis, Texas, July 15: "I preached a funeral in Waxahachie on Saturday, Back home at 11 A.M., Sunday, with one added. A crowd of twenty followed the minister to Bristol, twelve miles out, at 4 P.M., where we preached and sang in a revival service, with one restored."

From Willie Hunter, Livingston, Tenn.: "I have part of October and November that I would like to hold meetings either in Georgia or Oklahoma. Brethren desiring my services should write me at above address."

Congregations would do well to secure the services of Brother Hunter.

From F. L. Paisley, Camp Taylor, Ky., July 22: "Our Bible class at the base hospital increased last Friday night over the previous one a little more than one hundred per cent, with others to come yet who had other arrangements at the time of the last meeting. We study the life of Christ as recorded by the 'apostle of love.'"

Charlie Taylor writes: "Since my last report I have held meetings at the following places: At Fifteenth and Clay Streets, Paducah, Ky, with five baptisms and three restorations; Stone Church, near Rosiclare, III., with one baptism; and at Sixth and Husband Streets, Paducah, with one baptism. I am now at Cottontown, Tenn."

T. C. Little, of Fayetteville, Tenn., will hold protracted meetings as follows: At State Line, Lincoln County, Tenn., beginning on the fourth Sunday in July; Rowland Hill, Lincoln County, first Sunday in August; Liberty, Marshall County, second Sunday in August; Friendship, Lincoln County, fourth Sunday in August; Richmond, Bedford County, third Sunday in September.

From R. V. Robinson, Ireland, Texas, July 15: "I began a meeting here on Friday night. The attendance and interest have been very good so far. I should like to get in touch with several churches in the States between Texas and Virginia, as I am planning a trip to Virginia in September and would like to hold one or more meetings while on the trip. Address me at Kenedy, Texas, Box 143."

From J. H. Hines, Hopkinsville, Ky., July 20: "I have just closed a good meeting at Antioch, in Ohio County. One young lady took Jesus to be her Savior and was baptized into Christ. I go to Rose Hill, Tenn., Monday. The church in Hopkinsville is doing well. Six obeyed the gospel during the meeting which D. H. Friend held, making a total of twenty-one who have come into the church since January L"

Fuller Kirkpatrick writes from Waterloo, Ala,: "We had a glorious meeting for a week. The preacher, C. E. Holt, will be back on the second Sunday in October to hold another meeting for us of two or three weeks' duration. We had great crowds each night and the finest interest ever shown one of our faith and order in this town, everybody saying the sermons were the finest they ever heard. Brother Holt is full of the gospel and is a great preacher."

From Tice Elkins, Henrietta, Texas, July 19: "The meeting at Comanche is over, and we had a good one. Four were baptized and the whole church was strengthened and drawn closer together, and they all say it was a meeting fraught with great and eternal good. I will hold their meeting again next year. Good wishes to all. I go to Anson to-morrow to begin. Then to Hamilton, then to Gordonville, and then to Mangum, Okla. Let all get ready for their meetings."

From J. L. Leath, Corinth, Miss., July 20: "G. C. Brewer, of Winchester, Tenn., closed his third meeting at this place with fine interest and large audiences. His audiences continued to grow until the very last service. A goodly number obeyed the gospel and the church was greatly strengthened as a result of his labors. Brother Brewer is a very strong preacher of the word. He is a splendid Christian gentleman and is greatly admired by the people of this city."

From George W. Farmer, Lebanon, Tenn., July 19: "The meeting at Midway, near Overall, Tenn., closed on last Sunday evening, after running eight days with one baptism. I was very much indisposed through this meeting, and not being equal to the work put me to a great disadvantage all through the meeting. However, the interest was fine and growing better all the while, and crowds best, they claim, they had ever had there. Meeting too short to reap any harvest much. I am feeling better now, and, the Lord willing, will begin a two-weeks' meeting at Sykes, Tenn., on Sunday."

From J. L. Smith, Louisville, Ky.: "The work at F Street is doing very well. We are having a better attendance at the Lord's-day meeting. I went up to Campbell Street Church on the second Lord's day in July and baptized a soldier boy whom M. C. Kurfees had been teaching—Iven E. Brady, son of Brother and Sister T. E. Brady, of Fulton, Ky. He seemed quite happy. I also visited Brother and Sister H. C. Shoulders, of Sellersburg, Ind., on last Wednesday night (prayer-meeting night). A man and his wife made the good confession and next day were baptized by Brother Shoulders. This was the first time I ever preached there."

From A. O. Colley, Dallas, Texas: "A. B. Lipscomb has just closed one of the best meetings we have had at Pearl and Bryan Streets Church in a long time. The church worked with him from the beginning almost 'to a man.' We had never seen him before, but we now know how to appreciate him in a way that we could not have done by just reading of him. There were twenty-five accessions to the congregation during his stay. There have been about one hundred names added to our list in the last ten months. This includes Brother Larimore's meeting and those that have come in during the regular weekly services. The church is at peace, and all are planning for still greater things for the Lord."

From W. P. Skaggs, Tom Bean, Texas: "The meeting with the faithful in Barksdale began on June 29 and closed on July 10. This was my fourth visit with these brethren, and they asked me to be with them again next year. Our labors together this time resulted in five baptisms, one restoration, and one uniting with the church. Considering the hindering circumstances, this was, indeed, a grand meeting. The church at Barksdale is composed of some as faithful brethren and sisters as can be found. They are trying to do something for the Lord, and they succeed. This is the third year of drought with them, and the future prospects are very gloomy, but they say we must keep the Lord's work going. I am to begin at Chalk next Lord's day."

Christians Should Be Prudent.

BY J. C. M Q.

It will hardly be denied by thoughtful people that Christians should be prudent in their dealings with men of the world, as well as with one another. As Christians are the "light of the world" and the "salt of the earth," they have an elevating, refining, and purifying influence on those with whom they associate."

Writing of Christians, the Holy Spirit says: "But ye are an elect race, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a people for God's own possession, that ye may show forth the excellencies of him who called you out of darkness into his marvelous light." (1 Pet. 2: 9.) As Christians are Christ's epistles, they should study to reflect the divine light in all of their dealings with their fellow creatures. Christ has made great sacrifices in order that we may be redeemed. "For the grace of God hath appeared, bringing salvation to all men, instructing us, to the intent that, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly and righteously and godly in this present world; looking for the blessed hope and appearing of the glory of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ; who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a people for his own possession, zealous of good works." (Tit. 2: 11-14.) Christ, through his atonement, "saved us, and called us with a holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before times eternal." (2 Tim. 1: 9.)

Paul became all things to all men that he might win some for Christ. Without discussing the merits or demerits of the war, all must freely confess that as we are passing through a great crisis Christians should be careful to do nothing that will offend and drive people away from Christ. I sometimes fear that some professed followers of Christ, in the hope of showing their extreme toyalty, do things that bring reproach upon the cause of the Lord Jesus Christ. Christians are to be gentle, yielding, and pliable whenever and wherever no law of God is violated. This is the meaning of the word "moderation" as it is used in Phil. 4: 5, in the Authorized Version, which reads: "Let your moderation be known unto all men." In the American Revised Version it reads: "Let your forbearance be known unto all men." The marginal reading is "gentleness." Christians are not to be stubborn and should not make an effort to put a private interpretation upon the word of God that will bring them into opposition to "the powers that be." Instead of cultivating such a disposition, the child of God should strive to do all that his government commands him to do, unless by so doing he is in clear violation of the word of God. Christians who combine gentleness with firmness are a great power for good. The influence of such a life is irresistible for good. Christians are not leading the lives of gentleness and forbearance that they should when they unnecessarily antagonize humane work. Such opposition brings reproach on the cause of Christ and hinders, instead of advancing, the kingdom of Christ in the world. It is unbecoming in preachers who said little or nothing in opposition to war in times of peace to be so exceedingly zealous in opposing the present war in which our government is engaged. Such conduct is inconsistent and stops the ears of many honest people against such preachers. We are not only not to speak evil of the ruler of our nation, but the Holy Spirit admonishes us "to speak evil of no man, not to be contentious, to be gentle, showing all meekness toward all men." (Tit. 3: 2.) There is nothing to be gained now by taking an extreme position, but much to be lost. Those who unnecessarily antagonize the government when nothing good is to be accomplished by such antagonism not only sin before God, but destroy their own usefulness. Christians, above all others, should cultivate that spirit of meekness, gentleness, and forbearance inculcated by Christ. When Christ sent out the twelve, he said: "Behold, I send you forth as sheep in the midst of wolves: be ye therefore wise as serpents, and harmless as doves." (Matt. 10: 16.) If Christians are to teach, enlighten, and elevate the world, they can do it only by living lives of godliness, firmness, and gentleness, which will be uplifting to humanity.

The Christian who is conscientiously opposed to war loses much of his usefulness and power for good over men when he charges that the young men who have gone to war, conscientiously believing that they are doing right, are murderers. I have heard of preachers stopping the ears of people against the gospel that they preach by making just such a charge. No well-informed preacher will make such a charge, since the motive has much to do with the character of the action. But it is not my purpose to discuss this question with any man, but to urge upon Christians everywhere to be moderate, gentle, and prudent. We all know this is right, and there can be no question about it.

Not only so; but when we become rash and manifest a belligerent spirit ourselves, we know that we are not following in the steps of the meek and lowly Jesus. We know that such conduct is clearly condemned in the word of God. The Holy Spirit admonishes Christians: "Do all things without murmurings and questionings; that e may become blameless and harmless, children of God without blemish in the midst of a crooked and perverse generation, among whom ye are seen as lights in the world." (Phil. 2: 14, 15.) Again the Spirit declares, through the apostle Paul: "Ye are witnesses, and God also, how holily and righteously and unblamably we behaved ourselves toward you that believe." (1 Thess. 2: 10.) And again we find in the Thessalonian letter: "To the end he may establish your hearts unblamable in holiness before our God and Father, at the coming of our Lord Jesus with all his saints." (1 Thess. 3: 13.) Christ died in order that he might present Christians holy and without blemish, unreprovable before him. The standard of life held up for the Christian in the New Testament is a perfect one, Christians need not hope to so live that they will not be reproved and censured, but they should hope to so live that they are not justly to be blamed or censured. Their lives are to be such that they cannot be justly reproved.

"Music in the Apostolic Age."

BY M. C. K.

At the request of friends who think it will do good, we are glad to publish, on page 701 in this issue of the Gospel Advocate, from the Christian Standard of April 27, 1918, an article by Brother Z. T. Sweeney on the subject placed at the head of this editorial.

Our brother makes a number of observations on the history of music which, though true in and of themselves, nevertheless, as it seems to us, have no necessary connection with, or bearing upon, the only point at issue over the music question. Hence, concerning what he says on the origin of music and its monophonic, antiphonic, and polyphonic character, we raise no question at all and make no objection, for the simple reason that it is all immaterial to the only issue between him and us in the music controversy. Neither is it material to the issue whether they had contrapuntal, polyphonic, or homophonic music; but it is material to the issue—and to this we invite our brother's special attention-that all the polyphonic and contrapuntal music to which he refers was vocal and not instrumental. Whether the early Christians confined themselves to the canto fermo, as it is styled in ecclesiastical parlance, or had the more complex contrapuntal and polyphonic music, it was all vocal, and such an appeal is barren of support for his cause as long as he fails to find instrumental music in it. In the realm of music, there are two kinds-vocal and instrumental; and we maintain that God legislated in this realm, and in that legislation provided for and appointed vocal music, but did not provide for and did not appoint instrumental music. This, and this alone, is the issue; and if it can be shown that God, when speaking in this realm, provided for instrumental music as he did for vocal, then, and then only, can the position favoring instrumental music be maintained.

Brother Sweeney says:

That instruments were used early in the church is clear from the fact that some of the Fathers opposed the use of them. They could not oppose such usage if such usage was not in existence.

Of course they could not; but what does that prove? It shows that, for some reason, the Fathers opposed such is 1826; but it is not reasonable to suppose they would have entered such opposition if instrumental music in Christian worship had been handed down from the apostolic age with the stamp of apostolic approval upon it.

But let us paraphrase our brother's remarks and see how it will do: "That infant baptism and sprinkling and pouring for baptism were used early in the church is clear from the fact that some of the Fathers opposed the use of them. They could not oppose such usage if such usage was not in existence." What does our brother say to this? Does this ancient usage settle the question of divine authority for such things? And if it settles it for one of these points, why not for the other? But he not only knows it does not settle it, but he would be far from admitting the validity of such reasoning if applied to infant baptism and to sprinkling and pouring for baptism. Then, we respectfully ask, how can he consistently apply it to the music question?

Again, he says: "Having eliminated polyphonic, antiphonic, and also contrapuntal music, we are shut up necessarily to monophonic music." Well, what if we are? And what if it "was a simple crooning or droning rhythm?" It was vocal music, and not instrumental, and that is the only point at issue.

We have made a thorough examination of all available facts in the case of Clement of Alexandria, and our brother would be unable, we are quite sure, to establish as a fact what he says about him, although, even if it were established, it still falls short of divine authority. For a full discussion of the case of Clement, we refer the reader to our larger work on "Instrumental Music in the Worship," pages 118-134.

We are also thoroughly familiar with the case of Pliny the younger; but again the quotation our brother makes from him shows that the music was vocal and not instrumental. And what if it does "show the singing of the apostolic church to have been an individual matter, and not congregational singing?" That does not alter or in any way affect the fact that it was, nevertheless, singing, or vocal music, and not instrumental. No matter if it was done by individuals "each in turn," and no matter if all the music of the apostolic age consisted exclusively of solos, yet it was vocal music, and not instrumental, and this is the only point at issue. Hence, it is wholly immaterial whether there is anything in the New Testament "to show that congregational singing is required to carry out the meaning of the writer;" but it is material whether the music made by one person at a time or by a thousand in concert was vocal or instrumental. There is no issue over how many persons may properly make music in concert in the worship of God. God has not legislated on this point, and therefore we must not. Hence, one person can make music by divine authority in the worship of God or a multitude in concert can do so; but neither can find divine authority for making but one kind of music in that worship-namely, vocal music.

Finally, our brother makes this significant concession in his concluding remarks:

From the above facts I draw the conclusion that instrumental music is not authorized in the New Testament—nor is it forbidden. The organ is an innovation. So is the congregational singing of our brethren that ban the organ. If we wish to be strictly apostolic in the method of our singing, we must give up the organ, and also our congregational singing as we have it, and return to the old droning and crooning of the apostolic age.

But hold, dear brother! We are not debating about "the method of our singing," and there is not even an issue between us over "the method of our singing," Neither do we object to the organ because it "is an innovation." Innovations—"a change in custom; something new, and contrary to custom"—are all right and proper when they do not interfere with God's order by entering a realm in which he himself has spoken and settled things for us. In any realm, such as the method of conducting the worship, or "the method of singing," or the method of doing anything else which God has commanded, the method of doing which he has not prescribed, we are at liberty, of course, to choose a method, and must choose one, of doing the thing commanded; and in such a case, it violates no principle for one man or church to choose one method. and another man or church another method. We are not contending for a "return to the old droning and crooning of the apostolic age," and we agree with our brother that it is not necessary to do so. But we are contending that the music we make in the worship of God shall be the music which he himself has chosen and appointed for that worship. To make the point here perfectly clear, we again paraphrase our brother's words as follows: "From the above facts I draw the conclusion that infant baptism is not authorized in the New Testament-nor is it forbidden." Without a moment's hesitation and appealing to the Bible as our standard, we now propose that for every flaw in either logic or doctrine which he will point out in either one or both of our paraphrases of his words, we will point out the same flaw in both logic and doctrine in his statement. We gladly tender to him the use of our columns for the effort, the only condition that we feel it proper to stipulate being that both sides shall appear in the Christian Standard as well as in the Gospel Advocate.

When and Where to Preach the Gospel.

BY E. A. E.

In order to reply to Brother Bradley's question, I shall have to postpone the article on the world until next week:

"FIFTY YEARS' ATTITUDE TOWARD THE DENOMINATIONS."

Dear Brother Elam: I sincerely believe you to be strictly loyal to the truth, and also believe you to be capable above many of passing a scriptural and just criticism upon the life work of any one of your brethren. I therefore submit this sketch of "my attitude toward the denominations for fifty years," and ask you to kindly point out my mistakes, through the Gospel Advocate.

I shall be as brief as possible, so as to give you my acts for fifty years, which I wish to pass under your scrutiny. I can do this, I think, better, and in a shorter way, by speaking of one of my regular preaching points for thirty My first sermon in that town was in a small schoolhouse. Then the Baptists tendered us the use of their spiendid house, both for our monthly visits and also for a meeting. In that meeting, I think, I baptized twenty-two, and had a few from the denominations. Within a year a nice new house was built. The cause prospered. Other preachers did some preaching, especially in pro-tracted meetings. One faithful old brother (new dead) preached alternately with me for two years, I think. Finally the Methodists built a house. There are also Presbyterians near by, but they have no church in town. people of all these denominations, more or less, attend the services of the church of Christ, both Sunday school and preaching. Especially do the Methodists do so, because the services at the church of Christ are in the morning, and in the evening at the Methodist Church. For almost a year we allowed the Methodists to use our house monthly. During all these years I am sure those people have heard me preach more than one hundred times and upon as many subjects. Let me give the subjects just as I have them set subjects. Let me give the subjects just as I have them set down in a memorandum book for 1991 at this place: "The First Day of the Week;" "Hear Ye Him;" "Justified by Many Things;" "Crown of Life;" "Faith;" "Repentance;" "Confession;" "Baptism;" "The Reason of the Hope; "The Heart, Purification, and Religion;" "In Christ;" "Seek, and Ye Shall Find;" "Salvation and Loss of the Soul;" "The Righteous, Ungodly, and Sinner;" "The Race for the Crown;" "Take Heed Unto Thyself;" "Labor in the Vineyard;" "Heartfelt Religion;" "Does God Ever Repent;" "The Family of God;" "Preach the Word;" "What Must I Do to Be Saved?" "Forgiveness: "Christ, the Only Way;" etc. I think I can find among my papers other memorandums of an earlier date. I am my papers other memorandums of an earlier date. I am certain I can produce a book of subjects I preached on at this place of a more recent date. The ones I have given show about what those people heard from me.

I have been invited by the Methodists there several times to preach in their house. One time I was urged by their preacher to preach in his place. I consented. My subject that time was "Doing the Commandments." At another time (my memorandum does not state what year) the subject was "Seek, and Ye Shall Find." Last fall Last fall these Methodists invited me repeatedly to visit them again. I had not been there for several years. I consented, My appointment at their church was at 2:30 P.M. and at night. I attended worship at the church of Christ at 10 A.M., when the elder asked me to make a talk for the church instead of having their regular Sunday-school lesson. had a right good-sized audience for only a regular Lord's They invited me to visit them at some other day service. time, which I agreed to do. My two subjects at the Methodist Church were "True Worship" and "Temptation."

I have been censured very sharply for not using subjects of a more radical nature upon that occasion, such as "Baptism for the Remission of Sins," "Infant Baptism," "Mourners'-Bench Religion," "Sprinkling and Pouring for Baptism," "Faith Only," etc. The same brother has censured me many times under like circumstances, and upon the same grounds, during the many years that I have been preaching in this country. These very Methodists for many years have heard me upon those very themes and well know our teaching upon these issues.

Did I show unfaithfuiness because I did not "pitch into" these Methodists upon their errors? Do you think, Brother Elam, that I should have asked them to let the organ remain silent, which they were using in their own Sunday-school service just preceding the time for my sermon? Should I have preached a sermon upon "The Instrument and Its Sinfulness" right there in their own house? They well know that I do not favor its use in the service of God.

I was invited to preach in another Methodist Church last fall where they use the organ. A sister there asked for the use of the house for a few sermons, and asked me to carry song books. I asked those people not to use the organ in our part of the service, but we asked them to help sing, which they did.

This is (and has been for fifty years) my course in regard to the denominations. Where are my mistakes?

I R REALES

Three things are essential to the true and faithful preacher whose work God accepts—(1) the right theme, (2) the true and right motive, (3) the right manner. Error and all kinds of false doctrine may be preached in an earnest and attractive way, but that does not turn error into the truth; the truth may be preached in a partisan and bitter spirit, a pungent way, a holier-than-thou and condemnatory manner, a self-important and "knowing" air, or a "smart-alecky" style, which are the very opposite of humility and faith, wisdom and love, grace and the Spirit of Christ, and are very hurtful to the speaker and the audience; and either error or the gospel may be preached through love of money, popularity, and place, or through any other motive, except the true one of pleasing and honoring God and saving souls.

The preacher's heart must be right in the sight of God.

Paul was a model preacher in what he preached, his motive, and his manner. We all know he preached "the gospel," "the word," "the whole counsel of God," and nothing else. We all know that he "determined not to know anything" among the people, "save Jesus Christ, and him crucified" (1 Cor. 2: 2); that he preached not himself (his own exploits and family arrangements and excellencies or deficiencies, or his own wisdom and ways), "but Christ Jesus as Lord," and himself only a bond servant "for Jesus' sake." (2 Cor. 4: 5.) We all know that his "speech" and "preaching" ("the thing preached"margin) "were not inpersuasive words of wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit and power," that the faith of his hearers "should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God." (1 Cor. 2: 4, 5.) We all know that he said, "Woe is unto me if I preach not the gospel," and that he sought the salvation of the people and was moved with "anxiety for all the churches." He sought the edilication, development, unity and peace and greatest good of all the churches. He shamed the church at Corinth for dividing in feeling over men, himself being one. Shame, SHAME, SHAME! on the man who will divide a congregation over himself or allow one to divide over himself. Paul would not only not allow this, because Christ is not divided, but he adapted himself to all conditions and circumstances among Jews and Gentiles, becoming "all things to all men" that he "might gain the more;" yet "doing all things for the gospel's sake," always obedient to the "law of Christ," and never seeking his own comfort and advancement and glory. (1 Cor. 9: 19-23.) He was never coarse, discourteous, uncouth, and unchristian; but always dignified, courteous, and respectful to others and their convictions, and yet never failing in loyalty to Christ, and, therefore, to plainly teach "the whole counsel of God." A man does not have to be bitter and spiteful, coarse and hateful, in order to preach in firmness and loyalty and power the whole truth.

We all know that "the power of God" to save is the gospel, and that if the faith of people "stands" in "the power of God" and not "in the wisdom of men," the gospel and not the wisdom of men and the spirit and ways of the world must be preached. Many people just at this time are hungry for the gospel; they are anxious to know the will of God. It is a source of great grief that in many places almost everything except the gospel is being preached.

Having the right theme, the right motive, and an earnest and serious and courteous manner, one man cannot be forced to preach after another man's manner. Brother Lipscomb told me that, when he was comparatively a young preacher, a very strong and convincing preacher became worried at his manner of presenting the gospel, told him he would never make a convert, and at times would explain to the audience what Brother Lipscomb meant. Brother Lipscomb told this preacher it was not necessary to explain what he meant, because the people had good sense and could understand him. We all know something of the firmness of Brother Lipscomb and the great good he accomplished.

The one serious and all-important question is, not where, but what, one preaches. What one preaches and the spirit and manner in which one preaches depend upon why one preaches. When one seeks to be in the limelight all the while, he will be doing sensational things, or common things in some sensational or odd way, in order to attract attention to himself, that it may go forth that he himself is "some great one" and the people may say: "This man is that power of God which is called Great." (Acts 8: 9, 10.) One may make a "show" of "wisdom," of "humility," and even "severity to the body," in egotism and vanity and without love for God and man and without the spirit of Jesus,

Jesus preached in synagogues on Saturdays, in the temple every day during the week, in cities and villages, on mountains, in plains, in private houses, in journeys, from boats in the edge of the sea and while crossing the sea, in the upper room where he instituted the Lord's Supper, in his trials before Annas and Caiaphas and Pilate, while on the cross, and after his resurrection. He then sent out his apostles to "preach the gospel to the whole creation" and to "teach all the nations." A glance at their work will show that they preached in every place and at any time of day or night they could find an audience of one man, a household, or thousands. The disciples as well as the apostles "went about preaching the word." "Go, and do thou likewise."

When Jesus and the apostles preached in the temple and synagogues, they did not require or even request the Jews to change their order of worship on that occasion, but to accept the gospel and, therefore, to worship God "in spirit and truth" thereafter. Neither did they compromise the gospel and preach Judaism to please the Jews. In firmness and courtesy and kindness they preached the gospel in the Spirit and power of God until the Jews either accepted it or expelled them from such places. Just so, in order to preach the gospel in houses belonging to the Jews, Catholics, and other denominations, it is not necessary to require these denominations to set aside their own music and other ways of worship. God does require of the preacher, however, to preach the gospel, the word, Christ crucified, "the whole counsel of God," "all things that pertain unto life and godliness," and to do so in the spirit of Christ and love of souls. The preacher must be allowed to do this in grace and love and wisdom and in loyalty to Christ. Just how long he can do this and not be expelled from such places, as Jesus and the apostles were from the temple and synagogues, depends upon whether or not his hearers intend to practice "the whole counsel of God."

Some seem to think they cannot preach in a denominational house unless they compromise the truth and preach denominationalism. The sin is not in where they preach, but in compromising the truth or failing to preach the whole truth. Preaching the gospel in the synagogues and preaching Judaism are two very different things; just so, preaching the gospel—"the whole counsel of God"—in any house belonging to any denomination and preaching denominationalism are two quite different things. Preaching the gospel in any place where "the whole counsel of God" is not practiced and the gentleness and love, forgiveness and spirit of Christ are not manifested is a very different thing from so preaching and teaching as to encourage disobedience to God and to fill people with a worldly spirit.

Brother Bradley would have done wrong had he refused to preach the gospel to these denominations or to any persons; and we know he would have committed sin against them and God had he compromised the truth to please them.

Furthermore, the preacher who would refuse to preach the gospel when invited, or when he has the opportunity to do so, in gambling dens, whisky saloons, or bawdy houses, would be untrue to God and the inmates of such places—would commit sin. In order to preach the gospel to such people, however, he does not have to connect himself with such houses. He could not connect himself with such houses and preach the gospel or live the Christian life. Connecting himself with such houses and preaching so as to encourage such practices is as different from preaching the gospel and being a Christian as heaven is from perdition.

You will not be sorry for hearing before judging, for thinking before speaking, for holding an angry tongue, for stopping the ear to a talebearer, for disbelieving most of the ill reports, for being kind to the distressed, for being kind toward everybody, for doing good to all men, for asking pardon for all wrongs, for speaking evil of no one, for being courteous to all.—Selected.

An Unintentional Compliment.

Jealousy is the unintentional compliment that small people pay to their superiors. No one is ever jealous of the person he considers beneath him. Jealousy belongs only to little souls and is a frank admission of the other man's superiority. 0 0 0

Do Not Censure the Preacher.

The preacher is not always to blame. The minister is not to be censured because some hearers get nothing out of his sermon. The trouble is often with the hearer and not with the preacher. One may lead a horse to water, but he cannot force him to drink. A preacher is not responsible for the manner in which his auditors hear.

No Argument in Assertion.

The Lord at the present time by his Holy Spirit gives direct revelations to his people which are not recorded in his written word. He sends some on missions, directing them when and where to go by his Spirit .- B. F. Rhodes.

A brother requests me to reply to the above, but there is nothing to which to reply. Bald assertion is not proof. "And when they shall say unto you, Seek unto them that have familiar spirits and unto the wizards, that chirp and that mutter: should not a people seek unto their God? on behalf of the living should they seek unto the dead? To the law and to the testimony! if they speak not according to this word, surely there is no morning for them." (Isa. 8: 19, 20.) "If they hear not Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded, if one rise from the dead." (Luke 16: 31.) The man who will not hear Moses and the prophets, Christ and the apostles, is a good one to let alone, for there is no light in him.

With the Smile.

Smiling can be done without the face being seen. "It is our constant aim," says the Bell Telephone Company, "to promote the 'voice with the smile." The public knows how effectively this great service corporation has trained its army of operators to use "the voice with the smile." Business letters can often be written "with the smile," and usually they ought to be; such letters create good will and sell goods. We who are Christians ought not to be behind the most capable business people in using "the voice with the smile," and in bringing a genuine radiance into all our work and relationships. The Christian can into all our work and relationships. The Christian can have supernatural power in this all the time, by simply yielding to and believing in Him who sheds abroad the love of God in our hearts. The smiling life is the winning life; and habitual winning is the Christian's first business. -Sunday School Times.

Christians should be the happiest people in the world. The Bible admonishes them to rejoice. "Rejoice in the Lord always: again I will say, Rejoice." (Phil. 4: 4.) Christians should rejoice that Christ is proclaimed. "Rejoice evermore." 0 0 0

Military Training.

The government is going to have military instruction given to young men, as is clear from an extract from a letter sent by the Secretary of War to all colleges and universities:

Military instruction under officers and noncommissioned officers of the army will be provided in every institution of college grade, enrolling for the instruction one hundred or more able-bodied students over the age of eighteen. The necessary military equipment will, so far as possible, be provided by the government. There will be created a military training unit in each institution. Enlistment will be purely voluntary, but all students over the age of eighteen will be encouraged to enlist. The enlistment will constitute the student a member of the army of the United States, liable to active duty at the call of the President. It will, however, be the policy of the government not to call the members of the training units to active duty until they have reached the age of twenty-one, unless urgent military necessity compels an earlier call. Students under eighteen, and therefore not legally eligible for enlistment, will be encouraged to enroll in the training units. Provisions will be made for coordinating the Reserve Officers' Training Corps system, which exists in about one-third of the collegiate institutions, with this broader plan.

Thirteen-Year-Old Refugee Becomes an A. R. C. Worker.

After a twenty-kilometer walk and a long journey to Paris in the train, little Eloi Beaussart, aged thirteen, a refugee from the invaded regions, found himself alone at the Gare du Nord. He started out with his parents, but was separated from them at the outset. An American Red Cross worker found the brave little chap sitting on his baggage, which consisted of two big feed sacks, twenty kilos of beans, a cross cut saw, two axes, some harness, and a gas mask.

When he was asked whether he had any relations in Paris, he replied that he had an aunt and a grandmother, but he did not know his aunt's married name. He knew the name of the street she lived on, and so the A. R. C. man set out, and, visiting every house on the street, finally arrived at the right one.

Now the youngster is the happiest child in Paris. He has a khaki uniform with an A. R. C. on his collar. He works for the canteen department of the American Red Cross.-Paris Red Cross Bulletin.

The churches by making a contribution to the Red Cross may do a great work now in relieving the starving and suffering. If Christians desire to make their contributions collectively through the church treasury, they should be liberal in doing so. Individuals may make individual contributions in the name of Christ, giving God the glory. Christians can hardly realize that God will not held them guiltless if they fail to respond to the necessities of suffering humanity. With the world bathed in blood and tears, it is no time for Christians to sit with folded hands. As the Master worked "while it is day," so Christians should work now, realizing that the night of death draweth near, when no man can work. There are so many hungry to be fed, so many wounds to be dressed, and so many dead to be buried that no one can complain of a lack of opportunity for doing good. It would be well for all Christians to remember that Jesus says: "Whosoever shall give to drink unto one of these little ones a cup of cold water only, in the name of a disciple, verily I say unto you he shall in no wise lose his reward." It will be inexpressibly sweet when we stand before the judgment bar of God to have Christ say unto us: "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of these my brethren, ye did it unto me."

Brother McQuiddy: The church of Christ in one of our neighboring towns had a union prayer meeting with the Methodists, and a young man was sprinkled in the church of Christ. Please give us scripture for this.

MRS. OLLIE ALLOWAY.

I am not so sure that I get the meaning of the querist. I assume that she means that a young man had water sprinkled upon him in a church house of Christ belonging to Christians. There is no scripture for sprinkling water upon a young man for Christian baptism either in the house of Christians or anywhere else. People who enjoyed Christian baptism in the days of the apostles went "unto the water," where there was "much water," "went down into the water." and "came up out of the water," were "buried in baptism" and were "born of the water." Those who have proper respect for the word of God will do likewise now.

Brother McQuiddy: Please explain 1 Tim. 6: 16. Does the writer here mean to say that Christ is the only one possessing immortality, or does he mean to say that Christ, possessing immortality, dwells in the light which no man can approach unto; and if so, does the light mean the immediate presence of God?

J. M. Dennis.

The passage reads: "Who only hath immortality, dwelling in light unapproachable; whom no man hath seen, nor can see; to whom be honor and power eternal. Amen." The passage teaches that we enjoy immortality through Jesus Christ. He is the source from whence there comes to man eternal life. We read: "For as the Father hath life in himself, even so gave he to the Son also to have life in himself." (John 5: 26.) In Christ there is life, light, and immortality. Being the Son of God and dwelling in the light of God, he is surrounded by divine splendors upon which no mortal can gaze.

Brother McQuiddy: (1) Please show from the Scriptures where any or all Christians have the right to baptize penitent believers. (2) Please explain Ex. 4: 24, which reads: "And it came to pass on the way at the lodging place, that Jehovah met him, and sought to kill him." X.

We learn from Acts 8: 4 that "they therefore that were scattered abroad went about preaching the word." Whenever hearers became believers, those who did the preaching received them into Christ. They could not receive them into Christ without baptizing them, since believers are baptized into Christ. "Or are ye ignorant that all we who were baptized into Christ Jesus were baptized into his death?" (Rom. 6: 3,) We learn that Ananias baptized Saul of Tarsus. The Holy Spirit says of him: "Now there was a certain disciple at Damaseus, named Ananias; and the Lord said unto him in a vision, Ananias." (Acts 9: 10.) He baptized Saul into Christ. If one disciple has a right to baptize, then another has the same right. Where there is an established church, however, in order to do things decently and in order, it would be well for the elders to appoint some one to look after this work. Preachers are usually prepared to do such work, are good Baptists, and, therefore, usually do the baptizing. It appears that Paul usually had some one with him to do the baptizing for him. (2) This passage is very difficult to understand. The preceding verse reads: "And I have said unto the, Let my son go, that he may serve me; and thou hast refused to let him go: behold, I will slay thy son, thy firstborn." This evidently refers to the death of the firstborn in Egypt upon Pharaoh's utter refusal to let God's people go. The lodging place spoken of in this verse was not a hotel or place of entertainment such as are in common use to-day.

In that age of the world travelers generally endeavored to reach a well where they filled heir leather bottles with fresh water, and having clogged their camels or asses, permitted them to graze near their lodging place, keeping watch over them by turns. This is all we are to understand from the lodging place. It appears that God had commanded Moses to circumcise his son Gershom or Eliezer, it does not appear which. But Moses had failed to do this. As a child, therefore, was not in covenant relationship until circumcised, God is represented as seeking to bring about the natural death of the child. Zipporah, Moses' wife, becoming acquainted with the nature of the case and realizing the danger to her firstborn, took a sharp stone and cut off the foreskin of her son. By this act the displeasure of the Lord was turned aside. Zipporah considered herself as now allied to God because of this circumcision. The cutting off of this son should not be regarded as God taking vengeance on the child to bring the father to repentance, for such is not the case. According to the law, we learn that the uncircumcised child was to be cut off from his people, so that there should be no inheritance for that branch of the family in Israel. Moses, therefore, for neglecting to circumcise the child, exposed him to this cutting off, and it was prevented by the prompt obedience of Zipporah. Gen. 17: 14 declares: "And the uncircumcised male who is not circumcised in the flesh of his foreskin, that soul shall be cut off from his people; he hath broken my covenant." Moses violated this law of God in neglecting to circumcise his child. Jehovah, therefore, was about to proceed against him with that severity which the law required, and this was averted only by the obedience of his wife.

Brother McQuiddy: A brother comes into a community and identifies himself with a congregation without any formality; said congregation encourages him to such extent that he proves by his conduct to be worthy, and afterwards makes him an officer of the congregation, and he serves for several years in that capacity; he then quits coming, only when it suits him; the church admonishes him, and he then claims the church has no claim on him. What course should be pursued?

J. C. Orndorff.

The church should not have received the brother into fellowship unless it was acquainted with his former life. Those unacquainted should bring letters of commendation to the church. However, where one is known to a church and his life is open and above reproach, it is not necessary to have a letter of commendation. If a Christian does wrong and is guilty of grievous sins, he brings reproach on the cause of Christ in the community where he lives. Just so, if a man has membership in any church, it is where he lives and does his work. After he has stood identified with the church and has been recognized in the church, if he does any wrong, it brings reproach on the church with which he has stood identified. If he has committed grievous wrongs and refuses to walk orderly as the Holy Spirit directs, then the church should withdraw from him as any other disorderly walking member. The teaching of the Holy Spirit is clear upon this point where he directs: "Now we command you, brethren, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye withdraw yourselves from every brother that walketh disorderly, and not after the tradition which they received (2 Thess. 3: 6.) Simply because the brother identified himself with the church without any formality does not lessen his responsibility nor release him from the oversight of the church. The church should insist on his living an orderly and Christian life; and if he continues to refuse to do so, then it should withdraw fellowship from him in order that he may be brought to repentance and be saved and for the protection of the

CHURCH NEWS

Anniston, July 11.—Brother J. Pettey Ezell closed a very interesting and profitable meeting here last week. spoke to very large audiences every night. Four were added to the church while he was here and two more on the following Lord's day. Brother Ezell has a warm place in the hearts of the members of the West End Church, because he is the father in the gospel of many of them. He came here through the influence of Brother R. S. King about three years ago and established a working congregation of three. For three weeks he preached to five and six people. He returned the fol-lowing year for another meeting. As the result of his hard labors and sacrifices, we have now a congregation of about one hundred members. We all love and appreciate Brother Ezell very We all much. He has been a great help and encouragement to me during the short time I have been associated with him. May God's blessings rest upon him and his family while he is out preaching the gospel to a dying world.-C. H. Woodroof.

Valdosta, July 16.—I am at present in a meeting at Mount Pleasant. There are some signs of life here. I have just closed a good meeting with Bethel Church, near Bell, Fla. We had the largest crowds ever had there, with nine additions. The boys' leaving for the war, a Fourth-of-July picnic, and rain almost every day were the things that hindered; but a loyal bunch of brethren, a good song leader in the person of Sister Mamie Slaughter and a fine bunch of boys and girls to back her, and the very best efforts of my life were the things that helped. The brethren and every one else treated me well. I will begin a meeting at Dade City, Fla., the first Sunday in August .- William Rucker.

I will be busy in meetings from July 21 on through September, and expect a harvest of souls for Christ. I am proud of the work that loyal preachers are doing, but I feel sad indeed when I read of strife and confusion. Brethren, some souls are sure to be damned, if conditions continue as they are. I am afraid when we try to settle these difficulties we use man-made diplomacy. I firmly believe that God will help us if we will take our trials and troubles to him in prayer. Of course we pray, but how long do we make our prayers? I feel that a man must "pray without I would like to see some of ceasing." our preaching brethren meet and pray all day—yes, pray day and night—in "sackcloth and ashes," and I am sure God would help take away this contention and strife. I want to ask every Advance in Musical Education.

In view of the fact that we Americans spend over six hundred million dollars annually on music, approximately seventeen million dollars a year more for music education than for all the other branches of education above the graded schools, it does seem strange that the American system of musical education has not been more standardized. A boy girl can begin his or her education either along classical or special lines in our public schools to-day in almost any part of the country and carry it system-atically through until he or she has become highly specialized in that particular branch at the country's foremost universities. Throughout the education, regardless of the location and almost regardless of the branch of study, the system of study of the various subjects is so closely correlated and so carefully compiled that the student loses no time, and each separate branch of study is given full credit in the study of another.

It is not so in a musical education, however. The average boy or girl, beginning the study of piano under a private teacher, is tutored under that par-ticular teacher's own method. When the pupil enters the musical department of the high school, the method is again entirely different and no credit is given for the work that has already been com-When the pupil enters college, pleted. the same difficulty arises. As there are thousands of private teachers, there are also thousands of systems of teaching; and as there has been no standard textbook, there is no basis on which proper credit for the musical work already done can be given.

Standardization of music teaching and school credits for music study are subjects receiving serious attention by educational authorities throughout the country. From the present indication, mu-sical education is taking a decided step toward this accomplishment; and it seems that it will soon be the rule in high school rather than the exception to give credits toward graduation for outside study of music.

The difficulty in the past has been the lack of a general textbook and standard course of study that could be universally used. There are such textbooks in almost every other branch of study in the public schools, but not in music. At last the proper series of study and the proper text has evidently been perfected. A number of world-renowned artists, including Leopold Godowsky, Emil Sauer, Josef Hoffman, Edgar Stillman-Kelly, and others, have prepared from the vast source of the world's best musical literature in a thoroughly practical way what is known as the "Progressive Series of Piano Lessons," and they are being adopted all over America.

The scope of this series of piano lessons takes in the entire field of piano study, closely correlating every individual topic or branch and taking them up in their proper place in the education of the pupil in progressive form. The adoption of this method of piano teaching by the leading colleges and con-servatories and by thousands of high schools and private teachers throughout America seems to solve the problem, and is hoped that the time is not far off when a boy or girl in any section of our nation may begin a musical education that may be successfully carried through to its completion in every respect in line with the education of others and receive tull credit for every hour's study.

Another Good Colorado Meeting.

BY E. C. FUQUA.

I have just returned from Bellyue (near Fort Collins), where I conducted a three-weeks' meeting. Five souls were added to the Lord's kingdom as a result of my effort. The meeting closed at the water on Monday morning, where I baptized into Christ the father and mother of Brother Albert Little. These old people were nearly seventy years of age. They had been sprinkled early in life, but had never been baptized into Christ because they had never been shown the whole truth. I baptized a young lady also, he was visiting in the community. She was from Wyoming. It was from me that she first heard the gospel preached, and she related afterwards how that she had felt that every word of my sermon was addressed by the Lord to herself alone, and she could not but obey. She said she did not know what her father and mother would say when they learned of her action, but she was sure it would bring upon her a storm of persecution. She will be the only member of the church of the Lord in her home town. I told her that it might possibly result in the planting of the truth in that town and in the conversion of her parents; for I x-pect, the Lord willing, to try to open a work there myself during the coming winter. Two others who had been drawn into the follies of the "Christian Church" renounced their mistake and boldly took their stand with those who are content to "walk by faith." In all, this meeting was a great success.

A cloudburst almost ruined Bellvue during the meeting, and several of the brethren, especially Sister Sidney, a widow, were badly damaged. Some buildings were entirely washed away, others turned around, and water from several inches to several feet deep in several homes. Crops were washed away and many acres of fine land either carried away or covered deep in sand and rock. I was caught across the river and held for four days, the bridges all being made impassable; but we finally resumed the meeting, with the above results. Belivue is the place where I have begged so long to have brethren send means to help pay the meetinghouse debt off. About fifty dollars yet remain to be paid, and these poor brethren have done all they could have done. It would be a great blessing to them if others could lift this debt for them. If you wish to help them, address your means to Elmore Willis, Bellvue, Col. He is one of the elders. Bellvue is about five hundred miles from Olathe, and only about forty miles from Cheyenne, Wyo.

I am now engaged in a schoolhouse meeting a few miles from Olathe. Rains are interfering, but will soon be over, when we look for a good interest and splendid fruit. Pray for the effort.

That Ceremony Was Used.

BY J. J. VANHOUTIN.

Jesus said to his apostles: "Now ye are clean through the word which I have spoken unto you. Abide in me. and I in you. As the branch cannot bear fruit of itself, except it abide in the vine; no more can ye, except ye abide in me." (John 15: 3, 4.) Here for the first time the apostles are spoken of as being in Christ. The word which he had spoken unto them which engrafted them into the vine as branches is not recorded here; but whatever it was, it ordained them or put them into Christ for the purpose of bearing fruit, as verse 16 shows plainly that there was a transition act and ceremony by which the apostles were ordained at the time they were purified or cleansed through the word speken by Jesus. In the year 1869 an infidel opposed me for using the ceremony in Matt. 28: 19, on the plea that the apostles (as he claimed) were never baptized in accordance with the ceremony which they enjoined upon others. John's baptism had not the name of the Spirit connected with it; for Paul found twelve of John's disciples, and they had not even heard that there was any Spirit. So John's baptism did not bring any one into the Spirit, not even Jesus; for he was created (begotten) by the power of the Holy Spirit which came upon Elizabeth, enabling her to speak the word which brought about the miraculous creation of Jesus, who was born into this world, and after he became of age was born again when he was baptized by John, and was the first man on earth that was ever born of water and of the Spirit. He was the beginning of the new creation. He was then in his own kingdom, and established the law of regeneration when he spoke that word to his apostles which engrafted them "into" the true vine, and they purified their souls by obeying the truth. Then they could dwell in the Father, dwell in the Son, and dwell in the Holy Spirit. And as there never was any other way by which persons are brought into the name of the Father, and of the Son. and of the Holy Spirit, only through the ceremony given by Matthew to be used in baptizing, it logically follows that Jesus used it when he ordained his apostles. If they did not use it, they did not do what Matthew says Jesus commanded them to do; but Mark says they did, and that settles the ceremony.

Nuxated Iron To Help Make Healthier Women and Stronger Sturdier Men

Say These City Physicians—By Enriching the Blood and Creating Thousands of New Red Blood Cells It Increases the Strength and Endurance of Delicate, Nervous, Run-Down Folks in Two Weeks' Time in Many Instances.

SINCE the discovery of organic from, Nuxated Iron or "Fer Nuxate," as the French call it, has taken the country by storm, it is conservatively estimated that over three million people annually are taking it in this country alone. Most astonishing results are reported from its use by both physicians and laymen.

Dr. Ferdinand King, a New York Physician and Medical Author, when interviewed on this subject, said; "There can be no sturdy from men without iron. Pallor means anaemia. Anaemia means from deficiency. The skin of anaemic men and women is pale; the flesh flabby. The muscles lack tone; the brain fags and the momory falls and often they become weak, nervous, irritable, despondent and melancholy. When the iron goes from the blood of women, the roses go from their cheeks.

meiancholy. When the iron goes from the of women, the roses go from their cheeks.

"Therefore you should supply the iron deficiency in your food by using some form of organic iron, just as you would use sait when your food has not enough sait."

Dr. James Francis Suffixan, formerly Physician of Bellevue Hospital (Out-Door-Dopt), New York, and the Westchester County Hospital says: "In my talks to physicians I have strongly emphasized the great necessity of their making blood examinations of their weak, anaemic, rum-down patients. Thousands of persons go on suffering year after year, doctoring themselves for all kinds of ills, when the real and true cause underlying their condition is simply a lack of sufficient from in the red blood corpuscles to enable nature to transform the food they eat into brawn, muscle tissue and brain. But beware of the old forms of metallic from which frequently do more harm than good.

"Notwithstanding all that has been said and written on this subject by physicians formerly connected with well known hospitals thousands of people still hissist in dosing themselves with metallic iron simply, I suppose, because it costs a few cents less. I strongly advise readers in all cases, to get a physician's prescription for organic from—Nuxated from—or if you don't want to go to this trouble then purchase only Nuxated Iron in its original packages and see that this particular name (Nuxated Iron) appears on the package."

If you are not strong or well, you owe it to yourself to make the following test: See how long you can work or how far you can walk without becoming tired. Next take two fivernant tablets of ordinary Nuxated Iron three times per day after meals for two weeks. Then test your strength again and see how much you

The Church, the Red Cross, and the Cantonment.

BY F. B. SHEPHERD.

Unprecedented conditions call forth exceptional methods of procedure; hence if my subject has an uncommon title, it is because I am dealing with an unusual situation.

Of these institutions, one is divine, while the others are of purely human origin; yet I unhesitatingly affirm that the one cannot ignore the existence of the others, but, on the contrary, must meet the conditions which they have imposed and by its attitude determine largely its loyalty to truth, its appeal to men to-day, and the influence it shall have on the morrow of this awful conflict.

Service, which includes all that is highest and best in life, was the crowning glory of the Christ, the outstanding characteristic of the ministry of the apostle Paul, and should be the motto and slogan of the church today. The standard of greatness as set by the Son of God is the reverse of that generally recognized by the world. It is not he that leads, rules, or directs, that God looks upon as worthy of exaltation, but rather he who serves. (Matt. 20: 26, 27.) Hence, if the church would to-day exemplify the Christ, become the embodiment of Christianity, and be the highest expression of God's ideal for man (1 Pet. 2: 21), it must serve unreservedly in this the great crisis of our national life. Completely did Paul express the true philosophy of life when he wrote to the Romans (1: 14): "I am debtor both to Greeks and Barbarians, both to the wise and to the foolish." That he fully realized his obligation is manifest in Rom. 12: 15, where he exhorts them: "Rejoice with them that rejoice; weep with them that weep." That he shouldered the responsibility, we must believe from the reading of 1 Cor. 10; 33; "Not seeking mine own profit, but the profit of the many, that they may be saved." And how well he succeeded in discharging it, we gather from 1 Cor. 9: 19-22, where he affirms: "I am become all things to all men, that I may by all means save some." Coming as these expressions do, from a man whose field was the world rather than than that of conmunity, State, or country-one who served every one, religiously, voluntarily, enthusiastically—they should be heeded by men to-day.

That the church has never faced such an opportunity to serve God and man as now presents itself might be questioned by many, but that there has never been a time in its history when the need for activity was greater must be admitted; and, personally, I believe that its attitude toward the great questions of the day will perhaps determine its power to reach men tomorrow and its final acceptance with God. This principle is not necessarily peculiar to the present crisis, but one applicable in all ages. However, in our enthusiasm to serve and save (religiously speaking), let us heed the exhortation of even our government as well as the boys in training camp and trench: "Keep the home fires burning." Because I believe in preaching the gospel in the camps, I urge its necessity upon the churches I am privileged to labor with; but we must not adopt this work as something new to which we can switch our attention, hut rather as something additional that will call forth sacrifice to meet the crying need. Shall I be considered presumptuous if I say that the success of our labors among the millions of the finest physical manhood of the nation depends upon the speeding up rather than the slowing down of our activities at home (in the local congregation)? The business and financial world has adopted the attitude of "watchful waiting;" and while that is, no doubt, the wisest thing for them to do, it is no time for the church of the Lord Jesus to dally while it considers the propriety of plunging unreservedly into a renewed offensive against sin everywhere it exists. I am not of those who favor dispensing with our protracted meeting, or any other regular activity, to send the money thereby saved to help preach the gospel in the cantonments or buy supplies for the needy and suffering. What we need is to do both, and that us—fight or die. These germs are These germs are everywhere in the air we breathe. The odds are in favor of the germs, if the liver is inactive and the blood impure.

What is needed most is an increase in the germ-fighting strength. To do this successfully you need to put on healthy flesh, rouse the liver to vigorous action, so it will throw off these germs, and purify the blood so that there will be no "weak spots," or soil for germ-growth.

We claim for Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery that it does all this in a way peculiar to itself.

with greater zeal and energy than ever before manifested. How much the success of the Teuton arms would affect the freedom of Christians, no man can determine; discussions of "our attitude toward Germany after the war" I consider premature, if not unprofitable; but the vital question that should absorb our attention to-day is: What shall the church be after the war, and how well shall we be prepared to meet whatever conditions, new or old, will then confront us? I trust I am not indiscreet or disloyal when I say that the greatest and most vital question of all, the one upon which hinges the eternal destiny of our very nation, is not one of "trade treaties," "boycotts," and such like, but "Where art thou?" on the great question of peace with God, acceptance of the gospel as "God's power unto salvation," and a body presented as 'a living sacrifice." What will you do for Jesus who is called Christ?

A Good Meeting at Summerfield.

BY MISS EMMA L. MARTIN.

Brother R. E. L. Taylor, of Decherd. Tenn., recently closed a splendid meeting at Summerfield, in Grundy County, with twelve baptisms, including an aged couple-"Grandpa" and "Grandma" Sanders. Their Brother Marion Sanders, one of the strong members of the "one body." is an excellent leader, and is altogether loyal to the Lord's way. His parents are now past eighty, and his dear old mother, a sufferer for thirty years or more from rheumatism, has been confined to her room and to her bed twenty-eight years. She in an especial sense is going on her journey rejoicing. Brother Taylor visited her in her home and taught and baptized her there. It was a happy day for us all.

Brother Taylor is a convincing speaker, who fails not to declare the "whole counsel of God." He has done much preaching in Grundy County, at Sewanee, Coalmont, and other places. The fact that there are so many New Testament Christians on that mountain, right under the shadow of the University of the South, is reason for rejoicing. "Not many wise, not many noble, not many mighty are called." I thank God that the honest hearts of our mountain brethren have received the truth and that they are bearing fruit in their lives to God's glory.

Rainbow Never Shows Complete Circle.

A rainbow never shows a complete circle, but at the most only a semicircle, unless the observer happens to be at a great elevation, as in a balloon. when more than half a circle can be seen, but never an entire one. Halos and rainbows also differ in the size of the circles or semicircles that they exhibit. The radius of a halo is about twenty-two degrees and that of a rainbow about forty-two degrees. Other arches and circles are sometimes seen outside of both the rainbow and the halo, but the radii given are for the principal, or primary, phenomenon .-Exchange.

Intelligence.

An intelligent person is supposed to be one of cultivated understanding, a person who has acquired a large store of knowledge; but not necessarily in the schools or colleges, for many highly intelligent persons have been selfeducated men and women. UGH! CALOMEL MAKES YOU DEATHLY SIGK

Stop using dangerous drug before it salivates you! It's horrible!

You are bilious, sluggish, consti-pated, and believe you need vile, dangerous calomel to start your liver and clean your bowels.

Here is my guarantee: Ask your druggist for a bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone and take a spoonful to-night. If it does not start your liver and straighten you right up better than calomel and without griping or making you sick, I want you to go back to the store and get your money.

Take calomel to-day, and to-morrow you will feel weak and sick and nauseated. Do not lose a day's work. Take a spoonful of harmless, vegetable Dodson's Liver Tone to-night and wake up feeling great. It is perfectly harmless; so give it to your children any time. It cannot salivate; so let them eat anything afterwards.

Contending for the Faith.

BY J. H. PENNELL.

That the Christian has a faith, I think no one will deny; that the faith is one is another point on which we all agree; that this one faith was at some time delivered, and "once for all delivered unto the saints," is, 1 think, made clear by Jude; and that this faith is the rule by which Christians walk is set forth in Paul's second letter to the church at Corinth. That Jesus is the author and finisher of the faith is made clear by the writer of the Hebrew letter (12: 2). In defining the faith, he says it "is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen," and that through this faith (evidence) "we understand that the worlds were framed by the word of God." In John 1: 1-3 we have that faith or evidence. Again, Faul informs the Galatian brethren that it is the means by or through which they received the Spirit. (Gal. 3: 2.) Then, to make the story short, he says it is "the word of faith, which we preach." (Rom. 10: 8.)

From this we conclude that the faith "which was once for all delivered unto the saints" was none other than the gospel, the system of faith which was "kept in ward under the law, shut up unto the faith which should afterwards be revealed." (Gal. 3: 23.) It is a revelation. It was once delivered to the saints. Jesus is its author, its finisher. He never left it for Joe Smith, Ellen G. White, Charles T. Russell, Mary Baker Eddy, or any other person to finish. He finished it himself and gave it to the saints complete. By it we are justified (Rom. 5: 1); by it we are sanctified (Acts 26: 18); by It we are purified (Acts 15: 9); by it we overcome the world (1 John 5: 4); by it we are all made the children of God (Gal. 3: 26); and by it Christians walk (2 Cor. 5: 7).

This is the faith that Paul preached, which he once destroyed. (Gal. 1: 23.)

Without it, it is impossible to please God. (Heb. 11: 6.) And whatsoever is not of faith is sin. (Rom. 14: 23.)

What a wonderful faith it is-so rich, so full, so complete! It furnishes a man completely unto all good works and makes him perfect. What more could be ask? What is not included in this faith is excluded from it. It is perfect. (James 1: 25.) Why not earnestly contend for it? It is worth our every effort. Our eternal destiny depends upon it, for it is the faith that saves. So "watch ye, stand fast in the faith, quit you like men, be strong," "striving together for the faith of the gospel." And let us "keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace."

But when can we hope to come into the unity of faith? Not until our preachers and elders all get out of "No Man's Land" and into the ranks and earnestly contend for the faith with both tongue and pen until all those things which are destroying that unity are removed or destroyed.

"Whatsoever is not of faith is sin." Mormonism is nowhere mentioned in the faith; therefore it is sin. No Russellism there; hence it is sin. No isms of any kind there; then all isms must be sin. No organ or other musical instrument there; so we put them in the same class-sin. So you see I divide these things along with all societies like Josh Billings did snakes-" all in one pile." Then I just go after them all alike, making no difference. A sin is a sin; and the more innocent it looks, the more dangerous it is.

I have no quarrel with my brethren who teach school or publish a paper; both are public educators, and such we need. Education is all right if it is of the proper kind. But we do not always get the proper kind from either the school or the paper. A man may boast much of his book learning and his wonderful knowledge of English grammar, so much so that he will pose before the public as a real "know-all" and develop an egotism which pronounces a woe on any man who would ever dare cross his views, question his wisdom, or even think of gaining the same heights that he attained in the scholastic world. He becomes arrogant, and that finer nature which comes to a man through a proper knowledge of himself by reason of an education is lacking. Instead of the refined gentleman full of love and sympathy for his weaker brother, the element of destruction is abnormally developed, and every energy is used for the destruction of everything that is not in harmony with his selfish and egotistical nature. No matter how much such a one should boast of his education, everybody knows that he is woefully lacking in that line, and it is only ignorance of God and himself that makes him act in this way. I say, with such people I have no quarrel, and my reason for it is found in Prov. 26: 4.

Here is what I wanted to say: I am set for the defense of the faith, the gospel, and I will earnestly contend for it with both the tongue and the pen when I see some man or men trying to substitute something for it. I know that societyism is sin. I know that the use of the organ is sin; likewise Mormonism, Russellism, and all other kinds of isms; and neither my tongue nor pen will hold still when I see some one trying to corrupt the worship with them.

I am unable to see how any one can earnestly contend for the faith without just as earnestly contending against those things which are not of the faith.

Loss of Vitality is loss of the principle of life, and is early indicated by falling appetite and diminishing strength and endurance. Hood's Sarsaparilla is the greatest vitalizer-it acts on all the organs and functions, and bullds up the whole system. -Advt

Edifying as the Need May Be BY A. B. LIPSCOMB

"Inconsistency."

Under the above heading a Baptist scribe by the name of R. L. Riley, writing in the Baptist Builder, offers the following criticism on one of my articles:

A few weeks ago a friend of mine gave me one of his papers in which he said were some good articles. I noticed one article, entitled "The Way to Heaven."

The writer began by saying that "Jesus Christ is the way." I am sure that he is right thus far, because the Lord himself said: "I am the way, the truth, and the life."

But he goes further in the same article and says that baptism constitutes a part of the way. It was in trying to harmonize these statements that I failed to understand the writer's logic. So, after carefully reading the article, I sent the editor a note of inquiry, in the following manner, to which I have received no reply:

What is the way to heaven? Jesus Christ equals the way to heaven. 2. What is the way to heaven? Jesus Christ plus baptism, plus a good life, equals the way to heaven. Thus in figures his logic would be this:

 What equals five dozen? Sixty equals five dozen.
 What equals five dozen? Sixty plus eight, plus ten, equals five dozen.

Now, with justice to all, I cannot understand logic like that.

For illustration, if the Louisville and Nashville Railroad connects Louisville and Memphis, then why say it takes the railroad company, and a few miles on a street car, and a few miles on an auto, to put you from Louisville to Mem-

The same rule will work in spiritual things. the way from earth to heaven, and he says he is, why not let him have all the glory that belongs to him, without a plus or minus?

If he is not all the way, he is none of the way, the Campbellites and Methodists to the contrary notwithstanding.

The legs of the lame are surely not always equal.

Absence from the city prevented an earlier reply to this criticism. A little child can build a "man of straw," push it over, clap his little hands, and think he has done something great. Mr. Riley has performed such a feat and imagines he has done something wonderful in the eyes of the world. Yes, I said Christ is "the way," meaning, of course, that he is the way from earth to heaven, and this fact is more forcefully emphasized by the following: "No one cometh unto the Father, but by me." (John 14: 6.) According to my critic's logic, he is a Universalist pure and simple; for his interpretation of the words, "I am the way," excludes faith, repentance, baptism, and a godly life. If that does not admit every infidel and foul bird into heaven, then there is nothing in what he says. He does not know the meaning of "I am the way," else he would not involve himself in his present predicament. Jesus simply meant that he was the Author of the way of salvation, expressed in another form as "Jesus the author and perfecter of the faith" (Heb. 12: 2), the "faith" meaning that system of doctrine including the terms of salvation. Paul and Silas declared "the way of salvation" to the people in Philippi (Acts 16: 17); and if baptism was no part of this "way of salvation," then why were they told to be baptized (Acts 16: 32, 33)? Again, Philip preached Christ (the Way) to the eunuch; and unless in preaching Christ, "the way," he told the eunuch he must be baptized, why did the eunuch demand baptism? (Acts 8: 35, 36.) To preach Moses was to preach the law of Moses (Acts 15: 21), and to preach Christ, "the way," is to preach his law, the facts, commands, and promises of the gospel. Let us test his logic by substituting faith and repentance for baptism. "(1) What is the way to heaven? Jesus Christ equals the way to heaven. (2) What is the way to heaven? Jesus Christ plus faith, plus repentance, equals the way to heaven." Will he dare say that one can get to heaven without faith and repentance? If not, does he not make faith and repentance a part of "the way?" If he contends for faith and repentance, why does he reject baptism as a part of the way? Jesus Christ placed salvation after baptism-" He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved" (Mark 16: 16); and if in so doing he did not inseparably connect baptism with the way of salvation, then language means nothing at all. Mr. Riley closes his criticism with, "The legs of the lame are surely not always equal." Doubtless he discovered this fact from personal experience, judging from the lameness of his criticism. If, however, we were compelled to choose between lameness and blindness, we would prefer the former; for "there are none so blind as those who will not see."

Camp Bowie Notes.

BY J. H. LAWSON.

On the morning of July 5 orders came to break camp, and in a very short time everything was astir. On the morning of July 4 there was a general impression that immediately following the Fourth there would be a breaking of camp and orders to leave for "somewhere." This has been my first experience of this kind; and as it was so interesting to me and so vitally connected with my work here, I feel that the reader will be interested to know about it.

I have been in cyclone-swept districts soon after the happening; was in Ardmore, Okla., soon after the awful explosion which killed forty-six and injured over four hundred; was in an interurban wreck which killed three and crippled fifty-two, the three killed being right near me—one in the immediate front of me and the other two near my side; have witnessed many other events of thrilling nature; but never in life have I witnessed anything that so completely overshadowed everything else and caused such a diversity of occurrences as did the evacuation of Camp Bowie.

When the word went forth to "strike tents," the boys began to do so in earnest; but between breathing spells they came to the tabernacle to write farewell messages to loved ones or rushed to the telephone or telegraph office to send messages home. The Y buildings and all the tabernacles were "swamped" much of the time with boys desiring to send messages.

By Friday night the parents, wives, sweethearts, brothers, and sisters began to arrive in great numbers. Saturday morning the 143d Infantry began to entrain, followed by the 144th on Monday, the 141st on Tuesday afternoon and Wednesday morning, and the 142d on Wednesday, with the artillery and other contingents following as rapidly as possible until the thirty-three thousand had all taken their departure. Mothers, wives, and sweethearts by the hundreds with the boys, and everywhere there were tears and eyes red from crying. The boys sang through their tears, and, while clinging to fathers, mothers, sisters, or wives, they would laugh and sing and cry.

I passed through the camp from tent to tent and from battalion to battalion, from camp to train, and, in fact, from early morning to late at night I was hither and thither with those splendid specimens of manhood, and heard their conversations, heard their songs, witnessed their "good-byes," and in every way possible assisted and comforted them. Many messages were given me to deliver to parents, to wives, to sweethearts, and many times came the farewell words, "Good-by, good luck, and God bless you," from these boys.

When it became known that the camp was leaving, many of the young men would come to the tabernacle to bid me good-by, and in all my labors I have never been thanked for a work like I have with these boys. During the week this camp was moving there were baptisms almost every day and night. They came without preaching as well as when we preached. On several occasions young men came to me and said they had but a few minutes off, but wanted to be baptized if I could baptize them; and of course I was ever ready—I kept the baptistery filled all the time—and after hearing their confession I would take them into the water, while a few of the boys would sing some old, samiliar song, and there bury them with Christ in baptism, and they would return to their company in their wet clothing. Some came to say they had been out of duty and wanted me to pray with and for them that they might be restored to their former love, and this I would gladly do. Our last service was a sad one, for at that time most of the boys were "on their way," and a little bunch came to the tabernacle for a last service, and we sang and prayed and I made a short talk, after which one noble young man confessed Christ and returned to his tent in wet uniform. We were glad and yet sad; and that last service will, I doubt not, be remembered by these young men through life.

Now to each one of "our boys" I gave a New Testament and song book, and urged them to be faithful to God and to read his word daily, and to gather as often as possible and sing the old songs we had learned to love so well while in the tabernaele.

In their company streets they would gather in groups and sing, and mothers would stand around and cry. "Good-by Broadway, Hello France!" "A Baby's Prayer," "Mother Dear," "My Texas Home," "The Old Oaken Bucket," and many others of like nature were being sung in some part of the camp at almost any time of the day.

While viewing the boys as they would don their pack and gun, I would be reminded of an old-time play song that was very popular when I was a boy, and which ran something like this:

> "I'll place my knapsack on my back, My rifle on my shoulder; I'll march away to New Orleans, To fight and be a soldier,"

It made me think of boyhood days and of many who have crossed over the river.

I thank God that I have been with these boys, and I thank God for the faithful few who have stood by me and made it possible for me to render this service. My life has been a very strenuous one for some weeks, and I have walked until I have blistered both feet and have not then been able to do for these boys what I feel should have been done. I am glad to render this service, and will gladly blister my feet again to render service to the faithful young men who are to be with us here beginning in about ten days. Many of these boys urged me to go with them "over there;" and if I had the means so to do, I would gladly go and help them in every way possible. Some one who is qualified for such work should go, and I feel that it is a shame that we have no faithful man to be with these fine, true, Christian boys when they are in a strange land and among strange surroundings, to comfort them in sickness or when wounded, to encourage them when disheartened, to speak to them in temptation and in every way help them. Brethren and sisters, what shall we do for these thousands who look to us for help? Shall we pass by on the other side? Can you live in ease and luxury while these fine young men are giving themselves for us, and at the same time make no real sacrifices for them? What shall our record be? In so far as I am concerned, I am in this war to the end. I am willing to give my all. I care not for war profits. I care not for hardships. I am willing to give up the pleasures of home for a season. I could not look my son in the face and ask him to accept my kind of religion, if "my kind" had not made a sacrifice for him. I would to God that brethren and sisters would get in real earnest about the great work before them.

With renewed interest and with an experience that will be of great assistance to me, I go to the work of helping the new boys of Camp Bowie, and pray that the work may be a great success. I shall be glad to have the names and proper addresses of those in camp just as soon as they are properly classified, and I ask the readers to furnish me with those of their community.

Pray for me and the work and for all the boys who are trying to serve God. I need a Ford, tracts, books, money, etc. I need several earnest, God-fearing men and women who are willing to share the burdens. I need a helper and a singer. I need the love and sympathy of God's children.

Cain. No. 2.

BY H. LEO BOLES.

Some have concluded that Cain's offering was rejected because it did not have the sacrificial blood in it. The record is silent upon this point. The only reason given by inspiration is that it was not of faith. If we were permitted to offer a conjecture, we would say that Jehovah did not command him to offer of the fruit of the field because there was not the shedding of blood in his offering. This may be a reason for Jehovah's not commanding him to make an offering of the field, but it cannot be a reason for Jehovah's rejecting his offering; for, as we have seen, Jehovah has commanded and accepted vegetable offerings.

There may be many things that enter into an acceptable sacrifice before Jehovah. We may be sure of one element, at least, and that element is faith. This will include the condition of heart and life of the worshiper as well as specific direction from God. This is true with the sacrifices that men make to-day. There is much that is offered unto God to-day which is rejected by Jehovah because it is effered in the spirit of Cain's sacrifice. Cain's sacrifice becomes a warning to all who would attempt to render service to-day. How important that we first find instruction in the word of God for the things that are rendered unto him as service!

This is the first mention of sacrifice in the Bible. Adam may have made sacrifices unto Jehovah; but if he did, there is no mention of it in sacred history. This is where the history of sacrifices begins. What a blunder to make such a mistake in the beginning of a thing! This blunder at the beginning received its just recompense of reward and becomes the fearful warning to every one who would approach the altar of Jehovah and there offer a sacrifice of devotion unto him. Many lives have been robbed of blessings and cursed with the disapproval of Jehovah because they did not heed the warning that has been given in the history of Cain. The sin of Cain yet speaketh unto the children of men.

Our sacrifices represent our hearts and lives unto God. With Cain and Abel, each sacrifice represented the man; Cain's sacrifice represented Cain's heart and character, and Abel's represented his loyalty to God. Whatever Cain may have offered of the field, that represented his heart to God. In making an acceptable offering, the maker submits himself completely to the will of God. Just as freely and fully as the offering is placed upon the altar, so freely and fully must the man's life be dedicated to God. Anything else than that is hypocrisy and sham. Cain's offering, not being of faith, represented him as being a hypocrite. Cain is the beginning of a long line of vain worshipers which reaches to the present hour with an innumerable host of imitators. Cain's offering represented a wicked and rebellious heart; it represented human judgment as opposed to divine wisdom. Cain represents the beginning of worshipers of disbelief to God. It does not follow that simply because a man is a worshiper and makes sacrifices unto God, that he is in obedience to God. Here is the beginning of two great classes. Abel represents the beginning of true worshipers, the worshipers in spirit and in truth; Cain represents the class of vain worshipers teaching as their doctrine the commandments of men. These two classes of worshipers start at the same altar, but widely diverging. It is possible for a member of each class to-day to occupy adjacent pews, break of the same loaf, drink of the same cup, contribute in the same missionary box, sing the same song, and say "Amen" to the same prayer, and one's worship be accepted and the other rejected.

There are not only two diverging classes of worshipers which begin from this same altar, but there are also two great races of people which start from the same point. Of course, Abel is killed, but Seth takes his place in the lineage of the race. These two races are clearly distinct in their influences on the human family and the nations of earth. They are as divergent in their ethnography as they are in their worship. It may be our pleasure to trace briefly these races in future study of Old Testament characters.

While this is the first sacrifice of which we have any record, yet it may not have been the first sacrifice. It is spoken of as a well-established custom which seems to indicate that Cain and Abel had made other offerings. The universal prevalence of sacrifice shows it to have been primeval and deeply rooted in the hearts of humanity. It seems to have been based on a sense of sin and a lost communion with God. Sacrifice becomes a means by which one communicates with God. For this reason the place of sacrifice was considered holy, and later, through deep reverence of the place, monuments were erected. The one who offers the sacrifice had the consolation of being acceptable to God, of standing in the favor of Jehovah. Under the Christian economy, prayer in a certain sense takes the place of sacrifices and gifts under the old economy. "We have an altar, whereof they have no right to eat that serve the tabernacle. . . . Through him then let us offer up a sacrifice of praise to God continually, that is, the fruit of lips that make confession to his name." (Heb. 13: 10-15.)

In a peculiar sense all sacrifices were symbolical, a type or shadow of something better to come. From a close study of sacrifices it is clear that the idea as set forth under the old economy is a complex idea involving propitiation, dedication, consecration, and substitution. This is seen in the many kinds of sacrifices and offerings. We have burnt offerings, meal offerings, sin offerings, and incense offerings. Each one represents some phase of the complex idea of sacrifice. The typical sense of all these offerings is connected with the sacrifice of Christ himself, and with the sacrifices of praise, charity, thanksgiving, and devotion which we, as Christians, offer to God, and "with which he is well pleased," and which make an "odor of a sweet smell, a sacrifice acceptable, well pleasing to God." (Phil. 4: 18.) We are to understand that Cain violated every principle and law concerning the offering of sacrifices unto Jehovah and marred the type of the Lord Jesus Christ when he failed to make the offering that Jehovah had commanded him. What a sin for a worshiper of God to commit in the act of worshiping!

The Kingdom of Israel. No. 6. BY F. W. SMITH.

"Thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's wife." The darkest chapter in David's life—and, all things considered, one of the darkest chapters in the history of the world—transpired when he violated the plain command not to covet his neighbor's wife. It was a law in Israel, written upon a table of stone by the finger of Almighty God in the midst of flame and smoke on the summit of a trembling mountain, that man should not commit adultery, neither should he murder; yet, with this holy law before him, the "sweet singer" of Israel fell a victim to unbridled lust and committed both of these heinous crimes. It is frequently the case now that juries render verdicts of "Guilty, with mitigating circumstances;" but the Judge of all the earth pronounced guilt upon David without the slightest intimation of extenuating features, and in vain may we seek to discover any. David occupied the most responsible position in the kingdom, and it devolved upon him to set an example of holy and righteous living before his people; but the evil hour came, when he yielded to temptation and by one misstep marred a character that would have otherwise been well-nigh perfect.

Thus it is with so many now. They labor hard through many years to build good characters, and then by one stroke of unlawful indulgence sweep away that which is more precious than all riches. God has endowed men and women with fleshly appetites and passions, which can be gratified within the limits of moderation and law; but when these are transcended, suffering will ensue. It is worse than folly for men and women to conceive the idea that they can live in the unlawful gratification of these desires and go unpunished. Unless conscience dies, the punishment begins in this life; and for the perpetrator of such a crime as that committed by David, a miniature hell is the portion on earth, with eternal damnation in the end. The deepest repentance, coupled with the forgiveness of God, will not remove the sad and harassing regrets which fill the mind and haunt the soul.

David, though conscious that God had put away his sin, never ceased to repine over it and refer to it in sorrowful tones. He could not fail to see himself invading a home, the most sacred spot on earth to every true husband and wife, for the purpose of debauching the bosom companion of Uriah, a faithful servant who was at that moment exposing his life to danger in defense of his king. This in itself is black enough; but, to add sin to sin and infamy to infamy, he must have Uriah killed, thinking that he would thus cover up his crime of adultery with Uriah's wife. How all this weighed upon David's heart like a mill-stone about the neck! But—alas!—the experience of David and the awful consequences in the world to come to those who live such lives have not proved a sufficient warning to check this soul-destroying vice.

Notwithstanding the march and progress of civilization, with the increased knowledge of God's will, society is reeking with the sin of adultery. Unfaithfulness on the part of husbands and wives mars the pages of history and disgraces the courts of the land. As a rule, this sin does not exist among the common people, but flourishes in what is called "high society." For the prevention of this sin and the building of good society, God has established the marriage relation, and provides that man shall have one wife. The sanctity of the home and the strict observance of the obligations assumed in marriage, in connection with the religion of Christ, form the basis of all that is good, nobie, and pure in this life.

The seat of David's trouble lay in an unlawful gaze. He permitted his eyes to rest upon forbidden ground, while he planned in his heart to disobey the command: "Thou shalt not commit adultery," The blessed Master taught "that whosoever looketh on a woman to lust after her hath committed adultery with her already in his heart." (Matt. 5: 28.) The members of the human body can be made to glorify God, the Creator, only when held in subjection to spiritual law. The eye is one of the most important members of our physical organism, but it would be better for us to grope our way in midnight darkness than to be led by it into the sin of adultery. For the sake of momentary gratification of the fleshly man, David entailed upon himself and others untold misery.

If the veil could be lifted from the homes that have been blighted and plunged into the dark abyss of despair on account of the heartless crimes of lecherous scoundrels, a picture would be presented which would be so appalling that the pure in heart would wonder why God permits the world to stand. I see at this moment a tearful, broken-hearted father and mother. Under the guise of friendship and pretense of love, the impious minister of Satan robbed their home of its joy and light of life, and then went his way to wed another, leaving behind him not only broken hearts, but the heritage of shame and disgrace to his off-spring born out of holy wedlock. If all the warnings of the Bible against the sin of fornication and adultery were compiled, they would make a pamphlet. The penalty for such sins, unrepented of, is eternal damnation. God has given us a record of David's crime to warn us and show his absolute impartiality in dealing with the lives of men, even those of his best subjects.

Infidels and those who have no respect for religion are wont to flaunt in the face of believers this sin of David, as though God approved it. They try to convict God of indorsing such crimes, from the fact that he said: "I have found David . . . a man after mine own heart." To deal fairly with God, we must take into consideration the fact that this approval of David was uttered long before he committed this terrible crime. (1 Sam. 13: 14.) God can justly approve a man at one point in his life and condemn him at another. The man who seeks to do right is a man after God's own heart, and none other is.

David repented of his sin and God forgave him; and while a blot as dark as sin could make it attaches to his name, still he will be among the throng of redeemed souls in the world to come. This shows the amazing love and boundless mercy of our God. "Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts: and let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him; and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon." (Isa. 55: 7.) The very thought of mercy and forgiveness for such sins is enough to thrill the heart and set every fiber of the spiritual being in a quiver of praise to God. Blessed be his holy name!

BY J. P. SEWELL.

I. INTRODUCTION—EDUCATION.

By "education" I mean that teaching, training, development which equips the individual to live his life in such a manner as to achieve the greatest amount of real success and happiness for himself and to give the greatest amount of genuine service to the world.

This education enables the farmer to make the soil produce more and better, the stockman to make his stock yield more profits, the school-teacher to give better service to his students, the merchant and banker to serve their patrons better, the doctor and lawyer to protect the interest of their patrons better, the preacher to preach the gospel more effectively; in fact, the individual, in every activity of life, to meet the obligations and duties of life better and to find real joy in living.

Any process through which the individual may be taken which does not thus equip him does not deserve to be called "education." It may result in knowledge, information, and a certain kind of culture; but if it fails to equip the individual for life as it must be lived, it is not education.

II. CHRISTIAN EDUCATION.

By "Christian education" I mean the training suggested, given from a Christian point of view, in schools where not only the body and mind may be trained, but the heart also. This is the only way in which man may be equipped for the highest, broadest, richest, noblest living and happiness.

I care not how perfectly you may develop and train the body and mind, if you fail to plant in the heart an unwavering faith in the justice and power of an eternal God, and a strong moral character to guide, direct, support, and restrain that body and mind in the activities of life, you fail to educate fully, and the man becomes a greater injury and hindrance to society than he would be with no training at all.

1. Christianity is pre-eminently a religion of teaching.

Our Lord says to us: "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations." Why? This binds on us a vast responsibility. It is an obligation demanding vast thinking, effort, and sacrifice. "Neither for these only do I pray, but for all them also that believe on me through their word." Jesus included in his prayer those who were disciples then, but he expected them to obey his commands and teach the gospel to others. He understood that at least some of these others would be led by this "word" to believe on him, and he included them in his prayer. Here is one answer. We must teach the gospel, for through it men are made believers. "So belief cometh of hearing, and hearing by the word of God."

Again: "Many other signs therefore did Jesus in the presence of the disciples, which are not written in this book: but these are written, that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that believing ye might have life in his name." Jesus, the Son of God, came to give life. To enjoy this life, men must believe that he is the Christ, the Son of God; and the gospel, the words of the Holy Spirit, written in the Book of God, are written for the express purpose that men "may believe" this very thing.

And again: "It is written in the prophets, And they shall all be taught of God." Why? "Every one that hath heard from the Father, and hath learned, cometh unto me." Rather strong, isn't it? "They shall all be taught of God." We are to do the teaching. There is no other way to draw men to Christ. They must be taught the gospel, the words heard from the Father, until they learn. "Every one" thus taught comes to Christ.

And just here lies the great obligation and opportunity of God's church. Are we meeting and using it as we should?

2. The extension of the kingdom of heaven depends on teaching.

The greatest ambition of every Christian heart should be the extension of the borders of the kingdom of God, and its exaltation, honor, and glory. You desire it, of course. We cannot take guns and swords and go out and capture citizens for God's kingdom. There is just one way to do it. Teach them the gospel, the words heard from the Father, until they learn; then they will come. They will fall out with sin, Satan, and his kingdom; fall in love with Christ, righteousness, and his kingdom; obey the gospel and become citizens of Christ's kingdom. This is why Paul says the gospel is God's power to save. It is what Jesus meant when he said: "Ye shall know the truth; and the truth shall make you free."

It is what Paul had in mind when he said: "Take the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God." Christianity is not a negative, defensive religion only. Not only are Christians to put on the protective armor provided for them, and to plant themselves in the trenches of sound doctrine and pure living and defend themselves; but they are to take their weapons of offensive warfare, the word of God, and, under the leadership of Christ, go out and charge the trenches of error and sin. We have remained in the trenches too much. It makes no difference how sound our doctrine and how pure our lives, if we fail to get this doctrine into the minds of others and this purity into other lives, we are failing in the purpose of God's church.

3. Christians may teach the word of God at any possible time and place.

It is scriptural and right to teach the Bible anywhere, any time. The gospel is God's power to save when you get it into an honest mind and heart, regardless of time and place. But, of course, this greatest of all services should be performed with the greatest care and the best possible judgment. It should be done where the greatest good will result to the greatest number.

"Now while Paul waited for them at Athens, his spirit was stirred in him, when he saw the city wholly given to idolatry. Therefore disputed he in the synagogue with the Jews, and with the devout persons, and in the market daily with them that met with him." Just in the home, or in the home and church only? Paul did not wait for a church. He saw a city lost and ruined in sin. His great, Christian heart was stirred. He couldn't wait; he didn't wait. He began teaching them that they might be saved. He taught them in the synagogue; but that didn't satisfy him. It was too slow. It would take too long. There was the market place. Many people frequented it. He could teach them there. It was an opportunity. Paul used it.

"He went into the synagogue, and spoke boldly for the space of three months, disputing and persuading the things concerning the kingdom of God. But when divers were hardened, and believed not, but spoke evil of that way before the multitude, he departed from them, and separated the disciples, disputing daily in the school of one Tyrannus. And this continued by the space of two years; so that all they which dwelt in Asia heard the word of the Lord Jesus, both Jews and Greeks." Great, wonderful work! This time Paul was teaching in a school. He kept it up for two years. And the Holy Spirit says "all Asia." heard the gospel as a result. Do you think of a more fruitful work in the lives of any of the apostles?

Why these quotations and observations? That we may see that it is our duty to teach the word of God anywhere, any time, even in school.

Our Lord's Example.

No lot could seem much more comfortless and destitute than that into which our Lord was born. Out of all the different conditions which this world affords, he had chosen one of the very poorest; one most remote from any privilege of wealth or rank; one which could least attract attention and respect; one which lacked all that most men seek. And surely in that choice God spoke unto us by his Son, and speaks continually. . . . It is not always in our power to choose our place in life; many of us may have to work under circumstances which we would (or think we would) gladly make simpler and plainer if we could. But in whatever state we are, the fact that Christ willed to come among men as he did holds still its deep, persistent lesson for us. It stands with many words of his which cross all easy acquiescence in prosperity and warn us that a man's lot in life may be none the less perilous for being, perhaps, inevitable. Whatsoever our lot may be, we have to follow his example; and if we cannot follow it in the outward setting of our life, we are bound, as we love our own souls and Him who died for them, to follow it with genuine reality in the ordering of our affections, in the discipline of our thoughts and desires, by stern dealing with every form of pride and vanity.-Francis Paget.

Evils of German Teaching.

This false teaching undermines faith in the living God and destroys the sense of moral obligations, and when this is done the wickedness of the human heart will stop at nothing. The chairs and pulpits of this country have been reeking with Germanism, and the propagators have hidden under the screen of false scholarship. Their pet phrase is "the consensus of scholarship." There are more scholars against the German conclusions than there are in their favor. These lawless teachings are even finding their way into the army.—Journal and Messenger.

The Lonesome People.

"I watch, and am as a sparrow alone upon the housetop." (Ps. 102: 7.)

They are the lonesome people Who sit in their greed apart, Solely selfish and centered

In their own gray heart.

They are the lonesomest people; and pity them, Father of all.

That they give not even the blessing of a flower in the crannied wall!

They are the lonesome people
That have no moments of life
To forget their own poor burden
And think of another's strife.

They are the lonesomest people, remote in their selfish day,

With nothing but "me" to consider—poor vessels of clay!

They are the lonesome people Who, moving amid the throng, Can take no part in the singing, Responsive unto its song.

They are the lonesomest people who gather from life no rose

To lay on the lips of sorrow or soften the ages' blows!

They are the lonesome people
That cannot even with sight
See over their utter darkness
The burning spirit of light.

They are the lonesomest people that, wrapped in their petty care,

Forget that the world with its sorrow is waiting in sympathy there!

They are the lonesome people
That are merely living to live,
With nothing at all to scatter
And nothing at all to give.

For they only give who are giving self and the soul that flings

Itself into the empty chalice that the suffering comrade brings! —Folger McKinsey, in Baltimore Sun.

Things Which Make for Peace.

BY G. DALLAS SMITH,

"So then let us follow after the things which make for peace, and things whereby we may edify one another." (Rom. 14: 19.)

It seems to me that there is right now great need for us to heed the inspired admonition of the above text. I confess that I am somewhat disheartened, discouraged, and that I often feel depressed as a result of so much strife, wrangling, quarreling, and faultfinding among the brethren, where there should be unity, harmony, peace, and love. Paul says: "Let us follow after the things which make for peace." The word "follow" is expressive of activity, and suggests that we should be actively engaged in the pursuit of harmony and peace. Paul is not discussing the peace for which we should all pray-the peace between the warring nations. But he is talking about peace in the brotherhood-peace in the family of God, the church of Jesus Christ. We should follow after the things which make for peace among ourselves. God is called the "God of peace;" Jesus, the "Prince of peace;" and the angels at his birth sang, "Peace on earth, good will toward men." Surely, as the children of the "God of peace," as the followers of the "Prince of peace," and as the exponents of the "gospel of peace," we should heed this divine admonition to "follow after the things which make for peace." We should consider it both a privilege and a duty to do so. Father, grant that we may soon learn the lesson.

But what things make for peace? What course should we pursue that we may follow after the things which make for peace? This is an important question. Let us look well to its answer. The language implies that there are some things which if we do will be conducive to peace and harmony, and other things we may do which will produce strife and contention. Of course, we should never sacrifice the truth in order to secure peace. We must always contend earnestly for the faith, to be sure. Jesus was the greatest peace advocate the world ever saw, but he did not advocate "peace at any price." He contended for the truth and right. So did the apostles, and so should we, of course; and yet, while contending for the faith, we must also follow after the things which make for peace. It is possible for one to contend for the faith once for all delivered unto the saints, and at the same time fail to follow after the things which make for peace. Humility is one of the things which make for peace. Pride is the enemy of peace everywhere. People who are proud and haughty, inflated with self-esteem, are easily offended and their feelings are continually being wounded. They cannot bear to be criticized or contradicted. It is absolutely mortifying to them. On the other hand, true humility secures and promotes peace and harmony. The really humble man is always willing to give way to others, provided there is no principle involved. And whenever and wherever such persons, no matter how many, have fellowship with each other, there will be no strife, contention, or divisions. Under such favorable conditions each will take pleasure in the prosperity and good fortune of all others, and rejoice with them that rejoice as well as weep with those who weep. May the day soon come when all of uspreachers and all-will be possessed of this spirit of humility, remembering that God "resisteth the proud, but giveth grace to the humble."

Another essential to peace is the spirit of tolerance. If we would avoid the unpleasantness of strife, the heat of controversy, and the bitterness of quarrel, we must not Understand me. We be narrow, bigoted, and fanatical. are not to be so broad and liberal that we will agree that a thing is right when we know it is wrong, or admit that it is wrong when we know it is right. We must always be firm and immovable where truth or principle is involved. We must never tolerate error anywhere, but condemn sin everywhere, of course. But let us be liberal enough to give every man credit for all the truth he may hold and for all the good he may do. Let us not try to make an issue where there is none or make the breach between us and others wider than it really is; but, as the lamented D. Lipscomb has often admonished us, let us magnify the things on which we do agree, rather than those about which we disagree. I firmly believe, if we would try as hard to get together as we often do to show that we disagree, that we would avoid many unpleasant controversies which otherwise arise. It has occurred to me that in debates, both oral and written, between our own brethren, as well as between us and the "sects," that we endeavor to make the breach just as wide as possible, that there may be "the bone of contention." Frequently a man is not allowed to put his own construction on what he says, but has words put into his mouth which he earnestly disavows. Surely this is wrong; and to act thus is not to follow after the things which make for peace.

Good temper on our part is also essential to peace. If we keep good temper, we are blind and deaf to many things which we would otherwise see and hear, and dumb many times when we otherwise would speak. If we keep good temper, we will extinguish all the fire we can and start none. There are not enough fire extinguishers among us, and too many explosives. Are you—are ive—extinguishers or explosives, or do we just fan the flame? Self-control is one of the greatest of the Christian graces, if not, indeed, the very greatest. Inspiration says he who controls his spirit is greater than he who takes a city. James says: "Be swift to hear, slow to speak, slow to wrath." Harsh and bitter words are not becoming a Christian, and they are not conducive to peace. Jesus said, "Bless them that curse you, and do good to them that hate you;" and Paul says: "Recompense to no man evil for evil." If we are animated by this spirit, we will not lose our temper at the slightest provocation.

