1. After organization of Sunday-school classes, what should be our method of procedure? Should we select a recording secretary, one who must get up before the congregation and read off the minutes—tell what time of day we met, who read the morning lesson, who led the prayer how many were present and how many were absent, what the contribution of each class was, whether any visitors were present? Is this the scriptural way to run a Lord'sday school, or should we just appoint a man to take up collections from each class and keep up with the collections and the expenses, without all this sectarian proceeding?

What is the difference between a woman's getting up before a large assembly and proclaiming God's word and getting up before an audience and reading off the minutes of a Sunday-school?

3. Should we go through a formal dismissal of the Sunday school before we take up our Lord's-day worship? Some claim it is no part of the worship. In other words, would it be an innovation upon the Lord's-day worship? If so, then would not the Sunday-school supplies be detrimental to the upbuilding of the body of Christ? If not, why separate them?

All these things have been discussed here and we have been divided over the matter. Please give us your views upon the subject. I am perfectly willing to accept your views.

G. W. Parten.

I do not want any one to accept my "views." They are not worth anything. They are not to be made any one's guide; they are not my own guide. I cannot depend upon them and am very much afraid of them. I am as afraid of my own views as I am of the views of others. The word of God is our only guide.

The will of God itself must not be confused with methods of doing that will. This difference has been demonstrated so many times in so many different ways that we should all be able to see it. For instance: God's command is to go; we cannot obey him without going; but the method of going-whether we walk or fly, ride horseback, or use a buggy, an automobile, the train, a ship-is not prescribed. We can go in any way which is best under our circumstances. Would not a man commit a sin and be considered an egotist and simpleton should be attempt to force upon the church his views of the method of traveling and to confine all to that method? Again, God commands all repentant believers in Christ to be baptized, and tells and shows what baptism is; but he does not prescribe the method of performing the act, whether it shall be done in a pool or lake, under shelter or in the open, in running water or a tank; whether the one to be baptized shall have a handkerchief over the nose, and, if a man, shall be in his shirtsleeves and sock feet; whether the head shall be downstream or upstream; and whether the administrator shall be left-handed or right-handed. But he does prescribe that all things connected with baptism and every other service shall be done decently and in order. The method used is not disobedience to God, but the lack many times of decency and order and reverence is. Would not a man commit a sin should he try to force upon the church one particular method of performing the act of baptism? If the one to be baptized prefers a certain method-to go to a stream, to be robed in white or black, to be led into the water or to go unassisted, to have a handkerchief over the nose, etc.-1 comply most cheerfully with that method. So God commands that his gospel, "the gospel of Christ," "the gospel of peace," only Christ crucified-not something else-be preached, and that his word be taught; but he prescribes no one particular method of doing these things. He is a strife breeder and church splitter who tries to force the church to adopt only his views and prescribed methods of teaching and preaching. It is peculiar to human nature to cause trouble and division by attempting to force all to accept and work by its peculiar views or opinions and methods, and then to accuse others of the sin of destroying unity and peace. Such characters do not love and serve the Creator half so zealously as they love and serve the creature, are not half so loyal to Christ as to self.

EXAMPLES OF TEACHING AND PREACHING.

God commands parents to teach his word in the home diligently to their children. Parents can do this in whatever way, or according to whatever method, seems to them most efficient. They state Bible facts and principles at meals, in the family circle, and while at work; they relate Bible stories to the small children who cannot read, and ask questions of the older children and induce them to ask questions; they teach by reading the Bible in the family and by encouraging the children to read it; they consult maps, dictionaries, and commentators, and lead the children to do the same; and they use all other methods available. What would a man be called who should attempt to force all parents to use only his prescribed method of teaching the Bible in the home? Not long since a young boy just beginning a study in science appealed to his father for help. The lesson for the time embraced the size of the sun, the earth, and other planets, and the immense distance of the planets from the sun, etc. Having explained some of these things of such great magnitude and the power which holds all together, the father said to his son: "Get your Bible, turn to the nineteenth Psalm, and read it." He did so. The father sought to impress upon him the wonderful works and wisdom, goodness and glory of God. This is only a method of teaching the word of God, or, at least, parts of it. Again, this son told his father that the teacher of history said that people at first, or in the course of development, could communicate with one another only by signs-that is, there was a time when the race could not talk. Again the father said: "Get your Bible and read the account of man's creation." The son read that, when man stood at first in the image and in the presence of God, God talked with him and he with God; that Satan talked with Eve and Eve with Satan. The son marked the passages to show to his teacher, and asked: "What will he say when I show this to him?" When he called the attention of the teacher to these Bible statements, the teacher repeated that people at first made signs and communicated with one another in this way. The father called the son's attention to the fact that man was created in the image of God, whatever that image is, and that that image of God was not evolved from a monkey or some other lower animal. The image of God is not that of a monkey in any way whatever.

A query as we pass: Is it not far better to teach the Bible in school, and, therefore, to teach the correct and Bible account of the creation of man and of all things, than false theories? Is it not wrong not to teach the Bible account of creation and the Bible account of everything else in school, in the home, and everywhere else?

God has made the church the light of the world, the salt of the earth, "the pillar and ground of the truth," and has commanded it to preach the gospel in all the world and to teach his word to all nations, but he has prescribed no one method of teaching and preaching. Paul reproves the Hebrew Christians for not being able to teach the word of God to others, but not for using this method or that. The apostles "ceased not to teach and to preach Jesus as the Christ" "every day in the temple and at "home." (Acts 5: 42.) Here are two methods, teaching and preaching, and two places, "in the temple and at home;" and this was done "every day." This shows us that we can and must use all opportunities "every day" and all available places in order to preach the gospel and to teach the word of God. The church at Jerusalem "went about preaching the word" (Acts 8: 4), being confined to no particular method. Jesus taught in the temple when a boy both by asking and answering questions, and when his public ministry began he used the same method, Also, he discoursed unto the people. He sat on the mountain and in boats and taught, "and he stood on a level place" (Luke 6: 17) and taught; he taught in homes, on the streets, in journeys, in synagogues after the synagogue methods of teaching, by Jacob's well, in the day, through the night, in parables, by object lessons, by direct discourse, etc. So did Paul. He stood and taught and sat and taught; he taught while making tents the word of God to his fellow workmen; he preached publicly and taught from house to house, warning with tears night and day against sin; he preached on the sandy beach at Miletus and reasoned daily in the school of Tyrannus for two years; he preached on the castle stairs at Jerusalem to the mob that had beaten him and that would tear him to pieces; he preached in kings' courts, to the learned and supreme judges in the midst of Mars' Hill, and in prisons; he converted the bond servant of Philemon and sent him a Christian to his master; he preached to all on board the ship which carried him to Rome, and to the islanders where he was shipwrecked; he taught every soldier who was chained to him in Rome until his bonds in Christ were manifested "throughout the whole Prætorian guard;" he both preached and taught the kingdom of God and the things concerning Jesus Christ with boldness for two years at Rome in his own hired house; he taught orally and by epistle; and "he being dead yet speaketh."

The questions asked above involve methods of doing the will of God. No method can be used which violates the will of God. No method must be prescribed as the only right one, when God has prescribed none. In order to preserve harmony, peace, and unity, this method or that must be given up until one has been adopted upon which all can work together. In lowliness and meekness each must count others better than himself and not strive to have his own way. (Phil. 2: 1-11.) It would be well to memorize this passage, and more especially to practice it.

1. If any record is to be kept of the work and amount contributed, it is in order to appoint some one to do this. What wrong can there be in reporting simply who were present and what was done? It is contrary to the Scriptures to make a show of righteousness, to make a display of numbers, or to depend upon methods and not upon the gospel of Christ. When all have the spirit of Christ, are humble and submissive to God, and consider one another to provoke unto love and good works, all will soon settle upon the scriptural way of harmony and work. The Scriptures give the way to unity and peace.

2. A woman should not be encouraged to do anything which even has a tendency to lead her out of her sphere and away from her own God-appointed work or mission. Take the safe course. It is safe, and therefore better, to have some man read the minutes or to read publicly anything to be read.

3. "A formal dismissal" is a method of going out of one kind of work into another, or of adjourning a meeting. We meet on the first day of the week to break bread and to worship God otherwise as he directs. Before this hour or time, or afterwards, the church may and should teach the word of God and preach the gospel to all who can be reached. This can be done in the forenoon, afternoon, and night, and every day and night through the week, just as the aposties preached in the temple and taught at home every day, or when and where it is suitable for people to come together.

While the church can use suitable times, places, and methods for preaching the gospel and teaching the Bible, there is no other God-ordained institution or organization for doing this or any other work, and no other is necessary. He made the church complete and competent for every good work. Unto him must be "the glory in the church and in Christ Jesus unto all generations forever and ever. Amen." (Eph. 3: 21.) Not even an outside Sunday-school organization must have the glory. Let the church do the work, manage the finances, and give God the glory.

Leean and Delilah.

BY T. B. LARIMORE.

Leean and Delilah were sisters. I was their schoolmate, their classmate, their friend. The schoolhouse stood near the foot of a hill shaded and sheltered and screened by ash and hickory and oak. Many of the happiest, brightest, and best hours of my childhood and youth were spent with them there.

Leean was ladylike, dignified, reserved, and precise, Delilah was chubby and cheerful and jolly and gay. Both of them were confiding and faithful and good and true. In my early schooldays I was never happier than when seated between them in the schoolhouse or wandering with them among the buds and blossoms and birds upon that beautiful hill.

Leean passed away long ago-before the period of her girlhoed had otherwise ended. Her body was buried between Dunlap, the capital of Sequatchie County, and Pikeville, the capital of Bledsoe County, Sequatchie Valley, Tennessee.

Delilah lived till recently, when she died of a broken heart, people who know the sad circumstances say, only a few months ago. Such is life. Nor man nor angel may ever know the depths of her devotion to those she loved.

"O, why should the spirit of mortal be proud?"

While in "the Valley" recently, I visited Delilah's grave -at Dunlap, where she lived and died. Her grave is on the top of the hill where she, Leean, and I spent many happy hours together before we knew what sorrow is. No monument marks her grave, but memory sees her still on the very same spot where sleeps her silent dust. When I think of "The human countenance divine, Before Decay's defacing fingers Have swept the lines where beauty lingers,"

I think of Delilah-faultless in form and feature, countenance and complexion-just as she was more than threescore years ago-the peerless, perfect manifestation of that matchless beauty. In imagination I can see her now, as, with a playful toss of her head, she throws her luxuriant dark-brown curls back over her smooth, white shoulders, while her rippling laugh is sweeter far than sweetest music to those who truly love her.

As I stood by her grave, silent and sad, and thought of things I can never forget, I wondered whether, if permitted to meet and to greet that precious loved one in the sweet by and by, she could seem to me sweeter, even in heaven then, than she seemed to me here when we were children together in the sweet long ago.

If permitted to meet and greet her "over there," I shall see her and know her better then and there than I ever saw and knew her here; "for now we see through a glass, darkly; but then face to face; now I know in part; but then shall I know even as also I am known "-even as God knows us.

Let us so live, every day and every hour, that Jehovah may perpetually approve us.

Do not let your head run upon that which is not yours, but pick out some of your best circumstances and consider how eagerly you would wish for them were they not in your possession,-Marcus Aurelius.

PRICE OF MUSIC BOOKS.

On account of the great advance in materials and labor, it became absolutely necessary to make an advance in the price of all our music books. The cost of production has advanced much more than we have increased the price of books.

Below we give revised price list.

Little Children Training I

Obedlence.

The question of obedience to the laws of the home and to the community confronts each individual. Some pass it lightly by, giving it little thought and less observance. but not so the thoughtful parent or teacher to whom the care of children is intrusted.

Obedience should underlie the life of each of us; it is essential to happiness. Only as we learn to listen and obey are we fitted to take our rightful place in society. We must obey the laws of nature if we would be healthy, the laws of home and community if we would be worthy members of each group, and, above all, there must be obedience to the moral law.

Since obedience is such an important factor in each life, how can we best teach it to the child without destroying his individuality?

Many mothers admit their inability to obtain obedience, and teachers are often asked: "How do you make him obey? He does not mind me at all."

First, let us ask a few questions:

- I. Do you govern your child by love or by fear?
- 2. Are you honest with him?
- 3. Are your demands reasonable, and do you explain why you make certain requirements?
- 4. Do you talk indiscreetly before your child and admit your inability to control him?
- 5. Do you require prompt obedience, or do you tolerate disobedience and belated performance of duty?

In dealing with children, we should give the reasons for our conduct, if possible. Of course, there are some things which cannot be explained, and we should frankly admit it; there are others which we cannot explain to young children, and we should promise to do so when they are older.

A spiritual question arose one day in a Sunday-school class which was rather complex to explain to little children. The teacher left the problem and asked these questions: "How did God make the great oak tree come out of a tiny acorn? Do you see how be did it? Did he really do it?"

There was no doubt about the latter, for the children had often pulled up the finy oaks and found the acorn from which the roots and tree had sprouted. "Well," said the teacher, "there are some things we know are true, but we can't explain them, can we?"

A few Sundays later another problem arose in one of the hymns. The teacher made the best explanation possible, then added: "Some things are hard to explain, aren't they?" Smilingly one little girl looked up and remarked: "Just like the acorn and the tree; we cannot tell how God did it, but we know it is true."

Obedience is subjection to rightful control at all times and in all places. Yet many parents are satisfied with only occasional obedience. One day a mother expects inmediate response to her request, while a little later she waits indefinitely for obedience. At still another time, if she is busy at some household duty or neighborly conversation, she entirely forgets her request. What happens? The child under such conditions proceeds to decide matters for himself, and his motto becomes: "With mother, obey when it is convenient." Such a child soon demoralizes the children of the whole neighborhood,

Last, but perhaps of greatest concern to parents, is the advice to settle with disobedience at the time. Tally today's books to-day, unless some act requires a future opportunity for correction. Just here let us add one more word on this important subject. Study your child and his disposition; suft your corrections to him and to the particular act in question. A certain punishment may suit one child and work ruin in the life of another.

Perhaps the thought contained in the following verses by an unknown writer may help the mother to see her life work a little more clearly:

> I took a piece of plastic clay And fdly fashioned it one day: And as my fingers pressed It still, It moved and yielded at my will. came again when days were past; The bit of clay was hard at last; The form I gave it still it bore. And I could change that form no more:

I took a piece of living clay And gently formed it day by day, And molded with my power and art A young child's soil and yielding heart, I came again when days were gone; It was a man I looked upon; He still that early impress bore And I could change it nevermore, Self-Help.

In helping others, we also help ourselves. This truth is well illustrated by a story of two travelers in Lapland. It was a bitter, freezing day, and they were riding in a sleigh, wrapped in furs from head to foot. Notwithstanding this, they were almost freezing in the fearful cold.

By the wayside they happened upon a poor traveler, benumbed and freezing to death.

"Let us stop and help him," said one brother. "We may save his life."

"Yes, and lose our own," replied the other. "Are we not ourseives freezing in the cold? Only a fool would think of stopping on such a day as this. I would not take off my fur coat just now to save a hundred peasants."

"I am just as cold as you are," sald his brother, "but I cannot see this man freeze to death without trying to save him."

He was as good as his word, got out of the sleigh, threw off his coat, and worked over the poor man by the wayside -rubbed him with snow, got him on his feet, walked him up and down vigorously, gave him wine to drink.

The effort that he made brought warmth to his own limbs. He helped the poor man to the sleigh.

"Brother," he said, "look. The old fellow is feeling better. I have saved his life, and I believe I have saved my own, for I am as warm as a toast."

But his brother did not answer. He was sitting upright in his fur coat in the sleigh, frozen to death."-Messenger.

The Word Made Flesh.

The truth conveyed in speech before the throng, To peril is exposed: not all of these Are ready for the message; some will seize Upon the words and wrest them into wrong, The pen inscribing even poet's song Fares not much better if some hour of case Or sophistry the verse should fall to please The verse that ran like fire his veins along,

Who would not then believe the transient flesh, This strangely interwoven human mesh, Is best custodian, revealer, known! It must be so; in firsh the Word appeared, The truth of our calvation plainly shown, With all the humanness that fellowed and endeared Ida Ahlborn Weeks

BY J. C. MeQUIDDY.

D. S. Black does not understand fully the meaning of Eccles. 3: 19-22. He wishes an exegests of this passage, and also inquires to know the meaning of Rom. 14: 5.

(1) The passage in Ecclesiastes reads: "For that which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts; even one thing befalleth them; as the one dieth, so dieth the other; yea, they have all one breath; and man hath no preëminence above the beasts: for all is vanity. All go unto one place; all are of the dust, and all turn to dust again. Who knowoth the spirit of man, whether it goeth upward, and the spirit of the beast, whether it goeth downward to the earth? Wherefore I saw that there is nothing better, than that a man should rejoice in his works; for that is his portion; for who shall bring him back to see what shall be after him?" I understand that Solomon, in verses 19, 20, is dealing with the mortality of all animal bodies. Man as well as beast is animal. The beast has breath just the same as does the man. In this respect man has no preeminence over the beast. When it comes to the mortal and to the animal-that is, to the things which are connected exclusively with this world-"all is vanity." As the animal dies, so dies the man, and all alike go to one placethat is, the grave. This refers only to that which is mortal, the body, and not to the spirit. Verse 21 shows that the spirit of man is immortal, while the spirit of the beast is mortal. The spirit of man "goeth upward," while the spirit of the beast "goeth downward." Thus we see that Solomon makes an especial difference between the buman soul and that of brutes. Both have souls, but of different natures. The soul of man was made for God, and to God it shall return. The soul of man must derive its happiness from God; the soul of the beast must derive its happiness from this lower world. It is clear that Solomon did not believe that a human being and the brute had the same kind of spirit and would finally have the same lot, as some infidels and materialists claim, as is evidenced from Eccles, 12: 7, which reads: "And the dust returneth to the earth as it was, and the spirit returneth unto God who gave it."

(2) Rom. 14: 5 reads: "One man esteemeth one day above another: another esteemeth every day alike. Let each man be fully assured in his own mind." Under the new dispensation there is no command requiring Christians to keep the Jewish Sabbath and the new moons. The old covenant was ended and there was no virtue in the observance of days. Paul, in writing to the Colossians. says: "Let no man therefore judge you in meat, or in drink, or in respect of a feast day or a new moon or a Sabhath day." It was difficult to keep the early Christians from turning back to the Jewish law. Paul, in writing to the Galatians, says: "Ye observe days, and months, and seasons, and years." While this observance was not required of Christians, as its observance was not fundamental to salvation, if one believed it right to observe such days and his conscience demanded that he observe them, he could do so without sin. If another Christian dld not so understand, he should not observe them, and such fallure would not be sin. Jewish Christians who had opinions that they should observe such days, which opinions grew out of their prejudice for the old Mosaic law, could observe them without sin; but those who were better informed and who fully understood that God did not require them to keep such days under the new dispensation could not be expected to observe them in order to please the Jews. Men who have such opinions should not make them fundamental to salvation and demand of others that they accept their opinions as the law of God. Paul, writing on this subject, concludes by saying: "The faith which thou hast, have thou to thyself before God." (Rom. 14: 22.) Where there is no revelation and where God has not plainly spoken, men should not bring their opinions into the worship and force them upon others. This does not apply, however, to the things where God has spoken and things which be has clearly revealed. Whatever God has plainly commanded us to do in order to be saved, we must do it in order to please him and to be saved.

In the Gospel Advocate of October 9 I answered a query from Brother J. F. Neece relative to teaching the Bible in classes, also as to the scriptural right of having a plurality of teachers. The brother is not satisfied with the answer and presses his question as follows: "My question was: Is it in harmony with the teaching of the New Testament for the church to come together on Lord's day, divide up into two or more classes, with a plurality of teachers, some of whom are women, to teach the Bible? Did Christ and his apostles practice this system of teaching? If so, please give chapter and verse."

It is a fact that when Christ came to the earth on a mission of mercy and love the word of God was taught to children in classes. It was also taught to more advanced people in classes in connection with the synagogue worship. One authority says that there were thirteen synagogues and schools in Tiberias. Another authority says there were four hundred and sixty schools in Jerusalem. and still another says there were four hundred and eighty. This clearly shows that when Christ came class teaching was prevalent. The great commission was given to the apostles and not to any local church. These apostles were Jews and had been trained and taught in the synagogue schools. To them Christ said: "Go ye therefore, and make disciples of all the nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I commanded you: and lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." (Matt. 28; 19, 20.) Here is authority for teaching the word of God by the class system. The prevailing system of teaching at that time was the class system. Christ gave no method of teaching to the apostles. but simply commanded them to teach. When Christ gives the command to teach, he gives us permission to use any effective method of teaching. As the class system was prevalent when the command was given, Christ expected the apostles to use the method of teaching under which they had been trained—the class system. The truth is, no man can teach the word of God without teaching a class. The class may be one, it may be twenty-five, or it may be more. The Jews required that there must be one teacher for every twenty-five children. For a number above forty an assistant was required, and for a greater number two assistants were required. Unless our brother can show that the apostles were not expected to use their common sense and to teach people as they had been taught to do, and unless he can show, in addition to this, that Christ had bound some method of teaching, to the exclusion of other methods, he should accept this passage as authority for class teaching. We have Aquila and Priscilla teaching the word of the Lord more accurately to Apoilos. This is authority for a woman teaching. There is a distinct authority in the word of God for teaching by classes, but no chapter and verse that says meet at 11 o'clock A.M., and not one that says break bread in the morning; yet, clearly, my critic does both, and neglects to teach the word of God to a class, the method that was in vogne when the Savior commanded the apostles to teach without telling them how to teach. It is easy to strain out gnats and swallow camels.

以 | AT HOME AND ABROAD | 贝

John E. Dunn has bought a country home near Dallas, Texas. His new address is Route 2, Irving, Texas.

Born, on November 1, 1919, to Mr. and Mrs. David Thompson, of Murray, Ky., a son—James Forest Thompson.

The "Serinon" Number of the Gospel Advocate will appear next week. It will be interesting and instructive to all.

O childlike simplicity! How often in a few words dost thou open up to us a paradise of innocence and pure piety! —Refnick.

From Leslie G. Thomas, Flint, Mich., November 11: "We had two splendid services here on Lord's day. Several new ones present. Our interest still grows."

From A. A. Bunner, Waverly, W. Va., November 13: "Two more excellent persons united with the faithful at Naish Spring at our Wednesday-evening services. The work here moves grandly and gloriously onward."

Cards have been received announcing the approaching nuptials of Miss Sarah Elizabeth Gary to Granville Lipscomb Cayce. The marriage will take place on November 25 at Church Hill, Ky. The Gospel Advocate extends congratulations.

From H. F. Pendergrass, Akron, Ohio, November 10: "1 have just recently returned from France and would be glad to locate with some congregation to preach for them. Any one desiring my services may address me at 78 Elizabeth Street, Akron, Ohio."

From John R. Williams, Hornbeak, Tenn., November 11: "The special numbers of the Gospel Advocate are certainly making a hit. I hear them spoken of wherever I go. I hope to see the Advocate increase in circulation, that it may do more good to more people."

From John A. Hudson, Oklahoma City, Okla., November 11: "Last Lord's day we had two fine services at the Tenth and Francis Streets Church. There was one addition at the morning services. After the evening services, because our baptistery had started a leak and was unavailable for use, we baptized the young man who made the confession the Sunday before at the beautiful Belle Isle Park."

From J. B. Nelson, Dallas, Texas, November 14: "I am glad to report that my health is improving, and I hope to be able to be about the Lord's work soon. I have suffered a great deal the past two months. The places where I had appointments have been good to me. They have sent me a check as though I had filled the appointment. Such goodness makes a poor preacher appreciate such brethren more. Others have been thoughtful and kind to me. I have filled only one appointment in two months."

From J. P. Lowrey, Senatobia, Miss., November 10: "I am covered up with work, have more than I can do, teaching all the week and preaching every Sunday, and having calls from all parts of the State in destitute places for meetings. I have banded my resignation to my school board, that I may be in position to answer more important calls. I feel that the need is too great for me to be tied down in a public school. After December 12 I will be in position to go into the field wherever called."

Eorthcoming Debate.—I am sending notice of a debate between A. J. Sloan and myself. This debate will be held at Siloam Church, two miles east of Westmoreland, Tenm, beginning on December 2, at ten o'clock A.M. Mr. Sloan is one of the Missionary Baptists' "big guns" (in stature). We are expecting a good time, and we ask all who can to attend. The debate will last four days—two days to each proposition. All wishing to attend may write W. C. Stewart, Charles Toaley, or S. P. Jent, all of Westmoreland, and conveyances will be furnished by these brethren.—F. J. Rogers.

From T. B. Larimore: "At the end of a pleasant trip westward we reached Berkeley, Cal., 2115B Durant Avenue, Wednesday, November 5. While our home is in Berkeley, my work is in San Francisco, just across the bay. Our meeting place is Richmond Hall, corner of Fourth Avenue and Clement Street, where we meet at 10:30 for Sunday school, at 11 for preaching and communion, every Sunday morning, and for preaching at 8 each Sunday evening. I shall greatly appreciate any instruction or suggestion relative to brethren or friends who may be, or who may expect to be, in San Francisco or any one of the four 'bay cities'—the cities just across the bay from San Francisco—Alameda, Oakland, Berkeley, Richmond,"

From Felix G. Owen, Santa Rosa, Cal., November 15: "On November 2 there was an all-day meeting at Santa Rosa-three sermons, basket dinner, Sunday school, and lots of singing. Just two years ago we first met in our new house. The house will seat about two hundred people. We have, besides the main auditorium, two class rooms and a semidivision off from the main room, making good accommodations for four classes. There are also a baptistery, two dressing rooms and two toilets, a fuel room and a hot-air furnace. The house, finished and furnished complete, lot and all, cost five thousand dollars. At this time there remains only about one hundred and fifty dollars to be raised. We have good reasons to believe this will be paid in a short while. I am a stanch believer in a nice, good, convenient house and a good location. About ten years ago Earnest C. Love started the church in Santa Rosa. About nine years ago I came up from Los Angeles to work with Brother Love in publishing the Pacific Tidings (now the Pacific Christian) and to work with the church here. At that time there were about a dozen faithful members, but true and zealous. We have met in private houses and in a small rented hall; but we are now in our own new house. At the Sunday-morning and Sunday-evening services the main room is about filled. Our services are: Sundays, Sunday school at 10 A.M., general assembly at 11 A.M., communion at 12 M., and preaching at 7:30 P.M. Wednesday, Bible study and prayer meeting at 7:30 P.M. Friday, young people's meeting at 7:30 P.M. This latter meeting is conducted similar to an old-fashioned prayer meeting. In this meeting the young men and boys take about all the parts, the readings, talks, prayer, and the dismissing. In this meeting we make a special point to induce the boys to form the habit of order, system, efficiency, and preparedness in the services of the church. For each of these meetings a boy is notified beforehand that he is expected to conduct the meeting. This does not mean that he must necessarily read, make a talk, offer a prayer, or anything of that kind. His duty is to arrange, in ample time beforehand, and notify each one that is to take a part; then he conducts the meeting, or acts as what, in a business meeting, would be called the 'chairman.' We have a half-hour song practice before each evening service, or three times a week. At these times we study the songs theoretically and try to learn to sing them well. 'Whatever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy 'Whatsoever ye do, do it heartily, as unto the Lord.' California is a mission field, and not a very encouraging one. I believe Brother McCaleb said it was a more discouraging field than Japan. If you come to California to be interested in and to work with the church, you must learn that the conditions are very different from conditions back in dear old Tennessee and all the East and South."

A Great Lesson.

There are a great many people who are learning these days the very wonderful lesson that somewhere at the secret heart of sacrifice and self-giving there are springs of happiness and delight that are not to be found anywhere else in all God's great universe. Not a few who have heretofore thought of satisfaction chiefly in terms of possession, or attainment, or use, have suddealy stumbled across the truth that there is a better and more real way of life. The doing without things for one's self in order to have to give to others has been found to be not an irksome task, but a real joy and satisfaction. In toll and labor for others, or for a great cause, many have found a delight and a pleasure of quite a new and vital sort when compared with anything that mere amusement ever yielded. In fact, thousands who have never really seen it before have come to understand in a most personal and real way that what the great Master said about saving one's life by losing it is not a bristling paradox; but, on the contrary, a great and fundamental and beneficent law of Hife.-Christian Guardian.

We prepare ourselves for sudden deeds by the reiterated choice of good or evil which gradually determine character.-George Eliot.

ABOUT RHEUMATISM

What Thousands Have Found Gives Relief From This Painful Trouble.

Rhenmatism is a constitutional disease, manifesting itself in local aches pains, inflamed joints and stiff muscles. It cannot be cured by local or external applications. It must have constitutional treatment.

Take a course of the great bloodpurifying and tonic medicine, Hood's Sarsaparilla, which corrects the acid condition of the blood on which rheumatism depends, and gives permanent relief. This medicine combines, with excellent alteratives and tonics, what is generally conceded to be the most effective agent in the treatment of this disease.

If a eathartic or laxative is needed take Hood's Pills. Purely vegetable.

The majority of mothers nowadays overdo, there are so many demands upon their time and strength; the result is invariably a weakened, run-down, nervous condition with headaches, backache, irritability and depression—and soon more serious ailments develon. It is at such periods in life that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will restore a normal healthy condition, as did to Mrs. Worthline.

Public Health Campaign.

(Printed by request of the Tennessee Antituberculosis Association.)

Aiming at the development of the community spirit through the establishment of public health nurses and the enrolling of the children of the State in an organization to fight for better health of the community is one of the big features of the next year's program of the Tennessee Antituberculosis Association. At the present time the society has four nurses who are combing the States with exhibits, and who are not only canvassing small cities and towns, but are also mounting on horseback and penetrating into the little mountain towns with their message of health.

Figures just completed by the State Board of Health show that four thousand five hundred and fifty-one people died from tuberculosis in Tennessee in 1918. Rigid investigation of health conditions in various cities have shown that for every person who dies, eight are left seriously infected with the scourge, so that in Tennessee more than thirty-five thousand are sick.

When Governor Roberts was controlled with this report and the program of the Tennessee Antituberculosis Association, he accepted the chairmanship of the December drive of the society for funds to carry on this work during the coming year. Before thus aiding the society, Governor Roberts made sure that the State Board of Health, Charities, and Education indorsed its work; and finding that they did, he threw himself into this movement to make Tennessee the healthiest State in the Union.

At present there are too few sanatoria where the disease can be treated. Traveling medical clinics are a necessity. There are not enough open-air schools where infected children can be segregated and cured. More public health nurses are required to arouse the communities to the peril of this plague. And since the program of the Tennessee Antituberculosis Association includes all these things, we are glad to indorse it and urge public-minded citizens to work in this campaign, not only because it insures the betterment of their neighbors' health, but it guarantees good health to themselves. This is one of the first real local movements this State has had for many months, and it must succeed.

The Ford Car.

BY H. C. SHOULDERS.

A few weeks ago I made an appeal for money to buy a Ford car to be used exclusively for the Potter Orphan Home, at Bowling Green, Ky. I have received a few dollars in answer to the call, and am sure I will receive several more yet. The car is greatly needed for the Home. The car without the starter at present costs $566: with the starter, $644. Brethren, this is a small amount to be raised. Think of the Red Cross and other human in stitutions raising thousands of dollars. Will we let the human institutions put us to shame? There will be enough men, women, boys, and girls that will read this to give one dollar each to purchase the machine without a burden on any. Now, won't you be one of six hundred and forty-four to send one dollar for the Ford car? Please place your dollar in a letter and mail it to me, Box 194, Sellersburg, Ind. I appeal to every one who reads this to have an interest in this ear for the Home. Do not let this interfere with any other mission work you may plan. Every dollar will be acknowledged in this paper.

50 Eggs a Day

"Before using 'More Eggs' tonic, I was getting only 13 eggs a day and now get 50." writes Mrs. Myrils Icc. of Boston, Ky.

Any poultry raiser can easily double his profile by doubling the egg production of his hens. "More Eggs" is a scientific tonic that revitalizes the flock and makes the hens lay all the time. "More Eggs will double the production of eggs. Poultry raisers everywhere are making big profile by giving their hens." More Eggs." The results of a few cents worth will amaze you Send $1 to E. J. Reefer, the poultry expert, 2255 Reefer Building, Kansas City, Mc., and he will send you a season's supply of "More Eggs." A million-dollar bank guarantees if you are not absolutely satisfied, your dollar will be returned on request. So there is no risk. Send a dollar to-day. Strickland-Hurd Debate.

BY W. CURTIS PORTER.

This debate was held at Mangrum. Ark. Elder J. E. Hurd represented the "Millennial Dawn," or what is known as the "Russellite" church. Brother F. M. Strickland represented the church of Christ. Elder Hurd did considerable "blowing" when he came into the community, declaring that he had been trying for thirty years to get a "Campbellite" to debate with him. When Brother Strickland signed propositions with him, Hurd said he was the bravest man he had seen in thirty years. From that time till the debate began he kept spreading to the four winds that he would "clean up" Brother Strickland in a few minutes; that Brother Strickland would not be able to make but one speech. But when the debate began, the tune changed. Brother Strickland so completely covered him up with scriptural arguments that there was no possible chance of his ever coming out.

The debate continued two sessions. Before the time for the third session arrived, Elder Hurd sent word that If we would so announce it, he would quit the debate where it was and promise never to have another. The announcement was made and the debate closed abroptly. It was a great victory for the truth.

Those desiring a preacher for a meeting or a debate will do well to secure Brother Strickland's services.

Why Tighten Up on Missions?

BY W. W. FREEMAN.

A brother who has been forwarding funds to our Japan work writes: There has been a tightening up now because of the high cost of living, the strikes, etc. A brother who has been giving two dollars a month for years says he may have to let up." Why should Christians only, disciples of Christ, "tighten up," when the Baptists, Methodists, and other denominationalists are "loosening up" and are giving millions? This is not very encouraging, in view of the fact that our missionaries on the field advise us to increase the allowance of our native help thirty per cent to enable them to meet the increased cost of living. It is estimated that there has been fifty per cent raise in prices in Japan since the first of this year-this on top of the increase made last year. So, brethren, let us loosen up rather than tighten up. But this matter has to do with regular support of the work, and we feel confident that the faithful will see to it that this need is regularly supplied.

Another item which should be taken care of promptly is the matter of reimbursing the Koishikawa lot fund and then completing it. Only one offering came in this week, and though it is small, we appreciate it, and the Lord will bless the giver. In Christian thought a gift is not valued so much by the amount given as by the sacrifice made.

Previously reported, $302; Nannie R. Hobbs, Tennessee, $1.50. $303.56. Amount of reimbursement, $800. Balance to be raised, $496.50.

Let us hope that the next report will show larger gains than this week indicates. What church or brother will give one hundred dollars or fifty dollars? We shall feel greatly disappointed, if we cannot make a better showing in the next report. Send your gifts to either W. W. Freeman, Abilene, Texas, or to C. G. Vincent, 1366 North Broadway, Knoxville, Tenn., stating the purpose of your offering.

Where Drugs Fail.

Many chronic diseases fail to respond to drug treatment, even in the hands of the best physicians, whereas acute diseases usually respond readily. When a disease has become chronic, drugs often seem to do as much harm as they do good, for the system rebels against them. It is just this class of cases which derive the greatest benefit from Shivar Mineral Water. If you suffer from chronic dyspepsia, indigestion, sick headache, rheumatism, kidney or liver disease, uric-acid polsoning, or other curable conditions due to impure blood, do not hesitate to accept Mr. Shivar's liberal offer as printed below. His records show that only two in a hundred, on the average, have reported "no beneficial results. This is a wonderful record from a truly wonderful spring. Simply sign the following letter:

The Findings of the Japanese Commission in America.

BY E. C. FUQUA.

There is food for much thought in the findings of the special commission recently sent to America by Japan " to study the influence of Christianity on the lives of the American people." This commission consisted of Intelligent men, and men, too, who were favorable to Christianity as a prospective religion for the people of Japan, to supplant to a large degree the Buddhism now prevalent there. After an extended and careful study of Christianity's Influence upon the lives of our people, the commission returned and through the Japanese government published the following findings: "While education, commerce, and industry have been developed to a wonderful degree, there is little evidence that the Christian religion is regarded as important by most of the people."

They might have truthfully sald, "by most of the churches," for these represent Christianity in America and throughout the world; and it is an appalling fact that, in most modern churches, "there is little evidence that the Christian religion is regarded as important." Have not these modern churches preached, sung, debated, and otherwise argued that "the church does not save people;" that there "are as good people out of the church as in it;" that " one can be a Christlan as well out of the church as in it?" The Japanese. indeed, find these churches with "a form of godliness, but having denied the power thereof." (2 Tim, 3: 5.) They spend large sums of money and exert much energy to create and maintain churches, then openly preach that men may be saved "as well without as within " these churches! They "belong to the church," but not because it is essential to anything relating to salvation. They "go to church," not for spiritual edification, without which they would suffer, but for entertainment; not to more perfectly learn the will of the Lord, but to hear a sensational topic discussed, Their preachers are "called," not to teach and lead them to "fear God, and keep his commandments," but to tickle their ears and satisfy their denominational pride. They meet on the first day of the week, not "to break bread" as taught by the apostles (Acts 26: 7), but to listen to a short essay on some worldly topic and to be entertained by a musical "offering" or "program" devised to dazzle the eye and soothe the ear of the multitude. Indeed, they "serve not our Lord Christ, but their own belly." (Rom. 16: 18.) They profess to "need" this so-called religious service, precisely as it is claimed the tired business man "needs" the theater-for fleshly gratification and satisfaction purely; for they all admit that such religious service is not essential to salvation.

This is the character of the data from which the Japanese commission formed their conclusion as to the importance of the Christian religion in America, Such churches being, as they always will be, in the majority in this country, their estimation of Chrisflanity, as thus exhibited, formed the sole evidence which the Japanese gathered and subsequently published through their government. However, the Japanese are right in the conclusion, from such evidence as the above, that "there is little evidence that the Christian religion is regarded as important" by such people. But these do not form America; and as to the matter of pure Christianity, these do not offer an argument for or against it. With them, Christianity is a plaything, a pastime, a social occasion. To ascertain the effects of Christian-Ity upon any people, one must go to those people who take the Bible and the church seriously, and whose everyday effort is to please God according to the letter as well as the spirit of his word; who belong to the church because all who do not belong to it are " without God, and without hope in the world;" who meet upon the first day of the week to break bread because Christ thus taught and his early disciples thus practiced; who worship God because they need to do so, and because their souls cannot be satisfied without the worship of him; in short, who are Christians because they "seek for glory and honor and incorruption " in eternal life. (Rom. 2: 7.) These, and these only, are the true barometer to Christianity's influence upon human beings, whether Americans or Afri-

But the Japanese saw and understood "Christianity" only as it is reflected through sectarianism: they did not come in contact with any of those thousands who "walk by faith, not by sight," (2 Cor. 5: 7.) They were shown the church only as a nonessential institution, not as the "body of Christ" and the "house of God" as the New Testament shows It to be. This fact places their "findings" in an altogether different light than they would otherwise be in. Inserting "sectarianism" for "Christianity," we have the commission's estimation of the former solely, for that was all they saw while in America. The light of true Christianity was wholly obscured to the Japanese vision by the prominence of sectarianism in America. See, now, what effect the latter has had upon the Japanese mind! And shall true Christianity rest under the false representation that American sectarianism has given it? Is sectarianism willing to see Christianity rest under such a representation? No one can claim that the two are the same thing; for, by sectarianism's own admission, Christianity is essential to man's salvation, while sectarianism is not

The Literary Digest points out that Japan's findings in America will materially affect Christianity's growth in Japan; that whereas Japan has been kindly disposed toward Christianity as a "good religion" for that country, Japan will now turn more zealously toward Buddhism as being equal to, If not better than, Christianity, and as being already a sort of state religion which patriotism would require them to maintain. If this supposition materializes, American sectarianism will bear its sin for the continued idolatry of Japan. What atonement can it offer for this sin? Thus is Christ mallgned and his religion blasphemed through the influence of sectarianism. Brethren, are we fighting this foe with bold preaching of the truth in love? Or are we treating it as a friend with common rights on the earth?

Re Yourself.

There are no two things in the world that are exactly altke. The leaves on the trees of the forest and the blades of grass in the meadow are all different one from another. The clouds are constantly changing, and the sea is never the same.

This variety makes the world beautiful and fulfills its purpose. If all things were the same, there would be a painful monotony, and nothing would prosper.

There is as great variety among human beings as among the objects of nature. No two persons are alike. Their abilities vary. This is so for a very wise purpose. There are differ-

The Romantic Story of Southland's Favorite Shoe, EzWear

Some five years ago, a prominent citizes of South Carolina, visiting New York on important business, chanced to meet the maker of a shoe built on new and unusual lines; an enthusiastic admirer of its mos listinctive features, case and comfort, had suggested the name EzWear; it was promptly adopted. The business man from the South, knowing how welcome such a thoe would be in his part of the country, urged that its remarkable qualities, in cluding not only comfort, but style, durability and economy, be made known there. That this has been effectively done is proven by the enormous demand that has sprung up in the South for LzWear shoes. It is said that its sale there during the last twelve months has increased fully three hundred per cent. The distributor, Mr. hundred per cent. The distributor, Mr. J. R. AHINK of the strong, healthy men and women you know-people who are prominent and who are doing things worth while and you will find that they usually possess remarkable force, vim and energy—the kind that simply brim over when the blood is filled with iron. Iron is red-blood food-it helps put strength and energy into the veins of men and roses into the checks of women. Nuxated Iron by enriching the blood and creating new blood cells strengthens the nerves, rebuilds the weakened tissues and helps to instill renewed energy and endurance into the whole system.

If people would only keep their blood filled with strength-giving iron by taking Nuxated from when they feel weak, run-down and nervous, they might readily build up their red-blood corpuseles and quickly become stronger and healthier in every way. Unlike the older inorganic products it is easly assimilated, does not injure the teeth, make them black nor upset the stomach. Nuxated from often increases the strongth and endurance of weak, delicate people in two weeks' time. It is dispensed by all good druggists.

How the Bible Was Written.

The Bible is really a collection of sixty-six books, thirty-nine being in the Old Testament and twenty-seven in the New Testament. The first five books of the Bible were written by Moses about fifteen hundred years before Christ. The last book-Revelation-was written by the apostle John about one hundred years after Christ came. Thus there are about sixteen hundred years between the first and the last books of the Bible. The Old Testament was written in Hebrew: the New Testament, in Greek. five main divisions of the Old Testament are Law, History, Poetry, Major Prophets, Minor Prophets. The five divisions of the New Testament are Gospels, History, Letters of Paul, General Letters, Revelation, Each book and each division has its place, and none can be neglected if we are to know completely God's will.

The Bible was written by human hands, in human language, for human beings to read and understand. But the authors did not record their own thoughts as other writers in other books. What they wrote was put into their minds by the Holy Spirit. Paul. writing to Timothy, a young preacher, tells him the importance of continuing in the things he has learned from a child out of the "holy scriptures, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus." How does he say "all scripture" is given? (2 Tim, 3: 16.) The word "inspire" means literally "to breathe into." God did not, in every case, utter the words which the writer merely copied, but he " breathed into" the mind and heart of the writer that which he wanted him to say, and the writer wrote according to his own style and personality. Thus the Bible is a book of great variety, reflecting the personality of many men, but is none the less the very word of God. each part fitting into every other part without mistake or contradiction. though some of the writers lived hundreds of years apart. It is, therefore, a divine book, from which nothing can be taken away and nothing added -Baptist Magazine.

Thanksgiving Appeal.

BY MRS. JENNIE CLARKE

It may be that some postponed contributing to the Belle Haven Orphans' Home until our treasury is about empty. If such is the case, I sincerely trust they may be convinced that this is a mistaken view of mission work. The responsibility is so great upon those who have charge of an orphanage that they cannot afford to be without a good fund on hand. It would not be an honor to the church to have a Home without a reserve fund. We have sixty children in the Home now, and, owing to the high cost of food and clothing for this number, we are reducing fast the sum we hoped to save to apply on the erection of a substantial brick school building and dormitory in the future.

I suggest and urge that all who are able will express their gratitude for their many blessings by sending offerings for the benefit of Belle Haven. Will not a number blessed with an abundance of life's comforts arrange an endowment fund for this Home, so that, when I am called from my earthly labors, this Home, which has been the object of my hope and prayers for over twenty years, may be left to the care of the church of Christ with substantial modern equipment, and that, through your faithful cooperation, my epitaph may be truthfully inscribed with that assuring acknowledgment that Christ made to many: "She hath done what she could." Send all contributions to Mrs. Jennie Clarke, Belle Haven Orphans' Home, Luling, Texas.

America's "Reconstruction."

She is not ruined, that she needs to be rebuilt; she is giant among the nations now. She is not built on a wrong plan, so that she needs taking to pieces and putting together after a better fashlon; the old Declaration of Independence is all right, and the Constitution, and our "traditions." Nor is she left without a soul, without vision. Thank God for the voice which has uttered the past two years what is her true principle and her deep faith, the President whose words have gone out to the ends of the earth, and have prevailed. No, she stands as she has always stood-perhaps more than she has ever stood-for that Law of which Alfred Noyes sings, that Law whose outraged majesty "hath put down the mighty from their seat, and hath exalted the humble and meek." The "reconstruction" she needs is that all her sons cease putting self before her welfare and begin bringing themselves to practice, in peace as in war, what their citizenship professes; and most of all, those whose wealth and position, whose gifts of leadership, will tell the most, "Noblesse oblige,"-W. F. Faber.

Wonderful Egg Producer

Any poultry raiser can easily double his profits by doubling the egg production of his hens. A scientific tonic has been discovered that revitalizes the flock and makes hens work all the time. The tonic is called " More Eggs." Give your hens a few cents worth of "More Eggs," and you will be amazed and delighted with results. A dollar's worth of "More Eggs" will double this year's production of eggs; so if you wish to try this great profit maker, write E. J. Raefer, poultry expert, 3258 Reefer Building, Kansas City, Mo., who will send you a season's supply of "More Eggs" tonic for $1 (prepaid). So confident is Mr. Reefer of the results that a million-dollar bank guarantees if you are not absolutely satisfied, your dollar will be returned on request and the tonic costs you nothing. Send a dollar to-day. Profit by the experience of a man who has made a fortune out of poultry.

Give Us a King. BY S. WHITFIELD.

It is a good thing to copy after others in doing good. When others are doing right, it is commendable on our part when we try to imitate them. This is allowing others to make our lives better before God. We are sure to be influenced by others, but we should be very careful that it is for better and not for worse. To do this, we must let the few influence us, and not the many, for the masses are in the road to destruction.

In things of this life, people in general want to go with the crowd. What others have, they want to have: the way that others dress, they want to dress; the way that others live, they want to live. They are determined to do this regardless of the cost, shame, or evil it leads to. People are wrecked financially, physically, and spiritually, but still they go on in their reckless way to keep up with the times,

It is not so had to desire to keep up with the crowds in temporal things; but when it comes to spiritual things, It is a great mistake to want things like our religious neighbors have. A determination to go in this way is sure to lead to ruln.

In spiritual things we should not wish anything newer than God's way, and this is better than anything that all the wisdom and brains of this world can devise. As high as heaven is above the earth, so are God's ways higher and better than man's ways. The foolishness of God is wiser than the greatest wisdom of men. Let us, therefore, abide in God's way, for it is the only way that is for our good and that will lead us to our eternal home

God's way to rule and guide the children of Israel was by judges; but when Samuel was old, his sons, who were judges, walked not in the ways of God, but turned aside after lucre, took bribes, and perverted Judgment. Then all the elders of Israel came to Samuel and asked him for a king like the nations around them had.

It has been a common sin among men, when some one did wrong, to put the blame on God's way and say that it would not work. Israel should have corrected the evils in the sons of Samuel and continued on in God's way by having judges. It matters not what comes or goes, we should never think of turning away from the old paths or the good way of the Lord. His way has always worked and alwaya will.

Samuel was displeased when they asked for a king; but God assured him that the people had not rejected him. but that they had rejected God. This shows us that when we turn away from God's way and set up ways of our own, we turn away from God himself. Just to the extent that we reject. God, he will reject us.

Samuel was to tell them the manner of a king they would have and how he would afflict them, which Samuel did; but they said that they would have a king, that they might be like all the nations.

When God saw that they were determined to have a king, he told Samuel to let them have one; and this teaches us that when we know God's way, if we are determined to go in our own way, God will let us, However, we may always be sure that it will bring us a curse and not a blessing.

A desire to be like other people is one of the great dangers that is before us. Let us be careful test we reject the Lord. There are only a few people in this world that can stand for the crowd and popular current to be against them. But few think seriously what they ought to do or what Jesus would have them do.

"Thus saith the Lord, Stand ye in the ways, and see, and ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein, and ye shall find rest for your souls. But they said, We will not walk therein." (Jer. 6: 16.) "And they made a calf in those days, and offered sacrifice unto the idol, and rejoiced in the works of their own hands." (Acts 7: 41.) "Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God. He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son." (2 John 9.)

Every Druggist in U. S. Instructed to Refund Price While You Wait at Counter If Relief Does Not Come Within Two Minutes.

Delightful Taste, Immediate Relief, Quick Warm-Up.

The sensation of the year in the drug trade is Aspironal, the two-minute cold and cough reliever, authoritatively guaranteed by the laboratories; tested, approved and most enthusiastically endorsed by the highest authorities, and proclaimed by the common people as ten times as quick and effective as whiskey, rock and rye, or any other cold and cough remedy they have ever tried.

All drug stores are now supplied with the wonderful new elixir, so all you have to do to get rid of that cold is to step into the nearest drug store, hand the clerk half a dollar for a bottle of Aspironal and tell him to serve you two teaspoonfuls with four teaspoonfuls of water in a glass. With your watch in your hand, take the drink at one swallow and call for your money back in two minutes if you cannot feel your cold fading away like a dream within the time limit. Don't be bashful, for all druggists invite you and expect you to try it. Everybody's doing it.

When your cold or cough is relieved, take the remainder of the bottle home to your wife and babies, for Aspironal is by far the safest and most effective, the easiest to take and the most agreeable cold and cough remedy for infants and children.—Adv.)

Arkansas.

Jonesboro, November 10.—I closed at Sedalla, Mo., on October 12, with one addition. Some trouble, but I believe they will be at peace from now on. I went to Jerusalem, near Dexter, Mo., on October 18. The meeting was not continued because of bad roads. I promised to return in September, 1920. Meeting called off for first two weeks of November at Huffman, Ark., because of untoward weather conditions; so I came to Jonesboro instead, which meeting I will continue till November 14. I shall go from here to Belle Plaine, Kan., to hold a meeting, November 16-30, assisted by Charles F. Hardin as leader of song service. One addition at Jonesboro to date. The people are treating menicely, which is always the case on my visits here.—M. S. Mason.

Colorado.

Dolores, November 8.-Just a word to all who may be interested in the work of the Lord in this part of the Brother A. W. Arnold, of this place, wrote me to come and help them carry the Lord's work along in this part of Colorado, which call I answered, arriving here last Monday. There are only five or six brethren here, and they are not able alone to carry the work along; so I am asking the brethren through our papers to help them carry the burden. They are going the very limit here, that the Master's kingdom may be established in these parts. Brethren, help them. It was convenient for me to come here, as the doctors had recommended a higher climate for both wife and me. Wife is still in California, but I hope to have her with me in a very short time.-W. G. Oklahoma.

Checotah, November 8.—I am now at Checotah in a meeting. I began here on November 3 and will continue until November 13. Brother Frank Grammar, of Bonham, Texas, is leading the songs. We hope to establish a loyal congregation before we close.—R. H. Johnson.

Tennessee.

Evensville, November 9.—An enjoyable meeting was held recently at a little schoolhouse, called "Byrd's Chapel." Brother J. C. Mosley did the preaching, being assisted by Brother Slate Marsh in prayer and reading. The meeting continued about a week. Six persons made the good confession and were baptized, one was received on former baptism, and the brethren were brought closer together. There is a debate in prospect between myself and J. H. Hyomei Will Relleve You or Nothing to Pay.

When you make up your mind to get rid of disgusting Catarrh, follow this advice:

Go to your druggist; ask him for a HYOMER Outht (pronounce it High-o-me). This outhi cousists of a bottle of HYOMER (liquid), a hard rubber pocket hinaler, a medicino dropper, and full instructions for use. Pour a few drops into the ruhaier, and breathe it a few minutes each day, according to directions.

HYOMEI relieves Catarrh because it reaches every nook, corper, and crevice of the membrane of the nose, throat, and bronchial tubes. Stomach dosing, sprays, douches, and ointoents don't hill the germs because they don't get where the germs are. As the publisher of this paper knows, if you are not safisfied with Hyomei in cases of Catarrh and colds of the head Catarrhai Coughs, Bronchial Catarrh, Spasmodic Croup, Catarrhai Laryngitts or Hay Fever, your money will be cheerfully refunded. Franklin, November 6.-On the first Sunday in October the church at Philadelphia, in Wilson County, began a meeting, with T. H. Burton, formerly of Lynchburg, Tenn., but now of Union, S. C., doing the preaching. The meeting closed on Saturday night before the third Lord's day. Brother-Burton began a meeting next day at Bethlehem, in the same county, which closed (entirely too soon) on the night of the fourth Lord's day, with a large crowd. Brother Burton was at one time a Methodist, but he seems to be thoroughly converted from the errors of that church, while yet having the kindest of feeling for those yet in the darkness of denominationalism. He is alive in the work. He is now located in Union, S. C., in a mission field. There were two baptisms in the first of these meetings and three at the latter place. It was my privilege and great pleasure to assist in the singing at both places. The brethren and sisters at each place surely know how to show kindness to those they have with them in their work. I would be glad to have the opportunity of being

The church at Dixon Springs, in Smith County, began their meeting on the second Lord's day in September and closed it on the night of the fourth Lord's day. Brother J. H. Lawson, of Sherman, Texas, did the preaching. Of the preaching I can but say, "Well done." It is certainly helpful to listen to such plain, forceful presentation of the teaching of the Bible both to the church and to the world. Brother Lawson seems to be perfectly satisfied with "it is writ-Only one obeyed the gospel, but I trust the seed sown will bring forth fruit in the future, both in the church and in the world. The Simple Life.

The simple life-which many with more or less intelligence and success are trying to live now as never before-has its advantages as well as its deprivations. For one thing, it saves from the worry of wealth. Uneasy lies the head that must plan how to run the mill or fill the payroll. A very rich man once remarked: "I worked like a slave till I was forty to make a fortune, and I have been watching it like a detective ever since for my lodging, food, and clothes." Another well-off man said when asked his business: "I happen to have a little money, and my business is to see that nobody gets it away from me." Are such men really "well off?" "Riches bring cares" is an old proverb. It states only half the case, for riches also bring many delights and effect many deliverances. Yet a man who is rich simply because he has for years dodged every contribution box, denied every charitable appeal, or meanly taken advantage of his less able fellows does not deserve to have a good time, and, whatever else he may take pleasure in, cannot enjoy himself. The simple life does not demand that a man be either rich or poor, for it is a thing of the spirit rather than of bank accounts; but in order to live it, one must have himself in hand and make his great need to be the presence and favor of God. -Zion's Herald.

If you have done something that is good, forget it, and do something better.-Lavater.

If you would gain mankind, the best way is to appear to love them; and the best way of appearing to love them is to love them in reality.-J. Betham.

Grandmother kept her hair beautifully darkened, glossy, and attractive with a brew of Sage Tea and Sulphur. Whenever her hair took on that dull, faded, or streaked appearance, this simple mixture was applied with wonderful effect. By asking at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," you will get a large bottle of this old-time recipe, improved by the addition of other ingredients, all read to use, at very little cost. This simple mixture can be depended upon to restore natural color and beauty to the hair.

A well-known downtown druggist says everybody uses Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound new because it darkens so naturally and evenly that nobody can tell it has been applied; it is so easy to use, too. You simply dampen a comb or soft brush and draw it through your hair, taking one strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears; after another application or two, it is restored to its natural color and looks glossy, soft, and beautiful.

Fidelity of the Individual.

A good text for this subject is: "And they stood every man in his place round about the camp." (Judg. 7: 21.) In this chapter is recorded the conflict between Gideon and the hosts of the Midianites. When out of twenty-two thousand men who had been called to arms to fight against the Midianites ten thousand had been selected, it was found that this number was really too many to accomplish the work, and a test was made whereby this large number was reduced to three hundred men. These three hundred were equipped for the battle, instructions given them how to fight, and when the decisive moment arrived it. was said: "They stood every man in his place round about the camp." It is an interesting story. Read it.

From this we learn that every man has a place. No one can escape the responsibility. Our places in life may differ; but if these places are for the good of the human family, they are necessary and should be respected. The man who works the public highway, digs the ditches, or works in the mine, has his place, and it is as useful and honorable as that of the man who fills his place in the halls of Congress or on the judge's bench. But in this day of need, both physical and spiritual, there is no place for the drone in society or the slacker in the church.

The text says that every man was in his place—"round about the camp." The camp to the Jew in old Bible times was a sacred place. It was the seat of national, home, and religious life. First the camp, then the tabernacle, and then the temple. But whether camp, tabernacle, or temple, they were alike sacred. These places were the heart of the Jewish people, their hope, and their life. Here is where their children were taught of God, where the law was expounded, and where God appeared to them.

What the camp was to the Jew, the church of God should be to us. It is where God has promised to meet with his people. Jesus said: "Where two or three are gathered together in my name, I am in the midst," In the church every one has his place. Are we always in our place "round about The camp? " Too often members say: "O, there's no place in the church for mo!" "I can't give anything," "I can't sing." "I can't pray." And they will add "I can't preach," etc. Jesus spoke the parable of the talents to show that there is a place in his kingdom for every magnitude of man in the world. If we cannot sing, nor pray, nor give, nor preach, we can be found in our place round about the church, unless sick; and, as of old, when we are in our places round about the camp, God will deliver our enemies into our hands.-M. F. Harmon, in Alabama Christian.

Facts of Most Importance.

It ought to be observed respecting truths in general, that those are always most valuable which are most historical-that is, which tell us most about the past and future states of the object to which they belong. In a tree, for instance, it is more Important to give the appearance of energy and elasticity in the limbs, which is indicative of growth and life, than any particular character of leaf or texture of bough. It is more important that we should feel that the uppermost sprays are creeping higher and higher into the sky, and be impressed with the current of life and motion which is animating every fiber. than that we should know the exact pitch of relief with which those fibers are thrown out against the sky. For the first truths tell us tales about the tree, about what it has been and will be, while the last are characteristic of it only in its present state, and are in no way talkative about themselves Talkative facts are always more interesting and more important than silent ones. So, again, the lines in a crag which mark its stratification. and how it has been washed and rounded by water or twisted and drawn out in fire, are more important. because they tell more than the stains of the lichens, which change year by year, and the accidental fissures of front or decomposition; not but that both of these are historical, but historical in a less distinct manner, and for shorter periols.-Ruskin

How Cold Affects Sound.

A close observer describes two phenomena of nature not easily explained: First, that natural sounds are very different in the colder than in the warmer months of the year; second, that waters have different tints during the colder and warmer months.

A number of examples occur to prove the first phenomenon. Who has not noticed the contrast in the noise of the wind in different seasons when It blows around the corner of the house-in summer what a soft, mellow tone it has, and in winter what a harsh, rough whistle?

Then, again, let us stroll along the banks of a stream in May, June, or July, and we will observe that the water will then make a gentle, babbling sound; while in November or winter it will, with not great volume, make a hoarse, gurgling noise.

Still again, if we ramble in the woods during late spring or early summer, we cannot but notice with what a softness and mildness the wind has been blowing through the tops of the trees; on the other hand, what a rearing it makes in cold weather.

Perhaps the trees being with or without follage may cause some difterence, but it will be observed in May, before the leaves are out to any extent, there is even then a marked difference between that time and December. Often we have heard it along telegraph wires during the summer and winter, and have noted the contrast.-St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

IF BACK HURTS USE SALTS FOR KIDNEYS

Eat Less Meat If Kidneys Feel Like Lead or Bladder Bothers

Most folks forget that the kidneys, like the bowels, get sluggish and clogged and need a flushing occasionally, else we have backache and dull misery in the kidney region, severe headaches, rheumatic twinges, torpid liver, acid stomach, sleeplessness, and all sorts of bladder disorders.

You simply must keep your kidneys active and clean; and the moment you feel an ache or pain in the kidney region get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good drug store here, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days, and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice combined with lithia, and is harmless to flush clogged kidneys and stimulates them to normal activity. It also neutralizes the acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is harmless, inexpensive, makes a delightful effervescent lithiawater drink which everybody should take now and then to keep their kldneys clean, thus avoiding serious com plications.

A well-known local druggist says he sells lots of Jad Salts to folks who believe in overcoming kidney trouble while it is only trouble.

OBITUARIES

Shaffer.

Jerry Shaffer departed this life on October 27, 1919, at his home on Spring Creek, after a painful pro-tracted illness. He met death with true Christian patience and resigna-tion. He is survived by his wife and a large family of children and grandchildren. The esteem in which he was held in the community in which he lived and by his brethren in the church was manifested by the many friends who attended his funeral at the Houser graveyard. He was a highly respected citizen and a consecrated Christian. He obeyed the gos-pel fourteen years ago and became a member of the church of Christ. He loved the church, the pure word of God, his home, and friends. "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord."

THOMAS C. KING.

Thornton.

On Sunday, October 12, 1919, near Kingston Springs, Tenn., the remains of Lawrence H. Thornton were committed, by loving hands, to the earth. Brother Thornton was born on September 19, 1891, and departed this life on October 11, 1919. A large part of his short life of a little over twentyeight years was spent in God's service. He obeyed the gospel early in life under the preaching of Brother Has-sell. Those who knew him stated that he lived a consecrated, Christian life. He would frequently talk freely and frankly with his people about the necessity of spiritual preparation. We rejoice that by the life he lived he left the bereaved ones a hope that, now his suffering is over, he has gone to that haven of rest where suffering is no more. J. LEONARD JACKSON.

Rhodes.

Ernest D. Rhodes, son of Brother and Sister W. J. Rhodes, of Dunn, Tenn., died on Sunday night, Novem-ber 2, 1919, aged thirty-five years and a few months. Ernest was an excel-lent young man, and had been a member of the church of Christ for twenty years. He was in the West with very bright prospects for the future until about four years ago, when his health got bad and he came home. He was a patient sufferer, nearly always cheer-He always met you with a smile of welcome. It was a great satisfaction to his parents that they could have him at home during his last days, and to them we extend our heartfelt sympathy. He was buried at Leoma on Tuesday, after funeral services conducted by the writer. A large crowd was in attendance.

THOMAS C. KING.

Williams.

On October 29, 1919, Brother Munroe Williams, of Nolensville, Tenn. was summoned from the walks of men. Breakfast was enjoyed around his family table. He went to the field as usual for his day's work. When the time came for the noonday meal, he did not come home. After waiting for some time, his family started in search for him. Upon reaching the field, they found that he had fallen dead at his work. The funeral was conducted the following day in the presence of one of the largest concourses of sympathizing friends ever assembled in the neighborhood. It was the writer's pleasure to be present when he confessed his faith in Christ. in a meeting conducted by Brother S. M. Jones at Rock Spring Brother Williams lived faithfully the Christian life. He will be missed in the church and in the home, but we trust it is his gain. May his family be led to enulate his worthy example.

J. LEOVARD JACKSON.

Shelby.

Enos Kelton Shelby was born on March 5, 1854, and died on August 29, 1919. He was born and reared to manhood in Hickman County, Tenn. He obeyed the gospel at the age of nine-teen years. This example of giving the better and most active part of his life to the cause of the Master should be inspiring to bis children and relatives. He married three times. There were children only by his first wife. He married Miss Nannie C. Gregory To this union were born in 1873. four children-two girls and two boys. One of the boys died in infancy. Birdle Kirk, Mrs. Wille Harris, and George Shelby are the living. They were all at his bedside for weeks before he died. He had been in feeble health for two years. During this time he looked to George for help and advice. He and his first wife reared an orphan boy from two years of age-Badah Shelby. Badah was about ten years old when the wife and mother dled. George then raised Badah, who is still in his home. He loved Mr. is still in his home. He loved Mr. Shelby and was always regarded as one of the family. Brother Shelby married Sister Etta Birchett in November, 1905. She was a widow with two children. He was a father to them till March 9, 1912, when God called her home. In February, 1913, he married Sister Annie Frazier, a widow with six children. All were almost grown, except the two youngest; but they all loved and respected him as a father. Annie was so faithful to him all through his long and painful Illness. His children will always love and care for her because she was so devoted to him. He leaves two brothers and one sister. He always went to church when able and lived a Christian life until death. On August 30 we car-ried him to Lamalsamac, in Gibson County, where he and his first wife and children went to church. There, in the presence of many relatives and friends, Brother W. S. Long spoke words of comfort to the sorrowing ones, after which his body was laid to rest beside his first wife in the Lamaisamac cemetery, there to await the final resurrection, when we hope to meet him, together with all the redeemed in Christ. The Elements of Effective Preaching

C. M. Pullias Discusses the Main Idea.

The results of preaching are not always the same. Sometimes they were converted and obeyed the gospel; at other times they killed the preacher, as in the case of Stephen; and yet the preaching was just as loyal in one case as the other, and just as effectual. The effect of preaching is to convict men of sin, of righteousness, and of the judgment to come. (John 16: 7, 8.) What men do when they have been convicted is no fault, therefore, of the preaching. Some believe, some do not; some accept it, others do not; some yield, and others resist. What would be usually meant by "effectual preaching" is the preaching that holds audiences and gets what the world calls "converts." This might not be, however, what God regards as "effectual preaching." The main idea in preaching is to get God's truth before people. The idea of being a popular preacher or drawing an audience never enters into it. Of course, my subject implies preaching the gospel, which is the power of God to save. This must be done at all hazards. It must be remembered that the gospel is the savor of life unto life or of death unto death. Se, then, when the gospel is preached, it is effectual whether it saves or condemns, draws or drives. What Noah did to save himself and family condemned the world. So it was just as effectual in one case as the other. Let those remember, then, who think we must have something to "draw audiences" or to "hold the young people," that the gospel is God's power; and if the plain preaching of the plain gospel does not get such results, we are not justifiable in using

The preacher must be considered, for many times the truth is evil spoken of by reason of his lascivious doing. His life should be clean and free from worldliness. He should be a man who denies himself and one who crucifies "the flesh with the affections and lusts." He should live a life of self-control and as free as possible from worldly entanglements, conventionalities, and convivialities, lest he be embarrassed or intimidated in preaching the gospel. He must mortify his members which are upon the earth, since he has put off the old man with his deeds and has put on the new man; also, he must put off anger, wrath, malice, blasphemy, fifthy communication out of his mouth (Col. 3: 5-14), and avoid the works of the flesh (Gal. 5: 19, 20), that his good may not be evil spoken of (Rom. 14: 16) and that no man may "despise" him (Tit. 2: 15) and the opposition may "have no evil thing to say of him (Tit. 2: 8). It is a shame that the gospel's power is often neutralized by the improper conduct of the preacher. The preacher who is not careful about his obligations and does not meet promptly his debts, or who is a card player and who visits shows and theaters and otherwise engages in worldliness, is not the best man to handle the gospel with the most telling effect. Besides, he must not only be free from these things, but he must know the truth and be faithful in its presentation. There are quite a number of preachers who know the truth and have preached it for years, but they have lost much of their influence by the position they took with reference to Christians' going to war. So to-day their articles and preaching does not have near the effect they once did. A truth-crowned man is great, but the one who is loyal to the truth is greater. Egotism, vanity, and worldliness-let it not be once named among the preachers, and the preaching will soon be more effectual. Let the preachers also be clothed with the armor of light in all humility, and then the gospel's light will shine with undimmed splendor and its power will soon be felt everywhere.

"Preach the word" is the solemn charge of the peerless Paul to Timothy. No other preaching can be effectual in God's way of thinking. The early Christians relied upon nothing else for success. Without facilities of mail, travel, communication, and the like, and without money and real estate, they carried the gospel everywhere, and it was so effectual that all the world was under its influence more or less. But as a lady said recently, "We must spike the Bible; it is too dry;" and so we have until there is not much left but the "spike," and we are a failure.

C. M. Stubblefield Outlines the Destructive and the Constructive.

"Effective" means "result getting." Effective preaching, therefore, means the preaching which produces resuits. This would seem to imply that there is a preaching which does not produce results; but that is not true. Though preaching may be classified as destructive and constructive. It can never be properly divided into effective and noneffective. All preaching produces results some kind of results. The trite saying, "A cause for every effect," and its converse, is as true in religion as elsewhere. No Nineveh was ever brought to repentance without some Jonah and his preaching; no Israel was ever brought out of bondage without some Moses to lead the way; no true worship of God was ever restored without some Elijah to defy Basl and demonstrate the power of God; and never was there an apostasy of that nation but was caused, remotely at least, by preaching and teaching. And I lay it down as a postulate never questioned by my brethren, that there never was a Christian made, a church of Christ established and maintained, in the absence of preachers and preaching. If this be true, and it is, whether other Christians shall be made and the ones that now are be edified, and whether other churches shall be established and the ones now among us merely exist, or progress, or digress, or die, is being determined by the preaching we are now doing and shall do. What a pity it is, then, that some preaching is not noneffective!

By "destructive preaching" I mean the preaching which causes a church to disintegrate, then to degenerate, and, finally, having failed of the purpose for which it has its being, either pass into dense nothingness or be swallowed up in apostasy. This kind of preaching may be classified as positive and vapid. Both kinds tend to destroy.

Destructive preaching of the positive character seldom, if ever, does any real harm. It raises its hand high to heaven and declaims against God, Christ, the Holy Spirit, and the church. Though most Christians and churches become awe-stricken at the thought of such a harangue, its general effect is an increased attendance at church services, a warmer fellowship among members, an impetus to all activities, and a forward movement all along the line. Such has been my observation.

Not so, however, with vapld preaching. As its name signifies, it "passes off or flies by." In other words, it misses the mark. Is the question of the union and unity of all God's people under consideration? Creeds and confessions of faith are never mentioned as a possible barrier to such unity, lest some cold, narrow, bigoted sectarian who happens to be present become offended and not come back any more. Is it a question about contending for the faith? Then "there is too much controversy in our papers and from our pulpits." Should Christians play cards, dance, and otherwise fritter their time and influence away? It cannot say with certainty.

Though such preaching may not be the primal or immediate cause of digression and apostasy in a church, that will be its ultimate effect. The immediate result of such is the relapsing by the church into a sort of innocuous desuctude, in which it becomes fertile soil, plowed and harrowed, for a generous crop of heresies. Having been nourished only by such wrinkled, wilted, and insipid food. the church becomes so completely gutted, spiritually, that it is unable to state clearly whether it is simply and only a church of Christ or another denomination under the elusive title of "we as a people." Vapid preaching is neither cold nor hot, neither for nor against. It understands "both the flat and round systems, and will teach whichever the patrons want." And when the spirit of digression manifests itself, both the church and preacher are carried before it into the maeistrom,

Constructive preaching-and what shall I say of it? "And the word of God increased; and the number of the disciples multiplied in Jerusalem greatly; and a great company of the priests became obedient unto the faith." And so all through Acts of Apostles. What produced such results? Constructive preaching-the only kind they didthe only kind worth doing. With them, there was no mincing of words, no hesitating, no pussy-footing, no mollycoddle business, no compromise, no halting between opinions. Being set for the defense and propagation of the gospel, they proclaimed it in words all could understand; they walked by faith, preached what they were told to preach, taking no thought of what man could or would do. Is John before Herod? "It is not lawful for thee to have her" is his solemn pronouncement. Are Peter and others haled before the high priest and warned to teach no more in this name? "We must obey God rather than men" is their response. Is Paul before Felix, on trial for his life? "He reasoned with him of righteousness, of temperance, and of judgment to come." The majestic power of apostolic Christianity was found in the unworldliness of its men, its methods, and its message. The early preachers deliberately rejected the world's standards and chose to follow a course which, to their sophisticated critics, foreordained their mission to failure. The grand headquarters of the movement were the places of prayer. The scenes of their ministry were the walks of the common people. Without prestige of rank or power of riches, free from the cumbrance of man-made machinery, they went their way preaching the everlasting gospel, trusting in divine favor, and turning the world upside down by the message of the cross. They kept the faith, they followed their Leader,

When God put it into the hearts of our fathers to restore the church to the world according to the divine model, their souls were thrilled with the thought, and they rejoiced at such a privilege. East and west, north and south, on foot, on horseback, in any way possible, they went, calling upon men to turn away from factions and parties in religion and unite upon the Bible, and that alone, as the only possible basis for such unity. They believed precisely and only what the Scriptures teach; they practiced what, and only what, they enjoin; and they rejected everything they do not sanction. Sinners were converted to Christ, and Christlans of the age to the Christianity of the New Testament. Sectarian churches, and in some instances whole associations of churches, deliberately laid aside all denominational peculiarities and became churches of Christ only. They handed down to us the most priceless heritage ever bequeathed to uninspired men, and from their mansions in the skies they bid us to "carry on." If we are to prove faithful to this trust, we "must preach the word." Ours is a work of restoration; hence, we must preach a restoration message. I cannot close without this gem from F. G. Allen, preached forty years ago:

Unless we have a distinctive plea, we have no right to dist. The day we become like the denominations around us, that day ends our right to exist as a distinct religious people. If we have a distinct plea, in that consists I believe that our distinctive principles are our strength. made less prominent in our pulpits now than formerly. I do not mean that our preachers should be always on what is called "first principles." Very far from it. But I do mean that all our members should be deeply indoctrinated in the things that distinguish us from other religious peoples. The people should understand why they occupy the position they do. The better this is understood, the more will it be appreciated, and the more firm and consistent will be the Christian life. When people are led to believe that sectarianism is about as good as New Testament Christianty, their influence for the cause we plead is positively hurtful. Whenever we begin to curry favor with the sects and fawn upon them for recognition, we are certain to say but little about a plea that lays the ax at the root of the whole denominational tree.

"Ranting Scares the Children," Declares F. B. Srygley.

Effective preaching is preaching which has an effect. Preaching with a bad effect, in a sense, would be effective preaching; but I suppose what is meant is how to preach and what to preach so as to have a good effect, or the effect that God intended that preaching should have. On what to preach, I know of no passage which is clearer than Jon. 3: 2: "Arise, go unto Nineveh, that great city, and preach unto it the preaching that I bid thee." We are to preach or declare the gospel just as the apostles preached it, whatever may be the effect; and if we preach it correctly, we will not be held responsible for the effect. The Lord intended that the gospel as preached by the apostles should have two effects-one upon those who accept it and the other upon those who reject It. It will save the one and condemn the other. "For we are unto God a sweet savor of Christ, in them that are saved, and in them that perish: to the one we are the savor of death unto death: and to the other the savor of life unto life." (2 Cor. 2: 15, 16.) So God's word will not fail. It will have the effect he intended it to have—that is, it will save or it will condemn. "So shall my word be that goeth forth out of my mouth: it shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it." (Isa. 55: 11.) We are not to be held responsible for the effect of our preaching, but for the manner and matter of it, or for what we ourselves do. The effect or result of our conduct is in the hands of God.

The effect to be desired in preaching is to save the lost and to edify and comfort the saved. The lost in sin can be saved only by preaching the gospel, which is God's power to save. "It pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe." (1 Cor. 1: 21.) Not by foolish preaching-if this were true, the world would have been saved long ago-but "by the foolishness of preaching." "For the preaching of the cross is to them that perish foolishness; but unto us which are saved it is the power of God," (1 Cor. 1; 18.) The thing to preach is the gospel, the cross of Christ, the good news of salvation through the death, burial, and resurrection of Christ, with the commands which he gives to those who believe in him. Then, too, preaching should be to edify, to build up and strengthen the saved. "Let all things be done unto edifying." The weary, sorrowful, sad Christian should be comforted by preaching. "For ye may all prophesy one by one, that all may learn, and all may be comforted." (1 Cor. 14: 31.)

Ranting, holloing, bawling, may scare the children or sometimes frighten the feeble-minded, but it is unnecessary to a good effect. A good, round voice that can be heard well by all the audience is all that is necessary. More than this is hard on both the preacher and the audience. If you were to meet a man on the street and ask him an important question, however important the subject might be, and he were to double up his fist, get red in the face, with his neck veins swollen to their highest tension, and should begin to answer you, beating and pawing the air, as some preachers do in the pulpit, you would both likely be arrested as a public nulsance. Still, some of us have to be punished with this relic of a past age every time we go to hear the gospel preached. I speak for myself as an occasional hearer. If it is for my sake, you can leave it off. Earnestness and zeal I admire in a preacher, but bawling and beating the air is unnecessary to save, to edlfy, or to comfort.

Some simple rules of elecution are no doubt good, but It is not best to be handicapped by them. An easy, natural style and manner is better in the pulpit. It is not necessary to change your voice when you go into the pulpit. Use that same natural, everyday voice which your friends are acquainted with at other times, Accuracy in grammatical arrangement is better, if it can be had without slavery or too much effort. The preacher needs to be easy and natural and to remember that there are many to be saved besides two or three school-teachers or ex-teachers who may be in the audience.

Effective preaching, or the right kind of preaching, can be summed up in the language of an inspired man: "But speaking the truth in love, may grow up into him in all things, which is the head, even Christ." (Eph. 4: 15.) To my way of thinking, there are three words in this quotation which should be emphasized: Speaking, not bawling; the truth; and in love. The truth is the thing to preach, and to speak it in love is the scriptural way to preach it. I know of no other right way to do It.

Proper Criticism of Sermons.

BY H. H. ADAMSON.

Sermons and preachers are so closely allied that it is difficult to criticize the sermon without criticizing the man behind the sermon; and quite frequently the preacher deserves the criticism rather than the sermon.

I have been trying to preach only a little more than a quarter of a century, but in these few years I think my few listeners have "kept back nothing that was profitable unto me" in the way of criticism. In fact, some people have been quite extravagant in "administering to my necessities," But as I now review my efforts and the efforts of the people to help me, I frankly concede that much of the criticism, whether directed at me or at my sermons, has been just. Some, of course, had been unkind and unjust. However, I think the unjust critic has been really more helpful to me than the just one.

Some one has said, to escape criticism, "say nothing, do nothing, be nothing." The preacher who escapes criticism is a nonentity. The preacher who will not tolerate criticism is an ignoramus. The preacher who does not at times deserve criticism is an "imaginary."

As long as preachers are imperfect, just that long will their sermons be imperfect; but may the good Lord help all of us to pray: Lord, make me big enough and strong enough and good enough to profit by the criticism of my friends, and sanctity the unjust and unkind criticism of my enemies to my good.

"Now concerning" criticism "I have no commandment of the Lord: yet I give my judgment, as one that hath obtained mercy," that both brethren and sisters (for in this case the sister is not under boudage) should be encouraged to offer (speak out) their criticisms. "But lie not one to another, brethren," but go directly to the preacher and at the proper time and in the proper spirit tell him all that is in your heart. In the first place, this | forward them to the proper commissioners.

will do you good; for you can never, never be happy as long as this poison is pent up in your system. By all means purge it out. In the second place, it will do the preacher good. First, it will make him happy to see you happy; and, secondly, if he is a true man, he will take an inventory of his "stock in trade" and make a cleaning up where necessity requires.

Excuse me if I wander a little, for I notice my caption limits me to "proper" criticism of sermons; but, when criticisms are so common, how can they be proper? As I am not able to answer my own question, I am taking the liberty to write on common criticisms as though they were proper.

In concluding this article, I beg to say that the man whose sermons are not criticized will soon reach his goal. The best preachers and the best sermons have been developed in a large measure by a consciousness that their former efforts have not been well taken by the people. If I were writing for the hypercritical, I would pause here to explain that our efforts might please men and not please the Lord; but as I am just writing for common mortals, I'll proceed. The petted preacher soon becomes satisfied with his work, and satisfaction in the preparation and delivery of sermons spells "exit usefulness." The great things of life are all behind the satisfied preacher, and to him life is a diminishing quantity.

In all seriousness, therefore, I would urge every lover of the Lord to talk freely and frankly to the preachers of the word about anything and everything that will make them bigger, better, stronger men, and that will enable them to proclaim with wisdom and with power the gospel of our risen Lord

Be critics, my brethren, and not faultfinders.

We have received the following notes of acknowledgment:

With deepest gratitude we acknowledge receipt of your most wonderful contribution of five hundred dollars from the readers of the Gospel Advocate which we have received to-day (November 11)

Thanking you again for your generous support and for all past favors, we are. Gratefully yours,

POLISH VICTIMS' RELIEF FUND, (Mrs.) ETHEL SMUCKER, Assistant Secretary.

And from the Near East Relief Committee:

We take pleasure in attaching hereto official receipt for the five hundred dollars from the readers of the Gospel Advocate forwarded by you. We have had our publicity director write you concerning the matters referred to in your letter.

Our work of relief goes on with undiminished vigor. The war is not over in the Near East. Conditions are much the same as they were before the armistice, except where they are worse. Many little children have but a single garment to protect them from the bitter cold of the high plateaus in the mountain country. Thousands of refugees perished last winter. There cannot help but be a frightful loss of life this winter, unless we act quickly. We would hesitate to even try and relieve such frightful conditions but for the continued support of large-hearted people like yourself. Sincerely yours, C. P. BURGESS,

In sending contributions, be sure and state whether they are intended for the Home Orphans' Fund, the Armenian and Syrian Fund, or the Poland Fund. Make all checks and money orders payable to A. B. Lipscomb, who will

THE AUDIENCE | W

T. Q. Martin Explains Its Powers.

The admonition to render "honor to whom honor" is due is not always observed; for I am sure that the speaker often receives congratulations upon having delivered a good discourse, when the success of the discourse was due more to the audience than to himself.

Many a time have I gone into the pulpit tired, nervous, and almost exhausted, and yet in a little while I have forgotten that I was tired and found myself speaking with an enthusiasm that was quite a surprise to me. Now, whence the source of this enthusiasm? From the audience, Brethren, more power comes from the pulpit by way of the pew than any one who is not a public speaker can realize.

It must be conceded that no speaker has a right to come unprepared before the audience, and I would not be guilty of penning a line that would encourage a lack of thorough preparation upon the part of the speaker; but a sermon, no matter how well prepared, will "fall flat" if delivered before a nonattentive audience. I have sometimes safd—and I do not think I exaggerated—that I would rather have my subject suggested after entering the pulpit, with the privilege of speaking to an attentive and responsive audience, than to have a talk pretty well prepared and yet have to make that talk to an inattentive, unresponsive audience.

Please bear in mind that I am trying to emphasize the part which the audience plays in the effectiveness of a sermon. The preparation is the preacher's part, and he sins against God and his audience if he is not both careful and prayerful in his preparation of each sermon. The audience cannot assist him in the preparation of a sermon, but it can assist him in the delivery of it.

Audiences are made up of individuals; hence, I must deal with the individual in my brief suggestions. And I would suggest, in the first place, that, inasmuch as the preaching of God's word has to do with both time and eternity, and is, therefore, such a serious matter, every Christian coming to the place appointed to hear the word of God proclaimed should come breathing a prayer for the speaker, that he may deliver the message with power, and for himself and every other person in the audience, that each one may receive a lesson instructive and edifying, to the end that God may be glorified, the church edified, and the world brought to Christ. Let a godly man go into the pulpit praying, and let him be assured that every Christian in the audience is praying for him, and we will have some truly great preaching with really great results. A prayerful audience, then, will greatly help to make an effective Attentiveness upon the part of the audience, as has already been suggested, is a great factor in making a sermon effective. Beloved, does not common politeness forbid our being inattentive when one is trying to tell us something important? Would you not feel offended, my brother or sister, if in private conversation you were trying to relate something, and the person or persons to whom you were trying to talk would not even look at you, but gaze into space or look down at the floor and seem wholly indifferent to your effort? Some thought at this point will to some extent help us to grasp this vital matter from the preacher's standpoint. The real man or woman can cultivate himself or herself to the point of listening attentively to a speaker who is not naturally fluent or attractive in his delivery. If a man of God has a message for my soul, I ought to think more of the message than I think of the messenger We have been exalting the messenger rather than the message of late years, I fear, and, as a consequence, the fluent speaker has been in great demand, while many a godly servant of the Master has not been appreciated. We can remedy this evil and return to old-time effective preaching, but the pew must assist the pulpit in this matter.

First, then, let the congregations stand together as one man against giving encouragement to any preacher, no matter how eloquent or attractive he may be in speech, unless his life harmonize with his profession and unless he preach God's word. Secondly, when an audience assembles to hear the word proclaimed, let each one composing the audience—that is, if he be a Christian—come breathing a prayer for the blessings of God upon that meeting. Thirdly, let each one in the audience pay respectful attention to the speaker. This each one can do with a little effort. Fourthly, let each Christian in the audience listen responsively—that is, let him lend the speaker his heart as well as his ears.

Let us have godly preachers, and praying, attentive, responsive audiences, and we will start a revival which will not end with time, but the influence of which will outlast the fleeting years.

God grant that all of us may see that the audience has much to do with the effectiveness of the sermon on any given occasion.

J. P. Lowrey Remembers "Aunt Oth."

No preacher, it matters not what his ability may be, can preach an effective sermon without the help of his audience. Many splendid gospel sermons have fallen at the feet of the preacher because of the lack of interest upon the part of even one or two in the audience who should have been an inspiration to the speaker. Upon one occasion during a protracted meeting when the writer was making a special effort in a sermon to interest and lead to the Christ some young people in the audlence, just as he was about to offer an invitation he noticed that the gentle snoring of an elder had attracted their attention, whereupen the speaker said: "Let Brother and listen to me." The sleeping brother calmly opened his eyes and said: "Brother Lowrey, I am willing to leave the subject with you; I know that it is perfectly safe in your hands." As a result, no one obeyed the gospel at that service. That brother destroyed the effects of the sermon instead of making it effective. An expression of approval upon his face would not only have helped the preacher to preach, but might have encouraged others to accept the truth.