Then the spirit of forgiveness is essential to peace and harmony among us. There can be no peace among us unless we are willing and ready, and even anxious, to forgive one another. No lesson was stressed more in the life and teachings of Jesus than that of forgiveness. After relating the account of the unmerciful servant, Jesus said: "So likewise shall my heavenly Father do also unto you, if ye from your hearts forgive not every one his brother their trespasses." (Matt. 18: 35.) And he taught his disciples to pray: "Forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors." And then emphasized it thus: "For if ye forgive men their trespasses, your heavenly Father will also forgive you: but if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses." In the face of all this, there seems to be little disposition on the part of the brethren-even the preaching brethren-to forgive one another. Think of a preacher's suggesting that one preacher should make another preacher "smoke" just because that other preacher has trespassed against him! Suppose one preacher does trespass against another. Should he make him "smoke" on account of it? Is that the proper course to pursue? Is that the spirit of Christ which we preachers talk so much about? Should we preachers teach the brethren to make one another "smoke" when they mistreat one another? Paul said: "Render to no man evil for evil, but contrariwise blessing." And Jesus also teaches us to do good for evil. What has become of our teaching and living along this line? Is this kind of teaching out of date? May there soon be a speedy return to both the letter and the spirit of our Master's teaching. May we soon learn to put it into practice absolutely. And to this end I commend to you-preachers and all, myself included -the words of the great apostle: "Let all bitterness, and wrath, and anger, and clamor, and evil speaking, be put away from you, with all malice: and be ye kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you."

BY P. W. SMITH.

"Pyschology and Preaching," by Charles S. Gardner, is a book containing 389 pages, neatly bound and well printed. The McMillan Company, 66 Fifth Avenue, New York, dld the mechanical work, and it reflects credit upon that reliable firm. The aim of its author is expressed as follows:

"Pyschology and Preaching" undertakes to do for preachers what volumes on educational psychology have done for teachers. It is a thorough study of the more important mental processes involved in preaching, from the standpoint of functional psychology. After a discussion of the general mental processes—intellectual, emotional, and voluntary—as they function in preaching, it takes up, first, the psychic phenomena of the mass as they appear in assembly and community groups; second, three important occupational types—the minister, the laboring man, and the business man; third, the "modern mind," or the peculiar mental attitudes of modern men as contrasted with the characteristic attitudes of more primitive men.

Those who have a taste for pyschological research and who enjoy those fine metaphysical distinctions developed within the field of pyschology will find this book both interesting and profitable. The different effects of mental processes upon the physical man are clearly and strongly brought out by the author. He convinces the reader that much time and hard study have been devoted to this work. The first chapter deals with the "General Controls of Conduct," and these are given as reflexes, instincts, native dispositions, consciousness, and habit. The relations and dependencies of these are discussed in a very scientific and scholarly way.

Chapter XIII. deals with "Occupational Types," and on "The Ministerial Type" we find this: "Consider the breadth of his occupation." In developing this phase of the subject, the author says: "It is sometimes jestingly declared that, to meet the demands of a large congregation in a modern community, he must make more public addresses and of a vastly more varied character than a lawyer, read as much as a learned scholar, visit more people than a busy physician, exercise as much executive ability as the head of a great corporation, travel as many miles as a 'drummer,' cultivate as much tact and adaptability as a politician, and withal must spend as much time in prayer and meditation as a saint." This is spreading the "cloth" over considerable territory, with much danger of its becoming very thin; hence the author suggests: "Does not the average minister, in the effort to respond to the numerous calls made upon him, learn something about a great many aspects of life, without acquiring a very thorough knowledge of any one of them; dip into a great many subjects, without penetrating to the depths of any of them? Thus he comes to be a man of very varied but not very accurate information, a pleasant companion, an interesting 'conversationalist,' an excellent 'entertainer' in the social circle, but unable to speak with authority upon any of them." To avoid such "ministerial" inefficiency, how would it do to simply "preach the word;" to "give diligence to present thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, handling aright the word of truth?" But if Professor Gardner can relieve the distressed situation with his pyschological treatise, leaving the patient with a knowledge of the gospel, the willingness and ability to preach and teach it, then all hail to his beneficent efforts! The price of the book is $2, and it can be had from the publishers or from the McQuiddy Printing Company, Nashville, Tenn. 8 8 8

"The Real Key to Christian Science," by Richard L. Swain, is the very best exposition of the doctrine promulgated by Mrs. Mary Baker Eddy that I have ever seen. Every preacher of the word should have a copy of this book. It will enable him to get a clear grasp of that bundle of contradictions and faise doctrines set forth under the title of "Christian Science." The author of this book has done a work for the truth against the destructive influence of so-called "Christian Science" for which he deserves much credit. The book contains only ninety-five pages, but each page bristles and sparkles with gems of truth against the infidelity of "Christian Science." Price, in cloth, net, sixty cents. Order from Fleming H. Revell Company, 158 Fifth Avenue, New York, or the McQuiddy Printing Company, Nashville, enn.

In the day of gloom is there not somewhere to be found a bright spot or a cheerful corner? Said an invalid to her physician: "I simply don't know what to do with myself when the wind is from the east." To which her sensible physician replied: "You cannot stop the wind, but you surely can get into a cozy south room as far away from it as possible, and find some pleasant employment." It was good advice for a nervous little body, and it is good advice for spiritual natures which may be needlessly shivering in the east winds of raw depression. Seek the pleasant spot; do the pleasant work; cultivate the pleasant disposition; and—let the east wind blow.—Biblical Recorder.

Spirit of the Press

By J. C. McQUIDDY

As a Nation Thinketh.

Germany has taught us that it makes all the difference in the world what a man believes. By doing so this nation has knocked in the head forever, thinks The Christian Work (New York), the oft-quoted maxim: "It makes no difference what a man believes; only his actions count." The Germans have shown with cruel plainness that "a man will act as he believes, that his deeds are direct expression of his faith." The kind of god that they profess to worship is cited as the direct certification of their acts of cruelty. This is often pointed out, and the writer in The Christian Work, probably Dr. Frederick Lynch, again calls attention to the fact that the Kaiser's God is only a "magnified Kaiser"—more like Thor, with his hammer smashing up the universe, than the gentle Father of Jesus Christ." The result is natural:

"During the whole four years of the war the Germans have lived this faith. They have acted just as people will, must, always act who hold this faith. They have been hard, cruel, relentless, merciless, and as savage as their gods. Power, might, the achievement of ends regardless of moral distinctions have actuated every action of the nation. Revenge has been as bread of life to them because their god practices revenge. Militarism is their creed because their god is a god of war. Power is their one ideal because God is power, not love. Never has there been a more perfect illustration of the absolute power of a belief over action; as a man believes, so will he act.

"It makes no difference what one believes.' Every act of the German nation since the war began and including its inception has been the most direct expression of a creed. a creed that has always produced just exactly the kind of action in which Germany indulges. This creed has just been published by the New York Peace Society in a pamphlet called 'The Creed of the Huns,' entirely in words quoted from Germans themselves, even the title. (It should be remembered that it was the Kaiser himself who first designated the German soldiers as 'Huns' in his famous speech to the army sent to punish the Chinese at the time of the Boxer rebellion.) Prof. Charles H. Levermore has summed up these various German utterances, coming from such men as Frederick the Great, von Clausewitz, William II., Moltke, Treitschke, Lasson, Bernhardi, Bethmann-Hollweg, and the War Book of the German Staff, in the following sentence:

"'Article Second.—The state possesses unlimited sover-

"'Article Second.—The state possesses unlimited sovereignty, and is not subject to the moral restraints that should govern the conduct of individuals; therefore, in warfare any barbarity which is thought to promote or insure the assumptions of aggressive power is permissible and justifiable."

"This doctrine, expressed perhaps even more epigrammatically by Prince von Bülow in a speech in the Reichstag, 'For Germany right can never be a determining consideration,' has been instilled into the German people from the kindergarten up. It is the creed of militarism, and military training in Germany is directed to the mind as much as to the legs. For four years now we have seen a great people the willing tools of such crimes and barbarities as the world has never known: the invasion and raping of Belgium, with cruelties piled upon cruelties; the invasion and wanton devastation of Northern France; the introduction of the most hellish devices into warfare, such as gases and burning oils; the sinking of ships full of noncombatants and women and children, and manifestations of satanic glee over their fate (medals were struck over the drowning of women and children and distributed all over Germany); the practice of piracy upon the high seas, sinking ships of neutrals in all directions and all places so that no ship of any nation is safe anywhere in the world; the dropping of bombs, on children playing on the beach; the deportation of civilians of Belgium and France as slaves into Germany as the old heathen nations used to make slaves of all whom they conquered; the spying upon everybody in all nations; while guests of nations, secretly plotting to destroy them; attempting to stir up strife between friendly nations that Germany might profit by their quarrel; finally, the almost unbelievable, deliberate sinking of hospital ships; the practice of any kind of crime as a nation; the lack of any conscience; the inability any longer to distinguish between right and wrong; the indifference to the judgment of the whole world; the calm, purposeful descent to the level of the wild boar, goring his way to his prey. Every civilized man has been wondering and asking: How can any nation sink to the level to which Germany has sunk, do the unutterable things that with her have become a daily habit? The answer is written across the skies: Hold such a creed as the Germans hold, and you will do the things the Germans do."

If this is thought to be unjust to Germany, the writer asks why other nations, professing another creed, act otherwise.

wise:

"Can you conceive America sinking to the level of originating a world war of plunder and carrying it on as beasts and devils? No, because our creed is that a nation is bound to live in the world just exactly as a Christian gentleman lives in his city. As a nation's creed, so will its acts always be."

With the death of this fallacy of the nonimportance of belief goes the one that "education affects the disposition, will, and conduct." The Germans again prove the con-

"In the strict and technical sense of the word, the Germans are the most highly educated people in the world. Germany bristles with universities just as it bristles with forts. The graduates fill the land. Schools and technical institutes abound. Her scientists and scholars were renowned the world over. The war found thousands of chemists and machinists ready to invent every mechanical device imaginable. Thousands of her young men had been trained to business, commerce, and industry trained to business, commerce, and industry.

"Education and omniscience were the boast of Germany; Kultur and efficiency, her pride. And all were powerless to prevent Germany from committing the great apostasy of history, the great betrayal of the ages, and making her forever the Judas among nations, the Nero among empires, the Machiavelli among states. Apparently all her education has had no power whatever to direct her ideals toward the things of the spirit, had no power to illumine her conscience in the least, had no power to awaken in her any moral sense. The most highly educated men in Germany have lauded her selfish intentions, justified all her crimes, and been her apologists to the other nations.

"Educated Germany has equaled ignorant Turkey in every regard during this war. Indeed, there is some reason to believe that the initiative of everything that Turkey has done came from Germany. But all this has exploded forever the old theory that education without religion determines conduct. It seemingly, if we can judge from Germany, but puts more powerful tools into the hands of evil men. There is a great lesson for all of us here.—Literary Digest.

It is certainly true that the belief in the heart will come out in the life. Solomon says: "For as he thinketh within himself, so is he." (Prov. 23: 7.) A greater than Solomon declares; "Either make the tree good, and its fruit good; or make the tree corrupt, and its fruit corrupt; for the tree is known by its fruit. Ye offspring of vipers, how can ye, being evil, speak good things? for out of the abunance of the heart the mouth speaketh. The good man out of his good treasure bringeth forth good things: and the evil man out of his evil treasure bringeth forth evil things." (Matt. 12: 33-35.) A correct faith brings forth a righteous life. The faith of the heart speaks out, acts out, and comes out. A wrong faith led the German people into a wrong life. Our chief purpose should be to lead the world to believe the truth. 0 0 0

The Soul of America.

People are at heart idealists; they follow the man of intense ideals, and seek the leader who can give expression and direction to such ideals. Thus is created the soul of a nation. It is this patriotic spirit that gives a people its power, more than wealth or skill or political organization. It was because Germany thought that we had no national soul that she invited us to enter the ranks of her enemies. It is because she finds that we have a national soul that she now realizes and deplores her mistake."—President Arthur T. Hadley, in his baccalaureate address at New Haven.

John A. Klingman preached for the Russell Street Church, in Nashville, last Sunday.

W. E. Daugherty reports a fine meeting at Glen Alice, Tenn. He will go next to Crab Orchard, Tenn.

E. E. Dildine, of Martin, Tenn., has some time for meetings in August and September. He is a capable song leader.

From John W. Hedges, Kilgore, Texas: "The Myrtle Springs meeting has come and gone. Fine crowds throughout. Two restored. I go next to Ponta, Texas."

From John A. Klingman, Lebanon, Tenn., July 28: "We are enjoying a glorious meeting. A. B. Lipscomb is preaching to large audiences. Eight persons have been baptized thus far. One of the number is my only beloved son, Paul. Our hearts are overflowing with joy."

From E. P. Watson, Dugger, Ind., July 24: "I would appreciate it very much if you can assist us in finding a location in the South or West. The climate here is very much against my wife and little girl. We want to come to Tennessee, or go to Texas; in fact, anywhere it is not so damp and cold."

E. M. Borden writes: "My meeting at Wildersville, Tenn., closed on the second Sunday in July. The meeting was well attended. Eleven were baptized. One was about seventy-five years of age. I am now (July 22) in a meeting at Haywood Church, near Wedowee, Ala. I will go next to Brookland, Texas."

From J. C. Mosley, Graysville, Tenn., July 20: "I am in a good meeting here. Fine crowds. Three have been baptized to date. I went to Soddy, preached two sermons, and baptized one person. I was at Dayton last week and visited Elliot Boyd, the old-reliable preacher from my home county. I was glad to see him. I wish we had more men like him. I will try to get back to Bledsoe County soon."

John H. Arms writes from Celina, Tenn., July 21: "Being very busy at the time of receiving the premium New Testament, I had not sufficient leisure to give it such an examination as would justify an opinion of its merit. But after giving it a partial examination I would commend it as being very helpful to the thoughtful, careful reader. One who studies it, carefully and patiently studying all of the notes and comments in connection with the text, could hardly fail to be greatly benefited."

From C. E. Coleman, Macon, Ga.: "In answer to a call sent out from Atlanta for help to support the Macon and Camp Wheeler work, I have received donations as follows: From the church at Franklin, Tenn., $5; church at Winchester, Tenn., $5; West End Church, Atlanta, Ga., $5; S. H. Hall and Morgan H. Carter, $5. The church at Valdosta, Ga., sends $5 monthly to help us here. We are very thankful for all received and hope to report before the close of the year that the church is out of debt and self-sustaining."

From C. D. Crouch, Saint Jo, Texas, July 23: "Since recovering from typhoid fever I have preached at Iowa Park, Charlie, Thurber, Gainesville, Texas, and DeQueen, Ark. I have a meeting to hold in Hopkins County, Texas, in August. After that meeting I have no engagements. I shall be glad to communicate with some one who has a good farm to rent, near a good congregation. I think I shall work on the farm next year. I do not expect to quit preaching, though. I think I need the exercise of farm labor; besides, I need the reward of such labor. My address is Saint Jo, Texas."

From D. T. Broadus, Wichita, Kan., July 16: "I have not been in the Gospel Advocate columns for some time, and appear now with only a few brief statements. I am giving my time to the work in this city. I have been with these good brethren six and a half years. During this time the congregation has established a mission that now has a neat little chapel. I assist in the work at both places—preaching, teaching Bible classes, etc. We had four baptisms at our regular services last Lord's-day evening. There is much that we cannot do that needs doing. The work in the church and on the Christian Worker leaves no time for idling. Do not need that, anyway."

From James E. Laird, Senath, Mo.: "For reasons unknown to me I failed to get permission to preach at Camp Pike, either from the government authorities or the Y. M. C. A. I write this to let the brotherhood know why I failed to take up the work there. I wish to notify the churches in Northeast Arkansas and Southeast Missouri that we expect to begin a general evangelistic work throughout this country. Every church is asked to have fellowship in this great work. Send your money to J. H. Watson, Jonesboro, Ark., and he will send to me at the end of each month and report all sent in. We also ask the fellowship of the churches in directing my work and suggesting destitute places for meetings."

From Tice Elkins, Anson, Texas, July 21: "I got out of the meeting at Comanche, Okla., too late to begin the Anson meeting on time; but E. Christian began it for me, and I reached here Saturday night. To-day at the eleven-o'clock service two precious souls were restored to their 'first love,' and again to-night two more came back confessing their sins. We had the largest crowd to-night that I have preached to this year, and it will no doubt get better. The town and the church is stirred wonderfully, and the field here is ripe for gathering in souls. I will go from here to Hamilton for my third meeting there, and I hope the brethren will be ready with plenty of books and some one to lead the singing; also at Gordonville; and I know they will at Mangum, Okla. On with the good work!"

From I. B. Bradley, Paducah, Ky., July 26: "I have just closed an eight-days' meeting with Hebron Church, near Lowes, Ky. The meeting was too short. The people were getting deeply interested and the house was full at the night services, with a good attendance at the day services. There was a good many turned away last night for lack of room. The weather was unusually warm, but the people sat quietly for over one and a half hours through the service. There was only one baptized. Several others, we are sure, 'were almost persuaded.' I regretted to have to close, but other arrangements made it necessary. The meeting at Macedonia, near Mayfield, resulted in eight baptisms, one from the Presbyterians who claimed scriptural baptism, and one restoration. I am under promise to hold a meeting at both these places in 1920, the Lord willing. I go to Hohenwald, Tenn., for the next two weeks."

From A. L. Colson, Quitman, Ga., July 14: "On last Saturday evening the writer began a meeting with the Welcome Hill congregation. Much interest is being manifested by almost all of the members. One young man has made 'the good confession' and is to be baptized this evening. We all shed tears of joy with Sister Ethel Olliff yesterday when her faithful husband took his stand with us. It always makes my heart rejoice to see men and women turn from the doctrine and precepts of men and obey that 'form of doctrine' which was preached in the long ago by the apostles. Whosoever exchanges error for truth always gains and never loses in the end, provided he holds to the truth until death. W. A. Cameron has been with us during three services, but left yesterday and went to Valdosta to fill an appointment for last evening. He is to begin a meeting at Black's Schoolhouse on next Lord's day. I expect to join him on Monday and lead the song service throughout the meeting."

The World Against the Church. No. 11.

BY E. A. E.

WHAT IS THE WORLD?

Since we cannot understand the difference between the church and the world until we know what the church is, so we cannot understand this difference until we know what the world is. We must know what both are in order to see and feel the difference.

There is something in the New Testament called "the world," which Jesus and the apostles declare many, many times is altogether opposed to the church, the kingdom of heaven, the people of God, the followers of Christ, and all that God would accomplish through the church. What is it? For example, John (1:10) says "the true light"the Savior-came into the world, "and the world knew him not." Jesus says "the world" hates him because he testifies of it "that its works are evil," but "the world" does not hate its own. (John 7: 7.) Jesus declares that he has chosen his disciples "out of the world;" that "the world" hates them as it hates him, and persecutes the church (John 15: 17-25); that "the world" cannot receive the Holy Spirit (John 14: 17); that the devil is "the prince of this world" and has been condemned (John 12: 31); that the peace which he gives is not such as "the world" gives (John 14: 27); that when the church weeps and laments, "the world" rejoices (John 16: 20); that the Holy Spirit convicts "the world in respect of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment to come" (John 16: 8:12); that his disciples "are not of the world," as he is not of "the world," and, again, for this reason "the world" hates them (John 17: 14); that his "kingdom is not of this world" (John 16: 36); and that he has "overcome the world" (John 16: 33). The church is forbidden to love "the world" and "the things of the world;" so much so that "if any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him." (1 John 2: 15, 16.) "The world" does not know the church-"the world knoweth us not, because it knew him not." (1 John 3: 1.) The church is commanded to come out from "the world" and be separate (2 Cor. 6: 17) and to keep "unspotted from the world" (James 1: 27). WHAT, THEN, IS THE WORLD?

How can the followers of Christ-the church-keep separate and "unspotted from the world," if they do not know what the world is? Or must they need the command of God to keep unspotted from it? Must they believe Jesus when he declares his kingdom is not of this world?

Again, what is "worldiness" which writers write about and preachers preach against?

About three years ago a preacher of the church of Christ announced one morning to his audience that his subject for the occasion was "worldliness," and that he intended to be very plain in what he had to say. Since he is fully capable of giving any Bible subject a thorough investigation, I folded my arms with much satisfaction, expecting to hear a clear and strong presentation of that which the New Testament calls "the world" and of its teaching against being conformed to it; but imagine my disappointment and surprise when he referred specially only to picture shows and the game called "rook" as "worldliness." saying that he himself did not like to play "hullgull," if he referred to card playing and other worldly things at all, it was only incidentally. The sum of the "worldhness" of his sermon was ' rook" and picture shows.

The tendency of picture shows in general is evil, while some pictures are good, pure, instructive, and worth see ing. To what extent some games, innocent within themselves, and harmless diversions may border on to worldliness is a question worthy of consideration. But with its many and various "pleasures of sin;" with its emptiness, pretense, and show of religion, serving the creature rather than the Creator, and vain worship; with its seorn, pride, hollow ambitions, and scrambling efforts to occupy the chief seats and have the preëminence; with its jealousy, envy, hatred, malice, bitterness, and their fearful consequences; with its selfishness and destitution of forbearance and love; with its covetousness, greed, and love of money, which is "a root of all kinds of evil;" with its corruption, frauds, murders, crimes, whose name is legion, and lies of every nature and hue and variety; with its thousands of unscriptural divorces, whose number is increasing as fast as the courts can meet; with its fornication, drunkenness, and all forms of uncleanness and filthy practices; with its general wickedness and rebellion against Godwith all these, "the world," or "worldliness," embraces a thousandfold more than a few questionable amusements.

Again, almost every modern and sensational "evangelist," as the world calls him, seems to think he has exhausted the meaning of "worldliness" when he has spoken against "rook," picture shows, card playing, dancing, drinking, and the modern styles of dress for women. But when he discusses the modern style of dress, dancing, etc., he does so in a sensational and ridiculous manner that is more suggestive of evil than fraught with sober thought and promulgation of good. His preaching is turned into an entertainment for the worldly and, I may say, vulgar.

I am writing, speaking, and throwing all my influence against the evils of dancing, immodest dress, card playing, drinking, and such like; but these practices are not all of worldliness. These are not the only things Christians do not love in loving not the world. Jesus puts down "the pleasures of this life," "the care of the world," "the deceitfulness of riches," and "the lust of other things" as the thorns which "choke the word," so that many who once received it have become "unfruitful." (Matt. 13: 22; Mark 4: 19; Luke 8: 14.) "The care of the world" and "the deceitfulness of riches" are as much of the worldare as much included in worldliness-as "the pleasures of this life." Then, what about "the lust of other things?" Selfishness, greediness, and the cankering "cares of the world" will dry up all the spiritual fountains of the heart and send souls to perdition as rapidly and as abundantly as any scheme Satan ever hit upon. Gossiping, fault-finding, judging, tattling, taking up evil reports against neighbors, slandering, and rejoicing over the misfortunes and reverses of others are fearfully of the world and are condemned by the Lord.

It must be granted that there are innocent amusements in which for recreation young Christians can engage. There are games which are neither wrong within themselves nor associated with evil in any way. All can readily see that whatever is evil within itself or really leads to evil must be avoided. All Christians—young or old—should desire and must make the effort to abstain from "every form of evil." (1 Thess. 5: 22.) As every one avoids all deadly diseases by using preventives, disinfectants, and every other precaution, so Christians must use all the means God offers to protect themselves against the infectious and contagious and soul-destroying diseases of sin. The fight of Christians is against "the world." "The world" must be overcome.

For whatsoever is begotten of God overcometh the world: and this is the victory that hath overcome the world, even our faith. And who is he that overcometh the world, but he that believeth that Jesus is the Son of God? (1 John 5: 4, 5.)

That Christians may know what it is they have to overcome, how to overcome it, and when they have overcome it, I ask again, WHAT IS "THE WORLD?" The answer to this question must be postponed until the next article.

All the above-named sins and wickedness, shameful and disgraceful practices of "the world," could be left entirely with "the world," were they not overflowing the church. Since some preachers, who place themselves forward as leaders of the blind and sinful, and not a few elders and other leaders, are guilty of indulging in some of these sins and engaging in some of these impure and fraudulent practices, it is time for them to halt, take their bearings, examine themselves, and make an earnest and constant effort to manifest the spirit of Christ and live up to the standard of purity and honesty, righteousness and godliness, mercy and love, set for all in the life of Christ and the word of God.

The corruption and downfall of Israel and Judah followed fast upon the corruption and downfall of their prophets and priests. The worldliness and wickedness, corruption and downfall of the church will surely follow the worldliness and vanity, pride and vainglory, dishonesty and immorality of preachers and teachers.

THE OUTRAGE COMMITTED AGAINST THE HIGHLAND AVENUE CHURCH, OF LOUISVILLE, KY.

I take this occasion to say that my "anxiety for all the churches"—their peace and purity, unity and growth—causes me to manifest a deep interest in, and great concern over, the outrage committed against the Highland Avenue Church, of Louisville, Ky., as set forth in the columns of this paper recently by Brethren Lipscomb and Kurfees. I feel it my duty to my Master and to all the churches to speak out against all such procedure. How can a servant of God, praying for "the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace" of all the churches, remain silent?

The procedure of some preachers and some others in some churches is worse than dirty politics, while high-toned politicians and statesmen would never stoop to such practices; it is worse than dirty politics because every one knows that such tricks in politics are for political purposes, and in the church they are practiced in the name of religion and under pretense of seeking the good and peace of the church and the glory of God.

Granting that all concerned have made mistakes and even done wrong, there is a true, scriptural, and godly way to proceed. An autocratic, self-willed procedure in church discipline and other church work and affairs is rebellion against Christ. The New Testament marks out clearly the course to pursue.

Let us all who strive to be true and godly preachers and teachers study to show ourselves approved unto God, workmen who need not to be ashamed before him and who will bring no reproach upon the cause of Christ, and let us cry aloud and spare not and show the church the sins of such procedure until the world will never again hear of a church's dividing over a man.

"Be Not Conformed to This World."

BY E. G. S.

The expression, "Be not conformed to this world," is found in Rom. 12: 2; and not only this, but much more is found there. The whole verse reads: "And be not conformed to this world: but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect, will of God." It would perhaps be hard to find a verse that expresses more. The first is of a negative character, telling what not to do. This is certainly a very important prohibition to Christians, warning them not to do the thing that is named—that is, not to be conformed to this world, not to follow the sinful ways of worldly-minded people. If Christians do not carefully guard themselves along this line, they are liable to find themselves in love with the world and its many winning ways. Hence the word of God says: "Love not the world, neither the things of the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him." (1 John 2: 15.) This passage shows plainly the danger there is to Christians in falling in love with the world and the things of the world. The "things of the world" cannot save them, neither can the love of the world purify them. The love of the world may lead people to perdition, but it cannot possibly lead them to heaven.

The warning given in the last passage quoted is certainly a valuable one and should be seriously regarded by all who have a desire to go to heaven. It is very certain we cannot live here always. Death is sure to find us; and if we are not prepared to go to heaven, there is but one other place to go to, and that is the place of eternal torment. These are very serious and important things for us to consider. The Father in heaven has prepared a home of eternal bliss for his faithful servants, and not one of them will be overlooked in the great day of judgment, but all will be received into that heavenly home; while all that reject the gospel to the end of this life will be cast into the place of everlasting terment. All should seriously consider these things while they have the opportunity to make this preparation. When life is ended, we can make no further preparation, but shall pass into eternity just as we have lived.

The only safe course in this matter is to make preparation early in life and then continue in that prepared condition till called away by death. Nevertheless, a great proportion of the people to-day are putting off this preparation till a more convenient season, and doubtless death will come to thousands and millions in their career of sin and folly before they have ever considered the importance of making preparation for a better life and a better home. Thus they keep putting off the preparation for a better home than this world can afford. People love to secure nice, pleasant homes for this life; but many seem to care little about preparing for a heavenly home when this mortal life is ended. Thus they neglect the most important matter that is before them and go to the grave unprepared for the realities they have to meet. Those who are wise will think seriously about these things. If they do not think seriously about the hereafter, they will have to meet it unprepared. What a fearful thing that would be! It were better that they had never been born than to be called upon to meet the solemn realities of the unseen world and not be prepared for it.

In view of what has been said, all need to study the New Testament and strive in all the earnestness of their souls to understand and practice the teaching so plainly recorded in God's holy word. This is the only safety there is for the people of this world. Those who reject the New Testament, who fail to read, study, and obey its divine teaching, are walking in darkness; and if they keep on that way, they will end their lives in ignorance of what has been done for the salvation of a sinful world and will go into eternity unprepared and be eternally lost. It seems strange that so many people care so little to read the New Testament, when it is really the grandest book on the face of the earth. No other book reveals so plainly the final destinies of the human race. Yet, in the face of these facts, there is scarcely any other book that is so much neglected as the New Testament.

No other people on earth are so intelligent and so refined as are the people where the word of God is read and practiced. The Bible is more extensively read by the masses of this country than of any other country we know of. That is the reason why they have more morality and intelligence than any other nation on the earth. Furthermore, this morality and intelligence will grow and increase if the people will increase their Bible reading and the practice of its heaven-born principles and intelligence. The Lord forbid that New Testament reading and practice should ever cease or diminish; but may it abound more and more till all the world shall be brought under its elevating power and influence. Then the millennium will surely be ushered in and the light of heaven's truth will illuminate the whole world. May that lovely period be hastened, so that peace, truth, and safety may prevail.

The Action of the Elders of the Lone Oak Church.

BY J. C. M'QUIDDY.

On page 738 appears a statement from W. A. Record relative to the action of the elders of the Lone Oak Church in withdrawing fellowship from him.

A diversity of sentiment has arisen over the withdrawal of this church from Brother Record, which is very unfortunate, regardless of who is right or who is wrong. The editors of the Gospel Advocate are not personally acquainted with either the elders or Willie Record. As the local church is the only self-perpetuating and self-governing organization known to the New Testament and as the elders are scripturally authorized to take the oversight of the church, it has always been our custom, whenever a difference arose between an individual and the elders of a local church, to take it for granted that the elders were right and the individual wrong, unless the facts show to the contrary.

We are not unmindful of the fact that we are not to receive an accusation against an elder, except in the mouth of two or three witnesses. In this case, however, there are a number of witnesses, among whom are T. B. Thompson, Charlie Taylor, W. A. Record, and one of the elders, W. H. Thompson, who testify that Brother Record was not fairly treated and that the charge against him did not justify withdrawal of fellowship. Brother T. B. Thompson wrote a letter to Brother A. B. Lipscomb under date of July 22, in which he says: "While spending a few days with my father, he informed me that he had written you, requesting that you publish his explanation and confessiou respecting the case of the Lone Oak Church against Brother W. A. Record. He asked me to write you whether you expected to publish same or not. There must be some steps taken to repudiate the action of the Lone Oak Church against Brother Record. His character is unimpeachable. He is a first-class Christian gentleman, and I suppose there is not one church that is acquainted with the circumstances -no, not one in that part of the country-that would respect the action of that church against this brother. One side of the case has been heard, and every one outside the little congregation itself is positively indignant concerning the public notice of the withdrawal. It would never have affected matters had it not been seen by those who do not know the circumstances, for those who know have no respect for the action at all." Brother Charlie Taylor bears about the same testimony as to the unimpeachable character of Brother Record.

Now, it is not the purpose of this journal to reflect on the action of the elders of the church. Neither does it intend to do Brother Record any injustice. Far from this. As the New Testament church is a self-governing and selfperpetuating organization, and as God has ordained that the elders of the church should take the oversight, feed and discipline the church, we should be slow in condemning the action of the elders without knowing the facts in the case. At this distance we cannot know the facts only as they are reported to us by those who do know them. Neither does it seem wise to array the testimony of an outsider against the testimony of another outsider. As Brother W. H. Thompson has written a confession of his wrong in sending the document for publication, it appears that it would be scriptural and right for the elders to get together and send a statement to the Advocate for publication that would do justice to Brother Record. Presuming from evidence presented that a wrong has been done him, this would do far more to right that wrong than any statement that may be made from outside brethren. So far as I can discern, Brother Record's statement is Christlike and bears evidence of humility and an earnest desire to do the will of the Lord. If the charges are true as presented against the elders of the church, then the elders should make confession for the wrong that they have done. The Scriptures do not authorize hasty action in the withdrawal of fellowship. Such action should be taken only as the last resort, and should be taken, first, for the salvation of the offender and, second, for the protection of the church itself. If the facts are rightly stated by the critics of the elders, none of these considerations were present when Brother Record was so summarily dealt with. While Brother Record appeared before the church and apologized for what he wrote to Brother Rateliffe, if the facts as presented by the critics of the elders are true, then it seems to me that no apology was due. His language might have been more scriptural and more dignified, but there is certainly no wrong in preferring true charges against a church. So long as men are human, the management of a church will be fallible. The Holy Spirit, through the apostle John, preferred charges against the church at Ephesus in the following words: "But I have this against thee, that thou didst leave thy first love. Remember therefore whence thou art fallen, and repent and do the first works; or else I come to thee, and will move thy candlestick out of its place, except thou repent." (Rev. 2: 4, 5.) To the church at Pergamum he writes: "But I have a few things against thee, because thou hast there some that hold the teaching of Balaam, who taught Balak to cast a stumblingblock before the children of Israel, to eat things sacrificed to idols, and to commit fornication. So hast thou also some that hold the teaching of the Nicolaitans in like manner. Repent therefore; or else I come to thee quickly, and I will make war against them with the sword of my mouth." (Rev. 2: 14-16.) Also to the church in Thyatira he says: "I know thy works, and thy love and faith and ministry and patience, and that thy last works are more than the first. But I have this against thee, that thou sufferest the woman Jezebel, who calleth herself a prophetess; and she teacheth and seduceth my servants to commit fornication, and to eat things sacrificed to idols." (Rev. 2: 19, 20.) To the church in Laodicea he writes: "I know thy works, that thou art neither cold nor hot: I would thou wert cold or hot. So because thou art lukewarm, and neither hot nor cold, I will spew thee out of my mouth." (Rev. 3: 15, 16.) If the elders are guilty of the conduct with which they are charged, no preacher or evangelist who labors with them and knows the facts does his duty if he fails to reprove them in a spirit of meekness and firmness in the hope of getting them to live as the Holy Spirit commands. Paul charged Timothy to "reprove, rebuke, exhort, with all long-suffering and teaching."

Hoping that these reflections will be received in the spirit that they are given and that all will be profited thereby, I close by suggesting that the elders get together and agree as to the scriptural action that should be taken and forward us such statement for publication. If the elders acted hastily, they should not hesitate to say so and should not be satisfied until they have corrected the wrong. As one elder has made a confession and as good men are saying Brother Record has been wronged, it is evident that the elders were hasty in their action. The punishment inflicted on the evildoer in Corinth "was inflicted by the many." The demand for withdrawal should be imperative and there should be an overwhelming sentiment for it before its execution.

Are You a Christian?

BY GEORGE W. FARMER.

Are you a Christian? If not, you are in a lost state. No matter who you are, nor where you hall from, you have no hope out of Christ. Distinguished birth cannot avail in your salvation, nor wealth, nor honor, nor learning. All of these things are good if consecrated to the Lord, but otherwise they are worse than filthy rags, for of themselves they can do naught but intensify eternal punishment. Why depend upon human gifts for redemption? Christ alone can save?

Why not become a Christian to-day? To-morrow may be too late. God has nowhere promised us another day in which to repent. He says: "Now is the accepted time; ... now is the day of salvation." Life is uncertain; death is certain; and after death the judgment. Everytime we breathe, two persons die somewhere. Your time may come soon. Are you ready? At the great Lisbon earthquake it is estimated that sixty thousand persons perished in six minutes. Few of the number were ready to die. We ought to live every hour as though it were our last upon earth. The terms of salvation are very simple. No miracle is necessary in conversion. It is a shame that many theologians have thrown a cloud of mysticism about the Christian religion. But be assured, dear unsaved reader, that the way to God is clear and easy. First, hear the word (Matt. 17: 5); second, believe (John 3: 17); third, repent (Acts 17: 30); fourth, confess Christ (Matt. 10: 32); fifth, be baptized (Acts 2: 38). Take these five steps prayerfully and sincerely and your sins will be forgiven; you will be a member of the church of Chirst, a Christian, and an heir to eternal glory. A faithful life will then insure you an unfading crown at God's right hand. Will you not accept the blessed invitation to come to Christ right now? Say "Yes." "Thou God seest me!"

The contribution of $5, credited in last week's issue to Burnett's Chapel should have read: "Mrs. W. V. Eskridge, Antioch, Tenn.

Sister Crisp, of Orafino, Ida., in sending her contribution writes: "I have two fatherless children of my own, but they have enough to eat and wear. I cannot turn deaf ears to appeals."

Following received from Berne: "Relief administered to extent of funds available from twenty important centers greatly ameliorates distressful condition, but large numbers within reach are not affected. Many die because of prolonged underfeeding. Ration in some centers hundred grams of bread and soup once a day. It is pitiful to see gaunt figures clad in rags passing from door to door begging for food in wailing tones. Hundreds of children are walking about the streets trying to pick up livings from dust heaps. Reduction and limitation of appropriation will add greatly to this number and sadly increase the awful wastage of life. This pitiful cry pleads for increased supply. Is it not possible to restore appropriation to original figure at least for saving life."

In sending contributions, be sure and state whether they are intended for the Armenian and Syrian Fund or the Poland Fund. Make all checks and money orders payable to A. B. Lipseomb, who will forward them to the proper commissioners.

If We Had Known!

Not for the deeds we did, O God, we crave
So much thy pardon, as for those undone:
The words we might have said; the help to one
In need we might have given; the hand to save;
The love shown ere the inevitable grave
Shut out all hope, all chances to atone,
And with its irremediable stone
Closed the short opportunity we have.
For, "In that day," He saith, "the doom shall be
Not that ye sinned—all sin may be forgiven—
But on yourselves ye shut the gates of heaven:
Doing it not to these, even unto me
Ye did it not!" And these no strangers were,
But than our very lives themselves more dear!

Training Little Children

By MRS. PRINCESS B. TROWBRIDGE.

(Suggestions by mothers who have been kindergartners. Issued by The United States Bureau of Education, Washington, D. C., and The National Kindergarten Association, New York, N. Y.)

Article 19.

Joy and Satisfaction Come from Sharing the Children's Work and Pleasures and Letting Them Share Ours.

"Come, let us live with our children!" What more fitting advice to mothers than this old motto of Froebel's? To live with our children not only makes for their best development, but also develops the best motherhood in us. There would be more happy mothers if all could know the joy and satisfaction there is in living with the children, in sharing their work and pleasure and letting them share ours.

Let the child be with you while you work; let him help you even if he does "hinder" a little. Let him take walks with you. Tell him about the birds, squirrels, rabbits, trees, flowers, and all you see. Encourage him to see even things that you do not see; or, if he is not inclined to observe readily, call his attention to the objects of nature, and gradually explain their life to him. He will soon begin to ask questions. Answer every sensible question truthfully-I want to emphasize this point. I have made it a rule to give information when it is asked for, and almost at no other time, at least not until the child shows by some word or act that he is ready for it. The best way to teach a child is to give him truthful answers to his questions. Some one has said: "It makes a vast difference whether the soul of the child is regarded as a piece of blank paper to be written upon, or as a living power to be quickened by sympathy, to be educated by truth.'

I remember when my oldest child was about two years old that, in watching the sunset, he said: "Mother, where does the sun go when it sets?" I explained to him as well as I could; and then, taking an apple to represent the earth, showed him how the little Chinese children had sunlight when it was dark on our side of the earth. Whenever he talked about it afterwards, he always said: "After dark the sun is down with the little Chinese children." One day, about three years later, he came running home from kindergarten and exclaimed: "O, mother, now I know what you mean by the sun setting!" Then he repeated for me the little song, "Good Morning, Merry Sunshine!" by Eleanor Smith:

"Good morning, Merry Sunshine!
How did you wake so soon?
You've scared the little stars away,
And driven away the moon.

"I saw you go to sleep last night, Before I ceased my playing; How did you get way over there, And where have you been staying?"

"I never go to sleep, dear child,
I just go round to see
My little children of the East,
Who rise and watch for me.

"I waken all the birds and bees And flowers on my way; And last of all the little child, Who stayed out late to play."

Another time my boy asked the question: "How are the mountains made?" To explain to him; I took two apples, setting one in the window and letting it shrivel up, and baking the other at the first suitable opportunity. In showing the baked apple to the children, I pointed out that heat had made it burst out of the skin and that in just this way the earth, which was hot at the center, erupted into mountains. With the other apple I showed how the drying of the skin had made ridges, like those on the crust of the earth. Some months later the boy went to visit his uncle, who is a geologist; and when the conversation turned upon mountains, he remembered all I had said, was interested, and talked most intelligently on this subject.

On our walks through the woods, I do not say, "There is a beautiful tree," but rather, "There is an oak or an elm tree." When they were four and five years old, my children knew all the trees in our suburb, not only by their leaves, but by their bark. In the same way they have learned about the flowers. Even the baby knows a "robber" (robin). Treat children as intelligent beings, not as playthings or little animals.

In simple little ways that will occur to every mother, we can explain the facts of life to our children. My family is fortunate in living in a semirural district, and we have a cow. The question soon arose: "Where did the baby calf come from?" We told the children truthfully as much as was necessary for them to know at that time. Later we shall tell them more.

A little training in child culture would be most helpful to any mother. My training as a kindergartner has made my work with the children much easier, more pleasant, and, of course, more intelligent. I would advise women with children to attend all the mothers' classes and parents' clubs they can and to read as many good books on child culture as possible. But these things are not absolutely necessary to the making of a good mother. She needs first to have an open mind, a full heart, and a love for her child which plans for its healthful and symmetrical growth, physically, mentally, and spiritually.

One of the most helpful books I have found on the management and understanding of the child is Miss Elizabeth Harrison's "A Study of Child Nature." Other good books are "Poems Children Love," by Coussens (Dodge Publishing Company, New York, $1.25); "Mother Stories" and "More Mother Stories," by Maud Lindsay (Milton Bradley Company, Springfield, Mass., $1 each); Emilie Poulsson's "Finger Plays" (Lothrop, Lee & Shepard Company, Boston, $1.25); and books illustrated by Leslie Brooke. Some of these are: "The Tailor and The Crow," $1; "The Truth About Old King Cole," by G. F. Hill, $1; "Johnny Crow's Garden," $1; "Johnny Crow's Party," $1; "The Golden Goose Book," $2; "The Nursery Rhyme Picture Book," $1. These are all published by F. Warne & Co., New York.

If the mother can play or sing, I suggest that she purchase a few good song books. These will afford both the children and herself much pleasure and profit. Songs not only increase the musical sense, but also enlarge the child's vocabulary and imagination and develop community feeling. Emilie Poulsson's book, "Songs of a Little Child's Day," with music by Eleanor Smith (Milton Bradley Company, $1.50), is good for children four years old and over. The children would also like "Children's Singing Games, Old and New," by Mari Hofer (A. Flanagan Company, 50 cents).

Only those who are lifted up from the earth draw men unto them. The world is possessed by those who are not possessed by it. The momentum of love is the source of power.—Francis G. Peabody.

These people are naked and hungry, and they are our brethren. Are we going to remain idle and have our Savior say to us in the last day: "I was naked, and ye did not clothe me; I was hungry, and ye gave me not to eat. Inasmuch as you did it not to one of these, you did it not to me?" Let us read the twenty-fifth chapter of Matthew and decide what our duty is.

HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA AND PEPTIRON

Conditions that are both scrofulous and anemic are very common. Many persons whose faces are "broken out," cheeks are pale, and nerves are weak, suffer from them.

There is an effective, economical remedy in the combination of Hood's Sarsaparilla and Peptiron, one taken before eating and the other after.

The Prospect at Muskogee, Okla.

BY J. G. ALLEN.

I make this appeal to the preaching brethren for this reason: The very nature of your work enables you to appreciate the responsibility of preaching the word more than any other class of Christians. I have labored as a preacher in and around Nashville, Tenn., for the last twenty-five years and have had a humble part in establishing many congregations. I long desired to work in a field that I believed needed me more than Nashville, where there are so many preachers. In March, 1917, I came to this thriving city of about sixty-five thousand inhabitants, with four independent railroad lines reaching all over the West, and found no church of Christ here and no preacher within a radius of fifty miles. I found a few faithful brethren here who had met from house to house for some time, but they were without a preacher. I soon saw that I was where preaching was badly needed; so I secured work by which I could support myself and help bear the expense of the church. I have been working and preaching now for sixteen months, with the result that we need a permanent house to meet in; and for two thousand dollars we can buy a house with restrictive clause in the deed, which will give us a solid footing here and enable us to use our money for other mission work which is badly needed. We have more than sixty names enrolled now, with good attendance at every service.

Now, brother, I have full confidence in the brotherhood that they will respond liberally if this need is placed before them, so I pray that you will not neglect the same. A few years ago Atlanta, Ga., was without a true church of Christ. Cooperating with other brethren, I wrote a letter to a few brethren asking help to start the work, and the money came in nicely. Brother F. W. Smith, of Nashville, than whom there is no better preacher. was engaged to hold a tent meeting for one month, which resulted in twenty-eight additions. The writer was invited the same year to preach the first sermon in our up-to-date church house there. Look to-day how they have grown. Brother, here is a field "white unto the harvest;" so let your contributions come. The world is truly hungering for the pure word of God, divested of all fads and frills. Are we going to sit idly by and let this opportunity pass? Send all money to C. L. Hanan, treasurer, 320 West Okmulgee Avenue, Muskogee, Okla., and it will be acknowledged through the Gospel Advocate.

As to myself, I refer to any gospel preacher in Nashville, Tenn.; also J. W. Shepherd, of the Christian Leader. Address me at Osage and Monte Streets, Muskogee, Okla.

Keeping Up the Work.

BY JOHN T. RAMSEY.

I am now (July 24) engaged in my second annual meeting with the Spring Street church of Christ, in Murfreesboro, Tenn., with fairly good attendance to date. I closed my third annual meeting with the Madison Street church of Christ, in Corinth, Miss., with ten additions and the church left in a splendid condition. The church there is in better shape for work now thansever before, and they mean to get right down to real work and do their whole duty toward taking Corinth for Christ. Dixie people are a good class of people in which to work, and they know how to treat strangers. I have willingly agreed to return to these brethren. After I return to Dallas, Texas, my home, and get things in good working order there, I shall return to Corinth, where I shall spend some time in getting the church in a better working condition. I hope that all the Tennessee brethren will be wide awake and let us get busy as never before and take the State for Christ. We can do more, and let us do it. First, let us live right and teach right, and the work will run well. Let us all teach the same thing and live the Christian life, and the world can do us no harm. If God be for us, who can be against us?

Report from Tate County, Miss.

BY J. P. LOWREY.

I have just closed a very fine meeting at Crockett. This was the second meeting to be held in the new house at that place. The house was completed about one year ago. There is not a congregation in the State more in earnest than this one.

Our meeting with the Thyatira Church will begin on the second Sunday in August. The writer will do the preaching.

The work at Senatobia is moving along very harmoniously; we have never seen greater zeal than is being shown by this congregation. Material is being put on the ground for our meetinghouse here, and we will all rejoice when it is completed. But we must have more money before this work can go on to completion. We cannot understand why brethren where the Gospel Advocate is read have not responded to the appeals that have been made in the interest of this work. Since our last report we have received only ten dollars, which was sent by Sister C. A. Grayson, of Owen's Cross Roads, Ala. The writer has labored here for nearly four years in an effort to establish primitive Christianity, and we have accomplished about all that we can hope for until we get a house in which to meet. The brethren here have gone the limit, some of them borrowing money to contribute to this cause. When the house is completed, we expect it to be free from debt. We want this building completed in time to hold a meeting in it this year; but without help we cannot do this. Brethren, why will you not help the church at Senatobia? Is not the cause of Christ as much to you in Mississippi as it is at your own home? If you wish to know more of the worthiness of this appeal, write to Brother A. G. Freed, of Henderson, Tenn. He is familiar with the situation here. Will you not help us at once? Every week we wait, material costs us more. We have sent out the S. O. S. signal; souls are perishing all over North Mississippi. Will you not help us to make Senatobia a center from which to reach thousands who are yearning for the truth? Send your contributions to M. H. Dandridge, treasurer, Senatobia, Miss. The time will come when you will have reason to rejoice over having had a part in this work.

Camp Sevier and Brother Dunn's Work.

BY JOHN HAYES.

On July 14 I received a message from my son, who is in the army, that he would soon leave for France. Leaving home at 4:30 P.M., I reached Camp Sevier, Greenville, S. C., on Monday at 6 P.M.

The first night at the camp I got a glimpse of the work done by Brother Dunn, and during my three-days' stay I saw the great sacrifice he is making to do good to his fellow man. In company with my son, we went up to the Y. M. C. A. building, where Brother Dunn works. The building was crowded with soldiers, and Brother Dunn was busy talking with them and urging them to become children of God. One young man that night confessed Christ and was baptized by Brother Dunn the next morning; and that evening another soldier boy and his wife were baptized. My heart was made sad when I saw the zeal of the sectarians in this one army camp and noticed the need of a worker to cooperate with Brother Dunn.

Greenville is a city of over forty thousand people. Almost every sect is represented at the camp and has the cooperation of its organization in the city. On the streets and in the hotels are notices inviting the soldiers to preaching, but not a church of Christ in the city. Why do we claim to be loyal and to love the souls of our fellow men and let this golden opportunity for good go by? If the churches would support a man, he could soon have a good working church in that city, and what a help it would be to Brother Dunn in his work at the camp! The young men of our country are giving their lives for the cause of liberty, fighting against a system that would rob us of our liberties. Should we falter in giving of our means to teach the word of God where it is needed so badly? You who have criticized Brother Dunn, just go to Camp Sevier, see the great work before him, and you will be ashamed.

Work in Northern Alabama.

BY JAMES A. ALLEN,

On Lord's day, July 14, I had the pleasure of preaching both morning and night at the Jackson Street church of Christ, Albany, Ala. In the afternoon I went over to Trinity, some seven or eight miles from Albany, and spoke at an outdoor meeting, assembled under the trees.

I desire to call attention to a condition that exists in that section of Alabama, which is by no means peculiar to it alone. Brother J. Pettey Ezell, who lives in Albany, spends a part of his time with the Jackson Street Church and also devotes a part of his time to laboring at other points. He has done, and is doing, a splendid work. The Jackson Street Church is in a prosperous and flourishing condition, the work moving forward with zeal and energy. Brother Ezell was present at both of the Jackson Street meetings, and I noticed that he is held in very high esteem.

But what I desire to call attention to is that Brother Ezell is the only preacher in that section of the country. I am told that from Albany, Ala., going north, to Pulaski, Tenn., there is no Christian preacher; and the radius is about the same on the south, east, and west. Consequently Brother Ezell is the only gospel preacher living in that large section of Alabama.

This condition is not peculiar to Alabama. It is more the rule than it is the exception. And the moral of it comes to us with a tremendous force; and that moral is that men who can preach the gospel ought not to be congregated into a single locality, but that they ought to spread out. Consolidation into a central federation is not Heaven's order. When congregations become too large, they ought, like the bees, to swarm again. The same thing is true of the preachers. The twelve apostles were divided over the earth. They could not have accomplished their work had they congregated together. When the membership of the first church at Jerusalem ran into thousands, in the providence of God, persecution scattered them, like leaves, over the face of the earth; and "they that were scattered abroad went about preaching the word." So that out of apparent adversity came the greatest of blessing. Let our churches and preachers scatter themselves abroad and notice the good results that immediately will begin to accrue.

There is only one way by which we can reach our desired goal—that is, to get up and go.—Selected.

He was made perfect through suffering; He entered not into his glory before he was crucified.—Keble.

Increased Length of Life.

It is a comfort to learn, on highest authority, that the average man or woman of the present generation lives ten years longer than his or her greatgrandparents.

There are several reasons why. Not least important of them is the improved sanitary conditions of our modern environment, which do not invite disease.

We have mastered the great epidemic maladies, such as smallpox and the "black death." In former times smallpox annually killed five hundred thousand persons in Europe; and a single epidemic of bubonic plague swept away one-fourth of the poulalation of that continent.—Exchange.

What Was My Sin?

BY W. A. RECORD.

In the Gospel Advocate of May 30 a withdrawal notice appeared, signed by the elders of the Lone Oak Church, concerning me. If the readers of the Advocate knew the situation at Lone Oak as the neighbor congregations do, I would pay no attention to this slanderous notice; but as it is, no doubt you have wondered what crime I committed, and truly you have a right to; for the phrase, "disorderly walk," as used in that notice, without being modified in any way, certainly opens an avenue for guessing.

The church at Lone Oak has a chronic trouble which might be called "domineering," Its action and management have been questioned and have caused trouble for several years. While I am the only one to be advertised, I am not the only one who has been withdrawn from, and only one of several who quit the Lone Oak Church because of its conditions, I tried to not get mixed up with the trouble there and stayed clear of it for some two years; but after it leavened out and involved some of the Paducah brethren by their being falsely accused, I was demanded to take sides either for or against the main ruler of the Lone Oak Church. I could not act in the affirmative in this matter without doing something 1 believed was wrong and evil in its nature. I declined in this because I never believed in being for or against any one. I have always tried to be for right and against wrong, irrespective of who is wrong. I do not hold this position because I am always right, for I realize that I do and say many things which are wrong, but because it is the only rule which will enable one to rebuke the wrong in self, friend, and foe in the same manner. After a prayerful consideration and advice from other preachers, I ceased my connection with the Lone Oak Church (my only connection was association.) This was seven months before they took their so-called "action." Six months before this action, when I heard that Brother Ratcliffe, of Bardwell, Ky., had been employed by Brother Clark without the consent of the elders (which seemed to add more fuel to the fire which was already burning), I wrote Brother Ratcliffe as a preacher brother in regard to the condition of things at Lone Oak, and hence committed my sin. During this six months it seemed to me that Brethren Clark and Wharton worked diligently to try to find some fault in me. My neighbors were questioned to see if I had made any slanderous remark about Brother Wharton, and were requested to pump me to see if I would say anything which would retard the government or the Red Cross in the war work. They falled in this. So the letter was brought up again, and hence these charges:

The church of Christ at Lone Oak brings charges against Brother Willie Record, (1) that he warns Brother Rateliffe not to dirty his hands with an outfit like this. Therefore the church at Lone Oak feels aggrieved or humiliated at such language being used concerning us. Therefore we ask Brother Record to retract and confess his wrong, or the church at Lone Oak will proceed to act as the Scriptures direct for an erring brother.

The church at Lone Oak brings charges against Brother Willie Record (2) of his writing a letter to Brother Ratcliffe to not come to Lone Oak to hold a meeting. In that letter he charges M. N. Clark of being a busybody and not having authority from the elders to employ or correspond with said Ratcliffe. Therefore we ask Brother Record to retract and confess his wrong to Brother Clark as a brother.

Elders (J. W. DUNCAN, G. W. GRAVES.

W. H. Thompson would not sign this. I appeared before the church and apologized for the wrong I had done. The church and Brother Clark both pardoned me, and I heard no more of it until I read the notice in the Advocate. I deplore this trouble from the depth of my heart, and trust that strife will cease and brotherly love prevail.

DEFEAT BACKACHE AND KIDNEY TROUBLE WITH ANURIC.

Many people in this section, as elsewhere, have suffered from rheumatism and kidney trouble and have found Anuric to be the most successful remedy, to overcome these painful and dangerous ailments.

ous ailments.

The lucky people are those who have suffered, but who are now well because they heeded Nature's warning signal in time to correct their trouble with that wonderful new discovery of Dr. Pierce's called An-u-ric. You should promptly heed these warnings, some of which are dizzy spells, backache, irregularity of the urine or the painful twinges of rheumatism, sciatica or lumbago. To delay-may make possible the dangerous forms of kidney disease, such as diabetes or stone in the bladder. in the bladder.

To overcome these distressing conditions you should take plenty of exercise in the open air, avoid a heavy meat diet, drink freely of water and at each meal take Dr. Pierce's Anurie Tablets (double strength). You will, in a short time, find that you are one of the firm indorsers of Anuric, as are many of your neighbors.

You can obtain a trial package of Anuric by sending 10 cents to Dr. V. M. Pierce, Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y.

A Word to the Preachers in Behalf of Brother Jelley.

BY THOMAS H. BURTON.

Brethren, we have a coworker in distress far from his native land, who has sent out a call for help. What are we going to do about it? Have you thought? Did it impress you? Let us stop and consider. We are living with friends and loved ones in this richly blessed land, enjoying health and all necessary things to make us happy and comfortable. This dear brother that has sacrificed more in the last seven years to preach the gospel than we will in a lifetime is now asking for the small amount of a few hundred dollars to come home on, that he may regain his health. Will we heed his call or not? I would be glad to be one of five hundred preachers to send him a thousand dollars to bring him home. But perhaps that would take too long; so I want to be one of ten that will turn in this amount in the next thirty days. I am no beggar and a very poor hand to make up money, but I am sure I can do this. Who will volunteer to do this work to help relieve this suffering brother? Now, brother, don't think that some one else will do it, but join in at once and let us do what we do now. If we get up more than the amount it takes to pay his expenses home, he will have expenses here; so don't be afraid of doing too much.

Some one will say that that is too much money to spend in that way. Now turn the picture and read the Golden Rule on the other side. Would it be too much if it were you? If I were in his place, I don't think it would be too much for me.

It is not only a service to the man, but our Savior said: "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of these my brethren, even these least, ye did it unto me."

Enlist now, brother, and help us go "over the top." Write me at Hartsville, Tenn., and let me know what you can do, and that will encourage me. Send your collections to the Gospel Advocate office and they will be properly forwarded. .

Thorp Spring Christian College.

BY BATSELL BAXTER.

The writer is back on the faculty at Thorp Spring after an absence of two years. During this absence I was dean of Cordell Christian College (Oklahoma). I began teaching in Thorp Spring Christian College in 1911. I am to be dean and have charge of the history department. Brother R. C. Bell, who was president of the school for five years, is back also, and will have charge of the English department. Brother W. F. Ledlow, who has been with the school for the past two years, is now president.

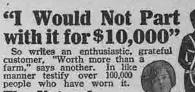

During the past few years the school has made great progress. Much new equipment has been added. The enrollment has grown steadily. The coming year promises to be one of the best yet. There are many girls expecting to come, and many more boys than would be expected in these war times.

With excellent equipment and full credit, Thorp Spring Christian College is doing work as a junior college of which any institution of learning might justly be proud.

Write to Brother W. F. Ledlow, Thorp Spring, Texas, for a catalogue. Better still, come at the opening in September and see for yourself.

Letters That Inspire Confidence.

I wish very much that every reader of this paper could spend sufficient time in my office to read the thousands of letters which I have received from all parts of the country. I have printed several hundreds of them in a booklet; but I wish you could see the originals, for I would like to have you realize the wonderful results which they report in the relief of dyspepsia, indigestion, persistent headache, rheumatism, kidney, bladder, and liver diseases, uric-acid poisoning, and other curable conditions due to impure conditions due blood.

Before my own health was restored by Shivar Mineral Water and I purchased this spring, and before ceived all these letters from sufferers, I did not take very much stock in advertisements like this. I, therefore cannot blame you if you doubt; but, my friend, I am absolutely convinced that the Shivar Spring is the greatest restorative mineral spring ever discovered, not excepting the famous spas of Europe. I have shipped this water to thousands of sufferers in all parts of the United States, and they almost invariably report either permanent restoration or beneficial results. That is why I make the offer contained in the following letter. Sign it now and mail it.

Value of Ideals in Life.

I am one of those men, and I am sure their number is legion, who believe that you cannot get the best results without ideals. To live a life without ideals must be a dull existence; however ambitious these ideals may be or however modest, I am certain that those people who do possess them get far greater results than the less happy people who do not .- Admiral Sir Rosslyn Erskine Wemyss.

Gaguebin.

On June 7, 1918, the death angel visited our community and claimed as its victim Sister Rebecca Ann Gaguebin, widow of Stephen Gaguebin, at her home near Tulare, Cal. Sister Gaguebin was born in Pennsylvania in 1844 and was seventy-three years of age at the time of her death. She leaves five sons—J. L., of Tulare, Cal.; R. B., of Fresno, Cal.; Arthur, of Visalia, Cal.; H. S., of Hanford, Cal.; and F. H., of Omaha, Neb. As long as she was able to go, she was a faithful member with us each Lord's day. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord? L. MEADE WILLIAMS.

Braithwaite.

Sister Ada Belle Braithwaite, wife of R. W. Braithwaite, was born on January 17, 1867, and died on July 14, 1918, at 8 o'clock A.M., at Shepherdsville, Ky. Her maiden name was ville, Ky. Her maiden name was stated on December 12, more." She married on December 12, 1888, and was still living at her father's old home place at the time of To this union two children were born-Blanche and Ernest. the tender age of sixteen she was born of the water and of the Spirit. She was a devoted mother and wife, a good neighbor, and a consistent Christian. She was not sick very long. May God bless the husband, children, brother, and sisters, that they may meet her in the home where changes never come, in that clime so bright and fair. (See Rev. 14: 13.) JARRATT L. SMITH.

Barriger.

W. E. Barriger was born on April 4, 1852, and died at his home, near Lowes, Ky., where all his days were spent, on May 31, 1918. At the age of seventeen he consecrated his heart to God, and his life was in accord with his profession, he being richly endowed with those characteristics common to men of faith. His faithful com-panion, two sons, two daughters, a host of other relatives and friends, and the entire Hebron Church, in which he was an elder thirty-five years, mourn his death. No one in that community would have been more greatly missed than he. He loved the church, loved those who preached the gospel, and his happiest hours, it seemed, were those which preachers spent in his home. I shall never forget the many words of encouragement he has spoken to me, for, though I have made many weak efforts at preaching at Hebron Church, he saw something good in them all. There was sadness in our home when word came that he had gone, for we realized that he was one of our very best friends. C. M. STUBBLÆFIELD.

Wilson.

Now I am without a mother. own sweet, loving mother died long years ago, and since then Mrs. Lydia Whatley Wilson has been my only mother. Forty-five years ago I mar-ried her daughter, Bettie, and during all these years she has been a good and patient mother to me. She never spoke an unkind or harsh word to me, and encouraged and supported me in all my efforts to do good and to be good. But she, too, is gone. She fell peacefully asleep in Jesus on July 17, 1918, at her home in Jacksboro, Texas, in the eighty-fifth year of her age. She confessed and was baptized into Christ under the preaching of J. M. Barnes, at Dublin, Ala., fifty years ago. She was a regular attendant on the services of the church of Christ and a reader of the Bible and the Gospel Advocate until a few years ago, when she became totally blind by reason of her great age. The funeral services were conducted by Brother Gaskins, elder in the church of which she had been a regular and faithful attendant more than thirty years, and whom she had long loved and regarded as one of the best and most loyal of Christ's disciples. D. B. MIZELL.

Chandler.

On Monday, July 15, 1918, the angel of death visited the home of Mr. Radford Chandler and delivered a message of death to his wife, Bessie. Her death came as a great shock to her friends and relatives, as she was sick only four days and very few knew she was sick. She was twenty-two years old. She married Brother Radford Chandler on January 28, 1916. She obeyed the gospel of God's dear Son eight years ago, thereby becoming a member of the church of Christ. She was bap-tized by Brother D. H. Friend, and was a member of the Oakwood congregation. She was a friend and neighbor to all that knew her. She was buried at the Blooming Grove burying ground, services being conducted by the writer. My friends, do those of you who have not rendered obedience to the commands of Jesus Christ ever stop for one moment and think of the great love that God has for us and that this hour will sooner or later come to us all? I heard an old preacher say not many days ago that the hardest task that comes to a preacher is to conduct the burial service of a person that had not obeyed the gospel, for there is nothing to say that would be any consolation to the relatives. But, on the other hand, if we have rever-enced the name of Christ, rendered obedience to his gospel, and have con-tinued steadfastly in the apostles' teaching, fellowship, breaking of bread, and prayers, death has no sting, the grave loses its victory. Then, and only then, can we say with the apostle Paul: "There is laid up for me a crown of righteousness."

A. S. LANDIS.

Mullins.

How true the saying, "Death is no respecter of persons!" J. B. Mullins, one of God's noble men, has passed from earth into the glorious beyond. On the night of June 19, 1918, as he and his wife were returning home from a visit to a relative, and before reaching home, he very suddenly breathed his last. Brother Mullins was born in Middle Tennessee, but came to West Tennessee, when a young man, and had been a citizen of Greenfield for many years. He was born on June 12, 1850, hence was a little over sixty-eight years old. He was married to Miss Ada Davidson on February 1, 1880. The wife and four children (three daughters and one son) survive. Brother Mullins obeyed the gospel when a young man, and for many years has been a member of the church at Greenfield. In his death the church has lost a most faithful and beloved member; the family, a loving and devoted husband and father; the town, a true and tried citizen. For some years Brother Mullins had been one of the stockholders and operators of the J. H. Ward & Co. roller mill at Greenfield. He is gone, but not for-gotten. He will continue to live in our memories because of his work of faith and labor of love. Funeral services were conducted in the home, in the presence of a large body of relatives and friends, and the remains were laid to rest in Highland Cemetery to await the resurrection of the J. L. HOLLAND. just.

Laster.

Mrs. Mary W. N. Laster (née Johnson) was born in Louisiana on March 9, 1837; moved to Obion County, Tenn., in 1851; was married to Elias Laster on November 1, 1854; and died on June 25, 1918, aged eighty-one years, three months, and sixteen days. She confessed her faith in Christ and was buried with him in baptism by Brother Isaac C. Sewell in 1869. Thirty-seven years ago Brother W. T. Shelton set in order a congregation of fifteen members at Pleasant Hill, in Obion County, and she was one of the number. Of that little congregation, only two remain—Brother W. S. Long, Sr., of Union City, and Brother G. F. Botts, of Rives. Brother Long was present at the funeral. On account of ill health, Brother Botts could not be present. Sister Laster was the mother of fourteen children. All but one lived to be grown, and eleven still live. was a mother in Israel who loved the baby in the home more than she did canary birds or poodle dogs. She was not ashamed of motherhood, and therefore she leaves to this wicked old world a rich legacy in her sons and daughters, who loved her dearly, a beautiful monument to her memory, and in them she "lives on and on." The writer conducted the funeral at Pleasant Hill in the same house where, nineteen years ago, he conducted the funeral of her husband. They now sleep side by side in the Pleasant Hill cemetery with life's work ended, but

JOHN R. WILLIAMS.

Fry.

Lieut. Clarence H. Fry, twenty-four years old, son of John W. Fry, of Columbia, Tenn., was killed in an aero-plane accident near London, England, on May 4, 1918. He was flying a highpowered, single-seater S. P. A. D. machine, which broke into a spinning nose dive too near the earth to be corrected. He was very fond of driving that type of machine. The officer in command of the Fifty-sixth R. A wrote: "Clarence was a very skillful pilot of great promise; he was very keen, and would have made a name for himself at the front, had he lived. He was given a military aviation funeral with full band, firing party, the coffin conveyed on an aviation trailer, covered by the United States standard, and was followed by some thirty offi-cers, fifty British troops, and fifty enlisted men of the Two Hundred and Twenty-second Aëro Squadron, U. S. A. S., with their officer, then many civilian friends. A United States flag was buried with him. Six of his closest friends were pallbearers, one of whom was himself killed four days later. He was very popular both with soldiers and civilians, and many wreaths were placed upon his grave in the St. Albans Cemetery." Of course it is some consolation to know that Clarence was permitted to die among friends, and, as one English paper stated, he was shown all the honor the living could show the dead; but the real comfort comes from knowing he was a Christian. He gave his heart to God and was baptized by Brother W. S. Morton. He was such a high-minded, moral, upright boy that his associates wrote the family that his had lost one of the good influences out of their lives. A beautiful memo-rial was held in his honor in Columbia, where his numerous friends ex-pressed their admiration for his character and sorrow for his untimely end. VIRGINIA BOYD.

New York, N. Y. (Special).—It is now proven that the stylish Panama, up to now only worn by the best-dressed people, can now be sold for $1. You don't have to be skeptical about the low price, as it gives service like the $5 and $10 kind, but not so fine a weave; and by this new discovery of weave one can hardly tell the difference. A Panama gives a man or woman distinction and at the same time comfort. Mr. George J. Bungay, 28 South William Street, of New York City, is backing up his discovery by sending a real hand-woven Panama, any size, trimmed, blocked, with slik band, to any one for $1, postpaid. Fitted with leather sweat band, 25 cents extra. Furthermore, his policy is that, if you are not entirely satisfied, he will return your money.—Advt.

Elkwood, July 23 .- The writer is in an interesting meeting at Shiloh Church, about eighteen miles from Huntsville. The interest is good and the large house is filled every night. I have been suffering with rheumatism for ten days and still have to stand by the help of a stick. I hope to report later that many souls have been led out of darkness into light. My next meeting will be at Lyerly, Ga.-John Hayes.

Fort Deposit, July 24.—Our meeting here closed on July 5, with twelve ad-ditions. Brother Pittman also held a two-weeks' meeting in Greenville, with three added to Christ. I closed an eight-days' meeting at Berea on July 19, with four additions. Three miles east of here Brother Rhodes had two additions. I am now in a meeting at Sandy Ridge, with two additions so far. Brother Pittman did us a fine work while here. The people would hardly let him leave. He is to be back next year. - R. H. Rogers.

Carbon Hill, July 22 .- I began a tent meeting at this place yesterday. I am here for a strong pull; may be here a month or more. This is a town here a month or more. About a year ago a cyclone struck the town, demolishing many of their homes and their house of worship. They have not been able to rebuild, and are not now able. Brethren, I appeal to you to help this little band rebuild their house of worship. They have a splendid lot, paid for; and if they can get help enough to enable them to rebuild; they can then build up the cause, I suggest that the brethren, for the sake of the cause we all love, put this matter before each congregation and ask them to make a special contribution to this work on the second Lord's day in Augusta Let the members of each congregation ask themselves how much they would appreciate help if their house of worship had been blown down and they were not able to rebuild. However small your offering may be, God will bless you in making it. Send contributions to S. P. Baker, Carbon Hill, Ala., and same will be acknowledged in the Gospel Advocate. W. H. Sandy.

Dugger, July 15.—I was with the brethren at Springfield, Tenn., in a very pleasant meeting the last of June and the first of July. The membership is not large, but they are faithful and devoted to the cause. The meeting closed at the water's edge with one addition. I was glad to see the article in last week's Advocate from Brother. Elam on the work that the church can do. The church here took that position on the start and has given one hundred and forty dollars. We are at the Pine Hill Schoolhouse, and when we leave here will return to Bristow and possibly spend a few days there. It has been a long time since I have seen brethren and sisters with more zeal to work than the Bristow people seem to have. We very much enjoyed hearing Brother Paul Young. He is a son of Brother F. Sworn Statement of Composition of its Formula

It increases the strength and endurance of delicate, nervous, sun-down folks in two weeks' time in many instances.

The Board of Directors have authorized the broadest publication of the sworn statement of the coposition of Nuxated Iron, one of the most widely used tonic, strength and blood builders in the world, so that the public may examine it for themselves and judge as to its merits.

It is conservatively estimated that this remarkable formula is now being used by over 3,000,000 people annually in America alone. Among those who have used and strongly endorse it are many physicians formerly connected with well-known hospitals, former United States Senators, Vice-Presidential Nominee Charles A. Mr. N. F. Shivar, Shelton, S. C.: Dear Sir. As you are well aware, in 1809 I was suffering with indigestion, stomach and liver disorders and all its train of horrifying phenomena for several months. I had lived on milk, soft eggs, shredded wheat, a very insufficient diet for an active working man, and of course, from disease and starvation was in a very low state of nervous vitality and general debility. Lordered 10 gallons of your Mineral Water, which I used continuously, reordering when necessary, and in four months from date I began drinking it gained 29 lbs., was strong and perfectly well and have worked practically every day since. It acts as a general renovator of the system. It prescribe it in my practice, and it has in every instance had the desired effects. It is essential to use this water in as large quantities as possible, for its properties are so happily blended and in such proportion that they will not disturb the most delicate system. It is purely nature's remedy.

Edifying as the Need May Be

Men Sent from God.

The student of Bible history cannot fail to observe the fact of the appearance of capable men at critical times in the development of God's nation and people. We can truthfully say that every epoch of that history had its epochal man. In illustration of this we need only mention a few of those illustrious characters whose words and deeds reflect the glory of the age in which they lived.

In the age before the flood-the age of almost universal apostasy-there was Noah, whom Peter calls a "preacher of righteousness," Like Enoch, this man "walked with God" and was righteous among his sinful contemporaries. There was Abraham, who appeared in his age as the undaunted champion of Jehovah, and was so faithful in all things that even now we call him the "father of the faithful." In quick succession come Isaac and Jacob, each walking in the footsteps of the greatest of Jewish patriarchs. Next in order comes Joseph, the prince of the house of Potiphar, and later on governor and diplomat under Pharaoh, the most resolute and resourceful ruler of them all. Then comes Moses, the lawmaker and founder of the Jewish religion and polity, who became the type of the Savior of the world. When he died on Nebo's mountain, Joshua appears as the logical leader of the Jewish people. He was a man of warlike skill, and right fearlessly did he lead them on, carrying always in his heart the resolution: "As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord." There was Samuel, the last of the judges and the founder of the prophets-a man of clear vision and holy fervor, who did not hesitate to dethrone one king and crown another at God's command. There was David, a great warrior and a great religious reformer, the great hymn writer. He held at once the great scepters that ruled the hearts of men.

But I am in the same dilemma of the apostle Paul. "What shall I more say? for the time will fail me if I tell of Gideon, Barak, Samson, Jephtha; . . . and the prophets."

You cannot recite the history of their respective ages and leave out their names. They are part and parcel of that history. What we say of one can be said of all. They were men sent from God just as truly as was John. Each one not only believed in God, but also believed that the Father had appointed him to some special mission to which his life was given and by the contemplation of which his work was inspired.

Features of the "Sent" Man.

In presenting a delineation of the character of the Baptist, of whom it is plainly said, "He was a man sent from God," we find certain features which were characteristic of all men sent from God and which should belong to men and women everywhere who would fulfill in this age and generation the divine purpose in their lives.

John was a man whose personality commanded respect. The Levites, who were sent from Jerusalem to question John, regarded him as a unique and remarkable character. To them he was more than an ordinary man. He was either Elias, or the Messianic prophet, or the Messiah himself. His moral greatness challenged the age in which he lived. He was what Dante calls "a spiritual splendor." It was not his physical appearance, nor his stern features, nor his long hair flowing upon his brawny shoulders, nor his raiment of sheepskin and camel hair, but his rugged manhood, that attracted men to John. They were drawn by the virtues which they knew were wanting in their own lives. John was the man of the hour because he was the one man on whom the hour could count.

It is just as true to-day. The secret of Christian influence is Christian personality. The thing that grips men and secures a hearing for the church is what we ourselves are. Christian character is the one thing for which the world never loses its zest; the one thing that warms human life into color and thrills its prosaic duties into music.

But John was a man who faithfully proclaimed God's truth. When he came out of the desert to preach, he had but one text, and that text was "Repent." He saw the iniquity of his age. He knew the wickedness of the times and appealed at once to the conscience of the people. He denounced sin in all its forms and in all its places, high and low. Sometimes his words seem harsh and his temper strained, but we cannot doubt his devotion to God or his love for the people. It was because the burden of his soul was their sins. Hence he pleaded with them to repent, and enforced his plea by declaring that the kingdom of heaven was at hand. His preaching startled the community. Men realized that some strange new power had appeared among them. This John the Baptist, this man from the wilderness, with unkempt features, with shaggy garb, with weather-beaten face, appealed to them as one of the prophets, and many recognized him as the fit harbinger of the King. Just such men as John the Baptist are the saving forces in life to-day. Men who cannot be content with things as they are, if they are wrong; men who will not bow down before the idol of fashion; men who rise above conventionalities in season and out of season; men who will faithfully preach and teach the truth as it is written in God's book, are needed. The world needs men who will turn the searchlight of divine wisdom into all the crannies of the human heart and upon all the devious paths of human life. 0 0 0

Success Without the Big Head.

John was a man who recognized his place in the order of God's providence and filled that place with satisfaction to himself and to his Maker. Men of his day greeted John as a new prophet and were ready to do him homage. Had he willed it, John might have been another Confucius or another Mohammed. He might have been a false Messiah and a lost leader. But John did not will it. "He confessed, and denied not; and he confessed, I am not the Christ," To all intimations that he must be one of the heroic few, he emphatically answered that he was not. His popularity and success did not turn his head. But more than this. Not only did John disavow all personal ambition, but he plainly called attention to the fact that his popularity would be short-lived; that it would wane in the presence of the growing power of the Savior to come, the latchet of whose sandals, John claimed, he was unworthy to unloose. When his disciples became jealous of his reputation, John answered them: "He must increase, but I must decrease." This was not the melancholy expression of an envious and disgruntled spirit, but the unselfish utterance of a heroic ambassador. It is an expression of the law of life. Elijah's mantle fell on Elisha. David sat in the room of Saul. When Wellington's star ascended, Napoleon's set. Grant became famous at the expense of Lee. All through life this law of increase and decrease is operative. It is the law of progress because it is the law of God. His own prophecy had been fulfilled. The voice that cried in the wilderness is stilled. This powerful factor in those events that heralded our Master's immediate coming has gone from the scene of his earthly activities to his glorious reward in heaven. This great epochal man passed away with his epoch. But as the gospel of Jesus Christ is preached more and more, his example will become brighter and brighter and his influence will widen to the ends of the world.

This is our age and our generation. So long as we are true and loyal, we are the men sent from God to enlighten this age and save its people. Every Christian to-day is God's agent and the herald of the gospel of Jesus Christ that has been established. And we have the Master's word for it that he has countless more epportunities for doing good than John the Baptist ever possessed; for though he be least in the kingdom of heaven, he is greater than he. The Christian's voice is the voice of God in the salvation of the world. That voice should be strong and clear and decisive. It should stir the consciences of sinners and cheer the hearts of saints. Your life and mine have been given to us that we may serve God in them, and as men sent from God we are to forget ouselves in the serving; and he who forgets himself in this service-he who loses his life-in unselfish devotion to his fellow man shall find it in the world to come.

The least deviation from the rules of honor introduces a train of numberless evils.—Sir Richard Steele.

Cain-His Sin.

BY H. LEO BOLES.

Sin with an individual originates in the heart. Of course, we know that Satan is the originator of sin. When Eve sinned, the suggestion of temptation came from without and reached her heart and caused her to sin. So in regard to Cain, whatever may have been the temptations and environments from without, the sin begins in his heart. The Savior said: "For out of the heart come forth evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, fornications, thefts, false witness, railings: these are the things which defile the man." (Mattt. 15: 19, 20.) Iniquity is always conceived in the heart before it is spoken or acted. The heart becomes the fountain from which flow all kinds of wickedness.

It is doubtful if only one sin can dwell alone in the heart. Sin is said to grow in clusters, "Then the lust, when it hath conceived, beareth sin; and the sin, when it is full grown, bringeth forth death." (James 1: 15.) This teaches that sin grows. It is a natural tendency or characteristic of sin to grow. It may seem small in its beginning, but by indulgence it grows and multiplies until it has involved the whole being for time and eternity. There is not a clearer example of the rapid development of sin than is found in the history of Cain. Sin points unerringly toward death. Every sin, whether public, private, secret, big, little, popular or unpopular, pleasurable or painful, leads ultimately and finally to death.

A close study of Cain's sin will reveal a hideous cluster. Of this cluster, the following may be mentioned; First, the sin of unbelief; second, substituting his ways for God's ways; third, wrath or anger with God, his Creator: fourth. anger with Abel, his brother; fifth, jealousy; sixth, murdered Abel; seventh, lied to God. There may be others that are not mentioned here, if one would analyze closely his conduct; and it may be that those I have mentioned overlap each other in a logical classification. However, these seven sins are very prominent and come from Cain's heart. A record of Cain's sin becomes a fearful warning to all the children of men and reveals to us the desperate condition of heart that one may have and still profess to be a worshiper of God. There are many to-day whose hearts are as vicious as Cain's, who are posing as God's elect; and it may be that they have persuaded themselves that they are acceptable in the sight of Jehovah.

The sin of unbelief may be at the foundation of all the others. Cain did not have faith in God. His brother, Abel, did have faith in Jehovah. Cain did not believe in the God who created him; he did not believe in him. He believed that God existed; he knew that God existed; but there is a vast difference in believing that God exists and in believing in him. One may believe in the existence of a person, and yet have absolutely no confidence in that person. The writer of the Hebrew letter gave the warning to Hebrew Christians to be careful, lest there be in them "an evil heart of unbelief." (Heb. 3: 12.) This sin of unbelief began with Cain's mother, Eve, and has cursed the human family all down through the ages. We are told that the sins of the fathers will be visited upon the children to the third and fourth generation of those that hate God. We are not told that any specific sin is visited upon them, but that the sin, in a general sense, is visited upon them. We may infer from this that the sin of unbelief of the first parents was visited upon Cain. Little did Eve think that the disbelief which was in her own heart would characterize her offspring. Little did she think, when she looked down in the eyes of her firstborn with all of a mother's love, that there would be a heart which would disbelieve in God. Little did she think that the object of her affection would become the fountain of such a cluster of sins. O, the possibilities of good or evil that is wrapped up in a human life! While in the ecstasy of a mother's love she might have said, "I am willing to exchange the paradise of Eden for the joys of a mother," she did not look into the bottom of the cup of her joy and see the bitterness of the sin of unbelief. O, the goodness and the mercy of our God as shown in his veiling the future from us!

The second sin of the cluster, as enumerated above, is the sin of substitution. Eve had transferred her faith and confidence from God to Satan when she believed Satan's message through the serpent. Cain, through unbelief, substituted Satan's ways for Jehovah's. Cain made Satan's way of worship his way; Cain's way becomes synonymous or coincides with Satan's way. One becomes exceeding wicked when one knowingly makes Satan's way his way and then substitutes Satan's way for Jehovah's way. What an awful crime to place the will, worship, and way of Satan where the way and worship of Jehovah should be! It is to dethrone Jehovah in our heart and enthrone Satan; it is to insult Jehovah and give adoration to Satan. This was the sin of Cain.

No wonder the prophets of Jehovah have denounced with such seathing terms the sin of substitution. "Woe unto them that call evil good, and good evil; that put darkness for light, and light for darkness; that put bitter for sweet, and sweet for bitter! Woe unto them that are wise in their own eyes, and prudent in their own sight!" 5: 20, 21.) The same anathema is pronounced on the one who preaches another gospel. (Gal. 1: 8, 9.) Those who would attempt to make any substitution to-day are heirs of Cain, and the condemnation and curse rests upon all his descendants. When we thus see the condition of Cain's heart, we are not surprised at anything else he might do. What kind of a heart he must have had to offer a substituted sacrifice, to substitute his own way, set aside the wisdom of Jehovah, impeach the authority of God, rebel against the sovereignty of his Creator, and murder his brother!

Cain was angry with his God. What is man, that he should become angry at his Creator? Anger is one thing and wrath is another. Wrath is anger cherished in the heart. Cain cherished his anger against Jehovah; and then becomes angry with his brother, Abel. It naturally follows that if he is angry at God, he would be angry with all that are on the side of God.

BY J. P. SEWELL,

4. Teaching Christianity in Schools,

It is with reference to the opportunity for accomplishing God's purposes by teaching the word of God in schools and colleges that I speak at this time. The school is not the only place furnishing an opportunity for obedience to our Lord's command: "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations." There are hundreds of others. But the school does furnish an opportunity for this greatest of all services, so wonderful in its possibilities that Christians cannot afford to neglect it.

While in school the individual is passing through the formative period. He is in the making. His body, mind, and heart are being formed. His faith and notions and conceptions of life are being formed and fixed. He is being developed, very largely, into what he is to be in time and eternity. Very few people are very radically changed in faith or in life after full maturity. In spite of the fact that most of our sermons are prepared and preached with the adult mind and heart in view, a vast majority of the souls converted by them are still in the formation period.

During this important period, shall we train the body and mind and neglect the heart? But, you say, the school is for training the mind, and the home and the church for training the heart; and surely the great work of the home and church may not be overlooked without disastrous results. The school cannot possibly take their places or do their work. Neither can it overcome defects of character resulting from their failure. Too often this is expected.

Why do a vast majority, practically all, of the children of Catholic homes become Catholics and remain Catholics? Are they more diligent in their homes and churches than Protestants? I do not like to think so; still a minority of Protestant children are not becoming members of any church. The difference is in the school rather than in the home and church. Catholic children are taught and trained religiously, not only at home and church, but in school also. We see the results.

Is it good judgment, and does the law of God require that we properly teach and train our children spiritually at home and church, and then place them in school where every spiritual influence and all religious teaching are calculated to counteract and destroy our work in the home and the church? You may as well argue that it is proper to guard the health of your child at home and at church carefully, and then knowingly and deliberately send him to school where you know conditions are unsanitary, and where you know he will be exposed to all kinds of contagious diseases. As surely as there is anything true and worthy in Christianity, from the viewpoint of the undenominational Christian, our children are exposed to moral and spiritual diseases in the State schools and in many denominational schools far more serious than mere physical malady; and we see the social and spiritual disease that so often comes from thus exposing our children.

Christianity is not merely a delightful and helpful profession for those specially inclined toward it and particularly adapted to it, as the practice of law, medicine, etc. If so, we might talk about general education, professional education, vocational education, Christian education, etc. Christianity is for all men, and for each one, not merely a profession, but life itself. Hence, from the Christian point of view, all complete education must be Christian, whether it be general, professional, or vocational. The entire training of the child must be Christian, not secular and Christian. The failure to understand and practice this great truth properly is responsible for the fatally erroneous notion that the individual lives two lives-his secular life and his Christian life. This is not true. Christianity either permeates the entire being and makes it every whit Christian or it is not Christianity.

Christianity is not merely for those of your boys who are going to make preachers, but as well for those who are to be farmers, mechanics, doctors, lawyers—for all. Christianity is not for church, prayer meeting, Sunday school, and funerals alone. It is for plowing, hoeing, cutting wood, selling goods, cooking, sewing, playing, courting—everything, everywhere. Then, from the Christian point of view, all education must be Christian. In anything and everything the child is to be trained for—educated for—there must be Christianity in the training. This is why God had the Jews educate their own children, and prescribed his law as a part of the entire course. This is why early Christians did the same thing.

This is what Brethren Lipscomb and Harding had in view when they started the Nashville Bible School. It is what "Uncle David" meant when he would say: "I long for the day when there will be not only colleges where the Bible is taught to every student, but when every congregation of disciples will have a school in which every child can be taught God's word."

We have barely touched the hem of the garment! For us such terminology as secular education should be forgotten. Everything that is taught our children should be Christianized in the process. Anything that cannot be Christianized should not be taught our children. Any surroundings and conditions making impossible the teaching of Christianity are absolutely unfit for the education of children from the Christian point of view. Christians cannot afford to accept such conditions.

Why don't we send our children to the Catholic school and the Catholic church on Sunday? They will be taugnt error. That is a good reason. But our children are taught as much error in the State schools and many denominational schools and colleges during the process of their education as they would be in these schools and churches.

They are taught by people with the same conceptions, faith, and ideals exactly in the State and in many denominational schools as in the Sunday schools and churches referred to. If it will affect our children to have them taught error on Sunday, how may they be taught error five days in the week and escape?

Ah! You say Sunday school and church train for the religious life; the school, for the secular life. This is the fatal point in our thinking. The Christian life is not Christian and secular. It is Christian. Christianity must permeate, restrain, inspire, and control every other act of life just as genuinely as it does the praying, singing, teaching, taking the Lord's Supper, or any other act of public worship or service, or the life is only part Christian.

If we meet the situation and educate our children as they must be educated, if their education is to be genuinely Christian, there is a great task to be performed. It cannot be done in a day. We have done something, but we have fallen fearfully behind. It will take time, sacrifice and study, prayer and work. It can be done; but, if so, all personal and sectional pride and ambition must be set aside. Every effort must be for the good of the work. It we are not big enough and good enough to proceed thus, we will fail, and we should fail.

Editor Moore's Wanderings.

BY F. W. SMITH.

How strangely inconsistent some men are! Here is Brother Moore, the beginner of a discussion with me, and because I am trying to follow him in his own wanderings he charges me with meandering! But our readers can tell who is "leading" in the roaming business; hence we will let them be the judges. His latest effort runs thus:

Brother Smith reads my "remarks" through his Campbellite kaleidoscope, as he sees me one time as a bone gnawer, next time as "wisdom the better part," and now as a "religious spy." I don't think you need to worry over my continual change of base, as I am trying to follow you in your meanderings to hide the cloven foot of Campbellism, with which you and yours are so enamored. You are the one that is doing the stunts of change.

You certainly got one on me this time in saying I am "yery much mistaken. I neither accept one into the church, nor reject one from the church." Grant this, and then what? Do you not claim to be under the commission as recorded in Matt. 28: 19, 20? It says: "Go ye, and make disciples of all nations, baptizing them," etc. If you are not in such work, I have been woefully mistaken. And how can you make a disciple without initiating him into the church, as the same act that makes a Christian adds him to the church? You seem to deny making disciples at all in above paragraph and say that God does it. Then you are in exact accord with Hardshells on this subject. If the Lord carries out his own commission. I'm sure your congregation does not initiate one into its fellowship, for the preacher does not give them a chance to either accept or reject. The preacher hears his confession, and straightway baptizes him into the fellowship of the body of Christ.

The preacher is the whole thing in accepting and rejecting members; the congregation or church is not even asked if they want him. So the very thing you claim not to be is the one thing that you are. Now, dear Brother Smith, don't you pass on the fitness of the confessor for baptism? To be sure you do, and try to make a misguided and untaught people believe that God does it. But you did not tell whether or not you ever attended a Baptist revival meeting, and, if so, what was your motive in attending.

Well, there are restrictions around the Lord's table, and these restrictions are in the Baptist discipline, Brother Smith—the New Testament, if you please. Do you believe in unrestricted or open communion? Answer, please.

I have answered your question on infant salvation. There is but one way of life—salvation by grace is the only way I know. Do you know and teach another? If so, give it, please.

You make a clean dodge on the order of repent and believe. Everybody knows that some kind of faith precedes repentance, but this was my challenge to you: "You know you cannot name one passage in the Bible where faith in Christ ever preceded repentance toward God." Yes, I know that one must believe that God is, or exists, before he can repent. But, my brother, is that faith what you claim as faith in Christ? One may believe a thousand things and never repent. Why did you not answer my language instead of your interpretation of it? It's a confession on your part that you can't do it.

Is believing the message of the gospel true, the same as believing in Christ? Answer, please,

My space will not allow me any further review for this week, but I will attend to it in full next issue. But I will ask Brother Smith to do me the favor of answering my last question here. You need not labor to prove degrees of faith, for the object is of more import than degrees. I believe you are wrong in your order of repentance toward God and faith in Jesus Christ. Is this the same as belief in Christ?

Don't get ugly, Brother Moore; dispense with "Campbellite kaleidoscope" and "cloven foot of Campbellism." Keep sweet and smooth and our readers will enjoy this friendly investigation of each other's positions.

My friend insists on my telling him if I ever attended a Baptist revival, and, if so, for what purpose. Yes, many a time; but I did not, as he claimed regarding his attendance at the meeting in Fulton, know "exactly what I would get before I went." If such had been the case with me, I would never have gone. I go to hear Baptists, Methodists, and Presbyterians with the expectation of receiving and being benefited by whatever they may say in harmony with God's word, and I have learned something helpful from all of them.

Our brother asks: "Do you not claim to be under the commission as recorded in Matt. 28; 19, 20?" Yes, and under the same commission as recorded by Mark 16: 15, 16, which places faith as the first act of the creature, thus refuting the claim that repentance precedes faith. I can only make "disciples" in the sense of teaching them the gospel. I cannot "initiate them into the church." for it is expressly stated that God does that. "And the Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved." (Acts 2: 47.) It is also stated that God rejects or takes away those who are unworthy. "Every branch in me that beareth not fruit, he taketh it away," etc. (John 15: 2.) Of course, God has a "system" or "process" by which this is done, and that is the gospel of his grace, composed of facts, commands, and promises. As heretofore stated, I can only preach the gospel, which is God's power unto salvation, and let him through his own chosen instrumentality add to and take from his church. The fact that Brother Moore and I "baptize" people is no evidence within itself that such are added to the church. We may, and perhaps do, immerse some who are unprepared in heart for acceptable obedience to this holy ordinance.

Our friend teaches that the church should sit in judgment on the fitness or unfitness of those demanding baptism. Hence the candidate for baptism is required to relate before the church an "experience of grace;" and if the church sees proper to vote him the privilege of being baptized, the preacher may then proceed to baptize the candidate. Brother Moore, find one scrap of authority for this procedure in the word of God, and I will close my part of this discussion.

Yes, the New Testament throws restrictions around the Lord's table, but it recognizes but two classes of people—viz., the children of God and the children of this world. My friend admits that Methodists and Presbyterians are the children of God, and yet he will not let these children of God eat at their Father's table! Shame on you, Brother Moore, for stretching a barbed-wire fence around God's table to keep some of his children from sitting at their Father's memorial feast!

He says: "Everybody knows that some kind of faith precedes repentance." I thank him for this admission, for it will be found fatal to his cause. He says "some kind of faith," and I demand that he tell us where he learned that there was more than one kind of faith. Is not all faith the same in kind? And is not all faith the belief of testimony? Can one believe in or on Christ without believing the testimony God gives in his word regarding his Son? Is there any other way of believing in or on Christ besides believing the divine testimony concerning Christ? Did the people on Pentecost believe the testimony of the Holy Spirit concerning the divine Sonship of Jesus? If so, did they not do this before they were told to repent?" In so doing, did they not believe in Christ before they repented? Is our friend trying to make some kind of play on the words "faith in?" He asks: "Is believing the message of the gospel true, the same as believing in Christ?" This depends upon what "degree" is attached to the word "believe." If you mean by "believing in Christ" faith in its comprehensive aspect, which includes obedience in baptism, I say, no; but if you mean simply the unequivocal assent of the mind or heart to the proposition that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God, I say, yes. Now for the proof. "Nevertheless among the chief rulers also many believed on him, but because of the Pharisees they did not confess him, lest they should be put out of the synagogue: for they loved the praise of men more than the praise of God." (John 12: 42, 43.) To believe "on" is the exact equivalent of believing "in," for it is the same preposition in the original. Paul said to the jailer: "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved, and thy house." (Acts 16: 31.) two classes, each said to have believed "on" or "in" the Lord Jesus Christ-the Pharisees and the jailer with his family; one class was saved and the other was not. Will Brother Moore tell us why this was true? The answer is easy. Faith in Christ in one instance was limited to the truth of the gospel and the claims of Christ, while in the other it was more comprehensive, including repentance and baptism.

He says I did not meet his challenge to find where "faith in Christ ever preceded repentance toward God." I am sure he is mistaken; but to give him full satisfaction. his attention is directed to this: "Nevertheless among the chief rulers also many believed on [in] him; but because of the Pharisees they did not confess him, lest they should be put out of the synagogue: for they loved the praise of men more than the praise of God." (John 12: 42, 43.) Will my friend say that these Pharisees who loved the praise of men more than the praise of God, and who refused to confess Christ, repented toward God? He is compelled to take this position or else abandon his contention The Holy Spirit said: "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit." (Acts 2: 38.) Now, I would like to know by what law of language our brother can squeeze faith in between repentance and baptism in Acts 2: 38. The truth is, faith encompasses both and leads to both repentance and baptism.

In answer to my question, "What becomes of infants dying in infancy?" he says: "There is but one way of life-salvation by grace is the only way I know." Well, that is the only way of salvation that any one knows of who believes the Bible; but, unfortunately for my friend's position on "total, hereditary depravity," salvation by grace involves faith. "For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God." (Eph. 2: 8.) Since salvation by grace is obtained "through faith," and infants cannot exercise faith, our friend's one way of salvation leaves the helpless infants without the pale of salvation. Cannot the reader see where his doctrine of "total, hereditary depravity" lands him? Why not, Brother Moore, leave the infant where God places it at birth-viz, safe-that is, without sin and in no need of salvation by grace or otherwise until it, like Adam, sins?

Our readers will doubtless be gratified to learn that the Gospel Advocate, through its readers, has been the largest contributor of all papers in the United States to the Pclish Victims' Relief Fund. A copy of the auditor's report reveals this fact, in which all who have contributed will take pardonable pride. Furthermore, the committee which forwards and distributes the funds seems to be overwhelmed with gratitude. In acknowledgment of our last remittance, amounting to $1,537.73, we have received the following letter:

New York City, July 29, 1918.—Mr. A. B. Lipscomb, Gospel Advocate, Nashville, Tenn.—Dear Sir: If it were proper to use a slang expression, I would say that I am simply floored by the size of your check; but since it is not the proper thing to use such an expression, I will simply state that I was most agreeably surprised by its dimensions. Really I do not know how to thank your readers sufficiently for their wonderful assistance. It has been months since we have seen so much money in one check, the largest contributions being at the utmost one hundred dollars. With all my heart I beg to express to you, on behalf of this committee, my deepest gratitude for all you have done for us. With very best regards, I beg to remain, Gratefully yours, W. O. Gorski, Honorary Executive Secretary.

In sending contributions, be sure and state whether they are intended for the Armenian and Syrian Fund or the Poland Fund. Make all checks and money orders payable to A. B. Lipscomb, who will forward them to the proper commissioners.

Why Christians Apostatize.

BY JOHN T. HINDS.

That Christians can apostatize is clear both from observation and plain Bible statements. The many warnings against falling away would be meaningless if there were no danger of falling. The neglect, carelessness, and world-liness so evident among church members would be ample evidence that Christians can and do fall, even if the Bible did not mention the subject. But when an apostle says, "Let him that standeth take heed lest be fall," we know that inspiration fully recognizes our danger and tries to protect us against it.

Since we can fall away, it seems foolish to not admit that there is danger of falling all the way, or of so apostatizing as to be lost finally. How intelligent people, with human examples before them and the plain statements of the Scriptures, can deny the possibility of apostasy, I cannot understand. But whether the apostasy be complete or only partial, there must be some causes for it. Failure of Christians to live as they should is distressingly common and does the church untold harm. The situation deeply grieves those whose earnest desire is for the welfare of the church, but how to find and apply a remedy is a difficult task. It may help some if we understand the causes. There are, no doubt, many causes that produce falling away from our steadfastness, but every one is not influenced by the same cause. It depends largely upon the situation and the peculiarities of the individual. Some of the causes, if not all, will be found in the following list:

- 1. Many neglect the church or quit it entirely because the limitations of the gospel are not in harmony with the demands of the flesh. Nothing is plainer than the fact that the Bible makes no compromise with the flesh. "Crucify the flesh" and "mortify the deeds of the body" are expressions that do not please the broad-gauge church member. Many in the church and out have always been willing to pay more for license than for prohibition. Many chafe under the restraints of gospel service and Christian duty. If the gospel is not perverted and the restrictions removed, they gradually quit. It never occurs to them that removing restrictions is often the worst thing that can be done.
- 2. Some fall also because of the humility required. Paul says to every man "not to think of himself more highly than he ought to think." This does not meet the approval of some. The Christian who is not humble is certain to receive jolts that will jar him loose for his fidelity. "Pride goeth before destruction," we are told, "and a haughty spirit before a fall."
- 3. Plain worldliness comes in for its share in producing apostasy. Of the thorny ground in the parable of the sower, Jesus said that it represents the one who allows the "care of this world and the deceitfulness of riches to choke out the word." No man can have the love of money in his heart and remain true to the church. The love of money is the root of all kinds of evil, we are told. If we allow ourselves to be "conformed to this world," it is certain we will "fail of the grace of God." Much apostasy owes its existence to just plain following after the world. When Christians try to follow the world, failure is inevitable.
- 4. Some fall away because they fear men. They do not have the courage to endure criticism. They "fear the voice of men" rather than the word of God. Social position, financial success, and political preferment are dearer to some Christians than the salvation of their souls. They, like the chief rulers who refused to confess Christ because of the Pharisees, are afraid they will be put out of society's synagogue; and they, too, love the praise of men more than the praise of God. Such church members cannot by any means be induced to be faithful to the church.

- 5. Similar to the above is the cause of evil association. Many Christians would do right if it were not for their associates. Just at this point is where many young Christians fail. Sometimes even the marriage relationship is responsible for a complete apostasy. A Christian that marries a sectarian or worldling and faiters in church duty in the least particular is in grave danger; in fact, the probability is a partial apostasy, if not a complete one. Association has led to much loss to the church. Association is bound to have its effect, and the strongest faith is necessary where the association is against the truth.
- 6. A change of environment often leads to apostasy. Many who are fairly true to the church under some circumstances prove utterly worthless under others. If it is popular or generally accepted as the proper thing to be a member of a church in some community, some will be all right; but at another place where it is unpopular or there is strong opposition, you can hardly drag them to church. Many have done well enough when with a country congregation, who fell away just as soon as they reached a town or city. The ranks of digression have been increased much by this class. Of course, at heart they never were right. All they needed was an opportunity. Still, if they had remained in the country, we might never have found them out. But the fact remains that they fall away when the situation becomes hard to meet. They have practically no power of resistance.
- 7. Others "take out" or quit because of pure laziness. They are careless and indifferent about the success of the church. They do not object to its succeeding, provided others do the work necessary for it. Others can preach, pray, exhort, give, and visit the sick, but they have no trouble with their conscience when they take no part in any church activity. There is no better way to describe this class than to say they are religiously lazy. This is a numerous class. The harm they do the church is immeasurable.
- 8. Still others fall away because of false teaching. When they change locations or come under the influence of false teaching, they are not strong enough in the faith to resist. Sometimes the church is to blame for not having enough plain teaching to protect weak members. Sometimes weak members deserve censure because they make no effort to grow stronger. But whatever be the cause, false teaching takes a heavy toll from the church.

Knowing all these causes to exist and the deadly effect they have upon the church, elders and all faithful members should do everything possible to safeguard the weak members against the danger of apostasy. The work of the church is too important to lose any power if it can be avoided. No organization can reach its maximum power if a large part of it lies inactive. Knowing the danger, we all need to take beed "lest we fall."

The Fear of the Lord.

BY C. C. FOWLER.

One of the greatest errors in religious thought is to think the fear of the Lord is just alone in being afraid, making void the wisdom and the virtue toward God. When we are made to understand the law of the heart that is to govern our conduct in this life, we will be made to see that there is a wisdom and a virtue in the fear of the Lord that is well pleasing to God, by which he permits us to establish a relation with him by a law of faith that works by love that is higher and above our own nature.

The evidence of relationship is in a loving heart and a loving life sanctified in Christ as Lord, "heing ready always to give answer to every man that asketh you a reason concerning the hope that is in you, yet with meekness and fear." "The friendship of the Lord is with them that fear him; and he will show them his covenant." "If thou seek her [wisdom] as silver, and search for her as for hid treasures: then shalt thou understand the fear of Jehovan, and find the knowledge of God." It is high time to wake up and believe the Bible, and Christ will give you light. "Happy is the man that findeth wisdom, and the man that getteth understanding. . . . She is more precious than rubles; and none of the things thou canst desire are to be compared unto her." "Wisdom is the principal thing; therefore get wisdom; yea, with all thy getting get understanding."

And James says: "Let patience have its perfect work, that ye may be perfect and entire, lacking nothing. But if any of you lacketh wisdom, let him ask of God, who giveth to all liberally and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him. But let him ask in faith, nothing doubting: for he that doubteth is like the surge of the sea driven by the wind and tossed. For let not that man think he shall receive anything of the Lord; a double-minded man, unstable in all his ways."

"Where shall wisdom be found? And where is the place of understanding? . . . God understandeth the way thereof, and he knoweth the place thereof. . . . When he made a decree for the rain, and a way for the lightning of the thunder; then did he see it, and declare it; he established it, yea, and he searched it out. And unto man he said, Behold, the fear of the Lord, that is wisdom, and to depart from evil is understanding."

If you lack these things, you lack wisdom; and to ask for wisdom, nothing doubting, is to believe that God will be as good as his word and give liberally. It is to believe that "wisdom is the principal thing," "more precious than rubies," and that "none of the things thou canst desire are to be compared unto her." It is to believe that the fear of the Lord is wisdom; and "if thou seek her as silver, and search for her as for hid treasures: then shalt thou understand the fear of Jehovah, and find the knowledge of God." If you believe this, "nothing doubting," ask for wisdom, and God will give you liberally.

Then, after all, what is the wisdom and the virtue in the fear of the Lord? "The fear of Jehovah is clean, enduring forever." "Happy is the man that feareth always." "In the fear of Jehovah is strong confidence." "The fear of the Lord is to hate evil: pride, and arrogancy, and the evil way, and the perverse mouth, do I hate."

To render fear to whom fear is due, honor to whom honor is due, is the evidence of a good and honest heart, to whom the word of salvation is sent: "Brethren, children of the stock of Abraham, and those among you that feareth God, to us is the word of this salvation sent forth." This was verified in the word's being sent to the household of Cornelius, one who feared God and gave much alms to the people, where Peter made known the terms of valid obedience and personal acceptance for all men: "Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons: but in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh rightequisness, is acceptable to him."

The Spirit teaches that in combining spiritual things with spiritual words and in rightly combining the spiritual things written aforetime with the spiritual word in the new and everlasting covenant, it fits just as a key to a lock. "Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons: but in every nation he that feareth him [in strong confidence hating evil, pride, and arrogancy, and the evil way, and the perverse mouth], and worketh righteousness, is acceptable to him." "Work out your own saivation with fear and trembling [in strong confidence hating evil, pride, and arrogancy, and the evil way]; for it is God who worketh in you both to will and to work, for his good pleasure." "Beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all defilement of flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God," in strong confidence hating evil, pride, and arrogancy, and the evil way, and the perverse mouth. "Herein is love made perfect with us, that we may have boldness [confidence] in the day of judgment; because as he is, even so are we in this world." "And if ye call on him as Father, who without respect of persons judgeth according to every man's work, pass the time of your sojourning here in fear."—in strong confidence hating evil, etc. "Be not high-minded, but fear." "Like as a father pitieth his children, so Jehovah pitieth them that fear him." This means all that pity means to them that truly fear the Lord, in strong confidence hating evil—deep, tender compassion of the God of all the earth, as high as the heaven itself; for he declares: "As the heavens are high above the earth, so great is his loving-kindness toward them that fear him."

No better reasons could the sons of men have for their hope than to truly fear the Lord and hate evil; for if ye hate evil, you will not commit evil.

Light at Evening Time.

The day is in its afternoon, and still the heavy clouds hang low.

The dawn was fair, but all too soon the storm cloud hid its golden glow.

All day the tempest ruled the air, and wreck and ruin mark its path.

Full many a sturdy oak shall bear mute witness to its mighty wrath.

The noblest branches shattered lie, riv'n by the lightning's stroke, and left

Upon the sodden ground to die; the parent tree is sore bereft.

Far out at sea, by wild waves toss'd, a ship lies helpless in the blast,

With tatter'd sails, with rudder lost, broken and useless ev'ry mast.

My windows look into the west, and there I sit with heavy heart,

And pray that God will send his rest to weary earth ere day depart.

All suddenly, when hope seems vain, the sun shines out in glory bright:

God's promise then is all made plain: "At evening time it shall be light."

My life has reached its afternoon, and still the clouds hang low and gray.

Its rosy dawn light faded soon, obscured and lost in stormy day.

All day the tempest swept my heart, and fondest hopes in ruin lie; Life's treasures, one by one, depart, far scattered on the ground to die. Far out upon the heaving wave, my ship is helpless in the gale; In vain I look for One to save, 'til faith and courage almost fail. Kneeling, I look into the west—the winds still rage, the billows roar—

And pray that God will give me rest, some token that the storm is o'er:

"O Father, rend the clouds apart and send thine own warm, cheering ray

Into my weary, aching heart for one brief hour ere close of day!"

The ship in harbor rests, at last, The sailors sing, all danger past. The sunset gilds a quiet sea.

The peace of God enfoldeth me.

-Maribel Yates.

On the shoulders of the luxury loving, the pleasure seeking, the unproductive, the pampered, the extravagant, the morally calloused, the spiritually dead, who make laws and recognize no law, who declare war and wage it not, who preach platitudinously of great things and live pettily, who love themselves much and patronize God a great deal—on the shoulders of such as these shall rest the responsibility for the treason that sneers at truth, mocks goodness, and destroys nations.—Edward M. Cross, in Exchange.

The Sentry Watch of God.

The sunlight filtered through the trees, Far off I heard the hum of bees, My troubled heart was far from ease; When softly, like a sighing breeze, A whisper came: "He keepeth thee."

He keepeth me! 'Mid surge of care, And cark of toil, day's wear and tear, Burdened with thoughts I cannot share, There comes in answer to my prayer The sure response: "He keepeth thee."

He keepeth me! In hours of joy,
In tasks that all my powers employ,
In scenes that please or that annoy,
In strife that would my soul destroy,
My strength is this: "He keepeth thee."

He keepeth me! In hours of pain, When only loss seems all my gain, And all my life's endeavor vain, Softly there comes the sweet refrain: "He keepeth thee, he keepeth thee."

He keepeth me! When daylight dies,
And slumber haunts my weary eyes.
My soul on his sure word relies,
And sleeps, nor fears the great surprise,
But trusts the sentry watch of God.

Will the World Ever Beat Its Swords into Plowshears?

BY A. M. GEORGE.

This question is suggested by a prophecy in Isa. 2: 4: and in order to get to any sensible conclusion about it, one should study the first, second, and eleventh chapters carefully to get the connection and proper meaning.

In the first chapter it is made plain that Isaiah is prophesying concerning "the children of Israel," God's people, and they alone. Israel had apostatized (many religious people think that apostasy, or falling from God's favor, is an impossibility, but such doctrine antagonizes the whole Bible) to such an extent that Isaiah speaks of it as a "complete desolation," and compares her (Israel) to Sodom and Gomorrah; and their worship was a stench to God—they were under his curse. He warns them to cleanse themselves, to cease to do evil and learn to do well, and he would bless them; but if they refused, he would destroy them. This all refers to Israel, Zion, and not to the world at all.

In the next chapter (second) Isaiah foretells the establishment of the Lord's house-the church, or kingdom of God-in Jerusalem, or Zion, and that through the church the word of the Lord was to go forth to the nations. "And he [the Lord] shall judge among the nations, and shall rebuke many people: and they [the peoples rebuked] shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning hooks: nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more. O house of Jacob, come ye, and let us walk in the light of the Lord." Here Isaiah again plainly, in verse 5 of this chapter, names the house of Jacob-Israel-and in this case it is spiritual Israel, the church of God; and so it is the church of God among the nations of earth, not the nations themselves, that should learn war no more. We all know what the church, or kingdom of God, was set up, or established, near two thousand years ago; and we know equally well that no nation has ever beaten its swords into plowshares and ceased to learn war: but now, after twenty centuries of intermittent wars, the nations, by most persistent, ceaseless effort, have brought the science of war to the very zenith, or climax, of destruction, and the nations are at each other's throats with a virulence, or malignity, the like of which was never before known.

Pretty free use is made of the word "nations" in the second chapter of Isaiah. In verse 2 it is said that when the Lord's house is established "all nations" shall flow into it, but it is a fact that only parts of the nations flowed into it; and in that sense, or with that limitation. I suppose we will have to understand verse 4, where it is stated that "the nations shall beat their swords into plowshares," etc.; and verse 5 seems to show that it is only the house of Israel that will learn war no more—spiritual Israel, the people of all nations that accept Christ. The first and second chapters of Isaiah show that many of all nations did flow into the kingdom, but not all of any nation; in fact, only a small part of any nation went into it, and those who did must be the ones who beat their swords into plowshares and learn war no more.

We know that the time has never been when the nations ceased to learn war, and I feel sure that time will never come. No such time came before the flood, but the world, nations, went continually from bad to worse till the flood washed all away; and Christ (Matt. 24: 37) says that as it was then, so shall it be when the Son of man comes the nations, the world, will go on and on with wars and all other deviltries, as the present conditions plainly indicate. Wars and wickedness have never ceased; and now, in the "last days" of this dispensation (see 2 Pet. 2, 3 and 2 Tim. 3, for proof that we are in the last days), the whole world is engaged in such a war as was never heard of before. and never can be repeated, for the avowed purpose of establishing a "universal democracy," the very antithesis of God's government-a pure autocracy. The autocracy is the best of all governments when God, instead of kaisers, is the Autocrat; but I think that, as long as the world will not submit to God's rule, democracy will be best for the people of the world, but not God's people. It may be, if God suffer the world to exist after this carnival of death on land and sea and in the clouds above the earth, that there will be a period when the blood-glutted nations will cease from wars; but if so, the war spirit will revive, and this bloody drama will have to be repeated, only it will have to be far worse than this, for Rev. 16: 17, 18, under the seventh seal, or vial, which brings the end of all works, good or bad, in this world, proclaims the greatest earthquake, or upheaval, or war, that ever has been or ever will be. So if this is not that then there must come another, still worse, to pull down the curtain.

In Matt. 24 the Savior, in speaking of the end of the world, said: "Take heed that no man deceive you. For many shall come in my name, saying, 1 am Christ; and shall deceive many. . . . Nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom: and there shall be famines, and pestilences, and earthquakes, in divers places. All these are the beginning of sorrows. . . . Many shall be offended, and shall betray one another, and shall hate one another. And many false prophets [teachers] shall rise, and shall deceive many. And because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold. But he that shall endure unto the end, the same shall be saved. And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come." Take all of this in connection with 2 Tim. 3 and 2 Pet. 2, which describe the "last days" of this dispensation, and it looks like we are getting near the end.

It is strange that Babylon, under the curse of God, should be used by him to print the Bible in all the languages of the earth and give it out to all the nations, so compelling his enemies to fulfill his word.

Men are so made as to resent nothing more impatiently than to be treated as criminal for opinions which they deem true.—Spinoza.

Faith is the practical exercise of the spiritual eyes. Spirit is the only true substance. The spiritual body is the real man.—Henry Wood.

AT HOME AND ABROAD

A. A. Bunner, of Cleveland, Ohio, is visiting the churches in Southeast Ohio and West Virginia.

Charles Holder requests us to state that he will not move to Dunlap, Tenn., but will remain at Bridgeport, Ala.

- F. W. Smith preached to a large audience at Russell Street Church, in Nashville, Sunday, while A. B. Lipscomb began the meeting at Franklin under most favorable auspices.
- A. B. Lipscomb closed the meeting at Lebanon, Tenn., August 2. There were fifteen baptisms. The interest was good from start to finish. John A. Klingman's labors at Lebanon have had a telling effect.

From Charlie Taylor, Murfreesboro, Tenn., August 4: "The meeting at Cottontown closed with fourteen baptisms. I promised to be with the prethren at that place in a meeting in 1920, the Lord willing. I am now at Almaville, Rutherford County."

Married, at the Hermitage Hotel, in Nashville, on Monday, August 5, at 6 P.M., Lieut. Mark Lowrie to Miss Haynie Owen, J. C. McQuiddy officiating. The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. C. Owen, of Hartsville, Tenn. The Gospel Advocate extends heartiest congratulations.

The death of Mrs. Nancy McQuiddy, aged ninety-five years, at her home at Farmington, Tenn., on Friday, August 2, removes one of the most venerable and best-beloved women in the State. She retained her mental faculties and attended to her household duties up to the last. She is survived by nine children. One of them is J. C. McQuiddy.

From J. H. McBroom, Ethridge, Tenn., August 3: "I closed a good meeting at Mount Pleasant on the third Sunday in July. There were only two additions to the church, but the meeting was one of the best I ever conducted. I am in a good meeting at Greenwood, in Giles County. There has been one addition—a lady from the Baptist Church."

The Belmont Avenue congregation, in Nashville, is making fine progress in a Bible-reading campaign. A total of twenty-one hundred and eighty chapters was read by the members of the various Bible classes. S. F. Morrow is urging each one to read the New Testament through by January 1, 1920, and he hopes that every church in the land will join in this glorious work.

From H. T. King, Franklin, Ky.: "I closed an eight-days' meeting with Berea Church, Route I, Rives, Tenn., on July 28. There were two baptisms and one restoration. The meeting was well attended and well supported. L. T. Holland, of Greenfield, conducted the song service, and did his work well. I begin with Smyrna Church, near Mc-Minnville, Tenn., on August 4."

A sister writes from Lebanon, Tenn.: "On July 28 Elder Thomas H. Burton, of Hartsville, Tenn., closed an eight-days' meeting at Flat Rock, with one added from the Baptists. Brother Burton labored hard to proclaim the unsearchable riches of Christ and to make clear the plan of salvation, and we hope the seed sown will result in a bountiful harvest in years to come."

A sister writes: "The church in Washington, D. C., is growing in interest and numbers. W. S. Long, of Tennessee, will locate with us in September and will devote all of his time to the work here. The brethren everywhere are urged to help those who come here in government service to locate the place of worship, which is in the Masonic Temple, at Eighth and F Streets, N. E. Congregations should see to it that their young people have this address before coming."

From C. L. Hanan, Treasurer, Muskogee, Okla.: "I wish to acknowledge receipt of the following contributions to the building fund of the church at this place: From the church at Davis City, Iowa, $20; church at Riverside, Tenn., $3; church at Eldridge, Ala., $2; church at Bethpage, Tenn., $6.50; church at McMinnville, Tenn., $10; church at Sellersburg, Ind., $5; church at Harper, Kan., $25; John D. Evans, Denver, Col., $2; Edward E. Kranz, Sellersburg, Ind., $2. Total, $75.50."

A. K. Ramsey writes from Forest Hill, La.: "July was a good month in this State. Brethren Chambers and W. J.

Johnson held good meetings at Amite and vicinity. Brother Hebert made steady gains among the French-speaking people. C. K. Matthews put in some good licks at Turkey Creek and Pine Prairie, a number of additions being reported. C. C. McQuiddy used his opportunities to good advantage in furthering the gospel at Forest Hill and vicinity. The writer was in thirty-six services and is now corresponding with a 'Church of God' preacher with the view to a better understanding."

From James H. Morton, Route 9, Lewisburg, Tenn., July 30: "I baptized a man eighty-three years old in Duck River to-day. The Lord willing, I will preach at Cornersville, Marshall County, on the first Lord's day in August, and at Philadelphia, Maury County, on the second Lord's day in August. I started the work at both of these places many years ago. In Marshall and Maury counties, since 1867, fifty-one years ago, I have baptized more than one thousand people, I am in falling health now, and I am past seventy-six. I have read the Gospel Advocate for fifty-three years, and I shall continue to read it until I cross over to the other side."

M. C. Cayce writes: "On July 14 I began a meeting at Walter Hill, Tenn., which continued until July 21, closing with the morning service. Two precious souls obeyed the gospel, being buried in the likeness of his death and raised in the likeness of his resurrection. It was the opinion of the brethren that we closed too soon. I am wanted for another meeting there next July. Granville Cullum preached at Hill's Chapel, on the Nolensville road, Sunday morning and night, July 21, and I began with them on Monday night and preached every night (except Saturday) and on Sunday morning and night, when the meeting closed with a large audience. One was baptized. I did not preach in daytime during the week, but worked every day and went out and back at night. Next Sunday (August 4) I am to begin my fourth meeting with the church at Burns, Tenn."

Morgan H. Carter writes from Atlanta, Ga., August 2: "Rejoice with us, for the lost are being found, and those who were dead are being made alive again by the saving power of our Lord Jesus Christ. S. H. Hall and I, with others cooperating with us, have enjoyed a number of interesting and biessed meetings during the last I am now preaching each night at Port McPherson to the soldiers and such civilians as gather in. Twelve persons have made a start for God, some of them by conversion as alien sinners and others who claim to be Christians desiring to come back to Christ, having sinned. attendance and attention have been excellent. services are being conducted at Camp Gordon each Lord's day at 3:30 P.M. in Company Building No. 22, Casualty Detachment, 157th Depot Brigade. We urge every reader who has friends in any Georgia camp or fort, or anywhere else where we may reach them, to send their names and addresses immediately. Also state whether or not those you name are Christians and give any other information that will be helpful to us in getting at the boys you name. this now. It is very important and may mean the salvation of many souls for Christ. Remember us in your prayers. Address me at 275 Oak Street, Atlanta, Ga."

L. D. Perkins writes from Armona, Cal., July 28: "After holding successful meetings at Los Angeles, Fresno, and San Francisco. Brother and Sister T. B. Larimore departed for Nashville, Tenn. The churches at all these places were built up in the most holy faith by the good preaching of Brother Larimore, and the good work done by him will live on after he has made his departure for the heavenly home. Brother Larimore tells me that he has decided to make California his home, and will seen, the Lord willing, Los Angeles take up his things and move to Los Angeles. is a beautiful place for Brother Larimore, with an even climate and the gentle sea breeze of the Pacific. Larimore does not expect to continue in the work of an evangelist after coming to the extent that that he has for the past fifty years; and we believe that he has more than done his part, and the churches should remember him. He certainly is entitled to a rest for the balance of his life. However, he does not intend to quit altogether in the good work, but from time to time will preach in California as necessity demands. We know that the work in California will be helped in many ways by the coming and presence of Brother and Sister Larimore. May the Lord bless them. The work at Hanford, my home congregation, is growing fast, and at Tulare the good work I hear good reports from other parts of California, and when more good evangelists and workers come we will soon have congregations in every city, as it should be May the Lord bless and prosper the work everywhere.'

Christians Should Be of Good Cheer.

BY J. C. M'QUIDBY.

When the clouds are threatening and lowering, it is natural for people, and even Christians, to despair and to conclude that the whole world is going wrong. The New Testament abounds in teaching which encourages us to believe that God still rules and that, therefore, Christians should be of good cheer. When a storm overtook Paul and his companions as they sailed toward Rome and all had been without food for many days, Paul said to them; "And now I exhort you to be of good cheer; for there shall be no loss of life among you, but only of the ship. For there stood by me this night an angel of the God whose I am, whom also I serve, saying, Fear not, Paul; thou must stand before Cæsar: and lo, God hath granted thee all them that sall with thee." (Acts 27: 22-24.)

While we are now passing through perilous times, we should put our trust in God, remembering that all things work together for good to them who love him. Doubtless Paul did not relish, at the time he was passing through them, the trials, hungers, shipwrecks, and tribulations, yet afterwards he could appreciate that they had redounded to his good. Afterwards, in writing to the Philippian church, he says: "Not that I speak in respect of want: for I have learned, in whatsoever state I am, therein to be content. I know how to be abased, and I know also how to abound: in everything and in all things have I learned the secret both to be filled and to be hungry, both to abound and to be in want. I can do all things in him that I strengtheneth me." (Phil. 4: 11-14.) This is a great lesson to learn, and one that Christians need to learn now. It is a very great accomplishment to be able to truly say: "For I have learned, in whatsoever state I am, therein to be content." No higher excellence can be attained. In order to attain to such excellence, Christians should learn to seek not their own, but the things of Jesus Christ,

God has ordained that Christians must abound in activity in order to live a Christian life. In activity metals shine. while in idleness they rust. In activity the Christian grows and develops, while in idleness he decays and dies. Christ, who is our example, has left us an example of ceaseless activity. His whole life was a day filled with noble deeds. He declares: "We must work the works of him that sent me, while it is day: the night cometh, when no man can work." (John 9; 4.) How busy was the blessed Son of God! We find him teaching with authority, casting out demons, healing Simon's wife's mother of a fever, healing the sick of divers diseases, and then hastening into other cities to preach and to teach them. While we cannot heal the sick and cast out evil spirits as did he. we can imitate his example of activity. Because the whole world is plunged into a cruel and bloody war is no reason why we should sit with folded hands, but is reason for our keeping busy in the service of the Master. No Christian can justify his failure to work with the claim that he has no opportunity to do good. There are opportunities all about us. There is a way to make an opportunity for helping others and for advancing the religion of Jesus Christ.

The American Boy says: "From your town soldiers are going to France. They will be lonely. Letters will delight them. Before they go, don't you think it would be a splendid idea for each of you to snuggle up to a man in uniform and get better acquainted? Don't you think it would be a bully idea to promise him you will write to him when he goes abroad? Maybe some of these soldiers have no families to write to them. Here's a fine chance. Pick out a soldier pal-and then write to him regularly. Tell him all the news. Maybe he'll find time to write you once in a while; but even if he doesn't, think what your letters will mean to him on the battle front."

And may I not add that in your letters you could throw in such thoughts as will be elevating, uplifting, and purifying? Hope springs eternal in the human breast;

Man never is, but always to be, blest.

Tell him to live close to God. Because war is not of a Christian's making is no reason why Christians should be pessimistic and imagine that the whole world has gone to the bad. This is not the first war. God is able to overrule war and to bring good out of it, and I firmly believe that he will overrule this cruel war and bring good to his faithful children.

The American Boy further says, very pertinently: "Illadvised or foolish people have said things about our army in France at which the army is justly incensed. The army is proud of itself and of its wonderful record for decency and cleanliness and manliness. Anybody who tries to tell you that army life over there brings out the evil rather than the good in a boy simply doesn't know. Here are a couple of facts: Out of all the American troops in France. the records show that there have been but forty-six attempts at desertion. This is the finest record of any army in the history of the world. Drunkenness is so rare as to be almost unknown. The percentage is much lower than in civilian life. As to other forms of vice, the evil results are so small as to be almost nonexistent. Don't let anybody slander our expeditionary army in your hearing."

Is it not wise for Christians, instead of magnifying vices that are in the army (and it is but reasonable to expect some), to do their part in helping to drive sin from the army? Is this not the Christian course? If it is claimed that the world is more sinful than it has ever been before, then so much greater is the need for Christian work. The greater the darkness, the more brightly should our lights shine. Instead of complaining and putting our lights under a bushel, the Savior says to us: "Even so let your light shine before men; that they may see your good works. and glorify your Father who is in heaven." (Matt. 5: 16.) But when the darkness is great, like Elijah, we are prone to give up in despair. Under the juniper tree, Elijah prayed to die; but God did not permit him to die, but gave him the joy and glory of heaven without death. Even when Christ taught his apostles that he was the bread of life, which saying his disciples said was a hard one, many of them "went back, and walked no more with him. Jesus said therefore unto the twelve, Would ye also go away? Simon Peter answered him, Lord, to whom shall we go? thou hast the words of eternal life?" Even so Christians to-day should realize that we must go to Christ if we would enjoy life eternal. Christians should not grow cold and indifferent. There is danger of many becoming so engrossed in this terrible war that they will cease to read the Bible and religious literature. Instead of looking backward, Christians should look forward with a new determination and zeal. Help every good work. Be active in feeding the hungry, dressing the wounds of the wounded. and in disseminating the truth. "No man, having put his hand to the plow, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God." (Luke 9: 62.)

What Specific Act Is Essential to Obedience to the Command to "Be Baptized?"

BY M. C. K.

The importance of having the correct answer to this question is, of course, precisely the same as the importance of obeying God. This self-evident proposition needs no argument to commend it to the favorable and serious consideration of all intelligent, well-informed, and unbiased minds. If it is at all important to obey God, then, of course, it is equally important to know what, in a given case, constitutes such obedience. Hence we raise the very proper and very important question, What specific act is it that constitutes obedience to the command to be baptized?

In principle, this question was answered in a former article in which we discussed the English equivalent for the Greek term "baptize;" and yet, involving, as it does, the serious and vital matter of obedience to God, the question deserves, and can be better understood and appreciated by receiving, entirely separate and independent treatment, and such treatment is proposed in the present article. Remembering, as formerly observed, that the term "baptize" is Greek and not English, and that, as we saw in our issue of June 13, its English equivalent is the term "immerse," it follows, of course, that, if we were translating into English a Greek sentence with "baptizo" in it, we would be compelled to render it by the term "immerse," or some other English term which has the same meaning. This principle has already been illustrated by the Greek term "hippos" and the English term "horse," both denoting the same quadruped in the animal kingdom and both conveying, in two languages, the same idea.

We now introduce another term in illustration of the principle; and if our readers will give it careful and conscientious study, each and all of them will be compelled to arrive at one and the same conclusion. It is impossible for them to arrive at different conclusions without plainly and pointedly contradicting the facts in the case. The term "arnion" is the Greek term meaning a lamb, literally a little lamb. Now, were animal sacrifice in vogue to-day, and God, expressing his will in the Greek language, should command an animal sacrifice, indicating, by the term

"arnion," the species of animal required, what would be our duty? The question is not what kind of an animal might we bring in such a case, but what kind must we bring in order to obey the command. If one man should bring a lamb, another a calf, and another a pig, and offer it in sacrifice, would the act of each and all of them be obedience to the divine command? Let the candid reader ponder, and seriously ponder, this question. The word "arnion" does not mean a calf, a pig, a horse, a deer, nor anything else but a lamb; and hence anybody who is capable of expressing a judgment on the matter at all knows that the sacrifice of any other animal at all except a lamb would not be obedience to the command.

Now, it is no more clearly and indisputably an established fact, backed by the whole realm of philology bearing on the question, that "lamb" is the English equivalent for the Greek "arnion" than it is that "immerse" is the English equivalent for the Greek "baptize;" and when, of three men professing to obey the command to be baptized, one of them immerses, another sprinkles, and another pours, the very identical mistake is made that is made when, of three men professing to obey the command to offer in sacrifice the animal denoted by "arnion," one of them offers a lamb, another a calf, and another a pig! And if those who sprinkle and pour are obeying the command to be baptized, then when God commands men to offer a lamb in sacrifice, those who offer a calf or a pig are obeying his command. If not, why not? So far as the treatment of the command in the two cases is concerned, they both do identically the same thing.

Hence, it follows, as clearly as a demonstration in mathematics, that, if those whom God commands to sacrifice a lamb, but who sacrifice a calf or a pig, are not obeying God, then those whom God has commanded to baptize, but who sprinkle or pour, are not obeying God. The whole world of present-day scholarship may be successfully challenged to name a solitary fact that would overthrow this position.

The World Against the Church. No. 12.

BY E. A. E.

WHAT IS THE WORLD?

The last article closed with the question: "What is 'the world,' out of which Christians have come, to which they must not conform, from which they must keep themselves unspotted, and which hates the church? What does the word mean?

We all know that Thayer's dictionary is one of the fullest and most authoritative to which we can appeal for a definition of this word.

The word most frequently used is "kosmos." John uses this word about ninety times.

Not copying Thayer's scriptural references and his explanations under each definition, the definitions he gives are presented here in order that we may see the general meaning of the word: (1) An apt and harmonious arrangement or constitution, order. (2) Ornament, decoration, adornment, (3) The world—that is, the universe. (4) The circle of the earth, the earth. (5) The inhabitants of the world; particularly the inhabitants of the earth, the human race. (6) The ungodly multitude; the whole mass of men attenuted from God, and therefore hostile to the cause of Christ. (7) Worldly affairs: the aggregate of things earthly; the whole circle of earthly goods, endowments, riches, advantages, pleasures, etc., which, although hollow and frail and fleeting, stir desires, seduce from God, and are obstacles to the cause of Christ. (8) Any aggregate or general collection of particulars of any sort. He cites James 3: 6-"the world of iniquity among our members is the tongue."

Then "the world" means no one thing of an arrangement or order, but the whole arrangement or order; no one particular thing of the universe, but the universe; no one particular inhabitant of the earth, but the human race; no one particular sinner, but "the ungodly multitude" and "the whole mass of men alienated from God "and enemies of the cross of Christ;" not one affair, but "the aggregate of things earthly;" not one object, which must not be sought and loved, but "the whole circle of earthly goods, endowments, riches, and advantages, pleasures, etc.;" not one harmful word and iniquitous deed, but the aggregate of idle words, gossip, talebearing, misrepresentations, tattling, slander, etc., and the whole of iniquitous things—"a world of iniquity."

Let me stop to say that the tongue, which is harder to tame than wildcats, panthers, bears, and "every kind of beasts and birds" and "creeping things"-rattlesnakes and copperheads-yea, which no man can tame; which "is full of deadly poison;" which defiles the whole body; which sets on fire the whole course of nature; which itself, "is set on fire by hell;" and which is "a world of iniquity." is one of the most worldly and wicked things in Satan's control. The tongue is the most effective and powerful instrument Satan has for sowing discord among neighbors. separating chief friends, destroying the unity and peace of the church, and causing "hell" on earth. The tongue is sharp and cutting and cruel; it is stinging and bitter and malicious. "The tongue is a fire!" It parches and blisters and burns; it kindles and feeds and fans the flames of a conflagration. "The world of iniquity is the tongue!" There are a thousand times more worldliness and wickedness and destruction of peace and good will to men on earth in a gossiping, tattling, slanderous, malicious tongue of some self-constituted censors and self-righteous and holier-than-thou critics of the morals and manners and religion of a whole community than in some thoughtless acts and mistakes of others, although such acts and mistakes may have a grain of harm and a tinge of wrong,

"Worldliness" cannot embrace less than the sins and the spirit of the world. One sinful practice cannot be any more worldly than another sinful practice, only as one practice embraces more concentrated meanness or rebellion against God than another. One can commit no greater sin or higher crime against God than to transgress-to rebel against and willfully set aside God's laws. One may yield to some temptation and stumble under the strong impulses and appetites of the flesh; but to stubbornly and rebelliously refuse to obey God, as did King Saul (1 Sam. 15: 22, 23), is to reject the word of God and to turn back from following him, and to be rejected by him. There can be no greater sin or baser crime committed to-day-there can be no more concentrated and double-plated and quadrupled "worldliness"-than to betray the cause of Christ to the enemy and deliver up the church of God into the hands of the world.

Who can discern his error? Clear thou me from hidden faults. Keep back thy servant also from presumptuous sins; let them not have dominion over me; then shall I be upright, and I shall be clear from great transgression. (Ps. 19: 12, 13.)

Under definition 5 Thayer cites John 1: 29—"Behold the Lamb of God, that taketh away the sin of the world;" and John 3: 16, 17—"God so loved the world," and "God sent not his Son into the world to judge the world; but that the world should be saved by him." "The world," then, was lost. Whom did Jesus die to save? From what does he save them? What does "the sin of the world" embrace? From what does Jesus save the earth? (See Rom. 8: 18-25, R. V.) Sin and death entered into the world by the transgression of one man. (Rom. 5: 12.) The human race was lost and the very earth was cursed because of sin. One cannot be more worldly than to have the spirit of transgression, than to be ruled in any way by "the sin of the world" and to be of that number whom Jesus died to save Thayer cites also such passages as this: "The corruption that is in the world by lust" (2 Pet. 1: 4); "The world cannot hate you; but me it hateth, because I testify of it that its works are evil" (John 7: 7); "Ye are from beneath; I am from above: ye are of this world; I am not of this world" (John 8: 23).

Attention must be called here to the fact that, with all their tithing of mint and anise and cumin, straining out a gnat and swallowing a camel, religious clothes and religious titles, long prayers on the streets and in the synagogues, pretended piety, long faces and fasts and almsdeeds to be seen of men, and great zeal in compassing land and sea to make a proselyte, the Pharisees were "of the world" and children of Satan-they were "worldly," most certainly. So people now may be religious; may worship God according to the wisdom and ways of the world; may seek chief seats and prominent places; may desire to be recognized and published as "the minister," or "Rabbi," or "Master," or "Pastor," or "Evangelist," or "Doctor," ad infinitum; may be zealous in establishing their own righteousness; and may be so missionary as to compass land and sea to make one convert; and yet be as envious and bitter, as wicked and worldly, as the Pharisees. Let all preachers scrutinize their own hearts and thoroughly examine themselves in the light of the word of God and see if it is the spirit of the world or the Spirit of Christ they seek and have: if it is the vanity and pride and ambitions of the world or the meekness and humility of Christ which govern them; if it is men and themselves or God they seek to please; if they themselves are thus worldly, or are they endeavoring to bring every thought into captivity to the gospel; if they are striving to "keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace" or dividing churches over themselves and their own speculations and self-con-

Thayer cites, furthermore, such passages as follows: "Keep oneself unspotted from the world" (James 1: 27); "Ye are from beneath: I am from above: ye are of this world; I am not of this world" (John 8: 23); "the world through its wisdom knew not God" (I Cor. 1: 21); "They are of the world: therefore speak they as of the world, and the world heareth them" (I John 4: 5); "Greater is he that is in you than he that is in the world" (I John 4: 4); "that we may not be condemned with the world" (I Cor. 11: 32); "the prince of this world" (John 12: 31: 14: 30; 16: 11), who is the devil.

There is another word translated "world"-namely, "aion," which means "age," Of this word Thayer says with other important things the New Testament writers. distinguish between "this age," "the time before the appointed return or truly Messianic advent" and "the future age "-"that is, the age after the return of Christ in majesty, the period of the consummate establishment of the divine kingdom and all its blessings." He says the period, "this age," is spoken of as one "of instability, weakness, impiety, wickedness, calamity, misery." "Hence the things of 'this age' are mentioned in the New Testament with censure: . . men controlled by the thoughts and pursuits of this present time (Rom. 12: 2), the same who are called 'the sons of this world' (Luke 16; 8; 20; 24)." This word appears in such passages as "the care of this world," "be not conformed to this world." "the princes of this world" (1 Cor. 2: 6, 8), "the god of this world" (2 Cor. 4: 4), "this present evil world" (Gal. 1: 4), "rulers of darkness of this world" (Eph. 6: 12), "rich in this world" (1 Tim. 6: 17), "having loved this present world" (2 Tim. 4: 10).

The definition of the word "world" and the passages of scripture in which it is used will help us very greatly in understanding what that thing is which is much against the church, what "worldliness" is, and what it is to be really worldly.

We hope to study more fully some of these passages of scripture.

When and How are Christians the Light of the World?

Christians are the light of the world when faithfully living as the word of God directs, because the word of God requires a life that is on a higher plane than could be suggested by men who are living after the flesh. Men who are living after the flesh love things that are fleshly; while they that are walking after the Spirit love spiritual things -that is, things that are taught by the Spirit of God. The Spirit of God always teaches the truth. The words of the Holy Spirit are always of a spiritual character, spoken by men spiritually endowed. No man ever spoke the words of the Spirit unless he was spiritually endowed. The writers of the New Testament were inspired to the extent that the Spirit of God directed the words as they wrote them. No uninspired man could write such a volume as the New Testament. Yet Christians to-day can read the New Testament and live in harmony with its divine teaching if they will deny the flesh with its affections and lusts.

When Christians set their hearts to walk after the Spirit and actually carry it out, they are then the light of the world. Their lives are a continual light to the people of the world around them. Their lives are upon a higher standard of morality than the lives of the people of the world. In this sense they are the light of the world. So long as any walk by the light of the New Testament, they will be the light of the world. If the time ever comes when none walk by the light of the word of God, the whole world will be in darkness. The only spiritual light there is in the world to-day is found in the inspired word of God. If all the people were to-day walking in the light of the New Testament, the world would be full of light. Hence, Jesus meant much when he said to and of Christians: "Ye are the light of the world." The light of those who live by the teaching of the New Testament is the light of divine wisdom. Therefore it is always safe to live as the New Testament directs. To refuse the New Testament and follow the teaching of uninspired men is to walk in darkness.

People that rely upon "getting religion" for the salvation of their souls are relying upon human wisdom, for the word of God does not say one word about "getting religion." The Bible tells what pure and undefiled religion is: "Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this. To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world." (James 1: 27.) This shows that religion is something to be done, not something to be got. Relieving the fatherless and widows from their afflictions is a grand work and will bring a great blessing to those that faithfully follow 1. The whole matter of a faithful life is given in the New Testament, but the matter of "getting religion" is not given even once. So none need be troubled about "getting religion," but all need to be anxious about practicing it daily.

The life that Christians are required to live is plainly laid down in the New Testament and needs to be faithfully studied and diligently followed. If there is any other sort of life that will prepare people for heaven, it has not been revealed. The life that is revealed and required in the divine word will secure to every one that faithfully lives it a heavenly home at the end of life. This will be as certainly true as that the New Testament is a divine record. On the other hand, it is equally true that all that refuse to lead a faithful life here will be lost eternally. This will be the most terrible outcome of human life that we could imagine. If our stay in torment was only for a period and was then to end, and we could then be transferred to heaven, that would be a different thing; but there is not an intimation that any such thing will ever be possible. When people are once consigned to hell, that is for eternity. Surely those that are leading continued wicked lives do not believe in eternal torment. How people can bear to lead abandoned, reckless lives, with eyes open to eternal torment, is hard to see. Either they are thoroughly thoughtless and indifferent to the whole matter or else they do not believe a word of the New Testament. There will certainly be a wonderful waking up and an awful cry of woe when that awful day comes; and it is just as certain to come as that the New Testament contains the words of eternal truth. What a wailing and gnashing of teeth there will be when that awful day shall come! But it will be too late then to mend the matter. O that all could realize that now is the accepted time and the only day of grace!

What Do the Churches Intend to Do About Contributing Through the Red Cross to the Sick and Wounded?

BY E. A. E.

After study and prayer and effort, a way has been provided for the churches to help, in the name of the churches and as the churches, the sick and wounded and other afflicted ones over the seas as well as at home.

- 1. The authorities of the United States who have the Red Cross work in charge assure us, as has been stated twice in these columns, that the churches can contribute as churches to the Red Cross chapters in the vicinity of the churches and receive full credit and a receipt for every dollar contributed; that some record can be kept of this and the whole published as contributed by the church; and that every dollar will be forwarded to its destination as given by the church and to the glory of the church. The Red Cross in this case will be only the means of transportation.
- 2. Any church, or any two or more churches, can endow a hospital bed in France at the cost of seven hundred dollars. The Red Cross will ask no credit or glory for this, but will give the church due credit and see that every dollar contributed goes directly to the specified place and for the purpose contributed, and in the name of the church.
- 3. Since the last statement I have again heard from the authorities, this time in regard to paying the amount necessary to endow a bed by installments. Three hundred and fifty dollars of this can be paid now, or when the bed is endowed, and the balance in six months. In this last communication I am again assured that the money will go directly to the bed endowed and to the credit and praise of the church or churches endowing it.

Could there be any more direct way of getting the money to the place needing it? Could there be any less expensive way?

Here is a case, then, of the church's knowing where the money goes, who receives it, how it is used, and of the ones who receive it knowing who gave it, and why, and in whose name, and of giving the church due credit.

Let the churches, then, do now what they intend to do I feel that I have discharged my duty in opening up the way and calling attention to it. Will the churches not take up the matter at once and act? Thousands of dollars could have been given in this way for which the church, as such, will receive no credit.

The way is open now for all congregations to give as the church, and the time is pressing.

The Gospel Advocate shall be glad to know and to report all that any and all churches do in this way. Also it shall be glad to assist any church in any way possible in the matter. Let the reports come in.

Training Little Children By MES. PRINCESS B. TROWBRIDGE.

(Suggestions by mothers who have been kindergartners. Issued by The United States Bureau of Education, Washington, D. C., and The National Kindergarten Association, New York, N. Y.)

Article 20.

Simple Playthings May Be Utilized to Add to Children's Knowledge and Skill.

A worsted ball, if kept clean, makes an excellent plaything for a little baby. If it is suspended from his carriage or crib, it will help him to learn to focus his eyes, and he will be amused by it for a long time. When the child is a little older, let him sit on a quilt on the floor and play with several balls in the six colors-red, orange, yellow, green, blue, and violet. Each ball should have a worsted string of the same color attached to it. When the child is a little older still, play simple little games with him, such as rock-a-bye baby, pendulum of a clock, swinging the ball back and forth and up and down, and in other ways that will occur to every mother. Unconsciously the child will acquire a sense of form, color, motion, and position by such games. Say to him: "See the pretty round ball!" "See the pretty red paper!" And the child will delight to find and bring to you other things that are round like a ball and red like the paper. A set of worsted balls in the six colors can be obtained from kindergarten supply houses; Milton Bradley Company, Springfield, Mass.; or E. Stieger & Co., 49 Murray Street, New York.

Long, slim clothespins make excellent playthings for babies. They can be used as babies or soldiers or to make fences, trees, log houses, and many other interesting things. Playthings that can be taken apart and put together again are good to have; also blocks with which the child can build all kinds of objects, engines that he can push along the floor, balls to bounce and throw, doll carriages, washing sets, etc. Dolls with clothes that button and unbutton and come off may be used to teach the children how to dress and undress themselves.

For older children, kindergarten beads are very useful and helpful. They are in the form of half-inch wooden balls, cubes, and cylinders, in the six colors, and also in the natural unstained wood. A shoe lace or bodkin and cord is used for stringing them. I would suggest, to begin with, that the child string balls only, and all in one color. After he has made a long string of these, ask if he would like to use two colors. He will probably string them in irregular order at first, and, if so, it will be necessary to suggest alternating the colors, putting on two of one color and one of another, and so on. In this way he will soon learn all the colors and numbers, perhaps, up to six or eight, and will know one form.

What else is there with which little children's hands can be kept occupied? First of all, sand. Just turn the children loose in a pile or box of sand with a spoon, a pall, a cup, or anything with which they can dig or shovel. I personally do not like to have sand in the house; but if you have a suitable place for it, it need not make any trouble. An old kitchen table turned upside down with the legs cut short and put on the other side makes a good table for sand. A piece of burlap or denim placed under the table keeps the sand from being scattered over the house. Children can early be taught not to scatter it.

With clay, a simple little cradle may be made. The child first rolls a piece into a ball, cuts it in half with a string, One of these halves forms the lower part of the cradle. The other he cuts in two, using one piece for the top and remodeling the other into a ball for baby.

Birds' nests with eggs can be made with clay; also apples, oranges, cups and saucers, and even animals may be attempted; in fact, clay has almost endless possibilities as play material. Plasticine is the best kind of clay to use, as it is easily handled and is always ready.

For little children, before they are old enough to use scissors, tearing paper is an engaging occupation. Tear a piece of old newspaper into an oblong shape; it may be any size-about two by four inches, we will say. By folding this in the middle, it will make a little tent. Again, fold in thirds, turn both ends down, for a table. The child can tear paper into trees, a ball, doll babies, and many other simple shapes.

When the child is old enough, he can begin to use seissors, but be sure to provide a pair with blunt points that cannot possibly hurt him. These will afford endless hours of amusement and profit. Have you found that "he cuts papers all over the floor?" Of course he does, but use this occasion to teach him neatness. Let him have his own little wastebasket, and he will delight in picking up the papers.

Let him cut pictures from old magazines and paste them into a book made from Manila wrapping paper. To make the book, take any desired size of paper, fold several sheets in half, and sew them together along the crease. A pretty picture might be pasted on the front page, or the child could draw one on it. This will take many days' work; but all the time he will be learning many lessons in patience, concentration, neatness, and accuracy, and will be developing artistic talent, if he is apt at drawing. Best of all, he will be gaining power to do things. If, in his cutting, he comes to a picture that has a story, tell it to him. Do not criticize his work, as this may discourage him, but see to it that he does the best he can.

Let the child draw with colored crayons or "crayolas." You will be surprised at how soon and how well, under proper guidance, he will be able to use this means of expressing himself. 0 0 0

Letters of Commendation

Many thanks for the helpful Teachers' New Testament. It certainly deserves a wide circulation.—Mrs. E. F. Tucker, St. Matthews, Ky.

I received the Teachers' New Testament, and think it a most excellent book. It is simple and thorough enough for both young and old.—Mrs. Frank Chapman, Farmington, Tenn.

I think the Teachers' New Testament is worth twice as much as it costs, or even more. I would not trade mine for three dollars and do without it.—D. L. Robinson, Smithville, Tenn.

I received your Teachers' New Testament. I have not read it much yet, for the reason that I have one nearly like it—the Holman; but I think the Book is all right.—W. J. Franklin, Andalusia, Ala.

I received the Teachers' New Testament, and I am very much pleased with it. I think it is a great help in studying our Sunday-school lessons. Many thanks to you.—Burnett Barriger, Fancy Farm, Ky.

The Teachers' New Testament is well worth the price. I find it very beneficial on difficult passages of Scripture, No one will make a mistake by having it handy for ready reference.—Mrs. W. R. Frazier, Glenwood, Ark.

I received the Teachers' New Testament as my premium for one new subscriber to the Gospel Advocate, and I am highly pleased with it. I think it a great help in studying the New Testament Scriptures.—Arch P. Baker, Duck River, Tenn.

I received the Teachers' New Testament, and think it a very helpful book. I am delighted with it. I am talking the Gospel Advocate to my home congregation, and hope to send you some subscriptions in the near future.—George E. Bucklew, Coal City, Ind.

The Teachers' New Testament received. I am well pleased with it; think it worth many times the price. The Gospel Advocate is always a welcome visitor to our home, as it has been for the past thirty-five years.—E. R. Young, M.D., Charco, Texas.

The new subscriber I sent you to the Gospel Advocate is highly pleased with both the paper and the Teachers' New Testament. Some time before you made this most excellent offer I bought one of these Testaments from you. I find the notes very helpful. They throw much light on subjects that are so often misunderstood.—R. C. Taylor, Fort Deposit, Ala.

I received the Teachers' New Testament. I think the notes are very helpful. I am sure the Testament is one of the best premiums you have given with the Gospel Advocate. Every old subscriber should be more than glad to send in one new subscriber in order to get the New Testament. And, too, the new subscriber gets value received for his money in the Gospel Advocate.—M. A. Creel, Hanceville, Ala.

I have been very busy on the farm, but have taken time to examine carefully the "Teachers' Testament with Notes and Helps," and will say that I like it very much. The notes are generally in harmony with the Scriptures and unfold a world of light to the earnest Bible student; and the other helps will indeed help those who carefully consider the same. The few exceptions to my agreement with the author of "Notes and Helps" make it, to my mind, a great book—"multum in parvo." I like specially the Standard Revised Version it contains, and withal it is a very desirable New Testament.—Harvey W. Jones, Hardin, Ky.

I received my Teachers' New Testament as my compensation for a new subscriber to the Gospel Advocate, and will say that it is an excellent book, far better than I expected. The notes are very helpful, giving one a brief commentary on the New Testament. One beauty of the book is, the notes, being given principally by teachers not identified with the church of Christ, gave us their view on certain subjects over which there is much confusion among religious people. On some of these subjects they take the same position that the church of Christ does, yet they do not publicly teach them. Hence, I take it, the notes can be used effectively in discussing these subjects. Please accept my most hearty thanks.—W. C. Graves, Dalton, Ga.

Your letter and the Testament have been received. The book I believe is a wonderful production and will be of great worth to the ordinary Bible student. The editors seem to make unprejudiced comments and explanations. One of the greatest features of the book, it seems to me, is the introduction it gives to the books. These introductions furnish information the ordinary reader would not be able to obtain otherwise. I do not mean to say that the Bible or the wisdom of the Author of the Bible can be improved upon. But the Bible had to be constructed so as to furnish thought and study for the literate as well as the illiterate; hence, the propriety of such as these notes—the learned helping the unlearned to understand—J. E. Dykes, Quitman, Ga.

Gaza.

The capture of Gaza by the British brought forward into the light of public interest an old, old city, scene of a thousand battles, veteran of a hundred wars, to whom, if such be possible, even the terrible Armageddon of to-day must come as only one more struggle in a long life of war. Incidentally, the fall of Gaza went far toward opening the road to Jerusalem to the English.

Gaza had not been taken by men of Western Europe since it fell to the armies of Napoleon more than a century ago. It has always been recognized as a key point in any campaign in the Holy Land. Although it is hardly more than a big village to-day, surrounded by dead sand dunes, only redeemed from complete barrenness by a surrounding grove of beautiful olive trees, it has been fought for as though it were one of the precious cities of the earth.

Such, indeed, it was in times past. In the days of the glory of the Philistines it was one of their principal cities, and that was many centuries before the birth of Christ. The Philistines took Samson to Gaza, and this was the city where that muscular hero tore down the gates. Even to-day there is a tomb in Gaza which is pointed out as his tomb; but, speaking both literally and figuratively, there is "nothing in it."

Gaza seems to have fallen to the British quite easily. In older times it was wont to put up a stiffer resistance. It baffled the full strength of Alexander the Great for one hundred and fifty-one days. Later it was twice destroyed in warfare. The hosts of Islam captured it eight centuries ago, and held it, except for the brief triumph of the French, until the British victory.—Exchange.

Over the face of the world lies a strange mist, bred by the lawlessness, sins, perversities of men, through which many radiant stars are invisible, and in which many things appear out of focus, distorted, mishappen; so that what we call progress is not so much rectification of knowledge by discovery of truth as purification of knowledge by character and correction of the fancies of disease by the clear vision of health. The redemption of society is an intellectual quite as much as a moral process, and the end of it is the restoration of the race to health.—The Outlook.

Fayette, July 29.—I am just from Louisiana, where we had a very good meeting. Twelve obeyed the gospel. It is the most destitute field I ever saw. I pray the Lord to send laborers into that field. Let all preachers passing from Meridian, Miss., by way of Shreveport, stop at Dubberly, call E. M. Chapman, and preach for them, They are calling for laborers.—W. H. Gurganus.

Haleyville, July 29.—Our meeting at Millport resulted in three being baptized and one restored to the fellowship. We have some fine people in Millport. I spent four pleasant days with the church at Oakman. They are doing things for the Lord. I am now in my seventh annual meeting at the White House, near Haleyville. We are having fine crowds and hope to accomplish much in the name of Christ. I go next to Berea Church, near Eldridge, for a two-weeks' meeting.—A. D. Dies.

Arkansas.

Little Rock, July 29.—I have just closed a meeting at Haywood, near Wedowee, Ala. The meeting continued eight days and the interest was great. Seven were added to the one body. If nothing prevents, I will be with these brethren on the first and second Sundays in August, 1919. My next meeting will be at Brookeland, Texas.—E. M. Borden,

London, July 29.—I have just closed a good meeting with the Mill Creek Church, near here. The interest was good, holding for two weeks, with fourteen baptisms, one restoration, and the church encouraged to do greater things. The brethren are wanting to locate a preacher here—a splendid idea. I am now beginning a meeting at Georgetown Schoolhouse, near London, with bright prospects of a fine meeting.—J. G. Malphurs.

British India.

Dahigaon, Ahmednagar, May 21.—
I have to report twenty baptisms in February, three in March, seven in April, and four in May. There are seven of us Indian preachers. For the month of March and April we have received seventy-three rupees (a rupee is thirty-seven cents). We have received two checks ($9.75 and $11.42) from the Campbell Street Church. I have been on a tour in twenty villages this month. The other workers have also been on tours. Brethren, please pray for the reëstablishment of our seminary. It is closed for lack of $1.10 per month each for ten boys. Brethren, we have to inform you that the corn is very dear—(four seers for one rupee). We are very thankful to you for your kindness.—B. G. Secretory.

Georgia.

Dalton, July 29.—I am now in a meeting with the Dalton Church. It has been going on for two weeks. Last Saturday night there was the first accepting move on the part of the hearers. Three persons came forward in answer to the gospel call.—R. P. Cuff.

Indiana.

Borden, July 29.—The meeting at Coal City closed on July 14, with twelve baptisms altogether. I began at Salem on July 15 and continued through last night. At the latter place three were baptisted and one came from the Baptist Church. I shall begin a meeting at Borden to-night.—J. E. Thornberry.

Kentucky.

Murray, July 28,—On the third Lord's day in this month I closed a meeting with the Liberty congregation, in Henry County, Tenn. Nine were added to the Lord and a number of young men started in the public work of the church. I began a meeting at Pace, Tenn., last night.—David Thompson.

Wingo, July 30.—I have just closed a splendid meeting at New Providence. Twenty-five were added to the church. This was my third meeting with these good brethren. I have also held meetings at Vancleave, McChristian, and Pottertown—all mission points. At McChristian the "faithful few" are planning to build a meetinghouse. I am now with the church at Mount Pleasant, Graves County, and hope to have a successful meeting.—Coleman Overby.

Berry Ferry, July 29.—Our meeting is now history. The sowing of the good seed by Brother W. N. Luton, of Little Cypress, was well done. Our audiences were good and gave the very best attention throughout the meeting. Three young men made the confession and were baptized. I wish to say to the brotherhood that in Brother Luton they will find a second Timothy (2 Tim. 3: 15.)—J. A. Kerr.

Sedalia, July 24.—I am now in a good meeting at Pilot Oak, with a good interest. We have baptized one young man, and a lady is to be baptized tomorrow. This is my second meeting at Pilot Oak, and each time the Baptists have carried on their meeting at the same time; but the people are good to come out and hear the truth, and we have large crowds at our services. I go from here to Pottsville to begin a meeting.—I. A. Douthitt.

Oklahoma.

Milfay, July 30.—I am now preaching at Milfay, having begun here on Saturday night. There is no congregation here, and but one brother in the town that I know of. I was asked to "come over and help us." I heard the call and am here. The people here are of the "Church of God" faith, and we thought we would not get a place to preach; but they were nice to us, and I am preaching under an arbor they had used for their meeting. The people are coming, and I feel that this is an opportunity to do much good.

This is the first meeting or preaching I have done since my little meetings over in Arkansas in May. I have a letter from home, and my wife says she does not feel any better. One of our boys is now on his way to France, and no doubt this makes it harder for my wife, for it is almost too much for me to bear. Pray for us. I want to do all I can to spread the kingdom of the Lord wherever I can. I will remain here over next Sunday, then I go home (Denton, Texas) for a meeting near by. I hope to be busy now all the time.—D. S. Ligon.

Tennessee.

Hohenwald, July 29.—1 began a meeting here yesterday, with fine erowds, and hope for a good meeting. Pray for us .- I. B. Bradley.

Diana, July 29,-1 am here from Jonah, Texas, on my way to begin a meeting near Rogersville, Ala., on the first Sunday in August. If anybody needs me when I am through there. they can let me hear from them .- J. B.

Appleton, July 29.—Beginning on the second Sunday in July, I held an eight-days' meeting at Culleoka, with three baptized. I began at this place yesterday, preaching in the morning and afternoon and at night, with one confession at the night service.-J. T.

Nolensville, July 29.-Brother F. B. Notensville, July 29.—Brother F. B. Srygley, of Nashville, began a meeting at Rock Spring on July 20, which continued with increasing interest to its close on July 27. Brother Srygley in his characteristic way preached the Bible. There were four confessions. Brother Srygley's sojourn in our midst was appreciated by every one.—J. Leonard Jackson.

Chattanooga, July 29.-I have closed two meetings recently, in which nineteen were baptized and six confessed their faults. I will preach above Pikeville, at Rocky Branch, on the fourth Sunday in August. I shall go next to Bledsoe County and work the remaining part of the summer, the Lord willing. Time is passing; souls are perishing; live right .- J. C. Mosley.

Glen Alice, July 25 .- I returned from Crab Orchard yesterday and resumed the meeting here last night which we closed on Monday night. Seven came forward last night—two to make the confession and five from the Baptists. This makes thirteen since Sunday night. This church has resolved to "go over the top" before this meeting closes. Any church desiring my services in a meeting can write me here. I go to Post Oak Springs next Sunday night, and from there to Crab Orchard.—W. E. Daugherty.

Cumberland City, July 29.—Brother W. M. Oakley, of the Potter Orphans' Home, visited Allen's Chapel, at Needmore, on the second Lord's day in July and filled Brother W. N. Fergu-son's appointment. He also preached at our little mission point in the afternoon and night. One wandering child of God was restored to fellowship. His wife, a Methodist, was baptized into Christ. We greatly appreciated Brother Oakley's visit. We consider the contract of the sider him as our own, as he labored so faithfully and so long for us. We have taken the emblems to our mission point and some are keeping house for the Lord .- A. S. Landis.

BY NELLIE STRATTON.

I have just received a short letter from Sister Armstrong-Hopkins, in which she tells us "the glad news of our Brother Martin's very marked improvement in health. He has certainly been desperately ill, but now he seems to be starting on the sure road to recovery. For this we thank God most heartily."

Regarding herself, she says that there is nothing cheering to write. She is somewhat disheartened since the death of her husband, followed by her own serious illness, and all the time her expenses were heavy and must now be met.

Let us remember both Brother Martin and Sister Armstrong-Hopkins, and thus cheer them when other things tend to discourage.

A good beginning was made in this work when a sister in Nashville, Tenn., wrote me a very interesting letter, and inclosed three dollars from herself and Sunday-school class; and she is not content with that, but she says that they intend to send on the fourth Sunday in each month.

A brother in Arkansas sent five dollars for the starving brethren in India, and a brother and sister in Kentucky sent ten dollars. These in answer to an appeal by Brother McHenry and Brother Martin.

A sister in Alabama, seventy-six years old, who has been sick since January, sent a contribution of two dollars each for Brother Martin and Brother Jelley.

I received two splendid donations for Brother McHenry's work at Aurangabad. One was fourteen dollars and twenty-eight cents from the church at Del Rio, Texas, and the other for twenty dollars from the church at Italy, Texas. Both of these churches are small, but they have the right spirit when it comes to giving.

From Miami, Fla., a brother writes that the church at that place intends to send five dollars each month for foreign missions. He says: "We are a struggling band made up of the poor working class of people, but liberal in heart." That is splendid! How many others will write in the same way?

Although a stranger in her community, a sister in Arkansas writes that she felt she ought to speak to the church there to help with Brother Jelley's home-coming fund. She did. and she sent six dollars and thirty cents.

These are only a few of the many interesting letters I have received within the last few days. these, there are some who give regularly every month, and others who cannot give every month, but who

Who will help to further the good work which is now being done-first by giving yourself and then by encouraging others to give? You have no idea the joy which you will derive from time and effort spent in talking or writing to others, interesting them in the splendid missionary work which we are accomplishing on the foreign field, and appealing to them to contribute to this work. Brother McHenry suggested to me once that we should have at least one brother or sister in each State who would keep closely in touch with the work which is being done for our Master in the darker corners of the earth, and who would make an effort to reach every other brother and sister in that State with the story of what is being done and an appeal that they help. Some call it "a blessing;" others call it "reflex action;" but whatever it may be called, I know that all the reward of time, effort, and money spent for Jesus in this way is not kept for the hereafter. Part of the joy comes now. Try it. Address Miss Nellie Straiton, 1020 South Lake Street, Fort Worth, Teres

Counterfeiters.

BY J. J. VANHOUTIN.

There never was a counterfeit piece of money without first there was a genuine. Because of the value of the genuine, men will take worthless material and fashion it like unto the genuine. Genuine Christianity has been counterfeited, and the counterfeit passed readily. It was the kind of leaven that Jesus warned his disciples to beware of. Atheism, deism, and skepticism have never been counterfeited. Neither was infidelity ever considered worth counterfeiting. Why go to an expense and counterfeit that which is worthless, especially when the genuine is worthless and never will do anybody any good, like atheism deism. skepticism, or infidelity? How can an idol be a counterfeit of the intelligent first cause. God, when the idolater denies that there is a God? Christianity, religion, the gospel, and truth have all been counterfeited, perverted, changed, and yet pass more readily than the genuine. If there was no true God, the idol would never have been used in his place. If there never had been a true promise of a Messiah, there never would have been the twenty-five false Christs before If Jesus was not the true Jesus Christ, there never would have been any antichrist. If Jesus had never established a church, there never would have been so many churches, specially any one claiming to be his church, unless it taught and practiced just what he commanded his apostles to do; and churches not doing that are not genuine. The pure gospel preached, believed, and obeyed results in establishing the church of Christ. So God forbid the establishment of any other church by forbidding any other gospel to be preached; for the result of any other gospel being preached, or the gospel perverted, would be the erection of another kind of church. Before a man undertakes to preach, he should learn what Paul preached at Corinth, and what the church received, then preach the same things; and if his preaching is believed and obeyed, the result will be the establishment of the church of Christ, and not a spurious church. A man can become a member of a spurious church without obeying the gospel, but he must obey the gospel in order to become a member of the church of Christ.

Seeing Oneself.

A sense of the dramatic is, of course, closely connected with a sense of humor. If you have this faculty for getting outside yourself and criticizing yourself, you will be pretty sure to see whether you look ridiculous. If you are a real artist in the exercise of the gift, you will also see yourself in your right perspective with regard to other people. The artist must not be an egotist. He must not allow the limelight to be centered on himself. He will see himself, not as the hero of the story, but as one of the characters -the hero, perhaps, of one chapter, but equally a minor character in the others. The greatest artist of all, probably, is the man who prays and tries to see the story as the author designed it. He will have the truest sense of proportion, the most adequate sense of humor of all. Undoubtedly prayer is the highest form of exercising this sense of the dramatic.--Exchange.

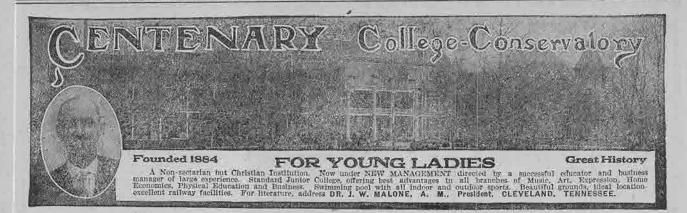

Your Brain Must Have Pure Blood.

No more important physiological discovery has ever been made than that the brain requires a due supply of pure blood. It is estimated that this organ receives as much as one-tenth of all the blood that is sent from the heart-a great deal more than any other organ of the body. If the vitality of the blood is impaired, the blood then affords the brain an imperfect stimulus, and there is mental and physical languor, sluggishness, or inactivity.

Pure blood is blood that is free from humors; it is healthy blood; and the term "pure blood," as it is generally used, means blood that is not only right in quality, but also in quantity. Hood's Sarsaparilla makes pure, rich, red blood. This is one of the great truths about this great medicine.-Advt.

CHURCH NEWS

Texas.

Dallas, July 29.—I closed the camp meeting at Laneport last night, with seventeen baptisms and one from the Christian Church. Brother J. W. Acuff led the songs and helped much otherwise. We held a meeting at Granger before we came here, and nine were baptized and two came from the Christian Church. I go to Huckabay on August 1.—J. B. Nelson.

Snyder, July 29.—1 am in a splendid meeting at this place. We have baptized six and the meeting is still in progress. I go from here to Dunn, and then I will go back to Tennessee. If any of the congregations in West Tennessee desire my services for monthly appointments another year, I would be pleased to have them write me at Yuma, Tenn.—Joe L. Netherland.

Collinsville, July 31.—We are in the midst of a very fine meeting here. Fine crowds in spite of elections, picnics, Mollie Bailey's show, etc. Ten were baptized last night. Tremendous crowd at the water. Collins is the home of that venerable and faithful old soldier, E. H. Rodgers. We are all rejoiced to see him "about his Father's business" again after suffering so much.—Thomas E. Milholland.

Austin, July 30.—The meeting at Bagwell began on July 8 and continued fifteen days. In the meantime there were eight confessions and baptisms, the church was greatly revived, and much good was done in a general way. During the meeting one sister who had gone off and united with the Baptist Church was restored to her "first love." I am just home from Donie, where I spent seven days assisting in a meeting. One brother was restored and four made the good confession and were baptized into the one body. My next meeting will be at Palestine.—H. F. Oliver.

Houston, July 31.—I have just closed a good meeting not far from here and am on my way home and to my next meeting at Trenton, northeast of Dallas, on the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railway. I am called to a meeting in Tennessee by Brother Tom Smith, of Bean's Creek, to begin on the second Sunday in September. Brethren, if you should have any work for me after this date, let me know it, and I shall appreciate it. I can engage for other meetings in Tennessee and Kentucky after the third Sunday in September, All correspondence should be addressed to me at 401 Montreal Avenue, Dallas, Texas.—J. C. Estes.

West Virginia.

Buffalo, July 30,-We have been having very interesting meetings in this section since last writing. Lord's day we had a very enjoyable all-day meeting at New Bethel, six miles east of here. Two noble young girls were baptized by Brother D. M. Ice in the evening. New Bethel is a small congregation and is too weak financially and otherwise to evangelize the country around, but there are a few earnest Christians there. I help them all I can. They help me some: but they are not able to do much. certainly do need all the help I can get in order to keep up our mission points. Brethren, please remember me in prayers and offerings as often as possible. Always address me at Buffalo, W. Va., Box 81. This is a critical time for us. We are obliged to build a house of worship now at this point, and additions to our building fund will be very much appreciated. Please do all you can for this fund now or soon. F. P. Fonner.

A Good Business Opening.

The steady increase of the live-stock interest in the Southern States warranted our making a thorough investigation of the natural advantages of the Southland for the raising of good horses, cattle, hogs, sheep, and poultry, compared to Northern States, like Iowa, that for years have been looked upon as leaders in these lines.

The reports of our experts justify our establishing headquarters in the South at some centrally located city having good railroad connections as soon as suitable arrangements can be closed.

Our business will require the help of a number of reliable men, who must be well and favorably known among planters and farmers who own stock in the vicinity of their home town, and we prefer men with some knowledge of live-stock.

These positions are worthy the prompt attention of any one who is looking for a chance to make money in a reliable, steady, and growing outdoor business.

Hymn for High Places.

In darkened days of strife and fear.
When far from home and hold,
I do essay my soul to cheer
As did wise men of old;
When folks do go in doleful guise,
And are for life afraid,
I to the hills will lift mine eyes
From whence doth come mine aid.

I shall my soul a temple make
Where hills stand up on high;
Thither my sadness shall I take,
And comfort there descry;
For every good and noble mount
This message doth extend—
That evil men must render count
And evil days must end.

For, sooth, it is a kingly sight
To see God's mountain tall
That vanquisheth each lesser height
As great hearts vanquish small.
Stand up, stand up, ye holy hills,
As saints and scraphs do.
That ye may bear these present ills
And lead men safely through.

Let high and low repair and go
To where great hills endure;
Let strong and weak be there to seek
Their comfort and their cure.
And for all hills in fair array
Now thanks and blessings give.
And, bearing healthful hearts away,
Home go, and stoutly live.

The Thompson-Scott Debate.

BY I. B. BRADLEY.

This debate took place twelve miles northeast of Murray, Ky., on July 2-5, between T. B. Thompson (Christian) and J. R. Scott (Old Baptist), both of Murray, and both young men. Four propositions were examined, embracing conditional and unconditional salvation as taught by the respective religious bodies they represented, and also human agency and election.

Brother Thompson has had four or five debates; while this was, I think, Scott's first effort. They were not equally matched. Thompson was quick; Scott, slow. Thompson is a good speaker; Scott, poor. Thompson is fine in repartee; Scott, a failure. Thompson is a logician; Scott, not acquainted with logic. Thompson is a rapid speaker, and clear in his presentation of argument.; Scott, slow, and vague in argument. Thompson spoke impromptu, largely; while Scott could not get away from his notes. The impression of the speakers on the audience was quite noticeable in the difference in which they responded to the two men. While Thompson spoke, they were open-eyed and eager; while Scott spoke, they were listless.

No attempt will be made to give the arguments, as this report would be too long. The usual positions were taken, and in the usual manner. Thompson exploded the Old Baptist capital argument against aliens doing anything in their salvation, from Rom. 8: 8, 9, "They that are in the flesh cannot please God," showing that Paul said this to warn Christians of the danger of following the "desires of the flesh and of the mind," citing Rom. 6: 1-17 to show that they were saved, and therefore not aliens; and further citing Rom. 8: 1-8 and 9-17 to show that Christians could by choice follow elther the flesh or the Spirit.

Thompson made a drawing to represent the world and the Old Baptist idea of election and reprobation-a circle with a line drawn through the center, the word "saved" on one side and the word "lost" on the other. He then asked Scott to write the word "Christ" on one side or the other, showing to which side he came. This was kept before him three days without any response. Then Thompson explained to the audience that Scott could not afford to write it on either side, since the Old Baptist theory made the death of Christ a vain sacrifice; because, according to the Old Baptist teaching, the number of the saved and lost were fixed before the foundation of the world. The elect were saved from all eternity to all eternity, and the nonelect were lost from all eternity to all eternity. The elect were already saved, and the death of Christ could not make them any safer; the nonelect were lost, and he could not save them. Hence he died in vain: and, worst of all, God knew it before he came into the world.

At one point in the debate Thompson, by skillful maneuvering, unrolled a ridiculous chart that Scott had hung on the wall to pull down at the psychological moment and ridicule the Bible doctrine of baptism, and turned it against them, and thus scored a point and brought confusion to the other side.

Three or four Old Baptist preachers were present and about a dozen Christian preachers. Everybody enjoyed both the debate and the kindness and hospitality of the people. The debate will help the cause there. Thompson made a fine defense of the truth. Brethren, hold up his hands. He is worthy of your hearty support.

C. H. Cayce and I were the moderators in this debate. We signed propositions for a five-days' debate at Burns, Tenn., to take place in December. Announcements will appear in due time. We anticipate a good time.

Christian Science. No. 1.

BY M. S. MASON.

This begins a series of articles in which I shall review at length the writings of Mrs. Mary Baker Eddy as contained in her book called "Science and Health and Key to the Scriptures," the book that we might term the "Christian Science Bible."

This subject, because of its present popularity, deserves notice, and I believe an exposition of the unscripturalness of Mrs. Eddy's book is a sufficient refutation of the whole Christian Science system. The system rises or falls on its scriptural merit because it purports to even be a "key to the Scriptures:" That only makes its sin more exceedingly sinful.

On the title-page she announces herself as " Pastor Emeritus of the Church of Christ Scientist." It is bad enough to pervert scriptural offices, but it is an insult to injury to pervert titles also. There were "pastors" in apostolic days, but no "pastors emeriti." But could Mrs. Eddy be one? No. There were no women pastors. A pastor cared for one flock-not for several, as did Mrs. Eddy and her associates.

In the same connection she calls the church "the Church of Christ Scientist." I have often said that, granting a certain system of doctrine to be correct. I could never see why it should be given an unscriptural name. Why should we be anything more or less than Christians and members of the church of Christ? Nowhere do the Scriptures warrant the use of the name that Mrs. Eddy gave the church. Paul calls them "churches of Christ" in Rom. 16: 16. Jesus said in Matt. 16: 18: "Upon this rock I will build my church," Then it is "Christ's church," or an equivalent expression can be "the church of Christ." If Mrs. Eddy really taught what Christ and the apostles did, why did she not term the body what they termed it?

In her Preface (lines 12-21) she pays a brilliant tribute to truth and very truthfully says: "Truth independent of doctrines and time-honored systems knocks at the portals of humanity." The expression is worthy of a better cause than hers.

On page 8, "Preface" (lines 9-12), she suggests that spirit and matter being opposite, both could not be real and good. As this principle of opposites is one used by Mrs. Eddy throughout her book, I might attend to it now. To repeat, she says that as spirit and matter are opposites, and spirit is real and good, matter is unreal and bad. Let us try a parallel case. We white people and the negroes are opposite races in color. We white people are Christians; but as the negro is our opposite, he cannot be Christian, but must be heathen. Because things are opposite in one respect does not mean they are in all. I might say this is a good example of Mrs. Eddy's logic all the way through.

On the same page (lines 18-21) she combats doctors and simply states that medical practice has been a failure. It is true that there is humbuggery in medical practice in that there are fake doctors, but to say that disease has increased rather than diminished under medical dispensation is to dispute all reason and experience.

Testimony that is contradictory is unreliable testimony, and on pages 8 and 9 of "Preface" I find two testimonies which deserve attention. On page 8 (lines 26, 27) she says she discovered Christian Science in 1866. However, on page 9 (lines 27-30) she says she was ignorant of "the stupendous life problem" till 1867. Therefore, if she discovered it in 1866, and was ignorant of it till 1867, she was ignorant of it one year after she discovered it:

On page 8 of "Preface" (lines 10, 11) she says in substance that matter is unreal, but on page 9 (lines 4, 5) she says the child looks out on a world of "whose existence he is as sure as his own." One time this material world is nonexistent, the next it is very much existent.

The import of Mrs. Eddy's teaching is that she and her followers have the same power as Christ, but Mrs. Eddy forfeits her claims by denying equality with One that did have divine power. Paul tells us in 1 Cor. 2: 16 that he has "the mind of Christ." Mrs. Eddy says on page 9 of her "Preface" (lines 18) that she was "waiting" for it even when she gave to the world her wonderful system. Therefore she gave it without the mind of Christ. But no one doubts that when he reads her production

On page 10 of "Preface" (lines 15, 16) she claims "thousands of cases of well-authenticated healing." In answering Mrs. Eddy's statement, I might answer all divine healers by saying that I do not believe there has been one case of well-authenticated healing since the apostolic age. What is a case of well-authenticated healing? Let us take one that we know is genuine and note three important features about it. Let us take the case of the healing of the lame man in Acts 3. First, he was lame from his mother's womb. It was not a case that would as probably get well without treatment as with it. Second, it was a demonstrated case before those people in their own borders. It was not what they heard that happened "far away," but it was a visible accomplishment before their own eyes. Third, the man was healed. It was so genuine that the friends of the cause were not only not disappointed, which is true in many modern cases, but even the enemies were forced to admit that a notable miracle had been done among them. That is what I call a "well-authenticated miracle." Can Mrs. Eddy show a miracle like that? I frow not.

One of the noticeable things in Mrs. Eddy's production is her perversion of scripture, twisting it to make it suit her cause. We find an example on page 9 of her "Preface" (lines 18-21) in using Luke 4: 18. The Master is here talking about captives to sin. Mrs. Eddy makes it "sense" and adds that to the expression. Mrs. Eddy infers that Jesus taught us there that he came to deliver us from the delusion of our senses and make us realize we are spiritual beings entirely and absolutely. The Master was really talking deliverance from the bondage of sin.

On page 12 of the "Preface" (lines 9, 10) we have the account of the organization of "The First Christian Scientist Association," which met monthly, with Mrs. Eddy as president. This was an unscriptural, carnal, worldly institution. Primitive Christians maintained congregational independence. Each managed its own affairs; no associations were held, nor were they needed.

What Is Nuxated Iron?

Physician Explains-Says Public Ought to Know What They Are Taking-Practical Advice on What To Do To Build Up Your Strength, Power and Endurance and Increase the Red Blood Corpuscies.