I am sure that no preacher ever preached many times at Old Thyatira, Miss., without having stamped indelibly upon his memory two faces that have for many years been conspicuous in that congregation—the faces of "Aunt Oth" Cathey and old Sister Gillespie. To look into their furrowed faces and watch the smiles of approval that play like radiant rays of sunlight over them when the story of Jesus and his love is being told has made more effective many sermons. I often wonder who will fill their places that must soon be made vacant.

The reason why Billy Sunday attracts so much attention and what he says has such a wonderful effect upon people is that he first gets possession of his audience, then whatever he says has effect whether it is the truth or not—the audience makes it effective.

The Best Sermon I Ever Heard.

BY F. W. SMITH.

It has been my pleasure to hear some of the most noted preachers of the age and to read the sermons of the socalled "greatest preachers" known to history. I have read sermons by Beecher, Talmage, Spurgeon, Brooks, Abbott, and many others of the denominational world equally celebrated, and have read and heard sermons by the ablest and most noted preachers in the church of Christ; but, of all the sermons read or heard from uninspired men, I regard a sermon preached by Brother David Lipscomb on "The Blood of Christ" as the greatest of them all. While it was delivered in the simplest style, devoid of any effort at oratory or rhetorical embellishments, it was profound in thought, and showed that the speaker had an insight into the merits and efficacy of the blood of Christ over and beyond any man that had ever dealt with the subject in so far as known to me. That one sermon revealed to me the word of God in a light in which I had never beheld it before, enabling me to grasp certain principles underlying the great scheme of man's redemption, without which much of the Bible intended for man's guidance cannot be appreciated. The text from which that great sermon was preached was this: "But if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus his Son cleanseth us from all sin." (1 John 2: 7.) In the unfolding and development of the riches of this wonderful passage, our brother began with the fall of man, tracing the ruin wrought by sin through all the ages, noting its blighting and withering curse, not only upon the life and character of mankind, but upon the face of nature and the animal world as well. He took the first bleeding victim laid upon the altar as an atonement for sin under the typical order of things, tracing its typical significance across the ages through patriarchal and Jewish dispensations to the tragic scenes of Calvary, where the great Antitype, the Lamb of God, hung upon the cross dying, shedding his precious blood for the sins of a condemned race. The first application of the lesson was under this head:

MAN'S APPROACH TO GOD.

It was clearly and forcibly demonstrated that in no age of the world since the fall of man could any soul approach God in any act of worship or service, howsoever small, without bringing the shed blood; that the only way man could bring the blood was to use the instruments, agencies, and ordinances scaled or dedicated with the covenanted blood; that every precept and ordinance of the old covenant was sealed with the blood of animals, and the only way to bring the typical blood was to offer worship and service in strict harmony with the laws and appointments thus sealed. The tabernacle with all of its vessels of ministry was sealed or dedicated with the blood of an animal (Heb. 9: 16-21), and no shovel, pan, tongs, or fire could be used by the priests, save those sealed by blood. It was shown that Nadab and Abihu, priests, were slain because they "offered strange fire before Jehovah, which he had not commanded them." (Lev. 10: 1.) It was "strange" fire because it was not taken from the altar on which fire was kindled and sealed with blood. This question was raised:

HOW CAN MAN APPROACH GOD UNDER CHRIST, OR THE NEW COVENANT?

The speaker showed most conclusively that every fact and command of the gospel or new covenant had been scaled or dedicated by the blood of God's Son (Matt. 26: 28), and that man cannot approach God in any act of worship or service without the blood of Christ. In order to bring the blood of the new covenant, man must come with only the blood-scaled appointments, ordinances, and agencies of Christ. None of the laws or appointments of man have on them the blood of Christ; hence, in value do men worship God in them.

On this undeniable principle of divine administration, those acts of worship and service which alone have been sealed with the blood of God's Son are acceptable to him. Since no institution but the church Christ purchased with his own blood has been sealed with that blood, no service can be rendered to God through any other institution; and since vocal music alone has been sealed with the blood of Christ, instrumental music is not pleasing to God in his worship. Hence, upon this principle of excluding anything and everything from the worship and service of God that cannot be found among the blood-sealed appointments of the Most High, a large class of worshipers repudiate all human societies for doing God's work and instrumental music in his worship. The only way the blood of Christ can reach and cleanse the heart of man Is through God's blood-scaled appointments.

"I" and Its Allases.

BY T. B. LARIMORE,

Mrs. Partington says: "If I had forty boys to name, I'd never even think of naming any one of them 'Alias;' for I've never heard any good of any one who wore that name. All the Aliases I've ever heard of have got into some sort of trouble—some into jail, some into the pentientiary, and some of them have been hung. I'll never name a child 'Alias'—never." "Them's my sentiments" relative to the use of the aliases of "I." I'll never use them—never.

Probably the most popular one of these aliases is "we," notwithstanding the very highest available authority on the subject condemns the use of "we" as a substitute for "I" in terms unmistakable and strong.

Why any one—preacher, politician, or any one else—should ever substitute "we" for "I" is a mystery beyond my comprehension. Some scholarly men do so, however, and they may be correct; but I think they are not, and scholarly books on the subject say they are not.

Long years ago a preacher and his frow meandered much together. The woman was a writer of some renown among the smaller fry. When, in her writing, she alluded to her other half, she simply called him "the preacher." Some of their friends promptly protested, however, because, they said, that plainly implied that she thought he was the only preacher: and, as she was the preacher's better half, it savored, or, at least, seemed to savor, or igotism, or egotism, or of something else no less objectionable.

Discouraged, she passed the pen to her husband, that he might try his hand at the business; but he made bad matters worse, for he substituted "the writer" for "1," and then they said he assumed to be the only writer.

Truly the tribulations of those who write and of those who speak are many; but both writers and speakers can easily and successfully side-step all this we-and-I-and-the-writer trouble by using correct language—by simply saying what they mean in good, plain, simple English.

We reveal egotism by every effort we make to conceal it, for the very effort we make to conceal it virtually says we know it is there. The better way is to forget self and say what we wish to say, in language as pure and simple and clear as we can command. That's the way to write, that's the way to speak, that's the way to think.

Preparation and Delivery of Sermons.

BY G. C. BREWER,

The object of every gospel sermon should be to make men see Jesus Christ the Savior of the world, and to make it easy for them to obey the gospel. Every sermon should, therefore, have plan, form, and symmetry. Incoherent talks do not convince. In order that a sermon be worthy the time and attention of intelligent people, it must have come after careful preparation. The preparation should be done with a view to—

1. Thoroughness. Some men take a text because it is poetical or striking, and they then proceed to tell stories or to quote other beautiful verses that may be suggested by some word in the text. Such a sermon may be entertaining, but it is not instructive. People would never learn the teaching of the Bible from such preaching. Often, too, such preachers draw inferences or make deductions from the text that are directly contradicted by other passages of scripture. In this way many false notions concerning the teaching of the Bible have originated and gained wide dissemination. Such an unfortunate result from a sermon would never occur if the preacher would study his text in the light of its context, ascertain its teaching, and then trace out all the references and learn what all other passages that bear upon the subject say. He may not be able to use all the passages in his sermon, but he will have no fear of a contradiction, and he can handle his subject with the consciousness of a reserved strength that will not fail to impress his hearers and make his lesson all the more convincing.

2. Accuracy. No speaker can afford to manifest doubt of any statement he makes. He should know whereof he speaks, and he should state it with conviction. If he quotes history, he should state the facts accurately. If he quotes scripture, he should give the exact thought, if not the words, and know exactly where the quotation is found. This requires study, but it repays the effort. No workman who studies need be ashamed, but the man who is inaccurate will often be embarrassed.

3. Prayerfulness. A sermon, to be effectual, must be well "soaked in prayer." If the preacher does not consider his sermon or the object of the sermon of sufficient seriousness to pray over it, he will not impress his hearers that it is of sufficient importance to cause them any concern. The preacher should not delude himself into thinking that because he has used the subject many times before it is not necessary to prepare anew with prayerful study for each occasion. It is all right to repeat old sermons, but they must be born again each time in order to be vital. Because some preachers cease to feel their absolute dependence on the Lord and try to preach without prayerful study, they lose their power. There are men who used to preach with almost compelling fervency, but whose efforts now remind one of Samson with his locks shorn. That which is not vital to the preacher himself can have no weight with others. But he whose soul is affame with the love of Jesus will never fail to do good whether or not the results are visible. Like the apostles, every preacher, to be successful, must "continue steadfastly in prayer, and in the ministry of the word." (Acts 6: 4.)

In delivering a sermon, the preacher should have an aim for-

1. Force. Nothing is more incongruous and disappointing than to see a sermon that is charged with God's dynamite exploding with about as much force as is exhibited by a bursting bubble. The gospel is not only power, but it is God's power, and that power must not be dissipated through an insipid sermonette or through the listless, lazy movements of an indolent speaker.

2. Clarity. It is better to speak five words that are understood and that will instruct the hearers than to indulge one's vanity in five thousand learned dissertations in which the speaker himself does not understand what he says nor whereof he confidently affirms.

3. Earnestness. The story is told of a prominent preacher who went to see a celebrated actor. When the play was over and the actor was holding a reception, the preacher asked him this question: "Why is it that you can speak and act a fiction and convulse great audiences, and I tell them the truth and fail to move them?" The actor replied: "Sir, the answer is easy. I speak a lie as though it were the truth, and you speak the truth as though it were a lie." A preacher should always be desperately in earnest in delivering a sermon. Nothing convicts like conviction, and it is the object of a gospel sermon to convict the sinner of his sins, convince him of the truth of the message, and bring him down at the foot of the cross for salvation. "The end of all Christian preaching is to cast the sinner trembling at the feet of mercy." (Vinet.)

Legitimate Sources of Sermonic Illustrations.

BY ISAAC C. HOSKINS.

It will be admitted by all that Jesus was the Master Illustrator, and, therefore, that whatever he did in the field of illustration was legitimate.

How simple, how lucid, and yet how masterful, is his Illustration against that source of much of our unhapplness-anxiety! "Be not anxious for your life, what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink; nor yet for your body, what ye shall put on. Is not the life more than the food, and the body than the raiment?" Then see with what inimitable grace he Illustrates his thought-viz.: "Behold the birds of the heaven, that they sow not, neither do they reap, nor gather into barns; and your heavenly Father feedeth them. Are not ye of much more value than they?" The uselessness of such anxiety is met by a question that bears on its face the answer: "And which of you by being anxious can add one cubit unto his stature?" .The absurdity of such anxiety is brought out by another question and its answer: "And why are ye anxious concerning raiment? Consider the lilies of the fleid, how they grow; they toil not, neither do they spin; yet I say unto you, that even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these." Then follows divine assurance: "But If God doth so clothe the grass of the field, which to-day is, and to-morrow is cast into the oven, shall he not much more clothe you. O ye of little faith? Be not therefore anxious, saying, What shall we eat? or, What shall we drink? or, Wherewithal shall we be clothed? For after all these things do the Gentiles seek." Be different from them. "For your heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all these things."

In the thirteenth chapter of Matthew, where the parables abound, he takes from nature, or life, his religious thought and presents it in his masterful manner, thus making clear his power as an illustrator.

Jesus uses historical events to prove the importance of being ready—"Watch therefore: for ye know not on what day the Lord cometh "—saying: "And as were the days of Noah, so shall be the coming of the Son of man. For as in those days which were before the flood they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, until the day that Noah entered into the ark, and they knew not until the flood came, and took them all away; so shall be the coming of the Son of man."

Again, he takes childhood and teaches great spiritual truths. "In that hour came the disciples unto Jesus, saying, Who then is greatest in the kingdom of heaven? And he called to him a little child, and set him in the midst of them, and said, Verily I say unto you, Except ye turn, and become as little children, ye shall in no wise enter into the kingdom of heaven. Whosoever therefore shall humble himself as this little child, the same is the greatest in the kingdom of heaven."

Lack of space forbids us to bring to view many fields of illustration where Christ entered; but these will be sufficient to show that we have his wisdom and example to assure us that any worthy object, system, or condition may be used to illustrate divine truth.

A true peacemaker is doing a divine work of love in the world.-J. R. Miller.

Selection and Treatment of Texts

"Diagnose the Case" Says Charlie Taylor.

That discretion should be used in the selection of the text, no one will deny. The physician that enters the sick room first diagnoses the case, then offers the remedy. There is a great disease that has fastened itself on the souls of men, and Christ, the great Physician of souls, gives the remedy.

This disease is sin, and it has various forms—idolatry, covetousness, disobedience, transgression, and many others too numerous to mention. There is not a community that does not have the disease in some form; there is not a church but what is infected with it in some way. The minister, on entering a place, should make an effort to find the form of disease, and then select the texts that will counteract it.

That the apostic Paul verifies this fact is evident when he comes into the city of Athens. (Acts 17: 16-31.) Paul, on entering the city, finds it given over wholly to idolatry, and he declares unto them the true, the living God. (Acts 17: 22-29.) "Then Paul stood in the midst of Mars' hill, and said. Ye men of Athens, I perceive that in all things ye are too superstitious. For as I passed by, and beheld your devotions, I found an altar with this inscription, TO THE UNKNOWN GOD. Whom therefore ye ignorantly worship, him declare I unto you. God that made the world and all things therein, seeing that he is Lord of heaven and earth, dwelleth not in temples made with hands; neither is worshiped with men's hands, as though he needed anything, seeing he giveth to all life, and breath, and all things; and hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation; that they should seek the Lord, if haply they might feel after him, and find him, though he be not far from every one of us: for in him we live, and move, and have our being; as certain also of your own poets have said, For we are also his offspring. Forasmuch then as we are the offspring of God, we ought not to think that the Godhead is like unto gold, or silver, or stone, graven by art and man's device."

Again, Paul, in his letter to the church at Corinth, knowing that there were divisions there, writes on unity and condemns division. "Now I beseech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment. For it hath been declared unto me of you, my brethren, by them which are of the house of Chioe, that there are contentions among you." (1 Cor. 1; 10, 11.)

It is evident to me, from the above, that ministers should be advised on the subjects to select. For instance, if one goes into a congregation where they are divided, he should select the text of unity and dwell at length on our Savior's prayer recorded in the seventeenth chapter of John. Should one go into a section of country where they have never heard the gospel, the following texts, it seems to me, are very appropriate: "Divinity of the Bible;" "What Think Ye of Christ? Whose Son is He?" "Proper Division of the Word;" "The Living Word;" "Work of the Holy Spirit in Conviction and Conversion." Again, if one goes into a community where there is a church that is prone to wander from the "old paths," he should select the text of "Walking by Faith," and show that to walk by faith is to walk by divine direction, and show that the individual that goes beyond the teachings of Christ "hath not God" (2 John 9), is not walking by faith, and is not well pleasing to God (Heb. 11: 6).

I will leave the subject here, and ask that the reader further the application; and may God speed the day when all soldiers of the cross will be content to "know nothing save Jesus Christ, and him crucified."

T. M. Carney Stresses Simplicity.

The selection of an appropriate text is not always an easy task. We sometimes hear the preacher ask: "What should I present next?" However, there are so many beautiful and forceful texts in the Bible that we shall never be able to use them all. Then, if this be true, and surely it is, should we not seek out those texts, or passages, that are the most practical and helpful in directing us and our hearers into all the truth?

I believe there is some art in the selection of texts, but have never styled myself an artist in said line of work. The simple passages, or texts, should prove to be the most useful ones. Paul has left us a beautiful and helpful example on simplicity. Hear him: "And I, brethren, when I came to you, came not with excellency of speech or of wisdom, declaring unto you the testimony of God. For I determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ, and him crucified." (1 Cor. 2: 1.) Again, he says: "But I fear, lest by any means, as the serpent beguiled Eve through his subtlety, so your minds should be corrupted from the simplicity that is in Christ." (2 Cor. 11: 3.) Surely the gospel of our Lord and Master is simplicity itself.

I remember a remark that was made by a brother after listening to a sermon delivered by one of our eloquent young men. I consider it the highest form of compliment to the brother who preached the discourse. Of the sermon he said: "It was so simple; almost any one could have preached it." But possibly the one who made the remark could not have presented a lesson in such simple style as did the one to whom he had just listened. Yes, that lesson as delivered then and there was much more helpful and practical than if that preacher had selected some symbolical and difficult text from which to deliver a learned discourse to that audience. Let us all labor and pray that God may send many more laborers into his vineyard who will deliver the "simple message."

Another important item in the selection of texts is to use tact and diplomacy. Both Jesus and Paul are examples in this respect, in that they used those lessons which were destined to challenge the attention of their hearers and at the same time teach them the truth. When Paul beheld the city of Athens wholly given to idolatry, his spirit was stirred in him; and note the tact and diplomacy manifested by this grand preacher and apostle. "Then Paul stood in the midst of Mars' hill, and said, Ye men of Athens, I perceive that in all things ye are too superstitious. For as I passed by, and beheld your devotion, I found an altar with this inscription, TO THE UNKNOWN GOD. Whom therefore ye ignorantly worship, him declare I unto you." (Acts 17: 22, 23.) Their gods were numbered by the thousands, but Paul wanted to introduce and proclaim to them the God they ignorantly worshiped. Hence, God was his theme. Then, when he wanted to teach his brethren not to trust in the flesh, Paul's words were these: "For we are the circumcision, which worship God in the spirit, and rejoice in Christ Jesus, and have no confidence in the flesh. Though I might also have confidence in the flesh. If any other man thinketh that he hath whereof he might trust in the flesh, I more: circumcised the eighth day, of the stock of Israel, of the tribe of Benjamin, a Hebrew of the Hebrews; as touching the law, a Pharisee; concerning zeal, persecuting the church; touching the righteousness which is in the law, blameless. But what things were gain to me, those I counted loss for Christ." (Phil. 3: 3-7.)

It seems practical and reasonable that we should study the minds and conditions of our hearers and select those texts which will enable us to lead our audiences into "the fullness of the blessed and glorious gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ."

R. D. Smith on "Sticking to the Text."

"Sticking to the text" means the strict adherence to the very substance or meaning of the particular text or passage selected for the discourse; and the adage, "Stick to the text," itself implies its origin.

He who stands in the sacred desk is under the most solemn obligations to impart to his audience the exact meaning of the text upon which he discourses, so far as he is able.

Now there are several ways by which he might fail to "stick to the text," and we follow with some of them.

- 1. He may preach "from his text"—that is, simply talk about something else. There is far too much of this sort to-day. If the preacher "sticks to his text," one who is acquainted with the Book, whether he has heard the sermon or not, should be able to give a fair estimate of the sermon from the text simply.
- 2. He may lug into the discourse other teaching, equally true, but foreign to the particular text. This is not necessarily harmful, but is unfair to one's audience; and, moreover, it gives one a reputation for not "sticking to his text."
- 3. He may misapply the text and, therefore, pervert its teachings. This he may do in the following ways:
- (a) By a construction that is out of harmony with the context. A case in point is the application of "born of water" to the natural birth, when the context clearly shows that he was a man to whom Jesus said, "Ye must be born again," and: "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God."
- (b) By a construction that contradicts other plain passages. "Whoseever is born of God doth not commit sin," etc., cannot mean that God's children cannot sin, for other passages teach clearly that they can and do sin. So long as an interpretation or construction is out of harmony with the plain passages at other places, the preacher is not "sticking to his text."
- (c) By failing to appreciate the meanings of words in the particular text, or by giving them the modern meanings instead of their ancient and original meanings. For example. Habakkuk's discourse upon the wicked in their efforts to destroy those more righteous than themselves, and of their wicked devices, the angle and the net, has been applied to the German submarine warfare. The angle is made to have reference to the different directions or angles taken by the submarine in the effort to catch the prey. A noted writer sometime ago said, "The most remarkable thing about Jesus was his leisureliness," and then followed with, "And so it is true that 'he that believeth shall not make haste," This man should have known that "make haste" has not the modern sense, but rather, as quoted in the New Testament, "shall not be confounded" or "shall not be deceived."
 - 4. He may smother the text with fables or stories, and thus cause the audience to forget it. He does not then "stick to his text." One great fault to be found with a large part of the preaching to-day is too much story-telling. In one meeting that has gone to the eternal record, it is perfectly safe to say that at least half of the preaching was simply pathetic stories, while the plan of salvation was touched upon very lightly. Doubtless many of our readers well remember the attitude of the "Christians only" in regard to story-telling back twenty years ago. Then we criticized the denominations severely for the practice; and if one of our own preachers indulged more than just a little, it was looked upon with disfavor. But there is a strong drift in this direction at this time. Much of the preaching is made up too largely of this sort of material. But is it wrong to use a story to illustrate the lesson? Surely not, since Jesus himself sets the example, in that he taught largely in parables; but however fit and proper these things be, great care should be taken that the illustrations do not overshadow and obscure the teachings of the text. It is then doubtless perfectly safe to use illustrations, since the Savior himself did so. And so it becomes a question of the abuse of a thing, rather than the use of a wrong thing. Perhaps we may not say for each other just how far one should go in the use of the story to illustrate the lesson; but it is safe to say that heart-wringing stories of human experiences should not be permitted to displace nor overshadow "the story of the cross." And, furthermore, it is evident that when one indulges too far in this practice, he does not "stick to the text."

"What Seek Ye?" (John 1: 38.)

(A sermon outline by Russell S. King.)

- I. Sought Where Christ Dwelt.
 - 1. Sought good company.
 - 2. Sought way of heaven.
- II. All Commanded to Seek.
 - 1. Matt. 6: 33: Seek first kingdom of heaven.
 - 2. Rom. 2: 7: Seek for glory, honor, immortality.
 - 3. 1 Cor. 10: 24: Seek others' good.
 - 4. Col. 3: 1: Seek things which are above.
 - 5. 1 Pet. 3: 11: Seek peace, and ensue It.
- III. What Seek Ye? (Personally.)
 - 1. Seek not-
 - (a) Riches. No happiness chasing rainbows, It is seeking destruction.
 - (b) Power. Brings one under obligation to wicked men. Only one power to stand in the judgment.
 - (c) Good Time. Animal life a vapor. 1 Tim.5: 6. To live in pleasure is death.
 - (d) Rule or Boss. Brings discord, strife, rending of the body of Christ, selfishness.
 - 2. Seek Christ. Matt. 2: 1, 2.

I Thank Thee. BY LOUIS MARIE ADRISSON.

- I thank thee, Lord, for eyes that see a smile Of thine in each tiny fragrant flower; That can note the beauty of the soft blue sky, And that see the glory of the sunset hour.
- I thank thee, Lord, for ears that hear the music Of the crooning wind at fall of night, And that eatch the sweetest note in song of bird; And for a heart that can find the light.

In all of Nature's wondrous symphonies, I thank thee, Lord, for the earth's great beauty, That bespeaks thy tender love, that blds me know Thou wilt care for all who turn to thee.

Complaining because it is hard to win one's contests against life's difficulties is like objecting to the wickets on a croquet ground. They are part of the game.—Selected.

The New Testament Type of Sermon.

BY M. C. K.

The special "Sermon" Number of the Gospel Advocate herewith offered to our readers furnishes a fine opportunity for different writers to discuss the different phases of one of the most important themes that has yet claimed our attention in this series of specials. Not only does preaching rightly occupy a prominent place in the efforts of the modern religious world to propagate Christianity, but It was especially ordained of God at the beginning as the one great instrumentality to bring to men the divine power to save; and hence, although the "word of the cross" became "a stumblingblock" to the Jew and was stigmatized by the Greek as "foolishness," nevertheless, says the inspired apostle, "it was God's good pleasure through [what the Greek philosophers called] the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe." (1 Cor. 1: 18-25.) Preaching is, therefore, a high and honored calling under God, and the preacher's mission is fraught with the most solemn significance and responsibility; and hence, the consideration of the sermon-the preacher's peculiar message-is a theme of transcendent importance.

Of course, in a most vital and essential sense, all sermons of the right kind are embraced In the New Testament type of sermon; but, nevertheless, it is not incorrect to classify and distinguish sermons in accordance with the different lines of teaching and application of the gospel message. In the department of homiletics in the schools, sermons, from one point of view, are usually classified as doctrinal, moral, historical, experimental, and occasional, while, from a different point of view, they are styled subject sermons, texnal sermons, and expository sermons. Such a classification is entirely proper, with the exception of the restricted use of the term "doctrinal." Ordinarily, as thus used, it is applied exclusively to sermons on points of denominational peculiarity and controversy, or to what are sometimes called "first principles," such as faith, repentance, and baptism; but, strictly speaking, this use of the term is inaccurate. The term "doctrine" simply means teaching, and "doctrinal," of course, means pertaining to teaching or that which is adapted to teaching; and hence, in this true and proper sense of the term, all sermons on all subjects, if worthy of being so called at all, are doctrinal. On the same principle, we object to such a classification as "doctrinal sermons" as distinguished from "practical sermons," for the simple reason that all sermons, whether on the theory or the practice of Christianity, are doctrinal-that is, they teach something If they amount to anything at all.

Turning now to the New Testament, while no attempt can be discovered there on the part of its writers to reproduce entire, as homiletic models, the sermons of those reported in its pages, yet enough is given to show that they were masters of the sermon which carries home to the hearts and consciences of men the message of God, and this is the true test of all genuine preaching and of all genuine sermons. To verify this statement, let the reader make a careful and close examination of the sermons of our Lord, of Peter, of Stephen, and of Paul. In arrangement of material, style, and delivery, as far as these may be gathered from the record, they are all simple, direct, didactic, and pointed, and all possess in common the evident purpose to impress their hearers with man's need of salvation and his accountability to God. Of course the sermons of the divine Master take precedence over all others, and it goes without saying that his great "Sermon on the Mount," recorded in the fifth, sixth, and seventh chapters of Matthew and modeled after the discourses of the peripatetic philosophers, is without a peer in all the annals of homiletic utterance; but it was sublimely simple in style and arrangement, and "the multitudes" who heard it "were astonished at his teaching."

Peter's sermon on Pentecost, recorded in the second chapter of Acts, is a model sermon on Christ, and him crucified. It was a direct appeal to the facts of prophecy and their fulfillment in the crucified, risen, and exalted Lord, carrying instant conviction to those who heard it, and the success of his effort was phenomenal.

The great sermon of Stephen, recorded in the seventh chapter of Acts, Is a model historical sermon, and, like that of Peter, carried conviction and consternation to his hearers.

But, next to the divine Lord himself, Paul is the great preacher of the New Testament period. His few recorded sermons, or fragments of sermons, are models in the art of sermon making. That delivered in the Jewish synagogue of Antioch, in Pisidia (Acts 13), is another model historical sermon, and it so deeply and solemnly impressed those who heard it that they called for a repetition of it the next Sabbath day, when, according to the record, "almost the whole city was gathered together to hear" it. His sermon delivered in the Areopagus, in Athens, and recorded in the seventeenth chapter of Acts, was to a different kind of audience, and, accordingly, the preacher pursued a different course in the treatment of his great theme, but, nevertheless, led his hearers to the same conclusion concerning the way of salvation through Christ.

To sum up the matter, we may very properly say that the New Testament type of sermon, no matter what particular line it may follow nor to what particular class it may belong, is an exact and forcible Illustration of carrying out the divine and solemn charge under which all preachers are placed and which is recorded in 2 Tim. 4: 1, 2, in the following words: "I charge thee in the sight of God, and of Christ Jesus, who shall judge the living and the dead, and by his appearing and his kingdom: preach the word." Here is recorded the preacher's great and distinctive duty. It definitely prescribes the message which he is to preach. "Preach the word" is the divine charge—not the preacher's opinion about the word, nor the opinion of anybody else about the word, but the word. No matter what may be the occasion nor what may be the theme, he is to preach whatever the word says on it, nothing more, nothing less, and nothing otherwise. If it be a theme on which the word says nothing, or some phase of a theme on which it says nothing, then let the preacher say nothing. The word of God is what the people need. God knew that they would need this at the beginning and that they would always need it, and hence his simple command is: "Preach the word." Let the preacher remember this divine charge, and at the conclusion of every sermon let him be able to say in the solemn words of Richard Baxter:

I preached as never sure to preach again, And as a dying man to dying men.

Adaptability in Preaching the Gospel.

BY J. C. M'QUIDDY.

The only hope of the world in this age of selfishness, unrest, and dissatisfaction is the gospel of Christ. As God created the first man, Adam, perfect, so the gospel of Christ is also perfect, and no improvement can be made upon it. All the works of God are perfect for their uses. When Christ gave the great commission to his apostles, he neither bound upon them any method of going nor restricted them to any method of teaching, but he did limit them as to what they should teach. He said to them: "Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I commanded you." This passage alone clearly teaches that neither apostle nor evangelist, nor any other man, has a right to alter or modify the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ.

While God demands strict loyalty to himself, he does not take from any man his individuality, nor does he expect or require that all men shall use the same identical methods in declaring the gospel of Christ. All men cannot be put into the same mold. Of the millions of people in the world, no two have been found who are exactly alike in every particular. There are always shades of differences and distinctions. Just so there will always be shades of difference in presenting the message that God has given for the salvation of sinners. We should never conclude that simply because an evangelist does not present the gospel according to our particular way of thinking or according to our particular individuality, he is not presenting the gospel of Christ. We should be careful that we are not more in love with methods than we are in love with the gospel of Christ. Our aim should be to preach the gospel and apply it in a way that will correct existing evils. When Paul visited the Corinthian church, which was divided into factions, he sought to cure and destroy the factions, not by taking part with the factionists, but by applying the gospel in a way to heal the divisions. He says: "And I, brethren, when I came unto you, came not with excellency of speech or of wisdom, proclaiming to you the testimony of God. For I determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ, and him crucified, And I was with you in weakness, and in fear, and in much trembling. And my speech and my preaching were not in persuasive words of wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit and of power: that your faith should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God." (1 Cor. 2: 1-5.)

Preachers should apply the gospel to the present evils. They should not simply preach stereotyped sermons—sermons which have no adaptability to the greed and selfishness of mankind; but they should present the vital truths of the gospel in a way that will uproot and destroy the selfishness of capitalists, of unions, of the rich, of the poor, the high and the low, the learned and the unlearned.

alike. Russia has very clearly demonstrated that the poor are no more capable of managing the world than are the rich. All goodness is not wrapped up in either the rich or the poor, but it appears that human nature is just about the same in a poor man that it is in a rich man. The governments of this world are weak and powerless and are wholly unable to destroy the selfishness of mankind. The need of the hour is efficient preachers to preach an applied gospel to meet the present evils. This need was never greater than now. If the gospel is divine, which I most heartily believe, then there must be a remedy for the evils of any age in the gospel of Jesus Christ. The question that looms in importance far above every other question is, Will the preachers meet the issue? Will they apply the gospel to the evils in such a manner as to drive selfishness out of the capitalist and out of the union agitator alike? Selfishness has been the one damning sin of the age from the garden of Eden until the present moment. Preachers should boldly and fearlessly present the teaching of the word of God against all selfishness and should impress in an effective way the fact that there can be no harmony between employer and employee until the Golden Rule is applied to all differences and disagreements that may arise between men. Neither all the good nor all the bad is with one party. This unrest and dissatisfaction is created by agitators who have no respect for the law of God nor for the law of man. Until men are brought to realize the importance of respecting God and his word and of doing what he commands to be done, there is no hope that the world will grow any better. Strifes, fightings, and wars come from the lusts of the flesh. Evil lusts and evil passions must be subdued before men can rise to a purer, higher, and nobler life.

Preachers, like Paul, should meet the emergency of the hour by becoming all things to all men in order to save some. This does not mean that Paul sacrificed any truth, but that he did not ignore the prejudices of men whenever he could use those prejudices for the salvation of their souls. He brought himself under bondage to all in order that he might gain the more for Christ. He says: "For though I was free from all men, I brought myself under bondage to all, that I might gain the more. And to the Jews I became as a Jew, that I might gain Jews; to them that are under the law, as under the law, not being myself under the law, that I might gain them that are under the law; to them that are without law, as without law, not being without law to God, but under law to Christ, that I might gain them that are without law. To the weak I became weak, that I might gain the weak: I am become all things to all men, that I may by all means save some." (1 Cor. 9: 19-22.) Paul was even crafty and caught some with guile in order that he might gain them for Christ. He rejoiced that the gospel was preached, even though some declared it of envy. Preachers to-day should rise in the majesty of Jehovah and boldly proclaim the gospel of Christ in that way that is most effective and in that way that will exalt virtue and debase the weakness of men. They should stand firm in the liberty wherewith Christ has made them free and should not be tled to methods and means of presenting the gospel that are wholly ineffective. While the fundamentals of the gospel should be preached, and while it will always be necessary to declare them, let no one conclude that simply because a preacher shows the evils existent in the world and then applies the gospel of Christ as a remedy for these evils, he is not preaching the gospel of Christ.

All Christians should stand aloof from the greediness, dissatisfaction, and unrest of the hour, striving to lead holy, godly, and unblamable lives. They should labor with their own hands, quietly and submissively doing the will of the Lord. They should shine as lights in the midst of a crooked and perverse generation. They should live economically, and, as far as possible, should help to relieve the suffering of afflicted humanity. I am firm in the conviction that the gospel applied and the Golden Rule practiced will cure the dissatisfaction and unrest of the world and will bring about a reign of peace and contentment, I am still firm in the conviction that God rules, and I am optimistic enough to believe that the world is not going to the bad, but that God will bring good to the world out of the evils that are now upon us, and that from the present condition we will emerge into a far better reign of usefulness, happiness, and peace.

On Metive, Preparation, Effectiveness, and Purpose of Preaching.

BY E. A. E.

Give diligence to present thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, handling aright the word of truth. (2 Tim. 2: 15.) But be thou sober in all things, suffer hardship, do the work of an evangelist, fulfill thy ministry. (2 Tim. 4: 5.)

The best book in the world on preaching-what to preach, what not to preach, motive, preparation, manner, speech, purpose, and effectiveness-is the Bible. It contains all the information God gives on this most important subject. Men may give later and fuller instruction (1).

God would not send out men into all the world to preach without solemnly charging them what to preach, in what spirit and manner to preach, for what purpose to preach, and against preaching any false doctrine.

What men preach and their "delivery" depend altogether upon whom they seek to please. Timothy, although inspired and although he had "known the holy scriptures" from childhood, was commanded to study still the word of God in order to be "approved unto God" and that he might not be ashamed of his preaching and teaching before God. He who seeks "the favor of men" cannot please God. (Gal. 1: 10.) The moment a preacher shows the disposition to become pleasing to men and popular, his influence for good begins to die.

The books on the subject of preaching-" Exegetics," "Homlletics," "Polemics," "Hermeneutics," "Pastoral Work "-which a preacher studies depend upon whom he seeks to please and what he would accomplish by preach-

The power to convince, to convict, and to save souls is the gospel of Christ. All "the effectiveness" for the good and salvation of men is in the word of God. "Preach the

The teaching of the Bible on "all things that pertain unto life and godliness" is clear and plain, beautiful and wonderful; Christ "taught as one having authority, and not as the scribes," and spoke as never man spoke; he sent his apostles "into all the world" to "preach the gospei to the whole creation" and to teach the observance of all things whatsoever he has commanded; this preaching and teaching was most powerful; yet the word "sermon" is not in the Bible. The words "sermonize," "exegetics," "homiletics," "polemics," "hermeneutics," "pasteral theology," are not in the Bible. These words and the ideas which they represent have sprung up since the New Testament was written and belong to the religious parlance of various denominations.

Jesus preached, but he never sermonized. He never sent out the apostles and evangelists of the New Testament to make sermons, to sermonize, to become pulpiteers, or to become modern "pastors" or the ministers of churches in a sense differing from and above all other ministers or servants of God. Hence, Jesus never gave any instructions in regard to making sermons, delivering sermons, and filling pulpits. He gave full and clear instructions on the qualifications, work, and support of Godappointed elders, who are the only scriptural shepherds or pastors, bishops or overseers, of his church. He gave full and clear instructions to evangelists, or preachers of the gospel, and all teachers of the word of God, even to the spirit and manner in which the preaching and teaching are to be done, and most solemnly warned against preaching and teaching wrong things.

I have just looked into two large volumes on "Homiletics." They are, no doubt, excellent works of their kind, and are classed with the best. These authors were preachers of different denominations and teachers in different. schools of "theology." They agree, however, in calling preachers "ambassadors of Christ," and write of them as "pastors" and of "pastoral work"-and one, of "pastoral theology" and "practical theology."

The preacher who starts out to preach with the wrong conception of his work and a false conception of himself will never become prepared to preach the pure gospel of Christ. He may "pervert the gospel of Christ" (Gal. 1: 7) to suit his own conceptions; handle "the word of God deceitfully" (2 Cor. 4: 2); corrupt "the word of God" ["make merchandise" of it-margin] (2 Cor. 2: 17); "wrest" the scriptures to his own destruction (2 Pet. 3: 16); or by "smooth and fair speech , , , begulle the hearts of the innocent," while he serves "not our Lord Christ," but his "own belly" (Rom. 16: 17, 18); but he can never in humility and meekness and the spirit of Christ preach the pure and complete gospel of Christ in its simplicity and power.

These things would not be mentioned here but for the strong tendency to denominationalize the church and to carelessly make use of denominational language. Certainly there must be some meaning to God's command to "hold the pattern of sound words . . . in faith and love which is in Christ Jesus;" to use "sound speech," "even the words of our Lord Jesus Christ;" to speak "as it were oracles of God;" that "all speak the same thing," and "be perfected together in the same mind and in the same judgment." Shall all this be ignored? Shall the language of Ashdod be used regardless of God's injunctions? Do some ignorantly fall or willfully refuse to use the "sound speech" of Christ and the apostles? All know that unless preachers and teachers "speak the same thing," the people cannot hear the same thing, believe the same thing, do the same thing, "be perfected together in the same mind and in the same judgment," and "keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace." Words represent ideas, and the most fearful responsibility of differences, strife, and division, together with a partisan and bitter spirit, rests upon those who fail, either through lack of study of the word of God or utter disregard for his teaching and willful disobedience to him, at this point.

If preachers insist upon being "ambassadors of Christ," they should be most anxious and scrupulously particular to use "the sound words" which he commands to be used and to speak "as it were oracles of God." "Ambassadors of Christ" do not use the speech which he forbids and cannot teach different and contrary doctrines. How is it? Frequently those who make the loudest claims know the least of the word of God.

The word "ambassador" is used only twice in the New Testament, and in both cases it is applied to the apostles. (2 Cor. 5: 20; Eph. 6: 20.) Preachers of to-day can no more be "ambassadors of Christ" than they can be apostles. Thayer says: "Certain false teachers are rated sharply for arrogating to themselves the name and authority of apostles of Christ." (2 Cor. 11: 5, 13; Rev. 2; 2.) If one will consult the Standard Dictionary of the English Language or the International Dictionary, one will learn that an ambassador is "a person commissioned as of the highest diplomatic rank, sent by one sovereign power to another, to treat of affairs of state, or to reside at a foreign capital as a diplomatic representative;" "an official representative sent by or to a sovereign or public body; an envoy or minister of state." The apostles were commissioned by the highest authority in the universe-"all authority in heaven and on earth"-and were sent by this authority to act "on behalf of Christ," in his stead, in presenting "the word of reconciliation," or conditions of pardon and peace to the world. They could forgive sins or retain sins (John 20: 22, 23) in that God commissioned them to present the terms upon which sinners could become reconciled to him or be forgiven and saved. In no other way could these ambassadors forgive and retain sins, and in no other way can sinners be saved-that is, without accepting the conditions God lays down through these ambassadors. For this reason Christ, after he gave this commission, never himself and never through angels directly told those who asked him what to do to be saved, but referred them to the ones whom he had commissioned to do this. The world needs no other "ambassadors of Christ," Jesus said he would be with the commission he gave the apostles unto the end of the world. There will never be another commission from God for the salvation of the world; all must be saved according to the one his ambassadors have presented. No other commission is needed. There can never be other ambassadors. The thought that all modern preachers are ambassadors of Christ" come from the erroneous teaching that all preachers of all denominations are called by the Holy Spirit "into the sacred office." Hodge, a Presbyterian commentator and "professor in the Theological Seminary, Princeton, N. J., says that "ministers" are "messengers;" that "they communicate what they have received;" that "they speak in Christ's name and by his authority, as he hath ordained the ministry and calls men by his Spirit into the sacred office:" and that "the rejection of their message is the rejection of Christ." This is true only of the apostles and inspired teachers of the New Testament. They spoke as the Holy Spirit gave them utterance; but they spoke the complete will of God. Nothing must be added to it or taken from it. I would tremble at the thought that when I reject the foolish teaching of many preachers of the religious world to-day I reject Christ. The ridiculousness and absurdity of all this become most apparent when we are called upon to believe that all preachers of all conflicting, clashing, and warring denominations, differing in teaching as widely as the poles, have been called by the Holy Spirit and sent out by Jehovah to deliver their contradictory messages. God never inspired any such foolish and conflicting theories. The church has labored long and faithfully to teach the use of pure speech and against the blinding error of the "called and qualified and sent ministry" of all denominations by some special influence or direct impact of the Hely Spirit. Will brethren to-day continue to "contend earnestly for the faith which was once for all delivered unto the saints" in the language of the New Testament, or will they give up the fight and lose what has been gained?

The first preparation for preaching the gospel of Christ with the greatest "effectiveness" is not the study of sermonizing—preparing and delivering sermons—homiletics; but a heart right before God—a heart free from envy and jealousy, from pride and worldly ambition, from the love of money and applause—a heart from sin set free and really converted to God—a heart in which "the love of God hath been shed abroad . . . through the Holy Spirit which was given unto us." With conscious insincerity or unconscious controlling desire to please and love of applause, one cannot "speak forth words of truth and soberness" with zeal and effectiveness.

If I speak with the tongues of men and of angels, but have not love, I am become sounding brass, or a clanging cymbal.

Right living—a pure and godly life—is another essential preparation for preaching and teaching the truth.

The man who has to move every year or two from one State to another, or across the continent, to get away from his influence or from under his own shadow, is not fit to preach or qualified to teach others.

Space will not allow quotations from the Scriptures on the necessity of preachers setting good examples, but read Rom. 2: 21-23; 1 Tim. 1: 5-11, 18, 19; 4: 12; 6: 11-16; Tit. 2: 7; Acts 20: 28; 1 Pet. 5: 3; Acts 20: 18, 19, 35; 1 Cor. 11: 1; and, above all, the example of Jesus. He did first the will of God, and then taught it. (Acts 1: 1.) Piety at home, real genuine and unpretended piety in business and in everyday life, integrity and uprightness, clean hands, a pure and holy life, are not only prerequisites to effective preaching; but the truly righteous and godly life is the most logical, the most eloquent, the most convincing, and in all ways the most effective preaching that can be done. "So let your light shine before men" applies to preachers and teachers of the word.

There are wrong motives for preaching the gospel. God, who knows the hearts of all men, declares that some preach the gospel, "not sincerely," but of "envy and strife" and of "faction" (Phil. 1: 15, 16); some in covetousness make merchandise of it—traffic in it (2 Pet. 2: 3); some turn godliness into a way of gain (1 Tim. 6: 5). Others still preach even false doctrine for "filthy lucre's sake." (Tit. 1: 41.) Some serve "not our Lord Christ, but their own belly," and with "their smooth and fair speech they beguile the hearts of the innocent," and divide the church by teaching things contrary to the doctrine of Christ. (Rom. 16: 17, 18.) To "serve their own belly" means to seek their own fleshly comfort and ease and popularity and to gratify their own appetites and passions.

There are specified in the New Testament things which must not be preached. God does not want his church "tossed to and Iro and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, in craftiness, after the wiles of error." (Eph. 4: 14.) "Be not carried away by divers and strange teachings." (Heb. 13: 9.) There are "ignorant questionings," "Jewish fables," and "old wives' fables." "foolish questionings," "a different doctrine," "endless genealogies," "questions and disputes of words," the precepts of men," "doctrines of demons," "secret things" or unrevealed things, or "any other thing contrary to sound doctrine." Kind reader, will you look these up? (See Deut. 29; 29; Mark 7; 6, 7; 1 Tim. 1: 3, 4, 10; 4: 1-3; 6: 3-5; Tit. 1: 11; 3: 9; Rev. 2: 14, 15.) What is the true or right motive for preaching and teaching the word of God? To please and honor God (Gal. 1: 10; 1 Cor. 9: 16, 17), and, therefore, to save souls-"that I may by all means save some" (1 Cor. 9; 20-22); to save oneself and those who hear (1 Tim. 4: 16; James 5: 19, 20; Gal. 6: 1, 2); "for the gospel's sake" in order to "be a joint partaker thereof" (1 Cor. 9: 23); in order to be "approved unto God," "not as pleasing men (1 Thess. 2: 4); to be "God's fellow workers" (1 Cor. 3: 9)-God working in the preacher and teacher "both to will and to work for his good pleasure" (Phil. 2: 12, 13), All whom the preacher instructs and persuades to become Christians and to live in obedience to the gospel will be his "joy and crown of glory" "before our Lord Jesus Christ at his coming." (1 Thess. 2: 19, 20; Phil. 4: 1.) What motive can be purer, holier, and higher? With this motive, nothing can stop the true preacher from preaching Christ, and him crucified.

All know what God commands the preachers to preach. (See Jon. 3; Gal. 1: 23; 1 Tim. 4: 1-4; 1 Cor. 2: 2; 2 Cor. 4: 5; Acts 20: 20, 25, 27, 35; Mark 16: 15, 16; Matt. 28: 18-20; Luke 24: 46, 57.)

The language in which this preaching and teaching are to be done is the language of the oracles of God (1 Pet. 4: 11); "the pattern of sound words" (2 Tim. 1: 13); (Continued on page 1176.)

"If I Could Preach"—The Woman's View

If I could preach, it seems to me
I'd give no time for theory
On this and that to disagree,
But more for Christ on Calvary;
For theories are made by men,
And gilbly fall from tongue or pen;
But harder far to live and teach,
"The greatest of these is charity."
And while the world's well taught in lore;
The world has still been bathed in gore.
And Grief cries broken-heartedly:
"O Love, where is thy victory!"

If I could preach, it seems to me Christ's love my favorite theme would be—The love that blessed in time of need: The love that never failed to heed The anguished cry of the little child, Of the wicked, or the meek and mild. Not in the vaunted haunts of men, But in alley-ways he sought, and then When found, the poor, the needy, sad, He tried to help and to make glad. O, if I could truly preach my Christ, My services could not be priced.

-Clara Cox Epperson.

Mrs. James E. Scobey Would Stress True Motherhood.

On the above subject Brother Lipscomb has kindly requested me to write. Napoleon once said: "The great need of France is mothers." To-day I say the great need of America is mothers. The ranks are being depleted by the deadly enemy of the human family—the devil. Many are the devices he uses to lure them from the narrow way which leads to the heavenly home. He knows full well the weakness many women have for fashionable dress. Unfortunately, they yield to the demands of fashion, although immodest and sometimes vulgar in style. As in the days of our Savior, the devil comes in sheep's clothing, and frequently comes to women, in the present time, suggesting to them that the wearing of few clothes is the proper thing to be done.

And not only that, the suppression of sweet motherhood has come to a stage which is alarming. When this is intentional, without a just cause, it is a sin against God. With many would-be mothers, at the present time, children are too much trouble, too expensive, and they interfere with their pleasure. Indeed they are, when mothers want to follow the foolishness and wickedness of the world; and as that appeals to the physical and animal life, many women accept the enemy's seemingly harmless advice.

Repeatedly we hear many say: "I do not see any harm in this or that." No, they do not, because they are not capable of seeing the right or the wrong as taught by the only Guidebook of life. God gave the Book to man because he knew he did not knew how to direct his steps aright. Honesty, industry, and economy implanted in the hearts of young children will make men and women fit for the Master's use and a blessing to the world.

Mothers cannot maintain their proper relation to their Creator and Savior and to the good of humanity and yield to the demands of the world in anything which is detrimental to physical, moral, and spiritual life. There are things purer, holier, and higher than simply dressing the body for a show. However, there is economy when buying clothes to buy as good as financial conditions will permit. But it seems that many of the twentieth-century buyers do not consider financial conditions. We need mothers who have strength of character and a will power which will override every opposing evil which assails the well-being of the race.

The work of mothers should continue with their children even after they have arrived at the years of accountability; and especially to-day their daughters need to be taught the great value of sweet modesty, not only in dress, but also in manners. Many are given to coarse, uncultivated, pert ways in public places. Some try to ape men instead of being like refined, cultivated young women. Many, I think, would turn from their worldly-minded ways if they only knew the great power for good they could have over the young men of to-day. They could also regulate the late hours at night kept by the young people of the present time; and, at their suggestion, gentlemen would be willing to attend with them places of amusement that would not be detrimental to morals or manners.

Promiscuous bathing in public places by Christian young women and young men together is a reproach to the cause of Christ. Of course, the world can do as it pleases in all these matters; but Christians are not of the world, but are of Christ.

Mothers whose labors are devoted to the home, children, friends, neighbors, and the church, have no time to spend on the political hustings. The mother is the stay of the home and upon whom the destiny of the nation hangs. Destroy the home, the purity and sacredness of the marriage vow, and the nation falls.

Mothers whose life work has not been in vain can thank and praise God for blessing their homes with children who will tenderly care for and comfort them along life's journey, and especially in their declining years. The work of true mothers will be a power for good in the church, the world be made better and God glorified.

Mildred Shacklett's "Woulds" and "Would Nots."

There are some men—good men, too—who preach the word, and by the frequent use of "I" bore, if not disgust, their hearers. I do not believe I would be guilty of this, if I could preach, trying to remember that "God giveth the increase."

There are some preachers who carry gesticulating to such an extent that to the observer it grows to be, you might say, "too utterly utter," sometimes Indicrous. A few gestures at the right time are impressive and help to convey thought, but it seems to me that the superfluous use of them is worse than none at all. I would try to be temperate in this, if I could preach.

I would not flatter myself that my audience would care to hear me for too long a time, realizing that it takes a brilliant speaker to hold his listeners for more than forty or fifty minutes.

I am sure that, could I stand in the pulpit and preach, I would not display tobacco-stained teeth and then comment time and again upon the extravagance of sisters and never mention the way so many of the brethren waste money on the "filthy weed." I would not preach quite so much to the women, anyway.

But this is enough for the "would nots."

I would, of course, try to preach the gospel of love in all its beauty and simplicity and with its wonderful plan of salvation. I would talk much of the brotherhood of man, and under the present circumstances I would employ what little talent I might possess in preaching against militarism, which has proved the doom of all countries in which it has held sway.

If there could be such a thing as specializing in preaching, I think I would make mine in teaching or preaching to the young, trying to show them the follies of wo idliness and belping them to appreciate the joys of innocent pleasures.

But—alas!—as I am only a woman and have not the God-given right to preach, I will try to help the one who does preach by being quiet and attentive, knowing that a public speaker can "feel" his audience and good listeners are ever an inspiration.

Announcing a Christian Training School for Negroes.

BY A. B. L.

If the plans of its founder are realized, we will have in operation in Nashville by January 1 one of the bestequipped training schools for negroes in the country. It has long been a cherished plan of Brother A. M. Burton to do something that would materially aid the colored people in becoming useful Christian citizens. When the Florence Crittenden Home was ordered for sale at public auction, he saw and grasped the opportunity to convert this building into a training school for colored boys and girls, and to open its doors to deserving pupils in all of the Southern States. The most important educational feature of this school will be the teaching of the Bible, but, in addition, all useful arts will be taught. The purpose of the school is to train colored boys and girls to be self-respecting and self-supporting by becoming true Christians. To this end, all the duties of the school will be performed by the students themselves, thus giving them the benefit of experience and at the same time cutting down the cost of operation. The school is located on Ewing Avenue in the midst of a large negro settlement. There are about thirty-five bedrooms, large halls for chapel and recitation rooms, a commedious diningroom, laundry, and kitchen. A heating plant warms the entire building and supplies hot water. Brother C. E. W. Dorris has been selected for superintendent of the school, and he and his wife will devote their entire time to its management. A competent faculty of colored teachers will be secured as early as possible, and its personnel will be announced later.

This announcement should awaken sympathetic interest among all the churches. There is no more inviting missionary field than that offered by the thousands of negroes right at our doors, and here we are mutually dependent. They need us and we need them. This is no appeal for money. The help needed from the brotherhood is in fixing up the different rooms. Furniture no longer needed in your homes can be used to great advantage. Clothing outgrown or out of style will be very acceptable. Anything that man, woman, or child can wear will be appropriate to send. Let me suggest that every church send a package in time to reach the school before the holldays. Wrap it securely and send to C. E. W. Dorris, superintendent, 309 Church Street, who will make acknowledgment.

"The Model Church" Commended.

Brother G. C. Brewer has received several letters commending his book, "The Model Church." Brother J. Pettey Ezell, of Albany, Ala., says: "Every member of the church of Christ, both old and young, ought to have a copy of this book and read and re-read it. It will do them good," He finds one or two points upon which he does not agree with the author. After mentioning these, he says: "And to my mind, with these changes, it is the best and most needed book I have yet read from men." The book deserves a large circulation. The prices are very reasonable, Single copy, prepaid, $1; one dozen copies, prepaid, $9; twenty-five copies, not prepaid, $17. Order to-day from the McQuiddy Printing Company, Nashville, Tenn.

Declaring the Whole Counsel of God.

BY E. C. FUQUA:

"For I shrank not from declaring unto you the whole counsel of God." (Acts 20: 27.) So spoke Paul to the Ephesian e'ders.

The term "declare" is from the Latin de and clarare, to make clear; to reveal plainly by means of language; to state fully. It implies that all obscurity and doubt are remove(; that nothing is kept back or hidden.

"Counsel" means advice, instruction, direction. "whole ' counsel of God, which Paul declared, consisted of everything God had instructed man to do or warned him not to lo. Paul was careful to see that God's counselall of 1 - reached those to whom it had been sent. And this is the one duty of every Christian preacher. When such a one feels his task undone and his mission unaccomplished so long as any part of God's message to men is unrevealed through him, he is a dependable gospel missionary, whose work will stand through all the trials of this life, because it rests upon the foundations of the " whole " counsel of God. His converts, having received all that their Creator intended for them, are as fully protected and educated as God can protect or educate men; while those only partially taught are only partially equipped and protected, to say the most. If they are overcome for lack of knowledge of the truth, God is not to blame, but their loss will surely be charged to him who failed to acquaint them with the whole truth.

This is why Paul was so careful to fully teach the counsel of God wherever he went. It freed him, he said, from the blood of those who came under his influence. Note his language: "I am pure from the blood of all men. For I shrank not from declaring unto you the whole counsel of God." Had he not done the latter, he would not have professed purity from the former.

If all preachers could only realize that to fail to fully teach their converts or those placed under their influence is to court bloodguiltiness, more thorough teaching would be done. The common idea that to merely preach truth is to prove faithful to God and beneficial to men is a deception. There is truth in every false doctrine and counsel from God in every human creed. The man who does no more than teach counsel from God in some matters only will make a good sectarian, but a worthless Christian. To teach truth is one thing, but to teach all the truththe whole counsel of God-is quite another thing. To teach sinners that they must with sincerity of heart believe on Christ and repent of their sins, if they would be saved, is to teach truth-counsel from God; but to teach these same persons that when they shall have done the two things named they will be citizens in God's kingdom, members of his church, with their names enrolled in heaven, is to teach error, because it is to fail to teach them the whole counsel of God. Such teachers are willing to have God counsel men thus far, but beyond this they prefer to counsel them themselves. This is what makes sectarianism-teaching counsel from God, but not teaching "the whole counsel of God."

But we may teach the whole counsel of God to alien sinners, then fail to teach the new converts God's whole counsel to them; and this is just as bad as the former error. All that God requires of alien sinners must by the true preacher be revealed to them, and all that he requires of baptized people must likewise be revealed to them. The commission is twofold: "Go ye therefore, and make disciples of all the nations, baptizing them: teach ing them [the baptized] to observe all things whatsoever I commanded you." (Matt. 28; 19, 20.) No preacher is faithful who refuses or neglects to teach the baptized to observe "all things whatsoever" Christ commanded them through the apostles. Yet here is where the whole trouble lies to-day. Many who are most faithful and "loyal" in teaching alien sinners precisely what God counseled are remiss when it comes to teaching the baptized to do precisely what God has counseled them to do.

In establishing congregations, or in ministering to congregations established by others, the faithful preacher must keep in mind his duty to them and to God, which is to declare "the whole counsel" of God to the people, Precisely what God has said on every subject must be impartially given them; the counsel of God on the subject of consecration, purity, liberality, prayer, fellowship, love; their duty to God, to the brethren, to the world, to their enemies, to the civil powers; their work on the first day of the week and on every other day in the week; their duty toward the sick and the needy; the effect of their daily influence upon the community; how to control their tongues, their bodies, their passions; how to use their money; how to support the gospel at home and abroad. In fact, they are to be fully taught everything God has fully revealed; and the preacher who has the opportunity, but who falls to use it in thus thoroughly acquainting them with the full counsel of God, becomes responsible to God for whatever loss ensues for lack of counsel or teach-

The Son of God laid down this law: "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." (Matt. 4: 4.) That was as true under the old law as it is to-day. Christ quoted from Deut, 8: 3. The way it had to be obeyed under the old system is thus stated through Ezekiel (3: 17, 18); "Son of man, I have made thee a watchman unto the house of Israel; therefore hear the word at my mouth, and give them warning from me. When I say unto the wicked, Thou shalt surely die; and thou givest him not warning, nor speakest to warn the wicked from his wicked way, to save his life; the same wicked man shall die in his iniquity; but his blood will I require at thine hand." Where the warning was properly given, the prophet or teacher "delivered." his soul from bloodguiltiness. Paul refers to this same principle as underlying the gospel administration. It is on the principle that God's wisdom gave us exactly what we have in the way of a revelation on religion, and this is exactly what we need on this subject; hence, any effort to assure man of his acceptance upon less than God has required is an insult to the wisdom and goodness of God; and whoever requires more than God has required assumes a prerogative of God-that of legislating for man in spiritual matters. Of course, a faithful, God-fearing preacher will do neither.

Some one has coined the phrase; "The brethren will do more when they are taught more." I believe this is true. If they are to do what God has counseled, they must know what his counsel is on every subject; and the business of the consecrated gospel preacher is to see that God's counsel reaches them in its fullness and purity, unaided by human wisdom and unmixed with human tradition. I believe the church would have evangelized the world long ago If it had been thoroughly taught God's counsel on mission work. With the recent agitation of this question there is a corresponding quickening of the falth and energies of the brethren with reference to mission work all over the world. My faith has always been that the church will do her duty when her ministers teach her what that duty is. This is the ground upon which I build in the establishment of a new congregation. Knowing that they will do what they are taught, if they are truly converted, I determine to fully teach them God's entire counsel; and I have never been disappointed in seeing the desired fruit. It is sure to come.

We then have a double incentive to declare the whole counsel of God—our own responsibility to God, who, in the name of his Son, has commanded us to "preach the word," and the knowledge that nothing short of God's whole counsel will constitute an established congregation at all. We wish our work to stand. It cannot stand upon less than the whole counsel of God. It may exist upon less, but it cannot live and grow upon less. The multitude of "dead" or inactive congregations throughout our land stands as a monument to the supreme folly of underteaching God's counsel. Better a few congregations fully taught than a multitude of congregations with little knowledge of a congregation's obligations to God and to the world. Some of the most needed missionary work to-day is placing good, thorough teachers with the multitude of untaught and inactive congregations all over the country to drill and train them to meet their God-ordained responsibilities. Otherwise they are lost. Nothing will harm the man who fully declares God's whole counsel. Even the world has a greater respect for that man than for the man who preaches to please it; and sectarianism, while bitterly persecuting him, will nevertheless honor him and fear him. Then he has God's guarantee that he will "be free from the blood of all men." Surely this is enough to encourage every preacher to do his duty.

Brethren, what has your record been with reference to this matter? Be that as it may, let us resolve henceforth to declare the whole counsel of God—to every one everywhere. This will save us.

On Motive, Preparation, Effectiveness, and Purpose of Preaching.

"sound speech, that cannot be condemned" (Tit. 2: 8); "sound words, even the words of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the doctrine which is according to godliness" (1 Tim. 6: 3); "the words of truth and soberness" (Acts 26: 25); "not in the words which man's wisdom teaches, but which the Spirit teaches" (1 Cor. 2: 13).

The New Testament gives instructions on the right manner of teaching and preaching. "Be ye therefore wise as serpents, and harmless as doves;" "be instant in season, out of season, reprove, rebuke, exhort with all long-suffering and teaching." "And the Lord's servant must not strive, but be gentle toward all, apt to teach, forbearing, in meekness correcting them that oppose themselves; if peradventure God may give them repentance unto the knowledge of the truth, and they may recover themselves out of the snare of the devil, having been taken captive by him unto his will," (2 Tim. 2; 24-26.) All things to all men, adaptable to conditions and circumstances, and not without law to God, but under the law to Christ, in order to gain or to save more. (1 Cor. 9: 19-23.) "Speaking truth in love." (Eph. 4: 15.) With his splendid elecution, perfect diction, glittering rhetoric, charming eloquence, and enrapturing delivery, the preacher without love is only as "sounding brass, or a clanging cymbal."

All preachers and teachers who have the love of God in their hearts, who in humility and meekness and in the Spirit of Christ desire to save souls, to be saved themselves, and to be approved unto God, will study the Bible in order to rightly divide it, to teach all classes and to treat all classes as the gracious Lord commands.

The man of self-assurance, self-importance, and egotism, and the worldly-wise man, is not qualified to preach the gospel of the meek and lowly Jesus.

If thou wilt thyself be borne with, bear also with another.—Thomas a Kempis.

Say not, "I am unfortunate," but rather, "I am fortunate that I have learned to bear this seeming ill so bravely."—Dodson.

Truth is the foundation of, and the reason for, perfection and beauty. A thing, whatever its nature may be, cannot be beautiful and perfect if it is not truly all that it cught to be, and if it has not everything that it ought to have.—La Rochefoucauld.

Married, Wednesday, November 19, 1919, at the home of the bride, in East Nashville, Mr. W. L. Cravens and Miss Elizabeth Mahon; Saturday, November 22, at the Russell Street church of Christ, Mr. Paul Climer and Miss Tressie Tygrett. A. B. Lipscomb officiated at both weddings.

Jesse P. Sewell writes from Abilene, Texas: "Please accept my congratulations on the excellent special numbers of the Gospel Advocate which you have recently given to us. I am sure that they will result in great good. I am glad to be able to report that our school is even better than any of us expected."

From J. H. Whisnant, Ames, Okla., November 15: "Since last writing we have moved from Coal Hill, Ark., to this place, where the brethren will support me for half my time, and I will devote some time to neighboring communities. Brethren who have lists of the Christian Literature Depository will please change the address to Ames, Okla."

From J. H. Lawson, Sherman, Texas, November 20: "I am now in a good meeting with Zion Church, near Weatherford, Okla. This is an excellent congregation, one of the oldest in Oklahoma. I have labored here in past years, and am glad to find them zealous for the old paths. This is my tenth meeting since July 1, including meetings in Tennessee, Texas, and Oklahoma. There is much to be done."

From John Allen Hudson, Oklahoma City, Okla., November 18: "Still the work grows here. One addition at the morning service last Lord's day. We have had additions every Sunday for several Sundays now. I have received letters from Muskogee, El Reno, Mangum, and many other places over the State in regard to our fifth-Sunday meeting on the fifth Sunday in this month. Every one who has written me says that he is coming. We expect a great day."

From F. L. Paisley, Memphis, Tenn., Route 6, November 19: "My last meeting for the season begins to-night with the Olive Avenue congregation. The McKellar Avenue congregation gave me, from its generous heart, two surprises this week—one, an increase in weekly support; the other, a nice suit of clothes. They and the Lord knew I could use both. His blessings be theirs. John W. Gill, of Allensville, Ky., realizing that my sermons need sweeten-Ing, recently sent me a pail of honey. I fear he missed his aim, as it had largely disappeared by the time for the next sermon. May his life be as sweet as was the gift."

From T. Park Burt, Commerce, Texas, November 17:

"It has been some time since I reported my work through your valuable columns, but I have been a reader of the good articles and reports of other brethren just the same, and am delighted to know that the cause of Christ is growing in our land. I have not been able to do much preaching for the last three months on account of the condition of my wife's mother, who is yet lying very low. This is hard on the preacher. But we are consoled with these words: 'All things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose.'"

From Willis G. Jernigan, Grand Junction, Col., November 17: "I was with the church at Olathe yesterday morning, and preached to a splendid audience. The brethren there seem to have the work at heart. They are expecting Brother Murrell, of Tennessee City, Tenn., to move into their midst in the near future. I am here to meet Sister Jernigan, who I am expecting to arrive from Los Angeles, Cal., to-morrow morning. We will then go to Dolores, where we are to make our home. I might add that my wife is still in very bad health. Brethren, remember us in the work at Dolores. The prospects seem good for a congregation in the near future. Send all donations to A. W. Arnold, Box 283, Dolores, Col."

The writer purchased a tent, thirty by fifty-one feet, which cost, including express, $256.39, and wishes to acknowledge receipt of, and to express thanks for, the following amounts: From the church of Christ, Hollis, Okla., $100; Miss Sallie Gillentine, Oklahoma, $10; Brother and Sister Overall, Livingston, Ind., $5; Brother and Sister Clyde Potter, Tennessee, $10; church of Christ, New Orleans, La., $50; church of Christ, Iota, La., $18.14; Brother Chambers, Louisiana, $4; Brother McQuiddy, Louisiana, $19.39; Brother Tobey, Louislana, $15; Sister Amy, Louisiana, $5; Sister Stephens, Louisiana, $5; Brother Taylor, Louislana, $1; Brother Robertson, Louislana, $1; Sister Meyaux, Louisiana, $1; Sister Whittington, Louisiana, $1; Sister Carnahan, Louisiana, $2. Total, $248.53. The balance was paid by myself. I hope to make good use of the tent next season.—A. K. Ramsey, Forest Hill, La.

Wanted-Ten good gospel preachers to come to Ontario, Canada, and preach the gospel. Salary, board and clothes. I am neither a prophet, the son of a prophet, nor a wizard, but I will not receive as many answers to my call as Brother Thurman. In three weeks I will give some reasons why there is a dearth of preachers. I am just home from a missionary trip to the rural community south of Collingwood, Ontario. I preached six times in the home of Edwin Fisher, which resulted in two being baptized, one from the Methodists. Brother Fisher and his good wife started to break bread in their home two or three years ago. They dedicated an upper room to the Lord, placing suitable chairs, table, chart, etc., therein. Here they began meeting, and invited their neighbors to come and study the Scriptures with them, and now there are about twelve or fifteen members there. I promised them that, the Lord willing, I would return next summer for a longer meeting. We need more men who will preach the gospel, and those who are preaching need to preach to the churches more than they have been doing. The churches will support the preachers when the preachers quit saying, "I don't charge." I would not preach to a church that is able to support me two days for nothing; if I did, I would be doing that church wrong. I have no time to waste on a stingy, tight-fisted church, and I want to say that the preacher that upholds that sort of a church is as bad as that church.-J. L. Hines.

The Need of a Modern Elijah

John T. Lewis Decries "Sissyism."

John the Baptist came in the spirit and power of Elijah, and the first words he ever spoke from God, words that resounded through the hills and plains of Judea, causing the "offspring of vipers" to "flee from the wrath to come," were: "Repent ye; for the kingdom of heaven is at hand."

There is a cry now going the rounds, "A dearth of preachers." The fact is, there has been a dearth of the Elijah kind for a long time. What the cause of Christ needs to-day is not so much an overcrop of preachers, but men in almost every congregation that will thunder away against sin and wickedness in high places. "Cry aloud, spare not, lift up thy voice like a trumpet, and declare unto my people their transgression, and to the house of Jacob their sins." (Isa, 58: 1.) If there were only a half crop of this kind of preachers, we would soon have living, active congregations all over the country, or, at least, what we do have would be living in a more healthful religious environment.

When Paul realized that his fighting days were over, he wrote to Timothy: "I charge thee in the sight of God, and of Christ Jesus, who shall judge the living and the dead, and by his appearing and his kingdom: preach the word; be urgent in season, out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort, with all long-suffering and teaching. For the time will come when they will not endure the sound doctrine; but, having itching ears, will heap to themselves teachers after their own lusts; and will turn away their ears from the truth, and turn aside unto fables." (2 Tim. 4: 1-4.) Has this time which Paul speaks of here ever come?

There is a cry now to "preach the word;" but who is saying anything about "reprove, rebuke, exhort, with all long-suffering and teaching?" Reprove what? Sin, of course. Rebuke what? Sinners, to be sure. Exhort whom? The indifferent, most assuredly. Who is doing it?

Twenty years ago the preacher that would go and hold a two-weeks' meeting for an old, established congregation, skin the sects "all from stem to stern," receive a contribution (all the congregation did toward the support of the gospel that year), then "write up" the meeting, mentioning the liberality of the congregation and speaking of a few of the old brethren by name, saying they reminded him of the old patriarchs-he was the most-sought-after preacher. But that kind of preaching is not wanted now. Sometime ago I heard two good brethren telling the kind of preaching they liked. "We want a preacher to preach the word,' and not be telling what the Baptists, Methodists. and 'digressives' (of course this last was the meat in the coconut) are doing." In other words, we must not even reprove the sin of division, nor rebuke the ones that cause divisions. (See Rom. 16; 17.)

The preacher that is in demand to-day is the one who preaches all the time on the goodness and mercy of God, telling sinners how God loves them, but never says anything about the "wrath" and "vengeance" of God. Sinners have about got to where they think that God is too good to punish them.

As the modern society woman thinks more of the charge and care of a poodle dog than she does of a baby made in the image of God, so the average congregation thinks more of "sissylsm" in religion than they do of the old Jerusalem gospel.

Whenever our preaching begins to cause sinners (in the church and out) "to flee from the wrath to come," we will begin to approach the suburbs of Jerusalem.

H. Leo Boles' Pen Picture of the Great Prophet.

It will be best to study the character and work of the ancient Elijah in order to determine whether a modern Elijah is needed. This we will briefly do. Elijah breaks suddenly into prominence during the reign of Ahab, king of Israel. He is presented in the history of Israel without any introduction, and his entire career is characterized with sudden movements, surprises, and astonishments. He appears in history like Melchizedek, without father or mother or descent. We know nothing of his childhood or his home; we know nothing of his family relation; he comes into view full-grown, developed and equipped for his mission. He bursts like a thunderbolt into the midst of Ahab's court and causes consternation to the wicked king and his idolatrous courtiers.

He is a plain man, wearing the skin of some animal and adorned with a mantle which is the badge of his prophetic office; he is a man of few wants and asks little of any one; he needs nothing that Ahab can bestow, and is too independent to receive anything from His Majesty. He is stern in manner, stern as the unbending truth. He is anstere in the presence of idolatry, and yielding to no suggestion of compromise with the sins of his age. He is aglow with enthusiasm for righteousness and after with indignation for idolatry. He stands unflinchingly before the enemies of God and hurls with precision his rebukes against the leaders of the people.

Elljah was more of a reformer or restorer than a prophet. He wrote no book; he predicted no distant event; he taught nothing new to the people. He is valued, not for what he said, but for what he did; he created or constructed nothing new, but destroyed; he made no advance in religious thought or piety, but restored the people from idolatry. His whole career, and not his words merely, was a revelation of Jehovah to Israel. He seems to leap upon the public arena in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, and denounces idolatry and predicts vengeance. He, like his great antitype, John the Baptist, has spent much time in solitude. It is said of John that he "was in the deserts until the day of his showing unto Israel" (Luke 1: 80.) Elljah spent much time in solitude. It is possible that this time was spent in intimate communion with God. Here he learned mere of the will of God and the nature of Jehovah than he could have done in the tents of ungodliness or the crowded, corrupted thoroughfares of the cities.

The kingdom of Israel had rebelled against the house of David and, under the leadership of Jeroboam, had formed a separate government. Dan and Bethel had been designated as places of worship in this northern kingdom, and idols had been placed at these sanctuaries, and wicked priests had taught the people to worship these idols during the days of Jeroboam. Jeroboam is succeeded by his son, Nadab; Nadab, by Baasha; Baasha, by Elah; Elah, by Zimri; Zimri, by Omri; and Omri, by Ahab. Throughout the whole length of the kingdom of Israel up to Ahab's relgn, a polluted stream of idolatrous worship ran side by side with the true worship of Jehovah. Sometimes this idolatrous current became so broad and deep that it gave color to the whole stream of the religious life of the people. The people were gradually alienated from the worship of Jehovan and practiced the worship of idols. When Ahab came to the throne, this idolatrous stream reached its highest culmination. Ahab married the Syrian princess, Jezebel, who hastened the climax of idolatry.

Her strength in wickedness and influence for idolatry are famous. Through her influence, for the first time in israel's history, religious persecution was practiced against the prophets of God. Idols and sanctuaries were put in all of the cities, and the people, partly through fear and partly through inclination, gave themselves wholly to idolatrous worship. This was the first time since the call of Abraham that a group of God's people had so unanimously given themselves to idolatrous worship.

Elijah appears on the scene and begins his stern reformation. Such a religious crisis always produces its hero. It becomes necessary for some one at such a time as this, who is endued with supreme energy and endowed with the courage of a hero, to bring the people back to Jehovah before the awful visitation of God destroys the whole nation. It is this work that gives lofty significance to Elijah's career. He at once attains the sublime altitude of Samuel in pleading Jehovah's cause and manifests the heroic greatness of Moses in restoring Jehovah's worship. Elijah stands as an example of brave and effective reform; he spared not the king or queen on the throne, nor the peasant in his hovel. He so impressed the lesson of reform that in later times, when moral and religious degeneracy came to Israel, the people looked for his return or for the appearance of one who in his spirit should denounce all forms of apostasy and idolatry, even though these were entrenched under the shadow of a throne or the holiness of a sanctuary. Elijah was not merely a patriot, reforming the state, but he was a servant of the Most High, calling upon the people to return to Jehovah. He had a higher wisdom than that of patriotism; he preached more than "civic righteousness," and his methods of reform were more effective than the counsels of statecraft. His work was that of a great hero. He saw what loyalty to the cause of Jehovah demanded, and became the champion of that loyalty, not by mere words, but by his life, Usually reformers begin with the masses and gradually work up to the classes. Elijah begins at the social summit. He stands in the court of Ahab, in the court of Jezebel, and hurls his philippies at royalty, which was the origin and cause of so much idolatry. If he could reform the king, this would enable him to destroy idolatry, as idolatry was sustained and protected by the throne. Like Moses before Pharaoh, he must be brave and bold in his denunciation. He must not compromise or spare any one. His fire must be concentrated upon the king, and must not be extinguished until idolatry is destroyed. The people must see that by the divine arm idolatry is destroyed; they must also see that as the divine arm is made bare, the divine heart is revealed; and they must be taught that Jehovah was greater and better than an idol, not because he could break down and destroy the idol, but because he could give that which the idol could not give-help in the day of trouble. God uses Elijah to bring the people back to him, that they may realize in him the blessings which were promised their father, Abraham, and repeated unto every hero of faith who had lived before their day.

At any time that a crisis comes in the history of God's people like unto this crisis, there will be need of a modern Elijah. Nebemiah proved to be an Elijah in the restoration of the worship when Israel had returned from Babylonian captivity. John the Baptist was a modern Elijah in calling the people to repentance. John denounced wickedness in later Israel. John, like Elijah, suddenly bursts out of the desert, and shouts: "Repent ye; for the kingdom of heaven is at hand," John stands before King Herod and denounces his wickedness, as Elijah had done before Ahab. John Knox, with the boldness of Elijah, stood before Queen Mary and denounced the wickedness of her age; Martin Luther stood before the ecclesiastic dignitaries of his day and sternly rebuked them with the spirit of Elijah, and stood firmly for liberty in Christ; Alexander Campbell stood unflinchingly before the leaders of denominationalism and demanded a return to a "Thus saith the Lord;" David Lipscomb stood humbly, yet firmly, in the spirit of Elijah, and opposed with might the departure from God's truth and the corrupting innovations in true worship.

Wherever there is a call to duty to-day, either in the public proclamation of the gospel or in the quiet walks of life, there is need for the boldness and the courage of Elijah. In the Christian's warfare there is a call to be strong in the Lord and to put on the whole armor of God. "Our wrestling is not against flesh and blood, but against the principalities, against the powers, against the world rulers of this darkness, against the spiritual hosts of wickedness in the heavenly places." (Eph. 6: 12.) There is a call for all Christians to be able to withstand in the evil day. The spirit and courage of Elijah is needed for this great task. The church is being weakened by the worldliness of its members and the ungodliness of their lives. The line of demarcation between the church and the world is not clearly drawn. There is need of a reformation in almost every congregation meeting for worship. There is need for a modern Elijah in every congregation who will restore the people from formal songs, prayers, sermons, and contribution; there is need of a modern Elljah to reform the social society of God's people and stay the onrushing tide of worldly pleasure; there is need of a modern Elijah to release from the bondage of style and fashion the saints of the Most High; there is need of a modern Elijah to rescue God's people from the lure of political ambition and the greed of commercial wealth; there is need of a modern Elijah to rescue the educational institutions of to-day from the blighting curse of infidelity. There is need of a modern Elljah in every child of God to-day.

"The Old, Old Story."

BY F. C. SOWELL.

Man cannot improve upon what God has said. He has expressed in words what man is to say and do for the salvation of the soul. His word should be heeded, respected, and loved. "For the word of God is living, and active, and sharper than any two-edged sword, and piercing even to the dividing of soul and spirit, of both joints and marrow, and quick to discern the thoughts and intents of the heart."

What God has said never grows old or stale. It gives new life to the inner man and refreshes the soul. When believed with all the heart, it makes brave and valiant soldiers. Therefore, Paul said: "For I shrank not from declaring unto you the whole counsel of God."

Strong faith and confidence in Jehovah will give courage to "contend carnestly for the faith which was once for all delivered unto the saints." If we hope to see peace and unity prevail in the church, every one who pleads in behalf of the Redeemer of the world must hide himself behind the cross of Christ and determine to know nothing but Jesus Christ, and him crucified. When this is done, we will be able to see the power and glory in the oneness of the Father and Son.

To effect these much-needed and essential results, it would be well for us to take Paul for an example: "And I, brethren, when I came unto you, came not with excellency of speech or of wisdom, proclaiming to you the testimony of God. For I determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ, and him crucified." (1 Cor. 2: 1, 2.)

While Jesus astonished the wise men at Jerusalem with his wisdom at the age of twelve years, yet his manner of teaching was so clear and explicit that the commonality of the people heard and understood. In the proclamation of the whole counsel of God, man will find there is a field for thought and study that will keep him busy all the time. There will be no time to be consumed in giving opinions and speculating on themes that do not concern the salvation of the soul. Search and seek diligently upon every subject the Lord has given for the betterment of the human family, then give it to the world in the spirit of meekness, humility, and love. Such teaching will be food for the soul and make men "strong in the Lord and in the power of his might." When one will familiarize himself with the word of the Lord and present it in the love of it, he need not put on any artificial magnetism to draw people, for the glorious gospel of the Son of God will have power to draw where salvation will be given. The one who stands on the walls of Zion should feel such a deep interest in the salvation of men's souls as to give such emphasis upon every utterance to impress the world that its salvation depends upon every word spoken. With this motive in view, he would feel and realize as did the apostle Paul when he said: "But though we, or an angel from heaven, should preach unto you any gospel other than that which we preached unto you, let him be anathema. As we have said before, so say I now again, If any man preacheth unto you any gospel other than that which ye received, let him be anathema." (Gal. 1: 8, 9.) With this solemn and serious thought in our hearts, we would not be led into presumptuous sins which drown men's souls in destruction and perdition.

The world should be turned upside down, and it can be when with united efforts we will use the means Jehovah has intrusted in the hands of men. Let us with true hearts and with love proclaim the whole counsel of God with that courage to serve God rather than men. Let it be sounded to the remotest bounds of the earth, that the religion of Jesus may blossom as a rose; and that no man should glory in the flesh, but that the name of the Lord be honored and glorified among men. Such a victory for truth and righteousness, it seems to me, would be enough to cause angels to shout again: "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace among men in whom he is well pleased."

Spiritual Service.

BY C. S. AUSTIN.

"I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, to present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable to God, which is your spiritual service. And be not fashioned according to this world: but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is the good and acceptable and perfect will of God." (Rom. 12: 1, 2.)

This language was written by Paul to the Romans. To these people this must have been a strange philosophy. They were accustomed to gratify every appetite of the body. The Roman nation lived in one continual round of sensual pleasure. Now the apostle writes to the congregation at Rome that they are to crucify these sensual indulgences—to present the body. In this they could reflect the life of Christ, their Leader. We are to-day surrounded by just about the same conditions of living that prevailed in ancient Rome. We are drunken on the pleasures of the world. The whole tendency is toward world-liness, indulgence, gratification. The simple Christian life, with the passions of the flesh controlled, curbed, even crucified if necessary, is almost out of the question now.

That we have a spiritual entity that dwells in the body during this life is evidently the teaching of the passage above quoted. This should control the body. The spirit is the master and the body is the servant. That is the meaning of Paul's "outward man" and "inner man." Our spiritual nature is born in conversion and should grow stronger and stronger as the body weakens with age. The man that allows the passions of the body to rule his life makes a mockery of Christianity and runs an awful risk of being a moral wreck besides.

Paul says this is our spiritual service. Then there is spiritual service and fleshly service. He says in Rom. 7: 18: "For I know that in me (that is, in my flesh) dwelleth no good thing: for to will is present with me; but how to perform that which is good I find not." This, I am sure, is the experience of all that are in the flesh. To will is present: to make good resolutions, to make high determinations for good, is relatively easy. But to do the good that we have planned is the acid test of righteousness. We plan to be liberal in our contributions to the Lord's work, but covetousness comes unawares and we do as we did hefore the good resolution. We plan to control our temper, but the temptation catches us unguarded and we go off In a rage. Some have a craving for strong drink. They sometimes resolve to quit; but some temptation comes, the appetite of the body overcomes the good intentions of the soul, and they drink again. Men become literally slaves to the passions of the body. "Who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" Read the seventh and eighth chapters of Romans.

The body is a sacrifice-a holy sacrifice. "Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth, while the evil days come not, nor the years draw nigh, when thou shalt say, I have no pleasure in them." (Eccles. 12: 1.) To really sacrifice the body, it should be done while the body is strong, young, and vigorous. It is not a sacrifice when one waits until the course of nature is almost run, until the passions no longer burn within him, and then presents his body to the Lord. The Jewish sacrifices were the best of the animals-young, healthy, clean, without spot and blemish. The man or weman who brings into subjection the lusts and passions of a strong body has won a victory that will count for personal holiness and, indirectly, for the upbuilding of families, communities, and nations. The greatest battles are not fought on the mighty battle fields of the world, but the real issues of life are forged in the fires of combat in ourselves-spirit against body-and on these battles depend the destinies of mankind.

"Be not conformed," says the apostle. The chief trouble with the church of Christ to-day is that its members are conformed to the world. Worldliness is the sin of God's people to-day. Cases of gambling, swearing, and drunkenness are found among Christians. In some of our congregations a few (usually young ladies) dance. This is as surely a work of the flesh as the fact that there are works of the flesh. The desire to do these things comes not from an ardent spiritual nature, but from the passions of the flesh. They are worldly, and one who practices them is conformed to the world.

"Be ye transformed," he further says. Be made unlike the world. The disciples of Christ while he was here on the earth were peculiar. He was peculiar. To be converted to discipleship meant a re-creation. It meant a giving up of the world, with the last of the flesh, the pride of life, and the pride of the eye. When we obey the teaching of Christ and the apostles, we will be Christians indeed and in truth; not like the world in wickedness, but reflecting the pure and holy life of our Master.

The denizens of that celestial world are to be the spirits of just men made perfect. This life is a great school. We educate our spiritual nature. We learn the lessons that will qualify us to enter the perfect life beyond. We can enjoy that life only when we have lived after the Spirit here. There is nothing sensual or fleshly there. May we learn our lessons well, so we can say at the end, "I have finished my course," and enter into that great spirit world fitted for the companionship of the pure in heart.

CATARRH DOES HARM

Whether It is of the Nose, Throat, or Other Organs, Get Rid of It.

Catarrh of the nose or throat when it becomes chronic weakens the delicate lung tissues, deranges the digestive organs, and may lead to consumption. It impairs the taste, smell and hearing, and affects the voice. It is a constitutional disease and requires a constitutional remedy.

Take Hood's Sarsaparilla, which by purifying the blood removes the cause of the disease and gives permanent relief. This alterative and tonic medicine has proved entirely satisfactory to thousands of families in three generations.

If there is biliousness or constipation, take Hood's Pills,-they are a thorough cathartic, a gentle laxative.

The Romantic Story of Southland's Favorite Shoe, EzWear

Some five years ago, a prominent citizey of South Carolina, visiting New York on important business, chanced to meet the maker of a shoe built on new and unnsual lines; an enthusiastic admirer of its moslistinctive features, ease and comfort, had suggested the name EzWear; it was promptly adopted. The business man from the South, knowing how welcome such a the South, knowing now welcome such a shoe would be in his part of the country, urged that its remarkable qualities, in cluding not only comfort, but style, durability and economy, be made known there. That this has been effectively done is proven by the enormous demand that has sprung up in the South for EzWear shoes. It is said that its sale there during the last twelve months has increased fully three hundred per cent. The distributor, Mr. fundred per cent. The distributor, Mr. I. R. The Model Preacher.

BY JOHN R. WILLIAMS.

During my life I have seen many preachers that I thought were model preachers and some I thought to be otherwise. I know a man who at one time was considered a first-class preacher. He quit preaching. I asked him why he quit. His reply was: "My idea of a model preacher was so far above what I was that I became discouraged and quit."