The fact that Nuxated Iron is today being used by over three million people annually and that so many physicians are prescribing it as a tonic, strength and blood builder in weak, nervous, run-down conditions has led to an a tonic, strength and blood builder in weak, nervous, run-down conditions has led to an investigation of its merits by designated physicians and others whose reports should be of great importance to the public generally, almong these is the statement made by Dr. James Francis Sullivan, formerly physician of Bellevue Hospital (Outdoor Dept.). New York, and Westchester County Hospital, who says: "When one patient after another began asking my opinion of Nuxated Irou, I resolved to go thoroughly into the subject and find out for myself whether or not it possessed asking my opinion of Nuxated Iron, I resolved to go thoroughly into the subject and find out for myself whether or not it possessed the real value claimed by its manufacturers and attested to by so many prominent people. This is exactly what I believe every honest, conscientious physician should do before prescribing or lending his endorsement to any product whatsoever. If an article is worthless we practitioners ought to be the first to know of it and if it is efficacious we are in duty bound to recommend it for the welfare of our patients. A study of the composition of the Nuxated Iron formula so impressed me with the therapeutic efficacy of the product that I immediately tested it in a number of obstinate cases. So quickly did it increase the strength, energy and endurance of the patients to whom it was administered, that I became firmly convinced of its remarkable value as a tonic and blood builder. I have since taken it myself with excellent results. There are thousands of delicate, nervous, run-down folks who need just such a preparation as this but do not know what to take. Therefore I have urgently suggested the wide-spread publication of the sworn statement of the composition of its formula so that the public may know what they are taking. This complete formula is now to be found in newspapers throughout the country. It is composed principally of organic from in the form of tron peptonate of a special specific standard and glycerophosphates which is one of the most costly tonic ingredients known. To the credit of the manufacturers it may be said that they use the most expensive form of iron peptonate, whereas by employing other makes they could have put the same quantity of actual iron in the tablets at less than one-fourth the cost and by using metallic iron they could have reduced the cost to less than one-twelfth, but by thus cheapening the product they would undoubtedly have impaired its therapeutic efficacy. In my opinion a careful examination of this formula by any physician or pharmacist should convince him that Nuxated from is to be placed among the very highest class and most strictly ethical preparations known to medical science. It excels anything I have ever used strictly ethical preparations known to medical science. The Hidden Life.

Paul writes in Col. 3: 3: "For ye died, and your life is hid with Christ in God." This saying is not addressed to the world at large; and if it were addressed to the worldly people, they could never understand it. The audience who will grasp and appreciate the meaning of this passage is limited. I would not have you think that the meaning of the text is obscure or that it belongs to an age far removed from ours. It is simply a matter of experience. We often remark that no one knows how to sympathize with the orphan so deeply or so well as one who has been orphaned, that no mother can feel the utter loneliness of another woman's bereavement who has not lost a child of her own. These are the sad emotions which can only be felt by those who have walked in the vale of sorrow and death. But Paul is speaking of a joyful emotion. He takes it for granted that we have passed through a great experience, and that this experience has brought us into a new world where old things are passed away and all things are become new. This verse touches the very center of the Christian life. It tells the open secret of discipleship and lays its finger on the heart of true religion. But notice the simplicity with which this great truth is expressed. When men get hold of a great idea or an idea that seems to be great, they first try to express it in grandiloquent language, and then the next thought is to copyright it. Then they fret and fume over it, raising such a dust and commotion over it as if the like of the new theory had never been heard. But there is nothing loquacious or boastful in the apostle's attitude. There is, on the other hand, a calm and deep tranquillity. The message they brought was not a message of their own. The gospel was not their happy discovery. It was the truth of God, and their business was to make it known in the confidence that it would do its own work and bear its own witness. In such a tone of quiet, sure restraint Paul says to Christians: "Your life is hid." He is so certain of it that he needs no appeal or argument. For him the Christian's hidden life is a thing so real and so substantial that proof may be dispensed with. Like the rays of the sunlight, like the beauty of the flowers, like the flow of the river, like the freshness of the morning, it is not an inference at all, but an undeniable fact. It is the great immovable rock on which we take our stand and look out with settled faith over the changing vistas of the world and up to the glory that is to be revealed.

The Old and the New.

The gospel of Jesus Christ had wrought a powerful change in certain people at Colosse. Once their life had no hidden depths at all. It had all been shallow, specious, concerned with the surface only, busy about things that counted for little, occupied with trifles, running to waste over poor and passing aims. But the grace of God had called them, as it calls every man who hears, into a new life. In that old, barren experience wells had been sunk, and now fountains of living water were springing up. In what had seemed unprofitable land, mines of infinite wealth had been opened up and the precious stones of faith and hope and love were being yielded.

Believers are to leave the old life behind them. Paul says: "Ye died." One man says the passage of a soul into the kingdom of God is like the flight of a bird in its swiftness. Another man related his own experience by saying: "Within ten paces, as I walked, life was transformed to me." "We lie down some night our old selves, and ere we sleep again the great disclosure has broken on the soul." Certain persons speak of a certain experience in their lives as they would speak of being struck by lightning. So there are those who would talk of newness of life on the Christian's part as something not definitely understood. They would throw around the beginner a feeling of awful suspense. Men die swiftly, they say, and they die slowly. It matters nothing when they have wakened on the immortal side of death. When the ship comes to the equator, no visible line is there which all see as they cross over, yet, in point of fact, the crossing is made; they pass silently, imperceptibly, from one hemisphere to another. And that is just the way one passes from death to life in the spiritual sense. We never know just when the great transition takes place. So they argue.

But the Bible does not leave us in ignorance as to the time of our entrance into the spiritual kingdom of Christ. Our entrée is not veiled in vague uncertainty. It tells us just when and where the new life begins. One passage is sufficient: "We were buried therefore with him through baptism into death: that like as Christ was raised from the dead through the glory of the Father, so we also might walk in newness of life." (Rom. 6; 4.) The newness of life is contemporary with our raising from the waters of baptism. There is where it should begin, if a Christian is honest and sincere; if he is not—if baptism is not an act of obedience, but just a mockery—then that is another matter.

Beneath the Surface.

"Your life is hid with Christ." There is something in every true disciple, even the meekest and plainest, which the wisest citizen of the world cannot understand. eannot explain the Christian character by anything that shows upon the surface. To find its secret, you must go down into the buried depths beneath a man's common words and thoughts. Travelers tell us that when they cross the highland moors of Scotland, they frequently come upon a bright streak of green winding in and out among the heather, its pure and shining verdure in strange relief against the dull brown of its surroundings. What can it be? How came it there? Whence does it receive its nourishment? If you dig deep enough, you will find a spring below-a rill of pure water flowing down there out of sight, only hinting its presence by the greenness and beauty above. So the springs of Christian life are hidden -hidden with Christ in God.

They are hidden from unbelievers. Something mysterious and inscrutable must always appear to a man of the world in those who live by faith in the Son of God. Sometimes he wonders at the mystery; sometimes he resents it; but he is always conscious of its presence. He is usually ready to offer any explanation except the right one. He says it is nothing but fear, self-interest, tradition, superstition, weak delusion, and all those theories by which outsiders have sought to explain the Christian faith, and by the explanation rob it of its power. When John the Baptist came, they said: "He hath a devil." When Jesus appeared, they whispered to one another, "He is beside himself;" or, "He is a winebibber and a glutton." And when the power of Pentecost was being experienced by the apostles, they deemed it enough to say: "These men are full of new wine "-as the court reporter would express it, "just a plain ease of drunk." All that the Christian can plead-and how much it is!-of aid sent him in temptation, or light that breaks upon his darkness, or consolations that soften sorrow and take away the sting of death, the fact that all things work together for his good, the assurance and the glory of the resurrection-what are all these to the unbeliever but an idle tale? The existence of all that deep life is unperceived. The Christian's secret is a secret from the world. Jesus knew it was going to be, for he said in one of his prayers; "I thank thee, Father, that thou hast hidden." Paul knew it was true, for he said: "The wisdom of the world is foolishness with God."

Lovely human play is like the play of the sun. There is a worker for you. He, steady to his time, is set as a strong man to run his course, but also he rejoiceth as a strong man to run his course. See how he plays in the morning, with the mists below, and the clouds above, with a ray here and a flash there, and a shower of jewels everywhere—that's the sun's play; and great human play is like him—all various—all full of light and life, and tender, as the dew of the morning.—Ruskin.

One Baptism.

BY A. M. GEORGE.

"There is one baptism." (Eph. 4: 5.) Many think it is Holy Spirit baptism; some think it is baptism in water. It must be one or the other; it cannot be both, as there is but one.

In Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John, all the baptisms that took place were in water—"in Ænon, . . . because there was much water there," and in the Jordan river, All these were for the remission of sins (Mark 1: 4), except the baptism of Christ, which was "to fulfill all righteousness" (Matt. 3: 15).

The one baptism is a command to be obeyed. "Repent, and be baptized every one of you." (Acts 2: 38.) "Can any man forbid water, that these should not be baptized? . . . And he commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord." (Acts 10: 47, 48.)

Ananias commanded Saul to be baptized and wash away his sins. (Acts 22: 16.) This was water baptism, because it was a command; and Holy Spirit baptism is not a command, but a promise. (See Acts 2: 33, 38.) Verse 33 says it was a promise. Verse 38 contains the water baptism, the command for the remission of sins, first; then the water baptism is followed by the promise—"and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit;" both together here; and if both are baptisms, there are two.

No one was ever commanded to be baptized in the Holy Spirit, and no one could obey if God had commanded it. No one but the Lord could baptize with the Holy Spirit, and he did it only twice—once in Jerusalem, the Jews (Acts 2: '1-4) and once at the house of Cornelius, Gentiles (Acts 10: 44). Any one can obey the command to be baptized in water if he will; but no one can be baptized in the Holy Spirit, as only the Lord can administer it. All this makes it plain that water baptism is commanded, and that it is one. If baptism in the Holy Spirit, also, is enjoined upon us, then there are two baptisms.

The baptism of the Holy Spirit is a promise (see Acts 2: 33, 38, 39); and no one can obey a promise. God's promises are only to those who honor and obey him; for we read: "And because ye are sons, God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts," etc. (Gal. 4: 6.) God did not send the Spirit into their hearts to make them sons, but because they were sons.

The gift of the Holy Spirit differs from the baptism of the Holy Spirit in this respect: what is called "the baptism of the Holy Spirit" came directly from God (see Acts 2: 1-4; 10: 44)—first on the Jews at Jerusalem, last on the Gentiles. There is no other instance of the Spirit's coming directly from heaven as a baptism. When it came in Jerusalem upon the apostles, it was not to save or convert them, but simply to teach them what they were to teach the world. (John 14: 17, 26.) When it fell on the Gentiles (Acts 10: 44), it was not to convert or save them; Peter's preaching was to do that (see Acts 11: 14); but it was to convince the Jews that they must receive the Gentiles. It was poured out on both Jew and Gentile, so fulfilling Joel's prophecy that it should be poured out on all flesh, as those two constituted all flesh at that time.

If the "one baptism" is "Holy Spirit baptism," and it is a promise, it cannot be fulfilled, for no one can administer it but the Lord himself. To take this view is equal to saying that God gave a commandment to the world that he knew could not be obeyed and then obeyed it himself for them. Some go to a still more ridiculous extreme and elaim that men are so totally depraved by nature that they cannot believe in Christ, nor even wish to be saved-powerless in the grip of Satan-and that God must send his Holy Spirit to seize and drag them to his salvation, without any faith or action on their part whatever. If this be true, what use has the world for the Bible, and why does God send his Spirit to only a very small part of the world, and not all of it equally deserving? Is he a partial God or a respecter of persons? Some think that 1 Cor. 12: 13, "For by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body" (one body, not Spirit), means that we are all baptized in the Holy Spirit. This is a mistake. The Spirit does not baptize in himself; he does not baptize at all; but he instructs others to do it in water, as in Mark 16: 15, 16: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." Again, in Matt. 28: 19: "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." What would be the use to teach the nations if they are so depraved and dead that they cannot hear, nor believe, nor obey? Men are to do the teaching and baptizing according to the teaching of the Holy Spirit. Everything that Christians do must so be done by the Holy Spirit, if done right. We get the whole law of God and all spiritual things by the Holy Spirit. Only obedient believers-that is, Christiansget the Holy Spirit. (See Gal. 4: 5, 6.) "To redeem them that were under the law "-that is, Jews-" that we might receive the adoption of sons "-that is, become sons. Now notice: "And because ye are sons, God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts," etc .- not to make them sons, but because they are sons already. verify all of this, read carefully Acts 8: 5, 18: 19: 1, 7. man can read or hear the gospel, believe and obey it, and be saved, like those above, and know nothing about the Spirit at the time; but this would not excuse him for future ignorance of the Spirit.

BY H. E. SPECK.

I. INTRODUCTION,

What makes schools necessary, and what are they for? We are all familiar with the facts which answer these questions. Schools exist for three reasons. There are those who have the ability to learn, there are facts and ideals that should be taught, and there are people who make the claim of being able to teach.

A conception of a goal, or a kind of life that is really worth living, presides, explicitly or implicitly, over all educational effort. Education gives to children the benefit of experience other than their own and in advance of their own. Thus the factors involved in the idea of education are these: an immature being, a goal or destiny for life, and older people who can help the younger to realize this goal or destiny.

It might be well to stop just here long enough to define education. As a definition is a relative thing, let us consider several definitions. "I believe that the school is primarily a social institution. Education being a social process, the school is simply the form of community life in which all those agencies are concentrated that will be most effective in bringing the child to share in the inherited resources of the race, and to use his own powers for social ends. I believe that education, therefore, is a process of living, and not a preparation for future living." (Dewey.) "Education is a gradual adjustment to the spiritual possessions of the race." (Nicholas Murray Butler.) "Education is the sum of the reflective efforts by which we aid nature in the development of physical, intellectual, and moral faculties of man, in view of his perfection, his happiness, and his social destination." (Compayre.) "Education cannot be better defined than by calling it the organization of acquired habits of conduct and tendencies to behavior." (James.) "To prepare us for complete living is the function which education has to discharge." (Spencer.) "The true end of teaching is one with the true aim of life; and each lesson must be presented with the conscious purpose of making the most out of the life of the one taught." (Tompkins.) "The question to be asked at the end of an educational step is not 'What has the child learned?' but 'What has the child become?'" (Monroe.)

For the sake of convenience of language, and especially because the public schools of our country do not give religious instruction, we have designated education as general, technical, professional, religious, and so on. This has resulted in an unfortunate habit of thought. Education in religion is looked upon as some sort of special training, or as a side current apart from the main stream of education. Like the training of musicians, the study of mathematics. or the exploration of the polar regions, religion is supposed to pertain only to those who have a special interest therein. Religious education can no more accept this place than religion can consent to be a mere department of life. If religion were just a specialty of priests, monks, and nuns, or if it belonged only to Sunday, or if it applied to only a part of our conduct or ideals, then religious education and general education might be compared with each other. Religion claims to belong to the man. Whatever religion may have been to the ancients or whatever it may mean to the civilizations that are to follow, to us it is an allinclusive, all-commanding principle—the very stuff that human life is made of. In keeping with this idea, then, religious education is simply education in the complete sense of that term, or else it is not education, but mere training.

Education is not divided against itself. It is a unitary process. Education is not made up by aggregating parts, each of which exists on its own account, any more than life realizes itself in the various organs of the human body. The unity of education is seen from a psychological point of view. The idea of education is that the whole child is at work in each of his studies-not memory in one, reason in another, and perception in a third. The idea is not so much that the child acquires one thing and then another as it is that he is one thing and develops into something else-not so much what he learns as what he becomes. This carries us to a consideration of the ethical point of view, and this, too, is a unity; for the ethical view of life is an effort to introduce into life, or rather to discover in life, organization, harmony, and unity. That is, ethics tries to develop toward an ideal self in which this ideal presides as mistress over the whole process. The unified self with which ethics has to do is the social self or the self realized in society. And just here we see unity in education from the religious point of view, for religion looks to the unification of the self with its entire world. Thus religion, instead of being a department of education, is an implicit motive thereof. It is the end that presides over the beginning and gives unity to all stages of the process.

The relation of education and religion seems so intimate that we cannot separate them without disturbing the foundation of each. As education presupposes immaturity in the taught, so religious education presupposes a positive religious nature. This does not imply that the child is all right as he is, that he can grow up properly without divine help, that the life principle in the child can take care of itself, that the child has any definite conscious religious experience or sense of God; but, speaking positively, it means that the child has more than a passive capacity for spiritual things, and that nothing short of union with God can bring a human being to himself.

Light and Life.

The fiat of the Almighty, constituting the first act of creation, produced light. "And God said, Let there be light." The oldest of historians adds, "and there was light." God does not work in the dark. This, the expression of an intelligent, omnipotent volition, was the first speech ever made within the universe. Before its utterance all was chaos, "the earth was waste and void." It was the commencement of activity, motion, work. Light means work, as darkness means sleep. "And darkness was upon the face of the deep." The voice of God, creating light, awoke the slumber of ages, dispelled the lethargy, the inactivity, of an eternal past. All was order, beauty, and life when God had finished speaking. "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God." Christ, who is called "the Word of God," is, therefore, "the light;" and, because he is "the light," he is "the life of man."

The fall of man, leading to his exile from paradise, his separation from God, brought an eclipse of the human mind. The Light was gone. Heavy, mental darkness lay like a pall upon the human mind. Stupor, lethargy, inactivity, was the natural result. Some few men, like Abraham, the patriarchs, the Jews, manifested some activity, did good, and served God, but only in a limited way. There were brilliant exhibitions of some virtues, but a woeful deficiency in regard to others. On account of this ignorance, in an age of the infancy of the mind, God winked at their sins. The best of them practiced polygamy and engaged in other things that God, in kindness, tolerated, while, at the same time, they were an abomination to him. The kingdom in Israel, instrumental music in the worship, and many other things invented by the ancients come in this category.

We need not, therefore, go back into antiquity to find much missionary work, the erection of hospitals, or the founding of orphan homes. There was too much darkness over the mind for so many lines of activity. "As he thinketh in his heart, so is he." A man must think good before he can do good. To the extent that the mind is flooded with light, to that extent it can think. How long a man has lived and how much he has lived are two separate things. A man can live more in fifty years to-day than he could in a thousand years before the flood. Books, magazines, the printing press-these place the knowledge of the world before him at a glance. The telephone, the cable, the telegraph, and great metropolitan newspapers inform him daily of what the people of all the earth are doing. In ancient times there were physical giants in the land. They have been superseded by mental giants whose power and achievement seem almost like works of fancy. The rise of the Sun of Eternity, dispelling the ignorance, superstition, and darkness of the past and flooding the world with light, inaugurated a new era and was the commencement of that missionary activity that has since been civilizing, educating, and saving the human race. Selfishness, covetousness, and greed are eliminated by Him who taught that "it is more blessed to give than to receive." Philanthropy and benevolence receive a new impetus. The poor are sought out and provided for, the hungry are fed and the naked are clothed. A public calamity brings instant help from all parts of the country. No man can be a disciple of the Master and be deaf to the cries of orphans and widows in their afflictions. And while charity begins at home, it does not remain there. Every penitent, immersed believer in Christ, who is rejoicing in the pardon of sins and the glorious privileges of the Christian life, is taught to employ every energy to bring others to "the Lamb of God, that taketh away the sin of the world." They "went about preaching the word."

The more intelligent congregations do the more work. Observation proves it. When you visit a congregation and see plenty of Bibles, Testaments, quarterlies, Sunday-school papers, and lesson pictures for the smaller children, you do not need to be told that you are in the midst of an active congregation, one whose elders are diligently looking after the welfare of the members, one that has regular preaching and that holds a successful meeting or two each year, that is looking after the poor, and that contributes liberally to preaching the gospel in other places. Light, intelligence, means activity. They go together. There can be no life, no living, no action, without light. Light generates activity, just as some one has said that "cleanliness is next to godliness." The Canadians, who have won so many laurels on the western front, though they are living in the mud of the trenches and suffer all the privations and inconveniences of army life, shave every day. Their officers have learned that an intelligent, clean man is more courageous, more active, and in every way a better soldier than one who is stupid and who needs a bath and a shave.

The Anglo-Saxon people surpass other people because they are more intelligent. It may be said that the mind of a people is embodied and pictured in their language. The Anglo-Saxon mind, wherever found, is greater, more acute, comprehensive, and vigorous than the French, German, or Russian, because it has a more acute, comprehensive, and vigorous language, a more polished machinery of thought. While mind generates language, language generates and polishes mind. As Cæsar said: "Money will raise soldiers, and soldiers will raise money." That ideas create language and language creates ideas is proved by the great inventions, discoveries, and improvements made by the American and English mind. Mr. Campbell, in a lecture upon the Anglo-Saxon language, said: "It is, in one sentence, a language of languages, whose terminology is mainly selected from almost all the ancient and most finished tongues of the civilized world. A rich, broad, and lofty tongue; a splendid composite; a greatly diversified, curiously inwrought, and highly polished mosaic composition, which can embody and present every form, color, and gradation of thought, sentiment, and emotion. In religion, ethics, politics, sciences, and arts, it has drawn upon Hebrew, Greek, Latin, German-upon all parent languages of every nation known to the Anglo-Saxon people, or their ancestors, far back as any living monument, or any written document now extant, attests."

All should strive to gain information and to spread it, to gain knowledge and to impart it to others. When you can get a man to thinking, you have him on the road to improvement. A sluggish, unthinking mind will certainly produce an inactive, profitless life. According to both reason and revelation, before a man can enter into life, either in this world or the world to come, before he can do those things that honor God and that do good to men, he must first "walk in the light."

Principles of right and justice were never determined by war. Strength of numbers, equipment, and resources may be tested by war; trade supremacy may be won by war; domain may be extended and maintained by war; thrones may be seized and held by it—such issues as these may be settled by force of skill, of energy, or of arms. But principles of right and justice are above and beyond the contending forces of battling nations, as the serene sunshine ever beams above and beyond the storm clouds. War obscures these principles and blinds us to them. Only the calm of peace can let the clear sunshine through to us.—Christian Herald.

The very afflictions of our earthly pilgrimage are presages of our future glory, as shadows indicate the sun,—Richter.

Spirit of the Press

Faddist Writers.

The majority of religious books, inspired by the war, that are now falling from the press, are by faddists; and the same may be said of numerous articles now running in the magazines.

These authors, nearly all of them afflicted with rationalism in one form or another, foresee demands for a new religion, and the majority prophesy that the new religion will be based on social service.

For a century the disciples of Christ have pleaded for a return to the plain teachings of Christ and his apostles, which would mean the suppression of humanisms in Christian teaching and Christian union on the original foundation. This plea is scriptural and practicable, and, in the coming crisis, it ought to be urged as never before.

Social service, like all other service the church is called upon to render, is fruit on the tree-not the tree.

What the world needs, and must have before its gates of paradise swing open, is uniform Christian teaching, out of which shall develop harmony and love and all other branches of the tree essential to the abundant luscious fruits demanded. To put it in a sentence: The new age upon which we are entering will demand the old religion, just as it is outlined in the New Testament.-Christian Standard.

The Bible is as well adapted to the new age as it is to all the past ages. The lesson should be impressed upon mankind that it must bow in submission to the authority of Christ. The world must obey his commands and not substitute something else for them.

God's Hour Has Struck.

On the evening of June 11, in the Auditorium Theater, in Chicago, thousands of the leading physicians of a score of nations gathered for the first session of the annual convention of the American Medical Association. In his presidential address, Dr. Arthur Bevan, speaking for, and with the practical approval of, the whole body, unreservedly denounced the drinking of alcoholic beverages. Among other things of like import, he said these:

I want to plead for the united action of the organized medical profession of this country to secure protection by law against the injury that drink is doing to our people, not as a political measure, but as the most important public health measure that could be secured. In this crisis, when we and our allies are fighting, not only for ourselves, but also for humanity and civilization, we must organize the entire nation in the most efficient way possible, and this cannot be done without eliminating drink

Each member of the medical profession, each county medical society, each State medical society, should take an active part in the propaganda against drink and secure national prohibition, not years from now, but now, when it is so badly needed and will accomplish so much good, not only for our boys in khaki and in blue, but for the nation in arms.

And when it has once been done away with, it could no more be resurrected after the war than could slavery.

This ought to put potential "pep" into the prohibition propaganda and "help those women" who are striving to bar the barley from the bar and bake it into bread." Three kings may have been fooled when they "did swear a solemn oath John Barleycorn was dead;" but when three thousand of the world's foremost physicians swear that he must die, because "among great wrongs none has done more injury to mankind than drink," it is time for every lover of peace, of mankind and of God to help in the exe-

When mighty currents of influence such as this are undermining the sandy foundation of the strongholds of drink, it is no time for slackers in the camp of prohibition Israel. It is no time for any of us to put off his harness or sheathe his sword. When the already trembling walls of this ancient Jericho of wickedness shall fall, let every man be ready to march "straight before him" to the utter destruction, extermination, eradication, annihilation of the devil of drink and all his works. Elizabeth Anderson, national Woman's Christian Temperance Union recording secretary, well says: "God's hour for the world has struck. The urgent and tremendous need of this time is a clarion call for service and sacrifice." May every patriot, every lover of mankind, every man and woman who is armed with the ballot, have the vision to see that they have come to the kingdom of citizenship for such a time as this.-Christian Standard. 0 0 0

To Evangelize Russia.

While the political salvation of Russia is a grave concern of the allies, her spiritual need has given origin to the Russian Missionary and Educational Society incorporated in Pennsylvania, the object of which is to make a great religious drive for her redemption. Similar societies in France, England, Sweden, Denmark, and other countries will participate, we learn through the press, and the big campaign is to be opened early next autumn. be the clearing-house for the proposed giant revival, and there a tabernacle will be built at the cost of three dred thousand dollars. Around the tabernacle will be grouped educational and vocational schools, ranging from kindergartens to colleges. It is planned also to have two orphanages for war children and a training school for two thousand students who will be employed in the task of spiritualizing Russia. Pastor William Fetler, of the Moody Bible Institute, of Chicago, who is training one hundred men to go with him to Russia, is quoted in Chicago dispatches as saying that the society has sufficient means to begin the great work of redeeming Russia, and he explains that-

"Russia, hungry for religion, is like a vast field ready for planting. The Greek Church-more a police system than a church-against whose power four years ago all attacks were futile, has been abolished and its property seized by the radicals. Russia was more religious in the old days than she is now. It was a religion, however, that did not inspire or liberate. The present regime is without "A coalition government is coming, a democracy like the United States. In a few months, perhaps in September, the revolution will begin to bear genuine fruit, and the real leaders of the people will go into control. Then will the big Russian soul seek spiritual consolation."

It is interesting to note that in the religious campaign the English language will be taught as well as the Russian, for, according to Pastor Fetler, the Russians realize the high place the English language now takes in the world. Literary Digest.

Let the churches get busy. A good preacher or a number of good preachers should volunteer to enter this mission field, and the churches should support them. "Even so did the Lord ordain that they that proclaim the gospel should live of the gospel," (1 Cor. 9: 14.) The command is: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to the whole creation. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that disbelieveth shall be condemned." (Mark 16: 15, 16.) This work is pressing and will not wait. The church is the light of the world, the salt of the earth, the pillar and support of the truth. Unless Christians glorify God through the church, they should not ask the church to do the work. Our time of working will soon be over. Let us do our full duty and leave the results to the Lord. We shall expect both churches and preachers to report ready for the work. Shall we be disappointed?

Training Little Children

(Suggestions by mothers who have been kindergartners. Issued by The United States Bureau of Education, Washington, D. C., and The National Kindergarten Association, New York, N. Y.)

Article 21.

Helpful Plays Can Be Carried on While Mother is Busy With Her Household Tasks.

Often mothers say to me; "Don't all the things you do with your children take most of your time?" By no means. I am a mother of three, and do all my own work, except washing and ironing, and I have to do sewing without end. A busy mother will make suggestions which can be carried out while she is busy at her household tasks. Stories may be told. For instance, baking will suggest the story of "The Gingerbread Man." This can be found in "Best Stories to Tell to Children," by Sara Cone Bryant. Paring an apple or a squash makes the opportunity to tell about the seeds hidden in their cradle, how in the winter they go to sleep, and so on. Make a whole story of it. A few days ago I told my three-year-old baby this story and sang to her:

> I know of a baby so small and se good, Who sleeps in a cradle as good babies should. Sleep, baby, sleep. I know of a mother so kind and so warm, Who covers this baby from all cold and harm. Sleep, baby, sleep.

Several days later we had another squash to prepare, and immediately she said: "Mother, sing about the baby." Later, on request, she told her older brother and sister the story of the seed babies.

It is well to make much of holiday celebrations. Have the children prepare little gifts for a birthday. Perhaps it may be only to draw a picture. On Valentine's Day we always make valentines. Use scrap pictures and paste them on colored cardboard; or use paper dollies, cutting out the center and pasting on a piece of cardboard, with an appropriate picture underneath. This makes a pretty little valentine of paper lace. Cut out hearts of red cardboard or paper and string them together in graduated sizes, on red ribbon or twine.

At Christmas time even the two-year-old can make something. A simple matchholder may be made as follows: Cut from cardboard a circle about four Inches in diameter. Cut a slit one-third of the diameter at each end. Fold the lower half upwards, turning the cut edges in and pasting them to the upper semicircle to form the holder.

To make a match scratcher, cut a piece of sandpaper any desired shape and paste on cardboard. A Christmas plcture or bell may be pasted at the top of the cardboard. Penny calendars can be used by the children in endless ways.

Mats for the dining table are also easily made. Cut a six-inch circle of cardboard with a circular hole in the center, and wind with raffia. Picture frames can be made in the same way, cutting the cardboard any shape desired. There are endless things children can make with water colors or crayons and cardboard, using colored paper and the Perry pictures. Perry pictures illustrating all sorts of interesting subjects can be bought for one cent each. A catalogue will be sent upon request by the Perry Picture Company, Malden, Mass.

Children never tire of making chains for decorating purposes out of colored paper. Take a strip of paper about four inches long and half an inch wide and make a ring by pasting one end over the other; slip another strip through this ring, and paste ends together, and so on. Our children make paper chains for one another as birthday presents. They always bring delight. White and colored chains can be used as Christmas tree adornments and give the added pleasure of letting the child feel he has helped make the tree beautiful.

Let me urge fathers as well as mothers to enter into the life and play of their children, for only when the father lends his aid in the process of child training can there be perfect unity. By working together, mother and father can lead the children to understand the life about them. They can teach them to know and to love nature. They can direct the emotions, develop the intellect, and strengthen the will; and, as a result, the children will naturally come to feel and understand the divine love which lies only half concealed behind all things.

Golden Vials Full of Hope.

What a glorious description of "things which must be hereafter" is to be found in the book of Revelation! Strange that we should not love to read oftener these things which pertain to our heavenly home, and thus prepare more earnestly for the time when we, too, shall be called to "behold the King in his beauty!" But the din of the world's battles seems to drown every heavenly voice, the darkness of hate which befogs the atmosphere dims our sight, blinding us to the heavenly vision.

Yet, as from a dark cloud a sudden bright ray lights up the horizon, a golden light fell on these words on Trinity Sunday as the writer, led on by the glorious vision of heaven opened, read on and on of her heavenly home: "And he came and took the book out of the right hand of him that sat upon the throne. And when he had taken the book, the four beasts and twenty elders fell down before the Lamb, having every one of them harps and golden vials full of odors, which are the prayers of the saints."

Wondrous thought! Your prayers and mine, dear reader, may fill these golden vials. Every humble, unselfish prayer we send up, every glad hymn of praise we sing, not only with our lips, but with our whole heart, every work of ours truly begun, continued, and ended with Him-because we love to serve Him and do His bidding-helps to fill these golden vials with the incense acceptable unto God .- Zoar.

Exalting Opinions.

BY J. C. M'Q.

[This week I republish an article which was published 1908. It is needed as much now as then, and shows that we were then teaching the truth as now.]

Suppressing places and names, I publish extracts from a private letter because the contents will be interesting to the public:

I have failed to get any one else interested in the Gospel Advocate. The fact is, they don't take religious papers—think the Bible is sufficient. I have noticed that those who read religious papers, the right kind, read their Bibles more than those who fail to read those papers. "leader" here, as he styles himself, says they teach too much error, and that the Gospel Advocate has done more harm than good. He is opposed to Sunday schools and to preachers, especially those who want to be remunerated for their services, notwithstanding Paul said the Philippians ministered to his necessities, set him forward on his journey, etc.; that he that preaches the gospel shall live of the gospel; and that if they minister to us in spiritual things, we ought to minister to them in carnal things. He reads or talks of only such phases of the question as suit him, such as "if a man work not, neither shall he eat." He lays great stress upon Paul's laboring with his own hands. He does not believe in meetinghouses. We meet every Lord's day in a private house. He has been lording it over God's heritage for years, and gets worse as he grows older. The consequence is, he has caused a division; some withdrew, among them his own daughter, Mrs. -They are striving to build a house of worship in which they can have the gospel preached to the people of -- by a gospel preacher. We dread division so much that only a few withdrew, though only a few, compared with the number of disciples in and around --, ever assembled with the others, many of them on account of the leader's false teaching. He has queer ideas about the "gift of the Holy teaching. He has queer ideas about the "gift of the Holy Spirit." He says the Holy Spirit is not given to Chris-tians, else they could perform miracles; that the Holy Spirit gives something, which is salvation. I am a sister in Israel, some older than he, and tried to show him his error. But it is no use to talk to him; he is fixed in his ideas, is not open to conviction. The teaching of the word of God concerning the Holy Spirit has always been very plain to my mind. The world cannot receive it. Christ had it without measure. The apostles were baptized in the Spirit, but the ordinary Christian receives him as a gift, but does not receive the power conferred on apostles; he, the Spirit, helpeth our infirmities. Paul says David of old asked God not to take his Holy Spirit from him. It is a comforting thought to me to know that the Holy Spirit abides with me.

Granting that our sister has represented this self-constituted "leader" correctly, he is far from the truth on all the points of doctrine specified. It is hard to conceive how a man who really loves and respects the truth can be so full of error.

It occurs to me that a man who insists on fastening his own ways and opinions upon the church should be dealt with as an offender. "A factious man after a first and second admonition refuse; knowing that such a one is perverted, and sinneth, being self-condemned." (Tit. 3: 10, 11.) We should be careful, however, not to receive an accusation against an elder, "except at the mouth of two or three witnesses." "Against an elder receive not an accusation, except at the mouth of two or three witnesses. Them that sin reprove in the sight of all, that the rest also may be in fear." (1 Tim. 5: 19, 20.)

From the statement of our sister, I can see no scriptural reason for those members' withdrawing themselves from the church. Such a course only made bad matters worse. As represented, the church had not sinned, but the would-be "leader" sinned against God and the church. He endeavored to fix his method of teaching on the church, when and where God had revealed no method, and taught doctrines directly contradicted by the Holy Spirit.

It is true that the Holy Spirit commands Christians to preach and teach the gospel. He nowhere reveals any specific method of teaching. The apostles that taught orally also taught the truth by writing epistles to the churches. Who has the right to say that one method is right and the other is wrong, when the Spirit authorizes and uses both? The writer of this has never raised an issue with any Christian about a method of teaching the truth. Yea, he believes it is sinful to seek to fasten a method upon the church, where God has not made such method binding. My contention has never been with the society people about the method of teaching the Scriptures, whether they teach orally from the pulpit, from house to house, or through the press. The position has been taken and sustained that Christians have no right to organize a human institution to do the very work that God has ordained the church to do. The right has been denied the society people to form an institution that usurps the prerogatives and functions of the church of God. This humanly organized society saps the very foundations of the church of God. We have never raised any question as to the method of teaching, but as to the institution that does the work. God never authorized the society, and it, therefore, is a usurper. What is true of the society is true of the Sunday school as a separate and distinct institution from the church. The teaching must be done in and by the church. Teaching belongs to the church as much as the fellowship and breaking of bread. "And they continued steadfastly in the apostles' teaching and fellowship, in the breaking of bread and the prayers." (Acts 2: 42.) the word of Christ dwell in you richly; in all wisdom teaching and admonishing one another with psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing with grace in your hearts unto God." (Col. 3: 1.) Again the Holy Spirit admonishes: "Speaking one to another in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing and making melody with your heart to the Lord." (Eph. 5: 19.) When the Lord directs Christians to teach, he gives them authority to use the most effective method; but he does not give them authority to get outside of the church to form an organization unknown to the word of God, and one that weakens and destroys the church. God never planted this society, It shall, therefore, be rooted up. "Every plant which my Heavenly Father planted not, shall be rooted up." (Matt. 15: 13.) To turn from the blood-bought church of God to a human institution to do the work of the church is a very grave reflection on the body of Christ.

On the other hand, when any man fixes a method of teaching where God has prescribed none, and demands the church to conform to his method, he sins. He may not do as much mischief as the society; but the reason is not because he is a less sinner, but because his influence and power for evil is not so great as the society. Teaching is an act of worship, and no man has a right to take it out. The teaching in the worship is for old people as well as the young. The teaching is not simply for children, but for all alike. It is as much worship as the communion, the contribution, or the prayers. Christians should realize that they have fallen short in the worship when they have no fellowship in the teaching, but only in the communion. Who dares intimate that one act of worship is any more sacred or important than another? The man who does so, does so without divine warrant.

The brother does not object to preachers, but he objects to paying them anything. The saloonist does not object to the preacher who leaves him free and undisturbed to debauch character and to send our sons to a drunkard's grave and a drunkard's hell. He has no use for the preacher that would stop the money from flewing into his pockets by putting an end to his hellish business. The whisky traffic is not a political issue, but a moral issue. The gospel preacher does not preach for money, but he must have enough to live while he preaches. I am glad to say that most of the preachers that I know labor, as did Paul, with their own hands. They are not ashamed of honorable toil. They love the truth and will proclaim it as opportunity is presented. But this does not justify our brother in his covetousness. The Scriptures are clear on the support of the gospel preacher. "Even so did the Lord ordain that they that proclaim the gospel should live of the gospel." (1 Cor. 9: 14.) "But let him that is taught in the word communicate unto him that teacheth in all good things." (Gal. 6: 6.)

This brother seems to have the same idea of working with the hands that he does of teaching. There are more ways than one of working with one's hands. Almost all men work some with their hands, but in different ways. Those who write on a typewriter work with their hands and use their brains at the same time. The sensible farmer works with his hands and his brains. The skillful physician uses both. It is wicked to try to put everybody in our own mold. All men do not work alike. It is unfortunate that some people think more of their own ways than they do of the peace and unity of the church of God.

When the apostles were baptized in the Holy Spirit, they were assembled in a "meetinghouse." "And suddenly there came from heaven a sound as of the rushing of a mighty wind, and it filled all the house where they were (Acts 2: 2.) Paul "abode two whole years in his own hired dwelling, and received all that went in unto him, preaching the kingdom of God, and teaching the things concerning the Lord Jesus Christ with all boldness, none forbidding him." (Acts 28: 30, 31.) If it were right for Paul to hire a house and preach in it, why is it wrong for any other Christian to hire a house in which to worship God? If it is right to hire one which somebody else has built, why is it wrong to build one of our own, provided we have the means to build it? If we could worship with less cost in our own house, would not the principle of economy taught in the New Testament require us to build our own house? Surely the apostles would not leave us the example of meeting in rented houses if it were wrong to have houses in which the church can assemble for worship.

The brother would do well to receive the sister as Apollos did Priscilla, for she certainly is able to teach him "the way of the Lord more perfectly." She is right about there being different measures of the Spirit. Only the apostles were baptized in the Holy Spirit. Those on whom they iaid hands received power to work miracles. But only the apostles or those filling the apostolic office could confer the power to work miracles. But if Christians do not receive the Spirit, then the Holy Spirit was at fault when he promised through Peter: "Repent ye, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ unto the remission of your sins; and ve shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit." (Acts 2: 38.) Again, Paul, writing to the Thessalonians, positively teaches that the Holy Spirit is given to Christians: "For God called us not for uncleanness, but in sanctification. Therefore he that rejecteth, rejecteth not man, but God who giveth his Holy Spirit unto you." (1 Thess. 4: 7, 8.) Read again: "And he that keepeth his commandments abideth in him, and he in him. And hereby we know that he abideth in us, by the Spirit which he gave us." (1 John 3: 24.) To deny that Christians receive the Spirit is to deny the plain and most positive teaching of the word of God.

It should be emphasized, in closing this article, that when a man pushes his own false theories to the disruption of the church of God, the church should mark him. avoid him, and have nothing to do with him until he repents. "Now we command you, brethren, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye withdraw yourselves from every brother that walketh disorderly, and not after the tradition which they received of us." (2 Thess. 3: 6,) "Now I beseech you, brethren, mark them that are causing the divisions and occasions of stumbling, contrary to the doctrine which ye learned; and turn away from them." (Rom. 16: 17.) Such positions as some held by our brother are making more infidels than all the literature of skeptics. If this man would not push his false doctrines to the destruction of the church, it would be right to bear with him and try to teach him the truth. He should hold such views as private property.

When Will God Stop the War?

BY E. A. E.

In this paper of July 25 appeared a thoughtful and helpful article under the heading, "WHY DOES NOT GOD STOP THE WAR?" by Simon Blocker, in The Christian Intelligencer. Under the same heading another sensible article was republished by this paper some time last fall or last winter. This article in substance was written last winter when the first article on "Why Does Not God Stop the War?" appeared.

The question, "Why does not God stop the war?" implies that God can stop the war, but for some reason he has not yet done so. Why not?

In 1914 President Wilson requested all religious people of the United States to pray on the second Sunday in October for the peace of the nations now engaged in this war. Since then he has made the request at different times that all religious people of the United States pray to God for the victory of the allies and the triumph of freedom and liberty for all nations. Mayors of different towns and cities have requested the religious people of these towns and cities to pray at certain times of the day, and thousands do so. Multiplied thousands of prayers go up daily in behalf of the boys on the other side. What do all these prayers mean? They mean that our worthy President and all others who offer them believe that God exists; that he is a rewarder of those who seek after him (Heb. 11: 6): that he, therefore, answers prayer; and that he can prevent wars, or, wars having begun, he can give the victory and cause them to cease. There is neither sense nor faith, neither religion nor hope, in praying to God, when at the same time one knows that God has nothing to do with the wars and other affairs of the nations. Such a course is stultifying; it is mockery and sin. One would as well pray to a telephone pole, and had better do so, than to make a deaf and dumb, unfeeling and senseless, idol of "the true and living God" by going through a form of prayer, knowing at the same time God cannot hear and answer, or would not if he could. This is worse than infidelity, superstition, and idolatry.

So, on the second Sunday in October, 1914, I did as the President requested, and as God has granted the privilege of doing. I said then that I was glad to emphasize the fact that at the head of this nation is a wise man who believes that God exists, that God hears and answers prayer, and "that the Most High ruleth in the kingdom of men, and giveth it to whomsoever he will." (Dan. 4: 25.)

Since then, whenever the President, or any governor of any State, or any mayor of any town or city, has requested all to pray to God for any purpose, I have gladly used the opportunity to emphasize and impress the fact that this nation believes in the existence of "the true and living God."

The Bible abundantly declares that God "doeth according to his will in the army of heaven and among the inhabitants of earth; and none can stay his hand, or say unto him, What doest thou?" (Dan. 4: 34, 35—be sure to read Dan. 4); that he rules the nations of the earth in his mercy and grace, goodness and love, justice and righteousness, wisdom and power, for his own glory and the accomplishment of his own holy purposes; that he sees every sparrow that falls to the ground, hears the raven's cry, and numbers the hairs on the heads of his people.

Righteousness exalteth a nation; but sin is a reproach to any people. (Prov. 14: 34.)

The nation, whose God is Jehovah, or that is even nearest Jehovah to maintain his principles of righteousness and justice and other attributes, has always been, is now, and always will be the most generous, most enlightened, most advanced in other ways, and the most powerful and invincible nation on earth. Anticipating the conclusion, we are forced to see here that God will give the victory in this most terrible, unutterably horrible and world-wide war to the nations that stand for the freedom and liberty, the general uplift and betterment, of all the other nations, of the human race, and that will, above all things, enable his people to "lead a tranquil and quiet life in all godliness and gravity" (1 Tim. 1: 1, 2)-or, in any event, that will serve his purpose in chastening and humbling the proud and haughty, worldly and wicked, avaricious and plundering, bloodthirsty and rebellious, and that will advance the cause of "the Prince of Peace."

All these prayers are cited here to show that the President, other rulers, and the thousands who are offering up their prayers and tears and heartaches from their homes and closets at midnight and midday and almost every other hour of the day, for sons and brothers, husbands and sweethearts, believe in the existence and overruling power of God. Prayer means this, and, as stated, the Bible teaches this. The New Testament teaches Christians to ask God to use his overruling power in restraining deceitful, wicked, and bloodthirsty men and in saving them from such men.

Finally, brethren, pray for us, that the word of the Lord may run and be glorified, even as also it is with you; and that we may be delivered from unreasonable and evil men; for all men have not faith. (2 Thess. 3: 1, 2.)

These "unreasonable and evil men," who had no faith in Christ and God, knew nothing of the earnest prayers offered up by Christians that God would restrain and overrule them for Paul's protection and the peace of the church. We must be impressed forever with the purpose to be accomplished by this prayer; it was not Paul's comfort and personal protection, but that "the word of the Lord may run and be glorified." God's honor and glory must be sought in prayer as well as in service. Paul speaks of the many afflictions which befell him in Asia, so that, "weighed down exceedingly" beyond his power, he despaired of his life, having "the sentence of death" within himself, that he might not trust in himself, but in God, "who raiseth the dead," and declares that, the Corinthians "helping together" on his behalf by their supplications, God delivered him "out of so great a death." and would deliver still. But why? For the good of the many, and not simply for his own personal safety. (2 Cor. 1: 8-11.) Paul requested the Christians in Rome to "strive together" with him in their "prayers to God" for the following reasons: (1) that he might be delivered from the ones in Judea who were "disobedient;" (2) that his "ministration"—the contribution the Gentile churches were sending to the Jews-might "be acceptable to the saints;" (3) that he might reach them in joy "through the will of God;" and (4) that together with them he might "find rest." (Rom. 15: 31, 32.) But his going to them must be "through the will of Ged." Should God will otherwise, he desired God's will and not his own to be done. Paul further calls aftention to the persecutions and sufferings he endured at Antioch in Pisidia, Iconium. and Lystra, but that "out of them all the Lord delivered" him. (2 Tim. 3: 11.) In the next verse he declares that "all that would live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution," and then adds (verse 13): "But evil men and impostors shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived." (Let me say here in parenthesis that if any brother thinks and preaches that "all that would live godly in Christ Jesus" will not now "suffer persecution," or that this scripture does not now apply to Christians, let him try living "godly in Christ Jesus" a while, and he will discover his mistake, or, perhaps, his perversion, or his attempt at perversion, of the word of God.)

I exhort therefore, first of all, that supplications, prayers, intercessions, thanksgivings, be made for all men; for kings and all that are in high place; that we may lead a tranquil and quiet life in all godliness and gravity. This is good and acceptable in the sight of God our Savior; who would have all men to be saved, and come to the knowledge of the truth. (1 Tim. 2: 1-4.)

Why pray for kings and all other rulers—in Paul's day the wicked and bloodthirsty Nero and other idolatrous and heathen rulers, as well as for the ones now who fear God and call upon him in prayer? (1) That God will so overrule them in making laws and governing the country that his people may be able without disturbance to "lead a tranquil and quiet life in all godliness [not some godliness only] and gravity;" and (2) God "would have all men to be saved, and come to the knowledge of the truth." This is the life Christians are required to live, the work they are required to do, and the life and work all preachers and teachers should teach them to live and to do.

These passages and many others in the New Testament, as well as numerous ones in the Old Testament, show that God hears the prayers of his children and overrules men without faith, impostors, unreasonable and evil men, and bloodthirsty men and rulers, as well as God-fearing and prayerful rulers, to his own glory, to the protection and peace and advancement of his church, and to the conversion and salvation of sinners.

On this part of the subject one other thing must be emphasized: Christians desire and pray and work to do that which "is good and acceptable in the sight of God," not that which "is good and acceptable" in their own sight or in the sight of the world. There is a vast difference. Jesus pleased not himself (Rom. 15: 3), but did always the things which were pleasing to God (John 8: 29). He prayed, not his will, but God's will, be done. All his followers have the same spirit, live the same life, and pray for the same things. The lack of piety and faith, humility and submission, reverence and awe in many prayers makes the heart sick and draws bitter tears from the eyes. How fearful it is for proud, haughty, vain, presumptuous, but ignorant and dependent and sinful, man to tell God what he wants God to do, and to hurry up about it! Prayer is not dictation to God or issuing orders to the Almighty. None can stay God's hand, or "say unto him, What doest thou?" We are clearly and plainly taught that "we know not how to pray as we ought" (Rom. 8: 26) and that God "is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think" (Eph. 3: 20). Then let us go to Christ that he may teach us how to pray-to pray in his Spirit and obedience and to say with him, God's will, and not our will, be done. In all things and at all times-in prosperity or adversity, in health or affliction, in peace or in war, in life or in death-we must pray that God's will and not ours be done, and God's will be done on earth as in heaven. In the greatest crisis of the world's history, Jesus and his disciples (it required time for Peter and some others to learn the lesson) submitted to the will of God. In this present great crisis, in these perilous times which try men's souls, let us in sublime trust and faith, deep humility and contrition, supreme reverence and awe, and the highest love for God and men and implicit submission, commit our way unto our Father in heaven and say with Abraham that "the God of all the earth" will do right.

The article copied in this paper July 25 and mentioned above says: "The pulpit is challenged by the prevailing religious uncertainty to make known the ways of God and to offer light and leading to those whose faith has suffered eclipse." But just here "the pulpit" in many places, if not generally, has fallen down. Instead of making "known the ways of God" and offering "light and leading" to the people, the majority of preachers have darkened counsel and helped to eclipse the faith of not a few. Mr. Blocker virtually says this in declaring that the pulpit is challenged to "make known the ways of God and to offer light and leading" to the ones who are in the dark, and in the expression, "the prevailing religious uncertainty." I ask our readers when they heard a sermon or read an article on "the ways of God" in dealing with the nations of earth -that God "changeth the times and the seasons; he removeth kings, and setteth up kings; he giveth wisdom unto the wise, and knowledge to them that hath understanding; he revealeth the deep and secret things: he knoweth what is in the darkness, and the light dwelleth with him" (Dan. 2: 20-22); and "that the Most High ruleth in the kingdom of men, and giverh it to whomsoever he will, and setteth up over it the lowest of men" (Dan. 4: 17). To serve his purpose, God sometimes sets over a kingdom the basest of men. The great majority of preachers either do not know "the ways of God" among "the inhabitants of earth" or for some reasons they have shrunk from offering "light and leading" in "the prevailing religious uncertainty" of the times. Woe unto the preachers who fail or refuse to study "God's ways" and who shrink from declaring "the whole counsel of God" concerning them! In the perilous times of Israel, instead of the priests furnishing "light and leading" to the people and teaching "the ways of God," it was "like people, like priests," (Hos. 4: 9.)

Jesus, the True Vine.

BY E. G. S.

Jesus said to his disciples: "I am the vine, ye are the branches." This is a very encouraging statement to the true disciples of Christ. It shows to them the true relationship that exists between Christ and his true and faithful followers. There is a close and living relationship between a vine and its branches; and if that relationship be severed, the branch dies unless it be quickly and properly grafted in again. It is equally true that if a living branch, a disciple of Christ, be separated from him, he will soon die spiritually unless he be quickly grafted in again.

So the word of the Lord informs us that we are sure to lose our close relationship with Christ unless we continue to live as we are taught in the New Testament. The teaching is plain, and there is nothing in it of which we will ever be ashamed if we continue to live by the inspired teaching given to guide us along the narrow way. The closer we cling to the word of the Lord, the more we will think of the Christian religion and of the Lord who gave us the New Testament and so many great and precious promises; but if we refuse to be guided by the New Testament, we will be more and more ashamed of ourselves and the sinful lives that we are living. There is nothing in the world that can give consolation when we come to face death and eternity, save a faithful, Christian life. I know of nothing that could make us feel more sad than to think of death and eternal ruin when we know that we are not prepared for eternal life; but eternal death will be our final and unavoidable doom if we refuse to lead a life of devotion in the service of God. It does seem to me that reflections like these would be enough to lead any alien sinner to at once obey the gospel and continue the Christian life until death shall come and carry him across

Hence the only wise course for humanity is to become a Christian early in life and continue that life till carried away by death. As the end of such a life as the Christian religion requires approaches, instead of dread and remorse for having neglected the gospel and the life that it requires, it will be exceedingly pleasant to reflect that our trials and tribulations are nearly over and that an entrance into eternal joy is near. What a wonderful difference between the end of this sort of life and a life that disregards the sacred interests of the soul! The end of the mortal life of a faithful Christian is full of hope and the confident assurance of eternal life in the heavenly home. But when a man neglects the matter of his soul's salvation till he is near the end of his earthly life, and then realizes that he has made no preparation for eternal happiness, his trouble becomes very great. The prospect of eternal punishment and no preparation for eternal life. is surely a terrible predicament to be in. But, with the New Testament in our homes, why should we be in such a dilemma? There is no good reason why any one in possession of the Bible should allow himself to approach death in such a condition. It is not the Lord's fault if any in this Bible land come to death's door in such an attitude. Nevertheless, many to-day are in this very con-

The habit of putting off obedience to the gospel is a habit that grows stronger the longer it is indulged. Hence putting off obedience to the gospel is dangerous in any light in which it may be viewed, and all that want to be saved should at once obey the gospel and thus put an end to such a dangerous uncertainty. Moreover, when people obey the gospel to the extent of becoming Christians, they should also realize that their final salvation in heaven depends upon faithfully living the Christian life so long as they are permitted to live in the flesh; for if, after living very well for a time, they turn back to the world again, the latter end may be worse with them than the beginning. It were better for such if they had never heard of the gospel than to go back to the world after having become Christians.

Christianity should be a lifetime matter with us, never to be given up till life comes to an end. Only in such a course can we be sure of eternal life. Such is the plain teaching of the New Testament, and we need not expect eternal life without a humble and earnest compliance with the word of the Lord. If we are faithful in complying with the word of the Lord, we have reason to rejoice always in hope of all the blessings promised to the faithful; but we have no right to look for or expect blessings from the Lord if we are living in disregard of the plain word of the Lord. Let us all be diligent, therefore, in keeping the word of the Lord as given in the New Testament. The Lord will remember all his promises to the faithful; but none of his promises are given to those who think they can go to heaven without doing the plainly revealed will of God. No precious promises are given to those who disregard the revealed will of God; but the faithful have the right to rejoice in the prospect of eternal life.

Georgia and the Far Southern Field

The Good Work Continues.

Since last report Brother Cuff's meeting has closed at Dalton, Ga., with three additions and the work greatly encouraged. In many respects this was one of the best meetings we have yet had at that place. He is now at Buchanan, Ga., to continue as long as the interest demands.

Brother Carter's three-weeks' revival at Fort McPherson closed on the first Sunday night in August, with eight baptized and eight led to the confession of their sins and prayers for a closer walk with God. This revival was conducted for the benefit, primarily, of the soldiers stationed at that place, and ten of the above number were soldiers. We are much pleased with this meeting, which was backed by the East Point and West End Avenue congregations.

One more has been baptized at Camp Gordon by Brother Shacklett recently. We are looking forward with no little pleasure to Brother J. T. Clark's coming to take up regular work with the Camp Gordon boys.

By the time this reaches our readers 1 will be in the midst of a revival with the brethren at Liberty Hill, in Cobb County, Ga., and from there I will go to Dasher, Ga., due to begin on August 20. The news has just come of some fine work done by W. M. Brumit near Veal, Ga.

"A World's Sermon for To-Day."

The following was mailed to me by The Atlanta Georgian, and it contains much food for thought. They are the words of John Temple Graves, of Washington, D. C .:

The Washington religious world is asking: "What of the Angelus so bravely and reverently advocated in the American Congress?

At the hour of noon every day, or at the sunset hour every evening, it was urged that every American—man, woman, and child—should pause for a moment and say a prayer for our country in her need—for forgiveness of our sins, personal and national, for blessing upon our country, and for victory of our arms.

The suggestion thrilled the Christian world and touched the serious and earnest mind of the country

It was believed by Christian people that this one moment every day of a nation's recognition of the omnipotence of God, this brief aspiration for the national soul to the great white throne, the recognition in our hearts and upon our lips of the God of nations and of men, would uplift the Christian republic and win God's blessing upon our cause.

Our churches and our synagogues have been breathing with prayers for victory. Our proclamations have called for invocations to the All Highest for the success of our arms. Our thanksgiving days have had a single notevictory.

How many thousands and millions of people have asked a thousand times, "Why does God permit this awful war?"

If it be true that he could at his will send ten legions of angels with flaming and invincible swords to cut off and destroy these murderers of the world's peace, why does not the bugle of Gabriel sound and the sword of the archangel flash in the shadow and gloom of the world's travail? There is purpose in war; otherwise it were devilish.

whole Christian creed is repudiated if we do not believe in some great purpose, corrective or uplifting-in the consent of omnipotence to the blood and the frightfulness of this awful time.

Confession and repentance is the old, old way to the smile of God—old as the Pentateuch, clear as the New Testament of his will. Is it likely that God will hear a purely selfish prayer for victory if it carries no penitence for personal and national sins?

Satan trembles when he sees the weakest saint upon his knees; and well may the Kaiser, mouthing the great name of God Almighty in the midst of the mad maelstrom of murder his devilish ambitions have evoked-well may the German devil tremble when he sees an allied nation on its knees

When this nation gets right before God, then, and not until then, say the law and the prophets, will God lift up his hand upon the nations that fight against the Israel of humanity and democracy and Christianity.
"The Angelus" then—every day at noon in the very pulse and throb of the nation's life!

One hundred million Americans halting at high noon to hail and salute the God of all the earth!

"In hoc signo vinces" was spoken ten centuries ago. Can Germany stand before this sign in the heavens of a mighty people on its knees?

On the day when one hundred and twenty million Americans reverently breathe the "Angelus" at midday, we shall begin at last and surely our triumphal march to that majestic victory which is the inaugural of a world's righteousness and a world's perpetual peace.

Upon the above I submit the following:

1. In this national call for prayer for the success of the allies, whose cause we believe to be just, I like the idea of incorporating in this prayer the earnest reques for forgiveness of our sins, "personal and national." This makes me think of the way Daniel prayed. May I not insist that the reader turn to Dan. 9: 3-19? The children of Israel went into captivity because of their sins, and the suffering that has come upon the nations these days has come for a purpose. It is true that thousands of the innocent have suffered, are suffering, and will suffer, people who have done their best, along with the innocent babes, and who are not, in any sense responsible for the terrible struggle that has been going on for these four years. But it is also true that not all Israel had sinned when they were sent into captivity; but those who were not responsible for the sins of that nation, with the children, had to suffer. Out of it, however, God brought a better people, a people more consecrated and thoughtful of his right to rule. As evidence of this, read the book of Nehemiah. And out of this world struggle, I am confidently looking for a new world to come, a reign of peace and righteousness never before enjoyed on the earth. May God help us to be patient while we wait, and help us to search our hearts and make full confession of all our wrongs.

2. I doubt, seriously, if the church of Christ, as such, feels her need of repentance and prayer as she should. In my judgment, there has never been a time since the days of the apostles when there was so much uncertainty and undependableness to be found among those who claim to be Christians. Covenant breaking, backbiting, hobby riding, strife, and confusion exist as I have never seen it before. Men in whom we had the utmost confidence and who we thought were almost as good as the angels have turned out to be party makers, church disturbers, and have set themselves up as redeemers of the churches of Christ that others have labored and died to establish. Their one great desire and aim is to slip in, get a hold on the congregations, and kick out those they cannot, with their smooth tongues, induce to bow to their authority. Subtle, indeed, they are. I think it high time for the church to become suspicious of preachers who appear "too good." Has the day fully come when "false apostles, deceitful workers," are "transforming themselves into the apostles of Christ" and Satan himself is being "transformed into an angel of light" as never before? Well may we take the words of David with us and remember them: "The words of his mouth were smoother than butter, but war was in his heart: his words were softer than oil, yet were they drawn swords." (See Ps. 55: 21; read Rom, 16: 17, 18.) Had you ever thought of the parallelism existing between the nations of the earth and the churches and preachers, so far as confusion is concerned? It it is good that the nation should be called to prayer, to repentance and confession, such would be timely for the churches and preachers. There never has been a time, perhaps, when there were more wolves to devour the flock. How important that elders that love the cause Christ died to establish see that they themselves are right with God and do their whole duty in overseeing, feeding, and protecting the flock under their charge!

While this I believe to be true of conditions to-day, yet, just as it has been with nations when they became so wicked that God had to curse them as such, we have some of the most faithful and loyal churches and preachers, but suffer they must for others' sins. But a pessimist I cannot be; it is contrary to my nature and the plain word of God. Read Rom. 8: 28; 1 Cor. 11: 19. "Thou shalt be sincere with the Lord thy God," (Deut. 18; 13.)

There is a true heartfelt union with our Lord, if in times of activity as well as in repose, in times of trial as in hours of prayer, you cast yourselves upon him. There would then be a growing similarity of your character with his character, of your mind with his mind, your heart with his heart—a result to be realized in time and perfected in eternity, as the living test and sign of your indissoluble union with him, before God and the holy angels. This will be to you a secret treasure between yourself and your God alone.-T. T. Carter.

Let us rather be thankful that our sorrow lives in us as an indestructible force, only changing its form, as forces do, and passing from pain into sympathy-the one poor word which includes all our best insight and our best love. -George Eliot.

A Psalm of David.

Jehovah is my Shepherd true, and nothing want shall I; He maketh me to lie at rest 'mid fields of tender green; He leadeth me with loving hand where quiet waters lie, And he restores my thirsty soul that fainting long has

He guideth me in righteous paths for his Name's sake on

Yea, though I wander through the vale of Death's dark lowering shade, Thou'lt be with me; no evil thing shall then make me afraid;

Thy rod and staff will comfort me, and lend their sturdy aid.

A table thou dost spread me in the presence of my foes; My head with oil thou dost anoint, thy favor to disclose; My cup with all thy bounteousness is full and overflows.

Thy goodness and thy mercy, then, shall follow me alway, And in Jehovah's house on high I'll surely dwell for aye.

We acknowledge a contribution of two dollars from J. C. Pedigo, of Red Boiling Springs, Tenn. Through an error this amount was credited to another party.

In sending his contribution, Brother H. H. Montgomery, of Shreveport, La., wrote us an encouraging letter, which follows:

Dear Brother Lipscomb: I have often thought of the poor, starving, helpless women and children of Europe and have wanted to do something to relieve their hunger and distress; but when I think of the spiritual condition of my home city (Shreveport, La.) and realize that only about fifty of the forty thousand who live here belong to the church that practices as "it is written," I have held back what I might have sent for their relief, in order that we poor, hard-run few might be able to build a house to meet and worship in. But now I am sending five dollars to help the hungry Armenians, and my prayer goes with this donation that it may relieve some poor, hungry child that can-not help itself. We do not know when we can build a house, as lumber is so high and we are not able to buy it H. H. MONTGOMERY.

In sending contributions, be sure and state whether they are intended for the Armenian and Syrian Fund or the Poland Fund. Make all checks and money orders payable to A. B. Lipscomb, who will forward them to the proper commissioners.

The congregation of disciples who worship at the David Lipscomb College is very generous. They recently contributed fifty dollars toward the fund to bring Brother Jelley home. Last Sunday one hundred dollars was raised to be forwarded to the starving people in India.

A.A. Bunner writes: "There will be, the Lord willing, an all-day meeting and basket dinner at old Brother Johnson's grove, near Medina, Ohio, on September 8. This will be a reunion of disciples of Christ from the Cleveland, Mankin, Ashland, and Akron congregations. A good time is anticipated."

Miss Lula Montgomery, of Cookeville, Tenn., writes: "I received my copy of the Teachers' Explanatory New Testament, and I think it is splendid; it is so helpful and instructive. The Gospel Advocate is just fine, and is such a comfort and help to me. I would be very sorry to be without it."

D. E. Peters writes: "We are having some good meetings, with Brethren Grider, Boyd, and Van A. Bradley, of Franklin, Tenn., with several additions at some points. We are looking with hope to the fourth Lord's day in August, when W. J. Haynes will begin a protracted meeting with the church at Andalusia, Ala."

From Willie Hunter, Route 1, Livingston, Tenn., July 31: "Our meeting at Bethlehem, Putnam County, closed on Monday morning, July 29, at the water. Four were baptized and three reclaimed. This was my third meeting at this place, resulting in about thirty-six additions, all told. I have promised to go back next year."

From Sister Eliza Fields, Crandall, Texas: "Jesse P. Sewell, of Abilene Christian College, has just closed an eight-days' meeting here, with four additions to the church—three by baptism and one by membership. I believe Brother Sewell is one of God's earnest workers. He presents the truth in love and kindness and fulfills the injunction to be 'wise as serpents, and harmless as doves.'"

J. D. Northeut writes: "On July 30 E. Gaston Collins and I closed a good meeting at Elora, with five baptized. This is the home of two faithful preachers, J. R. Bradley and Dr. J. J. Horton, who were with us. I am now at Fairfield. This is the home of C. M. Gleaves and R. E. Wright, who are doing very valuable work in this country. These brethren are highly esteemed here. I go from here to Bethel, in Sequatchie Valley."

From H. W. Gist, Hospital Department, Naval Training Station, Newport, R. I.: "Please announce in the Gospel Advocate that a few members of the church of Christ are meeting in a room at the Y. M. C. A., on Coster's Island, for regular Lord's-day worship. We would be glad to have any one coming to this station to meet with us. I would like to hear from any one having friends or relatives here now that would be interested, that we may see them and secure their assistance in this work."

Arthur B. Tenney writes from Cordell, Okla.: "Since I left Greeley, Col., in March, I have been here working in the Gospel Herald office. I have regular appointments at Clinton, Sentinel, Warren, and Blair. I have also preached at Hobart, Dill, Cordell, Rocky, Center (near Cordell), and Pleasant Valley (near Elk City). I find many ardent workers in the church and some who are indifferent to the church's best interest; and I do not blame the war for much of it, either. Let us plead our common cause, and not any personal cause."

From A. D. Dies, Haleyville, Ala., August 8: "Our meeting with the White House congregation was a success from every viewpoint. Twenty-seven were added to the church—twenty-one by baptism and six by restoration. I will begin my next fight at Berea, near Eldridge, on August 10. We have some fine people there. I assisted them in a meeting last year, and hope to accomplish much in the name of Christ. I hope to move my family to Alabama in the near future so I can devote all my time to the cause in this State. Pray for us."

From J. A. Cullum, Roff, Okla., August 9: "I am now at this place in a very interesting meeting, which began on July 30. We expect to continue until August 18. One addition to date. Interest excellent and crowds large. The 'digressives' are planning to start a meeting just across the street from us on Saturday night. They seem to be worried very much because we are not going to close our meeting next Sunday. I have had calls for several other meetings since I reached this State. It seems as though the brethren are going to keep me busy."

From M. S. Mason, Jonesboro, Ark., August 10: "I closed at Union Chapel, near home, with only two additions, but with good seed sown. I closed at Crisp, Dade County, without any additions, but I am sure with an increased love among outsiders for the cause we love. I was assisted capably by my good wife in the song service. I am now at Jonesboro preaching to small crowds. There are some noble brethren here, but the work grows slowly. However, we expect additions before the meeting closes. I go from here to Berea, near Springfield, Mo."

From C. A. Buchanan, Megargel, Texas, August 7: "I am in a good meeting at Megargel now. I shall begin at Lipan on the third Sunday, and at O. M., near Hollis, Okla., on the first Sunday in September. I shall begin work with the church at Handley, a suburb of Fort Worth, about September 15. They will use me only three Sundays in the month to begin with, and I will have one Sunday to give to some other place in reach. I would like to hear from any place desiring my services. I will do some school work in the Texas Christian University during the winter."

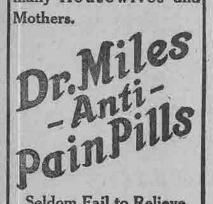

From J. P. Prevatt, Hahira, Ga., August 7: "I closed a meeting at Antioch, Fla., on June 25, with twelve additions to the church. One brother was restored, one came from the Baptists, one from the Methodists, and nine from the world. These brethren are a faithful band of workers, and under many burdens and trials they have pushed the church to the front. From Antioch I was called to the bed-side of a sister in Jacksonville. She passed away on July 3 and the body was laid to rest on the following day. From there I went to Fairfield, Fla., to begin my third mission meeting. My heart was heavy indeed, but I found a sweetness which I had never found before in preaching the gospel. God crowned our efforts, and a church with eleven members was established. I am now in a meeting in Hahira."

Church News

Alabama.

Athens, August 5.—Our seventh annual meeting at Mount Carmel, twelve miles from this place, closed on Saturday. Seventeen were baptized and some were restored. We are now at Pleasant Valley, with a good beginning.—Thomas C. King.

Millport, August 5.—Brother Vester Walker closed the meeting at Mount Pleasant Church yesterday, after preaching over two Lord's days, with fiteen additions, two from the Methodists. Brother Walker did some fine preaching. Though young, he does not fail to draw the attention of large crowds. After closing the meeting at Mount Pleasant, he preached to a large audience at Millport last Sunday night. Brother Walker has promised to hold a meeting here next year at the same time. He left us with the intention of holding a meeting at Red Rock.—Lloyd J. Seay.

Arkansas.

Hatton, August 3.—At a schoolhouse near here I preached a week, and one was added to the Lord.—E. Millwee.

Center Ridge, August 5.—I have just closed a sixteen-days' meeting with the brethren at Center Ridge. The meeting resulted in eighteen baptisms and thirty restorations. These brethren have had many storms and trials, but we now hope for much good to be done through their efforts. They gave me seventy-three dollars for my services. My next meeting is to begin to-night at Damascus. May God bless all faithful workers. The Gospel Advocate is a welcome visitor. I have developed some good sermon outlines from some of the articles in the Advocate.—S. C. Gorner Searcy, August 6.—I am now in a meeting with Friendship congregation, near Searcy. The following amounts were received to help bear my burden: From Jesse Lentz, Mangrum, Ark., $1; Joe C. Schell, Powell, Mo., $5; church of Christ at Mangrum, Ark., $5; T. A. Phillips, Coweta, Okla.; $1; church of Christ at Mammoth, W. Va., $5; E. Gaston Collins, Huntland, Tenn., $2; H. C. Bryant, Shirley, Ark., $1; church of Christ at Kenyon, Ark., $5. I am very thankful for this assistance, My burden is still very great. Address me at Monette, Ark.—W. Curtis Porter.

Greenway. July 31.—I came from home to this point on Saturday last and began a few-days' meeting that night. Up to this date I have preached five sermons. I will close to-night. On Sunday and Sunday night we had fine audiences; but, with two threshing machines in the neighborhood and some sickness, the rest of the time our audiences have been small, but attentive. I hope there will be good results later from this work. I am pleased to see the growth on the part of this congregation, both in number and ability to work for the Master, since I was here last. I will work among near-by congregations till August 17, when I am to begin at Antioch, near Cardwell, Mo. Correspondents desiring help in meetings in September should address me at Cardwell for the next three weeks.—Andrew Perry.

California.

Fresno, August 3.—The work at the Nevada Avenue church of Christ is moving along nicely. Brother Larimore was with us in a meeting the last of May and the first of June. The preaching was fine, the interest and attendance were very good, but there were no additions. The writer preached at Turlock on the fifth Sunday in June and baptized a young man. I also baptized a young lady at our midweek meeting this past week. I preached in San Francisco on the third Sunday in July. The work is moving along nicely in that city. Brother Larimore held a good meeting in San Francisco in June.—W. H. Trice.

Florida.

Lake City, August 1.—I left home on July 25 for Taylor County, where I preached three sermons at the Spring Warrior church of Christ, with good attendance and interest and two confessions. By special request I baptized these two persons on Monday morning just as the sun was peeping above the eastern hills. These two are heads of families and of mature age, whose influence will be for good to those around them. From there went to a destitute point twelve miles away and held a ten-days' meeting, which resulted in bringing in eleven souls, who were set in order to keep house for God as a New Testament church of Christ and who have resolved to build a house in which to worship.-J. O. Barnes.

Kentucky.

Cave City, August 5.—I have just closed a good meeting at Rose Hill, Tenn. Eight were added. This congregation is not one year old, but it is one of the best churches I know of I am at present at Cave City.—J. H. Hines

Fairview, August 3.—I am in a good meeting at Fairview, with seven additions to date. We are having splendid attention, and the behavior is fine. This church is coming out from sectarian doctrine to stand on the scriptural ground. I feel that a great victory has been won for Christ. When we can persuade the brethren to give up lodges and the various insurance orders to work for Christ, then the church will begin to shed forth its light as the only institution in which we can glorify the great name of God. Brethren, let us keep the church pure and clean. It was purchased by the blood of Christ.—R. A. Craig, Mississippi.

Tiplersville, August 2.—On the fifth Lord's day in June 1 began a meeting at Gardner, Tenn. The meeting continued ten days and nights, with large crowds and splendid attention. Seven were baptized and one was restored. We have a splendid congregation there. On Friday night before the third Lord's day in July I began a meeting at Mount Zion, seven miles east of Puryear, Tenn., and continued it one week, with large crowds; five were baptized. I am now in a meeting at Tiplersville. The meeting began last Lord's day. Ten have been baptized. The meeting will continue till Thursday night before the second Lord's day in this month. We have a splendid new meetinghouse here. Brother Shannon built it at his own expense. They have been meeting in the schoolhouse here for several years. I held a meet-ing for them last year in the schoolhouse. We have some faithful breth-ren here. I go from here to Spring Hill, ten miles west of here. The meeting there will continue one week. Then I go to Trenton, Tenn.-John Taylor.

Missouri.

Senath, July 31,-Brother J. W. Dollison and I have just closed a twoweeks' meeting at Kennett, which resulted in twelve additions-eleven baptized and one by membership. Kennett is a very hard place, with prejudice high and sectarianism strong. Our brethren there have been meeting for some time in a rented hall, but borrowed for our meeting a house that was built by the different churches of the town for a mission house among the poor people. During the meeting I baptized a lady who had control of the house, so we will get use of the house for worship. Our brethren intend to build a new brick house soon. Our brethren there are few and poor in this world's goods, being renters, all but two; but they will soon show that their pocketbooks have been converted. It has never been my pleasure to work among a more earnest, de-voted, self-sacrificing people. I prediet that a strong church will soon be developed there.—James E. Laird.

Tennessee.

Lebanon, August 5.—Our meeting closed on last Friday night. Brother A. B. Lipscomb is highly esteemed for his work's sake by the Lebanon church. There were fifteen baptisms during the meeting-John A. Klingman.

Henderson, August 8 .- I held meetings at Pilot Oak and Pottsville, Ky., during July. I had nine additions at each place, interest was good, crowds were large. I am now in a meeting at Fairview, Tenn. We have large crowds and good interest, but no additions as yet .- I. A. Douthitt.

Lawrenceburg, August 5 .- The meeting at Lexington, Ala., began on the third Sunday in July and continued for ten days. Three were baptized into Christ. I promised to preach monthly for this congregation next year. I made my home with Brother John Lanier, and a real home it is.—E. O. Coffman.

Gadsden, August 6.-The meeting here is ten days old, with three baptisms to date. Brother Romie Black is leading the song service. A great deal of interest is being manifested in the truth. I shall move to Bells this week, where I am to take charge of the high school, beginning on August 26.-W. Claude Hall.

Pikeville, August 6.-1 closed my to the State Farm last Lord's day and preached to the convicts, and four made the good confession. I will go back and baptize them this week. Brethren, pray for me. If Paul needed prayers, so do I.—G. S. Marsh.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE.

Duck River, August 5.—Our arbor meeting seven miles east of Somerville, Fayette County, closed last Thursday night. One from the Methodist Church made the confession and was baptized. Men and women of all ages flocked to the arbor day and night to hear the gospel in its beauty, simplicity, and power to save, for the first We were assisted in our work time. by our elder brother, G. W. Pilant, of Texas. I am now at Mars' Hill, in Hickman County.—William P. Walker.

Rives, August 5.—We closed our meeting at Greenfield on Thursday. The attendance and interest were fine. Eleven were baptized, two restored. Brother J. L. Holland was at home the first week and helped much. Brother G. Dallas Smith visited us one day while he was in a meeting at Bradford. For years I have greatly admired him and enjoyed his visit much. I began here yesterday. One is to be baptized this evening. I begin at Trezevant on the third Sunday. After that meeting I shall return to my work in Paris, Texas.—J. W. Dunn.

Franklin, August 5.—I closed an eleven-days' meeting at Sykes on the evening of July 31. This was the first meeting held in their new house. interest was fine from the beginning. Eight persons were baptized, four of whom were heads of families. The truth was preached, pure and simple, and much prejudice was broken down. The meeting closed with no one's feelings ruffled. Prospects fine for the conquest of the truth there. I began at Berea yesterday, with good audiences at both services. I hope and pray for great good to be accom-plished. I go from here to Kelso.— George W. Farmer.

Sykes, August 5.—On the third Lord's day in July Brother George W. Farmer began our meeting as was previously arranged and continued it ten days and eleven nights, crowded house at night and fair audiences in the day. Eight precious ones were baptized into Christ, and we feel much strengthened by Brother Farmer's edifying sermons. All who have heard him know he shuns not to de-clare "the whole counsel of God." We have arranged with Brother Farmer, the Lord willing, to be with us in a meeting again about the same time next year. In naming the churches that helped us on our house in the Gospel Advocate of July 11, I should have said "Maple Hill" instead of "Round Top." Brother O. P. Barry is to be with us on the third Lord's day in this month.—W. A. Dewell.

You Will Write a Letter Like This.

I wish I knew which one of the thousands of letters I receive would have the most weight with you, my friend. I cannot quote all of them here, but I am going to ask you to read these carefully and then give me a chance to renew your health and make you write me one very much like them:

Barnard Street, Savannah, Ga.

Mr. N. F. Shivar, Shelton, S. C.

Dear Sir: I was suffering with indigestion, stomach and liver disorders, and all its train of horrifying phenomena for several months. I had lived on milk, soft-bolled eggs, shredded wheat—a very insufficient diet for an active working man—and, of course, from disease and starvation was in a very low state of nervous vitality and general debility. I ordered ten gallons of your Mineral Water, which I used continuously, reordering when necessary, and in four months gained twenty-nine pounds, was strong and perfectly well, and have worked practically every day since. It acts as a general renovator of the system. I prescribe it in my practice, and it has in every instance had the desired effects. It is essential to use this water in as large quantity as possible, for its properties are so happily blended and in such proportion that they will not disturb the most delicate system. It is purely Nature's remedy.

A. L. R. AVANT, M.D.

Leeds, S. C.

Leeds, S. C.

I have tested your Spring Water in several cases of rheumatism, chronic indigestion, kidney and bladder troubles, and in nervous and sick headaches, and find it has acted nicely in each case; and I believe that if used continuously for a reasonable time it will give permanent relief. It will purify the blood, relieve debility, stimulate the action of the liver, kidneys, and bladder, alding them in throwing off all poisonous matter.

C. A. CROSBY, M.D.

These are not selected cases, nor are the results unusual. I receive thousands like them from physicians, ministers, lawyers, merchants, farmers, manufacturers, and every conceivable profession. I want the satisfaction of receiving such a letter from you. No matter what your complaint may bedyspepsia, indigestion, nervous headache, rheumatism, kidney or liver disease, or any curable ailment that has not responded to drugs. I invite you to match your faith in the Spring against my pocketbook. If the water fails to benefit you, say so, return the empty demijohns, and I will promptly and willingly refund your moneyevery cent. Sign below.

Shivar Spring, Box 21C, Shelton, S. C.

Gentlemen: I accept your offer and inclose herewith two dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Water. I agree to give it a fair trial, in ac-cordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send; and if it fails to benefit my case, you agree to refund the price in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns, which I agree to return within a month.

Victory.

BY C. PETTY.

Victory means triumph; to overcome, to defeat one's enemies. "For whatsoever is born of God overcometh the world: and this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith." (1 John 5: 4.) We see here that the world is to be overcome in order to be a victor at the end of the Christian race, and none but believers in Jesus will do this. A great many that claim to be believers will not overcome the world, because they love the world better than they do the Savior. Then we must turn away from the world and its follies or it will undermine our faith. John says: "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him. For all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world. And the world passeth away, and the lust thereof: but he that doeth the will of God abideth forever." (1 John 2: 15-17.) Now, if our affections are placed on the world or its lusts, they will undermine our faith, and then the victory is gone; for faith is the victory, John says. Then we should not love anything that will interfere with our faith. We must not let anything stand between us, and our Savior as long as life lasts. If we do, the victory is gone, then we are gone world without end.

I notice that the apostle John uses the word "overcometh" to all the seven churches, showing them that there was danger ahead. To the church at Ephesus he said: "To him that overcometh will I give to eat cf the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God." (Rev. 2: 7.) Here we learn that after the victory a crown shall be given to us. Paul, standing at the end of life with victory in his hand, said that he had kept the faith; and John tells us that faith is the victory, and victory meant a crown.

But how shall we obtain a crown now? Listen. Paul, in illustrating the Christian life by the Grecian races, says: "Now they do it to obtain a corruptible crown; but we an incorruptible." (1 Cor. 9: 25.) Again, in verse 27: "But I keep under my body, and bring it into subjection: lest that by any means, when I have preached to others, I myself should be a castaway." Paul would not be overcome by the flesh, but overruled it that he might save himself as well as others. Again, he tells us how he was living. Hear him: "Giving no offense in anything, that the ministry be not blamed: but in all things approving ourselves as the ministers of God, in much patience, in afflictions, in necessities, in distresses, in stripes, in imprisonments, in tumults, in labors, in watchings, in fastings; by pureness, by knowledge, by long-suffering, by kindness, by the Holy Ghost, by love unfeigned." (2 Cor. 6: 3-6.) Was there ever arrayed more features connected with the Christian life to endure, to overcome, and to do and be, than here laid down by the great apostle to carry out, that no offense might occur? Should not all Christians strive to live the same way, inasmuch as they have the same crown awaiting them at the end of life, if they will keep the faith as Paul did? Then, "let us not be weary in well-doing: for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not." Let us hold on to the life of faith, then lay down toil for rest and a crown.

North Alabama Notes.

BY J. PETTEY EZELL.

My last report left me with the church at Anniston, Ala. Our meeting there was a very pleasant one, resulting in four baptisms. It was such a pleasure to be there and observe the faith and zeal of this little band. Though only a bit more than three years old and composed largely of laborers, their Lord's-day contribution was more than fifty dollars. Brother Claude Woodroof is a splendid young man, a most lovable character, and is doing a great work there.

During my two-weeks' stay at home we had splendid Bible classes and one baptism. We were pleased to have with us on the second Sunday in July Brother James A. Allen, of Nashville, Tenn., who preached three most excellent sermons. Brother Allen made many friends on this visit, and all are anxious for him to visit us again.

I closed a week's meeting at New Zion, in Giles County, Tenn., on July 26, with seven baptisms, and began at Cool Springs, in the same county, on last Lord's day (July 28), and we have had six baptisms to date (August 3). These are good congregations and are doing a good work.

I am to begin a mission meeting in a tent near here at 3 P.M. next Lord's day. Truly I have never seen the interest so great before as in this section now. The harvest is ripe, but the laborers are so few. Let us all pray: "Lord, send forth more laborers into the harvest."

Ordained Before the World.

BY J. J. VANHOUTIN.

"According as he hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world." (Eph. 1: 4.) The apostles were the persons included in the word "us," and the position or rank of an apostle was the first position or office established in the church. "And God hath set some in the church, first apostles." (1 Cor. 12: 28.) This matter of being "chosen" in Christ "before the foundation of the world" was done before Jesus died and when the apostleship was established at the time of the engrafting. (John 15: 3, 4,

Paul was called and filled the same position that the branches occupied. The word "world" in Eph. 1: 4 means "regular order, or arrangement." That is, before Christ died, and before the gospel was established, before the law of regeneration was given, before the commission to go and preach was given, before the regular way by which persons would be adopted into the church was established, the apostles were chosen and ordained by our Savior to teach and adopt the true believers into the true vine in accordance with "the good pleasure of his will." Sometimes the word translated "world" means the people, sometimes it means the place where the people are living, and sometimes it means age or dispensation; while sometimes it means this material world, including the people. In Heb. 9: 26 two different worlds are mentioned. One of them ended at the time Christ suffered. That was the Jewish age, or world, governed by the law of Moses, which law was then taken out of the way. The other was the present dispensation, age, or world, which was founded upon the death of Christ. As the gospel was not given until the day of "Pentecost" (Acts 2: 1), when the regular order was established to govern the gospel age, sometimes called "world," and as the apostleship had been established before that day, when the Christian dispensation began, and as Paul shared equally with all of the apostles, even Peter, who was chief (chairman) of the apostles, so it is said of the apostles that they were chosen in Christ before the foundation of the world. Yes, before the chief corner stone (Christ) was laid in Zion, upon which foundation, with the apostles and prophets, the great spiritual temple called "church of Christ" was to be built and now stands, the apostles were chosen and ordained, and they have completed their work, being predestinated or placed in beforehand for the purpose of adopting children into the family of God.

PANAMA HATS HAND-WOVEN

New Discovery Brings Costly Panama Within Reach of All.

Within Reach of All.

New York, N. Y. (Special).—It is now proven that the stylish Panama, up to now only worn by the best-dressed people, can now be sold for $1. You don't have to be skeptical about the low price, as it gives service like the $5 and $10 kind, but not so fine a weave; and by this new discovery of weave one can hardly tell the difference. A Panama gives a man or woman distinction and at the same time comfort. Mr. George J. Bungay, 28 South William Street, of New York City, is backing up his discovery by sending a real hand-woven Panama, any size, trimmed, blocked, with silk band, to any one for $1, postpald. Fitted with leather sweat band, 25 cents extra. Furthermore, his policy is that, if you are not entirely satisfied, he will return your money.—Advt.

"Take Nuxated Iron"

As a tonic, strength and blood builder probably no remedy has ever met with such phenomenal success as has Nuxated fron. It is conservatively estimated that over three million people annually are taking it in this country alone. It has been highly endorsed and used by such mon as Hon. Leshe M. Shaw, former Presidential Cabinet Official (Secretary of the Treosury), United States Judge Atkinson of the Court of Claims of Washington; Judge Wm. L. Chambers, Commissioner of the United States Board of Mediation and Conciliation, formerly Chief Justice of the International Court, Samon; former United States Senator and Vice Presidential Nominee Charles A. Towns of Minnesota; former U. S. Semator RichardiollandKenney of Delaware, at present Assistant Judge Advocate General U. S. Army; General John L. Clem (Retired), the drummer boy of Shiloh, who was Sergeant in the U. S. Army when only tweite years of age; General David Statert Gordon (Retired), hero of the battle of Getrysburg; physicians who have been connected with well-known hospitals have prescribed and recommended it. Former Health Commissioner Wm. R. Kerr, of Chicago, says it ought to be in very hospital and prescribed by every physician.

Dr. James Francis Sullivan, formerly plysician of Believue Hospital (Outdoor Dept.), New York, and the Westchester County Hospital, says there are thousands of men and women who need a strength and blood builder but do not know what to take. In his opinion there is nothing better than organic from-muxated from-for enriching the blood and helping to increase the strength and endurance of men and women who burn up too rapidly their nervous energy in the strenuous strain of the great business competition of the day.

If you are not strong or well, you owe it to yourself to make the following test; See how long you can work or how far you can walk without becoming tired. The Master's Vineyard

Tennessee.

White's Creek, August 8.-I closed an eight-days' meeting at Flat Rock, in Smith County, on the fourth Sunday in July, with one from the Bap-tists. While there the good people sent Brother Jelley fifteen dollars and thirty-four nice chickens to the Tennessee Orphans' Home. The night following the closing services I began at County, Corinth, in Wilson County, and closed on the tenth day, with five added and a case of eggs sent to the orphans. The night following the closing at this place I was to begin at White's Creek, near Nashville; but, being delayed, I failed to arrive in time, and Brother Ferguson preached the first sermon to a well-filled house. Prospects are good here for much good to be done for the Master.—Thomas H. Burton.

Woodbury, August 5.—Brother S. P. Pittman was in a meeting with the church at Monterey from May 19 until the close of the month. His preaching was splendid, and, though there were no additions, we hope that some good was accomplished. During the meeting Brother Eugene Pearson spent about four days with us. On June 3 I began a meeting at Ozone and continued it eight days. Much interest was manifested, and we succeeded in starting the worship of the Lord there on the first day of the week as "it is written." Brother S. T. Nix preached one night during the meeting. Breth-ren Joe and Ferris Hickey are taking the lead in the work at that place. From June 23 to July 31 I was in Central Kentucky, with the Mackville, Bohon, Glenn's Creek, and Mount Zion congregations. Interest in these meetings was good. Brother John E. Dunn has done a great work with these peo-I believe that there are some as faithful members in these congregations as can be found anywhere. These brethren expect to locate a preacher to live and labor with them next year. am now in a meeting with the White's Bend congregation, in Jackson County.-Thomas D. Rose.

Texas.

Kirbyville, August 4.-I closed at Stockman on Thursday night, July 26, with eight additions five from the "digressives" and three baptized. One of those baptized was from the Baptists. I closed a splendid meeting last night at the Palestine church of Christ, in Shelby County, with two Palestine church of baptized,-J. S. Daugherty.

Fort Worth, August 5.-My meeting at Montague resulted in four baptized and one restored. I am now in a meeting at Oklaunion, where I have been preaching for three years. In the face of a drought the brethren here built a three-thousand-dollar meetinghouse, and this is the second meeting they have had this year. I will return to my work with the South Side-Central Church in Fort Worth after this meeting. I do not expect to be in Tennessee this year, but have some engagements in that State for 1919.-W. Young.

Tom Bean, August 5.—Our meeting with the faithful few in Chalk is now a thing of history. The immediate results were twelve baptisms, two of which were from the Baptists. promised to aid them again next year. I will begin at Allen, Okla., beginning next Saturday; next will assist the home forces in a meeting to continue as long as we think prudent; will then go to Missouri for two meetings, and then home for the regular work. May God help us all to be loyal and true through these trying times.— W. P. Skaggs.

Garrett, August 5.-Brother F. C. Sowell has just closed a fifteen-days meeting with the church of Christ at Garrett. Six made the good confession and were baptized into Christ and two were reclaimed. The audiences were large and much interest was manifested to the last. The church seems to be in fine working order. Brother Sowell sowed much good seed, from which we expect a rich harvest in the near future. He goes from here to Ray, where he expects to have another glorious meeting. Brother Sowell and pray that he may be spared to hold many more such meetings.-Mrs. Mary Peery.

Henrietta, August 1.—The meeting at Anson closed last night with the largest crowd of all the time. We had a fine meeting, baptized five, reclaimed five more, and stirred up a tremendous interest on the part of sectarians and sinners. The brethren were rejoiced over the meeting. They want me to try it over next year. They are fine brethren, but they will have to develop some leadership among them or they will go to pieces soon. One of their elders has left them and will make his home at Wichita Falls, and only one is left, and he certainly needs help. They wanted me to appoint some elders, but said that they had no one who was scripturally qualified. I told them to go to work and prepare some of the men for the place and then have them appointed. The place will wait if they work. I start to Hamilton to-morrow.—Tice

August 5.-The meeting at Lewisville began on July 21 and closed last night. I was not able, on account of sickness, to reach Lewisville for the first day of the meeting, but Brother J. L. German in a very acceptable way served the church that day. He has lived here for the past year and served as superintendent of the schools. Brother German has been of great service to the church here and is loved by the whole congregation for his pure, good life. I feel very grateful to him for the splendid aid and support he gave our meeting. He conducted the song service; and this is a guarantee for all that goes to make this part of the Lord's work accepta-I regret to see him leave Lewisville, but he goes to Pilot Point to engage in school work there. The meeting at Lewisville was a very joyous season for me. The church is very pleasant to labor with. The people made every effort to show themselves agreeable. They have only recently completed a beautiful little house of worship, at a cost of a little more than six thousand dollars, in the best location in the town; and the house is all paid for, too. The church provided me a very comfortable home with Brother J. E. Chambers. Two were reclaimed, about sixteen took membership, and eleven were baptized .-R. D. Smith.

Abilene, August 5.-Our meeting at Brownwood continued for fifteen days. We had fine interest throughout and eleven additions. There is a great op-portunity in that town and county for some faithful gospel preacher to do a good work. At West we had another very enjoyable meeting. The brethren at West are fortunate in having among their efficient workers Judge J. M. Deveny, who goes about in his invalid chair as one of the busiest men in town. He and his excellent wife are a great blessing to the community. eral years ago the Judge suggested setting out a grove of trees on the church lot. Thirty-six trees were planted in such a way as to make a good shade with their overlapping ches. For one hundred dollars brethren made enough plain branches. the brethren made enough plain benches to seat seven hundred and twenty-eight people. There were about one thousand persons present on the closing night. There were eighteen additions. Last Lord's day night we closed a good meeting at Clyde, with eighteen additions. Clyde is in the famous fruit belt of Central Texas. Our meeting had been announced since last fall to be held in the tabernacle which was built by the four churches of the town. About three weeks prior to the time of beginning the Methodists announced that they would begin a meeting the same day and were going to use the tabernacle. We rejoice to report that our brethren were not contentious about the matter, although, according to the agreement, we were entitled to take possession of the tabernacle. We met on our church lot most of the time and had two We met on our church services a day-at 6 and 8:45 P.M. Thirty-six trees will turn this lot into an ideal place for summer meetings,-George A. Klingman.

Indian Religion.

BY JAMES E. CHESSOR.

The religion of any people is an essential study if one would account for their character and their ideals.

The religious life of the aboriginal tribes of America has always afforded me a theme for the most absorbingly interesting study.

The Indian was an intensely religious and superstitious man. origin of his religion and how he came to inhabit our continent are questions about which there are diverse views. I have always looked upon the theory of Eliot and the Book of Mormon, that the red men are "descendants of the ten lost tribes of Israel," as too absurd and stupid for serious consideration.

The Indian belief was as variable as themselves, owing largely to tribal divisions, and yet there was a line of unity through the whole. Unity, indeed, was approached as monotheism was approached, an achievement, however, not possible among idolaters.

Their religious system, broadly speaking, consisted of belief in (a) one great Spirit and (b) many lesser deities. The Spirit pervaded and ruled all creation. This was the Power, possibly, that created things, the First Cause. The Indian seemed to recognize man's utter dependence upon something outside of himself, which yet was not wholly unlike himself. This was the essential idea of theism, which the Indian approached, but never reached. He came so near it that the atheist should be put to shame by the Indian's simple faith.

One item of Indian worship is worthy of note here, that of sacrifices. The Aztecs offered human sacrifices; the Hurons, dogs; others, maize; while some burned tobacco on the sacred altar. There is an amazing similarity in the bloody offering of the Indian and that of the Hebrews. This is an inscrutable thing for me, That savage idolaters, thousands of years and thousands of miles from the Hebrew worship, should offer sacrifices in many points similar to the Hebrew sacrifices can, in my opinion, be accounted for in only two ways-namely, the Hebrew worship may possibly have been handed down traditionally from generation to generation until finally the American aborigines received it in perverted form, or the idea and feeling of precious sacrifice, as of blood, may have been implanted by God in the soul. Perhaps both were true as regards the Indian. This thing of blood in religion is profound.

The pitiable thing about the Indian religion is the imperfect and distorted character attributed to the Great Spirit, or deity. The God of the English that could utterly destroy the Pequots was a "most dreadful God." His province and pleasure were to punish, not to love and bless. They feared him, but did not love him. How different from the God of the Bible, who loved idolaters and draws them to him by the Example of Vicarious Suffering!

Image worship is debasing. No people, Indian or Japanese, can make with hands an idol, attribute to it human attributes, and bow down to it, without corrupting themselves. tendency is downward.

God must reveal himself through his Son. The story of the cross must be told plainly throughout the earth.

Shackling the Temper.

There is an adage somewhere to the effect that the fighter who loses his temper gladdens his enemy. The experts of the prize ring will tell you this is a true saying. In further proof we have the Solomonic assurance that he who is slow to anger is better than the mighty. All of which means that anger is weakening, and that the man who permits his temper to rule him has a destructive master.-Exchange.

OBITUARIES

Smith.

Mary F. Smith was born in Wilson County, Tenn., on September 5, 1832, and departed this life on July 3, 1918, aged eighty-five years, nine months, and twenty-eight days. She obeyed the gospel at an early age at Berca Church, in Wilson County, and came to Texas on December 26, 1890. She was a Bible reader and was ever ready to defend the cause; and when she was stricken down, she asked the writer to tell her physician to tell her her condition, as she was not afraid to die. She leaves behind one daughter and two sons to mourn their loss. To them I would say: Weep not as those who have no hope, but live so you may meet her in the sweet by B. F. CORUM. and by.

Norwood.

Theophilus Brown Norwood, better known by his friends as "Brownie," was born on August 7, 1886, and departed this life on March 25, 1918, being in his thirty-second year. was the only son of the late Dr. R. W. Norwood and Mrs. L. D. Norwood. His father was a most excellent, useful. Christian man, practicing medi-cine and preaching the gospel with power, "Brownie" obeyed the gospel when quite young. For a long time preceding his death he was in very poor health, and he bore his continued sickness with a patient cheerfulness that was remarkable. It was my pleasure to visit him a number of times during his last illness, and he expressed himself as sorry for any neglected opportunity of doing good, any and all wrong or shortcoming, and enjoyed having me pray with him, and looked forward with faith and love to the time when he could meet with his father on the other shore, in the land of freedom from sickness and pain. Besides his mother and two sisters, Mrs. J. D. Simpson and Miss Cassie Norwood, he leaves a host of friends who mourn his loss. M. C. CAYCE, Hackworth.

Jessie Howland was born at Beech Grove, Tenn., on October 2, 1886, and received her early education in the schools of that place. During year 1902 she was baptized by Brother L. R. Sewell, and lived a consistent member of the church at that place until the year 1904, when she moved to Scottsboro, Ala. She completed her school work at the Winchester Normal, Winchester, Tenn., graduating there with honors at the close of the session of 1908. After her graduation she returned to Scottsboro, and was married on July 29, 1911, to O. C. Hackworth, of that place. Sister Sister Hackworth was for a long while teacher of the infant class at the church in Scottsbore, and the Bible knowledge of the little ones in her class manifests her good work. She was always to be found at her place at all the meetings of the church, and ready to do all that became her privilege to do in the church work. The entire con-gregation sustained a loss when she and her husband moved to Florence, Ala., early in the year 1918. But its overwhelming sadness came with the shock of the report that Sister Hackworth had died on Friday, June 28, 1918. The great assembly of friends who attended the funeral at Scottsboro, where she was buried, indicated the popularity of Sister Hackworth, with them, though she be absent, her influence will be felt throughout many days to come. Bumpas.

John Alfred Bumpas, a devout and consecrated Christian, departed this life on May 20, 1918, He was born in Dallas County, Texas, near Cedar Hill, on April 14, 1890. He was baptized by Brother Oliver when he was eleven years old, and from that time proved himself a faithful and untiring worker in the Master's vineyard, always striving to efface self that God might be given the glory. Brother Bumpas came to San Angelo with his mother, brother, and sister, in 1906, spent five years here, then moved to Dallas. was one of the charter members of the Oak Cliff Church, where he was an effective teacher and untiring worker. Unless hindered by sickness, he was always in his place of duty as the Lord's servant. He was married on June 2, 1912, to Miss Lillian Lacy, of El Reno, Okla. After a four-years' stay in Dallas, his health failed and he was confined to a hospital for one He then returned to San Angelo in September, 1916, hoping to regain his health, but in vain. The end came at the home of his mother, Sister Lucy Bumpas, after loving hands and medical assistance had gone their limit. He leaves a widow and two small boys. His wife and mother deserve a place in the ranks of the faithful women because of the faithfulness and devotion with which they cared for him during his long illness. his home life we find but few like him. He loved his family next to his God. It can truly be said of Brother Bumpas that he enjoyed the confidence and respect of all who knew him, and the godly life he lived while here will ever be an inspiration to us. He never grew weary in well-doing, but was constantly performing some deed of kindness. He possessed a gentle disposition, backed by a strong determi-nation to live in harmony with the principles of Christianity, and was indeed, a just man. He read the Bible much, always seeking the truth and to learn the way more perfectly, and was always firm in contending for what he believed to be the truth. It is a glorious thing to die in the Lord, in the triumph of a living faith in The large crowd of friends Christ. and acquaintances at his funeral and the great floral offerings were a token of the love and respect in which he was held. An impressive service was conducted at the home by Brother W. Wrye. His remains were then sent to Cedar Hill and laid to rest beside those of his father and little daughter. Brother J. S. Dunn conducted this service.

The Church of Christ.

BY ARTHUR B. TENNEY.

There was a time when there was no church of Christ. This church is

If this church is worthy of our consideration, it must be a help to the world. If we are to spend our time learning of it, and spend our time and support upholding it, it must have a worthy purpose, a worthy founder, a worthy organization, a worthy law, and worthy members.

Since it is a religious institution, all the above essentials must have a divine relation. Its founder must be a Bible character, the Bible must present the authority for its organization and direct us to its law, and its members must compare with Bible requirements. The purpose can be seen all the way through. The Bible is religious authority. If it approves, indorses, or advocates this church, we should belong to it.

Its purpose is to save the world from sin and its guilt and to improve living conditions and standards.

A scripture is useful now. Matthew (16: 18) records Christ as saying: "Upon this rock I will build my church." Christ, the Son of God, whom God told all people to hear, said he would build the church. He was a master builder and a servant of God at the same time. Christ is the corner stone (Acts 4) upon which he built the church. He mentioned that the church would be built in the future, and he said it at least a year after John the Baptist was dead. (See marginal dates.) In Acts 2 the church is spoken of as existing (A.D. 29 or 33) as soon as people obeyed the gospel preached that day.

Christ claimed the church as his. He said "my church." It was, then, Christ's own church, or, to use a prepositional phrase to say the same thing, the "church of Christ." He had a right to call it his, for he built it and came to be a Savior to those who would enter it. Truly we should honor Christ by naming his church after him as its Founder. It is equally true that its members should live so as to honor that Founder.

Note the word "build" in the passage. He had to have material to put into the building. Jesus was the foundation (1 Cor. 3: 11), and he wants people with sincere hearts as material to build the church out of. Though it has been nearly nineteen hundred years since its founding, yet the call comes to us to be worthy members of it. Are you one?

Christ is the head of this church. Elders are overseers of local congregations where men are qualified for the place. Deacons are more of the nature of business managers. Each Christian is to help the other.

Naturally the Founder should set the pattern for daily life and for doctrinal teaching. As Christ 's new in heaven for a while before he returns, we have to study the record of his life to know what he did, that we may know what to do. God has moved hearts to give us in plain English (in the Bible) what is to be done by members of the church. Hence the loval membership-those who will go on into heaven-are those who show by their lives that they know how Christ tived, and thus benefit the world in general. Obeying commandments is a test of love, (See John 14.) The Christians' lives are designed to be the best on earth. If one does wrong, he need not complain if he is corrected by any one. He should appreciate correction.

We come into the church through the door, which is Christ. (John 10.) Paul got in, and can tell us how it was done: "For ye are all sons of God, through faith, in Christ Jesus. For as many of you as were baptized into Christ did put on Christ" (Gal. 5: 26, 27.) The faith necessary leads to action, which includes repentance and baptism. Speaking of Christ, Paul says: "We were buried therefore with him through baptism into death [buried in water]: that like as Christ was raised from the dead through the glory of the Father, so we also might walk in newness of life." (Rom. 6: 4.) Be sure to get the newness of life. Is not this church worthy of your respect and consideration-yea, even your life itself?

Among the Colored Folks

Brother Womack's Report.

During the last of May and the months of June and July my attention has been given to the work in Nashville. I baptized two of our soldier boys recently-one at Bellwood, Wilson County, and the other at the Jackson Street Church, in the city. One from the Kayne Avenue mission was baptized on the first Lord's day at the Jackson Street Church.

I spent five days and nights at Belfast last week with Brother D. M. English in a good meeting. Four were added by baptism. The interest was good

I am now (August 5) in a tent meeting at the forks of the Ashland City and Charlotte turnpikes. The meeting opened with a good attendance. As Brother Keeble could not reach here in time to begin the meeting, he sent me word from Henderson, Tenn., where he is engaged in a good meeting, to come down and start the meeting here.

Brethren Burton, Hart, Selley, Larimore (and wife), Hasty, Pittman, the sisters of the College Street Church, and all others have my thanks for their aid.

We have received the following contributions for the South Hill mission: From the Highland Avenue Church, by Brother Dennison, $3; A. Perry, $1; W. T. Selley, $1. This is a work started some years ago by Brethren D. Lipscomb, Timmons, and Frank Smith (colored), and we are now trying to repair the house. Congregations or brethren and sisters wishing to aid this work should leave contributions at the Gospel Advocate office or send to my address, 1502 Hamilton Street, Nashville. I thank the Belfast people, by Brother English, for their aid.

The harvest is now ripe, but the laborers are few. Pray ye to the Lord that he send forth more faithful laborers into the field. Our hearts are often made sad by some of the old soldiers (white and colored) falling on the gospel field; but wherever we fall, let us fall at the post of duty.

S. W. WOMACK.

Meeting in Murfreesboro, Tenn.

Brother John Thomas Ramsey, of Dallas, Texas, is doing some fine preaching at the Spring Street Church of Christ, this city, with fine attendance and attention. Brother Ramsey's preaching draws the people, and all who come are pleased with the way that he preaches. There have been ten accessions to date. This is the best meeting that we have ever held here. The church seems to be in a better spirit and the outside people are well pleased. Let us all pray that this godly man may live long upon the earth to continue to do the will of the Master. We hope to have him back with us in the near future. At the close of this meeting Brother Ramsey will return to Dallas. Those who wish to write him may write him at 2317 North Hall Street, Dallas, Texas.

A Peculiar Image.

BY A. W. YOUNG.

If the kingdom of God wa not established in the days of the Roman empire, in the days of the kings of the fourth part of the image revealed to Nebuchadnezzar by Daniel, then that image was, truly, a most peculiar one. Those who deny that the kingdom of God was established in the days of the Roman kings, and who contend that it will not be established until Christ comes again, admit that the Babylonian kingdom was the head of gold of the image. They also admit that the Medo-Persian Empire was represented by the silver, that the Macedonian Empire was represented by the brass. A careful reading of the second chapter of Daniel will convince us that the Roman Empire is more clearly marked out than any of the others, as far as its characteristics are concerned. The Roman Empire being the fourth one in the line of succession, and being so clearly identified by Daniel's statement, is undoubtedly the one in which God's kingdom was to be established. But the objector tells us that while the Roman Empire was the fourth one, that it has not ended: that we are still in the "toe stage" of Rome. If this is true, then the toes of that image were several times longer than its body in number of years; and as the Lord has not yet come, the toes are getting longer every day. Suppose we make a diagram of that image, setting down the number of years from Dan. 2 to A.D. 476, when the Roman Empire ended, and then mak the toes long enough to reach down to about A.D. 2000, and then behold the symmetry of the image.

Courage is not simply the absence of fear. To be brave is not merely uot to be afraid. Courage is that compactness and clear coherence of all a man's faculties and powers which makes his manhood an operative unit in the world,-Selected.

Spiritual service looks not to immediate result so much as to a time of harvest to come. There is a joy set before it, which is a positive inspiration to endure all that is involved of present toil and hardness .- J. S. Holden.

What We Earn.

Few things are impossible to those who are ready to pay the price of labor. No person has a right to an ability which has not been secured by training, and it is certain that such ability will be imperfect and conducive to disappointment in its failure if it has not been acquired by hard work and preparation. There is no royal road to anything. The things we covet in others can be ours if we do what is necessary to get them—what those we envy have done, though their labor was not advertised.—Exchange.

A child's mind is plastic. The impressions received while young are lasting. When cement is in the process of making, it is soft and pliable; but once it is dry, it becomes so hard that a workman can hardly break it with a hammer. But, while it was soft, a child laid its hand on the material; in a few minutes the cement hardened, and the imprint made by the child's hand was still there.— Ernest M. Glenn.

A recent advertisement contains the following: "If the gentleman who keeps the boot shop with the red head will return the umbrella of a young lady with whalebone ribs and an iron handle to the slate-roofed grocer's shop, he will hear of something to his advantage, as the same is the gift of a deceased mother now no more with the name engraved upon it."—Exchange."

A Good Business Opening.

The steady increase of the live-stock interest in the Southern States warranted our making a thorough investigation of the natural advantages of the Southland for the raising of good horses, cattle, hogs, sheep, and pouttry, compared to Northern States, like Iowa, that for years have been looked upon as leaders in these lines.

The reports of our experts justify our establishing headquarters in the South at some centrally located city having good railroad connections as soon as suitable arrangements can be closed.

Our business will require the help of a number of reliable men, who must be well and favorably known among planters and farmers who own stock in the vicinity of their home town, and we prefer men with some knowledge of live-stock.

These positions are worthy the prompt attention of any one who is looking for a chance to make money in a reliable, steady, and growing outdoor business.

Renew Your Health At Nature's Fountain

Without the Expense and Loss of Time Necessary for a Visit to the Spring

THE CRISIS

There comes a time in the life of practically every man and woman when their digestive or eliminative organs, or both, fail to respond to drugs prepared by human skill. In fact drugs seem to do them about a much harm as good for their systems t bel against all drugs. These are the cases which physicians call "stubborn" and "chronic" for the reason that they persist in spite of drug treatment. I do not refer to incurable diseases such as cancer and consumption, but to that larger class of functional disorders which we meet every day, where the organs of digestion and elimination are impaired.

For this class of cases our best physicians and our big city specialists send their wealthy patients to the mineral springs where, in the great majority of cases they are permanently restored or decidedly benefited. But what about the poor man who has not the money or the busy man or woman who cannot spare the time to spend several weeks or possibly months at a health resort? Shall circumstances deny them the restoration to health which Nature has provided? Read my answer in the coupon at the bottom of this page.

I have the utmost confidence in the Shivar Mineral Spring Water for to it I owe my Restoration to Health and probably my Life. It has made me tens of thousands of friends in all parts of America and even in foreign countries, whose faces I have never seen. Yet I count them my friends for the Shivar Spring Water has bound them to me by lasting gratitude.

! ask you to read their letters, a few samples of which I publish below for your benefit, and if you find among them any encouragement as to your own health do not hesitate to accept my offer which has no limits or conditions except those shown on the coupon. If you could read the letters that come to me daily, numbering about ten thousand a year, and the vast majority of them similar to those printed below, you would not wonder that I make this offer displaying my absolute confidence in the restorative powers of Shivar Mineral Water.

INDIGESTION

Sayannah, Georgia.

I was suffering with indigestion, stomach and liver disorders and all its train of horrifying phenomena for several months. I had lived on milk, soft eggs, shredded wheat, a very insufficient diet for an active working man, and, of course, from disease and starvation was in a very low state of nervous vitality and general debility. I ordered ten gallons of your Mineral Water which I used continuously, reordering when necessary, and in four months gained twenty-nine pounds, was strong and perfectly well, and have worked practically every day since. It acts as a general renovator of the system. I prescribe it in my practice, and it has in every instance had the desired effects. It is essential to use this water in as large quantities as possible, for its properties are so happly blended and in such proportion that they will not disturb the most delicate system. It is purely Nature's remedy.

I feel it my duty to suffering humanity to make public announcement of the benefits I have derived from Shivar Spring Water. I have been a sufferer for the past twenty-five years from indigestion and dyspepsia. After one week's trial of Shivar Water I commenced to improve, and after drinking it for four weeks I gained fifteen pounds. I feel better and stronger than I have in twenty-five years. I strongly recommend this Water to any one with stomach trouble of any character, and truly believe it will cure ulcer of the stomach. I am writing this voluntarily and trust it will fall in the hands of many who are so unfortunate as to be afflicted with indigestion and hervous dyspepsia. vous dyspensia.

Baltimore, Md., April 30, 1914.

For many years I suffered with stomach trouble as a direct result of asthma. I consulted the very best specialist in this country, and spent quite a large sum of money in my endeavor to get relief. However, I had about come to the conclusion that my case was hopeless, but by accident I happened to get hold of one of your booklets, and decided to try Shivar Spring Water. After drinking the water for about three weeks I was entirely relieved, and since that time have suffered but little inconvenience from my trouble, I cheerfully recommend the use of your Water to any one that may be suffering from stomach trouble.

RHEUMATISM

I have tested your Spring Water in several cases of rheumatism, chronic indigestion, kidney and bladder troubles, and in nervous and sick headaches, and find that it has acted nicely in each case, and I believe that if used continuously for a reasonable time will produce a permanent cure. It will purify the blood, relieve debility, stimulate the action of the liver, kidneys and bladder, aiding them in throwing off all poisonous matter.

I suffered with indigestion and kidney trouble, and a year ago was stricken with acute articular rheumatism; was belpless for months, and since using your Spring Water I am walking without any crutch and improving daily. For over two years, following a nervous breakdown, I have suffered with a liver so torpid that ordinary remedies were absolutely powerless. Under such circumstances, I came to Shivar Spring, and began drinking the Water. Upon advice however, the first night I took a laxative; the second night a milder one. Since then I have taken none at all. The effect of the water has been remarkable—its action on my livermost marked, and my health and spirits greatly improved. I am satisfied that the laxative, followed by the Water, was the proper treatment in my case. My condition is now perfect.

Shivar Spring Water cured my mother of gallstones, or, I might say, it snatched her from the hospital door, as the doctors had said nothing short of an operation would do her any good. Temptation.

When we discuss temptation, we discuss ourselves; we deal with a problem that intimately concerns our very existence; we open the most pathetic chapters in human experience. We cannot in this world rid ourselves entirely of temptation. Jesus Christ, our Savior, was "in all points tempted like as we are "-not as we may be tempted, but as we are tempted. Phillips Brooks truly said; "No adoption of any strict rule of life, no separation of ourselves. sets us free from the persecution of temptation." Just here the Catholics make a serious blunder. They associate the idea of consecration with the hermit's life. They argue that since the worldly environment is always fruitful of temptation, why not escape it by living a holy life apart from the world? But men have tried the secluded life, only to find that they have exchanged one form of temptation for another-those wicked suggestions that flow in from without for those that arise from the unsuspected depths of the heart. Experience and observation, I believe, will show that there is actually less of temptation's danger in the midst of work and commingling with men than in idleness and solitude. "Idleness is the devil's workshop." Henry Ward Beecher gives us a true definition: "Consecration is not wrapping one's self in a holy web within the sanctuary, and saying: 'There, I am consecrated,' It is going into the world where God Almighty is, and using every power for his glory."

Temptation Is Not Sin.

The fact that our first parents, Adam and Eve, were tempted before they sinned, and the fact that Jesus was tempted, reveals the true limits of temptation. These facts teach us that temptation is not sin. On the other hand, the presence of temptation in our lives may be our very best chance to grow into our better selves. Resisting temptation is one of the divinely appointed means whereby Christian people may acquire strength of character. But let us not close our eyes to the fact that when the temptation is not overcome it offers also the possibility of irrevocable loss.

Jesus taught his disciples to pray: "Lead us not into temptation." This is perfectly compatible with the admission that such temptations, should it please God to send them as trials of our faith, may, when rightly used, be an occasion of rejoicing. "Count it all joy, my brethren, when ye fall into manifold temptations; knowing that the proving of your faith worketh patience." We should offer this petition, "Lead us not into temptation," in the same spirit with which we ask God to keep sickness and death away from our door. God does allow sickness to prevail and death to enter; but when he does, he gives us the grace and strength to be profited by the experience. We do not covet these experiences; we do not ask for them; but if they come, we understand God's power to overrule them for our good. Let us not forget the important distinction that the external circumstances in which men are placed by God's will may furnish more or less temptation to sin; but the internal assent, which yields to the temptation, is not of God. Never! For James says again: "Let no man say when he is tempted, I am tempted of God; for God cannot be tempted with evil, and he himself tempteth no man: but each man is tempted, when he is drawn away by his own lust, and enticed." The important part of this petition is that which says: "Deliver us from the evil one." We have large power within ourselves to cooperate with our God in answering that good prayer. There are several ways in which we can lighten our Father's burden in this matter. 0 0 0

Avoid Temptation, Not Duty.

First, we should not willfully throw ourselves in the way of temptation to see how strong we are. When we do this, we usually discover how weak we are. This is plainly tempting the devil instead of being tempted by him. It is the business of every man, so far as possible, to keep out of the way of falling. I have read of a man tempted to drink who kept a bottle of whisky in a conspicuous place in his room, and who said from time to time: "I double dare you to make me take a drink." The story went that he won the victory. That may have been the best way for him, but for most men it would be suicidal. Solomon gives us the better rule: "Avoid it, pass not by it; turn from it, and pass on."

Again, no man has any right to avoid temptation when his duty calls him where it is. The other day I saw a company of firemen at their drill. A long ladder from an aërial truck was extended into the air almost perpendicularly. If I had seen a citizen who had no connection with the department climbing to its dizzy height, I would have considered it a foolhardy act; but when I saw the fire laddies try it, each in his turn, and noted their agility, I was filled with admiration. It was their duty, and they seemed to attend to it without fear. If it is dangerous duty we have, let us think more of the duty than of the danger. It gives a man a sense of power to feel that he is in the path of duty; it gives him a sense of weakness to feel that he is avoiding that path because of his danger. It was certainly a great personal risk for Peter and John to continue preaching the gospel against the strict orders of the chief priests and rulers, but their duty was plain enough. "We ought to obey God rather than men." John the Baptist took his life in his hands when he said to Herod: "It is not lawful for thee to have thy brother's wife." But John delivered his message at the cost of his life. From these things I learn that there is nothingabsolutely nothing, not even the danger of temptationthat should stand between a man and the faithful performance of his duty. 0 0 0

Habitual Preference for One's Best Self.

A very fine safeguard against temptation is what some one has called "an habitual preference for the best in one's self." If one does not care whether one is one's best self or one's second best, then temptation is almost invited; but if a man cannot pleasantly think of himself as anything less than his best, temptation begins to lose its power. A certain mother had forbidden her small boy from swimming in the creek. He returned home one day with unmistakable signs that he had been in the water. When his mother remonstrated with him, he replied: "Yes, I know, mother, I did wrong, but I was tempted." "But how did you happen to have your bathing suit with you?" she asked. "Well, I took it along, thinking I might be tempted." How often we capitulate in advance to a temptation! A young man in a city is headed toward a fall, and a hard fall, when he begins to ask, "What's the use?" He must clearly understand that doing right is always of use, if he is to be his best self. He must not harbor the thought of yielding, but count upon overcoming. Like Joseph of old, he should say within himself: "How then can I do this great wickedness, and sin against God?" 0 0 0

"Remember Jesus Christ" and Be Steady.

There is great help in the persistent realization of God's presence. There are some things which we never think of doing when we are with certain people. A boy has grown pretty coarse when he swears before his mother or his sweetheart. I have a good deal of sympathy for the Indiand woman who brought suit for divorce against her husband, charging cruelty, and among other items mentioned that he "persisted in eating in her presence with his hat on." Most people are kept back from that kind of thing by the thought of those before whom they would be ashamed. This is where prayer helps. It reminds us continually of God's nearness to us. Paul bade Timothy to "remember Jesus Christ." He must have known how such a thought would steady him. The story is told that a man trained his dog not to touch meat set before him when his master said "no." When these trying times came, the dog's way of being obedient was not to trust himself to look at the meat, but always at his master. Is not that a pointed lesson for erring humanity? Not looking at temptation, not letting the mind be filled with the power of its attraction, but turning away and looking toward the face of Him who "hath been in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin."

Ulysses, you have read, stopped the ears of his companions with wax and had himself firmly bound to the mast of the ship when he was passing the fatal coasts of the Sirens. Orpheus overcame them by singing the praises of the gods, and made such splendid melody that the music of the Sirens attracted no attention. Even mythology has its practical, everyday lessons. This one is: Let God's presence mean more to you than the enticement of sin, and you shall win the victory over it.

Takes Two for a Successful Temptation.

The beginnings of temptation are the easiest to handle. All of us will testify that our sins begin with our thinking of them. That was the source of the first temptation. Satan tempted Eve with the thought that she might be "as God, knowing good and evil." The desire was good, but the method of gratifying it was wrong, because it led her away from the path of obedience. That was the beginning of trouble for the prodigal son. You say it was in leaving his father's house. But did it not first begin in letting his mind dwell upon the imaginary pleasures of the far country? He should have nipped that first thought in the bud. We cannot help thinking of things, but we can keep from going on thinking of them. Sowing thistles can always be stopped; it is not so easy to stop growing thistles.

Temptation is not all a matter of outward happening, but also of inner readiness. No outsider can be responsible for our sins as much as we are responsible. I would not put all the blame on the saloon keeper, as some people do. If a man would not allow himself to hanker after drink, the saloon keeper would have very little power over him. "He tempted me" only explains one side of temptation. The other side—the personal side—we must answer for, and no excuse will save us. It takes two every time to make a successful temptation, and one of the two is always our own responsible self.

It is important that there be a definite committal of one's self to courses of life which condemn sin deeply and unreservedly. We need to put ourselves on record so that we have burned our bridges behind us and a fall is all the more disgraceful. Paul speaks of a double crucifixion, "through which the world hath been crucified unto me, and I unto the world."

"You'll often be laughed at when you put on this uniform," said General Booth on one occasion to a Salvation Army recruit, "but you'll not so often be tempted. The devil runs from a soldier that shows his colors."

When we do fall into the tempter's snare and realize it, let us not feel sorry for ourselves, but manifest an unsparing severity in every case of yielding. God and other people may be gentle with us, but we are not to be gentle with ourselves if we fall. We should offer no excuses, but, like Ezra of old, should confess our sins, saying: "O my God, I am ashamed and blush to lift up my face to thee."

Satan's Method in Temptation.

It is said that there was once an about who desired a piece of ground that lay close to his land. The owner refused to sell it, but, after much persuasion, consented to lease it. The about leased it at a stipulated price for the length of time required for one crop. He at once took possession of it and sowed it in acorns, a crop which required a lifetime.

In the same way the devil seeks to get into the hearts of men. He does not ask for the whole of their lives. "Serve me only in the days of youth," he suggests, "and give God your old age." "Give me just a portion of your time, and the rest you may give to him," he says, knowing all the time that this is only a snare to catch the unwary and lead them into temptation.

"Be mine for one short hour, and then Be all thy life the happiest of men."

But, sad to say, that one short hour of Satan's service often means a lifetime of misery and ruin hereafter. Flee from the voice of the tempter. Not another day in his kingdom, nor another hour under his control, but, "looking unto Jesus the author and perfecter of our faith," seek the help of the great God "who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will with the temptation make also the way of escape, that ye may be able to endure it."

O, dear friend, out in the world, claimed by Satan and beset with sin on every side, if you are sick and tired of its empty promises, its ephemeral happiness, and its dark shadow of death, let me tell you there is great deliverance for you. Come to your blessed Savior, singing as you

"I need thee—0, I need thee! Every hour I need thee! O bless me now, my Savior! I come to thee."

BY H. E. SPECK.

II. CHRISTIAN EDUCATION AND ITS INFLUENCE.

An education may be religious, however, and not be Christian. Christian education sets the perfect man, Jesus, as its ideal. Paul declares that he and his associates labored, "teaching every man in all wisdom; that we may present every man perfect in Christ Jesus." God makes the heart hungry, and in Christ he responds to this hunger. Feeding upon Christ, we grow in the likeness of God—that is, we develop, we are educated. Christian education, then, consists in so presenting Christ to the immature souls that they shall be by him enlightened, inspired, and fed according to their gradually increasing capacity, and thus made to grow continually within the courts of the Lord's house.

But the question may arise, and has arisen: When should we begin Christian education? Is there a time when, and a place where? Some say begin it as soon as language is acquired; while others oppose all religious training of the young on the ground that religion should be a matter of deliberate and rational choice, which, they say, is not possible before maturity. Both of these views rest upon false assumptions. The first is the intellectualist's view of man, which makes life grow out of knowledge instead of knowledge out of life. The other is the notion that training with respect to religion can be postponed until some definite or particular period of life. Not for a single moment does the mind remain neutral or blank with reference to the interpretation of life. Very early the child witnesses specific religious phenomena. We cannot hide from him our Bibles, our churches, and our worship. The real question, then, is never, "When shall Christian training begin?" for it really begins with the beginning of the child's experience. The real question is: "What kind shall It be?" Shall it be positive or negative, symmetrical or distorted, repressive or emancipating?

We speak of America as a Christian nation. It is Christian in sanction, in public opinion, if we use the term to differentiate the religion of America from the pagan or other religions. There was a time in the history of this nation when it was Christian in purpose. The forefathers sought out this country as a place in which they might serve God in freedom and in peace. A profound faith was in the very bone and sinew of national life. The development was along religious lines, and it seems to me that almost everything good and great that the American commonwealth has stood for among the nations of the earth has been preëminently Christian. The greatness of the people came from the spirit of the religion that possessed them, and whatever greatness there is in us to-day is due to the inheritance of religious faith which we have. We are living on the inheritance of Christian faith bequeathed to us by men and women who were ardent believers in the God of our fathers and who were devoted professors of his holy law.

But what is the new spirit of America? Without allowing ourselves to become pessimistic, we must confess that there are numerous signs of degeneration forcing themselves upon us, and we cannot but deplore the sinking of religious ideals into a very inferior place. Before the nations of the world we stand for money-making. This is perhaps the first time in the history of the world when the temples of mammon overtop the cross that crowns the spires of the temple of God. It is to be hoped that the present world conflict will change this greed for gold into a consuming passion for service. But until the last year or so that sordid principle, "Get money honestly if you can, but get money," has been leading men of place and power into ways that are dark and devious, whose ends are destruction; so that there has been a moving picture of one public man after another standing for a moment under the white lights of public investigation and then going down in shame and disgrace because his questionable business methods could not bear the gaze of public scrutiny. The gospel of Christ would have us "lay up ... treasures in heaven." "Seek ye first the kingdom of his righteousness." So far have we drifted from these ideals that we have begun to glory in our false standards and to point to our material prosperity as a sign of our marvelous progress. But Christianity does not consist in the abundance of the things which we possess.

Another sign of how much we have forgotten or how far we have drifted from Christian ideals is the cheap way in which we hold human life. There is no mark of distinction between a Christian and a pagan that is more noticeable than the value placed on a human soul. It was made a little lower than the angels. It cost the blood of the Son of God for its redemption. All the treasure and measure of this earth would be as nothing compared to the loss of one soul. The constant affirmation of this fact will save the weak from the oppressive tyranny of the strong. It guards the life of the unborn and protects helpless infancy. It struck the shackles from the limbs of the slave as he stood on the auction block in the slave market. It stretches out its hand to helpless women and safeguards the most precious jewel in her crown. If a man to-day enjoys civil and religious liberty, it is because of the Christian affirmation of his individuality in the possession of an immortal soul; and his rights to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, because of his infinite redemption by our God manifest in the flesh. Pagan civilization has no such idea of the value of man. An Assyrian monarch wrote on the stones of Nineveh: "I took prisoners, men young and old. Of some I cut off the hands and feet; others I mutilated. Of the young men's ears I made a heap, and of the old men's skulls I made a tower. The children I burned in the flames." (Sounds as if it were written by the Kalser). Paganism to-day, under the flag of a new world religion, is drenching the allied nations in similar blood. But in our own America every day hundreds of lives are being snuffed out in order that our dividends, our salaries, and our coupons may satisfy our greed. Little wonder that when we bow down before the golden ealf, the worship of this false god demands false sacrifice; but the pity of it all is that on consuming altars are laid helpless womanhood and weak innocence. The incidents of the last three years have in a measure stopped us in our mad rush for gold. We stand paralyzed with amazement when we hear the agonizing cries of our neighbors, and live in constant dread and wonder of what another day may bring. I believe we are really being touched with the feelings of others' infirmities.

What is it that has changed our standards? The thing that is going out of our American life is the spirit of religion. How has it been brought about? The answer is patent. For two or three generations the young have been educated in our schools in which the name of God is practically forbidden and from which the dogmas and precepts of religion have been driven. Are we not inviting disaster by shutting God out of our schools? If our perpetuity as a people depends on the stream of the spirit of Christ that flows in our veins, are we not rushing on to a speedy death by shutting off those streams? How long can we live a the inheritance of religious faith bequeathed to us by an older generation, if we are spendthrift and profligate and do nothing to conserve the inheritance we have received?

Calling for a Specific Issue.

BY F. W. SMITH.

Brother Moore closes his last reply with the following: "Would it not be well to narrow down to some agreed-on subject, that we could discuss one thing at a time?" That is exactly what we started out with—viz., "total, hereditary depravity." but my friend would not stick to the issue. He has introduced a number of issues, and now desires to abandon all but one of these or get a new one. Very well, I am perfectly willing to accommodate my friend, if only he will select an issue and stay by it. Note the remainder of his reply:

I was just on the order of mention of faith and repentance when my space gave out last week. If my friend Smith is correct in his order of the two principles of the doctrine of Christ, it turns himself with all who follow with him in the wrong direction, for repentance means a turning away from all his former life. Faith in Christ is a part of sald life, and the main part if sincere, and he must turn away from this and give up. He says, and truly, without faith it is impossible to please God; so, according to his own logic, his repentance after faith is not pleasing to God, hence not acceptable and no good. Friend Smith and his logic both go together to regions of the lost. his mistake is in the faith he accepts. Faith in God's existence is the same with him as faith in God. Two different objects altogether; in God, and God is. One is believing in a fact, the other believing in God. The former is universal, the latter restricted to the saved. All nations believe in the existence of a god, for all nations worship some kind of god, but only the saved believe in the only true and living God. Christ as God is the only true object of Christian faith. One may believe the Bible story all true, and not believe in God. Thousands in hell have believed it, and now know it is true; but it did not save them, nor will it save Smith with all his following. And here is where Campbellism and all other isms that believe in salvation by law fall down and come short of the salvation of God.

Don't you know, Smith, that no man can serve two masters? He will hold to the one and despise the other. Repentance is the turning away from one lord, and faith is the accepting of another; therefore one must repent before he can believe; must give up the devil before he can accept the Lord Jesus Christ.

The two words are only mentioned four times together, and each time it is repent and believe—Matt. 21: 32; Mark 1: 15; Acts 20: 21; Heb. 6: 1. There is not a reversal of the above order in all the Book, Brother Smith. How dare you to claim that the holy Bible gets it wrong every time? This is a serious charge to make against the Holy Spirit.

There is more to know about the origin of the soul than either of us knows, but I cannot see how that God makes each soul like its parents in intelligence, traits, etc.; if God creates all souls now as he did Adam's then, all men by birth would be in a paradise till they sinned, and the death sentence would be too late for a remedy offered by Christ. What provision have you in your theology for their salvation after they have fallen from their created holy state? Our revelation reveals to us in Heb. 6; 4: For it is impossible for these who were once enlightened, and have tasted of the heavenly gift, and were made partakers of the Holy Spirit, and have tasted the good word of God, and the powers of the world to come, if they shall fall away, to renew them again unto repentance; seeing they crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh [or again], and put him to an open shame." If all souls now born into the world are holy and pure and sinless, they evidently can claim the qualifications laid down above, and they must fall before your theory of the way of life can reach them. And if true, Paul's gospel cannot reach them; for he says, "It is impossible." Then pray tell me Then pray tell me how they are to escape the damnation of hell. "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." (John 3: 3.) "Ye must be born again." (John 3: 7.) Smith, God finished his work of creation in the six working days of God, and you are not able to point another man with a soul made as was Adam's. Zech. 12: 1 refers to his breathing into the nostrils of the man of clay that he became a living soul. I have said before that Christ to Nicodemus meant eternal or spiritual life, and not the beginning of temporal life. You know this, and why continue to "beat the brush" with these repetitions? Find where God ever breathed the breath of life into another than our federal head. You cannot do it, and you other than our federal head. know it.

As to Eph. 2: 3 and Thayer's lexicon, I am willing to let stand my challenge to you on why the use of the word "phusis" in above and 1 Cor. 11: 14 and different in the other citations given you. You fail to reply to this. I suspect the reason is you do not know why.

Would it not be well to narrow down to some agreed-on subject, that we could discuss one thing at a time?

A man must be in a desperate strait to argue as does my friend Moore in the article under review. He argues that because I contend that faith precedes repentance, that faith becomes a part of the former life from which repentance leads us to turn! Our readers well know that my contention has been that repentance is the fruit of faith—that men are led to repent because of faith. Repentance within itself is simply a mental process, a turning from the former life in purpose, and must be followed by reformation of conduct in order to be of any value. Ah, my brother, your effort at this point only betrays the weakness of your cause and is a virtual confession of your inability to sustain your doctrine.

He says my mistake lies in the faith I accept. The apostles were told: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." (Mark 16: 15, 16.) Note the fact that salvation here is promised in part to those that believe; but it is proper to ask, Believe what? Why, that which was preached, of course. But what was preached? The gospel. The faith that saves, then, is the faith that embraces the gospel of Jesus Christ. What can be wrong about such a faith, Brother Moore? O well, he says, faith in the "existence" of God and faith "in" God are two different things. I will ask him, Can one have faith in God without having faith in the existence of God? If not, does not faith begin with the "existence" of God, and is not what you call faith in God simply a fuller degree or larger measure of the same faith? Now, if you mean by faith "in" God that degree of faith properly called trust, then I am ready to say that faith simply in the existence of God is not equal to faith in God. Trust involves a committal of one's self to God and his service, and is that degree of faith that leads one to put on Christ in baptism. (Gal. 3: 26, 27.) You may, in one sense, believe in a person without trusting that person, for the simple reason that you have committed nothing to him demanding trust. It is only when the soul is committed to God in obedience to the gospel that one believes unto salvation. My friend has already admitted that "some kind of faith" precedes repentance, and I suggested that his admission was fatal to his cause. Hence, I now ask him: What relation does that faith sustain to the Lord Jesus Christ? Please do not fail to answer this question, for it is vital to our efforts in seeking to ascertain the truth on this point.

To be sure, "there is more to know about the origin of the soul than either of us knows," but we can certainly know what God has revealed on the subject; and you have utterly failed to show where infants are "deprayed," much less "total, hereditary deprayity."

In his effort to sustain a false theory, my friend misapplies the word of God. Note his use of Heb. 6: 4. My friend, when did you see an infant "enlightened?" When did you know of an infant's having "tasted of the heavenly gift," and "made partaker of the Holy Spirit," and "tasted the good word of God, and the powers of the world to come?" Brother Moore's position has become a desperate one to necessitate such handling of the word of God. Of course, Christ was talking of spiritual life when he said a man must be born from above, or born again; but was he talking of spiritual life when he said, "That which is begotten of the flesh is flesh?"

You certainly did not read my reply, else you would not have said, "You fail to reply to this"—meaning your effort on "phusis" in Eph. 2: 3 and 1 Cor. 11: 14. Your readers know better, and you can, too, if you will consult my replies. But in order to leave no doubt about the inaccuracy of your statement, I reproduce what I said:

I am surprised that Brother Moore knows so little about J. H. Thayer and his lexicon. Thayer was a Congregationalist, and believed with my friend on the matter of "total, hereditary depravity," hence did not define "phusis" in Eph. 2: 3 to suit his religious blas. The leading universities regard his lexicon as the best in the world. Adam Clarke, one of the most scholarly men that ever lived, believed with my friend, and yet he said that Eph. 2: 3 did not support the doctrine of "total, hereditary depravity," but assigned to "phusis" "custom or habit as its meaning. Brother Moore knows that many words have more than one meaning, but never more than one meaning in the same place at the same time. The meaning of such words is determined by the context in which they are used. The very context in Eph. 2: 3 and 1 Cor. 11: 14 shows that "phusis" (nature) means "custom or practice." We speak of second nature—which is formed by practice.

Trustees of Abilene Christian College Take Commendable Action.

The contract has been signed and the work started on the remodeling of the administration building of Abilene Christian College and the construction of an addition to it which will be much larger than the old part. This new part, when finished and furnished, will cost more than twenty thousand dollars, and, taken with the old part, will give us an administration building modern and adequate for a school of four hundred students, which we expect to have the first year with normal conditions. The total value of this building will be about thirty-five thousand dollars.

This is the biggest thing we have seen done by our brethren in Christian service. A total of only thirteen thousand dollars is raised. But our trustees, who have seen the growth of this work and the blessings it brings into the lives of a great majority of the students, with confidence in God and their brethren and sisters in Christ, assumed this responsibility and proceeded without any hesitation to the work. This they have done each time the growth of the work has made necessary a new building. This will make three excellent buildings during four years, and they owe less money than they did before they built the first one.

There is no way for these men to get one cent of returns for this work except in the good done in the lives of the boys and girls of the country. They do not even get their expenses paid to the board meetings. Don't you think such faith and such love for the Christian training of our children deserve appreciation and commendation? large number have shown their appreciation by joining these men and paying for these buildings in the past, and we believe you will do the same thing now. A flood of checks, large and small, and of Liberty bonds, should be mailed to Brother W. H. Free, the faithful treasurer of the board, who has served from the beginning of the school. without another word being said or written. Won't you send one-the very largest one possible? Make a real sacrifice, and remember that every dollar helps. Times are hard and we have a war. But these men decided that we could not let this work of Christian service to our children suffer because of these things. They are doing their part in every war service and making big gifts to this work and assuming all of the risk, believing you will join them in this labor of love and sacrifice. Not a dollar of this money will go to any man for expenses. Every dollar of it will go into permanent improvements.

The members of the board who were present and decided to proceed with this great service are: J. S. Arledge, Bronte; J. R. Powell, Tuscola; George W. Birchfield, Fort Worth; A. F. McDonald, Lubbock; W. H. Arnold, Winters: J. M. Sedberry, Hamlin; W. H. Free, Dr. C. B. Leggett, T. A. Russell, G. B. Tittle, and J. S. Kirkpatrick, Abilene. Members who found it impossible to attend the meeting, but wrote letters unreservedly committing themselves to proceeding with the building and offering to do their part are: O. E. Bonner, Sweetwater; W. B. Lewis, Plainview; J. C. Reese, Mineral Wells; and E. A. (Gus) Jones, Quanah. We believe that every lover of the souls of our fine boys and girls will desire to join us in saying that these are great men of God, and that you want to demonstrate your appreciation in a substantial way.

Remember that the only thing in this world that is going to survive time is the human soul, and the only thing you are going to save out of your life in this world is what you invest in souls. Everything else will be lost. These investments are absolutely safe. They are secured with the blood of Christ. Jesus says: "Give, and it shall be given unto you; good measure, pressed down, shaken together, running over, shall they give into your bosom. For with what measure ye mete it shall be measured to you again." This promise, with hundreds of others like it, is absolutely good. No man ever trusted it and lost as the result. The great reason why men do not have more opportunities for service is the fact that they do not use the ones they have. The great reason we do not have more to give is that we do not give what we have. The unanimous testimony of those who have given much to this service is that they believe without any doubt that they have just as much as they would have if they had not given one cent, and they are happy and glad they have given. Come ahead and join them and get some of the fine pleasure that comes from such work.

Flawed Opals.

A lovely jewel: blaze of lurking fire,
And sea-green depths that flash, and change, and fade;
The sapphire's blue, the ruby's crimson shade,
The pearl's gray luster; mounting high and higher,
Rainbow's perfections mingling entire—
And at the heart the hidden flaw is laid,
Whence, at a touch, its beauties all decay'd,
The gem is dust, like ashes of desire!
O soul of man, meant for his diadem,
So lurks the flaw within the very heart;
And blows of circumstance, grief's mastering might,
Temptation's ruffian clutch, or even the light,
Soft-handed touch of pleasure—and apart
Crumbles to dust and ruin his chosen gem!

The Value of the Religious Journal.

Editorials generally deal with questions of urgent public interest, and that is why it is proper to have a sincere talk with our readers on the value of their church paper. We make haste at the beginning to say this is not a mere shop talk. We believe the religious papers have been too reticent in this matter, and as a result the people are greatly underrating their worth and neglecting one of the mightiest means of power and growth that is open to Christianity. The living voice has more influence intensively, but the printed page has vastly more influence extensively. The printed page can go where man can never come.

The religious paper is more than worth its salt, and without any bonus of premium or clubbing rate its cost in dollars and cents is far beyond the subscription price; but it is not a commercial business at all. If it were, the money invested to produce it and the labor expended to continue it would earn many times as much more in other fields. We may insist on this point till it is fully understood that the religious weekly is not published for money at all. For the same reason your minister preaches and your missionary goes to distant lands, your religious paper is published, and possibly in the days to come, when we are fully able to gauge religious values, the churches will set aside a sum of money sufficient to publish their paper and send it to every family, just as every one, rich or poor, has access to the same preaching regardless of their participation financially; and in that good day coming-and we believe it will come-everybody will read his paper sympathetically, attentively, appreciatively, and not in a querulous or fault-finding spirit.

The religious paper is a necessity to modern Christianity. From the earliest days some kind of written or printed communication has been necessary to keep the members in sympathetic and satisfactory solidarity. There are striking confirmations of this in the New Testament. Circular letters by the apostles and other leading Christians in the early days were sent around from church to church. It is thought by some scholars that the epistle to the Ephesians was originally such a writing. We not only find in these letters the doctrinal idea, but also the personal, human touch we so much prize, and we even read interesting news items. The germ of the religious newspaper is undoubtedly in the New Testament. We are, of course, not intimating that the religious newspaper is on a footing with these apostolic writings, but we are showing that there must of necessity be some kind of carrier of the common message if the people are to be held together at all, and if each one is to receive the inspiration that comes from the work of the whole brotherhood.

We can think of several ways of "carrying the message" to the people. One of them would be to hold inspirational meetings in strategic centers, but this would reach only a few hundreds, or at the most a few thousands, and the millions would really be untouched. Another is to inspire a few "key" men and send them forth as couriers and criers of the tidings of the kingdom. This could reach but few in an inadequate way; or, we might depend upon the natural capillary attraction of society and expect that each man would tell his neighbor until every one had heard. But the message would change each time it was repeated until the absorbent power of the mass would swallow it up altogether. Another method is personal correspondence. But if we had the addresses of the million and a quarter Disciples in the United States and could send each one a letter, it would cost close to one hundred and fifty thousand dollars. It is said every business house reckons that each personal letter costs ten cents or more. To reach the preachers alone in this way would cost one thousand dollars per week, or more than fifty thousand dollars annually; and that, too, for only two thousand or so words. To reach a whole brotherhood like ours would require seven million eight hundred thousand dollars annually for two or three thousand words each week! To attempt this would, of course, be an absurdity.

But in the light of it, how inexpensive, how practically expenseless, seems the newspaper, which is the other way; and it is in fact the only way in which any considerable number of people can be reached and held together.

We need the religious press to keep us from being overwhelmed with worldliness. But for it, all the news would clearly be about material things. As it is, even with the religious paper we can scarcely fight our way out into the pure air of anything spiritual or heavenly, so completely submerged are we by the news of sales, of money, and by the gossip of the scandal, embezzlement, crime and folly blackening the earth every day. In the midst of such a world the religious paper cries from the honsetops that we have souls, that there is another world, that there is something better and holier even in this world than the daily scramble and struggle of human passions and ambitions.

Real religious publications are to-day almost the only media of Christian unity. They will prove to be the largest factor in achieving this desired consummation as a reality. Through them we get the common denominator of Christian thinking. We become members of a vast parliament, almost a parliament of man. We get real information by which to guide our own ideas. We become assimilated to one another in this wonderful laboratory of the human heart and mind.

The religious paper makes leadership possible. It does this, not by aspiring to leadership itself, for the better kind of religious paper does not think about whether it is a leader or not. Its aim is to help people understand one another, to interpret the movements of the church, and to feature people fit to lead and save the churches from being imposed upon by mountebanks, charlatans, fakers, and impostors.

Without the religious press, moral and civic reforms would be impossible in the community and nation. It has only been very recently that any of the great daily papers or the secular weeklies took a stand for prohibition and like moral causes. But these have generally started with the religious press and by it have been fostered and promoted until they issued in success. Without this agency there is no hope of moral and spiritual progress, the only real progress for the people. This is as it should be, for it is their special and peculiar vocation to forward movements that benefit mankind.

The religious paper is more needed to-day than it has ever been. The world is awake and full of theories. We are about to reconstruct civilization. We are going to establish a new social and political order. Shall the voice of Jesus Christ be heard and heeded in this new formative period? Jesus Christ will have no direct champion in the current literature which will urge the ideals and principles of this new civilization without the Christian periodical. It alone will try to interpret the mind of Jesus Christ and to speak for him in these checkered, troublous, perplexing times

Our church papers claim no infallibility. They admit their faults, but insist that they merit our esteem because with all their imperfections they are real friends of our souls. Not only do they deserve to be circulated, but they deserve to be read; and in return they will give comfort, enthusiasm, information, and ideals. They will instruct us in doctrine and teach us to prize the things of the kingdom and of the Spirit. Here we may get weekly reports of the age-long battle between good and evil and draw buoyant optimism from the visioned issues. Here the sacred history of our precious dead is told and the printing press chants the litany which comforts our griefshadowed hearts. Here the story of birth and death is told as if to help the recording angel write in his book the golden story of the worth and beauty of every human life. Altogether what a friend is the weekly religious paper, and how barren and cold civilization would be without it, and how helpless the church and the individual Christian!-Christian-Evangelist.

Cain-His Sin. No. 4.

BY H. LEO BOLES.

We must bear in mind that the early chapters of Genesis are very brief, laconic, but full of meaning, a great deal expressed in just a few words. They are, indeed, multum in parvo—much in little. This is one evidence of the inspiration of the Scriptures: so much can be expressed with so few words.

We have learned that there are at least seven specific sins in the cluster which belongs to the history of Cain's life; the sin of unbelief, a substitution for God's ways, anger or wrath against Jehovah, anger with his brother Abel, jealousy, murder, and lying to God. It is to be expected that other sins grew out of these and are found in the heart of Cain. What a desperate condition of heart! So early from the garden of Eden, at the very fountain of the stream of life, how depraved and corrupt is Cain! It seems that it would be difficult to find one to-day, so far down the stream of life as we are, who has so debased a heart of sin as Cain; yet his tribe is numerous.

We learn this significant lesson from the life of Cain. A man of long experience in sin is always worse than he seems to be. No human eye can pierce the heart and see all of the fountains of wickedness that are potential in a human life. The all-seeing eye of Jehovah is able to see to the very bottom of the human soul and analyze the motives, intentions, and purposes of the human heart. He can see the roots of sin as it grows, and can pierce to the deepest depths the human heart and life, and knows all that is in man. We know a tree by its fruits, the outward life; but God judges the tree by what it is. One may look at a cancerous growth on the body and see but very little danger in it; but one who understands the nature of the cancer knows that its roots penetrate far into the human body and affect the human system. So it is with God in regard to sin. This explains why the statement is made that a sinner is worse than he seems to be. Every wicked act or intentional wrong comes from a wicked thought, but it may be that not every wicked thought finds an outlet in wicked actions. The longer a life continues in sin, the faster the sins grow and multiply and the more corrupt becomes the life and the nearer the sinner approaches unto death. One, in breaking from sin and a sinful life, should have our deepest sympathy and helpful encouragement because of the hard tasks in plucking up the roots of sin. The history of every sin should serve as a fearful warning to us. We cannot quarantine a part of our heart against a sin which may occupy another part. Its tendency and nature is to grow and involve the whole heart.

When one voluntarily sins as did Cain, that one becomes a partner with Satan to defeat the purposes of God with that life and produces death. The whole mission of Satan is to defeat God's purposes and plans with human heart. One may not understand or be conscious of Satan's mission, for it is Satan's work to keep one deceived; nevertheless, to engage in sin brings one into close and intimate relation with Satan and endeavors to the extent of that sin to'cooperate with Satan in thwarting God's purpose and encouraging Satan in his mission. We have learned that every sin points toward death; so, when we engage in sin, to that extent we become a partner with Satan in bringing about our own death. We enter into a covenant with Satan to help him produce our own ultimate ruin. This is a phase of sin that we often overlook. Cain, consciously or unconsciously, entered into a league with Satan to bring about his death; the same is true with Adam and Eve when they committed sin in the garden of Eden; it is also true with all who sin to-day.

Cain has the distinction in sacred history of being the first murderer. This murder was the outgrowth of a dispute or a difference on religion. Some have remarked that the first murder was caused by religious dispute, and they have used that as an argument against friendly investigation and discussion. I do not think that that is any sound reason against honest discussion. This murder did not originate there beside the altar, but it originated, like all sin, in the heart of the sinner. There is a difference in the hearts of these brothers, hence a difference in the worship of the two; and this difference, recognized by Cain, produced in his heart that spirit and sin of jealousy, and he wishes to destroy him who represents God, and thus destroy God's plan and give his own way free course in his life and heart.

It is the nature of sin to destroy, if possible, every force and agency which opposes it. Here the long conflict between right and wrong, if not begun, is encouraged; the conflict between righteousness and unrighteousness; the opposition of godliness and ungodliness; the antagonism between true religion and vain religion; the warfare between the doctrines and commandments of men and the way and wisdom of God is begun. The enmity, strife, and warfare between the world, the flesh, and the devil, on one side, and the Spirit, God, and all that is holy, on the other, began here or had an early beginning in the heart and life of Cain. It seems that we can see more clearly in the life of Cain, with its brief biography, the evil of sin and the work of Satan than we can see even in the first sinners, Adam and Eve. It seems that holy writ has passed over, after giving a brief account of Adam and Eve's sin, the awful consequences of sin, and waited until Cain's sin is recorded to give the greatest emphasis possible to the exceeding sinfulness of sin.

Cain was not only a partner with Satan, working for his own destruction and death, but he was "of the evil one." "Not as Cain was of the evil one, and slew his brother. And wherefore slew he him? Because his works were evil, and his brother's righteous." (1 John 3: 12.) John here states that "Cain was of the evil one," and that 'his works were evil, and his brother's righteous." This sets forth clearly the fierce conflict between good and evil, right and wrong. We are told, also, that the origin of the evil with Cain is the devil. Abel stood there before the altar in full, simple faith, representing God and God's will; Cain stood there with the delegated authority to represent Satan and his will at the altar. He is of the evil one, and as much of the evil one as was Abel, his brother, of the righteous one; and when the two, so diametrically opposed because each represents a different spirit, stand at the altar, there comes up all the bitterness and hatred of Satan in the heart of Cain and it is hurled with satanic force against the representative of God's will. He hated his brother. "Woe unto them! for they went in the way of Cain." (Jude 11.) These evil ones Jude represents as going in the way of Cain, hating their brethren. So the warfare between good and evil, once begun, continues with never-ceasing activities until the final victory of good over evil through our Lord Jesus Christ shall have been won.

Southern Fields.

BY S. P. PITTMAN.

Both the missionary and the congregations having mission work done are often confronted with the question of the "open door." It is often difficult to determine upon the field of labor. If one goes North, it may not be inviting, but the North is needing the simple gospel. The East has been sorely neglected, for it is so much easier to "go West." Much has been said and written about the Southern field, but all has not been said yet; for the South is large and needy, especially in some parts.

It is natural for one to be particularly interested in the field of his own labors. If he is in Georgia, he thinks that the needlest and the most prominent field; if in Alabama, he considers that State the most important. The same might be said of Mississippi, Louisiana, South Carolina, North Carolina, or Florida. We should not permit the great needs of one State to blind us to the needs of the other States. We are prone to be too "local" in our conceptions and our desires. How often have you heard a brother or sister say: "I just know we need the gospel here worse than any place in the world. There is not such a prejudiced place, I know, anywhere else!"

This summer I have been in Alabama and Mississippi both. From hearsay, observation, and experience, I know that the harvest is ripe in these two States, and the laborers are few.

I held two meetings in the Southern Alabama territory, and find it a promising field. Brother H. R. Rogers is located at Fort Deposit, with great prospects before him. With continued cooperation between him and the congregations that are especially interested in his work, there can be great things done. Greenville, the county seat of Butler County, is an excellent opening. There I met Brother Carl Barnette, whose labors in the gospel are hampered by ill health. There I met, also, Brother Albert Woodroof, who is a preacher, but does not know it. At Fort Deposit I had the pleasure of meeting and being with that man of God, Brother Samuel Jordan, who has labored much in South Alabama. Brother John T. Smithson, of the Highland Church, Montgomery, was also a source of inspiration in the meeting.

In Southern Mississippi I was in the portion of the State where Dr. T. F. Dunn, an ex-preacher, and Prof. E. E. Sewell, a former Bible-School teacher, are located. Time will be required to establish the cause in that vicinity, but it can and must be done.

Every one cannot look after every part of the South, 1 know, but we can all be interested in the entire world field, and, when opportunity appears, show our interest.

A Message of Cheer to the Readers of the Gospel Advocate.

Dear Brethren in Christ: On last Lord's day (August 4), in the morning, I preached for the brethren in Nankin, in Ashland County, Ohio, and in the evening I preached at the mission point at Ashland, the county seat. We had two grand and interesting meetings on that day. At the evening meeting two noble souls—a man and his wife—came forward and publicly confessed their faith in Christ, and that night I buried them with their Lord in baptism and they were raised to walk with him in newness of life.

What made the whole affair such a happy one was that the man and his wife was the son and daughter-in-law of Brother G. F. Strickling, of blessed memory, a strong pioneer preacher of the word-and one, too, who was in all things a faithful man-with whom I, in the beginning of my work as a preacher, was associated much in the work of the Lord, having been with him in many protracted meetings. I just thought on Lord's-day evening when Brother Strickling stood up and made the good confession and then went forward and obeyed his Lord in baptism, if the sainted dead were as much interested in the salvation of men as the angels are, then the happy spirit of old Brother G. F. Strickling certainly did rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory. I do thank the Giver of every good gift for the work of last Lord's day at Nankin and Ashland. I also thank the Lord for such elders over the church of God as Brother M. Farnsworth. To the Lord be all the praise for such noble men in these days that try A. A. BUNNER. men's souls.

Assurance.

BY S. W. BERRYMAN.

The normal condition of every true Christian is not doubt, but certainty. The Christian stands assured of God's promises, having accepted his word. Instead of being in doubt, he is sure-he knows. Fears, dreads, and doubts do not darken his path as they once did; but happiness, peace, and hope fill his heart. Having the assurance of God's forgiveness and acceptance, he presses forward toward the goal with a happy heart. Will he miss it? Nay, impossible, if he "hold fast the confidence and the rejoicing of the hope firm unto the end." (Heb. 3: 6.) The Christian's heart is filled with the "assurance of hope," and this he must maintain to the end. (Heb. 6: 11.) The closing of each day brings joy and gladness to the Christian because he has peace and assurance. At night he can lie down and rest without a fear or dread, being assured that if the death angel knocks at his door before the dawn of another day all will be well. What a blessing that this is true! Peace accompanies the Christian through life, and when death comes he is not dismayed, but, like Paul, he can say: "I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand." (2 Tim. 4: 6.) "I am ready to die." (Acts 21: 13.) In that hour he can look with the eye of faith to the rest that remains for the people of God. (Heb. 4: 9.) This, people with "defiled garments" cannot do. May our faith, hope, and zeal grow stronger, that we may work harder to bring others to Christ, that they, too, may enjoy the blessings of assur-

In the presence of the awful reality of the Incarnation, there is no room left for "shadows of religion;" and we commemorate it year by year that we may try to impress more and more upon our minds how stern as well as how gracious a truth it is. It can be the foundation of no idle and dreamy and sentimental religion. So tremendous a fact in the history of mankind cannot be consistent with any religious system or any religious practice which does not feel its keenness and its force. It is too great, too definite, too solid a thing for a religion of words, and phrases, and formulas, repeated till they lose their meaning; for a religion of understandings, and fictions, and conventionalities; for a religion of mere forms and orderly impressive ceremonies. If it has doctrines, they mean what they say. If it has sacraments, they are no figures of things past and absent, but assurances of things present. If it has worship, it sets us before the throne of God. If he, the Lord who "humbled himself," has promised to be with us, he is, indeed, with us; if he has told us anything, we must take him at his word.-R. W. Church.

AT HOME AND ABROAD

- F. W. Smith has gone to Arkansas for a meeting.
- H. W. Wrye reports an exceptionally good meeting at Smyrna, Tenn. There had been eighteen additions at last report.
- J. S. Trotter has closed a good meeting at Clearview, with six added to the church. He is now in a meeting at Bending Chestnut Schoolhouse, near Boston, Tenn.
- J. C. McQuiddy will be absent from the office for several days while taking a much-needed rest and recreation. We ask the indulgence of correspondents during his absence.
- From J. B. Nelson, Dallas, Texas, August 14: "I closed a good meeting last Sunday night at Huckabay, with six baptisms and one restoration. I am to begin at Itasca next Friday night, and Tolbert F. Stoyall will lead the sones."
- L. L. Yeagley, of Nashville, Tenn., reports two good meetings. One was at Nunnelly, in Hickman County, and resulted in twenty-three baptisms; the other was at Shady Grove Schoolhouse, and resulted in twenty-one baptisms and one restoration.

From Ben West, Ennis, Texas, August 14: "Large crowds at Ennis Avenue Sunday; one added. Three thousand at funeral at 4 P.M.—one of our young married ladies killed in an auto accident. I preached two nights at Bristol, with two additions."

From J. W. Dunn, Rives, Tenn., August 16: "We closed a very interesting meeting here last night. These are faithful Christians. I shall begin a meeting with the church at Trezevant next Sunday, after which I shall return to my work at Paris, Texas."

Frank B. Shepherd writes from Lometa, Texas, August 12: "I have just closed a meeting five miles west of Frederick, Okla., and shall begin again at Millville, Ark., on August 16, to continue ten days. Do not forget the Forest Vale mission and Brother Sherriff's needs. Truly, 'Greater Things for God' should be our motto."

- F. B. Shepherd has undertaken the work of receiving and forwarding funds to John Sherriff, our missionary at Bulawayo, South Africa. He intends to make regular reports of this work, and we hope there may be many favorable responses. The work deserves to be supported. Address Brother Shepherd at Lometa, Texas.
- H. Leo Boles is in a very interesting meeting with the Bethel congregation, near Greenwood, Tenn. There have been four baptisms so far. Large crowds are attending both day and night services. This is a good, strong church. Brother Boles reports that there is a fine prospect for a good opening at the David Lipscomb College.

Eight persons were baptized during A. B. Lipscomb's meeting at Franklin, Tenn. This church was never more efficient than at the present time. The results of F. W. Smith's ministry are everywhere in evidence. Recently the congregation, without any special exploitation, raised five hundred dollars in one day to take care of French orphans.

It is very gratifying to report that Joe McPherson, who has been confined to his room for the past five weeks with dropsy, is now improving slowly. He can dress himself and walk across the room without assistance. Let me suggest that a good letter of encouragement from the brethren will be appreciated by him. Address Joe McPherson, Madison. Tenn.

From G. F. Gibbs, Route 6, Macedonia, Ala., August 12: "I have just closed a meeting at Craigfield, in Williamson County, Tenn. Fine interest and increasing audiences. Three additions. I am now in a meeting at this place, with a splendid beginning. There are lots of good people here anxious to hear the good news. The Lord willing, I will preach at Leoma, Tenn., next Sunday."

From J. C. Mosley, Whitwell, Tenn., August 16: "I preached at Daus last Saturday night and Sunday and baptized one person. I have been at Cottage Station and Center Point a few days, helping Brother Taylor in a tent meeting. Ten baptized and several confessed their faults. I will go from here to a point north of Pikeville with the tent. Brother Taylor goes to New Liberty, I am going to Tracy City to baptize a lady. Brethren, clean up and adorn yourselves for the coming of our Savior."

From J. H. Hines, Hopkinsville, Ky., August 17: "I have just closed a good meeting at Shady Grove, in Hart County. Ten were added (two from the Methodist Church and one from the Baptists who claimed scriptural baptism) and two confessed their sins. This is one of the best churches. I have visited for some time. The leaders take the lead and the people offer themselves willingly. This was my second meeting with this church. I shall go back next year, the Lord willing. My next meeting is at Union Hill, in Trigg County."

From Mrs. T. B. Larimore, Amarillo, Texas, August 12: "We reached Amarillo yesterday morning at half past seven o'clock, and our meeting here began at eleven. We have two services a day—at 10 A.M. and 8:45 P.M. on week days, at 11 A.M. and 8:45 P.M. on Sundays. We had fairly good audiences yesterday and this morning. Amarillo is a pretty little city of about twenty thousand. The weather here is delightful—a cool breeze blowing all the time. Mr. Larimore and I are both feeling well, and expect to enjoy our sojourn here."

From D. S. Nelms, Pocahontas, Tenn., August 16: "S. P. Copeland, of Kendrick, Miss., recently held one of the best meetings we have had at Essary Springs Church in a long time. Eight confessed their Savior and were baptized (two of these from the Methodists and one from the Baptists) and two were restored. The church was greatly strengthened and encouraged as the result of his labors. The audiences were large and continued to grow until the last service. Brother Copeland is an earnest preacher of the word, a splendid Christian gentleman, and is greatly admired by the people of our community."

From H. I. Copeland, Ripley, Tenn., August 16: "I began a meeting at Fowlkes on the first Sunday in this month and preached twice each day for one week. Interest and attendance were good and eleven were added to the church. I began a meeting here last Sunday and will continue it ten days or two weeks. From here I shall go to Curve for a meeting. Last month I finished my regular work in Alabama and held a meeting at Finley. In September I shall return to Haleyville, Ala., for a meeting; also to my third annual meeting at Forest Home, near Franklin, Tenn. In God's vineyard there is need of laborers. I am glad that I am permitted to work for him."

A. G. Freed writes from Henderson, Tenn.: "The series of meetings with the church at Puryear closed on Sunday evening, June 21—eight days in all. The audiences were good and interest great throughout. The meeting should have continued. There are many faithful ones in that community. We have a neat house of worship, pleasantly located, in the little town. The surrounding country is pretty and the citizenship the best. We are sure to hear of greater things from this church. My stay was pleasant. I made my home with Brother and Sister J. G. Littleton. It was all any one could ask. I hope to be able to return to work with this church in another meeting. The coming session of the National Teachers' Normal and Business College, Henderson, Tenn., opening on September 11, promises to be fine. These are great times for young people to prepare for the wonderful places calling. Have you seen the late catalogue? Write for one."

Claude Hall, Tigrett, Tenn., August 17: "Crockett County is awake to preaching the gospel. Brother Srygley has just closed a very fine meeting at Cross Roads, four miles west of Bells, with three added. W. H. Owen is at Nance, four miles from Alamo, with large crowds, fine singing, and much interest every way. Phillips began a meeting in Alexander We hear that the meeting started well. Brother We hear that the meeting for this meeting. He used M. Phillips began a meeting in Alamo last Thursday Phillips was called from Florida for this meeting. to preach in this county, and did more, perhaps, than any other person for the starting of the loyal worship in Alamo. They, no doubt, will have a splendid meeting there. I am in the midst of an ideal meeting at Bethel, three miles east of Tigrett. Large crowds are attending, the best singing I ever heard, and more interest than is usually manifested in meetings. We have fourteen to baptize this aft-We are planning for greater work next year. One ernoon. man has proposed to purchase a tent to do mission work, the rest of the county will seat and light the tent and carry on the work for the county. The war need not lessen our ardor for the spreading of the truth. If there ever was a time in which we needed the simple gospel without any frills and foolishness, that time is now. Just a little more effort is required to be true to Christ than in normal times. No people except Christians are willing to keep the service going. Let us do our part."

Is It Necessary to Do the Specific Act Which Constitutes Obedience to a Command of God?

BY M. C. K.

Having seen that the English equivalent for the Greek term "baptize" is the term "immerse," it clearly follows, as we have already seen, that one has not obeyed the command to be baptized until one has been immersed. If facts are to be respected as we find them both in the Bible and in all philology, escape from this conclusion is simply impossible. This is not the opinion of some wise man, nor the consensus of opinion of different wise men; but it is a fact, clearly and fully established, and so conceded by the world's scholarship to-day. Hence the one remaining question, which claims and should have our serious attention, is the question placed at the head of this article. Is it necessary in any instance to do the specific act which constitutes obedience to a command of God? That specific act, in the case now under consideration, is immersion; but is it necessary, in the case of obedience to any of the commands of God, to do the specific act which constitutes that obedience? As the Bible is our only proper guide in all such matters, the only way to settle the question aright is to see what the Bible says on obedience itself, regardless of any special command.

In order that our readers may see the very serious and solemn light in which the matter stands, we shall now place before them the very words of the Bible on obedience in general, which, of course, must be applied to obedience to any command in particular. God has spoken specifically on the subject both in the Old Testament and in the New, and we now invite attention to his own words: "If ye will obey my voice indeed, and keep my covenant, then ye shall be mine own possession from among all peoples." (Ex. 19: 5.) "If ye walk in my statutes, and keep my commandments, and do them; then I will give your rains in their season, and the land shall yield its increase, and the trees of the field shall yield their fruit." (Lev. 26: 3.) "Beware lest thou forget Jehovah thy God, in not keeping his commandments, and his ordinances, and his statutes, which I command thee this day." (Deut. 8; 11.) "Hath Jehovah as great delight in burnt offerings and sacrifices, as in obeying the voice of Jehovah? Behold to obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams." (1 Sam. 15: 22.) "Jehovah will again rejoice over thee for good, as he rejoiced over thy fathers; if thou shalt obey the voice of Jehovah thy God, to keep his commandments and his statutes which are written in this book of the law." (Deut. 30: 9, 10.) "Obey, I beseech thee, the voice of Jehovah in that which I speak unto thee: so it shall be well with thee, and thy soul shall live." (Jer. 38: 20.) "Ye leave the commandment of God, and hold fast the tradition of men." (Mark 7: 8.) "But Peter and the apostles answered and said, We must obey God rather than men." (Acts 5: 29.) "To you that are afflicted rest with us, at the revelation of the Lord Jesus from heaven with the angels of his power in flaming fire, rendering vengeance to them that know not God, and to them that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus." (2 Thess. 1: 7, 8.) "And having been made perfect, he became unto all them that obey him the author of eternal salvation." (Heb. 5: 9.)

Now, in the light of such an array of plain and unmistakable passages from the word of God-passages containing God's own specific declaration of his will-what answer shall we give to the question at the head of this article? Yea, what answer must we give, if we are to show proper respect for God himself? No candid an thoughtful mind would even attempt to give any other than an affirmative answer. This position is either true or the language of the Bible is positively misleading and the entire subject of obedience to God as set forth therein is a hoax. The man or woman whose heart is touched and won by the ineffable love of God, as expressed by the gentle submission of his Son in yielding to the death of the cross, and who appreciates the salvation thus purchased, is glad to yield obedience to his command to be "buried with him through baptism into death" and to rise again to "walk in newness of life;" and as the body is buried beneath the yielding wave, the soul is committed to the future leadership of the buried and risen Lord. Although the ceremony is marked by the greatest simplicity, it is, nevertheless, a most beautiful expression of humility and of a soul surrendering and yielding itself to God.

When Will God Stop the War?

BY E. A. E.

Beginning here where the article of last week left off. further attention is called to Mr. Blocker's declaration that "the pulpit is challenged by the prevailing religious uncertainty to make known the ways of God and offer light and leading to those whose faith has suffered eclipse."

Why should war or any other evil eclipse the faith of some and cause a prevalence of "religious uncertainty?" Because some lack faith in God to begin with, and that which they call faith is only men's opinions and conceptions of God and his will. There is a vast difference between the conceptions many have of God-the God they have made-and Jehovah himself, "the true and living God," the God of the Bible. Men make gods to suit themselves, to fit their own conceptions of a supreme being, and to comply with their own feelings, ambitions, and lusts. For instance-and I speak advisedly and in "the light and leading" of the word of God-I no more believe that the Kaiser's god and the Kaiser's religion are the God and religion of Christ than I believe Baal or Mars is God and Baalism and Kaiserism are Christianity. In discarding "the gentle Nazarene," the Germans have rejected "the God and Father" of Jesus, the Christ, and have made a god of conquest and greed, of other lusts and base passions, upon whose altar they have sacrificed millions of human lives and poured rivers of human blood. Faith comes by hearing the word of God. The Bible reveals God and his wonderful attributes, and all who do not accept this revelation do not believe in the God of the Bible. Jehovah, "the true and living God." "Religious uncertainty" prevails because many seem not to know "the ways of God" and, therefore, do not believe that he now governs the universe-rules all the worlds and systems of worlds in the magnitude and amplitude of his creation, and yet sees every sparrow on earth that falls and beholds "all the sons of men." (Ps. 33: 13.) In Matt. 24, while foretelling the destruction of Jerusalem and the coming of false Christs and false prophets, wars and rumors of wars, famines and earthquakes, and great tribulations-"for nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom"-and that his disciples "shall be hated of all the nations" for his name's sake, Jesus says:

And there shall many stumble, and shall deliver up one another, and shall hate one another. And many false prophets shall arise, and shall lead many astray. And because iniquity shall be multiplied, the love of the many shall wax cold.

Like causes produce like effects. It is grievous that some brethren and sisters now slander others, have others, and threaten to deliver others up. Hatred has displaced in their hearts brotherly love; and the spirit of the world, the spirit of Christ. According to the experience and testimony of not a few earnest preachers, there has been a great cooling of zeal and waxing cold of love. Have not these sad effects been produced by the causes Jesus gives? God, Christ, the Holy Spirit, the kingdom of heaven, and "the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace" in the church are supreme and must come first. Everything must be sacrificed upon this altar. Every one knows the first and great commandment is to love God with all the powers of body and mind and soul. "Seek ye first his kingdom, and his righteousness." There can never come a time when this must not be done. It is a pity and shame and sin against "the Prince of Peace" for brethren and sisters-the children of God-to allow bitterness and strife and the spirit of "the world" to enter into the church, drive out the spirit of "the gentle Nazarene," set Christians at variance with another, destroy their faith and zeal and love, and send them to perdition. Many who should be devoting all their time and powers of mind and soul to the destruction of this "religious uncertainty" so prevalent, to the building up of the church in the faith and hope of the gospel, and offering "light and leading" to the people by teaching "the ways of God," are preaching something else and biting and devouring others.

Zephaniah prophesied in the time of Josiah, king of Judah, and before the destruction of Nineveh. He warned Judah and Jerusalem, said the great and terrible day of God's wrath was at hand, and urged Judah to repent. He toretold the downfall of neighboring nations, and declared that the faithful remnant of Judah would be protected and saved. Judah was to be destroyed because her princes were "roaring lions;" her judges, "wolves;" her prophets, "light and treacherous;" her priests had "profaned the sanctuary" and "done violence to the law;" and the people had "corrupted all their doings" and "sinned against Jehovah." God foretold that he would punish and destroy the neighboring and other nations "because they have [had] reproached and magnified themselves against the people of Jehovah's house."

Therefore wait ye for me, saith Jehovah, until the day that I rise up to the prey; for my determination is to gather the nations, that I may assemble the kingdoms, to pour upon them mine indignation, even all my flerce anger; for all the earth shall be devoured with the fire of my jealousy.

Read the book thoughtfully several times; it contains only three short chapters. All who would know and teach "the ways of God"—his dealing with the nations of earth—all who would "offer light and leading" to the people and remove this prevalent "religious uncertainty"—should study all the Bible reveals of God's power and rule over the various nations of earth at all times.

Yet, in the midst of all that God was then doing with Judah and all other nations and was foretelling what he intended to do, some said: "Jehovah will not do good, neither will he do evil." (Chapter 1: 12.) Just so now, many, who seem wiser than God, declare that God is "hands off," that he is not overruling the warring nations now, and that he now has nothing to do with the affairs of men. All this comes from unbelief, from rejection of the Bible, and from serving a homemade god. All such people have given up the God of the Bible, the true and living God, the all-wise and all-powerful God, and the God who is LIGHT and LOVE, and have manufactured a god to suit themselves. Their god is either musing, or has stepped aside, or is on a journey, or is asleep, having nothing to do now with the affairs of men. He created all things, set them going, and will be present at the end of the world; but between these two periods he does nothing. God declared to Judah that he would search Jerusalem with a lamp and would punish the ones who taught that he would "not do good, neither would be do evil," by making their wealth "a spoil," "their houses a desolation," and by giving their vineyards to others. In this way God demonstrated to them that he has something to do with the nations of earth.

This idea that God is "hands off" is aimost equal to atheism, at least, from the beginning of creation to the end of the world. There had as well be no God of mercy and love, wisdom and power, as a god who has nothing to do with the earth and its inhabitants. How can God forgive sins, if he takes no notice of and does not act now in reference to the lives of men? Has God made his dealings with the inhabitants of the earth a kind of slot-machine affair, into which hmen drop an act of obedience or prayer, turn a crank, and out drops a pardon or some other blessing? Is this the way all things work together for good to those who love God, who are the called according to his purpose (Rom. 8: 28), or in which he makes the wrath of men to praise him (Ps. 76: 10)?

The God that made the world and all things therein, he, being Lord of heaven and earth, dwelleth not in temples made with hands; neither is he served by men's hands, as though he needed anything, seeing he himself giveth to all life, and breath, and all things; and he made of one every nation of men to dwell on all the face of the earth, having determined their appointed seasons, and the bounds of their habitation; that they should seek God, if haply they might feel after him and find him, though he is not far from each one of us; for in him we live, and move, and have our being. (Acts 17: 24-28.)

This passage states the following: (1) God made the world and all things in it; (2) he is Lord—that is, ruler of heaven and earth; (3) he gives life and breath and all things to all men—to the wicked as well as to the good; (4) he not only made all nations, but has "determined their appointed seasons, and the bounds of their habitation;" (5) he desires that all nations should seek him (as the great commission declares); (6) he is not far from each individual—"each one of us;" (7) in him each one lives and moves and has his being.

God saw Hagar; he sees all persons now, knows all their thoughts, hears all they say, notes all their deeds, and will hold all responsible at the judgment. God heard the words spoken by the king of Syria in his tent. (2 Kings 6: 12.) God's children are invited and encouraged to roll all their burdens upon him (Ps. 55: 22) and to cast all their anxiety upon him, because he cares for them (1 Pet. 5: 7).

Like as a father pitieth his children, so Jehovah pitieth them that fear him. (Ps. 103: 13.)

The angel of Jehovah encampeth round about them that fear him, and delivereth them. (Ps. 34: 7.)

All God's children are exhorted to come boldly, or "in full assurance of faith," through Christ to his throne of grace, that they may obtain mercy and find grace to help in their time of need. (Heb. 4: 15, 16.)

GOD USES ONE NATION TO CORRECT OR PUNISH ANOTHER.

No one can read the Bible with any degree of care and fail to see that God uses one nation to correct, to chastise, to punish, and even to destroy another, as the good of humanity requires. This lesson has been made prominent through the story of Joseph and his brethren, the Pharaohs, the Amalekites, the nations of Canaan, the kings of Judah and Israel, the kings of Syria, the kings of Assyria, Nebuchadnezzar, Belshazzar, Cyrus, Darius—the whole Babylonian empire, the Medo-Persian empire, the Grecian empire, the Roman empire, and their downfall.

Study seriously the following:

The sentence is by the decree of the watchers, and the demand by the word of the holy ones; to the intent that the living may know that the Most High ruleth in the kingdom of men, and giveth it to whomsoever he will, and setteth up over it the lowest ["basest"—Authorized Version] of men. (Dan. 4: 17.)

And he changeth the times and the seasons; he removeth kings, and setteth up kings; he giveth wisdom unto the wise, and knowledge to them that have understanding; he revealeth the deep and secret things; he knoweth what is in the darkness, and the light dwelleth with him. (Dan 2: 21, 22.)

I bless the Most High, and I praise and honor him that liveth forever; for his dominion is an everlasting dominion, and his kingdom from generation to generation; and all the inhabitants of the earth are reputed as nothing; and he doeth according to his will in the army of heaven, and among the inhabitants of the earth; and none can stay his hand, or say unto him, What doest thou? (Dan. 4: 34, 35.)

No power on earth opposed to God's plans and purposes and the performance of his will can dictate to him or interfere with him in his great and gracious, just and righteous, work. One should be afraid to pray against or work against God's purposes.

For all his works are truth, and his ways justice; and those that walk in pride he is able to abase. (Dan. 4: 37.)

Jesus to-day is "the ruler of the kings of the earth" (Rev. 1: 5); "far above all rule, and authority, and power, and dominion, and every name that is named, not only in this world, but also in that which is to come" (Eph. 1: 21); "the King of kings, and Lord of lords" (1 Tim. 6: 15). Of what kings is Jesus the King, and of what lords is he the Lord, if not the kings and rulers of earth?

Do we really believe all that these passages of Scripture declare concerning God's overruling power and disposition of the kings and nations of the earth? Do we teach them and thus "offer light and leading" to the people? Or do we for some reason refuse or fail to even read them and others like them to the people? How can a preacher of the gospel fail to teach "the whole counsel of God" on this and on all subjects?

Attention will be called next week to a few examples of God's using nations to accomplish his purpose.

Two Elders Reply to Brother Record.

BY J. C. M'Q.

On page 815 of this issue will be found a reply to the question of Brother Record, "What was my sin?" by Elders J. W. Duncan and G. W. Graves. We cheerfully give this statement from the elders, and, having done so, we feel that we have discharged our duty to all parties concerned. We had hoped that the statement of the elders would adjust the unfortunate affair and bring about a reconciliation of all parties involved. We regret, however, that our hope has not been realized. The statement is signed by only two of the elders, one of the elders, Brother Thompson, failing to sign.