Webster says: "Model-that by which a thing is to be measured; standard, pattern; example, etc."

Before we can find a model preacher, we must first find that by which he "is to be measured." If we desire to know that our conversion is scriptural, we compare it, measure it, by the model, pattern, or example given in Acts of Apostles, as there we find conversions by which to compare our

The same is true of the church. God has furnished us with a model, a pattern, by which we can compare, or measure, the church of to-day. The same is true of elders and deacons of the local congregation. When we compare, or measure, the elders and deacons of to-day by the model, or pattern, that God furnished, we find but few model elders and deacons. They simply do not fill the measure of that by which they are measured.

To find the characteristics of the model preacher, we go to the word of

1. The model preacher must be faithful and able to teach others. "And the things which thou hast heard from me among many witnesses, the same commit thou to faithful men, who shall be able to teach others also." (2 Tim. 2: 2.) Faithful to God, the Bible, the church, humanity, and to himself and family.

2. The model preacher must have sense enough to know how to handle the word of God. "Give diligence to present thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, handling aright the word of truth." (2 Tim, 2: 15.) "Take heed to thyself, and to thy teaching. Continue in these things; for in doing this thou shalt save both thyself and them that hear thee." (1 Tim. 4: 16.) By these things we should compare, or measure, ourselves. The preacher that observes these things, to that extent is a model preacherone who will benefit the world.

3. Another characteristic of the model preacher is the manner of life. "Let no man despise thy youth; but be thou an ensample to them that believe, in word, in manner of life, in love, in faith, in purity." (1 Tim. 4; 12.) Inwardly and outwardly-clean in thought, word, and conduct. The preacher that becomes an ensample in these things, to that extent is a model preacher.

4. The model preacher does not entangle himself in the affairs of this life. "No soldier on service entangleth himself in the affairs of this life; that he may please him who enrolled him as a soldier." (2 Tim. 2: 4.) Many a good preacher has lost his influence with the church and the world by becoming entangled in the affairs of business, money-making, politics, etc.

5. The model preacher has an aim -a purpose-in life. "Yea, making it my aim to preach the gospel, not where Christ was already named, that I might not build upon another man's foundation." (Rom. 15: 20.) The aim of this model preacher was quite different to the aim of many preachers of the present day. The aim of many modern (not model) preachers is to seek for pastures green, where everything has been made ready by some poor, faithful preacher who thought only of converting men and women and building up the dear old church of God.

I know another man who quit preaching. When asked why, his answer was: "I have noticed those among us who are called the 'big preachers,' and they always go to the families that feed best and the congregations that pay best. They never go into the waste places-among those who live hard and are not able to pay but little." Sometimes, not always, this is true. I have never yet met with an ex-preacher who became discouraged and quit on account of a model preacher.

6. The duty of the model preacher: To "preach the word; be urgent in season, out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort, with all long-suffering and teaching." He should be able to comfort and console the aged and infirm: he should be able to encourage and arouse the young to greater efforts in life; a lover of God and of lost souls, doing all he can for the world that will make it better-to "keep the unity of the faith in the bond of peace." Such, I think, is a model preacher.

Let the tongue be palsied that would charge the gospel with making men eraven-hearted.

There can be no grand national life without courageous citizenship.

A Baby In Your Home

Science Discovers Remarkable Tonic Influence for Sterility-A Subject of Absorbing Interest, Fully Explained to Every Childless Woman Who Will Send Her Name and Address.

One of the most remarkable results ever attained in the use of a medicinal product is the effect of Steriltone for the constitutional weaknesses that cause sterility or barrenness.

A Baby Is the Most Wonderful, the Most Interesting of Life's Hopes and Ambitions.

Ambitions.

It seems to most people almost incredible that this can be accomplished. A host of married couples yearn for children, but nature seems to have been strangely unfriendly. Travel, recreation, careful living, and medicinal treatment have all uiterly falled heretofore, not only for sterility, but for the constitutional conditions or weaknesses responsible.

But now comes Steriltone, that exerts an influence so profound in its workings that the entire system seems lifted up, renewed, and rejuvenated. The sense of health, of well-being, of strength is so pronounced that when there is no mechanical obstruction, sterility, due to such causes, may cease, and thus dull, uninteresting, perhaps unhappy, homes may be transformed into wonderful palaces by the advent of bables.

This subject is so important, the results will mean so much to many women, that satisfaction in the use of Steriltone is fully guaranteed.

Every childless woman who would overcome the condition should consider the health of the condition should consider the condition and the condition the latest the condition that condition the condition the condition the condition that condition the condition the condition that condition the condition the condition that condition the condi

Every childless woman who would overcome the condition should consider it her first duty to know what Sterlitons is and why it should be so wonderful an aid to her. This is fully described in a little book sent free by sealed mail in a plain cuvelope.

Help Mission Points.

RY W. J. JOHNSON.

A report of contributions to the work here will be given later. Let the brethren not think that the work here is being liberally helped by contributions from churches elsewhere. Responses have been few. Shall the work here suffer because of a lack of liberality among the brethren? Shall preachers go forth practically at their own expense to preach the word in destitute places and when they ask for help be ignored? May churches awake to their duties that they may receive blessings from the Lord. (Acts 20: 35.) Some are active and are receiving much fruit to their account. If one waits for the other, nothing will be done for the work of the Lord.

Do not think that too much is being done for the missionaries. They are sacrificing much, doing without many things that they actually need that they may preach the word in its purity where it has not been preached. Let the brethren remember that these are attributes of the Christian character and cannot be dispensed with: "In love of the brethren be tenderly affectioned one to another; in honor preferring one another; in diligence not slothful; fervent in spirit; serving the Lord; rejoicing in hope; patient in tribulation; continuing steadfastly in prayer; communicating to the necessities of the saints; given to hospitality."

The brethren here are doing all they can to finance the work. Will you not come to their assistance, so that they can do more to spread the word in the surrounding country? Our church house must be erected at once. Send contributions to me at Amite, La., and they will be acknowl-

BY J. O. BARNES.

The trustees of the church of Christ at Lake City, Fla., are glad to make the following report of the work on the new house and contributions received since last report:

The work on the building is progressing splendidly, and the brethren are bravely and faithfully standing by us with their prayers and purses, and God is in our midst; hence the victory is sure, but not yet ours, for we must press on a while longer before it is accomplished. In the words of courageous Caleb, "let us go up at once and possess it; for we are well able."

LESS MEAT IF BACK AND KIDNEYS HURT

Take a Glass of Salts to Flush Kidneys if Bladder Bothers You

Eating meat regularly eventually produces kidney trouble in some form or other, says a well-known authority, because the uric acid in meat excites the kidneys, they become overworked, get sluggish, clog up, and cause all sorts of distress, particularly backache and misery in the kidney region, rheumatic twinges, severe headaches, acid stomach, constipation, torpid liver, sleeplessness, bladder and urinary irritation.

The moment your back hurts or the kidneys are not acting right, or if the bladder bothers you, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good pharmacy, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days, and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity; also to neutralize the acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts cannot injure any one. makes a delightful effervescent lithiawater drink which millions of men and women take new and then to keep the kidneys and urinary organs clean, thus avoiding serious kidney disease.

The St. Louis Work.

Eight more contributors to the St. Louis building fund have been secured since our last report, seven for $1 per month each and one for $5 per month for thirty-six months, which makes $43 of the $230 per month necessary, in addition to the contributions of our own congregation, to raise $10,000.

One brother has written us suggesting that, to obtain quick results, we ask one hundred brethren to assume an obligation of $100 each; and he stated further that if we would do this he is ready to contribute that amount himself. How many more will do so?

We are very much encouraged by the interest manifested so far by those who have agreed to contribute, and hope soon to be able to report that our building fund is definitely assured.

How much can you, your family, or your congregation promise? If $5 or $10 per month, it will mean a great deal to us; or if only $1 or more per month, it will be appreciated just the Funds for the Church at Metropolis, Ill.

BY J. OSCAR PAISLEY.

I wish to report what has been contributed by the brethren to the church of Christ at Metropolis, Ill., to help put up a house of worship in this little city that the truth may be firmly established here. Received from the Nashville brethren some time ago, $10; church at Pryorsburg, Ky., $6.55: Brother F. L. Paisley and wife, Memphis, Tenn., $2; Brother Calvin Farmer, Dixon Springs, Ill., $1; church at Hazel, Ky., $10.

For all this we are thankful to God through Christ and the brethren, the church. We will gladly and thankfully receive all other help, for it is badly needed at this place to help the truth to shine in the darkness of Southern Illinois.

Let Not Idleness Prevail.

BY PRIDE E. HINTON.

Why is it that there are so many people even in this fair land of ours who have never heard the gospel in its purity? Is it because the church of Christ does not possess that faith which "worketh by love?" (Gal. 5: 6.) And is this condition due to the fact that we preachers have failed to declare the whole counsel of God. which produces this faith? (Rom. 10: 17.) And this love by which faith works-what is it? "For this is the love of God, that we keep his commandments." (1 John 5: 3.) Brethren, can we not see such commandments as Matt. 28: 19, 20 and Mark 16: 15, 16?

I verily believe if all Christians would study carefully the following scriptures we could easily compare the idleness of the church to-day, as a rule, with the teachings of the Holy Spirit on this subject and find the answer: Rom. 10: 14, 15; Gal. 6: 6; Phil. 4; 1 Cor. 9.

Finally, brethren, let us be "not unwise, but understanding what the will of the Lord is" (Eph. 5; 17), and do it (Matt. 7: 21).

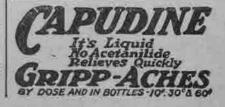

I am a young man, only twentytwo years old, and have been preaching only a few months. I now preach three Sundays in each month. I am planning to go to the places where the glorious gospel has never been preached; and these places, brethren, abound right here in my own State. If any of the brethren desire my services, address me at Hanceville, Ala., Route 2. As references, I give the following elders of the Sulphur Springs congregation, of Hanceville: Alonzo Night and Brooks Fanning.

Fort Smith, November 18 .- The meeting at Francis, Okla., closed without visible results, save one reswithout visible results, save one restoration. Rain hindered very much, it having rained every day we were there except three. The meeting was a failure, so far as I could tell. I was asked to return next spring. From Francis I went to Price's Chapel, near Sallisaw, Okla., for a mission meeting. We had very good attendance, the weather considered. This was my third effort at that place. Six were baptized in the other two meetings, but no visible results two meetings, but no visible results this time. This is a strong Holiness this time. This is a strong Holiness community. However, so much truth has been preached that they were un-able to raise a "shout" in their last meeting. I preached at nome meeting. Our audiences are increas-sonday. Our audiences are increaspreached at home last Sunday. Our audiences are increasing, and we are planning greater things for the future. I will be at home next Sunday; then I have a singing normal to teach in Van Buren County, after which I will be with the church at home for winter and spring.—Will W. Slater.

Lake City, November 17. — The writer was with the Antioch church of Christ, at Starke, on last Lord's day, the 9th. I preached three times to a small, but earnest, congregation, resulting in three accessions to the one body there.—J. O. Barnes.

Georgia.

Atlanta, November 17.—I preached at Borden Springs, Ala., yesterday. Meetings were held morning and afternoon. A long table was built in the church yard some years ago. This table was burdened with "good eats" by the sisters of the church, and all the people were urread to stay and all the people were urged to stay and eat heartily. The congregation is wide awake and doing a fine work.— John A. Klingman.

McGregor, November 18.—Brother J. P. Prevatt, of Valdosta, has re-cently closed another tent meeting of days' duration, which resulted in three more noble souls obeying the gospel. Two of these were a man and his wife from one of the denom-inations and the other a little four-teen-year-old girl. The people still seemed very much interested and seemed very much interested and came to every service. The song services were led by Brother Jasper Copeland, also of Valdosta. Brother Prevatt is to preach here again the first Lord's day in December. Our little band is gradually increasing. We believe Brother Prevatt to be doing a grand work here, May the Lord bless him.—Vina Hooper.

Checotah, November 18.-Brother R. H. Johnson, of Booneville, Ark., and Brother Frank Grammer, of Bonham, Texas, have just closed a ten-days' meeting here, which re-sulted in a congregation of the church sulted in a congregation of the church of Christ being organized with thirty-four members. We have rented the Presbyterian church house, and had our first meeting in it last Sunday. Brother Johnson did some good preaching, and Brother Grammer is an excellent singer. He is now teaching a school three miles north of town. We are thinking of having a thirty-days' tent meeting here next summer.—Charles L. Speir.

Meno, November 17.—I closed a meeting at Antioch, near Ames, on Wednesday night, with one added. I went home Thursday and spent two days, and found our oldest son at home. He has been in the United States Navy for almost four years. He has made twenty-eight trips across the ocean. We are certainly rejoicing that he is with us again. I had to leave them all Saturday evening and begin a meeting near Meno. I will go next to near Wellston. My Heavenly Father certainly has blessed me mentally, spiritually, and physically. I have done some hard work this year; have held fourteen protracted meetings, am now in the fifteenth, meetings, am now in the fifteenth, and still have another after this one; have baptized seventy-eight persons, and thirty-four or thirty-five returned to their first love; and held one de-bate. But unto our God be all the praise, and, with a humble heart, I am indeed thankful to him and press on.—J. W. Ballard.

Jewell.

Sister Amanda Anderson was born on April 30, 1858; was married to D. D. Jewell on October 20, 1883; obeyed the gospel more than forty years ago; and departed this life on October 23, and departed this file on October 25, 1919. Sister Jewell was one of the best women I ever knew, always ready to do her part as a Christian. The writer has known her for several years, and can truthfully say that a Christian woman has fallen. Though she has gone out from us, her godly life will live on. She leaves a good, Christian husband and one son behind, together with a host of friends, to mourn her death; but we will not mourn as those who have no hope, for John said: "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city." Brother J. T. Bentley speke words of comfort to those left behind. Look up, my Christian com-panions, for our Lord is coming again. Let us be ready to meet him when he comes. R. C. LEDBETTER.

Melton.

On October 21, 1919, the angel of death visited this community and took away Brother Luke Lee Melton. Brother Melton was born on April 20, 1845, and was seventy-four years. six months, and one day old at the time of his death. He was married to Paralee Powell about fifty-two years ago. Seven children were born to this union, of whom two boys and two girls survive. He made the good confession about fifty-six years ago, and since that time has ever been faithful since that time has ever been faithful to his Master's cause. When Brother Melton first moved to Gassaway, there was no church here. He went to work to have a church house built, and by furnishing six hundred dollars himself we now have a good house in which to worship. He has been an elder since the establishment of the church. He never allowed business to church. He never allowed business to interfere with his religion, although the Lord blessed him with worldly goods. Brother Melton is greatly missed by his home congregation and all of his neighbors. He was ever ready to help the cause of the Master. He spent some of his time preaching at his home congregation preaching at his home congregation and others in this county. During his ministry he married two hundred and seven couples. We are sure that his work will continue to do good, although he is resting from his labors; and those who knew him best will most lead to be a large form the Master's deeply feel his loss from the Master's vineyard. May God help and comfort his loved ones, and may they ever strive to meet him in that home where God "shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away." ROBERT S. FITE.

Abernathy.

Robert Campbell Abernathy was born on August 18, 1854, and departed this life on October 23, 1919 He had been a member of the church of Christ gospel about twenty-five years. Brother Abernathy's father was for a number of years a Baptist preacher, and the son accepted that doctrine at an early age. Some years ago he related to me how he was, as he expressed it, turned out of the Baptist synagogue for dancing." Returning to his home one night at a late hour, he recognized his father's voice at prayer. Standing shivering at the door, he listened to the prayer, the burden of which was a father's earnest plea for the reclamation and restoration of his wayward boy. "This," said he. "was a turning point in my life. I could never get away from that prayer." Some time after this he and his father "learned the way of the Lord more perfectly." and both became able proclaimers of the gospel and defenders of the truth. Brother Abernathy was a man who could do almost anything he chose to do, but never specialized in anything. I have often thought he should have been one of our ablest preachers. However, he chose to follow other vocations and to preach at or near home as occasion demanded. After funeral services, conducted by the writer, at the church at Ethridge, Tenn., where our departed brother had worshiped and preached a number of years, the remains were laid to rest in the village cemetery. The funeral was attended by a large gathering of sorrowing friends and relatives, who brought their flowers, shed their tears, and mingled their voices in expressions of love and sympathy. survived by his wife, two sons, two daughters, one stepson, two brothers. and three sisters. Thus, for a while, ve bid adieu to another of our noble fellow laborers in the Lord.

On entering a large house the eye is caught by a little placard which appears with surprising frequency in every room. It is a charge to employees and consists of three words: "Do It now." The young man who is inclined to think that to-morrow will do as well as to-day for a certain piece of work, who is sure that there is "no hurry" about something else, and that this other trifling duty can wait until he has more leisure, finds himself continually confronted by this silent warning, eloquent through Its repetition: "De it now."

Some of you need to adopt this motto as your own. Postponement is the refuge of indolence. Work is no easier for being undertaken to-morrow instead of to-day. It is the accumulated tasks that fret and tire us and overstrain our nerves. The Scarcity of Preachers.

BY J. T. S.

There have been some articles in the recent issues of this paper, from Brethren C. M. Stubblefield, Charles L. Talley, and S. H. Hall, about the scarcity of preachers and the reason

That there is a scarcity of preachers no one doubts. Many have been the calls for preachers. The fact that the brethren at College Grove published their need of a preacher is some proof that they are scarce. College Grove is less than seventy-five miles from Nashville. Brother Hall said something like twenty-six preachers answered the appeal from College Grove. This seems that there are plenty of available preachers; yet Brother Hall's mind is unchanged about the dearth of preachers. He believes preachers are scarce. Let us look at this just a little. These twenty-six preachers who answered the College Grove brethren's appeal were either busy holding meetings or laboring with some congregation or they were not. Now, if they were not holding meetings or working with some congregation, there were twenty-six preachers idle, or they were engaged in some other work for a living. If they were driven from the field and forced to do other work in order to live, what was it that drove them to this work to live but the lack of support and the hearty cooperation of the congregations? Then, Brother Hall is correct when he says that "preachers are not supported as they should be." If, on the other hand, these twenty-six preachers were busy holding meetings or working with a congregation, they either wanted to locate or change locations, and, in either case, there is no proof that there are plenty of preachers; for if there had been plenty of preachers, the brethren at College Grove surely could have got one without publishing their need for a preacher.

Now, to show you that there are very few preachers, we give Brother Stubblefield's statement as follows: "I have written numbers of letters of inquiry, to which I invariably receive the reply: 'I know of no one at present whom I can recommend." Now, if preachers are plentiful, we must say that there were none of them that could be recommended by the persons who replied to the number of letters of inquiry for preachers. But, believing as we do that the persons who answered the number of letters of inquiry for preachers meant that there were no available preachers to recommend for the place, that is proof that there are few preachers.

But what about the twenty-six preachers answering one call? We give, as we think, the solution of this, what Brother Hall says: "I am quite sure that among the number who wrote Brother Thurman are some of our best preachers-men who, doubtless, would be glad to remain where they are, but who are not receiving one hundred and twenty-five dollars, with the promise of more if needed. But they need more, sorely; and the only way they can get it is to quietly move to where they pay more, else ask for a raise. As a rule, preachers had rather move, if they can get more by moving than to ask for a better support where they are," We add: Indeed, a preacher would rather quietly move away than to stay where he is and ask for a raise, and the congregation not willing to grant it. Brother Hall continues: "Just as certain as I am now writing, this is one of the troubles. Where are the congregations that raise a preacher's support of their own accord? Some do, but they are few. Where are the congregations that have increased the preacher's support in keeping with the ever-increasing high cost of living? Some have, but they are few."

Preachers of the gospel are entitled to a living. "Even so did the Lord ordain that they that proclaim the gospel should live of the gospel." Cor. 9: 14.) Brethren, do you believe this? In this matter do you show your faith by your works, or is your faith in this dead, being apart from works? It seems to me that some one has robbed God when the preacher is not supported.

There are many preachers that are engaged in other things to stay clear of debt and to support their families. Why should a preacher be poorer than the members of the congregation for which he preaches? Some congregations think that the preacher should be a respectable pauper and keep in pace with other men and stay out of debt, while they withhold their means, thereby robbing God and driving the preachers to other fields and other work for a living.

To put the matter of supporting the preacher to a test, we ask: How many preachers who have preached regularly do you know that own their own homes? When you find them, you will see they are few in number. There may be several, but we know of none who have been able to own a home, to say nothing of the necessary conveniences of life. We will go a little further, and ask: How many preachers have made a living preaching for congregations? If we are correctly informed, the preachers whose names are mentioned in this article and who have preached for congregations have at times had to engage in other work to meet expenses, some of them spending considerably more than the congregation was paying them. This surely does not sound like congregations support preachers. About how many preachers do you know who have had a good support for their labors? About how many preachers do you know who are now and have been engaged in some other work to make a living? A careful investigation of these questions will reveal the true situation of the matter.

Preachers usually have less, give more, and do more than most members of the church. They make the sacrifices, deny themselves of many things they could have were they in any other calling. But few preachers own their own homes. They visit the sick, preach the gospel to the poor, bury the dead, and grow poorer. while most of the members grow rich, own their homes, automobiles, and have other pleasures and conveniences of life. Most of the preachers are capable of doing other things which will make them as independent as any member of the church, but they forbear that the souls of men may be saved. To-day almost any ordinary common laborer makes more money than a preacher. What is the matter? Ah, it is plainly seen. Let the congregations which have supported their preachers as they should have been supported speak up, and we will hear from only a few. We know that some members do all they can do in giving and otherwise, but they are individuals. Yet we ask: How many individual members have done all they could and have given of their means as much as they should? We think, too, they are few.

It is thought that preachers have an easy time and get plenty of money, and for that reason they are rich. Brother, let us ask this question: You who think a preacher has plenty of money, how did he get it? If all the members would give as much to the preacher as you give, would be be rich? How long would it take him to get rich if all should give as you do? Think over this matter and judge righteously and act wisely.

We would say to Brother Stubblefield that if the congregations would, as the College Grove congregation, offer a preacher a living-not only one hundred and twenty-five dollars per month, but more-then the congregations will likely get some of the brethren that answered the appeal at College Grove or the congregations would be able to keep the preacher they have.

Wonderful Egg Producer

Any poultry raiser can easily double his profits by doubling the egg production of his hens. A scientific tonic has been discovered that revitalizes the flock and makes hens work all the time. The tonic is called "More Eggs." Give your hens a few cents' worth of "More Eggs," and you will be amazed and delighted with results. A dollar's worth of "More Eggs" will double this year's production of eggs; so if you wish to try this great profit maker, write E. J. Reefer, poultry expert, 3258 Reefer Building, Kansas City, Mo., who will send you a sesson's supply of "More Eggs" tonic for $1 (prepaid). So confident is Mr. Reefer of the results that a million-dollar bank guarantees if you are not absolutely satisfied, your dollar will be returned on request and the tonic costs you nothing. Send a dollar to-day. Profit by the experience of a man who has made a fortune out of poultry.

The Largo (Fla.) Meeting. BY T. B. THOMPSON.

Beginning on October 12, I had the inestimable pleasure of assisting the church at Largo, Fla., in a meeting, which continued twenty-two days and resulted in adding eighteen to the church. This place is the home of Brother W. A. Cameron, whom the church loves and whose life has won for him an enviable reputation in the community for good. I made his home my home while there and enjoyed it very much. Brother Cameron's wife is a true helpmeet indeed. The church, as a whole, is progressing splendidly, and I predict for them a great future in the Lord's work. I was informed that the church there had passed through many troubles, resulting in serious setbacks at different times; but now they seem to have overcome and are ready to go forward. Any preacher who may have the good fortune to be called to assist this church in a series of meetings will be treated royally by the whole church. They remunerated me to an extent entirely satisfactory. They seem to have a mind to come behind in nothing. They are given to much charity work. They pray, "Lord, enlarge our hearts toward the poor and needy," and then work as they pray.

At the close of the meeting, Brother Cameron, after a meeting of the church, which I was not allowed to attend, reported to me that I had been unanimously requested to return for another meeting, beginning the first Lord's day in October, 1920, to which request I gladly yielded.

I am at this date in a meeting with the church at Jacksonville, Fla. This is the home of Brother Willis H. Allen, who labors with the church here. Pray for us that we may have a great meeting.

Eggs Paid the Pastor

Mrs. Lona McBroom, Woodbury, Tenn, writes: "I've got more eggs than I ever did in my life, paid my debts, clothed the children in new dresses, and I paid my pastor his dues. I have money to spare now. More Eggs' is the remedy for me. I sold 4214 dozen eggs hast week, set four dozen, ate some, and had 114 dozen left."

E. J. Reefer, the poultry expert, discovered the wonderful tonic, "More Eggs," that revitalizes the flock and makes the hens work all the time. You need this great agg producer. It means big agg profils for you. Don't delay. Send $1 to E. J. Reefer, $255 Reefer Building, Kansas City, Mo., and he will send you a season's supply of "More Eggs" tonic. A million-dollar bank guarantees that if you are not absolutely satisfied, your dollar will be returned on request. Send a dollar to-day. The Old Gospel.

Everything which is best in the world is old. Sunshine is as old as the earth itself, as old as the sun when the fire mist was rounded into an orb, the same to-day playing on our streets as when it played on the bowers of Paradise. The air is old, pouring its refreshing currents into our lungs and renewing our life to-day as in all time past. The great arch of the heavens is old; it has not been taken down and built up again on modern brick work since the creation. The doctrines of the gospel are old, but full of motion, full of energy, as the river is full of movement; full of life-giving power, as the sunlight and the vital air. They are the doctrines out of which the missionary work sprang. They are the doctrines of Paul, that first great missionary. He had strong convictions. He did not doubt. He knew in whom he had believed and was persuaded that he was able to keep him and to save the world. And who is the successor of Paul! He who holds the same faith with him and teaches it with the same earnest fidelity. This is the true apostolic succession.-Selected.

Trion, November 18.—On the after-noon of the 16th I closed an eightdays' mission meeting in the Meth-odist house of worship at Tyner, Tenn., ten miles from Chattanooga. There are only three disciples there—
Mrs. W. W. Major, wife of the principal of the High School at Tyner;
Miss Bessy Edmondson, from Nashville, teacher in the Grammar School; ville, teacher in the Grammar School; and a Mrs. Harris. The trio worships regularly in Sister Major's home on the Lord's day. Sister Edmondson was asked by some one if she did not fear she would be unpopular in being so exclusive. She answered that she would rather be unpopular than to neglect her Christian duty. Upon such fortitude and resoluteness to be faithful to duty the duty. Upon such fortitude and resoluteness to be faithful to duty the conversion of the world to divine truth and righteousness depends. Disciples from Chattanooga will meet with them in their worship after this. Congregations of Wilson County, Tenn., and the St. Elmo congregation gave liberal financial support to the meeting. Several from Chattanooga and suburbs helped by their presence at some of the services. We plan to have a tent meeting at Tyner in the summer of 1920, and we feel confident of happy results.—Flavil Hall. of happy results .- Flavil Hall.

Christ's Saving Power.

Great is Christ's saving power. Has it, then, no limits? It has more than most imagine. It is limited by the freedom of the human will, so that there are more sins committed than sins forsaken. Is he able to check the natural consequences of sin? The repentant sinner may be forgiven, but that does not rebuild the burned barn, restore the stolen money, bring back to life the murdered victim, cure the disease caused by the sin, or heal the sorrow. SAGE AND SULPHUR DARKENS GRAY HAIR

It's Grandmother's Recipe to Restore Color, Closs, and Attractiveness

Almost every one knows that Sage Tea and Sulphur, properly com-pounded, brings back the natural color and luster to the hair when faded, streaked, or gray. Years ago the only way to get this mixture was to make it at home, which is mussy and troublesome. Nowadays, by asking at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," you will get a large bottle of this famous old recipe, improved by the addition of other ingredients, at a small cost.

Don't stay gray! Try it! No one can possibly tell that you darkened your hair, as it does it so naturally No one and evenly. You dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two, your hair be-comes beautifully dark, glossy, and attractive.

Acceptable Obedience.

BY W. L. REEVES.

Questions are helpful to lead people to think in a systematic, edifying way; so I propound some for the reader's benefit.

- 1. What does obedience mean?
- 2. Why is it necessary?
- 3. What does its necessity prove relative to the one superior Being?
- 4. In religion, who only should be obeyed?
 - 5. Who must obey?
- 6. What is real acceptable obedience?
 - 7. When obey?
 - 8. What results from obedience?
- 9. What results from disobedience?
- 1. Obedience means service rendered in strict compliance with commandments or with the law specified.

2. It is necessary, because all blessings involved come to the subject through that channel, and that alone. To man, all things exist and consist by law. Conformity to law-or obedience, labor, expenditure of force-is certainly portrayed in all material things. The earth, the sea, the trees of the forest, the animal kingdom-in fact, the whole universe-affords invincible evidence that labor, or force, has been expended. All works of mechanical art-such as steam engines, electric machines, the great ships of the sea, houses in which we live, even down to clothing, books, pencils-everything-give evidence that labor has been expended in strict obedience to the law necessary to the production of each one. It is God's order that such must be, and it is not in the power of man to conceive another way. So it is relative to Christ's system of religion. The resultsrewards-involved can be reached in no other way than through obedience to the commandments which Christ has given. "He became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him." (Heb. 5: 9.) "In every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him." (Acts 10: 35.) It is necessary to obey Christ because he has made it so.

3. The need for obedience on the part of man in order to obtain certain blessings is evidence beyond dispute that there is a power over hima power superior to him; therefore, a supreme Being, who is the source of this power and of the laws, natural and spiritual, through which such power operates. From the fact that anything, animate or inanimate, exists for a time and then is changed by some force over which it itself has no control, we are honor bound to admit that there is a superior Intelligence who directs this power in its operations. That man, with his superior intelligence, must obey certain

Famous Old Recipe for Cough Syrup

Easily and chesply made at home, but it bests them all for quick results.

Thousands of housewives have found that they can save two-thirds of the money usually spent for cough preparations, by using the well-known old recipe for making cough syrup at home. It is simple and cheap but it has no equal for prompt results. It takes right hold of a cough and gives immediate relief, usually stopping an ordinary cough in 24 hours or less.

Get 2½ ounces of Pinex from any druggist, pour it into a pint bottle and add plain granulated sugar syrup to make a full pint. If you prefer, use clarified molasses, honey, or corn syrup, instead of sugar syrup. Either way, it tastes good, keeps perfectly, and lasts a family a long time.

It's truly astonishing how quickly it acts, penetrating through every air passage of the throat and lungs—loosens and raises the phtegm, soothes and heals the membranes, and gradually but surely the annoying throat tickle and dreaded cough disappearentirely. Nothing better for bronchitis, spasmodic croup, hoarseness or bronchial asthma.

Pinex is a special and highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract, known the wough over for its healing effect on the membranes.

Avoid disappointment by asking your druggist for "2½ ounces or Pinex" with full directions and don't accept anything else. Guaranteed to give absolute satisfaction or money promptly refunded. The Pinex Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

laws, proves the existence of an Intelligence far above that possessed by him; and assuredly this Intelligence is supreme, for man is possessed with intelligence superior to all known created beings. From this we conclude that this necessary obedience which we must render is unto that supreme Being whom we call "Jehovah God."

4. This brings us to Question 4. The gospel is of Christ; and when man obeys it, he obeys Christ, who gives eternal life unto all who obey him. (Heb. 5: 9.) Christ alone makes free from sin. Man is made free when he obeys Christ. (Rom. 6: 16-18.) Then he alone must be obeyed.

5. Who must obey? All who wish to enter into the kingdom of heaven. "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." (Matt. 7: 21.) All who wish to live forever must obey Christ. "If a man keep my saying, he shall never see death." (John 8: 51.) None can enter into the kingdom of God but those who have been born of water and of the Spirit. (John 3: 5.) The invitation is: "Whosoever will." (Rev. 22: 17.) "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." (Mark 16; 15, 16.)

6. Real acceptable obedience does not consist in just the abstract acts

FOOT TROUBLES

No Need of Them, Says Brooklyn Man, Who Has Evidently Solved a Big Problem.

According to the testimony of hundreds of people living in the southland and elsewhere, J. R. Simon of 1589 Broadway, Brooklyn, N. Y., has successfully developed a system of shoc building having for its prime object the conquering of foot and shoe troubles. It appears that Mr. Simon's establishment has become national head-quarters for people whose feet require his quarters for people whose left require his remarkable comfort shoe, known as the EzWear, but obtainable only of the in-ventor. Mr. Simon's new catalogue shows several hundred shoes that combine comfort with style at amazingly low prices and is now ready for free distribution.

alone. Paul said: "And though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor, . . and have rot charity [love], it profiteth me nothing." (1 Cor. 13: 3.) Again, he says it is faith which works by love that profits. (Gal. 5: 6.) Obedience must be of a willing mind, by faith, prompted by love. done as service to God and not unto men. (Col. 3: 23, 24.) Christ said: "But in vain they do worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men." (Matt. 15: 9.) The commandments of Christ, done in the right motive, is acceptable obedience to God.

7. There is but one time to obey. Man cannot obey yesterday; it has passed forever. He cannot obey to-morrow, for that has not come. "Behold, now is the accepted time: behold, now is the day of salvation." (2 Cor. 6: 2.)

8. The results of obedience are remission of sins here, a better life lived on earth, and an everlasting home in heaven hereafter.

9. Disobedience results in sorrow upon sorrow here and a casting away from the presence of God into everlasting punishment hereafter. (2 Thess. 1: 7-10; Matt. 25: 46.)

Paul, the Preacher.

BY J. J. VANHOUTIN.

Jacob, in his dying hour, said: "Benjamin shall ravin as a wolf: in the morning he shall devour the prey, and at night he shall divide the spoil." (Gen. 49: 27.) There never were but two very great and noted men of the tribe of Benjamin. The first was Saul, the son of "Cis." He did very well for a while, but finally died in open rebellion against God. Jacob's prophetic blessing cannot apply to King Saul. The next great man of the tribe of Benjamin was Saul of Tarsus, a city in Cilicia. He is also called "Paul," that being from the Greek word "Paulus," while "Saul" is from the Hebrew word "Saulus," while in our own language we say "Paul." He is the only man to whom the language of Jacob can be applied. In his early public life he appears to have acted in the capacity of what we would call "sheriff." He was to the church about what a wolf would be to a flock of sheep. You have read about his work in putting Christians in jail and making havoc of the church. That was in the morning of his life's work. Paul was honest and thought he was doing right in devouring the prey. Jesus knew that he was ignorant of the right way; hence he called him that he "should know his will." He then called Ananias to go to Saul and tell him what the Lord required him to do. How heartbroken and grieved Paul must have been when he learned the truth of the gospel! What a change! From that time on to the close of his wonderful life he would willingly divide the last dollar he had with those Christians who were in want, and thus he fulfilled the prophecy of Jacob in his dying hour.

Paul, as a preacher to the Gentiles. was foreordained and spoken of in prophecy by Isaiah; and after Paul had preached to the Jews and they had rejected his preaching, he said: "It was necessary that the word of God should first have been spoken to you: but seeing ye put it from you, and judge yourselves unworthy of everlasting life, lo, we turn to the Gentiles. For so hath the Lord commanded us, saying, I have set thee to be a light of the Gentiles, that thou shouldest be for salvation unto the ends of the earth." (Acts 13: 46, 47.) The prophecy which Paul applied to himself is in Isa, 49; 6. By this it appears like the destiny of the Gentile race was placed in his hands; and, since his day, no preacher has ever excelled him.

Recipe for Gray Hair.

To half a pint of water add one ounce of bay rum, a small box of Barbo Compound, and one-fourth of an ounce of glycerine. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it at home at very little cost. Full directions for making and use come in each box of Barbo Compound. It will gradually darken streaked, faded, gray hair, and make it soft and glossy. It will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy, and does not rub off .- Advt.

"Baptists vs. Campbellites." No. 14. BY M. S. MASON.

After saying some very fine things about the visibility and invisibility of church and kingdom, he had to spoll it by saying the family and the church, or kingdom, are different states. Let us offer two proofs on this proposition. In 1 Tim. 3: 5 we read that the church is "the house of God." The house is the family, So the church is the family of God. Jesus says that when we are born again we enter into the kingdom. (John 3: 5.) To be born again is to become a memher of God's family, as to be born the first time makes us a member of our father's family. But, as the church and kingdom are the same, as Mr. Bandy admits, and as to come into the kingdom is to come into the fam-By, and the kingdom and the church are the same, then the church and the family are the same.

Mr. Bandy does, however, state a great fruth by saying that union with the church and coming into the kingdom and being regenerated are all the same identical process. How he can maintain that idea and stay with the Baptist Church, I do not know; for they say there are people who are regenerated and born into the kingdom who are not members of the Bantist

On page 22 Mr. Bandy begins with a criticism of Luke 17: 21, saying it should not read, "the kingdom of God is within you," but "among you." That may be so; but "translation" may be abused, and it is certainly a favorite method of modern commentators to avoid what does not suit their purpose. I am quite sure that what Jesus meant was that the elements which go to make up the kingdom were constituent elements in their make-up; the possibilities of the kingdom were in them. "The kingdom of God is not meat and drink: but righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost." (Rom. 14: 17.) He says something relating to the visible church which is commendable.

He also gives some effective arguments against the Old Testament church and the New Testament church being the same institutions.

He then concludes the chapter on page 23 by contending that he does all this for the sake of the Baptists. Sorry he has so much zeal for God, but not according to righteousness.

Mr. Bandy now presents the Baptist order of the items of salvation, which he very confidently declares is the gospel order. He says at the outset these were practiced before the first Pentecost, which, of course, takes them out of the province of es-

Rome's Greatest Material Monument.

The debased stage was too tame for the Roman. It might have been sufficiently immoral, but it was not realistic enough to suit his coarse, war-ridden nature. His craving for blood found an outlet in the most shocking form in which any race has ever found amusement. While Rome has everywhere left witnesses of the blessings she conferred upon the world, ruins of amphitheaters in dead cities will rise up in the day of judgment against her. Is it the irony of fate that her greatest material monument extant should be the Colosseum, the place where human beings fought one another and wild beasts for the entertainment of the populace? Gladiatorial shows were given at the public games and at the banquets of the rich. The combatants were slaves, criminals, or captives. Even freemen entered the arena, so great was the glory of successful combat. Exhibitors vied with one another in the numbers exposed to slaughter. Cæsar put up three hundred and twenty pairs at once; Agrippa caused seven hundred pairs to fight in one day in Berytus; Titus, "the darling of the human race," put up three thousand; Trajan amused Rome for one hundred and twenty-three days by exhibiting ten thousand captives in mutual slaughter. Blindfelded men fought to the amusement of the crowd. Domitian introduced a novelty by compelling an army of dwarfs to fight. That the whole truth be known, let it be said that the ancient woman was not one whit behind her medern sister in athletic prowess. Even female gladiators, especially under Nero and Domitian, appeared on the arena. When we read of such events, all of which have been authenticated, we can better grasp Paul's meaning when he says "their senseless heart was darkened." We can see the realism of his figure when, writing of his own experience at the hands of wicked men, he said: "I fought with wild beasts at Ephesus."

Shocking Irregularity in Sexual Relations.

Coming now to the third test of civilization, we find in the domestic life and the relation of the sexes shocking irregularity. Woman has always occupied a high place among the Jews. But this is not true of Rome, and still less true of Greece. "We have." says Demosthenes, "courtesans for our pleasure, concubines for the ordinary requirements of the body, wives for the procreation of lawful issue and as confidential domestic guardians." I cannot explain how the women stood for this state of affairs, but they dld. The Greek was not attracted to home life: he preferred the company of men out of doors and that of courtesans. The courtesans, unlike the modest and ignorant Greek wife, were women of culture and refinement, who could talk intelligently on art and politics, could sing and make preity jokes. No shame attached to any connection between married or single men and these courtesans. Pericles was not ashamed of his Aspasia. Socrates visited his Theodota, taking his scholars with him. Some of the most beautiful creations of art were copies of courtesan models. Men would go to law to determine possession of one of these women. Divorce became very common. Mencould put away their wives for the slightest cause, and women could as easily put away their husbands. Seneca tells us of women who marked their chronology by the names of their husbands rather than by the consuls.

Abortion and Divorce.

The Greeks and Romans regarded children usually from the utilitarian standpoint. As they saw the matter, children belonged to the state rather than a private concern. Hence, they were educated and trained with a view of service to the state. Is not our military-training policy looking in the same direction? Abortion was widespread in all classes among the Greeks and Romans. There was no law against it. The Greeks liked small families. Do the Greeks stand alone in this respect? All weak and deformed children were killed or exposed to death. Senecatells us they were drowned like kittens. It was not unusual for a husband, when starting on a journey, to say to his wife: "Be sure and destroy the baby if it is a girt." Tertullian, one of the most brilliant writers of this age, says: "How many among you, even in the magistracy, destroy your children: you drown them, or expose them to die of cold or hunger, or to be eaten of dogs!" made a business of collecting foundlings. Some would cripple the little ones that they might be used as beggars; some would rear them as slaves; some would keep them to become prostitutes. There were witches who pleked them up to use their brains and bones for magical pur-Doses.

Human Life a Hell.

I might write still more of the terrible vices of the ancient world, but surely I have described enough to convince the candid reader that Paul's picture was not a bit overdrawn. It was true, awfully true. Matthew Arnold, in his "Overman," describes it:

On that hard pagan world disgust And secret loathing fell: Deep weariness and sated lust Made human life a hell.

Was there ever a world that needed a Savior more?

Was there ever a time in human history when it suited better for him to come?

But let it be not forgotten that even in that dark period there were a few brave souls who had not bowed the knee to Baal

New Testament Teaching on The Kingdom.

BY JAMES E. SCOBEY,

For years past I have read time and again discussions in reference to the kingdom and the church, some of the writers contending that the kingdom and the church are one and the same institution, others contending that there is a difference between them. One of these views is right, and, if so, the other is wrong.

I have endeavored to study the subject so as to form a conclusion in entire harmony with the teaching of the Scriptures. There is no truth known with reference to the matter except that which may be learned from the statements made by the writers of the New Testament.

With reference to the time when the kingdom and the church were established, it has been, and still is, a matter of controversy. We will do well, in the examination of the subject, to free ourselves from prepossession and prejudice in favor of, or against, the interpretations of the Scriptures and opinions of any of the older teachers or of the more recent, would-be leaders of religious thought.

There are those who claim that the church began with Abraham. Some others claim that Jesus instituted, or set up, his church in the days of John the Baptist. There are others who claim that the church was set up on the day of Pentecost. Now, it is quite evident that all these three positions cannot be true. It is absolutely certain only one can be true, and because two must be wrong does not prove the third right. If neither position can be sustained by the evidence clearly and definitely stated by the Scriptures, then all three must be wrong. If this were the case, then, if Jesus Christ has a church, it could not have been established in the days of Abraham or John the Baptist, nor on the day of Pentecost.

The word "church" is found only three times in the Scriptures before you reach Acts 2: 47, and these three times in the Gospel of Matthew (16: 18: 18: 17.) Jesus said to Peter, when he confessed him the Son of God: "Upon this rock I will build my church." Evidently it had not been in existence before that time, neither did it exist at that time. John the Baptist had been beheaded some months before. Therefore, the church was neither set up nor had a beginning in the days of Abraham or John the Baptist. But God added to the church daily, both on Pentecost and afterwards, those that were being saved; and God is now adding to the church those that are being saved.

Jesus, after his baptism by John and his temptation by the devil, began to preach the gospel of the kingdom. John had preached the same gospel when he said to the people: "Repent ye: for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." Jesus chose his apostles and sent them to the lost sheep of the house of Israel, preaching and saying: "The kingdom of heaven is at hand." He also taught his disciples to pray, "Thy kingdom come," and told them to "seek . . . first the kingdom of God, . . . and all these things shall be added," Jesus would teach them that the coming of the kingdom was more important for them than food, raiment, and the things of the world. He said to his apostles: "Fear not, little flock: for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom," (Luke 12: 32.) "And I appoint unto you a kingdom, as my Father hath appointed unto me: that ye may eat and drink at my table in my kingdom, and sit on thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel." (Luke 22: 29, 30.)

It was prophesied by Isaiah that Jesus should have a kingdom; "Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even forever." (Isa. 9: 7.) Daniel also said: "In the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed: and the kingdom shall not be left to other people." (Dan. 2: 44.) The angel which appeared to Mary said to her: "Thou shalt . . . bring forth a son, and shalt call his name Jesus. He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest: and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David: and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end."

Now I wish to inquire whether these prophecies and promises have ever been fulfilled. That they have I am quite sure; for the Savier himself said, just before his ascension from Mount Olivet: "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth." He needed then only to ascend to heaven to be crowned "King of kings, and Lord of lords," to wield the scepter of universal empire. Forty days after his resurrection he was with his disciples, speaking to them of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God. The apostles still had the thought of a temporal kingdom; for they asked him, saying: "Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?" It seems that they wanted power in the promised kingdom. He directed them to tarry at Jerusalem until they were endued with power. (See Acts 1.) Now, when the day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all of one accord and at once place. Then the power Jesus had promised came to them in the baptism of the Holy Ghost. Jesus had been crowned, and Peter and the other apostles were empowered to go into the world and induct men and women into the kingdom. It was now the kingdom of heaven. Peter was delegated to open the door of the kingdom on Pentecost, and about three thousand souls entered. They had been translated into the kingdom of God's dear Son. Peter was also delegated to open the kingdom to the Gentiles at the house of Cornelius. Jesus is now head of all principality and power (Col 2: 10, 11), and Christians are citizens of a heavenly commonwealth (Phil. 3: 20.)

There has been, and still is, some confusion and discussion as to whether the church and the kingdom are identical or not. As I understand the Scriptures to teach the truth on the subject, I feel sure the kingdom is one institution and the church is another. The church is the body of Christ. It is founded on him as the Son of the living God. This great and all-important fact which Peter confessed was not made known to him by flesh and blood, but, as Jesus said, "by my Father which is in heaven." A wise man builds upon the rock; a foolish one builds on the sand. Jesus built his church on the rock—the fact that he was the Son of the living God. A great many suppose they can open the doors of the church. Peter did not have a key to open church doors; he had the keys to the kingdom.

Jesus, as soon as he was crowned, was King, and his disciples were constituted a church. There were many churches (congregations), and each one was called a 'church." We do not read about the kingdoms of Christ, but we do read about "the churches of Christ." There may be many churches, but one kingdom. All the congregations of Christians in the world form, or constitute, the church of Christ. The church was built by Christ to extend his kingdom. It is the acting, working power of the kingdom. We do not read about a heavenly church, an overlasting church. It is an institution belonging in the world, and composed of men and women translated into the kingdom. Some people seem to think that the church is a kind of door, or vestibule, by which the kingdom may be entered.

Upon the day of Pentecost, Jesus built his church; and three thousand who had been translated into the kingdom, God added to the church. The church contains, or is composed of, Christians, once aliens, or sinners, who have become citizens of the kingdom. There are many who do not belong to the church, who are in the kingdom. All who are saved and those who need no salvation are in the kingdom. Infants and all irresponsible beings who have souls are not in the church, neither was the church built to save them; but they are not, and never were, lost, aliens and strangers to God. Jesus himself bears testimony to the fact that little children are pure and spotless, without sin and condemnation. "Of such is the kingdom of heaven," he said.

God gave Jesus the kingdom, and he will rule until he subdues all enemies, and the last enemy will be death. Then he will deliver up the kingdom to God, the Father, that God may be all and in all. In this kingdom will be all who are entitled to eternal life, whether they have been members of the church or not. All members of the kingdom are not in the church, but all in the church are in the kingdom.

The Need of the Hour.

BY I. B. BRADLEY.

The crying need of the hour is men. In every phase of life it is men that are needed. The business world is demanding men-men who are fitted for their work. The labor problem-the differences between labor and capitalis one of the most difficult to solve. There are plenty of men, but not of the kind who will or can fill the places where needed. The church needs men who are efficient for the work, both in the congregations and in the mission field. Recently, in the Gospel Advocate, there has been a call for a man to go to the assistance of the brethren and sisters who are struggling to build up the cause of Christ in Denver, Col. An efficient, prudent man is wanted for the work in Rochester, N. Y. There are many churches in the towns and cities that are calling for men to fill the pulpits and teach the churches-to do the work of an evangelist.

Where are all the preachers, and what are they doing? Have they decided to take a vacation, or have they resigned to go into a more lucrative work? Some one has recently said that there are two thousand less active preachers in the church of Christ than there were twenty years ago. What is the reason? The Bible schools were in their infancy twenty years ago, and not many men had been turned out from these schools. But in the years since there have been several hundred men graduated from these schools and fitted for the preaching of the gospel. Why are they not preaching to-day? What has caused the dearth of such men in the church?

There is more need for well-qualified, faithful, dependable men now than ever before. The unsettled conditions of society, the ease of money getting, and the desire for pleasure and the gratification of appetite have made it necessary to have firm, solid men to teach the word of God and guide the destinles of men: men who are settled, not easily turned aside; men who are content with enough for necessary uses, not full of greed for filthy lucre; men who love righteousness and truth, not the praises of the world; men who have the courage of conviction, not cringing cowards and timeservers; men who will do their duty, not sluggards and slackers; men who will work in the face of difficulties, not seeking an easy place; men who believe in God, not the god of this world.

It cannot be that the churches have all quit, gone out of business. There are more calls to-day, it seems to me, than there ever were before. Speaking from a personal knowledge, there is a greater demand for work now than for twenty years. All the preachers of any ability, who are actively engaged, have all their time spoken for several years ahead. The churches are calling as they never did before. Perhaps the churches are not meeting the needs of the preachers so that they can devote their time to the work, but must needs turn aside to other things to secure the necessary support for their families. Is this the reason? Have the churches been supporting the preachers adequately, and are the preachers just "greedy of filthy lucre" and, like the horse leech, crying, " More, more;" or is it true that the congregations have not done their duty to the preachers and they have been forced to engage in other things to obtain what they must have? There is something or somebody at fault, it is quite evident. Let us turn the search light of God's word in upon ourselves, both the congregations and the preachers, and find where the trouble is; then, by the grace of God, let us correct the wrong and set the matter right.

If every member of the church will do his duty, will render a faithful account of his stewardship, there will soon be means to double—yea, treble—the number of preachers in the work. The cails will be answered, the churches will be strengthened, the mission fields will be entered, and the cause of the Master will flourish again and many souls be gathered into the harvest of God.

The sectarian world is to-day placing before the church of Christ some powerful examples from a financial viewpoint. Almost all the larger denominations are raising large sums of money to further their school work and their church activities. Their missionary efforts are growing, their religious propaganda is increasing, and their free literature is being scattered broadcast over the world. The Adventists alone sold and gave away more than two and a half million dollars' worth of their books and tracts last year. When they cannot sell a book or tract, they give it away. The church of Christ is behind everything. Do her people love money more, or the souls of men less, than those of the sects? Do we think that the world is going to pass by the attention and interest of the sects and come to us for the truth? Do we think that, because we have the truth, we do not need to be concerned about other people? Do we think that God will work wonders and make the people come to us and supplicate us to give them the truth? Does not the very fact that we have the truth make it more our duty to bestir ourselves to give it to the world? Does it not obligate us to spend our money, our time, and our talent to get it before the world to take it to them? Must we not "break the bread of life" to the world, lest souls perish that we might save? Yes-a thousand times, yes. It obligates the man who can preach, to preach; the man who can write, to write; the man who can make money, to make it, and then to spend that money to help carry the gospel to the lost and dying, by the printing press and the consecrated tongue. Let the preachers all teach more by voice and pen along these lines. Let Christians all, everywhere, get on their knees and confess to God their negligence and unfaithfulness, then arise to study the word of God as never before to learn what his will is. Then let us all do with our might what God wants his people to do. Souls will be saved, the church will be strengthened, congregations will be built up, and God and Christ will be glorified in us. May the Lord help us to do our duty.

Why Continued and Undiminished Relief in the Near East Is Imperative.

The war is not over-in the Near East.

Peace is not signed-with Turkey.

Conditions to-day are much the same as before the armistice, except that in some regards they are worse.

Another year has added to the depletion of the resources of the refugees.

Repatriation of the Armenians is as yet impossible.

Turks still hold their homes. Attempted return means death.

The only earthly possession of many of them consists of the tattered remnants of the garments which they wore when driven from home in 1915.

Many little children have but a single garment to cover their nakedness and to protect them from the bitterly cold winter of the high plateaus around Mount Ararat.

Empty flour sacks, bearing the names of well-known American firms, are improvised as clothing for children. Dresses are made of old army tent canvas. Rags are used as shoes.

A member of the Harbord Mission, cabling to the Associated Press, summarizes the situation in four words: "It was misery unadorned."

These people are universally recognized in normal times as the most thrifty, industricus, and prosperous people of the Near East, but they have now been for four years exiled or fugitive from their ancestral homes.

Their last vestige of negotiable property has been sacrificed for food and protection.

Self-support at present is wholly impracticable despite the natural thrift and industry of the people.

Practically all flour and food staples are now toming through American relief. The total supply now in prospect will last only a few weeks at most.

Hundreds of tons of cast-off clothing from America could be used immediately. Some provision must be made for approximately thirty thousand tons of foodstuffs beyond present stocks, or there will be the greatest harvest of death from famine that has yet been known by this martyr pation.

Thousands—tens of thousands—of Christian refugees did die of starvation in this area last winter and spring. Our American Relief Commission reported one hundred and ninety-two bodies, victims of starvation, picked up from the streets of one town in one day.

Tens of thousands of others will perish this winter if help is not given quickly.

Herbert Hoover, whose knowledge of the world food situation is unsurpassed, says: "In my opinion, in the Near East is the most desperate situation in the world."

Private philanthropy is the only salvation for these helpless, stricken people:

- 1. Until a treaty of peace is signed, not only with Germany, but with Turkey, Germany's ally.
- Until under the League of Nations or other auspices a responsible government is established.
- Until this responsible, benevolent government has time to bring order out of chaos and repatriate these victims of the world war on their ancestral lands.

A commission composed of eight representative Americans, Dr. James L. Barton, chalrman, has just returned from a thorough investigation of every relief station in the Near East. These representatives report that at least one hundred million dollars would be required to reestablish these refugees in their homes on a self-supporting basis.

The immediate requirements, however, for the absolute necessities of life during the winter months, caring for the orphans, the rescued women and girls, the continuation of medical work, and material for industrial relief for refugees, call for a minimum budget of thirty-four million six hundred and sixty thousand dollars. Until some government comes to the rescue this amount must be provided by private philanthropy, or starvation and death on an unprecedented scale will sweep away tens of thousands of these Christian women and children.

Of children alone, there are a quarter of a million, many of whom, having lost both parents, do not know their own names.

American and British officers, thoroughly familiar with conditions, estimate that not more than twenty-five per cent of these refugees can survive through the winter except as help is given by the allies, with whom and for whom the Armenians fought, but from whom they have not as yet received deliverance from their enemies.

In sending contributions, be sure and state whether they are intended for the Home Orphans' Fund, the Armenian and Syrian Fund, or the Poland Fund. Make all checks and money orders payable to A. B. Lipscomb, who will forward them to the proper commissioners.

"If Not, Why Not?"

BY J. P. SEWELL,

In the Gospel Advocate of October 16, in an appeal for funds for David Lipscomb College, Brother E. A. Elam calls attention to the large sums of money being raised at this time by the Methodists, Baptists, and Episcopalians, and gives a quotation from the Atlanta Constitution, in which gifts of several individuals, including a Mr. M. H. Wolf, of Dalias, Texas, are mentioned. After commenting on these, Brother Elam says: "We cannot expect any one person to give to the school a million dollars or even as much as a hundred thousand dollars, but are there not some who can give several thousand?" Now my question: "If not, why not?" There are among our brethren men who possess as much wealth as the men who are making these large donations to the work of the various denominations.

I know personally Mr. M. H. Wolf, who has given a hundred thousand dollars to the present Baptist campaign, and who gave fifty thousand dollars to a special campaign during last year. In fact, Mr. Wolf is a personal friend of mine. He is not a man of exceptionally large wealth. I know numbers of our brethren who are worth far more money than Mr. Wolf. I know a former patron of David Lipscomb College who is worth several times as much money as Mr. Wolf is worth. Now my question again. If Mr. Wolf can give a hundred thousand dollars to this Paptist campaign, why cannot this disciple of Christ, this former patron of David Lipscomb College, with several times as much wealth, give a hundred thousand dollars to David Lipscomb College for the promotion of real Christian education? I am afraid that our wealthy brethren have been encouraged in keeping their wealth, or at least that they have not been taught the "whole counsel of God" in respect to using their wealth in Christian service. I am afraid that there are men connected with the churches of Christ who are thus connected because they consider this the cheapest way to heaven. They are, perhaps, unconscious of this fact themselves, and are possibly not altogether to blame. A great deal of our public teaching has had a tendency to belittle the idea of big giving and to lead people to understand that they may be members of the churches of Christ in good standing and give as they "purpose in their hearts," even if they purpose to give practically nothing. I do not believe that there are more liberal people on earth than the poor people among the churches of Christ, but my observation is that very few of our rich people give anything, comparatively speaking. If Methodists, Baptists, Episcopallans, Presbyterians, etc., can give vast sums of money for denominational missions, benevolence, and education, why may we not expect Christians only, who are worth as much money, to give as much? Many times as much money as is being asked for for David Lipscomb College should have been forthcoming in a very short length of time. There was a time when we could tell the truth and say, "We are few in number, poor in this world's goods, but rich in faith," and I notice that we continue to use this statement. We have no right to do so. It is not the truth. We have grown into a vast multitude of people; we have in our possession vast wealth; and if we do not give to the world a service in keeping with our numbers and wealth, all of our professions of loyalty to God will avail us absolutely nothing when we stand before his judgment. Again I say: "If not, why not?"

BY R. P. THURMAN.

Sometime in October I put a call in the Gospel Advocate for a preacher, wanting him to locate in our midst and labor for four congregations. I am sad to say that I have heard from twenty-seven preachers. I also stated that we would pay at least one hundred and twenty-five dollars a month. The question might be asked why it made me feel sad to bear from so many. Because it shows, as Brother Hall says, that they are not being supported. Why is it that our people will sit down on the stool of do-nothing and cry out, "We have the truth," and never have a man to locate and teach it to the people, while all the denominational churches have a preacher? I want to say to the preachers who have answered my call that I would be glad if I could find a needed field like this one for every one of them with a good salary.

I have known a few preachers who lived in town and who would go to the country on Lord's day and preach one sermon, go back to town on Sunday evening or Monday morning, and then walk the streets the rest of the week. I do not think this is in harmony with the word of God.

Out of the twenty-seven preachers whom we have heard from, there are many able and worthy ones. The one that the brethren seem to know best and I think would suit our field is Brother S. M. Jones, of Beamsville, Ontario, Canada. If it is the Lord's will and nothing prevents, we are expecting him to reach here about the last of this month (November). We thought it best for him to come and talk the matter over with the brethren. The greatest trouble, I fear, is finding a house.

As I have not been able to answer all the calls personally, I hope every one will read this and that it will be sufficient. I will here say that there have been several things that have come up that have tried to down us in our efforts to locate a man here, but, by the help of God, we trust we will succeed. We feel greatly encouraged, as there have been so many able preachers who seem to be in favor of this kind of work, such as Brethren S. H. Hall, C. M. Stubblefield, and G. W. Riggs.

Making Matters Plain.

BY CHARLES L. TALLEY.

In the "Query Department" of the Gospel Advocate of November 13 there appears a kind of a puzzle to some, and especially to myself. On this matter I, too, desire a little more light. As Brother McQuiddy rightfully states, the question is so simple and the course so very clear that an answer is wholly unnecessary.

However, there is in the matter, if the matter is correctly stated, quite a serious charge-"denied the privilege of partaking of the Lord's Supper in the evening." The fact that she was denied this privilege is stated, by whom, however, is left out; but the conclusion must be from what is said, and the place must be Cookeville, Tenn., for this seems to be the place from the post office given. Now, proceeding along the line that my conclusion is correct, we will proceed to try and make matters plain. The charge that the church at Cookeville denied any one the privilege of partaking of the Lord's Supper must be wholly incorrect. I have lived here and labored with this church for almost a year; and while it is by no means perfect, yet in it are some of the best-informed and best-qualified persons that I have had the pleasure of meeting with. In the time that I have been associated with them I have found that it is and has been a custom of the congregation to do the very thing that this accusation charges them with being guilty of and neglecting. I myself have, since coming here, gone with brethren and sisters into the home of a sick sister and so ministered to them.

Now, how shall we treat this matter? First, I will say that here is hoping that there is a mistake in the heading. I would not have given the matter any attention, were it not for the fact that one of the most widely known and best-acquainted brethren called me into his office. making inquiry as to when and why this was done. At this juncture came in one of the elders, one that is clerk of the board and has the roll of membership, and there is not a person by the name known to the congregation at this place. So, as to the matter, "to refuse a sister the Lord's Supper" after she had come eighteen miles in order "to break bread" seems to be a fact that is not made plain. I will say for the sake of this sister, or any one else, so far as that matter is concerned, that the Lord's Supper is set and partaken of in Cookeville every Lord's day at or very near 11:45 A.M., and that she or any other follower of the Christ of God is very gladly welcome to partake of same.

In order that we may be helpful in "making matters plain," we cheerfully print, in full, the note containing the query to which Brother Talley refers. Here it is:

Cookeville, Tenn., September 17, 1919.—Brother J. C. McQuiddy: I want to know if one is absent on Lord's day and cannot get to church in the morning, working out, and has to come on the train to get there, and wants the Lord's Supper in the afternoon, and the Lord's Supper be at one of the members' house, and one man be present and two or three women, would it be right to give it to them or not? We had a sister to come eighteen miles to get the Lord's Supper, and was refused. Was it right?

"Forgotten 'Conscientious Objectors,""

BY E. A. E.

The Laterary Digest, November 1, gives an article written by Mr. William C. Allen on the treatment "conscientious objectors" have been and are still receiving at the hands of the United States government, with editorial comments.

There were different classes of objectors to the world war, but Christians have to do with but one kind-namely, themselves, who believe that the spirit, teaching, and mission of Christ forbid their engaging in carnal warfaredevastation, bloodshed, killing human beings by the milllons, hurling souls unprepared into eternity, and making widows, orphans, and helpless cripples. Christians have no connection with and no sympathy for the class that would undermine the government, destroy law and order, and live in anarchy. Those who confuse Christians-true and genuine Christians-people who in faith in Christ and implicit obedience to him follow the teaching of the New Testament-with the class called "socialists," "radicals,"

"anarchists," etc., have read but little and have thought less. There can be no more law-abiding, order-loving, peace-maintaining, righteous, and profitable citizens of any government than Christians. The New Testament teaches this. It is sad and strange that in the last decade or two but few preachers and writers in religious journals, if any at all, have undertaken to present the clear and full teaching of the New Testament on the relation of Christians to whatever form of government under which they may live, and the law-abiding, quiet, tranquil, peaceable lives they must live, and for the very purpose, as one thing, to convince the governments themselves of the great good and beauty of Christianity. Have preachers and writers failed to do this or withheld this teaching purposely? Do they not know this teaching themselves? But we give the article from the Literary Digest. Let each one read It and note carefully its declarations and the sad facts stated,

Let us not think this is "a dead issue" or "a past incident." An old relic of the Civil War said to me a few months ago: "Let bygones be bygones and quit referring to these things [war issues]." But this is not a by gone issue so long as Christians live on the earth, civil governments exist, and there are wars and rumors of wars. "Can Christians use carnal weapons and engage in war?" will be a question to be decided according to the teaching and spirit and life of Christ until the glad time comes in fulfillment of prophecy when nations shall learn war no more and nation cease to lift up the sword against nation.

God respects conscience in the matter of eating meats and vegetables, and certainly his children must respect the conscience of their brethren against so awful things as devastation and carnage. Christians were not conscientiously opposed to the United States engaging in the world war, but in favor of engaging in other wars at other times; they are conscientiously opposed to engaging in war in any form at any time. But they are peace-loving, law-abiding, conscientious citizens, and a blessing to any government. They conscientiously obey all laws and submit to all powers that be, unless required to disobey God; they then obey God rather than men. (Acts 5: 29.)

Here is the article:

That the American people are "dangerously near the condition of Prussia before the war" is evidenced to one investigator by the way we have treated, and, on his authority, still are treating, the "conscientious objectors," Whatever the provocation or justification for our methods while the war was on, Mr. William C. Allen is puzzled to know why they are continued now that we are at peace. What has happened, he thinks, "bodes ill for the future of America." In the early days of conscription in England. America." In the early days of conscription in England, he points out, "conscientious objectors suffered much;" but "the press, preachers, and members of Parliament were not dumb." As a consequence of the public protest, "the condition of this unfortunate class was relieved," and not dumb." "since the conclusion of the war they have been released." But "to the dishonor of America it has to be said that almost all the press has been dumb except to misrepresent and ridicule; so far as the writer knows, not a single voice in Congress has been raised in their behalf, while no church conference or convention has uttered a single genulne call that these men be delivered from persecution." Mr. Allen makes these charges in "Unity" (Chicago), and the Literary Digest can only say that he has overlooked several articles on this subject in its pages while active warfare was in progress. The point of his article, however, is his report of past and present conditions made by the College Park Association of Friends at the United States disciplinary barracks at Alcatraz, San Francisco Bay. His memorandum, drawn up after the visit made there on September 3, 1919, he speaks of as his "individual report and comment." We read:

"Colonel Garrard, commandant, and all his subordinate officers were very courteous to us and seemed sincerely desirous of letting us have full opportunity to observe the actual conditions in this prison.

"We first interviewed those conscientious objectors to military service who were then in dark cells. These men, like the various criminals, are locked up for fourteen days in 'solltary,' then are released for fourteen days, and this is followed by another fourteen days in 'solitary' on bread and water if still adhering to their convictions that they will not work under military orders because they conscientiously reject military ideas or methods. These men have no cot, no chair, nothing but four medium-weight blankets to wrap themselves in at night when they lie on the miserable, cold concrete floor, to obtain such sleep as they can. In the old days of medieval torture, some of the finest productions of the human brain were written in solitary confinement by men who endured it for conscience' sake. But these young men at Alcatraz have no writing material, no books, nothing to employ the mind save their own thoughts. The writer has been thirteen times in Europe and, like so many other tourists, has sometimes looked with horror at the dungeons or cells where men were incarcerated because of religious or political convictions. But I believe that almost all such wretched places of abode had a little ray of light from a small window. On the occasion of this visit to Alcatraz, we were also shown the dungeons where we were told that up to three weeks ago these sufferers for conscience' sake had been kept during the regulation fourteen days at a time. But these dungeons were so placed in the heart of the prison that not the slightest ray of day-This savage brutality light could ever penetrate them. has recently been discontinued and the men are placed in the cells in which we saw them, which are cut off from all light with the exception of a few little holes about seven feet above the ground over the top of the door.

"After luncheon, we were introduced to a colored religious objector, who is standing faithfully by his interpre-tation of Jesus Christ's Sermon on the Mount. He, too, will not work and will not even walk under military commands. While this may seem a mistake, there would seem to be small excuse for the abuse which has been poured upon him. He needs different sort of treatment. The morning of our visit to Alcatraz, we were told by eyewitnesses that he had been hauled out of his cell, put upon a cart and finally thrown off of it, as if he had been a bag of meal, onto the ground. When we saw him, he was sitting in a doorway looking out through the bars upon the beautiful San Francisco Bay, with a mystical look upon his suffering face. He had been at first hardly able to converse intelligently with us. He had remarkably fine and regular features even from the Caucasian viewpoint. We left this unhappy victim of modern prison treatment, and in a corner of the chapel met with almost a dozen other conscientious objectors, who for the time being were par-ticipating in ordinary prison conditions. Among them Among them were some of the most simple-hearted and cleanest-looking young Christian men I ever met with. There was a Dunkard who by the President's ruling should apparently have been released long ago. One of these young men is a bril-Hant fellow, a lawyer and highly educated. Rhodes scholar, with all the position in educational circles that is thereby implied."

"Many unthinking people," says Mr. Allen, "class as shirkers these young men who, with high characters and often fine intellectual attainments, are thus incarcerated among army convicts." Such a charge he regards as "quite silly when we remember how bravely they suffer medieval punishments for conscience' sake, when by yielding they could secure easement for themselves." He quotes some as saying that this minority who think so differently from almost all "Christian civilization" must be of unsound mind. "We could just as easily say that the early reformers in all departments of life have been crazy, because in their day the majority was opposed to them and generally persecuted them."

Norman Thomas, writing in "The Social Preparation for the Kingdom of God" (Utica), asserts that there are still over two hundred conscientious objectors in prison in the United States. During the summer a large number were transferred, "handcuffed," from Fort Leavenworth, where they were during the war, to Fort Douglas, Utah, and to Fort Alcatraz, although the War Department well knew they would scorn to try to escape.

The Church Should Be a Factor in Reducing the High Cost of Living.

BY J. C. M'QUIDDY.

All are agreed that the cost of living is high. When people pay twenty-five cents per pound for sugar, seventy-five cents per pound for butter, and proportionately for everything else that they consume in living, the high cost of living impresses itself upon them in no unmistakable way. Those who have right views of Christianity and its work realize that socialism or Bolshevism is directly antagonistic to the religion of Jesus Christ. Those who are seeking to destroy the churches and the freedom of the people and are also denying that there is any God are not working for the amelioration of the human family. I am glad to say, however, that I am not pessimistic enough to believe that there are many people in our country who are ready to sacrifice the religion of the Lord Jesus Christ for free-lovism or for socialism in any of its forms.

It is encouraging, also, to note that people generally are agreed that in order to bring down the high cost of living we must work more, economize more, and spend less. I heard one of the leading merchants of this city a few days ago say that it is not the capitalist that is spending money so extravagantly, nor spending so much for his wearing apparel, nor for his food, but that it is the laboring man who is receiving a higher wage than ever before for his work. So long as Christians spend freely of all that they receive and work less than they have been doing in the past, they cannot hope to see the high cost of living reduced. Instead of people striving to see how they can make a living without doing any sort of work, they should go to work vigorously to see just how much they can produce and just how little they can spend. The man who is busily engaged in some honorable work is the happy man, The man in idleness is tempted by Satan and walks the broad way to destruction. Christ dignified labor by his own example. He came to do the will of his Father, and worked constantly while on earth, never losing an opportunity to cheer the despondent, lift up the fallen, heal the sick, and to teach sinners the way of life. He says: "My Father worketh even until now, and I work." (John 5: 17.) He so realized the absolute necessity of toil that he says: "We must work the works of him that sent me, while it is day: the night cometh, when no man can work." (John 9: 4.) When the Thessalonian Christians were idle, they became busybodies. Of them the Holy Spirit says: "For even when we were with you, this we commanded you, If any will not work, neither let him eat. For we hear of some that walk among you disorderly, that work not at all, but are busybodies. Now them that are such we command and exhort in the Lord Jesus Christ, that with quietness they work, and eat their own bread. But ye, brethren, be not weary in well-doing," (2 Thess. 3: 10-13.) Christians will be busy doing good and will encourage others to keep busy.

When our foreparents in the garden of Eden disobeyed God, they thus brought upon themselves and their posterity ruin, suffering, and death. God cursed the ground, not labor. To Adam, Jehovah says: "Because thou hast hearkened unto the voice of thy wife, and hast eaten of the tree, of which I commanded thee, saying, Thou shalt not eat of it; cursed is the ground for thy sake; in toil shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life; thorns also and thistles shall it bring forth to thee; and thou shalt eat the herb of the field." (Gen. 3: 17, 18.) Because of his disobedience the ground, when he tilled it, brought forth thorns and thistles. In order that he might make the best of life in his fallen condition, the merciful Father said to him: "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken: for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." (Verse 19.)

Man cannot reverse the decree of God without suffering the consequences. To every man who spends his time in idleness and who refuses to work will come hunger, misery, and death. When a certain ruler of the synagogue was indignant at Jesus because he had healed on the Sabbath and said that men should work six days, Christ did not deny that men should work this length of time, but simply taught that the Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath; that he should do good even on the seventh day of the week, or the Sabbath. The best way to sow discontentment, discord, and strife among the people is to cease to work. Christians should devote their time to working diligently as God has decreed, leaving the results with him.

Churches may be helpful in reducing the high cost of living and should leave nothing undone to bring about a better condition. The elders of the churches should call on the membership of the local churches to which they are called to minister to know just how many are buying less clothes than heretofore. Members of the church should let them know whether they have bought a greater number of pairs of shoes than before. It would be well for them to state just how many hats they have bought, Christians should not hesitate to cut down on the number of articles that they are buying, but they should do so as an act of duty that will be well pleasing to God. I heard a Jew speaking a few days ago, who said he had not bought a single new suit, or a new hat, or new underwear, or a new pair of shoes, during the year 1919, which is almost gone. This Jew has money with which to buy if he had seen proper to do so. But he seemed firm in the conviction that the way to bring down the high cost of living is to decrease the demand for essential articles. I would like to suggest to the churches, to the preachers, and to the elders of the churches, that they speak freely to the members about these matters. How many Christians are ready to wear patched clothing in order that they may bring about a lower cost of living and thereby relieve the agitated condition that is now upon us? It is not enough to be Christians in name, but we must be Christians by our practice, by our daily living. Instead of saying hard things about the agitators that would destroy our country, that would break down our civilization, let each member of the church of Christ show his fidelity to God by laboring with his own hands, by producing all that he can possibly produce, and by living as economically as is consistent with his health and the religion of Jesus Christ. It is a mistake to cease working, a mistake to enforce idleness upon people until they are hungry. So the church should exert itself to help our government to keep all people employed in some useful work.

David Lipscomb College Still Needs Help. EY E. A. E.

Nashville is called upon to raise two hundred thousand dollars for the Peabody Normal College. The Baptists are pushing their drive for seventy-five million dollars, and others are asking for their millions. David Lipscomb College has asked for only a small amount compared to what others want, but it has not yet received the amount asked for. Shall all other institutions receive all the money they ask for and this school not receive what its needs require? Will the friends of true, Christian education help every other cause more liberally than this school? Will church members do this?

This is a most worthy cause. Never was there greater need for the teaching and training received in David Lips comb Coilege, and never before did so many students ask for admission. It is a pity to have to turn any away for lack of room, yet this is the case. While many other schools are undermining the teaching of the Bible and destroying faith in Christ, this one is using the Bible as a daily textbook, teaching the only correct account of the creation of all things, the only true life, and the only revealed will of God. Should not Christian people respond more liberally to these calls for help for this and like schools than for any other educational institution? The Christian world needs to be awakened and to become aroused on the subject of true education and against all education which undermines the teaching of the Bible and man's highest duty and greatest good.

The work on the buildings is progressing moderately well. The boys' dormitory has been repaired and the new dormitory for girls has its walls up to a point a little beyond the beginning of the third story. The brick work on this story is to be finished, the roof is to put on, and all the woodwork and inside work is to be done yet. The money is not coming in sufficiently to carry on the work. We have faith that the necessary amount will be contributed, but the directors would be pleased to receive it as fast as it is needed. They need it NOW. Gentle reader, if you have not given anything to this work, will you not give something now? And if you have given something already, can you not give again? Will you not interest others in this work? Do not wait to be seen, but give some liberal amount now. Have some partnership in so good and so great a work.

So soon as the directors have received a sufficient amount to complete the work undertaken they will gladly inform all contributors and all others concerned.

Send all amounts to Prof. H. Leo Boles, David Lipscomb College, Nashville, Tenn.

A Call For Cows.

BY S. F. MORROW.

Some weeks ago a call was made in this paper by the Farm Committee of the Tennessee Orphans' Home at Columbia, Tenn., for twelve good milch cows or the money with which to buy them, as we have the feed to keep said cows and have seventy-eight little children who need the milk. We are glad to state that several congregations are raising money to buy a cow or part of one. Will not others join us in this good work? Feeding and clothing the orphans is a work that is well pleasing to our Master. I had the pleasure of meeting with the church at Fairview on the second Lord's day in November. At the close of the service I asked for a cow, and the brethren promptly said they would give one. Brother T. C. Jordan has notified me that their cow is ready. I was with the Pasquo congregation last Lord's day, and they cheerfully said they would help. It is a great pleasure to meet with such churches, whose heart is open to the cry of dear little orphan children who are dependent on each of us for their daily bread. Will each church interested in this good cause let us have a response as soon as possible? Send all checks to John W. Fry, treasurer, Columbia, Tenn. Notify any one of the Farm Committee if you have a cow.

Earnestness.

If you have seen a person who is in earnest, you have seen a person who does things. He does not stop to ask if they are difficult, nor is he frightened by a few obstacles. He finds a way to do what he has undertaken; and if he does not find a way he makes one. Hindrances that have turned some of us back from a good purpose have been tossed aside by others as though they were nothing more than straws. Why this difference? Why do some succeed where others fail? One reason is that some are in earnest and others are not. Earnestness is love in action. It is the soul of work. When it does not find the means at hand with which to achieve, it creates them on the spot. You may as well try to stop a cyclone as the individual who has concentrated all the resources of his being upon the accomplishment of a certain task. If we are continually seeking the path of least resistance, we shall find that it leads to no goal worth reaching. Achievement and perspiration go together.-Young Folks.

AT HOME AND ABROAD

Following the line of least resistance is what makes rivers and men crooked.

R. V. Cawthon is in a good meeting with the Eleventh Street congregation, this city.

Perhaps you have observed that the man who has a long head seldom has a long tongue.

Of every hundred men called "failures," ninety-seven have been lukewarm in their work.

Change of address: J. H. McBroom, from Rogersville, Ala., to 700 Cherry Street, Montgomery, Ala.

The success secret of any captain of the world's progress: He did more than was expected of him.

A Christian doctor and a loyal Christian preacher are wanted to locate at Buena Vista, Ark. If interested, write to W. R. Key, and he will give your letter prompt attention.

Henry T. King, of Nashville, Tenn., has been secured by the church at McMinnville, Tenn., to locate in their midst and to do evangelistic work. We are praying God's blessing upon this arrangement.

Isaac C. Hoskins, of Manchester, Tenn., will move to Martin, Tenn., about December 15. He will do evangelistic work under the direction of the Martin church. We wish for him great success in the new field.

A young man about twenty years of age wishes an education so as to prepare for the great work in God's vineyard. Could you give him advice that would put his desires into action? If so, please address P. O. Box 446, Marianna, Ark.

Maj. J. D. Allen passed away on Monday, November 24, at his home at Dixon Springs, Tenn. He was one of the faithful leaders in the church, and was greatly beloved by a large circle of friends. Brother Elam conducted the funeral services on Tuesday.

From H. M. Phillips, Tuscumbia, Ala., November 27: "I have just come from Mobile, Ala., where I held a short meeting. The cause is not well established there. We had very good crowds and splendid attention. Mobile is a Catholic center and a great stronghold for Satan."

From J. Arch Houston, Selmer, Tenn., November 28: "Having just read the 'Sermon' Number of the Gospel Advocate, I most heartly commend it as one of the best ever published. Allow me to congratulate you on your splendid management of the Gospel Advocate. I enjoy very much every issue."

From Jesse L. Beard, Lake City, Ark.: "Brother Porter and myself closed a short but interesting meeting at King's Mills, Ark., on November 9. One was added to the one body. I have some time open for 1920. Any one desiring my services should write me soon, so I can book it now. First come, first served."

From J. E. Wainwright, Texarkana, Ark., November 24: "Some four hundred persons displayed keen interest at both services yesterday. Many were strangers and not of the household of faith. One noble married lady confessed her Savior and was baptized to-day. Several Christians have moved to our city and have joined hands in the battle for righteousness. We are pressing toward the two-hundred mark."

From G. A. Dunn, Houston, Texas, November 26: "Much has been said—well said—of the special numbers of the Gospel Advocate, but much can be said of many not marked 'special.' The last issue (November 20) would be hard to surpass for good, sound, Bible sense. Every article in it is good. And this is not said to lessen the influence to any extent of the 'specials.' But are the people reading? The paper should be read."

From T. E. Tatum, Hallsville, Texas, November 28: "Our meeting at Bryant, Ark., began on August 31 and continued eight days. The meeting was well attended and the people listened with much interest. Only two confessed Christ and were baptized. I love the church at Bryant. They have had some good preachers and much good preaching there. T. G. Bethard led the song service well during this meeting. I want to visit Bryant again, if the Lord will permit."

As we go to press we read with sadness the following news dispatch from Tullahoma, Tenn., dated November 30: "Elder J. D. Floyd, of the church of Christ, died this morning at the home of his daughter, Mrs. R. H. Mitchell. Elder Floyd was one of the oldest and most prominent ministers of the church. He was eighty-four years of age, and was a Confederate soldier. The body will be taken to Shelbyville on Monday and buried at Flat Creek on Tuesday. His wife died only a few months ago."

The Gospel Advocate hastens to extend Christian sympathy. For more than half a century Brother Floyd has been one of its truest friends and stanchest supporters.

From William P. Walker, Clarksville, Tenn., November 27; "Work and sickness have hindered me from making prompt reports of our work on the Lower Cumberland. The congregations of Montgomery County and adjacent countles are taking more interest in the Master's cause. We are pressing onward and upward in the work of faith and the labor of love. The Clarksville congregation meets at the courthouse. Should you visit Clarksville, you are invited to worship with us. Preaching brethren are ever welcome. We are very grateful to S. F. Morrow for his advice and assistance in the work."

Carl A. Gardner writes: "As a matter of interest to my friends who are brethren in the Lord, I am in the publicschool work as superintendent of the Bardwell Public School, and I am busy each Sunday assisting some congregation in the work of the Lord. This is my second year in the school work at this place, but I intend to locate elsewhere in this section another year. Bardwell is in Ellis County. The church here is doing a good work and is making progress. J. S. Dunn, of Dallas, Texas, gives onehalf his time to the work here, and he is loved by all who know him. T. H. Etheridge spent a year with this congregation. His work bore fruit, and he is greatly appreclated by the brethren here. He recently entered Abilene Christian College, that he might better equip himself for the great work. Ben West is doing what he can for the Lord in Waxahatchie, while the brethren at Ennis are planning greater things for the Master. Everything considered, the work in this county is making fine progress."

Notice to the Churches.-We, the undersigned, wish to make a statement concerning the work at Dolores, Col. We have secured the services of Willis G. Jernigan, of Grand Saline, Texas, to help us carry on the great work of the Master at Dolores. Brother Jernigan is a very successful evangelist, as can be seen from his recent work in East Texas and at other points. We feel sure that there could not have been a better choice made for the work at Dolores. We are working on some of the churches in Texas to help us carry on the work here and in the surrounding country, but we feel that there are hundreds of disciples all over the country who will be glad to help us when they learn of the effort being put forth for the advancement of the cause in this part of Colorado. The nearest congregation to us is the church at Olathe, one hundred and fifty miles distant. There is a great work to be done here, and we feel that the brethren and sisters all over America will help us do it. Send all donations to A. W. Arnold, Dolores, Col .- A. W. Arnold, Dolores, Col.; C. D. Record, evangelist, Arlington, Texas.

Georgia and the Far Southern Field

By S. H. Hall

The Church Is Seldom Seen.

There can be no doubt that the institution of which Christ spoke of in Matt. 16: 18 excels anything that has ever been built. For the church of Christ to exist in any community, indeed, means the greatest blessing that could be bestowed on that community. But the church is seldom seen. We have many congregations calling themselves "churches of Christ;" and that there are some in these congregations who are pure, loyal, and true, I doubt not, but there is so much rubbish piled around the church that the true church is seldom seen. The true church is a church of confidence and joy, peace and power. The church is called the "house of God." (1 Tim. 3: 15.) Paul says we are this house, "if"-if what? Well, here is the whole statement: "But Christ as a son over his house; whose house are we, if we hold fast the confidence [boldness] and the rejolcing of the hope [glorying of our hope] firm unto the end." (Heb. 3: 6.) The true church has a boldness, a confidence, that others cannot have. The true church has a rejoicing, a glorying of hope, that others cannot have. The true church are those who, indeed, live in touch with God, in continual vital union with God; hence, possess something that aliens cannot possibly have till they cease to be aliens. And this is not all: they have something that those vain worshipers over there, though they are sincere in what they do, cannot have till they are led to see their error and fall into that way where God is found, and not merely thought to be found. It is contrary to every bit of reason for any one to claim that the real disciple, the "disciple indeed," possesses not something to which others are strangers. If this is not true, then pray tell me the difference in worshiping the living God of power, goodness, and mercy, and some stock or stone. Tell me the difference in the true worshiper and the vain worshiper, which vain worshiper misses the point of contact between God and man and thinks he is connected when he is disconnected. This eternal truth we must surrender to, else take one of two positions-namely, (1) that there is no such thing as union with God to-day, as one man's being more in contact with him than another, or (2) that the man who is in contact with God has no more joy, peace, and power than the man who is not in contact with God. If not, why not? Tell me not that there is no difference between the true and the counterfeit; tell me not that there is no difference between worshipers of idols and worshipers of the living God; tell me not that there is no difference in the joy, peace, and power of the true Christian and the hypocrite. There is a difference-an outstanding difference, a difference to be felt and not heard!

Paul says that "the church of the living God" is "the pillar and ground of the truth." (1 Tim. 3: 15.) But In what sense is the church "the pillar and ground of the truth?" In that it is forever talking and arguing about the truth? Not exactly. It is all right to talk the truth, and there are times when arguing the truth is permissible, but the crying need of the day is living the truth. And here is where we become the pillar, ground, and stay of the truth in the unanswerable and irresistible sense. The devil can parry almost any argument presented simply by our talking or writing, but he can do nothing with truths actually lived out in our lives. Here God expects us all to support the truth. We may not be able to defend It with our tongues, but we can with our lives; we may not be able to argue with false teachers with our lips, but we can answer all their contentions by living the truths we believe. It is, indeed, a sad day when the teachers of God's truth allow allens to see no more in their lives than they see in the lives of false teachers. Allens read us; this they cannot help. The question is, do they see the eternal truths we teach from our lips when they study our acts?