Another very serious disagreement is Brethren Duncan and Graves' charge that Brother Record refused to retract or apologize. Brother Record said in our issue of August 1: "I appeared before the church and apologized for the wrong I had done." He also says in the same article: "I wrote Brother Ratcliffe as a preacher brother in regard to the condition of things at Lone Oak, and hence committed my sin." He has thus clearly confessed and apologized for the wrong that he has done, making his confession first to the church and then stating to the readers of the Gospel Advocate that he had sinned and that he had apologized for his sin to the church at Lone Oak. I agree with the elders that if he stated facts concerning the church and the elders, he should not have apologized, but am sure that the church would not be justified in withdrawing from him on account of his readiness, willing ness, and effort to bring about a reconciliation.

The editors of the Advocate, having discharged their full duty to all parties, have neither the time nor the disposition to sit in judgment on the action of the parties concerned. Our interest in the matter is that of any other Christian-to try to save the church and to encourage the brethren to be guided by "it is written" in the worship. I would suggest that the elders at Lone Oak, in view of the fact that they are unable to agree and bring about a scriptural settlement, invite three or five scriptural elders from neighboring churches to hear the facts, present the matter to them, and allow them to render a scriptural decision in harmony with the facts presented, and that all agree to be governed thereby. The Advocate will cheerfully publish the findings of these elders, provided the church wishes us to do so and will furnish us with a copy of said findings. All parties concerned should remember that they must stand before the judgment bar of God, and, therefore, should determine to right all wrongs and to bring themselves in strict harmony with the word of God. We shall be glad, as Christians, to do anything that we can to bring about a scriptural reconciliation. All parties concerned freely admit that a bad state of affairs exists and that this should be corrected. In the language of the Holy Spirit, I would admonish all concerned to "put on therefore, as God's elect, holy and beloved, a heart of compassion, kindness, lowliness, meekness, long-suffering; forbearing one another, and forgiving each other, if any man have a complaint against any; even as the Lord forgave you, so also do ye: and above all these things put on love, which is the bond of perfectness. And let the peace of Christ rule in your hearts, to the which also ye were called in one body; and be ye thankful." (Col. 3: 12-15.)

Since writing the foregoing article the following statement from a number of elders, exonerating Brother Record, has been received for publication:

We, the eiders of churches of Christ in Western Kentucky and Southern Illinois, by knowing Brother W. A. Record in person, his manner of life, and the great work he has done and is doing in preaching the gospel, feel grieved at the withdrawal notice which appeared in the Gospel Advocate of May 30 concerning him. We believe Brother Record made right his wrong in the matter, and do not believe the church at Lone Oak should have taken the step it did. So we commend Brother Record to the brotherhood as a Christian gentleman and an esteemed preacher of the gospel.

"Born of Water and of the Spirit."

BY E. G. S.

The word of God says: "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." (John 3: 5.) This is largely figurative and has to be understood as such. A grown-up man cannot be born in a literal sense, but in a figurative sense he can. A grown-up man can become a Christian by obeying the gospel, and that is what this passage is talking about. In becoming a Christian one passes into a new state, or relationship. When a child is born into this world, it enters into an entirely new relationship. The apostle here uses this fact to illustrate the matter of becoming a Christian, and it is a very forcible illustration. When a man becomes a Christian by obeying the gospel of Christ, he passes from his old relationship, in which he was simply aid only a man of the world, into the kingdom of Christ, an entirely new relationship, which he had never before enloyed. There are so many things in the matter of becoming a Christian that are similar to a natural birth that this action is called a "birth."

There are many things in the Bible that are like many things that are in the natural, literal world. Hence inspired men often illustrated Bible teaching by occurrences of this world and this life. To be "born of water" is to be baptized in water, and to be "born of the Spirit" is to become a Christian by the teaching of the Holy Spirit. Hence to be "born of water and of the Spirit" is to be born of water as taught by the Holy Spirit. When an alien sinner repents and is baptized as taught in the New Testament, he is then born of water as taught by the Holy Spirit: and that is the plain meaning of the expression, "born of water and of the Spirit." Without the teaching of the Spirit in the New Testament, we would never have known anything about the matter of the new birth, of being "born of water and of the Spirit;" but with that plain teaching, it is all very plain.

If all people would take the New Testament at just what it says, there would not be so much division and strife in the religious world; but when people undertake to give what they call the "spiritual meaning" of the New Testament, they fall into division, strife, and contention about the meaning of the word of God. There is really no room for division over what the word of God says, but there will likely never be any end to division over the opinions of men as to what the word of God means. All such opinions should be set aside and everything should be settled by the word of God.

Men will likely never cease to have some opinions about things that are not plainly expressed in the Bible; but these opinions ought to be kept and handled as private property, and not handled and talked about as matters of faith. The word of God is plain on all matters of duty, and its simple statements should be believed and handled and talked about as matters of faith. In fact, there is but little room for matters of opinion in the practical teaching of the New Testament. Faith in what the word of God says is what is mainly needed. We can generally understand what the word of God says if we study it as we do other books. All matters that are plainly expressed are worth much study and investigation, and we should study them till we are satisfied that we understand them; but there is not much to be gained in the study of mere matters of opinion. All opinions, when weighed in scriptural balances, will be found wanting. The truth as expressed in the plain words of the New Testament is what we need. for the salvation of our souls depends upon believing and obeying the plainly expressed requirement of that book.

Certainly, then, we need to study and believe what is written in that sacred volume, the New Testament. That is the most important volume to us that can be found in the whole world, and the one volume the rejection of which means the rejection of the salvation of our souls. There is no other book that we can find in all the world that can bring salvation to our souls but the New Testament. The gospel plan of salvation is fully made known in that sacred volume. It may be quoted in many other books, but is to be credited to the New Testament. That is a book of divine authority, and full credit must be given to what it says. If we neglect or reject the salvation that is offered in the New Testament, then we prepare for eternal ruin without remedy. There is no other plan of salvation. But if people will obey the gospel as written in the New Testament, their salvation is sure and they may feel perfectly safe in regard to that most sacred interest. In view of the importance of the salvation of the soul, it seems strange to see so many people neglecting it, as if they had no souls to be lost. Even some that obey far enough to become Christians neglect to live a faithful Christian life and thereby defeat the promise of eternal life; for none have the promise of the glory home except those that continue faithful to the end of this mortal life. So let us all watch and strive and pray that we may be able to walk in the narrow way until death shall come and take us over to the other side.

TRAINING LITTLE CHILDREN By DOROTHY CANFIELD FISHER.

Article 22.

Educational Material Can Be Bought Much More Easily Than Mothers Realize,

In even the thriftiest and most economical family more money is spent foolishly on meaningless, flimsy toys for children than parents realize. The familiar five-cent bag of candy, which many country children expect on a trip to town, would buy a box of colored crayons, which would be a wellspring of joy and profit to them for days and days. The cheap, twenty-five-cent, gaudily dressed doll, which goes to pieces after a day or so of vigorous play, costs as much as five pounds of potter's clay, which would make innumerable toy dishes and be the source of incalculable educational advancement. If the mother, away on a shopping trip, can resist the temptation to "take the children something" in the shape of a poorly constructed woolly lamb, which loses its legs in the first half-hour's play; If she can persuade the visiting aunt to let her spend the money which was to have bought candy, very bad for little teeth; if she can head off the bachelor friend from bestowing a mechanical top which becomes uninteresting after the second day, she will soon have money enough to buy a treasure store of profitable educational playthings which will last through the children's early years.

Colored crayons cost five cents a box, and for another nickel a good supply of wrapping paper can be bought from the grocer, which, cut into large, square sheets, furnishes the background for much "drawing" and coloring by artists of three and tour years. They can be shown how to draw around a drinking glass or a small plate to make circles; around a block to make a square; around a salt cellar to make an oblong; and they delight in coloring the designs thus formed. This is fine preparatory training for writing. These colored designs can afterwards be cut out by the children with blunt-pointed scissors (which can be bought for ten cents a pair), and this furnishes another exercise for the hand. The general opinion is that children under five years are not able to use scissors, but there are many exceptions to this rule.

As the children grow older, they like to change from colored crayons to water colors, a box of which can be bought for ten cents. Such a box is, next to modeling clay, the most lasting satisfaction to children, and the uses to which it can be put are not to be counted. The spools which they have been playing with can be colored brightly and made into necklaces. All the designs they have made and colored with colored crayons can be colored with water color with fresh pleasures. Old magazines with large-size pictures can be colored; and the children, if a bit encouraged, are very apt to make large drawings on the big sheets of wrapping paper and color those. Paper dolls cut out of fashion magazines and colored by the children not only eost nothing, but give excellent practice to hand and eye. The mother should remember that any child who has had much practice in handling pencils and brushes has an immense advantage over others when he goes to school and begins to learn to read and write. After the child passes his fourth birthday, his mother should take special pains to encourage him to use his fingers in drawing and coloring, although never in small designs, which might tire his eyes.

On the whole, perhaps the very best use that the country mother can make of money saved by economies on candy and flimsy toys is to buy herself a few good books, which will give her valuable hints on her new profession of motherhood. She does not dream of trying to get along without a good cook book. Why should she think she can manage all the details of another new business without any instruction? Let her, as a matter of course, put on the kitchen shelf beside the cook book one or two good mother hooks, which she can take down and dip into at odd minutes as she waits for the water to boil or the oven to heat. One of these books will cost her but a two-cent stamp, and if she reads it carefully will give her innumerable suggestions. This is the catalogue of any firm handling kindergarten material, such as the Milton Bradley Company, Springfield, Mass., and E. Steiger & Co., 49 Murray Street, New York. Most of the country mothers know nothing of the material sold by such firms, and will be surprised to find that valuable educational material is offered at prices which make it far cheaper than common toys bought at the stores, and that she will need no training to make excellent use of much that is intended for class use. At the back of such a catalogue is a list of very inexpensive books for mothers which will give suggestions for paper cutting, clay modeling, and draw-

But the great, great beauty and value of country life for the child is too big a theme to do more than touch upon in so condensed a sketch. This is, of course, his closeness to nature and all sorts of natural processes which go on about him. But even here he needs his mother's help, for without it he must lose much time in misdirected effort. When he is so tiny that he can only look on, his mother, if she is wise, will see to it that he has a chance to look on; that he sees the horses watered, the cows milked, the chickens fed, the garden planted, the butter made, the washing done, and the hay cut. As fast as he can understand, she will give him a simple explanation of all these vital events; and as soon as he is strong enough to take part in these activities, she will use her ingenuity to devise ways for him to take a genuine part in the family life. Of course he will bother more than he helps at first, and nobody but his mother will have the nationce to respect his bungling attempts to join the work done about him; but to her they will be inestimably precious and recessary for his development, and she will take the greatest pains not to discourage him. If, in addition to the hardiwork mentioned above, the country mother will see that her children are not cheated out of their birthright of a share in the processes of country life, she need have small fear for their health, happiness, and moral development.

A few maxims to hang up over the kitchen sink and read over while the dishes are being washed;

- 1. Little children wish and need to be doing something with their bodies and hands every minute they are swake.
 - 2. They need a frequent change of occupation.
- If 1 provide them with interesting things to 10, they will not have time to be fretful or to do naughty things.
- 4. When I see my children harmlessly occupied and using their hands or bodies, I may be sure that they are educating themselves, even if I cannot understand the pleasure they take in their occupation.
- 5. When a child has a great desire to do something inconvenient, let me ask myself, "Why does he want to do it?" and try to understand and meet the real need which is apt to underlie his unreasonable request.

Tribute to a Good Woman.

BY JAMES E. SCOREY.

"Time is winging us away,
To our eternal home.
Life is but a winter's day,
A journey to the tomb."

On December 5, 1917, there died in the city of Nashville, Tenn., Ida Sparkman Johnston, wife of E. T. Johnston, of Leiper's Fork (Hillsboro), Williamson County, Tenn. A neighbor, Sister Thornton, had been taken to the city to undergo an operation, from which she died. Sister Johnston went from their home to the city to attend the funeral of Sister Thornton. At this funeral Sister Johnston suddenly expired. Her remains were taken back to her home at Hillsboro. The funeral services were held in the church building where for years she had met with the church to worship God. Brethren, sisters, friends, neighbors, and many from a distance attended the funeral exercises, which were conducted by Dr. Ward and the writer, Sister Johnston was the daughter of John J. and Elizabeth Sparkman and a granddaughter of Seth and Rebecca Sparkman. Her grandfather was the first convert made in that country by the preaching of faith, repentance, and baptism for the remission of sins. He made the study of the Scriptures and the practice of the Christian virtues his life work. The Sparkman family has been noted for its loyalty to the Word—the Scriptures of divine truth.

The subject of this sketch was born on November 22, 1857; became a Christian in her girlhood; and was married to E. T. Johnston on December 23, 1879. She was born, reared, and lived all her life in the vicinity of Hillsboro Church, of which she and her husband were members-and not only members, but faithful and truly devoted to Christianity. I have known her almost from her girlhood, and for several years worshiped with her at the Hillsboro Church. I never missed her from the assembly of the saints on the Lord's day, if no providential hindrance kept her away. Her reputation for Christian virtues, among her brethren, friends, and neighbors, was as good as the best.

Brother and Sister Johnston knew how to extend their aid to those deserving it or needing it, and the hospitality of their home was widely known. They had three children, all dying early in life, save an only son, John, who died in the days of his youth, near manhood.

She is survived by her husband, one sister (Mrs. Hattle Frye), numerous other relatives, and many friends.

May her life and noble deeds inspire others to walk with God, seeking the comforts and consolations of the gospel of Christ and a home beyond the skies.

The Cowart Street brethren are pushing ahead in their-efforts to build up the cause of the Lord in that vicinity, and the very efficient assistance rendered by Brethren Wallace, Brooks, and others is greatly appreciated by the congregation. At the services on Sunday night a brother who recently moved to Chattanooga from Georgia expressed a desire to be recognized as a member of the Cowart Street congregation. We had splendid audiences yesterday at Jackson Street and at Trinity mission at 3 P.M. Florence, August 12 .- I have just closed a very interesting meeting at Cliff Creek, in Haywood County, Tenn., a few miles from Brownsville.
This was a good meeting in many ways. Six young people were baptized into Christ, the church was encouraged to do better work, and back-sliders were renewed. Cliff Creek Church has a remarkable history. It was established in 1871 by David Whitelaw, who nourished and cared for it for twenty-five years. He was one of our old preachers who encouraged other younger members to preach the gospel. He developed teachers and preachers, so the work centinued after he was gone. After his death Brother James H. Aiken took his place and has done his best to build up his home congregation as well as others in adjoining communities. Brother Aiken has a model wife, and they have model children. children are godly men and women, and he is honored in the community in which he was born. I made my home with this family, and no preacher ever had a better home while laboring in the gospel. The most encouraging feature of Cliff Creek is its splendid body of young people. are godly and intelligent and can do a great work as teachers and workers. Grady, August 10.-It has been a long time since I wrote to the Gospel Advocate, but I am going to try to make amends by reporting more frequently in the future. I began preaching and teaching school in August, 1880, and continued in that work until 1913, when I had a stroke of paralysis, which hindered me as a school-teacher; so, dropping that part of my work, gave my whole time to preaching the gospel. Last May I was in a meeting with the church at Luverne. There were no additions, but the congregation seemed to enjoy the meeting. I have been with this congregation in protracted meetings regularly for the last ten years and have preached for them more or less regularly for twenty-seven years. My next meeting was with the church at Enterprise, which closed yesterday. Three persons were baptized. I go to Dublin to-morrow to assist the brethren in a meeting. It was at this place that I obeyed the gospel, under the preaching of Brother J. M. Barnes, in 1878. I call this my home congregation, as it is only four miles from where I live. Any one desiring any informa-tion about this new country can get reliable information from Brother L. A. Wolfe, Avon Park, Fla., or Brother J. B. Peden, Venus. Brother Peden is an excellent preacher, and a better man cannot be found in the church. He has done more preaching at his own expense than any man I know, and he should be kept in the field preaching. Any one desiring to come to Florida should investigate this newly developed country. Land is much cheaper than in older parts of the country. There is some of the best fruit land along this new road there is in the State, and it can be bought for about thirty dollars per acre. Lyerly, August 14.—The meeting at Shiloh Church, near Elkwood, closed with three baptized and one restored to the fellowship. The interest was good to the last night. Sellersburg, August 14.—Beginning on the first Lord's day in August, I preached ten days for Liberty Church, near Granville, Tenn. Murray, August 12.-I have just closed my meeting with the Mount Pleasant congregation, in Graves County. There were sixteen additions by primary obedience, two by restora-tion, and one identified himself with the brethren there.—Coleman Overby.

Glasgow Junction, August 12 .- I am now in a meeting at this place. I held two good meetings in July—one at Kirkmansville, Ky., and another at Bluff Springs, in Marshall County, I go to Pleasant View, Tenn., Tenn. for a meeting, beginning on the third Lord's day in August, and to Dunmor, Ky., on the fourth Lord's day. After the first of September I will be in Bowling Green, and should be glad to get in touch with the congregations in that part of the State. Since I expect to be in school, I cannot hold any meetings after August, but can arrange to do some preaching on Lord's days.-Robert Alexander.

Adairville, August 14.-My work in Logan County is getting along nicely since I moved to Adairville. I have held several good meetings, but am now in the best one, so far as I can tell. I am at Kedron, four miles north of Russellville. Beginning at 10 A.M. on Tuesday, September 3, I am to engage Mr. H. Boyce Taylor, of Murray, Ky., in a four-days' debate, which is to be held at Needmore, about reighteen miles below Clarksville, Tenn. I will affirm on apostasy and the design of baptism. Those wishing to attend should write Brother A. S. Landis, Cumberland City, Tenn., R. F. D., as to how to get there and when to go. We are expecting a good time. -Herbert E. Winkler.

A Good Business Opening.

The steady increase of the live-stock interest in the Southern States war-ranted our making a thorough investigation of the natural advantages of the Southland for the raising of good horses, cattle, hogs, sheep, and poul-try, compared to Northern States, like Iowa, that for years have been looked upon as leaders in these lines.

The reports of our experts justify our establishing headquarters in the South at some centrally located city having good railroad connections as soon as suitable arrangements can be closed.

Our business will require the help of a number of reliable men, who must well and favorably known among planters and farmers who own stock in the vicinity of their home town, and we prefer men with some knowledge of live-stock.

These positions are worthy the prompt attention of any one who is looking for a chance to make money in a reliable, steady, and growing outdoor business

Try This For Your Health.

For diseases which do not readily yield to drug treatment, such as chronic dyspepsia, indigestion, rheumatism, uric-acid poisoning, and diseases of the kidneys, bladder, and liver, the best physicians send their wealthy patients to the famous mineral springs. Some even spent months at the spas of Europe, and were almost invariably benefited or permanently relieved.

I believe that the Shivar Spring is the greatest mineral spring ever discovered; and I believe it so firmly that I offer to send you enough water for a three-weeks' treatment (two fivegallon demijohns) on my guarantee that if it fails to benefit your case I will refund the price. You would hardly believe me if I told you that only about two out of a hundred, on the average, say that they have received no benefit. The water is restoring thousands. It restored my health when my friends and physicians thought my case was incurable, and I am willing and anxious for you to match your faith in the Spring against my pocketbook. If I win, you become a life friend of the Spring; if I lose, I will be sorry for you, but I will appreciate your courtesy in giving the water a trial, and will gladly refund your money on request. Sign the following letter:

Hope.

BY S. WHITFIELD.

We work, sacrifice, and suffer to raise our children because we desire and expect them to become useful men and women and Christians. The farmer plows, sows, cultivates, and reaps because he desires and expects results. A man toils all day because he desires and expects his wages. We preach the gospel because we desire and expect to save ourselves and others. There is but little that we do without looking for the reward. That desire and expectation that we have of reward leads us to labor, suffer, and sacrifice in our different undertakings.

Hope is made up of desire and expectation. We expect to be saved through Christ, if we do our part, and we desire salvation; hence we accept Christ, obey him, and try to live the Christlike life.

We certainly need to look into this question during the days of trouble, that our hearts may be fixed firmly on the hope that is set before us, so that we may press forward to the end of our race.

God, Christ, and the Bible remain the same. Men may and do change, and conditions in the world change, but God remains the same. The hope of the Christian is just as bright, precious, and sure as it ever has been. The duty of the child of God is to go forward in the Lord's work.

"I have set the Lord always before me; because he is at my right hand, I shall not be moved. Therefore my heart is glad, and my glory rejoiceth: my flesh also shall rest in hope. For thou wilt not leave my soul in hell; neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption." (Ps. 16: 8-10.)

David looked forward to a glorious resurrection through Christ, which made him rejoice. Surely, since Christ has come, died, was raised up, and ascended to the right hand of his Father, the gospel is preached and remission of sins is realized, we should be glad and rejoice in the hope that is set before us.

"The hope of the righteous shall be gladness." (Prev. 10: 28.) "Happy is he that hath the God of Jacob for his help, whose hope is in the Lord his God." (Ps. 146: 5.)

"Of the hope and resurrection of the dead I am called in question." (Acts 23; 6.) There were many iu New Testament times that did not believe in the resurrection from the dead, and there are still people in the world that do not believe in it, and their actions correspond with their unbelief. Paul preached the resurrection from the dead.

EVER SALIVATED BY CALOMEL? HORRIBLE!

Calomel Is Quicksilver and Acts Like Dynamite on Your Liver.

Calomel loses you a day! Do you know what calomel is? It is mercury—quicksilver. Calomel is dangerous. It crashes into sour bile like dynamite, cramping and sickening you. Calomel attacks the bones, and should never be put into your system. When you feel bilious, sluggish, constipated, and all knocked out, and believe you need a dose of dangerous calomel, just remember that your druggist sells for a few cents a large bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone, which is entirely vegetable and pleasant to take and is a perfect substitute for calomel. It is guaranteed to start your liver without stirring you up inside, and cannot salivate.

Don't take calomel! It makes you sick the next day; it loses you a day's work. Dodson's Liver Tone straightens you right up and you feel great. Give it to the children, because it is perfectly harmless and does not gripe.

of many nations, according to that which was spoken, So shall thy seed (Rom. 4: 18.) Although according to nature Abraham had no reason to have hope, yet he believed what God said, and had hope. He had strong faith in God, hence his hope.

"We are saved by hope: but hope that is seen is not hope; for what a man seeth, why doth he yet hope for? But if we hope for that we see not, then do we with patience wait for it." (Rom. 8: 24, 25.) The hope that we have of a resurrection from the dead with bodies of immortality, to be with God and Christ forever and ever, and to be free from suffering and trouble, leads us on through all the trials, suffering, and sacrifice now, that we might gain that eternal reward. Hence we are saved by hope. We cannot yet see our reward, but we have great need of patience to continue on to the

"Ye are called in one hope of your calling." (Eph. 4: 4.) Just as there is one God, one Christ, one Spirit, one Bible, there is one hope, and that is eternal rest and peace.

"But Christ as a son over his own house; whose house are we, if we hold fast the confidence and the rejoicing of the hope firm unto the end." (Heb. 3: 6.) We need to hold fast unto the end. We need to be continually watching and praying, lest something lead us away from the hope of the

"Be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you with meekness and fear." (1 Pet. 3: 15.) If we have believed in Christ, repented of our sins, confessed him before men, have been buried with him by baptism into his death, then we know that our past sins have been blotted out. If we as Christians are true to God and are faithful in his service, and live holy lives to God to the end, then we can give a Bible reason for our hope. Are we always ready to give it?

Mother, Why Don't You Take Nuxated Iron

And Be Strong and Well and Have Nice Rosy Cheeks Instead of Being Nervous and Irritable All the Time and Looking So Haggard and Old?-The Doctor Gave Some to Susie Smith's Mother and She Was Worse Off Than You Are and Now She Looks Just Fine.

Any Woman Who Tires Easily, is Irritable, Nervous and Run-Down Should Take Nuxated fron to Help Increase Her Health, Strength And Vitality.

"There can be no strong, healthy, heautiful, rosy-checked women, without iron," says Dr. Ferdinand King, a New York physician and Medical Author. "I have strongly emphasized the fact that doctors should prescribe more organic iron—Nuxated Iron—for their nervous, run-down, weak, haggard-looking women patients. Pallor means anaemia. The skin of an annemic woman is pale, the flesh flabby. The muscles lack tone, the brain fags, and the memory fails, and often they become weak, nervous, irritable, despondent and melancholy. When the iron goes from the blood of women the roses go from their cheeks.

In the most common foods

To the most common foods of America, the starches, sugars, table syrups, candles, polished rice, white bread, soda crackers, biscuits, macaroni, spaghetti, taploca, zago, farina, degreminated cornmeal, no longer is iron to be found. Refining processes have removed the iron of Mother Earth from these impoverished foods, and silly methods of home cookery, by throwing down the waste pipe the water in which our vegetables are cooked, are responsible for another grave fron loss. Therefore you should supply the fron deficiency in your food by using some form of organic iron, just as you would use salt when your food has not enough salt."

"Iron is absolutely necessary to enable your blood to change food into living tissue. Without it, no matter how much or what you eat, your food merely passes through you without doing you any good. You don't get the strength out of it, and as a consequence you become weak, pale and sickly looking, just like a plant trying to grow in a soil deficient in iron. If you are not strong or well, you owe it to yourself to make the following test: See how long you can work or how far you can walk without becoming fired. Next take two five-grain tablets of ordinary nuxated from three times per day atter meals for two weeks. Then test your strength again and see how much you have gained. Numbers of nervous, rundown people who were have most astonishingly increased their strength and endurance simply by taking from in the proper form and this, after they had in some cases been going on for months without getting benefit from anything. acetate, or tincture of iron simply to save a few cents.

The fron demanded by Mother Nature for the red coloring matter in the blood of her children is, alas not that kind of fron. You must take fron in a form that can be easily absorbed and assimilated to do you any good, otherwise it may prove worse than useless.

Manufacturers' Note—Nuxated Iron, which is prescribed and recommended above by physicians. Is not a secret remety, but one which is well known to druggists. Unlike the older morganic fron products it is easily assimilated, does not injure the feeth, make them black nor upset the stomach. The Master's Vineyard Mississippi.

Toccopola, August 15.—Brother A. Y. Howell, of Water Valley, recently closed a fine meeting at Pine Bluff Schoolhouse, two miles west of Toccopola. Twelve were baptized and four restored to the faith. Greatgrandmother Lauderdale, who is seventy-two years of age, was baptized. She had been a strong Methodist for years and years. Her son, J. F. Lauderdale, was made to rejoice. He certainly has a great deal to be thankful for. He, his wife, mother, and eight children are in the faith. a little over a week after Brother Howell closed his meeting, Brother C. E. Coleman came home to visit his mother and relatives, and held a meeting, baptizing five. Brethren Howell and Coleman are excellent preachers of the gospel. We feel that there has been a great deal of good done here in the church, also on the outside in removing a great deal of prejudice. J. E. Allen.

Pope, August 10.—I will write a few lines in regard to the work in this part of the Master's vineyard. I am just home from attending a tent meeting at Leggo, eight or ten miles west of Water Valley, conducted by Brother A. Y. Howell, of the last-named place, which meeting closed last night. We had large audiences last night. We had large audiences and the best of attention, and so plain and forcibly did Brother Howell present to them the Lord's way that eleven noble souls stepped out on his promises and were baptized and one erring brother confessed his errors and was restored. Brother Howell goes from there to Ruleville, in the Delta. I also attended a meeting the first two days of the week at Central Academy, twelve miles east of Batesville, conducted by Brother Charles Williams, Brother Williams writes me that he baptized three and made the seats uncomfortable for some who would not endure sound doctrine, Brethren, I ask your prayers for all the Lord's people in this place, a very hard place to firmly establish primi-tive Christianity.—F. W. Lipe.

Tupelo, August 13.—I began a seven-days' meeting at Antioch, four miles southwest of Vernon, Ala., on Saturday night before the third Lord's day in July. Four were added by primary obedience. In a three-days' meeting at that place last year I baptized nine, They supported me well.

Beginning on the fourth Lord's day in July, I began at Bethel, three miles east of Vernon, Ala. Two years ago Brother C. A. Wheeler, of Jasper, Ala., and I held a meeting at that place, with nine additions. This time seven with nine additions. This time seven obeyed the Lord. This is my third year with this church. They supported me better this year than ever before. On the first Lord's day in August I began at Kingville, ten miles southeast of Vernon, Ala. I was with them two years ago, and have been preaching for them monthly since last November. There were five additions this time. They, too, supported me well. I grew up to manhood in that (Lamar) county. My father lived in that county for more than forty years. My youngest brother is a stationed Methodist preacher in one of the best railroad towns in the county. But my father gave me a New Testament when I was thirteen years old, and I have followed that. I belong to nothing I cannot read about in that book. the Lord had wanted more than the one church of Christ, I think he would have built it. No one, with intelligence and conscience both on duty, can afford to belong to any religious institution known as a church not mentioned in the New Testament. I have four meetings yet. I begin at Lawson's Chapel, in Clay County, next Saturday .- H. C. Harris.

New Mexico.

Roswell, August 12 .- In the Gospel Advocate of July 4 appeared our letter inquiring for a home in the West. To this letter we had replies from a number of brethren and one sister. We desire to express to them and to the Advocate our thanks for their interest in us. We are at Roswell, a resort of some seven to nine thousand people. Possibly eighty per cent of the families here are here on account of climatic conditions. The church of Christ here has a congregation of about one hundred and fifty members. Brother G. Dallas Smith held a meeting here during the spring months, and the church seems to be in good condition. Sister Hoffman's health is improving. We do not know how long we may remain here, as living is high and work is not plentiful. We would be glad to hear from our brethren and sisters. Our address is 500 South Mich Street.—J. E. Hoffman.

Tennessee.

Tracy City, August 16.—I closed a week's meeting at Fairfield last Sunday. Two were baptized. I shall begin at Bethel, in Sequatchie Valley, next Sunday.—J. D. Northcut.

Culleoka, August 12.—On last Monday night I closed a very interesting meeting at Appleton, with fifteen baptized. I am now at Bethel, twelve miles south of Columbia.—J. T. Harris.

Pikeville, August 12.—I am still on the firing line. I closed a week's meeting yesterday at Sampson, with two added by baptism. They came from the Methodist Church and were both over seventy years of age. I go from here to Newton.—G, S. Marsh.

Morrison, August 13.—The meeting at Gassaway closed on Wednesday night before the first Sunday in August, with six baptized and one reclaimed. The meeting here began on the first Sunday in this month. Six baptized and three reclaimed to date.—J. D. Gunn.

Evensville, August 12.—I preached yesterday afternoon and the night before. One made the confession. I baptized his mother and his wife about two months ago. I have quit working at Wind Rock and will now try to catch up with my preaching. I am badly behind with it.—H. B. Young.

Watertown, August 12.—I have just closed a splendid meeting out from Watertown, at Commerce. The crowds were interested and three were baptized. There are some as faithful members there as are to be found anywhere. I go to Alamo for a meeting, beginning next Thursday night. There is a great need for preaching now.—H. M. Phillips.

Gainesboro, Route 4, August 12.—I have just closed an eight-days' meeting with the congregation on Cub Creek, near my home. Three young ladies confessed Christ and put him on in baptism. It was indeed an enjoyable week for me. This was my third meeting there in eight years, besides preaching once a month for nearly half the time.—J. A. Craighead.

McMinnville, August 12.—Brother J. H. Murrell, of Tennessee City, closed a ten-days' meeting with the church in Northcut's Cove, last Friday. There was one baptism and two restorations. The interest was good. We feel that Brother Murrell taught us many valuable lessons. He began a meeting with the Red Hill Church, in Cannon County, yesterday.—V. L. Northcut.

Livingston, August 14.—Our meeting at Big Branch closed last Lord's day, after eight days' duration, with thirteen added-seven baptized and six reclaimed. I promised to go back next fall. Brethren T. D. Rose and H. C. Shoulders were in good meetings in Jackson County last week. I am now in a good meeting in Big Bottom, eight miles above Gainesboro, in Jackson County, with one confession to date.-Willie Hunter.

Henderson, August 12.—1 began a meeting at Spencer Hill Church, in Maury County, on the third Sunday in July. This meeting continued eight days, with good interest and five baptisms. Next, a week's meeting at Nebo, Gibson County, showed no im-mediate results. It is hoped, how-ever, that the church was edified and strengthened some. I am now at ever, that the charter strengthened some. I am now at Nance Chapel, Crockett County, with and fine attention. I go good crowds and fine attention. I go from here to Miller's Chapel, Dyer Having decided not to teach County. this fall, I can hold some more meetings in September and October, and would be glad to do so.-W. H. Owen.

Moss, July 28.—Brother M. L. Moore, of Franklin, Ky., closed a very interesting meeting here last Friday. He spoke to very large audiences twice each day for thirteen days. Fourteen were baptized, three were reclaimed, and one took membership. Brother Moore has a warm place in the hearts of all the members of this congregation. He is a great and godly man, and to know him is to love him. This was his home in years gone by, and he has many friends who were glad to welcome him back again. He and the writer enjoyed many conversations and sweet associations together. He is now in a meeting at Beech Bethany.-O. L. Carnahan.

Fayetteville, August 14.—I closed a meeting with the Liberty Hill people on July 15. Ten were added to the one body and one was reclaimed. This is one of the oldest congregations in Moore County. I began a meeting with the Freelabor people, in this (Lincoln) county on the first Lord's day in this month, closing it last Monday at the water. Nineteen were baptized, one was reclaimed, and one came from the Baptists. This was my fourth protracted meeting. I began preaching regularly thirteen months ago, and have preached almost every Saturday night and Sunday since. In the four meetings held by me thirtyfive men and women were baptized. will begin a meeting at Taft, in this county, next Lord's-day morning. have some time for other meetings this year, and am very anxious to be busy in the Master's work. If some congregation wants a meeting or to send some one to a mission point in Tennessee or near by, I am ready to answer the call. Write me at Fayette-ville, Tenn., Route 6.—Vernon Rozar.

Killed by Poisons

All scientists agree that poisonous products in the blood are eliminated by the kidneys and liver. The kidneys act as a kind of filter for these products. When the kidneys are changed or degenerated, by disease or old age, then these poisons are retained in the body. If we wish to prevent old age coming on too soon, or if we want to increase our chances for a long life, Dr. Pierce of the Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y., says that you should drink plenty of water daily between meals to flush the kidneys. Then procure at your nearest drug store Anuric. This Anuric drives the uric acid out. Scientific men have learned that in gout, also rheumatism, poisonous uric acid crystals are deposited in or about the joints, in the muscles—where inflammation is set up.

If we wish to keep our kidneys in the best condition a diet of milk and vegetables, with only little meat once a day, is the most suitable. Drink plenty of pure water, take Anuric three times a day for a month. An-u-ric is many times more potent than lithia and dissolves uric acid as hot water does sugar.

Send 10 cents to Dr. Pierce, if you wish to obtain a trial package of Anuric.

The Belle Haven Orphans' Home.

BY MRS. JENNIE CLARKE,

I here give a summary of work done at the Belle Haven Orphans' Home, of Luling, Texas, since the cyclone of April 5.

Barn erected, smaller than the one lost, old material used as far as possi-Dormitory put on temporary foundation, with a view of removing inner walls at once, for the purpose of better bracing. Besides this work, much repair work has been done. Kitchen enlarged and screened. cost, $1,223.70. Paid by debt due, by one of the carpenters, $80. On all of this work we have received donations of labor and materials from friends and the church of Christ of Luling, making the cost low. We have let the contract for the erection of the new church building, which we will be compelled to use for school purposes until the war is over and we become able to erect the school building being planned at the beginning of this war. The work on the church building started two days ago. It is to be a neat building, consisting of brick and interlocking tile, not to c t over forty-two hundred dollars, and perhaps a little less. Material is high, and labor also. We have at least saved eight hundred dollars by taking time to figure and secure donations from the lumber dealer of Luling, the brick and tile men, carpenters, and brick-masons, until we now see our way clear to have a substantial building, not to exceed $4,200, but worth $5,000. This will not include seats and painting.

Total amount reported in January report, $10,547.30. Total amount of receipts for the two quarters, $8,126.67, as follows: Regular contributions, $1,473.64; cyclone fund, $6,118.84; birthday fund, $534.19; balance on hand, $16,094.50.

Allowing the cost of the church to be $4,200 and the amount paid out of cyclone fund for work and material already paid for, there will be a balance of the cyclone fund amounting to $695.14. From this amount the dormitory is to be overhauled, the walls to be all covered and the church house to be seated and painted; therefore the cyclone fund will not cover the cost of repair and rebuilding caused by the cyclone.

Special contributions to meet this expense will be thankfully received. Brother Showalter and others did not miss it far when they stated that ten thousand dollars would be necessary to rebuild and repair all losses sustained by the cyclone. Neither will the birthday offerings meet more than one-fourth of the expense for the proposed laundry, but the same will be saved until increased. No provisions for water and sewerage system has been made.

I feel very thankful for all kind aid extended, and I wish to tender my sincere thanks to all, and I mention the above facts to convince the brotherhood that there are various needs and equipments needed for the Belle Haven Orphans' Home which cannot be furnished out of the balance we will have on hand after deducting amount to be paid on church building when completed. Besides, all who have kept up with the work and the reports up to January 27 will notice that we had a balance of $10,547.30, which we expressed a desire to save, if possible, for the erection of the school building, and this is still our plan and hope. We trust that the brotherhood, besides giving their regular support, will make special donations to add necessary equipments and meet the expense of supporting the children, in order that the above amount may be reserved to be used for the proposed school building.

About Sunday Work.

BY ARTHUR B. TENNEY.

Did you ever work on Sunday and miss church meeting? Many brethren feel that they have to. Some do not care very much; others give up their jobs and get other jobs that do not require Sunday work. Sizing up the whole situation, it is, on the whole, not easy to cope with.

A large per cent of our brethren are laboring men with dependents. "Bread and butter" has to be made. If they are skilled laborers, they do not have much difficulty in being exempted from Sunday work, if they ask to be exempted. If they are common day laborers and do not get favors, sometimes it is a case of work on Sunday or quit and let others take their places who will work on Sunday. When jobs are plentiful, workingmen ask for favors and get them; if jobs are scarce, they cannot be particular about when they work.

The poor man has to earn all he can. How can he hold his job and not work on Sunday? Many use the "union" method, which is sometimes carried far enough in some occupations to stop those trades by means of strikes, if demands are not yielded to. In this, however, you are reganized and "yoked" with "unbelievers" in the sense of being primitive Christians, and other things. There is a stronger weapon for us.

Business will be carried on on Sunday to the extent that we and others patronize it. If we would attend to our trading on week days, there would be no reason for business houses to open on Sunday. If we preachers and other Christians, other preachers and other church members, will create a sentiment for no Sunday business, it will have a strong effect. Let us launch a public and private campaign to diminish Sunday trading. Let us do all our trading on week days, and let us teach others to do the same. Garage men, ice-plant employees, druggists, etc., appreciate Sunday to themselves, as well as other people. But we require open house on Sunday of some business, and we are met by being accommodated. We can plan ahead and get on gas, ice, etc., on Saturday. Surely there are enough Christians in the United States to check this Sunday trade. Merchants will welcome our efforts. Other church people will join us in the campaign. By this procedure we will relieve many men for church services and make it far easier for many people to get to church regularly. Let us all start now and hold Sunday for rest and worship.

"What Was My Sin?"

Under the above heading a statement from W. A. Record appears in the Gospel Advocate of August 1. We, the undersigned, elders of the church of Christ at Lone Oak, desire to very briefly answer the question in the above heading. We submit here the letter written by W. A. Record to Brother Ratcliffe, which speaks for itself.

Dear Brother Ratcliffe: You may think it queer in me, but I feel like ought to write you this letter, and so I understand M. it comes. Clark, of this place, has corresponded with you in regard to holding a meeting here. Brother Clark is not an elder of the church, but a busybody. There is not one of the elders that has aught against you, but they have not authorized him to do what he has done. Just such steps as he has taken is one of the things which brought ruin to the cause here. All the preachers in the brotherhood might come here to hold a meeting, and they would have the same audience. There are only a few members, and no peace and no harmony at all. Therefore all of them would not come. Outsiders and sectarians never come about [generally speaking]. There is trouble between this church and the church at Paducah, and they don't come at all. Now what is the use of a good preacher's dirtying his hands with an outfit like this? If preaching would do them any good, they would have been bearing fruits of repentance now. I think the best thing a preacher could do for this church is to tell them [it] to get the evil spirits out of her or we will have nothing to do with you. And if I were you, I would write and tell Clark I understood Lone Oak Church had elders, and I would wait until I received a call from them before I come to preach. Now Brother Ratcliffe, this letter is in confidential and brotherly love, for your protection and the good of all and harm of none. You can write Brother J. L. Holland, at Greenfield, Tenn.-he was here last year: or write Brother Charley Taylor -he knows the condition of things

With much love I am your little brother and friend.

- 1. If M. N. Clark is a busybody, as described by Brother Record in the above letter, then he has done Clark no wrong in so charging him; but we know Brother Clark to be an upright, Christian gentleman, and not a busybody. Therefore Brother Record has sinned against Brother Clark.
- 2. If it were a fact that Brother Clark did employ Brother Ratcliffe without the authority of the elders. then Brother Record has done no wrong in warning a brother preacher to stay away, but has only done his duty, and, of course, owes no apology to any one for so doing. But we, the undersigned, elders, did authorize Brother Clark to write Brother Ratcliffe, and, in addition, the matter was stated before the church assembled and the selection of Brother Ratcliffe as the man to hold our meeting and the time of the meeting was approved without even one objector. Therefore we conclude that Brother Record has greatly sinned in making the above false statement.

3. If the church at Lone Oak were as Brother Record describes to Brother Ratcliffe, then, of course, he did exactly right in telling the truth about it. But we know the church at Lone Oak to be composed of clean, upright, Christian men and women, and is not the dirty outfit he describes. Therefore Brother Record has grievously sinned against the church at Lone Oak.

We, the undersigned, elders, did not act against Brother Record hastily, but were long-suffering and very kind to him. More than six months elapsed after we received the above letter before our withdrawal, during which time we visited Brother Record several times. We admonished him kindly, pointed out the false statements made, and assured him if he would repent of his sins and retract the false statements made that the ntire church would be glad to forgive him. He refused to retract or apologize.

We desire to state further that the church at Lone Oak seems to have many critics bent on its destruction. Many false and slanderous reports have been sent broadcast concerning the church and some of its members. Conditions throughout a large portion of Western Kentucky are deplorable on account of these reports. Therefore we ask the help of the Gospel Advocate to right the wrongs and thus remove the stigma that is resting on and hindering God's cause in this sec-We humbly and earnestly request that the Advocate call on all critics of the church at Lone Oak, or any of its members, to furnish it with specific charges of wrongdoing by its elders, by the church, or by any one or more of its members, a copy of these charges to be furnished the undersigned elders; that the editors of the Advocate select some fair and impartial man and send him to Lone Oak at the expense of the Lone Oak Church. and let him call on any of those making charges of wrongdoings against the church or any of its members to appear face to face with the alleged wrongdoers and prove the charges made. He, this man so selected, shall preside over this investigation, and all matters of procedure shall be left to his decision. When all the charges shall have been investigated, all witnesses examined and cross-examined, this brother shall write up the results of this investigation and have the report published in the Advocate.

I have not held so many meetings this year nor baptized so very many persons, but have held some, and am now in one at Chapel Hill, near Trenton, that starts off nicely. I began last Saturday night, and yesterday there was one young man, head of a family, who made the confession and is to be baptized this afternoon. Edifying as the Need May Be Thirst for Knowledge.

Jesus found in Solomon's career some striking illustrations, which he used to a great advantage in emphasizing certain spiritual truths. He said: "The queen of the south shall rise up in the judgment with the men of this generation, and shall condemn them: for she came from the ends of the earth to hear the wisdom of Solomon; and behold, a greater than Solomon is here." (Luke 11: 31.) was occasioned in the story of the queen of Sheba's visit to King Solomon's court. The chief purpose that inspired the long, wearisome journey was an honest thirst for knowledge, though mainly of the kind pertaining to the riddles and enigmas of which the Arabs were immensely fond. In the same spirit explorers and scientists have risked their lives to acquire new facts about the earth, as when Stanley plowed his way into the heart of Africa and Peary made his fruitless dashes in search of the North Pole. But how marked the contrast between this devotion to wisdom in its lower forms and the prevailing indifference to wisdom in its higher and abiding sphere! How few even of those who stood in the very presence of Him who was greater than Solomon cared for the words which fell from the Teacher's lips! If the queen of the south, who sought only that wisdom which gratifies one's intellectual curiosity, felt repaid for her outlay of trouble and treasure in visiting the Oriental monarch, how much greater sacrifices should we be willing to make in order to acquire the wisdom which comes down from God! If she sat with the keenest interest at the feet of one who discoursed on earthly things, with what more absorbing interest should we learn from Him who reveals heavenly things!

Solomon's Glory.

And what we learn we ought to apply. What we teach and preach in the Master's name we ought to practice. I ask what a young man is doing, and I am told that he is studying law. I ask the same question a few years later, and I am told that he is practicing law, and then I understand the reason for his patient study. For just the same reason we should be careful and persevering in studying the laws of the New Testament, that they may make us wise unto salvation and we may practice them in our daily lives. But Jesus made particular reference to Solomon's glory. Pointing to the lilies of the field, he said: "Even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these." (Matt. 6: 29; Luke 2: 27.) It is this remark of Jesus' that leads us to think more often of Solomon's glory than of anything else connected with his kingdom, more even than of his far-famed wisdom. To appreciate that glory at its fullest value, we should compare the life of King Solomon with that of the first king of Israel. The contrast between the two is startling. Saul was a ruler over a nation of peasants. Gibeah, his capital, seems to have been but an ordinary village, and in that village Saul lived the simple life. Solomon, on the other hand, was ruler over a vainglorious people. Jerusalem, his capital, was a citadel with walls, and in his magnificent palace Solomon lived sumptuously. Jesse sent the young man, David, to King Saul with a gift, consisting of loaves of bread, bottles of wine, and a kid. The queen of Sheba visited Solomon, bringing a tribute of gold and spices and precious stones. His throne was made of ivory, overlaid with plates of pure gold, and lions on either side of the six steps led to the seat of royalty. There was nothing like his opulence and splender in any kingdom. All the drinking vessels were of pure gold. "None were of silver," the record says; for silver "was nothing accounted of in the days of Solomon;" for "the king made silver to be in Jerusalem as stones." The stately guards who stood at the palace gate were all armed with shields of gold, and Josephus adds that the charioteers sprinkled the golden dust in their hair every day.

Th Perils of Prosperity.

But when we think of David, the contrast is more striking still. We think of Solomon in his official capacity on the judgment seat dedicating the temple. We do not think of him braving the lion and the bear to defend his flock, winning the heart of a Jonathan at court, attracting to himself while even an exile the brave men of the kingdom, admitting to a prophet that he had sinned, and weeping bitterly over a rebellious son. But, after all, our recollection of Solomon is of the court rather than the king, and our admiration is for the retinue and not for the man. But, with all his mistakes, Solomon's rule had a faithful beginning. He seems to have been equally famed for his wisdom and his justice, his commerce and his buildings, his gold and his treasures. As Augustus Cæsar is said to have found Rome brick and left it marble, so it may be said of Solomon that he found Jerusalem a fortress and left it a city. He found the sanctuary a tent; he left it a temple of stone. He extended and strengthened the walls and defenses of the city. He built a large palace for himself that required thirteen years to complete, although he had an army of workmen. He made an alliance with the king of Tyre, the capital of Phenicia. He built a fleet of ships which brought him treasures from Arabia and India. He built another fleet for the Mediterranean Sea, which brought back the riches of Spain. He collected toll from the caravan routes between Asia and Egypt, and became himself a trader, deriving an immense profit from the horses and chariots which he furnished the Hittites and Aramæan kings. It can be truly said of Solomon that he was to the highest degree a prosperous man, and in no other life are the perils of presperity more vividly portrayed. While none of us here are burdened with riches, we proudly boast that we are living in a prosperous age and among a prosperous people. But do we ever stop to think that prosperity in itself affords great temptations which do not belong to seasons of adversity? Solomon's prosperity was undoubtedly the cause of his disobedience to God's law. In Deut. 17: 16, 17, concerning the kings to be over Israel, it is stated: "He shall not multiply horses to himself. . . . Neither shall be multiply wives to himself: . . . neither shall be greatly multiply to himself silver and gold." All these commandments Solomon disobeyed. To show you what a change prosperity wrought on his loyalty, we read in 1 Kings 3: 3: "Solomon loved Jehovah, walking in the statutes of David his father." But in 1 Kings 11: 4 we read: "It came to pass, when Solomon was old, that his wives turned away his heart after other gods." This great mental degradation was the result of entangling alliances, and in the New Testament the lesson is plainly taught that Christian people may destroy their usefulness and lose their hope of salvation by falling into the same temptation. "Wherefore come ye out from among them." (2 Cor. 6: 17.) We also find that Solomon's prosperity changed the spirit of childlike humility which he manifested at the beginning into a spirit of worldliness. As he grew older his heart was turned away from that magnanimous course disclosed in his prayer to one of unmixed selfishness. The judicial mind for which he asked, that he might administer equal and impartial justice to one and all, gave place to an ambition that trampled upon the inherent rights of men and transformed the religious spirit of David's reign into one preeminently Finally Solomon abandoned himself to utter secular. worldliness. Worldliness, we know, lies more in the eager craving for worldly things and in the use one makes of them than in the actual possession. The merchant prince of the city may live simply and purely in his splendid home, while some poor man in the cabbage patch may squander all his earnings on animal pleasures and empty display. It may be a difficult task for one who possesses great wealth and power to set his heart on heavenly things, but Jesus taught that such a thing was not impossible. Indeed, it is a question whether worldliness is greater among the rich, who can gratify every wish without a thought of the cost, or among those comparatively poor, who often strain every effort to keep up appearances which they cannot afford. The love of display, the power of rivalry, the elevation of material and temporal good over the spiritual and eternal, are sins as old as humanity itself, and sins to which all of us are exposed. But Jesus laid down the unfailing test in this matter when he said: "Where your treasure is, there will your heart be also." If one's treasure, however small, be on earth, then worldliness will flourish. If it be in heaven, worldliness will find no place, however great the earthly possession.

The Mockery of Greatness.

It is sad to note that Solomon's prosperity brought him into a state in which, it seems, he no longer felt the need of Almighty God, although his writings abound in exhortations to be prayerful and dependent. In times of trouble and deep distress our natural inclination is to pray, to let the Heavenly Father solve our problems for us; but when Fortune knocks upon our doors and we follow, when everything works out well as we wished, then it is easiest to forget our prayers and our need of his helping hand. A Scotchman prayed: "O Lord, have a care for Rob, for he is on the great deep, and thou holdest it in the hollow of thy hand; have a care for Jamie, for he has gone to fight the enemies of his country, and the outcome of the battle is with thee. But you need not worry yourself with Willie, for I have him here, and I am capable of looking after him myself." Too many of us are like that Scotchman in thinking that we are capable of looking after ourselves. and only when trouble comes do we seek the help and guidance of our God. Finally, Solomon's prosperity was very hurtful, because it made a fool of him. As used in the Scriptures, "fool" is a word which occurs offenest in the book of Proverbs, and it seems to us when we read the book that the wise man is pronouncing over and over again his own sentence. As Dr. Van Dyke has said: "It is the very mockery of greatness, the supreme frony of fate, that the hoary head of the wisest of monarchs should be crowned by his own hands with the cap of a fool. And all this because he did not understand that to guide one's own life is a harder and more perilous task than to rule a kingdom." If there be no other lesson which we may learn from the story of Solomon's downfall, all of us can appreciate the truth: "He that trusteth in his own heart is a fool." (Prov. 28: 26.) * * *

"A Greater Than Solomon Is Here."

The character of Solomon, let me say in conclusion, is one of the loftiest and also one of the lowest in the Scriptures. We cannot say that it is similar to that of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde, but we cannot fail to note its brilliant flashes and its woeful inconsistencies. Dr. Hamilton has paid this eloquent tribute to his character: "Full of sublime devotion, equally full of practical sagacity; the extemporizer of the loftiest litany in existence, author of the pungent proverbs, able to mount upon Rapture's ethereal pinion to the region of the scraphim, and keenly alive to all the details of business; shrewd in his human intercourse; zealous in collecting gold, yet lavish in expending it; sumptuous in his tastes and splendid in his costumesthe ratriot intense, the Israelite indeed; like a Colossus on a mountain top, his sunward side was the glory toward which one millennium of his nation had all along been climbing; his darker side, with its overlapping beams, is still the mightiest object in that nation's history."

But whether we see one side or the other, whether Solomon stands before us as a figure clothed with nobility or looms up like a specter of forgotten grandeur, whether we find in him the true riches of wisdom or the glittering gold of Midas, whether we discover a sage or a libertine, for Christian people the thought of the text remains unchanged—"A greater than Solomon is here;" One who surpasses him, not only in the superlative importance of his themes, but in the divine authority by which he speaks.

Like the queen of the south, let us seek him out; let us bring our gifts to his altar; let us present our bodies a living sacrifice; let us fall down and worship him; let us confess him "King of kings, and Lord of lords." And even then "the half has not been told."

We have no more right to consume happiness without producing it than to consume wealth without producing it.—Bernard Shaw

Primitive Christianity.
BY JAMES A. ALLEN.

The advent of the Messiah and the establishment of his kingdom became the subject of prophecy from the very day that sin entered the world and the sentence of death was passed upon the human family. God, in his infinite goodness and benevolence, determined to redeem and save the world, to restore man back to the original heights from which he had fallen. Not one day was permitted to pass, nor one sun to set, after the offense had been committed, before he appeared and revealed a portion of his intentions. To the serpent, who had deceived the woman, he said: "I will place enmity between thy seed and her seed; he shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel." From this first dim, but kind, intimation of God's intention to graciously afford the world a means of escape from bondage to sin and its consequences through the instrumentality of a triumphant Messiah, the hand of prophecy and the finger of God in the world's events began immediately to open the way and prepare for his appearance.

Every messenger from heaven, sent to instruct and warn the people and to admonish the sins of the house of Israel, who spoke by prophetic impulse, added some new light, advanced more information, upon this great and sublime theme of a Savior's coming and the accomplishment of human redemption. The eyes of patriarchs and prophets, the longing expectation of the ancients, were pointed forward in joyful anticipation of the time when the promised Seed of the woman would, one day, arise and bruise the serpent's head. "Unto us a child is born," said the prophet, "unto us a son is given; and the government shall be upon his shoulder: and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counselor, Mighty God. Everlasting Father, Prince of Peace. Of the increase of his government and of peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to establish it, and to uphold it with judgment and with righteousness from henceforth even forever. The zeal of Jehovah of hosts will perform this." (Isa, 9: 6, 7.) "The scepter shall not depart from Judah," foretold the Spirit, "nor the ruler's staff from between his feet, until Shiloh come; and unto him shall the obedience of the peoples be." Job, in his affliction, declared: "But as for me, I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth."

In the book of Daniel are delineated affairs the occurrence of which occupies the long period of twenty-six centuries. The rise and fall, the ascendency and decline, ci the only four universal empires that have ever existed upon the earth, or that ever will exist, are described in prophetic history and revealed by the Spirit of God through the prophet. From the reign of Nebuchadnezzar, the king of Babylon, including the wars of Cyrus, the conquests of Alexander, and the triumph and decline of the Cæsars, are recorded events through which Omnipotence was shaping the destiny of the nations. "And in the days of those kings," declared the prophet, "shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed, nor shall the sovereignty thereof be left to another people; but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever." The Messiah's kingdom, then, and his dominion, is the fifth and last universal empire that shall ever be. It is not, however, an earthly reign or a worldly throne, supported by the sword and bayonet or by the force of arms; but it is an empire composed of the souls of men, that deals with the spirit and proposes to prepare it for eternity and for an acceptable meeting with God. Indeed, it was to be established upon an immovable foundation, which "standeth sure;" to be founded upon a rock, able to withstand every tempest and against which the gates of hell, incited by the hatred and malice of worlds seen and unseen, have not the power to overcome or overthrow. The design of its existence in the world, the purpose of its establishment, was to be an ark of safety, a place of refuge, into which men and women could enter, according to stipulated terms of admission, and escape the cruel mercies of the prince of demons, the father of all disobedience, and be safe in this life and forever safe in the eternal beyond, in the great hereafter.

The star of Bethlehem at length appeared. From the wilderness of Judea was heard the voice of Messiah's harbinger, saying: "Repent ye, for the reign of heaven is approaching "-" the kingdom of God is at hand." Jesus took up the work that was begun by John, the Immerser, and began to prepare the materials to be engrafted into the great spiritual structure about to be set up in Jerusalem and be spread from thence to the remotest parts and corners of the earth. He began to select apostles-men to be his ambassadors to all people. He chose not those who were rich in the goods and chattels of this world, no gentlemen of luxury or of ease, to be the administrators and executors of his will and testament; but he went upon the coasts of the Sea of Galilee to make a selection of his apostles. To the multitudes he spoke and taught in parables, but to them he expounded all things appertaining to his church and kingdom. "To you," said he to them, "it is given to know the mysteries of the kingdom;" and to them was delegated the authority of making known the affairs of the heavenly dominion and of "all things that pertain unto life and godliness." He gave them a commission, as wide as the world, the object of which was to convert the nations to the obedience of faith, and assured them: "What things soever ye shall bind on earth shall be bound in heaven: and what things soever ye shall loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven."

The apostles began their labors. They received the Holy Spirit, according to the promise and prediction of the Savior, which was to them a faithful monitor and which guided them into all truth, as they established churches and set them in order. The converts that they made to the cross, all whom they could persuade to look to "the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world," were constituted, not into the endless denominations of modern times, but members of one great and universal brotherhood, of God's family on the earth. The Lord himself recognized them as "saints," as "a peculiar people," as "a chosen generation," as "a royal priesthood," and as "citizens of a holy nation," who had their citizenship, not upon earth or upon a church book, but in heaven. Their churches, their local congregations, whether at Rome, Corinth, or Ephesus, were fraternities of love, joy, peace, and sincere good will. The slightest appearance of schism, of division or discord, of any nature or character, as soon as it appeared, was publicly condemned and warned against. "I beseech you, brethren," said one of their apostles, "through the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing [which is, of course, the natural consequence of believing the same thing], and that there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfected together in the same mind and in the same judgment." As they all, as every member of the primitive church, had been "immersed into one body," and had been called in one hope of his calling, they were instructed to give "diligence to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace." Thus did the first disciples of the Lord Jesus stand fast in one spirit, in perfect agreement, and unite their labors together in one harmonious effort for the advancement of the cause of their King.

The gospel was carried through the highways and hedges; it was preached from the housetops, along the public roads, and in the market places. The glad tidings of good things, the good news of salvation, were published in Jerusalem, Judea, and Samaria; along the coasts and in the islands of the Mediterranean Sea; and, indeed, in all the known world. Sinners were converted and saints were built up in their most hely faith; and they did it, not through a domestic or foreign missionary society, a Christian Endeavor Society, or a tract organization, but as members of the church of the living God, which they viewed as "the pillar and ground of the truth," as being "a glorious church, not having spot or wrinkle or any such thing;" they did it simply and solely "in the name of the Lord Jesus," and with an eye single to his honor and glory, and not to exalt the inventions of men above the wisdom of God. They cared for orphans and widows in their troubles and supplied the needs of the poor of the brotherhood, and of all men, without a fair or a festival, a church supper or a frolic, to raise the means. At their meetings upon the first day of the week, when they were assembled together for the purpose of breaking bread in remembrance of their Lord and Master, who died that they might live, when they were gathered together to commemorate the broken body and shed blood of Jesus, they each "laid by in store" of his means, "as the Lord had prospered him," and the collections thus taken up were applied to such purposes as would accomplish the greatest amount of good.

The teaching of Jesus is ever new and is as well adapted to the various conditions of society to-day as it once was. If the scholarship of the world could be concentrated into one focus, they would but demonstrate their own folly should they endeavor to new-modify "the faith which was once for all delivered unto the saints." The grounds occupied by inspired men in the beginning of the gospel, as they labored under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, present the only true rallying point for the religious world. The sooner the lesson is learned, the happier and more useful they will be.

Blameless.

BY S. W. BERRYMAN.

What does "blameless" mean? Webster defines it thus: "Without blame; guiltless; innocent." Then, to be blameless means a great deal. In fact, it means so much that there are very few blameless people, even in the church. Every true Christian desires to be blameless, and this they should be before the Lord, the world, and the church. Many of us do and say things that we should not do and say; but when such things occur, we should be willing to correct them. After we do wrong, we can see then that it might have been done otherwise. Then let us be careful to do all the good we can, keeping in mind all the time that there is no danger of our doing too much good. By doing this we will make few mistakes, and profit, too, by the mistakes that we do make. It is our duty to be loving and good, humble and submissive to the requirements of Jehovah in order that we " may be blameless and harmless, the sons of God." (Phil. 2: 14, 15.) It is possible for us to be blameless, or God would not require it of us. He requires no impossibilities of his children. We are told that Zacharias and Elizabeth "were both righteous before God, walking in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameless." (Luke 1: 5, 6.) In order for us to be blameless, we, too, must "walk in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord." Then, we cannot neglect a single duty and remain blameless before him. A brother cannot neglect his duty on Lord's day and be blameless. If we have a chance to attend the worship and neglect to do so, we fail to walk in the "commandments and ordinances of the Lord," and hence we become guilty, having neglected a duty. We are taught in the Bible to do unto others as we would have them do unto us. (Matt. 7: 12.) But many of us in our practice have changed the above teaching and do unto others as we would not have them do to us. The common practice of many to-day is: "Do others before they do you."

It is impossible for us to shed innocent blood and remain guiltless, neither can we speak lies and be without blame. Well, it is equally impossible for us to sow "discord among brethren" and remain blameless. Sowing discord among brethren is placed with murder and lying in the list of seven things that God hates, and no one can commit one of them and be blameless in his sight. (Prov. 6: 16-19.) Many are guilty of dividing the body of Christ; but, instead of doing this, all should strive to maintain unity. Jesus prayed for unity, and we must be united or stand condemned before him. (John 17: 21-23; 1 Cor. 3: 1-3.) The Lord looks upon the brother who sows discord among his children just as he does upon murderers, liars, thieves, etc. All are equally guilty, for these things are an abomination to the Lord.

Peter writes to the church concerning the second coming of Christ and gives it a bit of instruction. He says: "Wherefore, beloved, seeing that ye look for such things. be diligent that ye may be found of him in peace, without spot, and blameless." (2 Pet. 3: 14.) I am aware of the fact that, if the church were more diligent, it would be more peaceful, spotless, and blameless. In the first chapter of this letter he says: ' Wherefore the rather, brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure: for if ye do these things, ye shall never fall." (2 Pet. 1: 10.) He instructs us to "give diligence to make" our "calling and election sure," and adds: "For if ye do these things-"give diligence" and "add to your faith virtue; and to virtue knowledge; and to knowledge temperance; and to temperance patience; and to patience godliness; and to godliness brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness charity"-" ye shall never fall." If the church would just do this, when Jesus comes, he would find it "in peace, without spot, and blameless." Brethren, let us be diligent and do these things, for the haven of rest is worth attaining at any sacrifice. Jesus has made it possible for us to enter there, but we must be "harmless and blameless, the sons of God." Only the innocent will be permitted to enter; the guilty will be crowded out. May the Lord bless us to walk humbly before him, that we may be blameless in the great day.

BY H. E. SPECK.

III. EFFORTS TO OBTAIN THE INFLUENCE OF CHRISTIAN EDUCATION.

There is absolutely no way to conserve the inheritance of Christian faith on which the perpetuity of our national institutions depends, nor to make Christian ideals again dominant in our civic life, unless the teaching of Christian doctrine and the practice of Christian faith are in some way or other conjoined with the great public-school system by which the youth of our land are trained to citizenship. We are shut out of the public schools by the laws of the land. What shall we do?

We have presumed that we might relegate the teaching of religion to the homes. The American home has never been able to do that; and especially is this true of the modern home. We have thought the Sunday school—or "Bible study," if you prefer to call it that—would help out the homes and relieve the schools of the necessity of teaching Christianity; but how miserably incompetent it is when we make the most of it! No science can be learned by being taught only one hour a week. I do not mean to say that the Sunday school stands for a Sunday religion. I consider the Sunday school a factor in Christian education. But religion is to our daily life what salt is to our food. It enters into every act. To follow a method of living that carefully withholds the salt from our food six days in the week and gives us a peck of unadulterated and undiluted salt to eat on Sunday is not the best way to preserve our health and to continue in our mouth the pleasing taste for salt.

In an effort on the part of some of our best thinkers to keep alive the sentiment of religion, some sort of ethical culture has been injected into the curriculum of our public schools to supply this need by simply teaching the principles of morality. In the course of study for the Boston schools we find the following statement: "In giving instruction in morals, teachers will at all times exert their best endeavors to impress on the minds of the youths the principles of piety and justice and a special regard for truth, love of country, humanity, universal benevolence, sobriety, industry, and frugality, chastity, moderation, and temperance." This moral instruction, it is declared, shall have no trace or shadow of sectarianism or doctrinal teaching. It is very plain that this will eliminate the teaching of the existence of God. The atheist may be a good American citizen and desire to send his child to a public school, but he will not allow the ears of his child to be offended by teaching the existence of God. The Hebrew denies the divinity of Christ. And just so we could eliminate all moral and spiritual teaching. The law says morality must be taught without any dogmatism. absolutely impossible. If it were possible, then we should have a solution for this problem, at least. But you may just as well try to grow apples without a tree. You may just as well try to build the walls and roof of a house without the foundation. Dogmatism is the foundation of all morals. Eliminate all the dogmatic teaching, and you cannot formulate a complete code of morals. What motive for well-doing can be suggested if there is no Lawgiver who rewards the faithful and punishes the violator? Will you say to me, be good because it is nice, because it is gentlemanly, because you will be happier? The only power by which we can enforce our moral teaching is the fact that there is an eternal Lawgiver who has the right to bind our wills and the power to vindicate that right. The mere knowledge of the beauty and fitness of an act will no more compel me to do it, or not to do it, than the mere knowledge of geography will compel me to travel around the world. Man must recognize the absolute authority of the Lawgiver and his compelling power, so that his love, his power to punish, can overcome all allurements to present immoral pleasures. Morality cannot be enforced without such dogmatic teaching.

There is still a more serious aspect. In teaching, or trying to teach, morality separate and apart from Christianity, we make the wrong impression on those we teach. They can have little respect for Christianity, although we consecrate it in the church and defend it in the home, if it be condemned in the schools and driven from its doors. Children love school life; and if Christianity is so hurtful a thing as to be denied admission into their studies during school hours, are you going to be surprised to find them scoffing at it in after life? Can we hope to build up a God-fearing people, a people fit to be intrusted with domestic management and the guardianship of this great commonwealth, if they are trained with the conviction that Christianity, the only perfect basis of morality, is an outlawed thing during the best and brighter hours of the day, through the tenderest and most impressionable years of life?

If, then, we cannot teach morality without Christianity, and if the home and Sunday school are not adequate, and since we must have it in some way or other if we are going to fulfill our God-given mission, in what way must it come? The problem is pressing for solution. The crisis may be nearer than we think. Of course, we never realize a danger until the crash comes. They were eating and drinkand merry-making when the handwriting shone out on the wall. It was so when the waters came and covered the earth. It was so when the Assyrians came down on Babylon and when the Goths and Vandals swept over the mighty empire of Rome. It was so when the iron fist of the Teutonic hordes cursed the twentieth-century civilization with its hellish slaughter. It will be so "when "he Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ."

I have laid bare the disease. Perhaps I have been too explicit. I may have sounded the note of a pessimism or of an alarmist; but I have had only one desire, and that is to be as conservative as the facts allow. But what is the remedy?

It is difficult to realize how it was even possible to give over our magnificent public-school system to the agnostic and the godless to serve his purpose, and yet we have done so. You might be surprised to know that in one of these United States of America the teacher who conducts any sort of devotional service in his school will have his certificate canceled. There are other States in which the laws are almost as radical. I have taught ten years. I have never taught one day without having gone to God in prayer. I am too weak, too apt to err, to take responsibility of teaching one of God's highest creations without his blessing me in a special way. The door is perhaps forever shut against Christianity in the public schools. What are we going to do? What are we doing?

Editor Moore's Human Tradition.

BY F. W. SMITH.

I felt absolutely sure that Brother Moore could give no Bible authority for his practice of demanding the candidate to relate an "experience of grace" before baptism, and our readers can see from the following how correct was my judgment:

If you are not a Campbellite, Brother Smith, why do you defend Campbellism? It should not concern you in the least. Why should it sound ugly to you for me to use these "ugly" names.

Well, I am glad that you are able to get something good in attending a Baptist revival; but can you attend one such meeting without a compromise of your faith? You admit you are under the commission to "make" and "baptize disciples." Does not the same act that makes a disciple initiate him into the church, the body of Christ, according to the gospel you preach? If not, I have been misinformed as to the faith of your people.

The saved are the only ones that can be added to the church scripturally. (Acts 2: 47.)

I gave a short exegesis of faith in last week's issue. This will suffice till I hear from you on that.

The church does sit in judgment on the fitness of a candidate for baptism, for the reason that it is the only agency commissioned to make and baptize disciples. Does not Paul teach us that we judge those within? (1 Cor. 5: 12.) The church is responsible for those within, and most certainly should ascertain the fitness of one about to enter. Do you not do the same before you baptize a candidate? I am sure you do. Then, if wrong for a church to pass on one about to enter its fellowship, will it leave you guiltless for doing the same act? Really, do you not violate a scriptural advice in not doing as Baptists do on passing on the fitness of one for baptism? Does not Solomon, the wise man, say: "For by wise counsel thou shalt make thy war: and in multitude of counselors there is safety?" (Prov. 24: 6.) Can't you see that Baptist practice on this one thing is safer, and more in accord with the Word, than yours?

Does not your candidate for baptism relate some kind of an experience to you before you will get your consent to baptize him? To be sure he does. He makes a confession that he believes Jesus Christ is the Son of God, and faith is an inner grace either wrought in him by the Holy Spirit, or else he gave heed to the gospel and believed it. One or the other of these is true with your candidate, and both are experiences felt within. How could one know that he believes if he had no inner consciousness of it? You know he could not. So, you see, the accusation you charge against Baptists, you are guilty of yourself.

I will agree with you that the experiences are different; both of us require an experience before we baptize a candidate. Then pray tell me what scripture you claim as your authority to baptize any one apart from that commission to his church.

We are sorry to break off here, but a patient public says that's enough for one dose. Next week will follow the remainder of Brother Smith's article with our comments.

Brother Moore asks: "Does not the same act that makes a disciple initiate him into the church, the body of Christ, according to the gospel you preach?" If you make the word "disciple" the equivalent of Christian, and substitute the word "process" for the term "act," I say, yes. It requires more than one act to become a disciple in the sense of a Christian. But every act in the process is that of the candidate, and not that of the administrator of baptism. No administrator of baptism can tell whether or not the one he baptizes is initiated into the church or body of Christ. That is a matter known only to God and the one baptized. "For who among men knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of the man, which is in him?" (1 Cor. 2: 11.) The obedience in baptism, as well as in everything else, must be from the heart. "But thanks be to God, that, whereas ye were servants of sin, ye became obedient from the heart to that form of teaching whereunto ye were delivered; and being made free from sin, ye became servants of righteousness." (Rom. 6: 17, 18.) Please keep in mind this: "And the Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved." (Acts 2: 47.)

Now for my friend's proof that the church has the right to sit in judgment on the fitness of a candidate for baptism. He cites 1 Cor. 5: 12 as authority for his practice in the matter. In view of the fact that the New Testament records hundreds of cases of baptism, why did he not find one example among them all where any candidate for baptism was required to relate such an experience as the Baptists demand? Why did he not refer us to one passage in all the New Testament with explicit directions for his practice? He did not for the simple reason that he could not if his very life depended upon it. He must get away from all the examples of people entering the church, where baptism occupies a prominent place, and run to a letter written to the church. Well, this does not help his case, as I will now show. (1) The passage says not one word about the fitness or unfitness of one entering the church, and that is the very thing that Brother Moore needs to find. (2) The matter under consideration is church discipline, the dealing with an immoral character, one living in open shame before the world. (3) The word "judgment" here is used in the sense of condemnation-a thing the church had a perfect right to do, because the man's heart was laid bare in his acts. This is quite different from the practice of my friend in formulating an "experience of grace" with certain feelings and emotions as tests of its genuineness, imposing it on a candidate for baptism. Come, my friend, give us either precept or example or admit that you are holding to a human tradition. Suppose you try the baptism of the eunuch (Acts 8: 36-39), or the baptism of Saul of Tarsus (Acts 22: 16), or the baptism of the jailer (Acts 16: 33). Surely, if your practice is scriptural, you will find at least a hint of it in connection with these baptisms.

But I am reminded that Brother Moore says I require an experience of the candidate in that I ask the one demanding baptism to confess that he or she believes with all the heart that Jesus is the Christ. I shall not fall out with my friend for calling such an "experience;" the only thing that concerns me is, is that scriptural? Let us see: "And as they went on their way, they came unto a certain water: and the eunuch said, See, here is water; what doth hinder me to be baptized? And Philip said, If thou believest with all thine heart, thou mayest. And he answered and said, I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God." (Acts 8: 36, 37.) The very commission under which I preach says: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." (Mark 16: 16.) Hence I am authorized to baptize none except those who believe, and my right to ask the question. "Do you believe with all your heart that Jesus is the Christ?" is both involved and implied in the commission. "For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness, and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation." (Rom. 10: 10.)

Editor Moore charges me with defending "Campbellism," and I will now call upon him to do the following: (1) Give a clear and succinct definition of "Campbellism." Do not content yourself by saying, "It is the doctrine originated by Alexander Campbell," as is your custom. Never mind now who originated the thing you call "Campbellism," I demand a clearly defined statement of the thing itself, item by item. (2) If you succeed in showing that I believe, teach, and practice one thing in religion that Alexander Campbell or any other uninspired man originated, I promise you here and now to give it up. Here is work for you, and I insist that you go to it.

Cain, An Enemy of God. No. 5.

BY H. LEO BOLES.

It seems that as truly as God has had a representative in human form upon earth, so also has Satan. The same enmity that exists between Satan and God has existed between the representatives. When Jehovah pronounced the curse upon Eve, he said: "I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed: he shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel." (Gen. 3: 15.) We are not told anywhere that this enmity has ceased or been removed, but are constrained to believe that it still exists in all of its malignant forms. As the serpent represented Satan in the garden of Eden, so Cain represents him at this altar. Abel represents God and his will at the altar; he is also a type of the Lord Jesus Christ. Satan is trying through his agent, Cain, to destroy the seed of the woman as represented by Abel. Not only has Satan endeavored to destroy the representatives of God, but also he has tried to mar, corrupt, and destroy everything that typified the seed of the woman; he has also tried to corrupt every type of the different phases of worship that God has given to the human family. Every sacrifice and offering that typified Christ, Satan has attempted to corrupt, vitiate, nullify, and destroy. Satan has stood by every altar erected to Jehovah and tried to pollute it; he has had his representatives in every assembly of the saints and in some way or another has tried to defeat the will of God. He has mingled his voice with the music and praise of Jehovah; he has invented instruments to imitate and vitiate the harmony of the praise of Jehovah; he has even tried to substitute the crafty and skilled instruments of Jubal in all of the worship of God; he is even now advocating the use of the products of Tubal-cain in the destruction of his fellow man as service unto God. At every opportunity he has lifted his voice heavenward defiantly trying to nullify the authority of God. All of this grows out of his enmity for the seed of the woman.

The final struggle will come when the church of God, the spiritual body of Christ, shall have become triumphant over all enemies of righteousness. "Then cometh the end, when he shall deliver up the kingdom to God, even the Father; when he shall have abolished all rule and all authority and power. For he must reign, till he hath put all his enemies under his feet. The last enemy that shall be abolished is death." (1 Cor. 15: 24-26.)

The attitude that Cain assumed toward Jehovah is virtually the attitude that every sinner sustains toward God. He becomes not only a partner with Satan, but also an enemy of God. It is strange that one will voluntarily become or voluntarily remain an enemy of his Creator and God, who so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son. No wonder Paul pronounced such a scathing denunciation upon Elymas, the sorcerer: "O full of all guile and all villainy, thou son of the devil, thou enemy of all righteousness, wilt thou not cease to pervert the right ways of the Lord?" (Acts 13: 10.) Paul was able by the Holy Spirit to recognize in Elymas all the diabolical enmity of Satan; hence he condemns him with all of the power that the Holy Spirit gave unto him. It is enough to cause a thrill of horror to run through one's soul when he thinks of being an enemy of God.

Cain, like Judas Iscariot, had prepared his heart for such enmity. His heart had become a fit dwelling place for all of the envy and jealousy and bloody wrath that characterized the chief enemy of God. It does not matter whether one's sins are refined or gross, secret or open, popular or unpopular, they show that the sinners are enemies of God. When one becomes an enemy of God, that one becomes an enemy to all that is good, pure, holy, and righteous. He also becomes an enemy to himself; he opposes himself, and judges himself unworthy of eternal life. The sinner does not always recognize the fact that he is an enemy of God and a partner of Satan. But his unconsciousness of the attitude does not necessarily change that attitude.

Sin is destructive in its nature; it is never for an hour at a standstill; it is ever active. As we have already observed, there is nothing in nature so prolific as sin; hence the enmity of God increases as sin increases. Sin penetrates every fiber of character and forms there hidden passions of hate against God and unconscious enmity against his righteousness. The history of Cain becomes the history of sin; to understand Cain's motives, purposes, and acts is to understand the hideousness of sin.

May we see the goodness and the mercy of our God in revealing unto us the wickedness of Cain as his enemy. May we take it as a warning and be restrained from evil. May we always, like faithful Abraham, be called "friends of God."

Are We Walking in the Light? No. 1.

BY JESSE L. BEARD.

This is a very important question and is worthy of much consideration. Many of our brethren teach only the first principles, and, as a result, we have many that "ought to be teachers," and yet they must be taught the "first principles of the oracles of God." (Heb. 5: 12.) I trust that what I shall say in these few lines will be of some aid to those "summer Christians"—those who think it not so important to obey the "little things." What man may call "little things," God says are "great things"—things that must be kept.

This question needs but little defining. By "light" we mean brightness. David said: "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path." Again: "All thy commandments are righteousness." By "walking" we mean a going on (Paul says, "Let us go on to perfection"), a growing in the knowledge of God. So let us walk in the light of God, let us grow in the knowledge of God. Are we really walking in the light? This is something we all can work at—not just the preacher and elders, but all.

"As therefore ye received Christ Jesus the Lord, so walk in him, rooted and builded up in him, and established in your faith, even as ye were taught, abounding in thanksgiving." (Col. 2: 6, 7.) "As therefore ye received for, for the very reason ye received! Christ, so walk in him." For what reason have we received Christ? Because God sent Christ, his Son, into the world for our redemption; because Christ came and manifested his great power, gave out such great lessons, rebuked the Jews for not doing their duty. and, last, suffered the great trial of death for our redemption. This is the reason we receive Christ. Now, for the reason we receive him, we should also walk in him, "rooted and builded up in him." "Rooted" means we should be well settled. "Be ye steadfast, unmovable," Be solid. Be strong in the faith; be there so solid that you may not be blown about by "every wind of doctrine;" be so steadfast that you may stand the hardest storms and cyclones that come. "Builded up" simply means to add to. In erecting a building, we first lay the foundation, then we add to it until the building is complete. So the foundation is laid in the Christian life. But how and when is the foundation laid? Let Paul answer: "But God be thanked, that ye were the servants of sin, but ye have obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine which was delivered you. Being then made free from sin, ye became the servants of righteousness." When we obey the "form of doctrine," we obey the first principles; hence are made free from sin and become servants of righteousness. This is the foundation, or beginning. Hence we must build up. or add to, or go on in the knowledge of God. We must press on to "the mark of the prize of the high calling; must set our "affections on things above, not on things on the earth."

"From a child thou hast known the hely scriptures." Alas! How many of us can say we have known the Scriptures from our childhood days? I want to say they are few-yes, almost as scarce as "hen's teeth." Why do not the children of to-day know the Scriptures, as did Timothy? Paul says: "Bring them [the children] up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." There are about one-fifth of the Christians who even know that Paul used such language, and about one-third of those that know it practice it. So you see that makes a very few who know much about the Scriptures in childhood days. Most of the parents say: "Stand up for yourself; do not take anything off of that little old Johnnie Jones; he is so smart, anyway!" Is that bringing them up "in the nurture and admonition of the Lord?" That shows how much folks study the Bible. Let us all give heed to Paul's word's: "Study to show thyself approved unto God," Why don't they teach them that the Bible says, "Blessed are the meek?" Teach them to go to church and Sunday school by example as well as word. "Hear, ye children, the instruction of a father, and attend to know understanding." This shows clearly that the father is to teach the child the pure Bible, teach him how he should treat his fellow man-always be kind to everybody. "As ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise." Then we can say to them: "From a child thou hast known the holy scriptures."

O that there may be more teaching along this line! it will take a few generations to lift humanity from this fallen state. May we lift our eyes up from this world of sorrow and trouble and teach our children the blessed word of God! How many of us hold family worship each night before we retire? I know of some that do and many that do not. And some that do, do it in such a sorry way that there is but little to it. They are so careless that they let the children get off to bed and sound asleep, and then the father gets the Bible, reads a short lesson, and has a few words of prayer. How careful we should be concerning our children! Children, be sure you get all the good lessons that father and mother give you, for the wise man said: "Hear the instruction of thy father, and forsake not the law of thy mother: for they shall be an ornament of grace unto thy head, and chains about thy neck."

There are thirty-two contributors represented in the munificent contribution accredited to the church at Jackson, Tenn. W. S. Long, the evangelist, stirred up their hearts in this matter.

Among the donors mentioned above is a musician in the Headquarters Band, 114th Field Artillery, in France. He sent his contribution through his sister, who lives at Lawrenceburg, Tenn.

A flewspaper dispatch from Zurich indicates that conditions in Poland are growing worse. A staff correspondent of the New York World writes:

Conditions are terrible; the peasants and the poorer townspeople are literally dying of hunger. I mean dying, not merely living on short commons.

The Germans take away all foodstuffs, requisitioning the grain and potatoes, which are gathered while armed guards watch so that the owners cannot touch the food. Never before in all Poland's history have the Germans been so hated as now.

I was refused a pass from Lodz by the Germans, who allow nobody to leave Poland lest the truth be told. But finally I did get a pass to Vienna, where I obtained a permit to remain abroad thirty days, because the Austrians are more lenient than the Germans.

In sending contributions, be sure and state whether they are intended for the Armenian and Syrian Fund or the Poland Fund. Make all checks and money orders payable to A. B. Lipscomb, who will forward them to the proper commissioners,

He is able to bear the crosses of others because he bears his own. He can be of use to men because he can do without men. He is ethically effective because he is spiritually free. He is able to save because he is strong to suffer. His sympathy and his solitude are both alike the instruments of his strength.—Francis G. Peabody.

The Faith Once Delivered.

God is God!
Through wons past,
Through those unnumbered
Yet to come,
One truth remains:
God is God!

Though devils rage and woe on woe beset;
Though consternations sweep from pole to pole;
Through arching skies and ocean's deep to deep;
Though mountains rock and cataclysms roll,
And agonies unspeakable confound;
Though sun and moon and primal planets fall,
Hold fast! Unfathomable are His ways!
But God Almighty, still, is over all!

A Brother's Loss By Fire.

Brother D. P. Craig writes from Ingomar, Miss., under date of August 24, 1918:

Dear Brethren: We have this morning been informed of the loss by fire of the home of our beloved W. E. Crum, and submit through the pages of the Gospel Advocate an appeal to all the members of the church of Christ to send him a contribution. Like all gospel preachers, or most of them, Brother Crum is poor in this world's goods, and, in addition to preaching the gospel to the perishing around him, he has a family to support. Now that his home is completely destroyed, he will certainly suffer unless the brethren open their hearts and pocketbooks and assist him to rebuild his home. All he possessed in books and furniture was burned up. The local congregations in North Mississippi have begun a contribution, and we trust that the brethren and sisters in other churches will send him an offering. It will take a considerable sum to replace the loss of his home, and unless he receives our support it may throw him in debt and bring additional unnecessary burdens. His manner of life and preaching are well known in various sections, so that we need not to speak of things along this line. Suffice it to say, however, he has been a noble and able dispenser of the gospel light among those in the region and shadow of death, as well as a comfort to a great body of Christians and coworkers in the kingdom in many portions of Tennessee and Mississipni.

kingdom in many portions of Tennessee and Mississippi.

Brethren, such matters as these are our imperative duty and must not be overlooked. Those who labor in word and doctrine must be supported. "Remember the words of the Lord Jesus, how he said, it is more blessed to give than to receive." The brethren came often to minister to the necessities of the apostle Paul. The gospel commands us to be ready to distribute, willing to communicate.

I hope to see a goodly number of offerings given to this worthy brother in his hour of great need. May the Lord help us to see our duty. Send all contributions to W. E. Crum, Hickory Flat, Miss.

The best way to show sympathy is by revealing the light back of the cloud, thereby causing the cloud to disappear. Weeping with those that weep often intensifies the weeping. A cheerful person makes a rainy day look bright, and can change the atmosphere of a whole household from sadness to joy.—Selected.

Give every day a part of your time to your fellow man by relieving the distress of those who may chance to meet you. The highway has many who are poor and friendless that are worthy, but your gift is worthy if in the Master's name.—Selected.

Give to your enemy, forgiveness; give to your opponent, tolerance; give to your friend, your heart; give to your child, a good example; give to your parents, deference; give to everybody, sunshine.—Selected.

AT HOME AND ABROAD

Interest grows in F. W. Smith's meeting at Judsonia, Ark.

- C. R. Nichol, of Clifton, Texas, will begin a meeting at Cornersville, Tenn., next Sunday. He will hold other meetings while in Tennessee.
- J. S. Trigg, of Jonah, Texas, came to see us last week. He had just closed a meeting near Rogersville, Ala., and was en route to Eubank, Ky.

From W. Claude Hall, Bells, Tenn.: "We have been talking the Gospel Advocate during the meeting, and J. Green is sending you a list of renewals and subscriptions."

Charlie Taylor reports: "The meeting closed at Almaville, Tenn., with one reclaimed. I am now at Burnett Chapel, with splendid audiences. I go next to Lavergne."

H. T. King, of Franklin, Ky., will begin a meeting for the Twelfth Avenue congregation, this city, next Sunday. Services will begin at 7:45 P.M. Let all the Nashville Christians encourage this work.

From Thad S. Hutson, East Radford, Va., August 19: "Our six weeks in this part of Virginia closed last night. Five were baptized at Coffee Valley, two at Bethany, and twenty at New Salem. Praise the Lord!"

Herbert E. Winkler is anxious to secure some brother who is competent to act as moderator for him in a debate that is near at hand. If you can serve, telephone Brother Winkler at Adairville, Ky., at once. His telephone number is 114.

William P. Walker writes; "I am well pleased with my agency of the Gospel Advocate. I regret very much that I waited so long to secure the agency. I have worked in behalf of the Advocate this week, and I am well pleased with the results."

William P. Walker writes: "I am laboring this week at Totty's Bend, in Hickman County. The congregation at this place is one of the oldest in the county. Prospects are bright for a successful meeting in every respect. I hope to publish good results next week."

From Willie Hunter, Livingston, Tenn., August 23: "I closed a very interesting meeting at Big Bottom, in Jackson County, last Lord's day, with eighteen additions—eleven baptized and seven reclaimed. J. L. Hunter and I will leave to-morrow for a meeting in Clay County."

From J. T. Harris, Florence, Ala., August 23: "The meeting with the Bethel congregation, in Maury County, Tenn., closed on last Sunday night, having continued eight days. The audiences were large and attentive. Four confessed their faith in Christ and were baptized into him and two were reclaimed."

From F. L. Young, Little Elm, Texas, August 24: "We are in the midst of a great meeting. E. H. Rogers was with us for nearly one week. After two very serious operations, he regained his health. He helped us much by his presence and his earnest prayers. From here I go to Oklahoma for some meetings; then to Southwest Texas."

From Joe L. Netherland, Yuma, Tenn., August 23: "Our meeting at Obion Chapel closed at the water this afternoon. Eight souls made the noble confession and were baptized this week. J. W. Dunn was with us at the morning service and preached a very strong discourse. I shall begin my work in the Clarksburg High School next Monday."

We were grieved to learn of the death of Joseph E. Cain, one of the editors of the Christian Leader. He died at his home in Wichita, Kan., on August 13. Brother Cain was a very useful man in the Master's kingdom and will be sorely missed. We extend sympathy to the bereaved family, also to Brother Rowe in the loss of a good editorial writer.

From E. M. Borden, Lone Star, Texas, August 21: "The meeting at Brookeland, Texas, resulted in ten additions to the one body. I am now in a meeting at Lone Star, six miles out from Brookeland. Six confessions last night. We are expecting others. My next meeting is to be at Sharon, Tenn., embracing the first two Sundays in September."