I am constrained here to weave in the words of Edwin A Guest in his splendid poem, "Sermons Seen and Sermons Heard." Says he:

I'd rather see a sermon than to hear one any day, I'd rather one should walk with me than merely tell the way.

Have you ever been in a large city and asked how to get to a certain street or building? Which had you rather have—some man to give you directions about how to go there, or one to take you by the hand and say, "Come, go with me?" Let's do more than tell allens the way; let's show them the way by actually walking in it. This they can the better understand.

The eye's a better pupil and more willing than the ear; Fine counsel is confusing, but examples always clear. And the best of all the preachers are the men who live their creeds;

For to see good put into action is what everybody needs.

But more!

I can soon learn how to do it if you will let me see it done.

It is fine to preach, "Let love of the brethren continue;" but it is better for us to let people see us living it. It is fine to preach, "Love your enemies, and pray for them that persecute you;" but it is better to let people see us actually doing this. "Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good," is fine counsel and makes pretty sermons; but for the alien—and weak brethren, too, whom we are trying to get to practice this teaching—to see this really being done by us is stronger and better counsel and clearer preaching. Here is where we support the truth. This is how we become its "pillar and ground."

I can watch your hands in action, but your tongue too fast may run.

And the lectures you deliver may be very wise and true; But I'd rather get my lessons by observing what you do. For I may misunderstand you and the high advice you

But there is no misunderstanding how you act and how you live.

Truly did John say: "My little children, let us not love in word, neither in tongue; but in deed and in truth." (1 John 2: 18.) Do not the preachers and teachers in the church of Christ know these things? As a theory, they do; but as a living reality, many of them know it not. In this actually doing the things we teach to others is where the power of the truth is to be seen and felt. Actually living what we all admit the Father says will settle every church fuss under heaven and bring together brethren who are now alienated from each other. The "law of love" that some have much to say about is fine, but the "law of love" lived is a better thing. This the devil dreads, but our talking love does not disturb him.

Paul says that we are epistles of Christ, "known and read of all men." (See 2 Cor. 3: 2, 3.) Yes, and this church at Corinth terribly misrepresented Christ. Let us so live that people will see in us what we profess, and this will create in them a desire to be what we are. There is nothing more beautiful than the life of the real Christian.

When I see a deed of kindness, I am eager to be kind: When a weaker brother stumbles, and a stronger stays behind

Just to see if he can help him, then the wish grows strong in me

To become as big and thoughtful as I know that friend to be.

And all travelers can witness that the best of guides to-day is not the one who tells them, but the one that shows the way. One good man teaches many-men believe what they be-

One deed of kindness noticed is worth forty that are told. Who stands with men of honor learns to hold his honor dear.

For right living speaks a language which to every one is clear,

Though an able speaker charms me with his eloquence, I say,

I'd rather see a sermon than to hear one any day.

How true, indeed, are the words above, when considered from the standpoint of the way those to whom we preach really feel! In conclusion, let me say again that the church of Christ is "the pillar and ground of the truth;" but I care not how much we claim to be this church, unless we are supporting the truths we preach with our acts, we are not this church in its true sense. May God bless every one that reads this, to the end that it may be sanctified to the good of his or her soul; and may the prayer of every friend I have on earth be, when I am remembered in their prayers, that I may ever be sustained by God's grace, to the end that every truth I preach may be lived as earnestly as I preach it. I beg all of the Atlanta and Georgia members to give this lesson special thought. Will we not let Christ in us have just the church he wants us to be?

♥ ♥ ♥ McGregor, Ga., Heard From Again.

Our readers are asked to kindly consider the following letter from Sister Vina Hooper, McGregor, Ga.:

Brother Hall: We have the promise of an acre of land here for fifty dollars, on which our church is to be started soon. We hope to get the deed to it this week, in order that the work may begin at once. What is the best way to get help to build? Should I write individuals as well as congregations? Do you know of any help we may receive from this State? We are still getting on nicely, meeting every Lord's day. Our contribution for three Lord's days has been almost seven dollars. We hope to have Brother Prevatt with us in about two weeks. Please let me hear from you soon.

I have just this to say about the above. First, let every disciple in this State help. Will not each one who sees this take the matter up with your home church next Lord's day and get a special donation for this work? Please do this, and do it now. Let those out of this State who appreciate the faith and zeal of our good sister also help. Send all donations to Miss Vina Hooper, McGregor, Ga., and they will be duly acknowledged and applied to the work. While they are building, they will also need help to have the preaching that needs to be done. Brother Prevatt will do his part, but he must not do it at his own charges. Do this now, and let us put this new congregation on its feet and then direct our energies to another place.

Thanksgiving.

"I will extol thee, my God, O King; And I will bless thy name forever and ever; Every day will I bless thee, And I will praise thy name forever and ever." (Ps. 145: 1, 2.)

The writer of that beautiful Psalm was very happy when he bore witness to the loving-kindness of Jehovah. We trace his joy in every line. Are not our hearts made glad when we indulge in thanksgiving? May not this happiness become a very real experience in our own lives?

There are days when it seems impossible to cultivate this spirit. Distress, suffering, and less eat into our very souls. Ingratitude, or breach of faith on the part of those from whom we had hoped better things, possibly brings a tinge of bitterness and discouragement. Our own mistakes may produce anxiety in once quiet minds. Yet, after all is added up and the balance struck, we find that there is reason for glorifying God. Is his generosity not beyond our desorts?

Although human nature may sometimes seem all awry and our own souls not attuned to God's sweet music as they might, and although the world becomes exhausted with sin and drinks its cup of sorrow to the dregs, let us be thankful that there is good everywhere, and that so many men and women the world over desire to fiee to God for daily help. The purple hills and sapphire mountains are symbolic of the lofty shelter enjoyed by those who look beyond the narrow circumstances of their lives to their high refuge, Jesus Christ. Surely the note of thanksgiving should become magnificently triumphant when a Savior is our theme!

It is good to make and maintain the resolution that not only once a year, but every day, we will offer the simple sacrifice of praise. This uplift of spirit never fails to steady us. The finest spiritual and material dividends are returned to those who habitually invest in emotions of gratitude. The thankful heart is the optimistic heart. With sheer delight we can accept the language of John Oxenham:

For all thy ministries—
For morning mist, and gently falling dew;
For morning mist, for winter ice and snow;
For whispering wind and purifying storm;
For the reft clouds that show the tender blue;
For the forked flash and long tumultuous roll;
For mighty rains that wash the dim earth clean;
For the sweet promise of the sevenfold bow;
For the soft sunshine, and the still, calm night;
For dimpled laughter of soft summer seas;
For latticed splendor of the sea-borne moon;
For gleaming sands, and granite frontled cliffs;
For flying spume, and waves that whip the skies;
For rushing gale, and for the great, glad calm;
For Might so mighty, and for Love so true,
With equal mind.
We thank thee, Lord.

Brewer's Book on the "Model Church."

The author's chief purpose in writing this book was to create a higher degree of efficiency in the workings of the local congregation. He would awaken many from a lethargic and disorganized condition and bring them to that point where they might conduct the Lord's work in a businesslike way and at the same time be controlled by the mind of Christ in all things. The book is written in pointed style and is conveniently arranged for class study. While it is of special interest to the leaders, at the same time it is of such a wholesome nature as to afford profitable reading for all the members. The book deserves a large circulation. The prices are very reasonable. Single copy, prepaid, $1; one dozen copies, prepaid, $9; twenty-five copies, not prepaid, $17. Order to-day from the McQuiddy Printing Company, Nashville, Tenn.

It contains an index to subjects and an index to scriptures. Contains 440 large pages; printed in large, clear type. The book is substantially bound in eioth. Price, $1.50.

RESTORES VITALITY

Gives Strength to the Nervously Weak and Run-Down.

Peptiron is both medicine and food for the blood and nerves. It is in full accord with advanced science as to the proper treatment of anemic and neurasthenic conditions, in which the need of more and better nourishment is so apparent. It combines iron and manganese with nux, celery, pepsin and other tonics and digestives. It supplies the deficiency of red blood corpuscles in anemia, repairs the waste of nerve tissue in nervousness, gives color and stamina, and restores vitality.

African Missions.

BY F. B. SHEPHERD.

On account of the great space taken up every week by lengthy reports itemizing the receipts for mission work, I am acting on the suggestion of one of our publishing brethren and confining my report to the full amount received and forwarded, and shall in the future only send the personal receipts to the donors. I was able to send but forty-five dollars this month, being ten dollars less than last month and thirty dollars less than September, Brethren, this is quite discouraging to a man who has lost all his belpers during the past few months and has been pleading for a worker from this country for several years. Can you do better next month?

To the Churches of Christ Everywhere-Greeting; This is to certify that we, the elders and deacons of the church in Amarillo, Texas, having audited the books and examined into the work being done by Brother F. B. Shepherd on behalf of Brother John Sherriff and the cause of the Lord Jesus in Rhodesia, Africa, are heartily in sympathy with it. Brother Shepherd being our evangelist serving the church here in its effort to spread apostolic Christianity in this section, we send our financial assistance through him, and we indorse him as a safe messenger to intrust funds for transmission, and recommend to scattered disciples and the churches everywhere that they assist this work through his agency.

Done on behalf of the church, this second day of November, 1919.

Exchange Your Old Body for a New One.

You can do it in three weeks and thereby renew your health. This article is written by a physician who has seen it demonstrated in numerous cases and explains how it is done.

Listen! If your weight is one hundred and thirty-three pounds, your body contains eighty pounds of water, for, according to standard medical books, the human body contains sixtyseven and one-half per cent of water. Now, disease is invariably caused by impurities which we call "poisons," and these are readily dissolved by the right kind of natural mineral water. Drink ten gallons (eighty pounds) of Shivar Mineral Water (use no other water for twenty-one days), and you will have exchanged your old body for a new one, so far as the soluble part is concerned. The impurities will be dissolved and pass away. If you suffer from dyspepsia, indigestion, sick headache, rheumatism, kidney or liver disease, uric-acid poisoning, or other curable conditions due to impure blood, accept Mr. Shivar's liberal offer which appears below. Read the fol-lowing letter carefully, then sign and mail It:

Bradley-Nunnery Debate.

BY I. B. BRADLEY.

This discussion was held in the Pleasant Grove Baptist Church, twelve miles east of Wildersville, Tenn., and lasted five days. It began at one o'clock on Monday, November 10, and lasted until Saturday noon, November 15. The weather was clear and cool, except for the first day. The crowds were large, attentive, and respectful. The house was not sufficiently large to accommodate the crowds a part of the time. The order was fine throughout. There are some fine people in that part of the country and some faithful Christians. The Baptists have a very large following, and are very aggressive, led by their representative in this debate, A. U. Nunnery.

Mr. Nunnery is an unlearned man, but full of self-confidence. He is full of words, but does not seem to have much knowledge of their meaning. One man, in telling me about him before the debate began, said: "He is a regular blatherskite." In debate he has the appearance of one who would like to turn loose and say a lot of ugly, mean things, and very often gets quite close to forbidden ground. He can scarcely restrain himself so as to keep himself within proper bounds. Be it said to his credit that he never used the epithet "Campbellite" during the entire debate, though he said a number of times in referring to the church: "Campbell is the daddy of his church." He is very illiterate, and has copied his work from some one, using the usual "stock arguments" appropriated by all Baptists debaters from J. N. Hall. Nunnery was not able to present them with any effectiveness, as he did not understand the force of the terms used. His strongest work was the effort he made to show that Jesus constituted a church when he "called out" the twelve (Luke 6: 12-16) on the mountain and appointed them to be with him. I showed that this mountain was near the Sea of Galilee and about sixty miles from Jerusalem (Mount Zion), where God said his house should be established. (Isa. 2: 2; Zech. 1: 16.) His next greatest effort was on the order of faith and repentance, contending that God's order is repentance, then faith. To refute this, I showed that it is both a mental and psychological impossibility for a man to do this-that is, repent before he believes-and is contrary to the teaching of God's word. (Rom. 14: 23; Heb. 11: 6,) He was very weak on the operation of the Spirit and final perseverance of the saints-in fact, the weakest man I have ever met among the Missionary

SALTS IF BACKACHY AND KIDNEYS HURT

Stop Eating Meat for a While If Your Bladder is Troubling You

When you wake up with backache and dull misery in the kidney region, it generally means you have been eating too much meat, says a well-known authority. Meat forms uric acid, which overworks the kidneys in their effort to filter it from the blood, and they become sort of paralyzed and loggy. When your kidneys get sluggish and clog, you must relieve them —like you relieve your bowels—removing all the body's urinous waste, else you have backache, sick headache. dizzy spells; your stomach sours, tongue is coated, and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine is cloudy, full of sediment, channels often get sore, water scalds, and you are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night.

Either consult a good, reliable physician at once or get from your phar-macist about four ounces of Jad Salts, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days, and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralize acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is a life saver for regular meat eaters. It is inexpensive, cannot injure, and makes a delightful, effervescent lithia-water drink.

church question. On my affirmative I placed Mark 9: 1; Acts 1: 8; and Acts 2: 1-4, 17 on the board as one argument on the establishment of the church, or kingdom, showing that the kingdom, the power, and the Holy Spirit were to come simultaneously. I could not get him to examine it until the last day, and then not until just before my last speech. Then he said this was fulfilled at the transfiguration. I showed that this could not be so, as the Holy Ghost was not there. I also placed on the board Ps. 89: 37-39 and Acts 2: 30-36 to show that God had fulfilled his promise to David made in 2 Sam. 7: 12, 13, and that this took place after the resurrection of Christ and his ascension to heaven. This he never would examine, only saying, "David's throne is not in heaven," until his last speech, when he read Acts 2: 34 and said: "David had not gone to heaven on the day of Pentecost."

Again, on the operation of the Spirit, he would contend that the apostles had the Holy Spirit before Pentecost, in the face of the statement of Jesus in John 7: 39, which makes the glorification of Jesus prior to the giving of the Spirit. I showed how the Spirit filled the apostles on the day of Pentecost to guide them into all truth, to bring to their minds all things Jesus had told them, and how through them he was to convict the world of sin by the preaching of the gospel, the power of God unto salvation to all that believe, and illustrated by the cases of the Pentecostians, the Samaritans, the Philippian jailer, and the Corinthians. To these he made no reply.

One of the most amusing things that came up was the use he made of a chart and diagram of Acts 2: 38. To show the use of the preposition "for," he had a number of passages on the chart. Some of them had "peri;" some, "apo;" and some, "eis." Of course I exposed this and showed the audience he did not know the difference. On the diagram of Acts 2: 38 he could read what he had written, copying it from some one else, and would get his mode, tense, person, and number confused, sometimes saying one thing and sometimes another, and had "for the remission of sins" modifying the verb "be baptized" and not connected with the verb "repent" at all. When I read Hackett, Hovey, Willmarth, and other Baptist scholars on the meaning of "eis aphesin hamartion," he tried to show that the language had not been properly quoted. But, having failed here, he said that there were "a lot of rotten Baptists" among their people, and that he hoped that the day would come when they would be turned out, not knowing that most of them were already dead.

At one point he threatened to close the debate if I did not answer a query on the communion question by saying "Yes" or "No." I told him to close it, as I had had the last speech, and that I had replied to the question three different times, quoting the word of God on the matter, and that no rule required that I should answer as he demanded. When he had failed to force me to answer and had begun his speech, I arose and told him that I was not afraid to answer "Yes" or "No," and would now do so for myself, personally. The question involved the necessity of weekly communion. Then I answered, "Yes." He made nothing out of it, just as he had failed once before when he asked me if the church at Dickson had scriptural succession. When I told him, "Yes, through the seed of the kingdom, the word of God," he made no reply, but dropped the matter.

The debate will do good with all thinking people, and nothing can move the nonthinking ones, except the emotions stirred by superstition and the traditions of men. "The truth shall make you free." I told the brethren whenever they needed a debate in that country I would be at their service, but not to send for me to meet Nunnery and his like, as I consider it a waste of time to debate with such a man:

There were several Baptist preachers present and three young Christian preachers J. S. Jones, of Clarksville, Tenn.; S. O. Allen and R. L. Colley, of Henderson, Tenn. There was also one local preaching brother in attendance-Brother Henry Hendrix, S. O. Allen was my moderator, and a Mr. King acted in that capacity for Nun-

We-Brethren Colley and Allen and I-enjoyed this privilege immensely. The church supported me well in the debate. They expressed themselves as being well pleased with the work done in the discussion, and urged me to come to their help some time in a meeting. I pray God's richest blessings upon the faithful there.

Washington, November 5.-Brother F. B. Srygley spent two Lord's days with us and preached four fine ser-mons. The church here enjoyed Brother Srygley's visit and appre-ciated his practical sermons, and we all hope he may come again. New members are coming in and our hall is about full. We hope to begin the work on the new house in the near future, though we have only half of the money needed. Half of the funds has been raised in one year. We be-lieve if we begin the house the falthful friends and brethren will help us to raise the rest in six months. Now is the time to help. Come on while we need you most. We meet for worship in Masonic Temple, Eighth and F Streets, N. E., on the second floor. Take Eighth and F Street car or Navy Yard car. Fort Worth, November 25,-Last Lord's day was a good day for the Southside-Central Church, with large attendance, fine lessons, good singing, and a splendid interest in all lines of work. One of the elders told me the work was in the best shape it has been in a long time. I am preaching every Sunday and Sunday night; attend prayer meeting each Tuesday night; conduct a young men's training class, with singing, each Thursday night; conduct a ladies' class in church history each Tuesday afternoon; go from house to house all I can; and do most of my housework. My wife is still very weak and nervous. I hope the churches will keep busy through the winter and not go to hole. God be with you all.-Tice Elkins.

Centerville, November 21.-- It has been some time since I have made any report of my work, but I have been almost too busy to write. The church at Aplin called me there for a course of lectures. I began there on October 28 and closed on the following Sunday night. I never have been at a place where I was better treated and my work more appreciated than at Aplin. We have a fine lot of brethren and sisters there On November 3 and 4 gave two lectures at Case, where we have a good congregation of disciples. The next two nights I lectured at Danville, where we have a few faithful ones. The Methodist preacher was out to hear me the last night, and he liked it so well that he asked me to return and give two lectures in his church, which I did. Then I moved up to Havana and went out into the country and gave a talk at Spring Creek Schoolhouse and preached at Havana on the second Sunday. On the third Sunday I was at Hobart, and preached and lectured till Tuesday night. I am now giving some lectures at Centerville, and will preach here next Sunday. I am to begin a lecture course at Coxey, Ala., on November 29, and will be there several days. I would be glad to visit any place in Alabama or Tennessee wanting me for a series of lectures. Write Coxey, Ala., till December 6; but mail addressed to me at Denton, Texas, will reach me any time.—D. S. Ligon.

Calico Rock, November 24.urgent solicitation of the brethren of Izard County, where I was reared and where I began preaching a quarter of a century ago, I returned here a year ago to evangelize the county. This has been a busy year with me. I have preached publicly and from house to house, preaching very nearly every night and twice every Lord's day. During the summer months I preached twice nearly every day. It has been a protracted meeting really of twelve months' duration. I am as strong and fresh and vigorous as when I began. I have not been hoarse during this time. Our efforts have been blessed in bringing several into the kingdom and in strengthening and encouraging others in the right ways of the Lord and in getting the churches upon a higher plane of living. I sincerely regret to have to leave, and I know the brethren deeply regret it, too. I love the people of this country as I love no other people, and I know that I am loved as but few men are loved any-where. I verily believe that my life work would have been productive of far more good had I never left these hills. I spent the first eight years of my preaching life here. The brethren then kept me busy. I could have been busy every day since in a radius of less than thirty miles of where I was reared. As it has been, I have been a very busy preacher, but my work has been spread over such a large area that I have by no means been able to cultivate what I have sown.-W. A. Schultz.

The Love of God.

BY H. W. JONES.

When you think of "the breadth and length and height and depth" of the love of God, you will not expect my pen to do the subject justice. So wonderful indeed is the love of God that it is beyond the power of human speech to express it. If we can only impress on the minds and hearts of some the greatness of God's love for poor, fallen mankind, we shall feel amply compensated for this effort.

In the poet's language:

Could we with ink the ocean fill, And were the skies of parchment made:

Were every blade of grass a quill, And every man a scribe by trade; To write the love of God alone Would drain the ocean dry; Nor would the scroll contain the whole,

Though stretched from sky to sky.

The love of God is everlasting. "Yea," saith Jehovah, "I have loved thee with an everlasting love; therefore with loving-kindness have I drawn thee." Though we, like Israel of old, wander far from God, yet he continues to love us. His love knows no end. It is from everlasting to everlasting. "God is love." And "with him there is no variableness, neither shadow of turning." Hence, there is nothing "able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord." (Read Rom. 8: 38, 39.)

The love of God is inconceivable; it "passeth knowledge," as Paul says. In the absolute sense we cannot understand the love of God, yet relatively the Lord has manifested his icve for us." Yes, "God commendeth his love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us." Yes, "while we were yet weak, in due season Christ died for the ungodly." No. Christ did not die for us because we had been his friend, because we had done so much for him. He died for us because he loved us and because he wished, by his love, to draw us unto himself. He saw man in his lost, ruined, and undone condition, and died to redeem and save him. God took pity on us in our helpless, hopeless condition here below and sent his Son, Jesus Christ, to be "the propitiation for our sins; and not for ours only, but also for the whole world."

Now, with this, let us contrast man's love. "Greater love bath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friend," says Jesus. "For scarcely [hardly] for a righteous man will one die; yet peradventure [by chance, perhaps] for the good man some one [not "many"] would even dare to die," says Paul. This is the height of man's love; but God's love is as far above this as the heavens are above the earth. "For God so loved the world [sinful mankind], that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." Yes, God loved the world so much that he gave his only Son to suffer and die for it. God did not owe the world a single favor. He gave his Son as a gracious gift of love. Hence, salvation is of grace, not "as of debt." But this grace or salvation is conditional, as man must believe on Christ, repent of all sin, and be immersed in his name. And after this we must be faithful till death, that the Lord may give us a crown of righteousness that fades not away, eternal in the heavens. How the good Lord expresses his love for us in offering to save us on such easy conditions! Lord, help us to love and obey thee in return.

Jesus—and didst thou leave the sky, To bear our griefs and woes? And didst thou bleed, and groan and die.

For thy rebellious foes?

O 'twas wonderful, wonderful love, That brought him from heaven above,

As a ransom to die on the tree, To save a poor sinner like me!

Brother T. E. Tatum's Explanation. BY E. V. MILLS.

Inasmuch as Brother Tatum's position is misunderstood and he is criticized by some good brethren who do not know. I wrote him for a statement of the matter. I saw some of his receipts. I suggest that you publish his statement, using your own judgment as to best form.

Brother Tatum's letter follows:

Hallsville, Texas, November 1919.—Dear Brother Mills: Pl Please pardon my long delay in writing you. After caring for a number of orphans for some years, I had six hundred dol-lars of the money left which was sent to me for the purchase of a home for orphans and for their support. This six hundred dollars was used in buying a home for orphans. Other homes receiving more support than this one and prospering better than this one, thought it best to abandon my efforts here and cooperate with a home elsewhere. I have sent the six hun-dred dollars of orphans' money to the Tennessee Orphans' Home. In addition to this six hundred dollars, have sent eight hundred dollars to the Tennessee Orphans' Home, making a total of fourteen hundred dollars which I have paid through the First State Bank of Hallsville, Texas, to the Tennessee Orphans' Home. I hope to continue to cooperate with the Tennessee Orphans' Home in its great mission of mercy; and if God shall spare my life and permit me to live a few years longer and bless me with physical ability, as I am praying to him to do, so that I may labor on my farm, I shall hope to do much more than I have yet been able to do. wish multiplied millions of men and women possessed more love and sympathy for the unfortunate fatherless and motherless little folks. greater sacrifices would be made and more orphan children would be kindly and tenderly cared for. God would be henored in this work and souls would be blessed because they do his will. Fraternally, T. E. TATUM.

160 Hens-1500 Eggs

Mrs. H. M. Patton, Waverly, Mo., writes: "I fed two boxes of 'More Eggs ' and got 1500 eggs from 160 hens in exactly 21 days." This scientific tonic has made big egg profits for thousands of poultry raisers all over the United States. It revitalizes the hens, tones them up, and makes them lay all the time. Get ready now and make big profits out of your hens this winter. A $1 package will double the egg production, and a million-dollar bank guarantees to refund your money If you are not entirely satisfied. Send $1 now to E. J. Forgiveness at Its Flood.

Really, forgiveness is a flood or it is nothing. Never can there be degrees in forgiving. We forgive utterly, or we do not forgive at all. To dole out forgiveness-so much forgiveness for so much penitence-is a mathematical or legalistic process; and the heart knows nothing of such measures. When it lets go in the grace of forgiving, it never braces its feet lest it go too far. Forgiveness puts the recipient back in the place he forfeited. It never dogs him with the memory of his dark days. It wants him to forget. This is the significance of the robe and the ring for the prodigal at his return. Doubtless the place of the servant seemed all that he ought to ask; but it was not all he needed. He needed reinstatement as a son. This the father did for him, in spite of eavil and criticism. It is God's way. He buries our sins in the sea of forgiveness. "He remembers them no more against us forever." He would help us to forget, that he may restore our song. What an altered world this would be if we learned from God the way and measure of forgiving! Poor niggards we, when we might be spendthrifts of mercy, with the glory of it. -George Clarke Peck.

AN EXPERIENCE OF TWENTY-THREE YEARS,

The above is the heading of an interesting and convincing letter from the Rev. W. M. Jones, P. O. Box 163, Farrell, Miss., in which he says:

"I began using Pe-ru-na in 1896. I can recommend it to any one as a good medicine for coughs, colds, and tight oppression in the chest. I always got great benefit from Pe-ru-na.

"In August, 1915, I had chills and some fever. I got the chills stopped, but it left me in poor condition. There was a tightness in my chest, a rough hoarseness in my throat, and I had a very bad cough. Two bottles of Pe-ru-na put me in good health. For twenty-three years I have used Pe-ru-na. I am on my second bottle for 1915,"

Evidently the Rev. Jones does what every one should—keeps Pe-ru-na in the house for emergencies, the everyday ills. We try to show our appreciation of them by trying to hold up their hands and pay them a reasonable amount for their faithful work. Just to the extent that we work in peace and harmony the work will prosper here and elsewhere. The church building is in fine condition. The officers of the church are splendid financiers, the members are generous-hearted and meet the money demands promptly. We are now raising money and will soon have enough to pay for a first-class tent to be used wherever the ministers and the church think best. A man handed me money to help pay for the tent and said: "It may never do me any good, but it may do somebody else good." We admire that unselfish spirit of giving. Somebody to some extent is responsible for the slow spreading of the gospel. Is it you? Another year will soon be gone, Let us all resolve to redouble our efforts for good the next twelve months and see what the result will be.—John T. Hall.

You Do More Work,

You are more ambitious and you get more enjoyment out of everything when your blood is in good condition. Impurities in the blood have a very depressing effect on the system, causing weakness, laziness, nervousness and sickness.

GROVE'S TASTELESS Chill TONIC restores Energy and Vitality by Purifying and Enriching the Blood. When you feel its strengthening, invigorating effect, see how it brings color to the cheeks and how it improves the appetite, you will then appreciate its true tonic value.

GROVE'S TASTELESS Chill TONIC is not a patent medicine, it is simply IRON and QUININE suspended in Syrup. So pleasant even children like it. The blood needs Quinine to Purifyit and IRON to Enrich it. These reliable tonic properties never fail to drive out impurities in the blood.

The Strength-Creating Power of GROVE'S TASTELESS Chill TONIC has made it the favorite tonic in thousands of homes. More than thirty-five years ago, folks would ride a long distance to get GROVE'S TASTELESS Chill TONIC when a member of their family had Malaria or needed a body-building, strength-giving tonic. The formula is just the same today, and you can get it from any drug store. 60c per bottle.

The Church at Washington City.

BY F. B. SRYGLEY.

The third and fourth Sundays in November I spent in Washington City. I met with and preached for the brethren that worship in the Masonic Temple at Eighth and F Streets. I found Brother Long working with as much energy and hope as ever. I had no trouble in locating the place, as it is only about six blocks from the Union Station. No one was expecting me at that time, so I had an opportunity of seeing them with their everyday clothes on, so to speak. There was a good audience present and they seemed full of interest through all the services. There were brethren and sisters there who had come from different parts of the country, but they all seemed to be working in perfect peace and harmony. Perhaps our own State was as well represented as any other, possibly a little better. They have over one hundred members, besides a few others who attend with them, but have never obeyed the gospel. They cannot have a protracted meeting where they meet, as they can get the use of the hall on Sundays only. I was impressed with their liberality and devotion. They probably have more men who are willing to take a public or leading part in their worship than are usually found in our congregations. They are anxious to begin their building in the early spring. They have bought and paid for a good lot in a nice part of the city and have about half enough money to build a good, substantial house. They need and should have assistance from the brethren and churches over the country to build this house and not put themselves in debt. They are doing what they can, and will some day build a house in the nation's capital; but they need it now, and it will be an easy matter to furnish them the means to complete the work if we will but do our duty. Let the brethren and churches who see this make a little effort, and we will put this work over at once. I am impressed with the fact that Washington City, the capital of the greatest nation in the world, should have a house in which the pure, unadulterated gospel of Christ is preached. Our boys and girls are liable to be in Washington, some of them to make their homes there, and the full and complete gospel of Christ should be represented there. It is a radiating center for the United States and for the whole world, as for that matter. Brother Long, the right man, is there now, and we must assist him to complete this house. Send money to J. W. Gibson, 2500 Pennsylvania Avenue, S. E., or E. L. Mills, 2002 G Street, N. W., Washington, D. C.

Wonderful Egg Producer

Any poultry raiser can easily double his profits by doubling the egg production of his hens. A scientific tonic has been discovered that revitalizes the flock and makes hens work all the time. The tonic is called "More Eggs." Give your hens a few cents' worth of "More Eggs." and you will be amazed and delighted with results. A dollar's worth of "More Eggs" will double this year's production of eggs; so if you wish to try this great profit maker, write E. J. Reefer, poultry expert, 3258 Reefer Building, Kansas City, Mo., who will send you a season's supply of "More Eggs" tonic for $1 (prepaid). So confident is Mr. Reefer of the results that a million-dollar bank guarantees if you are not absolutely satisfied, your dollar will be returned on request and the tonic costs you nothing. Send a dollar to-day. Profit by the experience of a man who has made a fortune out of poultry.

The Romantic Story of Southland's Favorite Shoe, EzWear

Some five years ago, a prominent citizer of South Carolina, visiting New York on important business, chanced to meet the maker of a shoe built on new and unusual lines; an enthusiastic admirer of its moslines; an enthusiastic admirer of its mos-listinctive leatures, ease and comfort, had suggested the name EzWear; it was promptly adopted. The business man from the South, knowing how welcome such a shoe would be in his part of the country, urged that its remarkable qualities, in cluding not only comfort, but style, dura-bility and economy, be made known there. That this has been effectively done is proven by the enormous demand that has sprung up in the South for EzWear shoes sprung up in the South for EzWear shoes. It is said that its sale there during the last twelve months has increased fully three hundred per cent. The distributor, Mr. I. R. Simon, of 1589 Broadway, Brooklyn. N. The Disorderly and the Church.

BY W. S. LONG, JR.

Discipline is one of the most needed things in the church of God to-day. It has been neglected more than any of the commands of the gospel. It is my earnest prayer that the discussion of this subject may stir the eldership of every congregation to take the initial step and see that the congregation rids itself of disorderly members. A few positive statements backed by the word of God are here made to impress the important duty of discipline.

1. It is a positive command of the New Testament, "Now we command you, brethren, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye withdraw yourselves from every brother that walketh disorderly, and not after the tradition which they received of us." (2 Thess. 3: 6.) "In the name of the Lord Jesus, ye being gathered together, and my spirit, with the power of our Lord Jesus, to deliver such a one unto Satan for the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus." (1 Cor. 5: 4, 5.) These scriptures need no comment. The command is plain beyoud question.

2. Unless the disorderly show his sorrow and repentance for his sins, it is far better for him and the church, too, that immediate action be taken. Withdrawal will point out to the offender the seriousness of his crime, and he will then feel more keenly the guilt of his sin. The church will have performed its duty and stand in the true light before all the world. (1 Cor. 5: 5; 2 Cor. 2: 6:10.)

3. The church becomes guilty when failing to discharge this duty. "Your glorying is not good. Know ye not that a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump? Purge out the old leaven, that ye may be a new lump, even as ye are unleavened." (1 Cor. 5: 6, 7.) To tolerate corruption incriminates the church.

4. We are not left in doubt as to what it is to walk disorderly. Idolatry, sorcery, covetousness, extortion, drunkenness, fornication, indolence, idleness, lying, forsaking the command to worship and work, theft, and such like-to be guilty of such is to walk disorderly. (See 2 Thess. 3: 6-11; 1 Tim. 6: 4-6; 5: 12, 13; 1 Cor. 5: 9-13; Gal. 5: 20.) Some would excuse themselves from an open confession of sins by claiming that a secret confession to God of public sins is all that is required. To take such a position is to set aside the plain teaching of the word. The rebuke and the confession should be as public as the sin. I quote here a statement from Brother Campbell and give the proof text: "The acknowledgment of an offense and of repentance for it are, in all

Are You Losing Your Grip on Health?

> Physician's Prescription to Increase The Health and Strength of Anaemic, Rundown Men and Women and thousands of men and women are today losing their grip on health simply because their blood is thinning out and possibly starving through lack of iron. It is through iron in the red coloring matter of the blood that life sustaining oxygen enters the body and enables the blood to change food into living tissue muscle and brain. If people would only keep their blood filled with strength-giving iron by taking Nuxated Iron when they feel weak and rundown they might readily build up their red blood corpuscles and quickly become stronger and healthier in every way. If you are not strong or well you owe it to yourself to make the following test: See how long you can work or how far you can walk without becoming tired. Next take two five-grain tablets of ordinary Nuxated Iron three times per day after meals for two weeks. Then test your strength again and see how much you have gained. Nuxated Iron will increase the strength of weak, nervous, "run-down" men and women in two weeks' time in many instances. The manufacturers guarantee successful and entirely satisfactory results to every purchaser or they will refund your money. Nuxated Iron is on sale at all good druggists.

cases, to be as public as the sin itself. Peter's sin and repentance are as public as his name. So was David's. Those who have caused the Savior and his faithful followers to blush ought themselves to be made to blush before the world." This is true to the Book, and here is the proof: "Them that sin rebuke before all, that others also may fear." (1 Tim. 5: 29.)

5. The work of discipline must be done by the congregation, led by the clders. The elders are placed at the head to "take care of the church of God." (1 Tim. 3: 5.) They are to take the oversight and care for the flock. (1 Pet. 5: 2.) The punishment of withdrawing from the disorderly is done by the whole church. (See 1 Cor. 2: 6.) Sad indeed it is, and yet true, that discipline is almost unheard of in many congregations today. O for a speedy return to the New Testament order of things in this respect! When this is done, the church will have more power before the world. The members will be more loyal and sinners will come to the "fountain filled with blood."

Elements of Religious Destitution.

Near the close of our last article we used the word "disgust." That word better than any other, perhaps, represents the feeling of Græco-Roman society toward itself just prior to the coming of Christ. It certainly expresses the feeling of the better element, including the philosophers. The situation is better explained, however, if, instead of using one vivid word, we note four characteristic elements of the world's religious destitution. First, we mention skepticism. The epigram of Gibbon describes the condition exactly. He said: "To the politician all religions were equally useful, to the populace equally true, and to the philosophers equally false." You find an echo of Gibbon's observation in the words of the man who says: "All denominations look alike to me." What is this but a species of skepticism? As in ancient times, skepticism asserts for each the right to do what is pleasing in his own eyes. To the people all gods had failed. Certainty was unattainable, and no better light than probability was offered. Would it not be a dreary world for any of us were we compelled to say: "Probably there is a God, and probably there is not?" What a wonderful contrast when one can say with Job, "I know that my Redeemer liveth," or with Paul, "I know in whom I have believed!"

Destiny Had No Ears.

We are not surprised to find fatalism as one of the signs of religious destitution. As a result of nature religions, blind necessity, known as Fate or Destiny, occupied a high place among the Greeks and Romans. Men stood helpless and afraid before these implacable forces. The gods might be placated, but Destiny had no ears. The Romans were very inconsistent in following after such superstitions. They believed and fought for social order and government, but now they were admitting themselves helpless before Fate, which knew no order, but pursued a man's step from the cradle to the grave. But the Romans are not alone in their inconsistency. I know church members who run after fortune tellers and believe in taking chances.

We have already referred to the widespread disgust with life. This is the third element. The misery and poverty caused by the Roman conquests and civil wars destroyed the basis of a regular social life. Idleness brought the usual result—weariness. After all, there is nothing harder to bear than doing nothing. Amusements began to pall and means of excitement were exhausted. People moved from one place to another to keep from being bored.

Pessimism That Led to Suicide.

The fourth sign of destitution was a deep-seated pessimism, from which only the Jew escaped. The gay, lighthearted Greek, just because he was so sensitive to joy, was easily overtaken by a melancholy which gradually turned into unrelieved gloom. The Romans caught the same spirit from the Greeks. Their literature is full of pessimism. They contrasted their own age with the good old barbaric times. Historians and satirists dipped their pens in the blackest colors. Livy says: "We can neither cure nor endure our vices." Seneca, the noblest writer of them all, says: "Men complain that the hours drag too slowly past." The natural outcome of such a mood was suicide. "I can neither cure nor endure this life, therefore I shall end it." Suicide is but another expression of athelsm.

The Brighter Side.

We turn with relief from this sickening picture to view a better side of ancient society and note the rise and spread of higher and purer moral ideas. God has never in any age left himself without witness. The good and true found advocates and received expression even in that sinful age. The ideals by which we condemn the ancients were as yet in embryonic form. We must not overlook what a blessing it is to be born into a society with high ideals already established. Men form ideals before they endeavor to realize them; they taste the bitterness of sin before they thirst for righteousness. Had you and I lived in that age and under those terrible conditions, we would have been no better than their best. We should be grateful to the Heavenly Father, who has permitted us to live in a brighter day when he hath shined into the hearts of men, bringing "the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ." In gratitude we should profit by the great lessons of the past. The Græco-Roman age has one eternally true lesson to teach: it is that morality cannot long thrive among any people without the sanctions and incentives of religion.

When the Preacher Saved the Day.

In describing the better side of the Græco-Roman world, history demands that we pay a tribute to the preacher. Imperfect though he was, he became a powerful factor in building up the social and moral fabric of the age. Philosophy, which then covered the fields of morality and religion, led the way. Free speech was everywhere permitted. Certain philosophers avowed themselves to be physicians of the soul, ambassadors of God, whose business was to cure diseased souls. They revived the spiritual truths of religious teachers of the past and condensed them into a popular form to suit the age. Some philosophers, like some theological professors nowadays, did not go out themselves, but reduced their philosophy to a practical training for those who were to take it into the field. Men went out from the lecture halls to preach self-examination and selfculture. They counseled their hearers to preserve a good conscience, to act as if conscious that God sees all. They taught virtue to be its own reward and sin to be its own punishment. Preachers, like emperors, courted popularity with the masses. 0 0 0

Criticizing the Preacher.

Street preaching like that of the Salvation Army was started by the Cynics. There was a proportion of hypocrites among them. Men too lazy to work became preachers, reminding us of the old story of the father who had a son who had failed at everything he tried, and therefore the father "decided to make a preacher of him." Preachers were severely criticized then as now and as they will be so long as the world stands. There is always an element of society who attribute to preaching only the imperfections of its representatives. They can more readily detect the hypocrisy of one preacher than appreciate the earnestness of ninety-nine. Such people are too shallow-minded to deserve serious notice. It has been my observation, too, that some of those who criticize the preacher most severely are the first to send for him when they feel that death is near. Also, some people are more irritated by the collection than edified by the sermon. No man can preach against sin and be agreeable to everybody. Epictetus, one of these ancient preachers, had a lofty idea of his mission: "The school of a philosopher is a surgery. You ought not to go out of it with pleasure, but with pain, for you come there diseased."

Men may abuse their calling or they may ennoble it. But whatever men may think or do, "it was God's good pleasure through the foolishness of the preaching to save them that believe." I have often wondered if those who were so quick to sneer and speak evil of preaching as a profession ever stopped to consider that they are but laughing in the face of their Maker.

Inwardness.

One of the most remarkable and at the same time one of the most encouraging characteristics was what we might call "inwardness." There was an ever-growing tendency toward self-examination. It was characteristic of the Greek mind to inquire concerning himself. He idealized thought. Socrates urged the famous formula, "Know thyself." He made philosophy a criticism of life with a view to moral improvement. Most of us like to find our examples of sin in the lives of others, but Plutarch said: "If you like to study the history of sin, you will find plenty of material in yourselves." Horace frequently took stock of his moral life. Titus considered each day whether he had done any good, and, if not, exclaimed, "Diem perdidi!"--"I have lost a day." There is no more beautiful passage in pagan literature than the following from Seneca: "Every day I plead my case before myself. When the light is extinguished, and my wife, who knows my heart, keeps silence, I examine the past day, go over and weigh all my deeds and words. I hide nothing. I omit nothing. Why should I hesitate to face my shortcomings when I can say, 'Take care not to repeat them, and so I forgive you to-day?'" In these well-chosen words, signifying as they do an inward grasping for help and guidance, we find one of the finest preparations for Christ that one can possibly imagine. They breathe the lofty spirit of David, who prayed: "Let the words of my mouth, and the meditation of my heart, be acceptable in thy sight, O Lord, my strength, and my redeemer." They were voices crying in the wilderness of paganism, preparing the way of the Lord.

Search for Good Examples.

Still another encouraging feature was the earnest search for good examples. As in these days Christians find guidance in Bible texts, so at that time men needed some simple directions all the more because of the isolation of the individuals. Every system of thought had its ideal man, the picture of what a man ought to be. A kind of spiritual hero worship resulted. It is not uncommon today. There are many who worship men more than they worship God. Be it said to the credit of the ancients that at this time they were not seeking a military hero like Haig or Foch or Pershing. They worshiped those who triumphed in another kind of hardship. Strangely enough, the Greeks and Romans never thought of looking to their gods as examples. Orpheus and Pythagoras were held up before men's gaze. Socrates, whose personality was even greater than his teaching, became a kind of pagan Christ. The practical Roman thought that one of the best methods of educating his sons was by an appeal to the great men of the past. Readers of "Plutarch's Lives" will recall how everything he says is supported either by a text or by an example from history or mythology. Seneca reflects the need and practice of his day in his familiar direction to Lucilius to keep constantly before his mind the practice of some upright man, and so to live as if he were always in his presence.

Thus we see that Charles M. Sheldon did not give to the world a new principle when he wrote that splendid book, "In His Steps." He was but repeating the principle that was seized upon and used to tremendous advantage by pagan philosophers two thousand years ago. He did no more than clothe in a strikingly beautiful dress the exhortation of the beloved John: "He that saith he abideth in him ought himself also to walk even as he walked."

The Tennessee Orphans' Home.

BY J. PAUL SLAYDEN.

Last summer a number of brethren decided that it would be well to have more of the brethren to get acquainted with the Tennessee Orphans' Home; whereupon a general invitation was extended to brethren, and to others interested, to visit the Home on November 8, 1919, the day of the directors' meeting. Sisters from our local congregations took charge of the dinner and arranged to serve the crowd, so as to give the Home force a rest. A most excellent dinner was provided, consisting in part of four country hams. No one enjoyed the dinner more than the orphan children, who are keenly appreciative of the interest that is shown them. Several who attended the annual meetings as long as they continued said that this was the best day they had ever spent at the Home.

The report of the year's work showed that one hundred and seventy-eight children had been handled, with an average of sixty-eight, and that the business is being carried on economically, old debts having been liquidated and no new ones created. A man conversant with such work said that this is the best-managed institution of the kind in Tennessee.

Editorial Statement Challenged and Denied.
BY A. M'LEAN.

In the leading editorial in the issue of the 13th inst., the writer states that "the Congress itself clearly pointed out that the American Christian Missionary Society and the Foreign Christian Missionary Society have not only completely apostatized from the word of God and have thus abandoned the fundamental principles and most cherished aims of the Restoration movement, but they have apostatized along three of the most vital and fundamental lines, any one of which is a complete subversion of the New Testament. These lines are as follows: (1) They have actually adopted the practice of 'open membership,' which means the admission of persons to membership in the churches on sprinkling for baptism. Shades of Campbell, Stone, Scott, Johnson, Franklin, Lard, McGarvey, Peter, and Paul! (2) They are loose in the employment of men as missionaries, not even refusing those who deny the deity of the Lord Jesus Christ. (3) Some of their leading men have embraced the principles of destructive criticism and deny the divine inspiration of the Scriptures."

It would not be an easy thing to find in any other paper, secular or religious, an article of equal length that contains as many misstatements as this one. I meet every substantive statement with a square and absolute denial. The Congress expressed its convictions in fourteen resolutions and nowhere else. These resolutions do not charge the American Christian Missionary Society and the Foreign Christian Missionary Society with having completely apostatized from the word of God, or of having apostatized at all. It was not possible for the Congress to point that out clearly for the simple and sufficient reason that it isn't so. One has only to read the resolutions to discover that the editorial writer missed their meaning. As a matter of fact, the American Christian Missionary Society is not so much as mentioned in the resolutions.

In the sixth resolution a superfluous word of caution is addressed to the Foreign Christian Missionary Society and the Christian Woman's Board of Missions. I say "superfluous" advisedly, because these organizations have been doing in all the years of their existence the very thing they are besought to do.

Dr. F. D. Kershner, who had much to do with shaping these resolutions, has positively affirmed that there was no thought of reflecting on either of these organizations. And Dr. Z. T. Sweeney, the man who wrote the resolutions, states that "there was not in the minds of the Committee on Resolutions of the Congress any intention to reflect upon the integrity of character and probity of life of any of our official representatives, nor is there anything in the resolutions that does so reflect, as you will readily learn by a careful reading of them." These men could not have said these things if the missionary societies named had completely apostatized from the word of God and abandoned the fundamental principles and the most cherished aims of the Restoration movement and apostatized along three of the most vital and fundamental lines, any one of which is a complete subversion of the New Testament.

The statement in the editorial that these societies have "actually adopted the practice of open membership" has not an atom of truth in it. Neither society has done anything of the kind. Nor did the Congress so charge. The resolutions say that "certain among us are advocating and practicing open membership," and that is true. That is all the resolutions affirm. The resolutions do not say that the societies have done or are doing this thing. The second statement-namely, that the missionary societies are loose in the employment of men as missionaries, not even refusing those who deny the deity of the Lord Jesus Christis as destitute of any truth as the first. Neither society is loose in the employment of missionaries; on the contrary, the greatest care is taken to select only such men and women as it is believed will worthily represent Jesus Christ wherever they may be called to serve. Neither society has ever employed or would think for a moment of employing any man who did not declare that he believed in the Sonship and deity of our Lord. The third statement that some of their leading men have embraced the principles of destructive criticism and deny the divine inspiration of the Scriptures is as far from the truth as either of the other two. The leading men and women in the missionary societies take the Scriptures as their sole and sufficient rule of faith and practice. They hold that holy men of old spoke and wrote as they were moved by the Holy Spirit. All three charges are without any basis in fact or truth.

Here is something worth pondering. The nier and women who are accused of apostasy from the word of God were reëlected for the new year, and reëlected unanimously. It is simply inconceivable that the Convention would have done this if the charges of the editorial writer were true, especially since there were hundreds of the Congress people present when the election took place.

If the writer of the editorial had taken pains to inquire of the societies which he has assailed, he could have easily ascertained the facts in the case. Surely that much was due them. In that event it would not have been necessary for him to bring railing accusations against men and women who are as loyal to Christ and to the word of God as he is, and to invoke the shades of Campbell, Stone, Scott, Johnson, Franklin, McGarvey, Peter, and Paul. When one thinks of the absolute fairness and justice of Alexander Campbell, Isaac Errett, and Hugh McDiarmid in their editorial writing, and then thinks of how the editorial writer in the Gospel Advocate has misrepresented his brethren and sisters, he may well exclaim: "O, what a fall was there, my countrymen!"

Brother McQuiddy's Article on Brother Fuqua's Work. By LEE JACKSON.

I have been much interested in reading Brother McQuiddy's article in the Gospel Advocate of November 20 in which he gives us an interesting account of his visit to Colorado, of his meeting with Brother Fuqua, and of the difficulties in the way of mission work in Brother Fuqua's field of labor. Especially am I interested because of the fact that I have a kindly remembrance of pleasant associations with Brother Fuqua while he was here with some of our Mississippi brethren some fifteen years ago; and I now frequently meet with brethren who kindly make mention of Brother Fuqua's zealous work in some of the hard places in this part of our State. I well know, from sad experiences and from the history of Brother Fuqua's labors in these parts, that while here he was very inadequately supported.

After making some suggestions in regard to mission work in Colorado and in regard to methods for the proper support of evangelists, Brother McQuiddy courteously says that the columns of the Advocate are open to other brethren for suggestions. As I have long wanted to say a few things along the line suggested by Brother McQuiddy, I will accept this offered privilege; and in doing so I want to ask pardon in advance for all seeming egotism. Having long been a gospel preacher in destitute places and in difficult fields, and having always been in financial straits because of inadequate support, I simply feel that possibly I have earned the right to say some things that I could not consistently say under different circumstances. If, while now far advanced on the shady side of life, I was well fixed financially, well supported, owning a comfortable home and facing no dark days in the future, it would seem out of place for me to advise young preachers to support themselves by laboring with their own hands or to read them any sort of a lecture about an injudicious expenditure of money.

Brother McQuiddy's suggestion that some one or more congregations undertake the business of supporting Brother Fuqua in his mission work is an excellent one, and I simply want to emphasize its wisdom. As Brother Mc-Quiddy wisely says: "This support should be furnished in a systematic, businesslike way, and other churches should be given to know that these churches are taking care of his support." The wisdom in the suggestion that when a church is caring for the work of a preacher other church es should be informed of the fact is readily apparent to all thinking persons. Through the haphazard methods of brethren much money has been practically thrown to the winds in so-called "mission work." Some years ago a good sister had ten dollars that she wanted to send to some preacher to help him in his evangelistic work. She was in a quandary as to which one of three men in as many different States should receive the money. Each one of the three men was a prominent, well-advertised evangelist, who made it his business to cover a wide territory traveling from place to place holding meetings, generally for well-established congregations that were able to amply remunerate him for his work. The good sister's idea was that she could best serve the cause of God by sending her money to one or the other of these men. She let me know about her difficulty of decision by asking my advice as to the disposition of her contribution. I solved the problem by calling her attention to three unadvertised mission workers in our own home territory, men who were doing faithful work in communities where they were but poorly supported. One of these worthy men to whom I referred her was Brother Fuqua, at that time preaching in Mississippi; another one was W. E. Crum, of Hickory Flat. Like Oliver Twist, the great mass of men and women are always wanting just a little more. Among this number who want more may be included some of us preachers. It can be safely assumed that no consecrated, self-denying preacher ever gets more of this world's goods than his life work is worth to the community; but some of them manage to get more than their share, considered in proportion to the very little that others get. The haphazard method referred to results in the sending of money to certain well-advertised preachers, while others who are equally as worthy and who are doing an equally important work

Every preacher should be a bookkeeper, and some one in every congregation ought to keep books. Can I be pardoned for an allusion to my own work? If so, I will say that only last year a sister in one of the congregations where I have very frequently preached wrote me to know if I could tell her how much had been contributed to my work by the members of her congregation. I at once answered her that I could, and that I could also tell her what I had done with the money. I then got my account books together and copied the names of those in the congregation who had contributed to me, the amount contributed opposite each name, and the dates on which the contributions were made. I have followed this rule of keeping accounts so long that I now instinctively feel that I am not entitled to use a dollar until I have recorded it in my account book. Every well-established congregation should engage to regularly support an evangelist in some needy field, obligating itself to furnish his support. If this congregation is not of itself able to support the evangelist, it should call on other congregations to assist in the work, definitely naming the man to whom the money is to be paid. In this way it can be definitely understood what is required for the worker's support and the amount that he is getting. If the congregation that is looking after the support of an evangelist gets more money from outside sources than is necessary to pay him the amount agreed upon, this extra money can be used in helping other worthy causes. And every evangelist in a mission field should make faithful reports of all money that he receives, not reporting through the papers, but back to the congregation that stands sponsor for his support. It cannot hurt a preacher to always be kept in close touch with the local congregation that becomes responsible for his work. Then, if there arises any complaint against him, the matter can be referred back to this congregation. Records should be kept of money received and of all expenditures of money.

Brother McQuiddy found a peculiar phase of opposition retarding the cause of Christ out in Colorado. It is opposition to teaching the Bible in Bible schools, and opposition to preachers who have been educated in the colleges. Brother McQuiddy should not feel so much surprise at finding this sort of opposition out in Colorado. We have it down here in Mississippi; it is in Tennessee, Arkansas, and Texas; and in a greater or less degree it exists in all parts of our common country. The principle upon which this opposition is based is older than the origin of the fable of the fox with his tail cut off. Because he had no tail himself, this fox wanted to make it the fashion for all other foxes to have their tails cut off. But it most assuredly is not in harmony with the teaching of the gospel for those of us who have unfortunately missed the opportunity to study the Bible in college to make a test of fellowship against those who have been blessed with that privilege. It certainly cannot make a man any sounder in the faith or any more loyal to Christ for him not to be able to tell the source of the Jordan river, the distance from Beersheba to Jerusalem or from Jerusalem to Jericho, the direction in which Moses looked when he viewed the promised land from Nebo, nor be able to learn the depth of the Dead Sea below the level of the ocean. And because many parents are not prepared to teach these things to their children in the home is no reason why those children should be denied the privilege of learning them through the use of Bible literature in the Bible school. And the sooner children learn some of these associate facts of Bible georgraphy and history, the more probable it is that they will become interested in the study of the Bible. Why is it that when a preacher gets certain ideas in his head he is never able to learn anything else? Even though a man has never been to college or through a university is no reason why he should not be interested in learning things.

A Plea for Greater Missionary Effort.

BY F. W. SMITH.

The following letter from a worthy and zealous disciple is entitled to special notice:

Brother Smith: Some one, I know not who, has mailed me the tracts I am inclosing. No doubt you have seen them. I am in no way inclined to separate myself from the pure and simple gospel of Christ, but I am terribly grieved over the mission situation. I note in Brother Cowden's tract that there are only eleven missionaries working under our plan. If this be true, isn't it awful? Can it be possible that the primitive church of Christ, in her splendor and beauty and the only organization in the world that is backed up by God's eternal truth, is doing no more than this? I fear, Brother Smith, that we cannot get to heaven in this way. I do not mean this for you or any one else who does his duty; but it certainly is alarming, and terribly so, that Christians will allow such to be.

Now, I believe that some system or plan properly placed before the people will bring some great results. I know of no better way than through the Gospel Advocate. I know there are good, God-loving Christians, and thousands of them, all over the country, who read the Advocate, who love its editors and have all confidence in them and the writers, who regard them as great teachers, who have responded to worthy calls through their columns, who will also contribute to this mission call. I am going to suggest the following for your consideration: ready for a great campaign for 1920; that you prepare an article of length and force for the Advocate and all other religious journals which are loyal to the truth. I know you are certainly able for this undertaking. I also know that the brethren all over the country have great confidence in you as a gospel preacher, and one who is not afraid of opposition. I also would suggest that your writings be as impressive as possible, and that the great need of this work be put before the people in a way that will appeal to them with such force that they will not resist. I also would suggest that young brethren be urged to prepare for the ministry and to volunteer for mission work.

You know I was brought up under sectarian parents and for six years was a member of the Baptist Church when I began to learn the truth. I do not believe any one ever appreciated it more, and I thought the Christian brotherhood were the most loyal people on earth. Little did I know or even suspect that such division existed as does exist and that our own brethren were fighting and devouring one another as they are. I am told that we have one thousand less preachers to-day than we had ten years ago. I try not to be pessimistic, but this surely is discouraging to all truth-loving people and greatly encouraging to those who oppose us. I am only a five-year-old babe in Christ, handicapped for lack of learning and finances; but I tell you, Brother Smith, I am willing to sacrifice in every way I can for this precious cause that is bleeding and dying for lack of support and coöperation.

Brother Smith, can't you suggest a plan that will work? Can't you get the people to see our condition and the danger we are in? Can't you get them to go back to long ago and see the patience and love our Father had with the disobedient children of Israel and read again of the trouble they always had when they forsook him? I do not believe there is a true Christian living who will carefully read this history without being moved with a will to build up the cause.

Now, in conclusion, you will please pardon me for making these suggestions to you; but these are the sentiments of my heart, and I honestly believe that if the people are not stirred up we will be great losers, if not lost. I do not believe that the Advocate could do better than to give one of the special numbers to this work, and I pray that you and all others who can will do all you can to get this great work started in every locality where there are Christians, and that we may not appear before the great Judge emptyhanded or be weighed in the balances and found wanting.

Yours in hope of greater victories, X.

The tract by John B. Cowden, to which reference is made in the above communication, has for its introduction this sentence: "Any one that refuses to read both sides of a question is a sectarian who does not desire the truth." A just reply to this would be: Any one who refuses to state or suppresses the facts concerning a matter he opposes does not desire his readers to see "both sides," and is, therefore, worse than an ignorant sectarian. The tract in question is an effort to boost human missionary societies and to discredit the apostolic way of doing mission work. This the author does by telling how many missionaries the societies have, and how few the churches are supporting independent of the societies. Thus he seeks to establish the right of a thing by majorities; but upon this principle he will have "to go away back and sit down," for the Roman Catholics, Methodists, Presbyterians, and Baptists can distance him miles on miles. In fact, he would not be in the running compared with the number of missionaries sustained by the religious bodies mentioned. Now, if Brother Cowden really desires the people to know the truth about the workings of his societies, he should write another tract and scatter it broadcast as he has this one, showing the division, strife, wrangling, and corruption it has produced among the society people themselves. The doings of the societies have become a stench in the nostrils of thousands of society advocates themselves, and a heroic effort has been made to wrench it from the control of its present bosses. I believe it to be a fact that at least eightyfive per cent of the churches established in the United States calling themselves "disciples of Christ" were established without the societies. How many churches has the society established in Tennessee? It has been at work in this State for more than thirty years, and where are the monuments of its greatness? The tallest and most imposing monument it has builded has for its inscription: Division, strife, and alienation among a once united people and the retarded growth of the cause of Christ.

The brother whose letter is before us should be commended for his missionary zeal and desire to see the truth proclaimed abroad, but he should realize that God only requires him to what he can. The Gospel Advocate has, from the beginning, urged the spread of the gospel in harmony with the New Testament, and beyond this it cannot and will not go. It is true that very few, if any, churches or even individual Christians are doing all they can for the salvation of the world. I am more concerned about myself in this particular than I am about the other fellow.

From Brother Cowden's tract, one would think that he was on fire with missionary zeal, but the last I heard of him he was engaged in farming as a business. I have not heard of his turning the world upside down for Christ's cause, but occasionally I hear of him at some old, established church. The brother should show his faith by his works. Be missionary, Brother Cowden, and show us how to do the thing. Won't you? Frankly, if the way in which the apostles and churches under their divine guidance did missionary work so successfully is not God's way, and an all-sufficient way, I must confess my grave doubts of ascertaining God's will on any subject. Let us, therefore, bestir ourselves to work the New Testament order in this matter.

Why Is There a Dearth of Preachers?

BY J. W. BRENTS.

The articles which have appeared in the Gospel Advocate by Brethren Stubblefield and Talley concerning the dearth of preachers, to my mind, brings up some things and a condition which should be further considered. Perhaps there is no more important question which could be studied just now, unless it be a dearth of scriptural elders. As was recently suggested by that matchless preacher, Brother J. S. Dunn: "Folks talk a great deal about making preachers out of their sons; the crying need of to-day is more elders, and I would love to see my son make a good elder." As badly as we need preachers to-day, we surely need "shepherds to guide and tend the flock." Some one has suggested that when he "was a child they made popguns out of elders, but to-day they make elders out of popguns."

Brother Stubblefield's article was a dissertation upon the needs of the field in and about Montgomery, Ala. He concludes by asking: "Where are you going to get the men for these places? And why such a dearth of faithful gospel preachers?" And he could not believe the cause was due to a lack of education or fear of not receiving a support. He then invited a discussion of the matter. Brother Talley, anticipating a criticism of his article, said he was going to take a "precursory position." He then follows with a statement that "one cause of a dearth of preachers is due to a lack of substantial support." He then referred to the trials of the young preacher and covetousness of churches. And he thinks "if the question were settled before the judgment seat of God, that this (the lack of substantial support) has had more to do with the dearth of preachers than all other things combined." Be assured, Brother Talley, that I have no criticism upon your article, so far as the support of the preacher is concerned, for we all know he receives little enough. I cannot believe, however, that the dearth of preachers is due to a lack of substantial support more than all other things combined. Insufficient funds may cause a few "who love this present world," like Demas, to cease preaching; but even though his support be meager and his home not so "luxuriously furnished as others," surely a man "whose mind is stayed on the Lord" will not quit preaching because some church members had rather spend their money attending "movies," drinking Coca-Cola, smoking cigarettes, and countless other things, than to support a deserving preacher. I verily believe-and this may be taking "a precursory position '-that to-day it is the poor preacher who is accomplishing most for God. Preachers are like other people-too much money will ruin them. Not five years ago a certain preacher was calling for assistance to support his family while he preached the gospel in destitute fields. This brother, unfortunately, "struck a streak of luck" and got rich. To-day you never see where this preacher has done any preaching of any kind. Money rulned him. A few may have ceased their labors as ministers of the gospel because they were not supported with sufficient means to meet their actual expenses, but very few.

I believe there is a deeper and more vital cause for a dearth of preachers than the money proposition. Every preacher to-day can easily think back to some cause or influence which led him to pursue that course in life. Let Brethren Talley and Stubblefield give their reasons.

Is it not a fact that Brother Talley was reared by Christian parents and the early impressions which he received were, after all, the lasting ones? Maybe the young men, his schoolmates and classmates, who have taken up their callings as lawyers, doctors, bankers, and merchants, and have made their fortunes in the grand rush of events and are among the mighty and wealthy of the land, were unfortunate in their home life and did not have this Christian influence thrown around them.

Brother Charlie Stubblefield, one of my dearest and best friends, is preaching the gospel to-day because of that silent home influence upon his life; for was it not Sister Kate, when he was groping his way in sectarianism, like Priscilla of old, who "expounded unto him the way of God more perfectly?" And I wish we had a million more Kates. Just here, to my mind, is where preachers are made or unmade—in the home.

Long ago there was a man named Elkanah, who had Peninnah had children. two wives. Hannah was the mother of no children. Year by year this man with his wives went to worship and to sacrifice in Shiloh. Hannah was provoked by her adversary because of her barrenness. Hannah wept and prayed that the Lord of hosts would look upon her affliction and give unto his handmaid a man child. God heard this prayer and answered it. The influence of this mother of old gave to the world one of its greatest characters-Samuel. There is another story, as sweet as an angel's dream, told of a widowed mother who lived in a log cabin among the mountains of dear old Tennessee, who, one morning while sweeping up the dirt floor, picked up a small piece of paper and laid it upon the mantle. A little barefooted boy said: "Mother, why did you not burn that paper with the other trash?" The answer was: "My son, because it had the name of God written upon it." This little boy grew up among the mountains of his native State under such home influencessuch a mother. That little boy became the matchless, inimitable "Brother Larimore," who, like the mountains that towered above his home and surrounding hills and valleys, stands out above the ordinary man for gentleness, goodness, and nobility of soul. There are so many examples of this silent home influence. "And that from a child thou hast known the holy scriptures." And who was it that taught Timothy the holy scriptures? His mother and grandmother. When the home of Moses E. Lard was broken up because a widowed mother could no longer support the little ones depending upon her, with a broken heart she kissed her two little sons good-by and, giving them all she had, a New Testament apiece, and admonishing them to be true to its teachings, passed from their presence. One of those little boys became the author of our commentary on the book of Romans and one of the world's greatest preachers. Brother Charlie Taylor, of Paducah, Ky., an unusually remarkable preacher for his age and opportunities, relates this story of his sainted mother: "When I was but a very small boy, my mother taught me verses from the Bible, and use to take me in her arms and call me her 'preacher boy.' It was she who taught me to pray, and it was her dying request that I be a preacher." (I quote from memory.)

Just nere I trust that I may be pardoned for referring to a personal illustration. I ascribe all the credit to a godly mother for being a preacher to-day. It was she who prayed when I slept beneath her heart for a son, and that some day that son should preach the gospel. I am glad my mother has lived to know that her prayer has been answered. Truly, "the hand that rocks the cradle rules the world." I do not say that home influences are the only ones. There are other things which have had their weight. Many a boy has been fortunate enough to fall in with interested friends and through their encouragement have been led to become preachers. In the biographical sketch of Brother G. Dallas Smith by Brother John R. Williams, Brother Williams states that after being with him for some two years he said to him one day: "Brother Smith, you have the ability to preach the gespel and you should do it." He made no promise at that time, but we know the result.

Many a boy has entered our Bible schools with no thought of ever preaching the gospel; but the lives of such men as David Lipscomb, A. G. Freed, and T. B. Larimore had such constraining effect upon them that somehow they became preachers.

So, in conclusion, I would say that the cause for a dearth of preachers is not due to a "lack of substantial support;" but the main cause, I think, "if the question were settled before the judgment seat of God," is a dearth of homes where love reigns supremely and where mother's prayers ascend daily to the Lord of hosts, and who teaches her boys that the preaching of the gospel is the noblest of all callings. Yes, the main cause is a dearth of such homes, and a dearth of Lipscombs, Freeds, Larimores, Williamses, and others, who have been such mighty factors in leading young men to preach the gospel. Then, that we may relieve this deplorable condition, let us make our homes what they should be. Let us have our influence to be the very best. And last, but not least, let us make our Bible schools "places where, when our boys and girls enter, they will not get into the 'popular swim,' 'doncher know. and where baseball, football, basket ball, and glee clubs occupy their minds and where spiritual and mental attainments are of secondary consideration."

Gospel Trumpet Blasts.

BY A. A. BUNNER.

"Howbeit, because by this deed thou hast given great occasion to the enemies of the Lord to blaspheme, the child also that is born unto thee shall surely die." (2 Sam. 12: 14.) "Now therefore the sword shall never depart from thine house; because thou hast despised me, and hast taken the wife of Uriah the Hittite to be thy wife." (Verse 10.) "And David said unto Nathan, I have sinned against the Lord." (Verse 13.) "I acknowledged my sin unto thee, and mine iniquity have I not hid. I said, I will confess my transgressions unto the Lord; and thou forgavest the iniquity of my sin." (Ps. 32: 5.) For a full and complete penitential confession of sin and transgression by David, a man after God's own heart, turn and read the whole of Ps. 51. I would like to hear a discourse from some preachers on the sin and confession of David. It is a mighty good subject to study and preach on. It will do the preacher good as well as the enemies of the Lord. There are some men whom I would like to hear preach on the subject, after which I would like to step up to them and ask them the question: Can you sincerely and without hypocrisy adopt as your true sentiments the language of Job recorded in Job 31: 1, 9, 10, 11, 12? "He that covereth his sins shall not prosper: but whose confesseth and forsaketh them shall have mercy." (Prov. 28: 13.) But the man who only confesses his heinous sins when they are found out on him, and then, Adamlike, tries to shift the responsibility of his great crime onto the shoulders of another, and that, too, of a weaker vessel-I fear such confession is not genuine and not the kind of confession the Lord will accept. David's confession was: "Against thee, thee only, have I [not Bathsheba] sinned, and done this evil in thy sight." (See Ps. 51: 1-4.) I still think that David was a man after God's own heart and that God made no mistake in choosing him to be king.

"Lord, who shall abide in thy tabernacle? who shall dwell in thy holy hill? He that walketh uprightly, and worketh righteousness, and speaketh the truth in his heart. He that backbiteth not with his tongue, nor doeth evil to his neighbor, nor taketh up a reproach against his neighbor. In whose eyes a vile person is contemned; but he honoreth them that fear the Lord. He that sweareth to his own hurt, and changeth not. He that putteth not out his money to usury, nor taketh reward against the innocent. He that doeth these things shall never be moved." (Ps. 15.) The psalmist is not here showing how men enter Zion, but he is giving a faithful description of a loyal citizen of Zion; hence, in this Psalm we have the very finest summary of the essentials of Old Testament plety that can be given. It sets forth the character and conduct required in the worshiper for acceptance with God. The occasion of its composition may have been the bringing of the ark to Jerusalem. (2 Sam. 6: 17.) We should compare the whole Psalm with Isa. 33: 14-16. "Abide"-sojourn" (Revised Version). The man is set forth as the guest of God. "Tabernacle"-literally "tent," the kind of structure prepared by David for the ark. "Thy holy hill "-Mount Zion, viewed as God's dwelling place, and specially consecrated first by the presence of the ark and afterwards by Solomon's temple. "In his heart"emphasis is laid on inward sincerity as well as on outward "Backbiteth"-"slandereth" (Revised Version). "Taketh up a reproach." This phrase refers to receiving and repeating what is to another's injury. "He that sweareth to his own hurt, and changeth not." A truly upright and godly man will keep his word even to his own disadvantage. "Usury" was forbidden by the Mosaic law (Lev. 25: 36, 37; Deut. 23: 19, 20) as inconsistent with the kindly spirit of brotherhood among the Israelites. Interest was only allowed to be taken from foreigners. The absence of greed and exaction is what the psalmist com-"Nor taketh reward against the innocent." Bribery has always been one of the greatest corruptions of society. It was sternly forbidden in Israel, and certainly is not allowed under the gospel of Christ. "Nor taketh up a reproach against his neighbor," Once upon a time two cases came under my observation. One old deacon circulated a report on a young preacher that he (the young preacher) had whipped his own wife; and when accosted about the matter, his reply was: "I 'hearn' it." "You hearn' and then told or circulated it, not knowing whether or not it was true." "No, I did not know it to be true." "Well, then, why did you tell it? Now, I 'hearn' that when your brother was killed and you and the undertaker were hauling his body home, that you were both so drunk that you both fell off of the wagon. I have also 'hearn' that it is quite a common affair for you to get drunk. Shall I go around reporting these things to your injury, not knowing them to be true? I can tell three things I have 'hearn' on you to one story you can tell that you have 'hearn' on me. So go your length in telling what you have 'hearn' on me." Another case: A preacher said of a doctor: "He is not fit for an elder in the church, for I have heard that he swears and abuses his family. The doctor heard also that this same preacher, while engaged in a meeting at a certain place, passed himself off as a nurse and a single man, and tried to go with the girls; and this, too, was told by a woman who is a member of the church where the preacher held the meeting. Moral: Never repeat slander which you have "hearn," for the chances are that the other fellow can tell three stories which he has "hearn" on you to one you have "hearn" on him. "Lord, who shall abide in thy tabernacle? who shall dwell in thy holy hill?" "He that backbiteth not with his tongue, . . . nor taketh up a reproach against his neighbor." The man who puts in his time going around repeating slander is a twin brother to the liar. Then repeat no slanderous reports that you do not know to be true, and then do not repeat them just to slander even the vilest of the vile. Munsey says: "Slander is the gravest of crimes; it is worse than murder." This witness is true. Bridle your tongue; for he that "bridleth not his tongue, but deceiveth his own heart, this man's religion is (James.) Vain religion, vain religion, O how many are under thy influence, and perceive it not!

The Gospel Advocate of late has been getting out some special numbers on special themes, which have proved to be not only good, but very good. But, to my mind, the issue of November 13 is preëminently a special number. Every article in that issue is good and to the point, and all who failed to carefully read every article in that number failed to get a feast of good things. Turn to it and read it again, and read it with care. The article, "The Missing Link," is worth the entire subscription price of the paper for one year. Why will the brethren not fall to work and send in their delinquent subscriptions and then hustle to send in great lists of new subscribers and renewals? Christ has committed to no institution beneath the skies, save his church, the great work of preaching and supporting the gospel and converting the peoples of all lands; and, brother or sister mine, if you miss the opportunity of helping with your means this great work, you will find yourself a poor outcast pauper at the bar of God. Then be diligent, be in earnest, in this matter. No other organization the world over, save the church Jesus purchased with his own blood, has a place for every individual of every race or color, from the day of his birth into it to the day of his death, in which he can consecrate and exercise to the fullest extent all of his physical, moral, and spiritual powers in a right and acceptable manner to God. Young man, young woman, "seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness," and be a blessing to yourself and all who are around you.

There is not such a great dearth of preachers just now as there is of a dearth toward the preachers already in the field. Before you pray, "Lord, send more laborers into the field," go to work and support in a better way the laborers who are already in the field. God requires this right now of you, and you are going to be eternally lost if you do not do your duty along this line. When the support which you are unlawfully withholding from the true workers is forthcoming, the laborers will be found in abundance for the field—and efficient ones, too.

In Behalf of Starving Children.

· Another little child has shriveled up and died.

The mother, creeping back, gaunt and cold, from the desert, has put down the thin little bones with those that strew the road, so many miles, and has sunk beside them, never to rise again.

Only a little child and a mother out on the bleak Armenian road. But what is that Vision hovering there, and what is that Voice the cold winds bear to the ears of our souls? "I was hungry, and ye gave me no meat; I was naked, and ye clothed me not."

To-day—yes, to-day while we are preparing our gifts for Christmas—many more of these little children—not a hundred, nor a thousand, but two hundred and fifty thousand of them—are still wandering uncared for and alone in that dead land, "their weazened skins clinging in fear to their rattling bones," and they are crying out with gasping breath: "I am hungry!" "I am hungry!" And the voice of One who watches us as we prepare gifts to celebrate his birthday comes again to the ears of our souls: "I am hungry! I am hungry! I am hungry!"

Now the children and the mothers in Armenia are dreading the winter. "Just human remnants they are, not protected, many of them, from the elements by even the dignity of rags. The most favored have merely shredded rags." How shall we sing our Christmas songs—and laugh—and light the candles—and give beautiful gifts—while that pleading Voice cries in the ears of our souls: "I am naked—and cold!" "Naked—and cold!"

But we can feed and clothe those perishing ones—some of them—before it is too late. Herbert Hoover has cabled from the Caucasus: "It is impossible that the loss of two hundred thousand lives can at this day be prevented, but the remaining five hundred thousand can possibly be saved." They need not starve, and freeze, and die, if we will save them. In the name of Him who saw the multitude "as sheep not having a shepherd, and was moved with compassion toward them," and who exclaimed, when his disciples would turn them away, "They need not depart; give ye them to eat!"—in His name open your heart and purse and give to these Christians whom he loves—who are suffering for him, and with whom he is suffering. They need not die! Give ye them to eat!

Fifteen dollars a month (one hundred and eighty dollars a year) will provide food, clothes, shelter, and education toward self-support for one orphan child.

Ten dollars a month (one hundred and twenty dollars a year) will provide food, clothes, and shelter for one orphan child.

Five dollars a month (sixty dollars a year) will provide food for one orphan child.

He fed five thousand hungry people in the wilderness, and said to his followers: "The things that I do shall ye do also, and greater things than these shall ye do." To-day nearly eight hundred thousand destitute Armenians—His people—need food and clothing.

He took little children in his arms and blessed them. To-day will you take one, or more, of these sad, cold, hungry little children of Armenia into your arms and heart, in His name, and give them food, and warmth, and life?

What a joyful Christmas it will be, when, with your songs and your laughter, you hear a Voice of wondrous sweetness speaking to you: "O ye blessed of my Father I was hungry, and ye gave me meat; I was naked, and ye clothed me. Inasmuch as ye have done it to these my brethren, ye have done it to me."

In sending contributions, be sure and state whether they are intended for the Home Orphans' Fund, the Armenian and Syrian Fund, or the Poland Fund. Make all checks and money orders payable to A. B. Lipscomb, who will forward them to the proper commissioners.

Book Notices.

"The Jerusalem Tragedy" will make a handsome gift for Christmas. It is profusely illustrated, is ornamentally bound, and is packed full of good reading. We are selling it at the exceedingly low price of $1.25 per copy, postpaid.

"Outlines of Bible Study," by G. Dallas Smith, should be in every home. This book creates an interest in the study of the Bible in a systematic way. Single copies sell for 50 cents; one dozen copies, prepaid, $5.50; twenty-five copies, not prepaid, $10.

"Uncle Minor's Stories" is a very interesting book for both young and old, and especially is it charming to the children. This book is handsomely bound and is retailing for the very low price of $1.25. It makes a handsome Christmas gift. Let us have your order at once for a copy of this book.

If you want a practical and useful commentary on the New Testament, send us $4 for a set of "Peoples' New Testament," with Notes, by B. W. Johnson. There is a very great demand for this commentary, as it is especially suited to the busy man. We would be glad to have your order at once.

Do not forget to write us for anything you may need in the way of Bibles and Testaments. Nothing will make a more appropriate or better gift for Christmas than a good Bible. A large-type Bible or a large-type Testament will be appreciated by your mother or any dear friend. Write us for styles and prices, or see advertisement elsewhere in this paper.

"Life and Sermons of Jesse L. Sewell," by David Lipscomb, is not only a good book to teach the Bible, but it is a good book to teach pure English. The book has been read by many people and is almost universally commended. If you are seeking for Bible information; if you want to read good, pure literature, by all means send and get a copy of this book. Price, $1.25, postpaid.

We have coming from our press, which we hope to have ready for distribution in January, a book entitled "Adventism and the Bible." This book will be bound in cloth, will contain about 260 pages, and will retail for $1.25. The book exposes the fallacies of Adventism in a very convincing way and should have a wide circulation. If you are troubled with Adventists or their peculiar views, you should by all means send us your order for this book.

"The Gospel Plan of Salvation" is another good book that our readers should not overlook when buying their gifts. When making gifts, it is always well to give something that will be helpful as well as pleasing. No one can read "The Gospel Plan of Salvation" without much benefit from the perusal of its pages. We have not advanced the price of this most excellent book, but are still selling it at the old price of $2 per copy. May we not have your order to-day?

"The Model Church," by G. C. Brewer, is being given a very warm reception, and the sales to date have been far greater than we had expected. The book treats of live subjects, such as, "What Constitutes a Congregation," "The Qualifications and Duties of Elders," "The Relation of Overseen to the Overseer," "How Elders are Made and Unmade," "Dealing with the Disorderly," and other kindred subjects of much importance. Send us your order to-day. Price, $1, postpaid.

If you want to read a good book of sermons, one that is clear, strong, and convincing, send us $1.25 for a copy of "Sweeney's Sermons." I know of no book of sermons that you will read with more interest and profit. Send us your order before the holiday rush. As we are required to work short hours each day on account of the coal famine, of necessity we will find it difficult to get out our orders at this season of the year. We will take it as a favor if you will send in your order for any book that you may need at once.

By J. C. MeQUIDDY

Brother J. D. Clemens, of Grantsburg, Ill., asks, "Is it unscriptural to sing the song, 'The Greatest Thing Is Love,' in the 'New Christian Hymn Book' (No. 66)?" He then explains: "One of our good preachers who recently labored with us objects to the phrase, 'He took my place and died for me,' claiming that Christ took 'his own place' and died for us, and not 'my place.' Another of our able preachers calls for this song and commends it to the congregation. This, of course, causes confusion among us."

I can see no scriptural objection whatever to singing the song in question. Christ did not die for himself. He tasted death for every man and shed his blood for many for the remission of sins. He had no sins to remit, but all people sinned and needed the atoning blood of Jesus Christ. "For as in Adam all die, so also in Christ shall all be made alive." (1 Cor. 15: 22.) Christ came into the world and died in order to save and redeem sinners. Without his death, all must suffer death. No other sacrifice would atone for the sins of the world. "Without the shedding of blood there is no remission."

W. T. Buffaloe, of Monette, Ark., says that a sister in his community teaches that under no condition of separation and divorcement has a man or woman the scriptural right to marry again.

The fact that this sister so contends does not make it so. Paul teaches us that husband and wife have a right to live separate, but they must remain unmarried. There is no ground for either to marry unless the other be guilty of adultery. Adultery breaks the marriage vow; and if either marries, that one is guilty of adultery. I cannot see why the Savior made the exception of fornication or adultery. if that does not break the marriage vow. Clearly the Savior makes an exception when he says: "But I say unto you, that every one that putteth away his wife, saving for the cause of fornication, maketh her an adulteress: and whosoever shall marry her when she is put away committeth adultery." (Matt. 5: 32.) Also Matt. 19: 9: "And I say unto you, Whosoever shall put away his wife, except for fornication, and shall marry another, committeth adultery: and he that marrieth her when she is put away committeth adultery." I have no means of making this plainer than the Savior has done.

Brother I. H. Choate, of Dickson, Tenn., inquires to know if there will be degrees in punishment in torment according to the wicked deeds which one commits. He says: "I take the position that all will receive the same punishment."

The Bible clearly teaches that there will be degrees in punishment according to the willful ignorance or disobedience of people. This is clear from Luke 12: 47, 48: "And that servant, who knew his lord's will, and made not ready, nor did according to his will, shall be beaten with many stripes; but he that knew not, and did things worthy of stripes, shall be beaten with few stripes. And to whomsoever much is given, of him shall much be required; and to whom they commit much, of him will they ask the more." I understand this is the willfully disobedient servant. Any man who sins in the face of knowledge is such a servant. His neglect of known duty shall aggravate his punishment. The man who sins in ignorance, provided he is not responsible for that ignorance, shall have lighter punishment. All will not be punished alike. Men's responsibilities are measured by their opportunities, as is clear from Matt. 11: 23, 24: "And thou, Capernaum, shalt thou be exalted unto heaven? thou shalt go down unto Hades: for if the mighty works had been done in Sodom which were done in thee, it would have remained until this day. But I say unto you that it shall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom in the day of judgment, than for thee."

Brother W. C. Fuqua, of Stonewall, Tenn., inquires to know (1) when the Sabbath, or seventh day, was changed to Sunday, the first day. He also is concerned to know whether the change was made by divine authority or by the Roman Catholic Church and Constantine about the year 321 A.D. He inquires to know, further, if we should observe the day from sundown to sundown or according to Roman time. (2) He says: "My wife and I have just obeyed the gospel, being baptized into Christ while on a visit to my home, where the church of Christ is the established one. Here, where we live, there is no Christian Church. Would you advise us to continue to meet with the Methodists?"

1. The Sabbath or seventh day of the week has never been changed to the first day of the week. The Sabbath is still the seventh day, or Saturday. The first day is Sunday, or the Lord's day. The Sabbath was given to commemorate creation, and was given to the Jews because of their deliverance from Egyptian bondage. The first day of the week commemorates an entirely different event, the resurrection of Christ from the tomb. So long as the law of Moses was in force the Sabbath was properly observed. After the establishment of the church, we find Christians observing the first day of the week. I see no reason why the Roman manner of computing time should not be observed instead of the Jewish.

2. I would suggest to the brother and his wife that they do their best to establish the church of Christ where they live. He and his wife can have the emblems together, and with the proper effort they soon can have other Christians to meet with them to honor the Lord on the first day of the week.

Sister Florence Wyatt, Winesap, Tenn., wants to know (1) when Saul called on the Lord as recorded in Acts 22: 16. Did Saul call on the Lord before or after baptism? (2) She also inquires to know the meaning of Acts 2: 21, wanting information on the point as to whether a sinner should pray for salvation before obeying the Lord in baptism.

1. Acts 22: 16 reads: "And now why tarriest thou, arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on his name." Evidently the calling was done in the act of baptism and obedience. It is perfectly natural for one to pray when moving in faith and obedience. Saul of Tarsus, in obedience to the command, "Arise, and be baptized," did so, relying upon and trusting Christ for salvation. Every believer, in being baptized, confesses his own inability to save himself—his own weakness, fallibility, and sinfulness—and proclaims the power of Christ, and Christ alone, to save him. Helpless, with his breath suspended, eyes closed, passive in the hands of the administrator, he goes down into a watery grave, is baptized into death, looking up unto Christ, and calling on the Lord to bless and save him in the act.

2. Acts 2: 21 reads: "And it shall be, that whatsoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be saved." This means to turn to the Lord in his appointed way. It means a great deal more than prayer. It is not enough to say, "Lord, Lord, open unto us." All who call upon the name of the Lord must hear and obey. (Matt, 7: 21.) "Faith without works is dead, being alone."

Annual Meeting of the Directors of the Tennessee Orphans' Home.

BY J. C. M'QUIDDY.

This meeting was held on November 8, 1919. As stated elsewhere in this issue by Brother Paul Slayden, the churches took charge of the dinner for the children of the Home and the directors on that day, and did their work in a most commendable manner.

The directors went thoroughly into the financial condition of the institution, looked carefully into its management for the past year, and were gratified at the showing that was made by the management. While the management was not faultless, yet the affairs of the institution had been managed in such an economical manner, the maintenance of the children held to such a low average, that, despite the high cost of living, the institution has steadily increased in usefulness. The liberality of Christians has been such that funds have been provided for the maintenance of more children from November 1, 1918, to November 1, 1919, than in any preceding year.

While the management did not show any more money on hand than is actually needed for the proper support of the children now in the Home, yet every indication encourages the directors to believe that the liberality of Christians will provide funds as needed for the maintenance of other or-

THE FARM.

Much time and consideration were given by the directors to the management and improvement of the farm that is owned by the Home. It is believed that by proper management the farm can be put into such a state of cultivation that it will be very helpful in furnishing a support for the children. The directors are endeavoring to get a number of good milch cows, so that from the farm the Home may get all the milk and butter that the children of the Home will consume. Doubtless there are many good brethren throughout the country each of whom will cheerfully give the amount necessary to purchase a good cow. Those who are managing especially the farm are seeding it in a way that will speedily increase the fertility of the soil and thus make the farm far more productive. The directors also decided to raise sufficient funds to build a good house on the farm. This will enable the directors to get a practical, capable, and efficient farmer who will get the best possible results from the farm. Considerable funds, but not sufficient for the work, have already been given and pledged for the erection of this house. I do not feel that it is necessary to beg Christians to make a contribution to such a work. If such work as this is not pleasing and honoring Christ, I cannot conceive of what work would be. Simply to give an opportunity to brethren to make a contribution for such a work should be all that is necessary to secure ample funds for the erection of the house.

If any one who reads this article would like to lay up treasure in heaven by contributing one hundred dollars, fifty dollars, twenty-five dollars, or even ten dollars, or any other amount, toward the erection of this house on the farm of the Tennessee Orphans' Home, please send your check direct to me, and the check will be properly applied. Let every one give as his own soul requireth.

THE HOME STEADILY GROWING IN USEFULNESS.

It should indeed be gratifying and encouraging to all Christians to note that the Home is steadily growing in influence. Its power for good is greater to-day than it has ever been before; but even now its usefulness should be just beginning. If funds are properly handled and managed and if the claims of the institution are put before the people in an intelligent manner, I firmly believe that this institution will continue to grow until its usefulness is even a hundredfold greater than it is now. Feeding, clothing, and training orphan children is a work that appeals to all alike. No man should claim to have the Spirit of Christ who does not find pleasure in doing work of this kind. I do not mean to intimate that a man cannot be a Christian, or that a man will go to perdition, or that one cannot enjoy the approval of God, without contributing to the Tennessee Orphans' Home. I do say, however, and believe most heartily, that the man who has the Spirit of Christ will delight to engage in such work. Even if he does not contribute to the Tennessee Orphans' Home, he will find pleasure in feeding the hungry, in warming the cold, and in training children for usefulness and happiness. Men who have imbibed the spirit of the meek and lowly Jesus will not turn a deaf ear to the cries for help that come from orphan children. The beloved John wrote; "But whose hath the world's goods, and beholdeth his brother in need, and shutteth up his compassion from him, how doth the love of God abide in him?" (1 John 3: 17.)

As one of the special characteristics of Christ's ministry was that the poor had the gospel preached unto them, so the ministry of those who have the Spirit of Christ, his subjects, will also find much pleasure in ministering to the helpless orphans. God's true children do not have respect of persons, but they have respect for the true faith of Christ, which leads them to do good to those who are in need. "My brethren, hold not the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Lord of glory, with respect of persons. For if there come into your synagogue a man with a gold ring, in fine clothing, and there come in also a poor man in vile clothing; and ye have regard to him that weareth the fine clothing, and say, Sit thou here in a good place; and ye say to the poor man, Stand thou there, or sit under my footstool; do ye not make distinctions among yourselves, and become judges with evil thoughts? Hearken, my beloved brethren; did not God choose them that are poor as to the world to be rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom which he promised to them that love him?" (James 2: 1-5.)

WE CANNOT LIVE IN THE PAST.

We can neither live in the past nor in the future. We live only one day at a time. It will not avail us anything to boast of what we have done in the past. We cannot live to-day on the food that we have consumed in days that have passed and gone. We cannot live on the air that we have breathed, nor can we live spiritually upon the good works of the past. Taking it for granted that our zeal has been all that it should have been in the past, we must now renew our determination and allegiance to God and do the very best that we can in his service while it is day in order to be well pleasing unto him. With each day comes new duties, new obligations, and new aspirations. Many of our friends and associates who stood with us in the past have slipped away. They are no longer supporting and upholding us in every good work. So in the Home we will continually have new conditions arising. New children will come to the Home. Mothers will be taken to their eternal reward. Children will be left homeless and penniless and must be cared for. Will we be equal to the task? Will we put our best manhood and noblest womanhood into such work, or will we fold our hands and sing of what we have done in the past while our spirituality and usefulness die? God forbid! Let us with all interested workers resolve anew to feed more who are hungry, clothe more who are destitute, and warm more who are cold, in the future and in the present, than ever

CONTRIBUTION FOR THE HOME.

On the first Lord's day in January, 1920, we are asking all churches and Christians who are interested in this work to make a liberal contribution for the orphans. Will not some of our stronger churches who have been neglecting this contribution in the past begin the new year by making a liberal contribution for the orphans in the Tennessee Orphans' Home? The liberality of the churches in the past has been encouraging, but we hope that their liberality will abound more and more in this good work.

Send all contributions for the Home to the Tennessee Orphans' Home, Columbia, Tenn.

The Apostasy of the Missionary Societies and the 'I Restoration Congress.

BY M. C. K.

On page 1219 of this issue of the Gospel Advocate we publish, from the pen of A. McLean, president of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society, a criticism of our editorial on the Restoration Congress and the Missionary Convention recently held in Cincinnati. Certainly not because of any merit in his article—it contains nothing to recommend it—but because it is a characteristic dodge common to destructive critics and those in sympathy with them and affords a fine opportunity to expose their dubious methods of dealing with facts where great and serious issues are involved, we ask our readers to give his "square and absolute denial" a careful reading.

First of all, we promptly meet his "square and absolute denial" with the very appropriate counter-affirmation that, to adopt his own classic and brotherly (?) language, it "has not an atom of truth in it," so far as the charge which the Advocate editor made against the missionary societies is concerned; and that a man of A. McLean's intelligence would make such a denial in the face of the stubborn and damaging facts which confront him would indeed be surprising, if we did not know that this same "square and absolute denial" is one of the most common turns in the peculiar tactics of destructive critics and those in sympathy with them.

The Advocate editor did not say, nor does his language necessarily mean, that the missionary societies had formally indorsed "open membership" and the other apostasies in question, and probably no one knows better than A. McLean himself that sometimes very wrong and wicked things are done both by individuals and by corporations, through their agents and otherwise, without formal action at all. We have the highest authority in the universe for the position that the high crime of adultery is sometimes committed even in the heart. Nevertheless, because his societies had not formally indorsed the apostasies in question, it suited the purpose of this juggler with words to attempt to darken counsel by hiding behind a mere formality. But it is an "ill wind which blows no man to good;" and our critic has unwittingly furnished the opportunity not only to submit the proof that the missionary societies aided and abetted in bringing about the sad situation which called for the Congress and its loud protest. but also to lay bare the fact that, if he did not know this of the societies when he made his denial, then he is inexcusably ignorant of a notorious situation. We now note some of the facts of this situation.

- 1. The very origin of the Congress is proof of the charge made against the societies. Not only had the practice of "open membership" been adopted by some of the preachers and churches supporting the societies and with which the societies are in affiliation, but the deity of Christ was called in question, the materialistic philosophy which repudiates the inspiration of the Scriptures and discounts the Bible as the word of God was taught, and "infant dedication" was substituted "for infant sprinkling" on the mission field-all of this, so far as the public knew, without a word of protest from either the Foreign Christian Missionary Society, of which A. McLean is president, or the American Christian Missionary Society. These things had become so general and widespread, without a word of protest, so far as the public knew, from any officer of either the Home or the Foreign Society, that many brethren became alarmed over the situation which, in their judgment, called loudly and seriously for protest; and consequently the Christian Standard and its sympathizers, we take pleasure in informing Brother McLean, decided on a Congress for that purpose to meet in Cincinnati on the occasion of the General Convention of 1919.
- 2. When the Congress convened, it was found to be composed of over two thousand disciples who had enthusiastically gathered from all parts of the country to utter their loud and positive protest against the American Christian Missionary Society, the Foreign Christian Missionary Society, and the Christian Woman's Board of Missionary Society, and the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, because of the encouragement these societies, by their silence as well as otherwise, were giving to the apostasies in question. Were these thousands of disciples gathered in Cincinnati and thousands more who were in sympathy with them, but were not there, all deluded and making a loud protest when there was nothing against which it was necessary to protest?
- 3. But our brother, who hides behind a formality, when everything essential to Christianity is at stake, says: "The American Christian Missionary Society is not so much as mentioned in the resolutions." Well, what if it is not, when everybody knows that it was the American Christian Missionary Society and the other societies that were meant by the resolutions? Shame on such a point! When the question of merging all the societies into one united society was up for discussion before the Convention, it was not only made plain that the resolutions meant the societies, but the very apostasies for which they were held responsible, and which were identically what the Advocate editor charged, were clearly pointed out, among which, he addition to those mentioned in our former editorial, is the substitution of "infant dedication for infant sprinkling;" and this man McLean, the president of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society, was publicly asked in the convention if he would see to it that this practice is stopped, but no reply from him appears in the report. "Infant dedication" substituted "for infant sprinkling!" Again we say, shades of Campbell, Stone, Scott, Lard, McGarvey, Peter, and Paul! The case is far worse than our former editorial made it out.

We now introduce some of the witnesses and their testimony. John T. Brown, of Louisville, said to the Convention:

I just want to ask one question, which may be answered by Brother McLean, the president of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society: If these societies are to be merged into one, will Brother McLean, or those that are in authority, see to it that we stop dedicating infants on the foreign field? I have seen these infants dedicated at church services over there in a large number of our own fields. Will those in authority ask our representative, Peter Ainslie, if he will withdraw his statement that the churches of Christ have substituted infant dedication for infant sprinkling? If they will answer that, and will notify the missionaries at once that this unscriptural practice of dedicating babies on the foreign field must cease at once, then I am for the merger; but if they won't answer that question in the affirmative, I shall vote against it.

W. H. Book, of Columbus, Ind., said:

Will you assure us, if we vote for the unification of the societies, that no man shall be employed anywhere in all the world by any one of these organizations who stands for open membership?

P. H. Welshimer, of the great church in Canton, Ohio,

Unfortunately, I am sorry, some sectarial utterances and administrative policies in the last year or two have aroused suspicion in the hearts of thousands of us. When a secretary will make the statement that he does not care if another church of Christ is not established in the United States of America in the next twenty years, in the name of God, won't people ask questions? Mr. Chairman, I am satisfied that a word of expression from the secretarial and the presidential force of our societies, in which they will give evidence, as some of the ex-secretaries did on the platform of the Congress, that they intend to stand by the Restoration movement, will clear the situation and bring united support. . I am going back to Canton, and I am going to say to my people, we will exercise a large measure of faith again this year. We will take the largest offering in the history of the church. Then, when the merger has been tried for a year, if there is a deviation from the line of the Restoration movement, if men who preach what are known as first principles are sneered at and laughed at-then, sir, after this year we go in independent ways, and it is "good night!"

That means, and A. McLean, if he is properly at himself, knows it means, that Welshimer and his great church at Canton, after another year's trial, if the society does not reform, will abandon it and work in some other way.

S. S. Lappin, of Bedford, Ind., making public McLean's Foreign Society's effort to force the churches and preachers to support both men and measures which they believe it wrong to support, said:

Mr. Chairman, a secretary sitting on the platform to-day said to one of our ministers that the Methodists promote or degrade men according as they raise money for benevolences or not, and that we have a similar practice. We want to know whether that strain is going into the new organization. I cite as evidence in the case one of our men who went to China as a missionary. Twelve men, every one of them a Christian gentleman, testified personally that he believed in open membership, and some of them that he disavowed faith in the deity of Jesus. Nevertheless, the Foreign Christian Missionary Society sent Sarvis to China; but, friends, I want to know whether that strain is going into the new offspring when the merger is effected, . . I take the position that Mr. Welshimer has taken. Everything goes as usual for another year. But I want to know whether this foolishness is to go on.

That was another notice served on President McLean and his associates in the conduct of the societies that, for the next year, they would be strictly on trial, and at the end of that period, unless the society reforms, it will be abandoned; yet, the president of the Foreign Society, knowing that the Advocate readers, unlike those of the Christian Standard, are not in possession of all the facts touching the unfaithfulness of the societies, seeks, by "a square and absolute denial"—a denial which takes advantage of a mere formality and rests on nothing material to the issue but his bare word—to make the impression on them that the societies are innocent of the apostasies charged and which made the Congress and its resolutions necessary! He should be heartly ashamed of himself.

Mark Collis, of the large and influential Broadway Church, Lexington, Ky., calling attention to the denial of the deity of Jesus and other departures from the Restoration movement connived at by the societies, said:

My brother, Mr. President, you spoke of a yoke we are trying to put on our brethren. I would like to know what yoke of opinion we are trying to put upon anybody. Why, the gospel is the power of God unto salvation. are to preach the word-the gospel. The apostle spoke of the gospel being perverted in his day and of men being untrue to that gospel. Now, I wondered when the brother said that, if he meant I was putting a yoke upon somebody when I say that I want to talk about the delty of the Lord Jesus Christ. I wonder whether he meant I was putting a yoke upon somebody when I want a man who goes to teach the heathen and to teach these poor people in the Western fields, in the mining districts and in the foreststo teach them that the Bible he presents to them is the sure word of God; that it is safe for them to follow it; that it is inspired, not as Shakespeare is inspired, but that they were moved by the Holy Spirit; that it is not errors and old wives' fables; that it is not a book inspired in spots.

But that is not all. Ira Boswell, of Georgetown, Ky., said:

Mr. Chairman, I have two questions to ask: If this merger goes through, will the United Society continue to send its representatives to the State conventions to boost our colleges in their disloyalty to our plea and to the word of God, and to back them in their efforts to run the Convention by eliminating those who oppose the college? Will this merger perpetuate the present policy of the Educational Board and the Men and Millions Movement so as to make no distinction between sound and unsound institutions, so as to appeal equally for those that are Christian and those that are rationalistic? . . . I know that these things have been done, and I want to know if they will continue in our work.

That was a fine opportunity for President McLean to put in his "square and absolute denial," and shame on him that he did not do it! The charge was then and there openly and directly made that the society sent "its representatives to the State conventions to boost our colleges in their disloyalty to our plea;" that it was guilty of trying "to run the Convention by eliminating those who oppose" such a "college;" and that "the present policy of the Educational Board and the Men and Millions Movement" is "to make no distinction between sound and unsound institutions," or "those that are Christian and those that are rationalistic." There was the direct charge that the society was aiding and abetting, through its officious agents, the spread of the nefarious system of German rationalism. Why did not the president of the Foreign Society then and there rise up with his "square and absolute denial?" "Ay, there's the rub!" Hundreds of men with the high standing of those here quoted would have overwhelmed and silenced him with evidence of the truthfulness of the charge, and hence he kept mum! Moreover, all of this testimony with all of these charges, in substance, has been spread out in the columns of the Christian Standard, from which we quote it from its issue of October 25, 1919. Why did not this brave Spartan rush into that journal with his "square and absolute denial?" We repeat, shame on him that he did not do it! With all due respect for him and his compeers in their apostasy from the Restoration movement, we hesitate not to say that it is nothing short of cowardly to keep silent before the thousands in the great Convention and before the vast constituency of the Christian Standard, where the charges were originally made, and then come to the comparatively little audience of Gospel Advocate readers to air his "square and absolute denial!" In the light of the facts now submitted, our readers will know how to estimate

Not only does he hide behind a formality in attempting to shield his societies, but he attempts to pervert the generous language of F. D. Kershner and Z. T. Sweeney, who assisted in drawing up the Congress resolutions and gave them enthusiastic support, but who, nevertheless, in subsequent references to the clash between the two parties to the controversy, stated that "the Committee on Resalutions of the Congress" had no "intention to reflect upon the integrity of character and probity of life of any of our official representatives;" but they do not say that the "official representatives" are not in part responsible for the deplorable situation which made the Congress and its protest necessary. As to his appeal to "the absolute fairness and justice" of Isaac Errett in his "editorial writing," while there are some things on which that great editor was not in agreement with the Gospel Advocate, he was in perfect agreement with it on the great principles which called forth the Cincinnati Congress; and if he had been in it with the same convictions, no man's voice would have been more prompt or clearer than his in condemning the society apostasies in question.

Elder J. B. Briney, of Pewee Valley, Ky., who is known wherever the Restoration movement is known and whose name is a synonym for soundness touching the great and vital issue between the defenders of the Bible as the word of God and the defenders of Corman rationalism which reduces it to the level of a human document, has been a prominent leader of the fight against rationalism for many years, and especially since its appearance in the College of the Bible at Lexington, Ky. He is not an opponent, but an advocate of the societies, though he has felt in conscience bound to oppose the apostasies winked at by the societies in recent years and keeps himself fully abreast of all important developments in the situation. In reply to a recent letter of inquiry from the Advocate editor, Brother Briney says:

Guy Sarvis is the man whose soundness in the faith was called in question when the F. C. M. S. employed him and sent him to a foreign field. His employment raised quite a storm of protest, and I offered a resolution in the Louisville convention demanding that his employment be discontinued; but, contrary to all parliamentary law, the resolution, after being submitted to the house and discussed, was declared out of order by the chairman and withdrawn by him without coming to a vote.

R. M. Hopkins, Bible School secretary of the A. C. M. S., is a trustee of the College of the Bible and upholds the Crossfield administration and indorses the professors who teach evolution and destructive criticism. F. M. Raines, recently deceased, was also a trustee of the College of the Bible, and gave its present administration his indorsement. He was officially connected with the F. C. M. S. for many years.

Upon circumstantial evidence I believe that most of the officers of the two societies are in sympathy with the program that is being carried out in the College of the Bible.

. If any officer of either society has ever said a word in commendation of the effort to reclaim the college and restore it to its original purposes, I have never heard of it. Nor has it reached my ears that any one of them ever said a word in disapproval of the present administration and policy of the College.

Thus we see that, notwithstanding, as the evidence hereinbefore submitted shows, they had the proof from reliable men that Sarvis called in question the deity of Jesus, Brother McLean and his society, nevertheless, sent him to the foreign missionary field, and "his employment raised quite a storm of protest." Moreover, even after Brother Briney's "resolution in the Louisville convention demanding that his employment be discontinued" had been "submitted to the house and discussed," the sentiment among the society leaders was so strong in his favor that the resolution "was declared out of order by the chairman and withdrawn by him without coming to a vote," Listen again: "R. M. Hopkins, Bible School secretary of the A. C. M. S., is a trustee of the College of the Bible . . . and indorses the professors who teach evolution and destructive criticism." And if our venerable brother's "circumstantial evidence" is not sufficient to convict, how does it happen that no "officer of either society has ever said a word," of which Brother Briney has ever heard, in commendation of the effort to reclaim the college and restore it to its original purpose?" It happens because of the fact, which we have now established, not by "circumstantial evidence," but by positive evidence, in this article, that the societies could not consistently send their agents to State conventions to "boost" an apostate college and at the same time speak out in condemnation of the college and in commendation of efforts to reclaim it from its apostate condition.

Finally, with all right-thinking and reasonable persons, the very existence of the Congress and its ringing resolutions, together with the testimony subsequently introduced before the Convention, are proof that some of the churches and the societies have apostatized from the principles of the Restoration movement, not only along the lines mentioned in our former editorial, but along others equally detrimental to that movement.

"Ministers for the League."

BY E. A. E.

Under this heading the Literary Digest for November 29 states the following encouraging facts:

The ministers are "most certainly" not taking an attitude of opposition to the League of Nations, if we are to accept the findings of the National Committee on the Churches and the Moral Aims of the War, which made a postal inquiry reaching over seventeen thousand clergy and sent a special investigator to some thirty representa-The postal poll disclosed about one in twenty tive cities. who would defeat or drastically alter the League covenant. The investigator who made the survey says in the Christian Work that "the preponderance of church sentiment seems to be that it would be a calamity to the Christian church and to the kingdom of God on earth if the treaty and the League covenant should not be ratified this year. Thirty cities of the East and Middle West have been can-vassed and the belief is thus derived that "the sentiment of ministerial associations, church federations, denominational conferences, and other ecclesiastical establishments out there is in favor of the League of Nations." All through the Mid-West "and other sections of this country All the voice of the preacher is heard proclaiming the necessity for a League of Nations."

WHY PREACHERS WELCOME THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Quoting from the Christian Work, the Literary Digest

The Christian Work finds it "not difficult to understand why preachers welcome with such alacrity the League of Nations:"

"They have for years been reading their New Testament and studying the life of Christ. For generations they have been repeating 'God has made of one blood every nation of man to dwell on all the face of the earth, having determined their appointed seasons, and the bounds of their habitation.' They have been leading their flocks to a consideration of the Golden Rule. They have cried aloud and spared not those whose purpose in life is one of domination and not service. The Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man have been their constant themes. Preachers can do no less than they are doing for the beginning of this League. They feel that it enters the kingdom of religion and that the idea of a League, a world brotherhood of love, stands at the center of the teaching of their Master."

There is this final word:

"With joy they hail the coming day when the League, infused by the spirit of Christ, will be a living reality. They look forward to the new foundations built upon justice. They are sick of the unsound foundations of the past. They hope for the full coöperation of the nations in all matters of great and common concern. They hope that the League Council will soon get busy on the question of armaments. They are sick of armed peace, sick of the abominable record made by compulsory military service, sick of nations treating each other as if they are crooks to be forever armed against, sick of big nations being parasites on the back of little nations, sick of greed, sick of hate, sick of the whole philosophy out of which came the fires of heli in 1914."

Here then is the general admission and plea that the New Testament and the spirit and life of Christ are against war and all the evil things this article of the Christian Work mentions, and stand for universal peace. Think on these declarations and expressions: "Reading their New Testament;" "study the life of Christ;" "God has made of one blood every nation of men to dwell on all the face of the earth, having determined their appointed seasons and the bou... is of their habitation;" "consideration of the Golden Rule;" "the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man;" "a world brotherhood of love." All this, it is further declared, "stands at the center of the preaching of their Master." This all is good reading and sounds right. Christ is "the Prince of Peace," and through him must come and will come, not only "glory to God in the highest," but "on earth peace and good will to men."

The New Testament is always consistent; men are inconsistent. Since the New Testament-the Golden Rule, the Fatherhood of God and brotherhood of man, the entire teaching of Christ, the spirit of Christ and the life of Christ-furnishes strong reasons for disarmament and the League of Nations, does it not stand for the same whether or not nations disarm and enter into this League, and even during the time of war, or "fires of hell in 1914?" The sure way to bring about the practice of the Golden Rule, "a world brotherhood of love," a peace league between nations, when they will learn war no more, would have been for all preachers to teach the New Testament in time of war, devastation, and carnage; to have stood firm in the spirit and life of Christ, and thus to have shown that "the teaching of their Master" is against this "hell on earth" and that his church never did and never can engage in helping to produce such. Christ and the New Testament could not in any way whatever justify war with all its unspeakable cruelties and horrors, devastation and bloodshed, from 1914 to 1918, when the nations wanted war, and then, in turn, teach the Golden Rule, "the brotherhood of man;" and peace with all its blessings, when warring nations wear themselves out and want peace. Christ and the New Testament are always the same. The most appallingly inconsistent thing is for a preacher in Christ's church to declare that "there is no more soul-destroying place on earth" than army life and that war "is hell on earth," and yet attempt to justify Christians' taking any part in it and even encourage them in doing so.

Not many years ago the government licensed the manufacture and sale of whisky, beer, and other intoxicating and home and life and soul-destroying liquors. Were Christians justifiable in engaging in the whisky traffic because the government permitted it? Then, suppose the government had made it compulsory that Christians should really manufacture and sell whisky, beer, and other intoxicating beverages; would they and should they have done so in submission to the powers that be? Then, should the government make it compulsory that they train for and actively engage in war with all its destruction of homes and lives and the hurling of thousands of souls unprepared into eternity, should they do so? What is the difference? In the light of the teaching and life and spirit of Christ, which is worse? The New Testament is against the manufacture and sale of whisky, drunkenness, adultery-legalized or otherwise-and war with all its devastations and carnage and horrors; then, does it justify Christians' engaging in war, but condemn their committing adultery and making and selling whisky? What about the scripture which declares that if a man keeps the whole law, and yet offends in one point, he is guilty of all? Must Christians in some things obey God rather than men, and in others obey men rather than God?

This article of the Literary Digest states that these thousands of preachers referred to are sick of the evil things mentioned, one of which is "compulsory military service." I rejoice that they are, and that they are lifting up their voices against it. May their tribe increase until there cannot be found a preacher who will open his mouth or wield his pen in defense of war, in defense of compulsory military service, or in defense of compulsory military training. I rejoice in all these declarations. But all these preachers should have gotten sick of all these evil things before the war began and before a League of Nations was proposed, and doubtless many were.

God's ways are wonderful, just, righteous, and merciful. He uses wicked nations to chastise other wicked nations and at times to destroy the incorrigible ones; yet all the while he overrules all for the good of his people and the betterment of mankind. God makes the wrath of men to praise him, and whether the nations of earth are engaged in cruel and horrible war or in a league of peace, he overrules all to his glory and the advancement of his church. His will and not ours be done!

Christians are taught to pray for kings and all other carth rulers, that they may "lead a tranquil and quiet life in all godliness and gravity." They must not presume to dictate to God. He knows best. They must commit their way to him and in all their ways acknowledge him. They must lead this tranquil and quiet life in all godliness and gravity, and pray for God to overrule worldly, ambitious, and wicked men so that they may do so; they must follow peace with all men, and holiness, without which no man can see the Lord. Let us pray.

Renew Early.

BY J. C. M'QUIDDY.

Many subscriptions to the Gospel Advocate will expire at a very early date. We would take it as a favor if our subscribers would renew for another year at once. On account of the coal shortage our office force is compelled to work short hours each day. This period of the year is usually a very busy season, a time in which mistakes are liable to occur even though we use all the precautionary measures possible. Our subscribers may help us prevent mistakes and Reep them down to the very lowest possible mark by renewing at once. We would like to ask our friends to make a special effort to send us new subscribers. The Gospel Advocate has passed through many years of trial, responsibility, and work, with some degree of success; yet we have never attained that high degree of efficiency and success that we have devoutly wished.

Subscribers to the Gospel Advocate can increase its usefulness and power for good a hundredfold by calling the attention of their friends and neighbors to the paper. Show them your paper and ask them to subscribe for the year 1920. The year that is just closing has been far better than some of the preceding years. Despite the high cost of paper and of labor, the paper has been able to continue without being seriously involved in debt. While the owners and editors of the paper have not been working for earthly reward in publishing the paper, yet they have made many sacrifices in order that they might send the paper every week into thousands of homes in the hope of accomplishing good in the advancement of the cause of Jesus Christ. It is needless to tell our readers that we feel grateful for all the good that has been done and that we are thankful to them for the efforts they have made to further the good work. But as we cannot live in the past, we must all press forward more vigorously in the future in order that we may do more and more in combating evil and in promoting the forces of truth and righteousness.

Considering the results of the year that is soon to close and the work that has been done, we feel encouraged to renew our determination and zeal for the accomplishment of still greater good in the year 1920. We are counting on the cooperation of every reader of this paper, and believe that we shall not be disappointed.

Are People Saved Without Obedience?

BY J. C. M'QUIDDY.

Brother J. W. Wilson, of Albany, Ala., writes that he has a friend who holds to the view that one is a child of God before he is baptized in water. He writes me that his friend says that in an article which appeared in this paper on April 17, 1919, on the difference between the baptism of the Holy Spirit and the gift of the Holy Spirit, I taught that a person is a Christian before he obeys the Lord in baptism. This friend thinks that I am right in this and, I understand, is quoting me accordingly. I certainly did not mean to write anything that would convey the idea that people are Christians and are in a saved condition and have obeyed God before they have been baptized. The teaching of the Holy Spirit is so plain upon this subject that it seems that all that should be necessary is to quote what the Bible says about it.

Jesus said to his apostles: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to the whole creation. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that disbelieveth shall be condemned." (Mark 16: 15, 16.) Christ teaches clearly that the baptized believer is saved. He does not teach that the man who simply believes or the man who does nothing is saved. He does, however, say plainly, and in language that cannot be easily misunderstood, that "he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." I say to a man: "Build me a house and paint it, and I will pay you two thousand dollars." The terms of this contract are easily understood. If the man should build the house and not paint it, no one would claim that he had complied with the terms of the contract. If the man should simply paint a house, it would also be clear that he would not be entitled to the two thousand dollars. Before being within the terms of the contract, the believer must build the house and paint it. Then I would be responsible to him for the two thousand dollars. Christ again said to Nicodemus: "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." This is not speaking of the natural birth; for Jesus is talking to a man who is grown, already having enjoyed the natural birth. To him he said: "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except one be born of water and the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." (John 3: 5.) Unless salvation is enjoyed outside of the kingdom of God, there is no promise to the man who is not born of water and of the Spirit. The man who believes and is baptized has the promise of salvation. Hence, it follows that, to be born of water and the Spirit in order to enjoy salvation in the kingdom of God, one must believe and be baptized. When the gospel was preached for the first time, and men were cut to the heart and inquired to know what to do to be saved, the Holy Spirit, through Peter, said to believers: "Repent ye, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ unto the remission of your sins; and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit." These scriptures abundantly show that remission of sins, or salvation, is promised to penitent believers who are baptized into the solemn names of Father. Son, and Holy Spirit. All who obey the truth as prescribed by the Holy Spirit enjoy the remission of their sins, and, if they continue in well-doing until the end, will at last inherit eternal life. Other scriptures could easily be quoted, but these are amply sufficient to show that the promise is to the obedient and not to the disobedient.

It is a little strange that people who claim to love God prefer to be saved in a way that is not-taught by the Holy Spirit, rather than have that submissive spirit of obedience that will lead them to do just what God says do without stopping to argue with the commands of God. To the truly loyal person it is enough to know that God has authorized a thing to be done. With the trusting, submissive spirit, when God speaks, all controversy ends. It is a sad commentary on the Christianity of people to-day when they manifest so little respect and reverence for the Spirit of Jehovah. If I have ever written anything that belittles any plain, positive command of Jehovah, I did not intend to do so and am not conscious of such conduct.

Around the Bend of the Road.

BY CLARA COX EPPERSON.

(Suggested by a letter of condolence from Chaplain Mabrey, Fifty-fourth United States Infantry.)

Around the bend of the road of life,
O my beloved,
Out of sight of this world's grief and strife,
In that eternal peace,
Where all your sorrows cease,
You have found your soul's release,
My beloved.

Just around the bend of the road,
O my beloved,
Having laid down life's burdensome load,
You are free from every care,
In that Land of God so fair,
And I'll some day join you there,
My beloved.

Sometimes I almost see around the bend,
O my beloved,
And to you my spirit yearns to ascend;
In those restful fields of green,
Where the face of God is seen,
I shall see your face serene,
My beloved.

And the clouds that/shadow here,
O my beloved,
Will be banished forever over there;
When I've finished life's last mile,
Then the sunshine of your smile
Will my heart from grief beguile,
My beloved.

Brewer's Book on the "Model Church."

The author's chief purpose in writing this book was to create a higher degree of efficiency in the workings of the local congregation. He would awaken many from a lethargic and disorganized condition and bring them to that point where they might conduct the Lord's work in a businesslike way and at the same time be controlled by the mind of Christ in all things. The book is written in pointed style and is conveniently arranged for class study. While it is of special interest to the leaders, at the same time it is of such a wholesome nature as to afford profitable reading for all the members. The book deserves a large circulation. The prices are very reasonable. Single copy, prepaid, $1; one dozen copies, prepaid, $9; twenty-five copies, not prepaid, $17. Order to-day from the McQuiddy Printing Company, Nashville, Tenn.

AT HOME AND ABROAD

Everybody liked the "Sermon" Number.

"I think the 'Sermon' Number is grand."—J. T. West-moreland, Jackson, Tenn.

Brother Jelley is quite sick with bronchial trouble. Correspondents should address him at Bangor, Mich., in care of Mrs. Sterling Boyer.

E. V. Cowan is teaching school at Ravenden Springs, Ark., and is preaching every Sunday. He will be ready for evangelistic work on April 1.

On the last Sunday in December there will be a roll call of the membership of the Russell Street Church, in Nashville. It is planned to have a home-coming of all scattered members and a delightful reunion. We hope Brother Sewell, now in his ninetieth year, will be able to make a brief talk.

From Horace W. Busby, Fort Worth, Texas: "Please note the change in my address from Route 7, Box 65A, to 1705 College Avenue, Fort Worth, Texas. I am giving all my time now to the Glenwood work, in this city. The services are well attended and additions continue each Lord's day. Our Wednesday-evening Bible study and Friday-evening young men's training class are growing in interest."

From E. Gaston Collins, Huntsville, Ala.: "On December 3 I closed a short meeting with the church at Oneonta, Ala. There were no additions, but some interest was manifested on the part of those who came, although the crowds were small, due to sickness and a big trial that was in progress there. This closes my protracted-meeting work for this season. With singing and preaching, I have engaged in eighteen meetings this summer. There were other calls I could not accept. There were not many additions, but I trust that some good may have been done."

From Tom Walker, Vernon, Texas, December 3: "I moved my family to this city on September 10 and began regular work with the congregation. We have had over thirty additions to date, and a new home has been purchased by the congregation for their preacher and his family, which cost six thousand five hundred dollars. Our Thanksgiving offering for the Orphans' Home was five hundred and eighty-six dollars. We are planning a new church building that will be a credit to the brethren in West Texas. Our prayer meetings are well attended. The special numbers of the Gospel Advocate are great."

From W. S. Long, Washington, D. C.: "The special 'Sermon' Number of the Gospel Advocate is most excellent. It crowns the year's special numbers. In fact, I feel that the Advocate is growing stronger all the time. May its motto be, 'Let us go on to perfection.' I could not get a telephone put in where I was, and for that reason I have changed my address to 110 Second Street, S. E. Please give my address and telephone in the next Advocate: W. S. Long, 110 Second Street, S. E.; telephone, Lincoln 1719. I ask those who have friends here to send me their addresses, or send them my telephone number and street address."

From Carl A. Gardner, Bardwell, Texas: "I am delighted with the positive and constructive attitude of this good paper. The series of articles recently begun by A. B. Lipscomb on church history are very timely and instructive. Your plea for a closer adherence to the principles of the Restoration movement, along with the emphasis you place on spiritual growth and Bible study, are heartly welcomed by all who see the imperative need of holding aloft the New Testament standard. And I must not fail to tell you that I rejoice to know that the recent issues of the paper have found no space for unpleasant discussions of differences, and that the way seems to be cleared for a closer fellowship and unity, with the New Testament as the basis, among the people of God."

F. C. Sowell writes from Columbia, Tenn.: "If the brotherhood knew how badly in need are the motherless and fatherless children of the Tennessee Orphans' Home for milk and butter, there would be a hearty and ready response. A call was made not many weeks ago, but enough has been received to buy only one cow. We need one thousand dollars, and would be glad to get it right away, as we have some cows in view; and if, we could get the money at once, we could buy them at reasonable prices. It takes about eighty dollars per month to supply these children with milk and butter. We have the feed for the cows, and, of course, the sooner we get the cows, the less the expense for milk and butter. Brethren, let us hear from you."

From M. S. Mason, 1851 Broad Street, Springfield, Mo., December 3: "I closed at Jonesboro, Ark., on November 14, with one addition. Closed at Belle Plaine, Kan., assisted by Charles F. Hardin as song leader, on December 1, with three additions. A Kansas blizzard ruined the last week of the meeting. I am now at Center, near Sarcoxle, Mo., until December 18, when I shall return home to do the following work in appointments till July 1: First Lord's day, North Side, Springfield; second Lord's day, South Side, Springfield; third Lord's day, Flint Hill, Dade County; fourth Lord's day, Masters, Cedar County. The brethren are treating me nicely wherever I go. I hope to have a good meeting here. I will be at Belle Plaine, Kan., three weeks next year. Time practically all taken for 1920."

From T. S. Bain, Muskogee, Okla., December 5: "According to previous announcement, on the fifth Sunday in November there was held at Oklahoma City a meeting of the elders of the churches of Christ. Believing that this would be of general interest to the brotherhood. I will write a few words to the Gospel Advocate readers concerning same. The meeting was held with the brethren who meet at Tenth and Francis Streets. The morning sermon was delivered by A. E. Freeman, of Guthrie, Okla.; the evening sermon, by George Searcy, of Oklahoma City. The afternoon was devoted to a song service and a free-for-all discussion by the elders of various congregations who were present. Cooperation among the churches of Christ was the first subject discussed, the first speaker being Brother Lee, of the Oklahoma City congregation, followed by T. E. Burch, of Wewoka, and the writer. Others, whose names I failed to get, also took part in this discussion. The next subject was, 'The Duties of an Elder.' This was discussed by Elder J. H. Gawf, of the Muskogee congregation; Brother Jones, of El Reno; Brother Lizar, of Douglas; Brother Schooler, of Guthrie; and others. This proved to be a very profitable meeting to all concerned, and a spirit of cooperation and harmony prevailed. Every one seemed to be much encouraged and strengthened in the faith and left with a firm determination to do greater things for God. We believe that more of these meetings should be held among the brethren. This meeting was productive of much good and was a means of a better understanding among the brotherhood. The brethren at Oklahoma City are very much alive and are doing a great work for the Master. They are pulling together harmoniously, and, of course, are growing. J. A. Hudson has recently moved there and is devoting all of his time to the upbuilding of the church. All visitors were treated royally by the brethren there, who entertained all visiting brethren in their homes. 'Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity!""

"Move On."

Jo, the crossing sweeper, whom Charles Dickens drew with such power and sympathy, said the police were always saying to him: "Move on!" The boys on the streets then, as now, looked on the policeman as their natural enemy and felt as though he interferred with their fun and their liberty just out of pure meanness.

There is a reason why the officer keeps the crowds of people and the streams of vehicles moving on. There would soon be a blockade if two teams started to visit in the middle of the street. There would soon be no thoroughfare if a crowd of boys gathered and blocked the sidewalk. It is surprising how one piece of driftwood caught and held catches other stray boards and logs until there is a log iam. "Keep 'em moving" is the order to the log drivers.

This law is the law of the universe.

This is a good country congregation that keeps up a prayer meeting, a thing very unusual, and the more so with country churches. The Algood meeting con-tinued for eight days, and we were rained out last night. The crowds were very good for that place, the congregation being quite small and quite a deal of opposition by the denominations. The interest and attention were good, and three persons were baptized. This is one of the most zealous little bands that I know of. They plan to locate a preacher there and enlarge their field of usefulness. I hope that they may succeed. I shall hold meetings at both of these places next summer, the Lord willing. Brother I. C. I saw many of the good brethren while in Ennis, and it was like meeting home folks to be with them. I lived and labored with them about four years, and I know of no better church. They have no preacher yet, but have large crowds at the worship. The work here is deeply interesting. The brethren are loyal to God and faithful to duty. There is perfect faithful to duty. There is perfect peace among the brethren, and they all seem to love each other. Brother J. S. Dunn labored with them last year and did a most excellent work in organizing the forces. He left the work of his own choosing, much to the regret of the brethren, who greatly appreciate his large and forward program outlined for them. The church saw its opportunity to grow, and the "Baptists vs. Campbellites." No. 15.

We shall consider Mr. Bandy's defense of his "order." He hits the Hardshells a jolt, which I appreciate. Would to God he could hit them hard enough to break their shells! He says if faith comes before repentance, then we can be saved without repentance at all, as Paul told the jailer to believe and he would be saved. (Acts 16: 31.) Why didn't Mr. Bandy take all that record? What kind of faith was that that would save him? Was it "faith alone," or a faith that embraced the belief of facts, compliance with commands, and trust in promises? Certainly the latter. He asked what he should do to be saved. They told him to believe on the Lord Jesus Christ. Now the proposition arises: Who is Jesus Christ, what does he require, and what are his merits? The faith includes a confidence in all these things. "They spoke unto him the word of the Lord "-that is, they placed these matters concerning the Christ before him. He complied, as the record shows, and rejoiced in salvation. This perfecting of the faith embraced repentance, which is shown by the fact that he "washed their stripes." That shows his penitence, which he exhibited after being informed of the status of those whom he had mistreated. Certainly there was repentance in the jailer's case, and it came after he believed, too. There would have been no reason for his repentance had he not believed.

Mr. Bandy continues the same course of argument by quoting 1 John 5: 1; Acts 15: 7; and Matt. 5: 5, about which he says that this "faith" purifies the heart and enables us to 'see" and be "born of" God, and that all these great things are done without repentance. But Mr. Bandy makes the mistake that D. B. Ray did in his "Textbook on Campbellism," or perhaps Mr. Bandy is just echoing Mr. Ray's thunder. What is the mistake? The faith here is not "faith alone." It is the perfect faith. It is the faith that obeys. It embraces hearing, belief, repentance, confession, and baptism. That is why, when we receive all these blesings by faith, we do it with repentance, for that faith includes the repentance.

On baptism, which he touches very lightly, he says: "It declares our union with Christ." That is not so. The record plainly says that we are "baptized into Christ." (Gal. 3: 27.) "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." (Mark 16: 15, 16.) "Repent, and be baptized . . . for the remission of sins." (Acts 2: 38.) I do not wonder that Mr. Bandy got ashamed of the baptism proposition and turned off of the pedobaptists, about which he says some good things. But why does he not get right himself?

He, however, tries to "dig" us on communion. He says that "Campbellite" and Methodist churches administer communion to those out of fellowship. He wants to establish his close communion. But inasmuch as the Lord placed the table in the kingdom (Luke 22: 29, 30), and he says we are all in the kingdom, why cannot he commune with us? His close communion is a church closeness. If the Methodists had it for their church, and the Presbyterians for theirs, and we for ours, he would be satisfied. But yet, from a Bible standpoint, there would be nothing in it. There is a closeness in communion, but the Baptists do not understand it.

We have always quoted "self-examination" and have left the impression of an open invitation, as if it were meant that any man could "examine himself" as to his Christian fellowship, and, if he decided in the affirmative, he could commune, and if in the negative, he could not. That is not what Paul meant. Paul was talking to Christians, people who were members of the church, people who were members of the kingdom. They were not to examine themselves as to that status. They were not to examine as to their moral or spiritual condition. This is necessary, but not what Paul considered here. They were not to examine themselves and "eat" or "not eat;" they were to examine themselves and "eat." What was the nature of this self-examination? The record shows that they had not "discerned the Lord's body." They had perverted and misunderstood the institution. They had not regarded it with the significance and appreciation which belongs to it. Therefore, Paul says to them as Christians under that condition of affairs, to each one examine himself, correct his attitude of discernment, and so eat. Communion is just as "close" as the "church," the "kingdom," and terms of becoming children of God. The trouble with the Baptists is that they allow that people are in the kingdom, and then exclude them from communion, which they so absurdly talk about being in the "church." No scripture warrants us in-inviting everybody to the Lord's table. We can simply state that it belongs to the church, those in good fellowship and who properly discern the Lord's body. Only those people who have complied with certain terms occupy that state and are communion subjects. We cannot always decide whom we will commune with, as we cannot "call in the police" to oust the incorrigible or keep the holy emblems from his unholy lips, but we can preach the truth and let people commune at their own risk. (1 Cor. 11: 27.)

I would like to say another thing, too, before I conclude this article. I meet brethren who say they do not take the communion because they are unfit. I say to them: "If you are unfit for the communion, you are unfit for heaven." So they had better get right, obey the Lord's commandments, and be saved.

Hard Colds.—People whose blood is pure are not nearly so likely to take hard colds as are others. Hood's Sarsaparilla makes the blood pure, and this great medicine recovers the system after a cold as no other medicine does. Take Hood's.

KILLS CATARRH GERMS

Famous Hyomei—Mr. Booth's Wonderful Discovery.

Some years ago, the noted Richard T. Booth, founders of the blue ribbon movement and temperance orator and leader of international fame who induced over a million men to sign the pledge, developed a very serious catarrhait trouble. Seeking to regain health, he went to inland Australia where he breathed day and night the antiseptic balsams as given off by the Eucalyptus forests.

This experience led Mr. Booth to the discovery of the most wonderful catarrhal treatment known to medical science—Hyomei, which is formed from the purest oil of Eucalyptus combined with other healing and antiseptic ingredients. Hyomei is a germ killing vapor, absolutely harmless but wonderfully effective in the treatment of Catarrh and colds of the head, Catarrhal Coughs, Bronchial Catarrh, Spasmodie Croup, Catarrhal Laryngitis or Hay Fever.

The treatment is simple but most scientific. You breath Hyomei. It is pronounced the only nection of treatment that sends, by direct inh 'lition to the 'nost remote part of the air passages, a balsamic air that destroys germs and bacilli of bronchial catarrh in the breathing organs, sooths and allays irritation and enriches and purifies the blood. Grandma Used Sage Tea to Darken Hair

She Mixed Sulphur With it to Restore Color, Closs, Youthfulness

Common garden sage brewed into a heavy tea, with sulphur added, will turn gray, streaked, and faded hair beautifully dark and luxuriant. Just a few applications will prove a revelation if your hair is fading, streaked, or gray. Mixing the Sage Tea and sulphur recipe at home, though, is troublesome. An easier way is to get a bottle of Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound at any drug store all ready for use. This is the old-time recipe improved by the addition of other ingredients.

While wispy, gray, faded hair is not sinful, we all desire to retain our youthful appearance and attractiveness. By darkening your hair with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound, no one can tell, because it does it so naturally, so evenly. You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning all gray hairs have disappeared, and, after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, glossy, soft, and luxuriant.

Some Work in Arkansas.

BY ANDY T. RITCHIE.

I was in Augusta, Ark., when I wrote the Gospel Advocate last. We had all but smooth sailing there. Our tent failed to come, and we got permission from the Sheriff and the County Judge to use the courthouse for our meeting. We had handbills printed, and Brother Bowman (my song leader) and I took the town, street by street, and gave everybody a bill and a personal invitation to the meeting. We were just getting our crowds built up to a pleasing size when the Circuit Judge called an extra term of court and held both day and night sessions. We were paying room rent at one place and taking our meals at the notel, so we figured our stay there at a loss. We were there five days, with five other services at a little union church in the country. Brother Bowman went home, and I moved on to Pocahontas, in Randolph County, where I remained ten days, then on to Maynard for my third meeting with those brethren. I enjoyed the work at all these places. From Maynard I went to Ash Flat for a few-days' visit with my parents and other relatives. This was the first family reunion at which parents and all the children were present for nine years. Allfather, mother, seven brothers and sisters-were together for one day. But this pleasure was brief, for I was taken very sick, and, of course, the pleasure of my visit was at an end. I was in bed there several days before I got able to come home. That has been nearly three months ago, and I am but little stronger now than I was then. I have chronic malaria with enlarged liver and spleen, with some other complications. Within the last three months I have held two short meetings, filled two regular appointments, and done seven days' work outside. These conditions coming on a short crop make the outlook, financially, all but encouraging. I have canceled all my work in the swamps. My physician says I must stay out of a malaria country. If work calls me to a healthful, nonmalaria district, I will go; otherwise, I shall stay on the farm. Pray for us.

Wonderful Egg Producer

Any poultry raiser can easily double his profits by doubling the egg production of his hens. A scientific tonic has been discovered that revitalizes the flock and makes hens work all the time. The tonic is called "More Eggs." Give your hens a few cents' worth of "More Eggs," and you will be amazed and delighted with results. A dollar's worth of "More Eggs" will double this year's production of eggs; so if you wish to try this great profit maker, write E. J. Reefer, poultry expert, 3259 Reefer Building, Kansas City, Mo., who will send you a season's supply of "More Eggs" tonic for $1 (prepaid). So confident is Mr. Reefer of the results that a million-dellar bank guarantees if you are not absolutely satisfied, your dollar will be returned on request and the tonic costs you nothing. Send a dollar to-day. Profit by the experience of a man who has made a fortune out of poultry.

FOOT COMFORT ASSURED. Brooklyn Man Solves the Problem.

It is no longer necessary to suffer agonies that are caused by misfit shoes, for Mr. Simon, of Brooklyn, has proven that he can fit perfectly by mail. Simon's EzWear shoes are built to give every possible foot comfort; they are soft and stylish and do not need breaking in. They fit like the proverbial pair the minute you wear them. Every pair is guaranteed to give satisfaction and to fit perfectly.

Mr. J. R. Simon will gladly send a free catalogue of over 500 styles of EzWear shoes to all who write him, along with his scientific self-measuring blank. Write for your copy to-day and give your feet their much-needed happiness. Address all communications to Mr. J. R. Simon, 1589 Broadway, Brooklyn, N. Y., and you will receive personal attention.

PROFITS IN PIGEONS

A pleasant, easy way to make moneyatilize an otherwise worthless part of your back yard and turn it into profit. Pigeons are easily raised, prolific, and clean. The markets are clamoring for squabs. Good Books Make the Best Gifts

Below we offer a list of books on vital topics that should be of interest to every preacher, Sunday-school teacher, and Bible lover. Have you a friend out of the church whom you are trying hard to reach and save? Send him one of these books. If he is "almost persuaded," it may clinch the argument for you. If he is lukewarm, it may stir him to action. In any event, it will be appreciated.

The list includes most excellent books, printed and bound in first-class style. Postpaid prices are quoted. We have recently printed an edition of "Life of Elder John Smith," "Christian System," and "The Evidences of Christianity." We believe that a book worth publishing deserves to be accurately printed and neatly and substantially bound.

Neglected Coughs and Colds Are Dangerous

LADY IN BROOKLYN, N. Y., NARROWLY ESCAPES DEATH.

If people would only learn the folly of neglecting a cough or cold, much suffering could be averted and the development of many fatal diseases prevented.

The experience of Mrs. R. S. Pedersen. 129 Putnam Avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y., merely emphasizes the necessity of having the proper medicine on hand for such emergencles. She writes:

"One winter I had a severe cold. I doctored myself for several weeks with various Finally I was forced to go to bed with heavy cold in chest and head. I had a good attack of la grippe, with large lumps in my neck. My father persuaded me to take Pe-ru-na, and I was out of bed in two weeks. I continued the remedy for several weeks, and feel better than ever. Pe-ru-na has also relieved me of pains in the back and sides. I always recommend Pe-ru-na, and my father is a constant user."

Pe-ru-na, being a tonic laxative, regulates the digestion, enriches the blood, tones up the nerves, and carries its soothing, healing influence to the irritated, congested mucous membranes in all parts of the body. It is very beneficial after protracted illness or an attack of grip or Spanish influenza to restore strength and vigor to the wasted body.

Do not fool with a cold or any other catarrhal disease. It is dangerous. Get the right remedy in the first place, the remedy that for fifty years has been known as a successful treatment for catarrh.

Your dealer handles Pe-ru-na in both tablet and liquid form.

Binkley.

On Sunday, November 9, 1919, Sister Susie Jane Tyler, the beloved wife of Brother Thomas Binkley, departed this life, leaving her husband and son, Mack, to mourn her loss. Sister Binkley was born on July 26, 1867. The last sixteen years of her life were spent in the service of our Master. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them." The writer conducted the funeral services at the open grave, where a large crowd of relatives and friends gathered, and by loving hands her remains were laid to rest to await the resurrection.

EAT LESS AND TAKE SALTS FOR KIDNEYS

Take a Glass of Salts if Your Back Hurts or Bladder Bethers

The American men and women must guard constantly against kidney trouble, because we eat too much and all our food is rich. Our blood is filled with uric acid, which the kidneys strive to filter out; they weaken from over work, become sluggish, the elimina tive tissues clog, and the result is kidney trouble, bladder weakness, and a general decline in health.

When your kidneys feel like lumps of lead, your back hurts, or the urine is cloudy, full of sediment, or you are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night; if you suffer with sick headache or dizzy, nervous spells, acid stomach, or you have rheumatism when the weather is bad, get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days, and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate clogged kidneys, to neutralize the acids in the urine so it no longer is a source of irritation, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, cannot injure, makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water beverage, and belongs in every home, because nobody can make a mistake by having a good kidney flushing any time.

300 EGGS EVERY DAY

"Since using "TWO for ONE" I get 250 to 300 eggs a day instead of 25 or 30," writes J. C. Hoff of Indiana.

World's Greatest Egg Producer

"TWO for ONE" is the marvel of all egg tonics. It is the most remarkable producer of eggs ever known to the poultry world. "TWO for ONE" is making records every day in eggproduction that were never before believed possible. Flock owners all over the country are amazed with the results. The most experienced poultry experts say they have never seen the like of it.

say they have never seen the like of it.

"TWO for ONE" is not a mere food. It is an egg tonic in the truest seense of the term—ascientific preparation in concentrated tablet form—the result of scientific research and experiment. Every factor entering into the matter of egg production was scientifically studied.

As a result you have in "TWO for ONE" atonic that conditions the hen for the utmost in laying capacity—that builds muscle and bone—that slimulates active functioning of the hen's reproductive organs—that insures fertile eggs and 100% hatchings—that makes the laggard lay and increases the production of active layers. A tonic that gets more eggs for you winter and summer than you ever thought posssible.

The Master's Vineyard

Iowa.

Davenport, 1207 Pershing Avenue. December 1.—It is real winter here and the coal conditions are serious, but we had our church services yesterday just the same, with an increase of two—a mother and her little daughter. The mother is a member, and we have just recently found her. Brother Campbell, of Iowa City, wrote us about her, giving us her address. Her husband is also a member, but has to work on Sundays, so he says. He is working for the Rock Island Railroad people. If there is any one who has a friend in either Rock Island or Moline, Ill., or Davenport, whether a member or not, if you think he will be in-terested in the services of the Lord, write me, please, giving his address. Our place of worship is 510½ Brady Street, Davenport.—J. C. Estes.

Coleman, December 1.-We have moved from Mathis, Texas, to Cole-man. There are a few Christians bere. All are loyal, firm, faithful, poor brethren, but face a wonderful field to be worked for our Lord. We are building a house of worship. The "restrictive clause" protects our property. We need help from our brethren and friends to finish our house and establish the law and order of our Master here. Any fellowship sent will be properly acknowledged. My health is so much improved that I am now devoting my entire time to the Lord's work. I am busy. Pray for us and then help us. There is no riper field to be found than this one. Brother G. W. O'Neal, Brother J. C. Baldwin, or I will receive your fellowship and acknowledge same. However, Sister Ada Baldwin is treasurer of our building committee, and funds should be sent direct to her. Jesus Christ, Our Great High Priest.

BY J. PERRY HODGE.

"And to them were given seven trumpets." If the seven angels and the seven Spirits of Rev. 1: 4: Rev. 4: 5; and Rev. 5: 6 are the same, and if these represent the Spirit of Christ in all relations as the slain Lamb, through whom all enemies are to be overthrown and all the redeemed saved, it seems to teach that the Spirit thus represented was provided during or before the silence that occurred in heaven under the opening of the seventh seal, with all that was necessary for the sounding out of the word of the Lord, the gospel, which Paul tells us is "the power of God unto salvation" to those who believe (Rom. 1: 16.) And since it is true that the apostles preached the gospel by the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven (1 Pet. 1: 12), the Holy Spirit guiding them into all truth, teaching them all things and bringing to their remembrance all things which Jesus had said to them, and they speaking only as the Spirit gave them utterance, it really must have been the Spirit sounding out the word through them after the silence that occurred in heaven. It is our intention to speak at length of the seven angels and the seven trumpets and the seven soundings of them, but at present we wish to speak more fully of our great High Priest and the work he is doing in heaven for us. We will, therefore, in the light of what we know of the outpouring of the Holy Spirit on the day of Pentecost, take it for granted that all are agreed that the seven angels with their seven trumpets represent the work of the Holy Ghost, and that their work is his work, and that it began after the silence in heaven, and that the silence was broken when fire was taken from the altar and cast into the earth, by which we understand the Holy Spirit was poured out upon those that were together in Jerusalem that Pentecost following the crucifixion of Jesus, waiting, as they had been told to do, for it. (Luke 24: 49; Acts 1: 3, 4, 8; 2: 1-4, 32, 33.) Paul says: "Now of the things which we have spoken this is the sum: We have such a high priest, who is set on the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the heavens; a minister of the sanctuary, and of the true tabernacle, which the Lord pitched, and not man." (Heb. 8: 1, 2.) We understand that the angel John saw standing at the altar, having a golden censer, to whom much incense was given to offer with the prayers of the saints (Rev. 8: 1-6), was our great High Priest engaged in the work of the high priesthood to which he was called, the duties of which he had just entered. Jesus had not been a high priest while on earth. "For if he were on earth, he should not be a priest, seeing that there are priests that offer gifts according to the law." (Heb. 8: 4.) But "every high priest is ordained to offer gifts and sacrifices: wherefore it is of necessity that this man have somewhat also to offer." (Heb. 8: 3.) Therefore, not being a priest whose descent could be counted from the sons of Levi (Heb. 7: 5, 6), but after the order of Melchizedek (Heb. 5: 10), he offered himself (Heb. 7: 27) as the one sacrifice he must make for sins; and after he had offered this one sacrifice for sins forever, he sat down on the right hand of God (Heb. 10: 12). "Not by the blood of goats and of calves "-for gifts like these were offered by the Levitical priests (Heb. 8: 4)-"but by his own blood" he entered into heaven itself to appear in the presence of God for us. (Heb. 9: 11, 12, 24.)

It is there in heaven John saw him as he came and stood at the altar, our great High Priest, "who in the days of his flesh, when he had offered up prayers and supplications with strong crying and tears unto him that was able to save him from death, and was heard in that he feared; though he were a Son, yet learned he obedience by the things which he suffered; and being made perfect, he became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him; called of God a high priest after the order of Melchizedek." (Heb. 5: 7-10.) "For the priesthood being changed, there is made of necessity a change also of the law" (Heb. 7: 11, 12); and as the Lawgiver, he offers salvation only to them that obey him (Heb. 5: 9). Among the very first things he did when he came and stood at the altar after offering up the incense and the prayers of the saints was to fill the censer with fire of the altar and cast it into the earth. "And there were voices, and thunderings, and lightnings, and an earthquake. And the seven angels which had the seven trumpets prepared themselves to sound." (See Rev. 8: 1-6.) time had come for the changed law to be proclaimed by these seven Spirits of God from the throne of God, for the lightnings and thunderings and voices proceeded out of the throne (Rev. 4: 5), and their effect upon the earth was an earthquake or reformation; for the first tabernacle and the law of its service "stood only in meats and drinks, and divers washings, and carnal ordinances, imposed on them until the time of reformation. But Christ being come a high priest," through the offering of himself without spot to God, his last will and testament became effective. "For a testament is of force after men are dead." (Heb. 9: 10-28.) The change in the law that was proclaimed when Christ became our great High Priest was revolutionary and the effect was something like the effect of an earthquake. Judaism was stirred to its greatest activity, persecutions were launched against those who accepted the changed law, men and women were haled to prison, and many of them lost their lives. Saul of Tarsus, who afterwards accepted the law of the Spirit, was very active in the work of persecuting the church.

Jesus did not make himself High Priest. "No man taketh this honor unto himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron. So also Christ 'glorified not himself to be made a high priest; but he that said unto him, Thou art my Son, to-day have I begotten thee. As he saith also in another place, Thou art a priest forever after the order of Melchizedek." (Heb. 5: 4-6.) The Melchizedek order of priesthood was of the same authority as the Aaronic order, since both were called of God; but they were independent of each other, since one was patriarchal and the other tribal or national. Melchizedek did not count his descent as a priest from the tribe that was set apart to be priests (Heb. 7: 6), since the tribe at his day was yet in the loins of Abraham (Heb. 7: 5-10). The patriarchal order of priesthood had no beginning of days and will have no end. (Heb. 7: 3.) If Adam was a priest, he was of this order; Abel was; Noah and all the patriarchs were priests of this order; and it is stated by some that this order never ceased, except with the Israelites, but that there were patriarchal priests through all time. It certainly will never end now. "But this man, because he continueth ever, hath an unchangeable priesthood. Wherefore he is able also to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by him, seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them. For such a high priest became us, who is holy, harmless, undefiled, separate from sinners, and made higher than the heavens; who needeth not daily, as those high priests [of the Levitical priesthood], to offer up sacrifice, first for his own sins, and then for the people's: for this he did once, when he offered up himself. For the law maketh men high priests which have infirmity; but the word of the oath, which was since the law, maketh the Son, who is consecrated for evermore." (Heb. 7: 24-28.) " For we have not a high priest which cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities; but was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without Let us therefore come boldly unto the throne of grace, that we may

"I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service" (Rom. 12: 1); for "ye also, as lively stones, are built up a spiritual house, a holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God by Jesus Christ" (1 Pet. 2: 5). We understand that the tabernacle of the first covenant, or rather the first tabernacle, was a figure of the true, and that "when these things were thus ordained, the priests went always into the first tabernacle, accomplishing the service of God. But into the second went the high priest alone once every year, not without blood, which he offered for himself, and for the errors of the people: the Holy Ghost this signifying, that the way into the holiest of all was not yet made manifest, while as the first tabernacle was yet standing: which was a figure for the time then present, in which were offered both gifts and sacrifices, that could not make him that did the service perfect, as pertaining to the conscience; which stood only in meats and drinks, and divers washings, and carnal ordinances, imposed on them until the time of reformation." (Heb.

9: 6-10.) Now, the service that is accomplished while we live in the flesh answers to the service that was accomplished by the priests of the old law, and in that sense every Christian is a priest; but the work of the high priest is the work our Savior, Jesus, is accomplishing for us in the presence of God, for he has passed beyond the veil, which means his flesh (Heb. 10: 20), and is entered "into heaven itself, now to appear in the presence of God for us" (Heb. 9: 24), that "we might have a strong consolation, who have fled for refuge to lay hold upon the hope set before us: which hope we have as an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast, and which entereth into that within the veil; whither the forerunner is for us entered, even Jesus, made a high priest forever after the order of Melchizedek" (Heb. 6: 18-20). "By him therefore let us offer the sacrifice of praise to God continually, that is, the fruit of our lips giving thanks to his name. But to do good and to communicate forget not: for with such sacrifices God is well pleased." (Heb. 13: 15, 16.) "For the administration of this service not only supplieth the want of the saints, but is abundant also by many thanksgivings unto God; while by the experiment of this ministration they glorify God for your professed subjection unto the gospel of Christ, and for your liberal distribution unto them, and unto all men." (2 Cor. 9: 12, 13.) "Hereby perceive we the love of God, because he laid down his life for us: and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren. But whose hath this world's good, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?" (1 John 3: 16, 17.) "I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service." (Rom. 12: 1.) For, "if a brother or sister be naked, and destitute of daily food, and one of you say unto them, Depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled: notwithstanding ye give them not those things which are needful to the body; what doth it profit? Even so faith [your own, if it works that way], if it hath not works, is dead, being alone." (James 2: 15-17.) Our great High Priest stands at the altar with a golden censer in his hand. Are you offering up those sacrifices by him that are well pleasing unto God? You, as one of the living stones of the spiritual house, are a priest unto God. (1 Pet. 2: 5, 9; Rev. 1: 6; 5: 10.) Are you accomplishing the service of God in the tabernacle of this earthly house ere it be dissolved, in order that, when you shall pass through the veil of your flesh, you will have part in that building, that spiritual house not made with hands, which is eternal, in the heavens? (2 Cor. 5: 1-4; 2 Pet. 1: 13-15.) May God help us to realize that although Jesus is our High Priest, and that he continueth ever, and that he stands ready at the altar with censer in hand to offer up for us such acceptable service as is required of us (Heb. 13: 15, 16; Rom. 12: 1), we as priests are expected and required to accomplish that acceptable service here while living in the flesh, the same as he (our High Priest) accomplished his service here while in the flesh. To-day is the day of salvation; today is the day for accomplishing the service of God.

BLACK-DRAUGHT CLEANS THE LIVER

Enthusiastic Texan Tells of Bad Fix He Was In and How He Got Out by Using Black-Draught Liver Medicine.

Holland, Texas.—Mr. J. N. Messer, who lives a short distance from here out in the country, says:

"Black-Draught is without doubt the best liver medicine made. I do not hesitate to say it will do all it is recommended to do and more.

"I am strong and healthy; but we all need a little active medicine once in a while, and Black-Draught is good enough for me. It does the work well and cleans the liver, carrying away bile, the easiest of any purgative I have ever seen.

"Once, some years ago, I had slow fever, and my stomach was in a bad fix. Black-Draught gave me relief and helped me—a wonderful sight. It cured me of indigestion and the bad feeling after eating. I keep it for my family; they use it, and have for years; and, too, it saves doctor bills and is not expensive.

"'A stitch in time saves nine,' and most sickness is caused by a bad liver. A few doses of Black-Draught fixes that; and I do not see why people do not use it; they would see as I have—what a help it would be."

FROM THE FIELD

Alabama.

Albertville, November 28.-Brother T. M. Caldwell and wife moved from Frankewing, Tenn., to Drewry's Bluff, Va. At their request, I began a meeting there on the first Sunday in this month and continued it eighteen days. This was the first preaching our brethren had ever done in that com-munity. The meeting was held in the schoolhouse. The principal of the school and his wife are members of the "digressive" church, not knowing of anything else. At first they did not seem to know whether they had any interest in the meeting or not, but later they became very much interested, and a day or two before the meeting closed he asked to say a few words. He spoke of how he had en-joyed the preaching and had been benefited by it, and then announced that on the next Lord's day they would meet in Brother Caldwell's home to break bread and study the Scriptures. He will make an efficient leader if he can be taught out of "di-gressiveism," which, I think, is about accomplished now. I bought fifty copies "Seventy-Seven Sweet Songs" the meeting, and they tendered me the use of the piano, and were very much surprised when I respectfully declined to use it. They had never dreamed of there being anything wrong in having an instrument in the worship; but when I preached a sermon on "Ac-ceptable Worship," some of them could see the wrong in it. Virginia is an inviting field for missionary work. If there is another congregation in the State worshiping "as it is written," I do not know of it. The Lord willing, I shall visit them again next spring, when I hope to reap some fruit of the sowing .- R. N. Moody.

South Carolina.

Union, December 1.-After spending four weeks in Wilson County, Tenn., in meetings, and two weeks visiting friends at Hartsville, Nashville, and Lynchburg, I am again back in South Carolina with my work. The Grissim Corner meeting resulted in eight baptisms and an awakening to greater things for the Master. They volunteered one Sunday's contribution each month for this work. This is a young and small congregation, but greater workers will never be found than some of those who worship there. This meeting began on September 28 and closed on October 4. On the next day I began at Philadelphia. This is an old congregation, and I am glad to say that they are awakening to a It is certainly a pleasgreat extent. ure to work with such big-hearted peo-ple as these. on the following day and continued over the next Sunday night. This is one of the oldest and largest congregations in that part of the country. It has almost reached the century mark. Greater people have never been than these. To know them is to love them. They have agreed to support a preacher in this State, provided we can find the right man for the place. Three were baptized dur-ing this meeting. It was certainly a pleasure to get back among these dear, good friends and brethren after being in this country for several months, although I was glad to get back to our work here. We are moving along nicely now. We have bought a welllocated lot, which cost us only seven hundred and fifty dollars. We thought we were very fortunate to get this. We lack a little less than one hundred dollars having it paid for. This is the first, I suppose, that has ever been written for the church of Christ in this State. We hope to build in the early part of the year. We cannot do much more until we get a meetinghouse. Yesterday was a great day with us. We had two nice serv-. ices, with one confession and baptisma very fine young man who some have already bega nto prophesy will make a preacher. He took a public part in the night service. It is certainly encouraging when we get some one who will help in the work. Brethren, pray for us .- Thomas H. Burton.

Encouragement or Discouragement—Which?

BY F. P. FONNER.

Very often persons are encouraged by the words of others. Well did one say: "Words fitly spoken are like apples of gold in pictures of silver." This is a beautiful sentiment; and if heeded by every one, it would produce results beyond our fondest hopes. Many of God's children would be encouraged to go forward in the Lord's work, whereas many of them are disheartened and discouraged on account of unjust criticisms. These are often couched in the harshest of terms, thus revealing the spiritual conditions of the critic. Men of little spirituality are much given to this form of criticism. In fact, even a casual reader of our papers is able at times to form a just estimate in regard to the character of these critics. They seem to care but very little about the choice of words when they offer a criticism. To-day our young preachers and some of our missionaries, both-at home and abroad, are being severely criticized by those lacking in spirituality. any one objects to mission work either at home or abroad, it is because he is untaught or lacking in spirituality. The young preacher seldom gets any encouragement from these dead and dying church members. They want a big preacher." They are very much like "dead flies in the ointment of the spothecary." They will corrupt the entire congregation unless they are properly taught. An elder who allows a young man to "practice on us" without real words of encouragement or adequate support certainly is a spiritual degenerate. He should awake to a sense of his duty as an elder in the church of Christ. Perhaps he needs the practice more than the young preacher does. The young man will get the necessary practice if we support him and send him into the mission fields to build up the real cause of Christ. He wants to go. "Loose him, and let him go." And what about the elder? Let him study the word and develop himself as a teacher, and then let him "feed the flock of God." This will give him the necessary practice. This practice is needed in too many cases. This matter is not receiving the attention it

Say, if we do not encourage our young preachers now, where will our preachers come from in the future? And if the elders do not develop themselves as teachers, what will become of many of our local congregations? And if we do not sustain our missionaries at home and abroad, what will become of the many millions who sit in darkness? And what will become of us, if each of us does not

PELOUBET'S NOTES FOR 1920 NOW READY

Peloubet's Is the World's Greatest Commentary on the International Uniform Sunday-School Lessons

It has been issued for forty-six years with ever-increasing popularity and usefulness, which fact alone is a wonderful argument for its value and helpfulness. Rich in material, comprehensive in its scope, practical in its treatment. Every superintendent, teacher, and scholar will find in it his own personal requirements. Marion Lawrance voices the sentiments of thousands when he says:

"How this standard commentary has been able to maintain itself during all these years, growing annually stronger and richer, is a marvel to the Sunday-school world. Personally, I do not see how any Sunday-school teacher can hope to do his best without the rich, full helps found in these NOTES."

Pennsylvania Man Thankful

Mr. C. E. Brooks, Marshall, Mich.
Dear Sir:—Perhaps it will interest you to know that I have been ruptured six years and have always had trouble with it till I got your Appliance. It is very easy to wear, fits neat and snug, and is not in the way at any time, day or night. In fact, at times I did not know I had it on;
it just adapted itself to the shape of the body and seemed to be a part of the body, as it clung to the spot, no matter what position I was in.
It would be a veritable God-send to the unfortunate who suffer from rupture if all could procure the Brooks Rupture Appliance and wear it. They would certainly never regret it.
My rupture is now all healed up and tainly never regret it.

My rupture is now all healed up and nothing ever did it but your Appliance. Whenever the opportunity presents itself I will say a good word for your Appliance, and also the honorable way in which you deal with ruptured people. It is a pleasure to recommend a good thing among your friends or strangers. I am, Yours very sincerely,

Cured in Six Months After 18 Years

C. E. Brooks, Marshall, Mich.

Dear Sir:—I never wore the appliance a minute over six months and was cured sound and well—and I want to say no man ever did any harder work than I did while I was using it—I hauled 40 perch of rock, too big for any man to lift.

I was ruptured 18 years and words cannot tell how thankful I am. Use my name if you like.

Yours sincerely, RUFUS FIELDS, R. R. No. 1.

Others Failed but the Appliance Cured

C. E. Brooks, Marshall, Mich.

Dear Sir:—Your Appliance did all you claim for the little boy and more, for it cured him sound and well. We let him wear it for about a year in all, although it cured him 3 months after he had begun to wear it. We

Ten Reasons Why You Should Send for Brooks Rupture Appliance

- It is absolutely the only Appliance of the kind on the market today, and in it are embodied the principles that in-ventors have sought after for years.
- 2. The Appliance for retaining the rupture cannot be thrown out of position.
- Being an air cushion of soft rubber it clings closely to the body, yet never blisters or causes irritation.
- Unlike the ordinary so-called pads, used in other trusses, it is not cumber-some or ungainly.
- It is small, soft and pliable, and ively cannot be detected through the clothing.
- The soft, pliable bands holding the Appliance do not give one the unpleasant sensation of wearing a harness.
- 7. There is nothing about it to get foul, and when it becomes solied it can be washed without injuring it in the least.

 8. There are no metal springs in the Appliance to torture one by cutting and bruising the flesh.
- 9. All of the material of which the Appliances are made is of the very hest that money can buy, making it a durable and safe Appliance to wear.
- 10. Our reputation for honesty and fair dealing is so thoroughly established by an experience of over thirty years of dealing with the public, and our prices are so reasonable, our terms so fair, that there certainly should be no hesitancy in sending free coupon today.

When Men Tried All Religions.

It is interesting to study the trend of the public mind during the period just before our Savior's birth and to consider in their proper spheres the religions with which Christianity was destined to compete. It is a fact not generally known or appreciated that the Christian religion had to win its way by proving its superiority over mighty religious systems and practices. Nor was the ascendancy gained within a day or a year. We must think of Jesus as a contemporary with Julius Cæsar. There is the imperial regime of a mighty emperor side by side with the lowly Jesus. The question which many were called upon to decide was allegiance to one or the other. Shall it be Christ or Cæsar? Which shall have preëminence in my heart and life, the "divine right" of human systems or the divine power of unseen forces?

It may be said that the environment was favorable to Caristianity in that the keynote was universalism. The growing sense of the unity of mankind created a prejudice against any national religion. Plutarch voiced the spirit of the time when he said that men worshiped the same god, his name merely being different in different languages. The belief in monotheism was general, and this led men more eagerly in search of the One.

Myangels were offered from East and West, and men were not satisfied as in our day to owe allegiance to one sect or form of religion; they tried all. We are reminded of the lady who had secured a new cook and asked her to which church she belonged. "You needn't worry about that, mistus," said the resourceful colored girl; "I allus accommodates myself to the lady I'm working for." She is not the only one in these modern times who makes policy or accommodation or convenience the rule of selection. People forsake a church that is simple and apostolic and go to another because it is more fashionable. People give up the truth and the faith of their fathers for no other reason than that they are asked to do it by those whose friendship and influence they covet. Jesus Christ is not to them the determining factor. He holds the second place. Let us not be too drastic in our judgment of the ancients. "For wherein thou judgest another, thou condemnest thyself; for thou that judgest dost practice the same thing." 0 0 0

The Greek Ideal.

Of the religions competing in the Empire, those of Greece were philosophical, appealing primarily to the intellect; that of Rome was wholly political; those from the Orient were most akin to Christianity in that they were emotional and appealed primarily to the heart.

The "religion" of Greece was really no religion. It has been called an "anthropomorphic polytheism." This ungainly expression simply means that the Greek's thought centered upon man, which is but another way of saying that it centered upon himself. To him thought was the great reality. When psychological resources were exhausted, that was the end of his quest. His religion then was Beauty with a capital B and Joy with a capital J. It was such an interpretation of nature as to make the Greek feel at home in a world peopled with fairy deities. This was very pretty, of course, for fair-weather days, but it had no message when the elements of sorrow and trouble entered into his experience. It did not provide for the Infinite. We note the same ephemeral beauty in some modern systems that are far more popular in some quarters than the gospel plan of salvation. People with reasonable intelligence along other lines are taking up with New Thought and Christian Science. I have in mind a cultured woman who became an ardent devotee of Christian Science. She not only believed it herself, but she began enthusiastically to teach it to others. It happened that her only child was taken sick with diphtheria. The old family physician, being a near neighbor and seeing the sign of the health authorities upon the door, swallowed his professional pride, came to the door, and proffered his services. "Thank you so much," the lady sald, "But we don't require your services. Don't you know we have the Great Physician here?" A few days later the child died. Then, in the agony of despair and uncontrollable grief, the mother cried: "Since this terrible thing has hap pened, how can I ever believe in the goodness of God again?"

Let the solemn truth be impressed upon every heart that any system of religion, it matters not how beautiful, that presumes to take the place of Jesus Christ and his gospel, is doomed to railure in the final analysis. Some one may object and say: "But you overlook the fact that there is much that is good and true in Christian Science." This may be admitted, but there is no truth in it worth having that cannot be found in the Christian religion. It is enough to be a Christian without the "Scientist" and as a faithful child of God to believe that "no good thing will be withheld from them that walk uprightly." It is these half truths that make Christian Science and New Thought so attractive and so dangerous. Tennyson's words are always true:

A lie that is all a lie

May be met and fought outright;
But a lie that is half a lie
Is a harder thing to fight.

Emperor Worship.

We have seen that the Ideal of the Greek was thought, The ideal of the Roman was order or social control. Therefore, we are not surprised to find that the religion which Rome offered the world was of a political nature. the cult of the emperors. Emperor worship was conceded to be the best means of giving cohesion to a vast empire. It was never intended, however, to persecute other religions or to impose any religious dogma. Its prime purpose was to unite the heterogeneous peoples of this vast empire. Julius Cæsar opened the door for himself and subsequent rulers Into the Roman Pantheon. After the victory at Pharsalia he was acknowledged as "semigod" and his statue was placed beside that of the "King of the Gods." At first he modestly refused the position, but later accepted it. Later he became Jupiter Julius, and a temple was built in his honor. His assassination and the appearance of a comet secured his consecration. He was decreed to be "divine," and the senate gave authority "to honor him as a god." This helps us to appreciate the words of Cassius in the instigation scene of Shakespeare's famous play: "Upon what meat doth this our Cæsar feed. that he hath become so great?" After this an epidemic of divinity-seeking broke out among the Romans. Every "big gun" aspired to be a god. Sextus Pompey sent out cards announcing himself as a son of Neptune; Antony became the new Dionysus, whose worst qualities he imitated. Octavian was recognized as the Son of the Divine. Later on we find him addressed in inscriptions as Zeus and the Son of Zeus. Of all the Cæsars, Augustus received the most genuine adoration, chiefly because he was one of the worthiest rulers. On his death his anotheosis was decreed by the senate. Wicked Callgula was punctilious about his divinity. Domitian proclaimed himself "Lord and God" during his lifetime. The notorious Nero was the first to wear the radiant crown symbolic of descent from the semigod. At first the people only recognized in a formal way these man-made divinities, but later, influenced by the East, they prostrated themselves before them. To the soldiers on the battle field Casar worship became a bond of union and a sign of the greatness and ubiquity of Rome. It strengthened Roman authority and helped to unify the world. There is a disposition in the human make-up which craves a visible God. "Show us the Father, and it sufficeth us." Thus the emperor became a visible god dispensing justice. They figured that prayers addressed to the god Augustus were more surely answered than those addressed to Jupiter. Thus we see how a great nation "exchanged the truth of God for a lie, and worshiped and served the creature rather than the Creator." The Jew alone as a race preserved the integrity of the living God.

The dark days of emperor worship are past, but the deification of man after an unworthy sort is not altogether an ancient art. "What fools these mortals are!" may be said of every age. Lording it over others is frequently practiced in our enlightened times. It is characteristic of the modern man to "think of himself more highly than he ought to think." How slow we are to learn the Master's lesson: "He that is least among you all, the same is great;" and: "If I then, the Lord and the Teacher, have washed your feet, ye also ought to wash one another's feet!" (To be continued.)

The Kingdom of God.

BY W. L. REEVES.

The kingdom of God is that domain over which God reigns by means of his fixed laws, to which are appended certain penalties for violations thereof. All kings rule by means of laws, and the fact that there are many violations of these laws does not signify that there is no kingdom and a king over that kingdom.

Proposition: "Christ has a kingdom in heaven and on earth over which he now rules." The invincible proof of this proposition is abundant, some of which I shall proceed to give.

The prophets foretold its establishment. Isaiah (2: 1-3) told this: "The word that Isaiah the son of Amoz saw concerning Judah and Jerusalem. And it shall come to pass in the last days, that the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills; and all nations shall flow unto it. . . For out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem. And he shall judge among the nations, and shall rebuke many people: and they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning hooks: nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more."

It is not the part of wisdom to jump at the conclusion that because the kingdoms of men yet go to war, therefore the kingdom of God is not established. As well say that because men commit murder, therefore "Thou shalt not kill" is not in force yet. Men must not forget that prophetical commandments have their conditional penalties as well as any other commandments. While upon earth Christ taught very strongly that his followers should not "lift up sword" any more; but it seems that they do, anyway. At least, some who profess to be his followers do so. But does this fact prove that Christ does not rule over his people? The proof does not show such to be the case.

Christ was declared the Son of God with power by the resurrection from the dead, after which he himself said that all power in heaven and in earth was his. (Rom. 1; 4; Matt. 28: 18-20.) What does Christ need with so much power, if he is not now King? Why was he declared the Son of God at that time, if there is no kingdom over which he can now reign?

I submit to the reader the fact that all the good now found in any nation of earth exists there simply from the fact that God and Christ are to that extent accepted and feared as Ruler of the universe. On the other hand, those nations which are the most corrupt are those which recognize Christ's reign the least. Who can truly dispute this? I further declare that there is not one single principle of justice and equity to be found in the rules and regulations of any nation but what that principle of righteous rule is to be found in the teachings of Christ. What Daniel said is true from this very fact. He said; "The sentence is . . . to the intent that the living may know that the Most High ruleth in the kingdom of men, and giveth it to whomsoever he will, and setteth up over it the lowest of men." (Dan. 4: 17.) God does not rule unrighteously; so it can be but to the extent that righteous ruling is found in these kingdoms that he rules in them. "All unrighteousness is sin." (1 John 5: 17.) If any man thinks he can find any just principles couched in the laws of any nation which are not enjoined by Christ in the law by which he is now ruling more or less over all men, I should like to learn what those principles are. As hell is ordained by the Lord for the punishment of wicked people hereafter, so are human governments appointed by him to punish them here in this world: (See Rom. 18: 3, 4.)

There are two motive forces which prompt men to do right—viz, through fear of punishment and through love and hope for reward. God has no one to fear, so there is but one motive which prempts him—love. "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son," (John 3: 16.)

Christ must be King and rule over his kingdom, or his laws are of no avail whatever, for he has given commandment unto men that they should go forth and serve him. Does Christ rule over a people who are not his subjects? No! Such is not the ease. Christ is the rightful ruler over all those who have become Christians. All such are in his kingdom and serve him. They must obey him instead of men. (Acts 5: 29.)

Christ's birth of the flesh brought him into this world so that he might partake of man's infirmity—"tempted in all points like as we are, yet without sin"—and thus be better prepared to rule over his subjects by experience, knowing their infirmities. He uttered such statements as these: "It is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." "I appoint unto you a kingdom, even as my Father hath appointed unto me, that ye may eat and drink at my table in my kingdom." (Luke 22: 29, 30.) His disciples afterwards had received a kingdom. "Wherefore we receiving a kingdom which cannot be moved." (Heb. 12: 28.) When on earth Christ referred to the time for the establishment of the kingdom told by the prophets in these words: "The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand." (Mark 1: 15.)

The Lord's Supper is to be observed now and until Christ comes; but the Lord's table is in his kingdom, at which his disciples are to eat this Supper; therefore, the kingdom of the Lord is now in existence and men are in (Luke 22: 29, 30.) The members of the body of Christ which were at Colosse were, at the time Paul wrote, in the kingdom. (Col. I: 13.) Christ has not two religious institutions upon earth. The Supper is observed in the church; but it is in the kingdom; therefore, the church is the same as the kingdom. The same Head; the same territory; the same laws; the same people in It; the same blessings are enjoyed in each; the same acts of worship are performed in each. Dear reader, does it not look like the church and the kingdom are the same? Why, certainly they are. If a man is in one, he is in the other; if he is in the other, he is in the one.

Paul says that Christ is-not "shall be," but is-the "only Potentate, the King of kings, and Lord of lords." (1 Tim. 6: 15.) Again, he says: "Christ is the head of the church; and . . . the church is subject unto Christ." (Eph. 5; 23, 24.) From all such unqualified statements it is evident that the kingdom of Christ is now in existence on this earth as well as in heaven, and that Christ rules as King supreme now, and shall so rule till the time of his coming, at which time he shall have destroyed all enemies which now oppose his present reign, and "then cometh the end." End of what? The end of his kingdom on this earth. "Then shall the Son also himself be subjected to him that did subject all things unto him, that God may be all in all." (1 Cor. 15) 22-28.) When Christ has reigned as King till he has destroyed all ungodly men, at that time this earth shall be burned up, and there shall be "new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness." (2 Pet. 3: 7-13.)

God raised up Christ and "set him at his own right hand, . . . far above all principality, and power, and might, and dominion, and every name that is named, not only in this world, but also in that which is to come; and he hath put [not "shall put"] all things under his feet, and gave him to be head over all things to the church, which is his body, the fullness of him that filleth all in all." (Eph. 1: 20-23.) When a man reads these things in the New Testament, he is forced to admit that Christ is now "King upon his throne and that the kingdom of Christ now exists, or he must reject and denounce the sacred Scriptures. Then let us all be about our Master's business, serving Christ, our King, faithfully till we come to die, or until Christ comes again, for he is "King of kings, and Lord of lords."

The Law of Conscience.

(Exposition of Rom. 14: 13-23 and 1 Cor. 8: 9-13. By Prof. I. B. Grubbs, Submitted by Isaac C. Hoskins.)

In the controversy of late years, touching innovations and expedients; there has been for the most part, we think, a failure on the part of writers on both sides to grasp the full meaning of the apostle in the passages referred to in the heading of this article:

We here raise three questions, correct answers to which will place before the mind the apostle's meaning in the passages before us. (1) In what acceptation does he use the term "faith" in these scriptures? (2) To what weakness does he allude when he speaks of a "weak conscience?" (3) To what does he refer when he denounces as sinful the wounding of a "weak conscience?"