Brother Elam closed an eight-days' meeting for the Stewart's Creek congregation, in Rutherford County, last Sunday. Thirteen persons were baptized and one was restored. The interest was fine. Large audiences attended every service. Brother Elam will begin a meeting at Murfreesboro, Tenn., next Sunday. The song service will be led by Dr. L. K. Harding.

From Mrs. Charles B. Kennamer, Guntersville, Ala., August 23: "Our meeting closed in Guntersville on the first Lord's day in August. We had fairly good audiences all the week. C. E. Wooldridge is a splendid man and held such a good meeting. We hope to have him with us another year. I feel that no one could come to Guntersville and get the attendance he will get."

From Hal P. McDonald, Berry, Ala., August 21: "Alabama Christian College will open for its seventh session on Tuesday, September 3. Present indications point to the fact that we will have the best enrollment that we have had during the three years that this makes for me at Berry. A faithful Christian woman with a college education, who can teach piano and who will make herself useful, is wanted at once by our school."

We learn from J. L. Pummill, one of the elders, that the church at Pearl and Bryan Streets, in Dallas, Texas, is making splendid progress. There have been eleven additions to the congregation at regular services since the close of their protracted meeting. A. O. Colley, their minister, has been busy and successful in the evangelistic field for several weeks. Meanwhile Brother Pummill has been doing the preaching at Pearl and Bryan, with good results.

From B. C. Goodpasture, Shelbyville, Tenn., August 23: "Beginning on the first Sunday in August, I preached two weeks in Portland. Eight were baptized. I am now in the midst of a meeting at New Hermon, in Bedford County. Six have been baptized thus far. On the second Sunday in September, the Lord willing, I shall begin a meeting in Shelbyville, Congregations within reach of Shelbyville are requested to announce the meeting, and all are cordially invited to attend every service."

J. M. Rutherford, of the Antioch congregation, near Franklin, Ky., reports that this congregation, will be one of three to support a hospital bed in France. He would be pleased to hear from others who will join in this movement. Address him at Route 2, Franklin, Ky. The cost of a bed for a year is seven hundred dollars. Of this, three hundred and fifty dollars is cash payment, the balance in six months. This is a very deserving work that can be done through the church. For any further information, address the Gospel Advocate.

From George W. Graves, Route 12, Nashville, Tenn., August 22: "My meeting at Woods Chapel, in Cannon County, began on the second Lord's day in July and lasted two weeks. Four were baptized and one was restored. Then my meeting with the Smyrna congregation, near Cookeville, lasted twelve days. While we had good crowds and good attention, there were no additions. Next, my meeting at Zion, in Jackson County, lasted one week and resulted in five baptisms. At present I am engaged in a meeting in Bell's Bend, Davidson County. We hope for a good meeting."

James A. Allen, of Nashville, Tenn., sends us the following report: "We had four very enjoyable services Saturday night and Sunday, preaching Saturday night and Sunday morning for the church at Estill Springs, and Sunday afternoon and night in a schoolhouse packed with people eager to listen in a neighborhood where there had been no preaching. Joe Mason, of Estill Springs, is one of the most zealous brethren I have ever seen in making arrangements for preaching in destitute places. Clyde Gleaves is to begin a meeting for the church at Estill Springs the fourth Lord's day in September. The brethren are looking forward to a good meeting."

From W. S. Long, Jackson, Tenn., August 22: "I have just closed a very interesting meeting at Mars' Hill, near Florence, Ala. The meeting was well attended both day Hill, near part well. There were six baptisms and one restoration. I preached one night at Jacksonburg, Ala., and two were restored and one baptized. As I had to go to another meeting, Brother Traylor continued the meeting. I love to labor with the Mars' Hill church, because they love the cause of Christ and spare no means to make the meetings a success. My home was with the Gresham family. is the home of our beloved W. H. Gresham (brother-in-law of Brother Larimore), who passed to his reward last February. This is one of the happiest homes I have ever been in, and they know how to take care of a preacher so he may be able to do his best. May the Mars' Hill congregation be a burning and shining light till the end of time. I am to begin a meeting at Cottage Grove, Tenn., next Sunday."

When Will God Stop the War?

BY E. A. E.

To sum up, we have seen thus far:

1. The God of the Bible, "the true and the living God"not some other god-exists in the full exercise of all his wonderful attributes to-day; he is the same yesterday, today, and forever; "even from everlasting to everlasting thou art God;" he "is King forever" (Ps. 10: 16); and " unto the King, eternal, immortal, invisible, the only God, be honor and glory forever and ever" (1 Tim. 1: 17).

2. God rules the universe. Man does not know the vastness of the universe, but God knows and rules all.

3. Therefore, God rules the earth, one of the smallest planets of one of the systems of worlds. He overrules today the inhabitants of the earth. He "ruleth in the kingdom of men, and giveth it to whomsoever he will;" "he changeth the times and the seasons;" "he removeth kings, and setteth up kings;" he uses both righteous rulers and base rulers to serve his purposes; "he doeth according to his will in the army of heaven, and among the inhabitants of the earth; and none can stay his hands or say unto him, What doest thou?" "His dominion is an everlasting dominion, and his kingdom from generation to generation."

4. Jesus Christ "Is the ruler of the kings of the earth." "He is Lord of all." He has been crowned [not will be crowned] with glory and honor" (Heb. 2: 7, 8, 9), and reigns NOW as King. "He must reign, till he hath put all his enemies under his feet. The last enemy that shall be abolished is death." God alone is excepted—is not under Christ. When all things have become subject to Christ and "he shall have abolished all rule and all authority and power," he will deliver up the kingdom to God, and he himself will be subject to God, "that God may be all and in all." (1 Cor. 15: 20-28.) God has already exalted Jesus and has given "unto him the name which is above every name." Men can now in faith confess "Jesus as Lord" (Rom. 10: 9) and willingly submit to his rule in his kingdom to their everlasting salvation; yet, if they do not do so now, they will be forced to do so in the end, to their everlasting dismay and destruction, because God has made him King, "that in the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven and things on earth and things under the earth, and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father" (Phil. 2: 6-11).

5. Whom God loves he chastens. His chastisement yields "peaceable fruit," "even the fruit of righteousness," when it has been received with reverence and loving submission. The branch which is dead, and, therefore, has ceased to bear fruit, God takes away and destroys; the branch which bears fruit he cleanses-chastises, prunes, and purlfies-that it may bear more fruit. On this principle God deals with nations as well, as we shall see.

6. "All things work together for good" to all who love God, to all who are "called according to his purpose"persecutions, famines, pestilences, wars, or less afflictions. To love God is to obey him and to be true to him at all hazards. To be "called according to his purpose" is to heed the call of the gospel, through which God calls men (2 Thess. 2: 14), and to work according to God's directions for the accomplishment of his purpose to redeem and save the race. All things work together for good to all who do this. Our supreme allegiance is to God.

7. The great and widespread lack of faith in God and the Bible as the revelation of God himself and of God's will to men.

EXAMPLES OF GOD'S USE OF ONE NATION TO CHASTISE OR TO DESTROY ANOTHER.

One who has not seen in reading the Bible the numerous instances of God's using one nation to chastise, to correct, or to destroy another, has read it most thoughtlessly and to little profit. Space allows the citation of only a few of the many instances of this, and in citing these few examples only the facts can be stated. The reader must study the facts, which he will do if he fears God and desires to know his will and to teach it to others.

God told Abraham that his seed should "be sojourners in a land" which was not theirs, and serve the people of that land and be afflicted four hundred years; that he then would judge that nation and deliver Abraham's seed "with great substance." (Gen. 15: 13, 14.) God overruled the envy and wicked deeds of Joseph's brethren in selling him into Egypt to the taking of Abraham's seed through Isaac and Jacob into this strange land. Joseph told his brethren they sold him and meant evil against him, "but God meant it for good," "to save much people alive," to preserve them "a remnant in the earth," and to make them "a great company" that should escape. (See Gen. 45: 5, 7; 50: 20, 21.) God said to the wicked Pharaoh:

But in very deed for this cause have I made thee to stand, to show thee my power, and that my name may be declared throughout all the earth. As yet exaltest thou thyself against my people, that thou wilt not let them go? (Ex. 9: 16, 17.)

The higher Pharaoh exalted himself in sin, the greater would be his fall and the mightier would be God's name in overcoming him.

For the scripture saith unto Pharach, For this very purpose did I raise thee up, that I might show in thee my power, and that my name might be published abroad in all the earth. (Rom. 9: 17.)

"Surely the wrath of men shall praise thee." (Ps. 76: 10.) God makes the wrath of men to praise him.

Read seriously and studiously Deut. 28. Note the great and unceasing blessings God pronounced upon Israel so long as they should continue to obey him, and the curses when they should refuse to obey him. Among other things is this:

Jehovah will cause thine enemies that rise up against thee to be smitten before thee; they shall come out against thee one way, and shall flee before thee seven ways. . . . And thou shalt lend unto many nations, and thou shalt not borrow. And Jehovah will make thee the head, and not the tail; and thou shalt be above only, and thou shalt not be beneath.

But if they would not hearken unto God "to observe to do all his commandments and statutes," then the most fearful curses should follow. Among others, this:

Jehovah will cause thee to be smitten before thine enemies; thou shalt go out one way against them, and shalt flee seven ways before them: and thou shalt be tossed to and fro among all the kingdoms of the earth.

Jehovah will bring thee, and thy king whom thou shalt set over thee, unto a nation that thou hast not known, thou nor thy fathers; and there shalt thou serve other gods, wood and stone. And thou shalt become an astonishment, a proverb, and a byword, among all the peoples whither Jehovah shall lead thee away.

Because thou servedst not Jehovah thy God with joyfulness, and with gladness of heart, by reason of the abundance of all things; therefore shalt thou serve thine enemies that Jehovah shall send against thee, in hunger, and in thirst, and in nakedness, and in want of all things: and he shall put a yoke of iron upon thy neck, until he have destroyed thee. Jehovah will bring a nation against thee from far, from the end of the earth, as the eagle flieth; a nation whose tongue thou shalt not understand; a nation of fierce countenance, that shall not regard the person of the old, nor show favor to the young, and shall eat the fruit of thy cattle, and the fruit of thy ground, until thon he destroyed.

Nothing should be left—grain, oil, wine, cattle, flocks—nothing—until the nation should perish. In their great distress they would eat their own children or brothers or wives.

Note that the Jewish nation was first chastised from time to time by different nations; and when it would not suffer correction and repent, it was destroyed. God caused it to perish. Note that God sent these nations against it and brought the nation "of fierce countenance" "from far" against it. This fierce nation regarded not the person of the old and showed no favor to the young. Can there be anything worse than eating one's own relatives and children? Think seriously over this question: How did God send these nations and bring this fierce nation "from far" against the Jewish nation? These nations did not know Jehovah and did not do what they did in obedience to him. For conquest, through greed, thirst for power, ambition to rule the world, and all the basest passions and lusts which dominate the brute force, these nations went forth to conquer, to plunder, to shed blood, and to destroy other nations; but God overruled them to serve his purposes in chastening and correcting others, if they would receive the correction and repent, and in destroying them when they in wickedness became vessels of wrath prepared for destruction.

When their iniquity became full—when they had sinned away their day of grace—God destroyed the seven nations of Canaan.

Read Isa. 10. God called the king of Assyria the rod of his anger and staff of his indignation—a heathen, plundering, bloodthirsty king. God sent this king against the profane Jewish nation and gave him a charge against the people of God's wrath "to take the spoil, and to take the prey, and to tread them down like the mire of the streets." This was done for the correction and punishment of the Jews. But of this king of Assyria, God says:

Howbeit he meaneth not so, neither doth his heart think so; but it is in his heart to destroy, and to cut off nations not a few. For he saith, Are not my princes all of them kings? Is not Calno as Carchemish? is not Hamath as Arpad? is not Samaria as Damascus? As my hand hath found the kingdom of the idols, whose graven images did excel them of Jerusalem and of Samaria; shall I not, as I have done unto Samaria and her idols, so do to Jerusalem and her idols?

He said the God of the Jews was no more than the idois of the heathen, and that by his own wisdom, military skill, and power he had conquered and plundered all these nations

For he hath said, By the strength of my hand I have done it, and by my wisdom; for I have understanding: and I have removed the bounds of the peoples, and have robbed their treasures, and like a valiant man I have brought down them that sit on thrones; and my hand hath found as a nest the riches of the peoples; and as one gathereth eggs that are forsaken, have I gathered all the earth: and there was none that moved the wing, or that opened the mouth, or chirped.

God said "the ax"-this heathen and wicked kingshould not "boast itself" against him, who was hewing with it, or "the saw"-this heathen and wicked kingshould not "magnify itself" against God, who was wielding it. In other words, this king was in God's hands as an ax or saw is in the carpenter's hands. Again, does "a rod" wield him who holds it, or does he who holds it wield the rod? Does the staff lift up him who holds it, or does he who holds it use the staff? Do kings and rulers wield and use God, or does he wield and use them? Is God an instrument and power in their hands to accomplish their purposes, or are they instruments in his hands to accomplish his purposes? It is daring presumption for any man to attempt to use God and Christianity to accomplish any personal and selfish end. With all this king's boasted wisdom and power, God overruled his evil intentions and wicked deeds to serve God's purpose in chastening his own people and destroying nations still more wicked. Therefore God declared that, when he had "performed his whole work upon Mount Zion and on Jerusalem," he, in turn, would "punish the fruit of the stout heart of the king of Assyria, and the glory of his high looks."

Read Isa, 36, 37. Sennacherib, king of Assyria, invaded Judah. His general made defiant speeches to the men of Judah. In arrogance Sennacherib defied God and compared him to the idols of other nations. Hezekiah spread Sennacherib's letter before God and prayed. God answered. He said Sennacherib should not build a mound against Jerusalem or shoot an arrow there; that he would put his hook in Sennacherib's nose and his bridle in Sennacherib's lips and turn him back by the way which he came; and that he should fall by the sword in the hands of his own sons in his own land. The angel of Jehovah smote in the camp of Sennacherib one hundred and eightyfive thousand of his men in a night; he returned to Nineveh and was slain by his sons. Thus, as one controls a wild horse by a bit and reins and a blatant bull by a book in his nose, God overruled Sennacherib.

Nebuchadnezzar, another mighty king, but an ungodly and wicked and heathen one, is called God's servant—not as was Moses and Elijah and Paul—to chastise Judah and to punish all nations round about. (See Jer. 25: 7-11; 43: 10.) The following passage states God's use of, and dealing with, Nebuchadnezzar:

I have made the earth, the men and the beasts that are upon the face of the earth, by my great power and by my outstretched arm; and I give it unto whom it seemeth right unto me. And now have I given all these lands into the hand of Nebuchadnezzar the king of Babylon, my servant; and the beasts of the field also have I given him to serve him. And all the nations shall serve him, and his son, and his son's son, until the time of his own land come: and then many nations and great kings shall make him their bondman. And it shall come to pass, that the nation and the kingdom which will not serve the same Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon, and that will not put their neck under the yoke of the king of Babylon, that nation will I punish, saith Jehovah, with the sword, and with the famine, and with the pestilence, until I have consumed them by his hand. (Jer. 27: 5-8.)

How did God give all these lands and rulers to Nebuchadnezzar? He did it. Nothing can make plainer than this passage the fact that God overrules nations and the whole earth, even wicked nations, to chastise, to punish, or to destroy other nations, and then, in turn, punishes and destroys the wicked nations so overruled.

When the Jews by the Babylonian captivity had been chastened and reformed, God raised up Cyrus, another heathen king, to prepare them for their return to Jerusalem and the rebuilding of the city and establishment of the true worship of God. God called Cyrus by name about one hundred and seventy-five years before he was born, and called him his shepherd. (See Isa, 44: 24-28; 45: 1-13.) Verse 7 says:

I form the light, and create darkness; I make peace, and create evil; I am Jehovah, that doeth all these things.

Verses 11-13 say:

Thus saith Jehovah, the Holy One of Israel, and his Maker: Ask me of the things that are to come; concerning my sons, and concerning the work of my hands, command ye me. I have made the earth, and created man upon it: I, even my hands, have stretched out the heavens; and all their host have I commanded. I have raised him up in righteousness, and I will make straight all his ways: he shall build my city, and he shall let my exiles go free, not for price nor reward, saith Jehovah of hosts.

All this was foretold about two hundred years before it transpired.

Different members of the church of some age have told me recently that they did not know some of these declarations are in the Bible. These things sound strange to them and to others.

What is the Bible for? Why are all these things revealed through it?

Do preachers and teachers read these and numerous other passages showing God's dealings with the nations of the earth and the principles upon which he deals with them to their audiences, or exhort their audiences to read them that all may trust in God and realize that, since he rules, all things will work together for their good? Or do they turn in cold indifference from these passages and this wisdom and mighty power of God? Or do they in presumption ignore these things? Or will they study them in order to know and to teach the will of God and to offer "light and leading" to the people who are in need of instruction and faith?

No man can answer the question, "Why does God not stop the war?" or, "When will God stop the war?" until he knows that God "ruleth in the kingdom of men, and giveth it to whomsoever he will," and upon what principles God deals with the nations of the earth.

Who Are Certain of God's Blessings?

BY E. G. S.

The book of Revelation tells plainly who are certain of God's blessings. It says: "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city." (Rev. 22: 14.) This expression embraces all the requirements that are made at the hands of people in the New Testament. It includes faith, repentance, baptism, and all that is required of Christians in living the Christian life. It includes assembling on the first day of the week to break bread, visiting the fatherless and widows in their afflictions, and keeping ourselves unspotted from the world.

Now, visiting the afflicted is a very plain duty. It means much more than just going to see them. It means that we are to look into their wants and supply their necessities if we are able to do so, and to encourage them to put their trust in the Lord if they are Christians and continue to pray to him for his help in their recovery. But they are not to expect him to heal them in any direct way, but that he may bless the efforts of the physician to heal them, and are to use all the care they can to make the physician's efforts successful. They need not pray the Lord to heal them as he healed the sick when he was here on earth, but they may pray him to bless the efforts put forth in their behalf. Christians need not pray the Lord to give them their daily bread in any direct way, but they may ask him to bless and prosper them in their efforts to secure it in a laudable way. To pray the Lord to give it to them in a direct way, without a laudable effort on their part to secure it, would certainly be a vain prayer. The Lord did not propose to encourage people in idleness when he taught them to pray for their daily bread, but to help them in their efforts to secure it. Christians must work as well as pray. Prayer alone will likely be unavailing, if the one that offers the prayer is able to work. Earnest prayer will likely be answered if accompanied by necessary labor on the part of him that utters it. Prayer alone is about as useless as faith alone; and "faith without works is dead, being alone." It takes the doing of what the Lord requires of us to reach the promised blessing. Hence, Christians need to connect their prayers for their daily bread with earnest, active efforts to secure it.

Moreover, all our prayers should be upon this same principle. All should do all they can to help themselves when they pray to God for help; and all would more fully appreciate the blessings they pray for if they would faithfully do their part to secure them. Active industry must be used on our part to secure things we need, if we would truly appreciate and enjoy them when we receive them. As a rule, we enjoy what we secure by honest labor much more than things that are given to us by others. Of course, it is a great blessing for others to help us when we are not able to help ourselves; but active industry sweetens our toil when we secure what we need. Christians should always be ready to give earnest thanks to the Lord when they can secure what they need by their own industry. God knew what was best for us when ne ordained that we should labor for the things we need. Honest, faithful labor is far better for us than if we had everything we need placed in our hands without any effort on our part to secure it. Hence we should be thankful for the necessity of honest labor to secure a comfortable living.

We should always continue faithful in well-doing, that we may be sure of a crown of life in the glory home. If we want to be cheerful and happy in this life, therefore, we must do our part faithfully, that we may have a living and be able to help the needy. There will likely always be some people in every community that need help; hence we need to cultivate the grace of liberality. There will always be some poor and needy people about us that need help, and some that are not poor will need some sort of help. Some are needy because they do but little of what they might do to help themselves. Others are poor and destitute because they are not able to work, and it becomes the duty of those who can to help them. There are many ways in which people may help each other if they will. Hence people that can help others should watch their opportunity to help those who really need it. Much good can be done, and is being done, in this way.

Fanning Orphan School.

BY E. A. ELAM.

We here give the reports of the treasurer of the Board of Trustees and of the principal of the Fanning Orphan School.

TREASURER'S REPORT.

Nashville, Tenn., August 3, 1918.—Dear Brother Elam: I beg your pardon for the delay in furnishing you the promised report as to the result shown by the financial statement of the Fanning Orphan School for the year ending July 1, 1918. Other matters have kept me too busy to give it attention earlier.

In the first place, I beg to say that the total contribu-tions for the year amounted to $748.87, of which one brother gave $500 as a bequest, the same bearing interest during his lifetime. At his death the sum goes to the school without further interest.

I beg to commend this form of donation, and trust that others may give it consideration and act upon it in the future. As it is, the school is paying interest on borrowed money and other obligations; and I see no disadvantage in paying interest on a bequest of this kind where the principal goes to the school at the death of the party making the bequest.

Of course, the above donations passing through my hands do not include sums paid to Brother Lipscomb directly as tuition.

The financial statement shows a net loss in operating the school during the year ending July 1, 1918, of $748.87. In this due credit has been given for the income from rents and for the benefit of the produce of the farm of every character. This result was relieved only by the donations above referred to.

I desire to call attention to the indebtedness, which now amounts to $2,160, with small prospects of our being able to meet it any time soon. As you know, we are expecting to get some help from the sale of some timber we are having cut from the school farm; but this should be used in taking on more free pupils, as there are always many more than we can care for who apply for admission to the school. While good people are contributing liberally to other worthy causes now, it seems that here is an opportunity for doing a good work that should also receive attention, and I would rejoice to see the school free from debt and with sufficient funds to care for enough poor, orphan girls to fill the school to its capacity. Can we do it, and will we do it?

A. N. TRICE, Treasurer.

REPORT OF DAVID LIPSCOMB, PRINCIPAL.

To the Board of Trustees, Fanning Orphan School:

The thirty-fourth year of the life of the Orphan School was finished on the night of May 23, 1918.

The school has proved its right to live by living, living longer than any school or college that has occupied these or adjoining premises.

While from its nature its influence can never be so wide spread as that of Franklin College or the sister school, Minerva College, it can claim to be a small leaven that silently does its work.

More than a thousand pupils have been in attendance for longer or shorter periods since the year Miss Emma Page, now Mrs. T. B. Larimore, began to teach the class of six.

The experiment of admitting day pupils, or pupils from the neighborhood, has been made from time to time, with the final conclusion that it was in the main unsatisfactory.

During the term just finished we had by special concession only two day pupils, the daughters of Dr. J. M. McLaughlin, who acts as our school physician.

There were enrolled sixty-eight, classified as follows:

Full beneficiaries, 39; partial beneficiaries, 2; full pay, 25; Total, 68.

It will be noticed that the number of beneficiaries is greater than the thirty allowed by the board. This is accounted for in two ways: First, by withdrawal at sundry times, 4; second, by failure on part of some promising to pay, 2. This leaves the number of free pupils thirty-three or thirty-five, counting the defaulting ones, an excess of five, at the close of school. Four of these were admitted late in the term. Also, of the full-pay pupils, there were withdrawn during the term, four.

As known to most of your body, we introduced for the last three months of the term the study of stenography and typewriting, creating a class of ten of the more advanced pupils, with Miss Elizabeth Hitch, of East Nashville, as teacher. The immediate result of this work is the placing teacher. The immediate result of this work is the placing of four of the class in good, lucrative positions. Two, Misses Agnes Speck and Lela Baber, are with the Life and Casualty Insurance Company; one, Miss Elizabeth Steele, with the Graham Paper Company; and one, Miss Louise Grandy, with Miss Grace Dawson, public stenographer. Our music teacher, Miss Jessie Seitz, has learned stenographer.

raphy and will give lessons next term.

We lose from our teaching force Miss Elizabeth Ballou, who has taught two terms. She goes into government employ. Miss Cornelia Satterfield, now doing for the She goes into government summer some work for the government in Washington, is under agreement to return.

The vacancy caused by Miss Ballou's resignation has been filled, subject to your approval, by Miss Hazel Freeman, of Gallatin. The superintendent is well acquainted with Miss Freeman's two older sisters. They attended our school in 1908-09 and made most excellent records. Miss Hazel is a graduate of Howard College, Gallatin, and has taught in the Gallatin High School for one term. The superintendent asks that his action be ratified.

The health of the school last year was remarkably good. The doctor was called in once. The high price of food-stuffs, and especially the curtailment of the meat allowance, may have conduced to the health of the pupils. We were not reduced to short commons, but we had to be economical. Because of loss by theft of five fat hogs early in the fall of 1917, the rest were sold, and therefore we were largely without home-killed bacon. This may or may not have been a real deprivation.

The very cold winter caused some loss in plumbing and some hardships from lack of water. Our fuel supply, by rigid economy, held out, and we had some next season has been laid in already, we are happy to next season has been laid in already, we are happy to rigid economy, held out, and we had some left. Coal for report, although at a greater cost than ever before. Louisville and Nashville Railroad for many years has delivered our coal to Nashville free of charge, and the Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis Railway has placed it at Easton Switch without cost. A personal interview with

Mr. Peyton gained us this favor.

The superintendent has and some correspondence with heating companies that advertise pipeless furnaces. something of this kind that is a success could be installed in our building, it would add much to our comfort, and secure immunity from pipe freezing, and perhaps make for economy in fuel.

Other suggestions as to improvements could be made, but it is doubtless better to wait for cheaper labor and material. The roof of the building needs painting, as it has been two years since it was gone over, and the sleet and ice developed several small leaks. The roof of the kitchen was so bad that it was partially replaced last spring.

While everything has doubled in price, our financial condition is at least no worse than this time last year.

The Board of Trustees appreciates the services of the treasurer and principal of the school. It also appreciates the good management of the principal in taking more free pupils than it thought wise to admit at first.

The board indorsed at its last meeting the principal's selection of teachers and plan of work. Since, however, it learns there will be some change made in the faculty on account of one or two of the teachers taking work under the government.

The trustees heartily join both Brother Trice and Brother Lipscomb in earnestly requesting donations for the school. Please note what they say and contribute to the school accordingly. While generous in other ways and in helping other orphans, brethren must not neglect the onesat their doors and this school.

Let us relieve it of debt and so enlarge its endowment as to enable it to fill its rooms with free pupils. . -

Field Reports.

The writer recently closed a two-weeks' meeting at Tracy City, Tenn., which resulted in five confessions. This was my two-weeks' vacation from the Atlanta work, and those Tracy City people certainly made the days delightful for a tired man. We had services only at night, except on Lord's days and one Friday-afternoon service. Brother Joe W. White led the song service, and did his work well. We will never forget the Thorogoods, Finneys, and Stones, of that place, as well as others who did their best to make us happy. Tracy City is the home of J. D. Northcut, and he is loved and esteemed in that whole section. He was at home only a few days while we were there. May the Lord bless that congregation in all her efforts to grow into a greater power for good.

Last night (August 18) I closed an eight-days' meeting with the Liberty Hill brethren, out about eight miles from Atlanta, which resulted in four baptisms. This was one of the most pleasant weeks' work of my life. Some of as fine people as I have ever worked with are in this congregation—men of sterling character and who speak loudly in their daily walk for Christ.

Brother R. P. Cuff's meeting at Buchanan, Ga., resulted in seven baptisms and much good done otherwise. He and Brother Joe W. White are now in a meeting at Donaldsonville, Ga., where we have but three members. We are hoping that the prayers of a good sister at that place will be answered.

Brother R. R. Brooks' week's stay at Tunnel Hill resulted in one baptism. He is now at Sinai, out from Dalton, in a meeting.

Brother G. E. Claus recently closed a good meeting at Hardie's Chapel, with a number of conversions, a full report of which I have not received. We have some fine people in this congregation.

The "Y" Work in the Camps.

As is fully understood, I presume, the government has appropriated the Y. M. C. A. organization through which to see after the spiritual and moral welfare of our boys in the camps. Some way had to be arranged for this; hence, instead of creating an organization of its own, it took advantage of this organization that already existed. A great work is being done at home and abroad for our boys. As is well known, all religious bodies have access to the camps through this door of admission. Certainly our prayers should follow our men in this work.

Brother R. E. Wright, Wartrace, Tenn., writes me that he is thinking of entering into this work the first of October. The "Y" workers receive a salary commensurate with the demands on them at home, when not backed by their respective churches. Quite a number of the religious bodies have taken a great interest in supporting the preachers' families while they do this camp work. This is to be commended. The action of the church at Cookeville, Tenn., in stepping in and taking charge of the support of Brother John E. Dunn's family while he does the camp work speaks well for that congregation.

Now I want to know if the churches at Fairfield, Bell-buckle, Wartrace, Beech Grove, Shelbyville, and others in that section, will not step in at once and put up a reasonable sum toward Brother Wright's family per month, so that he will not have to ask for more than his incidental expenses in the camp? What do you say, brethren? Brother Wright will make a great man for this work. Make all reports to C. M. Gleaves, Bellbuckle, Tenn.

Somebody Else.

Who's Somebody Else? I should like to know.
Does he live at the North or the South?
Or is it a lady fair to see,
Whose name is in every mouth?
For Meg says: "Somebody Else will sing;"
Or, "Somebody Else can play."
And Jack says: "Please let Somebody Else
Do some of the errands to-day."

If there's any hard or unpleasant task
Or difficult thing to do,
'Tis always offered to Somebody Else—
Now, isn't this very true?
But if some fruit or a pleasant trip
Is offered to Dick or Jess,
We hear not a word of Somebody Else,
Why? I will leave you to guess.

The words of cheer for a stranger lad
This Somebody Else will speak.
And the poor and helpless who need a friend
Good Somebody Else must seek.
The cup of cold water in Jesus' name—
O, Somebody Else will offer;
And words of love for a broken heart
Brave Somebody Else will proffer,

There are battles in life we only can fight,
And victories, too, to win;
And Somebody Else cannot take our place
When we shall have "entered in."
But if Somebody else has done his work,
While we for ease have striven,
'Twill only be fair if the blessed reward
To Somebody Else is given. —Union Signal.

The Country's Charm in Winter.

It is pleasant to visit the country in the summer. There is music in the leaves and grasses, and pictures everywhere. The streams becken and call when the weather is warm, and the shade along the brook is pleasant. There is comfort in the growing things, and the song of the bird and the call of the insect are enchanting.

But there is a charm about the country in the winter that is more soothing, more delightful, than anything which one encounters in the summer. The pictures are done in drab and there is less of life in evidence. The forests moan instead of singing. The voice of the insect is stilled and there is little music from the feathery friends. But the out-of-doors is there, and the business of living is apparent. The tracks in the snow or mud, the well-worn trails through the dead grasses, the sodden paths across the barren fields—these things and a million more are woven into a fabric of delight; and about you everywhere is the breath of winter.—Exchange.

In all our conservation, let us not neglect to conserve our religion, for that is the greatest, most vital of all our needs; that is the only unfailing spring and fountain of all helpfulness and benefaction for the life that now is as well as for that which is to come. For in other conservation, the less you use, the more you have to store up and give away; but in religion, in spiritual resources, in the means of grace, the more you use, the more you increase your store, the more you have to bestow in many-sided helpfulness and blessing.—Arthur C. Clarke.

He who knoweth and understandeth Christ's life knoweth and understandeth Christ himself; and in like manner, he who understandeth not his life doth not understand Christ himself. And he who believeth on Christ believeth that his life is the best and noblest life that can be; and if a man believe not this, neither doth he believe on Christ himself. And in so far as a man's life is according to Christ, Christ himself dwelleth in him; and if he bath not the one, neither hath he the other.—Selected.

MISSIONARY

Canada.

BY NELLIE STRAITON.

I have just received two very interesting and encouraging letters from Canada. The first comes from Foxey. Ontario, and is written by J. D. Wismer. He says:

You will find in this letter a post-office money order for the amount of fifteen dollars, which you will please apply to some good missionary cause. It is from the church here. It is only a small amount, but our congregation is small in number-only six of us, and three out of that number who are not regular attendants. I think that the true gospel of Christ has great need of being preached throughout the whole world, even in what are called Christian We Christians here in Canada are at the prescountries. ent time going through great trials on account of the terrible war which is raging over in Europe. I would also ask the prayers of brethren and sisters wherever they may be. would now say that I hope this small contribution may help to spread the gospel of Christ, which is the gospel of peace. I wish you every success in your work."

Mrs. George M. Anderson writes from Irma, Alta, Canada, as follows:

You will find inclosed two dollars to help support our missionaries in India. Brother Floyd H. Henderson and Brother Alfred Murray are sending seventy-five cents each, and I am sending fifty cents. Yes, this is the same Brother Henderson that was in Saskatchewan. While he was there he found my name in the Firm Foundation, and saw that we were meeting on the first day of the week to break He is a very faithful Christian and needs to be bread. encouraged in the work. He comes twenty-one miles on a bicycle every Lord's day. He is also teaching a Bible class. Brother Murray is also from Saskatchewan. He heard of me through Brother Henderson. They both worked in Saskatchewan last summer. Brother Henderson's home is in Alabama, and Brother Murray's home is in Prince Edward Isle in Canada. They both came in the spring. We have been meeting in my home ever since April a year ago. Brother and Sister Clark were with us last summer and fall. They left for British Columbia last winter. Then my two daughters and I were left alone, but we kept up the communion services. Brother and Sister Clark will be with us next Lord's day. They think they will go to Saskatchewan, but I hope not. May membered in your prayers as a small band of disciples? We need some missionary work done in Canada, and we are willing to help support it.

These two letters are full of meaning, and I trust they will bring the same wonderful message of encouragement and desire to be up and doing for the Master as they did to me.

"Where Art Thou?"

BY F. B. SHEPHERD.

This is a tremendous question, and one vital in every walk of life. Man demands to know where you are on the great questions of the day—the war, Liberty loans, the Red Cross, etc.; but the one of transcendent importance, and that to which God demands an answer, is: Where art thou, my brother, on the vital dogmas of the church of Jesus Christ—its work and its worship? Do you believe its mission is the highest, noblest, and grandest man can conceive of? Is this an all-consuming conviction or a mere tacit acknowledgment?

In this time of great stress, when the world is in the turmoil of war and all men are concerned, more or less, about the things of the flesh that pertain to their future happiness and security, the followers of the Lord Jesus need to be reminded of their spiritual obligations. When some are even mortgaging property to meet the needs of our government, can we not find time to consider, and money to answer, the call of the millions of dying souls of earth as it is borne to us in the pleas of our faithful and self-sacrificing missionaries, and divert some of our means to the service of God? Are you, dear friend and fellow partaker of the promises, among those who are forgetful of the God-ordained mission of the body and in the stress of worldly affairs becoming lax in your duties, or do you still feel the burden of souls resting heavily upon you? The voice of one of God's big men comes to us from across the seas, asking, "Where art thou?" with reference to the work at Forest Vale Mission. Are you interested in the soul's salvation of those people to whom Brother Sherriff preaches? Is it from the lips-outward-or will your concern manifest itself in practical form? (See 1 John 3: 17.)

Since funds for this work are to be intrusted to me for transmission. I would like to arrange to send regular monthly contributions rather than in the haphazard way so often followed. Commencing with September, I shall endeavor to send Brother Sherriff a draft on the fifteenth day of every month. How much shall it be? Address me at Lometa, Texas.

Getting Down to Business.

BY C. G. VINCENT.

The church at McMinnville, Tenn., through its treasurer, H. K. Potter, writes that the church will assume the support of Brother Hiratsuka, in Tokyo, Japan, at twenty-five dollars a month. This is gratifying, and it is not only scriptural, but also businesslike. I know that this congregation will find much joy in this service for the redemption of the lost of Japan. I know of no native evangelist more worthy of confidence than Brother Hiratsuka. There are two other workers needing support at five and seven and a half dollars a month, respectively. Who will support them?

Brother Hiratsuka recently baptized three persons. He writes very favorably f the work in the country. He is to visit that work soon to do some preaching, as several seem desirous of obeying the Savior. The prospects in this and near-by villages are most encouraging.

Brother Ishiguro and Sister Okei, Brother Fujimori's niece, are to be married soon (probably they are married by now), according to a recent "communique." I am delighted to hear of this union, as Okei is a splendid Christian worker and will prove an asset to Ishiguro and the Otsuka work.

What have you done toward bringing Brother Jelley and his family home? The little band of Christians in Dayton took up a special offering last month for this purpose. amounted to twenty dollars. The same was sent to the Gospel Advocate, 317 Fifth Avenue, North, Nashville, Tenn., to be applied to the E. S. Jelley home-coming fund. We have sent over ten thousand dollars to the suffering in the war-stricken districts. A grand and good work, indeed! None of us have lacked on that account. All things considered, the present appeal is equally as worthy and should meet with as prompt and liberal a response. It has been suggested, and wisely, too, that a certain Sunday be set aside for an offering for this home-coming fund. Why not make it the second Lord's day in September? Let the elders, preachers, and others, remembering the Golden Rule, lay this matter upon their hearts, present the appeal to the churches, ask for liberal contributions, and remit to Brother McQuiddy promptly, so he can wire the money to Brother Jelley, and thus get this matter off our minds and hearts. This ought to be done; it can be done; and I believe it will be done. Brother Jelley has a right to expect this much of us; more than that, the Lord requires it of us.

Nine were baptized into the one body, six of whom were from the I will return in the future Baptists. and assist these brethren in the work. I am now in a fine meeting here.-A. D. Dies.

Hines, August 14 .- On the first Lord's day in this month Brother W. M. Behel began a tent meeting about two miles from this place and connine days. There were eleven additions, and one came back who had wandered off. The attendance was good and there was the best of behavior during the meeting. There are about thirty members now in this community. They are going to begin keeping house for the Lord and try to do their duty.-S. P. Clemons.

Arkansas.

Newport, August 18.—I have assisted in three meetings since last One was at Ash Flat, with report. three additions; another at Harmony, with no additions; the last one, at Kenyon, with sixteen baptisms and six restorations. All these meetings were good and extra well attended. I have never enjoyed three meetings my life more. The cause is doing well at all these points. May God bless and reward abundantly all the true gospel preachers.—O. E. Billingsley.

Beedeville, August 19.-I closed a seventeen days' normal singing school at Grubbs last Friday, which was a decided success in every way. Brother J. H. Curry, of Ravenden, held a meeting for the church while I was there, and I had the pleasure of being associated with him, leading the song service. Brother Curry is a great teacher, a grand man, and should be kept busy all the time. I am now in a fine meeting at Beedeville. I held the meeting here last year, taking Brother Nelson's place, as he was called away on business. We had a great meeting last year, but this one promises to exceed it, as the attendance is very fine and interest increasing. This is the home of Brother Z. D. Barber, one of our strongest Arkansas preachers. He is a godly man and has been laboring here for a number of years. He is at home this week, having had some of his meetings called off on account of dry weather. Brethren, it is a shame to contract with a man for his time, and then, just because it does not rain, write him not to come. He and his family must suffer by such acts. Every church that has contracted with Brother Barber for a meeting, then called the meeting off, should send him a check for at least fifty dollars. I go from here to Conway and Van Buren counties for three meetings. I have received more calls than I could possibly accept and have turned some of them to other preachers. Some churches dry up in dry weather and freeze up in cold weather, but, thank God, other churches are wide awake in the Master's cause,—W. W. Slater.

Florida.

Lake City, August 20.—I have just closed one of the best meetings of my life, all things considered. This meeting began with the Evergreen Church, in Suwanee County on August 10, and continued over two Lord's days, with services both day and night. The congregations were large and the atten-tion and interest were good throughout the meeting. Every religious body near was represented by some of their members; and while I "shunned not to declare the whole counsel of God," the brethren said that it was pre-sented in such a manner that no one could reasonably find fault. Three souls were buried with Christ in baptism and two came across the Baptist line and took a stand upon the Bible alone. The church was edified and awakened to duty, one elder and two deacons were appointed to do the work of the church in their line. At the close of the meeting I went about thirty-five miles and said the words that made Brother E. L. Fielding and Sister Maude Miller husband and wife. Brother Fielding is a teacher in the public schools of the State, while his bride is the accomplished daughter of a prosperous farmer.-J. O. Barnes.

Georgia.

Lyerly, August 19.-The meeting here closed last night. While there was only one baptism, yet this was one of my best meetings. The audiences were good; the interest, wonderful. When people will come and listen to the truth, our labor is not in vain. One young lady was present who had never heard a gospel preacher before. Her heart was absolutely free from prejudice, and, having a good educa-tion, she was prepared to listen and weigh the evidence. Some day soon she will accept the truth and lead others to Christ. The preacher made his home with Dr. Shamblin, and he and his Christian wife know how to make a preacher feel at home. While the Doctor is a busy man in ministering to the needs of the physical man, he in a quiet way sows the seed of the kingdom and never fails to doctor soul when opportunity affords. With the teaching he has done and the seed sown through this meeting, there will be fruit later on. I will return here in October for a mission meeting about four miles in the country .-John Haves.

Indiana.

Bloomington, August 19.—Our meeting of over three Lord's days in Sparta, Tenn., closed last night. Brother John T. Smith, the "home preacher," worked untiringly in the meeting. He is a choice spirit. He meeting. He is a choice spirit. He led the singing and helped much every way. Five were baptized and one restored. On the way to Sparta I preached one week in Murfreesboro. One was baptized. If it be the Lord's will, I hope to meet all these people again.-H. H. Adamson.

Kentucky.

Chaplin, August 15 .- Our meeting at Fairview closed with eight souls saved. I am now in a good meeting at Russell Schoolhouse. Eleven have made the confession. We have had baptizing every day. I go from here to Love Ridge for a two-weeks' meeting.-R. H. Craig.

Oklahoma.

Roff, August 19.—Our meeting closed here last night, with good interest and large crowds. Fourteen were added to the church and the brethren were greatly encouraged. I promised to re-turn for another meeting next year. I go from here to Nida .- J. A. Cullum.

Altus, Route 6, August 17.—I am just home from a ten-weeks' evangelistic tour in the destitute regions of West Oklahoma. I have baptized quite a few since June. One old Baptist (sixty-two years old) said he thanked God that his life had been spared to see the true light; that he had read the Bible much, but never could reconcile it with Baptist teaching.-H. H. Turner.

Tennessee.

Ralston Station, August 17.-I have just closed a splendid meeting at Hickory Plains Church, in Carroll County, six miles from Cedar Grove. Seven persons were baptized. The attendance and interest were excellent. -R. L. Colley.

Ethridge, August 22.-I am in a good meeting six miles east of this place. This makes my fourth meeting in Lawrence County this season. have other meetings to hold; but am forced to go home and do some farm work when we close here, as labor is scarce and the work must be done,-J. Clifford Murphy.

Latham, August 20.—Brother A. S. Wilson, of Farmington, Ky., has just closed a meeting here, with eight added by obedience and one from the Baptists; also, one rededicated her life to the cause. In many ways this was the most successful meeting we have ever had. Brother Will Yates led the song service.-L. A. Winstead. Bells, August 21.—We have just closed the meeting at Bethel, near Tigrett. Much good was done. Nineteen were taptized, one came from the Baptists, and four erring brethren confessed their wrongs and returned. The brethren were greatly encouraged and some prejudice was removed from the minds of the sectarians.—W. Claude Hall.

Huntland, August 20.—On last Sunday night we closed a meeting at Garth, near Paint Rock, Ala. Five were added by baptism, one from the Methodists who had been baptized, and one was reclaimed. I shall return again next year, if possible. I shall begin next Saturday night at Speigner, near Montgomery, Ala.—E. Gaston Collins.

Lebanon, August 22.—I closed the meeting at Gilroy, near Antioch, last night, and baptized a young man before leaving this morning. The small band of disciples at Gilroy deserve great credit for their zeal. Brother Owen, of Lavergne, helped much in the song service. I leave Saturday for Albany, Ala., where I am to begin a meeting next Lord's day.—John A. Klingman.

Cleveland, August 19.—1 began a meeting at Ooltewah on Monday night after the first Lord's day in this month and continued it until the third Lord's day. There were five additions by baptism. The attendance was fair, with strong opposition by the sects. The church was strengthened and left in good working condition. I will begin a meeting at Baxter on Thursday night.—W. C. Phillips.

Kelso, August 19.—I closed an eleven-days' meeting with the Berea Church, at Southall, on Wednesday. Six persons were baptized. The attendance and interest were good. We have some fine brethren and sisters at Southall. I began here yesterday, with fine audiences at both services. We are looking forward for a glorious meeting. I begin a meeting with the Hopewell congregation, near Castalian Springs, on the first Lord's day in September. Brother Byron Hughes will lead the singing.—George W. Farmer.

Columbia, Route 8, August 17.—Our meeting has just closed at the new church at Arkland. The meeting closed on last Friday night after continuing for eight days. Five young persons were baptized. The meeting was a great success in more ways than one. Brother R. A. Largen, of Fayetteville, did the preaching. He is a young man of only four or five years' experience in preaching, but he is a man that carries the deepest convictions and stands firm on the gospel of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. The church was greatly benefited by his good work here.—A. L. Neeley.

Tennessee City, August 22.—I preached at the meetinghouse here at home on Tuesday night and had one confession. The next night I began a mission meeting about three miles from town, and three accepted the invitation at the first service—two to be baptized and one restored. I have conducted five protracted meetings here in town, but those two sermons are the only ones I have preached near home since some time last year. I am considering a trip to Colorado soon, and may go immediately after this meeting closes; but mail sent to my home address any time should reach me without much delay.—J. H. Murrell.

Decherd, August 19.-It has been some time since I made a report of my meetings. I held a week's meeting at Tatesville. There were no additions, but the church was aroused to duty. They have no meetinghouse of their own to worship in. I took up They have no meetinghouse of a subscription of five hundred dollars to help to build a meetinghouse. The brethren contributed to me very lib-erally. On my way to Tatesville I stopped at Coalmont and preached one night. A Methodist preacher and his wife made the confession and were baptized. He had been a member of the Methodist Conference for seven years. I began a meeting at Center Point on the first Lord's day in August and continued it one week. were baptized and several confessed their wrongs. I moved my tent to College Station, about one mile from Center Point, where I preached five days, with sixteen baptized. We could not seat more than half of the people that came. I began a meeting at Liberty Schoolhouse on the third Lord's day in August, with a packed house. This is a destitute place. The Daus congregation turned out well. They are wide awake to their duty. Brother J. C. Mosley conducted the song service for me. I go next to I have many calls, but Lea's Station. my time is all promised for this year. R. E. L. Taylor.

Henderson, August 23.-After eleven days the meeting with the church at Troy closed on Wednesday evening, August 7. The interest increased till the close. We have never witnessed better order nor more perfect attention than prevailed in this meeting. We consider it a great seed sowing. This was the first series of meetings in the new building. The church has just completed one of the neatest and most convenient houses in all the country. It is of brick, modern in architecture, and well located. The heating, lighting, and ventilation were not overlooked. To make sure that this property would not be diverted its original purpose, the "restrictive clause" was placed in the deed. Fitz J. Smith, a lawyer, of Union City, prepared the document. It is all good, but the following clause shows the safety; "In the event of any division arising over these or other questions that may come up, the title of the property inheres to those, whether a majority or minority, who rigidly adhere to the requirements of the New Testament and to that particular faith and belief already herein recited and set out. These provisions are hereby made a vital and essential part of this deed, and are expressly incorporated herein that they may at all times be adhered to." The house is not the only thing. There is a splendid membership in the town and surrounding country. The brethren and sisters have a mind to work. They are not afraid to spend and be spent for the cause of the Master. You will hear from this church in the future. My stay was a pleasant one. I made my home with Dr. W. F. Roberts and his estimable wife. They know how to treat the preacher. They let him entertain himself and do as he pleases. School opens on September 11. The session will be great. Write for a catalogue.

Henrietta, August 13.—The meeting at Hamilton closed prematurely last Sunday night, on account of the sickness of my wife, who is some better This was a fine meeting. Eight were baptized, a man and wife at the last service. We had special services for the children one hour each day, and a great time we had. The brethren treated me well for so short a meeting and called me back for next I called off the meeting at Gordonville on account of my wife's condition; but if she continues to improve till Saturday, I will go yet and hold it for them. If not, my next one will be at Mangum, Okla., and then home for a meeting. I have some work to do in West Virginia; but if the draft age is raised to forty-five, I will get caught in it, and then cannot go, I am afraid. But if I go into the service of the country, I will preach the biggest lot of free sermons I ever did in my life. Who can lend me a tent for a meeting the last of September? Say it quick. Who has my "Handbook on Bap tism?" Send it quick.—Tice Elkins. Ban-

A Good Business Opening.

The steady increase of the live-stock interest in the Southern States warranted our making a thorough investigation of the natural advantages of the Southland for the raising of good horses, cattle, hogs, sheep, and poultry, compared to Northern States, like Iowa, that for years have been looked upon as leaders in these lines.

The reports of our experts justify our establishing headquarters in the South at some centrally located city having good railroad connections as soon as suitable arrangements can be closed.

Our business will require the help of a number of reliable men, who must be well and favorably known among planters and farmers who own stock in the vicinity of their home town, and we prefer men with some knowledge of live-stock.

These positions are worthy the prompt attention of any one who is looking for a chance to make money in a reliable, steady, and growing outdoor business.

A Prayer.

Lord, in this thy mercy's day, Ere the time shall pass away, On our knees we fall and pray.

Holy Jesus, grant us tears, Fill us with heart-searching fears, Ere that day of doom appears.

Lord, on us thy Spirit pour, Kneeling lowly at thy door, Ere it close for evermore.

By thy night of agony, By thy supplicating cry By thy willingness to die,

By thy tears of bitter woe For Jerusalem below, Let us not thy love forego.

Judge and Savior of our race, Grant us, when we see thy face, With thy ransomed ones a place.

On thy love we rest alone, And that love shall then be known By the pardoned, round thy throne, -Isaac Williams.

A Northern Preacher in Dixie.

BY E. G. ROCKLIFF.

Having just returned from "away down South in Dixie," I want to tell your readers something about it.

At Cincinnati I spent some hours in Brother Fred Rowe's company. He is a busy man, yet he always makes time to talk to you when you call, and brags just a little about the town in which he lives.

At Nashville, Tenn., I made the acquaintance of Brethren F. B. Srygley, F. W. Smith, E. A. Elam (I met him three years ago in Detroit), and J. C. McQuiddy. Brother Srygley conducted me on a sight-seeing tour around the town, and we might have seen more had he been more accustomed to walking. We have several things in common, one of which is we like to eat around noontime, and Brother Smith thinks that this is not the proper thing to do. Brother Srygley and I did the eating and let Brother Smith do the thinking.

Manchester, Tenn., was the next place visited, and it was there I met Brother Dallas Smith. They have a nice congregation there, also a good church house, and a very interesting meeting was in progress.

On Friday, July 12, I arrived in McMinnville, Tenn. I was no stranger in a strange land this trip, and soon I had the ear of Sister Frank Blue at the telephone, and she, in turn called up Brother Horton's residence (I guess the Ford had gone to the mill), and Frank Horton was harnessed and hitched and driven by Decla toward McMinnville to bring home preacher. To those who know Frank Horton, I do not need to say how little risk we ran of exceeding the speed limit. Next day Brother Blue's Ford carried me over the last lap of my long journey, and Sunday morning the Chestnut Grove meeting began. It was a good meeting. 1 trust much good was done. Two men were bantized and their wives were restored to fellowship during the meeting. Seven backsliders came forward confessing their sins and were restored to fellowship. The brethren at this place need a house badly, and I hope to hear of their building and setting the church in order shortly. On the last day of the meeting Brother Blue's home was destroyed by fire. I was his guest at the time, and regret that such a sad occurrence should be linked with my pleasant stay there. I cannot express my gratitude to these good people and the Chestnut Grove brethren for their wonderful hospitality.

From here I went to Rockliff, a place even better than it is named, and for eleven days was in a meeting there. My daughter, through the children's column of the Leader, has already informed you that Rockliff is a small town in Tennessee, named after her daddy. But in this she is mistaken, as there is no town therenot anything but a shack, a brush arbor, and a few warm-hearted Christian families, who did the writer the honor of calling their meeting place by his name. In this meeting there were none added to the church; yet it was a wonderful meeting, a sowing time, and harvest is just ahead. I feel sure the seed was good seed and that it was rightly sown on good soil; so, if the watering is done right, there will soon be increase. That is as God wills, and I am satisfied.

Brother and Sister Horton again took the queer Northern preacher into their hearts and into their homes, and right royally did they treat him. The rest of the brethren were just as willing, but I could only be at one place at one time. I have traveled extensively, seen many faces and many places, but never any more pleasant than in sunny Tennessee, and never have I seen hospitality so lavish as at Rockliff and Chestnut Grove. If I do not hear of a new church house being built at both these places before long, I shall be disappointed, as both places give promise of much progress and are good locations for church work.

Among the Colored Folks

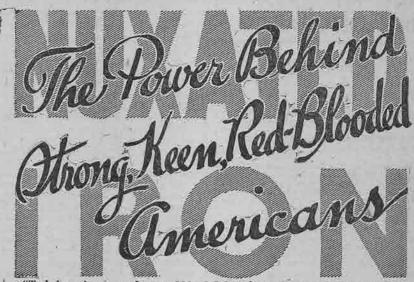

Brother Keeble's Fine Report.

When I made my last report, I was at Cookeville, Tenn., in a very interesting meeting; but there were no additions. I began a meeting at Latham, Tenn., on the second Lord's day in July and continued it one week. Interest was good and five young men were baptized. The white brethren and sisters attended the meeting regularly and assisted me in the work. From there I went to Henderson, Tenn., and began a meeting on the third Lord's day in July. This is a new field. When I went there two years ago, I found just four members -old Brother Crooms and his familyand baptized seven more. This time the interest was great. Sixty-nine were baptized. Eighty-four made the good confession, which leaves fifteen yet to be baptized. Very nearly all of these people came from the Baptists and Methodists. When w tried to rent the Methodist Church to hold the meeting in, they refused, although they allowed us to use it last year; and we tried the Baptists, and they refused. So Brother N. B. Hardeman arranged for us to hold the meeting about seven miles from town in a little schoolhouse which was located in a thick settlement of colored people. This meeting lasted three weeks. One day we went to the water to baptize twelve persons who had made the confession the night before, and I preached at the edge of the water, and eighteen more came forward and were baptized, making thirty that were baptized that day. The white Christians did all they could to assist us in the meeting. On the last night Brother N. B. Hardeman and others came out and made remarks in the meeting. This was my first time to meet Brother Hardeman, and, in my judgment, he is a fine, Christian man. Brethren Gibson, Tompkins, Cheatham, white brethren and merchants in town, gave liberally to the work; also, Brother Jap Hardeman encouraged and assisted me in this work. I want all who had fellowship in this work to know that I heartily appreciate what they did. I have agreed to spend thirty days in this section next year, the Lord willing.

No Worms in a Healthy Child

All children troubled with worms have an unhealthy color, which indicates poor blood, and as a rule, there is more or less stomach disturbance. GROVE'S TASTELESS chill TONIC given regularly for two or three weeks will enrich the blood, improve the digestion, and act as a General Strengthening Tonic to the whole system. Nature will then throw off or dispel the worms, and the Child will be in perfect health. Pleasant to take. 60c per bottle.

Dread of Poverty.

A great deal of apparent poverty comes from dread of poverty. A man saves every cent and goes mind and soul hungry, and, ten to one, he is starving somebody else at the same time, along with himself. He is really poor, for the time being, although he has a large bank account. Poverty will come every time as the result of the improper attitude toward money. Money is not a reality; it represents things that we consider for our good. But there is no poverty like that cf the starved soul that shrinks and dries up into narrowness and compression. In getting the feeling of wealth, look about you. See all the wonders of nature; believe that wonders will happen and then get ready for them. After the day's work is done, build air castles and then go in and lay a strong foundation under one of them. Expect to develop into efficiency necessary for the bigger job. The key to this lies in your hands in doing the little things well.—Selected.

The Book.

I am sorry for the men who do not read the Bible every day. I wonder why they deprive themselves of the strength and of the pleasure. It is one of the most singular books in the world; for every time you open it, some old text that you have read a score of times suddenly beams with a new meaning. There is no other book that I know of of which this is true; there is no other that yields its meaning so personally, that seems to fit itself so intimately to the very spirit that is seeking its guidance.—Woodrow Wilson.

The Master's Vineyard

Texas.

Kirbyville, August 19.-I closed my third meeting in Shelby County, at Hawthorn, last night. I was at Hawthorn, last night. I was at Stockman, July 17-25, with eight addi-tions; at Palestine Church, July 27 to August 4, with two additions; and at Hawthorn, August 9-18, with ten added -five restored and five baptized.-J. S. Daugherty.

Hemming, August 19,—I closed a meeting at this place last night, with eight baptized and one restored. There are some fine brethren here. Brother J. F. Smith did some of the first preaching of the old Jerusalem gospel here and established the cause in this part. I am to begin a meeting at Hulen, Okla., next Saturday, to confinue over the first Sunday in September. Hulen is only eighteen miles from Denton, my home. I have had the pleasure of having some of my children with me all the time. My wife is no better, so far as we can tell, but we are in hopes that after the hot weather she will improve.— D. S. Ligon.

Terrell, August 19.—I have just closed my fifth meeting with the church at Dawson, and I believe it was the best, in many ways, of all. Two were reclaimed and one was baptized. The baptizing was a very touching service. She was a little girl of about thirteen years, and going upon crutches. Many of those present showed deep emotion as this pure, sweet child walked bravely down into the water on her crutches, and was buried with her Lord in baptism, crutches and all. It was truly enough to put to shame those grown-ups who say they are afraid of the water and refuse to obey the Master's command. The brethren and the people of Dawson in general were very kind to me during my stay. I think that probably more of the people of other churches attended this than any meeting I bave held at Dawson, and I felt that there was a more kindly spirit shown toward us than ever before. that great good was accomplished in the meeting, due, for the most part, to the faithfulness of the brethren there. They are as good as the best. I pray that God may continue to bless them. I am now back at home again to take up the regular work with the Terrell. Pray for us .church at R. D. Smith.

Henrietta, August 19.-The Gordonville brethren and I mutually agreed to cancel the meeting there for the present. So I ran down to Nocona yesterday and preached to two large and very attentive audiences. perfected arrangements with them for a considerable amount of local work for the next year. The Bowie brethren, after reconsidering their intentions of locating me there, decided to let me go elsewhere; and they gave good and sufficient reasons for so doing, and reasons that are perfectly satisfactory to me as well as to them-I have only two more meetselves. ings in the south now, and one of them is here at home. The little congregation here is too weak to support a man from a distance, and they decided that I might do the preaching and they would do what they could. If any one wants to help, a good way to do it would be to buy a hundred copies of "Songs of the Reapers' ten dollars and send them at once. The meeting will begin on the fourth Sunday in September, and your help will be appreciated. Do all you can to help me put the cause here on a solid footing this fall. Write Brother A. J. Williams for information regarding the needs here. My next work after this will be in the east again.—Tice Elkins.

One's Career.

One's career ought to be one continual increasing accumulation of victory forces, of triumphant power. Every step of a man's progress ought to show an improvement, an increase in personal power-ought to mean growth.

There is no reason why a man should be permanently set back because a financial panic or the shifting tide of population has destroyed his business. The man himself should move on steadily, persistently, his life independent, broadening and deepening. growing more powerful every day, accumulating more strength from his new and enlarged experiences.

Success and failure are character revealers. Success very often brings out a man's weaknesses. If he attains wealth, he can afford to indulge in his desires-indulge in luxuries, fads, and fancies. If he attains a position of power, his domineering, aggressive qualities may be brought into action.

Fallure also exposes a man's weaknesses. If he is a coward, if he lacks stamina and grit, he will quickly show it when adversity overtakes him, just as he will show the opposite qualities if he is brave and steadfast and determined. What a man does after he falls indicates how much lime there is in his backbone.-Nautilus.

"What Is the Worst Calamity?"

To the question, "What is the worst calamity?" a thousand different answers might be given, but none would surpass that of Charles Kingsley, who years ago wrote: "The very worst calamity, I should say, which could befall any human being would be this: To have his own way from his cradle to his grave; to have everything he liked for the asking or even for the buying; never forced to say, 'I should like this, but I must not do it;' never to deny himself, never to exert himself, never to work, and never to want. That man's soul would be in as great danger as if he were committing great crimes."-Exchange.

This is the title of a most interesting booklet issued by the celebrated Shivar Mineral Spring. The booklet contains the strongest letters of testimonial from men eminent in the professions of medicine, law, and theology, from bankers, merchants, manufacturers, and others, telling how this remarkable water has relieved them of dyspepsia and indigestion, nervous headache, rheumatism, kidney and liver diseases, uric-acid poisoning, and other ailments due to impure blood. Sign and mail the following letter and you will have no cause to regret it.

Not Theory, but Practice.

BY H. W. JONES.

This is no time for finespun theories in religion, or anything else, as to that. The world does not demand so much theorizing to-day as it formerly did, and it is well that it does not, for this is the time of all times to be actively engaged in the plain duties we owe to our God, to our fellow men, and to ourselves. What care we for hairsplitting theories or fascinating inventions of men? What benefit to mankind are such things in religion, either here or hereafter? None what-

What we want now is a practical, everyday religion-a joint participation in the plain, simple requirements of the God of our Bible. Religion is not a mere sentiment; it is a senseyes, a sense of duty, a sense of activity, a sense of helpfulness one to the other. It is to love our God and Savior supremely and our fellow man as ourselves. It embraces the fundamental principle of "the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man." If we love God and his ways as revealed in his holy word, then will we seek to purify, elevate, and ennoble mankind both by our example and helpfulness to our fellows in distress.

James says: "Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, To visit [help] the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world." Now, what are you, immersed believers in Christ, doing to help the orphans and widows "in their affliction?" This shows the positive side of "pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father." Yes, something to do-to help those in need both in word and in deed. Have you "visited" (with your money) the widows and orphans in the foreign lands devastated by Prussian militarism? If not, why not? Have you helped distressed humanity in our own beloved homeland? Have you tried to have the pure gospel of Jesus Christ preached to your home people? All such work as this is truly religion positive.

What are you doing, O ye church members, to keep yourselves "unspotted from the world?" This is the negative side of pure and undefiled religion. Are you engaged in worldly pleasures? Are you going the ways of the world for popularity's sake? Are you trying to carry the church on one shoulder and the world on the other? Do you "drink on the sly" or swear occasionally? Do you, my sisters, worship at the shrine of fashions, suppers, social entertainments, etc.? If so, the devil is pleased and all good people are ashamed of you. Do we go through th Lord'sday worship as a mere formality or custom? The Lord pity all such. To your tents, O ye slackers in the work of the Lord! Let us be actively engaged in "doing the will of God from the heart." (See Eph. 6: 6-8.)

If you have already "obeyed the gospel" primarily, then let us drop every sectarian tenet and unscriptural practice and unite in working the works of Jesus while it is day: for "the night cometh, when no man can work." Let our song ever be:

> "O Jesus receive me, No more will I grieve thee; Thou precious Redeemer, O save me at the cross.

PANAMA HATS HAND-WOVEN

New Discovery Brings Costly Panama Within Reach of All.

Within Reach of All.

New York, N. Y. (Special).—It is now proven that the stylish Panama, up to now only worn by the best-dressed people; can now be sold for $1. You don't have to be skeptical about the low price, as it gives service like the $5 and $10 kind, but not so fine a weave; and by this new discovery of weave one can hardly tell the difference. A Panama gives a man or woman distinction and at the same time comfort. Mr. George J. Bungay, 28 South William Street, of New York City, is backing up his discovery by sending a real hand-woven Panama, any size, trimmed, blocked, with slik band, to any one for $1. postpaid. Fitted with leather sweat band, 25 cents extra. Furthermore, his policy is that, if you are not entirely satisfied, he will return your money.—Advt.

MILES MEDICAL CO., Elkhart, Ind.

Christian Science, No. 2. BY M. S. MASON.

On page 1, Mrs. Eddy, in giving proof of the power in prayer, says she speaks from experience. I suppose if there has been one doctrine, there has been one thousand, proved exactly in the same way. I take no one's experience who cannot establish it by the word of God. The human race may err, but the Bible never.

On page 2 Mrs. Eddy teaches that prayer is purely subjective, that we are only blessed as our desires work within us the blessing desired. If that is all there is to prayer, our coming to God in prayer would be like lifting ourselves off the ground by pulling on our own boot straps. There is a subjective influence in prayer. We are better simply because we have prayed. But is that all? Let us notice a few passages of scripture. In 1 John 1: 9 we read: "If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins." That is plain. There is a Personality. We plead with him. He forgives us. Pardon takes place a his mind, not ours. There is a defi-nite blessing. In 1 John 5: 16 we read that we can ask life for a sinning brother and receive it. Now, if prayer only aids the man who prays. how could any aid come to our erring brother through our prayers? Paul tells the Ephesian brethren to pray for him, for his utterance and boldness. If prayer is only subjective, how could it expedite the utterance and increase the boldness of Paul for others to pray for him?

Mrs. Eddy would have us believe that the mind of God is never changed by our petitions; that his plans, purposes, and conduct of affairs are all absolutely independent of any petitions we may make. In James 5: 16 we read: "The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much." In 1 Thess. 5: 8 we read: "Pray without ceasing." Paul on several occasions asked the prayers of the brethren. If there is no effect in prayer, what do these passages mean?

Mrs. Eddy emphasizes very strongly the fact that prayer without works avails nothing. That is so. But does that mean we work out all our pravers?

On page 5, line 10, she denies the atonement flatly by saying: "There is no discount in the law of justice." That rules out mercy. That rules out grace. That simply enables us to save

One page 5, line 22, she says: "Prayer will not cancel sin." That flatly contradicts Acts 8: 22; 1 John 1: 8: 9; 1 John 5: 14, 15. Of course, it is not taught that we can deliberately sin, then ask forgiveness, then sin again, etc.; but it is taught in 1 John 2 that, "if any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous: and he is the propitiation for our sins."

On page 5, line 21, she says sin is destroyed through suffering. If each life destroys its sin by suffering, then Jesus need not have suffered. It is true we must obey him and walk in his steps, but it is preëminently true that we are saved by the appropriated righteousness of Christ, We do not entirely save ourselves. Paul says of him in 2 Cor. 5: 21 that he became "sin for us," In Isa. 53: 5 we read: "With his stripes we are healed." In 1 Cor. 1: 30 we read that Christ is made unto us righteousness. This makes Christ the provision for our salvation, and we appropriate it by our obedience.

On page 5, line 30, Mrs. Eddy says: "Christ came to destroy the works of the devil." That is so; but Mrs. Eddy understood nothing about how that destruction comes about. Forgiveness has no place in her scheme, but that is the cardinal element in it all.

What is the truth about the matter? Adam sinned. Through his sin there was brought about a condition in the world that when we come to the age of moral responsibility we become sinners. This is the work of the devil. Now, Christ was manifested to destroy the works of the devil. How does he do it? He gave his life a sacrifice, a propitiation for our sins; and Paul tells us that he "became the author of eternal salvation to all them that obey him." (Heb. 5: 8, 9.) When we have obeyed the first principles of the gospel, God, for Christ's sake, forgives us of our past sins. In God's mind those are reckoned gone, or they are destroyed. Now we are still free moral agents and may sin again. If so, God makes provision for these also. For Christ stands as our Advocate pleading our infirmities to the Father, who, when he hears, forgives and "cleanses us from all unrighteousness." That destroys that sin. Therefore, as far as its influence is concerned for the destruction of souls, sin is destroyed. There may some sins cease to exist among men and in the individual, but sin as a whole is not completely overcome. It is forgiven. Thus the devil's works are powerless to jeopardize our souls.

In their dealing with the word "destroy," Mr. Russell's followers may consider this dissertation also.

The Florida Mission Field.

BY J. O. BARNES.

Feeling a continued interest in the spread of the gospel, especially in the destitute fields of Florida, I am again calling the attention of the brethren to the Florida Mission Fund, which I am raising for the above purpose. Some have already contributed liberally to this fund, and we have held one successful meeting by Brother J. H. Murrell, using this fund to support him. We have a small amount on hand yet, but not enough to support a meeting, and there is much to do in the Master's vineyard; but "the laborer is worthy of his hire," and men who have families to support must either get their support from the brotherhood or desert the fields and go to labor trades where they can command a salary sufficient to support their families. To do this means that the gospel, which is the power of God to save, will not reach so many people, notwithstanding the great commission of Jesus Christ: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature." This commission applies as much to one man as another. The preacher is responsible to God for all he can do, and so is every Christian. If he cannot go himself, he can go by giving his means to support the one who can and will go. Thus they are cooperating together, and every soul that is saved by their efforts will be equally credited to them, and we will be workers together with God. Now, brethren, let us raise a fund for the purpose above stated. Send all contributions to me, and I will see that they are properly used in the work for which it is sent. Don't wait: souls are dying out of Christ every day. Address me at Lake City, Fla.

A Prayer.

When on my day of life the night is falling,

And by the winds from unsunned spaces blown

I hear far voices out of darkness calling

My feet to paths unknown, who hast made my house of life so pleasant,

Leave not its tenant when its walls decay;

O Love Divine, O Helper ever present, Be thou my strength and stay!

Be near me when all else is from me drifting-

Earth, sky, home's pictures, days of shade and shine,

And kindly faces to my own uplifting The love which answers mine.

I have but thee, my Father! Let thy Spirit

Be with me then to comfort and uphold.

No gate of pearl, no branch of palm I merit,

Nor street of shining gold.

Suffice it if, my good and ill unreckoned

And both forgiven through thy abounding grace,

I find myself by hands familiar beckoned

Unto my fitting place:

Some humble door among thy many mansions.

Some sheltering shade where sin and striving cease,

And flows forever through heaven's green expansions

The river of thy peace.

The Church Work at Brownsville, Tenn.

BY WALTER L. BRUMMETT.

The work on the new house is going on nicely. This congregation is a small one, with only about fifteen male members, and about half of these have almost all the financial part to stand; but some have given s much as two months' salary, or onesixth of their yearly income, and some, perhaps, have given more. We wish to do well what we do; but, on account of the high prices of materials and labor, we do not expect to finish the house, but we want to get it so we can worship in it. So we are making an appeal to all churches and persons interested in building up the cause at weak places to send us a donation at once, before the carpenters stop work, so as to have funds enough to get the house so we can meet in it next winter. The Bible clause is in the deed. We have received considerable help from the people of the town and county, and here are some of the donations of churches and individuals outside the county during the last year: Church at Alamo, Tenn., $13.28; Henning Church, $25; Hartsville, Tenn., $7.80; Harbert Avenue Church, Memphis, Tenn., $15; church at Marietta, Miss., $22.80; church at Alma, Ark., Gummitsville, Tenn., $15.10; church at Brunswick, Tenn., $3.92; church at Toone, Tenn., $5.39; Mrs. Laura E. Hull, Brunswick, Tenn., $1.50; church at Gadsden, Tenn., $26.27; church at Maury City, Tenn., $45; Cross Roads Church, Bells, Tenn., $66; B. T. Lewis, Bells, Tenn., $2.50; J. J. Bridges, Bells, Tenn., $1; Nathaniel Whitson, Bells, Tenn., $1; J. F. Kail, Alamo, Tenn., $1; Carl Marbury, Bells, Tenn., $1. There are some others that I cannot give, as I have misplaced their letters. We are very thankful to all, and we ask the readers of this to consider this mission point. We need help badly just now, as we want to carry the work on as long as the money lasts. Send us a donation, and the same will be used wisely. Address me at Brownsville, Tenn.

What Is Truth?

BY TICE ELKINS.

There are many truths that have a direct bearing on the divine wisdom in the creation and preservation of worlds and everything therein, to which we have no reference when we ask the question, "What is truth?" We mean simply the duties of man to God. Just as if an angel in heaven should ask, "What is truth?" he would mean, "What is God's will to us as angels?"-not, "What is God's will concerning man?" And so it was when Pilate put the same question to Jesus. He did not mean, 'What is the science of worlds, or the metaphysical ins and outs of philosophy of this or any other world?" But he meant the truth that makes and keeps men free from sin, truth that pertains to man's duty to his Maker; the whole of that truth, and nothing but that truth

Then, what is truth? What is the whole truth pertaining to man? It is not a great problem of science; it is not putting a man through a school of philosophy till his head cracks (if it was not already cracked when he started in); but we have it in the Book, the Book of books. Thousands bring their sectarianism and their "lodgery" and vanities and human theories, and say they have the whole truth. The truth is not in them, because the Bible denounces them. Many come out from these things, and then before long they are back under the eaves of the old house because the truth was unpopular. Many who espoused the truth give it up and cry for the "leeks and onions." Take the New Testament, obey all of it that was written for men of our age, and then you have the whole truth. He who said, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved," is as worthy of belief as he who said "justified by faith."

Edifying as the Need May Be

The Glory of the Patriarchs.

The honor and respect in which the patriarchs are held do not diminish with the passing centuries. On the contrary, the luster of their names seems to grow brighter. The history of these men stand out with lessons of faith and fidelity for all time. The beginnings of God's dealing with the human race have to do with men and women whose faith in God and obedience to him were marked. These traits have brought their names into Christian literature and into general literature and have furnished inspiration to thousands of people.

God certainly intended for us to study their lives, else he would not have devoted so much space to them in the Bible. It is remarkable that so large a portion of the scripture, especially in the earlier part of it, should consist of biography. Commenting upon this fact, Prof. W. G. Blaikie said: "God has revealed his purpose somewhat after the manner of a philanthropist when he shows us pictures of rescued children, first as they were and then as they have become." Q

The Greatheart of the Old Testament.

In a study of this kind we naturally begin with Abraham, the hero of faith, the Greatheart of the Old Testament, the most commanding figure in the history from Adam to Moses. Surely a man who has been standing before us for almost four thousand years is worthy of most careful study. The particular lesson that I would draw from his life has to do with the promises of God; for surely the most comprehensive promise that was ever made to an individual was made to Abraham. We find it in Gen. 12: 2, 3: "And I will make of thee a great nation, and I will bless thee, and make thy name great; and be thou a blessing: and I will bless them that bless thee, and him that curseth thee will I curse: and in thee shall all the families of the earth be blessed." When you break it into parts and analyze it, you will find that seven distinct blessings are included. This means that it is all-inclusive, since the number seven denotes perfection.

The Sevenfold Blessing.

"I will make of thee a great nation." This is the great thought that runs through the whole book of Genesis. At the beginning of the sixteenth century there could scarcely have been more than a million Jews in the entire world. But their growth in numbers since then has been phenomenal. In 1896 the greatest authority on Jewish statistics gave their number as eleven millions. At the beginning of the European War their number was estimated at thirteen millions.

"I will bless thee." No earthly good can be so great as the blessing of God. Others are single, individual good things, but he that has God's blessing has the source of all good; not a cupful from the river of life, but the river itself with its ceaseless flow. He has God, the "giver of every good and perfect gift," as his own possession.

"And make thy name great." Every one must have noticed how much there is in the New Testament about Abraham and his faith. All the New Testament writers who wish to prove anything about true religion say, "Look at Abraham." Paul does it in Romans and Galatians and in Hebrews. James does it in his well-known discussion of faith and works. The reason of this is that in true religion there is one thing which never changes—the attitude of the soul toward God; and that right attitude of the soul toward God on which religion depends for its very existence is perfectly illustrated in Abraham.

"Be thou a blessing," or, as in the Authorized Version, "Thou shalt be a blessing." These words teach us that the blessing was not intended to center in Abraham and end there. He was to be blessed that he might become a blessing to others.

"I will bless them that bless thee," Here was a blessing promised on an enlarged scale. Not only was Abraham to be blessed, but those who were helpful to Abraham would be blessed also. God counted as his friends those who were friends to his servant Abraham.

"Him that curseth thee will I curse." God had called Abraham to honor, exaltation, and service, and would protect him in his position and mission. He would be counted as God's enemy who was an enemy to Abraham. "The good man is not alone; touch him, and you touch God."

"In thee shall all the families of the earth be blessed."

This is the climax of the promise to Abraham. More excellent than to become a great nation, to have a great name, to be blessed, and to be a blessing, would it be that from him should spring a godly nation to bless the nations of the world, and that from his posterity should arise the Messiah, the Christ of Bethlehem, who should be the world's Redeemer.

The Vision Supreme.

What a vision Abraham had! Others have had visions of better countries, of ideal peoples. We think of Plato's Republic, the Greek Hesperides, Moore's Utopia, Bacon's New Atlantic, the Spanish Eldorado, Wilson's World Safe for Democracy; but what are these to be compared with the vision and promise given to Abraham, which will be completed only in the New Jerusalem? The lesson teaches us that God's promises are ever on the ascending scale. One leads up to another, fuller and more blessed than itself. In Mesopotamia, God said to Abraham: "I will show thee the land." At Bethel he said: "This is the land." Later he said: "I will give thee all the land, and children innumerable as the grains of the sand." And even these promises are eclipsed. God allures us to saintliness; not giving us anything until we have dared to act—that he may test us; not giving everything at first—that he may not overwhelm us; and always keeping in hand an infinite reserve of blessing.

The World and the Church.

BY JAMES A. ALLEN.

Few people appreciate what it is to be a Christian, a member of the church of Christ—to be a child of God. If they realized what it is to be a member of the church, they would never seek to be identified with anything else. All other institutions would seem to them insignificant, untrustworthy. When a man understands what it is to be a Christian, he does not desire to be anything else. When he has done everything that he ought to do as a Christian, he has no time, means, talent, or energy to spend at anything else.

There is no good that comes to a man that does not come to him through Christ, through being a member of the church-that does not come to him as a Christian. Different human organizations have borrowed different features from the church. Some have borrowed one feature, some another. Some human institutions have borrowed so many features from the church that some men think that to be a member of the human institution is enough; that it is not necessary to be a member of the The church is thus robbed, borrowed from, and no acknowledgment made of the debt. But all human institutions combined, of any nature or character, cannot gainsay the fact that when a man is a member of the church he has every good feature of them all, without the evil connected with them. The church includes everything that is "good, and very good," without anything that is bad.

The church is not an imaginary institution. It is a real, an actual, an existing body. While it is a spiritual kingdom, it is a real, practical kingdom, not a fictitious, illusionary institution. It has Christ for its Head, its King; and Jesus Christ was and is a real, living Person, with personal, positive attributes, not the imaginary hero of an Arabian tale. It has Christians, children of God, as members of it; and it is as visible as they are. It has an inside to it, and an outside to it, and all responsible subjects of the gospel are either inside of it or outside of it. The line that separates the church from the world is not a fictitious, illusionary, imaginary line. The door of the church was opened by the keys used by Peter when he named the real, actual, practical terms of admission.

The church, or kingdom of God, stands opposed by the kingdoms of this world. There is no illusion about it. It is a real war, a real antagonism. There are two great armies in the field. The army under the command of the Lord Jesus Christ is opposed by the army under the command of Satan, the enemy of God and of Christ. Every man is in one or the other of those armies.

The kingdoms of this world belong to the devil and are animated by his spirit. He is their sovereign and they are under his control. The kingdom of God belongs to God and is animated by God's Spirit. The war between the forces of good and evil will go on until evil is exterminated and God's will is "done on earth as it is in heaven." The kingdoms of the world were not originally under the control of the devil. "And he led him up, and showed him all the kingdoms of the world in a moment of time. And the devil said unto him, To thee will I give all this authority, and the glory of them; for it hath been delivered unto me; and to whomsoever I will I give it." God gave them to man in trust. "And God blessed them: and God said unto them, Be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth, and subdue it; and have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the birds of the heavens, and over every living thing that moveth upon the earth." "For it hath been delivered unto me." Man betrayed them to the devil, the enemy of God; and, therefore, "the whole world lieth in the evil one," and "the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now."

"And the glory of them." The kingdoms of this world have a "glory." The kingdom of God has a "glory." The 'glory" of the kingdoms of the world and the "glory" of the kingdom of God are exactly opposite, essentially antagonistic, different in every respect, each representing the extreme end of the opposite hypothesis. So much that if a man loves the "glory" of the world, the "glory" of the kingdom of God does not appeal to him at all. If he loves the "glory" that comes from God, the "glory" of the world is as nothing to him. The glory of the kingdoms of the world is a temporary, transitory, fleeting, worldly It consists of that which makes a worldly show, that which has a glitter and dazzle to it, and which appeals to the sensual nature. "To be seen of men" is the essence, the spirit, of it. Those imbued with it are not attracted by the glory of doing good in a quiet way, " in the name of the Lord Jesus," to be seen only "of thy Father who is in secret."

The evil in the kingdoms of the world keeps them in a continual upheaval. Evil means trouble, as holiness means happiness. So there is always trouble in the world, and always will be until the evil is rooted out. When any trouble that arises in the church—when anything that hinders the gospel, disturbs the worship, slackens the work, or divides the brethren—is reduced to the last analysis, it will be seen that the cause of the trouble is that some feature of the kingdoms of the world has been permitted to enter into the kingdom of God. Without some evil of the world entering the church, it is impossible to have trouble in the church. When congregations seek that which makes a show, creates an impression, caters to vanity, and appeals to pride, they put a higher estimate upon the glory of the kingdoms of the world than upon the glory of personal consecration and a holy life. "For, behold, the kingdom of God is within you." That means it is not in advertisement of self, prompted by vanity, but that it consists of individual purity and spiritual fellowship. The strength and standing of a congregation cannot be estimated by a costly meetinghouse, large crowds, any display of worldly standing, or by any of those elements that appeal especially to that which is animal in man.

The world and the church stand as the embediment of all that is opposite. All good is in the one, all bad is in the other. But they sometimes become strangely commingled, strangely blended, under the present condition of society. The church influences the world, and, sad to say, sometimes the world influences the church. All the good the nations have, every good law they have, every wave of reform, every moral and uplifting feature their governments inculcate, they owe to the influence of the church. And, on the other hand, sometimes the work of the church becomes stagnant, and some of the disciples cater to pride, vain display, and to that which appeals to the lusts of the flesh, because of the influence of the world. They must be recognized as essentially, entirely separate. It is easier to mix oil and water, to mold a wooden handle to a pewter spoon, than it is to mix the world and the church. To the extent that the world gets into the church, into its members, to that extent the church loses its power. A man cannot love the church and the world at the same time. He must "die" to the world, and "be born again" into the church. As "a new creature" he enters the church. "The old things are passed away: behold, they are become new."

Running a religious paper is an illustration of the fact that the world "loves its own" and that it ministers to them that minister to it. A journal that has a real right to exist cannot, in the nature of things, meet the general favor of the public. If it meets public favor and "all men speak well of it," as they did of the false prophets, then it is not devoted to those things that are antagonistic to the world. This is why a paper devoted to the truth, that does not tickle the ears of those who "heap to themselves teachers after their own lusts," is not a money-making proposition. Not enough people patronize the truth. The world appreciates a paper that appreciates it; and it lavishes its patronage and its praise upon one that smiles at its follies and ministers to its taste. "If ye were of the world, the world would love its own." An understanding of this will lead to an understanding of why a publication that is filled with matter purely sensual that attracts, incites, and gratifies the flesh, and that does not contain one page devoted to those things upon which are predicated human life, happiness, and destiny, can run into an enormous circulation, at a profitable price, while a publication that is devoted to truth and righteousness can hardly maintain enough circulation to make ends meet at the nominal price of two dollars a year. A paper that advocates the introduction of organs and societies into the work and worship of the church can, with the very same exertion, easily secure several times as many subscribers as one that does not. Why? Because it is closer to the pulse beat of the world. Its greater popularity is the proof of it.

The world admires most that which has the least true merit. The almost incredible mass of rubbish and trash that is sold, the busy, feverish pens of hordes of writers, striving to produce something "rotten enough to be syndicated," is ample evidence of the fact that seeking the favor, instead of the good, of the public is one of the high crimes of modern journalism.

But the abuse of a thing does not condemn its proper use. No man can estimate the power of the press. Nor must it be condemned and its immense power discarded because it is abused. We only regret that the Christian public is so slow to utilize such an immense power for propagating the truth. Those who are preaching error and who are sowing the tares "while men sleep" are not guilty of such supine neglect. No! They scatter their literature, like autumn leaves, everywhere; they extend their propaganda to every corner of the country; they work the press day and night; they utilize it to the uttermost. Their adherents go down into their pockets; they cheerfully, gladly, freely contribute the means that enable their publishers to circulate their journals, papers, and books below cost; and if a man is not able to buy them, they are glad for him to have them gratis. The number of their converts runs into an enormous figure; and they deceive thousands that they would not deceive if the children of this world were not "wiser than the children of light."

The Rod of Iron.

BY A. M. GEORGE.

What is this "rod of iron?" We find answer in the following scriptures.

Isa. (11: 4) says: "He [Christ] shall smite the earth with the rod of his mouth." Rev. 2: 26, 27 reads: "He [the faithful Christian] that overcometh, and keepeth my works to the end, to him will I give power over the nations: and he shall rule them with a rod of iron." In Rev. 12: 5 we find: "And she brought forth a man child [Christ, or the church], who was to rule the nations with a rod of iron." Then, in Rev. 19: 15, John says: "And out of his [Christ's] mouth goeth a sharp sword, that with it he should smite the nations: and he shall rule them with a rod of iron."

This "rod of iron" is the word, or law of God, that was to go forth from Zion and Jerusalem, and which did go forth from there A.D. 33. (Acts 2; Isa. 2: 3.) This law is to stand even after the heavens and the earth shall have passed away, and we will all be judged by it when Christ comes again. There will then be no bending, twisting, or breaking of this rod to accommodate any man's fancies. It is an iron rod, and every jot and tittle of it must and will be fulfilled.

When God gave his law to Israel, he said: "Ye shall observe to do therefore as the Lord your God hath commanded you: ye shall not turn aside to the right hand or to the left." (Deut. 5: 32.) "What thing soever I command you, observe to do it: thou shalt not add thereto, nor diminish from it." (Deut. 12: 32.) All the above was under the old Jewish law.

In the New Testament, as a grand finality and a solemn warning to men, John says: "For I testify unto every man that heareth the words of the prophecy of this book, If any man shall add unto these things, God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book: and if any man [you, I, or any man on earth] shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life, and out of the holy city, and from the things that are written in this book." (Rev. 22: 18, 19.)

The foregoing ought to make it plain, even to any poor, half-witted man or woman, that this word of God, this "rod of iron," must and shall stand as it is written, word for word; and woe, for time and eternity, to the poor, presumptuous mortal, male or female, who dares to raise his or her hand or voice to add a word to it or take an iota away from it. Presumptuous, ambitious persons may ignore it and set up their own puny, pitiful inventions as substitutes, and deceive and mislead silly, credulous people, but they cannot change or destroy it. The enemies of God and men have been trying to do this all along down the centuries. When the beast worshipers in "the Dark Ages" and on to our own time were and are trying to get it out of their way, under the overruling of God, they have been made to preserve it; and to-day its enemies are printing it in all the languages of earth and sending it out broadcast so that all can have it in their own tongue, thus fulfilling the Savior's prophecy in Matt. 24: 14: "And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come." They took the Scriptures from the people for a while, but, under God's overruling, they are giving it back with interest. To attempt to change or destroy the law, or word of God, in the least, is the greatest sin that a man can commit, and God has pronounced the most terrible punishment in his power to inflict upon the one who dares to do it.

God never said an unnecessary word or did an unnecessary act; but he said that his word was a "rod of iron," and that it should stand and accomplish the purpose for which he sent it. Some may wonder why God found it necessary to inflict so great a punishment upon so small an offense as changing a word or two of his law. Well, perhaps it might be that, if he allowed you or me to change one word, he, being no respecter of persons, would have to allow every other person the same privilege; and every one exercising his right, God would soon have no law to speak of. Moses and Aaron, who were shut out of the promised land for changing a word, or Uzzah, who was killed for inadvertently touching the ark, which was not lawful for any but priests to do, might answer this question. God made man, and he knew what was in him and what was best for him. He put him under the best law that he could provide to lead men to the best possible results for time and for eternity; and hence he had to guard that law to the limit of his ability, leaving man free to choose for himself

With all this, such is the perversity and high-handed daring of men that millions of them, and among them the most gifted, recklessly face the Almighty and flaunt their pitiful rebellions in his face.

It seems impossible to get a very large part of the human family to realize the immensity of the crime and punishment connected with the adding to, or taking from, the word of God. No law, human or divine, will be honored by all men; but remove the law, especially God's law, and anarchism, or chaos, would hardly express the condition of the world. Jeremiah (44: 28, 29), speaking of this great sin, said: "Yet a small number that escape the sword shall return out of Egypt into the land of Judah, and all. the remnant of Judah, that are gone into the land of Egypt to sojourn there, shall know whose words shall stand, mine, or theirs. And this shall be a sign unto you, saith the Lord, that I will punish you in this place, that ye may know that my words shall surely stand against you for evil." The words of Stephen, when the mob were stoning him for the word of God-"Ye stiff-necked and uncircumcised in heart and ears, ye do always resist the Holy Spirit; as your fathers did, so do ye"-apply well in this evil day, when so-called worshipers of God glory in perverting his words.

Well, do not forget this: The "iron rod" will rule in the end. It will stand when your tongue will have ceased to wag against it, and it will confront you before the throne of judgment.