1. The statement, "Whatsoever is not of faith is sin," was quoted by Augustine as having reference to faith in the gospel, to faith as a fundamental element of the Christian life, and this mistake has been repeated in a vast multitude of instances. It is found in commentaries, sermons, tracts, disquisitions, etc. That it is an error, however, is perfectly obvious from a mere glance at the context. The apostle had just said that "to him who esteems anything to be unclean, to him it is unclean;" that "all things [all meats] indeed are pure; but it is evil for that man who eats with offense." He, therefore, argues that "he who doubts is condemned if he cats, because he cats not of faith;" adding that "whatsoever is not of faith is sin." Clearly, then, the "doubt," the lack of "faith," in the case, is not a doubt or tack of faith as to the gospel, or the truth as it is in Christ Jesus, but simply and alone a distrust or doubt as to the religious propriety or rightfulness of the donoter's own act. The statement, therefore, that "whatsoever is not of faith is sin," signifies that the doing of anything whatever, that does not proceed from faith in its purity or propriety, is sinful on the principle In Christian ethics laid down by the apostle that "to him who esteems anything unclean, to him it is unclean." The term "faith" in this connection, then, denotes simply one's opinion as to the character of an act, his "esteeming" it to be of this or that nature. It is absolutely certain, then, that the apostle condemns as sinful a lack of conscientiousness even in these matters that are regulated by mere opinions touching their moral and religious attributes. And it matters not in the least whether these opinions be theoretically correct or not, as far as the need of conscientionsness in their practical observance is concerned, for it is universally true that "whatsoever is not of faith is sin."

Let this be carefully noted, and let equal care be taken to consider that, by virtue of the very antithesis here involved, the conscientious action referred to is what conscience impels one to do under the conviction that the opposite course would be sinful. This will prevent any sophistical play upon the word "conscience." No one can plead conscientiousness in the sense of the passages before us, in reference to any practice which he avowedly regards as merely expediential. If a practice is observed from motives of expediency, it cannot, for that very reason, proceed from the conviction that the opposite course would be sinful.

2. But the apostle goes still further. He not only inculcates respect for one's own conscientious convictions, but for those also of others, lest by our influence those of "weak conscience" become entangled in a course of action involving self-condemnation. And this brings us to the second question: Who are those of "weak conscience?" It is almost universally supposed that the allusion is to those who, on account of a lack of enlightenment, object to things which are innocent in themselves. Why this, however, should be called weakness of conscience, no one of this view has ever found it necessary to inquire. Let it be noted that Paul is speaking, not of mental, but of moral weakness. He locates the defect in the conscience, not in the intellect. This is significant, While, too, the herb eater referred to in Rom. 14 held erroneous views touching the eating of meats in general, the objection in 1 Cor. 8 to the participation of sacrificial meats in an idol's temple held the correct view according to Paul's decision in chapter 10, verses 20, 21.

Yet this last, as much as the other, is characterized as having a "weak conscience" when he is led by the influence of example to do what he conscientiously believes to be wrong. Thus the weakness of conscience in both cases is not in the theoretical views of the parties concerned, but in the failure of moral manhood to withstand the influence of example and to adhere firmly to moral conviction.

"If any man see thee, who hath knowledge, sit at meat in the idol's temple, shall not the conscience of him who is weak be emboldened to eat those things which are offered to idols?"

As conceded by the best exegetes, the apostle treats of one thing at a time. Here, having under consideration the need of regarding another's conscience, he argues upon the assumption that he who sits at meat in an idol's temple possesses the knowledge which he claims, the point in the argument not being affected by the assumption.

When, however, the apostle comes to consider the merits of the act itself, as he does in the tenth chapter, he decides the case in harmony with the view of him who objects to participation of idol feasts. "The things," says he, "which the Gentiles sacrifice, they sacrifice to demons, and not to God, and I would not that you should have fellowship with demons. You cannot drink the cup of the Lord, and the cup of demons; you cannot be partakers of the Lord's table and of the table of demons."

It was indeed allowable to eat of meats in general, which came from the market, even though some of these may have been offered to idols; but participation of idol feasts in an idol temple was a different matter, and the man of "weak conscience" referred to in 8: 10 is precisely the one who entertained correct views on the subject, according to the teaching of the apostle as just quoted. A "weak conscience," therefore, is no more concerned with false views or lack of enlightenment than with the reverse; its weakness consists solely in the lack of moral power to withstand an external influence inclining to do violence to itself.

3. "It is good," then, "neither to eat flesh, nor to drink wine, nor anything whereby thy brother stumbles, or is offended, or is made weak." Hence the strong asseveration: "When you sin so against the brethren and wound their weak conscience [cause any deflections in weakness from its convictions], you sin against Christ. Wherefore, if meat make my brother to offend, I will eat no flesh while the world stands, lest I make my brother to offend."

Herein a clear answer to our third question is found, and it appears that the wounding of a conscience is causing "to offend," to "stumble," to be made "weak." If even the otherwise innocent eating of meat would do this, the apostle would "eat no meat while the world stands."

Golden sentiment and beautiful illustration of the law of brotherly love on the basis of which alone this noble man of God would deal with the conscientious convictions of his brethren through a most willing restriction of his individual freedom! He knew of no way of regulating religious convictions and conscientious action by a popular vote. With him, it was a maxim of universal application, that "whatsoever is not of faith is sin," and that those who even induce a faithless act of this kind are involved in the gullt of this sin, as a "sin against Christ," whether effected by a popular vote or in any other way.

The New Testament Church.

BY MORGAN H, CARTER,

The Bible is God's eternal word. It is the soul food which we must have to live and grow spiritually. It answers the deep problems of life which are of paramount importance. For example: Is there life beyond the grave? What must I do to be saved? these are two of the many questions on which God's word alone is authority. "Every scripture inspired of God is also profitable for teaching, for reproof, for correction, for instruction which is in righteousness; that the man of God may be complete, furnished completely unto every good work." (2 Tim. 3: 16, 17.) This shows us the perfection of the Bible. We can also see the absolute need of its being our only guide when we consider two other passages here given. testify unto every man that heareth the words of the prophecy of this book, If any man shall add unto them, God shall add unto him the plagues which are written in this book: and if any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part from the tree of life, and out of the holy city, which are written in this book." (Rev. 22: 18, 19.) "Whosoever goeth onward and abideth not in the teaching of Christ. hath not God; he that abideth in the teaching, the same hath both the Father and the Son." (2 John 9; see, also, 1 John 5: 10, 11.)

Remembering these facts, let us spend a few minutes in prayer that God may help us in correctly understanding his message bearing on the church of the New Testament, then without prejudice or preconceived ideas let us study God's word. Get your Bible, please, and read not only the verses I mention, but see to it that you get their setting and context thoroughly. Much that is false comes from a failure to properly construe the meaning of scriptures. No verse should ever be used out of its proper relation to other passages.

The word "church" as we find it in the New Testament is a translation of "ekklesia," a Greek word meaning "called out," or "assembly." Primarily it did not refer simply to a religious body, but might mean any group of called-out people. See Acts 19: 32, 39-41, where it tells us of a heathen mob. In Acts 7: 38 the same word is used to call our attention to the congregation of Israel in the wilderness, who had been called out of Egypt.

Now we come to four uses of the term "church" when applied to Christians. First, a meeting of Christians for worship-those assembled, not the house in which they meet, which is never spoken of in the Bible as the church. (1 Cor. 11: 18; 14: 19, 34, 35.) Secondly, the company of Christians associated for work and worship in a particular community-a local congregation, but never a denomination or sect. (Acts 5: 11; 8: 3.) Again, "ekklesia" is used to designate the whole body of Christians on earth; the family of God, containing all who have been born of water and the Spirit and who remain faithful; those whom God through his word has called out of the world into his kingdom and who are yet in the flesh. (1 Cor. 15: 9; Gal. 1: 13.) Finally, in the widest sense, "ekklesia" is used to refer to all the redeemed of all ages. (See Heb. 12: 23.)

Thus we see the New Testament use of this important word, which is first found in Matt. 16: 18, where Christ, referring to the fact of his Sonship which had just been confessed by Peter, says: "Upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of Hades shall not prevail against it." Then, on the day of Pentecost, when the apostles were baptized in the Holy Spirit and Simon Peter preached that wonderful gospel sermon, closing with the fundamental truth of Christianity that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, many were pricked in their hearts and cried; "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" God answered them through his inspired servant, who replied: "Repent ye, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ unto the remission of your sins; and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit." (Acts 2: 36-38.) "They then that received his word were baptized; and there were added unto them in that day about three thousand souls." (Verse 41.)

Now, these people had been truly converted, born again, and were children of God and members of his kingdom. They had been called out by Jehovah, and were, therefore, God's called-out people-members of God's church. In verse 47 we find that "the Lord added unto them day by day those that were saved." So we see that these people who heard the gospel, believed it with their whole heart, repented, and were baptized in obedience to God, were forgiven of the sins that they were guilty of and were made members of God's called-out. But where does it tell about their "joining the church," as the modern phrase puts it? What "denomination" did they "belong to?" Think carefully, search diligently, and see If you do not agree with me that God's word says absolutely nothing about Christians' "joining the church" or "belonging to a denomination." In the days of Paul, Peter, James, and John, people heard the gospel, obeyed from the heart the form of doctrine once delivered to the saints, and were added by the Lord to his church; and if they remained faithful, they had the sure promise of eternal life, (Rev. 2; 10.) They belanged to God; they were his children, his called-out ones, and wore the name of their Savior. (1 Pet. 4: 16.) They were members of the one body (Rom. 12; 4) of which Christ is the head (Eph, 1: 22, 23); the divine institution, undenominational and unsectarian, which God calls his temple (1 Cor. 3: 16).

Now, when the Philippian jaller (Acts 16: 25-34), the Ethiopian eunuch (Acts 8: 26-29), Cornelius (Acts 10: 1-48), and others were converted, were they not in position to go to work for God? And if they remained faithful, would they not be saved? (Rev. 2: 10; 20: 7.) In the same way, cannot you and I and all who desire be Christians just like they were? If not, why not? Were they divided and warring among themselves, and yet saying: "It doesn't make any difference which church you belong to: we are all on the way to the same place?" Did God originate such an idea? Does he not say, "Be of the same mind one toward another?" (Rom, 12: 16; also 15: 5.) "Now I beseech you, brethren, through the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfected together in the same mind and in the same judgment." (1 Cor. 1: 10; see, also, 2 Cor. 13: 11; Phil. 2: 2.) Christ fervently prayed that his people might be one, even as he and the Father are one. (John 17: 21.)

Then, am I not thoroughly correct in saying there is something terribly wrong to-day when people who profess to be Christians are teaching and practicing so as to cause strife and division? Somebody is wrong! We are all wrong, except as we take God's word as our guide and follow where Christ leads us. But how may we be right with God? Where is the way that is right and cannot be wrong? Let us find and walk in it, that we may have light and life from God. That way is found in God's word; it is so plain that "the wayfaring man, yea fools, shall not err therein." God certainly has power to speak plainly. He loves us, wants us saved, and has spoken clearly, if we will only open our eyes and ears and heart and treasure up his message. (See Mark 16: 15, 16; Luke 24: 46-48.) Let us have God's word alone as our creed, and let us be the same kind of Christians that Paul and Timothy were; for God promises eternal life to that kind. He says nothing about his people's belonging to human denominations. The divine institution is sufficient for us to work in and accomplish all God directs, and that is the whole duty of man. (Eccles. 12: 13.) Finally, remember that "whosoever goeth onward and abideth not in the teaching of Christ, hath not God." So let us neither add to nor take from God's word in teaching or practice, but let us remain faithful unto the end, that we may be his sons and dwell in his city forever and ever.

Bible Sayings on Industry, Idleness, and Slothfulness. (Arranged by A. M. Burton.)

Gen. 2: 15: "The Lord God took the man, and put him into the garden of Eden to dress it and to keep it."

Prov. 10: 4, 5: "He becometh poor that dealeth with a slack hand: but the hand of the diligent maketh rich. He that gathereth in summer is a wise son."

Prov. 13: 4-11: "The soul of the sluggard desireth, and hath nothing; but the soul of the diligent shall be made fat. He that gathereth by labor shall increase."

Prov. 22; 29; "Seest thou a man dlligent in his business? he shall stand before kings; he shall not stand before mean men."

Eccles. 9: 10: "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave, whither thou goest."

1 Tim. 5: 8: "If any provide not for his own, and specially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel."

Prov. 6: 6: "Go to the ant, thou sluggard; consider her ways, and be wise."

Prov. 18; 9; "He also that is slothful in his work is brother to him that is a great waster."

Prov. 19: 15: "Slothfulness casteth into a deep sleep; and an idle soul shall suffer hunger."

Prov. 20: 4-13: "The sluggard will not plow by reason of the cold; therefore shall he beg in harvest, and have nothing. . . . Love not sleep, lest thou come to poverty."

Prov. 26: 13-16; "The slothful man saith, There is a lion in the way; a lion is in the streets. [Excuses.] As the door turneth upon his hinges, so doth the slothful upon his hed. The slothful hideth his hand in his bosom; it grieveth him to bring it again to his mouth. The sluggard is wiser in his own conceit than seven men that can render a reason."

Eccles. 10: 18: "By much slothfulness the building decayeth; and through idleness of the hands the house droppeth through,"

Ezek. 16: 49: "This was the iniquity of thy sister Sodom, pride, fullness of bread, and abundance of idleness was in her and in her daughters." (See Luke 19: 20-25.)

Acts 17: 21: "All the Athenians and strangers which were there spent their time in nothing else, but either to tell, or to hear some new thing."

2 Thess. 3: 10: "For even when we were with you, this we commanded you, that if any would not work, neither should be eat."

O happiness! Our being's end and aim! Good pleasure, case, content! Whate'er thy name; That something still which prompts the eternal sigh, For which we bear to live or dare to die.

Thou Lord of Light.

Thou Lord of Light, across the years
Thy shining path of love we see;
Bright glows amidst our joys and fears
The arder of our faith in thee.

The Teacher thou of those who taught,
The Master Guide through learning's maze,
The subject of their deepest thought.
The object of their reverent praise.

Their hearts interpreted thy word,
Through them thy messages were sent,
Within these walls thy voice was heard,
Here wisdom found its sacrament.

We thank thee for these years of power, For stalwart sonls, for gentle life! For men transformed to meet the boar Of blasting wrong, of surging strife—

For men who gird the world with flame.
Who count for thee all things but loss.
Who challenge nations in thy name
To hear the story of thy cross.

Yet beating through our gratitude, We feel the pulse of coming days; Thy truth must stand where it has stood; New darkness waits its deathless rays.

High courage grant, the outlook broad,
The strength of joy, the zest for right,
The faith that burns, the sense of God,
Thy fellowship, thou Lord of Light, —Selected.

Gospel Trumpet Blasts. BY A. A. BUNNER.

"And in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed: and the kingdom shall not be left to other people; but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever." (Dan. 2: 44.) "How great are his signs! and how mishty are his wonders! his kingdom is an evertasting kingdom, and his dominion is from generation to generation." (Dan. 4: 3.) "And he said unto them, Verily I say unto you. That there be some of them that stand here, which shall not taste of death, all they have seen the kingdom of God come with power." (Mark 9: 1,) "Whorefore we receiving a kingdom which cannot be moved, let us have grace whereby we may serve God acceptably with reverence and godly fear: for our God is a consuming fire." (Heb. 12: 28.) "Giving thanks unto the Father, which hath made us meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the saints of light: who hath delivered us from the power of darkness, and hath translated us into the kingdom of his dear Son; in whom we have redemption through his blood, even the forgiveness of sins." (Col. 1: 12-14.)

The God of heaven has either somewhere in the past set up his kingdom or he has not. If he has not yet set it up, as sure as he is God, he will yet in the future set it up, for he cannot lie. If he has not yet set it up, he will assuredly send his Son at some future date and fulfill his promise in Dan. 2: 44, and then that doubtful exegesis of the prophecies-that Jesus will come in a body of fiesh and blood (for he could come in no other manner and sit on David's throne in Jerusalem) and reign for a thousand years-may be realized. But viewing as I do this nowno-kingdom theory from plain scriptural viewpoints, I find several well-grounded objections to it. First, Christ is now immortalized and glorified with the glory that he had with the Father before the world was; and in order for him to come again to earth in a body of flesh and blood to sit on a literal throne composed of literal wood, gold, and ivory, and reign over literal Israel, a people composed of the same flesh and blood, Jesus would again have to empty himself of all the glory, honor, immortality, and eternal life he now possesses with the Father and again subject himself to the same trials, temptations, and hardships that mortal flesh and blood is heir to. In fact, his former life in the flesh would all practically have to be lived over again in his next body of flesh and blood. Who would want the blessed Son of God to have to endure these things again? I know I would not, and I know the Father would not suffer it. Hence, I long ago arrived at the conclusion that the immortalized and glorified feet of the blessed Son of God will never again set themselves on this sin-cursed earth-never, no, never! But after the final fulfillment of what is recorded in 1 Cor. 15: 25-28, 51-58, and I Thess, 4: 14-17, then our Lord will plant his feet on the earth; but it will be the new earth, as new as his body is now new. But this he will not do in order to set up a kingdom as some vainly imagine, but in order to deliver up to the Father the kingdom he (the Son) has been reigning over from the first Pentecost after his resurrection from the dead up to the time described in the Scriptures before cited. (See 1 Cor. 15: 25, 26.) From the time this kingdom was set up on the first Pentecost after the resurrection of the Son of God from among the dead it has seen no end, and it will have no end throughout vast eternity; it will only change hands after the last enemy has been put beneath the feet of the now reigning King, the Son of the Highest. Jesus by his reign will have perfectly restored the right to rule all things back to the Father, and the Father will then take the kingdom and reign over it forever and ever. Then what? See 1 Cor. 15; 28. Banish forever the wicked thought of the Son of God ever again assuming a body of flesh and blood! But I hope in the future, If spared, to say more on the kingdom question, for I do not think it is well understood by many in some quarters.

"In the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed." (Dan-2: 44) "And I say unto thee, That thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." (Matt. 16: 18.)

The Christian religion has been on this earth ever since the first Pentecost after the resurrection of Christ from the dead, and every hellish invention that the wicked hearts of devils and men could think out has been brought to bear against it for its overthrow, and still it lives and will continue to live. It cannot be overthrown, for it is of God. Hence the triumphant language of the writer of the Hebrew letter. (Heb. 12: 28, 29.)

"In 1787, the ship Bounty sailed from England to the Pacific in quest of young breadfruit trees to be replanted in the West Indies. On her way home the crew mutinied, placed the master and eighteen others in a frail open boat, with scanty provisious, and committed them to the mercy of the ocean. Strange to tell, that boat accomplished a voyage of more than four thousand miles and reached England in safety. The mutineers, twenty-five in number, set sail for some island in the Pacific. They quarreled and separated. About half of the whole number were captured by an English vessel of war, carried home, and hung in irons. Nine of these desperadoes went to Tahiti. took on board nineteen natives (seven men and twelve women), and salled for some uninhabited island in the ocean. They found one, Pitcairn Island. Shortly after landing, the Tahitian men murdered five of the mutineers, upon which the twelve women arose at night and killed their seven countrymen. Of the four remaining mutineers, one invented a distillery, and, becoming delirious, leaped from a cliff into the sea and was lost. Another was shot for attempting to destroy his messmates. Of the two then left, one died a natural death; and the other, named John Adams, alone survived. Here their hiding place was undisturbed until 1814, when it was visited, as also in 1825. Strange alterations had taken place. The number of in-habitants had increased to seventy. There was no debauchery among them. Good order prevailed. Filial affection and brotherly love pervaded the entire society. The blessing of God was invoked on every meal. Prayer was offered every morning, noon, and evening. The laws of civilized society were in force. The rights of property were respected. A simple and pure morality was prevalent. How was this? What made the change? Had vice wrought its own cure? Had there been some good principles combined with the mutiny and murder, the heathenism and devilish passions, which this gang had been guilty of? No. These evils never work their own cure, except by consuming like a fire their own materials. The cause of the change was this: Adams had saved, hid, and preserved a Bible; and when his comrades were dead, he studied it, embraced its promises, believed God's testimony concerning his Son, was converted, read and taught its truths to his family and neighbors, and God blessed his word to their conversion also. That very Bible in 1853 was still in this country. It was a small volume, printed in 1765. The salt sea and the salt tears of old Adams had taken away its gloss and dimmed its print, but it contained God's testimony of Jesus. That was the secret of its power. The worm has eaten it through and through. But the glad tidings to sinners could still be read in it. That Bible has traveled around the globe, and has been the means of reforming a whole community of outlaws, and still lives to proclaim its divine Original and its lifegiving power. When Adams was brought to his deathbed, he was old in years, but strong in faith. The friends of the old salt collected around him and asked: 'Well, John, what cheer?' 'Land ahead!' was his characteristic reply. After a few days they again gathered around him and said: 'Well, John, how now?' He replied: 'Rounding the point in the harbor.' At last he lay upon his dving pillow, and his relations were standing all around in tears, and yet in hope. One said: Brother, how now?' 'Let go the anchor!' was his dying exclamation; and he fell asleep."

Such has been, such is, and such will continue to the end of time, the influence of this grand old Book of books upon the hearts and lives of individuals and whole communities of individuals when its sacred truths are received meekly and gladly into good and honest hearts. Who would part with it for worlds like this? It contains all of the seed of the kingdom of heaven, and when sown in the proper soll (good and honest hearts) it will produce its fruit-the kingdom of heaven in all of its beauty and grandeur. To the church of the living God has been committed the great work of sending this blessed old Book with its precious fruit-bearing message of life and salvation into all lands and to all peoples. I ask, what is the church of Christ doing to-day in carrying out this great trust her divine Head has committed to her? I am satisfled that the time is short now in which to sow the seed of the kingdom. Wake up, O wake up, indelent, half-hearted, sleepy, careless, indifferent, stingy, tight-fisted congregations of disciples of Christ, and diligently get at the great work the Lord has committed to your trust! Many are the laborers who are willing and ready to enter the fields. if you will only send them and stand at their back while they do the work. Their name is legion who are willing and ready to go. Send them, send them, and send them now. The King's business demands haste.

Terrible Conditions in Poland.

Surviving the persecution of five hundred years and being bled white and mauled with unspeakable cruelty by both the Russians and the Germans during the great war, the Polish people in their present-day struggle have aroused the unstinted admiration of American relief workers, declares Lieut, Shelton Wright, of the American Red Cross Commission to Poland, who recently returned to the United States after having taken relief trains into all parts of the new republic.

Subjected to forays by Bolshevik troops on the north and a guerrilla warfare with Germans in the southwest, and trying to care for the pitiable remnant of twelve million Poles who are returning from refugee life in Siberia, Poland as a whole will need American aid for many months to come, Lieutenant Wright says. Outright starvation, numerous diseases attributed to mainutrition, and typhus have killed men, women, and children like files, and the coming winter will be very bad for the bulk of the Polish population despite efforts of the European Relief Administration under Herbert Hoover, the American Red Cross, and the Polish government to get the people on a self-supporting basis, fed, clothed, and sheltered. In every box car you find cases of typhus and dead.

"I vividly remember one incident along the road where a family was attempting to live under an overturned wagon. The mother was found under a tree a few yards away, dead. She apparently had been dead two or three days. In the shelter of the wagon were two little children, both under five, and both down with typhus. An older child, about eight, sat stupidly beside them—a girl driven out of her mind. Not far away, stretched upon the ground, was the father, dying of typhus. He died that day. We found that there were five children in this family, and these were hurried to relief places and eventually to orphanages. The dead we buried.

"We found in a village near Brest-Litovsk, a sorely-tried Polish surgeon trying to care for a hospital full of his wounded countrymen. He had no nurses, and his equipment consisted of his jack knife and a pair of forceps. There was no antiseptic, no anæsthetic, and he worked with his bare hands. The Red Cross equipped a hospital for him in every way.

"Everywhere we found a desire among the people to keep clean, but a situation in which it was impossible to do so. This may be indicated by nine of our American personnel falling victims of typhus, which is a louse-borne disease. The Poles follow readily our instructions in sanitation, and despite their long subjection to persecution, when given an opportunity, take care of themselves splendidly. They get on to our methods quickly; and when they have food, they demonstrate a surprising endurance. Practically naked, and four years without adequate food to sustain health, they nevertheless have accomplished wonders for themselves since the armistice."

"The people have been so browbeaten and abused first by one oppressor and then by another that they do not expect fair treatment from anybody, and it has been a case of every man for himself and the devil take the hindmost. The Germans stripped Poland of her industries, deliberately wrecking and burning factories, upon their forced evacuation," reports Lieutenant Wright. "The German-planted wheat crop, which has been harvested by the Poles, is going to contribute to the relief of the situation, but several harvests would hardly relieve a people who but lately were making 'bread' out of leaves and bark and soup out of grass.

"Not only typhus, but relapsing fever, typhoid, and dysentery are prevalent, and the commission considers that very severe epidemics will occur this winter unless most energetic measures are taken to deal with the situation in Poland to prevent the spread of typhus and other epidemics to Western Europe and America."

In sending contributions, be sure and state whether they are intended for the Home Orphans' Fund, the Armenian and Syrian Fund, or the Poland Fund. Make all checks and money orders payable to A. B. Lipscomb, who will forward them to the proper commissioners.

Something About Witcheraft.

BY G. N. MURPHEY, M.D.

Witchcraft is as old as mankind, and was, no doubt, given to the world by the devil in the garden of Eden. It is mentioned in many places in the Bible Scriptures, both Old and New. It is known by many different names—as, soothsaying, sorcery, necromancy, familiar spirits, divinations, witches, wizards, charms, enchantment, dreams, spiritualism, clairvoyance, psychism, new thought, fortune telling, etc. In the Mosaic law the whole system was condemned.

For the benefit of those who may wish to investigate this important subject, I invite their attention to the following passages in the Bible: Ex. 22: 18; Lev. 19: 31; Deut. 18: 10-12; 1 Sam. 28: 3-20; Isa. 8: 19; Jer. 27: 9: Mic. 5) 12; Mal. 3: 5; Acts 8: 16; Acts 16: 16-18; Gal. 5: 20; Rev. 22: 15.

Every now and then some one of this craft comes along masquerading under the name of hypnotist, clairvoyant, or psychologist, and creates a furor of excitement with his or her divinations. Almost every community has its fortune tellers. Few persons seem to know from whence these people derive their powers to divine events and even to communicate with the dead. There was one of this craft in our city recently that entertained large audiences for several nights at the opera house with exhibitions of witchcraft and created much excitement among the people and took in large sums of money by soothsaying. He claimed that he had acquired his supernatural powers by scientific research in psychology, and said that any one else could do the same thing who would study the subject as he had done. Be not deceived by any such statement. The power of witchcraft does not come from any such source, for many ignorant people who are wholly uneducated possess the same power.

It is not necessary for me to say that witchcraft emanates from the devil when the Bible teaches against its practice. I will quote just one passage from the Bible on this subject, and then the readers can draw their own conclusions from whence it comes. "There shall not be found among you any one that maketh his son or his daughter to pass through the fire, or that useth divination, or an observer of times, or an enchanter, or a witch, or a charmer, or a consulter with familiar spirits, or a wizard, or a necromancer. For all that do these things are an abomination unto the Lord; and because of these abominations the Lord thy God doth drive them out from before thee." (Deut. 18: 10-12.)

That members of this craft can in reality divine events of the past, present, and future, there is no question whatever. The writer has personally interviewed a number of these fortune tellers or diviners and knows whereof he speaks. They have told me things that had transpired in my life before I saw them and other things that they said would occur, which came to pass just as they predicted that they would. Some of these predictions were of such a nature that they had never entered into my mind before they were prophesied of. I have long since discarded all these wicked things and now have nothing to do with fortune tellers or spiritual mediums, as I believe that they are all emissaries of the devil. I have read books dealing with this subject by more than twenty different writers and am familiar with all their teachings and theories, and I, therefore, speak with confidence about these things,

At one time in my life I was dangerously near being converted to spiritualism by tampering with this craft. It is a dangerous expedient for any one to meddle with spiritualism, and he who does It is holding out a hand to the devil, who is certain to give it a welcome grasp. Mr. Savage, a noted minister of the Congregational Church, of Boston, quit preaching the gospel of Jesus Christ and took up spiritualism and wrote a book on it. Some years ago an eminent divine of the Methodist Church, of Memphis, Tenn., whose name I have forgotten, went into spiritualism and either quit the church of his own accord or was turned out of it, I am not certain which. I believe he also wrote a book called "The Clock Struck One."

The wizards and witches of to-day do not differ in any wise from those of ancient times—as, the witch of Endor; Simon, the sorcerer, of Samaria; and the damsel of Philippi, out of whom Paul cast the evil spirit, who brought her masters much gain by soothsaying.

I have often heard people say: "What harm is there in having your fortune told or attending spirit meetings?" The harm is simply that when you do such things you are disobeying God, who forbids it. Christ says: "Ye cannot serve two masters." You are servants to whom you submit yourselves. "For of whom a man is overcome, of the same is be brought in bondage."

I have shown conclusively that witchcraft in all its phases comes from Satan, and that is enough to condemn it. I believe every word and statement in the Bible, and, therefore, base all my argument against witchcraft on its teachings.

Some may say: "Why does God allow witchcraft in the world?" To that I will say that we are all free agents and can choose the right or wrong for ourselves. Again, I would refer my readers to one more passage in the Bible—namely, 2 Thess. 2: 7-12. If you reject the truth, then God will let you believe a lie.

In closing, I would warn every one to beware of fortune tellers and spirit mediums. They are a bad lot,

We should distinguish between a mere speculative knowledge and that knowledge in the possession of which the mind not only speculates, but feels and relishes. That kind of knowledge by which we receive the impression of loveliness or hatefulness is not exactly the same kind of knowledge as that by which we perceive the nature of a square or a triangle. The one is mere speculative knowledge; the other, a knowledge connected with the affections, in which something more than mere intellect is concerned—something that not only beholds, but has inclination, and is pleased or displeased.—Jonathan Edwards.

If.

If you can keep your head when all about you
Are losing theirs, and blaming it on you;
If you can trust yourself when all men doubt you,
But make allowance for their doubting, too;
If you can wait and not be tired by waiting,
Or being lied about, don't deal in lies,
Or being hated, don't give way to hating,
And yet don't look too good, nor talk too wise;

If you can dream, and not make dreams your master; If you can think, and not make thoughts your aim; If you meet with Triumph and Disaster, And treat those two impostors just the same; If you can bear to hear the truth you've spoken

If you can bear to hear the truth you've spoken 'Fwisted by knaves to make a trap for fools,' Or watch the thirgs you gave your life to, broken, And stoop and build 'em up with worn-out tools;

If you can make one heap of all your winnings
And risk it on one turn of pitch-and-toss,
And lose, and start again at your beginnings,
And never breathe a word about your loss;
If you can force your heart and nerve and sinew
To serve your turn long after they are gone,
And so hold on when there is nothing in you Except the Will, which says to them, "Hold on!"

If you can walk with crowds and keep your virtue,
Or talk with kings, nor lose the common touch;
If neither foes nor loving friends can hurt you;
If all men count with you, but none too much;
If you can fill the unforgiving minute
With sixty seconds' worth of distance run;
Yours is the Earth, and everything that's in it,
And—which is more—you'll be a Man, my son!

AT HOME AND ABROAD

Victor Dorris reports a good meeting at Remington, Ind. There had been five confessions.

E. S. Jelley, returned missionary from India, is sick at the home of his mother in Dayton, Ohio,

What could be a more delightful gift than to send the Gospel Advocate to your friend fifty-two times in the year?

The "Jesus Said" Number will appear on Christmas Day. Send in the name of a new subscriber to begin with that number. Such a gift will be appreciated.

From G. C. Parham, Oklahoma City, Okla., December 12: "Please state in the Gospel Advocate that I am ready to answer calls for meetings for 1920."

We wish to call the attention of our readers to the contribution to be taken for the Tennessee Orphans' Home on the first Lord's day in January. Make the orphans comfortable and happy by a liberal contribution on that day.

When we think of the labor required to rear the few that are in our household, the weariness, the anxiety, the burden of life, how wonderful seems God's work, for he carries heaven and earth and all the realms in his bosom?—H. W. Beecher.

From L. D. Perkins, Armona, Cal.; "T. B. Larimore is in a good meeting at Hanford, Cal., preaching to the largest audiences in the history of the church. Since I came to Hanford this congregation has grown sixfold. May the Lord prosper the work everywhere."

From A. D. Dies, Oakman, Ala., December 10: "Since last report I have baptized eight persons at New Castle, and have begun my second year's work with the Oakman and New Hope churches. The work is moving along nicely. We have had a successful year in many ways. We have a band of faithful, sacrificing Christians here."

From G. C. Brewer, Winchester, Tenn., December 9: "For some cause I did not receive the special 'Sermon' Number of the Gospel Advocate and had not seen it till this week, when I borrowed a neighbor's paper. I call it a special special number. It is a specially good special. I enjoyed what all the writers had to say, and know from experience that all they say about preaching is true."

Fram O. M. Reynolds, Hollis, Okla., December 1: "The Gospel Advocate specials are superfine. You are deserving of much credit. Keep 'em coming. I shall make a strong pull to put the paper in new homes. The Hollis and Harmon county work is fine. The church is standing behind me, and many go with me to the schoolhouses on Lord'sday afternoons. We are planning much work for 1920."

B. C. Goodpasture writes: "'The Model Church' reached me on time. I have read most of it, and must say that I am delighted with it. The book supplies a fundamental need. The author is specific, definite, particular, practical; he wastes no time with uncertain and theoretical speculations and intangible and vague generalities. Thoughtful reading of the book will accomplish good. I predict for it a wide circulation."

The writer of this page officiated at two weddings on December 11. The contracting parties were: Mr. Robert Creighton McKeand and Miss Emma Narcissa Johnston; Mr. Newell T. Pangburn and Miss Corlyn Crabtree. Mr. and Mrs. McKeand will reside in Florida, while Mr. and Mrs. Pangburn will make their home in New York City. We believe this means a little more of conjugal sunshine for the South and East.

From John D. Evans, Denver, Col., December 7: "Please announce in the Gospel Advocate that the members of the church of Christ formerly worshiping at Eighth and Ogden Streets, in Denver, are now meeting in their new home on South Sherman Street, between Bayand and Maple, two blocks east of Broadway. Car No. 2, 3, or 9 will stop within two blocks. Visitors get off at Maple. John D. Evans, minister; residence, 6 Broadway. E. E. Shoulders, associate; same address."

C. C. Merritt writes: "J. H. Murrell, of Tennessee City, Tenn., had planned to move to Olathe, Col., this month, to take up the work in that needy field; but the few brethren out there have just informed him that the weather is so severe and the snow so deep that it will not be good for him to come before spring. Now, brethren, this has greatly discommoded him, for he had canceled all his work here to make the move there. If any of you can have him engage with you until that time, it will be a great help to you and to Brother Murrell also. Write him at Tennessee City, Tenn., and have him take up some work with you for a while,"

From J. W. Brents, Lorenzo, Texas, November 30: "For several years past I have been connected with the highschool work in Texas. At present I am superintendent of the school at this place. During this time I have practically done two men's work. I have taught five days in the week and preached almost every Lord's day. When the present term of school is out, the last of next April, I expect to do the work of an evangelist. Every year I have had to close my meeting work and begin teaching school. This work does not appeal to me when I see the souls of men going to perdition. I shall perhaps make my home in Tennessee; but already I have work arranged for in Texas and Missouri, and am willing to go anywhere. that I can be of service. I realize that this decision will mean a great sacrifice financially, but duty impels me. I should be glad to arrange work from June till December. Write me here."

From E. C. Fuqua, Fort Collins, Col., December 5: "I want to express my beartfelt thanks to you for the articles you wrote for the Gospel Advocate relative to the Colorado work. Brother Evans likewise appreciates your favor. He writes me that he expects this long-neglected field to now find workers, through the interest that you have manifested in it. I know that some day this will be a rich field-rich in Christian congregations-if we can only hold it down until that day arrives. Those who come after us, on this field, will not have to bear the brunt of the pioneer work to which we are at present subjected. I was not expecting you to mention my book, but your mention of it is appreciated; and while no one has written me a line regarding my work or my book, I believe at the proper time many will. It is hard to get the brethren to see that I have not lived in Colorado for myself, but for the cause entirely, and were it not for this I would leave the State for the good old South at an early day to satisfy a personal yearning. But I am trying, through every possible sacrifice, to remain here to keep this work going until, after my death, others can take it up where I left off and carry it on with a brighter prospect. I fully believe, therefore, that I will die with this work. This is my desire, at least. I have baptized a few since you were here, and others seem 'almost persuaded.' The outlook for the work itself is greatly encouraging. The Loveland congregation is gathering strength. The private home in which we have been meeting will no longer accommodate us, so we are looking for a hall of some kind. As soon as we can get coal I shall begin a meeting in Fort Collins; but at present we are told that churches will all have to close, together with theaters, etc., to conserve coal. I am just waiting for developments. Let me once more humbly thank you for the good words you have spoken in behalf of our work in this State. May God use them for the good of his struggling cause in the West, and richly reward you for making the matter known to the brethren, by whom we expect this and all other missionary efforts to succeed." [These are extracts from a private letter to Brother McQuiddy.]

Training Little Children

By MRS. ALICE BARTON HARRIS

Unwise Reading, Story-Telling, or Threats Fill the Child With Fear.

The ideals which we wish to develop in our children are chiefly those of courage, truthfulness, and unselfishness, i believe that the normal child is born brave, physically and morally, and that out of laziness or ignorance the grown people put fear into his little consciousness. He is not allowed to climb, for instance, because his mother is afraid he will fall; and his plastic mind is filled, through stories or threats or actual punishment, with a sense of danger and evil with which he in his helplessness cannot cope.

Lying, of course, comes from the same source. The child lies because he is afraid either of being misunderstood or punished. Thoreau says: "It takes two to speak the truth; one to speak, and one to listen." When the child lies, the burden of the lie too often rests upon the grown people who have him in charge.

Many persons believe that fear is inevitable to man, that it is a race memory; but I believe that fear of the dark, of solitude, is much more likely to come from mind pictures of terrible things which unwitting elders have discussed in the child's presence, or as a result of unwise reading or story-telling in very early childhood. This is difficult to avoid, perhaps, but quite possible, if parents are willing to be sufficiently watchful. The magnificent trust with which a child thus guarded can face the world is a guarantee in itself of success in life.

Unselfishness is one of the virtues which has to be cultivated, for we are not born unselfish. We have to be taught this virtue, and, of course, the greatest teacher of all is love. I am inclined to think love is the only teacher. Henderson says: "To get children interested in impersonal things is to make them unavoidably unselfish. Solitary children, only sons and daughters, are, as a rule, extremely selfish, for the simple reason that their lives have been so overwhelmingly personal. The way out is through group activities on the part of the whole family, through pleasures as well as through service. If life is to be permanently successful, and happiness genuine and secure, the major interest must be impersonal, must have to do with something bigger than the little self, must concern itself with the abiding and universal things."

The Seventh Biscuit.

I knew a boy who was a sophomore in college. He had been away from home just long enough to realize that the little house he came from was not very pretentlous. And he began to be ashamed of the home where his mother sat, in a neat print frock, darning stockings, and where his father, dressed in blue overalls, fussed over the kitchen garden.

This boy made friends with a rich student who belonged to the same fraternity. And then, suddenly, at the beginning of the Easter holidays, the rich student walked into the boy's room, and said; "Say, Dick, the mater's giving a big party this week—and I'm tired of big parties. Can't I go home with you?" And the boy, groaning inwardly, said as cheerfully as he could; "Why, certainly, old man, I'd be glad to have you."

So Dick came home with his rich friend. And the father, in overalls, met them at the station with a buggy. And the rich friend drove home sitting on a soap hox, for the buggy was small. And he laughed and said it was fun, but the boy was strangely silent. And the mother, in her freshest print dress, met them at the gate and kissed them both. "For," she said, "I knew I'll love any of my son's friends!"

And the rich man's son thought of his coldly formal home, and he kissed her while he winked, just a bit, because there was something in his eyes that bothered him. But Dick dragged him away worriedly, and led him to the guest chamber.

And then they had supper in the cool dining room, and there was homemade strawberry jam to eat, and hot biscuits. And as the rich student was eating his seventh biscuit he turned suddenly to the boy. "You're lucky, Dick," he said, gruffly. "You don't know how lucky you are!" And then Dick understood. And he wasn't ashamed of his home any more,—Margaret E. Sangster, in Christian. Herald.

For Mother.

The tall, awkward boy, just in from his work at the shop, carefully unrolled the big bundle he carried and disclosed a blooming plant. As his toil-roughened hands busied themselves with folding up the paper and string, a woman in the kitchen—one who felt that her slight relationship and neighborly services gave her a right to free speech—looked at the flower and remarked: "It's pretty, but there are plenty of things needed a sight more than flowers in the house."

"It's for mother," answered the boy with a brusqueness intended to conceal any deeper feeling. "She's had a whole lifetime of doing without things she liked because something else was needed worse. She's going to have flowers now if I can get them."

it would not be for long. They both knew that. And the invalid, in her plain little room, caressed with loving fingers and eager eyes the treasures that were brought to her. She was too weak to question now with voice or brain how such things were procured; she only watched for and enjoyed them, and the boy saw to it—at what cost of self-sacrifice and overwork he only knew—that the supply did not fail. But the well-meaning woman in the kifchen shook her head over each arrival and murmured to herself, if to no one else, that it was "a shame to spend money for just flowers, with so many things worse needed about the house."

Love's lavish offerings have often a reason and meaning not fathomed by those who coldly compute the pence they cost. The flowers in the sick room were pleasure and comfort to the dying mother, but who shall estimate what threads of fineness and nobility their purchase wove into the character of the boy?—Forward.

A brother wishes to know if haptism administered by a Baptist preacher would be valid, provided the candidate made a good confession.

The validity of baptism does not depend on the administrator. A man may be baptized by a Christian minister, and yet his baptism not be scriptural because he did not have a scriptural faith. Scriptural baptism must be preceded by a belief with all the heart that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God. While it is pleasing to any one who has been baptized to believe that he was baptized by a pure, godly preacher, yet he can never be absolutely certain as to the character of the one who baptizes him. When a man with a scriptural faith bows in submission to the authority of God and is baptized as directed by the Holy Spirit, his baptism is not invalidated simply because he is baptized by a Baptist preacher.

Brother J. S. Wyatt asks the following questions: "Did the apostles have the power, when they were called under the first commission, to raise the dead, heal the sick, and open the eyes of the blind, and did they do these things before the day of Pentecost?"

If the querist had noted the scriptures bearing on this subject, he would have seen just what power was conferred on the apostles under the first commission. Matt. 10: 1 says; "And he called unto him his twelve disciples, and gave them authority over unclean spirits, to cast them out, and to heal all manner of disease and all manner of sickness." This shows that he gave them authority over unclean spirits to cast them out, to heal all manner of diseases and all manner of sickness. Luke 9: 1, 2 gives them the same authority over demons and diseases and to heal the sick. Mark 6: 13 shows that they exercised this power before the day of Pentecost. It reads: "And they east out many demons, and anointed with oil many that were sick, and healed them." It should be noted that under the first commission they were not promised power to raise the dead, and we have no account of any apostle's raising any one from the dead until after the day of Pentecost.

W. T. Buffaloe, of Monette, Ark., says: "I have not been able to have some questions noticed in the Gospel Advocate. [I wish to assure the brother that there has been no intentional oversight.-Editor.] He now asks the following questions: (1) "Should persistent absence from worship on Lord's day, when persons have no reason for such absence and do not even offer excuses, especially when they know the Lord's will on the subject, be considered disorderly conduct; and if so, should fellowship be withdrawn from them?" (2) "Does the parable of the tares and wheat, recorded in the thirteenth chapter of Matthew, teach that such members as I have described should be tolerated and left without discipline here, and that in the judgment God will cast them into outer darkness?" (3) "Is there any scripture which teaches, directly or otherwise, that a member of a local congregation can or may withdraw himself from the congregation?"

1. The Bible nowhere tells us just how long we should bear with the shortcomings of brethren. It does teach us, both by the example of Christ and plain statements, that we should be long-suffering and forbearing with one another. Paul, in writing to the Galatian church, says: "Brethren, even if a man be overtaken in any trespass, ye who are spiritual, restore such a one in a spirit of gentleness; looking to thyself, lest thou also be tempted. Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ." Even though members of the church, without reason, deliberately absent themselves from the house of the Lord on the first day of the week, the church should use every possible means in order to create a new interest in such members. When such efforts have been continued indefinitely and without visible results, it seems to me that the elders of the church should announce the true condition of such members, and that on account of their conduct they are no longer faithful, loyal members of the church. They have withdrawn from the church and a Christian life.

2, I do not understand that the parable of the tares teaches that the wicked should be permitted to grow with the good in the church of God. The field in which the seeds were sown represents the world of mankind. Christ sows the good seed, the devil sows the tares. Some have concluded that the tares are to be permitted to grow with the good seed, lest in rooting up the tares the good seed be rooted up also. The parable does not teach this, for Christ teaches elsewhere clearly that discipline should be exercised. Read Matt. 18: 17; 1 Cor. 5: 11-13; 2 Thess. 3: 6. There are also other reasons why it is not true that Jesus was opposed to "church discipline." Jesus makes the servants of the householder, who made the proposition to pull up the tares and who were the reapers of the harvest, represent, not the elders of the church, but the angels of God-"the reapers are the angels." Again, we must accept the interpretation that Jesus himself gives to the parable. In his exposition he passes by any thought of prohibiting discipline of offenders in the church and gives it no part whatever in the significance of the parable. It is true that gathering up the tares at the end of the world. implies that they will be permitted to grow until that time, but it implies nothing at all as to whether such of them as can be shall be excluded from the church. The kingdom in which they are to be allowed to grow together is the world. So the kingdom out of which they are to be gathered at the end of the world is the world and not the church. Inasmuch as all authority in heaven and earth is given to Christ (Matt. 28: 19), his kingdom in reality includes the whole earth; and in at least one of the parables, that of the pounds (Luke 19: 14, 15, 27), the term is used to include both his willing subjects and those who will not that this man reign over us." It is true that the church of Christ embraces all his "submissive subjects" that are in the kingdom of Christ; yet it is also true that the church of Christ includes none of the "unwilling" subjects of Christ. In the interpretation of this parable, it should be carefully noted that Christ's kingdom out of which the tares are gathered at the end of the world is his kingdom in the broader sense, or the world itself.

3. There is no scripture that says in so many words that a man can withdraw himself from the local congregation, yet it is a fact that thousands have done so. When Christians make shipwreck of the faith, when men turn away deliberately from the Lord Jesus Christ and seek to be justified by their own wisdom, they are fallen from grace. To the Galatians, who sought to be justified by the law of Moses, the Holy Spirit said: "Ye are severed from Christ, ye who would be justified by the law; ye are fallen away from grace." (Gal. 5: 4.) The Scriptures do not teach any man to cease to do his duty or to resign a duty. The Scriptures do teach that all men have sinned and come far short of the glory of God, and that they must rise upon subdued evil and continue faithful in well-doing to enter heaven at last.

Remittances will be at our risk when sent by express or post-office money order, in registered letter, or by draft payable to our order.

When changing your post-office address, tell us your old as well as your new address; otherwise two papers might be charged to you. The paper is malled regularly to all subscribers until definite orders in writing are received and all arrearages paid in full. If you wish us to stop your paper, write us to that affect; but do not ask it unless you have paid all arrears, if there are any. Do not ask you postmaster to attend to it for you, but do it yourself.

The date on your tab shows the time to which your subscription is paid. When money is received, the date will be changed, which will answer for a receipt. Two weeks time must ordinarily occur from the time your remittance is sent before the tab on your paper is changed; if not changed by that time, notify us at once.

Subscribers, after paying for their papers, will favor us by noting whether the date on the address label is changed, and, if it is not changed within a month, by writing to us. We are careful, but mistakes may occur or letters may be lost. Our rule is to change the date on the day payment is received; but the mechanical work of correcting and printing the list takes time, and payments even from near-by piaces may not appear the first week. Credits for payments from a distance may be even more delayed. Mistakes are easily rectified if prompt notice is given.

The Ministers and the League of Nations.

BY J. C. M'Q.

What I shall write on this subject has no reference to politics nor especially to the League of Nations, which was recently rejected by the United States Senate. It is not now my purpose either to approve or disapprove of the particular peace pact and League of Nations drafted by the leaders of the allied powers. It appears, however, from the Literary Digest, that the great majority of ministers throughout the country favored the League and peace pact which the Senate rejected. The findings of the National Committee on the Churches and the Moral Aims of the War, which made a postal inquiry reaching over seventeen thousand clergymen, having sent a special investigator to some thirty representative cities, disclosed the fact that about one in twenty of the ministers would defeat or drastically alter the League covenant. The investigator represents that the preponderance of church sentiment seems to be that it would be a calamity to the church and to the kingdom of God on earth if the treaty and the League covenant should not be ratified this year. The investigation was made especially in thirty cities of the East and Middle West. All through the Mid-West and other sections of the country it is represented that the voice of the minister is heard proclaiming the necessity for a League of Nations.

Seventeen thousand clergymen in the United States presented to the Senate, through Vice President Marshall, a monster petition calling for the ratification of the League covenant in a way that would not cause its resubmission to the powers in Paris. This indicates that the ministers of America are not avoiding this great issue. To my mind it appears that the preachers, as a class, are for peace and not war among the nations of the earth. The Literary Digest quotes from Christian Work:

Contemplate the power of the message of seventeen thousand preachers constantly calling for a League of Nations and you can see the doom of the evil forces that keep the human family apart. Racialism may continue for a span, but its days are numbered. Commercial ex-ploitation may persuade itself that it is immortal, but its days are in the yellow leaf. Militarism and navalism may hold their serpentine heads above water for a little time, but soon they will go under. Too long have they been permitted to swim their slimy way into the life of nations, but their glory has forever departed. "Othello's" occupation's gone.

It would be an interesting thing to observe the success of any petition circulated among the ministers by the opagainst ratification. The result of such a task would be a against ratingation. The mail that recently brought over seventeen thousand favorable replies brought word from only eight hundred and five that they opposed the League, or were not in favor of ratifying the covenant without drastic

I cannot believe that even eight hundred and five ministers in the United States would object and do object to a righteous peace among the nations of the earth. No true minister would favor an unrighteous peace. It may be that they had objections to this particular League, and that they felt that in this covenant of nations sacred rights that should be protected by the people of the United States were being conceded to the nations of Europe. It is inconceivable that any minister or Christian would oppose a righteous peace which would usher in "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace among men."

The mission of a preacher should be to inculcate peace and to encourage all to "follow after peace with all men." The mind of the Spirit of Christ is peace. He taught his subjects not to fight, but to live peaceably with all men. Christians should inculcate, pray for, and work for peace with all the vigor and ability that they can command. Ministers, in their opposition to the League covenant framed in Paris, should be careful to say nothing and to do nothing that will make the impression that they are opposed to universal peace on the earth. I sometimes fear that some of our scribes have not been as careful as they should have been along this line. In the days of Christ the whole multitude of disciples rejoiced and praised God with a loud voice for all the mighty works that they had seen, saying: "Blessed Is the King that cometh in the name of the Lord: peace in heaven, and glory in the highest." (Luke 19: 38.)

When the divine philanthropy has accomplished its purposes and the mission of Christ is fulfilled on earth, of the nations it is prophesied: "They shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning hooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more." (Isa. 2; 4,)

The Christian Work continues, as quoted by the Literary

They have for years been reading their New Testament and studying the life of Christ. For generations they have been repeating: "God has made of one blood every nation of men to dwell on all the face of the earth, having determined their appointed seasons, and the bounds of their habitation." They have been leading their flocks to a consideration of the Golden Rule. They have cried aloud and spared not those whose purpose in life is one of domination and not service. The Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man have been their constant themes. Preachers can do no less than they are doing for the beginning of this League. They feel that it enters the kingdom of religion and that the idea of a League, a world brotherhood of love, stands at the center of the teaching of their Master.

With joy they hall the coming day when the League, infused by the spirit of Christ, will be a living reality. They look forward to the new foundations built upon justice. They are sick of the unsound foundations of the past. They hope for the full cooperation of the nations in all matters of great and common concern. They hope that the League Council will soon get busy on the question of armaments. They are sick of armed peace, sick of the abominable record made by compulsory military service, sick of nations treating each other as if they are crooks to be forever armed against, sick of big nations being parasites on the back of little nations, sick of greed, sick of hate, sick of the whole philosophy out of which came the fires of hell in 1914.

It is a fact, however, that, in spite of all the influence of the ministers, the Paris League covenant has been temporarily killed by the Senate. Whether this particular League covenant is ever revived or not remains to be seen. It seems that with eighty of the Senators for a peace treaty and a League of Nations, when it only takes sixty-four to ratify, a compromise should be reached that will be satisfactory to all. But whether this treaty is ratified or not, ministers and all other Christians should continue to work and pray for and inculcate peace among the nations of the earth.

One great hindrance to our missionary efforts is that Christians seem to imagine that there are foreigners with God. The Bible makes no distinction between home and foreign missions. God knows of no racial distinctions. Christ did not come to bring peace simply to America, but to all nations of the world. The great commission commands: "Go, and teach all nations." In Christ Jesus there shall be neither Jew nor Greek, neither male nor female, but all are to be one in hlm. Christ "made of one every nation of men to dwell on all the face of the earth." But as little as has been said about it, racial distinctions and prejudices have greatly retarded and hindered the efforts that have been made for peace among all men. We find people who are not willing to preach the gospel to the negro, but who stop to argue with the command of Jesus Christ when he says "teach all nations."

It is the work of Christianity to uproot narrowness, self-ishness, and bigotry. The Spirit of Christ in no way encourages one to believe that he is holier than another who does the will of the Lord. Christians should labor to bring about the brotherhood of all who fear God and keep his commandments, regardless of nation or race. Instead of being discouraged over the failure of the League covenant, let us continue to teach the truth as it is in Christ Jesus, remembering that while God's purposes mature slowly, they will yet triumph and bring complete victory.

Meeting of the Vinewood Avenue Congregation, Detroit, Mich.

BY E. A. E.

Vinewood is a compactly settled avenue of Detroit, not a vine-clad suburb or a village surrounded by vineyards. It runs north and south one block west of Grand Bouleyard, one of the most beautiful streets in the city.

This meeting began on the first Lord's day in November and continued three weeks. One was baptized in faith and penitence.

The house in which this congregation meets for work and worship is unpretentious, but presents a pleasant appearance; it is neat, comfortable, and with all its apartments well adapted to the present needs of the church. The auditorium is easy and pleasant for speaking. The church itself is a city set upon a hill and the salt of the surrounding community, being one of the most earnest and most zealous ones it has been my pleasure to work with for a long time. I speak advisedly, this is a lovely congregation-that is, the members seem to "let love of the brethren continue," to "let love be without hypocrisy," and "In love [to] be tenderly affectioned one to another." I heard no criticisms of the preacher and his family, no criticisms of one another, no faultfinding, no bickering, and no cruel denunciations; but, on the other hand, I observed a general flow of peace and good will. I do not mean to say there are no differences of opinions among these good people, but they were held as private property for the sake of unity and peace. I pray that no root of bitterness may ever spring up to trouble them and thereby the many be defiled. With these encouraging features, the most worthy of all is that these people delight in studying and hearing preached the plain, simple, but all-powerful truth-"the gospel of peace," the power of God to save. At least, this was the delightful impression made upon me and the happy side of the congregation presented to me.

Whatever growth this church had made in these graces and virtues theretofore, the members have continued to make admirable progress in them under the teaching and example of our beloved brother, J. W. Shepherd, for the last five years. Brother Shepherd is a man of experience and wisdom, faith and love, and in kindness and forbearance, gentleness and firmness, he preaches the gospel of Christ in its simplicity and power. Much of the present happy condition of the church is due to plain, earnest, sympathetic, and faithful preaching and work of Brother Shepherd. He and his good wife and family are held in high esteem by the congregation. It is the unanimous voice of the congregation that they are "good-living" people, that they have the courage of their convictions and practice what they preach. During the most trying and grievous time of the world war they pursued their even and straightforward way in the Christian life in the love of the church and the great respect of the world about them, notwithstanding the clashing elements about them. But I am telling our readers nothing new. All know the good work of Brother Shepherd in Tennessee and adjoining States, his faithful work for many years on this paper, his high sense of justice in moderating many discussions, and his pure and righteous life. It was a great pleasure to be in his hospitable home, graced by the loving service of his faithful wife, and to work with this congregation so loyal to the truth.

All other congregations of the church of Christ in Detroit were well represented at different times during this meeting. The following preachers attended as they had opportunity and helped in the work by reading the Scriptures and leading the prayers: Brethren W. D. Campbell, preacher, of Hamilton Avenue congregation; Claude F. Witty, preacher, of Warren Avenue congregation; C. B. Clifton, preacher, of Cameron congregation; E. G. Rockliff, preacher, of Fairview; Fred Cowin, preacher, of Plumb Street congregation; Field Fleming, of Cameron Avenue congregation; and L. B. McGary, of Plumb Street congregation. I met Brother C. S. Black at Hamilton Avenue on a Sunday morning; but, working at night and preaching himself usually at some place on Sunday morning, he could not attend the meetings at Vinewood. All these are pleasant and encouraging brethren. So many preachers of the gospel pure and powerful-fellow soldiers-presenting an unbroken phalanx against the indifference and wickedness of the city should be felt as a power for godliness; so many congregations at peace with one another should each soon plant another; and thus the word of God should increase and the disciples multiply abundantly.

Just as I was leaving, Brother D. Harry Jackson, of Toronto, Ontario, Canada, was expected to begin a meeting with Brother Rockliff, of Fairview congregation. Brother Rockliff is a firm and faithful man, and, with Brother Jackson's help, the church should enjoy a successful meeting. With the hearty cooperation of the other congregations, much good should be done.

Brother Goodpasture Comes With Us.

BY J. C. M'Q.

On account of the growing influence and increasing usefulness of the Gospel Advocate, It becomes necessary to increase our force of workers. Definite arrangements have been made with Brother B. C. Goodpasture, one of our most promising young preachers, to become circulation manager of the Gospel Advocate, beginning next January. He will devote considerable time in the field, preaching and laboring among the churches, and any encouragement given him will be greatly appreciated by the entire force of the Advocate.

Brother Goodpasture is held in very high esteem by the entire church of Shelbyville, Tenn., where he is now laboring. He comes to the Advocate with the intention of making journalism his life work. He feels that in journalism his field of usefulness will be much broader and that he can accomplish much greater good for the Master than by simply confining his efforts to preaching. He will write regularly for the Gospel Advocate and will devise ways and means of increasing its usefulness. He will spend some of his time in the office, where he hopes to see all of his friends, and will appreciate any suggestions that they may have to offer him as to the best way of increasing the circulation, usefulness, and influence of this journal.

I have been with the Advocate for over a third of a century, and during all of the years that have passed I have never known the general feeling to be more in favor of the paper than at the present time. We are hearing continually words of approval, and very seldom are we receiving adverse criticism. We want our friends and workers to understand that we appreciate their criticism whether favorable or unfavorable, believing that sometimes we may profit more by adverse criticism than by words of approval. The management of the Advocate proposes to encourage Brother Goodpasture in every scriptural way possible. Its purpose is to develop him into a first-class journalist, one who will be capable of managing the paper and of bringing the most good out of it. We bespeak for him the same kind consideration from all our subscribers that has been accorded us.

The management feels that the talent of our young preachers should be developed. We want to connect with us young preachers who are interested in the work of saving souls and who realize that there is no greater or better work possible to man than the work of sowing the seed of the kingdom among men. If we can encourage and develop our young preachers to use the press in this great work, we feel that we should leave nothing undone to do so. We want all of our young preachers to knew that the Gospel Advocate is not against any young minister who loves the truth, who is making sacrifices for it, and who is using his best manhood in order to advance the religion of Jesus Christ.

Every true preacher is doing the greatest work with the greatest and purest motives and will ultimately reach the greatest success that comes to men. All those who have been associated with the Advocate in the past are expected to continue to do their work, and all hope to do their work in a better and more efficient manner than in the past. While those who have been laboring for years to advance the cause of Christ have no desire or intention of decreasing their efforts, they realize that of necessity they may be useful and helpful in developing the best that is in our young preachers. As the years come and go, and as we see our friends, that have stood by us in the years that are gone, slipping away, we realize that it cannot be very long until the work that is being done now by the old must be done by the young. The policy that would neglect and not encourage our young preachers is sulcidal and means death to the cause that we love. Those who love Christ and who are following after him are not willing and will not cease to work for the Master until they can no longer be effectively active. However, profiting by the experience of others, they realize the necessity of helping and developing the young so that the great work of winning souls to Christ may continue until Christ's mediatorial reign as ended and Christ has called his saints home.

"Pulpit Turned Into a Soap Box."

BY E. A. E.

Under this heading the following article appeared recently in one of the daily papers of Detroit, Mich.:

KANSAS CITY DIVINE TELLS PASTORS DOCTRINE OF WAR HATE BROUGHT CHURCH DISREPUTE, Leather-lunged, intemperate proclamation of the "gospel of hate" during the war brought the pulpit into contempt of hate" during the war brought the pulpit into contempt and caused the preacher and preaching to lose ground, Dr. George H. Combs, of Kansas City, Mo., the distinguished author-preacher of the Disciples denomination, told the Detroit Pastors' Union at its monthly meeting this morning at the Y. M. C. A.

"In the name of patriotism the pulpit was converted into a soap box, and we are now paying the penalty for it," he added.

he added.

Dr. Combs intimated that the trouble with much of our preaching was that the preacher himself failed to be the incarnation of the truth he proclaimed.

It is not enough for the preacher to proclaim the truth:

he must be it," Dr. Combs declared.

"The wages of the barber, the baker, and the candlestick maker have doubled during and since the war. Is there a preacher here whose salary has been doubled? Does not that show what the public thinks of us? "The aim of preaching should be the making of a man, not the saving of a wreck," Dr. Combs continued.

We should magnify our calling, not apologize for it, as so many preachers seem inclined to do.

"The man who preaches only doubts and perhapses isn't a preacher; he's a peddler. The American pulpit must recover its lost note of positiveness and authority before it can recover its lost prestige."

This shows what Brother Combs thinks of the preaching of many preachers during the war. This is one of the greatest evils which has befallen the church in many generations. As has been said before, instead of preachers remaining with the church, preaching peace and good will and love, encouraging and comforting the grieved and broken-hearted, and teaching all Christians to pray for their rulers and to strive to live the tranquil and quiet life in all godifness and gravity, which God commands them to live, very many preachers engaged in preaching this gospel of hate."

Not long since a life long teacher of widespread reputation and an ex-Senator said to me that he was looking for a general and great revival of religion. I replied: "Not yet, Professor; something else must take place first." "What is that?" he asked. "A conversion of the preachers," I replied. "The preachers must learn to preach 'Christ, and him crucified,' 'the gospel of peace,' the gospel of love and Christianity, before there can be any great revival of pure and undefiled religion among the churches and people generally."

But one encouraging sign is, there is a cry from the churches generally for gospel preaching and the practice of Christianity.

Brother Combs correctly draws the contrast between the increased support of all other workers and the sad lack of such an increase of the support of the gospel preacher. The true and faithful preacher will continue to preach as best he can, support or no support; but were unto the churches that do not do their duty in liberally supporting him!

These declarations of Brother Combs are given to show what others think of preaching in general for the last four or five years.

The Women Preachers Organize.

On November 21, in St. Louis, there was organized the International Association of Woman Preachers. The purpose as stated in the constitution of the new organization is "to promote fellowship among women preaching the gospel of Jesus Christ, to secure equal ecclesiastical rights for women, and to encourage capable and consecrated young women to take up the work of the ministry."

In their Declaration of Principles these preacher women declared themselves as standing for: The Holy Scriptures as the revelation of God to man and the ground of faith in Jesus Christ as Savior; a full presentation in teaching and preaching of both individual safvation and social righteonsness; a missionary program that shall comprehend the needs of the whole man throughout the whole world; a genuine democracy that shall secure equality of opportunity for all, regardless of property, caste, race, or sex.

The organization is made international to include the many evangelists in mission fields. It is interdenominational nine denominations being represented in the group that met at St. Louis to organize.

The officers elected were: President, Miss M. Madeline Southard, Winfield, Kan.; Vice President, Mrs. Etta Sadler Shaw, Grand Rapids, Mich.; General Secretary, Mrs. Mary Kuhl, Champaign, Ill.; Recording Secretary, Miss Lida Herrick, Lincoln, Neb.; Treasurer, Mrs. L. R. Kroft, Indianapolis, Ind.; Auditor, Mrs. Mary Sibbitt, Wichita, Kan.

I am invited to make such comment on the above as I like. I prefer to let the New Testament comment: "Let the women keep silence in the churches: for it is not permitted unto them to speak; but let them be in subjection, as also saith the law." (1 Cor. 14: 24.) "Let a woman learn in quietness with all subjection. But I permit not a woman to teach, nor to have dominion over a man, but to be in quietness. For Adam was first formed, then Eve." (1 Tim. 2: 11-13.)

Commendation of "The Model Church."

BY G. DALLAS SMITH.

Through the kindness of the author I have been privlleged to read that splendid little book, "The Model Church." In my humble judgment, this is the most valuable book that has come from the press in recent years. All the subjects treated in this little volume are vital and living, and Brother Brewer has handled them in a masterly way. He sets a high standard for the church; but it is, in the main at least, a scriptural standard. If the churches should put into practice the suggestions made in this book, there would be a great forward movement along all lines of Christian activity. I should be pleased to see the books distributed by the thousands among the churches. Especially would I advise every preacher and elder to secure a copy of this book at once and to read it carefully. It can be had from the McQuiddy Printing Company, Nashville, Tenn. Price, single copy, $1; per dozen, $9.

The Preachers' List.

I am correcting the "List of Preachers" for 1920, and would like to hear from preachers and other church officers regarding all changes, etc. Brother Showalter asked me to do the correcting in lieu of Brother Young, who has previously done this work in connection with Brother J. W. Shepherd. Address D. F. Draper, 2709 May Street, Fort Worth, Texas.

Book Notices.

"The Jerusalem Tragedy" will make a handsome gift for Christmas. It is profusely illustrated, is ornamentally bound, and is packed full of good reading. We are selling it at the exceedingly low price of $1.25 per copy, postpaid.

"Outlines of Bible Study," by G. Dallas Smith, should be in every home. This book creates an interest in the study of the Bible in a systematic way. Single copies sell for 50 cents; one dozen copies, prepaid, $5.50; twenty-five copies, not prepaid, $10.

"Uncle Minor's Stories" is a very interesting book for both young and old, and especially is it charming to the children. This book is handsomely bound and is retailing for the very low price of $1.25. It makes a handsome Christmas gift. Let us have your order at once for a copy of this book.

If you want a practical and useful commentary on the New Testament, send us $4 for a set of "Peoples' New Testament," with Notes, by B. W. Johnson. There is a very great demand for this commentary, as it is especially sulted to the busy man. We would be glad to have your order at once.

Do not forget to write us for anything you may need in the way of Bibles and Testaments. Nothing will make a more appropriate or better gift for Christmas than a good Bible. A large-type Bible or a large-type Testament will be appreciated by your mother or any dear friend. Write us for styles and prices, or see advertisement elsewhere in this paper.

"Life and Sermons of Jesse L. Sewell," by David Lipscomb, is not only a good book to teach the Bible, but it is a good book to teach pure English. The book has been read by many people and is almost universally commended. If you are seeking for Bible information; if you want to read good, pure literature, by all means send and get a copy of this book. Price, $1.25, postpaid.

We have coming from our press, which we hope to have ready for distribution in January, a book entitled "Adventism and the Bible." This book will be bound in cloth, will contain about 260 pages, and will retail for $1.25. The book exposes the fallacles of Adventism in a very convincing way and should have a wide circulation. If you are troubled with Adventists or their peculiar views, you should by all means send us your order for this book.

"The Gospel Plan of Salvation" is another good book that our readers should not overlook when buying their gifts. When making gifts, it is always well to give something that will be helpful as well as pleasing. No one can read "The Gospel Plan of Salvation" without much benefit from the perusal of its pages. We have not advanced the price of this most excellent book, but are still selling it at the old price of $2 per copy. May we not have your order today?

"The Model Church," by G. C. Brewer, is being given a very warm reception, and the sales to date have been far greater than we had expected. The book treats of live subjects, such as, "What Constitutes a Congregation," "The Qualifications and Duties of Elders," "The Relation of Overseen to the Overseer," "How Elders are Made and Unmade," "Dealing with the Disorderly," and other kindred subjects of much importance. Send us your order to-day. Price, $1, postpald.

If you want to read a good book of sermons, one that is clear, strong, and convincing, send us $1.25 for a copy of "Sweeney's Sermons." I know of no book of sermons that you will read with more interest and profit. Send us your order before the holiday rush. As we are required to work short hours each day on account of the coal famine, of necessity we will find it difficult to get out our orders at this season of the year. We will take it as a favor if you will send in your order for any book that you may need at once.

Death of Sam Webb Elam.

BY A. B. L.

The hearts of Christian people are like lute strings. "When one is touched, the others tremble." Many Christian hearts will respond sympathetically to the sad announcement of a death in Brother E. A. Elam's family, Sam Webb, one of his younger boys, died suddenly at the Elam home, near Lebanon, Tenn., last Saturday. He was a boy of many fine attainments. In the face of much bodily suffering he cultivated a brave and cheerful disposttion. His eager interest in the welfare of others won for him the friendship of his neighbors and left its indelible stamp upon the hearts of his parents and his brothers and sisters. Had he lived, he would doubtless have grown up Into Christian manhood and proved to be one of our most useful citizens. As the matter stands, he has not lived in vain. It is good to know that he remembered his Creator in the days of his youth, loved and respected the Bible, and was faithful to the good confession of his Savior.

His death reminds us of the solemn truth that God's most faithful children are not exempt from the heaviest trials. Sometimes it appears to me that God deals with them as the teacher in the schoolroom deals with the best pupils when he gives them the hardest problems. This is not to punish them, but it is a mark of confidence. It is because our God knows the strength of his faithful children that he sometimes subjects them to the severest trial.

Brother Elam and his good wife are so well acquainted with the Scriptures that it seems unnecessary to remind them of this great storehouse of perennial comfort, except as a mark of unstinted sympathy, breathing the spirit of a friendship that never dies. Brother Elam himself has carried God's most comforting messages to innumerable homes and knows just where the solace is sweetest. Perhaps in this hour he will discover a deeper meaning in the tender yearning of another father: "I shall go to him, but he shall not return to me." Or it may be that he will apply Paul's healing balm: "But I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not, even as others which have no hope." In any event, there is sunshine behind the cloud. "Weeping may endure for the night, but joy cometh in the morning!"

Sister Evelyn Long's Appreciation.

Sister Evelyn Long, of Milledgeville, Ga., thinks something directly should have been said of our appreciation of the help received for the Milledgeville meeting. I regret that this silpped my mind at the time the report was made on this page. I feel sure, however, that every one who helped has no doubt of our appreciation. But our sister is right in thinking something more definite should have been said. We give our readers her own words of thanks to the donors through this paper:

Kindly permit me to say a few words through the Gospe! Advocate in regard to acknowledging the contributions for the support of the Milledgeville meeting, as Brother S. H. Hall unintentionally overlooked this matter in his report of the Georgia work.

We do not know where to begin to express our thanks to those who responded so generously to our "Macedonian call," but we doubly assure each one that every cent was greatly appreciated, from the largest check to the last nemay

We say with heartfelt gratitude, we will never forget the congregations and individuals who helped to make this meeting possible, and deep in our hearts we feel that those who helped will hear favorable reports from us next summer.

All interested in this work join me in this.

Very gratefully yours, Evenys L. Lose.

A Week's Stay in David Lipscomb College.

Beginning on the last Lord's day in October and closing on the first Lord's day in November, I spent eight of the most enjoyable days of my life. I found the finest-looking and the largest student body that I had ever seen in this great school. All departments seemed to be moving smoothly, and I was delighted to see the splendid work that Is being done,

It would be hard for me to forget the Nashville Bible School, now known as David Lipscomb College. The years I spent there at the feet of the lamented D. Lipscomb meant more to me than tongue can ever tell. He is gone, but his influence still lives. It was so good to see Sister Lipscomb, who stood so nobly by him during his long and useful life and helped greatly in the wonderful work he did. It was so good to see and be with the McCanfesses, the Wards, S. 1. Jones and wife, A. M. Burton and family, and last, but not least, H. Leo Boles, the president of this college, and the other members of the faculty. To say that the week's stay there made me better, by strengthening my determination to press onward and upward in the greatest work of life, is putting it mildly. Then, the happy privilege of being often at the Gospel Advocate office and being with such men as A. B. Lipscomb, J. C. Mc-Quiddy, F. W. Smith, F. B. Srygley, and others, is a thing that means much to any soul. The Lord bless all these faithful souls and this college, with all the other colleges and schools that have as their aim the same great work.

It would not be amiss to state that the college still needs more money to do the needed enlargement to meet the growing demands of those who wish to be educated in this institution. Brother Elam has repeatedly spoken of this. Let it be said, also, that the trustees are giving this work their best attention, and that every dollar that is contributed will be used as intended. I see nothing but the best for the future of this institution, and the trustees and friends of the college are determined that no backward step shall be taken, but that it shall be second to none in the way of a place to which our fathers and mothers may send their sons and daughters for an education that means the best to them.

Alabama.

Brewton, December 9.—I have just closed a week's meeting with the Hoomesville congregation, twenty miles from Brewton. Some were baptized; others were convinced and desired to obey the truth, but were hindered. Here I found some of the very best people that I ever met. They insist on my locating here. Let any one desiring to write me address me at this place.—G. W. Jarrett.

California.

Santa Rosa, November 27.—I have just returned from Los Angeles, where S. H. Hall, of Atlanta, Ga., began a meeting on November 9, to continue about a month. They are having a successful meeting. By this I do not necessarily mean baptisms or additions. Good prayers, good sing-ing, good preaching, good attendance, and good interest always constitute a good meeting. Brother Hall a good meeting. Brother Hall preached one Saturday night at Santa Ana, and he expects to preach at Riverside before leaving Southern California. On his way north he will probably preach at Fresno, Madera, and San Francisco. We expect him to begin a meeting in Santa Rosa, possibly the first Sunday in December. While in this section we hope he will also preach at Forestville and Graton. The Pacific Christian Academy, at Graton, will want him for a few lectures at least. The congregations on this coast are comparatively tions on this coast are comparatively tions on this coast are comparatively few, good gospel preachers are few, and we do not like to allow one to pass by, especially a visiting preacher from the East, without hailing him: "Come over, brother, hold us a nice little meeting, get acquainted, and cheer us up." Los Angeles is the home of G. W. Riggs, who was formerly a Tennessee boy and a Nashville Bible School student. He has lived in Los Angeles about seventeen lived in Los Angeles about seventeen years, and has done a great work there and at other places in Southern California. It was a pleasure and a treat to meet with the Los Angeles church, and especially at the Sunday-school and Lord's-day worship. These services were conducted with a marked degree of order, system, and efficiency. I was especially impressed efficiency. I was especially impressed with the communion service. Not a word was said about who should pre-That was all arranged beforehand. I learned afterwards that they have a system about this. The brother who is to wait on the Lord's table knows beforehand, and he, in turn, selects four other brethren who know beforehand that they are to assist him by passing the emblems to the congregation. They have six elders and middle aged and would the congregation. They have six elders—old, middle-aged, and young. Brother Riggs is one of the elders, which place he has filled for about twelve years. Order, system, efficiency—we must have these to succeed in a business enterprise. Louisiana.

Ellis, December 6.—I am sending a report for the first time in my life, but I certainly have enjoyed reading the Gospel Advocate and the reports of others. I have been trying to preach the glorious gospel of our Lord and Savior a little over two years; have been teaching school also, as the brethren have not seen fit to employ me full time, but am planning giving up the teaching and entering the ministry altogether. I have had a burning desire to do this for years, but have never gone into it altogether; but I have devoted as much spare time as possible and Lord's days to the work. I feel like my home State (Louisiana) is one of the most needy fields that I know of; but if the people here do not feel like supporting home talent, I will go elsewhere and give support to some one else to carry on the Lord's work here. Brother A. K. Ramsey, of Forest Hill, recently held a week's meeting at Maxie, one mile and a half north of here. One noble young man came from the Methodists and obeyed his Lord in baptism.—K. E. Ball.

Missourt.

Kennett, December 4.—I am here giving a brief sketch of the work that is being done at Kennett. During the year 1918 we bought a lot, for which we paid thirteen hundred dollars, and during this year we have erected a neat house of worship on the ground. While we are few in number and poor in this world's goods, yet I feel that there has been some real sacrifice and self-denial in the matter. We now have it completed, except some painting and seats, which we hope to have in the near future. Brother J. W. Dollison has been preaching for us. Brother Dollison is getting old in years, but is still a man of power when it comes to preaching the gospel. Brother James E. Laird, of Campbell, has labored some with us, and to him we owe a great deal of the credit of building up the congregation. Our meeting this summer was conducted by Brother M. S. Mason, of Rogersville. There were twenty additions, of which a good number were youths. It is grand to see the interest that is shown by these young ones. Some of the members have been staying away from the worship, but they have been admonished, and we hope to reclaim them. Brethren or sisters visiting Kennett or passing through will be welcomed at the worship on Lord's day. We also meet on Wednesday night for prayer and Bible study. Our building is located three blocks southeast of the Square, on Third and Slicer Streets.—Mrs. Carl Green.

The Abuse of the Appeal.

BY J. L. HINES.

At the risk of being criticized by a few hundred of the few thousands of "appealers" who appeal through our religious papers and through letters and by personal representatives, I am about to speak. I have waited and waited for somebody to speak out and cause a halt in the everlasting appeal; but it seems that no one will venture upon the task, and so at great peril I venture.

To the critic who stands ready to say, "O, he just doesn't want to help and speaks from a selfish motive," let me say that you are here and now invited to investigate my offerings to the cause and my activities in behalf of the needy. I think I can stand as much investigation along this line as the common run of preachers.

These notes are not intended to cover the whole field of appeals, as it would require far too much space, but are intended to deal with the question of appeals in behalf of the old and broken-down or the sick preachers. However, the remarks might apply to almost any case of need.

This matter of appealing for help for our faithful preachers has, in my judgment, reached a disgraceful point. What shall we say of our boasted Christianity when a faithful preacher and an elder in one of the best churches in the State, and in a city where there are perhaps anywhere from two thousand to four thousand Christians, is advertised to the world as a beggar? If it is necessary to appeal to the whole brotherhood on behalf of this faithful man, Christians of his city should be ashamed.

The trouble, in my judgment, arises from the use of a wrong method in caring for the needy. The constant appeal through the papers and otherwise has had the effect of making the local congregation feel irresponsible for the care of the needy. It is pretty safe to say the churches and the preachers, as a rule, want to do their duty in these matters; and if, instead of so many appeals for help, the churches and preachers were urged to attend to this work, doubtless the needy would be cared for.

In the first place, it is a disgrace to the cause to advertise our faithful preachers as paupers. We should have more respect for their feelings. In the next place, it is neither wise, systematic, nor successful. Who can tell a thousand miles away whom he is helping, and whether the help is deserving or is sufficient to meet the needs? But the church in the preacher's home town knows or can know all about the conditions, and can relieve the needs with less expense and in a more acceptable way by their personal attention.

But what if the church neglects this work? What if the "appeal" goes unheeded? I repeat that if more time and space were devoted to appealing to the churches to do their full duty by the needy, the problem would be solved.

There are some who seem to have a sort of mania for "sending to some-body off," but are slow to contribute to the cause at home. As preachers, we should teach the church that it is the duty of each and every member to contribute to the treasury for the support of the cause, and then insist upon a proper use of the funds, one of which uses is the caring for the needy.

"Hereby perceive we the love of God, because he laid down his life for us; and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren. But whoso hath this world's goods, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels [heart] of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?"

Brethren, I "appeal" to you, let's see to it that no worthy one suffers. Let's divide our bread with them, and not fill the papers with appeals. A church misses its greatest opportunity for service by a failure at this point.

You Do More Work,

You are more ambitious and you get more enjoyment out of everything when your blood is in good condition. Impurities in the blood have a very depressing effect on the system, causing weakness, laziness, nervousness and sickness.

GROVE'S TASTELESS Chill TONIC restores Energy and Vitality by Purifying and Enriching the Blood. When you feel its strengthening, invigorating effect, see how it brings color to the cheeks and how it improves the appetite, you will then appreciate its true tonic value.

GROVE'S TASTELESS Chill TONIC Is not a patent medicine, it is simply IRON and QUININE suspended in Syrup. So pleasant even children like it. The blood needs Quinine to Purify it and IRON to Enrich it. These reliable tonic properties never fail to drive out impurities in the blood.

The Strength-Creating Power of GROVE'S TASTELESS Chill TONIC has made it the favorite tonic in thousands of homes. More than thirty-five years ago, folks would ride a long distance to get GROVE'S TASTELESS Chill TONIC when a member of their family had Malaria or needed a body-building, strength-giving tonic. The formula is just the same today, and you can get it from any drug store. 60c per bottle.

The Modern Dance.

BY J. L. HINES.

"There is a way which seemeth right unto a man; but the end thereof are the ways of death." (Prov. 14: 12.)

God holds the Christian criminally guilty who knows of danger and will not warn others to shun it. Listen to his words of warning found in Ezek. 3: 17-19: "Son of man, I have made thee a watchman unto the house of Israel: therefore hear the words at my mouth and give them warning from me. When I say unto the wicked, Thou shalt surely die; and thou givest him not warning, nor speakest to warn the wicked from his wicked way to save his life; the same wicked man shall die in his iniquity; but his blood will I require at thine hand. Yet if thou warn the wicked, and he turn not from his wickedness. nor from his wicked way, he shall die in his iniquity, but thou hast delivered thy soul." This is God's unchangeable word for both speaker and hearer.

Christianity does not ask you to give up one single elevating, legitimate pleasure. All amusements for the Christian must be elevating. The dance and the card table are demoralizing, their tendency is to evil.

The substance of your church obligation is; Repenting of and forsaking all sin, I accept Jesus as my Redeemer and the Bible as my guide for daily living.

Do you say you see no harm in dancing and cards? God pity your blindness. Have you looked for the harm? If you have and cannot find it, the Bible tells you why. "The god of this world hath blinded the minds of them which believe not, lest the light of the glorious gospel of Christ, who is the image of God, should shine unto them." (2 Cor. 4: 4.)

Many church members are really color-blind to God's danger signals. His danger signals are as discernible as red lights in the dark, but colorblind church members do not see them. To be color-blind naturally is a physical defect, but to be colorblind spiritually is due to neglectto sin. Such people have failed or refused to exercise their senses so as to "discern good and evil." You have lost your spiritual vision and are groping along an uncertain way. "There is a way which seemeth right unto a man."

Yes, you say: "You have no right to interfere with my personal liberty; if I want to dance, I will dance." No doubt you will; but when you are about to start the next game of cards, just ask those who are about to play with you to bow their heads, that you want to ask God to bless the game to

Foley's Honey and Tar

COMPOUND

CLEARS THE THROAT of phlegm and muces, stope that ticking, opens the air passages for easier breathing and coats the rave, inflamed surfaces with a heeling, soothing medicine.

Grateful Father Tells What It Did W. E. Curry 130 Up 6th St., Evanguille, Ind., writes: "I have a little girl 6 years who has a good deal of trouble with crosp. I have used Foley's Honey and Tar Compound, giving it to bet according to directions, and obtaining instant relief for her. My wif and I use it whenever bothered with a had cold; cough, and I will say that it is the best cemedy for a had cold, cough, throat trouble or crow that I ever saw."

Parents who use Foley's Hon and Tar know it is cafe and no barm will come even if an overdose should be given by accident. It tastes good and children like it. It won't upset the delicate stomachs of young children, delicate persons or elderly people.

your hearts. Yes, my friends, you may smile, but dancing and card playing is a waste of God-given time, and listen to what God's word says about your liberty: "Take heed lest by any means this liberty of yours become a stumblingblock to the weak."

You ask me to show you the harm in these questionable amusements. I ask you to show me the good coming from them. For every argument you can produce in favor of them, scores can be produced against them. What of the three hundred thousand abandoned women of America, two hundred and twenty-five thousand of which attribute their fall to the dance? Mr. Faulkner, in that startling book, "From the Ballroom to Hell," says that, of two hundred women with whom he had interviews, one hundred and sixty-three of them told him personally that they fell through the dance. Think of this great army of women (depraved through the dance) dancing their way to hell, and you doing all you can to encourage the destructive dance! Selfishness ought to be engraved on the tombstone of those who will not abandon the dance because it has never harmed them.

What a burlesque on our country when professing Christian people will participate in a public "hugging social" set to music! "Hugging" either with or without music breaks down and destroys modesty; and when that is gone, ruin is almost certain to follow. The heathen student justly rebuked his teacher when he told her: "Your Jesus no good. You say he lika you. You foola him. You let many man huga you and lift you all over the floor; by'm by you go to Jesus' church, sometime tell people you like um Jesus. Why you no be close to him lika you do to other mans?"

The various steps of the dance are contrived with "devilish ingenuity" to excite the instincts of sex. That the modern dance is lascivious in its influence and tendency is beyond doubt true. Its chief attraction arises from the close contact or the sexes and the excitement of the sensual feelings. If this were not true, men would be as fond of dancing with men as with women, and women would be as fond of dancing with one another as with men; yet you could arouse no interest in a dance confined to either sex.

The dance is lascivious and should not be countenanced by Christians. We learn slowly. Christians ought to be appealed to to cease attendance at the dance. The dance custom is fraught with evil tendencies.

Father, mother, guardian, friend, keep those young people committed to your charge away from the dance hall. If through your own carelessness they go down to ruin, their blood will be required at your hands. (Ezek. 3: 17-19.) Practices that lead to wrong and imperil virtue in men and women ought not to be encouraged by parents.

No Christian can honorably indulge in or encourage any amusement that may ruin a soul. If you accept Christian favors, you should be true to the Christian faith. He who does less than this is disloyal and brings reproach upon his profession. Therefore, let us look to Christ Jesus, who taught us by precept and example the joy of self-denial for the good of others. Again let me remind you of the words in 1 Cor. 8; 9; "Take heed lest by any means this liberty of yours become a stumblingblock to the weak." When the weak fall through your influence, you sin against Christ.

Sowing and Reaping.

BY J. W. BRATCHER.

"For whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. For he that soweth to his flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting." (Gal. 6: 7, 8.) If a man sows corrupt seed, his harvest will not be as desired, the amount harvested will not be as hoped for, and the seed harvested will not be good-will not be matured. A good harvest depends upon good seed as well as the proper cultivation of the

Not only is this so in temporal things, but in spiritual things as well. Every Christians sows some kind of seed, either good or bad. If the seed be not good, healthy seed, cultivating the soil will make but little difference in the growth and quality of the production. The gospel preached in its purity and simplicity prepares the heart for the reception of the good I seed of the kingdom of God, Faith, repentance, confession, and baptism will bring us to God through Christ, in his name. Disobedience will separate or keep us from him. Those who cause divisions by their preaching, by their acts or words, are sowing corrupt seed, which is condemned. On account of a failure to properly understand God's word we have divisions and subdivisions until churches, so called, are numerous, In John 17: 20 our Savior prayed that his disciples might be one. He prayed not "for these alone, but for all them also that believe in me through their word; that they may all be one, even as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they may also be in us."

To exercise faith in the Lord Jesus Christ and obey his commandments with a pure heart is the evidence of good seed sowing. Obedience is the result of faith in Christ. Adding to our faith the Christian graces, we begin to grow unto the harvest. It is not all for an individual to obey Christ, to become a Christian, a member of his body; but it requires the obedience and faithfulness in him to retain our relation or our fellowship with him. The list of duties enjoined in the New Testament is quite lengthy, but not grievous. things that are pleasant to the Christian seem strange and hard to an individual who is on the outside of the church, or kingdom. Here are some of the things we should not do: "Now the works of the flesh are manifest, which are these; Adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies, envyings, murders, drunkenness, revelings, and such like." Those who do these things "shall not inherit the kingdom of God." But listen: "But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance: against such there is no law. . . . If we live in the Spirit, let us also walk in the Spirit," If we have not the Spirit of Christ, we are none of his. Another thing is, we should "not be desirous of vainglory, provoking one another, envying one another." "This I say then, Walk in the Spirit, and ye shall not fulfill the lusts of the flesh. For the flesh lusteth against the Spirit." As long as you are led by the fleshly desires, you cannot be prompted by the Spirit.

THE MORGAN DRUG CO.,
1521 Atlantic Ave. Brocklyn, New York City

Cheerful Words from Alabama.

BY CARL BARNETTE.

Perhaps some of my friends would like to know of my work during 1919.

I am busily engaged with my little farm and garden at Greenville. Last year I asked for a few dollars to purchase a mule. I have repaid all this money, except ten dollars to W. W. Hankins and Ezella Morton. This money enabled me to do some mission work last year. My crop this year was good and my returns amounted to twelve hundred and ninety dollars. This enabled me to meet my obligations for the present year and to pay four hundred and thirty dollars of debts to parties who had befriended me during the past four years in my sickness and other privations.

On July 17 I began a meeting at Brewer, Miss. The continued rains caused us to close the meeting before it was intended. A brother said there never had been as many people at Brewer, at a political speaking, picnic, or any other gathering, as were there on Sunday night, July 17.

I went to Yarbrough on August 9, where we had a good meeting, with large attendance and the best of attention.

On August 17 I began a meeting at Herbert, Ala., and continued it until August 24, when we were again rained out. The first days of this meeting were very interesting. The Methodists in this community closed their meeting to attend ours. It was said by both the members at Herbert and others that there never had been as large gatherings there before at any of our services. I was told that people in the vicinity who had not attended any religious services for years were present several times. However, this meeting terminated in some very unpleasant things owing to jealousies.

On November 23 I began a meeting at Goodway, Ala. The inclement weather was against us, though the services were well attended. This is a mission point. There are only four members there. It is the only locality I have visited in years that some one did not tell me of the faults of others. They have a union church there, and all the members of each church attended this meeting. Many seemed very much disappointed because I could stay no longer.

I must say that I am thankful for the blessing the Lord has given to me this year. I found a physician, Dr. A. L. Stoble, who has practically cured me. I can work all day, sleep all night, and eat all I can get. This I have not been able to do for ten years, owing to my heart being affeeted from a ruptured artery in the

I most heartily indorse Brother

Talley's article on "The Dearth of Preachers," while Brother Stubblefield's article is not far wrong on the cause of the lack of preachers. Too many places are dominated by the "one-man rule," looking for some one brother to indorse the preachers. Too many places "practice" a young man because they can do no betterand, too, to the embarrassment of the preacher, who goes off into some other avocation. Too many places, as Brother Stubblefield says, do not like the preacher because he cannot give the proper accent in pronouncing Greek and Hebrew words. This is one great trouble. Then jealous brethren try to work each other's downfall that they may rise. I think, too, that there is a tendency toward professionalism.

Brother Iverson Boles, of Atmore, is a man after my heart. He is humble and energetic. His work is only a few days in the month, for he has to resort to some other avocation for a support. It is too bad that he is not kept in the field every day. I do not think that he would sit upon goods boxes during the week and call upon the treasurer on Sundays for his pay, but, like Brother John T. Lewis, would work "while it is day" and be ready when "the night cometh, when no man can work."

With blessings and good will to all.

The Prospect in East Tennessee. BY C. E. HOLT.

In East Tennessee there are few churches that stand for a strict conformity to the apostolic pattern. The denominations are well represented, and some of them are quite active. The majority of churches that stand for undenominational Christianity have all the machinery of modern denominationalism. There are some very strong churches of this type, but they are doing practically nothing in missionary work in that part of Ten-

It is now a propitious time for disciples who stand for the old paths to make a strong and systematic effort to evangelize that section of the old Volunteer State. Brother George W. Farmer, a well-educated and in every other respect a well-qualified man, is located in Cleveland, and is making himself felt among the people of that thriving city. There is now in Cleveland a congregation of about eighty members that stand for New Testament Christianity without the frills and furbelows of human invention. It was my pleasure to assist the little band in a very interesting and successful meeting in November. I am well pleased with the outlook in that part of East Tennessee. With Cleveland as a point from which to radiate, I am sure that a great work can be done in establishing New Testament congregations in that section. I want to do more work in that part of the State in 1920, if the Lord wills

There are large sections in Alabama that are as destitute as East Tennessee or any other State in the Union. There is practically no interest among the churches in Tennessee and Alabama to evangelize those large areas in which we are unknown as to what we really teach and practice.

Employing preachers at from one hundred to one hundred and fifty dollars a year to labor with local congregations that are able and willing to pay such liberal (?) salaries will never get beyond Jerusalem. I presume that it is all right to "locate" a preacher with a local congregation at a living salary (and if he is "lo-cated," he should be well paid), but we should not forget that the commission reads: "Go ye into all the world." Really, it seems to me that the word "go" has come to mean "stay"—that is, stay as long as the "pot boils strong." That means never "go" unless the "good of the cause demands it." Ah, my friends, we are simply making a farce of the great work of evangelizing the world. We are "long on theory," but wonderfully "short on practice."

CHURCH NEWS

Tennessee.

Chattanooga, December 4.—The church of Christ at Soddy has just closed a good meeting of twelve days' duration. Three young persons made the good confession and were baptized. The congregation was worked up to a higher plane of spiritual excellency in Christ. Brother John T. Lewis, of Birmingham, Ala., did the preaching. In him we found a workman worthy of his hire, so much so that the brethren invited him back to hold a meeting for them next year, This is a mission point. I have been preaching for them some for two years. They are the faithful few, poor in this world's goods, but rich in faith.—W. A. McCullough.

Lebanon, December 5.—I have just recently closed my protracted-meeting work for this year, and shall return at once to Cleveland and take up the work with the church there again. Since the first of last February, or since the "flu" epidemic abated, I have been very busy. I have gone straight ahead and have prosecuted my work with all my might, as I believe all will testify who have had any chance to know of the work. The results, in the main, have been very gratifying. I have tried to teach the truth in love, and have succeeded in breaking down much prejudice and making friends for the truth. Now, if I have kept back or covered up any truth to do this, let those where I have labored speak out and say so and let the brotherhood know it. How beautiful it is to be able to declare the whole truth in the love of the truth and make friends instead of enemies to the truth! With reference to the Cleveland work, I will say that while there remains much to be done, yet we rejoice that the results of the work there have been very encouraging. We shall take up this work with renewed vigor, and we shall hope and pray to be able to make still greater headway for the coming year. In addition to the Cleveland work, we are planning to have a number of good meetings held in other parts of East Tennessee next year. If any should be interested in our East Tennessee work, write me at Cleveland, Tenn. I shall be giad to give any information possible about the work in this great gospel field.—George W. Farmer.

Brownsville, December 8.— The church is progressing slowly at this place. Several members have moved in recently and others will move in the first of the year. We are glad to have new members come and help us in the work. I would gladly correspond with any brother or sister that wants to locate in a hustling town of three thousand population. There is a fine opening here for a good horse-shoer and for others. We had Brother W. S. Long with us on August 3 and 4, and he baptized one person. Brother William Etheridge, of Dresden, was with us the fifth Sunday in May and the fourth Sunday in September. Brother Murrell was with us the first Sunday night in October, and Brother W. L. Reeves was with us the fifth Sunday in August. We are not able to engage a regular preacher. We have our new house finished on the outside, and our energies are now being directed to paying off what we owe on a note and getting some new seats. Who will send us a Christmas gift to be applied on the seating fund? We have a fine opportunity before us here, and we are doing some good work in building a house of worship where the pure gospel has been neglected for so long a time. We have done nearly all the financing by just a few giving heavily; however, we have received some help from churches and individuals, which we appreciate. May the Lord lead other churches and individual Christians to help us. While others are making their drives up into the millions, what are you planning to do next year? In the name of Christ, let us do our best for Him who died for us. Let us show our faith by our works.—Walter L. Brummett.

Miami, December 9.—I am now located at this place, working with the Christians here and at Lakton Schoolhouse. There are only a few of the faithful here, but we hope to accomplish a good work and build up a strong church. I preach here in the morning and evening and at Lakton in the afternoon of each Lord's day when the weather will permit.—Lee Sanders.

The Support of the Preacher.

BY W. T. BEASLEY.

I have been reading the Gospel Advocate for more than twenty years and preaching for twenty-three years. As Brethren Stubblefield, Hall, Talley, and others have had something to say on the scarcity of preachers and their support, I should like to say at least a few things.

There is and has always been a scarcity of true gospel preachers-"the harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers are few: " but an overplus of a great per cent of the kind we have at present-following Jesus for "the loaves and fishes," It has been decided already by at least two or three of the writers that the scarcity has been brought about through a lack of support. I believe that God ordained that his ministers should be supported while preaching the word (2 Tim. 4: 2; 1 Cor. 9: 14), but I do not believe that he has ordained that they should be supported while idling away their time-preaching most of the year on Lord's-day morning and at night, assisting in a prayer meeting sometimes on Wednesday or Thursday night, the remainder of their time (save an hour or two per day for reading) spent loafing around town, whittling boxes, telling jokes, or going to the depot to see whom they might know on board the train. Please place your finger on the man who devotes all of his time to reading and preaching. I never met a preaching brother who claims to devote all of his time to the ministry that did not idle away at least a part of his time. Why not work at some honorable occupation during that time? Is it a disgrace for a preacher and his family to work at some honorable occupation and help to bear the burdens of the church? (See Acts 2: 42.)

Brother Talley says (and I was surprised to read what he said about the faithful, sacrificing brethren, both dead and living): "I have little faith or confidence in these self-appointed and self-sent preachers and evangelists. The cause suffers in many ways because of them. Where they go, there is usually a very good crop of strife, and contention follows." Now we have it in "words that have been well weighed." If these statements are true-which, as far as I know, I deny-I would like to ask Brother Talley a few questions. (1) Please tell us, are you a God-appointed preacher or evangelist? (2) If so, please tell us how, when, and where you received such an appointment. (3) Please give us chapter and verse for salary-paid preachers. The most of the present congregations were established by men who labored with their hands. If you demand their names, I will gladly furnish them. But Brother Talley says: "The cause suffers in such hands." Why the change? We need more of that kind of preachers and less of the other. Again, he says: "Where they go, there is usually a very good crop of strife, and contention follows." As far as I know, I deny this accusation in full. This year I have already preached about two hundred discourses, served in twelve meetings, at other times preaching on Saturday night, Sunday, and Sunday night. During this time I was successful in settling four bad church troubles. How many have you settled this year, Brother Talley? If I have caused any strife or contention. I have not heard of it. The congregations can speak out.

I preach about as much as any man. I have a wife and eight children. I owe no man anything but love. I have plenty of corn, hay, and such like, raised on the farm, and some to sell. I have only one finger and thumb on my right hand. I hire but little; I and my family work. As Paul has said: "What is my reward then? Verily that, when I preach the gospel, I may make the gospel of Christ without charge, that I abuse not my power in the gospel." (1 Cor. 9: 18.) I know of many preachers who are not doing that. When they are paid much, they spend much; when they are paid less, they spend less; and when old age finds them, they have reared in idleness a set of boys that have been or will be a disgrace to the church and humanity and a drawback to our country, and the preacher many times passes away a beggar. Better work with his hands, that he may have plenty and to "give to him that needeth." God has blessed me abundantly at home and abroad, thank Jehovah's name. I am satisfied, except I am fighting for heaven.

World's Greatest Egg Producer

"TWO for ONE" is the marvel of all egg tonicalt is the most remarkable producer of eggs eyer known to the poulity world. "TWO for ONE" is making records every day in egg production that were never before believed possible. Flock owners all over the country are amazed with the results. The most experienced poulity experts say they have never seen the like of it.

"TWO for ONE" is not a mere food. It is an egg tonic in the irruest sense of the term—ascientific preparation in concentrated tablet form—the result of scientific research and experiment. Every factor entering into the matter of egg production was scientifically studied.

As a result you have in "TWO for ONE" atonic that conditions the hen for the utmost in laying capacity—that builds muscle and bone—that simulates active functioning of the hen's reproductive organs—that makes the largard lay and increases the production of active layers. A tonic that gets more eggs for you winter and summer than you ever thought possible.

Beautiful Pictures.

BY T. W. PHILLIPS.

Beautiful pictures are admired by every one; while none of us appreciate an ugly one. But the very words we speak are "pictures" painted on the canvas of the walls of memory, and in the vision of memory we view these pictures all along the walk of life. The wise man said: "A word flily spoken is like apples of gold in pictures of silver," (Prov. 25: 11) Your words and mine are either "fitly spoken" or else unfittly spoken every time we speak; and each set of words forms a picture upon the canvas as it hangs in somebody's "heart parlor." When we write a word on the paper (in a letter to a friend or on the manuscript for the newspaper), we have a chance to erase and correct it, and no one but ourselves and God may ever see the "picture;" but if the words are spoken to some one, our efforts are in vain when we dare erase them-in vain because no human eraser can take from the pages of memory. True enough, when we portray a word picture of which we really become ashamed and over which we become penitent, God and good men will allow the use of the "eraser," yet memory's keen eye will behold the picture, and sighs of regret will whisper her "woes" to us as we run away from memory's gallery. "A soft answer turneth away wrath: but grievous words stir up anger."

Now let's you and me turn back a moment. Look at the words of a recent answer and behold the picture. "Pictures talk." But tell me, what de you see? Is wrath turned away, or is anger stirred up? Our words did it. "By long forbearing is a prince persuaded, and a soft tongue breaketh the bone." "By their fruits ye shall know them" is a true doctrine; and "By your words ye shall be judged " is just as true. Sound speech, words seasoned with grace, is "words that cannot be condemned." Then, was my words and yours seasoned with soundness and grace when we spoke unkindly of and to each other? If you should not steal, do I steal? Should I allow those things in myself for which-I condemn you? If I do you wrong in word or act, and in turn you do me the same way, have you taken vengeance into your own hands? Can the pot say justly to the kettle, "You are black," when, indeed, the pot is Itself as black as the kettle? "Lie not one against another" is a message from God. If I should not lie on you, have you fied on me?

Brethren, listen: "But if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses." (Matt. 6: 15.) Now, to one and all I

I beg to say that in my bumble heart I have forgiveness for one and all who have sinned against me in any way, and I beg you to forgive me for all in whatsoever way I have sinned against you. Will you grant it? "Take heed to yourselves: If thy brother trespass against thee, rebuke him; and if he repent, forgive him." "Let all litterness, and wrath, and anger, and clamor, and evil speaking, be put away from you; with all malice; and be ye kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake bath forgiven you." (Eph. 4: 31, 32) 1 take this step as a preacher, hoping that all the preachers and brethren in the whole brotherhood will follow sult as justice, mercy, and love may demand all over the land. In conclusion. I extend the glad hand of love to one and all, with wishes of much happiness and growth in grace in all the years to come, and a home at last in heaven with all the ransomed. May the Gospel Advocate live long to carry good news to men, and may the Lord of all grace bless, prosper, and protect the editors, writers, and readers against the evil day, and bless all the faithful at last, with an abundant entrance into that everlasting home.

Fort Worth, 1420 Lipscomb Street, December 1.—The work at Southside-Central Church is getting better gradually. These good people have been handicapped severely in the past, but are now overcoming their obstacles and moving out now in a truly cies and moving out now in a truly encouraging style. There was one addition to the local congregation yesterday. We have six services each week, all told, and the officials say we are doing well. I am busy, and I am trying to get others to get busy. I am doing my best.—Tice Elkins.

Buckholts, Route 3, December 2.— I live a secluded life, but I am thankful for such companions as Brethren Larimore, Lipscomb. McQuiddy, Kurfees, Elam, and the host of others I become better acquainted with from week to week in the Gospel Advocate. What I have read of "The Model Church" is what we need; it is fine. Brethren, we have a small, struggling congregation here, and we would like well to induce some Christian fami-lies to come to our country. There well to induce some charge. There lies to come to our country. There has to come to our country. My falies to come to our country. There are small homes one can buy. My father has a tract of four hundred and eighty acres which he wants to sell, as he is very old, and we would be so glad if some Christian families would buy it to make homes of. It is ideal for that, and within two miles of the tabernacle where we meet. The tabernacle is paid for. We need a strong leader. We have our meetings every year, with some converts, but the regular attendants are the same. They are faithful. God saw fit to take our dear old leader and church founder away from us two church founder away from us two years ago. His last exhortation to us was to be faithful. An Excellent Motto.

Two days before his forty-seventh birthday, the last night before his death, in the last entry Arnold of Rugby ever made in his journal, were these words: "Above all, let me mind my own personal work-to keep myself pure and zealous and believinglaboring to do God's will, yet not anxious that it should be done by me rather than by others, if God disapproves of my doing it."-Exchange.

'Since using 'TWO for ONE' I get 250 to 300 eggs a day instead of 25 or 30" writes J. C. Hoff of Indiana.

Peloubet's Is the World's Greatest Commentary on the International Uniform Sunday-School Lessons

It has been issued for forty-six years with ever-increasing popularity and usefulness, which fact alone is a wonderful argument for its value and helpfulness. Rich in material, comprehensive in its scope, practical in its treatment. Every superintendent, teacher, and scholar will find in it his own personal requirements. Marion Lawrance voices the sentiments of thousands when he says:

"How this standard commentary has been able to maintain itself during all these years, growing annually stronger and richer, is a marvel to the Sunday-school world. Personally, I do not see how any Sunday-school teacher can hope to do his best without the rich, full helps found in these NOTES,"

Good Books Make the Best Gifts

Below we offer a list of books on vital topics that should be of interest to every preacher, Sunday-school teacher, and Bible lover. Have you a friend out of the church whom you are trying hard to reach and save? Send him one of these books. If he is "almost persuaded," it ay clinch the argument for you. If he is lukewarm, it may stir him to action. In any event, it will be appreciated.

The list includes most excellent books, printed and bound in first-class style. Postpaid prices are quoted. We have recently printed an edition of "Life of Elder John Smith," "Christian System," and "The Evidences of Christianity." We believe that a book worth publishing deserves to be accurately printed and neatly and substantially bound.

BETTER THAN WHISKEY FOR COLDS AND FLU

New Elixir, Called Aspironal, Medicated With Latest Scientific Remedies, Used and Endorsed by European and American Army Surgeons to Cut Short a Cold and Prevent Complications.

Every Druggist in U. S. Instructed to Refund Price While You Wait at Counter If Relief Does Not Come Within Two Minutes.

Delightful Taste, Immediate Relief, Quick Warm-Up.

The sensation of the year in the drug trade is Aspironal, the two-minute cold and cough reliever, authoritatively guaranteed by the laboratories; tested, approved and most enthusiastically endorsed by the highest authorities, and proclaimed by the common people as ten times as quick and effective as whiskey, rock and rye, or any other cold and cough romedy they have ever tried.

All drug stores are now supplied with the wonderful new clixir, so all you have to do to get rid of that cold is to step into the nearest drug store, hand the clerk half a dollar for a bottle of Aspironal and tell him to serve you two teaspoonfuls with four teaspoonfuls of water in a glass. With your watch in your hand, take the drink at one swallow and call for your money back in two minutes if you cannot feel your cold fading away like a dream within the time limit. Don't be bashful, for all druggists invite you and expect you to try it. Everybody's doing it.

When your cold or cough is relieved, take the remainder of the bottle home to your wife and babies, for Aspironal is by far the safest and most effective, the easiest to take and the most agreeable cold and cough remedy for infants and children.—Adv.)

Vengeance.

BY J. J. VANHOUTIN.

God is a God of justice and mercy, and no man is capable to administer vengeance with mercy; hence, they are deprived of the legal right to take vengeance. It appears like Paul was waiting, but ready and willing to take part in the work at the proper time, when he said: "And having In a readiness to revenge all disobedience, when your obedience is fulfilled." (2 Cor. 10: 6.) God has taken to himself the right to administer justice in judgment and vengeance, Solomon gave one reason for so much evil when he said: "Because sentence against an evil work is not executed speedily. therefore the heart of the sons of men is fully set in them to do evil." (Eccles. 8: 11.) If every man who commits a crime knew beforehand that vengeance would be meted out to him as soon as the crime was committed, men would be rather slow about it. Sometimes a person does not feel like waiting until the "day of vengeance" and proceeds at once, and comes out second best. Vengeance is usually supposed to be taken on account of injury to a person or to his character. Paul says: "Recompense to no man evil for evil." Again, in the same chapter, he says: "Dearly beloved, avenge not yourselves, but rather give place unto wrath: for it is written, Vengeance is mine; I will repay, saith the Lord." (Rom, 12: 19.) A man may be greatly injured in body or character, but he must not punish by physical force in return; the Lord will see to that; but just how it will be done and the "repay" is all left to the Lord to settle. Socrates explained this better than I can. He said: "He who fulfills his duty here on earth with constancy, despite all difficulties, and bears all adversities with a resignation to a divine will, must enjoy the reward of his virtues hereafter." John said: "I saw under the altar the souls of them that were slain for the word of God, and for the testimony which they held: and they cried with a loud voice, saying, How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth?" (Rev. 6: 9, 10.) Here we have an account of persons whose bodies had been killed, and their souls yet existed, and, being conscious, they desired vengeance on those who had committed the murder. This also shows that their request would be granted at the proper time. The idea of revenge for injury to person or insult or injury to character was prophested of by Enoch, the seventh man this side of Adam. So the doctrine existed from the early dawn of man's existence and was reiterated and established beyond doubt by the inspired apostles. Yes, and it is reasonable to say, Noah must have brought this prophecy of Enoch with him: "Behold, the Lord cometh with ten thousands of his saints, to execute judgment upon all, and to convince all that are ungodly among them of all their ungodly deeds which they have ungodly committed, and of all their hard speeches which ungodly sinners have spoken against hlm." (Jude 15.) in the twenty-fifth chapter of Matthew, Jesus taught that whatever good or bad deed any man dld toward the least of his brethren, the same was done toward him. That being true, church rulers should be very careful how they prevent even the least of Christ's preachers from preaching in their houses, lest they turn Jesus Christ out, "That no man go beyond and defraud his brother in any matter: because that the Lord is the avenger of all such." (1 Thess. 4: 6.) Reader, tell me, shall I write again?

Pennsylvania Man Thankful

Mr. C. E. Brooks, Marshall, Mich.

Dear Sir — Perhaps if will interest you to know that I have been ruptured six years and have always had trouble with it ill I got your Appliance. It is very easy to wear, fits ocat and sing, and is not in the way at any time, day or night. In fact, at times I did not know I had it on; it just adapted itself to the shape of the body and seemed to be a part of the body, as it clume to the spot, no matter what position I was in.

It would be a veritable God-send to the unfortunate who suffer from rupture if all could procure the Brooks Empure Appliance and wear it. They would certainly never regret it.

My rupture is now all healed up and nothing over the good word for your Appliance, and also the homorable way in which you deal with ruptured people. It is a pleasure to recommend a good thing among your friends or strangers. I am, Yours very sincerely.

Ten Reasons Why You Should Send for Brooks Rupture Appliance

- I. It is absolutely the only Appliance of the kind on the market today, and in it are embedied the principles that in-ventors have sought after for years.
- 2. The Appliance for retaining the rapture cannot be thrown out of position.
- 3. Being an air cushion of soft rubber it clings closely to the body, yot never blusters or causes irritation.

 4. Unlike the ordinary so-called pads, used in other trusses. It is not cumbersione or ungainly.
- 5. It is small, soft and pliable, and positively cannot be detected through the ciothing.
- The soft, pliable bands holding the Appliance do not give one the unpleasant sensation of wearing a harness.
- 7. There is nothing about it to get foul, and when it becomes solled it can be washed without injuring it in the least 8. There are no metal springs in the Applicace to torture one by cutting and bruising the flesh.
- All of the material of which the Appliances are made is of the very best that money can buy, making it a durable and safe Appliance to wear.
- 10. Our reputation for honesty and fair dealing is so thoroughly established by an experience of over thirty years of dealing with the public, and our prices are so reasonable, our terms so fair, that there certainly should be no hesitancy is sending free coupon today.

TOHMULOT SH

"Peace, Be Still"

BY CHARLES R. BREWER.

Ï.

Calm evening steals across the lake, And bird notes sound sleep-tremulous, While home their nets the fishers take, And shadows lengthen, tenebrous.

By silent oars a boat slips out, And glides across the waters deep; No song nor sailor's lusty shout— The tired Master rests in sleep.

But see! Dark clouds grow in the sky, And sudden winds sweep o'er the lake, And giant waves roll mountain high; The anxious sailors cower and quake.

"Wake, Master, save!" they cry in fear;
"The mighty waves our vessel filt."
He speaks, the winds and billows hear
And heed his mandate; "Peace, be still."

A calm ensues on Galilee—
While wondering faith supplants their fear—
A mirrored moon sinks in the sea,
And one by one the stars appear.

H.

So 'mid the cannon's flame and roar,
Where death and anguish never cease,
Like heavenly music comes once more
The voice of Christ, saying: "Peace, peace."

Thus to the sin-racked soul of man
Can Christ from sorrow bring surcease;
And in the gospel's gracious plan,
May all who mourn in Him find peace.

Though all by Satan are defiled.

Submerged in sin's increasing flood.

Our souls may yet be reconciled,

And cleansed in Christ's abluent blood.

When troubles darken life with woe,
And hearts would welcome death's release,
Still hope may light us by its glow,
For Jesus whispers: "Peace, Peace."

Selected Texts From Jesus' Sayings

"A New Commandment I Give Unto You."

Jesus said to his disciples: "A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another; even as I have loved you, that ye also love one another." (John 13; 34.)

In my judgment, our blessed Lord, during his personal ministry, taught nothing which, if well learned and implicitly obeyed, would bring more happiness to the human family and greater power to his church than would his new commandment." The essence of this commandment is love-and how great a love! "Even as I have loved you, that ye also love one another." Not until we can comprehend the wonderful love that Jesus had for his disciples can we understand the love that he here commands them to have for one another. It is a love that will move a man to "lay down his life for his friends;" and "greater love hath no man than this." Since, then, there is no greater love than that which is here taught, whatever attributes belong to real love, belong to that which is here commanded. Let us, therefore, that we may better understand the love under consideration, note some of the attributes of the love that God approves. We shall find them wonderful, so wonderful that the possession of them by the children of God would revolutionize both the world and the church. A few of these attributes of love as given by our Father himself follow: "Love worketh no lil to his neighbor," (Rom, 13: 10.) "If because of meat thy brother is grieved, thou walkest no longer in love. . Wherefore, if meat causeth my brother to stumble, I will eat no flesh for evermore, that I cause not my brother to stumble," (Rom. 14: 15; 1 Cor. 8: 13.) "Love suffereth long, and is kind; love envieth not; love vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up, doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not its own, is not provoked, taketh not account of evil; rejoiceth not in unrighteousness, but rejoiceth with the truth; beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things. Love never faileth." (1 Cor, 13; 4-8.) Are not these attributes wonderful? If found in us, would not our influence be much greater. would not this old world be much happier, and would not the church be much more powerful? Did I make it too strong when I said they would "revolutionize both the world and the church?" Surely not. How, then, may we have these qualities in us? The answer is simple: since they are in love, when love dwells in us, then will these qualities also dwell in us. In other words, just to the extent that we obey Christ's "new commandment" these attributes of love will be ours.

Not so long ago I read a book that I valued very highly because of one special lesson that it emphasized-namely: that the true teacher of God's word must not only teach all that God has taught, but must exalt most that which God has most exalted. With this principle as our guide, what place should Christ's "new commandment" have in our teaching and in our hearts? Note from what follows the exalted place that our Father has given it in his Book; "Above all things being fervent in your love among yourselves." (1 Pet, 4: 8.) "Above all these things put on love, which is the bond of perfectness." (Col. 3: 14.) "But now abideth faith, hope, love, these three; and the preatest of these is love." (1 Cor. 13: 13.) "If I speak with the tongues of men and of angels, but have not love, I am become sounding brass, or a clanging cymbal. And if I have the gift of prophecy, and know all mysteries, and all knowledge; and if I have all falth, so as to remove mountains, but have not love, I am nothing. And if I bestow all my goods to feed the poor, and if I give my body to be burned, but have not love, it profiteth me nothing." (1 Cor. 13; 1-3.)

I know of no other lesson that God has exalted so much as this lesson of love. I suggest, therefore, that those who teach give this "new commandment" the place in their teaching that our Father has given it in his Book, and that those who hear receive it into "good and honest hearts," till we can truly sing:

"Blest be the tle that binds Our hearts in Christian love."

J. E. THORNBERRY.

"Search the Scriptures." (John 5: 39.)

This injunction came from the lips of our Savior during his sojourn on earth. Jesus knew the importance of an understanding of the word of God, and hence gave us this commandment.

If each one of us should ask all his acquaintances how much he had read the Bible, I dare say we would be surprised to learn how few read the Scriptures and how little the great masses of the people know about Christ's teaching and the Bible;

In general I make the following statement, in no way boasting, but only as a matter of fact to show what can be done if one is so inclined—namely: During the past twenty years I have read the Old Testament Scriptures, from Genesis to Malachi, six times, besides a good deal of miscellaneous reading of the same. During the same time I have read the New Testament through one hundred and seventy times. I have also read the unauthenticated part of the Old Testament, the Apocrypha, three times. I am still reading and expect to continue so doing until my dying day.

If I were called upon to address a public assembly a moral questions, I would advise one and all to read some thing in the Bible each day that they could, if it were only one short chapter. Such a habit or duty would keep the fear and admonition of the Lord before us every day.

The Bible, as a whole, touches upon every possible condition and experience of life. That cannot be said of any other book that was ever written. That fact alone oughto be sufficient to convince any one that it is the inspir word of God. There is also this advantage and plear in having a general knowledge of the Bible: it monot what church you attend, when the minister selections, you know what he is going to preach about

A good many of my friends who know that I ... the Bible come to me to know if such and such a statement is in the Bible and where it can be found. I am usually able to give them the information that they wish. A short time ago I was passing the door of a friend, who had an open Bible in his hand, and he called to me and asked where he could find, "I know that my Redeemer liveth." I promptly told him that it was in the book of Job, and in a few minutes found the chapter and verse; besides, I was able to make the whole quotation for him.

Some years ago I was dining with a minister friend, and in the course of our conversation he remarked, "when Paul was chained to a soldier." I asked him where he got his information that Paul was ever chained to a soldier. He answered that he got it from the Bible. I said that I would be pleased if he would show it to me. He assured me that he could do so in a very few minutes; but when he turned to the chapter where he expected to find it, he found that he was mistaken. I do not believe there is a single statement of any special note in the Bible that is not more or less familiar to me. I intend to read the Old Testament Scriptures again soon. I was talking to a Jewish lady several months ago, who is about seventy years of age, when I incidentally said something about the parable that Nathan gave to King David about taking Urlah's wife—" David, thou art the man," etc.; and, to my great surprise, she had never read about it and acknowledged that she had read the Old Testament but little, and yet she belonged to the better class of Jews in our city.

in closing this article, let me beg every reader of the Gospel Advocate to read at least one chapter in the Bible every day and then carefully consider his ways. "The ox knoweth his owner, and the ass his master's crib; but Israel doth not know, my people doth not consider." (Isa. 1: 3.) In the same line of thought, see Jer. 2: 32; 8: 7; and Hag. 2: 5: "Now therefore thus saith the Lord of hosts; Consider your ways." That is the great trouble with the masses of the people: they do not consider their ways until death is tapping at the door or its shadow is falling across their pathway.

"But if it Die, it Bringeth Forth Much Fruit."

"And there were certain Greeks among them that came up to worship at the feast: the same came therefore to Philip, which was of Bethsaida of Galilee, and desired him, saying, Sir, we would see Jesus. Philip cometh and telleth Andrew: and again Andrew and Philip tell Jesus. And Jesus answered them, saying, The hour is come, that the Son of man should be glorified. Verily, verily, I say unto you, Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone: but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit. He that loveth his life shall lose it; and he that hateth his life in this world shall keep it unto life eternal."

This incident and these words of our Savior occurred just a little while before his arrest and death.

There are two pretty stories by some of the early historians in connection with the incident.

These Greeks were Jews from Helias, born and reared among the Greeks of Asia Minor, speaking the Greek language, and wearing Greek names, doubtless, but loyal to the law, or at least to the traditions of the elders. They came to Philip, attracted, it may be surmised, by his Greek name. He goes to another disciple bearing also a Greek name, Andrew, and they with the delegation go to Jesus

Now the story. A prince who lived in the town of Edessa had heard of Jesus, had learned of his wonderful miracles and his more wonderful teachings. Also, he had been told of the persecution to which Jesus had been subjected by the Jews at Jerusalem and other places. He was a pairon of men of letters and philosophers and a friend to all in distress. He instructed these Greek Jews who came from his city to offer Jesus a place of refuge and a home in his own city, Edessa. This offer was evidently made by these Greeks, for Jesus replies that "the hour is come, that the Son of man should be glorified," etc. But who can say that his man side was not tempted? A home of ease and peace after the stormy times through which he had passed since his baptism in Jordan! And now that he was face to face with death, a horrible death, could any one say that his soul did not draw back? But notice both his courage and resignation. For this cause he came into the world, not to do his own will, but his Father's.

The second story. Among the Greeks were some painters, who asked that they might make a portrait of Jesus to carry back to their master. Jesus is said to have declined to sit for them, but they from memory drew a picture, replicas of which are known as the Angelico portrait of the Savior.

These stories may or may not be authentic, but I see no special reason to discredit them. They are not unreasonable.

The saying of Jesus is what concerns us. "Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone." Dying is not annihilation. Dying is God's means of giving life. Dying is but changing from one condition or form to another, and often a finer, more beautiful. Mark the caterpillar and the butterfly, the human body with its allings and the forms of the angels. The Hebrew poet said: "Blessed be God: for he created death; for death is life for evermore," Our godspell, or gospel, is the death, burial, and resurrection of Jesus.

There is something about a heroic death that dazzles and charms. Had Sam Davis lived to old age, there would be no statue on Capitol Hill to preserve his memory. He would not have been remembered outside of the purlieus of his native village, and there but briefly; but his decision to die rather than yield to the temptation to live ennobled him. Charles I. met death on the scaffold with such unflinching courage that his fame is half redeemed. John Jacob Astor went down with the Titanic rather than crowd the boat and endanger the lives of others, and this act makes us forget his disregard for law, human and divine.

"He that loveth his life shall lose it; and he that hateth his life in this world shall keep it unto life eternal," The man that puts life before his duty, before his honor or his faith, is the person the Savior had in mind. He is the one who shirks his responsibility to his family, to his community, to his country, and to his God-a slacker along all lines. The father who runs, leaving his family in distress or sickness; the physician who lets his patients in time of pestilence shift for themselves; the preacher who hies him to the mountains when yellow jack issues from the jungles—these are in the same category, and they shall meet the same fate. But he who puts duty before easy living, honor and faith before every temporal advantage-he shall live; if not in this world, in that which is DAVID LIPSCOMB, JR. to come.

"My Meat Is to Do the Will."

"Jesus saith unto them, My meat is to do the will of him that sent me, and to finish his work." (John 4: 34.)

There is a belief among certain classes that man is the creature of circumstance, heir to good fortune or ill fortune as the case may be, and that, therefore, his efforts count but little in the great battle of life. This is a dangerous doctrine, leading to many harmful ends, and is clearly refuted by the words of our Master in the text quoted above.

The first thought expressed by the Teacher is, "My meat [my mission] is to do the will of him that sent me," revealing a clear and well-directed plan or course of procedure for his wark among men. The second thought, "and to finish his work," shows clearly the work to be accomplished.

We are taught two very important lessons by these words of the Savior. First, man has a mission in the world, a work to accomplish; second, he is not a dependent upon "luck," as some would have us believe, but, like all else of God's creation, there is for him a purpose which he must conserve. We would not infer for an instant that man is not a dependent creature; for, "it is not in man that walketh to direct his steps." He must have a reliance—"a shelter in the time of storm."

What, then, is my mission in the world? Where shall I find the work mapped out? Will I discover it in the experiences of those who blazed the trail before? Ab, no! Sin has sundered the golden cord binding us to eternal day, and Satan has turned his Stygian darkness to block our way. We must have an ideal-a light-a guide to direct our faltering steps aright. And in the life of Him who conquered death and hell and illumined the darkness of the grave by his glorious resurrection will be found the model for all of man's endeavor. For there was never an idle day in his busy life. And his mission was to brighten the pathway of others-to bind up the broken-hearted; to do the will of Him who sent him, and to finish His work. And since he is our model, then our mission is the sameviz., to be helpful and useful in the world-to let our light so shine before men, that they may be led to "the true Light, which lighteth every man that cometh into the world." "For with thee is the fountain of life; and in thy light shall we see light." (Ps. 36; 9.)

And in these times which try men's souls, when strife and turmoil stalk abroad in the land, and when thoughtful minds are troubled for a remedy for those malignant ills which beset humanity, let us be reminded of that soulstirring sentiment of the poet:

> Though I forget Him and wander away, Still He doth love me wherever I stray,

And let us say, with the impulsive apostle: "Lord, to whom shall we go? thou hast the words of eternal life."

LYTTON ALLEY.

"Go. . . and Preach the Gospel."

"And he [Jesus] said unto them, Go. . . and preach the gospel." (Mark 16: 15.)

I cannot say that this is a favorite with me, but Brother Berry gave it as his "special," and I call it good.

I will try to tell you of one good old brother who tried and, almost unconsciously, obeyed it because he had love in his heart for Jesus and for his aged sister. This "Go" should be a real heart "Go," anyway, and not a matter of form or ritual.

In a big city in a big State, too far east of the great Mississippi to touch it, was a poor old brother with a big heart, but, some thought, a little mind. I do not knowmaybe. But a big heart about gets it, anyway. "Sister Jane" lived away off in California, thousands and thousands of miles to him, apparently. They were reared together, for she almost completely reared him. But now they were far apart, very far, especially to one that had hardly been out of his native county. He had heard of Jesus, learned of Jesus; learned not one, but several, "Jesus said," and in so doing became a Christian. But sister did not know, and he loved sister and wanted her to become a Christian, too. She must know the Bible way, Jesus' way. What could be done? He barely could write, and she barely could read even print, much less brother's writing. But he tried to tell her and she tried to learn, though but little headway was made. Sister had been a mother to him, and he loved her, and she must be taught and be saved. At last Jesus' "Go," without thinking that it was in the Bible, came into his head. Yet it was so far, and he was old, poor-no money-couldn't make much. Give up, and sister die and not saved? No, never. Distance seemed as far as several times around the world. But he was going to heaven to see Jesus, and sister must not be left. He planned to save his pennies, nickels, dimes, and quarters, if he got any he could spare at all. He counted it often-watched it slowly grow. He would try to "go," though old and Ignorant and poor. Would sister be prejudiced, and her husband? "Love constrained!" "Go" was the decision. With anxious heart he regularly added his pennies and nickels. Succeed or fail? Ever get enough to go? Time showed he would, if he lived. Time, much time, goes by. But at last the dream is coming true. ough is saved to buy a round-trip ticket away out to mia; for, if not a round trip, he might never get back. "Good-by, I am going to see sister, and teach her how to be saved." "Awfully far away, but hope to get there." The train goes on and on, and his mind is busy, too, "Will she know me? How will she look? Will he be prejudiced? Will he be mad or glad?" Thinking. planning, and praying, on he goes, on and on and on. At last he is in "another world;" they meet, cry, rejoice. Three old, feeble people wend their way out into the country to her home. They talk of kin and home and loved ones-some still here, some gone on before. Around the fire, still hour, they are talking now of the theme that made him come. Sister listens; he reads and talks; husband leans over listening, much interested. I do not know what the angels were doing. At the table, the fireside, as they do their little work, the hours are spent trying to learn and trying to teach. But they are all happyhappy hours.

Husband and wife talk, and they plan. They ask brother to preach to the few, very few, at the little schoolhouse, Preach! He is no preacher. Could he? Ignorant, oldpreach! "Might save sister." "Do anything to save her." He did his best, she did her best. How could he give invi-tation? Would it do any good? Could he take a confession, anyway? Should he? Should he baptize her? Could he? Well, he did not know how, but somehow there are some things said, some way, and some things done; and, at last, not sister only, but husband, too, both accepted Christ as best they knew, and brother had done the best he knew, and he has baptized them, in some way. I suppose God accepted it all-'twas their best. A little more time is spent together. All happy. A glorious trip! Going time has come. Good-byes and tears. Sad to see her no more on earth, but "we will be together in heaven." Sister is saved. And Jesus' "Go" has been obeyed from the heart and heaven's best results attained.

As he told me this, crying, he added that he would have got "on his hands and knees" and crawled to California to accomplish what was done. And I have told you a true story as I remember how he told it to me.

If all sisters and brothers had such hearts, would the world be better off? And that is a good way to do one of Jesus' "Go's." D. A. G.

"I Am the Vine, Ye Are the Branches."

"I am the vine, ye are the branches: He that abideth In me, and I in him, the same beareth much fruit: for apart from me ye can do nothing. If a man abide not in me, he is cast forth as a branch, and is withered: and they gather them, and cast them into the fire, and they are burned." (John 15: 5, 6.)

I am sure the Lord is not teaching us the lesson that some try to get out of it-viz., that the branches are different denominations-branch churches. No, the church had no branches then, nor should it have now. Jesus was the true Vine. There was but one true one then, and there is but one true one now. The children of God, or his disciples, were the branches then; all Christians are branches of Christ, the Vine, now.

This lesson teaches us that without Christ we can do nothing. Even apparent success is a signal failure without him; hence, the lesson teaches dependence. It teaches nearness-"ye are the branches." The branch of any vine or tree depends on the tree to sustain it; its vital force comes from the main trunk or vine. It teaches reliance and humility. We have no life of our own; our life is of Him and in Him. All the fruit of any grapevine (which was doubtless before the Lord when he gave this lesson) comes from the new growth-from the branches and not from the vine itself. All fruit in the Christian life, from the church, must be borne by the members. The fruit must partake of the nature of the vine that produces it.

A real Christian must bear fruit, or it will be a useless branch. The branches that do not bear fruit are to be cut off and east into the fire. When I was quite a young lad, I heard a very great effort made by a man of considerable ability as a debater to prove from this passage that the Lord was talking about "water sprouts" that were not really in the vine, but just professedly so. He had espoused a doctrine of impossibility of apostasy, and he must in some way get rid of the passage that says, "He that abideth in me," and, "If a man abide not in me." Was he in Christ? Jesus said "in me." Would I or any one else tell a man to abide in a house, a ship, or in anything, one who had never been in such a state or place? No. The final state of any man who refuses to abide in Christ and bear fruit is stated, sadly stated, in the sixth verse of this lesson.

Finally: "Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit; and so shall ye be my disciples." There is no other way to remain in Christ, the Vine, except by continuing to bear fruit. We glorify God by bearing fruit. God was glorified in the Old Testament times through the tabernacle and the temple service that he had appointed. We give God glory to-day in the institution—the church—which he has appointed for that purpose. Let us bear much fruit to his glory.

Signs of the Times.

I came on at an unfortunate period in the history of our country and was denied privileges and opportunities offered to boys and young men of to-day. My parents were poor, lived on the farm, and I walked to a country school four miles distant after crops were laid by, and there received much of what little education I have.

Christian ministers were about as scarce then as gospel preachers are now, and I heard only denominational preachers until I was about grown. They were either very uninteresting or the girls were very attractive, or else I was very stupid, for I thought much more of the girls than I did of the preacher.

"Uncle Abner" Cooper, as he was familiarly called, a leading Presbyterian preacher in West Tennessee where I was reared, preached a sermon on the millennium. He gave many signs, told the year of its beginning (which was then in the near future), and I, boylike, was badly frightened and thought the world was coming to an end, and began to think, and I have been engaged in that business from that day until this.

I heard only three or four Christian preachers while a boy, and perhaps heard one hundred denominational preachers, but did not obey the gospel until I came to Nashville and heard Brother R. Lin Cave in a series of gospel sermons.

I heard many of the leading Presbyterians, Baptists, and several Methodist bishops, some of whom were scholarly entertainers; but a large majority of the preachers of that day were, in my opinion, wholly unfit for the ministry. I was then a seeker, thought very little of much of the preaching then, and think less of much of it now; but I believe we had more gospel preachers then, comparatively speaking, than we have to-day.

After I became a part of the church, I began to study and observe men and institutions, and have continued from that day until this, and I unhesitatingly say the ministry, like the press, is degenerating, and that great gospel preachers are scarcer than ever before since the Reformation

I love and believe in debate and kind criticism, and firmly believe the doing away with it has injured our cause, degraded the ministry, and built up denominationalism. The ministry is following hypocritical theorists, impractical teachers, and a degenerating press, instead of following Paul's teachings; and if it continues its downward course that it is now going, nothing short of a revolution or an earthquake will ever bring about the reformation predicted by Brother David Lipscomb.

It is neglecting great fundamental principles, which leads to skepticism and infidelity, and discussing nonessentials where no principle is involved, praising theories and theorists which have no place in the ministry, and contributing much to make it what it largely is—professional.

David Lipscomb said many years ago that another reformation would come, but, unlike professional preachers, never preached Lipscomb, was not hypocritical, and did not encourage anything that would make reformation a necessity.

He was not, in my opinion, fully understood and properly appreciated by either faction in our church, was more liberal than they or the denominationalists believed him to be. They had a superficial knowledge and thought him narrow-minded, simply because he would not sacrifice a fundamental principle and had a clearer vision of effects and the future than they were able to grasp or to imagine.

The tendency of the ministry is professional, preaching nothing, teaching nothing, encouraging by word and deed mockery, if not blasphemy, and things that lead to skepticism, infidelity, and socialism.

I believe the ministry has kept pace with the press, which is largely edited from the countingroom, where dollars reign supreme, and that nothing short of a revolution will ever check desengration and give us a better ministry.

The press is following the people, giving them what they want and will buy; and the ministry is following the press and teachers, giving them things they do not want and cannot use, and is like a safety razor at a nigger partynot worth anything.

Godly men and great gcspel preachers are a desirable combination, seldom found these days, and will become extinct if degeneration continues and there is no higher aspiration than that of an entertainer and complainer.

We have ministers with extreme views in both factions of our church, discussing theories, nonessentials, and indulging in speculative opinion and neglecting gospel preaching, which all thoughtful people want to hear, and which all thoughtless people should hear and must hear if truly converted and saved as responsible persons.

I have heard some of the silliest and most absurd, ridiculous, and inconsistent statements from so-called leading ministers in this State and from other States imaginable. They would not have been uttered by such politicians as Lincoln, Cleveland, and Carmack, and were so absolutely ridiculous and inconsistent that I was embarrassed and ashamed of them.

We need a better ministry following the teaching and preaching of Paul, Stone, Campbell, McGarvey, and Lipscomb, and unless we have it denominationalism will continue to grow and prosper, and skepticism, infidelity, church federation, interdenominational cooperation, and open church membership will grow and prosper with them. Let us hope and pray for a better ministry.

A. S. WARREN.

God has many interests to consider, many conflicting forces to deal with, and many issues to provide for. Therefore, different men may have different views, and yet all be in the right. Many purposes may be almed at in redemption beyond what we can see, and thus many processes which to us took meaningless, find their end. The water is not taken over the millwheel simply that it may find its nearest course to the river, nor is the Christian led over a broken path because that is the nearest way to heaven.—W. F. Adeney.

"Go Ye Therefore, and Teach All Nations."

Jesus said: "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." (Matt. 28: 19, 20.)

Among all the great lessons of our Savior, he left as the climax of bis life's work the command to "go, teach." No doubt he fully realized that the future of the church of God and the salvation of the world depended upon it. This commandment is the fundamental, organic, and constitutional law of the kingdom of Christ. Man, in this life, can never know just what it means to carry out the command to "go, teach." If there is no teaching, no hearing; no hearing, no faith; no faith, no obedience; no obedience, no salvation; no salvation, no church—no Christianity. (Rom. 10: 14-17; 14: 23; Heb. 11: 6; 2 Thess. 1: 7-9.)

It is not just teaching we need, but the right kind of teaching. The world is full of teachers, and too much of our time is devoted to intellectual development and too little to spiritual development. Training the mind is good, but that alone will not do. "Nations have risen to the noblest heights of intellectual greatness while stooping to the lowest depths of moral decay." Look upon Athens, the beautiful capital of Greece, standing like a city of brazen foam, a wilderness of marble draped in glory as if let down from the akies, streaked with silver and ablaze with gold, looking down from her ruffled peninsulas upon the tideless waves of her storm-beaten shores. Greece was the cradle of learning, the citadel of scholarship, the land of legend and song, where Alexander exhausted the genius of generalship and Plato discoursed like an oracle in the academic groves. For advancement in temporal affairs, look at Rome, whose coffers were filled with the revenues of a hemisphere and whose ships of commerce traveled every known sea. In all that it takes to make power, prestige, dominion, wealth, display, and military glory, she surpassed every nation that preceded her. But, lacking in spiritual training, they have gone the way of all the earth. View Germany as she was, and see her now as she is, all of which is the result of trying to accomplish things and leaving God out of it. Many a mind has been harmful to the world because it was led by the wrong kind of teaching. Bacon was said to have been one of the wisest and greatest, yet meanest, of all mankind. The teacher who ruins his influence by the life that he lives, though great he may be, better for him never to have taught

We need the teaching that will cause one to hate the appearance of evil, abhor the very presence of a wicked person, but one that will cause us to have the moral courage to stand up for the right and condemn the wrong anywhere and everywhere. Yes, we need the teaching that will make us consult God daily and invoke his blessings and guidance in all things—teaching that will cause our brethren to go down deep, deep, deep into their pocket-books and make their money do the bidding of Almighty God.

1. A. Dournitt.

"My Kingdom Is Not of This World."

Among the many sayings of Jesus we find the following very emphatic statement: "Jesus answered, My kingdom is not of this world: if my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight, that I should not be delivered to the Jews: but now is my kingdom not from hence." (John 18: 36.)

A kingdom is composed of at least three things—viz., a king, subjects, and laws; and, according to Jesus, no part of the kingdom he established is of this world. I am constrained to believe that a great many professed subjects of the kingdom of Christ do not fully understand and appreciate that fact, while others do not properly respect It. The kingdom of Christ was intended to have an entirely different spirit and mission to that of the world. Its mission is to save both soul and body of man, and not to in any way seek to destroy either. While it is true that the subjects of the kingdom are in the world, still they are not of the world. (See John 17: 16.) To be sure, the subjects of Christ's kingdom hold some things in common with the world, but all such things must not in any way affect the moral and spiritual power of the subjects of Christ's kingdom.

In order to avoid this, there are things which they must neither "touch, taste, nor handle." The mission of the kingdom is set forth by the Master in the following parable: "The kingdom of heaven is like unto leaven, which a woman took, and hid in three measures of meal, till the whole was leavened." (Matt. 13: 33.) Some, in their haste to prove a theory not found in the Bible, have perverted this parable, making the leaven represent the kingdom in a degenerate or corrupt state because leaven is sometimes used to indicate corruption. (See Matt. 16: 6-12.) In representing the kingdom by leaven, Jesus is simply showing the power of the kingdom to transform or convert the world into Christians just as leaven has the power to change the meal into a different state. Now, in carrying out its mission, the subjects of the kingdom are positively forbidden to use carnal means or physical force. In a nutshell, the subjects of Christ's kingdom are forbidden to engage in antagonisms of a carnal nature for any purpose whatsoever.

"Of course," says one, "they must not do such a thing in order to advance the kingdom of Christ, but-" But what? Now, my friend, I am perfectly willing for you to have your say, and I did not intend to cut you off entirely; only, I wish to say, when you undertake to "butt" me on this proposition, that you do so with clear, distinct. and unequivocal statements of holy writ. It seems to me that since the beginning of the Christian era it is against God's will for any nation to go to war with another nation. The prophetic utterance concerning the establishment of the kingdom or church (which are one and the same) in Isa, 2: 2 is closely followed by the prohibition that "nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more." This prohibition is commensurate with the establishment of the kingdom, binding upon the world, and how much more, then, upon the church! Before the precipitation of this world war it did not enter my mind that any preacher, elder, or well-informed member of the church of Christ would for a moment think It right for Christians to go to war-take up carnal weapons. Imagine, then, my surprise on learning how far I had missed it in my calculation. When I learned of preachers, elders, and many others in the church advocating and encouraging the children of God to take up arms, I felt disappointed, grieved, and discouraged. Some I could mention whose influence for good was widespread, but has depreciated no little with many of the saints. I must confess that my confidence in the loyalty of many has received a severe shock. Now, if there is one passage in the New Testament that justifies a Christian in using carnal weapons even in the defense of his own life, I am free to confess that I have not sense enough to see It; and, what is more, I do not believe the man lives who has sense enough to find such a passage. Never mind, my brother, as to what you or I might do under this or that circumstance; show me the passage. You and I both, no doubt, do many things that are wrong, but all that does not prove the right of Christians' going to war. The fact that nations go to war no more proves it to be God's will than the fact that men steal proves that to be God's will.

Another may say: "Are not Christians at liberty to fight for national rights?" Just how the greater can be right when the lesser is forbidden, I am unable to see. Jesus said: "Ye have heard that it hath been said. An eve for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth; but I say unto you, That ye resist not evil: but whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also. And if any man will sue thee at the law, and take away thy coat, let him have thy cloak also. And whosoever shall compel thee to go a mile, go with him twain." (Matt. 5: 38-41.) If these sayings of the Master do not forbid his disciples to resent with carnal weapons personal insults and infringement of property rights, then, in the name of reason, what do they mean? How can any preacher, elder, or informed member of the church of Christ, with such teaching before him or her, advocate or sanction in any way Christians' going to

But we are asked: "Do you not know that God requires Christians to obey the powers that be?" Yes; and do you not know that the same God requires Christians to disobey the powers that be when the powers that be require them to do that which God has forbidden? If not, you have read the Bible to little purpose. According to your argument, Christ would never have died for the sins of the world and the apostles would never have preached the gospel and sealed it with their blood. Here is what some of "the powers that be" dld, and we see what the apostles did: "And they called them, and commanded them not to speak at all nor teach in the name of Jesus. But Peter and John answered and sald unto them, Whether It be right in the sight of God to hearken unto you more than unto God, judge ye. For we cannot but speak the things which we have seen and heard," (Acts 5: 18-20.) In the face of "the powers that be" the angel of God spoke to the apostles in clear and unmistakable language: "Then the high priest rose up, and all they that were with him, (which is the sect of the Sadducees,) and were filled with indignation, and laid their hands on the apostles, and put them in the common prison. But the angel of the Lord by night opened the prison doors, and brought them forth, and said. Go stand and speak in the temple to the people all the words of this life." (Acts 5: 17-20.)

There seems to me an absolute prohibition against the children of God engaging in carnal war for any purpose in the following passage: "And the Lord's servant must not strive, but be gentle toward all, apt to teach, forbearing." (2 Tim 2: 24.) The word translated "strive" in this passage is from machomai, meaning to fight. It is the same word used to describe the attitude toward each other of the Hebrews whom Moses sought to reconcile. (Acts 7: 26.) It is true the word in 2 Tim. 2: 24 is used in a tropical sense, forbidding a war with angry words, but the literal meaning is certainly involved in the prohibition.

How can a corrupt tree produce good fruit? The tree that produces war is rotten, its very root is poison itselfviz., unholy lust. "From whence come wars and fightings among you? come they not hence, even of your lusts that war in your members? Ye lust, and have not: ye kill, and desire to have, and cannot obtain: ye fight and war, yet ye have not, because ye ask not. Ye ask, and receive not, because ye ask amiss, that ye may consume it upon your (James 4: 1-3.) By what species of logic can the product of a corrupt tree be transformed into good fruit? The law governing Christians in their conduct toward their enemies is laid down by the Master thus: "Recompense to no man evil for evil. Provide things honest in the sight of all men. If it be possible, as much as lieth in you, live peaceably with all men. Dearly beloved, avenge not yourselves, but rather give place unto wrath: for it is written, Vengeance is mine; I will repay, saith the Lord. Therefore if thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink: for in so doing thou shalt heap coals of fire on his head. Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good." (Rom. 12: 17:21.)

I would like to hear the preachers, elders, and other men in the church preach from some of these texts, and then note their efforts to justify the course they have pursued during the war just ended.

I close with a quotation from the Immortal Campbell:

On reviewing the subject in the few points only that I have made and with the comparatively few facts I have collected, I must confess that I both wonder at myself and am ashamed to think that I have never before spoken out my views, nor even written an essay on this subject. True, I had, indeed, no apprehension of ever again seeing or even hearing of a war in the United States. It came upon me so suddenly, and it so soon became a party question, that, preserving, as I do, a strict neutrality between party politics, both in my oral and written addresses on all subjects, I could not for a time decide whether to speak out or be stient. I finally determined not to touch the subject till the war was over. Presuming that time to have arrived, and having resolved that my first essay from my regular course, at any foreign point, should be on this subject, I feel that I need offer no excuse, ladies and gentlemen, for having called your attention to the matter in hand. I am sorry to think—very sorry, indeed, to be only of the opinion—that probably even this much published by me some three years or even two years ago might have saved some lives that have since been thrown away in the desert—some hot-brained youths.

"Whose limbs, unburied on the shore, Devouring dogs or hungry vultures tore."

Not "Under the Bushel, But On the Stand."

For twenty-five years I have been studying the Sermon on the Mount, and I think I can truthfully say that every time I examine it I am surprised to find some striking lesson that I had never noticed before.

Only last week I read the statement: "Neither do men light a lamp, and put it under the bushel, but on the stand; and it shineth unto all that are in the house."

The following thoughts then came into my mind: Suppose that a very large number of people were instructed to enter a building and do a certain amount of work; also suppose that a number of lamps were to be placed in the building, and a definite number of other people were to be intrusted with the work of keeping all the lamps burning brightly so that the work would not be retarded. Soon an enemy of the person having the work done enters the building, carrying a number of vessels, in appearance like unto bushel measures. He then tries to interfere with the work by inducing the people having the lamps in charge to place these vessels over the lamps. Now the vessels are not all alike, nor are they made of the same material, but they are all intended to serve the same purpose-that is, they are intended to cover the lights in the room and thus hinder the work. Soon the enemy is exhorting all who will to accept one or more of the vessels and slip them over the lights committed to their care.

Of course, all understand that Christ is represented as having the work done; the workers are the people of the world whom he would have to glorify his Father in heaven; Christians are the ones he asks to let their lights shine; Satan is the enemy; some of the bushel measures he tries to get Christians to conceal their lights under are dishonesty, selfishness, malice, neglect, lust, pride, ignorance, falsehood, love of money, laziness, high temper, worldly pleasure, faultfinding, tattling, drunkenness, gambling, adultery, rashness, excessive talking, foolish talking, smutty talking, boastfulness, profanity, haughtiness, flithlness, thoughtlessness, ingratitude, unbelief, false doctrine, hobby riding, wastefulness, and trouble making.

As I look around me and see how very few people of the world are now turning to the Lord and thus glorifying his name, I am alarmed and ask the question: "Why is all this?" I then look toward the church, and, behold, how dimly its lights are burning! Hid under the devil's bushels! No wonder the world is in darkness. O, that we would resolve to uncover our lights and by their brightness compel the world to be attracted to Christianity!

But instead of uncovering our lamps, we hear some saying: "I would not touch some of the bushels for anything! I think it is terrible for Christians to hide their lights under them. Take dishonesty, for example; my conscience would drive me wild if I covered my Christian light with dishonest deeds." Possibly so; but how about your ungoverned temper? Another says there is no excuse for any Christian's hiding his light under the bushel of selfishness. Quite right; but how do you expect the world to be attracted by your light so long as you continue to keep it covered by your pet hobby?

So, we see, the matter is all summed up as follows: The Christian says it is inexcusable for others to cover their lights with the particular bushel they have selected, but it is all right for me to cover my light with the bushel I have selected.

Satan says: "Just take your choice of bushel measures, and I will be satisfied. All I want is the light covered, and I do not care whether it is hidden under the bushel of neglect or that of murder."

Jesus would say: "What matters it to me which bushel measure your light is hidden under? It is not the kind of bushel you selected, but the fact that you hid your light under any bushel at all."

CLAUD F. WITTY.

A Neglected Gospel Ordinance.

The ordinance referred to in the caption of this article is the one mentioned by Paul in the thirteenth verse of the ninth chapter of his First Corinthian Letter. The full effect of this ordinance is practically lost through misinterpretation or neglect. I think it has an important bearing upon the welfare and success of the church founded by the Savior of mankind.

Three things are supremely necessary for the full and ready triumph of the church of Christ—namely: pure gospel trath, faithful preachers of that truth, and liberal material support of the sacred work. The first of these we have in the word of God; the second, in willing ministers of the gospel; but the third is insufficient. Full cooperation of the three is absolutely necessary. God has done his part; preachers of the gospel are ready to be sent; but professed saints hesitate to supply the needed means from their substantial increase. This indifference or fallure produces partial, and offtimes complete, paralysis of the congregational parts of the spiritual body—a fact that is shown by the frequent cries of distress coming up from stranded congregations everywhere.

This condition in matters of the church of Christ is shameful and unworthy of us, and, I truly believe, is abhorrent to God.

Neglect of our financial obligations in the administrations of the divine scheme of human redemption and final spiritual salvation is as sinful in this church age as it was in the shadowy days of the holy prophet, Malachl, Our neighboring competitive religious organizations keep their coffers full by conscriptive methods; but their ways in this, as in other matters religious, are not God's way. Conscientious voluntary payment of the divine debt directly into the Lord's treasury is God's requirement.

The sword of the Spirit is full of divine power; faithful men are ready to wield it; but material support is withheld. We have the fire and the firemen, but the fuel is insufficient. Why is this, brethren? Dare we believe that the faithful are willfully negligent, and that they value more highly their perishable allver and the temporal gratifications of the world than they do their own imperishable souls? God forbid. But that there is a real cause for this fatal delinquency is certain. Now for a look into the Holy Scriptures for divine guidance.

The apostle Paul, in the ninth chapter of his First Corinthian Letter, sets forth the divine plea, necessity, and law for the general material support of the gospel. In the midst of his instruction the apostle asks, in the thirteenth verse, this question: "Do ye not know that they which minister about holy things live of the things of the temple? and they which wait at the altar are partakers with the altar?"

Every student of the Bible knows that this inquiry had reference to the material support of the spiritual ministrations provided for in the tithal ordinance of the law. God's chosen people were taught the divine principle expressed as an immutable provision in God's plan of salvation by the assurance: "The tithe is the Lord's; it is holy unto the Lord." With the inspiration of this truism in mind, the apostic asked the question expressed by verse 13, and then in the next verse (14) declared: "Even so hath the Lord ordained that they which preach the gospel should live of the gospel."

In this plain statement we are told that the Lord had ordained something with respect to the support of the gospel. The result of this act of the Lord was an ordinance, rule, or law for the support of the gospel, and certainly contained everything divinely necessary to meet its purpose. What was this ordinance? Are we not warranted, under the circumstances of this utterance, in accepting it as the divine approval and reënactment of the Lord's standard tithal assessment for the material support of the church of Christ? If I am not justified in this interpretation of verse 14, may 1 not hope and insist that some good brother will explain just what the Holy Spirit meant that the Lord had ordained for the support of necessary gospel work? Of course, we all understand that said ordinance requires "that they which preach the gospel should live of the gospel." But even this indefinite application would leave us culpable, since many who go forth to preach the true gospel are compelled to give up the sacred work by reason of nonsupport.

The phrase, "even so," used to introduce the declaration contained in verse 14, means in like manner. This of itself is significant, following as it does so closely the reference to the Lord's provision of the tithal assessment of the children of Israel. Thinking of the reasonableness of such a provision for the followers of Christ, and knowing that there is nothing in "the perfect law of liberty" forbidding the Christian to pay conscientiously one-tenth or more of his material income regularly into the treasury of the Lord, and that it is a possibility fraught with such undoubted blessing of power and perfection, I can see no divine reason why we should not teach, preach, and practice it.

Our brotherhood, generally, appear to rely for the doctrine of gospel support upon Paul's exhortation found at the beginning of the sixteenth chapter of the same letter to the Corinthians, wherein the apostolic directs:

- (1) "Now concerning the collection for the saints, as I have given order to the churches of Galatia, even so do ye." Note the use and meaning of the phrase, "even so," in this verse.
- (2) "Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come."

The apostle was, in this instance, simply making an earnest appeal for a special charity g(ft) to be used in meeting a temporary emergency found to exist in a few neighboring congregations in Judea. He evidently had no thought whatever of providing a divine rule for the general and continuous support of the kingdom of Christ. Indeed, this view is rendered wholly tenable by the fact that the Lord had already provided an ordinance for the support of the gospel. It is well to remember that there is a vast difference between the bestowal of an occasional gift and the payment of an ever-recurring debt.

To tell a disciple that he owes something to the Lord and that he should give something whenever he feels like it is not convincing to him. It is too indefinite. An honest citizen wants to know the nature of his debt and the terms of its payment. Otherwise he will be more or less indifferent. This is, doubtless, at least in part, the cause of our lean sacred treasury. The truth and the tithe would make the army of the Lord invincible, for they would provide for every contingency incident to the Christian warfare.

I rejoice to see that some of the strong brethren are outspoken in advocating our conscientious payment of at least the tenth part of our income for the support of the church; and I truly believe that a general concerted conscientious plea from pulpit and press for that sacred assessment would honor God, inspire the church, thwart the schemes of Satan, and much more abundantly bless the world.

John R. Weathers,

Circumcision and the Support of Foreign Missionaries

Some one may be inclined to ask: "What connection has eircumcision with the support of foreign missionaries?" It is the purpose of this article to answer that question.

Most great men have been accused at one time or another of being inconsistent, either in their words or in their conduct. Paul is no exception to that rule. His teaching and practice of dircumcision is said to be self-contradictory. He circumcised Timothy, and he absolutely refused in the face of strong pressure to circumcise Titus.

He taught that circumcision was a thing of no importance; it made no difference whether one was circumcised or not. "For in Christ Jesus neither circumcision availeth anything, nor uncircumcision." Again, he writes that circumcision is nothing and uncircumcision is nothing. He places circumcision among those things we would now call the "nonessentials." Yet he taught that if any one be circumcised, Christ shall profit him nothing; that in submitting to be circumcised the believer had fallen from grace.

Now, on the surface, there is an apparent contradiction; but ofttimes in what looks like inconsistency there is to be found real harmony and consistency. The old proverb is true: "Circumstances after cases."

In the case of Timothy, he was the son of a Jewess with a Greek father. Paul desired to use him as an assistant in his work in the Jewish synagogue and elsewhere. But the Jews would not have listened one minute to an uncircumcised Jew. So, as a concession to their prejudice and to secure an open door, Paul circumcised Timothy. He became "all things to all men," that he might win some, So, in this matter of circumcising Timothy, he acted as a Jew toward the Jews, that he might have the readier access to the synagogue and to the hearts of those who gathered there.

If one of our missionaries going to China found it expedient to grow a queue like a Chinaman, to wear native costume, and to conform to native customs, there is no good reason why he should not do so. On the other hand, if it would facilitate his obtaining a hearing from the people and breaking down their prejudices against an Occidental, there is every reason why he should do so. As Paul became like a Jew to the Jews, so our missionary might become like a Chinaman to the Chinese, that he might win some.

But the case of Titus was entirely different from that of Timothy. There had arisen a party in the early church who taught that except the Gentile converts were circumcised after the manner of Moses they could not be saved. With these brethren Paul and Barnabas had no small dissension and disputation. Under the direct revelation of God, Paul, Barnabas, Titus, and certain other brethren went up to Jerusalem to confer with the apostles and elders at that place. A determined effort was made to have Titus, who was a Greek, circumcised. Some of the Pharisees who believed said it was necessary to circumcise him and to command him to keep the law of Moses. To these men Paul did not give place by subjection—no, not for an hour—that the truth and liberty of the gospel might be maintained. Under these conditions, had Paul yielded to the Judaizing teachers, he would have surrendered our Christian liberty. To submit to them was to fall away from Christ. In such circumstances Christ would profit them nothing.

We now see that there was no real inconsistency in Paul's conduct in circumcising Timothy and positively refusing to circumcise Titus. The circumstances altered the cases. In Timothy's case there was no principle at stake. It was a matter of no importance. It was not practiced as a divine law or as an ordinance binding on believers. In the case of Titus, members of the church said he must be circumcised in order to salvation. Paul said: "No. God does not require that from our hand." The mistake which the Christian Pharisees made was to make a law where God had not made one. They exalted their opinion and interpretation of Old Testament scriptures into a positive requirement, and insisted that all Christians be bound by it. I know of no more serious danger than this. Where the Bible speaks, we should speak; and where the Bible is silent, we should accord to each other the liberty to form and hold our own opinions. When I seek to press my opinion, however good it may be, and make it a binding law upon the conscience of my brethren, I am taking upon myself divine authority and assuming a power God has not given to any man-

A few examples will help to make this point clear.

We are all agreed that singing, reading the Scriptures, prayer, breaking of the bread, and giving are parts of divine worship upon Lord's day. I am not particular as to their order. I have never found the scripture which says they must be attended to in a certain rotation or order. When any person says I must observe them in a particular way, my reply is: "I have no objection to your order, but I do object to your making a law where God did not make one."

Again, some brethren think that one common fund for all the needs of the church is sufficient; while others think a separate contribution for such purposes as supporting an Orphans' Home, relieving distress such as the present trouble at Corpus Christi, is better. Either way will suit me, if only the money is raised and the work done. But when some one says it is unscriptural to have more than one fund in connection with church work. I object. God has not spoken on this subject, and each congregation is free to use any method that may be thought wisest and best.

The Lord's last command to his apostles was, "Go." He dld not say how to go; so I am free to go in any reasonable way I choose. And I think I have gone to gospel appointments in almost every way, save in an airship, and I may go that way yet. The Lord's "Go" had special reference to what we now call foreign missions. "Go . . into all the world." And the brother or the sister who goes to a foreign field has usually special need for support. How is that support to be raised? Our present plan is producing fairly good results. No doubt these might be better. But some one objects to our present way and says it is unscriptural. I have been a reasonably careful student of the New Testament for many years, and I have not yet found any command as to how missionary money should be raised. Any plan which does not create an ecelesiasticism over the churches is all right.

JOHN STRAITON.

"This Do in Remembrance of Me."

Some years ago on Passover Day, as the Jewish people were thronging into their temple, I saw Abe Benjamin, a young Jewish friend, about to drive off in his car. "Why are you not at church?" I asked. "Well, I don't go to church any more, Professor," he replied. "Why, Abe, I am surprised and grieved. You haven't discarded your religion, have you?" I inquired. "No! No! The very reverse. I am more religious than I ever was. I am more religious than many of those people you see going into the temple to worship. I am out of sympathy with formal worship, Professor. I believe in serving—in doing something of practical use to somebody. I am going to the hospital right now to read to a sick man."

This incident stamped itself upon my memory, because it seemed to furnish one answer to the problem, "Why do people not attend church?" Service is the catch word in this age. You hear it on all occasions from all sorts of people with reference to all kinds of projects. Be a member of some social organization which sends out food baskets Christmas. Serve on committees to raise money for the Red Cross or the Antituberculosis League. Contribute to funds for the erection of a hospital or an orphans' home. Do these things; talk feelingly of the brotherhood of man; speak deprecatingly of any doctrine or practice of worship—you are accounted a Christian with a life to be emulated.

Without charity, without visiting the sick, without service to humanity, no one can please God. The teachings of the Scriptures oppose selfishness and stinginess and aloofness. We are to live for others. All men are our brothers in the sense that we must love them. Entirely true. A Christian is certainly to give service. Unquestionably he must.

The same God, however, who originated the principle of service and implanted it in the hearts of his creatures made it clear to them that he expected their worship. In every plan devised by Jehovah whereby fallen humanity might bind itself back to him, worship has had a large place. Formal worship; worship in assembly of designated acts at designated times.

In the dawn of creation, "Jehovah had respect unto Abel and to his offering." Later, under the Mosaic laws, an elaborate system of worship was enjoined—worship as an act quite distinct from righteous living or from benevolent consideration of one's fellow man. Divine Providence saw to it that inspired singers wrote psalms of praise to Jehovah and that these were preserved for models to be used in his worship.

"This do in remembrance of me," the Savior commanded at the last supper, when he instituted the chief ceremony of the Christian religion. By this command he gave approval to the principle of worship. He showed plainly to the twelve, and through them to all Christians, that he desired to be honered, not only in feeding the hungry, nor in spreading the gospel, but in an act of purely ceremonial worship, an act which requires meeting together as worshipers.

Recently a crowd of gentlemen of different faiths were discussing why people stay away from church. They blamed the automobile, the full Sunday paper, the decadence of the pulpit, the strain of modern business life. My opinion was asked. I said: "These causes which you mention are all effective to reduce church attendance. But one which you have not named, in my judgment, is more effective. Worship has been robbed of its importance and spiritual-mindedness is outwelghed by practicalness. Men, even nominal Christians, no longer feel the impulse to thank Jehovah for his mercles or to praise his holy name. They are saving themselves by service."

"Behold Thy Mother." (John 19: 27.)

The real mother spirit-does it still live to-day?-the same loving, faithful, long-suffering, sacrificing mother spirit of which we read in the Book of all books, written and praised centuries before Christ? Does the same spirit still live in our mothers of to-day that prompted Hagar of olden times to lift up her voice from out the wilderness in prayer to God for the life of her outcast child, who was perishing from thirst? Do we find the same loving and long-suffering spirit to-day that led the Hebrew mother to hide her baby son, Moses, in order to keep him alive, after the king had ordered the drowning of all Hebrew male babies? Do we find sacrificing mothers like the mother written of in 1 Kings 3: 26, who was ready to sacrifice her ownership to her own child to the woman who unjustly claimed it, rather than see her living babe divided by the sword? Are there still mothers like Mary, the blessed virgin, and mother of our blessed Lord and Savior, who are faithful unto the bitter end-who, even though their cross becomes almost too heavy to bear from cruelty and inhuman treatment, never lay it down for once and give up the struggle, but count all suffering as their duty to their Creator and Savior, and thus forge on falthfully until death releases them from their cross of sorrow and suffering and their fleshly body no longer holds their immortal spirit?

Surely there are still, to-day, mothers in whose hearts we find the same spirit of those of ancient times, but perhaps not quite as strong, yet who are loving, faithful, and long-suffering for their children, who oftentimes make their cross so burdensome that it would be too much to bear were it not for the power from the God above; whose children, even though they for a time seem to depart from the example of a Christian mother's life, are in later years drawn back by the faithful, God-given mother spirit which controlled their lives in babyhood and youth, and which inevitably leads them, no matter where they go-the Christlike spirit, which, even though they fall many times, is ever ready to forgive and lead them on again to purer actions and more godly lives-the spirit that knows no defeat, not even death, but which lives on and on in the lives of the children generations after her fleshly body has gone back to mother earth in decay.

Surely there is one little mother of the real spirit, whom the writer thanks God for each day, and whose faithful prayers ascend to God both day and night for the divine guidance and protection of her only child, whom Fate and circumstances have cast among strangers out on a sincursed world. Though her eyes are dim from disease and age, her hair is streaked with silver, her step is slow and unsteady, and her body is too frail to perform the many duties she once so faithfully performed, still her motherly, Christian spirit suffers on and on, growing stronger each day, and shining out from her eyes that truly could be called "the eyes of the soul."

God help us to erect to the memory of such mothers a monument not made of metal or stone which corrodes and crumbles in ruins, but a living, breathing monument, a perpetual structure, which shall embody the principles and actions of our real mothers of to-day. Let each day record a good, pure thought or a good deed for the sake of humanity and in memory of the mother who, perhaps, is still living. Let us not wait till death claims her before we begin our praises, but start now, and thus give her who suffers for us a little earthly happiness as a reward for her loving, faithful, long-suffering life for us,

M. JANE FLOYD.

Sometimes it is hard to find the City of Happiness, but it will narrow the search if you remember that it is in the State of Mind.—Selected.

And Jesus said, "If Ye Shall Ask Anything"

"If ye shall ask anything of the Pather in my name, he will give it you."

For nineteen centuries this glorious promise has been a source of comfort and of strength to countless millions of the oppressed, the sick, the suffering, the troubled, and the grievously burdened. These burning words have been a pillar of fire by night and a pillar of cloud by day to the heavily laden and the sore distressed and to those multitudes who have passed through the Valley of the Shadow of affliction or death. And now in this latter day—nay, at this very hour—millions of women and children in and near those lands, those hills and rivers made holy by the sacred memories of our Lord, are claiming this promise and are crying out to him in an agony of spirit and body, beseeching him that he will save them from starvation, from death, and from horrors worse than death.

Four million Armenians, Syrians, and other war sufferers in Western Asia are practically without food, clothing, or shelter, the vast majority helpless women and children. More than a million and a half have been deported. Nearly a million have been brutally murdered and massacred. Four hundred thousand children are orphaned. It can be said that there are practically no more children left under the age of five, all having perished from exposure and disease. For every hundred births there are from two to three hundred deaths. The newly born children die almost immediately, their mothers having nothing to give them but tears. Deaths from dysentery, typhus, tuberculosis, and famine are increasing from day to day with appalling rapidity. The homeless-a pitiful stream of women and children-wander aimlessly through the streets of their wrecked villages. If you stop a child toward evening and ask him where he is going, he will tell you: "I am searching for a place to sleep."

All winter long they have slept in nooks and corners, in alleys and by the roadsides, with no blankets, no covering whatever, their clothing the merest rags. The women clasp their wan-faced children to their breasts and on their faces is written the pitiful story of their utter despair.

The scenes in these lands of grief and suffering are beyond the power of imagination to conceive or of words to describe. Throughout the length and breadth of these countries there is no food save bread, the dry crusts of bread that they receive at the hands of charity. No meats, no soups, no vegetables, no sugar, less than a pound of bread daily, and even this poor morsel has often to be shared with others. "A poor old woman faint with hunger said to me to-day," writes one of the devoted workers: "'Sahib, the bread won't go down. I soak it in water, but it sticks in my throat."

"Wheresoever I go," a missionary reports, "I see men or women fallen on the street dead or dying, and little emaciated children stretching out their wasted hands 'for just one shahie for bread,' tears running down their cheeks; and still more awful are the little ones sitting propped against a wall, listless and torpid, indifferent even to food, waiting quietly for death."

"Just now," says another worker, "I have been interrupted in my writing. A Jewess has come to tell me of a woman who staggered to her door begging late last evening. She was allowed to spend the night in a corner of the house, and this morning she was dead. 'Won't you please send some one to bury her?' implored my caller."

Such pleas are frequent now. There are more dead than buried in Armenia. Men and women once in good circumstances and self-respecting, now hungry, helpless, friendless, crawl away, like animals, out of sight, die unseen, and lie unburled.

There is no joy of victory in these distraught lands, but only the cries of an agonized people to whom peace has brought neither benediction nor blessing, neither rest nor respite; lands where the war has left an awful human wreckage in its wake; a great Kingdom of Grief filled with the cries of mothers and orphans, a distressed people prostrate with desolation, numbed with suffering, having no partnership in the great joy of a liberated world.

No sons, no fathers, no brothers are returning victorious to their homes in Armenia or Syria, for their villages and their cities have been razed and ruined and lie in dust and ashes, and the men by the thousands and hundreds of thousands have been pitilessly murdered or barbarously deported.

Deported? Yes; but what a cuphemism for the most heartless and relentless crucity! Deportation means the loss of home, business property, and every personal possession. It means being driven into desert places, forced to march at the point of the bayonet until strength is exhausted; it means being refused shelter, food, drink; It means being subjected to outrage and calculated crucity.

Many such scenes of terrible and tragic suffering are in the very lands where Jesus walked with his disciples; where he had compassion on the needy multitudes, and fed them and healed them and comforted them. Many of these awful sights are even in the very shadow of the Mount of Olives, where Christ said: "Suffer the little children, and forbid them not, to come unto me: for of such is the kingdom of heaven." Millions of "the least of these my brethren" are hungry and naked and sick and in terrible prisons without walls. In them and through them the King of Pity and of Love is calling to you to minister to them just as you would do if you saw Him lying at your feet.

You, to whom Christmas has meant a time of reunion, a time of feasting and happiness; you, whose homes are warm and whose children are well fed, think now of these your brothers and sisters who are perishing. The cries of these children must reach your ears. The prayers of these mothers must touch your hearts. These homeless and starving millions are dependent on charity—your charity; for Turkish charity provides for no one—it begins and ends at home.

It is America's God-given privilege to feed the hungry from her great bounty and from her unlimited stores. It is her blessed duty to lift the head of fallen Armenia and put the cup of cold water to her lips and the morsel of bread in her hands, and so prove herself indeed the protector and liberator of the oppressed and subject races.

We have presented the needs of the Armenians twice before to our readers, and they have responded largely, liberally, most generously. But now the period of rehabilitation in the Near East is at hand. Vastly larger sums will be required to restore the refugees to their homes than were required merely to sustain life in their desert exile. The American Committee for Relief in the Near East, under the able leadership of Cleveland H. Dodge, is appealing for a minimum of thirty million deliars "with which," say the committee, "we can, humanly speaking, save every life."

We feel this cause to be so worthy, this need to be so desperately urgent that, even though we made a liberal contribution less than a year ago, we are now subscribing five thousand dollars to this new drive. We are doing this after having convinced ourselves by a careful investigation extending over a number of days that these funds will be wisely administered, that this work is in most capable hands, and that every dollar given will go for relief without the deduction of one cent for organization expenses. Send your own contribution quickly, and so bring new life and new hope to some weary, broken body in the Near East.

Now is our opportunity to show these lands made luminous by the footprints of Christ and the apostles what our Christianity of the West means to-day. Now is the time when these places of sacred history should receive a new sanctification by the service of God's children in the twentieth century. With a Christlike healing of the sick and feeding the hungry, we will make a royal highway for our Lord into the grateful hearts of these people, along which the King of Glory may come with his message of love and light.—Literary Digest.

"If a Man Love Me." (John 14: 28.)

These words from the Lord Jesus Christ, especially taking in consideration the connection here, are very farreaching respecting both God and man. Jesus says: "If a man love me, he will keep my word" (verse 23)—"my commandments" (verse 21). We do not have to be very observant these days to find many people—and church members, at that—who miserably fail at keeping the word of the Lord, and who pass by some very plain commandments as though they were not given. Is there any remedy for such an omission? Yes, the Lord Jesus gives it in this very text. "If a man love me"—this is the answer. Just get men to love the Lord, and they will keep his word, no matter what that is; for when they learn his will, they will do it—Jesus sald they would. But how get men to love him? This is the first and great question.

Is it not the love of God toward men that constrains them? Then get men to see first that even while they were sinners Christ died for them because he loved them; and if he loved them while they were disobedient and sinners, much more when they are obedient as sons (for Jesus says that if a man keep his word he will love him, and adds, "and my Father will love him"). The more that men are able to apprehend the dimensions of that love-its breadth. length, depth, height-and to realize that it "passeth knowledge," the more readily will they yield themselves to Him who loves them so. Therefore let us all "bow the knee," as Paul wrote the Ephesians, and pray earnestly that we may appreciate this fervent and boundless love, which is but faintly pictured by a father to his son as he stood with him on a mountain, and, pointing to the east, west, north, and south, then passing his hand across the heavens, said, "My son, the love of God is like this;" to which the son replied: "Yes, father, and we are right in the middle of it," So are all the Lord's faithful children.

Now, seeing such love manifest in Christ and God begets love in us and causes us to "keep his word," whether it be the first or the last part of the great commission, or whether it be loving our enemies or loving our brethren, or whether it be worshiping the Lord on Sunday at eleven o'clock or on Wednesday night at seven, or whatever it be, Lord Jesus, help us that we may "love thee,"

The Weak and the Strong.

(Exposition of Rom. 14 and 1 Cor. 8. By Prof. 1. B. Grubbs, Submitted by Isaac C. Hoskins.)

I hold it to be exegetically demonstrable, and therefore positively assert, that the difference between the weakness and the strength referred to in these scriptures is wholly unconcerned with, is absolutely independent of, all difference between ignorance and enlightenment. So prevalent, indeed, is the misconception of Paul's real meaning in these passages that it seems almost impossible to dispossess the minds of men of the false idea that the strong believer here is a man of broad, liberal views, having a clear insight into the true liberty of the gospel, while the weak believer is, per antithesis, a narrow-minded ignoramus, hampered by needless doubts and fears, and swayed too often by prejudice and bigotry.

We cannot, without just reason, allow to pass unquestioned an interpretation that is so very complimentary to such as claim superior knowledge and breadth of understanding as to questions involving practical differences among Christians.

Let the argument against this exposition be fully met and overthrown, on the one hand; or, on the other, let it be accepted as decisive, accompanied with a recognition of the fact that an advance has been made in the exegesis of these scriptures.

The demonstration alluded to proceeds on the basis of the most fundamental law in hermeneutics-the need of holding, in all interpretation, to the unity of truths, gathering the scattered fragments of teaching on any given topic, and discerning clearly the thread of meaning by which these are all bound up into one harmonious whole. If, as the result of any exposition, Paul or any other inspired author stands before us as an inconsistent writer. the law of harmony at once fixes the seal of condemnation upon that interpretation; yet this is undenlably the case as to the prevalent understanding of the passages before us. It so happens, indeed, in regard to two of the points of difference between the weak believer and his opponentthe restriction of food to herbs, in one case, and the rejection of sacrificial meats sold in the markets, in anotherthat the erroneous view lies on the side of the weak. Not, indeed, that he is weak on account of this view, but, as we shall see, on account of the relation to his conviction which his whole moral manhood is made to occupy under the influences of others.

But in reference to the third point of difference, that concerning the moral and religious character of sitting at a table in an idol's temple, the correct view is entertained by the weak believer, according to the apostle himself. And, if this can be made clear, as it undoubtedly will be, then must it be admitted that the difference between the weak and the strong is not a difference between the ignorant and the enlightened.

Come, then, to close quarters, you exegetical scribes, and let us see how this matter stands.

When, then, the apostle says, "If a man see thee which hast knowledge sitting at meat in an idol's temple, will not his conscience, if he is weak, be emboldened to eat things sacrificed to Idols?" you will surely say to me, concede, or at least seem to concede, that "knowledge" is on his side who stands in contrast with the "weak" believer.

In our turn we ask, would it not be well, before suspending much upon this "knowledge," to give careful heed to the admonition in reference to it given just before by the apostle? "If any man thinketh that he knoweth anything, he knoweth not yet as he ought to know "-a plain intimation that his knowledge may not be quite as perfect as he supposes. Let the caution dropped here be well considered by any one disposed to ascribe to himself the possession of broad, liberalizing views touching the freedom of the gospel. Yet the apostle freely admits that the claimant in the case immediately before him has knowledge of the truth "that no idol is anything in the world, and that there is no God but one," And though "there is not in every man this knowledge," the very lack of it may lead to the avoldance of a practical impropriety into which the boastful claimer of knowledge and liberality may fall himself, but may lead the other against the dictates of his con-Belence.

Now let it be carefully noted and never forgotten, that apart from the theoretical knowledge of the unity of God and the nothingness of idols there is a practical point of difference between the two, and that, in reference to this practical difference, the apostle emphatically decides the views of the "weak" believer to be correct. The one who prides himself upon his superior knowledge and his broad conception of Christian liberty considers it perfectly innocent, while the other considers it improper, to "sit at meat in an idol's temple." Which is right? Hear the apostic when he comes in the tenth chapter to treat of the merits of this point of difference: "What say I then? that a thing sacrificed to idols is anything, or that an idol is anything? But I say, that the things which the Gentiles sacrifice, they sacrifice to demons, and not to God; and I would not that ye should have communion with demons. Ye cannot drink the cup of the Lord, and the cup of demons: ye cannot partake of the table of the Lord, and of the table of demons."

Now, since, according to the tenth verse of the eighth chapter, it is the "weak" believer who regards it as wrong to "sit at meat in the idol's temple," and thus to "partake of the table of demons," but yet is emboldened to do violence to his convictions in the premises through the example of one who erroneously supposes it to be innocent to eat at the idol's table, how can it be truthfully said that the former's "weakness" consists in his ignorance? Clearly he is the one who has knowledge as regards this practical point of difference, while ignorance is justly chargeable upon him who boasts of his knowledge and liberty. This must be admitted, or the apostle will stand before us as guilty of self-centradiction.

Not only can we now see that the prevalent interpretation of these scriptures is erroneous, and ought to be abandoned, but we can also understand the nature of the "weakness" referred to by the apostle. He who has not sufficient moral manhood to carry out his own convictions of right, but wickedly wavers and yields against his conscience under the pressure of persecution or the influence of another's example, is weak in a far more vital element of his being than his intellectual faculties. Paul, therefore, locates the weakness under consideration in the conscience, since it shows itself unable to counteract the influences that draw its subject into a violent conflict with his convictions.

It is thus that both he and the one who influenced his act are represented as "wounding his weak conscience" and so "sinning against Christ," This is the result morally in every such case, whether the correctness of view be on the one side, as in the eating of herbs only, or on the other, as in the partaking of sacrificial meat at an idol's table. The difference between knowledge and ignorance has, in fact, nothing whatever to do with the ethical question involved. For it is universally true that "whatsoever is not of faith is sin," be the perpetrator of such an act an enlightened apostle or a blinded idolater. Nor is there any necessary connection between ignorance and the moral weakness in question. Erasmus Berenger, and a host of others, were superior to their age in enlightenment, but had little moral strength to stand by their convictions; while multitudes who were but babes in Christ suffered martyrdom rather than deviate in the least degree from their sense of duty.

It is obvious from all that has been said that the weakness of which the apostle speaks is neither identical with ignorance nor flows from it as an effect from its cause.

It is also clear why Paul should speak of one characterized by such weakness as "weak in his faith" (Rom. 14: 1), according to the correct rendering of Greene. The very next verse, as also verse 23, conclusively shows that the reference is to the subjective act of believing, and that, too, as regards the propriety of one's own course of action.

It is a man's faith simply and alone in the rightfulness of what he does. If he adheres firmly to this conviction. he is strong in his faith; if he weakly fails to abide by it, he is "weak in his faith." The constant practical exemplification of the law of Christian love required by the apostle throughout these teachings, the enforcement of a fraternal regard for the convictions of brethren in the surrender of supposed liberties, and even of actual personal rights, to meet their views of religious propriety, was never on any subsequent occasion neutralized by this infallible instructor of the church. When he afterwards said, "Let no man judge you in meat or in drink, or in respect of a feast day or a new moon or a Sabbath day," he speaks, as the context there shows, of a judgment proceeding from those who would enforce upon the church unauthorized institutions and precepts, such as we now see in the Romish enactment of cellbacy and Lent and a thousand other human inventions. This has nothing to do with the matter in hand, or, if it has, it would apply to any who would introduce and enforce unauthorized expedients against the protest of their brethren. But to insist upon the perpetual observance of the inspired instructions of an apostle in regard to the deference due conscientious conviction, to urge a constant compliance with the demands of Christian love in the case, is neither to bind a human judgment or precept upon Christians nor to ask for the fostering of ignorance and weakness among brethren. Such a view is based, as we have seen, upon a complete misconception of the weakness to which Paul alludes, while the question of ignorance forms no element whatever in the apostle's discussion.

The Way to Dorlt.

If I help you and you help me,
And we help some one else, you know;
Then that's a lovely way, you see,
To make this old world brighter grow.

If you serve me and I serve you,
And we serve some one else in need;
Then don't you see it's very true
This world would soon grow fair indeed?

If you and I would not forget 'To do these kindly deeds of cheer,
We'd have less reason for regret
With closing days of every year.

Then let's be busy every day
And scatter love and joy and light,
For that is just the only way
To make this world grow fair and bright.
—Francis McKinnon Morton.

There are such things as spontaneous flashes of suggestion that come on the inspiration of the moment, but they come to those who have previously meditated long and earnestly on the questions involved; and even so, those exalted moods in the Christian life in which the soul mounts up on wings like an eagle come to those who have tolled along the road of faithful daily service.—Bryan Collier.

An hour of solltude, passed in sincere and earnest prayer in conflict with and conquest over a single passion of subtle bosom sin, will teach us more of thought, will more effectually awaken the faculty and form the habit of reflection than a year's study in the schools without them.

"I Will Make You Fishers of Men."

Jesus seeing Simon, who is called Peter, and Andrew his brother, casting a net into the sea, for they were fishers, saith unto them: "Come ye after me, and I will make you fishers of men." Immediately they left their nets and followed him. Leaving them, he saw two other brethren, James, and John his brother, in the boat with Zebedee, their father, mending their nets, "and he called them." As did the other two, so did these, for they straightway left the boat and their father and followed

Following Christ precedes becoming fishers of men. No man can fish for men as Christ would have him do without first following Christ with all his heart. When these disciples chose to deny themselves and to follow Jesus, it was the parting of the ways. Their choice led through many hardships and trials upward to blessings inconceivable to them at the time. It was a choice for life, and with them there was no looking back. In this they should be an example to every person who elects to preach the gospel of Christ. The young man who is not willing to endure hardships as a good soldier, who is not willing to preach the gospel under adverse conditions, is not good material for the ministry of the Lord Jesus Christ. He will prove a failure and a detriment to the church. Whenever a man decides to preach the gospel of Christ, his decision should be to continue in the proclamation of the truth so long as life lasts, regardless of storm and sunshine, of poverty and wealth, or the frowns and smiles of the world. "No man, having put his hand to the plow, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God." (Luke 9: 62:)

The call of Christ is a call to higher service. They were believers in him. Being disciples in his preparatory school, they had seen some of his works and had heard some of his teachings. From fishers in the sea they were to be fishers of men, as much better as men are better than fishes. They were to have a part in the making of the greatest kingdom, doing the greatest work with the purest motives, using the greatest powers and with the greatest success. There is no work that is better or nobier possible to man. The nobility and greatness of the work should never be obscured by the thought of the temporary reward that should come to every faithful minister of Christ. Winning souls to Christ is so much greater and nobler than striving for dollars that all Christians should spura the thought of neglecting to win souls to Christ simply because the gold is not in sight. We hear so much said about the support of the ministry and about the stinginess of the churches that we are led to believe that many have ceased to fish for men and are fishing for dollars. This is a debasement of the high calling of the ministry of Christ; it is a lowering of the work of the church of Christ. With our hearts filled with love and gratitude for the mercy of God and with all that Christ has done for the salvation of the world, we should devote our thought and time to the greatness, blessedness, and nobility of the work of winning souls to Christ. If we are truly in love with the truth; if we have the spirit that Paul had and truly realize that woe is unto us if we preach not the gospel; if we are ready to endure hunger, stripes, and imprisonments, as did Paul and others, Christ will make us fishers of men. Without such a spirit of sacrifice and devotion, Christ cannot make us fishers of men. Those whom Christ called to be fishers of men were everyday men. He chose them from the humble calling of fishing. They were men of like passions and were tempted as are other men to-day. R. E. Thompson, in his book, "The Apostles as Everyday Men," says: "Suppose that our Lord had made up his first church out of rare and elevated natures-men who never would have doubted, or flinched from peril, or acted on the lower motive when a higher was possible—the Gospels would have been far less to us than they are now. We should have said that it was a beautiful story, full of religious poetry, but unable to take hold of people like us. . . . But, in fact, Jesus made up this first church of just such people as make up his churches to-day."

Jesus, in preparing the material that was to constitute the first church, which was established on the day of Pentecost, used those who were weak, as we are, and used Peter, who had denied him with oaths. May we not get the thought from this that we should not expect too much of the preachers of the present day? Even the most gifted and talented preachers are human beings and are subject to like passions as are other people.

Again, when we think of the success that these everyday men attained, we should not lose sight of the truth that the everyday men of the churches now may become powerful factors in advancing the kingdom of God in the world. While Christ called these four men to a higher, nobler life, he did not call them until they had been faithful in their daily duties. Faithfulness in our own business prepares us to be faithful in the Lord's business. In the same way that they were successful, so may every faithful minister of the gospel be successful in any community, and successful in a way that will be good for the community.

Jesus taught these four disciples the true method by an object lesson. Of this the Sunday School Times truly says; "No human occupation has ever so perfectly illustrated the art of 'soul winning' as that of the fisherman. Patience, knowledge of the interests of his fish, knowledge of the balt that will attract fish, faith in things unseen, skill, delicacy of touch, refusal to be discouraged, unlimited perseverance, conviction that he has not yet exhausted the possibilities of his art—all these and more make the true fisherman. They reveal the moral qualities that we must have to lead our fellow men to God. And the very maxims of this art disclose the true method for the Sunday-school teacher."

While the catching of fish by fishermen means the death of the fish, the catching of men by the gospel fishermen means life. God wants live men. He has no use for dead men in his kingdom. In fishing, the man uses bait, then to the very best of his ability he chooses the bait that will appeal to the fish. Some one has truly said: "The best human bait in the world is honest, sincere commendation. The surest way to drive men from us is to condemn or criticize." No godly preacher can fish effectively for men who does not teach with the authority of God's word. If his life is guided and molded by the truth which he preaches, the greater will be his success in fishing for men. The truest and most falthful ministers are not looking for the imperfections of Christians. It is remarkable how little fault Jesus found with his imperfect disciples. He complimented his disciples by giving them something to do. Working together brings people together. There are two methods of fishing: one by the net, catching fish in large quantities; the other by the line, catching them one by one. Jesus used both methods-personal work and great, enthusiastic meetings. Every disciple should fish for men by personal work. "They therefore that were scattered abroad went about preaching the word." (Acts 8: 4.) Quaint old Izaak Walton gave three rules for catching trout. The first is, "Keep yourself out of sight;" the second is, "Keep yourself farther out of sight;" and the third is, "Keep yourself farther still out of sight." The preacher who would have power in winning others must lose sight of self and selfish interests. He should be " the engine hidden in the depths of the vessel, that makes it go; and let others sit on the bowsprit and wave the flag."

The message, in order to influence, elevate, and purify the people, must come from a warm, obedient heart. The word of God has greater power and influence when it is warmed by the living presence of a person filled with its spirit. Personal character has great influence upon the souls of others. Soul inspires soul. No man who is influenced by worldly aspirations and worldly gain is capable of leading the people to the purest and best life.

"Come Unto Me . . . and I Will Give You Rest."

In this issue of the Gospel Advocate, styled the "Jesus Said" special number, it is to be hoped that, from the shining galaxy of his sayings recorded by the four evangelists, such selections will be made by different writers as will focus a large part of their light even within the narrow limits of our columns in this number. Where the material is so rich and abundant and is spread out in such great variety, the difficulty is not to find some saying that is suitable for treatment in such an issue of our paper, but to decide on which among the many of that class shall be selected for that purpose. The one chosen for the present article is not only famous and popular, but it strikes a responsive chord in the human heart at all times and has been the theme of unceasing pulpit treatment ever since it was first recorded nearly two thousand years ago.

Let us, first of all, look at this great invitation as it is recorded in full. It reads as follows: "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light." (Matt. 11: 28-30.)

Just as in all the history of frail and fallen humanity there was probably never an utterance even of divine origin filled with greater pathos and tenderness, so there was probably never a time when the heavy-laden and suffering multitudes of humanity called more loudly for such an invitation than now. Scattered over this sin-cursed and warridden earth there are literally millions of human beings groaning under oppressive burdens of privation and suffering in a thousand different forms and pitiably yearning for relief and rest. The blighting touch of cruel and bloody war, demolishing happy homes and devastating fair lands, has not only sent millions of men to untimely graves, but it has left many millions more who, though living, are in dire distress and threatened with hunger and starvation. O that they all might know "the Man of Galilee" and could grasp the full meaning of this his tender call as it still echoes across the centuries: "Come unto me. . . and I will give you rest."

The world will never find deliverance from "wars and rumors of wars" and the thousands of other burdens imposed by its own galling yoke until it exchanges that yoke for His who said: "My yoke is easy, and my burden is light." Hence, every step the world takes toward that exchange should be hailed with joy and meet with unstinted encouragement from the church. Why not? This is exactly the reason why all Christians, and particularly all preachers, should use every opportunity to encourage their respective governments in an effort to establish any national or international measure, such as the League of Nations, looking to the abolition of war and the reign of peace. Of this we hope to have more to say in an early issue, as it seems timely and important now.

Yearning for rest has marked the history of fallen humanity in all the ages. David, of whom Jehovah said he had found "a man after his own heart" (1 Sam. 13: 14), groaning under the oppressive burdens of his time, said: "I am restless in my complaint, and moan, because of the voice of the enemy, because of the oppression of the wicked; for they cast iniquity upon me, and in anger they persecute me. . . . O that I had wings like a dove! Then would I fly away and be at rest." (Ps. 55: 2-6.) Throughout the Old Testament period mankind groaned under the burden of sin, longing for deliverance, but the way of deliverance was yet future. The condition of men without Christ then, even as their condition without Christ now, is well expressed by Sir Edwin Arnold:

Which mean for rest, and rest can never find;
Lo! as the wind is, so is mortal life—
A mean, a sigh, a sob, a storm, a strife.

But Jehovah was preparing the way of deliverance, and as far back as Isaiah's day he said: "Look unto me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth." (Isa. 45: 22.) This beneficent invitation, though it came from the God of infinite love, was, nevertheless, only his call to the benighted denizens of earth to look unto him for the way of deliverance yet to be opened up in all its fullness when the same God, veiled in human form, should become "the man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief" (Isa. 53: 3); when he should be "touched with the feeling of our infirmities," and should be "in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin." (Heb. 4: 15.)

But when the Babe of Bethlehem was born, the longlooked-for way of deliverance had come; light had broken on the world, and a new day had dawned. From that time onward, not only has it been proper to sing with Faber, but even now and here, wherever men can take His "yoke" upon them and "learn" of him, "the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, shall guard" their "hearts and thoughts in Christ Jesus," (Phil. 4: 7.) In a most vital sense this "yoke" brings heaven and earth together in happy concord, and wherever it is loyally borne the will of God is "done, as in heaven, so in earth," (Matt. 6: 10.) And then, with both these happy abodes in mind—both heaven and earth—we may well put into the mouth of Him who offers this "yoke" the appropriate words of an unknown author:

> O Paradise! O Paradise! Who doth not crave for rest? Who would not seek the happy land Where they that love are blest?

Come unto me when shadows darkly gather, When the sad heart is weary and distressed: Seeking for comfort from your Heavenly Father, Come unto me, and I will give you rest.

Large are the mansions in your Father's dwelling, Glad are the homes that sorrows never dim; Sweet are the harps in holy music swelling, Soft are the tones which raise the heavenly hymn.

There, like an Eden, blossoming in gladness,
Bloom the fair flowers the earth too rudely pressed;
Come unto me, all ye who droop in sadness—
Come unto me, and I will give you rest.

M. C. KURFEES.

"When the Comforter Is Come." (John 15: 26.)

I should like to review this blessed promise of our Savior in the light of its fulfillment. Without doubt, Pentecost was the most striking event in the history of the church. In our study of this event two extremes are to be avoided.

(1) Pentecost should not be overestimated. Among our religious neighbors it is commonly believed that "Pentecost is the stronghold of the Campbellites," meaning "Disciples." A favorite criticism is found in the saying, "He never gets off of Acts 2: 38." In the same vein we might say in reply that there are those among the denominations who never preach a sermon or pray without mentioning the outpouring of the Holy Spirit. They themselves believe and would have others believe that God still pours out his Spirit in a miraculous measure, the only difference being that we do not see the tongues of fire. Some even claim to see them or something just as miraculous. In my reading I ran across this statement: "Pentecost, whether in the first century or in the twentieth, will give the peculiar power to the word which will awaken and convict." As a matter of fact, there has been no Pentecost in the twentieth century, and we need not expect one. Careful Bible study shows conclusively that this miraculous outpouring was promised to the apostles and that it was manifested only on two special occasions, and in each case the purpose of the demonstration is plainly apparent. Yet some of the most eminent and scholarly preachers in the land write and talk as if Pentecost was an everyday occurrence. Along this line we are told some very touching stories. Out of thousands I cite the following typical story as related by Mr. Spurgeon: "The father of Thomas a Becket went into the Crusades and was taken prisoner by the Saracens. While a prisoner a Turkish lady fell in love with him. When he was set free and returned to England, the lady followed him at the earliest opportunity. She did not know where to find him, and the only English word she could speak was the given name of her lover, 'Gilbert.' She determined to go through all the streets of England crying the name of Gilbert till she found him. She went to London first, and the passers-by on every street were astonished to hear an Eastern maiden crying; "Gilbert! Gilbert!" She passed from city to city, constantly calling, until one day there was an answer, and she found him whom she sought. Just so, we are told, Christ is seeking the sinner, and that an awakened soul, pierced through with the Spirit-driven arrows of conviction, may find him if he will but begin to cry: "Jesus, Jesus!"

But what is the true significance of Pentecost? It emphasizes the familiar fact that no event can be isolated from what precedes and follows it. There is a backward as well as a forward look in connection with every event. Recently General Pershing spoke at the Auditorium, in Nashville. To many it was a great occasion; to many he brought a thrilling message. Why? Because of what lay behind it: weary months spent in France; times when the issue of war was hanging in the balance; times when the General showed courage and patience and ingenuity; times when mothers' hearts were racked with pain and anguish. Had it not been for that history, Pershing's speech would have been commonplace.

But for Jesus there would have been no Pentecest. He furnished the theme for Peter's sermon. Because of what Jesus had said and done and because of the faith which the people had in him, the Holy Spirit was poured out on that memorable day.

Many have felt that Pentecost was not only the greatest, but the happiest, event in Peter's life. But I ask you seriously, was it not a far greater thing for Peter to be personally acquainted with Jesus, to stand in the relationship of his intimate friend, to sit at his feet and hear him teach, to see his gracious acts, and to break bread with him a thousand times? What he had said and done counts far more than anything which any one could say about him. It was not the kind of death which he encountered, but it was the kind of man who died that gives to Jesus' death its place in history. Thousands have died upon the cross. In fact, two other men died on the cross on the same day that Jesus was crucified, but Peter makes no mention of them. The wrath of his enemies made Jesus conspicuous as he faced the ignominy of the cross, but it was his own character that turned its shame into glory and gave universal meaning to the words: "I, If I be lifted up, will draw all men unto myself."

But each event has also a forward look. What is the look of Pentecost? When we read the story, we are duly impressed with the great Ingathering. We marvel at the result of Peter's sermons when we see how three thousand souls were added to the one hundred and twenty believers in one day. But shall we overlook the great multitudes, whom no man can number, that have been received into the fellowship of the church since that day? Shall we close our eyes to the prophetic utterance that the kingdom of Christ is to grow and spread until it covers the earth as the waters cover the deep?

My contention is, (2) Pentecost should not be underestimated. It was a great and glorious event, not only for Peter and the rest of the apostles, but for all mankind. The work of the Holy Spirit on that occasion was a thing of incomparable value. It is very significant that it had a threefold symbol. It is like unto the wind, which is an invisible but all-pervasive power. It is like unto flame, which not only symbolizes intense energy, but light and warmth and cleansing as well. It is like unto tongues, which stand for the proclamation of the gospel to all nations and in all languages. But the greatest lesson of Pentecost is not found through emphasizing one feature as against another, but in the contemplation of this event as a whole. Viewed in its entirety, Pentecost stands for the establishment of the kingdom and the church of the firstborn. Jesus Christ, the founder of the new religion, had disappeared. Henceforth some one must be his spokesman. I do not say "take his place." There is a difference between speaking for one and taking that person's place. Every now and then there appears in human society a leader among men who stands head and shoulders above his brethren. As he grows old, people who know his worth in the community begin to inquire: " Who shall take this man's place?" "Who shall continue his work?" There may be many applicants, but sometimes we despair of finding a worthy successor. As for myself, I have never had an aspiration to fill any great man's place—I fear lest my feet should "rattle in his shoes;" but I do have an earnest desire to fill my own little corner in the world creditably and well. If we feel this way about men, what must we say of Jesus? Who could take his place? No one. Elisha might take up the mantle of Elljah, but the successor of Jesus has never appeared. Jesus did not command his disciples to take his place. It was his desire that they should be his witnesses to bear testimony "both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea and Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth." These are the "standing orders" of Jesus to his disciples. They have never been rescinded.

It is a very simple but imperative obligation for every Christian to be an "introducer" of Jesus to those not yet acquainted with him. Some of the summer hotels employ a lady of fine social attainments to introduce each new guest to the others. From quite a different motive it should be the purpose of the Christian to Introduce his Lord and Master to others. Knowledge of Jesus carries with it an obligation-the obligation to disseminate that knowledge. Some complain of having nothing to do. But here is something that all can do-bringing others to Jesus. People greatly miss the mark in their ideal of how the world must be converted. Most of them believe that it must be done through paid preachers, and with that feeling they pay preachers to do it. But Jesus intended that every Christian should have a hand in the work. You do not have to preach big sermons from the pulpit to win people to Christ. Substitute the word "reporter" for "preacher" and you will get the thought. It is the business of the Christian to report to others his knowledge of Jesus and his saving gospel. This is the true apostolic succession. Women can do this work as well as men. If we really love Jesus, we won't need to be urged. Fancy, if you can, Mary and Martha keeping silent with regard to One who had been a welcome guest in that quiet home at Nazareth. But, remember, before we can tell a thing to others, we must believe it and feel it ourselves. Just at this time there is a dearth of gospel preachers. I have on my desk a dozen calls for preachers from a dozen different fields. The preacher, like the silver dollar, has come back into demand. He has almost become a luxury. Various efforts have been made to explain the scarcity of preachers. The usual explanation is that he has been underpaid, and is, therefore, turning to some other profession where he may make a living. But, to my mind, this is not the underlying cause. It goes deeper than wages. The explanation lies in the fact that people generally do not appreciate the meaning of Christ in the life of man. They do not feel the need of self-sacrifice and of personal testimony. The average Christian is denying himself the most glorious privilege ever vouchsafed to man-the privilege of telling about Christ to his neighbors. If every congregation in the land had this vision, there would be no need of sending off for a paid preacher. The congregation could readily supply its own preachers. Whatever we may think of the matter, it was the purpose of the Founder of the Christian religion that every disciple should have his place in a succession of workers that began on Pentecost and extends to the present hour. During the war we heard much of German propaganda, and we were amazed at the unfriendliness of that nation toward their fellow men. But since the war Germany has been following a course of action that is worthy of emulation all over the world. While the masses in England and in this country have been striking for shorter hours, the German people have been working fourteen hours in a day. It is freely predicted that German marks will advance in value much quicker than English pounds. It is the productive power of a nation that restores and enhances a nation's credit. This is not merely an economic observation. It is God's unchanging law. "Seest thon a man diligent in his business? He shall stand before kings; he shall not stand before mean men." When the church forgets its great mission, when its members learn to depend upon others for something they should do themselves, it ceases to be a church and becomes merely a social organization. It was not a pulpiteer, but it was Lamartine, poet, orator, and statesman, who said: "The one object of my life has been to bring men to God."

"Whoseever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be saved." This means far more than simply prayer. One must do more than say, "Lord, Lord, open unto us." He must hear and obey. In plain terms, he must go to work. "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." (Matt. 7: 21.)

The Things to Try.

The things that haven't been done before,
Those are the things to try.
Columbus dreamed of an unknown shore
At the rim of a far-flung sky;
And his heart was bold and his faith was strong,
As he ventured with dangers new,
And he paid no heed to the jeering throng
Or the fears of a doubting crew.

The things that haven't been done before Are the tasks worth while to-day. Are you one of the flock that follows, or Are you one that shall lead the way? Are you one of the timid souls that quall At the jeers of a doubting crew? Or dare you, whether you win or fail, Strike out for a goal that's new.

A GOOD REPORT.

We are glad to be able to make a good report to our readers for the year 1919. The Gospel Advocate has had much better support during this year than it did in 1918. We are also pleased to say to our readers that many of them are renewing and sending us new subscribers. As this is the season of the year in which many subscriptions expire, we are inclosing in the present issue a renewal blank. If your subscription is behind, a prompt renewal will be appreciated. We also earnestly request you to send us a number of new subscribers with your subscription.

While a number of religious papers are now charging three dollars per year for their papers, we are only charging two dollars per year, in advance. This is not an increase in the same ratio as the cost of production has increased. Christians should endeavor to create more and more interest in the great work of saving souls. Christian parents should not neglect to place good religious reading in the hands of their children. The young generation should not be permitted to become so worldly that they lose all Interest in the truth and religious work. young people are ready to scoff at the truth and preachers, it is clear that there is something wrong with their hearts. In this we want to urge upon our readers the importance of doing everything possible to disseminate religious papers and good books that will be uplifting and helpful to all alike. Some are doubling the amount of their subscription and some are sending us even as much as ten dollars, with the request that we send the paper to some poor Christlans who are not able to pay for it. Our readers may do a good work in this way.

Anthem of the Angels on Far Judean Hills.

On far Judean hills the wakeful shepherds lie
And watch their flocks by night;
From far beyond the star-bespangled sky
There gleams a mystic light,
As breaks upon their startled sight an angel throng,
Arrayed in robes of white, and then
Upon their raptured souls there bursts a heavenly song:
"Peace on earth, good will to men."

Decades and centuries have slowly taken leave,
Wars have raged (yet war must cease),
Since that celestial choir proclaimed at eve
The advent of the Prince of Peace.
Yet each trusting child of that slain and risen King
May hear above the restless din,
Across Judean hills, thy wondrous anthems ring:
"Peace on earth, good will to men."

LOUIA MARIE ADKISSON.

"The Poor in Spirit."

That Christ is the one to whom we must go for the secret of blessedness must be admitted. Too, that the man does not live who can show any course that man can possibly pursue that is as conducive to happiness as what Christ has taught us to do and be is a challenge that we can safely make to the infidel world. Man's greatest good—in fact, man's only good—is to be found in making an absolute surrender to the will of our Lord.

In the first paragraph of the Sermon on the Mount we have what is known as the Beatitudes. The word "blessed" occurs nine times, and is applied each time to souls that have an established character, which character is described by such descriptive words and phrases as, "the poor in spirit," "they that mourn," "the meek," "they that hunger and thirst after righteousness," "the merciful," "the pure in heart," "the peacemakers," "they that have been persecuted for righteousness' sake," and those whom men reproach, persecute, and say all manner of evil against, falsely, for Christ's sake. It is easy to be seen from these statements that the blessedness spoken of is bestowed on people for what they have done and are now doing. No chance here for people with merely good Intentions; good Intentions must be crystallized into character established by actions to reach the blessedness of the Sermon on the Mount.

"Blessed"—in some translations, "happy"—is a translation of makarios, and, literally rendered, it means one who is not subject to "fate" or "chance," but that this soul whom Christ says is "happy" or "blessed" is in the hands of the eternal Father, and that all things come to this soul just as he permits or directs. It certainly requires no great effort on the part of those who believe to see that such a soul is, indeed, "happy." He lives as long as he should live, and dies when God thinks it best for him to die. This soul can say: "My times are in thy hand." (Ps. 31: 15.) All of this man's experiences bring good to his soul. (See Rom. 8: 28.) And it must be remembered that this happy and blessed state is to be found "in the Lord," not out of him. (Rev. 14: 13.)

Each beatitude should be studied carefully with a desire to be just what each requires; but in this effort we will consider the first—namely, "the poor in spirit"—that we may see just what one comprehends and means to those who will have it; hence, we raise the question: Who are the poor in spirit? Those who are deeply sensible of their spiritual poverty and wretchedness are the only ones who could be called "poor in spirit." The prodigal son is a striking example; so are Gideon and others that might be named. (See Luke 15: 17-19; Judg. 6: 15.)

The sin of the ages since man's fall has been man's unwillingness to fall before God and plead absolute bankruptcy and ask him to guide and save man. The poor in spirit can say: "O Jehovah, I know that the way of man is not in himself; it is not in man that walketh to direct his steps." (Jer. 10: 23.) They also realize that "there Is a way which seemeth right unto a man; but the end thereof are the ways of death." (Prov. 14: 12.) They know that God's thoughts and ways are not theirs, but that they are as far above man's ways and thoughts as the heavens are above the earth." (Isa. 55: 8, 9.) Man wants his own way and has brought ruin upon himself. "I have spread out my hands all the day unto a rebellious people, that walk in a way that is not good, after their own thoughts." (Isa. 65: 2.)

Is it not true that poverty of spirit is the crying need of to-day? If Christ were talking to many of those who are active members of the church, could he not truthfully say: "Except ye turn, and become as little children, ye shall in no wise enter into the kingdom of heaven?" (Matt. 18: 3.) Surely Paul's admonition is sorely needed—namely: "Let no man deceive himself. If any man thinketh that he is wise among you in this world, let him become a fool, that he may become wise." (1 Cor. 3: 18.)

If all preachers to-day, all who claim to follow Christ, were "poor in spirit," no doctrine would be taught except the teaching of our Lord, no church would exist except the one he established. Is it not so? "For," says Christ, "theirs is the kingdom of heaven." How could it be otherwise? And it is not only true that no doctrine would be taught save that of our Lord (see 2 John 9), and no church exist except the one he established, but that church Bolshevism preached and practiced by some who claim to be members of the church of Christ would not be known among us, which Bolshevism makes the advocates "church wreckers," just as that preached and practiced in Russia makes the advocates government wreckers.

Imagine, if you can, the change in the religious world, if all were "poor in spirit." "Thy will, Father, not mine," would be our song and prayer, and love and peace would reign. Such is the case with many souls. Let us not despair, but prayerfully press onward and upward.

The Mormon View of Jesus' Birth.

WHEN WAS JESUS BORN?

An intelligent Mormon "Jaughs up his sleeve" at the observance of December 25, yet he observes it. He knows, by the words of Jesus himself, that he was born on April 6, just eighteen hundred and thirty years from the time the Latter-Day Saints Church was organized. No one ever heard of a Mormon child ever hanging up a sock or shooting a pop-cracker to observe it. Why?

WHERE WAS JESUS BORN?

The "Book of Mormon" says "in Jerusalem." The "Holy Scriptures" translated by Joseph Smith says "in Bethlehem." As he translated both books, a Mormon has to believe that Jesus was born in two places. They cannot settle the "where."

R. B. NEAL.

How would you work a gold mine, if you owned one? Would you listlessly pick at the poor-pay dirt of the surface, satisfied to get merely enough gold to sustain you? Would you give to the getting of gold only the work hours required by custom, and waste the rest of your time? Would you be a mere surface scratcher, a mere timesaver, in working your own gold mine? Or would you eagerly embrace every up-to-date opportunity and employ every modern means in your reach to bore to the heart of your bed of ore and sestfully work overtime developing your mine and taking out gold? It is no idle question. do own a gold mine-yourself-that is priceless and limitless in possibilities of development. Within yourself you may develop knowledge, ability, skill, efficiency, and opportunities that will assay as pure as gold.—Charles Grant Miller, in Christian Herald.

When Jesus Walked Among Men

[I consider the following quotation from Professor Fairbairs to be the finest descriptive article about Jesus' earthly ministry that has ever come under my observation, the New Testament, of course, excepted. It lifts me from my feet and makes me praise the God who could endow a man with such intellect as to compose it.—A. B. L.]

Jesus' discourses have so marvelous a hold on reality that their place, their time, and their whole social environment may be seen reflected as in a mirror. Nature is there as she lies under the clear Syrian sky. The lily blooms in a beauty that Solomon in all his glory fails to rival, while the great trees spread their branches in the radiant air, the birds build their nests in them, feed their young, and are fed by the Heavenly Father. The vines tended by the vinedresser grow on the hillsides; the fig tree blossoms on the plain, and speaks now of the summer which may tarry long, yet so surely comes, and now, laden with figs, of realized hopes, or, again, bearing nothing but leaves, of unfulfilled premises. The yoked oxen plow the fields; in the furrows they have made the sower walks, casting his seed into the prepared ground; while later the corn, white unto the harvest, covers the dark earth, and men as they watch it ripening pluck the golden ears and rub them in their hands. The lake, like a living eye, looks out on the landscape, and the heavens, whether in sunlight or in starlight, look down into the lake, which now rises tossed and angry at the stroke of the sudden tempest, and now lies placed and fair, inviting men to come and listen while He speaks by its brink; and man is there as well as nature. The fishermen, to his eye potential apostles, to other eyes but Ignorant and unlearned men, sit in the shadow of their boats mending their nets, or fare forth upon the lake and cast them into the sea, drawing them in here empty, and there so full that they break with their burden, or, again, leaving them behind in despair of their own lives endangered by some furious squall. Women toil and spin and grind at the mill, draw water from the well, seek health of the physicians, sin in the city, or minister in the home, where sisters are jealous and differ from difference of temper, where the housewife lights the lamp, sweeps the house, rejoices or sorrows with her neighbors, and delights to call them in to share her own happiness and celebrate it with a feast. There is nowhere so fine or so pure a picture of eternal womanliness, the nature that is so swift to see, so keen to feel, so shameless in its sinning, so splendid in its penitence, so quick in its gratitude, so ungrudging in its service, and so absolute in its devotion. Infants come in their mothers' arms to be blessed and to be pointed out as types of life within the kingdom. Children play in the market place, making games for their amusement out of the serious business of their elders; they sleep with the father in the bedchamber, or they sit at table, eat, and are filled, while the hungry dogs watch for the crumbs. Brothers differ over their inheritance; sons are by their expectations made suspicious of their father, the rectitudinous fearing he may prove indulgent to the profligate; while fathers think that sons dear to them will be as dear to their neighbors and dependents. In the city the poor and maimed, the blind and lame, are crowded together; in the marketplace where the children play the weary laborer stands waiting to be hired, and often waits in vain. The rich men live in stately houses, are clothed in purple and fine linen, "and fare sumptuously every day;" while servants wait at their tables, and guests come by invitation, each at once clad in fit raiment and expected to know his proper place. There are slaves that may be beaten, and to them the foreman is harsher than the master; and there are workmen who may be paid, and they are easily discontented with their wages. On the bench there sits a judge of a genuinely Oriental type, terrible to the poor and the weak, for he neither "fears God nor regards man." On the road from the capital to the provinces priests travel absorbed in a pride that will not allow them to notice the man who has fallen among thieves. At the street corner the Pharisee carries himself disdainfully before men; in the temple he boasts his almsgiving and fasting, and bears himself proudly before God; while the publican tries to stand hidden from hard and curious eyes, and does not dare to look up into the face of heaven. The representative of Cæsar lives and acts like a Roman; the people hate him and fear him; the sects discuss, academically, questions concerning the tribute money, which their scrupulous consciences would fain refuse to pay, though they are not strong enough to withstand prudence prompted by compulsion. The whole Jewish world is there, a compact, coherent, living world, which we can rearticulate, revivify, and visualize, even though the magic mirror in which we behold it is the teaching which reveals the kingdom of heaven,-A. M. Fairbairn, in "The Philosophy of the Christlan Religion."

"Verily I Say Unto Thee."

It is frequently stated in the four Gospels, "Jesus answered and said," and, "Verily I say unto thee." His word was with power. He never failed to command the attention of both his friends and enemies. Multitudes followed him, so great was the conviction of his message. They would gather by the seaside, on the mountain, in the house or temple, to hear the words of grace that came from his mouth. His discourse was simple and understood by the masses, who heard him gladly. They could grasp the point and force of his teaching, and thus he was able to wield a strong influence upon them. His words and illustrations could be appreciated by all.

The fifth chapter of Matthew is a part of the "Sermon on the Mount." The principles taught here by Jesus would revolutionize the world if appropriated to the hearts and conduct of the people. The first principle announced seems to be basic in the Christian religion. "Blessed are the poor in spirit" shows to what extent we should realize how dependent we are upon God. We neither have nor enjoy anything of ourselves. God provides for us. He gives us food, raiment, and shelter, and provides spiritual and eternal blessing through Jesus Christ. We must recognize his sovereignty and do only as he directs to receive his favor. Israel wandered and fell repeatedly when guided by their own impulse and wisdom. The only result in "walking according to the course of this world" is wandering from God into sin. And Jesus would have us, first of all, trust God and follow his guidance.

So with all the truths and principles laid down by Jesus in this chapter. If the world would imbibe and apply them, the result would be fellowship with God; sympathy of all individuals, classes, and nations with each other; and strife and wars would cease. Only then shall we be perfect, as our Father who is in heaven is perfect.

The result of such simple, sublime teaching was that the people were astonished at his doctrine. It was so real and practicable. It is the same yet when we can get the multitude to hear.

Training Little Children

"The greater man, the greater courtesy."

In every home opportunities should be made for the little children to practice consideration and care for something weaker than themselves. The cherishing instinct, both in the individual and the family, needs cultivation and direction. It is manifested in the love of little girls for their dolls and in the devotion of boys to their pets. If this quality of nurture is not exercised or properly directed, it withers; for affections must be exercised if they are to develop. We often see spoiled children in American families where all their desires are gratified without effort on their own part and they are given no opportunity to serve. Many a mother virtually makes a slave of herself for her children, humoring every whim, relieving them of all care, trouble, and responsibility, only to find when they are grown that they are utterly selfish and inconsiderate.

Unfortunate, too, is the only child or the youngest member of the family, who is over indulged, with no more dependent member of the household to call forth his tender feelings. Herein lies one great value of the kindergarten, where children are given opportunities to help those younger than themselves.

For the child without companions in the home, the parent should provide occasions that require service or sacrifice for others. Arrange to have his friends come frequently to play with your little one and share his toys, suggesting that the little guests must have the best.

Adaptability is gained through companionship with one's equals. From association with boys, little girls learn something of fair play and become acquainted with the sturdler virtues; while from girls the boys learn to have a chlvalrous attitude toward womankind.

The instinct of nurture is developed through the care of a garden or pets, for a child must exercise thought and put it into practice in order to obtain results. Then, too, generosity and respect are stimulated by sharing the fruits of his care-a little bouquet for mother, a head of lettuce for a neighbor, an extra kitten for a playmate.

If pets have young, the child's mother should call attention to the care of the mother for her little ones, and her courage and self-sacrifice whenever the young are endangered. A child should be taught to take entire charge of his pets, to weed and care for his garden, if he is to receive the full benefit in character development and achieve the self-respect which comes from responsibilities accepted.

Then, too, good manners which spring from consideration are as essential to the happiness of the world as are good morals, and parents should be examples of both to their children. How often virtuous people make us unhappy by their lack of tact! Courtesy and graciousness smooth out the rough places of life. A tiny boy of three can raise his hat and one of five can rise at table and push mother's chair into place. When older people enter a room, children should rise; in fact, they should be taught to practice all the little daily civilities. But courteous manners are taught slowly; "for precept must be upon precept, precept upon precept; line upon line, line upon line; here a little, and there a little." Many a man of good character has greatly limited his usefulness by his lack of "polish," because his mother, either from stupidity or overindulgence, neglected his social training.

At this momenous time it is especially important that all means possible be employed to foster the instinct of caring for the weak and dependent.

It would be well if more children were made to feel responsible for some child of less favored circumstances. It is astonishing how boys and girls will rise to the occasion when responsibility is placed upon them. In 1913 my eleven-year-old niece, who lived in London, had a "godchild" in another city, to whom she wrote a monthly letter and sent little gifts at Christmas time and other holidays.

At the present time the millions of little allied orphans should make a strong appeal to the childhood of America. Correspondence between them would not only teach our children consideration for others and develop their familiarity with a foreign language, but it would also help cement the friendship of America with her allies and greatly promote the cause of internationalism.

Love's Legacy.

He who writes these things once knew a man who was to him companion, friend, and more than brother. They lived, they thought, they argued together; together they walked on the hillside and by the seashore; they had itstened to the wind as it soughed through the trees, and to the multitudinous laughter of the waves as they broke upon the beach; together they had watched the purple light which floated radiant above the heather, and together they had descended into the slums of a great city where no light was, nor any fragrance, and had faced the worst depravity of our kind. Each kept hope alive in the other. and stimulated him to high endeavor and better purpose; but though the same week saw the two friends settled in chosen fields of labor, the one settled only to be called home, the other to remain and work his tale of toil until his longer day be done. But the one who died seemed to leave his spirit behind in the breast of the man who survived; and he has lived ever since, and lives still, feeling as if the soul within him belonged to the man who died. -A. M. Fairbairn. 0 0 0

The Old Year and the New.

Up woodland slopes my path has led, And this is the garland I weave, to spread O'er the icy limbs and the drooping head Of the dying year, There's pale green pine for youth that is fled; For hope fulfilled, the sumach red; And the bayberry gray when the years have sped, And death draws near.

There's a strange new warmth in the noonday sun, And a laugh of joy in the streams that run; The cry of life that has just begun, The year's newborn. There's a sigh in my heart for a task never done, For a goal never reached, for a prize never won, For the web of Illusion ambition has spun, For a hope foresworn.

The gold of to-morrow is heaped in the west. A voice whispers low: "Unfulfillment is best; For thy soul finds its life in eternal unrest, In a truth unrevealed.

Thou art rich in a treasure that's yet half possessed, In a hope yet unborn in a creed half confessed; i in a man yields the secret that's locked in his breast, And vision is scaled,

AT HOME AND ABROAD

Change of address: F. W. Smith, from Blair Boulevard to 921 Sixteenth Avenue, South, Nashville, Tenn.

From Guy Renfro: "I send Christmas greetings to the churches in South Alabama with which I have worked."

R. P. Cuff reports one confession and baptism at Lawrence Avenue Church, this city, at the regular service last Sunday.

From Mrs. L. Tucker, Knobel, Ark.: "I certainly did enjoy reading the 'Loyalty' and 'Sermon' Numbers of the Gospel Advocate.

From W. R. Cox, Remmel, Ark,: "I surely appreciate the splendid paper you are getting out. Especially fine are the special numbers."

The brethren at Miami, Fla., would like to get in touch with a good song leader who would like to spend the winter in Florida. Write to Joe L. Netherland, Box 253, Miami, Fla.

The wedding of Mr. S. Lyle Morrow and Miss Josephine Gill was solemnized at the bride's home in Allensville, Ky., on December 19. The Gospel Advocate extends congratulations.

A roll-call service and reunion of old members will be held at the Russell Street Church, this city, next Sunday. It is hoped that Brother Sewell, now in his ninetieth year, will be able to make a talk.

"The Gospel Advocate has the tone of the same work as in days of David Lipscomb and E. G. Sewell some thirty-five years ago when I began to read it."—H. L. Richardson, Summertown, Miss.

From Mrs. N. A. Rainey, Cottage Grove, Tenn., December 6: "I wish you would publish in the Gospel Advocate that we want a reputable physician to locate at this place. We want one of primitive Christian tendencies, if not a member of the church, if possible. Address W. E. Rainey, at this place."

T. M. Carney, San Angelo, Texas, writes to "the editors and contributors" of the Gospel Advocate: "Please accept my thanks for, and appreciation of, your patient and able efforts during the year 1919. They have been helpful and encouraging to me. May our Heavenly Father bless you all, and keep you 'by the power of his word' through the changing scenes and seasons of another year."

From C. A. Buchanan, Floresville, Texas: "I am entitled to the preachers' reduction, but will not use it this time. There is no way to estimate in money the value of the Gospel Advocate to me. I know I can be a better preacher now, having read the special numbers of this year. May you continue to maintain the present high standard of the Advocate."

From Charles King, Melvin, Mich.: "I enjoy the Gospel Advocate and want to see all Christlans reading it. Often one number is worth the year's subscription. I like the special numbers. Brother Thomas was with us last Lord's day and preached for us both morning and evening. We seem to be too far north, as few preachers visit us, especially in the winter. We surely would enjoy a visit from a good preacher."

From Tice Elkins, Fort Worth, Texas, December 17:
"We were almost frozen out at church last Lord's day and had no service at night; but last night we had a good time at Bible study and prayer meeting. I baptized two fine young ladies after our lesson, and I understand there are several others almost persuaded to take their stand for God. All departments of work at Southside-Central Church are moving along fine. I am putting on a campaign to find all the stray members, and will put the sisters to work next week to make a house-to-house canvass, hoping to increase our attendance."

J. M. McCaleb writes: "Beginning at Beech Grove, Maury County, Tenn., on January 4, I plan to travel south as follows: Columbia, Lynnville, Lawrenceburg, Florence, Birmingham, Atlanta, Union (South Carolina), Valdosta, Jacksonville (Florida), reaching the latter point on February 2. I will probably spend some of February in Florida, then go west through Texas as far as Abilene. Those who have kindly ordered books to sell for the benefit of the Girls' Sewing School in Japan can send the proceeds to me at any time at 2625 Montgomery Street, Louisville, Ky."

Mrs. Ed. Jones furnishes the following: "A pleasant surprise was given A. S. Derryberry and wife on the night of December 12, their thirtieth wedding anniversary, when more than half a hundred members of the Reid Avenue church of Christ showered them with many useful gifts at their home on Olympic Street. An hour was pleasantly spent, Talks were made by A. S. Derryberry and Oscar Peal; readings and songs were also enjoyed. Brother Derryberry has been laboring with the Reid Avenue church for four years and is very much loved by the members, who are ever willing to support him in the good work he is engaged in. May the Lord help us all in laboring to bring many to the fold through the coming year."

From T. M. Carney, San Angelo, Texas, December 15: "The first Lord's day in this month was an encouraging one for the church of Christ at this place. At the close of the morning services two ladies took membership with us, and at the close of the evening services one young lady made the 'good confession' and was baptized on Wednesday evening at our prayer service. The general work of the church here seems to be moving forward steadily. Our contributions are increasing very nicely. These brethren contribute to missions besides the support they give the cause here. We are going to make a contribution to the work at Washington, D. C., next Lord's day. Let all the churches of Christ that are able (and most of them are) get busy and raise the necessary funds to erect a nice house for worship in the capital city. One of the elders here stated that they had fellowship in erecting a church house in the capital city of their State, and that we were now ready to assist and have fellowship in the work at Washington. Dear readers, should not every one who is able desire fellowship in this worthy effort? 'Let us work while it is day; the night cometh, when no man can work,""

ABOUT RHEUMATISM

What Thousands Have Found Gives Relief From This Painful Trouble.

Rheumatism is a constitutional disease, manifesting itself in local aches and pains, inflamed joints and stiff muscles. It cannot be cured by local or external applications. It must have constitutional treatment.

Take a course of the great bloodpurifying and tonic medicine, Hood's Sarsaparilla, which corrects the acid condition of the blood on which rheumatism depends, and gives permanent relief. This medicine combines, with excellent alteratives and tonics, what is generally conceded to be the most effective agent in the treatment of this disease.

If a cathartic or laxative is needed take Hood's Pills. Purely vegetable.

"Making It Effectual."

BY F. B. SHEPHERD.

It must be remembered that the church of the Lord Jesus is not a hothouse plant needing the careful nursing of God through the fiery trials of the present only to be finally rescued to spend the eternal future; but it is intended to be the rolling "stone," ever growing in size, power, and momentum, to finally crush in its irresistible onrush all opposition. Its message is the leaven that inevitably will permeate society; its weapon, the "sword" that slays and the "power" that defeats the enemy. (Eph. 6: 13-17; Rom. 1: 16; 1 Cor. 1: 18-21.) The strength, courage, and success of the early Christians resulted from a well-grounded conviction of their power to triumph with the "word." They "ran the race" with steadfastness (Heb. 12: 1) because they were untrammeled by the theories of men. Unincumbered with any "traditions" or "history" of an ecclesiastical system, they enjoyed the freedom of unadulterated truth. Hence, they conquered. To-day the absolute scripturalness of our plea makes it irresistible in its appeal, unassailable in its logic, yet simplicity itself in practice. Positive and dogmatic it undoubtedly is, yet adapted to the needs (2 Tim. 3: 16, 17) of man, though not adaptable to his whims. "Sound doctrine" to the ones seeking salvation (1 Cor. 1: 18), but not tickling the itching ears of the frivolous and indifferent (2 Tim. 4: 3). Hence, what we need is not a revision of our message or improvement in our weapons, but rather a definite, wisely executed plan of campaign; which plan, with all the details necessary, is revealed in the record of apostolic precedent. (Acts 13.) The Holy Spirit made the door effectual by instructing Antioch to separate and send Paul and Barnabas to the work assigned. We may make this door effectual by separating and sending a worthy man to carry the "water of life" to the souls crying for its thirst-quenching power. Two men with their wives—one in Colorado, the other in Tennessee—are ready for the work. Where is the church interested enough to investigate and, if satisfactory, send?

Donations for the existing work should be sent to John Sherriff, Bulawayo, Rhodesia, Africa; or, if you so desire, to the writer at 1409-A Jackson, Amarillo, Texas. The church of which I am a member and an evangelist indorses me as a safe messenger to receive and transmit funds and has the oversight of the books at all times.

Remember the Potter Orphan Home Ford.

BY H. C. SHOULDERS.

The Ford fund is growing, but not as fast as seems to me it should. This is a very deserving appeal, and should meet the approval and hearty support of every Christian. Brother and Sister Hugh Potter have charge of the Home and are giving their time to the care of the children. Brethren, this is a great opportunity for us all to help the Home and put Brother Potter in a position to do more and greater work for the children. Now, brethren, let every one put his shoulder to the wheel and put this fund "over the top." I appeal to every reader of the Gospel Advocate to have at least one share in this Ford car, which is one dollar. Talk to your neighbor, and let's have this as the beginning of doing things. If too much is received for the car, I will turn the remainder over to Brother Potter for the regular running expenses of the Home. Don't say, "Well, some one else will look after that," but say, "I want to help in that good work," and send your offering to me-H. C. Shoulders, Box 194, Sellersburg, Ind.

BETTER THAN WHISKEY FOR COLDS AND FLU

New Elixir, Called Aspironal, Medicated With Latest Scientific Remedies, Used and Endorsed by European and American Army Surgeons to Cut Short a Cold and Prevent Complications.

Every Druggist in U. S. Instructed to Refund Price While You Wait at Counter If Relief Does Not Come Within Two Minutes.

Delightful Taste, Immediate Relief, Quick Warm-Up.

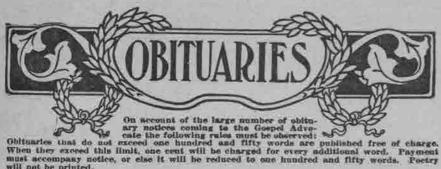

The sensation of the year in the drug trade is Aspironal, the two-minute cold and cough reliever, authoritatively guaranteed by the laboratories; tested, approved and most enthusiastically endorsed by the highest authorities, and proclaimed by the common people as ten times as quick and effective as whiskey, rock and rye, or any other cold and cough remedy they have ever tried.

All drug stores are now supplied with the wonderful new clixir, so all you have to do to get rid of that cold is to step into the nearest drug store, hand the clerk half a dollar for a bottle of Aspironal and tell him to serve you two teaspoonfuls with four teaspoonfuls of water in a glass. With your watch in your hand, take the drink at one swallow and call for your money back in two minutes if you cannot feel your cold fading away like a dream within the time limit. Don't be bashful, for all druggists invite you and expect you to try it. Everybody's doing it.

When your cold or cough is relieved, take the remainder of the bottle home to your wife and babies, for Aspironal is by far the safest and most effective, the easiest to take and the most agreeable cold and cough remedy for infants and children.—Adv.)

She was burried at her home town, Plainview, Texas, on November 11. She was the daughter of Curtis B. and Harriet New. She was born in Graves County, Ky., on December 4, 1861, and was married to Brother Wescoat about thirty-one years ago Wescoat about thirty-one years ago. Soon after their marriage ne paperacher into the church of Christ with his own hands. To this union were born two children, both of whom were with her when she departed this life. Soon after their marriage he baptized two children, both of whom were with her when she departed this life. Brother Wescoat had three children by his first wife. I have received personal letters from them saying: "Brother Peace, you can't say too much of her as a stepmother; for she was a true, good mother, and cared for us as she did her own children." Loving hands did all that could be done for her. She passed away with a smile and without a struggle. She had been sick at her daughter's for several months with stomach trouble. Sister Wescoat was a grand and no-ble Christian woman, loved not only by the members of the church, but by by the members of the church, but by all who knew her. She was a live, active worker in the church. I have known her for more than ten years, and can truthfully say that she was as good a woman as I have ever known in my life. In the spring of 1893 I was attacked by Muscular and Inflammatory. Rheumatism. I suffered as only those who have it know, for over three years. I tried remedy after remedy and decter after doctor, but such relief as I received was only temporary. Finally I found a remedy that cured me completely, and it has never returned. I have given it to a number who were terribly afflicted, and even bedridden with Rheumatism, and it effected a cure in every case.

I want every sufferer from any form of rheumatic trouble to try this marvelous healing power. Don't send a cent; simply mail your name and address, and I will send it free to try. After you have used it and it has proven itself to be that long-looked for means of curing your Rheumatism, you may send the price of it, one dollar; but, understand, I do not want your money unless you are perfectly satisfied to send it. Isn't that fair? Why suffer any longer, when positive relief is thus offered you free? Don't delay. Write to-day.

R. M. PEACE.

Wilson.

On Saturday night, November 22, 1919, Brother James R. Wilson was called from labor to rest. With him the paramount issue was Christianity. He lived as he believed. His walk before men showed that he was firm in his convictions of right and firm in his convictions of right and wrong. Scrupulously honest, he acted upon the principles of honesty and truthfulness in his dealings with his fellow creatures. His deeds of kindness were known only to those who asked his assistance in time of trouble and distress. He cared not for the plaudits of men, but the approval of his acts by an all-wise Heavenly Father is what he sought, and we feel that when he has been tried he shall that when he has been tried he shall receive the crown of life. He was universally loved by his fellow townspeople and will be sadly missed by this town and community. In the death of Brother Wilson his wife has lost a kind and affectionate husband; his children, a loving and indulgent father; and the church of Christ at Thornton, Texas, has lost one of its most loyal members, one of its best helpers, one who was always found to be ready to do such work as would truly advance the cause of the king-dom of God's dear Son on earth; and we feel that his influence and everwe feel that his influence and ever-ready help will be greatly missed. In the death of Brother Wilson the Sun-day school has lost one of its most faithful workers and the class a val-uable aid and friend. This commit-tee feels that it can express no greater tribute to the name of James R. Wilson than to say that he was truly a Christian.

Smith.

Smith,

The angel of death poised in solemn silence over our home again on the morning of October 13, 1919, and claimed for his own another treasure of our home. Horace Mann Smith, youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. Claude Smith, was born on September 19, 1918, and departed this life on October 13, 1919. On June 13, 1917, God sent an angel to waft the spirit of little Paul to that fair clime where suffering is unknown. All that loving hands and anxious hearts could do was done for our precious babes, but God saw fit to add them to his flock of lambs in his upper fold. The passing away of these two treasures leaves places vacant in our home which never can be filled. Some writer has said: "Woe unto them that smile not over a cradle and weep not over a tomb!" Truly we have done both. He who has never tried the companionship of a little child has carelessly passed by one of the greatest pleasures of life as one passes a rare flower without plucking it or knowing its value. We know that to these sweet children death is no other thing than the dispatcher of all displeasure, the end of all travail, the gate of gladness, the port of Para-dise, the beginning of all blissfulness. Our two boys are now basking in the Our two boys are now basking in the sunshine of God's love, while father, mother, and one brother are left to mourn their going away. We saw their light-blue eyes grow dim, their cheeks grow pale, and their lovely forms fade away into the tomb, and none could tell the cause that blighted their leading. their leveliness. But sometime, somewhere, we'll understand that God knows best and doeth all things well. The simplest and most obvious use of sorrow is to remind us of God; and may this, the second and greatest sorrow of our lives, draw us nearer to each other and our God. MOTHER.

Anderson.

Brother W. H. (Horace) Anderson was bern on May 6, 1882. In his early youth he obeyed the gospel. On June 10, 1908, he was married to an excellent Christian girl—Ethel Brown, of Celina, Tenn. Of this union two children and the contract of the state of the contract of th dren were born, a boy and a girl. Sister Anderson died on June 17, 1913, having lived only five years and seven days to bless and brighten his home. On September 24, 1919, Brother Ander-son passed out of the earthly tabernacle and into that prepared place where parting and sorrow can never come.
"For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dis-solved, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." (2 Cor. 5: 2.) Again: "For which cause we faint Again: For which cause we taint not; but though our outward man perish, yet the inward man is renewed day by day." (2 Cor. 4: 15.) The above scripture I believe to be true of Brother Anderson. His affliction was progressive paralysis of the muscles, which had its beginning in the right which had its beginning in the right hand and gradually spread over the whole body, and at last the outer man perished. We tenderly consigned the body to mother earth, in the Brown graveyard, in Celina, Tenn., there to rest till Jesus shall raise and immortalize it, that the pure soul of Brother Anderson may have a fit body in which to dwell in the presence of our Heavenly Father and be an associate of the holy angels. He was always earnest and meekly sincere in all of his acts, and his character was such as to com-mand the highest respect of all who knew him. Children were especially attracted to him, and he was very fond of them. One noticeable feature at the funeral was the very large number of children present. We may have a strong hope that his Christian walk and meek, pure life in their midst will bear fruit in the influence over their lives. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them." (Rev. 14: 13.)

Wellington, December 9.-I have just recently closed a very pleasant year's work with the church here. The results have not been all that we hoped for, yet we trust that the work has not been in vain. We have some as noble Christian characters in the church at Wellington as I have ever met anywhere, and, as in almost all congregations, there are some not so well developed in the Christian virtues. I shall continue to live at Wellington and preach some here and at points in the country near here at points in the country near here that I can reach on Sunday mornings and return home that night. I am at present working for the Wellington Hardware Company, and may continue to do so indefinitely. I had much rather devote my entire time to preaching the gospel, but circumstances seemed to make it absolutely necessary that I engage in other work. This is no bad comment on the necessary that I engage in other work. This is no bad comment on the Lord's faithful at this place, either. Those who have stood by me in a financial way the past year are still standing by me, and they are liberal with their means, too. I have never really received a support for my work since I have been preaching, except in a very few instances, and I have moved about so much (because a few discremited brethren wanted to try disgruntled brethren wanted to try a new preacher and it was thought the best interests of the cause of Christ demanded it, I have sought other fields of labor) that it has taken all that I have ever been able to save to pay moving expenses. All things considered, I believe that I can do more good by living in one place and working at something else for a living and preaching as I have oppor-tunity. I am tired of humoring the whims of a few members of the church, when such humoring entails so great a sacrifice on me and my family. I may have time for a few meetings next summer. Those desir-ing my services for such work will please not wait till July or August to write me about the work.—C. D.

A Good Letter from Japan, By C. G. VINCENT.

Brother Y. Hiratsuka, our native evangelist of the Kamitomizaka Church, writes as follows: "We are, indeed, very sorry to hear that you and Sister Vincent do not return to Japan. It is a disappointment to us, but we are glad to have your wife in better health. We all, in the church here, thank God for your great and good guidance and help to this work while you were in Japan. During your five years in Japan many good brethren became Christians. You remember them. [Here he gives a list of names too difficult for the readers to pronounce.] I thank you for your every kindness to my family and to me. We shall not forget as long as we live."

In the next part of his letter he makes an appeal that I sincerely hope will soon be answered by some worthy and capable couple. He says: "We desire you send us a nice missionary couple soon. We need the guidance of some good American brother. Any brother whom you and Brother Freeman send to us, we welcome them very much." Who will respond in the words of an ancient worthy: "Here am I; send me?" This is a Macedonian call. The need, the opportunity, and the ability to meet the need, all together, put us under a responsibility not easy to escape in the day of reckoning. Write me or W. W. Freeman, Abilene, Texas, if interested.

Regarding the lot, he writes: "We lost one good lot, as you know; but we are investigating another one. It is not far from our present place. As you say, we will do—that is, when we find one that is good for us, we will buy it and pay cash all we can and report how much more is needed. We think we should buy in hurry, because Tokyo land is getting higher, like rice, all the time."

This week I received on the reimbursement fund (eight hundred dollars was returned to a donor who made the gift while very sick, thinking he would die; but having regained health, the old brother badly needed the money, so the same was returned to him, and we are trying to reimburse the lot fund to this amount before proceeding further) one gift for $1. Total given in cash and pledges, $304.50, leaving $495.50 yet to be raised. Let us hope that others will have a part in this good cause.

As to recent results, Brother Hiratsuka says: "I am very glad to tell you that we have had three baptisms since the last time I reported. They are two young men students and one young lady. We thank God for these new brethren. Please pray for them. We always thank God for the good American brothers and sisters who help us to tell the gospel to our nation."

Let us bear this work in our hearts to pray for it and to give to it as God prospers us. My new local address is 1210 North Fourth Avenue, Knoxville, Tenn.

The Double Nature of Man. No. 1. BY TICE ELKINS.

"And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul." (Gen. 2: 7.) "There is a spirit in man: and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding." (Job 32: 8.)

Whence came I? What am I? Whither am I bound? These are questions which have excited in the human mind an intensity of thought and feeling awakened by no other subject. They are questions of transcendant importance; for all that elevates us in the scale of being, all that directs to noble and virtuous purpose the energies of our nature, all that can give permanency to our hopes of an eternal being or satisfy our longings after immortality, is centered in the solution which reason and religion give of them. The very rules of life, the maxims of society, the ultimate purposes and aims of a social and immortal being, are dependent on them; for, unless we know what man is, what are the present objects of his being, and what is to be his final destiny, how can we prescribe rules for his conduct or lay before him proper motives of action? How can we still the disquietude of his heart or prevent the soul from falling back, discomfited and distressed, in its unsatisfied longings to solve the mysterious problem of its own being? Any effort, then, however weak and unsatisfactory it may be, looking toward the solution of this problem, is not unworthy of considerate attention and thought.

But how little does man know of himself! After all the research of science, from the time that "Know Thyself" was first inscribed upon the temple of reason till the present hour, what has been the result? How little do we know of even our physical economy-the curious mechanism of the human body! The coarser appurtenances of the grand machinery, indeed, are very well known; but the finer qualities of our being, which are essential to our existence, which give energy to the elastic springs of life, have as yet eluded the search of science and the skill of human ingenuity.

Who can look upon this organism without seeing and feeling that he is "fearfully and wonderfully made?" But if the investigation of our boddies is attended by so many difficulties and involves mysteries so inscrutable, can we wonder that the mind, the immaterial and thinking principle, should involve questions still more inexplicable? Can we wonder that the undying spirit, that emanation of light and glory from the Headache

It has been issued for forty-six years with ever-increasing popularity and usefulness, which fact alone is a wonderful argument for its value and helpfulness. Rich in material, comprehensive in its scope, practical in its treatment. Every superintendent, teacher, and scholar will find in it his own personal requirements. Marion Lawrence voices the sentiments of thousands when he says:

"How this standard commentary has been able to maintain itself.

"How this standard commentary has been able to maintain itself during all these years, growing annually stronger and richer, is a marvel to the Sunday-school world. Personally, I do not see how any Sunday-school teacher can hope to do his best without the rich, full helps found in these NOTES."

bosom of the Eternal, should rise above our comprehension and clude the search of our limited powers? We pity the poor man who prefers to wander in the barren wilderness of speculation rather than to draw water from the fountain of truth or sit under the shade of life's tree and eat of its fruit.

When God had molded the dust into a form of beauty and majesty fit to become the abode of a spirit, it was not left dead. A mysterious and sublime emanation from himself was infused into the molded dust while yet it was as lifeless as the clod, a principle of thought, feeling, and action, and man became a living soul.

Now, having introduced the subject thus, if allowed the space, I will proceed to throw all the light in my power on the subject of the "double nature of man" in future articles.

Some Facts and Figures.

BY W. W. FREEMAN.

Up to September there were fifty baptisms in the Japan missions. There have been several since then, and prospects are bright. There were three baptisms at Kamitomizaka on the last Sunday in November. One, Brother Watanabe, is a brilliant student from Waseda College; another is a bank clerk; and another is the daughter of a lieutenant colonel. The last is the wife of a sake drinker, and belongs thus to a rich Buddhist family, but is now happy in knowing Christ.

Such reports have come every month since I assumed Brother Vincent's obligations in keeping the work going on the old Snodgrass-Bishop foundation. We have been getting along on about eighty dollars a month; but now we must have more, as follows, for the cost of nearly everything has gone up about fifty per cent this year: Brother Hiratsuka was raised from twenty-five to thirty-five dollars, and must now have forty-five dollars to support his family and keep at gospel work. Brother Ishiguro needs and calls for a helper, and it is hoped that some of the new missionaries may go to his assistance. He has been getting about seventeen dollars and fifty cents (less exchange, which seems a little heavy during the war); but he needs thirty-five dollars (less exchange), which he or some one else must have been supplying in part so far. Miss Togo requires ten dollars a month. She teaches the children on Sundays and helps in visiting and otherwise. Two churches each have sent funds for this for the past year. Takashi, son of Brother Hiratsuka, who is in a medical school and may do work as a medical missionary, is given five dollars a month by Brother Hodson, of Alabama. About five dollars a month goes for tracts and ten dollars for rent on the church at the present location. Thus a hundred dollars a month is required for regular ex-

Two churches to give ten dollars each are needed. They may send directly or by me. Either way is scriptural. Churches sending directly are liable to send all to one or two and none to others. I work like the early "apostles of the churches" collecting funds, only that I use the papers as well as travel. It is surely all right to use our mails and banking facilities and to use a man to disburse the funds. I do not favor general sending to natives when we have a loval American representative there. Persia is an example here. Of course, no method will run itself, and not even a cash register will reveal dishonesty. Churches should hear through more than one source from their funds sent. Crookedness should be reported to the church sending the missionary who is careless or dishonest. I doubt if one such case can be specifically cited. I work, as should all others, as a member of the church where I hold membership. Members of this church audit my accounts. No charges are made for this work or for exchanges. I hope destructive and partisan criticism may cease and that we may have some positive work done henceforth.

You Do More Work,

You are more ambitious and you get more enjoyment out of everything when your blood is in good condition. Impurities in the blood have a very depressing effect on the system, causing weakness, laziness, nervousness and sickness.

GROVE'S TASTELESS Chill TONIC restores Energy and Vitality by Purifying and Enriching the Blood. When you feel its strengthening, invigorating effect, see how it brings color to the cheeks and how it improves the appetite, you will then appreciate its true tonic value.

GROVE'S TASTELESS Chill TONIC is not a patent medicine, it is simply IRON and QUININE suspended in Syrup. So pleasant even children like it. The blood needs Quinine to Purify it and IRON to Enrich it. These reliable tonic properties never fail to drive out impurities in the blood.

The Strength-Creating Power of GROVE'S TASTELESS Chill TONIC has made it the favorite tonic in thousands of homes. More than thirty-five years ago, folks would ride a long distance to get GROVE'S TASTELESS Chill TONIC when a member of their family had Malaria or needed a body-building, strength-giving tonic. The formula is just the same today, and you can get it from any drug store. 60c per bottle.

God's Storms.

There is a beautiful figure in one of Wordsworth's poems of a bird that is swept from Norway by a storm. It battles against the storm with desperate effort, eager to wing back again to Norway; but all is vain. So at last it yields, thinking that the gale will carry it to death; and the gale carries it to sunny England, with its green meadows and its forest glades. Ah, how many of us have been like that voyager, fretting and fighting against the will of God! And we thought that life could never be the same again when we were carried seaward by the storm-until at last, finding all was useless, perhaps yielding to the wind that bloweth where it listeth, we have been carried to a land that was far richer, where there were green pastures and still waters.- Exchange.

One of the nearest and simplest of duties is the perception of others' points of view, of sympathy, in no limited sense; and that sympathy we can gain only through looking at humanity in its wholeness.—Selected.

Why a Dearth of Preachers?

BY J. L. HINES.

"The harvest indeed is plenteous, but the laborers are few." (Matt. 9: 37.)

Jesus addressed his disciples thus after he had been going about from city to city teaching the people concerning the kingdom of God; and when he saw the multitude, he was moved with compassion on them, because they were distressed and scattered, as sheep not having a shepherd. Our Lord labored in the ministry about three years. He labored and toiled day after day. He preached, he taught, he bore the infirmities of the weak, and his one aim was to "do the will of my Father who is in heaven." He turned down earthly pomp, wealth, and glory at the beginning of his ministry. He taught his disciples to turn away from the things of this world, to trust in God, saying unto them: "Consider the lilies of the field;" "Be not . . . anxious for the morrow;" "Casting all your anxiety upon him, because he careth for you;" "Lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven." The first disciples sent out to preach were given authority over unclean spirits. And Jesus charged them: "As ye go, preach, saying, The kingdom of heaven is at hand. Heal the sick, raise the dead, cleanse the lepers, cast out demons: freely ye received, freely give. Get you no gold, nor silver, nor brass in your purses," etc. (See Matt. 10.) Their business was to preach the gospel of the kingdom of God, and it was God's business to take care of them. God has not ordained that preachers who preach his gospel are to be fed from a silver spoon direct from heaven; but God's plan, when preached faithfully, is self-operative. preacher that goes forth to-day thinking how much money he is going to make is not worthy of the name

" preacher." The twelve did not think about how much money they could accumulate, but their one thought must have been: Be true to the Master, and all will be well. There was a dearth of preachers in those days, for the Lord said: "The laborers are few." Why? Because there were few men who were willing to leave all and follow the Master; the way looked rough and thorny. It cost too much to follow Jesus. There is a dearth of preachers to-day because too few are willing to pay the price; there isn't enough money in it. Parents have quit encouraging their boys to be preachers, but are encouraging them to be lawyers, doctors, merchants, or farmers.

Too many have made preaching a profession, and as a profession it does not pay. Preaching is something that you get no more out of than you put into it. If you put your life into it, you will get life out of it. Preachers will talk about the congregation's not supporting them, as though they were not a part of the congregation. Preachers should pay as well as be paid. How did congregations first spring into existence? Who supported the first preacher? Who supported the preachers who were instrumental in establishing the cause at Jerusalem, Antioch, Ephesus. Philippi, and throughout Asia? Suppose preachers of that day had been like some of to-day, where would we be? Why, some men to-day seem to think that all that they have to do is to go to college for a few years and that the churches are under obligation to pick them up and pay them a handsome sum for a few cutand-dried, secondhand sermons. Too many are following Christ for the loaves and the fishes, I am afraid.

Sometime ago there was a call from Brother Thurman for a preacher to locate at College Grove, Tenn.; salary, one hundred and twenty-five dollars per month. Twenty-seven answered. I put an advertisement in the Gospel Advocate for ten gospel preachers to come to Canada to locate; salary, board and clothing. Not a man answered. Why? Here in the great Dominion of Canada there are hundreds of mission points and not more than fifty gospel preachers, and these points calling continually for some one to come and help them, but because they have not the dollars they must call in vain. Think of Paul at Troas. Really, what are we preaching for-the salvation of money or the salvation of souls?

Do you tell me that the churches are to blame? I tell you that the preachers are to blame for not teaching the churches the whole counsel of God. The churches will support the gospel when the preachers quit saying, "I don't charge," and go to preaching that it is the Christian's duty to support the preaching of the gospel. I know of some preachers who say, "I don't charge for my preaching," and at the same time grumble because the churches do not support them. I have preached where I got as little as one dollar and fifty cents per week, but that church did all that it was taught; but, thank the Lord, before I was in that field three years I was well supported and another preacher with me. We preached in schoolhouses, under tents, trees, and anywhere we could get a hearing. The gospel was preached, the people were stirred, the church was built up, and believers were added to the Lord.

The "pastor" idea is fraught with dangers. I know of some men who are getting from fifteen hundred to two thousand dollars per year, who do absolutely nothing except preach for one church. There are mission points all around these same men, but they never help them. Who is to blame in cases like this? Do you tell me that such men are men of faith? Where are the Pauls? Where are the Campbells, Sewells, Franklins, and David Lipseombs? Who supported the preachers who were instrumental in establishing the cause in Nashville? Yes, there is a dearth of the right kind of preachers. But why is this? I answer: Because there is a dearth of faith.

I have written plainly, but I know that it is the plain truth that is needed to-day.

"Middle Ground" and "The Community Church."

Years ago, it will be remembered, I wrote an article on "Middle Ground." I thought then that there must be a middle ground upon which all Christians could agree. I was young then, and thought that what I did not know about the Bible was torn out of the book. I could not see what harm a little construction could do.

I never did believe that it was right to organize societies in the congregation, with controlling heads outside of the congregation, but I could not see why those who wanted to do such things ought to be withdrawn from. I thought it was better for those who did not believe in such things just to remain in the body and have nothing to do with those that did. In short, I thought a sort of middle ground could be maintained; that a man could be neither for nor against, neither fight nor approve, and keep a unity of the faith. I tried that once, and got hit so hard I thought a mule had kicked me with all four shoes on one foot.

I have been convinced for about ten years that there is no middle ground in the religion of our Savior. We are either serving God or the devil; we are either on our way to heaven or hell; we cannot serve two masters.

Last week I saw a short article in the Leader on "The Community Church." I said to myself: "That's ancient history; a community church is a relic of heathenism; it's just another name for a national church that will meet the needs of everybody and justify everybody's religion; it really means a place of worship that will be open to any brand of religion that may spring up in the community."

I sort of tried that thing once, and had a worse time with it than I had with the first skunk I ever saw, I thought that skunk was the prettiest thing I ever saw. I was courting then. The first thing that came into my mind was to catch that pretty thing and give it to my girl for a Christmas gift. I took out after the skunk and caught it. Holy Moses and the angels, send your pitying glances down! It was nearly a week before my friend would stop and talk to me. That skunk taught me a lesson-not to try to eatch every pretty thing I meet in the road.

A community church is as much like the church of Christ as a skunk is like a pet squirrel, and no Christian will ever try a second time to establish one.

It was Mr. Lincoln that said: " You can fool most of the people some of the time, and some of the people most of the time, but you can't fool all of the people all of the time."

The community church is the outgrowth of a desire to reach a whole lot of people. We get the fool notion that we could do more good if we had more people to preach to. To some extent that is true; but what would we preach in order to hold the crowd? We could not preach the gospel of Christ in a community church without hurting the feelings of those of the several denominations; and then, again, you would have to be careful not to touch on any of the doctrines of other people.

In fact, a community church is about as much like the church of Christ as a moving-picture show is like a Christian revival or a prayer meeting is like a crap-shooting game.

There is no community church but the church of Christ, and all that enter that church must believe the same thing, must do the same thing, must hope the same thing-must have but one faith, one Lord, and one baptism, one God over all and in you all.

There is no community church; it is either the church of Christ or it is nothing at all .- S. R. Cassius, in Christian Leader.

A Victory for the Truth.

To the Disciples—Greeting: We, the undersigned, members of churches of Christ near Jennings Lake, Fla., where the recent six-days' debate on the Sabbath and Lord's-day question was held between C. B. Stephenson (president of the Florida Conference of Seventh-Day Adventists) and Flavil Hall (disciple), take great pleasure in giving the strongest assurance—

(1) That the victory for the truth as pleaded for by our representative was absolutely complete.

(2) That Mr. Stephenson, though put forth by the Adventists as their champion debater for many years, went down in inglorious defeat in his affirmation on the first proposition—viz.: "Resolved, That Christians are under obligations to keep the law of the Ten Commandments, or Decalogue."

(3) That we felt that we were lifted and carried upon the clouds of glory as our representative wielded the sword of the Spirit and brought forward the testimony of saints and martyrs of the first and second centuries (Barnabas, Ignatius, Justin Martyr, Irenseus, and Clement) in support of his proposition—viz.: "Resolved, That the first day of the week is the Lord's day, and that Christians should meet on that day to partake of the Lord's Supper."

(4) That the conviction that our representative won was general.

(5) That the people generally were deeply impressed with his Christian conduct in the discussion.

(6) That we have learned that he is not only a good man and a good preacher, but that he is eminently adapted to the defense of the truth in polemics wherever such defense is needed.

An Appeal to Christians in the State of Arkansas.

BY V. M. ROREX.

The church of Christ at Pine Bluff, Ark., is at present devoting itself to the task of securing funds to build a house of worship, and in order to do so we need the financial assistance of loyal disciples at other places; so we use this means to place the opportunity of fellowship in this work before you.

We are making this appeal only to Christians which we can reach in our own State, as we believe that they especially should have the opportunity to help and that they will be more likely to come to our aid than some one farther away. However, we will, of course, appreciate help from Christians outside the State who may see this and be interested in helping us. There are a good many Christians in the State who know our needs; but for the benefit of those who do not know the situation here, we will state that we have just bought a building site with funds which we have accumulated mostly by our own contributions. It is in a good location, and after paying for it we have about three hundred dollars toward the building fund. We believe that we should erect a house that would cost about four or five thousand dollars. and we have pledges from the members of the congregation for about forty or fifty dollars per month, which is very good for the few disciples here. So, brethren, you can see we are not asking your help without first doing what we can.

Pine Bluff, as you know, is about the third largest city in the State, and the need for a house of worship for the loval disciples should, of course, be apparent to you. We have been meeting from house to house for several years, and at present we are meeting in the Chamber of Commerce Hall. We need a building of our own, so that we can have some protracted meetings, spread the gospel, and build up the church here. There is a strong congregation of "digressives" here, and they are making plans at present to build a forty-thousand-dollar house. Cannot we secure help enough to build one to cost about one-tenth that much in which to teach the word without addition or subtraction? All funds sent us will be properly acknowledged. Do not lay this aside and forget it, but respond at once, and invest as much as you are able in this good work. Make checks or money orders payable to "V. M. Rorex, Trustee," and mail to V. M. Rorex, 1701 Olive Street, Pine Bluff, Ark.

"Since using 'TWO for ONE' I get 250 to 300 eggs a day instead of 25 or 30" writes J. C. Hoff of Indiana.

This wonderful new egg producer has made thousands of dollars profit for poultry raisers all over the United States. Now is the time to increase your egg supply, when eggs are selling at $1.00 a dozen. Give your hens "TWO for ONE," the scientific tonic that makes layers and real moneymakers out of every single solitary hen you own. Send $1.00 to Kinsella Co., 2919 Le Moyne Building, Chicago, for small box of our Special Offer, or $2.00 for large box containing three times the quantity of the $1.00 size—a full season's supply. We guarantee to return your money if not satisfied. Enter our FREE $5,000.00 egg-laying contest. Full particulars in each box of "TWO for ONE."

Said for SS Years FOR MALARIA CHELS AND SEVER Also . Fine General Strengthening Tonic

Notes from Berry, Ala.

BY HAL P. M'DONALD.

Alabama Christian College has a good enrollment and is doing some very good work. Our enrollment last year reached one hundred and seventy-six, and promises to be better this year. Beginning on January 1, 1920, we are prepared to lend from one hundred to one hundred and fifty dollars for one year to worthy young men and women of good character and clean habits who would educate with us. All interested should write at once for particulars.

The churches of Christ in Alabama are, no doubt, doing much good; but they should do far greater things in the future. Here is an opportunity to get results in which every one of you should take active part at once. Brother Jelley, from India, recently visited us. He has done a great work that should be kept on a good footing. He suggests that Alabama Christian College educate an Indian boy for a missionary. We say educate two boys. God says that to-day the harvest is white. Five congregations or individuals in this State should pledge ten dollars per month each, or the total amount of fifty dollars per month, to buy the clothing, books, board, and school expenses of two Indian boys for a period of three years. Let this start now, and, with a good Christmas donation, get the boys over here and at the work at once or as soon as passage may be procured. Preachers, elders, Christians, improve this opportunity.

The Southern Practical Institute.

BY ANNIE C. TUGGLEL

There is nothing more consoling to me in such an hour of unrest over the condition of so many of my people who are in gross ignorance and under bondage of sin than the generous gift from Brother A. M. Burton of a peautiful three-story brick building in the city of Nashville for a school for the education of the negro race physically, intellectually, and spiritually. Brother Burton is to be commended for this noble deed, for by it we have the greatest opportunity that has ever been before us-not an opportunity to get great gain and fill our barns and storehouses with this world's goods, but something far better than that-yea, better than silver and gold and precious stones-an opportunity to prepare ourselves for the battles of life, to make ourselves more useful to the world, and to lift as we climb.

Brother Burton's love for the cause of Christ and a desire to lift fallen humanity from the bottomless pit of ignorance and shame to the standard of true Caristian living were fully manifested in the purchasing of this institution, and I believe its works will be felt throughout Americayea, to the uttermost parts of the earth. Solomon, with all his wisdom, could not have acted any wiser

"The Southern Practical Institute," as the school is called, will play its part in the service of God (1) by teaching its students honest trades, (2) to be good and useful citizens and do their duty both to God and to man

We highly appreciate what Brother Burton has done for us, and wish for him a long life, that he may carry out his plans and see some of the fruits of his labors and at last enter in through the gates into the holy city that fadeth not way.

Try Renwar for Rheumatism.

Try Renwar for Rheumatism.

It is not necessary any longer for you to suffer those intense pains and aches of theumatism. Renwar is a saits combination scientifically prepared to neutralize the urle acid in the blood and thereby cure freematism. Don't wait until those rhounatie pains return. Buy a bottle of Renwar and forget about that rheumatism. Renwar is an old, well-established remedy. It is prescribed by the best of physicians and has thousands of friends. President L. A. Bauman, of Varley & Bauman Company, Nashville, says: "Renwar entirely relieved me of my rheumatism." For sale by druggists; price, 50 cents. Positively guaramized by money-back offer. If your druggist doesn't carry Renwar in stock, tell him to order it for you from WARNER DRUG COMPANY, NASHVILLE, TENN.

My Thanksgiving.

For the joy of work; for the chance to hit hard, when necessary; for the goodness and the grit of the fellow who may disagree with me; for the test that shows wherein I may grow stronger; for the thought that "each new day may be as the beginning of life; " for the power of Christ, whom I serve; for the final victory which I know shall be mine,-Charles Stelzle.

There is greater assurance of the reality of our possession of eternal life when once the heart has been given to Christ than there is of the reality of our possession of earthly property. Earthly possessions depend upon the integrity of men, but our possession of eternal life depends on the integrity of God .- Faris.