Think on these things.

The blessed word "health" once literally meant "holiness," and that means simply "wholeness,"—Frances E. Willard.

The Hidden Jewel.

BY LILIAE BERRYMAN.

There is a very striking resemblance between the world at this critical period and the story of a beautiful pearl which lay at the bottom of the deep, blue sea. Thousands of years it had lain thus hidden with the dark sand and decay of years, concealed from the light and sunshine which would make it sparkle as the clear dewdrops; but at last, one day it was washed up by the surging billows and was tossed on the prow of a fisherman's boat. Thus it was brought to light where thousands of eyes should be made glad by its pure sparkle.

And so it is with the world. For a few short years will it be hidden in the monstrous arms of war, lost to peace, happiness, and the sunshine of faded years; but at last, when wrongs shall have been righted and when the brave, noble, and inspiring shall have come out triumphant over the low and base, then shall the dove of peace settle over all humanity and the bright, sparkling, happy side of life be revealed to the sad and sorrowful.

Notes from Detroit, Mich.

BY CLAUD F. WITTY.

In Detroit, as elsewhere, the mind of the public is very unsettled on account of war conditions. Almost all of the hundreds of great factories here, some of them employing as many as thirty-five thousand men, are working almost exclusively for the government. However, we have no complaint to make, so far as the church work is concerned.

At Warren Avenue the attendance has not been quite up to standard during the month of August, but it is always so here at this time of the year. However, that the vacation period is almost over and the weather is getting cooler, we expect to do a great work this autumn and winter. I am sure we will outgrow our present meeting place in the near future.

The mission work conducted by the Warren Avenue Church is making splendid progress. I have just closed a fine meeting out at Flint, seventy miles from Detroit. We started this work three years ago with one member in a private home, and now we have over sixty names on the church record. Five good deacons were appointed during the meeting, a good lot has been bought, and work will start on the basement of the new chapel next Monday.

The work at Gratiot Avenue, in Detroit, another mission of Warren Avenue, is also being well cared for. They expect to have a good meeting during October.

We have also established two missions among the colored people of the city. Both of them are doing good work.

Plans are now being made to start some special Bible-study work at Warren Avenue in the near future. Our studies in the Old Testament last year proved very helpful, and we are sure of a stronger class this year than last. One of the greatest works of this excellent congregation has been to develop the talent of its members. As a result, we have seven or eight good preachers, a number of song leaders, and plenty of teachers both for the home congregation and for the new missions we plant.

The liberal contribution from the Belmont Avenue congregation, in Nashville, reflects the spirit of this body of Christians. Whatever they start out to do, they do it well.

Here follows a child's letter in explanation of her gift:

Dear Brother Lipscomb: Inclosed you will find one dollar. I want you to send it to the little starving children. I had a pet lamb, and I sold him the other day, and wish to send part of the money to those poor children.

MARY BESS HUNT, Prospect, Ky.

As a matter of general information, we furnish some important facts about the Armenian Relief Work:

The American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief is attempting to provide the necessities of life for two and a half million starving people in the Eastern war zone; four hundred thousand of those in need are orphan children.

Relief for these sufferers is transmitted in the form of credit through the War Trade Board and in cooperation with the State Department, thus giving assurance that the enemy or the allies of the enemy do not derive benefit from the funds given for the relief of these destitute of Western Asia.

No food is sent directly from the United States to either points within or outside the Turkish Empire. All supplies purchased in the countries where the relief is distributed.

The work of distribution is carried on by American missionaries, physicians, and teachers who have remained on the field, braving the dangers of war and pestilence to give aid to these suffering peoples.

The principal relief stations of the committee are situated at Erivan, Russian Caucasus; Teheran, Persia; Cairo, Egypt; Bagdad, Mesopotamia; Jerusalem, Palestine. from these larger centers radiate hundreds of smaller

The American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief gives no direct money aid except to orphan children or in urgent cases of absolute destitution. The aim of the committee is to furnish work for the refugees who come under their care.

Five dollars supports a refugee for one month. Sixty dollars furnishes the necessities of life for one year. different sections of the field prices of food and material for industrial work differ, but this amount is the average estimated at a conference of returned missionaries, teachers, and physicians, last autumn.

Armenia can receiv no governmental grants such as those given to Belgium. Russia is no longer able to contribute to the support of these destitute peoples. Armenia cannot look to England and France. Each of these countries is busy with her own problem; America is her only aid.

One hundred cents on every dollar given to the American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief goes to the field. All expenses of the committee, even the cost of cabling the money, are met privately.

In sending contributions, be sure and state whether they are intended for the Armenian and Syrian Fund or the Poland Fund. Make all checks and money orders payable to A. B. Lipscomb, who will forward them to the proper commissioners.

Christian Education. No. 4.

BY H. E. SPECK.

IV. Some Historic Reflections.

Let us notice the history of religious movements in this respect. History bears irrefutable witness to the fact that education and the growth of Christianity are inseparably connected. Every great religious movement has been immediately followed by an educational revival, and the movement has been successful and permanent only in so far as it has taken the schools into its alliance.

A striking example of the power of education under religious influence is to be seen in the case of the Scotch Presbyterians. Through the leadership of Knox, Scotland established a system of schools in close affiliation with the church. Ever since that time the ministers have been searching out the most gifted boys and encouraging them to get an education and enter the ministry. It has been this splendid cooperation between the church and schools which has made Scotland the land of great preachers.

Another remarkable historical evidence of the value of schools in strengthening a religious movement is to be seen in the case of the Jesuits. When the Roman Church had lost all Northern Europe through the Protestant revolt and was being threatened even in Italy itself, she sought defense in the establishment of Jesuit colleges. Every one knows what the result was. So insidious and persistent were these colleges that for almost two centuries they trained and controlled the leading intellects of the continent, both Protestant and Catholic.

Do you want to know what the Catholics are doing in America? It was decreed in the last Plenary Council of Baltimore, in 1885, that within two years of the date of the proclamation of the decree every parish priest must provide an adequate school for the children in his parish or give the reason of his inability in writing to the bishop.

This official attitude toward the school question gave such a renewed impetus to school building that there are now one million three hundred and fifty thousand children educated in schools immediately under the control of the Catholic Church, and during the last three generations three hundred million dollars have been spent for this purpose.

Quoting from Dr. Eby on Baptist statistics, we have these startling facts: "At the beginning of the nineteenth century the Baptists in the entire Dominion of Canada numbered about six hundred, and they had no schools. Denominational lines had all along been very closely drawn, and expansion could take place only under the most difficult circumstances. With heroic faith the small body established Acadia University, in the Maritime Provinces; Feller Institute, in the very heart of Catholic Quebec; McMaster University, with its two adjuncts, in the expansive Northwest. At the end of the century there were approximately one hundred thousand Baptists in Canada. More than any other factor these Christian colleges are responsible for the result. At the beginning of the nineteenth century there were one hundred thousand Baptists in the entire American Union; to-day there are about six million. At that time they possessed only one institution of learning; now there are over two hundred in all. These schools have been an indispensable factor in this marvelous development."

The story is the same, no matter where we look. Shall I be considered an heretic if I say that if "we as a people" ever intend to come into our own and to make the Influence of the religion of Jesus Christ felt through us, we must build, maintain, and perpetuate a system of schools in which Christianity in its beauty and simplicity may be taught in some way coordinate with the State schools? And I am willing to go on record as being one who is not in sympathy nearly so much with the idea that now prevails, wherein any one who chooses may establish a school of this sort, as I am with a systematized, organized, purposeful effort on the part of all the Christians of all the congregations of God in all the counties of all the States of these United States, call that a system of "church schools" or what you wish. I am willing to go one step further and say that that individual who purposefully puts himself in the way of the progress of Christian education through the Christian college is either ignorant of the opportunity it affords or he is a slacker in the army of Jesus Christ and a traitor to his cause.

Shall We Fight the Battle?

BY R. P. CUFF.

Various descriptions of life have been given. It is difficult to define. Yet, speaking metaphorically, let us say life is a struggle. Man grows by struggle. In a struggle there are contending forces. In life's battle, these are good and evil. God is the fountain of all good. The devil is the fountain of all evil. Everybody is in the struggle. The babe is somewhat passive, we think, yet Christ counts him for his own. The kingdom of heaven belongs to him. (See Matt. 19: 14.) Even the babe has an influence. All people have—if not for Christ, against him. There is no neutral ground. The very effort on one's part to remain neutral, spiritually, puts him against Christ. Nonperformance of the right is the same in consequence as the doing of real wrong.

There are two classes of people-responsible and irresponsible. The gospel was not given to the sinless, but to the sinful. Part of the irresponsible class finally come to be responsible. Young people grow up to the age of responsibility. Then is sounded for them the call to arms. How grand to heed at once! To those who have enlisted in the recruiting station of the prince of this world, the Lord Jehovah is calling also. These soldiers of Satan must lay down the old armor and take on the new-the armor of God. "No soldier on service entangleth himself with the affairs of this life." (2 Tim. 2: 4.) It is not child's play; it is life duty. It takes a man to be a Christian. God supplies the quarries, but he does not carve the statues nor pile the cathedrals save by the hand of man. Though God provides the armor, we must put it on. We must don the uniform.

Volunteers are wanted. (Matt. 23: 37; John 7: 17; Rev. 22: 17.) The appeal is made to free moral agency.

Jesus is our Captain. (Heb. 2: 10; 5: 9.) He marshals the soldiers; he directs the battle; he makes possible the victory.

The "devil and his angels" are our contestants. (Eph. 6: 11; 1 Pet. 5: 8; Matt. 25: 41.) Works of the flesh are of the devil. Oftentimes, too, he comes to us through human agency. We must never compromise or make peace with him. "When you hit the devil, hit him hard." Be the standard bearer of Jesus. Satan's onsets are well called "wiles," for he shuns open fields and deals best in ambuscades and secret plots.

What is the armor? (a) The girdle of truth. (b) The breastplate of righteousness. (c) Preparation of the gospel of peace. (d) The shield of faith. (e) The helmet of salvation. (f) The sword of the Spirit—the weapon. Jesus used it when tempted. It will stand us in good stead. It brings defeat to the enemy. (g) All prayer. When about to think or do the wrong thing, pray.

The battle is spiritual. "For our wrestling is not against flesh and blood, but against the principalities, against the powers, against the world rulers of this darkness, against the spiritual hosts of wickedness in the heavenly places," (Eph. 6; 12.)

Once enlisted, there is no discharge so long as strength and health remain, but there may be desertion. Upon careful notice, it is found that none of the parts of the Christian armor is for the back. Therefore, if one prove coward and turn about, the darts of the evil one may pierce his back. One should never give up, "never turn back," when fighting under the blood-stained banner of Prince Immanuel.

And now, kind reader, won't you defend "the colors?" If you are not saved; if you are not a Christian; if you are not engaged in the spiritual struggle for the triumph of truth and right, won't you heed the call to arms and become a soldier of the cross? Won't you "take up the whole armor of God, that ye [you] may be able to withstand in the evil day, and, having done all, to stand?"

The Bible Chair in the University of Texas.

I am exceedingly gratified at the favorable responses coming from the different parts of the country in regard to the important work of maintaining a school of the Bible in connection with the State University at Austin, Texas. Brethren Klingman, Sewell, Barret, Gardner, and others have written much that is encouraging, with a view to the establishment of the work. To my mind, there is no more important field of work. Some fifty or sixty students from the homes of loyal Christians are attending the State University on a general average, each year, and this number is rapidly increasing. Besides, there are others favorably inclined to the claims urged by the churches of Christ for the restoration of the simplicity of New Testament Christianity. A school of the Bible established by loyal disciples, offering several courses, would draw a good attendance from the best class of students who attend the University. Our young men and young women who attend the University, and who are just going out into the world to be the exponents of our religious claims in the future. should have our most careful consideration and attention. We should safeguard their spiritual interest in every possible way; moreover, we should consider that the young people who are taking a university education will, as a rule, be far above the average as a power in whatever way their activity and their energies are exercised. They should by all means be kept in the "strait and narrow way." The foolish speculations of religious theorizers abound in all the State schools. There are teachers whose unbelief will be reflected in the student and will undermine his faith. In the various schools of philosophy and science especially there is danger. The word of God reaches the student in a very diluted form through teachers who are devoting themselves wholly to training men and women for the civil, political, and secular affairs of life. Many reflections are made on the faith of our young people, who are, as a rule, particularly inquisitive, and are anxious for counsel with those who are older than themselves and more firmly established in the faith. I have had many conversations with young people in the University along these lines. I know that a great work, and a work of far-reaching consequence, could be effected by the establishment of a Bible chair at Austin. It would be a channel through which we could reach in the years to come many thousands of Christians, and also many thousands of others who might be led to the truth.

In the institution of a school of the Bible at Austin, affiliated with the State University, we could have the benefits of a senior college without the financial outlay. The students would have access to the best libraries. The State Library at the Capitol would be available, and in easy reach, and the library at the University, one of the most costly and valuable in the United States, would also be available. Expensive laboratories in the various branches of science are provided by the State, at a cost of many thousands of dollars, such as we might not hope to secure for many years were we to establish a senior college. Practically all secular courses that students might desire are available in the State University. In short, an institution of learning provided at the State's expense, and with an outlay of several millions of dollars, providing the best of teachers, laboratories, libraries, etc., would all be accessible to the students of the Bible. I do not certainly know what is best in regard to a teacher. If I should take the work, it would be necessary for me to make some special arrangements in connection with the work of the Firm Foundation. However, we can make some kind of arrangement. One thing that is necessary is the promise of a sufficient salary to maintain a teacher. Abilene has promised fifteen dollars a month for the work. We want nine more congregations or individuals willing to pay this amount each month through the school year. If the work is not done, the money, of course, will not be collected, or, if sent, will be returned. It is not necessary to send any money now. What we want to know is whether there may be found a sufficient number of brethren to guarantee the support of the work during the coming year. We will arrange details when this matter is determined. I shall be glad to receive further communications from brethren interested in this movement.-G. H. P. Showalter, in Firm Foundation.

"Too Late."

- "Too late!" in bitter anguish now we cry; We scarcely learn to live before we die. The doubting heart alone bewails its fate, For God's forgiveness never comes too late.
- "Too late!" The heart we loved is in the dust; We have betrayed our sacred love and trust, Neglected duty. Why so desolate? Repent, and it shall never be too late.
- "Too late!" the tempter whispers in our ear,
 And we are overwhelmed by doubt and fear.
 We must be brave, our souls in patience wait;
 For thee, O God, it shall not be too late.
 —Martha A. Kidder.

The Cost of Prayer.

The disciples besought Christ to teach them how to pray. Christians need to learn the lesson. It is not so easy to pray as we should. The following from the Watchman-Examiner is worthy of our most thoughtful consideration.

Prayer seems sometimes to be regarded in a more or less slighting way, as if it were the easiest thing in the world to pray, almost as if it were a sort of slacker's recourse, the holding out suppliant hands to receive as a gift what one is not strong enough or courageous enough to win as a guerdon. But he who thus speaks or thinks of prayer has surely misconceived the meaning of the word, and, If he is a praying man, has strangely misinterpreted his own There is nothing negative, sentiexperiences in prayer. mental, weak-fibered, mendicant, about prayer. Just the Prayer is the highest and most taxing exercise opposite. of which the soul is capable. It is the putting forth of tremendous vital energy. It takes something out of a tremendous vital energy. It takes something out of a man really to pray, as well as brings something to him or something into him. Jacob prevailed in prayer at Peniel. He got the blessing for which he besought God; but when he passed over the brook in the sunrising after the night of the struggle, "he halted upon his thigh," and his limping walk was the outward sign of what the experience had cost him.

Each of us has his own task, and each must find what to do with his own being and the place in which he fits into the plan of the world around him.—Forward.

To love truth for truth's sake is the principal part of perfection in this world, and the seed plot of all other virtues.—John Locke.

Georgia and the Far Southern Field

The Dasher Meeting.

I am now (August 27) in a revival at Dasher, Ga., this being the eighth day. We meant to close to-day, but the interest forbade it; we shall try to close to-morrow. To date we have had nine confessions and one from the Baptists, six of these having come forward to-day.

A more enjoyable time I have never had than my stay with these good people. I have been agreeably surprised to find so many members of the church of Christ in this section, and some that cannot be excelled for sterling character. Last Lord's day the house was run over. It looked to me like there were at least two hundred who stood for the communion service. We have seven churches in this (Lowndes) county, and they were all represented. Then we had representatives from Morven, in Brooks County. It was a great day for us. On Sunday night 1 preached in Valdosta, where Brother G. E. Claus is doing such a splendid work. He has been with us a number of times in the Dasher meeting.

I find that all of this section, practically, is "for the faith which was once for all delivered unto the saints." A great work has been done here, and a greater work is certain to be done; for more and more life is being taken on here, and the brethren are seeing and realizing that it is their duty to arise and give the people of this State and adjoining States the gospel that they for years have been enjoying.

Brother J. P. Prevatt is making this his home, and he is being felt as a leaven for good. He is one of J. A. Harding's former students and associate teachers, and is a man who lives close to God. It has been no little help to me to have had the privilege of associating with him. Brother J. G. Malphurs was with us one day. His splendid wife was with us for seven days. He had been away in evangelistic work, and left to-day for his school work at Arcadia, Fla. Brother M. L. Colson also lives near here, and is doing a great work in South Georgia and in Florida. Prevatt, Claus, and Colson are doing a great work in this section, and it has been an inspiration to me to be here and see the work.

This revival has been conducted daily, with services at 11 A.M. and 2 P.M., with dinner on the ground. No evening services. This has been my first revival conducted just this way, and I like it. I could not easily forget these fine people, and shall leave them to-morrow night with a longing and a promise to return. My home has been with Brother I. S. Wisenbaker, and a better home I have never been in. Just three at home now-the father, mother, and daughter. Brother Wisenbaker has a son in the front-line trenches in France. May the Lord bless and protect him and bring him back to his wife and infant child and the other loved ones. 0 0 0

The Dasher Bible School.

I have been very much pleased to look more fully into the Dasher Bible School. The trustees, I find, own three acres of ground, on which they have a two-story frame building and the president's home, an eight-room house, in which some of the boarding pupils are kept. Brother Prevatt has charge of this school, and will have two able assistants the next school year, which begins on the second Tuesday in September. The tuition runs from two dollars to five dollars and forty cents a month, all the high-school branches being taught. Good board can be secured for fifteen dollars a month. A great work has been done, and I firmly believe that the Dasher Bible School is destined to become one of the greatest blessings God has given to the work in this and adjoining States. Brother Prevatt is not pushing the school just now as much as he intends to do later, due to war conditions; but I think it well for the brethren to look this way when they think of sending their children from home to one of the best high schools that we have and where the influences are the very best. Young preachers who feel unable to go to the larger schools, due to their lack of finance-we will be glad to see if we cannot make a way for them at Dasher that will mean much to them and at the same time let them be continually used for the extension of the cause of Christ. For all information, address J. P. Prevatt, Dasher, Ga.

A Great Day for Atlanta.

Last Lord's day (August 25) was also a great day for Atlanta. Brother Shacklett preached a stirring sermon at South Pryor in the forenoon and was with the boys at Camp Gordon in the afternoon. Brother Carter was at his regular place at East Point in the forenoon. Brother H. Leo Boles, president of the David Lipscomb College, of Nashville, Tenn., spoke to a full house at West End in the forenoon and also at night, and in the afternoon he spoke to a splendid audience at East Point. His subjects were timely selections, and he drove them home to the hearts of his hearers. His visit meant so much to the work, and we feel so thankful for it,

In connection with Brother Boles' visit, I wish to say that he is at the head of one of our greatest colleges, formerly the Nashville Bible School. It has prospered under his supervision, and it is a college that should have the whole-hearted support of the brethren. David Lipscomb and J. A. Harding never did a greater piece of work than the day they opened the Nashville Bible School, a work that has given birth to dozens of other institutions of learning like it and that has educated and sent out its hundreds of young men who are now proclaiming the gospel to the lost of earth.

Brother Carter baptized the husband of one of our best members on Thursday night of last week. They had just recently married.

To the brethren in all this section I say: Arise, in the name of our Lord, and let us take the land for Christ.

Family Prayers.

You say you are busy this morning, In the maelstrom of family cares, And husband must rush to the office, So there isn't a moment for prayers.

Then children are sent to the schoolroom. And the grind of the day thus begins, With no word from God's Book to remember, Nor the echo of strengthening hymns.

What wonder the burdens are heavy. And the hours seem irksomely long; What wonder that rash words are spoken, And that life seems discordant and wrong.

Pause for a little each morning, And again at the close of the day, To talk with the Master who loves you-Remember, he taught us to pray. -Christian Workers' Magazine.

By seeing the divine in every sinner, Jesus made them realize their divinity. Sin no longer held them in bondage after Jesus had revealed to them the Truth that makes men free.-Selected.

Brother Elam is in a meeting with the church at Murfreesboro, Tenn.

From G. A. Marsh, Pikeville, Tenn., August 28: "I closed my meeting at Newton last Monday. Two were added by baptism and one came from the Baptist Church. I am now at Luminary for a few days."

We made a mistake in reporting L. L. Yeagley's recent meeting at Nunnelly, Tenn. There were three additions instead of twenty-three. He closed a good meeting at New Eden, in Williamson County, on August 26. Six were baptized and two were restored.

Whoever, by a Christian word he speaks or by a Christian life he lives, brings a new soul to see the perfect life and take the perfect grace, has poured out of his full hands a blessing on his brother that leaves utterly out of sight any gift that riches can bestow on poverty.—Phillips Brooks.

Charles L. Talley writes: "I have just closed a very interesting meeting at Stony Point, Lincoln County, Tenn. We had splendid interest and attention, with two baptisms. The general outlook for the church in Lincoln County is not as encouraging as in the past. I begin a meeting at Molino, Tenn., next Lord's day."

Married, at this office, on August 20, at 5 P.M., Mr. James R. Hodge and Miss Claudia B. Clark, both of Lynnville, Tenn.; at Mount Juliet, Tenn., on August 29, at 8 P.M., Dr. W. Luther Ellis and Miss Effie Sharon Sweatt. A. B. Lipscomb officiated at both weddings. The Gospel Advocate extends heartiest congratulations.

A. W. Young, Box 464, Fort Worth, Texas, writes: "Good services at all of the congregations in the city on the fourth Lord's day in August, and we now have six congregations here. At South Side-Central Church we baptized two, and four others took membership with us. I expect to be in Tennessee for evangelistic work in 1919."

From C. E. Wooldridge, Fayetteville, Tenn., August 27: "I am in a little meeting this week out in the country. We have had two confessions to date. I expect to go to Mount Juliet on the third Lord's day in September for a meeting. C. R. Nichol, of Clifton, Texas, is to begin a meeting at Cornersville, in Marshall County, next Lord's day. I hope to be with him some next week."

From M. N. Mathes, Fort Henry, Tenn., August 28: "The church at Blue Spring has just closed a splendid meeting of ten days' duration, with W. A. Record, of Padueah, Ky., doing the preaching. The attendance was the largest we have ever had. There were fifteen additions and the church was greatly benefited. Brother Record is a sound, loyal preacher, and the church greatly appreciates his labor."

A brother who did not sign his name sends us this report from Milburn, Okla., August 26: "I have just closed a twenty-days' meeting at Roff, Okla., with fourteen additions. The meeting at Nida is progressing nicely. We are having large crowds and fine attention. I will begin at Alma, Ark., on September 5, after which I will go to Western Oklahoma for a meeting, then to New Mexico to locate for my wife's health."

From W. A. Record, Fort Henry, Tenn., August 28; "I have just closed a ten-days' meeting with the Blue Springs Church, with fifteen additions. I found a splendid band of Christians there. These brethren are alive and active and appreciate one's efforts, and they stand by their preacher in every way. Their future bids fair for a strong church. I return home from here, and then go to my work in Illinois, where I labor with two strong churches."

The opening exercises of David Lipscomb College will be held in Harding Hall, on the college campus, next Tuesday, September 10, at 10 A.M. Several speakers will be present to make short addresses. The public is cordially invited. The prospect for a good opening is very encouraging.

From D. E. Peters, Andalusia, Ala.: "I report good success in our home meeting at Oakland, near River Falls, Ala. We had a week's help by H. T. Dowling, of Remerton, Ga., and a few good discourses by Van A. Bradley, of Franklin, Tenn., and closed with a week's preaching by W. T. Grider, of Dozier, Ala. Ten were added to the fold at this place, and twenty-six were added to the church near Opp, Ala., the week before coming to this point. We thank God for the Bible and the Gospel Advocate."

From J. H. Lawson, Fort Worth, Texas, August 27: "Your letter with check for two dollars, the gift of Mrs. S. J. McCullough, Finch, W. Va., came to me in due time, and I assure you it was appreciated, as the great drought over Texas has left many of the best people and our best supporters in need and not able to render assistance. The drought over West Texas is the worst we have ever known, and the State is now raising means to help that part of the State through the winter; and the crops in the central part are over half short, especially cotton."

Lieut. John S. Cayce writes from "Somewhere in France," Base Hospital 42, A. E. F., A. P. O. 731: "I cannot refrain from writing this letter to you now for two reasons—(1) because just yesterday I received my first copy of the Gospel Advocate (dated June 27), and (2) because of the most excellent and timely letter from John E. Dunn from Camp Sevier. I have never read the Advocate without a new incentive, without a fresh sense of duty being created, and always has its columns borne me a new message and, I can truly say, made me better for having read it. I do not want to ever be without it."

From L. E. Carpenter, Itasca, Texas, August 27: "J. B. Nelson has just closed a short meeting with the faithful at this place, where he has labored for some time. Ten were baptized and one came by letter, and the church was greatly benefited. T. F. Stovall, of Dallas, led the singing. The church here has a very bright prospect, because the brethren have a mind to work for the Lord. I have just returned from some protracted-meeting work in Kentucky and a visit to my old home there, during which time I buried my father. I am here now to labor with the brethren in Itasca this winter. Let us all be faithful in season and out of season, while the opportunity is ours."

From Lacy Elrod, Milton, Tenn., Route 1, August 28: "I. B. Bradley, of Dickson, Tenn., began a meeting at Antioch, Rutherford County, on the third Sunday in August and preached until the fourth Sunday night. Seven were baptized and two were restored to fellowship. There were large audiences from the beginning, and they increased as the meeting progressed. Brother Bradley did some excellent preaching, and the church here was greatly strengthened. The more the members of the church here know Brother Bradley, the more they love him for his work's sake. Byron Hughes made a splendid song leader for this meeting. We pray that the church at Antioch may continue to grow in the Lord."

From H. J. Stafford, Trezevant, Tenn., August 30: "J. W. Dunn, of Paris, Texas, closed a twelve-days' meeting here yesterday. The meeting was a grand success. A. B. Reavis, of Dresden, led the singing, and did his work well. The preaching was splendid. Sixteen were baptized (three of them were rebaptized), one came from the Presbyterlans, two were restored, and one took membership. We feel like a great work has been done here. Brother Dunn is indeed a great man in every sense of the word. He is sound in doctrine, strong in faith and practice, loving in disposition, humble in service, convincing in logic, and sufficiently able to defend the truth, and has no fear for those opposing him. Both Brethren Dunn and Reavis have agreed to be with us next year."

From T. M. Carney, Union City, Tenn., August 29: "I send you a report of three meetings in Obion County, Tenn., as follows: At Mount Zion, twelve days, with five added; Oak Ridge, ten days, with nine added; Freemont, eleven days, with three added. I find the work to be more difficult than usual. Many of our good boys have been called to serve their country, and we miss their assistance in the Master's vineyard here. However, I have worked with greater determination because of the sacrifice these boys are making for us who remain at home. Brethren, if there was ever an age in which we should be in earnest about our work, this is the most needful one of seriousness and devotion to God and man. O how can any professed Christian be careless and indifferent when the whole world is being baptized in human blood! May God's message of love and cheer lead, strengthen, and prepare us for the trying ordeals of each day."

Where Does the Modern Missionary Society Contravene God's Law?

BY M. C. K.

In the midst of the great confusion growing out of denominationalism, it is difficult, in these modern times, to condemn the wrong without condemning the right, or to indorse the right without indorsing the wrong. It goes without saying that right is right, and we should never condemn it; and that wrong is wrong, and we should never indorse it. But just where to draw the line within which we may properly act, and beyond which we may not, is the question.

These reflections are suggested by a letter from a brother who is diligently and honestly studying the question of missionary societies, and is perplexed over certain difficulties which he has encountered in connection with the problem. While he has been trained to believe the society is without support in the word of God, yet certain arguments and circumstances have been placed before him and certain questions have been suggested to his mind until he has some doubt about the correctness of the position of those who oppose the society. In his letter just mentioned, which is marked by evident sincerity, he states his difficulty and propounds certain questions which we are called upon to answer. In deference to his wish, we withhold his name and are glad to render to him and to others, on the merits of the question, any assistance within our power. He presents his difficulty in the following statement:

I know that God has placed ecclesiastics in the church, that their province is local, and that they are answerable for the oversight placed in their hands; that they cannot shift their responsibilities or take to themselves responsi-bilities not authorized. They as well as their flock must walk by faith. But if they share the responsibility among their respective flocks of sending a man to preach the gospel, where and how is their individual oversight abridged or diminished? They may not in person have anything to do with the missionary, but through their delegate or "messenger" they do, which, to my mind, is all the same. Do we not recommend our local evangelist to the brethren at large, and do they not cooperate with us in supporting him? Is this not in effect one and the same as a mission-ary cooperation? My trouble is this: I do not see how the missionary cooperation is necessarily an adjunct to the church; and a recent writer to the Advocate has stated, I believe, that the Advocate does not oppose such societies as adjuncts. But now where is the local oversight of the eldership abridged or diminished by such co-operative movement? This is what I cannot see. And this is the question proper that I should like for you, if you can thus favor me, to answer.

Then, again, the local society for good works-as long as they are subsidiary to the eldership-under its controlwhere is there any principle of God's law transgressed?

Let us now look at the matter in the light of the New Testament. Several observations are worthy of note:

1. Referring to the board of elders, bishops, or overseers, as they are variously styled in the New Testament and divinely appointed in each local church for the express purpose of overseeing, directing, and managing in church affairs, he asks: "If they share the responsibility among their respective flocks of sending a man to preach the gospel, where and how is their individual oversight abridged or diminished?" That depends altogether on how "they share" the said responsibility. If they "share" it only in the sense that the board of bishops or overseers in each local church directs its flocks in sending support to the same man or men who are preaching the gospel in the mission field, there is no abridgment of their "individual oversight" at all and no improper interference otherwise with their legitimate function and rights. Mere sharing of responsibility in such a case is wholly harmless, being nothing more necessarily than a cooperation of churches, the right of which is clearly and abundantly recognized in the New Testament.

2. But such a sharing of responsibility is not only not the same thing that is found in the modern missionary society, but the two things are vitally and radically different. In the former, each church not only maintains its own individual independence and identity, but it is in direct communication with those whom it supports and retains control over them and the work it is doing through them. In the latter, there is a central board of overseers and managers which is not only separate and distinct from the divinely appointed board in each local church, but it has invested in it and exercises authority and control above and beyond them all. This central board is in absolute control of missionary work, and the churches have no voice in the matter. They furnish the money for the central board to use in the work, but they have no voice in the control of things. The central board selects, passes on the fitness of, employs and sends out the missionaries, and has all control over them and the work, including the power to recall them from the field, if it wishes to do so. Moreover, nobody else can recall them. The churches are powerless here and have no voice in the matter. If a missionary becomes unsound in the faith so that the churches feel that he should not be retained and supported in the work, they cannot recall him. So far as the management and control of a missionary and his work are concerned, they are utterly powerless, and, in spite of any protest from them, the board can continue him in the work and ao church can prevent it. Yea, more, every church is compelled to support him and his false teaching, or pull out of the concern, one or the other. Of course, as we are here sometimes reminded, a church, in such a case, could pull out of the association and have nothing to do with it; but this, please remember, would be an acknowledgment that the association is wrong and a concession of the only point in controversy.

3. Referring still further to the question whether, in the case supposed, there is any abridgment of the functions belonging to the board of overseers in the local church, he says: "They may not in person have anything to do with the missionary, but through their delegate or 'messenger' they do, which, to my mind, is all the same." Now, precisely in this use, or rather misuse, of the term "messenger" and the nature of the ecclesiastical arrangement it represents lurks all the danger. To use the term "messenger" as synonymous with the term 'delegate" in the ordinary ecclesiastical sense of the latter is wholly foreign to the New Testament. To undertake to conduct missionary work and other church affairs through an ecclesiastical body composed of "delegates" from the churches-a sense in which "messenger" is never used in the New Testament-would be to commit the churches to the principle of dealing with and deciding such matters by a majority vote of their delegates in convention assembled, which, of course, would open the way to fasten upon the churches false teachers or anything else which the majority of such a body might desire.

4. But "do we not recommend an evangelist to the brethren at large, and do they not cooperate with us in supporting him?" Yes, certainly, but this does not tie up the churches in an ecclesiastical arrangement that can fasten apon them false teaching and anything else whether they vant it or not. He then asks: "Is this not in effect one and the same as a missionary cooperation?" No. by no means. What our brother here supposes is merely a cooperation of churches, without any central board of authority and control, which is all right and proper, and which can be effected through messengers, every church retaining its own independence and control over the work; but in the missionary society, with its central board of supervision and control, every church is tied up and bound, as if by ecclesiastical ligaments, to every other church in the cooperation, and all are equally subordinated to the general body, having surrendered to it all control and management of the work in hand; and this is precisely where "the local oversight of the eldership" is abridged by such cooperative movement."

5. Responding to his question on "local societies," concerning which he says as to "the local society for good works—as long as they are subsidiary to the eldership—under its control—where is there any principle of God's law transgressed?" we reply, if by such a "society" our brother means nothing more than a committee, under the lirection of the eldership, doing work along certain lines, here is no "principle of God's law transgressed."

6. Finally, the reader, we trust, is now prepared to appeciate the conclusion that we make no opposition to the dissionary society on the ground of a mere method of wrk. If it were nothing more than a mere method of wrk, we would utter not one word of opposition; for we are compelled, if we work at all, to work by some method. Bt it is more than a method. It is a general organization so constituted and operated as to contravene and interfere, as we have seen, with the divine order revealed in the New Testament. On the matter of direct communication between the churches and those whom they support, and the supervision and control of missionary work, such a general organization completely supplants the order founded by the Lord with an order founded by man.

When Will God Stop the War?

BY E. A. E.

God's charge against the Jews is that, while they bear the name of a Jew, rest upon the law, glory in God, know his will, approve of the things that are excellent, are instructed out of the law, are confident that they are guides of the blind, a light to the ones who are in darkness, correctors of the foolish, teachers of babes, have in the law the form of knowledge and of the truth, they break the law, dishonor God, steal, commit adultery, and are guilty of the same sins as the Gentiles. (Rom. 2: 17-29.) Is not the same charge applicable now to many who claim to be of spiritual Israel? Is the church to-day keeping itself unspotted from the world and separate from sinners? Have not many set themselves up as guides of the blind. lights to those in darkness, correctors of the foolish, and teachers of babes, who are as full of the spirit and ways of the world, follow as much the wisdom of the world, and are as guilty of sin in some respects as the ones they would teach? It is a grievous and fearful thing that many preachers and teachers, who claim to speak as the Bible speaks and to be silent where the Bible is silent and to add nothing to and to take nothing from the word of God, fail, either through downright neglect, or cold indifference, or presumption and willful disobedience, to preach and teach that which the Bible teaches concerning the spirit and mission of the nations and kingdoms of the earth, and God's control and use of them, and the nature and spirit and work of the kingdom of Christ. It is a sin of the deepest dye to presume to know more than God and to know better what to teach than he knows. All these things and whatsoever other things are in the Bible have been written in the wisdom and love of God for our learning, "that through patience and comfort of the scriptures we might have hope" (Rom. 15: 4); and all who neglect them do so at their own peril.

Fifty years ago it was the general custom in all revivals to pray God to become reconciled to save sinners. This prayer was loud and long. But good men and thoughtful preachers of the gospel taught the people that sinners are the wrongdoers and the ones to become reconciled; that God entreats them to be reconciled to him and has sent out through the apostles "the word of reconciliation," or the terms upon which he will pardon and save them. (2 Cor. 5: 17-21.) Sinners, not God, are the ones to be reconciled. Just so now, instead of studying the Bible and endeavoring to harmonize themselves with God's ways and to teach his ways to the world, many are striving to harmonize the wisdom of God with the wisdom of the world and praying God to fit his ways to the ways of the world. But, "as the heavens are higher than the earth," so are God's ways higher than man's ways and his thoughts than man's thoughts. (Isa. 55: 8, 9.) Men have to get up to God's thoughts and ways; they cannot bring him down to their thoughts and ways. The two are different and antagonistic. "For the wisdom of this world is foolishness with God." (1 Cor. 3: 19.) Then let us all seek and teach God's thoughts and ways and pray for that wisdom which is "from above," which "is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without variance, without hypocrisy." (James 3: 13-18.)

God teaches that upon the following principles, set forth in Jer. 18, which be sure to read, he deals with the nations of earth:

As a potter uses a piece of clay, according to the quality, of the clay, to make a certain vessel of honor-an artistic and beautiful vase; and another piece of clay of different quality to make a different vessel-a vessel of dishonora slop jar; so God uses the different nations of the earth, all according to their own choice and will, qualifications and good or bad character, to serve different purposes. (Verses 1-4.) If a nation is base and brutal, bent on plundering and vandalism and conquest, greedy and bloodthirsty, governed by the wisdom which is not from above, but which, with all its efficiency and philosophy, "is earthly, sensual, devilish" (James 3: 15), God does not infringe upon its free agency to choose whom or what it will serve and the wicked course it will pursue, but overrules it in order to demonstrate what men without "the gentle Nazarene" and "the living and true God" will become with all their learning and wisdom, and to chastise other nations; and then, having served his purpose with it. as he did with the Pharaohs, the kings of Assyria, Nebuchadnezzar, and Belshazzar, if it is beyond redemption, destroys it.

Then the word of Jehovah came to me, saying, O house of Israel, cannot I do with you as this potter? saith Jeho-Behold, as the clay in the potter's hand, so are ye in my hand, O house of Israel. At what instant I shall speak concerning a nation, and concerning a kingdom, to pluck up and to break down and to destroy it; if that nation, concerning which I have spoken, turn from their evil, I will repent of the evil that I thought to do unto them. And at what instant I shall speak concerning a nation, and concerning a kingdom, to build and to plant it; if they do that which is evil in my sight, that they obey not my voice, then I will repent of the good wherein I said I would Now therefore, speak to the men of Judah, benefit them. and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem, saying, Thus saith Jehovah: Behold, I frame eyil against you, and devise a device against you: return ye now every one from his evil way, and amend your ways and your doings. But they say It is in vain; for we will walk after our own devices, and we will do every one after the stubbornness of his evil heart. (Verses 5-12.)

Judah would not repent, but walked after their own devices and after the stubbornness of their own hearts, forgot God, burned incense to false gods, turned from the old paths, and walked in bypaths. (Verses 13-16.) Therefore God said:

I will scatter them as with an east wind before the enemy; I will show them the back and not the face, in the day of their calamity. (Verse 17.)

Then God took "all the families of the north" and sent for Nebuchadnezzar, his servant, and brought them all against Judah and Jerusalem and against all the nations round about, and utterly destroyed them and made them "an astonishment," "a hissing" and "perpetual desolation." (Jer. 25: 8-10.)

God declared that after he had chastised Judah for seventy years, then he would punish Babylon and that nation and make the land of the Chaldeans "a desolation forever," and "many nations and great kings" should "make bondmen of them" and recompense them according to their deeds. (Verses 12-14.)

Then God instructed Jeremiah to take the "cup of the wine" of his "wrath" and "cause all nations" "to drink of it." (Verses 15-29.)

A noise shall come even to the end of the earth; for Jehovah hath a controversy with the nations; he will enter into judgment with all flesh: as for the wicked, he will give them to the sword, saith Jehovah. (Verse 31.)

After God had taken his people into Babylonian captivity, he taught them to build houses there for themselves, to plant gardens, to eat the fruit of them, to marry and rear children, to teach their sons and daughters to do the same, to increase and not become diminished, to seek the peace of the city, and to pray to Jehovah for it, for in its peace would they find peace. God had thoughts of peace and not of evil of them in their latter end; for they should pray and he would answer, and seek him and he would be found, and he would turn their captivity into freedom, and gather them from the nations whither he had driven them and restore them in Jerusalem. (Jer. 29: 5-14.)

Just so Christians are taught to-day to make "supplications, prayers, intercessions, thanksgivings" "for all men; for kings and all that are in high place "-civil rulersthat they may lead a tranquil and quiet life in all godliness and gravity." "This is good and acceptable in the sight of God our Savior; who would have all men to be saved, and come to the knowledge of the truth." (1 Tim. 2: 1-3.) Such "supplications, prayers, intercessions, thanksgivings," offered that Christians may lead the life described and that all men "may be saved, and come to the knowledge of the truth," are "good and acceptable in the sight of God." Are all preachers and teachers and the whole church working and praying as God commands in order to be acceptable to him-namely, to "lead a tranquil and quiet life in all godliness and gravity" and to bring all men "to the knowledge of the truth" and salvation in Christ? Should the church and her preachers and elders forget their mission, depart from the thoughts and ways of God, lose the spirit of Christ, and work after the wisdom and ways and in the spirit of the world? Let us "stand in the ways and see, and ask for the old paths, where is the good way," and let us "walk therein," and we shall find rest for our souls. (Jer. 6: 16.)

This is the teaching of the Bible from beginning to the end. Men "by searching" cannot "find out God." (Job 11: 7.) God reveals himself—his wonderful and unfathomable attributes and his merciful and gracious, righteous and holy will—to men through the Bible. (See 1 Cor. 1: 20, 21; 3: 18:23.) Let us study it.

"Yet forty days, and Nineveh shall be overthrown." But the king and people of Nineveh "believed God," repented—turned from their evil ways and put violence out of their hands—and God stopped the overthrow. (Jon. 3.)

"The higher powers," "the powers that be," "kings and all that are in high place," civil governments, are ordained of God "for vengeance on evildoers and for praise to them that do well" (1 Pet. 2: 13); to be "a terror" to evil works, ministers of God, avengers of wrath to those who do evil, for they "bear not the sword in vain," and ministers of God for good to all who do good (Rom. 13: 1-7).

God teaches Christians to "be subject to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake, whether to the king as supreme, or unto governors sent by him" (1 Pet. 2: 13); to "be in subjection to the higher powers," or civil authorities, in any form of government; to pay tribute, custom, and all forms of taxes; to respect and fear and honor the rulers of the land, and, as we have seen, to pray f r them.

Whether Christians as citizens, like all other citizens, approve or disapprove of some laws of the land, they must cheerfully and fully submit for right's sake and for Christ's sake. They cannot take the law into their own hands, become night riders or join mobs. All Christians are law-abiding citizens, maintaining the harmony and tranquillity and seeking the good of their neighbors. This life, as God teaches, secures the hearty approval of the govern ment. "Do that which is good, and thou shalt have prais from the same: for he is a minister of God to thee fo good." When church members-I cannot say Christian, for Christians will not do it-violate the law, God say they should be afraid and should be punished, because te ruler "bears not the sword in vain." The ruler bears te sword in vain when he does not punish evildoers or lavbreakers. For Christ's sake, and, therefore, as a Christin duty, Christians cheerfully submit to "the powers tat be." In no case are Christians justifiable before God in refusing to submit to civil rulers, or the laws of any government under which they live, except only when the civil authorities forbid their obedience to God or require them to do something which God forbids. Then God must be obeyed. It is a violation of God's law to act disrespectfully toward, and to refuse to honor, the rulers of the government. According to our understanding of this matter in our home, we cook and eat, sleep and work, economize and conserve in every way as the law requires for the relief of the suffering and needy over the ocean, and are glad to do so, rendering to all their dues, customs, tribute, tax, honor, fear, etc.

Christians are taught, not only to submit to "the powers that be," and not only that these powers have been "ordained of God" to restrain, to be "a terror" to, and to purish evildoers, whether the evildoers are individuals or nations, but also that they may use these powers for their own protection. Paul used his Roman citizenship for his and Silas' exoneration at Philippi (Acts 16: 37-40) and to protect himself against scourging in Jerusalem (Acts 22: 25); was escorted from Jerusalem to Cesarea by soldiers under the order of "the chief captain" as protection against a mob (Acts 23: 22-24); and again to protect himself against a mob appealed to Cæsar (Acts 25: 11, 12). Paul was a prisoner in the hands of "the chief captain," and it was "the captain" who ordered the soldiers to take Paul to Cesarea for protection, for which Paul was no more responsible than the prisoner now who is guarded in jail by soldiers against mob violence or sent by the sheriff in the hands of soldiers from one place to another to escape a mob. But Paul gladly accepted this protection. Having appealed to Cæsar, Paul was sent by the Roman governor of Judea to Rome in the hands of a centurion and his soldiers. In Rome many soldiers, one at a time and in turn, were chained to Paul to prevent his escape. Paul was not responsible for any of this. In offering "light and leading" and in saving the church and others from prevalent "religious uncertainty" and an eclipse of faith, as Mr. Blocker exhorts, brethren must be careful to teach the facts and the truth in regard to Paul's use of civil powers. They must not allow prejudice and a partisan spirit to control them. Paul never used the civil authorities in order to retaliate and take vengeance; he never prosecuted an officer for false imprisonment, sued any one for having beaten him uncondemned or for slander: but teaches that vengeance belongs to Ged and that God uses civil government, which God has ordained, as "an avenger for wrath to him that doeth evil." (Rom. 12: 19; 13: 4.)

While Christians must use the law of the land to protect their property rights and themselves against thieves, incendiaries, rapists, murderers, etc., they are forbidden to "go to law before the unrighteous" and "unbelievers"—that is, with one another and to settle their own differences. God declares that it is a "shame" and "a defect" that some Christians have lawsuits with one another; that their differences must be settled by wise and just men in the church; and that they must suffer wrong rather than do wrong. (1 Cor. 6: 1-11.)

Who Is Free from Condemnation?

BY E. G. S.

It is certainly a grand thing to be free from condemnation. But who can claim that he is free from condemnation? The word of the Lord plainly tells who is free. "There is therefore now no condemnation to them who are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit." (Rom. 8: 1.) This passage shows that two things must be true with us to put us in that condition. One of these is that we must be in Christ; the other is that we must walk after the Spirit, and not after the flesh. These things are certainly very plain. Those that are in Christ are those that have been baptized into him, for baptism is the step by which we enter into him. None are in him that have not been baptized. The word of God shows who are in Christ, and how they got into him. Therefore those that read and study the word of God as given in the New Testament may be perfectly certain as to whether they are in him or not. Those that have been baptized and are living as the word of God directs may rest assured that they are in Christ, but those that have not taken that step are not in him. If not in Christ, we are not free from sin. This shows the importance of being sure that we are in him. It is a very dangerous thing to live in sin. So far as we know, death may come at any time, even when we are least expecting it; and if we are not ready when it comes, it will be too late to get ready then. The wise thing, therefore, is to get ready early in life and lead a life consecrated to the will of God. God knows we can do this, else he would not have required it of us.

The very fact that God requires us to do certain things is evidence that we can do them. People should be very careful not to say that we cannot do what God commands us to do. Nevertheless, very many of the people where I was brought up talked that very way, and actually thought it was true; but they were going by what uninspired men said, and not by what the word of God says. The Bible says no such thing. Obeying the word of God is the only thing in all the world that can prepare people for the happy home in heaven. If we turn away from the word of God, no matter what else we may do, we are certain to be lost at last. Let all be perfectly sure, therefore, that they are doing the very things the word of the Lord says do. All that will do that may be certain that God will fulfill all his promises to them; but if we turn away from the Lord's will and follow the will of men, the Lord will turn away from us and we will be eternally lost.

There is much thoughtlessness with many people along this line. There is just one line of perfect safety for people in life, and that is to be always in the line of obedience to the word of God. If we strive to live every day as the word of God directs, we may be sure the Lord will not overlook us when he gathers his saints home. The true and faithful children of God may sometimes be chastened by him, but the faithful ones will never be forgotten and forsaken by him. While the Lord chastens his faithful children sometimes, it is because he loves them and wants them to be saved. The best of men sometimes make mistakes and do things they ought not to do; but as soon as they see their mistakes they will strive to correct them, and God will be merciful to them and forgive them when they repent. But Christians ought to watch their own lives closely and keep them as thoroughly in harmony with the will of God as possible; for, while the will may be good toward duty and faithfulness, the flesh is weak and needs much watchfulness to be kept always in the right. With the best we can do while in the flesh, we will sometimes depart from the right way and will need to repent and get right again; for we can carry no sin to heaven.

People must get rid of sinful lives before death comes or they will carry them into eternity. There will then be no chance to dodge the destiny of a sinful life. The Lord has taught us in his word how to get rid of a sinful life—that is, to repent and turn away from it. A wicked life will not turn away from us, but we can turn away from it if we make the proper effort. But it takes a practical and earnest effort to get rid of a sinful life after we have practiced it for a good while. Sin becomes a fixture after we have nursed and encouraged it for a long time, and it becomes hard to shake off; but it can be shaken off, if people will begin in time. The longer sin is indulged, the harder it is to shake off. Hence the effort to get rid of sin should begin early in life, before it gets too strong a hold upon us.

In the Bible we are admonished: "Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth, while the evil days come not, nor the years draw nigh, when thou shalt say, I have no pleasure in them." (Eccles. 12: 1.) This is a fine admonition; and if all would follow it, we would certainly have a very different world from the one we now have. But very many young people seem to think that Christianity would keep them from being happy instead of making them happy. This is certainly a very great mistake. True happiness and an innocent life generally go together. The way to have an innocent life is to become a Christian in youth and practice it faithfully through life. Only in this way are we likely to have an innocent life. People that do not become Christians in youth frequently fail to become Christians when they are older; they put it off through life and never become Christians. The safe way, therefore, is the best way. To become Christians in youth is the safe way. Death cannot take us unawares if we lead a faithful life.

The most fitting words this month seem to be that we, as contributors, have done exceptionally well. Let us encourage each other to do equally as well next month. And to those who are not giving, this is a splendid opportunity to be of service in the cause of Christ. It is only through our efforts that those in spiritual darkness will learn the blessed story of mercy, forgiveness, and salvation for all. While each of us is endeavoring to live as a Christian ought, and by our example and influence we are making Christians here, let us also send our money to the foreign field that our missionaries may be supported while making Christians over there. O, for the time when the knowledge of His love will cover the earth as the waters cover the seas! Address Miss Nellie Straiton, 1030 South Lake Street, Fort Worth, Texas.

BY J. M. M'CALEB.

Across the fence from me is a neighbor with a large family and only one arm. His right arm is off right at the shoulder. He has a garden of about half an acre. With only a left hand and a hoe he cultivates this garden, and does it well. Whenever I see him out there at work, I feel ashamed that I am not more thankful for two good arms.

On the last Sunday in March, Brother Fujimori baptized four persons at the Takahagi Church; on Tuesday, April 2, Brother Ishiguro, of the Otsuka church, baptized five persons—three women and two men; on the first Sunday in April Brother Miyajima, of the Sendagaya church, baptized three—a woman from the Salvation Army and two young men.

One morning after the meeting of the church I noticed a windowpane broken, and called Sister Yoshić's attention to it. Yes, she said, it was done by one of the Sunday-school boys. I just saw his clothing at the time and could not tell which one it was. But I made a talk on the words, "There is nothing hid that shall not be brought to light;" and when I had finished, the little boy that did it came up and confessed it and asked to be excused.

Training Little Children

(Suggestions by mothers who have been kindergartners. Issued by The United States Bureau of Education, Washington, D. C., and The National Kindergarten Association, New York, N. Y.)

Article 23.

The Intelligent Mother May Guide Child's Play in the Same Way as Does the Kindergartner.

If there is no kindergarten near enough for the child to attend when he reaches the stage of development that should have more definite purpose than mere activity of body or handling of materials, the intelligent mother may guide his play in such manner as to supply in a measure the processes of development adopted by the trained kin-

A table or trough containing sand has unlimited possibilities for the energetic child. At first there should be free handling of the sand (guarding always against the dangerous sport of throwing the sand at another child); then simple forms that may be molded with damp sand; then impressions made on the surface of the sand with blocks, tart pan, or other objects; then drawing with the finger or a stick on the smoothed surface of sand. Later on, as the child develops, it may be suggested to him that he can build a house with blocks in the center and lay out grounds in the sand about it. Twigs and leaves make excellent trees; tiny sprigs help to make the garden. He may even have the beds laid off by shells. A small pan of water sunk in the sand will serve admirably as a lake. Clay can be modeled into people, and animals and more blocks will make a barn or stable. The beauty of all this is that the child can do everything himself, and is most happy in the doing.

A wooden box divided once horizontally and once vertically makes a four-room house, which can be papered with wall-paper samples and furnished with furniture constructed of cardboard. Books of instruction, easily understood by most mothers, are usually furnished with the heavy quality of cover paper used for such handiwork.

With a pair of blunt-pointed scissors plain Manila paper or colored paper can be cut into the most fascinating plants, animals, people, and many inanimate objects. A cloth scrapbook, or one of heavy paper, is easily made at home, into which these cut-out objects may be pasted. This is delightful work for rainy days and needs little or no direction except in the use of the paste, so as to avoid smearing or waste. A child soon learns to use paste daintily.

Children delight in stringing objects. With a large, blunt needle and heavy thread they can string rose hips, cranberries, acorns, acorn cups, and many other natural objects. When these are not available, colored wooden kindergarten beds, in the form of spheres, cubes, and cylinders, can be obtained and strung on shoestrings. These beads supplement blocks in teaching form and the knowledge of color and number.

Most children develop early a love of numbers and take great delight in counting. When the desire to do this appears, it is well to meet it, but not to force it. The child may count or may string all the beads of one color, and of various colors, by ones, by twos, and by threes, according to his age and ability.

A wise mother will not allow any of these exercises to continue indefinitely. As soon as the child appears bored or when a new way of doing the work in hand is not readily accepted, his attention should be diverted to some other form of play or work. There are so many little duties inside and outside of the house which an eager, willing child can assist the mother in performing, he may be kept happily employed, while unconsciously learning much that will be always useful to him.

Toward the close of a busy day, before early tea and bedtime, there comes the period properly known as the "children's hour," when father or mother tells or reads a story. All parents are not gifted story-tellers, but most of them may become, with a little effort, sufficiently adept to be entirely satisfactory to a lenient audience. If the mother begins early with very simple stories, she can easily learn to tell these, and later, with practice, master the more complex ones. A story told is much more satisfactory to the average little child than a story read.

As the child grows older there are nature-study primers and readers which give charming accounts of the lives and habits of plants, insects, fish, and animals.

Care should be taken that the books selected are scientifically accurate, although simple.

Live pets serve to instill in the child respect for other life beside his own and to give him a sense of responsibility in providing for their care.

Few parents need to be told the value of individual gardening; and if no greater space can be provided, a window box will serve as a garden bed.

The intelligent parent realizes that the child is, above all things else, a self-active being. This abundant activity is a compelling force which must find an object upon which to spend itself; in other words, the child must be "up and doing." Let us, therefore, endeavor to always provide him with worthy objects upon which to expend that divinely provided energy.

Life lies before him, and we wish him not only to obtain the best from life, but to contribute to life something worth while. He exerts influence as unconsciously as he breathes, and as parents it is our privilege to see that he becomes a conscious influence for good.

Every act of his is helping to form the life he is to lead; and it is our privilege to equip him for his journey with a strong, clean, healthy body, a well-stocked mind, and a spirit which bids him serve his fellow man and thus "fulfill the law of God."

In Silence.

Our lives are full of chatter and complaint; We lack the hush in which alone is heard The sweetest strain, the all-including word, Unfailing portion of the listening saint He catches rarer sounds that are too faint For noisy throngs; his soul within him stirred Responds as singing bird to singing bird, And jubilant forgets the earth restraint.

O Thou who waitest to communicate Thy secret to an open heart and ear Hush into silence all our clamor loud; For only in a holy atmosphere Thy voice is heard; and unto them who wait Its tones thy hidden purpose is avowed. -Ida Ahlborn Weeks.

McCaleb.

I was recently called to New River, Ala., to conduct funeral services over the remains of our beloved brother, John T. McCaleb, a faithful elder, a cit-izen of the highest type, a friend to the poor, a dutiful husband, and a sup-porter of the truth. He had reached the age of seventy-eight, and had spent about sixty years in the service of his Master. The highest eulogy I can pay to his memory is to say that he was a Christian. He had climbed the heights of faith, hope, and love, and now has dawned the grander day when his hope shall be realized. He was held in high esteem, and his burial took place in the presence of a large gathering of people, both white and black. May the Lord bless the living. A. D. Dies.

Dunn.

Mrs. Kate Cryer Dunn died on August 7, 1918, at the Old Woman's Home, Nashville, Tenn. She was born on the Long Hollow Pike, near Gallatin, Tenn. She was the daughter of Hardy Muffre Cryer and Susan Ann Duval, of Ken-tucky. Her father was a well-known Methodist minister and stock raiser of Sumner County, Tenn. An older sister, Elmoza, married Dr. J. A. Anthony and lived at Hartsville, Tenn. There she heard the gospel preached. She believed and obeyed, thus becoming a member of the church, as well as her husband. Kate, the youngest sister, also became a member, and has remained faithful to the end. She received a good education and taught many years. For some time past she had been an inmate of the Home, and there the funeral took place. Her favorite songs were sung and her favorite Psalm was read. May her rest be sweet from the labors of life.

Burnette.

Mrs. Mattie J. Burnette, aged fifty-six, the widow of the late B. L. Burnette, who was an elder of the Cowart Street congregation, Chattanooga, Tenn., for twenty years, has passed from this life. Their home was in the eastern part of the city, and was such as delights the heart of a servant of the Lord, one that breathed the spirit of refugerent pin breathed the spirit of refinement min-gled with an air of devotion to the Mas-ter. This home was blessed with three children-one girl and two boys. about two years and two months the death angel has paid three visits to this home, claiming father, sister, and mother as his victims, leaving Sam and Leonard to mourn their loss and bear the burdens of life alone. Sister Burnette obeyed the gospel at the age of eleven years, and doubtless she served the Lord as best she could. She was a devoted wife and consecrated mother. At the funeral the writer spoke words of comfort in the presence of a large gathering of sorrowing relatives and friends.

Flora.

Sister Flora, of Brinkley, Ark., was called away on Wednesday night, Au-gust 14, 1918. She was at Hot Springs gust 14, 1916. She was at the springs taking treatment when the end came unexpectedly. She will be remembered by former students of the Nashville Bible School as the mother of the three Flora girls who have all been students there. The three daughters are living testimonials of the devoted, consecrated life of their mother. In Sister Flora's death the church has lost one of its pillars, a "mother in Israel" has fallen, and one of the happiest of homes has lost that which makes home most worth while. The word "mother" expresses the ties that are nearest and dearest to us, and God's love and goodness are manifested when he provides us with a Christian mother. When he sees fit to call them away, we must bravely face the loss and feel thankful that they were given to us as long as they were. Interment took place in the Brinkley Cemetery after short services conducted by Brother Gillespie and the writer. H. J. SUDBURY

Baker.

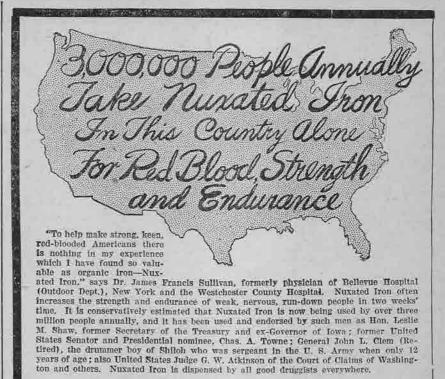

Mrs. Lucy M, Baker passed from our midst on July 10, 1918, in her seventy-sixth year. Well taught in the holy Scriptures, she was ever faithful and true in all the relationships of life. She was one of the few who loved to talk about the Bible, religion, and all the better things of life. She was the wife of the late J. F. Baker, who departed this life about ten years ago. In the capaclife about ten years ago. In the capacity of mother of his children (she had none of her own) she was ever watchful and careful of their best interests. ably was the love and devotion that developed between her and the youngest daughter such that it might be likened unto that which existed between David and Jonathan. Nothing but death could separate them. She is sadly missed in the home, in the congregation, in the Bible class, in which she always took great interest. Her presence there was always helpful in getting good out of the lesson. She was a member of the church of Christ for twenty-nine years. We fondly cherish her memory; and while she has gone to her reward, she has left an example and influence that will remain and which will help us who knew her best in striving to reach that better land where there is no sickness, no pain, no death, and no separation of loved ones, but where, with all the redeemed, there is joy and peace and happiness evermore. To Stop Falling Hair.

The cause of baldness, hair falling out, loss of luster and color, is found in the roots of the hair itself. Our hair is but a portion of our body, and, like the other organs, cannot subsist without food. The hair finds its food in the fat layer of skin next to the skull. When this source of food is stopped or impeded, out comes the hair. The dreaded disease, dandruff, is a germ. It collects on the bottom of the hair and eats away its life. The hair sack, from which the hair comes, is imbedded in the layer of under skin. When the scalp is diseased and the hair falls out, often this small hair sack closes. Eventually, as a result of the dandruff germs, baldness comes. The proper method of restoring the hair and stopping the falling out must necessarily be in the destruction of the dandruff germs and in the reopening of the little hair sacks. Furthermore, in order to rejuvenate the scalp and make the growth of new hair more vigorous, it is neces-sary that the system be able to furnish an abundance of hair food. Many artificial methods have been tried in restoring the hair which were only surface remedies, and, failing to reach the small hair sacks, were unsuccessful. Reopening the hair sack allows the new hair to grow. CALVACURA begins at the root of the trouble, and its use is, therefore, advised. Its mission is to feed the new hair as well as the old and rid the scalp of all dandruff germs. By thus cleansing and rejuvenating the entire scalp, a healthy growth of hair is assured. Falling of hair is stopped, new life and color to dead, gray hair is developed, and the hair becomes smooth and velvety. It is not an unpleasant treatment, and takes only a few minutes of time each day for about six weeks. The Union Laboratory, 214 109th Street. Binghamton, N. Y., will send you a liberal sample of Calvacura No. 1 FREE, together with Calvacura No. 1 FREE, together with a booklet, "The Triumph of Science Over Baldness," if you will send your name and address, together with 10 cents in silver or postage stamps to help pay the distribution expenses.

Character Building.

We have a way ofttimes of finding fault with circumstance and environment, of saying that we only need a chance to make good, when the truth of the matter is that what we need is a little more character. That is what Stevenson and Field and Riley and Van Dyke put into their work, and that is what makes it enduring. Character is what counts in this world, and it shows in every deed that we do. And we must forget, as far as we are able, the pains of life and dwell on its pleasures; for it is this quality-this enjoyment of the "good that we have"-that brings us happiness and enables us to pass on the joy that we have found for others to share.-Exchange.

PANAMA HATS HAND-WOVEN

New Discovery Brings Costly Panama Within Reach of All.

Within Reach of All.

New York, N. Y. (Special).—It is now proven that the stylish Panama, up to now only worn by the best-dressed people, can now be sold for $1. You don't have to be skeptical about the low price, as it gives service like the $5 and $10 kind, but not so fine a weave; and by this new discovery of weave one can hardly tell the difference. A Panama gives a man or woman distinction and at the same time comfort. Mr. George J. Bungay, 28 South William Street, of New York City, is backing up his discovery by sending a real hand-woven Panama any size, trimmed, blocked, with silk band, to any one for $1, postpaid. Fitted with leather sweat band, 25 cents extra. Furthermore, his policy is that, if you are not entirely satisfied, he will return your money.—Advt.

De Queen, August 27.—I am now in a meeting at this place. We have a few brethren here who meet in the Cumberland Presbyterian meetinghouse every Sunday afternoon. No series of sermons has ever been preached here by a loyal gospel preacher. Prospects appear favorable for a good meeting, yet there are obstacles to overcome. I have reserved three weeks for the meeting here. I shall go to Kirby next. Mississippi.

Tillatoba, August 28.—Our meeting at Sylvan Knoll, near Coffeeville, closed on August 9, with one baptism. Broth-

On the second Lord's day in August I began a meeting with the August I began a meeting with the brethren at Ruleville, over in the Delta. This meeting resulted in seven confessions and baptisms. We have had twenty-one additions at our regular Lord's day services since the first of July, and two more are to be baptized on Wednesday night. This is the first effort the brethren have made to advance the cause here, outside of one protracted meeting each year and one service each week. The cause has suffered much in the hands of men who would rule or ruin. We have only one hundred and ten members in this great city of one hundred thousand people, but we are growing and the outlook is encouraging.—B, U. Baldwin.

There were no additions, but a fair interest was manifested. I then went to Lemalsamac, near Newbern, where twenty-one were baptized and two were restored. Nashville, August 27.—On account of the illness of my mother I was called home from Alabama last Tuesday. During the month of August I have been evangelizing in Clay County, Ala. I have held meetings at Mount Zion and Campbell's Cross Roads, and had started one on Sunday at Pleasant Grove, but had to close on Tuesday morning. At Mount Zion fourteen were baptized, three were restored to fellowship, and two were received by letter from another congregation. At Campbell's Cross Roads there were six baptisms, two restorations, and one from the Baptists who claimed scriptural baptism, I baptized two at Pleasant Grove. The Lord willing, I shall return there in a few days and finish the meeting. The work in Anniston is moving along well, despite the fact that we have lost two substantial families recently, who moved to Atlanta. We have two or three additions every month.—C. H. Woodroof.

Nashville, August 29.—My fourth successive meeting with the church at Burns closed August 14. Six were baptized. The attendance and interest were fine. The church is working in peace and love, and I trust they will always "let brotherly love continue." We have some of as good and faithful workers in Burns as can be found anywhere. I have been preaching for them monthly between meetings. It is a pleasant place to work, and the church is not hiding its light under a bushel. Last Sunday night

I closed a meeting with the church at Bethel, four miles from Martin. The first good rain they had enjoyed for a long time fell Sunday night; and while it kept many at home, it did lots of good. The meeting was well attended. The afternoon services were more largely attended than week-day services usually are. Brother Kennedy and his good wife know how to make a preacher feel at home. One lady past middle age was baptized on Sunday afternoon just before the hard rain began. Next Sunday I shall begin a meeting near Coldwater, Miss.—M. C. Cayce, Dickson, August 27.—I closed an eight-days' meeting with the church at Antioch, near Murfreesboro, at the water, on Monday morning. There were seven baptisms and two restorations. This was a very interesting meeting, the interest growing to the close. The house was overflowing each night, and with the best daily attendance of any church for which I have held a meeting this year. There are many good brethren and sisters in this congregation who are deeply interested in the Lord's work. Brother Leo Boles was with us one day, and we enjoyed his presence. Brother Lacy Elrod, whose boyhood was spent near this church, spent three or four days with us. We were glad to have his help in the meeting. Brother Byron Hughes, of Franklin, led our song service, and did it well. A debate between C. H. Cayce, of the Primitive Baptist Church, and the writer will begin, near Burns, on September 23 and continue five days. Establishment of the church, unconditional salvation, and the conditions of pardon to an alien sinner will be discussed. Brethren will please take notice, as this debate was scheduled to begin on December 2. The change was made to suit the people of the community. Accommodations will be provided for all who desire to attend.—I. B. Bradley.

St. Joseph, August 27.- Thus far this summer I have held four meetings. On July 14 I began a meeting at Mountain Springs, Ala. There were five baptisms. The brethren a few miles distant, having secured the privilege of using the Methodist meetinghouse at Pleasant Grove for their weekly meeting, urged me to hold a few-days' meeting for them. Being pressed for time, there was but one chance. As we were not having night service at Mountain Springs, we could have night service at Pleasant Grove. So I undertook the task of holding two meetings at the same time, about three miles apart. This resulted in three baptisms. I spoke three times at Frankfort, Ala., with no visible re-I left a promise for a meeting in er. I returned to Lauderdale October. I returned to County, Ala. Clemons will take a leading part in these meetings. I will visit these brethren again as soon as possible. On August 11 I began at Shi-loh and continued eight days. Eleven were baptized and thirteen were re-stored. I began at Mount Zion, Ala., on August 28. I have not been in posi-tion to do as much work this summer as I usually do. My son, on whom I had to depend to look after my farm work, was called into the army last September, and this has hindered me in the work of evangelizing. But I will do my best. Pray for me.—William Behel.

Texas.

Ennis, August 19.—Large crowds at Ennis Avenue Church yesterday. Brother White spoke twice. Two cars, loaded, went to Bristol at 4 P.M. Brother Maxwell spoke, and there was one confession. The church moves on in the glorious work. Jesse P. Sewell will lecture here to-night.—Ben West.

Gober, August 20.—My meeting at Bynum has just closed. There were twenty-eight additions. Twenty-one were baptized. It was a fine meeting. I am now at this place in a good meeting. From here I go to Bowie; begin there on the fourth Sunday in August. I hope for good meetings at each place. The school at Thorp Spring promises to be good next year. Catalogues sent on request.—W. F. Ledlow.

Austin, August 23.—Recently I spent a week with the brethren at Midway, in Houston County, in a good meeting. We had large attendance and the very best interest was manifested, but no one turned to the Lord. My association with those brethren was indeed a source of pleasure, and I am sure the whole congregation was much benefited by the efforts put forth by all during the meeting. The brethren at Midway have done much in the past to build up the cause in the community. They have a comfortable house in which to worship and a large tabernacle to use for summer meetings, and they are out of debt and are prepared and ready to do in a substantial way what is needed to keep the good work going.—H. F. Oliver.

Two Kinds of Offerings.

BY J. J. VANHOUTIN. .

There was blood in Abel's offering, but none in Cain's. Blood was given to both man and beast as the life power of the flesh. God said: "It is the life of all flesh." It appears that a sacrifice for sin required one with blood in it. The first sin caused a separation from the tree of life, and death was the result. It appears like a man was required to bring an offering for sin as near his own life as could be secured. A man could not offer his own lifeblood and body and live, so he was permitted to offer the beast and its blood to atone for sin; but as the sheep or ox was inferior to the man who offered it, he was offering that which was less value in the sight of God than himself, and it could not take away sin because of its inferiority to the man who offered it, yet it was the nearest his own life of anything that could be secured. But when Jesus offered himself for all and died for man, there was a pure, holy sacrifice greater than man; and when his side was pierced and his lifeblood was shed, then and there was an atonement equal to the life of the human race, which was lost in sin and death on account of the first transgression. Jesus is our sacrificial offering, and through our obedience to God's law Christ intercedes and makes the atonement. Cain's offering might have passed for a thank offering, as they did not require blood, being only expressive of thankfulness. Cain's offering having no blood in it indicates that he did not consider himself a sinner, so only expressed his thanks to the Lord by offering him a few potatoes or turnips or something that grew in the ground! The Lord told him that "sin lieth at the door," and that if he would do good he would be accepted. As much as to say: "Your conduct is sinful, and you have not brought an atonement equal to your sins." Can it be possible that a person now will refuse to come to God with Christ as his great sacrificial offering, and in place of his obedience to the gospel will offer to the Lord a peck of potatoes to atone for his sins and justify himself in his thankfulness? Sinners in turning to God in obedience should present their bodies "a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service." Dead sacrifices are not acceptable.

Calomel Salivates and Makes You Sick

Acts like dynamite on a sluggish liver and you lose a day's work.

There is no reason why a person should take sickening, salivating calomel when a few cents buys a large bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone—a perfect substitute for calomel.

It is a pleasant, vegetable liquid, which will start your liver just as surely as calomel, but it does not make you sick and cannot salivate.

Children and grown folks can take Dodson's Liver Tone, because it is perfectly harmless.

Calomel is a dangerous drug. It is mercury and attacks your bones. Take a dose of nasty calomel to-day and you will feel weak, sick, and nauseated to-morrow. Don't lose a day's work. Take a spoonful of Dodson's Liver Tone instead and you will wake up feeling great. No more biliousness, constipation, sluggishness, headache, coated tongue, or sour stomach. Your drugglst says if you do not find Dodson's Liver Tone acts better than horrible calomel, your money is waiting for you.

Help in Temptation.

An English naval officer told a grateful story of the way he was helped and saved from dishonor in his first experience in battle. He was a midshipman, fourteen years old. The volleys of the enemy's musketry so terrified him that he almost fainted. The officer over him saw his state and came close beside him, keeping his own face toward the enemy, and held the midshipman's hand, saying in a calm, quiet, affectionate way: "Courage, my boy. You will recover in a minute or two. I was just so when I went into my first battle." The young man said afterwards that it was as if an angel had come to him and put new strength into him. The whole burden of his agony of fear was gone, and from that moment he was as brave as the oldest of the men. If the officer had dealt sternly with the midshipman, he might have driven him to cowardly failure. His kindly sympathy with him dispelled all fear, put courage into his heart, and made him brave for battle..

It is thus that Christ is touched with a feeling of our infirmity when, assailed by sudden temptation, we quail and are afraid. He comes up close beside us and says: "I understand. I met a temptation just like yours that tried me very sorely. I felt the same dread you feel. I suffered bitterly that day. I remember it. Be brave and strong, and your fear will vanish and you will be victorious." Then he takes our hand, and the thrill of his sympathy and of his strength comes into our heart, dispelling all fear.—J. R. Miller.

Colors of the Rainbow.

The colors of the rainbow vary according to their size, and the size differs according to the bigness of the raindrops. Large drops produce narrow rainbows and bright, clearly defined colors. The colors are generally as follows: When the raindrops are in the average one millimeter in diameter, we see a violet, pale blue, bluish green, green, yellow, orange, pale red, and deep red rainbow; when the drops average threetenths millimeter, the rainbow is violet, pale blue, bluish green, green, yellow, and orange. Drops of one-tenth millimeter produce the succession of a very pale violet, violet, whitish blue, whitish green, bluish vellow, and pale vellow; drops of one-twentieth millimeter (fog) give white tinted with violet, a very vivid white, a white tinted with yellow, and a very pale yellow.-Selected.

Cumberland University, Lebanon, Tenn.

On account of the preparations for the Students' Army Training Corps, in which Cumberland University hopes to share, the date of opening for the next college year has been changed to Wednesday, September 18, instead of the 11th, as announced.

Students in Training to Get Thirty Dollars a Month.

Austin, Texas, August 23.—President R. E. Vinson, of the University, Regional Director of the Committee on College Training of the War Department, this afternoon received a telegram from R. C. McLaurin, director of the committee, advising him that it had been decided to allow all young men, eighteen to twenty-one years old, who may be voluntarily inducted in the Students' Army Training Corps of the University and other educational institutions, thirty dollars a month. The students will also be provided with uniforms and equipment by the War Department. They are required, however, to pay for their own subsistence and quarters.

It is expected that the arrangement will cause a large attendance of young men of these ages at the different universities and colleges the coming session.

President Vinson's territory embraces the States of Texas, Oklahoma, Arizona, and New Mexico.

In a letter, dated August 20, Dr. Vinson says: "I have requested the Committee on Education and Special Training to establish a unit of the Students' Army Training Corps at Abilene Christian College as soon as the committee is notified that you have as many as one hundred men eighteen years old, physically fit, in your college classes. If you do not have this number, it will not be necessary for you to enroll your students in Simmons College, but the two colleges together can make application for the detail of a commandant to serve both. I shall let you know if any changes are made in this program."

If we can get the news to our brethren throughout the nation, we should have the required one hundred college students, and more. Not often does a boy get an opportunity to go to college and get thirty dollars a month and his clothes for doing so.

If we do not get the required one hundred, we have arranged with our neighbor, Simmons College, to join with them, so we can take care of all of our boys who come under the government provision, anyway.

The indications are that men above eighteen are going to be given no choice. They are going to be taken for military service. This being true, it seems to me it would not take a moment for you to decide to go to a Christian college where you can continue your education with the assurance that you will not be called into service as long as the government can get along without you. You have the privilege of choosing between continuing your education and going directly into camp. It should not take long to make that choice.

Indications are that we are going to have all the boys and girls both we can care for. If you want to get into the best quarters, you should write at once.

The new Administration Building is going right up.

Sincerely and fraternally,
Abilene, Texas. J. P. Sewell.

Another Letter from Camp.

BY E. C. FUQUA.

The war is making deep impressions these days. Christianity is passing through a trying hour. Only the "survival of the fittest" will ensue; the church, like a fruit tree, will be pruned and prepared for better fruitage in the future; those who remain Christians at all will be better Christians after the

The church at Olathe, Col., feels the sting of war keenly. Sixteen of our number are in the first draft; three or four are in the second (for August 24); and the new law, if passed, which calls for all from eighteen to forty-five, will take every member we have, save five. This will leave a congregation of females almost entirely. We number here about one hundred souls.

Application was legally made for the exemption from "combative service" of all our drafted members at Olathe. One of these has just written me from the camp. I baptized him just one year ago the day he left for service. I had patiently and thoroughly drilled him, with all the other members, until his greatest pleasure lay in serving the Lord. Feeling that his letter might be of benefit to others, I here give it:

Dear Brother Fuqua: I will drop you a line this morning to let you know how I am. This is Sunday morning, and I know at this hour you all are enjoying vourselves around the Lord's table. I wish I were with you; but I know we will all be together some day. I heard that you were sick, but I hope this finds you up again and holding some good meetings. I feel pretty good this morning, but last Sunday morning I did not know whether I would live to see an know whether I would live to see another Sunday or not. My fever was 105, and I scarcely knew I was alive. But it did not last but two days—thank . . . I am going to be . . . They called me this the Lord! transferred. morning and told me to wash my clothes, as I was to be transferred. never ask any questions; I just went to work. So I don't know where I am going. Will let you know when I get there. But I think I am going to get a good job, for I passed all the examinations; and from what one of the officers. tions; and from what one of the officers told me, I think I'll fill the bill. But if they put me to shining the officers' shoes, I'll do it with a big heart. Brother Fuqua, I am well satisfied here, but I will surely be glad when it is all over and I can go back home and shake hands with the people who have lifted me from the ditch. You don't know how good it makes me feel here among strangers when I remember that I have a Friend that will take care of me. And I am so thankful that you. Brother Fuqua, opened the way for me; and I hope that you will open the light to lots of others. Don't forget me in your prayers, for one needs lots of help in the army.

CHARLEY C. BERRY.

Being exempt from "combative" service, he did not know what "noncombative" position he would be placed in; but he shows the spirit of a true Christian in that he is willing to do anything assigned him in the "noncombative" service, even to shining shoes. I said on the day of his departure that if I had converted no one else since coming to Colorado, save this young man, I would feel that my coming here and all my sacrifices were well repaid. But I rejoice that this is just one among many whom I have rescued here.

From the day of his baptism this young brother had never failed, he stated publicly, to kneel at his bedside and ask God to help him live a noble. Christian life. He was one of the number who were always present on Lord's days, and his part was to assist in passing the loaf and the cup to the congregation. I baptized also his father, brother, two sisters, and his mother (but the latter had been baptized, as I remember). They are all faithful.

The other young brethren in the nation's service were all baptized by me, and in their letters to me they all mention as their chief desire the privilege of again meeting with us at home around the Lord's table. May God grant their heart's desire! I shudder as I think of the thousands in the service who apparently never give God and his cause one thought. Thorough training in the church at home is the only thing that can hold our men up in the army; and if they cannot stand up there, their chance for heaven is indeed short. Let us do more faithful work in the churches.

Scattering Our Shot.

BY TICE ELKINS.

If Christians would be a power in the hand of God, bring glory to him, and be effectual soul winners, let them be united in their efforts and be pure in life, so that they can convert two souls into one, three into one, three thousand into one, the whole body into one, as on the day of Pentecost, when a multitude declared themselves "of one heart and one soul." They did not split their strength nor scatter their shot. This kind of army goes forth only to conquer. Jesus saw the infinite wisdom of such a movement when he prayed "that they all may be one." When Christians scatter, divide, and subdivide, in the denominations or out of them, they are made weak and become a prey to a deadly foe.

One morning a company of soldiers looked out of their tent door in the Philippine Islands and saw a great serpent, thirty feet long, with head up three or four feet in the air, licking out his tongue, with a terrific glare in his eye, looking for his breakfast-perhaps had scented the soldiers in the tent. They ran for their rifles, and all leveled their guns on his head, were given a signal to fire, and all fired at once as one man. His head was full of bullets in a second and the monster was wriggling in death agony. These soldiers all had their minds concentrated on one thing-the destruction of their enemy.

Sin is the target. He not only wants a breakfast, but a dinner and supper, on souls, and there must be a deliberate and concentrated aim at his head, not his tail. This will reach the goal and conquer the foe. This will blow up every refuge of lies and leave the world without a den for the wolf in sheep's clothing; without a whited sepulcher; without a den of thieves; without a digressive machine crying, "Peace, peace!" without blind guides; without daubers of untempered mortar; without "chief seats in the synagogue;" without "false prophets" in sacerdotal garments executing sham battles. These great vipers Jesus talked about. These sectarian bloodhounds, peddling the tears and blood and dying groans of the Son of God for mammon as they go, would all come to the ground if the saints would quit scattering their shot, but all take deliberate aim at the serpent and fire at once.

Then we would have standing room, running room, and Babylon's music would be thrown into discord, and we would have a revival as broad as the earth, like the first century, and the sectarian hirelings would all go back to the cashier's desk or the merchant's counter, and the plowmen and fishermen would again occupy the pulpits and preach the gospel that makes all "of one heart and soul." But we can only be made one in line with the truth. It is oneness we need and must have, but we cannot sacrifice right nor truth to get it. God's will must be first and last in everything. A mixture of truth and error will never do. This will never bring oneness. But the whole truth will bring it. This will make us one with God and one with each other.

Babies at the Fair.

Babies will rival blue-ribbon cattle and poultry as the center of attraction at State and county fairs this fall. According to reports received by the Children's Bureau of the United States Department of Labor, children and the things that concern children are to be given unusual prominence among the exhibits as a result of the Children's-Year campaign for better babies. Not only that, but the rather haphazard "baby shows" of other days will be superseded at many fairs by contests that are to be virtually "well-baby clinics," conducted in full accordance with scientific principles. The utmost care will be taken to guard the children from the danger of infection and the babies will be judged by experts.

One of the fairs where the new type of baby show will be held is the Illinois Centennial State Fair, where a baby contest will be conducted under the supervision of the State Director of Public Health. Entries for this contest are said to have reached an unprecedented figure as a result of the weighing and measuring test. The little contestants will be examined by child specialists, by dentists, and by eye, ear, nose, and throat special-A consulting service under a physician experienced in children's cases will be at the command of the parents of children entered in the contest. Demonstrations of proper clothing and food for children and lectures on child care will be given daily for the benefit of mothers attending the fair, and among the exhibits will be a model baby-welfare station of the kind adapted to the needs of a small community.

The weighing and measuring of children is to be a feature of the Michigan State Fair, where, as a war measure, the "better babies" department is to be given unusual prominence this year. In connection with the test there will be demonstrations of the proper feeding of children, with the need for economy and for food conservation kept always in

The newly organized child-welfare department of the Minnesota State Board of Health is to conduct a child-welfare exhibit at the Faribault (Minn.) Fair, and an exhibit of charts illustrating the care and feeding of children will have a prominent place at the East Texas Fair. Pamphlets on child care will be distributed in connection with the baby contest at the Kansas State Fair, and the Kentucky State Fair is planning a baby pageant.

In connection with many county fairs there is to be a "patriotic play day" to show the value of recreation in building up a young America that is strong and happy in spite of the disturbing influences of war time. Tests of physical efficiency, drills, games, and children's ' together with exhibits of things "sings." made and raised by children, will go to make up the day's program.

We shall have much to learn in a future world, and I think we shall be children to begin with when we get to heaven, whatever our age when we die. and shall grow on there. My idea of heaven is to be engaged in perpetual ministry to souls in this and other worlds.-Tennyson.

God Knows Best.

There was once an aged hermit in the Egyptian desert, we are told, who thought it would be well with him if he had an olive tree near his cave. So he planted a little tree, and, thinking it might want water, he prayed to God for rain; so rain came and watered his olive tree. Then he thought that some warm sun to swell its buds would be advisable; so he prayed, and the sun shone out.

Now the nursling looked feeble, and the old man deemed it would be well for the tree if frost were to come and brace it. He prayed for frost, and hoarfrost settled that night on bar and beam. Next he believed a hot southerly wind would suit his tree, and, after prayer, the south wind blew his olive tree and-it

God gave me all I demanded for my tree as I saw fit, and yet it is dead."

"And I, brother," replied the other hermit-" I left my tree in God's hands; for he knew what it wanted better than I."-American Messenger.

"Seeing" Sound Waves.

Interesting data regarding the visibility of sound waves have recently been published in L'Astronomie in letters from men at the front. One writer tells of seeing curved lines of light, alternating with dark bands, moving swiftly across the sky while heavy cannonading was in progress. A second writer speaks of witnessing a series of arcs of light traveling across a cloud-flecked sky. Scientists attribute these phenomena to sound waves, which originate with the explosions and spread in all directions like enlarging spheres, resulting in successive and alternate belts of rarefied and compressed air. Under certain atmospheric conditions, with the sun in the proper position, portions of these spreading waves become visible in the form of moving arcs of light.-Popular Mechanics Magazine.

A Promise Is a Promise Forever.

James tells us that the Lord is "not slack concerning his promise," and that great truth about God is fittingly illustrated in the story of Abraham. His promises to him are still being redeemed. That is one great difference between God and man. Man makes a great many promises, but he rarely fulfills them all. And some are adepts at making promises without fulfilling any of them. We can never have very much respect for people whose promises are like pie crusts. Abraham Lincoln was great in his honesty. His regard for his word is shown in the conversation he had while a member of Congress, when a friend criticized him for declining to drink wine. "I mean no disrespect," answered Lincoln, "but I promised my mother only a few days before she died that I would never use any intoxicating beverage, and I consider that promise as binding to-day as it was the day I made it." "But," the friend continued, "there is a great difference between a child surrounded by a rough class of drinkers and a man in a home of refinement." "A promise is a promise forever," the great Commoner said, "and when made to a mother it is doubly binding." The nearer that we come to that ideal in the matter of making promises, the nearer we come to the character of our God.

God Is Able to Keep His Promises.

On Schubert's grave you may read this epitaph: "He gave much, but he promised more." Sometimes a man makes a promise in all good intention, but he is not able to perform it. Not true of our God. Writing on this very point and using Abraham as an example, Paul said he was "fully assured that what he had promised he was able also to perform."

Comfort Powders.

Goulburn said: "One thing I do believe, more surely than the evidence of the senses, for they may be imposed upon. . . . I do believe that God is true. I do believe that whenever God makes a promise, he will assuredly fulfill it. I do believe that if you or I come under the terms of the promise, he will fulfill it to us."

I do not believe that we think enough of the promises of God. If we did, we would trust him more and serve him better. We do not seem to catch the full meaning of Peter's words when he writes of "precious and exceeding great promises." Mr. Moody said: "At one time in Chicago, when the meetings grew a little dull, I told them we would go through the Bible and look for all the promises given us; and from that time on there was no more dull meetings. We had never realized before what promises God has made to those who believe in Jesus Christ." That would be a pleasant and profitable exercise for any Christian. In a hospital, on a stand beside an invalid, somebody placed an envelope, labeled: "Comfort powders for the weak and weary; take one as often as needed." In that envelope some one had placed a lot of little papers, and on each paper was written a promise from the word of God.

The Command Before the Promise.

We should not fail to note that God's great promise to Abraham is preceded by a command. The patriarch is commanded to get out of his country, to leave his kindred and his father's house, and to go to a land that God would show him. It required more than ordinary faith to obey this command. He was told to do something that would change his prospect, something that would disturb the conditions under which he had lived. And that is true of the gospel. To obey it requires that we shall be disturbed and changed from our old manner of life. We must put off the old man of sin to become new creatures in Christ. Let us not forget that the divine government has a disturbing element even after we are baptized. "My duty is so to live that I shall be ready to be disturbed at any moment when God pleases."

Abraham's Call and Ours.

The migration of Abraham was in response to the call of God. The call of patriotism is powerful, hesitating at no sacrifice; the call of mate for mate is dynamic, leaping all barriers; but the call of God is absolute, admitting no alternative.

The call that comes to each one of us is the call of the gospel, the call to obey the Lord Jesus Christ. It is wisely expressed in the words of his mother at the wedding feast: "Whatsoever he saith unto you, do it." After all, our hope is not far removed from that of Abraham. Our goal is to get to heaven, and the writer of the letter to the Hebrews tells us that Abraham "looked for the city which hath the foundations, whose builder and maker is God." If I do not answer the call of the gospel, then, so far as I am concerned, the promises of God are meaningless; but if I do, they are mine.

> "Mine! What rays of glory bright Now upon the promise shine! I have found the Lord my light; I am his, and he is mine."

I am truly glad to note that Brother Moore and I are agreed on some things, and especially so since those things are of such vital importance. This leaves ground to hope for still further agreement as our investigation progresses. He deposes as follows:
