Edifying as the Need May Be

1919.

Text: "So teach us to number our days, that we may get us a heart of wisdom." (Ps. 90: 12.)

The opening year impresses the thought that we have started out an unknown way in which, to a great extent, we must walk by faith, and not by sight.

What is 1919? It is only a little space of time marked off from the vast stretches of eternity. It steals upon us noiselessly and glides away swiftly. Before we become very accustomed to writing 1919 we must pass on and begin to write 1920. The year is short, but it is fraught with significance. It is a gift from God for a holy purpose. It is time for repentance, for improvement, for enlargement.

Despite the fact that the war is over, a feeling of uneasiness besets the world. The conference of nations is fraught with destiny. The welfare or the misery of millions is at stake. No one can foretell what the results will be. We all hope for the best. What is true of the nation is true of the individual life, for each one of us is an uncharted sea with an ever-changing shore line. It is a time when we feel the beauty and the pathos of the prayer used by the fishermen of Brittany when they launch their boats: "Keep us, our God, for our boats are so small and the ocean is so wide." It is a time when we need the impetus of a fresh start.

The great thought with us should be the thought of our usefulness during 1919. The great question is: How to make the most of life. Some people make a great deal of life; others make very little. To some it is intensely interesting; to others, vapid and boresome. Some are tired of life before they begin to live; it seems that they were "born tired." There is a species of affection with others to whom the art of weariness seems to be the mark of genius. This indifferent spirit is never characteristic of true Christians. Noble and manly natures do not fall into the pit of satiety. They are always full of faith and hope and energy. To them life has inexhaustible charms; it is evermore full and rich and varied. Each day dawns with new expectations and closes with new hopes for to-morrow. It is these living characters that keep the rest of us alive. Wheresoever we meet them, they strengthen our faith and drive our cares away as the sunshine penetrates the clouds. They make us participants of their own enthusiasm.

How to Live in the Fullest Sense.

The apostle Paul was such a character. How rich and how full was his experience! How much he made of his years! Dr. Clarke says: "He stands like the Nilometer in Egypt to tell how high the river of Thought and Love and Will may rise." He had seen Jesus but once, yet he seems to have understood his teachings better than those who had been with him. In service he labored more abundantly than they all; he passed through more trials than any of the other apostles; he planted more churches; he took more journeys; he wrote more letters. His days and weeks were full of work, but at the same time were full of thought and of deep reflection. If one asks how it was that Paul made so much of life, admitting the point of his inspiration, we may safely say it was the enthusiasm of his love for the Master-an enthusiasm that knew no bounds. In his experience we find the first essential for making the most of life. Forget yourself in some interest outside yourself. Paul spent but few of his precious moments thinking of himself. There was something else before him. If we look for a general rule of his conduct, we hear him say: "This one thing I do." If we look for an ideal, we hear him say: "For me to live is Christ, and to die is gain." If we look for a human object, we hear him say: "My heart's desire and prayer to God for Israel is, that they might be saved." In like manner it is necessary that we be interested in something good in order to be alive in the fullest sense.

God expects us to show improvement in proportion to our own talents. There is too much of that spirit which says, "All or none;" or, "If I can't have what I want, then I'll not take what I can get." We are on dangerous ground when we allow ourselves to complain that if we only had another's money or influence or physical strength we might do better. This indicates a belief on our part that God has dealt unfairly with us, whereas he graciously gives us the opportunities of life in just such proportion as we can use them.

The Object of Highest Endeavor.

Worldly people sometimes have trouble in selecting an object for their highest endeavor. I read once of a wealthy woman who came from the West to New York with three palace cars full of cats. These animals were fed on the daintiest food and slept in berths of plush. Their arrival in the metropolis attracted much more attention than a whole train load of orphan children. What a pity, we think, when there are thousands of waifs in Armenia and Syria and Poland who would like to change places with these aristocratic pets! But the woman doubtless had a good intention. She felt that she must become interested in something, that she must place her affections and devote her energies to some worthy object. What more worthy, she thought, than a poor, persecuted, downtrodden cat, the emblem of rancorous music and the target of worn-out boots? The Christian is not misled. He does not mistreat cats, but he does not lavish his attentions upon them, He who reads the word of God to find out the purpose of his life and the objects of his love will not make any such mistake. The Scriptures become to him an infallible guide. in them he reads the always timely admonition: "As we have opportunity, let us work that which is good toward all men, and especially toward them that are of the household of the faith." He contemplates the words of the Master: "Verily I say unto you, Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of these my brethren, even these least, ye did it unto me." The definition of James is constantly before him: "Pure religion and undefiled before our God and Father is this, to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep oneself unspotted from the world." Drink in the meaning of these three passages and there will be no difficulty in selecting the beneficiaries of your service. Your purpose will be the truest, your object the worthiest, and your reason the best in the world. To whom, then, will you go the quickest? Answer: "The household of faith." What are the limits of your goodness? Answer: "The world and 'all men' in the world, as I have opportunity." What is the reason for it all? Answer: "The Master's 'inasmuch.'" 0 0 0

"Do It With Thy Might."

In looking for another rule that will help us to make the most of 1919, I am struck with the force and splendor of a passage from the book of Ecclesiastes: "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might." Sometimes we do things mechanically, satisfied if we do as well as others or no worse than the majority. This is often true of our worship. A good deal of religious effort is like the practice of "marking time" among soldiers. They lift up one foot and then put it down in the same place. They are marching, but they are not moving. In just the same way we may be going through the motions of a Christian life, but are not showing progress. We may be saying our prayers, but are not praying. We may be going to church, but not to heaven. How inspiring is the Savior's ministry as compared with our unreality and spirit of make-believe! When he preached a sermon, it was complete! When he taught a lesson, it was perfect! When the multitudes came to him bringing their sick, lame, and paisied, he healed them all! In whatsoever thing his hand found to do, that blessed hand revealed its might:

Thoroughness is characteristic of a great mind. It is related of Mr. Lincoln that he once had to argue a case in which all depended on finding the boundary for a piece of land on the Western prairies. There were no stones for boundaries and few trees. The surveyors were in the habit of indicating the corners of lots by shoveling up little heaps of earth. But it happened that the ground squirrel or gopher did the same thing. Hence it was very important to distinguish between the mounds made by the surveyor and those made by the gopher. Mr. Lincoln sent to New York for books which would tell him all about the gopher. Bringing the books into court, he showed the judge and the jury how the gopher built his mound and how it differed from that of the surveyor. Thoroughness won his case. It is said of Benjamin Franklin that he did everything as well as it could be done. The people of this country generally have confidence in President Wilson because they know he has studied the subject of human government from a to izzard. If he errs, it will not be on the side of ignorance. God hasten the day when we shall have this much respect for Bible study, that we may be "thoroughly furnished unto all good works!" Let us believe in that which is highest and do with all our might that which is nearest, for, as Wordsworth says:

The primal duties shine aloft like stars: The charities which sooth and bless and save Are scattered at the feet of men like flowers.

"A Day's Work in It's Day."

I find another rule for improvement in the annals of Oriental life. When the Egyptians had the Israelites in cruel bondage and Pharaoh would increase their burdens, the taskmasters "were argent, saying, Fulfill your works, your daily tasks, as when there was straw." The expression, "your daily tasks," is better rendered literally, "a day's work in its day." Here it has a very unjust application, but is, nevertheless, a very wise proverb. It explains the material success of the Egyptian nation. They were the great builders of antiquity. Vastness characterized all their structures. The Pyramids remain until this day. They are built of solid granite hewn from quarries hundreds of miles distant and brought down the rough desert ways on sledges. The enormous blocks of stone weighed in some instances sixteen hundred tons. These were dragged by the hands of men one inch at a time. In one case it required two thousand men three years to bring one stone from the quarry to its place in the Pyramid. How did they ever accomplish such stupendous tasks? They applied this proverb-"a day's work in its day." They were smart enough to hit upon the divine plan of doing things. When God in creation broke the life of the world into successive day and night, he wrote on the face of the universe, "A day's work in its day;" and he followed the rule himself. Let us be like our God in this. Let us have that much of Egyptian sagacity and make it one of our rules for 1919.

The Christian in the spiritual sense lives in this world as the man without a country. Paul says: "We have not bere an abiding city, but we seek after the city which is to come." In the mighty upheaval of world events let us look upward and rejoice. It seems to me that in 1919 God is calling to us louder than ever before. We cannot be so ambitious for ourselves as he is for us. Across the extended plains of earth and far above the highest hilliops gleams our City of Refuge. Each traveler must find his own footpath and set his own pace. Our feet have not stood within its jasper walls; our eyes have not seen the beauty of its shining towers; our hearts have not felt the peace of its lasting benediction. But enough to know that its blessings are not beyond our reach and that 1919 brings us nearer—yes, nearer than we have ever been before—to our eternal home.

Like the lawyer to whom Jesus told the parable of the good Samaritan, we also need the Christ. We need him on life's highroad. We need him whether we travel uphill or down-dale. But, like the priest and the Levite, we sometimes miss him because we keep to our own side of the road. If we would find him, as it were by chance, we must look for those who are down on their luck, who are in trouble; we must cross over to them, and there, amid those whom he would save, we shall find Him who alone can save us.—P. Whitwell Wilson.

Old Testament Characters-Enoch.

BY H. LEO BOLES.

The interpretation of characters, as given in Old Testament history, is as much the wisdom and will of God as that which is given in the enactments of laws and direct commandments of Jehovah. Surely God intended that we should study the characters of the Old Testament, or he would not have given so much in the Bible concerning persons. The very fact that we find anything in the Bible, whether it be history, delineation of character, law, prophecy, or poetry, is evidence that God intended that it should be studied.

One of the best ways or methods of studying the Bible is that of topics. This topic may be an institution, law, ordinance, principle, character, or ethology; many thoughts may cluster around these topics. One has never learned all that God teaches upon any subject until one has studied everything that God has given on that subject, and has studied it from every possible angle. The different viewpoints always give us new and different visions of a subject. Sometimes the approach to a principle or a lesson through the interpretation of a character helps us to understand the will of God. We have never studied any subject to the greatest profit until we shall have examined it from every angle and viewpoint that is possible. I feel sure that every Old Testament character furnishes an opportunty to learn more of God's will than could otherwise be learned. We may look for new thoughts, clearer conceptions, and fuller knowledge of God's relationship to man and man's responsibility to God in the study of Enoch.

Enoch lived about three thousand eight hundred and seventy-five years before Christ, according to the best chronologists. The name, "Enoch," means initiated, a beginning, or it means tuition, or teacher, instructor The name is used in the Bible to apply to persons or a city. Cain's oldest son was called "Enoch" (Gen. 4: 17, 18); Cain "builded a city, and called the name of the city, after the name of his son, Enoch;" the third use of the word is the name of Jared's son, the seventh from Adam.

The scriptures that should be studied concerning Enoch are Gen. 5: 18, 19, 21-23; 1 Chron. 1: 3; Luke 3: 37; Heb. 11: 5; Jude 14, 15. The references in 1 Chron. and Luke are merely incidental in giving the lineage from Adam to Abraham. The emphasis for our study will be placed upon the few verses of Gen. 5; Heb. 11: 5; and Jude 14, 15. We will study Enoch under two divisions—his walk with God and his translation.

Enoch has a short biography, but was a wonderful character. One proof or evidence of the divinity and inspiration of the Scriptures is that so much can be crowded into so little. The biographers of George Washington, Napoleon, and other historical characters occupied several volumes in writing the lives of these notable men. It is very likely that they did not express within the compass of these volumes all that they knew of their subject, it is also likely that they said more than they knew. Enoch is a greater character than any of these men, yet God can write his biography with a few sentences, and express more with these few sentences than man can express with volumes

"Enoch walked with God." The Septuagint Version translates this expression, "Enoch was well pleasing to God." I do not think that there is any difference in the thought expressed. When it is stated that "Enoch walked with God" and "Enoch was well pleasing to God," these terms or phrases are used synonymously; and this fact is emphasized in Heb. 11: 5—"He had been well pleasing unto God." I think that Moses' statement in Genesis and the writer of the Hebrew letter express the same thought. This is another way of saying that Enoch pleased God.

Enoch must have lived more in the society of Jehovah than did his contemporaries. He was a seer, or prophet, and thus communicated with God. "He must have touched the eternal, and was bathed in the presence of God." We are not told how his contemporaries looked upon him, but there must have been a consciousness of the divine in him that made him stand out a giant among the citizens of earth at that time. He was a fit companion for Jehovah, for he walked with God and was well pleasing unto him. This companionship implies regular, unbroken, well sustained communion with God: and this elevated him far above others of that age. He had grasped by faith the reality and personality of God and had made him his companion. Such intimate communion with God fills the soul with aspirations for a higher life and transforms the character into harmony with the angelic host.

There is also implied fellowship with God in the life of Enoch. In order to be congenial in this walk, he had to agree with God. For one in the flesh to have such carse fellowship and communion with God, one must have a pr. found humility of spirit, a high and holy purpose, an utter unselfishness, and a heart purified by faith. Enoch was a man of like passions with others of Adam's race. So far as the temptations and weaknesses of the flesh are concerned, Enoch was not an exception. He lived in a wicked age: in the midst of a wicked generation, surrounded with all of the wickedness of the human race. He did not go into a wilderness to live a monastic life; he did not retreat to any secluded hermit's hut or withdraw himself to a plous monk's abode; but, in the midst of all of these, he went among the people of earth performing his duties, meeting his obligations, and helping his fellow man, at the same time that he walked with God.

"The Protestant."

BY F. W. SMITH.

The world is flooded with books-good, bad, and indifferent; and to the making of them there is no end, only the end of the world. "The Protestant" is a brand-new book from the pen of Burris A. Jenkins, noted for his latitudinarianism in things religious. In his own description of the book he says: "It is iconoclastic, negative: it is destructive criticism. It has very little to offer by way of remedies." No doubt the author intended this to apply to what he regards as hindrances to Christianity and the progress of the church of the living God, but it strikes at the very foundation of the Christian's faith and hope. There is an originality of expression, a uniqueness in the arrangement of topics, and a pollsh of rhetoric which, from a merely literary consideration, charms the reader; but this makes the book the more dangerous. A few of its statements will convince those who revere the holy Scriptures that Mr. Jenkins manifests a reckless regard for the word of God, or else is illy informed on the contents of the Bible.

CREEDS.

Much that he says on this subject is not objectionable, but in his efforts at creed destruction he destroys the heart and soul of Christianity. Hear him: "They need a good impertinent iconoclast to come along and tear the intellectual clothes off them, the forcordinations, the apostolic successions, the virgin births, the infallible inspirations, and the like, and let them get a breath of God's cool, free air." I know of no one who stands more in need of cooling zephyrs than does Mr. Jenkins, for his brain is on fire. Much learning (?) has driven him mad. It will be remembered that the author said his book "has very little to offer by way of remedies," and he will have no difficulty in forcing this conviction upon those who read his book with any degree of intelligence. He strips the Bible of that which challenges the faith of man-viz., divine inspiration and infallibility of statement-and dynamites the foundation of the church of the living God by his fling at the virgin birth of Christ. Mr. Jenkins is a big man; in fact, he is too big for the Bible and the brains of his day and time. Now that he has blown into smithereens (that is, he thinks he has) the biblical statement of the miraculous conception and birth of the only begotten Son of God, what will he offer us as a foundation for our faith and hope? If the plain statement of the Bible on this subject is a tie, as Burris A. Jenkins would give us to understand, how does any one know but that which he would substitute for it would be a lie also? Why does Burris A, Jenkins and his school of critics reject the Bible statement on this subject? Simply and solely because it does not fit their idea of things, does not appeal to their reason. Any man, after contemplating his own being, even if he reached the conclusion that he evolved from a tadpole, should not stagger at anything resembling a miracle; for most certainly the power that could make a man out of a tadpole could perform any sort of a miracle. Yes, Mr. Jenkins needs fresh air; in fact, a bath in ice water may be needed to cool his torrid brow within which his brains are on fire. In referring to the church of which he is a member, he says: "The church I happen to belong to has no written creed, but an unwritten, which is worse." It is not clear to what church the author refers, but the church of the New Testament not only had a creed, but a written creed-one written by men inspired of God. Since Mr. Jenkins has repudiated that creed, he is only acting consistently in repudiating all creeds. With him, one can believe anything or nothing, just so he keeps it to himself. Oneness of belief finds no place in Mr. Jenkins' theology, even if Paul did say: "Be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment." (1 Cor. 1: 10.)

THE CHURCH.

The institution the author would have his Protestant mold out of Christendom is comparable to a "crazy quilt" with its stripes and squares of a thousand and one colors-just a piecemeal affair, nothing to indicate heads or tails. Hence he says: "Let us all get so mixed up together we can't tell the difference." Would the reader know just how this is to be accomplished? If so, listen: "Let our identities disappear in the universal confusion of love." Will you have another glass of soda water? Perhaps, when its foam disappears, you will be enabled to see how the church "identities" disappear also. John says: "This is the love of God, that we keep his commandments." But Mr. Jenkins has invented a new kind of love that will swallow up the identities of religious sects without keeping the commandments of God. I prefer the old love to this modern invention. His "community" church has no creed, but he tells us how to become a member of it-viz., "walk up and shake the hand of the minister," with, perhaps, an affirmative answer to this question: "Do you want to help this community to live nearer God?" It strikes me that, after all, he does have a creed, but a poor substitute for the divine one. Sometimes he tells us the question may introduce Christ, "but never in theological terms or spirit." Don't forget that one of these theological terms with Mr. Jenkins is what Peter said: "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." Christ must not be introduced into this "community" church in any such light. The author would not permit his Protestant to restore the apostolic church, because, he says, "it is not up with the times, and probably would more resemble an ancient Jewish synagogue or a modern Mohammedan mosque than anything else."

BAPTISM.

He confesses himself a "liberal:" but this was altogether unnecessary, for a casual reading of his book shows him to be not only liberal, but reckless, with the things of God. He speaks of some who "are still in bondage to the form of baptism," and here is where he shows himself an extreme "liberalist," He would not discard "forms and symbols," but each can choose his own form or symbol, no matter if Jesus Christ did command men to be immersed. To insist upon the very thing God ordered is, with Mr. Jenkins, "to be in bondage to forms." Note this: "The form that fits-that is the test, is it not? . . . The conditions surrounding, the tastes of the times, the state of education of those concerned-all these and more will weigh in the shaping of forms." Nice teacher of religion, indeed! Every man can become a law unto himself-the very thing God's Book forbids and condemns from start to finish.

THE BIBLE.

Mr. Jenkins terms reverence for the Bible as a book of authority "bibliolatory," "I think the Protestant, when he comes, will dispense with a seat of authority. The Bible has been czar long enough, and ground the faces of the poor." This he seeks to modify by saying: "No, not the Bible itself; but the bigotists who insist upon setting it up as an idol." It is very evident that the only Bible Mr. Jenkins approves is the one of his own creation-one that is not inspired of God, and one altogether fallible and flexible. To show this to be true, we have only to read between the following lines: "The last fifty years or sothe period of science and critical study-has rung the death knell of bibliolatry." Hear, you old sunbonnet sister! The Book you have been reading all of these years, over whose pages your bedimmed eyes have sought and found sweet comfort and consolation, has had its "death knell rung." The destructive critic, during "the period of science and critical study," performed this great service for all ye benighted ones! Would it not be too had if the Protestant for whose advent the author is praying and hoping should, when he comes, protest against the teachings of Burris A. Jenkins?

Elders Ask for An Investigation.

We, the elders of the congregation worshiping at Lone Oak, Ky., do not feel that the action of this church in withdrawing from Brother W. A. Record is clearly understood, and we are especially anxious that those elders of sister congregations who signed a printed statement exonerating Brother Record meet with us and with him in a brotherly conference for the purpose of coming to a better understanding about this matter and other troubles that need to be settled.

We earnestly request that these elders aid us in bringing about a full and impartial investigation at a very early date. We desire that all the facts be brought to light; and if we have done any wrong, we wish to correct it.

We will name the time for the meeting after we have learned when will be the most convenient time for at least one of our ablest brethren to meet with us to teach on this line of church work.

THE WAR SUFFERERS' FUND

"Whose stoppeth his ears at the cry of the poor, he also shall cry, but shall not be heard."

During the year 1918 more than sixteen thousand dollars was received from the readers of the Gospel Advocate for the War Sufferers' Fund. These gifts have all been duly acknowledged in our columns and forwarded to the various distributing centers. In next week's issue we shall give the exact amount donated to the Armenians, Poles, Belgians, and to the fatherless children of France. The Christmas offerings from churches and individuals are acknowledged in this week's issue. The warm-hearted generosity of our readers is nobly reflected in these gifts. Our blessed Savior will honor every little bit of self-denial and thoughtfulness for his little ones. The amount here acknowledged gives us a good start on the new year.

Training Little Children

(Suggestions by mothers who have been kindergartners. Issued by The United States Bureau of Education, Washington, D. C., and The National Kindergarten Association, New York, N. Y.)

Article 33.

Love and Patience Accomplish Most with Children-These Qualities Parents Must Learn to Develop in Themselves.

People often remark that my children do not seem to annoy me. Of course, they do at times. I find, however, that it is the way I feel, and not the child's naughtiness. which is the cause. Do you ever stop to think that to-day you scold your child for something which yesterday passed unnoticed? It was a wise person who said: "Always count ten before beginning to scold." That gives you a chance to think who is in the wrong and how much he is in the wrong.

I have just finished reading an article by Thomas L. Masson, the subject of which was, "Can Parents and Children Get Together?" This question was answered in these few words: "Yes, through love and patience." The article showed that parents as well as children need bringing up: that the child is not only what he makes himself, but what he makes himself plus what the parents make themselves. Therefore, parents need to watch themselves in order to understand their children better.

We say: "Come, let us live with our children." Children, without knowing it, say: "Come, let us live with our parents." Where is the little girl who does not want to make cookies like mother, who does not enjoy having an apron and cap to put on when she dusts? Where is the boy who is not proud to have a box of tools like father's? Bob said to me the other day: "Mother, when can I have collars and neckties like daddy's?" In all things our children copy us. What a responsibility for us!

It is a great thing to have kindergartens in the public schools, so that we can share our responsibility with the teachers. When we send our children to kindergarten, we are placing them for a few hours each day in the care of some one who has been trained through years of hard study to give to them, mentally, morally, and physically, just what they need. Perhaps all mothers do not know how to live with their children. This is a sad condition, but it is a true one in many families. It is a great thing, then, that their children can go to kindergarten and come in touch with some one who knows how to live with them. A welltrained, sympathetic teacher will do more for a child than an unsympathetic mother. Teachers also have a perspective of a child, while mothers have only the close view. As soon as mothers realize that they can learn from many sources, there will be better boys and girls in the world. The teacher is one of these sources.

Send your children to kindergarten. They will come home and tell you what they did. Some day the teacher will call on you and invite you to go and see the children in the kindergarten. Accept the invitation, and I am sure after spending a morning there you will understand what a valuable gift Freebel gave us when he planned kindergartens. The word "kindergarten" means "child garden." a place where children grow.

While I was teaching, mothers would come and ask how John or Lucy behaved. When I said, "Splendidly," they were surprised. They could not understand it, for their children were so naughty at home. I found that the fault was often with the mother. She was not sympathetic with, or interested enough in, her boy or girl. In kindergarten the child was allowed more freedom to express himself; the teacher thus learned in what he was interested and his interests were carefully observed and fostered.

Another experience I had while teaching was with a child who dld not want to come to kindergarten. For three days I used all my persuasive powers; he would come as far as the door and no farther. The fourth day I persuaded him to come into the room, but he would not sit down. The next day he took his chair, and after that, little by little, he became a part of the kindergarten. In the end he was one of my most helpful pupils. When I went to call on his parents, I found that he lived over a saloon and that both his father and mother were heavy drinkers. He had been brought up with whippings, and that was the reason for his extreme distrust when he first came to the kindergarten.

Many persons have said to me: all that children do in kindergartens is to play. I always answer by asking if they have ever been in a kindergarten, and almost always the answer is, "No." Then I will tell them to go and visit one, and that after that I will talk to them.

Of course, children play in kindergarten. What ought children from four to six years of age do? The play, however, is so carefully selected and guided that throughout it all the children learn many things. They learn from picture games, blocks, etc. My Bobby, though only four, knows the simplest forms and shapes. Direction is also taught in the kindergarten. Through plays, pictures, and games, the children learn about the various trades and their benefit to us. These are only a few of the things they learn, and I wish I had time and space to tell all. But, perhaps, if I had the time, I could not do so, each day bringing forth something new.

The trouble with us as parents is that we do not play enough. Some fathers and mothers say to me that it is undignified. I answer: "Never, if carried on in the real child way. Nothing is undignified that will help our boys and girls to be better men and women."

In closing, let me add that we, as mothers, though we think we are doing everything possible for our children, can always find room for improvement and the kindergartens will help us many, many times. The good work we start, the kindergartens will carry on. Let us never be like the mother who said her boy was not interested in anything. For the boy's teacher, when she called, noticed that he had a box of which he seemed to take great care. and it was not long before she learned that it was a collection of caterpillars. Yet the mother said that her boy was interested in nothing. The teacher at once showed the little fellow that she, too, was interested in his caterpillars. She learned from the boy a great many things about caterpillars that she did not know, and in turn taught him things he did not know. Teacher and boy became great friends. Through this common interest others sprang up, and the boy changed from a sullen, inattentive boy to a broad-minded, wide-awake man. If the mother could only have shared her boy's Interest, how much more helpful they would have been to each other!

MISSIONARY

Difficulties That Confront the Missionary.

BY J. M. M'CALEB.

I most heartily commend an article by Brother McHenry, which appeared in the Gospel Advocate some time ago, under the heading, "Some Inside Information." The conditions in India are strikingly similar to those with which we have to contend. What is to be much regretted is that missionary methods, in common practice by the various denominations, only aggravate the trouble. I have at different times talked with various missionaries in regard to this question of self-support, and all, so far as I remember, agree with me that my views are correct, but denominational rivalry keeps them from carrying them out. If a mission stops the support, the work stops, and the workers seek a place with some other mission that will pay. One hates to see his workers leave him. I know this from experience. One hates to see his converts gathering around some other center than the one he has started-a center, too, not centered on Christ. I also know this from experience. But what is to be done? It is impossible to hold people true to Christ with monetary inducements even, if it is the custom of the missions to practice it. I agree with Brother McHenry that fewer baptisms of the genuine kind are better than many for the loaves and fishes.

Japanese Changing Their Dress.

BY LILLIE CYPERT.

Last year, before I left home, I saw a series of articles in a newspaper-the Little Rock Gazette, I think it wason Japanese dress. I do not remember just how the articles were headed, but this is the substance of them: how the Japanese are becoming Westernized in dress. I find this to be true even more than I had expected. The men especially are changing from their long kimonos, with the big winglike sleeves that keep them hobbled in so many ways, to the close-fitting suit we see on the American gentleman. In high schools, colleges, and places of business, nearly all wear foreign dress, and in many of the grammar schools-or middle schools, as they call themthe children wear uniform suits, made in foreign style, and shoes. However, they seem to still enjoy their loose kimonos and zori, which they can so easily slip on and off, when they are in their homes. Of course, they must remove their shoes before going into the house on the nice soft tatami, thus making the zori necessary for their feet, and the tight-fitting suit of the foreigner makes sitting on the floor, which most of them do, quite uncomfortable. But the loose-fitting kimono and no shoes would make it equally as uncomfortable to sit on the seats and chairs at school and in business places, and especially so in winter.

The women, too, are gradually adopting foreign styles. Many of the schoolgirls wear shoes, and in some schools many of the smaller girls wear foreign dresses. One of the first things the Japanese women think of when they are going abroad is to get their clothes made in foreign style. To adopt foreign dress would bring a burden on the Japanese women that they do not have now. Their native dresses are all made alike; so, when a woman gets a new kimono, there is only one way for her to think about making it, and when she learns that way she can do her own sewing very well. Clothing for men, women, and children is all made very much alike. Even though it would bring a burden on them, I sometimes wonder if it would not be worth the trouble. The long, loose sleeves and the tight skirts seem so uncomfortable. With their kimonos they cannot wear shoes and stockings, but must wear the short tobby, which comes only to their ankles, and, when they go out, gata, which is a flat wooden shoe with a short piece of board at each end to hold it up out of the mud, and straps across the top to hold it on. Their dry-weather shoes are similar, but lower, or flatter. It is no uncommon thing to see them barefooted even in winter, save their wooden shoes, and generally so in the summer. Their sleeves are so big and loose that their arms are exposed to the cold almost to the shoulders.

I meet with a group of very nice ladies twice each month to help them do foreign sewing. In this way I get acquainted with many to whom I hope to teach the Bible. Some of them have already asked me to teach them. Most of them understand some English, and some of them understand real well; so I will teach them in English. It makes me very happy to see the mothers become interested. Two of them have already started their children to Sunday school.

Japan Missions Report.

BY W. W. FREEMAN.

Received for the lot to December 5: Last report, $10; D. B. Anderson and wife, Tennessee, $5; Viola church, Tennessee, $13.50; Old Lesea church, Tennessee, $15; Mrs. Mollie Cannon, Texas, $10; P. E. Tucker, Wisconsin, $11; Mrs. Kate Adams, Texas, $25; by Christian Leader, $2; by Gospel Advocate, for Mrs. Hundley, Alabama, $10; Nelsonville church, Kentucky, $4.50; Vinewood Avenue Church, Detroit, Mich., By A. C. Kenyon, $25; G. A. Riddle, $21. Total, $152.20.

General receipts: McMinnville, Tenn., by K. F. Potter, $25 for November and $25 for December (toward support of Brother Hiratsuka); Earl Hodson, Alabama (gives $5 regularly to help medical missionary student, $2 extra for Brother McCaleb's home ticket), $7; H. N. Wolfe, for Dayton church, Ohio, $7 (hopes to make it regular, for Sister Togo, teacher and helper); R. E. Spears, Missouri, for church, $25; Ruth Goodwin, Tennessee, $1; Parkland Church, Louisville (hope to make it monthly, for Miss Togo), $7; balance from funds raised for sending new workers out, $93.05; interest on this last to December 1, $4.48; Cedar Springs, Ky. (not previously reported), for Mrs. Armstrong-Hopkins, $10; for native Japanese workers, $10; for poor (India), $11.67; S. G. Thornton (church), Missouri, $6.86. Total, $233.06.

Latter total less overdraft last month, $7.05; draft to McCaleb for Vincent account this month, $55; drafts for Cedar Springs, as above reported, $31.67; draft to Hiratsuka, $5; making a total of $143.72. A balance is left of $89.34. This may be used for new missionaries or for the lot, if other missionaries do not go soon.

I hope funds for the let will soon be raised, and that some church will send forth a couple of missionaries whom we may assist. They are badly needed for the McCaleb work and for the Vincent position. Brother Sherriff reports a sad need of a single man or couple at Bulowayo, Rhodesia. To do as well as the Moravians, each lifty-eight members of the church should support a foreign worker. Prospects are for many to give more regular support to missions, though some will drop into the antebellum ruts and drift to perdition. Let us practice the plan for which such a strong plea is often made. One test, and the crucial scripture test, is that a member or church bear fruit. Remember, we are under the final orders. The Lord bless and guide his people into a giorious service.

Mrs. Maggie Nisbett, Murfreesboro, Tenn., writes; "I wish/you all a happy and prosperous New Year."

From Roy Endsley, Anes, Tenn.: "I would not be without the Gospel Advocate for three times the price."

From J. G. Allen, Muskogee, Okla.: "One young lady was baptized last week. So you see we are steadily growing."

From T. E. Tatum, Hallsville, Texas: "I consider the Gospel Advocate a most worthy paper, and I want every member of my family to read it."

From Mrs. William Ferguson, Magnetic Springs, Obio: "My enjoyment in both the Gospel Advocate and The Young People continues to increase."

From E. M. Massey, Lebanon, Tenn.: "I thank the Lord this morning that I am still able to pay for the dear old Advocate and read it with the aid of glasses,"

From W. C. Presley, Bono, Ark.: "If you are giving the Teacher's Testament as a premium for new subscribers, you can send it to me; but if not, it is all right, anyway, as the Gospel Advocate is worth much more than its cost."

From Mrs. M. A. Matthews, Jackson, Tenn.: "I have been taking the paper for over fifty years, but I don't think I will help many more years. I hope the paper will be carried on long after I am gone. Best wishes for a successful year."

From W. G. Black, Abilene, Texas: "I am heartily with you in the work, and shall continue to be, so long as you continue the Gospel Advocate as you have been and are now conducting it. I wish you the very best success for the coming year."

From Mrs. John Linch, Fosterville, Tenn., December 21: "Please accept my thanks for the nice Testament. I had the Gospel Advocate sent to Miss Long as a Christmas present without any thought of remuneration; however, it was highly appreciated."

Mrs. E. C. Kinzer, Columbia, Tenn.: "I have been a reader of the Gospel Advocate for about seven months, and I enjoy reading it so much. I want to send my mother a Christmas present, and have decided there would be nothing nicer than one year's subscription to the Gospel Advocate."

From O. L. Carnahan, Moss, Tenn.: "I have now redeemed my promise that I made to these congregations, sending every penny of the contributions to the war sufferers. I do not feel that I am able to do this next year, but I have insisted on each congregation keeping this work up."

John T. Hall, of Jackson, Tenn., called to see us last Saturday and bought a number of Bibles. He is authorized to take subscriptions to this paper and will cheerfully do what he can to extend its circulation. He has long been a warm supporter of the Gospel Advocate, which is duly appreciated.

From J. P. Kimbrell, Whitewright, Texas, December 23: "At the morning service yesterday a man and his wife from Trenton made the confession and were baptized. The faithful there meet in the home of Brother McMahon. The church here will have no Christmas tree, neither any Christmas spree, no blow-out of any kind, consequently no bad effects 'the day after.' However, we expect to begin the new year's work with renewed zeal and determination."

God is one from whom we expect all good, and in whom we can take refuge in all our needs, so that to have God is nothing else than to trust and believe in him with all our hearts; as I have often said, that trust and faith of the heart alone make both God and idol. If the faith and trust are right, then thy God is also the right God; and, again, if thy trust is false and wrong, then thou hast not the right God. For the two, faith and God, hold close together. Whatever, then, thy heart clings to (I say), and relies upon, that is properly thy God.—Martin Luther.

F. C. Sowell writes from Columbia, Tenn.: "I have recently read a splendid tract written by James H. Morton, the title of which is 'The Beginning Corner.' Brother Morton is in feeble health now, and not able to go out on the mission to tell the story of the cross of Christ; but if you will send for this tract and distribute it among your friends, in that way you will assist him in spreading the news of salvation. The tract is only ten cents. If you will do this needed work, it will not only make Brother Morton feel good, but will make an addition to your treasures laid up in heaven. Order from J. H. Morton, Lewisburg, Tenn."

From U. G. Wilkinson, Gainesville, Ark., December 23: "I closed yesterday at Beech Grove and came on to Gainesville, where I began last night with good interest, I go from here to Delaplaine and other points. I will be in this part of Arkansas for some time yet, as there are various places that desire me to pay them a vist. I am principally engaged in delivering special lectures on the fulfillment of prophecies in the great world war and its results and what effect it will have on the churches. I believe the churches need edifying at the present time, especially during the winter months, more than anything else, and generally they are hearing gladly. My book on the same subject will soon be ready for delivery. Price, fifty cents. Brother, send for one; it will do you good."

From W. S. Long, Washington, D. C., December 22: "The church in Washington is small and poor and young. They had asked the churches at large to give one Lord's-day offering to assist them in building a house in which to worship 'as it is written.' We could not ask the brethren to help us unless we first showed them that we were sacrificing at home. So at eleven o'clock to-day we called for an offering, and the baskets were carried through the little assembly of about forty and were filled to running over. The contribution was three hundred and eighty-one dollars and eighty cents. This is the best Lord's-day offering I have ever seen in any congregation, though I have visited some of the strongest in the United States. Now, to the readers of this good paper, would you, with all the blessings that God has given us, refuse us one offering for the house of worship? Will you not lay your hand upon your pocketbook and with a prayerful heart make an offering for this needed work, if this you have not done? You may say: 'O, I have so much of that kind of work at home.' That may be true, but do some there and also divide with us. This is as much your home as it is mine. It is a part of 'the field,' and Jesus says 'the field is the world.' Sickness and death have brought poverty to this congregation, and yet, out of this poverty, they abound with liberality. I pray that this may stir you to a greater devotion to God. Send your offerings to E. L. Mills, 2002 G Street, N. W.; T. F. Colvin, 2536 Eleventh Street, N. W.; or J. W. Gibson, 2500 Pennsylvania Avenue, S. E."

New Year Wishes and Aims.

At the beginning of 1916 the following splendid thoughts were sent to me by a friend. They are worth reading every day. The wishes I appreciated, indorsed the aims, and made the resolutions mine. I am passing them on at the beginning of 1919 to the many readers of the Gospel Advocate with the prayer that thousands of souls will be blessed by them.

The Heart We Need.

Jesus said: "My meat is to do the will of him that sent me, and to finish his work." (John 4: 34.) The heart that enables us to say this is the heart we need. Love will give us this heart. "For this is the love of God, that we keep his commandments; and his commandments are not grievous." (1 John 5: 3.) If you do not find real pleasure in doing God's will, it is proof that this love is not in your heart. The heroes of the Bible had this heart. Job beautifully expresses it when he said: "Neither have I gone back from the commandment of his lips; I have esteemed the words of his mouth more than my necessary food." (Job 23: 12.) How unlike Job are many church members who trample under foot God's precious word to satisfy the flesh, to please themselves! David said: "How sweet are thy words unto my taste! yea, sweeter than honey to my mouth! Therefore I love thy commandments above gold; yea, above fine gold." (Ps. 119: 103, 127.) Kind reader, is God's word thus precious to you? How to obtain this love should be a most important study, and to it we shall soon come, the Lord willing.

May the Lord bless us with hearts that find joy, indeed, when conscious of the fact that we are now obeying him, doing what he wishes us to do in everything: in our homes as husbands and wives, as parents and children; in the church, in our conduct toward every member; in every use we put the members of our body to in thought, word, and act. Watch the tongue. (James 3: 1-12.)

Success.

Stanley well says: "He has achieved success who has lived well, laughed often, and loved much; who has gained the respect of intelligent men and the love of little children; who has filled his niche and accomplished his task; who has left the world better than he found it, whether by an improved poppy, a perfect poem, or a rescued soul: who has never lacked the appreciation of earth's beauty or failed to express it; who has always looked for the best in others and given the best he had; whose life was an inspiration, whose memory a henediction."

This certainly is well expressed, and this that man has certainly done who, with the whole heart, has lived in God's law; for "good success" God has guaranteed to all who so live. (See Josh, 1: 8.) Now look back over your life and see that every real failure that you have ever experienced was due to your getting out of the good and the right way. (Jer. 6: 16.)

A Word to Our Friends.

Time and space forbid my saying all that I would like to say to the many who have helped us in the Georgia work and for this work continually prayed. We hope to give a full report of our success and failures soon on this page, but suffice it to now say that the year 1918 has been our best, so far as we are capable of judging, and the year 1,49 begins with a hope that stirs us as never before. As some of our readers know, this will be my thirteenth year in this field. I have had a great desire to make this headquarters and slip out and evangelize for at least a year simply as a change of work, and some of this, perhaps, I will do this year; however, the plans we have before us demands my giving the work here a few more months' hard work, which I gladly give.

God certainly has been good to us and blessed us with all that we have needed. As I reflect over some of the experiences here, my faith in God grows. Some of the experiences that we have had here look almost miraculous. I pray that we may keep ourselves in such condition of heart that he will continue his blessing.

I'm Going Home.

I'm going home! I've tarried on the alien plain so long, That in my throat had almost died the song-I'm going home!

I'm going home! Where snowy peaks salute the summer sky, And call to life again the submerged I-I'm going home!

I'm going home! I touch again the great ancestral heights, And lo! my dark blooms into countless lights--Selected. I'm going home!

The Return of Peace With the Religious Outlook at the Dawn of 1919.

BY M. C. K.

The death knell of the old year with the birth of the new at midnight, December 31, 1918, marks an epoch-making period in the world's history. Not since "an angel of the Lord" announced the advent of the world's Redeemer to the shepherds on the plains of Bethlehem and "a multitude of the heavenly host" chanted the praise of God over the glad event has there been such a New Year. The purpose of this article is to note some of the stirring events which mark the epoch and to call attention to the religious outlook, with the serious obligation it places upon the church.

The most gigantic and appalling war of all history has come to an end, and the beast of Autocracy lies in the dust of defeat. The student of military operations heretofore accustomed to look upon Xerxes with his million soldiers as the great military spectacle of history will hereafter think of him and his army as a mere speck compared with the multiplied millions of soldiers marching under Allied banners against other multiplied millions marching under the tanners of the Central Powers. It has been a contest between barbarism and civilization; between men who have respect for national treaties and other men who regard such treaties as nothing but "a scrap of paper" to be torn into shreds, with the outrage of every principle of honor, freedom, and justice among men. But the rigid and farreaching terms of the armistice have dismantled organized barbarism and utterly demolished and destroyed the mightlest war machine ever created by the genius of man. Men who forget God and the Bible and organize themselves into a system of tyranny and oppression to be executed by the sheer brute force of military rule for the domination of the earth have been taught a severe lesson, and the whole world is prepared to study that lesson with profit.

Without pausing here and now to discuss in detail either the function or the momentous importance of the International Peace Congress at Versailles, we merely note the fact that it is convened to formulate an international treaty of peace, destined, no doubt, to be the mightiest instrument of the kind so far in all history. For the time being, this congress commands the undivided attention of the civilized world; and our own President, no doubt with the penetration and sagacity of genuine statesmanship, has gone in person to participate in its counsels. The treaty of Westphalia in 1648, at the close of the Thirty Years' War; that of Paris in 1783, at the close of the American Revolutionary War; and that of Frankfort in 1871, between France and the new German Empire, were all great treatles each in its day and for its purpose; but the treaty to be formed at Versailles in 1919 is destined to eclipse all its predecessors in the vast scope of its significance and far-reaching importance. Let us hope and pray that it will put an end to war, if not forever, at least for a long time. That it will do this, we have not the shadow of a doubt. In the meantime two things demand our immediate and serious attention.

1. The reconstruction period. Such a period, of necessity, must follow the war. In general outline and from the material point of view, everybody knows what it means to bleeding Belgium and the devastated regions of Northern France. In the plains of Flanders, in the valleys of the Vosges, and on the broad fields of the Marne the thrilling story is told. Here are not only the bloody battle fields of the Internecine slaughter where the mighty holocaust has destroyed and maimed millions of men, but there is also to-day presented the spectacle of wrecked homes, the spoliation of cities and villages, the needless destruction of orchards with their annual yield of luscious fruit, the devastation of farm lands, the shelling of temples of worship, and the ruthless destruction of countless treasures of art that now lie in the ashes and ruins of war, Even if the great struggle had ended in 1915, the damages would have exceeded five billions of dollars; and now at the end of the war in 1918, while we have not the exact figures at hand, we know that the sum is staggering; but when we enter the moral and spiritual realm, in which, under the influence of rationalistic philosophy in parts of Europe and particularly in Germany, the tendency toward the rejection of God and the Bible has grown steadily for a hundred years, culminating in the unspeakable tragedy of the great war, the problems imposed upon the church to be met in the reconstruction period are indeed vast and important. Hence, let us consider:

2, The present duty of the churches. The time of a great opportunity is now evidently dawning. We mean the period of reconstruction that will follow the war when the dove of peace again spreads her pinions over the nations of the earth. Both pulpit and press should urge upon the churches the obligations that will be imposed. In our judgment, never was there a time more opportune for the presentation of special lines of instruction than will be afforded by this period. New emphasis should be placed. upon the simple facts of the gospel and the equally simple conditions of salvation. We make a special appeal to the readers of the Gospel Advocate that we all make the best possible use of this opportunity. Especially let us steer clear of unnecessary or untimely discussion of differences among us. Of course, where these involve matters essential to salvation or to the union of a divided church, discussion of them cannot properly be avoided, but is always necessary and timely. But there are so many things now demanding attention, on which we are all in perfect harmony and which call for special emphasis in pulpit and in press, that it is a pity to have either this harmony or the progress of such work marred and hindered by unnecessary discussion over differences. There are times occasionally, and now is one of them, when constructive work should not only have our attention, but when it should be allowed to progress uninterrupted and unhindered by work on destructive lines. The lines for constructive thought and teaching now are numerous and vast. We here offer some suggestive themes: Deeper Spirituality and Consecration; Dignity and Purity of Speech; The Old Gospel for the New Age: The Universal Brotherhood of Man in Christ; Rightly Dividing the Word of Truth; The Great Commission in the Light of World Events; Open Doors for the Gospel; Every Church an Organization for World-wide Mission Work; Attendance Upon the Lord's-day Worship; The Church Revealed in the New Testament; The Great Salvation; Faith; Repentance; Confession; Baptism; The Gospel God's Power to Save; Prayer and the Reign of Law; Atonement in the New Testament, or, The Blood of Christ for the Remission of Sins; The Shadow and the Substance, or, The Law and the Gospel; Watching and Praying; The New Testament versus Denominationalism; 'The Lord's Day and the Lord's Supper: The Supreme Authority of Christ; The Divine Basis of Christian Union; How to Keep the Unity of the Spirit in the Bond of Peace; etc.

Let us enter the new year with clear ideas of the great principles here involved, that we may present a solid and united front in the work of building up the churches and spreading the gospel "from the River unto the ends of the earth."

Was It "An Unwarranted," "Uncalled-For," and "Inexcusable" Thing?

BY E. A. E.

Am I willing to do God's will? That is, have I purposed and determined to obey God at all times and at all cost? (See John 7: 16-18.)

My being able to understand God's will depends upon my will to do it. If I purpose and determine to do it, I have the assurance that I can understand it.

I have been settled in my conviction for almost fifty years that I desire above all things to be saved. Then I know I must do God's will. (See Matt. 7: 21, 24, 25.)

Am I self-deceived?

If any man thinketh himself to be religious, while he bridleth not his tongue but deceiveth his heart, this man's religion is vain. (James 1: 26.)

To fail to control the pen is equally as sinful as to fail to bridle the tongue.

I preached recently on vain religion and vain worship, which is not difficult to do. Am I deceiving my own heart to think I am religious after a godly sort because I preach and write against unbridled tongues and uncontrollable pens, while I am failing to control my own tongue and pen? Should not I confess my faults first and then persuade others to do so? Well, I am ashamed when I know I have spoken in the home, the social and business circles, or in the pulpit, anything unbecoming a child of God, or that I have written anything that will not accomplish

I believe the following passage, as I do every other command of God, with my whole heart:

Let no corrupt speech proceed out of your mouth, but such as is good for edifying as the need may be, that it may give grace to them that hear. And grieve not the Holy Spirit of God, in whom ye were sealed unto the day of redemption. Let all bitterness, and wrath, and auger, and clamor, and railing, be put away from you, with all malice, and be ye kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving each other, even as God also in Christ forgave you. (Eph. 4: 29-31.)

Have I grieved the Holy Spirit by a refusal to speak and write as I am here commanded to do, or by being governed by these wicked things which are condemned?

Should I never be wronged by others, there will never be anything to forgive. That I am commanded to forgive others shows that I may be wronged by others. As others, too, may wrong me, I may wrong others. With intentions to do right and to accomplish good, I have wronged others.

If Christians never make mistakes, never mistreat one another, never do wrong, are never overtaken in any trespass; then there can never be an occasion for suffering long, forbearance, forgiveness, and the manifestation of love, which hides a multitude of sins. Were they never guilty of becoming angry, seeking vengeance, railing, becoming embittered, malicious, and refusing to forgive one another, there would be no place in the New Testament for such passages as the one quoted above.

When I have been wronged, I must not become angered and rail and grow sour and bitter and retallate and overcome evil with evil, etc. I must forbear, suffer long and still be kind, and show the forgiveness and spirit of Christ. "But," says one, "do you always practice what you preach?" No, not on the spur of the moment. So I say we should not be hasty in condemning others. Let us take time, "cool off," and when angry let us not sin, and let us see that the sun does not go down on us seeking vengeance and harboring malice. "In malice be ye babes, but in mind be men."

Now, if I have spoken or written an "unwarranted," "uncalled-for," and "inexcusable" thing, I repent of it, beg pardon, and ask the forgiveness of God.

I am sure that I cannot in any way wrong any personblack or white, red or yellow, young or old, male or female, ignorant or learned, small or great, sinner or saint and be saved, unless I repent of that wrong and make reparation of it to the extent of my ability. It matters not what the provocation—how many times and to what extent—one has wronged me, I cannot wrong that one in return and be saved, unless I repent and do all in my power to right it.

I feel more keenly and deeply the necessity of righting the wrong I may have done another, regardless of the wrongs I have suffered, than I feel hurt over wrongs done me. All the wrongs I have suffered or may ever suffer do not justify one wrong I do another.

Paul suffered many bitter and grievous wrongs at the hands of others; but he said:

Open your hearts to us: we wronged no man, we corrupted no man, we took advantage of no man. (2 Cor. 7: 2.)

Again, he says that it is better to suffer oneself to be defrauded and otherwise wronged than to defraud or otherwise wrong another.

For this reason I had rather be wronged a hundred times in a hundred different ways by a hundred different persons than to wrong one person one time. Howsoever, much and grievously I may be wronged by others, I can be saved; but I cannot be saved and wrong one person one time, unless I repent.

Then, why is it that I should be so much more agitated, disturbed, and hurt, and should complain so much more, over wrongs that some one has done me—that "one has cheated me," "defrauded me," "misrepresented me," "falsely accused me," "slandered me," ad infinitum—than I am over the fact that I have wronged another? The man who has wronged another has ruined his soul, unless he repents; and I should be concerned about my own soul.

Let me reverse this matter and seek to right the wrongs I have done others, set a good example, and be saved.

Why should I make a vain attempt to justify myself in any wrong I have done and thereby commit a double offense? I may justify myself to my own satisfaction and to the satisfaction of a few who are my personal and partisan friends; but that does not justify me before God, and before him I stand or fall. On this point Paul says:

But with me it is a very small thing that I should be judged of you, or of man's judgment: yea, I judge not mine own self. For I know nothing against myself; yet I am not hereby justified: but he that judgeth me is the Lord. Wherefore judge nothing before the time, until the Lord come, who will both bring to light the hidden things of darkness, and make manifest the counsels of the hearts; and then shall each man have his praise from God. (1 Cor. 4: 3-5.)

I cannot be saved because I can justify myself in my own eyes.

Every way of a man is right in his own eyes; but Jehovah weigheth the hearts. (Prov. 21: 2.)

Neither will I be lost, thank the Lord, simply because others condemn me.

What is that which Jesus says about "judge not," and that which Paul says about being doers and not judges of the law?

Why should I be always confessing the faults of others, telling them and relating to others how unwarranted, uncalled for, inexcusable, unjust, slanderous, and wicked many of their deeds are, and never be able to see and to confess my own sins?

Confess therefore your sins one to another, and pray one for another, that ye may be healed. (James 5: 16.)

The only right way and, therefore, the shortest way out of wrong is to confess it, repent, and seek forgiveness. Then it has gone forever.

One of my sons when very small ran in crying and told me his brother had struck him. I seized the opportunity to teach him a lesson which I hoped would benefit him in after life. So I asked him what he had done to his brother. He was confessing his brother's wrong. He replied to my question that his brother had hurt him by the lick. I replied, "I do not doubt that," but pressed my question, "What did you do?" He answered again by saying: "But he hurt me." I replied again: "I believe all you say: your brother struck you, he hurt you, he should net have done so, and has done wrong, therefore; but tell me what you did to him." Seeing I was fair and just, he sald: "Well, I bit him." Then I had both sides, and got them from the one who made the complaint. Another little fellow at another time came with his waist soaking wet from top to bottom, complaining that a grown boy had "poured a pitcher of water down his neck." "What did you do?" I asked. "I threw some water on him," was the reply. "Were you both playing?" I asked. "Yes," was the reply. "Go, then," I said, "put on a dry waist, and do not come to me crying because the other fellow got the better of the play." Just so, grown children in the church come complaining that they have been very badly treated in various ways, but they rarely ever tell what wrongs they have done. I want to ask: What did you do?

There can never be a quarrel without two quarrelers; there can never be a fight without two fighters.

A man ran in haste down the street. One met him and asked why such haste. "I am trying to prevent a fight between two men." "Who are they?" was the question. "I am one," he said, and ran on. Suppose church members were so afraid of strife, trouble, and a church fuss that they would run from them?

I have assisted in settling a few very grave church troubles. At one time two congregations were united when the church had separated and the withdrawing faction had built another house of worship. This was done by fair and just and frank dealing—by teaching from the word of God each one to confess his own faults. I have never failed when I could persuade the parties to the trouble to do this. I have always failed when I could not lead them to do this, If wrongdoers cannot see their own sins and will not repent of them, troubles can never be adjusted and their souls can never be saved.

It is a sin, a crying shame, and a blight on the church that so many preachers, elders, editors, and teachers in Bible schools, who virtually offer themselves as guides to the blind and who should be examples to the church and lights to the world, are embittered against each other, are trying to devour each other, are having their following and tearing apart into factions the body of Christ. "Who?" All who are guilty. Let each one of us examine himself and say: "Lord, is it I?" Some have committed this fearful sin.

Some seem to care no more for God's teaching on "the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace" and the things essential to this than some others do for the teaching of the New Testament on baptism, the Lord's Supper, or against the divorce evil.

It was a rare thing that preachers, teachers, elders, editors, and some others confess they ever make mistakes and do wrong in any given case. We all sing, "Lord, my sins, they are many," and we all quote, "In many things we all stumble;" but we never say in a given case that we did wrong there or in any particular way.

Some people seem never to have learned how to say they have done wrong or to beg another's pardon; and some others seem never to have learned how to grant pardon or to forgive. They can never "get over" anything. There is as much grace in granting pardon as is required to ask pardon.

Let us think on these things a while, and the Lord have mercy upon us all.

Thirty-Four Years' Labor.

BY J. C. M'Q.

With this issue of the Gospel Advocate I close thirty-four years of arduous labor with the paper. During that time we have printed about seventeen hundred and sixty-eight issues of the Advocate. During all these years my purpose and aim has been to be true and loyal to God. My highest ambition has been to do God's will, for I realize that this is the only road to happiness in this life and in the life to come. While this has been, and shall continue to be, the purpose of the Advocate, I realize that my work has been faulty and that I have made many mistakes. For my weaknesses and shortcomings I pray the Father's forgiveness and our readers' forbearance.

Thirty-four years is but a moment in comparison with the never-ending ages of eternity. The poet has well said:

Lo! on a narrow neck of land,
"Twixt two unbounded seas I stand,
Yet how Insensible!
A moment's time, a point of space,
Removes me to you heavenly place
Or shuts me up in hell.

But thirty-four years in one fleeting human life is much, it is long. This is doubly true when these years are taken out of one's young manhood and the best working years of his life. I fully realize that the years that are yet granted me by a merciful Heavenly Father, of necessity, cannot be so full of work and activity as the years that are gone. As the years come and go, I stand face to face with the fact more and more that soon I must stand before the judgment bar of God to give an account of the manner in which I have spent the years and improved the opportunities that have been granted me. It is but to be expected that soon I must give place to another and the burdens that I have borne through all these years must fall upon other shoulders; but to me this should matter but little, if I am only ready to pass out of the trials and responsibilities of life into a glorious beyond. Every one should pause in the midst of the busy scenes of life and take an account of his purpose, of his ambition, and of his work, and should certainly ask himself the question: "Am I doing what I should for the advancement of the religion of Jesus Christ in the world?" I feel that during the remaining years of my life I would like to devote more time to the work of advancing the Master's kingdom in this world. We should all realize that we must work the works of God while it is day, knowing that the night of death draws near, when no man can work.

Comparatively few of the subscribers who were reading the paper thirty-four years ago are now with us. A beloved companion, children, father, mother, and associates have passed to the great beyond and gone to their reward in these years; but while loved ones, subscribers, and friends have gone to their home, a sweet memory of their lives and the blessed work that they did while here still remain with us. It is also encouraging that others have come up to take the place of the subscribers who have gone. Thus the work moves on, and so shall it ever be. None of these things should move us, but we should press forward with the one determination to honor and glorify God in all that we do.

As has been our determination in the years that have passed, so it shall be our determination in the future to do the will of God as we see it. We have never been bound by the opinions of men, and have never bound ourselves nor sought to cause any one else to be so bound. No man knows all the truth. The purpose of all connected with the Gospel Advocate is to know and do God's will fearlessly and boldly, even if such should not please men. believe it is better to please God than to please men. In the beginning of this new year we most earnestly ask the cooperation of all who wish to see God's will done on earth as it is in heaven, and who are willing to labor and make sacrifices to that end. This shall be the aim and purpose of this paper, and we pray that the tongue may be speechless and the hand palsied that would divert it from such a purpose.

The Word of God.

BY E. G. S.

The word of the Lord must direct Christians in all things, if they would be on safe ground. Man's wisdom cannot guide people in the way that leads to eternal life. Man's wisdom is too weak and too short to lead him in the narrow way that leads to eternal life. The word of God is the only thing on earth that can lead people to heaven, and it can lead them there only when they follow its divine directions. As certain as the Bible is true, it will take all safely home that will faithfully follow its divine teaching; but those that disregard its teaching through this earthly life are sure to miss heaven when they die. It is worth everything, therefore, to mortals of earth to obey the plain word of the Lord in this life.

When Jesus said, "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven," he evidently meant just what he said. Hence, there is no showing at all for the salvation of those who refuse to obey the word of God as given in the New Testament. Yet there is a wonderful tendency on the part of some to change, to add to or take from, certain passages of the New Testament. Jesus said, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved;" but lots of men say that those who get religion will be saved whether they are baptized or not. Now why do men say such things? Does the Bible say so? It certainly does not. It does not a single time use the words "get religion." Why, then, should uninspired men talk that way? If the New Testament said even one time that we must "get religion," then we might safely talk about It in that style; but it does not say one word about getting religion. It is, therefore, dangerous to the interest of our souls to talk that way. If those that teach that way could show one passage in the New Testament that puts it that way, we would be glad to accept it and preach it that way; but as it cannot be shown that way in the New Testament, we are afraid to teach it that way.

Then, again, lots of preachers teach that "baptism is not essential to salvation." They teach that the main thing in conversion is to get the heart right; that baptism is not in any sense a saving ordinance. But they run to a decided extreme on this matter. The word of God says: "Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death? Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death: that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life." (Rom, 6: 3, 4.) This passage shows baptism to be a matter of very great importance and furnishes a decided contradiction of the claim that baptism is a matter of no importance. Baptism puts people that are ready to be baptized into Christ and into the promise of remission of sins; it puts them into the church of God and makes them sons and daughters of the Lord. Without coming into these relations, none can be called the children of God, according to the New Testament.

God has never given to man the right to change his word in any particular. We have no right to add anything to his word or to take anything from it. We humanize his word when we add anything to it or take anything from it. We must accept it just as he gave it or we can receive no blessing from it. It is only a matter of human wisdom to talk about "getting religion." If the Lord had commanded us to "get religion," he would certainly have told us what it is and how to get it; but he did not. Therefore, we have no right to talk about doing what he has said nothing about in any way. We only need to accept and obey the New Testament just as the Lord has given it to us, if we would be saved by it. When the Lord promises salvation to all that obey it, our part is to obey the word as the Lord has given it, and he stands ready to save us, and that is the only showing we have for salva-

. Sometimes a little poem speaks volumes. We believe we have found one of this kind, written by Amy Sherman Bridgman, entitled "Armenia." Here it is:

Had I the tears of all the years Since tears began to flow, I could not shed them fast enough To rightly speak her woe!

O little harried garden-land, O Eden of man's birth,

O tortured, stricken country— Her grief thrills all the earth!

She stretches out her bleeding hands. Let her not cry in vain! O give and give and give once more To ease Armenia's pain!

What one loves is of more importance than what one knows; what one wants to do and is interested in trying to do is of more consequence than what one has done,—William DeWitt Hyde.

Neal.

Sister Neal, widow of our lamented brother, W. F. Neal, evangelist who labored here at Winnipeg, Manitoba, Canada, for about six years, has gone to her rest. She died on November 10, 1918, and was laid to rest in Elmwood Cemetery. We are glad to testify to the unswerving loyalty of our sister to the plain teaching of the New Testament. The writer has vivid recollections of many heart-to-heart talks with her about the Truth. She was a worthy daughter of a worthy father—namely, Brother J. W. Harding, of Winchester, Ky., a worthy exponent of the Truth at ninety-five years of age. The apostolic injunction to the church at Corinth justly portrays our departed sister; for she was steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord. Our deepest sympathy goes out to the family in their bereavement, A, R. Adams.

Miller.

On October 19, 1918, the death angel came and took for its victim Miss Cinda Miller, of Piper City, Ill. Sister Miller was born in Monroe County, Ky., and had reached the age of thirty-one years at the time of her death. She had lived in Illinois only a short time. She confessed her faith in the Savior when quite young and had lived a consistent, Christian life. Just before she passed away she sang, in a clear, distinct tone of voice. just before she passed away she sang, in a clear, distinct tone of voice, "Nearer, My God, to Thee." She is survived by her father and mother, two brothers, and three sisters. Her remains were brought to Summer Shade, Cal., and tenderly laid away to await the resurrection morn. To the dear ones I would say: "Sorrow not, even as others which have no not, even as others which have no hope. For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him."

L. MEADE WILLIAMS.

Allison.

On November 12, 1918, the death angel came to the home of Elder A. L. Allison, of Dover, Tenn., and claimed for its victim his devoted wife. Sister Allison before her marriage was Miss Rebecca Minerva Campbell. She was born on July 2, 1877. In 1896 she was "born again"—born into the family of God, the household of faith, the church which our Savior shed his precious blood to our Savior shed his precious blood to establish. She was baptized by Brother Matthews. She was married to Elder A. L. Allison on June 12, 1904. To this union were born five children, one of whom (the oldest) died in infancy. The writer was called to conduct the funeral services, but, on account of a misunderstanding in the time, arrived too late, and the services were conducted by God's faithful servant, our brother in the one faith, her husband. The highest eulogy I can pay to her memory is to say she was a Christian.

WAYNE CLARK.

Gaines.

Brother Claude Gaines, of County, Miss., and a member of the County, Miss., and a member of the Antioch congregation, was born on March 7, 1868, and died at his home near Coldwater, Miss., on August 25, 1918. He leaves his wife, Mrs. Julia Gaines, and four children (three daughters and one son), besides a number of relatives and friends, to mourn their loss. Brother Gaines was devout as a Christian, kind and loyal as a husband, and dutiful as a father. In his business as a farmer he was prosperous, and was always. he was prosperous, and was always willing to respond to calls for assist-ance in charity and for the cause of ance in charity and for the cause of Christ. He was kind and generous, and his well-furnished home was always hospitably open to all who made claims upon his open-hearted generosity. Taken away in the prime of life, his place of usefulness cannot well be filled, but by faith we look to the Giver of all good for the making of all things right. We will see the kindly face of Brother Gaines no kindly face of Brother Gaines no more on earth, but we can meet him in a home where sorrows come no more. LEE JACKSON.

Hicks.

Brother T. R. Hicks, of Bradentown, Fla., died at his home on the night of November 7, 1918. Brother Hicks, I judge, was about fifty-five years of age. He began preaching after he was well advanced in age, and devoted himself diligently to the work of preaching. I write this notice of his death because I knew him, and loved him for his work's sake. He was originally a railroad man, but, having learned the way of the Lord, he determined to tell the story Lord, he determined to tell the story of redemption to others. Few men know of the sacrifices and privation that some preachers make and endure. I have known Brother Hicks to labor hard, but willingly, in fields where the financial outlook was poor, simply because he loved the Truth where the inancial outlook was poor, simply because he loved the Truth and because the Savior had made the sacred statement: "And the poor have the gospel preached unto them." Brother Hicks did not claim to be a scholar, but he could tell the story of the cross so well that many of the saints in the South were delighted to have him for a meeting. He will be missed in South Alabama. Brother C. M. Stubblefield conducted the funeral service in the meetinghouse on Catoma Street, in Montgomery, Ala., on Sunday afternoon, November 10. We shall expect to meet Brother Hicks "on the other side."

ren

Womack.

Francis M. Womack was born on May 26, 1833, and departed this life on December 1, 1918. He was married, on February 26, 1854, to Martha I. Thomas, who departed this life on September 20, 1883. He was married, again, to Mary O. Snodgrass, on September 18, 1892. There were born to him and his first wife saven skill. to him and his first wife seven chil-dren, four boys and three girls, all living but one boy. Brother Womack obeyed the gospel fifty-two years ago and lived and died in the faith. He always stood firm on the Bible. He was a father to me in the study of the Bible, and advised me as he did his own children. He will be did his own children, fie will be missed by his companion, who was so good and kind to him. She never let him want for anything during his affliction. God will not only bless her in this life, but will crown her with a crown of righteousness in heaven. His children did all they could for him. A reunion of his children and bindred and friends was dren and kindred and friends was held once a year at his home, which always made him happy. Some day always made him happy. Some day a reunion will take place at the judg-ment seat of God; so let us all look forward to that day and prepare to unite with him in that upper and better kingdom, where there will be no more separations. A large crowd no more separations. A large crowd of friends paid him the last tribute of respect. His body was laid to rest in the cemetery at the church of Christ, Bean's Creek, Tenn. Funeral services were conducted by Brother George Gilbert, of Manchester, Tenn., assisted by the pair. assisted by the writer.

When Christmas Calls.

Christmas has called-and I want to go home:

Christmas has whispered-and out through the night

There's something which beckons to us who must roam

Far from the berries of scarlet and white;

There's something which beckons— —and out on the road We follow the way of a dream that is old, And weary the travel and heavy the load Of those who may never turn back to the fold. I want to go back to the day where at dawn

A tow-headed youngster rushed forth with a whoop To the clarion call of the little tin horn And the roll of the drum as it summoned its troop

Of the tin-soldiered legion with muskets agleam,

Serried and straight in an unbroken

I want to go back where a fellow can dream

Of Christmas like that in the Longtime Ago.

Nerve and Eye Strain.

Many nervous as well as other diseases are caused by incorrect Illumination. The eve is a subject of prime consideration in connection with our health and happiness. Eye fatigue spoils the disposition. As that is one of the conditions given for inefficient work, we find here again a reduction in efficiency and a cause for more loss of the workman's time. The first loss was mechanical, the second is physical; both, when reduced to a dollarand-cents basis, show a large percentage over the cost of lighting that would be required to eliminate them. As judgment is dependent upon perception, and perception upon the sight, then the laborer, to be efficient, must be able to see fine details and small objects at close range with sharpness and distinction, to distinguish objects at a distance with accuracy, and to have clear perception of all objects in the intermediate space.-Exchange.

FIRST AID TO DIGESTION

In cases or indigestion or dyspepsia, the contents of the stomach, for lack of a proper supply of digestive juices, first ferment, forming gases, and later decompose. This precess is attended with more or less discomfort and reacts to the injury f all the digestive organs, with the result of poisoning the entire system, a condition known as auto-intexication. Three prime considerations arise in treatment of such conditions:

First, the process of decomposition must be arrested, by neutralizing the acid condition of the stomach, thus giving prompt relief from pain.

Second, the salivary glands and other glands which produce the various digestive juices must be stimulated into active secretion in order that the food may be proporly digested.

Third, the stomach nerves must be toned up into a healthy state and inflammatory conditions of the membranous lining allayed.

Advanced Bible Courses.

BY W. W. FREEMAN.

Just now thousands are getting out of the military service back into the flow of the normal life of the world. Surely it is a time for us to do our best to enlist more workers in the Master's service. The task of the church of God to-day certainly is a worthy challenge to the best there is in the men who have offered themselves in the closing struggle. Let every preacher and every leader make a desperate effort to improve conditions. The fields call for more workers. Men will be hunting noble positions. The church has a task committed to it by Jesus, who said: "Go, disciple all nations." Now is a supreme moment to improve. It is not easy to stir the cement after it once settles down.

Before I mention the special work of Abilene Christian College, I want to suggest another important matter. The work of preparing Christian workers costs money, and money is required continually to support an army in the field. Now, hundreds have money loaned which they may as well or better leave on deposit so as to give the accruing interest to the cause of missions. Why not? Is the war for righteousness over? Were we in dead earnest when we professed to give and sacrifice, even to coal, bread, and sugar, that liberty and freedom in righteousness might come to the peoples of earth? I hope our religious spirit is not dependent on the flurries of national life. The kingdom of God makes no truce. The strains on moral principles and the demands for constructive work may be quite as exacting in the era following war as while the consensus of public opinion favors sacrifice in its progress. The next decade of mission work will tell largely the future, and a century of missions will enable us to forecast what the coming millennium under normal conditions will reveal. We are making history. What will the record be in the last day? The Lord has trusted us. Shall we be faithful? We are stewards-"stewards of the manifold grace of God." Shall we not put our bonds permanently with the churches or some individual, that the accruing interest may go to the work of spreading the gospel? Such a step is essential and is "reasonable service." Have we learned to give as the big enterprise requires? Will we do it?
Abilene (Texas) gave five thousand dollars on the new building we are soon to open. It affords ten or more good classrooms and one of the best auditoriums outside of the large cities. We have a thriving little city, and our dormitories are of modern brick, with gas, electricity, and running water in each room. Our S. A. T. C. unit has been dissolved, and so we have room for some new students at the opening of the next term, December 31. Some of our soldier boys will remain; others are coming back from service in camps or abroad: and we want other mature men to enroll for our regular school work, especially for our Bible work. Besides the classes in Bible from the sixth to the senior high-school classes, we have college courses (interpretation, church history, comparative religions, Greek, Hebrew, evidences, homiletics, etc.) of seminary rank. We offer three years of courses for university graduates or students specializing for active religious work. Get our catalogue. Full credit for all our work may be had hour for hour in higher schools. Let us get together and do our best for Jesus and humanity.

Posture in Prayer.

BY F. C. SOWELL.

The Lord wills that men should pray, and the best of men in Old Testament and New Testament times prayed.

One may pray standing, sitting, prostrate, or on his knees. But when one is free and at liberty when he goes to the Lord in prayer, we are impressed by Bible examples that he goes down upon his knees.

When Daniel knew that King Darius had signed the decree that no prayer should be offered only to the king, that in thirty days he should be put into the den of lions, "he went into his house; and his windows being open in his chamber toward Jerusalem, he kneeled upon his knees three times a day, and prayed, and gave thanks before his God, as he did aforetime." (Dan. 6: 10.) Daniel was a most excellent character, and Jehovah loved and blessed him. Daniel showed his devotion to his God in getting upon his knees in the spirit of humility.

When the woman of good works and almsdeeds, called "Dorcas," died, Peter was sent for; and "when he was come, they brought him into the upper chamber: and all the widows stood by him weeping, and showing the coats and garments which Dorcas made, while she was with them. But Peter put them all forth, and kneeled down, and prayed; and turning him to the body, he said, Tabitha, arise. And she opened her eyes: and when she saw Peter, she sat up." (Acts 9: 39, 40.) This shows clearly that Peter "kneeled down, and prayed." We find the same posture with Paul when he left the disciples at Ephesus, in his farewell address: "And when he had thus spoken, he kneeled down and prayed with them all." This seems to have been the most humble attitude in worshiping before God. When our blessed Lord went to the mount of Olives, as his custom was, his disciples were with him. "And he was parted from them about a stone's cast; and he kneeled down and prayed, saying, Father, if thou be willing, remove this cup from me: nevertheless not my will, but thine, be done." (Luke 22: 41, 42.)

With such Bible examples before us, with freedom of body, I feel it is the infallibly safe side of the question to kneel in prayer. Should one be bound upon his back, as Paul and Silas were when in prison, then pray as they did -upon your back; but in the freedom of your body, kneel upon your knees. Paul says: "Wherefore I ask that ye may not faint at my tribulations for you, which are your glory. For this cause I bow my knees unto the FaTO WARD OFF PNEUMONIA Rub vigorously with GOWAN'S—the pleasant, effective, external application for colds, croup, pleurisy, pneumonis, etc. Soothing and healing. ther, from whom every family in heaven and on earth is named."

Many of the disciples in these days sit or stand during the prayers. They may have their reasons for this. But when I read about these men of God upon their knees praying, I feel that I can talk to God better upon my knees. When I get upon my knees to pray, I feel like I am in the same posture as Peter, Paul, and our blessed Lord. This posture in prayer is expressive of humility, dependence, homage, or adoration. I feel the need of humility and greater reverence for God's word. "He that humbleth himself shall be exalted."

Indians No Longer Outeasts.

In the annual report of Cato Sells, Commissioner of Indian Affairs, this is said: "Evidences of material and humanitarian advancement are everywhere apparent. Industrially and socially, the Indians are making unparalleled strides toward self-support and civilization. I have discovered that with sympathetic cooperation and intelligent encouragement their response is almost universal."

Within the last few years forty-two thousand one hundred and ten Indian families have forsaken the tepee to live in houses. The tribal Indian rapidly is becoming "individualized." His red past is only a few years behind him, but it is in the past. The government no longer believes that wars with the Indians are possible. The question of peace with them is an answered one, and all that remains is to make of the Indian a self-supporting, self-respecting member of American society.

It has been said that the red past of the Indian is only a few years behind him. How strikingly this is shown by the fact that to-day many officers of the United States Army below the rank of brigadier general wear the ribbon which shows that they have seen active service in warfare against the Apache, the Sioux, the Cheyenne, or other tribes of mountain and plain. It probably will be hard to-day to find any irreconcilables among the Indians of the West, unless the search be extended into the tepees of the ancients who grow to old age in a condition of roamers and warriors, and in whom nature forbids a change to take place.—Chicago Evening Post.

I see not a step before me as I tread

For perhaps the dreaded future is less bitter than I think:

The Lord may sweeten the waters before I stoop to drink; Or, if Marah must be Marah, he will

It may be he keeps waiting for the coming of my feet,

So I go on not knowing-I would not if I might;

I would rather walk in the dark with God than go alone in light;

I would rather walk with him by faith than walk alone by sight.

My heart shrinks back from trials which the future may disclose,

Yet I never had a sorrow but what the dear Lord chose;

So I send the coming tears back with the whispered words, "He knows.

"Praise Ye the Lord."

BY S. WHITFIELD.

Every creature that is in this world should praise the Lord for his goodness and mercy to the children of men, for he has been good to us. God made this world, and it is a wonderful place. It is adapted to man and to his needs in this life. God made it for man. God made us, and we are adapted to this world. God adapted us to it. Everything that God made, he made it right, and he said that it was good. But some one might say that this would be a better world if there was no sin or evil in it. Well, that is true, and this should lead us to praise the Lord. God made only the good. He is the author of all good. God did not put the evil here. The Evil One is the author of all evil and sin. God gives us health, strength, food, and raiment. We are satisfied with the good things that we enjoy. God has given us bodies and minds to use to his honor and glory; and if we use them in this way, we can be a blessing to others, and build up a character that will have an influence for good after we are dead and away from this tabernacle. God has given us the association and fellowship of the best people that are in the world. When we sit down, look on the bright side of life for a while, and count our opportunities for good and our blessings, they seem to be without number. For all of these things we should praise the Lord.

"Praise ye the Lord. Praise ye the name of the Lord; praise him, O ye servants of the Lord. Ye that stand in the house of the Lord, in the courts of the house of our God, praise the Lord; for the Lord is good: sing praises unto his name; for it is pleasant." (Ps. 135; 1-3.)

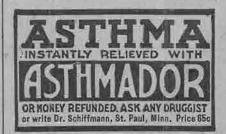

David did not forget to praise the Lord for all the blessings that he received. He called on others to do the same; and he calls on us to thank the Lord for all his goodness to us. Are our lives filled up with praise to God as much as they should be? I fear not. Do we stop to think of all the goodness of God to us? "Blessed be the Lord, who daily loadeth us with benefits, even the God of our salation." (Ps. 68: 19.)

"The Lord of hosts is with us; the God of Jacob is our refuge. Come, behold the works of the Lord, what desolations he hath made in the earth. He maketh wars to cease unto the end of the earth; he breaketh the bow, and cutteth the spear in sunder; he burneth the chariots in the fire. Be still, and know that I am God: I will be exalted among the heathen, I will be exalted in the earth. The Lord of hosts is with us; the God of Jacob is our refuge." (Ps. 46: 7-11.)

During these days of war most of us have enjoyed liberty to worship the Lord and do our duty as children of God: and for all of this, with the other blessings that we enjoy, we should be very thankful, and should praise the Lord, from whom all blessings come. But now, since God has seen that it is enough and has caused the war to cease, we should praise him still more. God does all things well. He is still overruling all for his honor and glory and for our good. Let us give him the honor that is due him for all that he has done. Let us show our appreciation for all of God's goodness and mercy to us during all the days of our lives. God will give us the very help that we need, if we only do his will. He is our refuge at all times.

Some praise the Lord a great deal with their lips, but I am afraid that their hearts are not right before God; for they say, "Lord, Lord," but do not do the things that the Lord says. Maybe sometimes we are ashamed to say, "Praise the Lord," for fear some one will say that we are like them; but if we are doing the will of the Master as best we can, we ought to praise God from the depths of our hearts. Indeed, it is our duty to do this, for all that we are and all that we have we owe it to God.

There does not seem to be much limit to David's expressions concerning his thanks, praise, honor, glory, and blessing to God. He did not seem to be afraid that any one would accuse him of repetition, or, if he did, he did not care what any one might say; for he said what he wanted to say in praise to God, and he said it over and over again, and again, and still again. Who can blame him? Surely no one wants to! Let us rather eatch up the same good spirit of praise and thanksgiving to the God of all gods.

"Evening, and morning, and at noon, will I pray, and cry aloud: and he shall hear my voice." (Ps. 55: 17.) "Seven times a day do I praise thee because of thy righteous judgments." (Ps. 119: 164.) "From the rising of the sun unto the going down of the same the Lord's name is to be praised." (Ps. 113; 3.) This is all plain enough, and shows that David's heart was full of praise at all times to God for all of his mercy, goodness, and love.

There were ten lepers in the days of Christ, who were healed. One of them came back to give thanks for the great blessing he had received; but the nine were ungrateful. Jesus asked where the nine were. Is it possible that we are grieving God because we do not return to give thanks to him!

The Spirit's House.

From naked stones of agony I will build a house for me; As a mason all alone I will raise it, stone by stone, And every stone where I have bled Will show a sign of dusky red. I have not gone the way in vain, For I have good of all my pain; My spirit's quiet house will be Built of naked stones I trod On roads where I lost sight of God. -Sara Teasdale.

FOOT TROUBLES.

No Need of Them, Says Brooklyn Man, Who Has Evidently Solved a Big Problem.

According to the testimony of hundreds of people living in the Southland and elsewhere, E. P. Simon, of 1589 Broadway, Brooklyn, N. Y., has successfully developed a system of shoe building having for its prime object the con-quering of foot and shoe troubles. It appears that Mr. Simon's establishment has become national headquarters for people whose feet require his remarkable comfort shoe, known as the Ez-Wear, but obtainable only of the in-ventor. Mr. Simon's new catalogue shows several hundred shoes that combine comfort with style at amazingly low prices and is now ready for free distri-bution.—Advt.

KILLS CATARRH

Famous Hyomei-Mr. Beeth's Wonderful Discovery.

Some years ago, the noted Richard T. Booth, founder of the blue ribbon movement and temperance orator and leader of international fame who induced over a million men to sign the pledge, developed a very serious catarrhal trouble. Seeking to regain health, he went to inland Austraits where he breathed day and night the antiseptic balsams as given off by the Eucalyptus forests.

This experience led Mr. Booth to the discovery of the most wonderful catarrhal treatment known to medical science-Hyomel, which is formed from the purest oil of Eucalyptus combined with other healing and antiseptic ingredients. Hyomei is a germ killing vapor, absolutely harmiess but wonderfully effective in the treatment of Catarrh and colds of the head, Catarrhal Coughs, Bronchial Catarrh, Spasmodic Croup, Catarrhal Laryugitis or Hay Fever. The treatment is simple but most scientific, You breathe Hyonel. It is pronounced the only method of treatment that sends by direct inhalamethod of treatment that sends by direct inhala-tion to the most remote part of the air passages, a balsamic air that destroys germs and bacilli of bronchial catarrh in the breathing organs, sooths and aliays irritation and enriches and purifies the blood. Mary Jenkins Brittian.

BY F. B. SRYGLEY.

Sister Mary Brittian, formerly Mary Jenkins, died at her home near Nolensville, Tenn., on May 19, 1918. She was born on November 22, 1838, and, hence, lacked only a few months being eighty years old. She obeyed the gospel at Rock Springs, in Rutherford County, Tenn., the third Sunday in September, 1858. She was a member of the church nearly sixty years, and was faithful to it till her death. For about forty-five years of that time she was present at the meetings of the church. The last fifteen years of her life she was an invalid and, therefore, could not attend all the meetings of the church, but she never forgot to give of her means to support the gospel. She was a faithful wife; a tender, loving mother; a good neighbor, and a true Christian. Could much more be said in commendation of any woman? She reared two sons and one daughter, and taught them to be Christians, and, therefore, to be useful men and women. Her husband and her only daughter preceded her several years to the glory world; and while this saddened her life, it sweetened it and better fitted it for service. Her faith grew stronger in the eternal world as the ties were broken in this world. Her sons and grandchildren are left with the memories and the heritage of a faithful life to encourage them onward and upward to a brighter day. It will be a happy meeting when father, mother, daughter, and sons all meet together in the glory world. Cherish the memory of mother and grandmother, imitate her example of faithfulness, and follow her as she followed Christ; and some sweet day there will be a happy reunion of the family "over there."

The year's work has done good, I be The greatest number of additions came in at Pine Prairie, which was new plowing, the gospel not hav-ing been preached there for ten years. This is rather a hard field, though a good one in many respects. The people always have time to listen. I am looking for a good year's work among them next year. If any of the breth-ren have a mind to help, I would appreciate a few gifts in the shape of books, which I am not able to buy and which I sorely need. Altus, December 18.—I have just returned from a fruitless, expensive trip to Northwest Oklahoma, Colorado, and New Mexico. I was closed out of all my appointments on account of the I could do nothing except visit a few brethren from house to house. I met Brother John D. Evans in Denver—a grand man, I think—with oth-ers there, who are doing all they can to build up the cause of Christ there. Denver is a great city for sight-seeing and a health resort, but cursed with sects of every kind. I was told that the population was near three hundred thousand, with one little congregation of loyal Christians. We need to locate some loyal evangelists in Colorado. Several years ago I helped to establish several congregations in Northwest Oklahoma, New Mexico, and Northwest Texas; but since the war excitement and politics among the brethren, the most of them have gone to the bad. Some few seem to be contented with one meeting a year, with some favorite preacher, if they can get him; and if they fail to get him, they fail to have any meeting. They are spiritually dead. Those congregations do not like to hear sermons on Christian worship, duty, fellowship, and church work. Where will they land? May God help us to arise out of our lethargy.—H. H. Turner, Gave Great Writer a Theme.

In one of his stories of farm life in Georgia, Joel Chandler Harris tells of a wealthy planter who wanted a few acres of original woodland cleared near a village in which he lived. Labor was scarce, but he finally induced a thriftless fellow in the village to do the work—a man who had always been honest, but a kind of dreamer and "ne'er-do-well."

After a few days the man came to his employer and frankly confessed that he could not do the work, although he needed the money. Pressed for a reason, he said that the first tree he started to cut down was hollow and occupied by two squirrels, who made violent complaint at the destruction of their house. The next was the home of a chipmunk with a large family, and the third was occupied by at least four pairs of jaybirds. "That piece of woodland is a peopled city, throbbing with life, busy from morning until night. It contains their homes and families; they have built and lived there for years, and I have not the heart to destroy what belongs to these helpless creatures." And out of that incident, simple but impressive as it was, Mr. Harris drew inspiration for one of the most graphic pictures in all literature.-H. E. Harman, in the South Atlantic Quarterly.

Catarrh is an excessive secretion, accompanied with chronic inflammation, from the mucous membrane. Hood's Sarsaparilla acts on the mucous membrane through the blood, reduces inflammation, establishes healthy action, and radically cures all cases of catarrh.

A Call to Men.

The great world's heart is achingaching fiercely in the night,

And God alone can heal it, and God alone give light;

And the men to bear that message, and speak the living word,

Are you and I, my brothers, and the millions that have heard.

Can we close our eyes to duty? Can we fold our hands at ease,

While the gates of night stand open to the pathways of the seas?

Can we shut up our compassions? Can we leave one prayer unsaid, Till the lands which hell has blasted have been quickened from the dead?

O Voice of God, we hear thee above the shocks of time,

Thine echoes roll around us, and the message is sublime;

No power of man shall thwart us, no stronghold shall dismay,

When God commands chedience and love has led the way.

TO STOP FALLING HAIR.

The cause of baldness, hair falling out. loss of luster and color, is found in the roots of the hair liself. Our hair is but a portion of our body, and, like the other organs. cannot subsist without food. The hair finds its food in the fat layer of skin next to the skull. When this source of food is stopped or Impeded, out comes the hair. The dreaded disease, dandruff, is a germ. It collects on the bottom of the hair and eats away its life. The hair sack from which the bair comes is imbedded in the layer of underskin. When the scalp is diseased and the hair falls out, often this small hair sack closes. Eventually, as a result of the dandruff germs, baldness comes. The proper method of restoring the hair and stopping the falling out must necessarily be in the destruction of the dandruff germs and in the reopening of the little hair sacks. Furthermore, in order to rejuvenate the scalp and make the growth of new hair more vigorous, it is necessary that the system be able to furnish an abundance of hair food. Many artificial methods have been tried in restoring the hair which were only surface remedies, and, failing to reach the small hair sacks, were unsuccessful. Reopening the hair sack allows the new hair to grow. CALVACURA begins at the root of the trouble, and its use is, therefore, advised. Its mission is to feed the new hair as well as the old and rid the scalp of all dandruff germs. By thus cleansing and rejuvenating the entire scalp, a healthy growth of hair is assured. Falling of hair is stopped, new life and color to dead, gray hair is developed. and the hair becomes smooth and velvely. It is not an unpleasant treatment, and takes only a few minutes of time each day for about six weeks. The Union Laboratory, 214 109th Street, Binghamton, N. Y., will send you a liberal sample of Calvacura No. 1 FREE, together with a booklet, "The Triumph of Science Over Baldness," if you will send your name and address, together with 10 cents in sliver or postage stamps to help pay the distribution expenses.

Fool or Wise Man?

BY EDGAR L. VINCENT.

Human nature has not changed much since the beginning, and there must have been some who called Noah an old fool when he laid the keel of the ark. "Poor old man! Only seven or eight hundred years old, and yet he surely must have come into his dotage! Talk about building an ark to save the world from drowning! Never was a flood, anyhow; never will be."

So they went right on doing just as they had done; and Noah kept busy at the ark. In the meantime, how he did preach repentance and try to show people that sin surely would bring sorrow; that God is just and his word is true! Year in and year out he fought on, single-handed, that battle against evil. And the more he preached, the more men laughed, and the harder Noah worked to finish that ark on time; for he knew that God tells the truth, and just the minute he is ready the rain will begin to fall.

Have you ever stopped to think what a day that was when Noah gathered his wife and children into the ark and the door was shut? It seems as if things would have begun to look a bit serious to the neighbors by that time. From the fields everywhere Noah had gathered those friends of the fur and driven them, in spite of their protests, into the shelter of the ark. Of all living things that God had made in the beginning, not one was missing. For one day, beyond the swirl of the floods, there was to be a new world, in which man would need the help of these dumb creatures.

Now the last pair is in. Noah, with head erect and flashing eye, steps through the doorway like a king. Never was his faith stronger. It was his time now to laugh; but I do not think he felt much like laughing. Rather, did he not stand there with his feet on the threshold and for the last time call the men and the women he had known so long to repent of their sins, so that even yet the world might be saved?

It may be the sun was shining when Noah went in that last day. Mountain, field, and wood may have been bathed in the glory of a day most beautiful. Not much like a flood, was it? And yet he went in? Then God shut the door. Noah sat down and waited.

The sunshine faded out; clouds swept across the sky; the wind blew; in terror the people who had laughed and mocked and scoffed beckened toward the shut door. But the lashing of the rain in their faces was the only answer. It was too late. God had shut the door, and it stayed shut.

To-day there are a few souls brave enough to say that this old world of ours is at the parting of the ways. Cries of peace come from every hand. Glibly men tell us how they are going to work out some sort of an agreement that will insure humanity against a repetition of the awful scenes we have lately witnessed. No more war. All screne among the nations. Wait until we have come elbow to elbow and issued our mandate, and we will show you a world forever at rest.

Through the clamor of these confused assurances of a man-made peace we hear the voice of the men of faith of the old sort; and these men say: "Sit elbow to elbow with God. Take him into your counsels. Let him be the guide and the wisdom of all that shall be done. Trust not to your own understanding. This is the world's crisis. Listen, and hear God tell you the way of peace!"

Will men listen? Will they call upon God with all their hearts, so that they may be sure that he is directing the peace? Of will they laugh as they did in the day of Noah, and go on planning a peace that shall leave God out, selfish, intensely commercial, wholly inadequate to the demands of the times?

The hearts of true Christians everywhere stand still while waiting for the answer to these questions. God bless the men in France who have in their hands the determination of the grave questions that will come before them! God give them to put aside all longing for power of every kind, national and individual! God grant them a spirit of faith in the Lord God of Israel and a courage to stand for the right in every spot and place! God help them to be men, men of God and men of the Spirit! Then will the wisdom be given them to forge on the anvil of the Almighty a peace which shall last for all time. Then will the coming of the kingdom be greatly advanced

Redemption Not a Commercial Commodity.

Most of us understand that redemption is not a commercial commodity. We cannot buy heaven with good works any more than we can buy good works with money. Salvation, we understand, is not earned. It is not a matter of merit. If such was the case, there would have been no need of our Savior's sufferings, for meritorious men lived on the earth before his coming. There would have been no need for his tremendous sacrifice, for men could have been saved without it. The cross would seem to us now to have been an artificial burden and Calvary would seem superfluous. Let us acknowledge, then, that it is the gift of God; that no human merit can acquire it, but any human need can obtain it. Salvation is free. It is for the richest and the poorest, for the best and the worst. As God makes his rain to fall on the evil and the good, on the just and the unjust, in like manner he dispenses salvation through Jesus Christ, his Son. Over and over again the Bible fact is repeated in history, in psalmody, in prophecy, in the gospel narratives, in the apostolic letters, and in the Apocalypse, that "the just shall live by faith."

Once in a great while the United States government throws open a new section of land, and all the settler needs to do is to enter his claim and live on his land. There is always, in such cases, a mad scramble for the free land, and many are disappointed, for there are more settlers than homes. But not so with the territory of redemption; not so with heaven. All who will may go up and possess the land. "Whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely."

True Relation of Works to Faith.

There are some who regard the gospel of a free salvation as dangerous because they say it discourages work. "Get that thought into people's heads," says the critic, "and they will leave you. They only enter the church because they are trying to accumulate a little merit for eternity. Teach them that they are not saved by works and they will lose interest. They will stop praying and working and going to church. You will lose your constituency." We have no constituency, and we would hardly know what to do with one if we had it. But there is no reason why a live, fruit-bearing tree should stop bearing fruit simply because it has been ascertained that the fruit is not the cause, but the product, of its life. Nor is there any reason why an active, energetic Christian should quit work when he learns that his works are not the cause, but the fruits, of his salvation. Paul was a most earnest advocate of justification by faith, and not by works, yet he could truthfully say, "In labors more abundant." James also teaches us that true faith cannot be divorced from works. His challenge is: "Show me thy faith without thy works, and I will show thee my faith by my works." As air is essential to life, although it is not life, so he teaches that while good works do not constitute salvation, at the same time they are essential to it. o o

The Evidence of Genuine Faith.

One's good works are evidence. They prove that his faith is genuine. If a man's face be turned toward the world of darkness and sin, and if he seems to be following his face, you will find it hard to believe that he is on the road to heaven, whatever he may say about it. If, standing beside a locomotive, you should lay your hand on the boller and find it cold; if you should open the fire door and find only gray ashes and black cinders, all the engineer's protestations could not possibly make you believe that the engine was in a condition to pull the train, for the evidence would be lacking. A financial institution might claim to be perfectly sound and solvent; but if, when you searched for collateral, you found only a desk, some chairs, a water cooler, and some stationery, that evidence would hardly corroborate its claim.

If we claim to be Christians, God in heaven wants some reliable evidence of our sincerity. The world vehemently demands the proof of our religious assertions. Dubious men and women are everywhere exercising the "show-me" spirit of the human mind. "Show me your faith by your works," they say. "Let your works radiate your faith; let them authenticate it; let them certify to its genuineness." It was this crucial test the Savior had in mind when he said in that wonderful Sermon on the Mount, "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven." It was this underlying principle which inspired the admonition of the apostle Paul to the young man, Titus: "In all things showing thyself an example of good works; in thy doctrine showing uncorruptness, gravity, sound speech, that cannot be condemned; that he that is of the contrary part may be ashamed, having no evil thing to say of us." (Tit. 2: 7, 8.)

Getting Acquainted With God.

The good works help us to get acquainted with our God. "The only real communion," it has been truthfully said, "is the communion of work. Dogmas and rituals are dead wires. Good deeds are living lines of rapid transit." If we will search the annals of Bible history, and particularly that part which tells of the patriarchs and prophets, we will find that those who were closest to God were those who worked the hardest for him. Hence, Enoch "walked with God;" Abraham was his "servant," and David his "friend." It is just as true to-day. Those who maintain the most appreciable nearness to God are those most actively engaged in his work. We cannot argue our way into an acquaintance with the Father. We cannot get close to him by simply theorizing about delty or mastering the various systems of theology. What most of us need is not more argument, but more experience; "not creeds, but deeds." If, when we enter the church of Christ, we will work assiduously and devetedly, our doubts will vanish like the dews of morning and our difficulties will be easily overcome. God only knows how much we can learn and how much better we may become if we remain "a peculiar people, zealous of good works."

How to Develop the Soul.

Good works develop a greater soul capacity. The Bible teaches us that there are big and little souls-souls that expand and souls that contract. We have not rendered full obedience until we have fulfillment of the first great requirement God makes of us: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind." (Matt. 22: 37.) The expression, "with all thy soul," shows there is a love which is not complete, because the soul is not full. The foolish rich man described by the Master in Luke 12 had room in his soul only for his barns and his grain. That was his soul's capacity. In the foolishness of his heart he thought that his soul was big enough, for we hear him say: "Soul, thou hast much goods laid up for many years; take thine ease, eat, drink, be merry." We cannot be any bigger than our souls, but, by the grace of God, we can make our souls bigger. By doing the work that God demands of him, a man can soon change from a listless, half-hearted disposition to one of manly, whole-souled effort. As his work increases, his interest will grow, and his soul's enjoyment will be proportionate to its capacity. With the poet he can always say: "Build thee more stately mansions, O my soull"

Good Works Bless the World.

But, as a final thought, let me say that a Christian must not think of himself only in his works. It is an old saying, but it is always true, and it is so helpful that it can never become trite; "Good works bless the world." That is their chief value. Those of us who try will always have the poor to succor, the sick to heal, the homeless to shelter, the tempted to sustain, the discouraged to cheer, and the wronged to defend. We cannot work miracles; we cannot open the eyes of the blind; we cannot unstop the ears of the deaf; we cannot cause the lame to leap and run; but in many other ways we can imitate the Master, who went about everywhere doing good. We can give to the world some tangible evidence that our faith is more than talk and that our souls are bigger than our bodies. We can show the true relation of works to faith and glorify that religion which has for its chief attraction the ever-increasing goodness of its people.

This teaching inspired these beautiful lines of Susan Coolldge:

Souls are built as temples are, Based on truth's eternal law, Sure and steadfast, without flaw. Through the sunshine, through the snows, Up and on the building goes; Every fair thing finds its place, Every hard thing lends a grace, Every hand may make or mar.

Fresh Beginnings.

"No soul was ever lost," wrote Faber, "because its fresh beginnings broke down; but thousands of souls have been lost because they would not make fresh beginnings." A striking little poem starts out thus:

"I wish that there were some wonderful place Called Land of Beginning Again, Where all our mistakes and all our heartaches And all of our poor, selfish grief Could be dropped, like a shabby old coat, at the door, And never put on again."

There is just such a place; it is the threshold of each new day! As Susan Coolidge sings in one of the most inspiring of poems:

"Every day is a fresh beginning,
Every morn is the world made new;
You who are weary of sorrow and sinning,
Here is a beautiful hope for you,
A hope for me and a hope for you."

Approach each new day with keen expectation. No matter how many discouragements have crowded the days before, this may be the day when the clouds will break and the sun come out in glory. There must be a change, if we hold on long enough. Harriet Beecher Stowe once wrote this stout sentence: "When you get into a tight place and everything goes against you till it seems as if you could not hold on a minute longer, never give up then, for that is just the place and time that the tide will turn." Hold on a little longer. That "little longer" will win the victory.—Amos R. Wells, in The Witness.

Two Wonders.

Lately I saw two wonders. First, as I looked out of the window I saw the stars shining in God's beautifully vaulted heavens, and yet there were no visible pillars supporting the firmament, and still the heavens fell not. Now there are always some who search for those pillars to grasp them, and, failing in their quest, they go about in fear and trembling, as if the heaven must fall because they cannot grasp the said pillars. If they could, then all would be right, they fancy. Second, I beheld great clouds hovering over us, borne down by their great weight, like unto a mighty ocean; and yet I saw no foundation upon which they rested and no shore which bounded them, and still they did not fall, but, greeting us stiffly, fled on apace. But when they had vanished, a rainbow feebly lit up earth and sky, till it, too, disappeared like a mist among the clouds, making us fear as much for the foundation as for the water-charged clouds above; but in very deed this almost invincible mist supported the heavily charged clouds and protected us. So there are some who pay more attention to, and are more afraid of, the waters and the dark clouds than give heed to the tiny bow of promise. They would like to feel the fine mist, and because they cannot they fear a second flood.-Selected.

Thoughts reveal themselves in one's expression. Beautiful thoughts cause the face to shine. It was shortly after the stoning of Stephen that Paul's conversion took place.—E. V. H.

Success-Spiritual and Material.

Possibly my heading will suggest a contradiction; for it is frequently urged that spiritual and material success are incompatible and antagonistic terms. That material success may be achieved by methods that bar spirituality. I think no one would deny; and spiritual success may be attained in the midst of, and in spite of, material failure. But it seems to me that real success implies complete success—spiritual and material. If we succeed measurably along either of these lines, but fail in the other, our lives are incomplete; we have not lived as fully as we might have. There is a tinge of failure that shadows our success. The full, robust, happy, most useful life is not possible when shrouded with failure.

It has been argued that material success is not possible if we employ only honest methods of business. Many people believe they could succeed if they were only a little less conscientious. I believe we are outgrowing that belief, but it is not entirely gone. I believe we may cite the success of Henry Ford to disprove the theory without going into the realm of ethics and the science of business success. That Mr. Ford has succeeded, nobody can doubt. That he has been dishonest, many thousands of employees and users of his products would strenuously deny. His success is directly attributable to other means than dishonesty in business or oppression of his laborers. And he is only one among many who might be named in this connection who have succeeded eminently by honest rather than dishonest means.

Again, it is said that Christians are debarred from material success simply because they are Christians-"that we are at a disadvantage, and purposely so put by God himself; that material success is extraneous to God's plan for his children here; that he would thus teach us that we are 'sojourners and pilgrims' here below." could mention a brother in this connection whose true success has been most wonderful-whose complete success is directly attributable to God's grace and God's direction. Without, however, using his name, I may say that he listened to a brother's discourse one evening on the need of the gospel among the heathen. He was made to see the great need of preachers and supporters of preachers to do that great work. He then determined to make some effort to accomplish that much-needed work. His business was more closely followed. He became more "diligent in business," was not "slothful in business," but labored that he might "have to give to them that need" and to "communicate with them that teach in all good things," daily praying for God to prosper his efforts. As I have said, his success has been and is phenomenal. From his own statements and my knowledge of his life, I think I can truthfully say he has succeeded because of his ideals and efforts harmonizing with God's purpose. He tells how he analyzed his resources and denied himself indulgences, conforming to the "simple life," and applied himself to his work with intelligence and enthusiasm, until to-day he is able to contribute, not dimes and dollars only. but hundreds and thousands of them, to God's work.

In the light of the foregoing, I believe that complete success is attainable and desirable and necessary. If anything further should be said on the subject, it seems to me that the citation of a few passages of scripture from the New Testament would be in order. I do not quote any passage from the Old Testament because these are sufficient and certainly are binding in this age. "In all things

I gave you an example, that so laboring ye ought to help the weak, and to remember the words of the Lord Jesus, that he himself said, It is more blessed to give than to receive," (Acts 20: 35.) "Let him that stole steal no more: but rather let him labor, working with his hands the thing that is good, that he may have whereof to give to him that hath need." (Eph. 4: 28.) "But we exhort you, brethren, that ye abound more and more; and that ye study to be quiet, and to do your own business, and to work with your hands, even as we charged you: that ye may walk becomingly toward them that are without, and may have need of nothing." (1 Thess. 4: 10-12.) "For even when we were with you, this we commanded you, If any will not work, neither let him eat. For we hear of some that walk among you disorderly, that work not at all, but are busybodies. Now them that are such we command and exhort in the Lord Jesus Christ, that with quietness they work, and eat their own bread." (2 Thess. 3: 10-12.) "But if any provideth not for his own, and especially his own household, he hath denied the faith, and is worse than an unbeliever." (1 Tim, 5: 8.) Since we are to work, and to work to support ourselves and our dependents, and to work that we may have to give to the needy and to the support of the gospel, I think it reasonable to conclude that we should do that work for which we are best fitted and in which we may accomplish the most good; for if one is able to manage a farm or a business that would pay ten thousand dollars a year, it would be sinful for him to fill some place that would pay only a hundred dollars a year. If ye prepare for and fill that place that God would have us fill and do that work he wants us to do, the most of us, at least, will live more happily and successfully than we are at the present.

"Why We Sing."

(An address by G. Dallas Smith.)

We are here, my friends, not to make speeches, but to sing. From the earliest ages singing has been one of the most effective means of expressing the deepest emotions of the human heart. It has ever been the sweet companion of labor and toil. The rude chant of the boatman floats upon the water; the shepherd sings on the hillside, the milkmaid in the dairy, and the plowman in the field. Every trade, every occupation, every act and scene in life has long had its own peculiar and special songs. The bride goes to her marriage, the laborer to his work, and the old man to his long and silent rest, each with appropriate and immemorial songs. Singing has long been considered the mother of sympathy and the bandmaid of religion; and this is particularly true of that sympathy and that religion which came from above.

The Bible is replete with references to, and examples of, singing. After their long night of bondage, when God had by a mighty hand led them across the Red Sea into the wilderness of liberty and freedom, the hosts of Israel sang the song of deliverance—a real victory song. Many years after this, in the time of the judges, when God had delivered the children of these same Israelites out of the hand of Jabin, king of the Canaanites, Deborah and Barak sang another victory song. These were times of great rejoicing. Before Jehovah led Israel over the Jordan and into the land of Canaan, he commanded Moses to write a song and teach it to all the people, that they might remember the true and living God, and not be led away to worship the gods of the Canaanites. Solomon wrote one thousand and five songs, while David is known the world over as the "sweet singer of Israel." When David's greatest Son, the Lord Jesus Christ, the Prince of peace, paid this old earth a personal visit in the long ago, his coming was heralded by a company of angels who sang: "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will to men." Jesus and his disciples at the institution of the Lord's Supper sang a hymn; and the apostle Paul, writing to Christians, said: "Be filled with the Spirit; speaking to yourselves in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing and making melody in your heart to the Lord." The one hundred and forty and four thousand redeemed souls whom John saw in his Isle-of-Patmos vision were singing a new song which none but they could sing. And in the "home of the soul" over there, the saved from every nation will sing "the song of Moses and the Lamb" throughout the endless ages of eternity.

But why should we sing to-day? Why are we assembled at this hour to sing? Why are the people throughout this nation gathered together at this hour to sing? For this is a nation-wide singing. Every child in the nation can answer this question. We are just emerging from the darkest night this old world ever saw. For four long years and more the somber clouds of war have overshadowed everything. The horrors of these four years have had a depressing effect on our spirits. We have been singing during these years, of course; but largely from a sense of duty. We have sung "Keep the Home Fires Burning," "The Star-Spangled Banner," and other patriotic songs as a means of reviving the drooping spirits and to encourage the boys who were fighting our battles for us. But at last-after more than two hundred billions of the world's wealth has been worse than wasted, and multiplied thousands of the world's best manhood have been slaughtered, and millions more have been scarred, maimed, and blinded for life; after more than two hundred thousand of our own boys have been either killed or wounded; after the earth has been drenched in human gore; after all the sorrow, pain, anguish, and distress of these four years-after all this comes the gladsome news that peace is in sight, that fighting has actually ceased, and that the war is really over. No wonder the nation went wild with joy and instituted such a celebration as the world had never seen before. And from that very moment until now the very atmosphere has been laden with the spirit of joy and thanksgiving. And it was as natural as it was fitting for our President to call on us to express in song our heartfelt thanks, not because we have won over Germany, but because an evil spirit that was threatening the peace of the world has been crushed-because there has been secured to the world a peace which will be based, we hope, largely on the principles of righteousness and justice. This is enough to make the nation sing.

Mr. Sankey tells of a little girl who, in company with her father, went upon Mount Washington. While up there a storm arose in the valley below. They were entirely above the clouds; and while the lightnings flashed and the thunders rumbled in the valley, all was quiet and calm on the mountain. The father said: "There is nothing to see up here, Lucy, except blue sky everywhere." The little girl responded: "O, father, I see the Doxology; for everything seems to say, 'Praise God, from whom all blessings flow.' 'So, ever since the good news of peace reached us, there has been a different color to everything. We step more lightly, greet each other more pleasantly, and smile more frequently. The very atmosphere is burdened with the spirit of "Praise God, from whom all blessings flow." Why should we not sing under such gracious and glorious conditions?

I am passionately fond of the essays of Charles F. Raymond in his little book, "Just Be Glad." One of these essays, entitled "Mothers, Sing On," is, I think, quite a gem. He says, in part: "Sing on, mothers. Sing when the cares are more than you can manage, when the clouds press darkly down, when the larder's low. Sing when the rent is overdue, when the coal bin is shallow, and the boss is out of work; for the children will hear the song and laugh the hours away, and he will hear it, too, and will face the world with a brighter eye, will look for the silver lining. And life will be more happy because you sang. Mothers, sing on. Your voice may not be heard in the halls of our Legislature, you may not know a line of our laws, and we may never know your name, but you may hold upon your knees this moment a child to bless the world-a Moses to blaze the way, a David to kill a Goliath, a Saul to tower above us, a Lincoln to free some slave, a Shakespeare to inspire, or a discoverer to benefit the race. So, sing on. You may fondle to-night a Grace Darling, a Florence Nightingale, a Jenny Lind, or one who may herself raise up a mighty man to help the world along. So, sing on."

So, to you, my friends, who are gathered here in response to our President's call: to you who are filled with gratitude for the many blessings we enjoy, especially the inestimable blessing of peace—to you I say, Sing on.

Making Others Happy.

With me and mine, I feel sure that the past Christmas holidays were the happiest in our lives; and, if you will pardon me for the reference. I am sure that the season was entered with less thought of self and more thought for others than ever before. On my return home from a visit to my mother, in Tennessee, I found some letters on my desk, parts of some of which I shall give our readers with the hope that it will do good.

1. The following is from a letter from Sister Hoffman, one of our best members, whose heart has been heavy for quite a while on account of the afflictions of her splendid husband:

Dear Brother and Sister Hall: The package came from you yesterday (December 26), but words can never express how greatly I appreciate the remembrances to me and my loved one. O, how I do thank God for the sweet friends I have! I received several cards from different members of the church. And, Brother Hall, will you please say to them all that they were a great comfort to me? And I thank you for asking them to remember me in that way—I know you did, for it is so much like you.

Sister Hoffman, at the time the letter was written, was nursing her niece at Tennille, Ga. It was her desire to spend Christmas Day with Brother Hoffman. The following words from her letter make me think how true it is that we, through God's people, are remembered most while forgetting self for others:

I am glad to say that my niece is doing nicely. All danger is past and she will soon be herself again. . . . I never in my life saw any one suffer more than she did on Christmas Day; and if she is to suffer much more like that, death would be sweet. . . .

The hardest thing I have had to do, recently, was to decide to stay here and not spend Christmas with my precious husband. But I knew one day is the same as another with him, that I could not do anything for him if I were there; so I had to forget the great pleasure it would have given me and try to do all I could for my dear, poor sister's comfort. And when, with tears streaming downher face, she said, "What would I have done without you? For there is no one that could fill your place"—it was then I felt that my sacrifice had been small. Just as soon as she gets so I can leave her, if only for a day, I am going to see Mr. Hoffman, and I do hope and pray that his condition will be so much improved.

I hope you both had a pleasant visit to Tennessee and found your mother well. I would be so glad to hear from you sometime, and I trust it will not be very long before we can meet and worship together again. In the meantime, do not forget to pray for me and mine.

2. It was my pleasure and profit to know, personally, Brother J. D. Northcut, whose death at his home in Tracy City, Tenn., has already been spoken of by others on the pages of the Gospel Advocate. I can think of no preacher that it has ever been my privilege to meet in whom I had more confidence than J. D. Northcut. He had the happiest disposition of any preacher I know.

So soon as I heard of his death and could find the time to do so, I tried to write Sister Northeut a few lines to help her endure the grief that was upon her. I knew of nothing better to tell, in connection with his splendid life and the undoubting confidence that we all have in his eternal safety, than that Brother Northeut is conscious of the fact that she and the children remain here, and that, could he speak to them now, he would beg them to dry away the tears, not to worry one moment about him, but let their lives be wholly devoted to God and to serving him. I am so glad my feeble efforts did good. I give the following lines from her letter because I know the many friends of Brother Northeut will appreciate seeing them:

Dear Brother Hall: We have received above fifty comforting letters from brethren, sisters, and friends, and I must say that yours gave me one of the most comforting thoughts of them all. Just to feel that my dear husband is conscious of our existence on this earth will give me more courage to bear the burden and to rear our four precious children, which has always been a labor of love. It used to be my custom, when he was away, to fill my letters to him with their little affairs, and now I miss that privilege so much. He always seemed so interested in everything we had to tell him and was always so solicitous of our welfare that to feel that he is still watching over us is indeed an inspiration to do my very best.

But, O, Brother Hall, home is so empty without his visible presence and sunshine, and L so miss his counsel. I could go to him as to no other. I feel so helpless. Were it not for the Bible and the prayers that have gone up to God by hundreds of his children, I feel the burden would be greater than I could bear.

I am grateful to you for your offer of assistance if I should ever need it. It is, indeed, wonderful the way in which the church has stood by me in these dark hours of affliction. . . . I wish you could know the details of the assistance rendered us, which would take many pages to tell you. I have never known of any man having such honor done him, which overwhelms me with thankfulness to God and the brethren.

How well does the above paragraph speak for the church at Tracy City, Brother and Sister Northeut's home congregation! God bless those brethren for their thoughtfulness and their letting Christ live in them and through them, and bless our dear sister in her hour of sore trial and sadness! May other churches awake from their sleep and do likewise. No organization beneath the skies should be allowed to do more for its members than the church of Christ does for her own; and this, indeed, is the case where Christ has a church that is his indeed. There are so many, however, that claim to be churches of Christ that exist only in name, not in reality. There are preachers, I am sure, who would be afraid to die and leave their loved ones in the hands of their home congregations. The principal thing, however, that I had in mind when I decided to let our readers see a part of Sister Northcut's letter was her thoughtfulness of others. Brother Northcut was an old student of Brother J. A. Harding's, and when she saw the suggestion that he be remembered this Christmas she did so. Here is what she says:

I noticed the article concerning Brother J. A. Harding and sent him a package, and put only my name on the outside; and will you please explain to him that it was sent in the name of my husband, who was a pupil of his in the Nashville Bible School? I have often heard him speak complimentary of Brother Harding and also of his great faith in God. I feel that if he were here he would send some token of his love and esteem for him.

The Harding Shower.

It would be well to say to the many friends of Brother Harding that they gave him and his devoted wife a most enjoyable Christmas. A cloud filled with sunshine and joy found its way over the home at 115 McClendon Street and hovered there for several days, from which fell quite a shower of cards, letters, and various gifts. I am sure that if every one who sent a card, a letter, or a gift, should now speak, each would say, "It did me good;" and I make this statement on this page that Brother Harding's friends may know he was not remembered by just a few, but by dozens. I pray that the Lord may bless them all. Sister Harding tried to acknowledge all the gifts; but if any failed to receive her acknowledgment, please remember that words cannot express her appreciation of what you have done.

The Last Lord's Day in 1918.

Contrary to my custom, I spent the last Lord's day in last year away from Atlanta on a visit to my mother's home. Mrs. Hall and our son, with one of his chums from Tech. High School, were with me. Mother is getting very old and feeble. It may be my last Christmas on earth with her; but how good to think how ready and willing she is to go!

I slipped off to Nashville early Lord's-day morning, however, and enjoyed so much being with the Twelfth Avenue congregation. We have but few, if any, better congregations than this one.

The work in Atlanta went well at all the places. Brother Silas E. Templeton, who has just moved to our city, spoke at West End Avenue, with two additions from the Baptists and one confession and baptism. West End received one the Sunday before by letter and one by confession and baptism. Bright indeed is the future for us.

Christ and Finality.

The Gospels, as far as descriptions of our Lord's doings and sayings are concerned, are final; but the mark of finality with regard to his teaching and effectiveness is a long way in the distant future. The spirit of the Master, persistently and ceaselessly, is moving in the present-day world on a larger scale than ever, seeking not men's opinions, but their convictions. As in Simon Peter's day, so in ours, there are the two circles of humanity—those who readily answer what others say about the Christ and those who speak for themselves from the depth of conviction's language. We are bound to find ourselves in one circle or the other; and whether we are rightly placed is going to determine whether or not we are to have any of the real values of life.

The most critical cannot dispute the fact that Christ personified life's best. There was absolutely no discrepancy between his teaching and his life. Uppermost and always in the Master's mind were effects. He sought to cause men to make more of the future than the mere present. This is where for some time the first disciples failed to catch his great vision. As an illustration of this, you will remember how Simon, when in obedience to his command he let down the nets, was so overcome with the unusual harvest of fish that he saw nothing but fish. Our Lord beheld far more, and so made the promise to make him a fisher of men. The successful fishing in the Lake of Galilee was but a suggestion of a greater and more permanent success. Our Lord's ultimatum for Peter was to win men. Christ lived in finalities and not in beginnings. With him it was not what a man was, but rather what he would be.-William Porkess.

The Moral Perils of Victory.

It is morally easier to be an idealist in distress than in triumph; to prepare for victory than to use the fruits of victory; to sacrifice what one expects to win than what one has won; to make war than to lay the foundations for a wise peace. The moral forces of history play no favorites. More than one nation has lost its soul while gaining its neighbor's territory. A war to emancipate the world has in the past led to an attempt to control the nations it has freed. To-day it may even more easily result in the adoption, partly unconscious and partly planned, of the very ideals for whose destruction it was fought.—The Biblical World.

We Tire of Pessimists.

A moody, morose, pessimistic sort of an individual does little good for himself or others. He continually looks on the dark side of life and sees the worst of everything. As he views it, nobody is right. The churches are all going to the bad; his neighbors are bad, business men are bad—everybody and everything is bad. Such a fellow usually lives all over the country—first at one place, then at another—and has little influence anywhere. He soon tires out with everybody and everybody gets tired of him. There is still much good in the world, and it is a good place to live.—Firm Foundation.

Cigarettes Are "Coffin Nails."

We have been told, and have tried to convince our young men, that eigarettes are "coffin nails." But opinion seems to have changed. Is that the reason why so many cigarettes have been sent to the army camps and Y. M. C. A. huts-to provide nails for the coffins of those falling in battle? Have the "coffin nails" become less harmful because of the war? Have our people become convinced that tobacco is a good thing for soldiers, and so propose to inflict upon them a habit which will surely cling to them when they come home? Let our good housewives no more complain of the filthiness of the tobacco habit. We knew of a schoolteacher who encouraged the boys to smoke in the schoolroom. But he did not hold his place long. That was in the long ago. Times have changed since then. An employing carpenter told us, the other day, that he would not employ a man who smoked cigarettes.-Journal and Messenger.

Lilliputian Heresy.

Good news is big news—especially, when it is God's good news, or the gospel. Christians often unconsciously dishonor their Lord by talking as though the best he could do for them was, after all, very little. It may seem humble to take this attitude; but is it not, on the other hand, the worst sort of unbelief? God says that Christ can do all things for us, and that in him we can do all things; that "as he is, even so are we in this world" (1 John 4: 17). What right has the Christian to pray, as so many do, "Lord, let others see a little of thyself in me?" Christ never offered himself to us on any such Lilliputian terms as that! Where in the whole Bible do we find the inspired writers talking about the little things that are all they can hope to do through the power of God?—Sunday School Times.

A Few Bolsheviki in the United States.

There are a few Bolsheviki in the United States. Most of them are of foreign birth, usually German or Russian, with some Sicilians. They are incorrigible members of society-the wild beasts of the world which should be hunted to the death. We all believe in liberty of opinion; but when a band of men set out to rob trains, we do not talk much about opinions. We capture them. If they are shot in the capture, that is so much the better for society. The Bolsheviki in this country and in Russia are no better than any of the bands of train robbers which at one time caused loss in the West. A few of them are able to write. Trotzky even became a reporter on a New York newspaper. The few Bolsheviki of this class have recently been sending circulars through the mails asking for a favorable opinion of the Russian Bolsheviki. They are, of course, lying circulars. But with the lying statements is an appeal to lower passions, and also an effort to enlist sympathy. Silly women often send flowers to the most brutal wife murderers in prison; and we suppose there are no crimes that can be named which would not find foolish people to apologize for the criminals. The biblical doctrine of a hell seems a necessity to the universe, as a place of separation for those who would destroy all foundations of morality. But until the final separation takes place we need to be on our guard, not only against criminals, but against their advocates and supporters, no matter how good a case they may seem to make by a mixture of falsehood and maudlin tears. There are men who ought to suffer for their crimes against humanity. It is better to think of the sufferings of victims of their passions and hates rather than the suffering of the criminal in punishment.-Journal and Messenger.

Positive Preaching the Need To-Day.

In any year preaching is a privilege and a responsibility. In this special year it is an unusual privilege and a profound responsibility. It is desirable, therefore, that the preacher's words to-day be direct, clear, applicable, if possible forceful. They must be based on what is substantial: not on guesswork, not on the problematical, but on the authoritative. To me in this chaotic period one Personage more and more emerges as an absolutely sure teacher, the one Teacher whose principles lay hold on all conditions of present life and look commandingly even into eternity itself, Jesus of Nazareth.—James G. K. McClure, President of McCormick Theological Seminary.

Decline in Bible Knowledge.

Hon. James Bryce said, in an address at London University: "It is with great regret that one sees in these days that the knowledge of the Bible seems declining in all classes. I was struck with the same thing in the United States. Looking at it from only the educational side, the loss of the knowledge of the Bible and of all the Bible means would be incalculable to the life of the country. It would be a great misfortune to the country if generations of children grew up who did not know their Bible. It is a sin for which those responsible for the absence of the Bible from our schools and homes need to repent."—The Australian Christian.

I forwarded the thirteen dollars for Brother Jelley to Brother J. C. McQuiddy, as passage money for Brother Jelley and family was cabled to him in October. Both this month and last month I received one dollar, as well as some smaller amounts, to help pay my postage, stationery, and other expenses. I appreciate this very much indeed. Of the amount sent to Brother Martin, six dollars was for the educational fund and four dollars and seventy cents for literature.

There are two things I wish to commend this month, and these are the regularity of some of the contributors and the size of some of the contributions. Many of those who contributed this month have sent every month during this year. Of course, to those who cannot send regularly, remember to send as often as you can. One sister wrote that she could only send in the fall of the year, as she received her money then after the renters had gathered their crops, and she sent a splendid contribution. There were several other large amounts. You will notice that nearly one-half of the amount I forwarded this month came from two Texas towns. I think these two things are a splendid sign. They show that we are becoming more interested in the spread of the gospel in foreign lands, but we have not reached the top of the ladder yet. Let us keep on climbing.

I want to make a special appeal for Brother Govind Ram this month. As many of you know, he is a high-caste native, who became a Christian with several of his family some time ago, and who now wishes to give his life to teaching his own people. He knows his own class, their language, their customs, and, above all, their idolatry and their great need of a Savior. Who will send something regularly every month to this worker, and who will send something for a literature fund for him? This appeal is addressed to those who are not contributing now to one or more of our other missionaries; for we do not want those who are now contributing to switch their gifts, for that would seriously inconvenience the other missionaries, Address Miss Nellie Straiton, 1030 South Lake Street, Fort Worth, Texas. 0 0 0

Moving Pictures.

BY J. M. M'CALEB.

Whereunto shall this spirit of a Christless Christianity of modern times grow? For my part, I had rather be but one on the side of right and with Christ than to follow the multitude without him.

There is a story, whether true or not no one can tell, about Abram and his father, Terah, as follows: One day his father went off on a journey, and when he came back Abram had burned up all the idols. The father was angry and was going to whip him, but Abram pleaded that if fire was stronger than the gods, they were of no value. "Then we will worship the fire," said Terah. Then Abram threw water on the fire and quenched it. "We will worship the water," said his father. Again Abram was going to show something stronger than water, when Terah flew into a rage and drove him out of the house.

In my judgment, children are kept in school too long and are given too many studies. They get a smattering of many things and are proficient in nothing. The facts of life are few and simple. One should know how to write and speak correctly and how to keep accounts, and should be well grounded in morals and the Christian religion. With these as a foundation, any one with common sense can go on improving. Many bury their education at marriage, and they might as well have grown up in ignorance as for the good it ever does them. Many a graduate also cannot write a decent letter, and his speech is filled with errors. Education should be along more definite lines according to the ability and inclination of the young, with a view to following it up in a practical way when they leave school.

AT HOME AND ABROAD

W

C. G. Vincent is located in Tours, France.

Brother Elam preached several times this week for the congregation at King's Hall, in Louisville, Ky.

A. B. Lipscomb made brief visits to relatives in Memphis, Tenn., and Louisville, Ky., during the helidays.

There is a good opening for a physician, who is a Christian, at Bridgeport, Ala. If interested, address Mrs. L. H. Hughes.

C. E. Wooldridge, who has labored successfully at Fayetteville, Tenn., has taken up the work at Murfreesboro, Tenn. We wish him much success in the new field.

From J. P. Watson, Route 9, Cookeville, Tenn.: "I have not been able to get out for several weeks, but am improving now, and think I will soon be able to preach the word again."

Married, in the study of the Russell Street Church, this city, on December 24, at noon, Mr. T. G. Neal to Miss. Willette B. Thompson, A. B. Lipscomb officiating. Heartiest congratulations.

A. L. Dixon, of Delirose, Tenn., a good song leader, can arrange dates for teaching vocal classes or leading song services in meetings during the coming summer months. If you should need his services, write him as early as possible.

From Mrs. J. A. Romine, Guernsey, Cal.: "I will renew my subscription for the Gospel Advocate soon. I do get so much good from it, especially the front page; and I did so enjoy Brother Smith's article, 'Does Death End All?' I love any article on spiritual uplift and growth."

The way has been provided to organize and maintain a public library or reading room so as to make the same a place of pleasure and profit to the church and to the general public. For information about the same, inclose ten cents to Prof. George W. Taylor, Melissa, Texas.

S. Lyle Morrow, the son of our good friend, S. F. Morrow, has formed a connection with Witherspoon & Co., 230 Third Avenue, North, Nashville, Tenn. This firm makes a specialty of real estate, insurance, mortgage loans, stocks and bonds. Brother Morrow is a fine, Christian young man, worthy of all confidence.

From Bonnie Thornton, Avon Park, Fla.: "We are enjoying some fine weather now. The climate here is splendid, but, best of all, the church is doing so well. I noticed last Lord's day that every one in the house went to the classes. T. B. Thompson is delivering some fine sermons, May your New Year be a happy one."

Despite the inclement weather, the special services at the Belmont Avenue Church, this city, were well attended. The following themes were presented: "Lifting Up the Language," by A. B. Lipscomb; "The Master of Men," by S. P. Pittman; "The World's Greatest Library," by H. Leo Boles; "The Goodness of God," by E. A. Elam.

Mrs. W. M. Robertson, the only sister of F. W. Smith, of this city, and of W. H. Smith, of Athens, Ala., died in Nashville on Thursday, December 26. The funeral service was conducted at Winchester, Tenn., by G. C. Brewer, Sister Robertson was a most estimable Christian character and will be sadly missed. The Gospel Advocate extends sympathy.

From Willis G. Jernigan. Grand Saline, January 2: "The work is progressing nicely in this county. The writer was with the church here on the fourth Lord's day in December, and with the brethren at Sand Flat last Lord's day. We had splendid attendance at both places. We are contemplating a great work for the coming year. Any one desiring my services will address me at this place."

From Miss Polly McClure, Dixon, Ky.; "I must tell you here that I enjoy reading the Gospel Advocate above any religious journal. It is a welcome visitor. It is and has been a comfort and a source of information to me. Let the good work continue. May the richest blessings from the great Father be yours. I wish you and the Gospel Advocate force a merry Christmas and a happy and prosperous New Year."

From G. W. Jarrett, Emerson, Ark.: "If any loyal congregation wants a loyal preacher to locate and preach for them or around them, please write to me. If I am not employed all my time, I am willing to work at making a crop or helping in the store so as to be self-supporting. I have no family. My manner in preaching is to teach and persuade sinners to obey Christ, teach brethren to walk in love and have no division among themselves."

From Harry Hayes, Conservation and Reclamation Company, Q. M. C., Barracks B 4, Camp Jackson, Columbia, S. C., January 1: "I wish to say at the beginning of the new year that I wish the Gospel Advocate great success. I also wish to say it is the best religious paper published. My work in the army is not yet finished, though I hope to be back to my home at Hornbeak, Tenn., before many more months. I have been here more than eight months, and my record has been perfect."

From Ben West, Ennis, Texas: "Hugh Chism, son of Brother and Sister Chism, of Hillsboro, Texas, was a member of the Ennis church. He was killed in France on November 1. We held appropriate memorial services at 3 P.M., December 22, in Ennis, in the presence of all of Brother Chism's family and a host of friends and brethren in the Lord. He was loved and appreciated by all of us here, where he was a faithful Christian worker. 'Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord from henceforth.'"

From L. E. Carpenter, Itasca, Texas: "The work is growing in interest here and the crowds have held up fine even in the midst of the 'flu.' We have some very self-sacrificing brethren here, and they got busy recently and raised nearly seven hundred dollars with which to pay the church out of debt. We have a very neat little church house here now, and have it well seated, and this sets it free of debt. We are thankful we can enter the new year with the church clear of debt and with a renewed zeal and determination to do greater things for God. May we all do our best this year for the Lord."

From W. S. Long, Jr., Washington, D. C.: "The readers of the Gospel Advocate will be glad to learn of the interest that is being taken in the work of building a house of worship in this city. Encouraging letters have come from different parts of the United States containing liberal donations to this end, and we hereby acknowledge the receipt of the same and express the sincere thanks of our hearts. The encouraging letters are helpful, as well as the donations. Let us go forward with the work without further delay. Each contributor will receive a card of thanks, and a report will appear in the papers monthly. Should your name not appear in this report, you will find it in the next one. Read of the good work through the Advocate and other good papers and catch the spirit of liberality and service to humanity, and keep step with the forward march of God's people. May the New Year bring to you much prosperity, that you may do a great work for the poor and for the salvation of the lost. 'There is no place for knockers and growlers. Lift, man, lift!' Among the good deeds of 1919, can you not have partnership in building a house of worship in your national capital? Address all letters to T. F. Colvin, 2536 Eleventh Street, N. W.; J. W. Gibson, 2500 Pennsylvania Avenue, S. E.; E. L. Mills, 2002 G Street, N. W.; or W. S. Long, 46 R Street, N. E."

Are Baptized Believers in the Kingdom?

BY J. C. M'Q.

A sister requests me to cover the delinquency of a young preacher, which is not possible, as shown by the following query:

Prichard, Ala., December 13, 1918.—Brother McQuiddy: A young preacher of Louisville, Ky., who held a tent meeting for us several years ago, taught publicly that baptized believers were not yet in the kingdom, but only in the vestibule of the kingdom. He also taught that it is just as necessary to wash one another's feet as it is to partake Please give me book, chapter, and of the Lord's Supper. verse to prove these things, as he did not.

If the false doctrine named in the query could be sustained by the Bible, it would have been an inexpressible joy for the young preacher to give the passage or passages teaching the doctrine. The very fact that he cites no passage to support his view is convincing evidence that there is none. Ususally those who teach that the kingdom is not yet present and will not be till Christ comes, not only flatly contradict God, but also teach other doctrines equally as pernicious, as is clear from some statements here given. F. C. Ottman declares: "Christ's kingdom shall be established, not, as men vainly imagine, by the preaching of the gospel, but by the iron rod that shall smite down all opposition and make the enemies of Christ like the broken pieces of a potter's vessel." Charles T. Russell asserts: "God has not yet, by any means, exhausted his power for the world's conversion. Nay, more: he has not yet even attempted the world's conversion. . . . The only hope is in the intervention of supernatural power, and just such a change is what God has promised in and through Christ's millennial kingdom." West exclaims: "Gigantic is the misconception to dream that God has given the church, unable to reform herself, to build the Christian state up to a kingdom of Christ, or to reform the world. . . . More and more the Christian state is a tool of Satan." Tying, another advocate of the position that the kingdom is not yet present, says: "They are without warrant in the Word who are looking for the conversion of the world by the preaching of the cross and the extending influence of the church. In no portion of the Scripture is such a hope justified. All that the gospel was designated to accomplish was less than this."

Thus it is seen that those who propagate the doctrine of no kingdom assign a more potent influence to physical than to spiritual instrumentalities. They allege that the preaching of the gospel was never intended for the conversion of the world; that only with the reappearance of the Lord and the inauguration of his visible reign will evangelism succeed on any great scale. This view is out of harmony with the New Testament estimate of spiritual agencies. The New Testament exalts the spiritual above the physical, and Christ taught his disciples to expect that the efficient working of the Holy Spirit in and through them would far more than compensate for his physical absence. The no-kingdom doctrine belittles the Holy Spirit and his work. The Bible expressly teaches that those who believe not Moses and the prophets would not be converted though one should rise from the dead. In the Scriptures much is said about the efficacy of the gospel message and about the sanctifying power of truth. No apostolic word associates Christ's coming again with a prospect of world evangelism.

If any one thinks that such views as stated in the query are not preached, he is mistaken; for the theory is being proclaimed in Alabama and elsewhere that baptized believers are in a vestibule, and not in the kingdom. The Gospel Advocate has vigorously opposed the pernicious doctrine, and now dedicates anew every fiber and every drop of its blood to uproot and destroy such false teaching, regardless of whether it pleases or displeases men. A birth of water and of the Spirit is an unalterable condition of entrance into the kingdom of God. Christ declares: "Except one be born of water and the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." (John 3: 5.) The baptized believer is saved, is born of water and the Spirit, and, hence, is in the kingdom of God. If the baptized believer is not yet in the kingdom, what is it to be born of water and the Spirit, and why did Christ mislead the people by teaching the people that one must be born anew to enter the kingdom, when there was no kingdom to enter and would not be for thousands of years after those to whom he spoke were dead? Such a theory of the kingdom makes Christ practice deception all through his life and proves the Bible not adapted to the people of all ages. The theory that the kingdom is not yet present is out of joint with all of Christ's teachings. If the kingdom is not yet present and may not be for thousands of years yet to come, then Christ's language to the Pharisees is incomprehensible and misleading when he said: "The publicans and harlots go into the kingdom of God before you." (Matt. 21: 31.)

Also when he declared: "Ye shut the kingdom of heaven against men; for ye enter not in yourselves, neither suffer ye them that are entering in to enter." (Matt. 23: 13.) The erroneous view that believers are not in the kingdom charges Christ with misleading the scribe when in an approving response he said to him: "Thou art not far from the kingdom of God." (Mark 12: 34.) The theory that I am criticizing makes Christ a hypocritical pretender when he said to his disciples: "But seek ye first his kingdom, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you." (Matt. 6: 33.) But if there were to be ne kingdom for them to enter during their lives and none for thousands of years after their death, to them the language was meaningless and misleading. But the theory is wrong and Christ is right. The kingdom would come during the lives of some of those to whom Christ spoke, as is clear from the following scripture: "There are some here of them that stand by, who shall in no wise taste of death, till they see the kingdom of God come with power." (Mark 9: 1.)

If preachers did not turn away from the truth to such absurd and damnable heresies, there would be no necessity for this article. If they would be content to "preach the word" and to proclaim the gospel, which is God's power unto salvation, they would be free from the blood of all men and would make more progress in leading people to Christ. The word of God nowhere says that baptized believers enter a vestibule, but it emphatically declares to the Colossian believers who had been buried with Christ in baptism: "Who delivered us out of the power of darkness, and translated us into the kingdom of the Son of his love." (Col. 1: 13.) The man who knows and loves the truth and who "holds fast the form of sound words" will teach that "baptized believers" are "translated into the kingdom of the Son of his love" instead of getting out of the kingdom into the vestibule. It is wiser and safer to fear and serve God in the kingdom, as Paul admonishes: "Wherefore, receiving a kingdom that cannot be shaken, let us have grace, whereby we may offer service well pleasing to God with reverence and awe." (Heb. 12: 28.) These converted Hebrews had received an abiding, unmovable kingdom; hence, in this kingdom, not vestibule, they should with thankful hearts render an acceptable service to God with reverence and awe. I tremble for the man who preaches that the obedient are not yet in the kingdom. I would rather be blind and speechless than to thus flatly contradict the word of God. Any man who so acts is in danger. The condemnation of God is upon him. "As we have said before, so say I now again, If any man preacheth unto you any gospel other than that which ye received, let him be anathema." (Gal. 1: 3.) The kingdom was here in the life of John, the beloved disciple and Revelator, for he declares: "I John, your brother and partaker with you in the tribulation and kingdom and patience which are in Jesus, was in the isle that is called Patmos, for the word of God and the testimony of Jesus," (Rev. 1: 9.) I fittingly give here for the encouragement of our readers a paragraph from the closing part of "Studies in Recent Adventism," by Henry C. Sheldon, "In the point of view of the New Testament the kingdom of God is most closely associated with the person of Christ, so that the attitude toward the one essentially defines the attitude toward the other. Now, in the rounded idea of the kingdom there is a union of process and consummation. The kingdom is both present and future-present in its primary stages, future in the glorious fulfillment of its ideal"

It is true that Christians should be humble enough to wash one another's feet. It is an act of humility. Footwashing is nowhere connected with the assembly of the saints. The Lord's Supper is an item of public worship. The disciples met on the first day of the week to break bread, but they did not meet on the first day of the week to wash feet. Foot-washing is a private duty and should be exercised vigorously in the home. Hospitality is also a Christian duty, and one which is much neglected. The Lord's Supper and foot-washing should not be classed together, as is shown from the following passage: "Let none be enrolled as a widow under threescore years old, having been the wife of one man, well reported of for good works; if she hath brought up children, if she hath used hospitality to strangers, if she hath washed the saints' feet, if she hath relieved the afflicted, if she hath diligently followed every good work." (1 Tim. 5: 9, 10.)

Was It "An Unwarranted," Uncalled-For," and "Inexcusable" Thing?

BY E. A. E.

This article is a continuation of the one last week under the above heading. I request that both be read together. The first one was intended as a preparation for this one.

Jesus says as the Father taught him, he teaches the people; his teaching is not his, but the Father's who sent him; that God gave him a commandment, what he should teach; and that he speaks not from himself—that is, his teaching does not originate with him and proceed from him—and that he teaches no notions, theories, and speculations of his own. (See John 7: 16-18; 8: 28; 12: 49, 50.) Also, he says he did always the things that were pleasing to God, and for that reason God was with him. (John 8: 29.)

All that we teach must be the teaching of God—every sermon and every article and every example must be from God, not from ourselves. We must do always the things which are pleasing to God. If we have not the Spirit of Christ, we are none of his.

I trust our readers will allow me to say my daily prayer is to be able to follow these declarations of Jesus in the preparation of these articles and of all articles and sermons; this desire fills my soul, and this spirit animates my heart. Without this desire, this spirit, this prayer, and this constant effort, I know I cannot please God and be saved or help to save others. I am either helping to save or helping to befog and mislead and destroy others.

Paul asks the Galatians if he had become their enemy because he told them the truth, or dealt truly with them. (Gal. 4: 16.) To deal truly with people and, therefore, to speak the truth to them is to befriend and leve them. But so weak and selfish is human nature that it thinks unless one sides with it in its prejudices, partialities, and personal difficulties, and shares with it a partisan and sometimes bitter spirit, one is not its friend and takes sides against it. Love covers a multitude of sins (1 Pet. 4: 8)—that is, it forbears, suffers long, is kind, and does all in its power to induce wrongdoers to see their sins, repent, confess, make reparation, and seek forgiveness. In this way it covers a multitude of sins. No sins are covered until they have been forgiven, and no sins can be forgiven without repentance and obedlence to God.

O, there is so much strife, contention, bitterness, and division among many—very many—who profess to love the Lord and make pretensions to be his peculiar people, or a people for his own possession! One is led almost to the conclusion that they are indeed peculiar—unlike all others—in holding to conflicting theories and opinions, in thinking of themselves more highly than they should, in counting themselves wiser and better than others, in strife and contention and bitterness, in self-justification and condemnation of others, and in a sad failure "to give diligence to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace."

Numerous are the exhortations in the New Testament to congregations to "be at peace among themselves;" to "seek peace and pursue it;" to "follow peace with all men;" to "follow after the things which make for peace" and which are edifying; and for each individual, as much as in him lies—so far as he is concerned—to keep the peace. Jesus blesses the peacemakers and condemns the peacebreakers: Must these commands of God be ignored and despised? Is not disobedience to God here as fearful as disobedience to him in any other particular? There is no character more despicable, more dangerous, more ruinous, and more strongly condemned than the one that stirs up strife and sows discord among brethren.

Behold the many congregations, like black spots on the fair face of the earth, here and there, divided over personal differences, private (which should be) opinions, or men themselves! It must be a vain man, blinded by self-esteem, who will allow a congregation of disciples of the meek and lowly Jesus to divide over him. He certainly does not realize the enormity of the sin of rending the body of Christ.

A good and devout man, with the good of the church at heart, wrote me some weeks ago in regard to the sad condition of the congregation with which he works and worships, asking me what I thought about the ones who love righteousness, purity, and true holiness withdrawing and forming a new congregation. This is a true and lovable man, sincere and honest and righteous, and all must respect his desires and efforts to keep the church pure, not having spot or wrinkle or any such thing. I was on my way to an appointment when I met the mail on the road and read his letter. I could not wait until I reached my destination to write him that, with all the sins in the church at Corinth, Paul never advised a separation, but a clearing up and righting of the wrongs and withdrawal of fellowship from fornicators, covetous ones, and other incorrigible wrongdoers. There is a great difference between the church's withdrawing fellowship from immoral characters and other wrongdoers, after having taken all scriptural steps to restore them, and dividing the church into two congregations with good people and bad people in both. It requires faith, courage, love of truth and right, strength of character, and the love of souls to do the former. The church-the body of Christ, the Lamb's bride-should let the world know that it stands for rightcousness, purity, and godliness, or true holiness, and, therefore, not for impurity, drunkenness, covetousness, worldliness, and wickedness.

Furthermore, Brother R. H. Bell has written me that my "reference" in even a letter to him to his espionage in "the Rowe affair" (to use his own expression) was "unwarranted and uncalled for" and that my "publication of the letter containing this reference" was "inexcusable." And he says I "understand sufficiently without remonstrance from him "how unwarranted," "uncalled for," and "inexcusable" this was.

I repeat that which I said in the preceding article: if I have done an unwarranted, uncalled for, and inexcusable thing, I regret it, repent of it, turn from it, and seek both Brother Boll's and God's forgiveness. I must leave it to Brother Boll's sense of justice and right to discover that if a "reference" to this and the publication of it was "unwarranted," "uncalled for," and "inexcusable," the deed itself must be much more "unwarranted," "uncalled for," and "inexcusable." He says he "would not do again what" he "did in Rowe's case," "not because" he "did him a wrong, but because it gave further occasion to my [Boll's] unscruphlous enemies." He further says "that all" he "had to do with it was done with good motive, and good only, both toward Rowe and the cause of Christ." Then, if the deed itself was not wrong, was done with good motive both toward Rows and the cause of Christ, how can it be "unwarranted," "uncalled-for," and "inexcusable" to refer to it in a letter or to publish it in the paper? Again, I referred to this in my letter to Brother Boll, and gave my consent, when it was solicited, to the publication of the letter "with good motive, and good only," both for the good of "the cause of Christ" and all concerned. I wrote that private letter to Brother Boll in order to lead him to see that all purity, all righteousness, all love of peace, and all justice are not with Patmont, Boll, and all who defend Patmont, and with Jorgenson and his supporters, and all unrighteousness, impurity, ungodliness, and injustice with those who differ with them.

I had no connection whatever with the affair of Boll, Patmont, Rowe, and Jorgenson, or those associated with these men. For the sake of peace and the good of the cause of Christ, I was invited by Brother G. Dallas Smith to meet and confer with Brother Boll in Murfreesboro, Tenn, some time before Boll's conference with the publishers of the Gospel Advocate. I went gladly and had a pleasant meeting. I helped to arrange the conference with the Advocate. I was earnestly requested by both parties to be present. I deemed it my duty to both parties to be there. I have heard of some of Boll's party saying I was very fair and just. As to the Highland Church affair, Louisville, I was likewise urged to visit that church before the rupture, and was told that I could reach both sides. I felt it, again, my duty to do this, and postponed a meeting in Denton, Texas, a week in order to do so. I did not go. however, because I was afterwards informed that the time was not opportune. Brother Boll made a statement in his paper in regard to the church's withdrawing from Patmont in Cincinnati, and I felt I had as much right, for the sake of the cause of Christ, to make reference to that withdrawal and to the action of Jorgenson and others in Louisville as Boll had. I wrote different letters to Boll trying to maintain peace and unity. I cannot indorse his theories on unfulfilled prophecies; I cannot indorse his defense of Patmont and Jorgenson's course; I cannot indorse the course Jorgenson pursued with the Highland Church; and if such things are taught in the Bible, I confess I am still in deepest darkness. But there is no room here for bitterness and lack of love and false accusation.

Now, with all my deep interest in the salvation of all these parties, in the peace and harmony of the church, and all my efforts to adjust matters and maintain peace and good will, I am criticized as judging without testimony; of doing an "unwarranted," "uncalled-for," and "inexcusable" thing; of condemning "the church of the Lord "-and that, too, before I "knew the facts;" and of implicating myself with Boll's "unscrupulous enemies." He says I know that if he had been in Rowe's place and Rowe in his place the Advocate would have vindicated Rowe and published him as an evildoer; and that I know also that if any church had withdrawn from him (Boll), however arbitrarily it had been done, "the Advocate would have eagerly announced it with editorial commendation." I do not know this, but I know the Advocate in such case would defend Boll. I am grieved to learn that preachers and teachers and editors think that such things would be done and the church of Christ used to serve one's ambitious and personal and bitter ends. It is a shame and blot on the church that those who prefess to be guides to the blind and teachers in Israel will give way to such feelings and sinful passions and imagine that others are seeking. as "unscrupulous enemies," their destruction.

• I have no sympathy whatever with this thing of writing what one pleases of ugly charges in private letters and saying "not for publication." All I write in letters about all such matters, I am willing to see in print

Again, I say if I have done an "imvarranted," "uncalled-for," and "inexcusable" act, I regret h, repent, bezpardon, and will do all in my power to correct and right it.

Who in all these matters have you heard say he ever did wrong or even made a mistake? All are trying to condemn others. Let us try confessing our shas one to auother and praying one for another and see how that works.

No one has requested nor even intimated that such action be taken, but I considered it proper and right for a committee of brethren to look over the correspondence and receipts for the War Sufferers' Fund and to issue a statement concerning the disbursements of all contributions intrusted to my care during the year 1918. Herewith follows the statement:

Nashville, Tenn., January 6, 1919.—To the readers of the Gospel Advocate: Having examined the correspondence and receipts held by Brother A. B. Lipscomb, we find that during the year 1918 he has received and forwarded the following amounts: American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief, $8,423.40; Polish Victims' Relief Fund, $6,237.44; Fatherless Children of France, $1,000; Commission for Relief in Belgium, $800.54. The total amount received and forwarded was $16,461.38, which corresponds with the total of contributions acknowledged in his last report for the year. We furthermore find that no charge has been made for stationery, postage, or collection of checks.

Flippancy.

BY DAVID LIPSCOMB, JR.

Anent Brother Elam's paper on the flippancy and irreverence of the services, so-called, held in the Y. M. C. A. huts, in which paper he quotes from the Literary Digest from an article which I had already read and heartily indorsed, I wish to say that irreverence and flippancy are not confined to the "Y" workers, by any means. Sometimes, many times, it crops out not only in the public addresses, but also in the private conversation of some preachers-preachers, too, who have been successful in making and baptizing many converts. I wish to say that there is no one who loves laughter, wit, and song more than I. But to make the name of the Most High common. to use the gospel of Jesus Christ, his Son, in a jesting way, is abhorrent. To a special case. A preacher, while looking at my herd of cows, said: "Brother Lipscomb, do you know any one who will sell me a cow, and let me pay him a small sum down and take the rest in preaching?" I was at a loss for an answer, for I felt a little dazed at the flippant manner in which the question was phrased. At last I replied that many of us needed preaching, but few of us were willing to sell cows that way. Preacher brother, yours is a holy calling. Jesus said to preach the gospel to the poor is greater than miracle working. Let it be done in meekness and fear. The pendulum has swung too far. In getting away from sacred houses, sacred relics, and bones of saints, we may reach, and have reached, profanity, indifference, and irreverence. "Put off thy shoes from off thy feet, for the place whereon thou standest is holy ground."

In my opinion, we could get wholesome lessons in behavior and speech from our Catholic friends without imbibing any of their doctrines or dogmas. Once, many years ago, being in Bay St. Louis, Miss., on Sunday, there being no congregation of Protestants there, I went to the cathedral near my stopping place. I shall never forget the perfect conduct of the congregation, the whole attitude of worship. All came to worship—whites, mulattoes, Indians. There was no whispering, no speaking with eyes or shuffling of the feet of young or old, no caste or racial lines were thought of. The rich and the poor were gathered together to worship, and the Lord was the maker of them all.

Any ultimate delight in life must be rooted in something deeper than self-centered pleasure; it must love persons and seek ends for their own sake; and find its joy not in the satisfaction of man as he is, but in the development of that which his thought and love enable him to become.—William De Witt Hyde.

CHURCH NEWS

Alabama.

Albany, December 25 .- From November 24 to December 12 I was with the church at Jacksonville, Fla., in a very interesting and pleasant meeting, which resulted in nine baptisms and the stirring up of the church to greater activity along important lines. This is the home of Brother Willis H. Allen, who has lived and labored with this church for the past three years. He has done a good work in this city, and, considering the love and confidence in which he and his family are held, his rare ability and the hearty cooperation of the body there, I predict a bright future for the work in Jacksonville. Brother Allen and I first met at Potter Bible College, Bowling Green, Ky., where we enjoyed the pleasantest associations, and where, too, we met our wives (we have one each), who are sisters and were stu-dents in the same college. Taking into consideration the facts that my family accompanied me, that this was our initial trip to Florida, and that the association in general was so pleasant, I pronounce this the most pleasant trip and work of my life. To-day, as I write this report, comes exactly twenty-seven sweet remembrances, greetings and good wishes from some of the faithful there to me and mine. Who would not enjoy a visit among such a people? Our work at Albany is in fine condition. In spite of unfavorable conditions, our audiences are good. This is the beginning of my fourth year to live and labor with the church here, and we plan to make this a good year for the church in this section. I am endeavoring to locate Brother I. B. Bradley in Limestone County, to live at Athens, the county seat, and labor Athens, the county seat, with the churches near there, and to plant a church of the New Testament order in that beautiful little town, concerning which effort I shall have more "Lord, be to say at an early date. thou our helper."-J. Sam and James Lee, of San Angelo; and Claude and Fitz-Arizona; Walter and Everett Ree, of San Angelo; and Claude and Fitzhugh Lee, who are now somewhere in France, are brothers. Mrs. Hardgrave was born on November 17, 1894, in Austin County, and came to San Angelo with her parents in 1904. She was baptized by Brother Warlick in 1908, and was married to Mr. Hardgrave on March 29, 1914. In her home she was a ray of sunshine, and was untiring in her efforts to make her husband and children happy. To her parents, sisters, brothers, and friends, she was devoted, and was a general favorite with all who knew a general favorite with all who knew her. To measure her life in years, we are limited; but in patience, loyalty, consecration, and love, we found no limit. Her beautiful life of purity and devotion rises as sweet incense and inspires us to emulate her example. We shall no more hear her bringing comfort and sweet voice bringing comfort and cheer, nor see her loving face scat-tering sanshine wherever she went, tering sunshine wherever she went, but we may rest assured that she is asteep in Jesus MRS. P. C. McGLASSON, Gossett.

Little Margaret Lucile Gossett, born on January 23, 1912, departed this life on Wednesday morning, November 27, 1918. She was a sweet, lovable child of inviting ways and pleasing disposition. Her young life has been cut short, but has been filled with many sweet memories which are carried into that infinite realm where memories never die and where flows cannot vanish away. Her life was spent aright, for she came to the Llewellyn and Center Streets church of Christ, where she learned of flim who said: "Suffer little children was a contract of the children was a contract of the children who said: dren to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of heaven" She was a member of Sister Stevens' class, and who doubts that what she learned of Jesus while a member of this class is to be her greatest joy when in his presence? She will be no stranger there. In this life we need shelter and shade where we can slumber and sleep, for mortalwe can slumber and sleep, for mortality grows weary on life's way; but little I neile has gone to where there is no need of sun nor light of moon, her body can never he sick, her soul never grow weary; but, instead, she is to enjoy the glad fruitions of one blissful day, an unending day which shall have its dawning by the rising of eternity's never-setting sun. Elliott.

Jesse Garvin Elliott, the youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Elliott, was born on May 10, 1896, and died on October 24, 1918. For several months he had been in training in camp. It is said by his captain, in a letter to his father, that he was a splendid soldier and loved by all his comrades; also, that he contracted influenza, which brought on his death, by discharging faithfully his duty by discharging faithfully his duty, and not by innecessary exposure. Garvin was a boy with a big heart. He was never tir d of doing anything to make happy those he loved. When our country called for him, he went without a murmur and made a record of which his friends are proud. Some years ago he became a member of the church of Christ at Locust Grove, being baptized by Brother D. H. Friend, of Horse Cave, Ky. We are glad that he heard God's call for him and that he was not afraid to follow in obedience to the divine will. When his mother learned of his serious illness at Staten Island, she started to see him, but before she could reach him he died. On Tuesday following his death by almost a week his mortal remains were laid to rest in the family burying ground near the home of his early life. He loved the cause of right and fills an loved the cause of right and fills an honorable soldier's grave, and lies draped in the flag for which he gave his life. Funeral services were held in the open air at the home by the writer and Brother H. T. King, in the presence of a host of friends and relatives. May the Lord bless and comfort the sad parents and other relatives and all friends in this dark hour, and may all so love the Lord and live so as to meet in the haven of rest, where we shall be free from M. L. MOORE. sorrow and care.

Allen.

"Harvey Reagan Allen was born on June 28, 1899; was born anew, into the kingdom of God, at the age of fifteen, being baptized by Brother G. W. Riggs. He lived a pure, duriful, Christian life until the end came, October 25, 1918, (Mother)." The foregoing was handed to the writer just before conducting funeral services over the body of Harvey Allen at Madera, Cal., the oldest son of Brother and Sister Chyrus Allen. Harvey was a very promising young man, of whom his parents, relatives, and friends were justly proud. In this age and in this Western land it is rather out of the ordinary to see as quiet, modest, well-behaved young as quiet, modest, well-behaved young man as was Harvey. It was my pleasure to be with the congregation at Madera several times during the past year or two, and I think Harvey past year or two, and I think Harvey was always at meeting with his mother and the other children. But while it makes us sad to part from our loved ones, especially when so young and promising, still there is a bright side, a side of rejoicing, to the Christian: "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they

A Tribute to Millie Ellen Warner.

BY J. S. WYATT.

Millie Ellen Warner was born in Cumberland County, Tenn., on November 16, 1901, and died at Erasmus, Tenn., on December 27, 1918, having lived seventeen years, one month, and eleven days. Those seventeen years were years of hardship, of struggles and sorrow, yet she spent the greater part of them in laughter and song. She was the seventh child of a family of nine children, the daughter of Frank and Lizzie Warner. She was baptized into Christ at Newton Church by Brother J. C. Mosley on September 24, 1918. She stated on her deathbed that she desired that the Lord's will be done; that she had no fears of death; that she had done the Lord's will and was ready to go. Then she sang the sweet song, "When the Roll Is Called Up Yonder, I'll Be There," and, after praying for all the people she knew, she fell asleep in Jesus. It is hard to give her up, for we shall miss her companionship, and we had bright hopes for her future here. But we confidently believe she has passed into that rest that remaineth for the people of God. Still, we sorrow; we cannot help it; and we are thankful that the apostle does not tell us not to sorrow, but to sorrow not as those who have no hope. Her mother and one brother are members of Christ's body, while her father and other brothers and sisters are yet in the world. Her short Christian life has been a model one for all that have had the pleasure of her sweet association. The writer spoke a few words of comfort and cheer to the bereaved parents and relatives at the Van Winkle graveyard, where her body was laid to rest to await the resurrection morn. Memorial services will be held in the future at Newton Schoolhouse by J. C. Mosley.

A Natural Strengthener.

The value of iron in medicine has long been known, but never more appreciated than to-day.

People are learning that in Peptiron—a real iron tonic—this most useful metal is so happily combined that it is acceptable to all, even those who, for some reason or other, have been unable to take it in the past.

Peptiron is an agreeable, easily assimilated, nonconstipating preparation of iron, nux, pepsin, and other tonics and digestives, and is giving great satisfaction.

In cases where blood cleansing and liver stimulating as well as nerve strengthening are needed, Peptiron is very effectively and economically supplemented with Hood's Sarsaparilla and Hood's Pills. These three medicines form the Triple Combination Treatment to which the C. I. Hood Company is now calling attention as especially beneficial to sufferers from impure blood, weak, unstrung nerves, torpid and sluggish liver, or a generally run-down condition.

Suffering Transmuted.

Unhappiness is the hunger to get; happiness is the hunger to give. True happiness must ever have the tinge of sorrow outlived, the sense of pain softened by the mellowing years, the chastening of loss that in the wondrous mystery of time transmutes our suffering into love and sympathy with others.—William George Jordan.

The Great Test.

Self-control is an easy matter when we are alone. But the moment our lives are thrown in with others, then comes the struggle. To maintain our equanimity; to restrain the sharp retort, the impatient exclamation; to get along smoothly with disagreeable people, without friction or jarring—this is the great life test. This is what builds character, what tests manhood or womanhood, what makes the ideal employee.—New Success Magazine.

Love and Sympathy Needed.

Goodness should be the most attractive thing in the world; but we do well to remember that mere correctness of life and principle, unvitalized by love and sympathy, lacks the qualities that charm.—Exchange.

Four Years of Evangelistic Work.

BY M. KEEBLE.

I am now closing my fourth year's work, and I am happy because Jesus has blessed my labors, and to him be all the praise. For four years I have daily worked trying to win souls for Christ, because winning brings reward. One thing that has served to encourage me in the work is the assistance that I have received from so many of the brethren and sisters who have been so thoughtful of my needs. A good many places where I have gone to preach to my people, if it had not been for the aid given by the white people, I would have suffered, and I am so thankful for such kind and Christian fellowship, and pray that I may ever live so as to be worthy of all blessings bestowed upon me in , the future. I shall now give an account of all of my work for the last four years, and I hope it will be inspiring to all who may read it. Year 1915-Sermons, 240; baptized, 90; restored, 23; miles traveled, 5,260. Year 1916-Sermons, 335; baptized, 135; restored, 30; miles traveled, 5,000. Year 1917—Sermons, 297; baptized, 104; restored, 16; miles traveled, 6,497. Year 1918-Sermons, 289; baptized, 128; restored, 17; miles traveled, 6,295. Total for four years: Sermons, 1,161; baptized, 457; restored, 86; miles traveled, 23,052.

I give these figures to prove that the work can be done without the aid of any human organization. I have always believed that the work could be done by the church, and now I know it can. During these four years I have established two congregations, and both of them are preparing to build meetinghouses this spring. In accomplishing what I have, I have suffered in many ways, but ever trusting Jesus, who suffered for me. Now, as the old year passes out and we are blessed with the privilege of seeing the new year come, let us not make new resolutions, but put in practice those we have already made. May God help me to do more in the future and bring many souls to Him who redeemed us. May God bless all who have had fellowship with me in my work, and I ask of them their continued fellowship and prayers.

Calomel Dynamites A Sluggish Liver

Crashes into sour bile, making you sick, and you lose a day's work.

Calomel salivates! It is mercury. Calomel acts like dynamite on a slug-gish liver. When calomel comes into gish liver. When calomel comes into contact with sour bile, it crashes into it, causing cramping and nausea.

If you feel bilious, headachy, constipated, and all knocked out, just go to your druggist and get a bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone for a few cents, which is a harmless vegetable substitute for dangerous calomel. Take a spoonful, and if it doesn't start your liver and straighten you up better and quicker than nasty calomel and without making you sick, you just go back and get your money.

If you take calomel to-day, you will be sick and nauseated to-morrow; besides, it may salivate you; while if you take Dodson's Liver Tone you will wake up feeling great, full of ambition and ready for work or play. harmless, pleasant, and safe to give to children; they like it.

Harvey.

BY W. G. BLACK

On September 29, 1918, at 7:30 A.M., Elder George W. Harvey "finished his course." He passed over on the Lord's day, which was his desire if it was the Lord's will.

Brother Harvey was born in Alabama on March 15, 1832. His father came to Texas in 1839. Shortly after coming to Texas, his father died and left him to become the dependence of his mother, who was an invalld for a number of years. He eared for her a number of years.

Soon after the death of his father, Brother Harvey bired to a Methodist minister. While working for him, he was impressed with the importance of becoming a Christian by the pious and godly life of the minister's wife, Subsequently he joined the Methodist Church: but later he heard the gospel and obeyed the same. In obeying the gospel, Brother Harvey obeyed it because he believed it the power of God to save the believer. In accepting the Bible, he accepted it as the word of the true and living God-man's only guide from earth to heaven. He believed it to be the "science of all right living." He was very conscientious in studying the Bible, and said that "the Bible is always right." If he found his conclusions to be wrong, he did not feel humiliated to change. I have heard him say: "One should change as often as he finds himself mistaken." As Brother Harvey accepted the gospel as "the power of God unto salvation," so he felt that he must preach it to others. This he did with zeal and earnestness, as all who knew him will testify.

Brother Harvey's character was above reproach. Sister Creath (his only daughter living) said she did not know of one blot on his character. I have been intimately associated with him for some six years, and I found him to be a source of strength to me as a young man in the ministry. also found him to be a true teacher, a wise counselor, and a true friend.

To our beloved Sister Creath I would say: Weep not as those who have no hope. For "blessed are the dead who die in the Lord from henceforth: yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; for their works follow with them." (Rev. 14: 13.) But continue to press on, that you, too, may obtain the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus. May the providence of our Heavenly Father ever guide and protect you.

Convalescence after pneumonia, typhoid fever, and the grip is sometimes merely apparent, not real. To make it real and rapid, there is no other tonic so highly to be recommended as Hood's Sarsaparilla. Thousands so testify. Take Hood's

TO STOP FALLING HAIR.

The cause of baldness, hair falling out, loss of luster and color, is found in the roots of the hair itself. Our hair is but a portion of our body, and, like the other organs, cannot subsist without food. The hair finds its food in the fat layer of skin next to the skull. When this source of food is stopped or impeded, out comes the hair. The dreaded disease, dandruff, is a germ collects on the bottom of the hair and eats away its life. The hair sack from which the hair comes is imbedded in the layer of underskin. When the sculp is diseased and the hair falls out, often this small hair sack closes. Eventually, as a result of the dandruff germs, baldness comes. The proper method of restoring the hair and stopping the falling out must necessarily be in the destruction of the danaruff germs and in the reopening of the little hair sacks. Furthermore, in order to rejuvenate the scalp and make the growth of new hair more vigorous, it is necessary that the system be able to furnish an abundance of hair food. Many artificial methods have been tried in restoring the hair which were only surface remedies, and, failing to reach the small hair sacks, were unsuccessful. Respening the hair sack allows the new hair to grow. CALVACURA begins at the root of the trouble, and its use is, therefore, advised. Its mission is to feed the new hair as well as the old and rid the scaip of all dandruff germs. By thus cleansing and rejuvenating the entire scalp, a healthy growth of hair is assured. Falling of hair is stopped, new life and color to dead, gray hair is developed. and the hair becomes smooth and velvely. It is not an unpleasant treatment, and takes only a few minutes of time each day for about six weeks. The Union Laboratory, 214 109th Street, Binghamton, N. Y .. will send you a liberal sample of Calvacura No. 1 FREE, together with a booklet, "The Triumph of Science Over Baldness," if you will send your name and address, together with 10 cents in silver or postage stamps to help pay the distribution expenses.

Christmas at the Tennessee Orphans' Home.

The children of the Tennessee Orphans' Home were made happy Tuesday afternoon by a loaded Christmas tree and a program of carol singing into which they entered with all the joy of the season. The beautiful ceremony at the Home began at half past two o'clock; and when the time came for the distribution of the many gifts, the children pulled them from the tree with laughs and comment of delight.

Each child had the same number ofgifts on the tree and received in addition bags of candy, nuts, apples, and oranges to their full satisfaction. The tree was planted in the large dining room, and the children sat in a circle around the brilliantly ornamented cedar. There being fifty-seven children in the Home, they made a most interesting and attractive circle.

People of Columbia and many other places were exceedingly liberal this year in their contributions of presents and money to buy goodies and toys for the Orphan Home children. Special presents sent for individual children were given direct to the respective ones for whom they were intended Christmas morning, and each child was informed as to whom the remembrance was from. Four children who were in their beds, two on account of measles and two on account of influenza, were given their gifts in their rooms.

The arrangement and distribution of the presents were planned by Mrs. Granville Lipscomb, superintendent of the Home, assisted by Mrs. Davis and Misses Greer and Caskey. Their skill in developing the children spiritually, intellectually, and physically was shown in the plan of the Christmas tree. The Tennessee Orphans' Home is to-day like a well-regulated Christian family home, which is the best in the world. Everything at the Home indicates a fairness and justice such as a mother would show her own children, so that no partiality or favoritism is permitted. Most of the children call the beloved superintendent "Mother Lipscomb."-Columbia Her-

FOOT TROUBLES.

No Need of Them, Says Brooklyn Man, Who Has Evidently Solved a Big Problem.

According to the testimony of hundreds of people living in the Southland and elsewhere, E. P. Simon, of 1589 Broadway, Brooklyn, N. Y., has successfully developed a system of shoe building having for its prime object the conquering of foot and shoe troubles. It appears that Mr. Simon's establishment has become national headquarters for people whose feet require his remarkable comfort shoe, known as the Ez-Wear, but obtainable only of the inventor. Mr. Simon's new catalogue shows several hundred shoes that combine comfort with style at amazingly low prices and is now ready for free distribution.—Advt.

ARE YOU LOSING YOUR GRIP ON HEALTH

Your Blood May Be Starving for Want of Iron—Making You Weak, Nervous, Irritable and Exhausted.

Nuxated Iron, increases the Red Blood Corpuseles and builds up the strength, energy and endurance of delicate, run-down people in two weeks' time in many instances.

Thousands of men and women are impairing their constitutions, laying themselves open to illness and literally losing their grip on health, simply because their blood is thinning out and possibly starving through lack of iron.

Dr. James Francis Sullivan, formerly physician of Bellevue Hospital (Outdoor Dept.), New York, and the Westchester County Hospital, says: "Lack of Iron in the blood not only makes a man a physical and mental weakling, nervous, irritable, easily fatigued, but it utterly robs him of that virile force, that stamina and strength of will which are so necessary to success and power in every walk of life. It may also transform a beautiful, sweet-tempered woman into one who is cross, nervous and irritable. To help make strong, keen, red-blooded Americans there is nothing in my experience which I have found so valuable as organic iron—Nuxated Iron. It often increases the strength and endurance of weak, nervous' run-down people in two weeks' time.' Nuxated Iron is now being used by over three million people annually, including such men as Hon. Leslie M. Shaw, former Secretary of the Treasury, and ex-Governor of Iowa; former United States Senator and Vice-Presidential nominee, Charles A. Towne; United States Commissioner of Immigration Hon. Anthony Caminette; also United States Judge G. W. Atkinson of the Court of Claims of Washington and others.

Somewhere on the Atlantic.

BY C. G. VINCENT.

After a week's strenuous training at Columbia University, New York City, we, a large group of "Y" men, from all parts of the States and from all walks of life, find ourselves aboard one of His Majesty's transports en route to France via England. The voyage so far has been delightful. Fearing floating mines and possibly a sneaking "sub," our captain, several times torpedoed, did not relax any of the precautionary requirements. These regulations occasioned some inconvenience to the passengers, but no one complained. We congratulate ourselves because we are to pass through England.

While in New York it was my good pleasure to meet Brother John E. Dunn a few days before he sailed for France. We all know something of the good work he did in one of our Southern camps. Brother Dunn felt that he wanted to be near the boys at the front, among whom is his own son.

Brother Moore Lynn, a member of the Peak and Main Streets Church, Dallas, Texas, is in our group. To meet and to know him was another happy surprise. We took the training course together and are companions in travel. For two days he was simply "down and out," but so far I have maintained my reputation as a good sailor.

The "Y" officials realize that time is precious, so they require us to study French and to do work in drills and in various physical exercises daily. We are also asked to read certain books setting forth the needs and methods of work in France. there is some time left for recreational games. A concert is given every evening. The talent is found among the passengers and the crew. We keep in touch with the big world by means of the wireless. Our ship is a very large one and takes the waves and swells gracefully enough, but there is no ship affoat that does not everlastingly roll!

One night about ten o'clock we received the S. O. S. call. It was from a burning vessel, and we started toward her. However, another ship was nearer, so we passed on. could see it quite distinctly. No life was lost. A sailor to whom I talked told me that he had been sailing the Atlantic for ten years, and it was the first time he had ever witnessed such a scene.

Just now I am thinking of the work in Japan. Brethren, are you standing by that good work? Let us not only support the work, but also have a share in that lot so much needed. Send to W. W. Freeman, Abilene, Texas, or to the Gospel Advocate, and your offering will go forward in due time.

God's Cause Must Not Suffer.

BY GEORGE W. FARMER.

The religion of Jesus Christ is of the supremest importance, and to-day it is being put to the most crucial test.

No true Christian, when rightly understanding his relation to God and his fellow man, can afford to overlook these stern facts that stand out boldly before us all. Neither can he afford to fail to lift his voice and raise his hands in the defense and for the promotion of its principles. Should we lose sight of, and become indifferent, as some have, toward these things, the world loses that which makes it "worth while" and makes life worth living, and that which we cannot afford to be without. Its significance and supreme importance are indicated in the language of the Christ: "Ye are the salt of the earth: but if the salt have lost its savor, wherewith shall it be salted? it is thenceforth good for nothing, but to be cast out and trodden under foot of man. Ye are the light of the world. A city set on a hill cannot be hid. Neither do men light a lamp, and put it under a bushel, but on the stand; and it shineth unto all that are in the house. Even so let your light shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father who is in heaven." (Matt. 5: 13-16.) Note the expressions, "salt of the earth," "light of the world." They are very significant.

We should all desire to be good, useful, and helpful in the world; and it is a veritable fact that every true Christian is all of that to the world, for he is ever striving to bring his whole life's work and character into harmony with God's will as it is in Christ. Therefore, to practice the principles of the religion of Christ indeed and in truth is to give to the world an expression of the best, noblest, and the very highest life of which we are

Paul said of the church: "It is the fullness of him that filleth all in all." Yes, certainly so. There is no type of character pleasing to God and complete in all particulars, but that it is to be fostered in all of its essentials in the church. There is no kind of work, either needful or helpful, but that it may and should be done in the church of God, under the leadership of Jesus Christ. "And whatsoever ye do, in word or in deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God the Father through him." (Col. 3: 17.)

In view of what has been spoken and written so many times before, and the which has been so plainly and pointedly, and at the same time so beautifully, verified, we should be awakened to the demands of the conditions, intricate and urgent needs that are now upon us, and that will still roll in upon us like the ocean billows for the years to come. The most terrible war that has ever been waged is now ended and the light of peace shines forth again. May it ever shine the brighter through all the coming years. But with the coming of peace the responsibility does not end. Let us not overlook that fact.

The subjugated nations are in chaos -almost "without form and void." In our deportment and work toward them we must well remember the rules laid down by our blessed Master. They must be helped in almost every way. We must love them, not hate them; do good to them, not abuse and maltreat them; pray for them, and not curse them.

O, what a field has opened up for the beautiful "trying out" of the principles of the religion of Jesus Christ!

Besides all this, the soldier boys are coming home soon. They have seen and heard new things, got new ideas, and learned new ways. They are going to expect something of us when they get home. Shall they be disappointed? The churches (congregations) had as well be getting ready for their coming. Those slothful, inactive, sleeping, unsystematic, do-nothing congregations—in fact, all—should be waking up to the responsibilities and opportunities before them. Wake up! Get ready for work. God's cause must not suffer.

Another Year's Work.

BY G. P. BOWSER.

"We spend our years as a tale that is told." The year 1918 recedes into history with its story of bliss or woe. The good or evil that has been done, only eternity can tell. Have I done my best? I shudder on reflection. The Lord has blessed me bountifully. Our meetings have been most encouraging. During the year I have held meetings or preached at the following places: Nashville, Lebanon, Cookeville, Silver Point, Lancaster, Bellwood, Brownsville, Capleville, Neshoba, and Henry, all in Tennessee; Belen, New Zion, Smithville, Thyatira, and Kileton, in Mississippi; Marvell and Blackton, in Arkansas; Glen Allen, New River, Bankston, Berry, and Patton, in Alabama; Jacksonville, Fla.; Louisville, Ky.; Indianapolis and Carthage, Ind.; Chicago, Ill.; Detroit, Mich. Number of sermons preached. 231; number of additions, 31.

The calls for meetings for 1919 are many more than I shall be able to fill. "I am only one, but I am one. I cannot do all things, but I can do something. What I can do, I ought to do. What I ought to do, by the grace of God I will do."

I have not words with which to express my appreciation to the many who have assisted in this great work.

"Be Still, and Know That I Am God."

Be still, and know that I am God, Ye who with fret and fear are worn; Who hear no voice when tempests beat;

Who faint, by sorrow overborne; Who dwell in shadows of defeat.

Be still, and know that I am God; The world is mine—the shine, the storm;

Your life is mine—your hopes, your fears;

The sun is mine, to keep you warm; I guard your days, your distant years.

Be still, and know that I am God; Let not the fires of war appall; Fear not the demons of the sea; The kings who build on blood shall fall;

I rule the nations' destinies.

Be still, and know that I am God; Mine only is the conquering sword; What can avail the tyrant's boasts. If I oppose, who am the Lord? Fear only me, the Lord of hosts!

How Shiver Mineral Water Relieves Rheumatism.

According to the standard medical books, rheumatism is not a germ disease, but is the result of imperfect nutrition. The food is either imperfectly digested or imperfectly assimilated. Poisons accumulate, and these irritate and inflame the delicate linings of the joints, the heart, and other organs. To relieve rheumatism, it is, therefore, necessary to stop the formation of these poisons and get rid of those already formed.

The celebrated Shivar Mineral Water acts on the stomach and kidneys. It corrects the digestion and washes out the poisons through the kidneys. This is the opinion of physicians who prescribe it. If you suffer with rheumatism, dyspepsia, indigestion, disease of the kidneys, bladder, or liver, uric-acid poisoning, or any condition due to impure blood, read the following letter, then sign it, inclose the amount, and mail it. Only two out of a hundred on the average report no benefit.

Shivar Spring, Box 21B, Shelton, S. C.

Gentlemen: I accept your offer and inclose herewith two dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Water. I agree to give it a fair trial, in accordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send; and if it fails to benefit my case, you agree to refund the price in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns, which I agree to return within a month.

Edifying as the Need May Be

"My Body, Which Is Broken for You."

I have received from Brother R. D. Smith, of Terrell, Texas, a criticism of one point in my recent article about the passover as a type. It is written in a very brotherly and friendly spirit, and I am glad indeed to present it to our readers with a few further comments of my own upon the interesting point under discussion. Brother Smith writes:

Dear Brother Lipscomb: Your work on the first page of the Gospel Advocate is undoubtedly most excellent, and I have enjoyed it greatly; but I just cannot agree with you in your criticism on the "broken body." I have heard the same before, but have never been able to agree with those who say it is not correct to say, "this is my body, which is broken for you."

If I understand, the argument for rejecting "is broken" is that it is not in the original, and that it does not agree with some other passages on the same subject.

Is the expression "is broken" in the original of Paul's writing? This is what I do not know, nor no one else knows, nor can know. How then, I ask, shall we determine the genuineness of words? Now, if a word did not appear in any ancient authority, and yet were not out of harmony with other scriptures, I could see no harm in its remaining in the text. But when a word has the sanction of the received authorities and is in harmony with the rest of the Scriptures, it seems to me perfectly safe to retain it.
This is exactly the case with the expression "is broken"
(klomenon). (1 Cor. 11: 24.)

1. The expression "is broken" is genuine.

The American Standard Version, although omitting the word, states in a footnote that "many ancient authorities read is broken." I have before me the readings of eight of the (said to be) most reliable Greek texts. Four of these retain the reading "is broken." I may add to this that retain the reading "is broken." I may add to this that in the "Life and Epistles of the Apostle Paul," by Conybeare and Howson, the reading stands. Also Dr. J. H. Thayer, in his New Testament lexicon, recognizes the genuineness of the word.

I remember a discussion which appeared in the Advo-cate a few years ago, to which, if my memory serves me well, Brother David Lipscomb was a party. It was pro-posed to reject Acts 8: 37 on the ground that it was not in some of the Greek texts. My recollection is that Brother Lipscomb contended for retaining it, on the grounds that it was in some of the texts, and that it was in harmony with the other scriptures. I have just examined the readings of the different texts, and find that five out of the eight reject the entire verse; but I think most of us are in favor of retaining it. There is, therefore, only one excuse left for omitting the word, and that is upon the ground of disharmony.

2. The expression is harmonious.
(1) David said: "He keepeth all his bones: not one of them is broken." (Ps. 34: 20.) John (19: 33) says: "They brake not his legs." Again, in verse 36 he says: "These things were done, that the scripture should be fulfilled, A bone of him shall not be broken." There is no contradiction here, for Paul says the "body" which "is broken," not "bones."

(2) The Scriptures (Zech. 12: 10; John 19: 34, 37; Rev. 1: 7) teach us that he was pierced, not broken. (a) Paul could have, with correctness, referred to the act of piercing his side as breaking of his body. If a sharp instrument is brought into contact with an egg, so as to penetrate the shell, though it may leave but a smooth, round opening, we say the egg is broken. Now, Webster gives as one definition for "break:" "To divide by piercing or penetrating; to make breaches or gaps by battering, as in a wall." (b) Paul could have employed the word as a description of the violent manner of his death. Thayer says of the word "broken" (klomenon) as in this place: "Metaph. Shattered, as it were, by a violent death." And there is plenty of evidence in Webster for this usage.

(3) But Paul uses a different word to the one Luke (22: 19) employed to tell what Jesus said at the supper. I answer, he could have used a different word or different words even to quote from other Bible writers, and have been in the very best of company. The New Testament furnishes many examples from the teachings of Jesus and the apostles.

But the language of Paul, "This is my body, which is broken for you," is not quoted from Luke, nor from any other man or men. He was "not one whit behind the chiefest apostles." "For I have received from the Lord that which I delivered unto you." Paul says Jesus told him that when he broke the bread at the supper he said: This is my body, which is broken for you.'

Why, then, if Jesus told Paul, in reporting the supper, that he (Jesus) said, "This is my body, which is broken," and this was so, did not Luke so report? He might have used both of the words on that occasion, and the apostle have simply not reported the one. I think it is understood that they did not pretend to report absolutely every word and deed in his life.

But suppose Jesus said at the supper, "my body which is given for you," and told Paul he said. "My body, which is broken for you," how could we harmonize the words? They are not out. The word "given" is "didomenon," the present participle of "didomi," and "didomi has one definition as follows: "To give over; deliver." The word, therefore, as used by Luke, has reference to the offering of his body as a sacrifice for our sins. The word "broken" is "klomenon," and refers likewise, as shown above, to the sacrificial offering of himself. The first has reference more particularly to his act in delivering his body on our behalf. The latter would seem to emphasize the awful effects of the cruel ordeal through which he passes for us—is being broken.

If it was "given," given over, delivered, for us, it was broken for us; and if it was "broken" for us, it was given

There is no discrepancy here.

It is, of course, correct to say his body was given, and his body was pierced; but if I should prefer one as being more expressive than another, I should say "is broken." Broken." (klomenon, "is being broken.") is the fitter (klomenon, "is being broken") is the fittest word I know to describe the awful process from the supper by which his body was brought to death. "Being broken" would seem to bring before one Gethsemane, with the awful agony, the prayers, and the tears; the arrest and the cruel trials; the buffetings and the scourging; the nail-torn hands and feet, and the riven, bleeding side: would picture that broken, wrecked form, thorn-crowned and hanging there, the eternal proof of God's love for a world—the picture that inspired the lines:

> "See, from his head, his hands, his feet, Sorrow and love flow mingled down. Did e'er such love and sorrow meet, Or thorns compose so rich a crown?

"Were the whole realm of nature mine, That were a present far too small; Love so amazing, so divine Demands my love, my life, my all."

Westcott & Hort, whose Testament is recognized by scholars as the Standard Greek Text, leave out of the text "klomenon," from "klae." This text was used by the American revisers; hence, "is broken" is left out of their translation. Thus the concentrated scholarship of the religious world does not hold "is broken" as genuine. While the committee was open-minded enough to let Bible readers see that some ancient manuscripts did insert "klomenon," yet they leave it out because it is not in the most genuine Greek texts. The same is true of Acts 8: 37. Thayer, in his Greek-English Lexicon of the New Testament, defines "klao" "to break: used in the New Testament of the breaking of bread (see artos, 1), Matt. 14: 19; 15: 36; 36: 26; Mark 8: 6; 14: 22; Luke 22: 19; [24: 30]; Acts 2: 46; Acts 20: 7, 11; 1 Cor. 10: 16; 11: 24." Thus Thayer does not use "klao" as referring to the body of Christ as being actually broken. A New New Testament Interlinear Greek-English Lexicon, published by Hinds, Noble & Eldridge, translates "klomenon" "is being broken," which shows that they referred it to the bread which represented the body of Christ. Christ said of the bread: "This is my body." (1 Cor. 11: 24.) This passage that has "is broken" in many ancient manuscripts very clearly shows that it is the bread which was being broken, and not the real body of Christ, which was present in its entirety with the disciples. To prove by any manuscript that the real body "was broken" is to prove that the bread is the real body of Christ. No passage in the Bible even intimates that the real body of Christ was broken. Thayer refers the word to the body only in a metaphorical sense, which shows that he did not teach that the body was actually broken.

The Scriptures speak of Christ as being pierced. "They shall look on him whom they pierced." (John 19: 37.) The soldiers broke the legs of the thieves that were crucified with Jesus, but "they brake not his legs," "that the scripture might be fulfilled, A bone of him shall not be broken." The body is the "physical organism," and it is not a body without bones. The eggshell illustration is a misfit. The shell is the only solid part of an egg, and when broken the contents are all wasted. Not so with the body. The body may be pierced, wounded, and bruised, and yet the "physical organism" not be broken so long as the bones remain intact.

The only passage on which Brother Smith relies for proof that the body of Christ was broken, according to Thayer, states that the breaking refers to the bread and not to the body of Christ.

"Shall 1 Cor. 14 Stand or Go?" BY A. W. YOUNG.

Under the above heading an article appeared on page 1062 (issue of November 7) of the Gospel Advocate, which was the product of the pen of Brother A. M. George. His article is a criticism of two articles of mine which recently appeared in these columns. If all the brethren and sisters would remember just what is written and not read between the lines, even in the word of God, there would be no need for a reply to Brother George.

It is strange that men will allow themselves to follow a hobby so earnestly and persistently that they cannot see truth when it is clearly presented, and strange, too, that in attempting to reply to others they will speak in such an illogical way. For instance, Brother George says in regard to me: "He thinks that there is no hour for meeting specifically commanded; that worship is not the only thing for which the church can assemble, and that all details connected with the work and worship of the church are not given." No, Brother George, I do not think any such thing; I know it. Instead of taking the time and space to criticize, why did you not give us the passage of scripture which names the hour of worship, or the passage which gives the details of baptism, the communion, the contribution, or anything else. The details of acts of worship and the work of the church are not given in the New Testament. It was not necessary that they should be, What difference does it make where a man is baptizedin a baptistery, in a pool, in a river, in a gulf, or in the ocean? What difference does it make how many folks are present when he is baptized, whether it is hot or cold water, winter or summer, daytime or nighttime? If Brother George knows how many cups the Jerusalem church used in the communion after the number of members had grown to about ten thousand, I would like to know how he found it out.

In the second place, Brother George says that Paul and Peter said that the man of God was "thoroughly" furnished, and that I said that he was not. I have never said such a thing in all of my life. I fully believe that the man of God is "thoroughly furnished unto every good work;" but that does not make me contend that this furnishing mentions all the details of such work, when I know that the word of God does not mention them. I am simply trying to get the brethren to see the difference between the opinions of men and the word of God. The word of God does not mention any specific place for baptism; hence, God's children can baptize folks anywhere, where they have enough water and where there are folks to baptize. The opinions of men say that you must not baptize in a baptistery, but that you may baptize in a tank or river. The man who contends against a baptistery and for some specific place for baptizing is as guilty of creed making and popery to that extent as any council or head of the Roman Church ever was. The man who contends for some specific way of contributing, laying his money on a table or something like that, and condemns those who pass the contribution baskets, is also guilty. The man who contends for a certain number of glasses in the communion and refuses to worship God if you have more is a creed maker, for the word of God says nothing about this. Brother George may ridicule the idea of "sanctified common sense" as much as he likes, but the man who makes his opinions or the customs of some backwoods congregation equal to the word of God is proclaiming "unsanctified nonsense."

Brother George's contention that we should be governed by the instruction given to the church (1 Cor. 14) when the members were inspired, could speak with tongues, prophesy, work miracles, etc., is as reasonable as to contend that we should go fishing in order to get money to pay our taxes because Jesus told Peter to do that. If Brother George can speak with unknown tongues and has some special revelation from God to communicate to the church, then 1 Cor. 14 gives him instruction as to the matter; but as he cannot even give us what the Lord has said and left in writing without mixing it with human tradition, we are hardly prepared to receive him as a prophet.

As to the chief contention of his article, that I am trying to do away with 1 Cor. 14: 34, 35, he is entirely mistaken. Much of the first Corinthian letter is a repetition of what the Corinthians had written to Paul. They wrote that unto him, and he repeated it in his letter to them and then severely condemned them for writing it by saying: "What? came the word of God out from you? or came it unto you only? If any man think himself to be a prophet. or spiritual, let him acknowledge that the things that I write unto you are the commandments of the Lord." (1 Cor. 14: 36, 37.) Those brethren wrote as though the word of God started from them, or as though that word came to the men only, and hence the justice of the rebuke. But even admitting that Paul originated the statement, which he did not, it would only apply to married women, because they are the only ones who have husbands at home; hence, Brother George might allow the unmarried ones to sing in his home congregation, which he has not been willing to do.

"The Man of Sin." No. 1. BY F. W. SMITH,

We have recorded in 2 Thess. 2: 1-10 a description of what the Holy Spirit terms "the man of sin," or "the lawless one." The picture drawn of this "man of sin" is, indeed, a graphic one, with the finger of inspiration point-Ing to certain characteristics differentiating him from all other characters of either sacred or profane history. These characteristics are so marked, or clearly defined, that it would seem at least within the range of the possibilities to discern the original. But, strange to say, men with fruitful imaginations have converted this inspired picture into a human kaleidoscope through which they behold a multiplicity of pictures suited to as many different theories. But, unfortunately for these discoverers (?) of "new truth," the Bible cannot accommodate itself to all of the vagaries in which they delight to revel, for the holy oracles teach but one thing on the subject. Hence, all of these expositors may be wrong, and it is absolutely certain that they all cannot be right. It shall be my purpose to show that this "man of sin," or "the lawless one," is not some thing or person yet to come on the earth answering to the "abomination of desolation" foretold by the prophet Daniel and the Lord Jesus Christ. (Dan. 11; 31; Matt. 24: 15; Mark 13: 14.) This I propose to do from surface facts-facts over which men in their haste to discover new (?) truth have blindly stumbled.

"THE MYSTERY OF LAWLESSNESS."

The apostle declares that this was at work when he wrote the epistle, because he says: "For the mystery of lawlessness doth already work." (2 Thess. 2: 7.) Now, it is useless to attempt a separation between "lawlessness" and "the lawless one" as found in this chapter, and it only remains to show how or in what sense the "lawless one" was at work in order to prove that the "lawless one," or "the man of sin," existed in Paul's day. Surely no one will dispute the fact that "the man of sin" and "the lawless one" refer to the same character, and with this assumption it will be proper to ask: How could it be possible for a thing to be at work in Paul's day which had no existence, only in prophecy to be fulfilled at the coming of Christ? I confess that such a view of the subject presents difficulties which, it seems to me, contradict the plain declarations of an inspired man. The acorn is the oak tree in embryo, holding within its prison shell every constituent element of the mighty giant of the forest, and the very moment this vegetable seed begins to germinate in the earth an oak tree is in process of development-an oak tree is born. The shell, the walls of its prison house, have crumbled, and the delicate fibrous tendrils begin at onco the formation of the tree. Now, all that was involved in "the man of sin," or "the lawless one," was in the seed or principle at work in Paul's day just as the oak was in the acorn. The principle that developed into "the lawless one" had germinated in the soil of human hearts, and was going on toward maturity in the time when Paul lived on the earth. Its growth was held in check by one who restrained its development; but when that one was taken out of the way, it went on to the fullness of its strength, and it will continue to exist on this earth in some form and degree of strength until the coming of Christ, who will destroy this " man of sin." This much is affirmed in verse 8 of the chapter under consideration, which says: "Whom the Lord Jesus shall slay with the breath of his mouth. and bring to naught by the manifestation of his coming." It is a perversion of God's word to teach that "the man of sin" will not be revealed until the coming of Christ, and was evidently invented to support another theory unsupported by the word of God.

THE NATURE OF "THE MAN OF SIN."

This, undoubtedly, is religious. That Paul was writing about some great religious institution, presided over by a dominating head or supreme ecclesiastic, is shown by these words: "He that opposeth and exalteth himself against all that is called God or that is worshiped, so that he sitteth in the temple of God, setting himself forth as God." (2 Thess. 2: 4.) The "temple of God" evidently means the church of God in an exceedingly corrupted form.

WHO OR WHAT IS "THE MAN OF SIN?"

The word of God does not mention by name any individual or institution as the "man of sin," but states the fact that it or he was in existence and at work in apostolic times. The language is: "For the mystery of lawlessness doth already work." (2 Thess. 2: 7.) Just as the constituent elements of the oak tree in embryo are hidden away under the earth, silently, secretly, and mysteriously working in the formation of the tree, so were the elements and principles of "the man of sin" concealed in the hearts of those apostates in the church out of which sprang the full-grown "lawless one" that cursed and is still cursing the earth. The characteristics of "the man of sin" are given in the Bible, and with these, in the light of religious and political history, we should have no trouble in locating this great iniquity. Paul declares there was a restraining power holding "the man of sin" in check. He says: "And now ye know that which restraineth, to the end that he may be revealed in his own season." (2 Thess. 2: 6.) It is clear to my mind that Paul himself, with his divinely constituted apostolic authority and power, was this restraining influence which held back the development of "the man of sin." That the incipient "man of sin" originated among leaders in the church of God seems to be beyond question. In addressing the elders of the church at Ephesus, the apostle says: "I know that after my departing grievous welves shall enter in among you, not sparing the flock; and from among your own selves shall men arise, speaking perverse things, to draw away the disciples after them." (Acts 20: 29, 30.) The "perverse things" and "drawing away the disciples" from the simplicity of the gospel constituted the beginning of the apostasy, or "man of sin," and intimates it could not or would not be developed until after his departure.

More Help Needed for the Fanning Orphan School.

BY E. A. E.

Some congregations and some individuals have responded promptly and liberally to the call for help for the Fanning Orphan School.

The trustees take this opportunity to express their thanks for these contributions. Yet, since they give their time, service, and money so cheerfully to the school, they feel that it is the duty of others to generously contribute to the support and advancement of it. Why not?

But not enough has yet been given to pay the debt of the school?

I have been asked, if the school has been well managed, why is it in debt?

This is easily explained.

In the first place, it has been well managed, having had all along as trustees some of the safest and best business. men of the country. Besides, its superintendent and matron are very capable and conscientious. The school, under good management, has grown from a small beginning to its present size and means and usefulness. With its present income it is able to care for-that is, to board and teach free-about thirty girls. It could not do this much when it first began; it could never do any more than this should it never grow any more. As it is now, it pays the superintendent, matron, and teachers, and carries free of cost as many as thirty orphan girls. But, in kindness and desire to help by educating and preparing for usefulness as many girls as possible, it has accepted from year to year more such girls than its income at times would justify, trusting to donations to pay the additional cost, and not enough has been received always to do this. To meet these expenses, the school has then been forced to borrow the money. Let all who are now contributing to the school understand that they are contributing to the preparation for usefulness of some worthy and poor young lady who would otherwise not receive such preparation. When such young ladies knock at the door of the school, it is a difficult thing to say, "We cannot receive you," because all such have our sympathy and we are forced to extend a helping hand.

If the trustees should be content to never increase the number of free pupils and to never enlarge the usefulness of the school, it could go on under existing conditions with its thirty free pupils out of debt. But it must grow in usefulness; hence, contributions to this end must be made. Nothing good must grow backward. It is easily in the power of good people to increase the income of the school to almost any capacity—at least, until every room in its present building is filled with free pupils.

As it is, to accomplish the greatest good possible, the school carries as many free pupils as it possibly can and then urges congregations and individuals to place worthy orphan girls or poor girls there by paying the actual cost of keeping and educating them, which is only one hundred dollars. This is cheap, considering the prices of everything.

Then, if the school has not been filled with free pupils and the ones others may pay for, it allows parents who desire their children to receive such training to send their daughters until the building has been filled. But no difference in any way is made between the pupils.

It may sound a little strange, but it is with this school as with every other and with other kinds of business: some few who promise to pay fall behind, and some never pay. In this way, too, the school comes out behind at times. Churches or individuals who obligate themselves to pay for one or more girls should keep their obligations.

What better work can churches or individuals do toward helping orphan girls, or poor, worthy girls, than thus educating them? And what church cannot do this for such a girl in its own community? All, as some do, should grasp this opportunity to do this permanent good.

In view of the great good this school has done, is now doing, and can do in the future, will not congregations and good men and women rally to it and not only give enough to pay its present indebtedness, but to increase its capacity for usefulness?

A little more than a thousand dollars in available cash has been given in response to these appeals, a full report of which will be made in these columns in due time. We ask others to consider this work and as soon as possible respond to these appeals. Let each congregation that has not done so set its own Sunday for a contribution, mention it beforehand, and make a generous donation to the school. This appeal should bring thousands of dollars. The need is urgent, the cause is worthy, and the brethren have the money. Let us hear from you. Send all donations to A. N. Trice, treasurer, care of Washington Manufacturing Company, 330 Public Square, Nashville, Tenn., and greatly enrich your soul. Some congregations are giving a hundred dollars, as specified in former appeals, some more, some less; the point is, give all that can be given. Suppose every congregation should not stop until it had given this good work a hundred dollars. Then, suppose every individual who can should give more or less than a hundred. See?

Brother Sweeney Withdraws from the Discussion.

Dear Brother Kurfees: I have read with some surprise your reply to my letter in the Gospel Advocate of the 19th. The proposition we were to discuss is: "That God has legislated upon, provided for, and appointed vocal music in the worship of Christians." In the absence of any explanation or qualification, I felt justified in taking the language in its most usual signification. That I have given correct definition of the above terms, you will not deny. In your last reply you say: "The only sense in which we mean that God has passed a law or laws conditioning beforehand and stipulating as a decree or ordinance that vocal music should be used in the worship of Christians is that he has said use that kind of music in the worship of Christians. That, exactly that and nothing more, is what we mean." That may be what you mean, but that is not all that is in the proposition which I denied. I simply misunderstood your language. As you now define the proposition, there is very little at issue between us, certainly not enough to justify our prolonging the correspondence. Regretting the misunderstanding, I am,

Sincerely and fraternally, Z. T. SWEENEY.

Acquire the contemplative way of seeing how all things change into one another, and constantly attend to it, and exercise thyself about this part of philosophy. For nothing is so much adapted to produce magnanimity. Such a man has put off the body; and, as he sees that he must, no one knows how soon, go away from among men and leave everything here, he gives himself up entirely to just doing in all his actions, and in everything else that happens he resigns himself to the universal nature. But as to what any man shall say or think about him or do against him, he never even thinks of it, being himself contented with these two things, with acting justly in what he now does and being satisfied with what is now assigned to him; and he lays aside all distracting and busy pursuits and desires nothing else than to accomplish the strait course through the law, and by accomplishing the strait course to follow God.-Marcus Aurelius.

It is not the temptation, but the man's own thought in connection with it, that ruins him. In every instance, it is not the external incident, but the man's own thinking, which directs, controls, and decides what his course shall be.—Aaron Martin Crane.

Allies Not to Intervene in Russia.

According to reports, the allied governments have decided against further intervention in Russia, "at least for the present." Great Britain and the United States, it is said, while recognizing that Russia should be helped in a way to permit her to return to normal conditions, see difficulties and danger of all kinds in military intervention on a large scale. But moral assistance will be freely given this unhappy government. This is encouraging in two ways. It must mean that matters are getting better in Russia, and it is a welcome return to the idea of the power of moral influence. No doubt it will be proved that more can be accomplished in this way than by guns.—Christian-Evangelist.

The Passing of Theodore Roosevelt.

It is doubtful if America has produced a more spectacular character than Theodore Roosevelt. When only a young man, he made for himself an enviable reputation as a popular magazine writer; he plunged into the Spanish-American War and at once became a hero; he returned from the field of battle to start upon a political career that was, in many ways, extraordinary; he left the White House, not to sink into obscurity, but to travel and explore and write and campaign, and up to the day of his departure to be a center of attraction. For two decades this man has figured continuously in the news of the country, and frequently in the news of the world.

No matter what one's politics or prejudices, he admires genius and daring and tireless activity. Hence, the eccentric man who passed away at Oyster Bay, January 6, 1919, will be remembered by the American people as one who had convictions and courage and will power, and who set an example that has been, and will be in the years to come, held up to the youth of the land.

The following summary of Colonel Roosevelt's life is clipped from an editorial in the Cincinnati Times-Star:

The passing of former President Theodore Roosevelt ends a career which was filled with many remarkable experiences and with dangers met—eagerly met—and overcome; a career unique in American history. As a boy, Roosevelt defied physical weaknesses which alarmed his parents; he decided he would be strong, and he became strong; he defied the wild beasts of the jungle; he defied his political adversaries, and for years he conquered them; he laughed at the assassin's bullet, and recovered from his wound; he faced unflinchingly the guns of the country's enemy in the Spanish War, and he came home the hero of the "Rough Riders."

Power is always dangerous, and the man who is endowed with it on a tremendous scale has placed upon him the greatest of responsibilities. Hence, former President Roosevelt was considered, by many, as a dangerous man. That he made mistakes, all will admit—the greatest men blunder; and, usually, the greater the man, the greater the blunder. However, it will be conceded generally that Roosevelt had honest intentions and that he lived up to his convictions. Moreover, even his critics will admit that his life accomplished much good; this may be said with special reference to the example of endurance and activity constantly lifted up in his career for all to see.—Christian Standard.

The War Is Not Over.

From the fateful day when first the infernal serpent

"Raised impious war in heaven, and battle proud With vain attempt," conflict has been the lot of man. The war has progressed in various forms and with varying fortune, but the fight has been eternally one—Right against Wrong.

There is no concord between righteousness and unrighteousness, there never will be; and whether the controversy takes the form of arms on the field of battle or becomes a flery flame in the public forum, a contest of strength at the ballot box or the slow, sure dynamic of education in the home, school, church, or press, the war goes on forever.

We fall into a grave delusion in imagining that the world is at peace when the gates of Janus are shut. They were closed when Jesus looked down on Jerusalem from the Mount of Olives and wept over the city because she knew not "the things which belong unto peace."

We celebrate the cessation of arms in the late war, and this is well. We hope that the golden age is dawning, the age of "gentle peace in freedom's hallowed shade." We believe that Mars has been mortally wounded. But the commissioners at Versailles cannot make the peace of the world. The "fourteen points," whatever they may mean, will prove to be no talisman of universal tranquillity. A league of nations, wisely composed, will be a factor in promoting peace, but no league of nations can make or guarantee the world's peace. Reduce armies to the vanishing point, raze all the forts of the nations, drive every dreadnaught from the high seas, and yet this cannot produce "peace, peace and public calm, endless extinction of unhappy hate."

Admiral Beatty's command ordering the German flag hauled down and Foch's articles of armistice did not change the leopard's spots. They are still Huns, and the prewar propagandist is already lifting his sneaking head intreachery. The red flag flutters in the breezes of all the nations. Capital and labor are still to be heard from. Autocracy is still ruling in many hearts, if not upon many thrones. Aristocracy is not dead, nor are plutocracy, ochlocracy, anarchy. Internecine strife in the ranks of Christians is not noticeably a thing of the past.

All this because the world has not comprehended and accepted the things which belong to peace.

The program and the prerequisites of peace have already been laid down, written by high authority in the Holy Scriptures. Christ is the Prince of peace—but first he is the Wonderful Counselor. He is first King of righteousness and then King of peace. "The government shall be upon his shoulder [first]: and his name shall be called Prince of Peace." "Of the increase of his government [first] and [then] of peace there shall be no end." Thus is the question reduced to the simple terms of the gospel of Jesus. The world's peacemakers are they who bring the good tidings.

Atheist and Jew and Unitarian, Catholic and Protestant may unite in expressing their joy that peace has come; but the fact remains that "He is our peace," and the peace is made at the foot of the cross.

The ancient order still stands: "Fight the good fight of faith, lay hold on salvation."—Christian Standard.

o o o Vision.

Lord, open thou mine eyes, that I may straightway see The host of chariots and horsemen sent by thee To terrify my foes, and win the fight for me!

The mountains standing round about me, Lord, I know, Are all affame with sudden fire; I feel its glow—Lord, open thou mine eyes, that I may see it so!

For seeing is believing, as Saint Thomas said: To him thou didst uncover feet, side, hands, and head— Forgive me, Lord! I, too, the doubter's pathway tread!

I hear the noise of horses, chariots, and men;
I smell the dust and smoke of battle down the glen—
Lord, open thou mine eyes! Let me have faith again!

Brother Sweeney's Fiasco and the Close of Our Discussion.

BY M. C. K.

On page 52 of this issue of the Gospel Advocate the reader will find Brother Sweeney's exit from the arena of debate, so far as our present controversy is concerned To say that we are surprised at his quitting the discussion, and especially at his quitting it for such a reason as he assigns, but mildly expresses our feeling over his course; and, in the light of the very significant facts of the case, we are persuaded that our readers will be equally surprised at the turn he has taken. Whatever else may or may not come of this sudden change of front without, as we must respectfully contend, a valid reason, assuredly it will not strengthen the side which he represents in the music controversy.

Having, at least as we humbly believe, clearly, fully, and indisputably established the truth of the proposition which we affirmed and started out to establish, and having established it, not by an appeal to the wisdom and opinions of men, but by positive and undeniable proof in the form of clear and explicit statements from the New Testament, we cannot but look upon our beloved brother's course as a clear evasion of the plain and obvious obligation which his acceptance of our challenge and the subsequent developments logically and fairly placed upon him; but, instead of meeting that obligation by examining the proof submitted and squarely facing the very pertinent and pointed questions which we propounded, he quits the discussion on the, as we must respectfully regard it, flimsy ground that he "misunderstood" our "language." However, in view of its extreme plainness and simplicity, no doubt our readers will wonder what could have obfuscated so clear a vision as his in dealing with it. Of course there remains nothing for us to do but to accept the situation.

In the meantime we invite attention to the facts of the case as it now stands.

- 1. In the following words, and with entire correctness. our brother states the proposition which we had mutually agreed to discuss, "That God has legislated upon, provided for, and appointed vocal music in the worship of Christians," we affirming and he denying.
- 2. Concerning the terms of that proposition he says, "In the absence of any explanation, I felt justified in taking the language in its most usual signification," and then he adds: "That I have given correct definition of the above terms, you will not deny." Well, we did not deny it nor attempt to deny it: but, admonishing against hard and fast lines which would virtually mean that "God has legislated upon, provided for, and appointed" nothing that is to be done in Christian worship, and taking, in its only legitimate and proper sense, his own definition of the terms, we proceeded to prove, and did prove, if clear and explicit language from the New Testament can prove anything, "that God has passed a law or laws conditioning beforehand and stipulating as a decree or ordinance that vocal music should be used in the worship of Christians;" and the way we proved it is the only way by which Brother Sweeney or anybody else can prove "that God has legislated upon, provided for, and appointed" anything at all to be done "in the worship of Christians"-namely, by showing that God "has said use that kind of music in the worship of Christians"-that he has, through inspired apostles, commanded it to be so used; and, if that does not prove it, PRAY WHAT COULD EVER PROVE IT?
- 3. When we think of the high character and standing of our opponent, of his clear vision, unquestioned scholarship, quick perception, and splendid ability in argumentation, we are not only astonished at his retirement in such a way and for such a reason from the debate, but we are wondering what sort of proof from the New Testament he would require to sustain such a proposition. So far as its terms are concerned, they were accepted in the same sense by both sides, provided he did not, by his definition of them, mean to convey a sense in which nothing is "legislated upon, provided for, and appointed" in the New Testament for Christian worship. We would be far from thinking of him as illustrating, in his use of language, the doctrine and tactics of Talleyrand, the French diplomatist, when he says: "Speech was given to man to conceal his thoughts." But we took no such view of our brother's course, and, therefore, proceeded to deal, in the most natural way, with the proposition and the proof properly required for its support; and hence, from examples enacted under the leadership of inspired men and recorded in the New Testament by the pens of inspired men for our guidance, we showed exactly when and where vocal music was used in the worship of Christians; and from still other New Testament passages we showed that, through inspired apostles. God commanded Christians to use that kind of music in their worship; and we showed it in precisely the same way and with precisely the same sort of proof by which Brother Sweeney and all the rest of us show that God requires Christians to not forsake their assembling together for worship on the first day of the week, and what they are to do in that worship; and if that does not prove "that God has legislated upon, provided for, and appointed vocal music in the worship of Christians," then what a pity our brother did not turn on the light and show us what would prove it! We have been attracted by the beautiful and impressive Latin motto printed on his letterhead, "Lux lucet in tenebris;" but its meaning, the light shines in darkness, is not very vividly illustrated by the degree of light which he is dispensing in this instance on the music controversy.

4. In view of all the premises now before us, we unhesitatingly maintain, and with all the earnestness and positiveness that we can command, that one of two conclusions must here and now inevitably follow: (1) That, by clear, positive, and explicit proof from the New Testament, we have established the truth of our proposition beyond all cavil, all doubt, and all equivocation; or (2) it cannot be proved that "God has legislated upon, provided for, and appointed" the Lord's Supper or anything else to be done in the worship of Christians.

5. Moreover, we here respectfully observe that, in his acceptance of our challenge, if our brother had in mind, and expected to use its terms in, a sense in which he did not believe that "God has legislated upon, provided for, and appointed" anything at all in Christian worship, then it was unfair not to frankly say so in his acceptance; and we want to distinctly and openly go on record again by saying, as we said before, that when "God has named, specified, and thus indicated" a thing to be used in Christian worship, and then, through inspired apostles, commands it to be so used, just as he "has named, specified, and thus indicated" the Lord's Supper to be used in Christian worship, we unhesitatingly maintain that we have then proved "that God has legislated upon, provided for, and appointed" that thing to be so used, and we respectfully deny that "on the side of the ethics of Christian controversy there is a solitary rule of debate, of language, or of logic that would permit, much less require, the attachment of any other sense to our terms or call for any other kind of proof. And hence, when our brother says, "That may be what you mean, but that is not all that is in the proposition which I denied," we respectfully remind him that he is mistaken and places himself squarely against the facts of the situation. That is absolutely all that is in the proposition which he denied. He has evidently failed to be properly thoughtful here. Even a mediocre intellect, with limited information, but competent at all to judge of such matters, knows that our terms could not possibly be construed, with any degree of correctness or propriety, to mean any more than to affirm that the matter in dispute is "legislated upon, provided for, and appointed" by the Lord for Christian worship in the sense in which the New Testament teaches that anything at all is "legislated upon, provided for, and appointed" by him for that worship. Our brother's position, therefore, is simply unreasonable and untenable and his claim falls to the ground.

Finally, against Brother Sweener's denial, we are perfectly willing and even glad, both from the logician's and from the Christian's point of view, to have our position advertised far and near that, when the proof is submitted from the New Testament that God has named, specified, and thus indicated a given act to be done in Christian worship, and, through inspired apostles, has commanded it to be done in that worship, just as we have submitted it in favor of vocal music, we then have the proof that "God has legislated upon, provided for, and appointed" that act to be done in Christian worship; and, although with continued love and esteem for him, we close the discussion more strongly intrenched than ever in our position on the question of music in the worship of God.

[Nore.—Our regret is intensified that the Christian Standard and the Christian-Evangelist, because of their crowded condition, could not see their way to admit the discussion into their columns. Not, we trust, without becoming modesty, we confidently believe that their readers, in common with the readers of the Gospel Advocate, if the facts were before them, would concede that we established our proposition.—M. C. K.]

Magnifying Differences.

BY J. C. M'Q.

It is undoubtedly true that all of the orthodox Protestant bodies in this country agree in most of the essentials of Christianity. As this is an age of cooperation in business. it should also be the age in which the different religious bodies should make an effort to get as close to each other as possible. That there is a decided tendency toward union among Christians cannot be doubted even by the casual observer. It appears that some are so anxious to unite that they are willing to unite even in error. This is a mistake, as truth is eternal. No man has a right to sacrifice any part of truth in order to stand identified with any one. While I am strictly opposed to giving so much time to nonessentials and magnifying the slight differences which are not essential to living the Christian life, I am also unalterably opposed to changing or compromising God's truth. Early in December I clipped the following, relative to the Conference on Church Union, from the Nashville Banner: "More than one hundred delegates, representing fourteen religious denominations, assembled here to-day for a three-days' conference on church union. Prominent clergymen and laymen from all parts of the country were in attendance. Denominations represented include the Northern Baptist, Congregational, Disciples of Christ, Society of Friends, Methodist Episcopal, Evangelical Synod of North America, Moravian, Presbyterian Church in the United States, Protestant Episcopal, Reformed Church in the United States, Reformed Church in America, United Lutheran, United Presbyterian Church of America, and the Welsh Prebyterian." This shows that there is a desire to get together among the churches and thus answer the prayer of Christ when he prayed that his followers might be one, as he and his Father are one. Such efforts should be welcomed, and all engaging in this should be encouraged to lay aside partyism and to stand for the truth, and truth alone.

Let us note some of the points of agreement between the different religious bodies. All teach that there is "one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is over all, and through all, and in all." While it is true that all do not agree as to the action of baptism, yet all, save the Quakers, practice what they call "baptism."

Now, it is clear from the word of God that we must have faith in God. "And without faith it is impossible to be well pleasing unto him; for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek after him." (Heb. 11: 6.) There is not a dissenting view from this position. All that are regarded as orthodox bodies also agree that those who are Christians must accept Jesus Christ as the Son of the living God. Peter confessed this when he said: "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." The same truth was also confessed on the mount of transfiguration when a voice out of the clouds said: "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased; hear ye him." (Matt. 17: 5.) It is folly to turn away from believing in Christ to wranglings and discussions over the doctrines of total depravity, predestination, and the operation of the Holy Spirit. Such discussions have never yet saved a soul; yet every one who is justified and saved must believe with all his heart that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God. A careful reading of the book of Acts will convince any one that the apostles, in their preaching, labored especially to bring men to believe that Jesus is the Anointed of God, that he is the Christ. This truth stands out very prominently in nearly all the conversions. Let me encourage our readers to give the book of Acts a careful perusal with this fact in view. Examine the sermons that the apostles delivered, and note the emphasis that they placed upon this truth. It is not necessary to believe in the doctrines of men. It is sinful to contend about nonessentials, thus wasting our time instead of devoting our energies and our talents to the upbuilding of the truth, which a man must accept in order to be saved.

It is also agreed by most religionists, and by all, so far as I now recall, that a man must repent of his sins in order to be saved. We read in Luke 13: 3: "I tell you, Nay: but, except ye repent, ye shall all in like manner perish." Also, Acts 17: 30 alleges: "The times of ignorance therefore God overlooked; but now he commandeth men that they should all everywhere repent." If all men do not understand that repentance is a change of will which leads to a reformation of life, it can hardly be contended that any responsible person does not understand the fruits that should follow repentance. If a man pretends to believe and be baptized into Christ to-day and gets drunk to-morrow, all realize at once that he has not repented. Man does not repent of any sin so long as he persists in a continuance to practice that sin. The penitent man, one who truly repents, hates, loathes, and abominates sin and is determined by the help of God to trample it beneath his feet and on a subdued nature to rise nearer and "nearer. my God, to thee." I am not disposed to devote much time to arguing with any one over the order of faith and repentance. It is not possible for one to exercise them in the wrong way or to get the cart before the horse, if he desired to do so. Brother F. W. Smith has shown most forcefully and conclusively in his discussion with Brother Moore, of the Baptist Church, that there must always be some faith before there can be any repentance. But I am not disposed to argue this question, for the simple reason that a man must exercise them as God intended, and that all of the argument that man may bring to bear upon the subject will not change God's order.

When it comes to the subject of baptism, I may emphasize here that it is not possible to enter the orthodox bodies of this country without what that body calls "baptism." While Christians who love the truth will contend for the action of baptism just as it is revealed in the New Testament and will insist that the believer submit to the act required by the Holy Spirit, yet it seems to me that there should be union ground here. Why not take just what the Bible says about it? Let the believer go "unto the water," where there is "much water," go "down into the water," be "buried in baptism," and come "up out of the water." It is certainly safe to do as the New Testament directs.

As to the forgiveness of sins, this is the work of Jehovah. It is man's work to believe, repent, and be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ unto the remission of sins. It is God's work to remit the sins of those who obey him. No believer can cross the line between the world and the church until he complies with the law of God as laid down in the New Testament. The fact that he imagines that he has crossed the line before he has crossed it does not make it so. The wise course is to encourage all believers to do as the New Testament reveals. In the days of the apostles believers were baptized "the same hour of the night;"

and Saul refused to take nourishment, fasting three days, until he had completed his obedience by being baptized into Christ. 1 am not much disposed to argue with the Baptists as to the exact moment God forgives sins, if I could only get them to encourage people not to put off their obedience to God. We nowhere read in the New Testament where a believer was told to wait for one day, week, month, or year before being baptized. If Baptists would only encourage believers to be baptized "the same hour of the night" and practice as the New Testament teaches on this subject, God will take care of the remission of sins at the right time. Instead of arguing and contending with each other over God's work, why should we not encourage every one to do as the people did in the days of the apostles?

When it comes to the work of the Holy Spirit, we all agree that the Holy Spirit has a work to do. The operation of the Holy Spirit is the work of Almighty God. No one doubts that the man who takes the Bible, believes it, loves it, and walks in its light throughout life will be saved, and that God will take care of the work of the Spirit in that man. We should all encourage people to read and study the Bible more, and we should devote more time to doing what God commands us to do, instead of contending and arguing with each other about the work of the Holy Spirit, which belongs exclusively to Jehovah.

In concluding let me impress on our contributors and readers that our constant desire should be to minify differences among religionists, to magnify the truth as it is in Christ Jesus, and to seek to get all to obey God rather than men. A man who obeys the truth as revealed by Jehovah will be happy and useful in this world and blissful in the world to come. The man who is partisan and loves partyism will be a failure in this life and miserable in the life to come.

AT HOME AND ABROAD

From Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Romine, Hanford, Cal.: "May the Gospel Advocate always prosper."

From Mrs. Thomas S. Jones, Russellville, Ala.: "The Gospel Advocate gets better with each issue."

We are grieved to learn that C. R. Nichol, of Clifton, Texas, is seriously ill. His wife writes that he will be out of the evangelistic field for two or three months.

"We love the dear paper," says Mike Floyd, of Arkansas. This is the first time we ever saw any good sense in that well-worn slang expression, "For the love of Mike!"

From T. Reginald Boley, Mount Vernon, Texas: "I am located here to work with the church of Christ. There is much to be done. Influenza is a great hindrance to our progress."

From Mrs. S. A. Loyd, Bellbuckle, Tenn.: "It is such a treat to have such a welcome visitor as the Gospel Advocate in my home. How it cheers me along the weary journey of life!"

From H. E. Wilkerson, Nocona, Texas, January 5: "Please announce to your readers that Tice Elkins is unable to attend to correspondence on account of illness. He has been in bed a week."

From Joe S. Barry, Alexandria, Tenn.: "I won't say I can't do without the Gospel Advocate, but I don't want to do without it. I have been taking it at least thirty-five years. I like to read it."

After seven years' residence at Florence, Ala., I. C. Hoskins has moved to Manchester, Tenn., where he will do evangelistic work under the direction of the church. We wish for him great success in the new field.

From Mrs. W. M. Anderson, Ardmore, Okla.: "I enjoy the Gospel Advocate more each year. Try to show the Christ spirit more one toward the other, and I will never hesitate to see others besides myself read it."

From A. M. Bibb, Charleston, Mo.: "I have been a reader of the Gospel Advocate over forty years, and think it the best religious paper I ever read. I would be lost without it. I wish you much success for the coming year."

From T. Q. Martin to F. W. Smith: "I have read everything you have ever written that has fallen into my hands, but I regard your present discussion with Elder Moore the finest piece of polemical work you have ever done."

John Hayes, of Athens, Ala., has suffered another bereavement in the death of his son, Sergeant Thomas L. Hayes, who died in France on December 28 as a result of typhoid fever. Let us remember Brother Hayes before the throne of grace.

From Lon Lifsey, Cedar Grove, Tenn.: "The Gospel Advocate has been a welcome visitor in our home every week as far back as I can remember. My father was a subscriber as long as he lived. May the editors live a long and useful life."

J. M. McCaleb writes from Tokyo, Japan: "Owing to delay in obtaining a passport, my sailing on January 25 will be delayed. How long, I am yet unable to say. All friends will please write me at 68 Zoshigaya, Tokyo, Japan, till further notice."

From T. P. Bonner, Morrison, Tenn.: "My mother is eighty-seven years old, and she says she has read the Gospel Advocate for many years and cannot do without it. She looks forward every week for the day it comes, and is disappointed when it falls to come."

Mrs. W. J. Hogan, of Speigner, Ala., writes: "If I could, I would put the Gospel Advocate in reach of every man, woman, and child. It is the best paper I ever read. I would not be without it in my home any more for anything. May it have a prosperous new year."

From F. D. Humble, Pikeville, Tenn.: "I am sending in my renewal for another year, as I do not feel like I could do without the Gospel Advocate at all. One sure gets some good, sound teaching from it. I think every Christian ought to read it. I am sending in two subscribers and will send more when I can."

P. H. Robbins, of San Angelo, Texas, says: "It seems so strange that people publishing as good a paper as you do, as long as you have, as good, patient people as you are, should want or ever need money. Why not the ravens feed you, not the 'Robbins?'" We are not particular about the bird, just so the orphans are fed.

From O. M. Reynolds, Canadian, Texas: "You are deserving of the highest praise for giving the brotherhood a truly Christian journal, full of strong gospel teaching, every writer manifesting the spirit of Christ. I greatly admire the spirit of contending earnestly for the faith in your writers, so characteristic of Paul and of many of the older great men of God of our time."

From T. B. Thompson, Avon Park, Fla.: "We are moving along nicely here. We are building an addition to our meetinghouse, while all the time trying to look after God's house, too. The prospects are great. No hobby riders nor cranks to hinder, but all seem to want to see the work move forward. I believe the Gospel Advocate is getting better all along. It is pretty well represented here."

From William P. Walker, Nashville, Tenn., January 6: "Through the goodness of God I entered David Lipscomb College last fall that I might continue my education. This is my fourth year's work, and, if the Lord wills, I expect to remain here two years. Brethren should note the change of address. Christian mothers and fathers who have children to educate away from home should consider Christian colleges, institutions in which primitive Christianity and the fundamental principles of life are taught daily, as well as literary courses. We have just entered the second semester. A better faculty and a happier student body cannot be found in any college."

D. B. Mizell, of Kaufman, Texas, writes to Brother McQuiddy, January 8: "I see from the last number of the Gospel Advocate that you have completed your thirty-fourth year of work on it. I remember well when you began, and had not thought about it being so long ago. I cannot now recall anything that I have read from your pen in all these long years that I did not heartly indorse. Your writings and your course in the editorial management of the paper have appeared to me to be so thoroughly in accord with the letter and the spirit of the New Testament that I have learned to love you and to feel that it would be good to know you personally and to have the help of your Christian association."

J. W. Chism, of Hillsboro, Texas, addresses the following note to the readers of the Gospel Advocate: "Christ is in need, in the person of Sister T. J. Bonner, Newport, Ark. Brother Bonner, a faithful gospel preacher and man of God, died a short while ago and left Sister Bonner with some little ones to care for; and as Brother Bonner had spent his life in the Master's field, it is our duty to help. I commend her to you as worthy in every way. Send aid, brethren, and send it now. The church here is sending to day a contribution to her, and we trust a hundred other churches will do the same. Do not be afraid she will get too much, but send liberally. Send all contributions direct to Mrs. T. J. Bonner, Route 2, Newport, Ark.

Married, at the Twelfth Avenue Church, Nashville, Tenn., on January 6, 1919, at 7 P.M., Mr. Raymond Earl Shaub and Miss Mabel Viola Luton, A. B. Lipscomb officiating. The bride and bridegroom are exceptionally fine Christian characters. Prior to her marriage Mrs. Shaub was connected with the McQuiddy Printing Company, and through her faithful service and her very modest and lovable disposition endeared herself to everybody in the plant. In her connection with the proof-reading department she read in manuscript thousands of pieces of copy that were printed in the Gospel Advocate. The young couple will reside for a while in New Jersey, where the groom is in the government service. May the richest biessings attend them through all the journey of life.

From R. E. Wright, Unit 261, Y. M. C. A., Camp Sevier, S. C., January 7: "I have found several of our brethren in camp through the Gospel Advocate, and they meet with us every Sunday afternoon in a room at Unit 84. Brother Logue is building secretary and the religious man A fine fellow, indeed, is he in this work. Brethren, if you know of others, be sure to write me. I am ready to arrange for some summer and fall meetings, and, if you will write me soon, will be glad to book some work with I arranged for very little work last year on account I am in hopes that all of us will be out of of this work. the army by or before summer. I have met some of as good men here, I believe, as live-tried, and tried hard as by fire, and found true. Our services here are just as religious and as much reverence shown in them as in any of the churches at home. When our religious service is opened, it is religious and only religious, with nothing 'tacked on,' as one 'critic' in the Literary Digest writes so much about. Services of that kind are not held in my unit, nor in any unit in Camp Sevier. If I had to be connected with such services, I would go home by the quickest route, and go now."

"Over the Top" and Victory.

There is nothing that better sets forth what was really done in our union meeting the first Lord's-day night in this year than the heading to this paragraph. It is the custom of the Atlanta Christians to close the old year and begin the new year with a series of union meetings. The first meeting was held at the South Pryor Street chapel on New-Year's night, but on account of the downpour of rain the attendance did not reach its usual number; nevertheless, we had a glorious time. The second meeting was conducted last night (January 5) at the West End Avenue chapel. I am giving a brief account of what took place, feeling that it cannot do otherwise than encourage others to have such meetings and willing workers everywhere to go onward and upward in the greatest work of life—viz, the extension of the cause of Christ on the earth.

I was delighted with the logical sequence of thought in the program, especially since there was no specially prepared program. The song leaders were asked to give their part of the work prayerful thought, each selecting what he considered the most appropriate song in the book, and especially their favorites.

The meeting began with Brother Bearden's leading his selection-"We Are Workers Together with God." Appropriate, indeed, was this song, and it was as well sung as selected. Then we paused for a special prayer for Brother John Klingman and family, who had been expected at the West End Avenue service In the forencen and to remain in the city for the union service; but had to forego the pleasure, due to the condition of Brother Klingman's throat. The prayer was led by Brother Silas E. Templeton. The next selection was led by Brother Henry Boyd-" We Are Going Home to Rest When the Sun Goes Down." A brief statement was then made of the fact that in the West End Avenue congregation there was more sickness than at any other one time in its history-about fifty cases of the "flu," with other troubles. Brother Bearden then led a prayer in behalf of all our sick and the afflicted at other places as well. Then Brother Lee came forward to lead his selection; and, as though he did not want the minds of the people to get away from the first selection, he announced that we would sing "Work Till the Sun Goes Down." Here we paused, and a statement was made about the conditions of the nations of the earth and the fact that our President is now abroad striving to bring about such peace as will forbid future wars and give to the world absolute religious freedom. The fact that we are commanded to pray for our rulers, to the end that they may so rule "that we may lead a tranquil and quiet life in all godliness and gravity," was stated: then Brother Brooks led us in prayer for our rulers and the rulers of all the nations. In this prayer the suffering millions were also remembered, and a prayer was offered to the end that such conditions might soon come as would meet their every need. Brother Farmer then came forward with his selection, and a beautiful one it was-"The Star of Hope is Shining." Each song, each prayer, and every statement seemed to grow in depth of fervor as the program continued. 0 0 0

Business.

With all true worship there is business vitally connected with the progress of the work to be considered. West End Avenue, the mother church, stated that our prayers had continually been that South Pryor and East. Point might begin the new year free from indebtedness; hence, a statement from them was called for.

Dr. Paine reported a very successful year, financially, for South Pryor, and that there remained only five more of the forty-dollar notes for them to meet. Brother Walter Boyd, one of South Pryor's youngest members, had slipped forty dollars into Dr. Paine's hands to cover one of the notes. Good for this young brother! Brother Silas E. Templeton then arose and stated that he had a little money on hand that he had purposed to give wholly to the cause of Christ from last year's receipts and that he would be responsible for one of the notes. West End then proposed to take another. At this juncture Brother Bearden arose and moved that South Pryor promise to eliminate the other two this week, wiping the indebtedness out. This carried, and joy reigned in the hearts of the South Pryor members.

Brother Lee then made a brief statement about East Point's financial condition, stating that 1918 had been their best year. Everything looked bright and hopeful to them, except a five-hundred-and-twenty-dollar note that falls due on January 17. We were conscious of the fact that East Point could not handle this and support Brother Brooks as he should be without overstraining themselves. "What shall we do?" was the question. Brother Bell arose and spoke of the fire that Brooks was putting into the East Point congregation, and stated that they had held a little meeting in connection with their forenoon services and could promise to burn the note next Sunday night at our third union meeting, if they could get as much as two hundred and fifty dollars toward the debt. Brother Templeton arose and said he had thirty-five dollars more in his fund and would give it. West End then arose and agreed to give the two hundred and fifteen dollars and wipe the debt out. It was then announced that all the notes were to be met this week and would be ready for the burning next Lord's-day evening (January 12). Brother Stroud then announced the song, as though all barriers were now out of the way, "Let Us Travel On." Such singing we seldom hear. Brother Garrett then led the congregation with a prayer of thanksgiving and praise and a strong entreaty for God's continuous blessings. As though we could not yet be satisfied, Brother Stroud announced another song-"Keep on Climbing-Higher, Higher, All the Way."

The remainder of the program was made up of short speeches from Brethren Coggins, Farmer, Stroud, J. H. Johnson, Dr. Eaton, Garrett, Bearden, Haner, and closed by Brother Brooks. I wish I could give the readers what each said, but space forbids. Every talk was stirring. Brother Haner was just eight days old in the church, he having been haptized the previous Lord's day evening. A more touching, practical, stirring address I have never heard than the words that fell from the lips of Brooks. God has blessed us. Never in my life have I been so happy. I give this report because I know there are hundreds of souls who will rejoice with us that we begin 1919 with the brightest prospects in the history of the work.

It is momentous that we should pause from time to time to regard our ideals. They exercise their influence upon us insensibly. We grow like the object of our desire perhaps before we have distinctly realized its true nature; and so we may find ourselves, like some of the souls at the close of Plato's Republic, involved in unexpected calamities through a heedless choice. At the same time, the effort to give distinctness to our ideals brings with it a purifying power.—Bishop Westcott.

Another Faithful Soldier Has Fallen.

BY J. H. WHISNANT.

While devoting a snatched minute to glancing through the Christian Leader, I was shocked and much saddened to note the account of Brother Thomas J. Bonner's death on December 1, 1918, of influenza. That terrible epidemic has broken many homes, almost entirely destroying some. It has taken some of my relatives (one sister) and many friends-how many I do not know, for they are scattered " far and wide;" but in taking Brother Bonner it has taken one who has been to me for more than a dozen years a friend in need, hence a friend indeed. Brother Bonner and I became acquainted shortly before I obeyed the gospel, but were together but little until after, and then never long at a time. But there were ties formed which kept us together in correspondence and the kindest of thoughts while apart. His letters have nearly all been preserved as "keepsakes," because of their encouragement and brotherly advice.

Though we had both made a few talks before, he considered the time when one of us preached at eleven o'clock on Lord's day and the other at night at a little meetinghouse near Judsonia, Ark., in 1906, the time when we began preaching. He was a few vears older than I, and had been brought up under the influence of the truth, which gave him the advantage over me, but which advantage was mine, after all, for he used it in helping and encouraging me. If ever one chanced to speak kindly of me to him, they had as well said it to me, for I soon heard it; or anything he thought would help me along the way, it was said or done.

We had planned to get located together that we might be together more. One was to come to the other when a suitable place was found. The place has been located by him, and I am looking forward to the time when I shall join him there. Then there will be no more moving in search of a better place.

Brother Bonner was about forty years old. He leaves a Christian wife and three small children to mourn their loss. Nor have they a grandtather nor even a lodge to look to for their future home and sustenance.

Brother Bonner was not what many call a "big preacher," but he was one after the order of Him who went about doing good. He did much preaching in destitute fields and bore the burden, with his faithful wife. This year he farmed near Newport, Ark., and preached on Sundays at different points in reach.

To Sister Bonner I would say: Let the days of your mourning be shortened by the great and precious promises given by Him in whom he trusted.

CHURCH NEWS

Colorado.

Fort Collins, January 2.—There is little to report from this immediate field at the present, save, perhaps, that the "flu" ban was lifted in Fort Collins last Sunday, thus clearing the way, after three months' quarantine, for starting the work in this city. To me this is the very best of news, as nothing has ever so completely got in my way as has this influenza epidemic. It completely paralyzed my work among those unacquainted with the gospel, confining my efforts to the brethren; but in this I can see a bless-Needed lessons have been given received that otherwise might and never have been learned, strengthening the church for the coming campaign to evangelize this whole country and giving time for other necessary preparations for work. On the very day this latter On the very day the ban was lifted I was taken down with some-thing like the "flu," but not that exactly, the doctor says. But I have gone through with about everything a patient is generally expected to develop, except death. I am still closely confined to my room, unable even to get kindling and coal; but I am getting better each day and am confident that, with good care, I will be able to work in another The Bellvue congregation has lost another splendid member, through influenza, and my last work out of doors was to preach the funeral sermon in Denver. I refer to Sister A. F. Pendleton, who has for years resided in Loveland, Colo., but who attended meeting at Bellvue as regularly as possible, driving twenty-three miles to worship-forty-six miles the round trip. She died on Christmas Day. We are evidently nearing the beginning of the Fort Collins campaign, to which I have looked forward since the first day I reached this city, in September. With the "flu" ban lifted and the people's fears of the malady subsided, as soon as I regain my health, I feel that a great work will be started in this city. Even my present illness is making friends and acquaintances, which is one important step toward our contemplated work. Neighbors who are strangers to us in our new home are running errands for Mrs. Fuqua, splitting the kindling, bringing in the coal, and otherwise every kindness toward us. showing Our one hope is that we may reward them by leading them into Christ. We shall at least do our best to save them all. Though not church members, as we have learned, they have what the world calls a "good heart," which shows that they are of a material that will probably yield to the gospel call and produce excellent fruit unto eternal life. We pray for excellent wisdom and strength with which to reach and save them, if possible.-E. C. Fuqua.

Minneapolis, January 7 .- Our small but harmonious congregation here is now meeting in a rented hall and inviting the interested public to study and worship with us. At two services last Lord's day we had a total of four strangers who expressed interest and intention to return. Our meeting place now is Room 303, Meyers Arcade Building, 920 Nicollet Avenue. We welcome visiting brethren and desire the names of Christians or friends of our brethren elsewhere, not only of residents of Minneapolis, but also of St. Paul or anywhere in this State. Plans are now being laid to materially extend the work here and try to bring it to a point where we will be able to reach out and help develop other points in this great untouched Northwest, Any assistance extended us in this effort will be appreciated and properly acknowledged on behalf of the few brethren here. Browning, January 7.—We closed our work at Dugger, Ind., on the tourth Sunday in December. We spent two very pleasant years there, and enjoyed the good fellowship of the brethren all that time. The caurch at Dugger is not at all perfect, yet it is composed of many tried and true brethren. I think that I can truly say that it is far above the average in many respects. After our farewell sermon on Sunday morning we were invited to the basement, where the sisters had prepared a most excellent dinner. The day was very sad to us in many ways, because we knew that in all probability we would not see many of the brethren again in this life. This is a splendid work for a good, strong man.—E. P. Watson.

Texas.

Nocona, December 29.-Some misunderstanding has gone out concerning the preachers' meeting at Wichita Falls, and I have sent notices to the papers to call it off, but I am now authorized to go ahead and advertise the meeting. It will begin on January 21, as before published, and all the preachers are invited to attend and take part in the discussions and services that will be held. I am down sick with the "flu," and my wife, four children, and my son-in-law are all down with it here at my home, and we are surely "up against it." I missed the services at church yesterday, the first time in so long I have forgotten when it was. But the work went on, and with enthusiasm. I am going to be with them next Lord's day, if possible. -Tice Elkins.

Dallas, January 8.-Brother Farmer's article, "The Preachers and the 'Flu,'" in the Gospel Advocate of December 26, tells the experience of many ministers of the gospel, especially the evangelists. Many a min-ister's meetings and other appointments have been called off because, as the brethren say, of the "flu," but it seems that they do not think it any duty of theirs to send support, anyway. At least, I know of none who have been guilty of that, except a place or two where the minister is doing local work. Because of this, I have been out of work longer than any one time since I have been trying to preach and teach God's word. Hence, I had arranged to be engaged otherwise this year; but now these arrangements are upset, and I suppose I will be at home to answer any call to preach the word that I may get till all my time shall be engaged again in the greatest work on earth-preaching and teaching God's word to save souls. If you need my assistance, write me-401 Montreal Avenue, Dallas, Texas,- Denison, January 6.—The Armstrong Avenue church of Christ is still growing. I have begun my third year with these good people. We have some fine workers indeed. Mostly railroad men and their families; quite a few of other professions, but railroad men are in the majority. The "flu" hurt us as it did nearly all other congregations. While we are getting on our feet again I have made several visits to Collinsville, the home of the venerable E. H. Rogers. They have helped us, and we have helped them. This is as it should be. I will go to Madill, Okla., next Lord's day to help the elders and brethren, left sad by the death of Brother Rollins. However, Manufacturers' Nete: Nuxated Iron, which has been prescribed and recommended by physicians and which is used by over three million people annually is not a secret remedy, but one which is well-known to druggless everywhere. we will not neglect the work here. We have just about reached the two-hundred mark. Our future was never brighter. With the exception of some disagreement about "how" the teaching should be done on the Lord's day, we are moving along fine. In fact, I see no scriptural reason for brethren "striving about words to no profit." Some good brethren seem to think the means or manner or medium of transmitting the word of God to the human heart would affect the character of the word itself? I suppose their idea is that corn carried to the field in a big sack would make big ears, and corn carried in a little sack would make little ears. "Whatsoever [not how] a man soweth, that shall he also reap. Sow the seed of the kingdom, brother, and God will bless you. Send out more good gospel papers this year. Parents and Children.

BY TICE ELKINS.

Under the above head I desire to write two or three articles, hoping to accomplish two ends-(1) to comply with the request of others for the articles and (2) to do good by means of

I shall write first of the duties of parents toward their children. These duties are many, the first of which I will notice being to provide for them. "For I seek not yours, but you: for the children ought not to lay up for the parents, but the parents for the children:" (2 Cor. 12: 14.) Our children have a right to enough to eat and to wear, and it is our duty to provide the same; and even if it is hard to do, we must do it, for the child has no choice in coming into the world, does not come of his own volition, and these who bring him in are responsible for his welfare. We sin against the child if we do not give him enough wholesome food and warm clothes to insure for him a sound and capable body, one which is able to care for itself when old enough to go forth into the world. (See 1 Tim. 5: 8.)

Second, it is our duty to teach them. To the ancient Jew, God said: "And thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up." (Deut. 6: 7.) We neglect this duty and leave our children to learn, as they often do, from sectarian sources, and their minds are often filled with all manner of falsehood before we wake up to realize that they are old enough to receive teaching.

Third, it is our duty to train them. The wise man said: "Train up a child in the way he should go: and when he is old, he will not depart from it." (Prov. 22: 6:) So many parents fail here; and when the child goes astray, they try to make excuse by saying: "Well, I did my best, but after he got away from home he learned other ways and went wrong." Brother, it is dangerous to lay the blame on God; risky to make him a liar. He said, "He will not depart from it." You say he did depart from it. Listen! If your boy or mine goes wrong, you and I made a mistake somewhere in training him. We are to blame.

It is our duty to control our children, "Withhold not correction from the child: for if thou beatest him with the rod, he shall not die." (Prov. 23: 13.) "The rod and reproof give wisdom: but a child left to himself bringeth his mother to shame." (Prov. 29: 15.) From these and many other texts we learn that reproof and correction are useful; but folks say that was a

DRINK HOT WATER IF YOU DESIRE A ROSY COMPLEXION

Says we can't help but look better and feel better after an Inside bath.

To look one's best and feel one's best is to enjoy an inside bath each morning to flush from the system the previous day's waste, sour fermentations and poisonous toxins, before it is absorbed into the blood. Just as coal, when it burns, leaves behind a certain amount of incombustible material in the form of ashes, so the food and drink taken each day leave in the alimentary organs a certain amount of indigestible material, which, if not eliminated, form toxins and poisons which are then sucked into the blood through the very ducts which are intended to suck in only nourishment to sustain the body.

If you want to see the glow of healthy bloom in your cheeks, to see your skin get clearer and clearer, you are told to drink every morning upon arising a glass of hot water, with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it, which is a harmless means of washing the waste material and toxins from the stomach, liver, kidneys, and bowels, thus cleansing, sweetening, and purifying the entire alimentary tract, before putting more food into the stomach.

Men and women with sallow skins, liver spots, pimples, or pallid complexion; also those who wake up with a coated tongue, bad taste, nasty breath; others who are bothered with headaches, bilious spells, acid stomach, or constipation, should begin this phosphated hot-water drinking, and are assured of very pronounced results in one or two weeks.

A quarter pound of limestone phosphate costs very little at the drug store, but is sufficient to demonstrate just as soap and hot water cleanses, purifies, and freshens the skin on the outside, so hot water and limestone phosphate act on the inside We must always consider organs. that internal sanitation is vastly more important than outside cleanliness, because the skin pores do not absorb impurities into the blood, while the bowel pores do.

long time ago and does not hold good now. I tell you it does, and a parent that will not correct a child does not love that child like he ought. (See Prov. 13: 24.) If children are not controlled while young, they will grow up and become uncontrollable and bring shame and sorrow to our hearts. Listen: "Chasten thy son while there is hope, and let not thy soul spare for his crying." (Prov. 19: 18.) God knew where all our weaknesses lie, and how we would, in a false notion of love, pity, or mercy, lose our grasp on the situation and let them get out and away. So, with training, instruction, and correction, God expects us to shape a character in the child that will fit him for usefulness here and heaven hereafter. Bringing them up in the right way, teaching them God's laws, administering proper chastisement, and nurturing them in the admonition of the Lord will give us a guarantee against the sorrow and shame that will be the lot of those who let their children have their own way.

The Deathless Book.

Two college alumni, meeting together recently and renewing a friendship formed fifty years before, chatted on the changes of half a century, "Over against all these revolutions in opinions, tastes, dress, and what were once supposed to be fixed institutions," said one of them, "stands one thing like a rock amid the ever-changing waves. As a book man I have seen thousands of volumes published by prominent publishers and promising authors. Literary reputations have been made, withered, and become naught. Yet the Bible, instead of falling into oblivion, was never more the word of God than to-day... Nor was it ever more called for and sought as the one thing needful in the world of thought and reading. Even the great war of 1915-18, instead of consigning it to the limbo of forgetfulness, has opened new paths and wider areas for its circulation. Verily of the Rock of Ages we have no more visible or striking symbol than the printed Bible; and the secret of this is patent. 'The hand that made us is divine' is what the scripture, as well as the spacious firmament, is ever singing. 'Forever, O Lord, thy word is established."-Christian Intelligencer.

Rhumatism and Indigestion.

Practically all physicians and medical writers are agreed that there is a close relationship between indigestion and rheumatism. This view is substantiated by the fact that Shivar Spring Water, which is probably the best American mineral water for dyspepsia and indigestion, relieves rheumatism and the rheumatoid diseases, such as gout, sciatica, neuralgia, and nervous headache. All of these diseases are probably related and all are probably due, in whole or in part, to imperfect digestion or to imperfect assimilation of food. Physicians who have studied this water and who have observed its effects in their practice believe that it relieves these maladies by rendering the digestion complete and perfect and thereby preventing the formation of those poisons which inflame the joints and irritate the and eliminating, nerves, also by through the kidneys, such poisons as have already been formed.

The following letters are interesting in this connection:

The Inhowing letters are interesting in this connection:

Dr. Crossy, a South Carolina physician, writes: "I have tested your Spring Warer in several cases of rheumatism, chronic indigestion, kidney and bladder troubles, and in nervous and sick headaches, and find that it has acted nicely in each case, and I believe that, it ased continuously for a reasonable time, it will give permanent relief. It will purify the blood, relieve debility, attinuate the action of the liver, kidneys, and bladder, adding them in throwing off all poisonous matter?"

Dr. Avant, of Savannah, writes: "I suffered for years with a most aggravaling form of atomach disorder, and consulted a number of our best local physicians; went to Baitimore and consulted specialists there and still I was not benefited. I had about despaired of fliving, when I began to use Shivar Spring Water, and in a short time was entirely relieved."

Mr. Rhodes, of Virginia, writes: "Please send me ten gallons of Shivar Spring Water quickly. I want it for rheumatism. I knew of several who were relieved of theumatism with this water."

Editor Cunningham writes: "The water has done me more good than any medicine I have ever taken for rheumatism. I am entirely free from pain."

Mr. McClam, of South Carolina, writes: "My wife has been a sufferer from rheumatism, and, after drinking twenty gallons of your Mineral Water, was entirely relieved of the horrible disease."

Mr. Carten of Virginia, writes: "Mrs. Carter has had enlarged Joints upon her hands, caused by rheumatism. Shivar Spring Water removed every trace of the enlargement. The water is simply excellent."

Essential or "Nonessential"— Which?

BY H. W. JONES.

God created nothing as a nonessential. Everything in the created universe is essential for some purpose, else God would not have created it. Nothing is "nonessential" in the kingdom of nature. Neither does God. in his hely word, ordain and require "nonessential" things. Everything required of man is essential for the very purpose ordained of God in the economy of grace. Nothing is unnecessary. No waste of time or work or words here. God would have us all possess a good, full, strong, well-rounded character, and not be lopsided, as some are; hence, he has, in the inspired Scriptures, "furnished [us] completely unto every good work." (2 Tim. 3: 16. 17.) Yes, every work, however small it may seem to us, is essential for some good purpose, if found in the Bible. True, we may not understand fully the purpose or design God has in requiring us to do, or not to do, certain things; nevertheless, God has his own purpose or design in all his requirements, else he would not have enjoined them upon mankind. Surely no one will dare deny this.

Whence, then, the origin of the idea or saying that some of God's commands are "nonessential?" This idea did not originate in the mind of God. but is from the evil one. Yes man, frail man, following the device of Satan, says that "baptism is nonessential to salvation," etc., and thus causes many of his fellow creatures to neglect, fail, or refuse to be "buried with Christ in baptism," as our Lord says. Now, in the light of reason and revelation, let us see how this question stands. On one side is a throng of humanity, saying, "Baptism is nonessential;" while on the other side the Lord, in his holy word, continues saying: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved;" "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for [unto, or into] the remission of your sins;" "baptized into Christ;" and as "eight souls were saved by water" (during the flood), "the like figure whereunto even baptism doth also now save us," etc. Now, with the above statements from two sources before us, I am wondering why all of mankind, in Bible lands, will not "say the same things" about baptism that the Lord himself says. Such course would cause many to obey our Lord and keep the unity of the Spirit. And, too, the Lord's way is the only safe way. Let us test it and see: If, in the end, it could turn out that baptism is not essential to salvation from past (or alien) sins, then we will have lost nothing by obey-

Wonderful Egg Producer.

Any poultry raiser can easily double his profits by doubling the egg production of his hens. A scientific tonic has been discovered that revitalizes the flock and makes hens work all the time. The tonic is called "More Eggs." Give your hens a few cents' worth of "More Eggs" and you will be amazed and delighted with results. A dollar's worth of " More Eggs" will double this year's production of eggs; so if you wish to try this great profit maker, write E. Reefer, poultry expert, 9251 Reefer Building, Kansas City, Mo., who will send you a sea-son's supply of "More Eggs" tonic for $2 (prepaid). So confident is Mr. Reefer of the results that a million-dollar bank guarantees if you are not absolutely satisfied, your doilar will be returned on request and the "More Eggs" costs you nothing. Send a dollar to-day or ask Mr. Reefer for his free poultry book that tells the experience of a man who has made a fortune out of poultry.

ing the command to be baptized. But, on the other hand, when the statements of holy writ turn out to be true in the judgment, then those who failed or refused to be baptized will lose it all. So, on the one side of obedience, it is all to gain and nothing to lose; and on the other side of disobedience it is all to lose and nothing to gain.

Now let us carefully examine and apply the argument James made with the pen of inspiration when he said: "Whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend [stumble] in one point, he is guilty of all. For he that said, Do not commit adultery, said also, Do not kill. Now if thou commit no adultery, yet if thou kill, thou art become a transgressor of the law." (James 2: 10, 11.) The inspired man of God here makes the argument that it is the very same God who said, "Do. not kill," that said, "Do not commit adultery;" therefore, both commands are equally essential and binding just the same, one as much as the other; and when a person fails in one known command, he becomes thereby a transgressor of the whole law of God. Likewise, the same strong argument holds good when applied to the positive commands of our Lord Jesus Christ to alien sinners, who are commanded to believe, repent, and be immersed before the promise of salvation or remission of sins is made. (Mark 16: 16; Acts 2: 38.) Yes, he that said, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ," said also, "Be baptized" (immersed); and the same Lord that said, "Repent," said also, "Be baptized" (Acts 2: 38). Now, if thou believe on the Christ and yet refuse or fail to be baptized, thou art become a transgressor of the whole law of pardon to the alien sinner. If not, pray tell me why not. And if one believe on the Christ and sincerely repent of his sins (and thus reform his life), yet offend, stumble, or fall in one point (immersion), "he is guilty of all;" yes, the guilt of past or alien sins has not been removed (remitted), which is done by the Lord when we are buried with him in baptism. And, too, a partial obedience is only a partial conversion, as the love of sin is removed from the heart through wholehearted faith in Jesus Christ, and the practice of sin, as a rule of life, is changed or done away by genuine repentance, and the guilt or stain of alien sins is removed, pardoned, remitted, or blotted out, in baptism. Hence, the whole man-his heart, his life, and his state or relationship-is changed by faith, repentance, and baptism.

So we conclude, with all certainty, that faith, repentance, and baptism are, all alike, essential to conversion (1) because the Lord enjoins them all and (2) because the nature of the case demands them all. Hence, I conclude that the nonessentials in religion are the things gotten up by man, such as sprinkling and pouring for baptism, infant baptism for believers' baptism, organized societies of any kind to do the work of the church, instrumental music in the worship of the church, all sectarian names and religious practices not authorized by the word of God, and all things required in the Old Covenant that are not enjoined upon us living under the Christian dispensation of grace.

Then let us all, as professed followers of Christ, "will to do his will" as revealed to us in the Bible, and let all the nonessentials of men be cast to the moles and bats, where they belong. Thus let the Lord be praised and all nonessentials razed.

IF BACK HURTS USE SALTS FOR KIDNEYS

Eat Less Meat if Kidneys Feel Like Lead or Bladder Bothers You — Meat Forms Uric Acid.

Most folks forget that the kidneys, like the bowels, get sluggish and clogged and need a flushing occasionally, else we have backache and dull misery in the kidney region, severe headaches, rheumatic twinges, torpid liver, acid stomach, sleeplessness, and all sorts of bladder disorders.

You simply must keep your kidneys active and clean; and the moment you feel an ache or pain in the kidney region get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good drug store here, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days, and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice combined with lithia, and is harmless to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity. It also neutralizes the acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is harmless, inexpensive, makes a delightful effervescent lithlawater drink which everybody should take now and then to keep their kidneys clean, thus avoiding serious complications.

A well-known local druggist says he selle lots of Jad Salts to folks who believe in overcoming kidney trouble while it is only trouble.

Daily Bible Reading.

BY L. E. CARPENTER.

It is my desire, purpose, and prayer to our Heavenly Father that this short article may interest some one or more in a daily study of the Bible and in a systematic study of it. I think this is one of the greatest needs among Christian people to-day.

Jesus says: "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God" (Matt. 4: 4)—that is, the word sustains the same relation to the inward man that bread (food) does to the fleshly man. Now, if the fleshly man lives by bread, he will certainly die without it. So, if the inward man lives by the word, will he not die without it?

Bible study should be daily for the same reason that we cat food daily. We realize that, to be able to work, grow, and be strong, we must feed our physical man daily, and even two or three times a day. Why not eat these three meals in one? Well, we know that we can only assimilate enough of the food to last us for a few hours, and all over that we eat is wasted. Now, I am not fearing our reading the Bible too much at any one time. but we need to read it so as to digest and assimilate it and to get the greatest good possible. Hence, it is better to read seven chapters a week, reading one each day, than to read even more at one time and then not read any for the next six days, for the same reason that we would not eat our food for one day all at one time.

Bible study and prayer sustain the same relation, practically, to a Christian that the fuel does to the engine. Then, it is no wonder our steam (zeal) runs low oftentimes-the fuel is all out! I fear we would not make very good firemen at this rate. Paul says in Acts 17: 11 that some of those brethren were more noble than others. Why? They read the Bible daily. Do you think it would be any less noble for us to read it daily to-day? Is not the need for it as great or even greater in some ways than at that time? Again, Paul says that though our outward man decayeth, our inward man is being renewed day by day. Now, we all renew the outward man daily; but do we renew the inward man (which is of more importance) daily, as Paul indicates here we should?

We put on our shoes every morning (have our feet shod) before we start about our daily work or enter upon our journey for the day; then, why not see to it that our spiritual feet are shod (Eph. 6: 15) each day before we start out into the manifold temptations of life and upon our life's journey for that day? A horse, in order to pull well and to stand up on slick places, must be well shod. (No wonder we slip and backslide so easily!)

Remember, when we stop eating food, we soon become weak, and it is very easy for a person in a weakened condition to catch almost any disease that comes his way. So, with a person who has become weak spiritually, it is very easy for him to fall a prey to Satan's temptations.

Now, dear reader, will you not resolve in your heart now, at the beginning of this new year, to read your Bible daily, systematically, carefully and prayerfully? Will you not try to read every chapter in your Heavenly Father's will during 1919? If you are not already a daily reader, will you not become one now? A good way is to read a part of your daily reading in the morning and a part at night, which gives you more time to think about and study on what you read. Divide the number of pages you desire to read during the year by three hundred and sixty-five (days in the year), and the result will be the number of pages you should read each day. But do not allow yourself to get behind with your reading, if you can help it, for then it is pretty hard to catch up again. Then, if the Old Testament becomes dry to you, read some in the New Testament. But, above all things, be sure not to allow anything to keep you from reading or having read to you a portion of God's word every day. It will make a better man or woman out of you, a better husband or wife, son or daughter, by having done this. "Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly."

If I can only get a few interested and get them to study the Bible daily by this article, I shall be greatly rewarded for my efforts. I write this for this one purpose, and I pray our Father to help all who read it to fulfill this purpose because of what it will be worth to them. Will you not start it now, to-day, before you forget or neglect it?

"Heartfelt Religion." No. 1.

BY J. M. DENNIS

Having been born and reared in the backwoods of Middle Tennessee at a time when books were scarce and schools were poor, it was no uncommon thing to hear such expressions. with reference to persons being saved in answer to prayers made while at the anxious seat or mourners' bench. as that he or she "got it," "found it," "come through," "got religion," "and whether or not they understood in any sense the term "heartfelt religion." it was a prevalent expression among the religious people in many parts of the country forty and fifty years ago. Many religious teachers who knew very little about the Bible and who seemed to care less were often heard to say something about getting religion, and strongly emphasized the necessity of "heartfelt religion." These preachers seemed to have a very vague conception of the heart as taught in the Bible, and, to show their ignorance in this matter, they would often put their hand on the left side of the breast over the muscular viscus, which is the primary organ of the blood's motion (the fleshly heart).

Three things are to be considered in writing or preaching on heartfelt religion-first, the "heart;" second, "felt;" third, "religion;" but in this short article we will mainly confine ourselves to the investigation of the term "heart." Let us go to the Bible and see what is attributed to the heart, and by this means determine as to the heart-fleshly or spiritual and intellectual. That the heart in man-sinful man, alien sinner-needs to be renovated, we refer you to Jer. 17: 9: "The heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked: who can know it?" As Jeremiah was one of the "holy men," who spoke as he was moved by the Holy Spirit (2 Pet. 1: 21), so from him we can at once learn the necessity of a "change of heart." The heart in the alien sinner needs to be changed from an ignorant to an understanding heart; for ignorance leads to crime before God (Acts 2: 22-36; 3: 12-17) and to alienation from God (Eph. 4: 18).

The heart is the source of the prompting of all actions, either mentally, morally, physically, or spiritually. Hence, we can see why Solomon, the wise king in Israel, gave the solemn charge to the people when he said: "Keep thy heart with all diligence; for out of it are the issues of life." (Prov. 4: 23.) As no fountain can be purer than its source, so no life can be any purer than the heart from which it flows. Now, as we are talking about heartfelt religion as is taught in the Bible, that which places man in an approved and saved state before God, we naturally would expect the heart to be pure to start with.

The things attributed to the heart in religion will help us to determine as to what is meant, whether the fleshly or the spiritual heart. The six principal things in which the heart of man engages are thinking, reasoning, understanding, believing, loving, and doing. So men are said to have thought in their hearts (Matt. 9: 4), to reason in their hearts (Mark 2: 6), to desire in heart (Rom. 10: 1), to believe in their heart (Rom. 10: 10), to rejoice in heart (Ps. 19: 8), and to sorrow in heart (Neh. 2: 2). None of these can be attributed to the fleshly heart, but all to the spiritual heart.

The fieshly heart is the source of natural or animal life, while the spiritual heart is the source of spiritual life. The natural heart, from which natural or animal life flows, is made pure and kept pure by physical means; the spiritual heart, by spiritual means—belief of the truth and obedience to the same. (Acts 15: 9; 1 Pet. 1: 22.)

Heartfelt religion is a religion that affects both the heart and the life, or, rather, it flows out from the heart through actions performed in harmony with the dictations of the heart. If the heart accepts the truth and acts in harmony with it in controlling the life, then will be manifested a pure heart through a pure life.

Confidence in Soil.

Confidence in the soil means much for good farming. If you believe your soil will respond to good tillage, you are apt to trust it to that. If you believe your soil will pay for extra investment in lime, drainage, and fertilizer, you are likely to make the greater investment. But, after all, it is self-confidence, for the soil will do just what you let it in the way of production.—Exchange.

OBITUARIES

Bunner.

On December 29, 1918, Brother R. H. Bunner, son of Mr. and Mrs. A. A. Bunner, all of the church of Christ, in Cleveland, Ohio, passed to his well-deserved final reward. He was a deserved final reward. He was a brother of young Laurence Bunner, whose death was reported in the Gospel Advocate but a short time ago, and is the second member of the Bunner family to be taken by the prevailing epidemic. Brother Bunner had become the chief speaker in the church of which he was a member, and was be-coming a very useful and much-esteemed preacher of the gospel. He leaves a wife and three young chil-He would have been thirty-three in February. His loss is deeply felt by the church as well as by his doubly bereft family. W. K. AZBILL.

Grigg.

J. P. Grigg, who came to St. Louis, Mo., two years ago from Tenn., died at his home, 5236 Delmar Avenue, on December 13, 1918, and was laid to rest in Valhalla Cemetery. He was a veteran among the disciples. He was born in Wilson County, Tenn., near Lebanon, Tenn., on March 17, 1847. Early in life he began to take an active part in the Lord's work. His ability to exhort was so marked as to lead the brethren to call upon him frequently. As a consequence, in due course, he gave himself wholly to the ministry, in which he continued to the day of his death, excepting that for the last few years his speech had been so impaired as to make it impossible to clearly utter the truth that was in his mind and on his heart. His ministry extended to many points in Central Tennessee. Apart from his labors in the pastorate, he baptized three thousand nine hundred and nine ty-nine persons. He was married for-ty-two years ago, to Emma E. Watson, at Leeville, Tenn. He is survived by his wife; his daughter, Miss Nellie De-Moss Grigg, of St. Louis; his son, William B. Grigg, of Aberdeen, S. D.; and his wife's mother, Mrs. Watson, who has been a member of his home for many years, and who, with her daugh-ter and her grandchildren, laments the going home of one who made full proof of his ministry as a gospel preacher and was equally true, loyal, and loving in the domestic relation, as well as in every sphere wherein he moved.

BARCLAY MEADOR.

Woody.

On November 11, 1918, in the town of Rives, Obion County, Tenn., the summons of death came and took from a happy home a widowed mother, Mrs. Dora Woody (née Hornbeak), leaving the home without both father and mother. Sister Wood was about fifty years old at her death, had been a member of the church of Christ about thirty-three years. She leaves behind four children, all members of the same church as mother. The eldest of the four is married; the other three are single—two girls and one boy. Sister Woody had lately moved to Rives from Dyersburg, where she kept a boarding

While there, a young man who was drafted for service in the army became interested in the salvation of his soul. She read to him and taught him what God's word required of him to be saved. He learned and accepted the truth, and after going into the army they corresponded regularly, and he always expressed his thanks to her for teaching him the way of life and salvation. So, while she quietly sleeps in the lonely grave, her work goes on, with one, at least, be-sides her own family, to love and revere her name. She loved the church, she loved her family, and she tried to do her duty toward both. She leaves for her children a devoted service to God and to her fellow man, which is the richest legacy that can be bequeathed to children in this world richer far than all the wealth of this world-a pure, spotless, godly, devoted life. Funeral services were conducted by the writer at Mount Moriah, on November 12, in the presence of a large audience, after which her body was laid to rest by the side of her husband to await the resurrection morn, when God will call his children into that rest that remaineth to the people of God. John R. Williams.

Derryberry.

Sister Ellen Derryberry was born on November 25, 1866, and departed this life on December 17, 1918. She obeyed the gospel at the tender age of four-teen years. She made the marriage vow on December 25, 1892, to live with Brother Jeff Derryberry till death should separate them. She was true to that yow till the sun went down in the closing of her last day on earth. Her sweet childhood days were filled with the beautiful light of a loving, Christian family. She loved the Lord supremely and always rejoiced to have fellowship in the worship on the first day of the week. During her thirty-eight years of service in the Lord she failed to meet on the Lord's day only about one dozen times, and her life during the week corresponded with her faithfulness on the Lord's day. Sister Derryberry leaves a husband and three sons, besides a father, mother, two sisters, and five brothers. Brother and Sister Derryberry were congenial and happy in their union. The three boys, Ridley, Oscar, and L. C. Derryberry, show good training in their Christian living. She was devoted to her boys; and this was right, for they were worthy. The affection of a Christian mother is indelibly impressed upon the hearts of her children, and they will ever rejoice that their mother was the queen of their home. I pray that the Lord may bless the dear family and at last bring them together and grown them. bring them together and crown them in the glory land. F. C. SOWELL.

COMB SAGE TEA IN FADED OR GRAY HAIR

Look Young! Common Garden Sage and Sulphur Darkens So Naturally Nobody Can Tell.

Grandmother kept her hair beautifully darkened, glossy, and attractive with a brew of Sage Tea and Sulphur. Whenever her hair took on that dull, faded, or streaked appearance, this simple mixture was applied with wonderful effect. By asking at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," you will get a large bottle of this old-time recipe, improved by the addition of other ingredients, all ready to use, for about fifty cents. This simple mixture can be depended upon to restore natural color and beauty to the hair.

A well-known downtown druggist says everybody uses Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound now because it darkens so naturally and evenly that nobody can tell it has been applied; it is so easy to use, too. You simply dampen a comb or soft brush and draw it through your hair, taking one strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears; after another application or two, it is restored to its natural color and looks glossy, soft, and beautiful. This preparation is a delightful toilet requisite. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation, or prevention of disease

Notes from West Tennessee.

BY JOHN R. WILLIAMS.

On December 30 I passed the sixtyseventh milepost of life's journeyonly three years lacking of the threescore and ten. Jacob said to Pharaoh: "The days of the years of my pilgrimage are a hundred and thirty years: few and evil have been the days of the years of my life, and they have not attained unto the days of the years of the life of my fathers in the day of their pilgrimage." "Few and evil have been the days of the years of my life" can be said by many of us.

On July 29, 1885, I was called and set apart to preach the gospel of God's dear Son by the congregation at Hornbeak, Tenn., and from that time until the present I have labored "in season, out of season," doing what I could to spread the gospel and build up the church of God. When I began to preach, I was a great deal smarter than I am now; but few things then that I did not know about the Bible. I would tackle almost any subject or proposition that was presented, and dispose of them to my own satisfaction, at least. When a young preacher starts out, if he could only know how ignorant he is, but few would have the courage to try it. "Where ignorance is bliss, 'tis folly to be wise;" still, those days of ignorance are blissful days to many a young preacherthey were happy days for me. An old saying, "Young folks think old folks are fools, while old folks know young ones are," applies pretty well to young and old preachers; at least, I now know that I was a fool then. I am truly thankful that I was not too big a fool to try to learn more, if anything remained to be learned. But as the years come and go, many changes come and go, and so many changes come to the preacher. After all, preachers are nothing but men, like other men in many respects, and like none in some respects.

Last year was a hard one for the preachers and for the congregations. War, war was about all one could hear. But now that the war is ended, let it be hoped that the preachers and the congregations may take on new life in things divine, things eternal.

Some congregations in West Tennessee are doing fairly well, while some have just about quit. The Lord willing, I shall continue in the same old field for 1919. I have worked this more forgiving, and think more of our own faults and less of the shortcomings of others. Unless we correct the faults in our lives, it is useless to try to correct them in others. For the incoming year let us all try our hands on old man Self; for if we succeed in bringing him under, then we can try our hands on some one else. The greatest thing needed in West Tennessee at this time among the congregations is spirituality. There is too much tomfoolery and worldliness among church members and too little Bible study and prayer. Let us try to correct these evils, then we may expect better things. I pray for a happy and prosperous new year to the Gospel Advocate and all its readers The Romantic Story of Southland's Favorite Shoe, EzWear.

The business man from the South, knowing how welcome such a shoe would be in his part of the country, urged that its remarkable qualities, in-cluding not only comfort, but style, durability and economy, he made known there. That this has been effectively done is proven by the enormous demand that has spring up in the South for EzWear shoes. It is said that its sale there during the last twelve months has increased fully three hundred per cent. The distributor, M.1 J. R. Simon, of 1589 Broadway, Brooklyn, N. Edifying as the Need May Be

The Commonest Temptation.

The temptation to grow weary and discouraged in welldoing, while not the greatest temptation to Christian people, is undoubtedly the commonest. (Three distinct times in our study of the apostle Paul's letters do we find the warning against its encreachment. "Consider him [Jesus Christ]," said the apostle Paul to the Hebrews, "that endured such contradiction of sinners against himself, lest ye be wearied and faint in your minds." The same hortatory dose of inspiration is given to the heartsick Thessaionians that we find applied to the discouraged of the Galatian church, only in the latter case the result of the tonic is forecast. It is this note of encouragement, " in due season we shall reap, if we faint not," that makes this passage most attractive. It is this promise of the word of God that reaches for its fulfillment far into the great beyond that renews the message over and over again in our overanxious hearts.

Many a Christian has overcome the grosser sins of life, and yet has fallen a victim to the subtle, insidious temptation of discouragement. This temptation is not peculiar to the bad, but to the good. It does not belong to the coarse nature, but to those aspiring spirits who long to do and to dare great things for Christ.

The Painful Sense of Imperfection.

Possibly the most frequent source of weariness in well-doing is the painful sense of the imperfection of our Christian work. It falls so far short of our own ideals and makes us conscious of the defects that are always before our eyes. We should remember, however, that it is not the perfection of the work, but the spirit of the worker, that attracts the Master's notice. If we are handicapped in the Christian race, God knows it and makes allowances. We need not tell him about our narrow environments or our small chances for doing good, for he has placed us where we are and he can judge full well the possibilities of our lives. It is the spirit of our work which counts with God.

But the greatest source of discouragement is the apparent lack of results in our well-doing. To toil on and on, day after day, month after month, and sometimes year after year, apparently in vain, is hard. To give our time and strength and means and prayers for the promulgation of some great Christian work or for the salvation of some precious soul, and at the end of months and years to find the goal of our hope as far off as it was before, is more than hard—it is heart breaking. Many of the bravest have succumbed under such a trial and have said: "I have spent my strength for naught."

Under the Juniper Tree.

The tree that we sit under the oftenest in our Christian lives is the juniper tree. This was the tree, you will remember, under which Elijah sat and prayed God to take his life away because, as he thought, he did not amount to anything and his work was a total failure. Some of the great men we read about in the Bible whom God appointed to fill important places in his kingdom were timid and retiring, full of fear and humility by nature, but none of these men were "out and out discouraged." He does not call this kind to do his work. We cannot be despondent and yet be in full fellowship with Him who is the God of hope, able, as we are told in the letter to the Romans, to fill us with all joy and peace in believing. No Christian, then, should loll under the juniper tree of despondency; but every Christian should abound in hope, revel in the sunshine of service in his Master's vineyard, and prayerfully await the fulfillment of his promise.

Sowing Imperishable Seed.

Paul tells us that in well-doing we are sowing to the Spirit and that such seed is imperishable. Among the ruins of Pompeil, excavated a few years ago, they found seed that had been sealed up in that ill-fated city for eighteen hundred years, and the wonder of it was, when some of the seed was taken out and planted, it sprang up and bore fruit. If natural seed possesses such wonderful vitality, what shall we say of that spiritual seed of well-doing in which God has placed some of his own indestructible life? We have the Father's promise that when we sow this seed we shall reap, if we faint not. To the farmer who sows his field and then, becoming faint-hearted, goes back to sit in the house or under a juniper tree, there is no promise; but for the persevering man that rests in hope there is God's omnipotent "shall" to brighten the labors of life and cheer him on until the harvest days are come.

For the Discouraged Teacher.

The seed that man sows is imperishable. Two men once met in a railway car, and the conversation drifted to Sunday-school work. The older of the two said that many years before, in a distant city, he had taught a class of unruly boys, had done his best for them, had labored with them and prayed for them, and yet, when he had to leave the city to move into a distant State, he had seen no fruits of his work. The other took the opposite view. He said: "I was once a Sunday-school pupil in a dimentical city, and, though I was boyish and full of fun at the time, the example and lessons of my teacher have never been forgotten. They sank down into my heart, and finally they led me to obey the Savior." A few questions brought out the fact that the discouraged man was the teacher and the other was one of his boys.

It is God's law, both in nature and in spiritual things, that the reaping will be in excess of the sowing. One bushel of grain sown in the ground means many bushels of reaped grain, and in the case of the luxurious alfalfa of the West there are many harvests. According to the same principle, the Savior taught in his parables that the well-doer who sows a pound shall reap ten pounds, the well-doer who sows ten pounds shall reap ten cities.

Let Us Hold the Hill.

We can never tell what issues may hang upon our individual fidelity to God. We can never tell what may come of our work to-day, to-morrow, the next week, the next year. A young artillery captain on a famous battle field was given a little eminence to hold. The general told him to hold it at all hazards. Charge after charge was made upon that hill, but the young captain held it with desperate bravery. He could not tell how the battle was going. He had not the faintest idea of his general's plan. The only thing he knew was that he must obey orders—he must hold his post at all hazards. He held it, and not until the smoke of battle had cleared away and the victory was won did he learn that his post was the key position of the whole battle field and upon his fidelity depended the fortunes of the whole day.

Brethren and sisters in Christ, the great Commander has placed us on a hill. We have been given a place to hold. While we know that there are other organizations at work in this same field, we can but feel that ours is the key position. Upon us depends the spiritual welfare of our community. It is our part to lead the men and women all around us to the way of salvation. It is our holy mission to preach the pure, unadulterated gospel of Jesus Christ and point them to the truth as it is written in God's holy word. Let us not be weary in well-doing. Let us not take the edge off Christian enthusiasm. Let us not chill the glow of Christian zeal. Let us not dim the bright eye of Christian hope.

But let's hold the hill. Let's fight the battle, Let's say within our heart to-day: "I shall not fail nor turn aside. I shall not close my eyes nor fall asleep. I shall not die nor pass away until in me and in my life God's work is done."

When the battle is fought and when the victory is won, in the light of heaven we shall see the fulfillment of a promise which here on earth we could but faintly understand—the promise which says: "Let us not be weary in well-doing: for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not."

Duties of the Lord's Day.

BY JAMES E. SCOREY.

The first day of the week is the day upon which the early church met for public worship. This is the day God has appointed for the members of the body of Christ, the church, to come together to engage in the work and worship of the Lord; to teach and admonish one another in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing with grace in their hearts to the Lord (Col. 3: 16); to engage in thanksgiving, prayer, and supplication to God the Father, through Jesus Christ our Lord; to keep the ordinances of the church, the Lord's Supper; to study the word of the Lord; to hear words of exhortation and encouragement from the elders; to have a minister preach, if necessary or convenient. Paul preached on such occasions to the church.

In every dispensation of God's providence, since the fall of man in the garden of Eden, he has appointed certain times and seasons for man's approach to him to receive his blessing. The first public or private worship mentioned in the Bible is that of the account of Cain and Abel as detailed in Gen. 4. It is said: "In the process of time ["at the end of days"-marginal reading] it came to pass, that Cain brought of the fruit of the ground an offering unto the Lord. And Abel, he also brought of the firstlings of his flock and of the fat thereof. And the Lord had respect unto Abel and to his offering; but unto Cain and to his offering he had not respect." Now, this action on the part of Cain and Abel was not the result of their wisdom. God had appointed the time and the character of the offering. Abel followed the direction of God, and by faith he made a more excellent sacrifice to God. Cain's offering was without faith in God, and was, therefore, a sin: for, in God's service, "whatsoever is not of faith is sin."

God appointed the time and the manner of keeping the passover, etc. The professedly Christian world generally recognize two great festivals, or days of extraordinary public worship-Christmas and Easter Sunday. They greatly rejoice on these days. They celebrate the birth of the Savior on the twenty-fifth day of December, though no man to-day knows the month or the day of the week in which Jesus was born in Bethlehem of Judea. God appointed the fourteenth day of the first month of the Jewish year for the observance of the passover, the feast to continue for seven days. Men have instituted a feast and a day of rejoicing they call "Easter," after the name of an old Saxon goddess worshiped hundreds of years ago by the ancient Britons. They have also made it what they call a "movable feast" of the church, the day being determined by the phase of the moon after the twenty-first day of March, or the vernal equinox.

We do know certainly the year, the month, and the day Jesus of Nazareth was apprehended, tried, condemned, and crucified. We do know the day of the week he arose from the dead. This is the day the Christian should celebrate the hope of the world in a risen Savior, who brought life and immortality to light when he overcame death in its own dominion—the grave—and came forth a Conqueror, bearing in his hand the palm of victory, then ascended into heaven, where, crowned "King of kings, and Lord of lords," he wields the scepter of universal empire, and will reign until he shall have put all enemies under his feet. Christ is our Passover, and it has been ordained that his followers shall remember his sacrifice for us, and especially the great victory he accomplished in his resurrection, by commemorating his death till he comes. This feast, in the emblems of his body and blood, must be observed, not just once a quarter, nor once a year, but the first day of every week in the year.

Men have often misinterpreted God's wisdom in appointing his days and the manner of keeping his ordinances, and have substituted other days and other ways than those appointed of God. It sometimes seems a burden for some of us to seek God's blessings in the work and worship we should render. We seem to have time and opportunity to do all we wish, except to go to the assembly of the saints on the Lord's day to engage in the work and worship of the Lord. There are spiritual blessings connected with this day and its duties which cannot be enjoyed on any other day. The Lord's Supper is a memorial institution, and in attending to it we will be constantly reminded of God's great love for man, as well as the sacrifice Jesus made for the redemption of man from his lost and ruined condition. It will inspire us with the hope of his coming to redeem us from the grave and to bestow on us the crowning glory of eternal life. It will help us to "grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ," (2 Pet. 3: 18.)

You, young Christian-or, as for that, old Christianhow much have you grown since you were baptized into Christ? Have you become "strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might?" Have you "put on the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil. . . . and having done all, to stand?" Are you really and truly consecrating yourself to the service of God? Or are you simply satisfied to have your name on the church record, and then serve the world, the flesh, and the devil? Are you not sleeping on your rights and Are you spiritually dead? "Awake thou privileges? that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light." (Eph. 5: 14.) Open your eyes, unstop your ears, and receive into your heart the word of Christ, that it may "dwell in you richly in all wisdom." 3: 16.)

The church is the great school of Christ. It is the pillar and ground of the truth. It teaches the will of God and strongly exhorts us to do God's work. "For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them." (Eph. 2: 10.) All the meetings of the church, whether upon the first day of the week or upon other days and nights, are intended for aid to the edification of the church, and demand the hearty cooperation of all the members of the church.

The assembly of the saints upon the first day of the week is a means of grace in more ways than one. All recognize it as a day for public worship, a day in which we should rest from our usual daily labors. It affords an opportunity to every member of both giving and receiving. We can give to the Lord, and we will receive his blessing. It is right in our service to expect something from the Lord; but, perhaps, this should not be our highest aim. We reach the most exalted plane of spirituality when we are willing to spend and be spent for the good of the brethren. Such was the feeling of Paul. (See 2 Cor. 12: 15.) Until we recognize the fact that we and all we have belong to the Lord, that we are simply his stewards, we are not prepared to render that spiritual service that will be an honor to God and a joy to us. We must gain a fuller and higher appreciation of the grace of God and his lovingkindness to usward than many of us have manifested in our service to him, if we hope for the eternal comforts and consolations of the world to come.

The object of the attendance of a disciple on the services at the church on the Lord's day should not be simply to be entertained, either by the singing, the reading, the prayers, preaching, or other things; but he should enter heartily into all the work and worship of the congregation. If we attend church to get and not to give, no wonder we become weary and dissatisfied, and so abandon the service. It becomes a burden. But if we go to the house of God and give our hearts to his service, and our best efforts of mind, soul, and body to his glory and honor, we will rejoice and be glad when done.

Oftentimes those who do not get what pleases them at church refer the failure to the preacher, the elders, or the singer. Complaints are: the sermon too long or too short; the prayers too monotonous or too varied; too much or too little singing; the tune pitched too high or too low; the sermon too simple or too learned, too plain or too obscure. These complaints may be fair or unfair, right or wrong, just or unjust; nevertheless, you hear them made. These criticisms or complaints are symptoms of dissatisfaction. The very thing which we may not like may be well pleasing to many others. However, "we then that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak, and not to please ourselves. Let every one of us please his neighbor for his good to edification. For even Christ pleased not himself." Jesus came to minister, not to be ministered to; and this is the true Christian spirit.

Engaged in the habit of giving, we soon find a joy we did not know, and realize the truth and beauty of the statement of the apostle when he quoted Jesus as saying: "It is more blessed to give than to receive." I have heard of some saying they always, at least, give the widow's mite. There are none who do that. She gave all her living. Who does that now? I know there are misers—a miserable, narrow-minded, close-fisted class—who never have anything to give to God or man. But there are more spendthrifts than misers. Isaiah says: "Why do you spend your money for that which is not bread?" We should use our means for all necessary purposes, but we have no right to dissipate them to vile or unnecessary uses and purposes.

God's cause and the safety of humanity should not suffer for any lack of means which we can with safety afford to give for the spread of the gospel. Whatever we may think of the duties and obligations, its blessings and privileges, it remains to be said that the first day of the week is ordained of God for the special work and worship of the body of Christ.

We close with the exhortation of the apostle Paul to the Corinthians. He said: "Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord."

Too Late.

BY LOUIA MARIE ADKISSON.

In our language so broad and fair
There are many sorrowful words;
But the saddest of any there,
It often seems, are these—"too late."

The flowers we meant to strew to-day, But thoughtlessly fail to scatter, Ere long may deck mounds far away, As with a sigh we say, "Too late!"

Some one thought to enter the fold,
But the days sped on golden wings;
The years fled, too; his heart waxed cold;
The night soon stole, and—'twas too late.

Some one thought to return some day

To the fold from whence in youth's days
He had been lured by sin away.

He waited till—alas!—it was too late.

O, let us hear the Shepherd to-day— Hear and obey his gentle voice— Rend'ring kindnesses while we may, Ere it be forever too late.

"Would you actually buy a life for seventeen cents?"

"If you knew of a place where great numbers of half-famished bodies were being sorted over, this one saved and the next one thrown into a heap labeled 'To starve;' if you visited this place and saw a mother torn from her baby, one or the other of them sorted into the heap of emaciated bodies, would you remain a more or less interested spectator, or would you buy back the life of the mother or the child and then keep on buying lives at seventeen cents each as long as money lasted, and finally would you rush off to get as many of your friends as possible interested in this business of buying lives?"

These are the questions the American Committee for Relief in the Near East are asking Americans in its effort to save the lives of millions of people who are just beginning, for the first time in ages, to taste the joys of liberty after Turkish barbarism for decades has reduced the entire people to a state of destitution.

One of our relief workers reports that in the region of Mush Valley seven thousand children between three and ten years of age died of starvation, and one hundred women were buried alive in the trenches which the Turks first forced them to dig.

Attention, Sunday-School Teachers!

The conscientious teacher of the Bible is anxious to secure the best help available in the preparation of the lesson. Patient research not only improves and enriches the mind of the teacher, but makes the class work doubly interesting to the scholars. In addition to our quarterlies, we carry two excellent books that cover the International Sunday-school Lessons. The publishers of "Peloubet's Select Notes" claim that it is the "most valuable commentary in the world," because it is "scholarly, comprehensive, condensed, and practical." It covers every phase of the lesson, from treatment and explanation of text, with notes from the best commentators, to list of special books for further study along the lines of thought suggested.

"Tarbell's Teachers' Guide" is edited by Miss Martha Tarbell, Ph.D., and has been a general favorite for many years. The author has covered everything in the field of research and investigation that the enterprising teacher or scholar would like to know. Primary, Junior, Intermediate, Senior, and Bible-class teachers find in it full explanation of Bible texts, light upon difficult passages by the best biblical scholars, and discussion of present-day problems in teaching.

We will send either one of these valuable books for $1,25, postpaid. Teachers would do well to have them both. They are beautifully bound and will fit well in the library.

The Young People, edited by A. B. Lipscomb, is a highclass illustrated weekly of four pages. The editor's comments upon the lessons occupy one page. The price is fifty cents per single copy for a year, or five or more copies to one address for forty cents each.

Address your order to the McQuiddy Printing Company, 317-319 Fifth Avenue, North, Nashville, Tenn.

Christ, We Are Here!

Christ, we are here, to thy life's call replying, To thee, the Giver, we ourselves would give! Christ, we are here, remembering thy dying, We, dying with thee, here would learn to live!

Christ, we are here! Dear Lord, if thou dost see us, Selfish and stained, unworthy of thy face, From that which grieves thee, Lord, in mercy free us, And set us serving in some lower place.

Christ, we are here, and here would be uniting
Love frail as ours with thy love strong and true;
Bearing thy cross, thy battles to be fighting
Till thou, through love, make us and all things new.

Both above and below, without and within, which way soever thou dost turn thee, everywhere thou shalt find the cross, and everywhere of necessity thou must hold fast patience, if thou wilt have Inward peace and enjoy an everlasting crown. If thou bear the cross cheerfully, it will bear thee and lead thee to the desired end—namely, where there shall be an end of suffering, though here there shall not be.—Thomas à Kempis.

Spirit of the Press

Not Representative of the Brotherhood.

At the interdenominational conference, recently held in Philadelphia, Peter Ainslie read a paper which was published in the Christian-Evangelist of January 2, under the title, "The Message of the Disciples of Christ." Under the subtitle, "A Catholic Administration," the essayist said to the conference:

"Having committed themselves to a catholic policy for the union of the church, the Disciples were compelled, by the logic of their position, to find a way for the practice of catholicity in the administration of the ordinances of baptism and the Lord's Supper. Concerning these matters, Christians have long been dreadfully divided. On the question of baptism, after a long and painful wrestling with the facts as they came to view them, and through long and diligent examination of the Scriptures, the Disciples, at great cost to their own hearts in giving up much that had been precious, were constrained to adopt the immersion of penitent believers as the one catholic baptism, recognized by all communions, Greek Catholic, Roman Catholic, and Protestant, and, therefore, the one baptism on which all Christians can agree and unite. For infant baptism they prefer to substitute the dedication of children, remembering that the little child is the one model which Jesus held up before all who would be fit for the kingdom."

The question arises, Whom did Brother Ainslie represent at the Philadelphia Conference? If he attended that conference as an individual, he represented only himself; if he was there as a delegate from an organization among us, he represented only the particular group of people comprising that body. There is no way by which any man can speak to an interdenominational gathering, or any other gathering, as an authoritative representative of the people known as the disciples of Christ. Therefore, it is absurd for a man, or a group of men, to present anything to an interdenominational conference in the name of the disciples of Christ.

It is the privilege of one and all to state the historical plea of the Restoration to any body of people, and all of us should do this whenever an opportunity to do so is afforded. Our brethren have done this from the beginning of the movement, and thus they have won for it consideration and respect and success. However, they have been content to emphasize the scriptural basis of union—without additions or subtractions. Neither unscriptural practices nor their substitutes have ever been, nor can they ever become, part and parcel of the Restoration message.

Brother Ainsile, therefore, went far afield when, while discussing the administration of the ordinances at the Philadelphia Conference, he appointed himself the mouthpiece of the disciples of Christ, and said: "For infant baptism, they prefer to substitute the dedication of children, remembering that the little child is the one model which Jesus held up before all who would be fit for the kingdom." In the first place, the fact that Jesus lifted up the little child as a model affords no foundation for either infant baptism or a substitute for infant baptism. In the second place, the statement that the disciples of Christ prefer to substitute the dedication of children for infant baptism is erroneous.

We presume Brother Ainslie and a few other preachers among us, together with possibly a' few hundred people who are not in our ministry, are ready to substitute the dedication of children for infant baptism; but do they constitute the brotherhood of more than a million disciples of Christ? We venture the assertion that not one in a hundred of our congregations would vote to recognize the decication of children as an ordinance.

Restoration literature will show that the disciples of Christ have proclaimed only two ordinances—haptism and the Lord's Supper. Yet, at the Philadelphia Conference, Brother Ainslie specified a third ordinance, and made it appear that more than a million people were committed to it!—Christian Standard.

Brother Ainslie represented himself and no one else at the "interdenominational conference." He cannot represent people as a denomination who are opposed to all denominationalism. Faithful Christians teach what they find in the New Testament, regardless of what the denominations may or may not teach. The New Testament says nothing of substituting the dedication of children for infant baptism. Of children the New Testament does teach: "Of such is the kingdom of God." Christians realize that it is their duty to "train up a child in the way he should go, and even when he is old he will not depart from it." (Prov. 22: 6.) As to the action of baptism, Christians should speak as do the oracles of God, and no man who loves the truth should ever be sad or pained because he must part company with the opinions of uninspired men in order to follow the plain teaching of the word of God. Christians may be grieved that men love their own inventions and devices more than the truth.

Bolshevism, the End of Civilization.

Returning to Holland from Russia, Dr. Oudendija, the Dutch Minister in Petrograd, was interviewed by the London Times and made an impassioned plea for allied intervention as a duty to civilization. He said:

I wish to give a solemn warning to the working classes of all nations. Bolshevism, I say without exaggeration, is the end of civilization. I have known Russia intimately for twenty years, and never have the working classes of Russia suffered as they are suffering at the present moment. I have never seen or dreamed of the possibility of such corruption, tyranny, and the absence of all semblance of freedom as there are in Russia at the present moment.

Translated into practice, the five points of Bolshevism really come to this: (1) high wages; (2) don't work; (3) take other people's property; (4) no punishment; (5) no taxation; and I suppose there will always be a certain number of people who will adopt a program which in practice amounts to this. That is why, having myself seen the disastrous effects of this policy on all classes of society, I take the first opportunity on my arrival in England to warn the public. The bulk of the workmen in Russia are to-day far and away worse off than they ever have been, and the state of unemployment is simply terrible. When I left Petrograd, the situation was one of utter starvation, and most people hardly knew how they would exist through the following day. The future, to me, seems hopeless. One thing is certain: that, left as she now is, Russia will be in a state of utter and complete ruin. Wherever Bolshevism rules, the nation has been beaten to a pulp and is utterly helpless

Is not the gospel of Christ the best help we can send Russia? The gospel practiced will enable them to feed and clothe themselves. The great need of the hour is applied Christianity. "All things therefore whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, even so do ye also unto them: for this is the law and the prophets." (Matt. 7: 12.)

On page 76 of this issue you will please to note description of "Peloubet's Select Notes" and "Tarbell's Teachers' Guide." We have reduced these books to $1.25 each. Either of these books is almost indispensable to a teacher. Order to-day, for our supply may soon be exhausted.

The Voyage of Life.

O the sun and the rain, and the rain and the sun! There'll be sunshine again when the tempest is done; And the storm will beat back when the shining is past, But in some happy harbor we'll anchor at last.

O the rain and the sun, and the sun and the rain! When the tempest is done, the sunshine again! And in rapture we'll ride through the stormiest gales; God's hand's on the helm, and his breath in the sails.

Then nurmur no more in dull or in roar,
But smile and be brave till the voyage is o'er.

Does Fighting and Dying for Religious Principles Save?

BY J. C. M'Q.

I have recently learned from a number of sources that many Christian people think that the young men of this country who fought and died in France for righteous principles will be saved regardless of their former lives, and saved simply because they did this. A man of prominence said to me a few days ago that he heard a distinguished preacher present this view in a large church, and that, so far as he could judge, it appeared that the great majority of the audience accepted this position, which the judge thought was exceedingly dangerous. Let it be remembered that I have no disposition to detract anything from the bravery and valor shown by our young men in the recent war. It is not the purpose of this article to discuss the war, nor to discuss the salvation of those who entered it any more than the salvation of those who did not enter it.

To me, such a position seems to set aside the wisdom of God and to nullify all that he has done in providing the plan of salvation. "For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have eternal life." (John 3: 16.) The blood sacrificed all through the ages pointed to the great sacrificial offering of Christ. God did not give him to a life of ease, of luxury and wealth, but gave him to a life of self-denial and suffering and a most exeruciating death in order that the scheme of redemption might be provided for the salvation of lost and ruined sinners. All through the ages back of Christ there had been no real atonement for sin. Sins had been passed over from year to year, but the blood of animals could not actually blot out or atone for one sin. So soon as the world was ready for the Christ, God sent him into the world to die in order to redeem and rescue it. When the infinite wisdom of God had devised a plan and the divine law was ready for its execution, he said to his apostles: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to the whole creation. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that disbelieveth shall be condemned." (Mark 16: 15, 16.) As God had ordained that faith should come by hearing, and hearing by the preaching of the word of God, it was necessary for the apostles to preach the gospel to every creature in order that man might accept, believe, and obey it. Of the gospel Paul declares: "For I am not ashamed of the gospel: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek." (Rom. 1: 16.) As God had ordained and provided, the apostles preached the gospel to every creature under heaven. Those to whom the apostles preached were required, on hearing the gospel, to believe, repent, and be baptized by the authority of Christ into the solemn names of Father, Son, and Holy Spirit. Those who did this were thereby delivered out of the power of darkness and translated into the kingdom of God's dear Son. By a faithful continuance in well-doing after becoming members of the church, and by working out their own salvation with fear and trembling, doing the will of God as directed by the Holy Spirit, they had the promise of everlasting life. Thus it is seen that by believing and being baptized they enjoyed the remission of their past sins, and then by living the Christian life they enjoyed salvation in heaven. Those who believe and accept the word of God will not question this position.

As God has but one plan of salvation and as the gospel is the power of God unto salvation, it is without divine warrant to even intimate that a man can be saved because he fights and dies for a righteous cause. All through the ages many men have engaged in fights and have lost their lives in contending for a righteous principle. But so far no one has ever set aside the atonement of the Lord Jesus Christ, the work of the Holy Spirit, and the entire plan of salvation by teaching or accepting in his heart that the man who fought and died for a righteous principle would be saved. Such an intimation is a reflection upon the wisdom, the love, and the power of God. If we admit the correctness of this position, there is no need for the New Testament. God made a mistake when Christ died; Christ made a mistake in dying, and also made a mistake in sending to the apostles the Holy Spirit to abide with them as a Comforter and in commanding them to preach the gospel to the whole creation. If such a view is correct, there is no need for the church of Christ, and all that faithful Christians and martyrs have endured in order that the gospel might be preached to lost and ruined sinners has been in vain. In our admiration for the young men who have fought valiantly, courageously, and bravely, we should not allow that admiration to lead us to reject the wisdom of God and the plan of salvation which he has provided for his children. Without saying one word that will detract from the splendid service of our young men, yet it will not be denied that those who remained at home have been just as faithful and have rendered just as valiant service in the upholding of righteous principles as have these young men. Are they to be saved because they did this, and saved without obedience to the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ?

Such teaching flatly contradicts the word of God and should not receive lodgment in the hearts of Christians for one moment. The Holy Spirit, through the apostle Paul, tells us: "And to you that are afflicted rest with us, at the revelation of the Lord Jesus from heaven with the angels of his power in flaming fire, rendering vengeance to them that know not God, and to them that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus: who shall suffer punishment, even eternal destruction from the face of the Lord and from the glory of his might." (2 Thess. 1: 7-9.) The Savior also makes it clear when he says: "He that believeth not shall be condemned." Again, we learn from Heb. 11: 6: "And without faith it is impossible to be well pleasing unto him; for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that seek after him." These passages convince us that it is folly to hold out the view that men will be saved simply because they fight for righteous principles. Saul "lived in all good conscience," believed that he was doing God's service, but so long as he persecuted Christians and declined to accept Jesus Christ he was in a lost and ruined condition. There is no promise of salvation without obedience to the gospel.

Voting in the Church, Again.

BY E. A. E.

There is an evil easily resulting from voting in the church which has not been emphasized, and that is the playing of politics.

We have seen clearly already that by trying to settle questions in the church by vote children who have just entered the church (some of whom are not a dozen years of age), others who are young in the service of God, others who are ignorant of much of the teaching of the Bible, and still other babes in Christ can outvote overwhelmingly the experienced and truly wise in the knowledge of the truth, scriptural elders, and aged and godly women.

I use the word "politics" in the sense of dividing into parties and scheming to carry a point and to put forward a certain party in the church by vote or otherwise. Political schemes can be promoted and accomplished by other methods as well as by voting. I suspect many in the church have seen this done in one way or another.

EXAMPLES.

1. It is not altogether uncommon to remove elders who oppose certain unscriptural or questionable things and have their places filled by men who stand for these same things; to remove teachers of classes who oppose these things and fill their places with others who teach these things. Some years ago a preacher who worked through and represented the missionary societies went against the protest of the elders to conduct a meeting in a certain town. Before the first week of the meeting had passed he had slated a new "board of elders and deacons;" but when he presented them to the church, an elder arose and informed him that this move was unscriptural and his "board" would not be recognized as elders and deacons. Brother Lipscomb, in decrying such high-handed procedure, said this preacher had outraged the church. But this is no more an outrage because done by a preacher who works through and for the societies than by one who claims to be "loyal." One can digress from God's will and the spirit of Christ in different ways. Any going beyond the teaching of Christ-and, therefore, going "beyond the things which are written" (1 Cor. 4: 6)—or any failure to abide in the teaching of Christ (2 John 9), is digression and to depart from God.

- 2. Certain members of a church in a certain city some years ago wished to carry a certain point in the selection of a preacher. The question was to be submitted to the vote of the church, a child's vote counting as much as an elder's. These members electioneered the church, drummed up votes for their side, secured proxies of those who could not attend, and easily outvoted those who stood for the pure worship of God. This is politics, but not the way to uphold the truth and to maintain the true worship of God. The right or wrong of any course cannot be settled by the majority vote.
- 3. Another church in another town voted on a preacher, and the ones who wanted the election to go a certain way had their crowd present to vote, while some on the other side had not been notified even that a vote would be taken, and, therefore, not when it would be taken. However, when the opposite vote was called for, a wise and good brother, being present, protested, saying that was not the way in which that church had decided questions heretofore, and not the scriptural way of settling questions at any time. That was politics—a scheme to gain a point and to advance a party in the church.
- 4. Certain members of a church-not the whole churchwish, for reasons best known to themselves, to cast out of the synagogue a certain person. This cannot be done scripturally by the whole church's withdrawing themselves from and having "no company with" that person (2 Thess. 3: 6-15) or by the whole church's "being gathered together" in the spirit and power of Christ, "delivering such a one to Satan" (1 Cor. 5); but it can be done by calling a meeting for some night or day of the week (of which meeting many who think there is no scriptural cause for withdrawing from that person have not been notified), and taking a majority vote. This may be called the withdrawal of the church, but it cannot be, because the church did not withdraw themselves, and the church was not of one accord, of one mind, of one heart, and of one soul. It was one party in the church voting against another party in the church and carrying a point by majority vote, when many of the opposers were not present. This was division; it was politics of the worst kind. The Bible condemns "factions, divisions, parties." (Gal. 5. 19-21.) Of course the ones who cause these and lead these are condemned
- 5. As clearly as the Bible teaches that Jesus of Nazareth is the Christ, the Son of God, it teaches that the elders are the overseers of "the flock;" are to feed and "tend" the church (Acts 20: 28; 1 Pet. 5: 1-5); are to rule, and to "rule well," and to "labor in the word and in teaching" (1 Tim. 5: 17); and are responsible for the souls of the church (Heb. 13: 17). For these grave and great reasons the elders are, more than all others, responsible for the teaching the church receives. For these reasons God declares that elders with other qualifications must "be able both to exhort in the sound doctrine ["teaching"-margin]. and to convict the gainsayers. For there are many unruly men, vain talkers and deceivers, specially they of the circumcision, whose mouths must be stopped; men who overthrow whole houses, teaching things which they ought not, for filthy lucre's sake." (Tit. 1: 9-11.) Babes in Christ from ten to twenty years of age and others only a few months or even a year or two old in the church, from the nature of the case, not being "experienced in the word of righteousness," are incapable of telling the difference between "vain talkers and deceivers" and humble and true preachers of the gospel, but are more likely to be beguiled by the smooth and fair speech of the "vain talkers and deceivers," who "serve not our Lord Christ, but their own belly." (Rom. 16: 17, 18.) It is ruinous to attempt to decide what kind of teaching a church should have by the vote of children and babes in Christ. It is as foolish as a mother's trying to decide what wholesome food is by the vote of her babies. It is contrary to all the teaching of God. But while elders are to tend the flock, exercising the oversight thereof in humility and willingly and not for filthy lucre, making themselves good examples, they must not "lord it over the charge allotted" to them or rule arbitrarily. Their will is not law. They practice and teach only the word of God and lead the church by that alone. Therefore, when the church needs additional teaching to that which they are able to give, they should consult members who are sufficiently informed in the Scriptures to know what sound teaching is as to what preacher to select. According to the Scriptures, nothing should be done through faction and vainglory, but all should come to one mind and one heart and be of one accord. (Phil. 2: 1-11.) It is the word of God all want taught, the gospel all want preached, and all must work together to secure such a preacher as will teach and preach that, and one who will avoid all the untaught questions which God commands to be let alone."

To ignore the teaching of the Bible in regard to elders and their work and their responsibilities is as much sin and rebellion as to ignore and turn from it in any other teaching.

Different good and wise men in the knowledge of the Bible, of middle life and older, lament the fact that the younger generation in the church do not know what the New Testament church is—its construction from foundation to head, its work or great mission, and its all-sufficiency—and, worse still, not a few of the present generation of young preachers seem not to know, or, at least, they are not teaching it.

It is as foreign to the word of God as night is to day that a preacher, asked to join the elders of a church in preaching the gospel and teaching the truth, is to assume the rule of that church and presume to control it. A vast deal of error creeps in and no little strife and division arise because of this vital mistake. As elders fail in qualifications and work, the one-man rule and power loom up. But as elders possess the scriptural qualifications and are put in their place in the church to teach, to guide, to tend the flock, to rule well by the word of God, to "labor in the word and in teaching," the self-assumed authority of the preacher diminishes; and when the elders occupy their place fully and do all their work efficiently, the authority of the self-constituted ruler in the form of some preacher will disappear as mist before the sun.

The history of the church, as is seen from the lives of the seven churches of Asia and of others, is similar to that of the Israelites. Christians are the Israel of God today. The history of the Israelites is one of lapses and restorations. Here it is:

And Israel served Jehovah all the days of Joshua, and all the days of the elders that outlived Joshua, and had known all the work of Jehovah, that he had wrought for Israel. (Josh. 24: 31.)

Then they began again to fall away and to be restored, as the book of Judges shows. And on and on.

For example, Campbell and his colaborers did a great work in restoring to the people the church of the New Testament. The church remained pretty true during Campbell's lifetime and the lifetime of some who outlived Campbell. But then bitter strife and divisions arose over man-made societies and human ordained ways of worship. Franklin, Fanning, Lipscomb, the Sewells, and others taught the churches which did not go into the societies and did not adopt human ways of worship to be faithful to the New Testament, and those who outlived these faithful men have done well in their efforts to hold the churches in "the old paths;" but wide is the complaint to-day that sound teaching is failing.

I may miss a thousand miles the teaching of the Bible on the church's withdrawing themselves from the disorderly, on the church and its elders and their work, and on unity and peace, etc.; but the preacher who has the spirit of Christ and has willed to do God's will (John 7: 16-18), and who is, therefore, not seeking to justify some unscriptural course by quibbling, by dealing in mere technicalities and wresting the Scriptures to his own destruction, has the assurance from God that he can understand what the will of God is concerning all these questions. Let him study that. Studying the Bible in order to learn and to do God's will and placing difficulties in the way of the man who seeks to do and teach his will are two quite different things.

Wherever there are contentions, strife, and division, there is sin. Those who have produced these are the sinners, and without repentance they must be lost. These things are grievous and must not be passed lightly by. The man is blessed of God who can remove the wrong and unite again the contending parties. "Blessed are the peacemakers!"

"WHAT IS SCRIPTURAL DIVORCE?"

Brother Elam: Will you be so kind as to answer, through the Gospel Advocate, the following questions: (1) What is it to be scripturally divorced? (2) Has the man who has been scripturally divorced from his wife, or the wife who has been scripturally divorced from her husband, the scriptural right to marry again? (3) Or, if the man thus divorced has any sort of right to marry, has he the right to marry the guilty woman on whose account his wife divorced him?

AN HONEST INQUIRER.

Nothing in the Bible can be plainer than the answer to these questions. One serious trouble is, many church members do not believe the Bible; and when divorced people take a notion to marry, they pay no attention to the Bible.

God ordained the marriage relationship (Gen. 2: 23, 24; Matt. 19; 5; Mark 10: 7, 8; 1 Cor. 6: 16; Eph. 5: 31); and what God has joined together, no man—no court or civil authority, from Congress down—can separate. God alone can give the cause of separation.

And I say unto you, Whosoever shall put away his wife, except for fornication, and shall marry another, committeth adultery: and he that marrieth her when she is put away committeth adultery. (Matt. 19: 9; see also Matt. 5: 32.)

The same truth applies to woman. (Mark 10: 11, 12.)

When a person marries a man or woman divorced for any other cause than fornication, that person lives in adultery with that man or that woman, because that person in God's eyes is living with the wife of another man or the husband of another woman. A legal divorce does not change God's law or the sin in his sight.

When a man has been divorced by his wife or the wife has been divorced by her husband on account of fornication, the person who marries the divorced one lives in adultery with that divorced one. If not, a premium is placed on fornication. A man forsakes his wife and several children, takes up with another woman, and his wife divorces him; can he then marry and live with the woman on whose account his wife divorced him and be free from continued adultery? Has the adultery in which he lived before his wife divorced him been changed into hely wedleck because his pure and Christian wife divorced him? If so, all that such a man has to do to change adultery into scriptural marriage is to seduce some innocent gfrl or to take up with a wench, let his wife divorce him, and then marry the girl or wench. Or any woman can take up with another man than her lawful and scriptural husband, let her husband on that account divorce her, and marry the other man, and be sinless before God.

AT HOME AND ABROAD

From D. C. Madry, Athens, Ala.: "The last two articles of Brother Elam's are worth the price of a year's subscription."

John R. Williams will preach regularly on the fourth Lord's day in each month during the year of 1919 for the congregation at Hornbeak, Tenn.

The editors and publishers appreciate the many good wishes that are coming in from all parts of the country, some of which appear on this page.

J. Leonard Jackson has changed his address from Nolensville to 1105 Montrose Avenue, Nashville. He will be with the South College Street Church during 1919.

Mrs. H. W. Sherman, of Tampa, Fla., writes: "We enjoy the Gospel Advocate far more than any other paper we get, and wish you much success during the new year."

Mrs. B. P. Sloan, of Humboldt, Tenn., says: "I love the Gospel Advocate and am heartily with you in the work. I wish you the very best success for the coming year."

From Mrs. Lillie Moore, Corinth, Miss.; "I enjoy reading the Gospel Advocate very much. It is so helpful to one who is trying to lead a Christian life. I have secured a new subscriber."

I join with H. C. Shoulders in the fervent wish that enough money will be forthcoming next Sunday to pay off the mortgage for the little band at Lexington, Ky. Don't fail to read his statement in this issue.

On page 76 of this issue you will please to note description of "Peloubet's Select Notes" and "Tarbell's Teachers' Guide." We have reduced these books to $1.25 each. Either of these books is almost indispensable to a teacher. Order to-day, for our supply may soon be exhausted.

Miss Clem Purson writes: "I do not know how I could do without the Gospel Advocate. It is such a joy and comfort to me. It elevates the mind, gives one sweeter and purer thoughts, and casts away heartaches. I hope it will live on and on to do its great and good work."

Mrs. H. M. McRea, of Rockmart, Ga., writes: "This number alone is worth the subscription price of the paper to a thoughtful reader. May our Heavenly Father bless every one of the editors and guide them in wisdom and right-eousness in all they say and do, and may each succeeding issue be as good as the last one."

From Mrs. M. J. Pearson, Tullahoma, Tenn.: "I do not want to miss a single number of the Gospel Advocate. I have been taking it ever since it was first published, and think it grows better each year. Long may the good work go on. I am wishing you health, happiness, and prosperity throughout the new year."

W. M. Oakley, superintendent of the Potter Orphan Home at Bowling Green, Ky., writes: "We are at this time under the shadows at the Home. Mrs. Oakley and twenty-four of the children are down with the 'flu.' Our helper and I are all that are left to see to the rest. So far it has been impossible to get a cook or nurse. I am giving the sick my personal attention. Pray for us."

From W. A. Schultz, Calico Rock, Ark.: "I have been a member of the church of Christ for thirty-six years. I was reared under sectarian influences. I am indebted to the Gospel Advocate more than to any other uninspired influence for what I have been able to accomplish as a preacher for the past third of a century. It has been a safe counselor and teacher and helper in all my trials. I cannot do without it."

From J. H. Murrell, Box 24, Tennessee City, Tenn., January 17: "Having been kept out of all protracted meetings and most of the time even prevented from preaching on Lord's days since the first of October, I have not much church news to report. We have had the 'flu' in our home for the past nine days, and Mrs. Murrell and one of the children are still down. The rest of us were not as sick as they have been. We hope all will soon be well. I also hope to be out preaching again real soon."

J. C. Estes writes: "Last Sunday, January 12, I filled my regular appointment with the good little congregation near Seagoyille, Texas. While there this time they engaged me to preach for them in a fifteen-days' meeting this coming summer. They seem to have a mind to work. Most of my protracted meetings this year are engaged. However, I have some time yet that I can give to monthly preaching anywhere in reach of Dallas. If you need me, write me at 401 Montreal Avenue, Dallas, Texas."

From F. P. Fonner, Buffalo, W. V., January 15: "I have received mission offerings as follows: From Mrs. Dan Leathers, $1; John F. Kemp, Sr., $1; Mrs. Ira C. Hardesty and others, $4; Mrs. S. A Terry, $10; her precious mother, $1; Miss Mattie Thornton, $2; Miss S. C. T., $10; Bethel Church, Greenwood, Tenn., $15; O. P. Osborn, $1. This help came at an opportune time. May God bless and prosper all the donors. Influenza seems to be passing in some places here now, and we have resumed work at some mission points. During the epidemic I lost out to an alarming extent; and unless I get liberal help now, it will be some time before I get over the misfortune of 1918. Please help now; and, if possible, help our building fund also. We are not able to build a house without help. I can use a check."

From R. H. Johnson, Booneville, Ark., January 16: "I have just finished twenty years' work in the field as a gospel preacher. I have labored principally in Central and West Arkansas, Oklahoma, and Texas. I have built up and set in order many congregations, and have assisted in building a number of meetinghouses. I have been preaching at Booneville for about nine years; so I would like to have a new location and field in which to labor. I am known by the brotherhood in Arkansas, Texas, and Oklahoma. I have been associated with Hinds, Chism, Srygley, Warlick, Wooldridge, and many others of our gospel preachers. I held a meeting for the brethren at Cookeville, Tenn., the fall of 1912. Any place wanting a preacher to locate and devote his time to the ministry may address me at Booneville, Ark., Box 244."

Help the Church at Lexington, Ky., Next Sunday. BY H. C. SHOULDERS.

Let us all remember that next Sunday is the day to make a little offering to help remove the debt on the property of the little church in Lexington, Ky. The debt is five hundred dollars now. Just think, if one hundred congregations or persons will send five dollars, the debt will be paid; or if five hundred persons will send one dollar each, the debt will be wiped out and we can burn the mortgage. Almost any human organization, such as the Red Cross or Y. M. C. A., can raise hundreds of dollars in a very short time. Then, will we let a human institution do more than the church of the living God? Certainly we can raise the five hundred dollars on the fourth Sunday in this month. Now, don't say, "Well, some one else will look after that," but say, "I want to help in that work," and send your offering to me, Box 194, Sellersburg, Ind. Brother H. A. Shockney, who has been one of the mainstays in the Lexington work, says: "I want you to strike the match and set the mortgage on fire." Then, brethren and sisters. one and all, to the work, and let me burn the mortgage. As I have done heretofore, I will report all money received in the Christian Leader and the Gospel Advocate.

Brother McQuiddy: What authority have the Roman Catholics for saying our Bible is incomplete, and what is the difference between the two? Mrs. J. C. Dorman,

The scholarship of the world does not support this claim of the Catholics. Their Bible, commonly known as the Duoay Bible, is a translation from the Latin Vulgate, published in 1610. In this translation there are many gross inaccuracies. In addition to the books found in our Bible, the Catholic Bible contains the apocryphal writings, which are regarded as spurious.

Brother McQuiddy: I have been recommending "Civil Government," by Brother D. Lipscomb, to some of the brethren to read. Do you accept his position in this work as being correct?

W. T. Beasley.

While I have never contended that it was absolutely sinful to vote and while I have voted some few times in my life, I have never had time to take any interest in politics. In fact, when a Christian does his duty, he is kept so busy working in the service of the Master that he has no time to work at politics. I have observed, furthermore, that when people become engrossed in politics they do not usually make active workers in the vineyard of the Lord. Of course, this is no proof that it is absolutely sinful to have any connection with politics, for some mule traders do not make good servants of Jesus Christ. A man can abuse almost anything that he does. While I am not able to answer some of the arguments that Brother Lipscomb makes on civil government, yet there are difficulties that I am not able to meet if I were to take the position that it is absolutely sinful for a Christian to vote. I never understood Brother Lipscomb to take this position. In all of my associations and work with him, I never heard him intimate that a man could not be saved who voted or that a Christian who voted would be lost. My work is, and shall be, to encourage Christians to be faithful and active in the service of our blessed Master. I am sure the man who does this will be useful in this life and fitted and qualified for life everlasting in the world to come.

Brother McQuiddy: As teacher, I feel the need of help. We have just started in the book of Revelation, with one preacher in the class. He has much to say about the dragon, papal Rome, and pagan Rome. I do not see that in the the first three chapters. As helps I have Martin on Revelation: Raple, DeMoss, B. W. Johnson, and White's "Sermons on Revelation." Can you recommend anything better? New or secondhand and where I could get it and cost. I understand that J. L. Martin's son wrote a book on Revelation that far surpasses "The Voice of Seven Thunders." Please give me the benefit of your experience and observation on the study of the book of Revelation.

D. F. BELL,

The querist certainly has a sufficient number of commentaries on Revelation. He does not need more, for it is probable more would confuse rather than enlighten. 1913 we printed for Brother P. Jay Martin, son of J. L. Martin, "The Mystery Finished; or, The New Heaven and 'The New Earth." I am not informed as to where Brother Martin is now located. My observation and experience teach me that human keys do not fit the divine lock. Each commentator has a new interpretation or key with which to unfold or unlock the mysteries of Revelation. Instead of seeking to interpret mysterious symbols. I devote my time to the many practical truths clearly taught in Revelation. Many practical things are enforced and taught concerning the seven churches of Asia. Of the church in Laodicea the Revelator wrote: "I know thy works, that thou art neither cold nor hot: I would thou wert cold or hot. So because thou art lukewarm, and neither hot nor cold, I will spew thee out of my mouth." (Rev. 3: 15, 16.) This is clear enough, and so is this: "I know thy works (behold, I have set before thee a door opened, which none can shut), that thou hast a little power, and didst keep my word, and didst not deny my name." (Rev. 3: 8.) And so also is this clear: "Blessed are they that wash their robes, that they may have the right to come to the tree of life, and may enter in by the gates into the city." (Rev. 22: 14.) And the following is beautiful and clear enough to encourage all God's people to be faithful: "And he showed me a river of water of life, bright as crystal, proceeding out of the throne of God and of the Lamb, in the midst of the street thereof. And on this side of the river and on that was the tree of life, bearing twelve manners of fruits, yielding its fruit every month: and the leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations." (Rev. 22: 1, 2.) There is much in Revelation that is simple, practical, and helpful. Only a morbid curiosity leads us to devote our talents to the unraveling of symbols that cannot be unraveled. There are many things connected with the plan of salvation on the divine side that are unsolvable mysteries, that we will never be able to explain to our own satisfaction, and surely not to the satisfaction of any one else. It is the part of wisdom to devote ourselves to the human side, to the plain and practical things which God requires us to do. "The secret things belong unto Jehovah our God; but the things that are revealed belong unto us and to our children forever, that we may do all the words of this law." (Deut. 29: 29.)

Brother McQuiddy: We have services at 11 A.M. and 7 P.M. each Lord's day. We have the Supper at both services. We have two members here that insist that we have no authority to take the Supper at night, because it is not the first day of the week, claiming the day is the same as in the beginning as recorded in Genesis. Please give an expression on this.

J. G. ALLEN.

Christ instituted the Lord's Supper at night, and in imitation of its first celebration by him it was at first celebrated at night by Christians. Later it became almost universally connected with the morning service. The Greek word from which we have the Lord's Supper means "the chief meal of the day." In the primitive church Christians partook of the Lord's Supper almost daily. When this was rendered impossible by persecutions, they partook of it at least several times a week, or at least on Lord's day. As we are reminded of the resurrection upon each first day of the week, so we should meet to observe the Lord's Supper upon each first day of the week. As to the frequency of the observance of the Lord's Supper little is said, but that little warrants a weekly observance of the ordinance. The disciples met together on the first day of the week to break bread. I am not able to find any authority in the Bible authorizing a church to observe the Lord's Supper twice upon the same day. In the light of Bible teaching, I think we should not do this. Reckoning time according to the Jewish count, the day begins at sunset and ends at sunset. The two brethren are right who claim that 7 P.M. is not the Lord's day, as Monday would begin at 6 P.M. Sunday evening. Counting as we count time, from midnight to midnight, 7 P.M. would be on the first day of the week. To be absolutely safe, the Supper can be observed anywhere from 6 A.M. to 6 P.M. on Lord's day, and there cannot be a doubt about its being on the first day of the week. But, as I have already stated, I think any church should be very slow to teach all of its members to observe the Lord's Supper twice on each Lord's day. If the querist means that some cannot meet at the eleven-o'clock service and that the Supper is observed in the evening for those who cannot meet in the morning. there can be no objection to it, but it would be safer to observe it before six o'clock in the evening.

Georgia and the Far Southern Field

The 1919 Revival Is On.

As has been stated before, if we appreciate the greatness of the work Christ died to establish, the annual revival will begin the first day in the new year and close, so far as the year is concerned, the thirty-first day of December: but, in fact, not close at all, but be on and continue right into and through the new year. So have we tried to do in the Atlanta work. If Christ or his apostles ever went into "winter quarters" or off on "vacations," we have not the slightest intimation of their doing so. It was work and pray and pray and work all the time, even when they withdrew themselves from the multitudes for short seasons.

And when we think of the value of one soul; of what Christ did to redeem every soul, having tasted death for every man; of the shortness and uncertainty of life and the length of eternity, how consistent does their conduct appear to us, and how inconsistent the conduct of many of us sometimes becomes! The soul-saving business they were in, and to it they devoted themselves assiduously; and if they ever had time to go wild over politics or shoulder a gun and go into the man-killing business, we know nothing about it. The early Christians were taught to work with their hands the things that were good, that they might have to give to them that were in need; to use economy, not be extravagant; to be diligent in their business; but all of this to the end that more souls they might save and God's name they might honor and the doctrine of Christ adorn. So thoroughly was the first church, the Jerusalem church, taught this doctrine, that, when they (numbering thousands) were scattered abroad, "they went everywhere preaching the word." Of course, they, in their scattered state, resumed whatever business calling they had formerly followed for a living: but "preaching the word," saving souls, was the controlling thought of their souls, which they neglected not to put into actions by word and deed at every opportunity. So should it be with us to-day.

In last week's issue something was said on this page about the fine union service that we had on the first Lord'sday evening in this year. I am glad to tell you that the second Lord's day was better. Brother John Klingman was with us at the West End Avenue Church and continued the study of "Seek ye first the kingdom of heaven" that had been started the Sunday before. The house was more than filled with hungry listeners. At the close of his splendid address, a Mr. Hadaway, formerly a Catholic, whose wife had been baptized some months before, came forward for confession and baptism; the youngest daughter of Brother Hornsby, and the only member of the family out of Christ, came forward for the same purpose; Brother Ricks, of Texas, came forward to let us know that he wished to make West End his church home; and a brother from the East Point congregation, from whom fellowship had been withdrawn, came forward to confess his sins and reconsecrate himself to God. A call was then made for those members who were not satisfied with their attainments during 1918, who were conscious of the fact that they had not worked as they should, were sorry of this fact, and wanted to confess it and resolve to make 1919 better, to come forward. Some twenty-odd came forward or arose in their seats and made this confession. Indeed, God was in our midst and filled us with joy.

I was so much pleased, too, to learn of the expression of a number of strangers who had dropped in for services. "That church has more religion in it than any church I have ever been in," was the expression of one. Now, will the preachers and elders who read this turn to 1 Cor. 14: 24, 25, and learn that it is our duty to have such worship when we assemble that it forces the unbeliever to exclaim. "God is in you of a truth," and stop dishonoring the religion of Jesus and letting souls perish by putting them on 'cold storage" when they come into our assemblies?

Reports from South Pryor, East Point, Ingleside, and Liberty Hill, where Brethren Templeton, Brooks, Garrett, and Stroud, Coggins, and Ricks, respectively, led the services, were to the effect that they were glorious.

Our third union meeting took place in the evening at the East Point Chapel. I would love to descibe it, but it went beyond description, so far as my limited power is concerned. Suffice it to say that notes were burned and the announcement was made that all the congregations start with no indebtedness to hinder them and a splendid balance in all the treasuries.

In conclusion, allow me to say that the coming to this field of Brethren John Klingman, Silas E. Templeton, and R. R. Brooks goes a long way in enabling us to let 1919 begin as we have never been able to begin a new year before. They are great men, love the work, and are angels of light to this section. 0 0 0

Good Days, Bad Days.

Here I wish to ask the question: Why is it that our "good days" and "bad days" for Lord's-day services are governed by the weather? That is, when the weather is good, we have a large crowd; when the weather is bad, we have a small crowd. I ask, why is this, if we are indeed seeking first the kingdom of heaven and his righteousness? O, you say you are afraid to expose yourself to the weather, you might take cold! Well, why do you not have such fear about going to work through the rain on Monday to follow your trade for "meat and drink?" May I ask you to read again Matt. 6: 24-33? I think I have heard some of the very church members who thus neglect their duty say that they believed God protected people when they were baptized in cold weather and the ice had to be cut, and that they would, doubtless, take pneumonia and die if they should thus expose themselves for ordinary affairs. If it be true that God thus protects those who are striving to meet his appointments in baptism, why does it not hold good for any other command-for instance, "Forsake not the assembling of yourselves together?" (Heb. 10: 25.) When I see a model Christian and a model congregation, I will see a brother or a sister in Christ and a body of such men and women who allow not their "good Sundays" and "bad Sundays" for regular worship to be governed by weather conditions. What say you, my brother?

This page was written on Wednesday, January 15, while on the train for Calhoun, Ga., to meet the bereaved family of Brother J. M. Weaver, of Dalton, Ga., and conduct the funeral services of his excellent daughter, Sister Burch. I trust I have made myself sufficiently clear to be understood in the above lines.

When Are We "Seeking First His Kingdom?"

Christ, in speaking of food and raiment and the kingdom of heaven, says: "But seek ye first his kingdom, and his righteousness; and all these things [food and raiment, etc.] shall be added unto you." (Matt. 6: 33.) The question as to when we are really doing this has been on my mind for a number of days, especially in connection with attendance of the regular services of the kingdom of heaven.

Certainly we all understand that the man that makes food and raiment in the right way connects with all his GOSPEL ADVOCATE.

But here is the question that is on my mind. We have good days and bad days for our regular church services, which good and bad days depend on the weather. If the weather is good, look for a large crowd; if the weather is bad, look for a small crowd. Now, is this true with any business that requires your services six days in the week? If you are a banker, rain or shine, you are found at your post of duty. If you are in the grocery business, six days in the week, rain or shine, you may be found at your post of duty. If you are working in the railroad shops or in some manufacturing establishment, six days in the week, rain or shine, cold or hot, you are there. Isn't it so? Well, you church members who are punctilious in ever being at your post of duty in the line of work you follow for food and raiment and go to the church meetings only when the weather is fair, are you seeking first the kingdom of heaven? Now, are you? Ponder this question well in your hearts. 1 do not think you are; and if you will think only a moment, you will convince yourself that I am right. Hence, I shall raise the following question: Why should not church attendance be just as good on rainy days as when the sun is shining, or on cold days just as much so as when it is warm? We have just as many people in the drygoods stores at work, just as many in our factories, just as many in our banks, on rainy days as we do on fair days. If we can brave any kind of weather to hold our jobs, why can we not do as much for the regular services of the church? I have never seen a congregation that comes up to my ideas of a model church, West End Avenue congregation in Atlanta comes more nearly being such than any I now know of. When you see the model church, you will see one all of whose members respect the regular worship as highly as they do their jobs. If not, why not? Brethren, think on these things.

Why the Change?

BY C. A. BUCHANAN.

In the Gospel Advocate of December 26, Brother H. M. Phillips has an article under the caption, "There Seems to Be a Change." I beg to take issue with him on one point. He seems to lament the change of attitude on the part of some of the preachers toward war. Some brethren may have changed in order to be on the popular side, but I do not think all the changes due to this cause. It is no disgrace, nor is it a sign of weakness, for one to change when he sees he is wrong.

The fact that many Christians were forced into the service may have caused us to seek to justify carnal warfare; but, anyway, we have been able under the circumstances to make a more fair-minded study of both sides of the question.

There is always a wrong in carnal warfare. It is wrong for a nation by its might to invade the rights and liberties of others, just as it is wrong for a man to arm himself and rob a bank, perhaps taking lives to do so. But it is not wrong, according to my view of Rom. 13, for the duly authorized officer to take the life of the criminal. The Lord has ordained civil government to punish cylldoers and to furnish protection to others. Germany armed herself and set out to rob and plunder the whole world, if possible. Then Germany as a nation became a criminal, and the only way to punish her was by armed force. It is to be regretted that many Germans were slain who were not responsible for the war; but how else could the punishment have been carried out?

Of course, it is just as foolish for nations to seek to settle their differences by war as it is when two men try to decide their issues by mortal combat when a principle of right and justice is involved. Might does not always make right, Such disputes should be settled before a court of justice. It is to be hoped that in the near future we will have an international court before which all international disputes may be decided. Then we will need armies only to enforce the decisions of the court just as we have officers to execute our civil laws. In the late war public opinion of the civilized nations acted as the court, and the United States acted as a legal and divinely authorized agent in avenging for the crimes inflicted upon helpless and defenseless nations and peoples. I think it was as much our duty to do this as it is for the officers to seek and take the outlaw who murders innocent people and plunders detenseless homes. I do not count those boys murderers who fought on the field to stop such outrages upon a civilized world as the enemy practiced. The American soldier was not acting on his own responsibility, but was carrying out the orders of constituted authority. If the nation did right in the part she took in the war, the obedient soldier did not sin even though he were a Christian.

I am sorry when the criminal must be hanged. I am sorry when a man resists the officers and must be taken dead or alive. But such things must be done to restrain others who might become criminals if crime should go unpunished. This is one function of "the powers that be." I deplore war, but armed resistance is sometimes necessary. In the late war it saved the world from slavery to a wicked and greedy monarch who feared not God nor regarded the rights of man.

She became suddenly ill with congestion of the lungs, and lived only one day and two nights, and the last half day and night never regained consciousness. Sister Osborn was faithful to the Master's cause, never being absent at the hour of worship unless providentially hindered. I have known her to drive alone through the snow and cold for miles in order to assemwith the faithful. Such as these will be rewarded when the Lord comes to make up his jewels. Spear.

On October 18, 1918, while engaged in his daily duties of life, Brother Levi Spear was very suddenly called into the beyond. He was a faithful Christian, a generous father, and a devoted husband. He was a daily reader of God's word, closing the day by calling down the benedictions of God upon his home and family. He was ready at all times to administer unto the wants and necessities of the poor, a friend to the friendless, a very present help in time of trouble and sorrow. be greatly missed in his community by all with whom he was associated, but most by his dear, loving companion, to whom he was very much devoted. Brother Spear leaves a wife, ten children, and many friends and relatives to mourn his death, and we pray that all may emulate his worth. His remains were laid to rest in the Baily cemetery. Let us strive to meet him in the great beyond. Funeral services were conducted by the writer.

To this union there were To this union there were born five children. Four are still living and members of the church of Christ. His last wife was Miss Fannie Mae Wilhelms, of Paducah, Ky. It was my pleasure and profit to know this man of God for sixteen years. He was indeed a Christian in the fullest meaning that the word implies. As a business man he was a success, and in all of his dealings he had the confidence of all who dealt with him. As a soldier of the cross, he was ever ready to obey the orders of his King. Upon the first day of the week he was always at his post of duty. His counsel was sought by the old and young, and it was a beautiful sight every Lord's day to see the children greet this venerable man of God. He loved them dearly, and they all loved and respected him. His wife and children can look up through their tears with joy and gratitude that he has laid down his earthly fight and entered into that rest that awaits every faithful child of God. "And I heard a voice from heaven saying unto me, Write, Blessed are the dead which did to the Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them." Brother Cathey is not dead: them," Brother Cathey is not dead; the body is dead, his earthly dwelling house, but he lives on. While the church loses a faithful member, and while the wife loses a loving com-panion, upon whom she had leaned so long, and the children lose the counsel of a tender father, they should not be selfish to want him back from that happy rest. Just a few more years of labor and they may join him in that sunlit clime where sorrow, death, and "Be thou faithpain will never come. ful until death, and I will give thee a crown of life." Dawkins.

Sister Mayme A. Dawkins, of Rush Springs, Okla., died on January 4, 1919, and was buried in the Rush Springs cemetery on Sunday afternoon, January 5, in the presence of a very large audience of sorrowing friends. The writer was called to con-duct the funeral services. Had she lived until January 12, she would have been twenty-six years old. unmarried and was engaged in teaching school. She died of the dreaded Spanish influenza, which has carried so many away, and leaves a father, mother, one brother, and one sister to mourn her death; but our loss is undoubtedly her gain. Although so young and at that time of life when most young people are swept away by the follies of the world, Sister Dawkins was a noble, Christian girl. She had chosen to tread that strait and narrow pathway which Wisdom pre-scribes: "The path of the just is as the shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day." "Her and more unto the perfect day." ways are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace." When other gay and thoughtless young people were seeking the primrose path of carnal pleasures, folly, fashion, and pride, she chose to sit at the feet of Wisdom and listen to the voice of understanding, to hear instruction and live. Her place was always filled in church at all the services. She even often visited churches at distant places to assist in the protracted meetings, especially at Comanche, my own home church, thirty miles away. Instead of choosing some great worldly institution in which to complete her education, she selected Thorp Spring Christian Colwhere she could be surrounded with the wholesome and godly influences and instruction to be found there. O that all young people would select the path of wisdom! She was baptized into Christ in April, 1913, by Brother W. D. Bills. She is done with this transitory life and has entered that immortal state where death is swallowed up in victory. I knew Sister Mayme and her parents well. Their house was my home. I baptized her father into the one body. them I say: Let us look away from the sorrows of this strange existence, with its heartbreaking sorrows, to the city where there is no more death nor sorrow, where God shall wipe away all tears from our eyes.

Porch.

One of the saddest homes that I have been in this year (1918) is the home of Brother and Sister T. M. Porch, of Trumbull, Texas, formerly of Baker-ville, Tenn. These noble Christian parents in less than six weeks had to give up three sons who were in the bloom of manhood. They were taken down with the influenza and developed pneumonia, which caused their death. There is no better family in Trumbull than the Porch family. All are loved, honored, and respected as good citi-On Octozens and noble Christians. ber 17, 1918, Walter F. Porch died in Dallas. He left a wife and two chil-dren. Brother J. S. Porch was born on January 19, 1883, and died on November 27, He was baptized at the age of fourteen, with Masten, during a meeting held by Brother E. G. Sewell, in Tennessee. I was called upon to conduct the last two funerals-of Masten and William. These two boys, with their sister, Carrie, kept house, and a noble, sweet, Christian home it was. I have visited them often. They were so Christlike in their deportment. They were active in church work and as liberal givers as I ever saw to be in just ordinary circumstances. I heard several say in regard to William and Masten that two better boys could not be found in the country. They were, indeed, two noble, upright men in every respect and died true to God and the church. I was called to the bedside of William a few hours before he died, and he told me that he had tried to live a Christian life all along, but wanted to be sure that he was right with the church and God before he He asked me to bow down by his bedside and pray out loud for him. Nurses were so hard to get that it was absolutely necessary to have them where one could take care of all. In the same town, at another house, one son was getting up from pneumonia, and the dear old blind, partially paralyzed father and the precious mother lay sick with the influenza, suffering and mourning over the loss of their sons. Out in the cemetery at Ferris there are three new-made graves side by side, and there rest three noble young men. Thanks be to God, they were God's children. The dear old father said children. The dear old father said to me: "Brother Nelson, I can't see, but I wish I could be carried to my dead boy and feel of him." O, how sad this remark made me! Sick and cannot go, blind and cannot see my dear boy that is dead! Brother W. T. Kidwill was with me at the funeral of William and prayed a beautiful prayer, after which I said that this boy, like the one gone on before, believed and obeyed the gospel and lived as a Christian ought, and then I told of the promises to such people as re-corded in the Bible. I am sure that heaven is much sweeter to Brother and Sister Porch and the children, while earth is much sadder. May the lives of these young men become beacon lights to this noble family; and when they come to the beautiful these sons will welcome them, and then Brother Porch will see.

Christian Sympathy and Aid Badly Needed.

BY IRA B. HENTHORN.

C. S. Osterhus, a good, Christian man, his wife and their eleven children have been burned out of a home by a fire which consumed their house, several outbuildings, much clothing and household goods, besides a good quantity of onions and seed corn being held for the market, the proceeds of which were to have been applied against unpaid taxes and to lessenthis good man's heavy indebtedness. They live at Robbinsdale, a suburb of Minneapolis. Only two bedsteads were saved, one or two stoves, and some other household effects of little material value. Records of a religious publication published by Brother Osterhus for many years in the Norwegian language, in the interests of Christian unity, and which represented the labor of years, are destroyed. The combined efforts of those of the family who were at home, the village fire department, and some fire equipment from Minneapolis were without avail.

Brother Osterhus has been a preacher fighting fearlessly for the independence of the church from ecclesiastical control for years, and has during the last year or two worshiped with the little band here striving for the establishment of the pure gospel in this city. If there was ever a time when a proper manifestation of the spirit of Christian fellowship might make an impression and accomplish much in the way of relief and of endearing the brethren in Christ to one who has endured more trials than some of us will ever have to endure, this seems to be the time. The brother is deeply in debt and needs quick and abundant assistance. So far as we can learn, they are bearing their sorrow as becometh Christians, and are asking no help, but aid should be given. The few here will do what we can. Gifts should be sent at once to Wayne Taylor, treasurer, 36 Spruce Place, Minneapolis, Minn., and marked "Osterhus Fund." "Whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, even so do ye also unto them."

Letters That Inspire Confidence.

I wish very much that every reader this paper could spend sufficient time in my office to read the thousands of letters which I have received from all parts of the country. I have printed several hundreds of them in a booklet; but I wish you could see the originals, for I would like to have you realize the wonderful results which they report in the relief of dyspepsia, indigestion, persistent headache, rheumatism, kidney, bladder, and liver diseases, uric-acid poisoning, and other curable conditions due to impure blood.

Before my own health was restored by Shivar Mineral Water and I purchased this spring, and before I received all these letters from sufferers, I did not take very much stock in advertisements like this. I therefore cannot blame you if you doubt; but, my friend, I am absolutely convinced that the Shivar Spring is the greatest restorative mineral spring ever discovered, not excepting the famous spas of Europe. I have shipped this water to thousands of sufferers in all parts of the United States, and they almost invariably report either permanent restoration or beneficial results. That is why I make the offer contained in the following letter. Sign it now and mail it.

Shivar Spring, Box 21L, Shelton, S. C.

Gentlemen: I accept your offer and inclose herewith two dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Water. I agree to give it a fair trial, in accordwith instructions contained in booklet you will send; and if I report no benefit, you agree to refund the price in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns, which I agree to return within a month.

District of Columbia.

Washington, January 13.—The attendance was better last Lord's day than it usually is and every one seemed very much encouraged. The seemed very much encouraged. The members have "a mind to work," and some good work is being done. Funds are being raised to help the war sufferers, and, in addition to that, a good offering is made weekly to add to the building fund. The church discusses some interesting subjects in the evening service, and all are invited to have a part. Interesting addresses are made by the young men, and in this way we develop the talent of the church. Considering the number of congregations well planted in the United States, comparatively few have said by their actions that they want to help us build a house of worship in the national capital. We will soon have the funds to finish paying for the lot. When this is done, I hope and pray that more congregations will respond .- W. S. Long.

An Urgent Appeal.

BY H. C. SHOULDERS.

For more than three years I have been raising the money to secure a place of worship for the little band of disciples of Christ in Lexington, Ky. The place has been secured, but they owe nine hundred and ninety-five dollars on the property. The note is due on the second day of February, which is Sunday. This will give us till Monday, February 3, to pay the note. Recently I have been writing congregations, asking for a contribution to help remove the debt. To date I have received four hundred and eighty-five dollars and forty-three cents to be applied to the note, leaving a balance of a little over five hundred dollars yet to be raised. Brethren, with a very little effort this amount can be raised by the time the note is due.

To the congregations and individuals everywhere, let us make the fourth Sunday in this month "Lexington Day." This is one common work for us all. Let each congregation send just a small offering for the Lexington building fund. To every individual, if your congregation cannot send a small donation, won't you yourself place a one-dollar bill in an envelope and mail to me at Sellersburg, Ind., saying, "Apply this to the Lexington, Ky., fund?" Let us let it be said of us one time like it was when the people were bringing their offerings to build the tabernacle. "And all the wise men, that wrought all the work of the sanctuary, came every man from his work which they wrought; and they spake unto Moses, saying, The people bring much more than enough for the service of the work, which Jehovah commanded to make. And Moses gave commandment, and they caused it to be proclaimed throughout the camp, saying, Let neither man nor woman make any more work for the offering of the sanctuary. So the people were restrained from bringing. For the stuff they had was sufficient for all the work to make it, and too much." (Ex. 36: 4-7.) you, my brother, be one to help wipe out the Lexington church debt? Send your offering to me at Sellersburg, Ind., not later than January 27, and the debt will be wiped out and we will all be happy.

The following amounts have been received for the Lexington building fund: Previously reported, $1,923 .-55; Mount Zion congregation, Mackville, Ky., $5; Fairview congregation, Hardyville, Ky., $5; Corinth congregaion, Germantown, N. C., $5; church at McMinnville, Tenn., $5; Sugar Creek congregation, Gainesboro, Tenn., $5; Russell Street congregation, Nashville, Tenn., $10; church at Coopertown, Tenn., $12.17; church at Horse Cave, Ky., $10; church at Covington, Ind., $5; church at Blythedale, Mo.; $5; church at Estill Springs, Tenn., $5; church at Portland, Tenn., $5; church at Little Lot, Tenn., $5; church at Allensville, Ky., $10: church at Cookeville, Tenn., $5; church at Bohon, Ky., $10; church at Mount Juliet, Tenn., $5; some members meeting in private homes, Blackwater, Mo., $8.30; congregation at Salem, Ind., $6.35; Union Hill congregation, Gallatin, Tenn., $6; church at Lafayette, Tenn., $5; Dorris Chapel congregation, Eaton, Tenn., $5; church at Bellwood, Tenn., $5; Highland church of Christ, Louisville, Ky., $5; Jones Chapel congregation, Franklin, Tenn., $3; Mrs. John Ezell, Route 1, Franklin, Tenn., $1; Bates Haskins, Route 1, Franklin, Tenn., $1; A. O. Colley's Bible class, Pearl and Bryan Streets, Dallas, Texas, $5.66; Woodson Chapel congregation, near Nashville, Tenn., $5; "A Sister in Christ," Sellersburg, Ind., $5.

Other contributions are greatly needed to remove the debt on the property. Remember my address-Box 194, Sellersburg, Ind.

A Short Trip to Texas.

BY GEORGE W. FARMER.

At 10 A.M., December 10, I left my home for a short trip to Texas. Reaching Nashville at 11:30 A.M. and spending an hour and a half at the Gospel Advocate office, I then went to the Union Station. Boarding a Memphis train and leaving on regular schedule about 2 P.M., I believe, we reached Memphis at 11:15 P.M.-behind time. Missed connection with the train-Cotton Belt Route trainso had to stay in Memphis till 8 A. M. next day.

Leaving Memphis at that hour, I reached Gilmer, Texas, my first stopping place, at 3 A.M. the following day. On account of missed connections I failed to get to preach there on Wednesday evening, but it was announced for the following evening at seven o'clock; but the incessant rain and much sickness in the town caused the audience to be small that evening. The Gilmer congregation is small numerically, but it has some fine material in it.

From Gilmer I went to Pritchett in the afternoon of the 13th and preached to a fair audience at 7 P.M. At Pritchett I found a large congregation with a neat and very commodious house and in good working order. Here I was entertained in the home of Brother and Sister C. W. Ing. Brother Ing is one of our ablest Texas preachers, and he and his wife are held in very high esteem by the church at Pritchett Leaving Pritchett at 2 P.M. of the 14th, I arrived at Crandall about 8:15 P.M. I had an appointment there for next day-Lord's day. Here I had held meetings and preached a good deal besides. It was like getting home. I held several services and baptized my good friend, Mr. Fields. Owing to rain and so much sickness, we decided best to discontinue the meeting. There are no better people anywhere than at

On the 18th, switching around by Dallas, I dropped off at Ferris. No preaching there. Too much rain. I spent a day and night visiting old friends and also visiting the school, which was a delight to me.

From Ferris I went to Dawson, my old home town. I spent one day and two nights there shaking hands with brethren, sisters, and friends. But no preaching there then; school entertainment in the way.

From Dawson I went to Garrett and preached twice on the fourth Lord's day to appreciative audiences. this place I have preached more, perhaps, than at any other one place. It is the home of our well-beloved and venerable brother, V. I. Stirman, one of our oldest preachers living to-day. He has been and is my best friend, and a great help and encouragement has he been in my work. Brother Stirman is holding up well for a man of his age, but I was sorry to find Sister Stirman very sick. I wish that she may be much improved by now. May the blessings of our dear Heavenly Father rest richly upon Brother Stirman and family. It was a great treat to me to be with the Garrett congregation, notwithstanding many could not be out on account of sickness.

From Garrett 1 dropped down to Ennis to preach there Monday at 7 P.M.; but the weather turned very cold, so the audience was small. Here I met the consecrated and untiring worker, Brother Ben West, and wife. Brother West is doing a great work in Ennis, and he and his wife are held in very high esteem by all the people

From Ennis I went to Italy and spent three days with our daughter and family, taking my Christmas with

The latter part of the week I went back to Dawson to preach there on the fifth Lord's day. Here I preached two discourses to appreciative audiences. This was an occasion of much joy mixed with some sorrow, to me. It was a joy and a delight to meet with so many of my old friends, and especially my old students; but sadness came into my heart when I found so many had crossed over to the other land. After preaching in the afternoon and spending the intervening time shaking hands and saying good-by, I boarded the train at 7:30 P.M., homeward bound. I reached home, Lebanon, Tenn., at 10 A.M, December 31.

The Romantic Story of Southland's Favorite Shoe, EzWear.

Some five years ago, a prominent citizen of South Carolina, visiting New York on important business, chanced to meet the maker of a shoe built on new and unusual lines; an enthusiastic admirer of its most distinctive features, ease and comfort, had suggested the name EzWear; it was promptly adopted. The business man from the South, knowing how welcome such a shoe would be in his part of the country, urged that its remarkable qualities, including not only comfort, but style, durability and economy, be made known there. That this has been effectively done is proven by the enormous demand that has sprung up in the South for EzWear shoes. It is said that its sale there during the last twelve months has increased fully three hundred per cent. The distributor, Mr. J. R. Simon, of 1589 Broadway, Brooklyn, N. Y., says that all who wish to know about a shoe that combines all worth-while shoe qualities may have a copy of his money; saving shoe book for the asking.

The Restoration Movement.

RY E. R. SHEPHERD.

Near the close of the eighteenth century there arose in several of the denominational churches men who began pleading, more or less boldly, for a return to apostolic simplicity in doctrine and practice. Two of the bolder of these-Barton W. Stone, in Kentucky, and Alexander Campbell, in the Virginias-joined forces, and this union resulted in what is now called "The Restoration Movement of the Nineteenth Century." The plea these pioneers made for the abolition of all religious parties, with the consequent removal of party leaders and extinction of party names, was a unique one, and placed them in the position where, denying the right of men to legislate for God's people, they had no man-made theories to propagate, no ecclesiastical system to protect, no human creed to adhere to, but were free and unemcumbered to preach. with all its primitive power, simplicity, and attractiveness, the unsearchable riches of God's grace. Little wonder, then, that the work accomplished in a few years rivaled in its phenomenal success the growth of the early church. But-alas!-that which a short time ago was a movement to-day seems almost still. Is it because, like many other movements, it has run its course and, instead of gaining momentum, has stopped of its own weight, or is it because we to-day are not possessed of the fire and zeal of the nineteenth-century advocates of the great plea in John 17: 21? If the latter is the reason for its apparent lack of progress, can we not, as they did, also realize the urgent need for action to save the religious and secular world from its very self and for God? As we read of that thing of life rather than of mere numbers, the Jerusalem church, which, in spite of its persecutions and handicaps, evangelized the world in a brief thirty-three years, cannot we, with our freedom and superior advantages, also catch a vision of the story of the cross sounded into every corner of this great world before the darkness of sin settles more closely around the millions of men into whose hearts has never shone the illuminating ray of heavenly sunlight? India, they tell us, has three hundred million souls that know not the Christ; Japan and China, many millions more; the "Dark Continent"-for which I plead especially-is only now beginning to open its doors to the Christian religion, and we, "the restoration movement," are unprepared to enter. The need of men and funds to strengthen the all too feeble effort now being made in South Africa is urgent. Can

Those who object to liquid medicines can secure Peruna Tablets

writes:

"I wish to state that I always keep Peruna in the house. I think it is a good medicine to have on hand. If I commence taking a cold, I take Peruna and it breaks it up for me. It is also good for the Bronchial Tubes."

Peruna has served the American people for more than forty years. Those who know its value always have it at hand. Why not you?

a man be found? Will the funds be forthcoming? I rejoice to know that the financial support from this country has increased rapidly during the past few months, but the necessary man is still to be found.

What is our faith, my brother? Is it a mere abstract principle of the heart, or does it live and work through love to the glory of God? Shall we be a movement reaching out even to the darkest corner of dark Africa, or shall we be content to merely "hold what we have?" The answer is ours for the giving.

"God give us men! A time like this demands Strong minds, great hearts, And willing hands.'

The Church at Plant City, Fla. BY T. B. THOMPSON.

On the fifth Lord's day in December had the pleasure of meeting with the church at Plant City, Fla., and preaching for them twice. About this town and church I wish to say a few words.

This prosperous town is about twenty-two miles east of Tampa and has about thirty-five hundred inhabitants; wo main-line railroads and one branch line, with twenty-two passenger trains daily. It is located in the edge of one of the largest phosphate mining regions in the South; has six citrusfruit packing houses. Its best business is vegetable and strawberry raising, being located in an excellent trucking section. Farmers are now getting from thirty to forty cents per quart for their berries; and that price, I am told, will hold up until March, quite likely.

This leads me to speak of the church there, otherwise I would not have asked for space to publish the above. The membership of the church there is small, yet they have a good, wellseated, roomy house, which they built and paid for. Now, these brethren are anxious to locate some good, Christian families in and around their city to help build up the church and make it a factor for greater good in that section of country. One brother remarked to me that he would sell his grocery business to some brother and go into some other business in order to locate another Christian family with them.

Now, brethren, if you would like to move to Florida, here is a splendid chance to enjoy a good climate, get away from the cold winters of the North, make an easy living if you halfway hustle, and, best of all, you have a splendid chance to help in the greatest business on earth-building up the cause of our Master. If you are covetous, contentious, contrary, careless, and crosswise on everything looking to the interests of the church, we do not care to take our precious time getting you located; we had rather you would stay where the cause is more firmly planted, where you cannot do it as much harm. However, we are anxious to have any one who has a mind to help build up the church, and are willing to be of any assistance possible in helping them get a suitable location

Should any be interested in locating in or near Plant City, Fla., write H. C. Hanor, of that place, who will take pleasure in giving you information.

NUXATED IRON

"Say, Doctor, This Prescription Works Like Magic."

Physician Says Nuxated Iron Quickly Puts Astonishing Strength and Energy Into the Veins of Men and Brings Roses to the Cheeks of Nervous, Run-Down Women.

Ask the first hundred strong, healthy people you meet to what they owe their strength and see how many reply "Nuxated Iron." Dr. James Francis Sullivan, formerly physician of Bellevue Hospital, (Outdoor Dept.), New York, and the Westchester County Hospital, says: "Thousands of people suffer from iron deficiency but do not know that to take Thousands or people suffer from iron deficiency but do not know that the take Thousands or people is not believed." says: "Thousands of people suffer from fron deficiency but do not know what to take. There is nothing like organic fron—Nuxated Iron, to enrich the blood, make beautiful, healthy women, and strong, vigorous men. To make absolutely sure that my patients get real organic fron and not some form of the metallic variety, I always prescribe Nuxated Iron in its original packages. Nuxated Iron will increase the strength and endurance of weak, nervous, run-down folks in two weeks' time in many instances."

Manufacturers' Note: Nuxated Iron recommended above by Dr. Sullivan can be obtained from any good druggist with or without a physician's prescription on an absolute manufacturers' guarantee of success or money refunded.

Edifying as the Need May Be

When a Big Man Dies.

This journal joins with hundreds of others in lamenting the death of Theodore Roosevelt. He was in many respects the most original and most fearless of all our Presidents. Perhaps we could not epitomize his meteoric career in a better way than to say: When he was right, he was intensely right; and when he was wrong, he was intensely wrong. But whether right or wrong, he fought his battles with all the powers of his being. Many are saying, "We shall not see his like again."

The writer of the last chapter of Deuteronomy said: "There arose not a prophet since in Israel like unto Moses, whom the Lord knew face to face." But Moses, the man of vision, the man of peerless leadership among a million souls, must die. From the human side of affairs, the paths of glory lead but to the grave! But God had another man ready for the emergency. "The great Craftsman can always find another tool, sharpened and ready to his hand." To Joshua, the son of Nun, came the word of the Lord: "Moses my servant is dead; now therefore arise." A larger sphere opens, and he must become a larger and better man. During all the silent years his manhood had been cementing, and the material is at hand. God's purposes and processes have no blank pages and are often advanced by the removal of those who seem most essential to the success of great causes and bringing from obscurity a new instrument which he has been silently preparing for the foreseen occasion.

It is good to remember that faithfulness, not fame, is God's standard of service and the measure of reward. The towering summits may overshadow the foothills, but do not obliterate them. "To every man his work" is the rule. All cannot be leaders; but it is as noble to obey as to direct. The world selects its heroes, but God rewards the unrecorded service. The smallest task may be as great a test and expression of fidelity as the greatest achievement. Every man is a vital part of his living age. "All that a true soldier wants to know," wrote Henry Ward Beecher, "is that he understands his orders."

"Make Your Plans Large."

A writer in Onward relates how Mr. Moody, on the last day of his life, was listening to passages from the Bible as they were read to him by one of his sympathizing friends. At last he asked that the Bible be laid beside him, and he wrote on the margin of it: "If God be your partner, make your plans large." The trouble with most of us is that we do not make our plans large enough in life, and the reason why we do not is because we do not have the sense of being partners with God. We need to appropriate the beautiful thought of Bayard Taylor, who wrote the lines:

In my own hands my want and weakness are; My strength, O God, is thine.

"Hast thou not known? hast thou not heard?" questions the prophet Isaiah. "The everlasting God, Jehoyah, the Creator of the ends of the earth, fainteth not, neither is weary; there is no searching of his understanding. He giveth power to the faint; and to him that hath no might he increaseth strength. Even the youths shall faint and be weary, and the young men shall utterly fall: but they that wait for Jehovah shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles; they shall run, and not be weary; they shall walk, and not faint."

What are Christians put into the world for, except to do the impossible by the grace of God?

When We Leave Faith Out.

A while ago a daily paper presented a series of pictures in which one element was omitted, and the reader was asked to guess what element was left out and the change its presence would make. In one picture there appeared a man rushing forward with wild, outstretched hands, while men and women were scattering in every direction to keep out of the way. He seemed like a lunatic escaped from an insane asylum attacking a terrified and fleeing company. The element left out was merely a pocket handkerchief tied over his eyes. With this supplied, the scene was transformed into a harmless game of blindman's buff.

When the ten spies brought back their report of the land of Canaan, they presented just such a puzzle picture. It was a goodly country, "flowing with milk and honey," but a terrible place, impossible to conquer because of walled cities and mighty glants. But the spies left out of their description and advice the most important element—faith in God. We need to give heed, lest, like the Israelites, we leave out the most important element in our life and desire for success; lest we dwell on our difficulties and weak resources instead of upon God and his resources.

God and two men said, "Let us go up at once and possess it;" but ten men and the devil said, "We be not able." What a difference faith makes! G. Campbell Morgan gives us a fine sentence to remember: "What we do in the crisis always depends upon whether we see the difficulties in the light of God, or God in the shadow of the difficulties."

Why We Can, and Why We Can't.

It was the brilliant and polished Virgil who wrote: "They can, because they believe they can." But it remained for one of the later poets, not nearly so erudite as Virgil, but one "unheralded and unsung," to give us some lines that explain why certain people can't do a thing. Not very much for poetry, but brimful of common sense:

If you think you're beaten, you are,
If you think you dare not, you don't.
If you'd like to win, but think you can't,
It's almost a cinch you won't.
If you think you'll lose, you've lost.
For out in the world you find Success begins with a fellow's will—
It's all in the state of mind.

Full many a race is lost

Ere ever a step is run.
And many a coward fails

Ere ever his work's begun.

Think big, and your deeds will grow;
Think small, and you'll fall behind:
Think that you can, and you will—
It's all in the state of mind.

If you think you're outclassed, you are.
You've got to think high to rise;
You've got to be sure of yourself before
You can ever win a prize.
Life's battles don't always go
To a stronger or faster man,
But soon or late the man who wins
Is the fellow who thinks he can.

Attention, Sunday-School Teachers!

The conscientious teacher of the Bible is anxious to secure the best help available in the preparation of the lesson. Patient research not only improves and enriches the mind of the teacher, but makes the class work doubly interesting to the scholars. In addition to our quarterlies, we carry two excellent books that cover the International Sunday-school Lessons. The publishers of "Peloubet's Select Notes" claim that it is the "most valuable commentary in the world," because it is "scholarly, comprehensive, condensed, and practical." It covers every phase of the lesson, from treatment and explanation of text, with notes from the best commentators, to list of special books for further study along the lines of thought suggested.

"Tarbell's Teachers' Guide" is edited by Miss Martha Tarbell, Ph.D., and has been a general favorite for many years. The author has covered everything in the field of research and investigation that the enterprising teacher or scholar would like to know. Primary, Junior, Intermediate, Senior, and Bible-class teachers find in it full explanation of Bible texts, light upon difficult passages by the best biblical scholars, and discussion of present-day problems in teaching.

We will send either one of these valuable books for $1.25, postpaid; or, in combination with a new subscriber, we will send the Gospel Advocate for one year and either one of these commentaries for $3 to the same or separate addresses.

The Young People, edited by A. B. Lipscomb, is a highclass illustrated weekly of four pages. The editor's comments upon the lessons occupy one page. The price is fifty cents per single copy for a year, or five or more copies to one address for forty cents each.

"The Man of Sin." No. 2.

BY F. W. SMITH.

As was shown in a previous article, Paul intimated that "the man of sin" would not be developed until after his death. For further information as to who or what "the man of sin" was, we must rely upon authenticated church history. The language is very specific, in that the article points to only one such character or institution—viz., "the man of sin." The term, "man" is used in the sacred writings to designate an institution. In speaking of the church of Christ, composed of Jew and Gentile, the apostle says: "That he might create in himself of the two one new man." (Eph. 2: 15.) Hence, it is perfectly reasonable to conclude that "the man of sin" refers to an institution rather than an individual, and that an individual could be meant only as representing an institution.

CHURCH HISTORY.

No one at all familiar with church history will dissent from the statement that Mosheim's "Church History" is among the very best and most reliable of all such histories. I shall, therefore, rely upon this most eminently qualified historian for a description and designation of the only "institution" developed or revealed after Paul's departure that bears the characteristic marks of the pen of inspiration

In Maclain's translation of Mosheim, page 41, we read: "During a great part of this century [second] the Christian churches were independent with respect to each other; nor were they joined by association, confederacy, or any other bonds than those of charity. Each Christian assembly was a little State, governed by its own laws, which were either enacted or at least approved by the society: but, in process of time, all the Christian churches of a province were formed into one large ecclesiastical body, which, like confederate States, assembled at certain times in order to deliberate about the common interest of the whole. This institution had its origin among the Greeks, with whom nothing was more common than this confederacy of independent States, and the regular assemblies which met in consequence thereof at fixed times, and were composed of the deputies of each respective State. . . . These councils, of which we find not the smallest trace before the midle of this century, changed the whole face of the church, and gave it a new form; for by them the ancient privileges of the people were considerably diminished, and the power and authority of the bishops greatly augmented."

In the third century Mosheim (page 63) says: "It is also evident that in every province one of the bishops was invested with a superiority over the rest in rank and authority. This was necessary to the maintenance of that association of churches which had been introduced during the preceding century, and it contributed to facilitate the holding of general councils, and to give a certain degree of order and consistency to their proceedings."

In the fourth century, page 86: "To these minor councils, which were composed of the ecclesiastical deputies of one or more provinces, were afterwards added ecumenical (universal) councils, consisting of commissioners from all the churches in the Christian world, and which consequently constituted the church universal."

In the fifth century, page 114: "A variety of circumstances concurred to augment the power and authority of the Bishop of Rome, though he had not yet assumed the dignity of supreme lawgiver and judge of the whole Christian church."

Page 136: "In the sixth century the flatterers of the pope maintained the pontiff was constituted judge in the place of God, which he filled as the vicegerent of the Most High."

Thus the finger of history accurately points out a thing that fits the inspired picture of "the man of sin"—a thing that was in existence and at work in Paul's day.

THE FALLING AWAY.

The apostle affirms that the "falling away" (which was the great apostasy) and the "revelation of the man of sin" had to take place before the coming of Christ, and not at his coming. "Let no man beguile you in any wise: for it will not be [the coming of Christ], except the falling away come first, and the man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition." (2 Thess. 2: 3.) Here "the falling away" and "the man of sin" are inseparably connected, the "falling away" simply being the seed or the beginning of "the man of sin." Hence, it amounts to almost an absolute certainty that the Roman Catholic hierarchy, that great politice-religio institution which began to work in Paul's day as "the lawless one," and which came to its full maturity in the sixth century, is "the man of sin" described by the pen of inspiration.

"EXALTED ABOVE GOD."

This "man of sin," also called "the son of perdition," was to oppose God and exalt himself against all that is called God or that is worshiped. This is precisely what the church of Rome, through its head, has done, in that it claims the prerogatives of God himself. God reserves to himself alone the right to legislate or make laws for the guidance of his people, for the worship and service of man to him. Hence, the institution that would, through its accredited head, presume to set aside, alter, or change in the least degree the laws of God is exalting itself above God and opposing God. Has not the Roman Catholic Church done this very thing? Has it not substituted sprinkling for immersion and sought to convert bread and wine into flesh and blood? Has it not assumed the prerogative of forgiving sins, and actually sold indulgences to sin? Not only forgiving past sins, but for so much money giving men and women the right to sin. Did the God of heaven ever do such a thing as that? If not, did not the pope of Rome exalt himself above God? Has he not permitted himself to be worshiped, and even styled himself as God?

THE COMING OF "THE MAN OF SIN."

This is declared to be as follows: "Even he, whose coming is according to the working of Satan with all power and signs and lying wonders." (2 Thess. 2: 9.) Is it not a part of the Roman Catholic faith that the institution abounded with miracles and signs? Even to this good day such claims are made and believed by thousands of deluded people. I repeat, there is nothing in profane history that will fit the Bible description of "the man of sin," except the Roman Catholic Church; and that institution, in some form, will be on this earth when the Son of man comes. All this talk about a union that will do away with sects and denominations is a shallow dream. The only possible way for there to be but one religious body on this earth would be for the entire Protestant world to throw up hands, surrender, and walk solidly into the Roman Catholic camp, for the Roman Catholic Church will be here as "the man of sin" when Christ comes. Will Protestants surrender? When the sun grows old, the moon pales, and the stars go down to rise no more, then you may ask the same question. The perpetuity of the Roman Catholic Church is assured by the word of God as "the man of sin," and all the efforts at Christian union cannot change the matter. Men should be faithful in preaching and living the truth and let the question of Christian union take care of itself. Every man that believes the truth and obeys the truth is united with every other man that does the same things without making any other effort at union. Why not, then, let each one simply believe the truth and obey the truth without worrying over the condition of the religious world?

Theory and Practice.

BY JOHN T. HINDS.

There are no two propositions in the Bible more clearly stated than the following: "And ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." (John 8: 32.) "But whose looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work, this man shall be blessed in his deed." (James 1: 25.) Putting these into common, everyday speech, they mean that we must know the truth and obey it in order to be saved. This again means that we must have a correct theory and the practice of that theory; or, expressing it differently, it means that we must practice what we preach and preach what we practice. Accord and harmony between theory and practice is necessary for the sake of both consistency and success.

Theory equals the system or rules of conduct accepted, whether they be of divine origin or self-made. The former is the standard of life. Practice means the doing of what the theory calls for.

Some have no concern for either theory or practice. They are content, so far as God and the Bible are concerned, to remain strictly indifferent. They form the great "don't-care" class. Others are fairly ablaze with zeal and are sure that they must do something, but it does not make much difference what they do. Still others are so exceedingly particular about the correct theory that they spend all their time theorizing and have none left to carry out their own theory. It needs no argument to prove that all such persons are extremists and real failures.

The tendency of the members of the church of Christ has been to make their theoretical work stronger than their practical. They have gone before the public at all times when necessary to defend the theory. Their success in this line has been remarkable—the wonder even of their opponents—but their weakness has always been in a lack of consistent practice. This, though it affects not the theory, is extremely detrimental to the church. If we were as strong in actual practice as we are in telling what the truth is, our success would be marvelous.

Paul criticized his Jewish brethren because they had "a zeal of God, but not according to knowledge." He said their ignorance of God's righteousness caused them to go about to establish their own righteousness. His criticism was appropriate and deserved.

We have appealed to this language as our justification for criticizing our religious friends when they display so much misdirected zeal. Our course in this matter is also timely and correct. People who cover their ignorance of God's word by shouting "glory to God," "hallelujah," and other like expressions, are in the same class with the blind Ephesians who shouted, "Great is Diana of the Ephesians." Such outbreaks of religious fervor are usually true signs of Bible ignorance. The more zeal one has without knowledge, the worse it is for all concerned.

The whole history of mankind from a religious viewpoint shows that the truth saves. A falsehood told in Eden cost our ancestors their life; it robbed them of their first home; its power has always been the same—to deprive us of heaven and eternal life. If believing and obeying the falsehood took man away from God, surely the believing and obeying another falsehood will not bring him back to God. Since, then, salvation depends upon the truth, how earnestly we should try to have it ourselves as well as teach it to others! We should bring our zeal into harmony with the truth we have,

While we may justly rebuke others for their lack of knowledge, they may often as justly rebuke us for our lack of zeal. Paul's rebuke implies that there should be a proper balance between the two. Then, knowledge without zeal can no more be defended than zeal without knowledge. The trouble with people who are sure they have the truth is that they rely too much on the truth alone. The gospel saves only those who believe it. No one believes it who does not hear it. The truth, then, that is not heard is valueless. Medicine may cure the disease if taken, but in no other way. So the gospel will save when obeyed, but in no other way. This not only applies to first principles, but to Christian living as well. While we are criticizing the wild zeal of those in error, let us see to it that we present the truth with proper zeal. There is no more danger of falsehoods taking people to hell than disobedience of the truth. Paul says: "For not the hearers of the law are just before God, but the doers of the law shall be justified." (Rom. 2: 13.) "Physician, heal thyself," is good and sensible advice. The passages already presented in this article fix this point beyond any doubt. The question may be put thus: Do we believe what the Bible says on this matter just the same as what it says on what the truth is? If so, are we obedient? If not, do we appear any better in God's eyes than those who know not the truth? Really, does not the man who "knows his Lord's will," but prepares not himself, deserve to be beaten with "many stripes?" So taught our Lord. Ignorance is not excusable, but knowing disobedience is unquestionably deserving of punishment.

The matter, then, of first importance is to have the truth; the second, but of equal importance at least, is to obey that truth. Do we, as professed Christians, know our duty? Do we do it? Are we trying? Or do we content ourselves with knowing the truth and criticizing those who do not?

What about forsaking the assembly on Lord's day? What about giving as we are prospered? What about sending "once and again" to poor saints and missionaries? What about continuance in well-doing and avoiding the "very appearance of evil?" What about "growing in grace and the knowledge of the truth" and taking part in the reading, exhortation, and prayers? Suppose we all make a careful inventory of our resources and strive to make our zeal harmonize with our knowledge. Why not do it now? Let us make 1919 the best year of our lives.

Help the Fanning Orphan School.

BY E. A. E.

The following report is encouraging. It is submitted to show the appreciation of the school, to acknowledge the receipt of these amounts, and to stimulate others to give. Send all donations to A. N. Trice, care of Washington Manufacturing Company, Nashville, Tenn.

Nashville, Tenn., January 18, 1919.—Dear Brother Elam: I inclose herewith a list of donations received for the Fanning Orphan School since the appeal through the Gospel Advocate was published some weeks ago. I have endeavored to acknowledge receipt of all these promptly, but suppose you will also wish to publish the list in the Advocate.

Besides the donations mentioned on the list, I have also received from our esteemed superintendent, David Lipscomb, a Liberty Bond for fifty dollars; also from Brother R. W. Comer, of Nashville, a certificate of stock in the American Pharmacal Company, Nashville, Tenn., for five hundred dollars. I do not know the value of this stock, but their remedy, Carlstedt Liver Regulator, is highly recommended and widely known. In order to clear up all indebtedness, there is still lacking about one thousand dollars. But it is certainly desirable to reach that financial condition where we may be able to take all of the freescholarship pupils that may come within the requirements of the school who may offer for admission hereafter. We have been compelled in the past to turn away many such applications for lack of funds, and our indebtedness in the past has been caused by our overreaching our finances and taking on more free-scholarship pupils than we could pay for.

On behalf of the school and the board of trustees, I wish to thank all of the donors sincerely and gratefully,
Yours truly,
A. N. TRICE.

Following is the list of donations referred to in Brother Trice's note:

Richard H. Gill, Jr., Allensville, Ky., $10; R. H. Brother C. E. Coleman's Great Loss.

BY S. H. HALL.

The many friends of our brother, C. E. Coleman, of Macon, Ga., will be sorry to learn that on the morning of January 21 his most excellent wife was taken from him, leaving him and three little children—Charles H., Eloise, and Rosa—to continue life's way without that gentle touch that only a mother's hand can give. Nothing has so grieved me, of late, as the death of this great woman.

Many of our readers knew Sister Orlend Smith, as she was known before she was married to our brother, and for them I am writing these few lines, as well as for the many friends of Brother Coleman. I have never known of a happier couple than "Edwin" and "Orlena," as they were familiarly known. A man and wife could not have been more devoted to each other, and no woman has ever meant more to a man than Sister Orlena meant to Brother Coleman. The children are so sweet and have well stamped on their tender hearts that gentleness that only true religion in the hearts of the father and mother can give.

Perhaps but few have thought of it, but, to speak the truth as it is, I would have to call Sister Orlena the mother of the splendid work we now have in Macon. Some ten years ago she wrote me of her sister, Lyde C. Walton, who then lived at Byron, Ga. She had a feeling of fear that her sister would become cold and careless away from the church influences she had formerly enjoyed, and she was insisting that I go there with a tent for a meeting and she would see that the expenses were met. Arrangements were perfected to this end, and Brother Flavil Hall and I were to go there together for the revival; but a near nervous breakdown forbade my going, and Brother Flavil did a good work there without my help. Sister Orlena was there with her presence, prayers, and financial support. Brother J. A. Perdue went later for a short revival, and soon Sister Walton moved to Macon and the work continued there; and to-day we have in East Macon a house and lot paid for and a splendid congregation worshiping regularly in it, all of which is the outgrowth of a work that Sister Orlena began and which was so well continued by Sister Walton. Sister Orlena never forgot the work, but continued her prayers and offerings. The one great reason for having Brother Coleman to move to Macon was that these two sisters might live and work together. How beautiful it was for her to die with the work she so much loved!

How my heart goes out for Brother Coleman just now! He needs our prayers and words of comfort. To intensify his sorrows, this great loss from his own home followed so quickly the loss of his oldest brother in Birmingham, Ala. Sister Orlena and the children went over to Sister Walton's to stay while he was away attending his sick brother. How sad to think that on returning he found his wife with pneumonia and two of the children in bed with the "flu." And hardly a week had passed when she, too, passed by way of death into the land from which none return. Brother Coleman, we love you, and hundreds pray for you in your sore distress. God will bring to you blessings in spite of the darkness through which you now find It difficult to see. The loss is great, but you must think of the blessedness of having such friends as your two sisters-in-law, Sister Walton and Sister Herbert, and that most excellent brother-in-law, in the person of Brother Herbert, to help you. Through them God will bless you with all needed help with the children, and, in spite of your loss, they will be mothered and reared just as Sister Oriena so much desired herself to rear them.

It would be so much like Christ would have you do, if the friends and old schoolmates of Brother Coleman would remember him with a letter or card, and even in a more substantial way, by addressing him at 108 Delaware Avenue, Macon, Ga.

For some years, at Christmas time, a good sister has been laying a wreath upon the grave of a dear departed friend, but last Christmas she used the money instead to bless and comfort the little hunger-stricken children across the sea. Her name appears in the list above. Her thoughtful action both helps the living and honors the dead. I am reminded of a fine sentence by J. H. Jowett. He said: "What we do in our bereavement is very momentous." Along the road of humble, consecrated service even death is defeated, being made to minister to the glory of God.

The following letter is self-explanatory:

My Dear Mr. Lipscomb: In the name of the Nashville Committee for the Fatherless Children of France, and especially in the name of the destitute war orphans of France, I want to thank you for your most generous contribution of one thousand dollars, which will provide aid for twenty-seven French orphans for one year. Kindly, through your paper, extend thanks to those who made this beautiful gift possible. There is no relief work being done in Europe at the present time more needed than that which is being done by the Fatherless Children of France Society to aid the children of the brave men who laid down "their lives for France and the world's good cause."

Please accept our thanks and the gratitude of the little ones "over there." Sincerely yours,

Anna Russell Weaver, Chairman, Nashville Committee Fatherless Children of France, Sam H. Orr.

It will doubtless be very interesting for our readers to know the names, ages, and addresses of the twenty-seven fatherless children of France who will be supported for one year through their generosity. Here are their names

The Difference Between a Church Messenger and a Missionary Society.

BY M. C. K.

The brother, whose name at his own request is again withheld and whose queries on the missionary society were recently answered in our columns, calls for more light on certain points which are not yet clear to him. Like many others who do not see the real reason for the opposition to the society, he seems not to grasp, with clearness and appreciation, the underlying and characteristic principle involved in the ecclesiastic polity set forth in the New Testament; and we cheerfully make another effort to help him by answering his queries in the light of that principle. This time he makes the following statement of his case:

According to your recent article on the golden mean, the churches may make use of a messenger as a medium through whom to mutually advise with one another on the sending, support, and recall of their missionaries. And the question presents itself: Why may they not as consistently not only advise, but also act to these ends through this same medium? Why may they not through this messenger transact the business matters incident to the sending, support, and recall of the missionaries? Paul, for instance, collected, carried, and distributed funds for the Surely it will be admitted that they can. Then. to get at the issue in a little different way, and at the same time in a more fundamental and concrete way, just where do the purposes and actual work of the "board of control" in the so-called missionary society transcend the purposes and actual work of such a messenger? The "board" is merely the medium through which the churches act in these matters after having advised with one another through their convention committee, just as the messenger is the medium through which they might act after having mutually advised with one another through him. If not, why not? In what particular or particulars is it not? And if the "board" as such presents an example of centralized control independent of all control either direct or indirect on the part of the church or churches, so does the above messenger. If not, why not? And again, in what particulars?

For the sake of both order and clearness, we shall number and answer his points as they appear in his own statement.

1. Concerning church messengers, he says: "According o your recent article on the golden mean, the churches may make use of a messenger as a medium through whom to mutually advise with one another on the sending, support, and recall of their missionaries. And the question presents itself: Why may they not as consistently not only advise, but also act to these ends through this same medium?" They may to the full extent of their own selfgoverning action, and we have said nothing to the contrary; but we have before said, and so now say again, that, while a church, either in planning for its own separate action or for action in cooperation with other churches, may use a messenger as a medium of communication between itself and other churches, it cannot, without violating New Testament order, transfer to such a messenger the matter of authority and control, either in missionary work or in anything else, which God has definitely placed in the churches themselves. When a church messenger delivers to another church the message intrusted to it and returns the answer, if an answer be required, it has exhausted the function divinely assigned to it, and has nothing further to do as such a messenger until a similar duty is committed to it.

2. He asks: "Why may" the churches "not through this messenger transact the business matters incident to the sending, support, and recall of the missionaries?" To this we reply that, without the slightest violation of any principle of New Testament order, so far as we can see, the churches may "through this messenger transact" all "the business matters" they please; but they cannot, without such violation, transfer to such a messenger the authority and control which God has placed in them, thus placing themselves, as is done in the case of the missionary society, where they are completely shorn of power, with absolutely no voice whatever in the selection, support, or recall of missionaries, or any control at all in missionary work, not even so much as in the disbursement of their own missionary funds. This is exactly the attitude of the churches in the missionary society arrangement. It would be just as much out of place to clothe a church messenger with such authority and control as it is to clothe a missionary society with it. "Paul" indeed "collected, carried, and distributed funds for the churches;" but he did not have transferred to himself, nor to any of the church messengers to whom he refers, the authority and control in question. With him the local church, in all cases and under all circumstances, was left entirely independent and in supreme control.

3. Our brother further asks: "Where do the purposes and actual work of the 'board of control' in the so-called missionary society transcend the purposes and actual work of such a messenger?" Precisely in the matter of authority and control over the churches in so far as missionary work is concerned. Let the very significant and undeniable fact be kept before us and never forgotten that, "in the so-called missionary society," the churches are divested of all power in the selection, sending, support, and recall of the missionary, not even having any voice in the disbursement of their own missionary funds or in the kind of teachers whom their funds shall support, all of this power being transferred to the central "board of control." And here is the one vital point at which we feel compelled to demur; for, as the careful student of history must see and as we have so often pointed out, centralization has been the bane of the church in all the ages and the one fatal rock on which it has run aground.

4. He then adds: "The board is merely the medium through which the churches act, . . . just as the messenger is the medium through which they might act." No, no, dear brother; this is very far from being the case. If what he here assumes were true, we would urge no objection to the missionary society; but it is not only not true, but the missionary society, instead of merely doing what the churches tell it to do, does what it pleases and when it pleases and where it pleases, in the selection, sending, and recall of missionaries, and no church on earth has any power to prevent it.

5. Finally, he says: "If the 'board' as such presents an example of centralized control independent of all control either direct or indirect on the part of the church or churches, so does the above messenger." Again, this is very far from the case. "The above messenger," if he acts only in the capacity of a New Testament church messenger, has no "centralized control" at all, and no control in any other way or in any other sense, except to deliver the message with which the church has intrusted him. When this is done, he has exhausted all the power and has filled the only function divinely assigned to him. He is merely a servant of, and not a master over, the churches with supreme authority and control over their missionary work. His function and that of the missionary society are the width of the poles apart, with practically nothing in common so far as missionary work is concerned.

In conclusion, we feel confident that, if thoughtful brethren of the society will properly weigh, in the bright light of history, what they in common with all of us admit to be the simple ecclesiastic order unquestionably taught in the New Testament with its local church independence, they will see the danger which lurks in any sort of centralization of power in religion. May the Lord help them and all of us to calmly and dispassionately weigh all the facts connected with the one vital issue involved.

Sister Jelley's Sickness and Death.

BY J. C. M'Q.

The two letters given below, copied from the Christian Leader, are self-explanatory:

November 22, 1918.—Messrs. F. L. Rowe, J. C. McQuiddy, and G. H. P. Showalter: At Mr. Jelley's request I write to let you know his estate. Mr. and Mrs. Jelley have both had a relapse, and now their five children also are down with the influenza epidemic, which is raging so terribly in India. Mr. Jelley has received about thirteen hundred dollars to pay their passage home; this is probably three hundred dollars less than enough. (See Thomas Cook & Sons' estimate, already sent you.) In addition to this, their expenses for food, clothing, and rent up to March or April must be made, as Mrs. Jelley will be unable to leave before that time. Also, needing money for medicine and nursing, their medical expenses will not be as high for all seven of them as were those of Mr. S. O. Martin alone; but still they must be very high, for Mrs. Jelley requires constant nursing day and night, and there are three small children in the family who have to be watched over constantly, and doctor's fees and medicines also come high.

high. Faithfully yours, KHIYALI RAM. Pastor Presbyterian Church, Dehra Dun, India.

Dehra Dun, U. P., India, 3:18 A.M., November 26, 1918.-Dear Brother Rowe: All the harm that brethren could do me is done now. At half an hour past midnight my sainted wife went to be with Jesus. They cannot neglect her more or wound or traduce her more; and as for me, the greatest blow which is possible in life has fallen upon me. I am indifferent about the rest. Pray for us.

Wife has sown the precious seed with weeping; no doubt she will reap with joy.

Your brother in Christ,

E. S. JELLEY.

Brother Jelley sends an account of Sister Jelley's death to Brother Rowe, with request that he send copy of the letter to me. It is always sad when our loved ones leave us, sad especially for those who are left behind, but not sad for those who are ready to go to their eternal reward. Brother Jelley has the sympathy of all faithful Christians In his great loss, and especially since his wife died away from home just a short while before they were expecting to return home. But may we not find comfort in the thought that the thirteen hundred dollars was received before her departure, and that while she was not permitted to return to her home in this country, the Lord in his wisdom and goodness has seen fit to remove her to that house of many mansions where separations are unknown, where eyes are never dimmed with tears and where hearts bleed no more? All Christians sympathize deeply with Brother Jelley and his children. In this hour we can only commend him to the God who doeth all things well, who is a father to the motherless children, and who will give Brother Jelley the wisdom to rear them in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, provided he is faithful and ever clings to him.

Brother Jelley first wrote us that he would need twelve hundred dollars to bring him and family home. Later we received a card from him that he was in need of immediate funds, so I cabled him one hundred dollars. I then cabled him thirteen hundred dollars in answer to his request for twelve hundred dollars to bring him and family home, making fourteen hundred dollars in all that I cabled him.

On November 8, 1918, Brother Jelley wrote an article for publication in the Gospel Advocate. In that article he says that the Spanish influenza has been raging in India as elsewhere. He tells us that in Bombay the daily death rate from that cause was eight hundred. He and his family had the influenza, but all save his wife were recovering. He says: "Mrs. Jelley is worse; she had to have the doctor all night last night. Expensive, but unavoidable." That our readers may judge for themselves, I give some extracts from the article to which I refer. Transportation is more since Brother Jelley wrote for twelve hundred dollars. He writes:

Upon my arrival in Dehra Dun, I learned that Brother McQuiddy had cabled me something like thirteen hundred dollars for our home-coming. I thanked God and took courage, although the surprise of it set me all of a tremble and gave wife a chill. What pleased us at the time was not so much the fact that we are actually going home as the fact, demonstrated in cold cash, that the brethren care for God bless them!

My estimate of thirteen hundred dollars was based upon the rate of exchange before President Wilson tinkered with our rate of exchange and brought the price of rupees up. They have risen in value until, whereas formerly we got more than three rupees for a dollar, now we get about two and three-fourths rupees. Of course that will make a dif-In addition, the new baby will make ference on our fares. a difference of something like one hundred dollars; and as we will not be able to start till we can get passage (1 have heard of as many as two hundred missionaries waiting for passage at one time), which will be in February or March, we will need money regularly to live upon until then. A word to wise and thoughtful brethren is sufficient; only, please do not put off assistance too long. want to pay up our debts and start in March at the latest, but we cannot do so without assistance. Perhaps you did not know I was in debt. Still, you could have found out by a little thinking. When you stop sending a brother money in war time, it is not likely some one else will take your place. As a matter of fact, our deficit has mounted up to about one thousand dollars, which could easily be made up by every one sending me the amount he would have sent since the first of the year if some one had not induced him to stop contributing. Some, however, will not do so; so, if the Lord touches the hearts of others, they should heed it in this matter. No, we are not in debt fully a thousand dollars. I had a little money saved from my salary when I came out. It is all gone now, and I am in debt as my reward for seven years of service. I do not think the brethren would wish to have it so. "No man warreth at his own expense." And when I get home, I do not want to be compelled to again ask your assistance; but I shall have nothing with which to support my family and my mother, except such common laboring work as I can find for months to come, unless at least a part of the deficit is made up.

Brother Jelley also expresses the hope in his article that he will be able to get another government position, but thinks this is unlikely, as he is now past forty years of age. He has no regrets to express for what he has lost and thinks that eternity alone can reveal the good that has been done. Notwithstanding all of his hardships, his comparative bad health, his failure to be able to work all the time, he says: "At any rate, I am extremely grateful to the true brethren and sisters who have so quickly sent me the money to come home. I trust that they will not fail of their reward." He also reports funds received, as follows:

For October I received $4.99 from a sister in Washington. This month, however, I have received $24.50 through Brother Rowe, and $22 through Sister Nellie Straiton; also $10 for workers from "A Sister," Sherman, Texas. She will receive her receipt from one of the workers direct. The workers have received very little to live on during these hard times, but they have been true. One of the workers lost his wife by influenza. The latter leaves several small children.

After cabling the thirteen hundred dollars to Brother Jelley, I did not know just when he would leave India for home. Since that time we have received two hundred and twenty-two dollars and seventy-eight cents for Brother Jelley, which we are ready to cable him in order to complete the sum necessary to bring him home. I am firm in the conviction that Brother Jelley should be brought home from India. There have been conflicts and misunderstandings among the workers there and such conduct as should not exist among Christians. Until these matters are rectified, the Gospel Advocate does not see its way clear to support the workers now in India. We pray the Lord to give us the wisdom to do the right thing, and to do only that which will enhance and advance the cause of Christ.

"The Reconstruction Period."

BY E. A. E.

Much is being said now in political papers, farm papers, magazines, and religious journals about "reconstruction" and "the reconstruction period." A farm paper had something to say recently of interest and profit about "the reconstruction" of the sheep industry, and in another column of the same issue of that paper something was said about the reconstruction of the world. Political papers speak of the reconstruction of things political—governments, their constitutions, laws, and rulers. Religious journals speak of the reconstruction of things religious.

The purpose of this article is to deal to a limited extent with things religious.

We know what reconstruction means.

In the first place, then, it is perfectly in order to raise the question, what things religious need reconstructing?

1. Does Jehovah, the only true and living God, with his unfathomable attributes of mercy and justice, grace and righteousness, love and light, wisdom and power, need reconstruction? "From everlasting to everlasting" he is

God. (See Ps. 90 and numerous other scriptures.) man-made gods-"the mammon of unrighteousness," human wisdom and culture, "the lordly intellect," the lusts and passions of the flesh (see Rom. 16: 18; Phil. 3: 19), as much as any image of any heathen nation groping its way in deepest darkness-are veritable idols and their service is idolatry. Covetousness is idolatry. (Col. 3: 5.) There is a "god of this world" that has "blinded the minds of the unbelieving, that the light of the gospel of the glory of Christ, who is the image of God, should not dawn upon them." (2 Cor. 4: 4.) Jehovah, God, cannot be changed, or "reconstructed," to suit the ambitions and lusts and culture of one nation, the sympathies and sentiments and refinements of another, or the pleasure seeking and civilization of still another. He is the same at all times to all peoples of the earth. There is no real culture, civilization, happiness, or permanent peace without submission to his righteous and holy will. Jesus, who came down from heaven, not to do his own will, teaches all to pray not their will, but God's will, be done, and that God's will may be done on earth as it is in heaven. God is, and will be, the Supreme Ruler of the universe. Rom. 1: 18-32 presents a most fearful picture of all peoples of any agethis "new age" or any past age-who have forgotten God, have not the knowledge of God in their hearts, or have not the fear of God before their eyes. Let us study this passage; let us note the different and abominable sins it specifies, and then let us be impressed with one of the first evils which befall those who do not acknowledge God and do not glorify him as God-namely, they "become vain in their reasonings and their senseless hearts" become darkened. Boasting of their wisdom, they become fools before God. A failure to acknowledge God, forgetfulness of God, and ungodliness are the foundation sins of the sins named in this passage.

2. Can Jesus, the Christ, the Son of God, be reconstructed to suit the "new age" with its wisdom and progress? Christ is the Lamb of God that takes away the sin of the world (John 1: 29) of any and of all ages. His blood cleanses from all sin (1 John 1: 7), and without the shedding of his blood there is no remission of sin (Heb. 9: 22; Matt. 26: 28). He is forever "the way, and the truth, and the life," and in no age can people come to God except through him. (John 14: 6.) Rivers of human blood shed on fields of battle cannot save one soul. Is it not both idolatry and blasphemy to teach that men are like Christ in this and will be saved because they have laid down their lives for their country? This is in no way like Christ. Christ died for his enemies, and soldiers die trying to kill theirs. When Christ was reviled, he reviled not again: when he suffered, he threatened not; by his stripes sinners are healed; in this he became an example, that we should walk in his steps (1 Pet. 2: 20-25); and he prayed on the cross for the ones who nailed him to it. Nations that do not accept the true and living God and Jesus the Christ teach in their idolatry that their soldiers fighting for their country go to their heaven when killed on the field of battle. Is this the reconstruction which must come after the world war? Must Christians turn back to heathen philosophy and superstition?

3. Can the Holy Spirit and, therefore, "the fruit of the Spirit" be "reconstructed?" Can the spirit of the world ever become the Spirit of Christ, or the Spirit of Christ ever become the spirit of the world? These spirits are antagonistic. "For the flesh lusteth against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh; for these are contrary the one to the other; that ye may not do the things that ye would." (Gal. 5: 17.)

Now the works of the flesh are manifest, which are these: fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, sorcery, enmities, strife, jealousies, wraths, factions, divisions, parties, envyings, drunkenness, revelings, and such like; of which I forewarn you, even as I did forewarn you, that they who practice such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God. (Gal. 5: 19-21.)

Contrasted with these works of the flesh is the fruit of the Spirit;

But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, kindness, goodness, faithfuiness, meekness, self-control; against such there is no law. And they that are of Christ Jesus have crucified the flesh with the passions and the lusts thereof. (Verses 22-24.)

What reconstruction can any "new age" demand or make of this beautiful and wonderful fruit of the Spirit? Can the Spirit produce any other fruit in any age?

4. The gospel of Christ "is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek" (Rom. 1: 16), because of its facts, its commandments, its promises, its hope, and its holy life. Until men can be saved without the death of Christ for their sin, his shed blood unto the remission of their sins. his resurrection for their justification, his ascension and life in the presence of God as their Priest and Advocate to make intercession for them, his coming again to receive them unto himself, and without holy living in order to be found without spot and blameless in his sight when he does come, they cannot be saved without the gospel. They cannot reach Christ, enter into Christ, receive all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ, die in Christ, and be saved by Christ, in disobedience to the gospel of Christ. The will of God cannot be changed, revised, or modified.

All flesh is as grass, and all the glory thereof as the flower of grass. The grass withereth, and the flower falleth: but the word of the Lord abideth forever. (1 Pet. 24, 25.)

To argue for any reconstruction of "the gospel of peace," which is called also "the gospel of God," "the gospel of Christ," and "the gospel of our salvation," and which is the will of God, is to question the wisdom and mercy and power of God. The anathemas of God fall upon the man or angel from heaven who would dare to change or to pervert the gospel. (Gal. 1: 7-9.) The remedy for sin must be, and is, the same in all ages, dark or enlightened, heathen or civilized, ignorant or learned, and the gospel is everlasting.

5. Can the "pure and undefiled religion before our God and Father" be reconstructed? Shall people not continue to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction and keep themselves unspotted from the world? (James 1: 27.) There is great need of the practice of this religion. All other religions are vain. Every man-made religion is a false religion. Keeping "unspotted from the world" may be the part of pure and undefiled religion which many think needs reconstructing, because most church members and a majority of the preachers, considering all sects, have more of the spirit of the world, and especially of the "new age" and "reconstruction period," than of Christ. But Christianity is the same always and cannot be adapted to the spirit and ways of the world. The true and pure and godly Christian life is always the same.

6. Must not God, who is a Spirit, be worshiped now "in spirit and truth?" (John 4: 24.) God forbids going "beyond that which is written" (1 Cor. 4: 6), and declares that abiding in him and in Christ and being saved depend upon abiding in the teaching of Christ (2 John 9). All worship of God to-day after the precepts and doctrines and ways of men is vain worship. (Mark 7: 1-9.) There can be no "reconstruction" of the pure and true worship of God.

7. The church of the New Testament, of which Christ is the foundation, the builder, the head, the ruler; which he has bought with his own blood; which is the habitation of God through the Spirit; and which God has made "the pillar and ground of the truth," needs no reconstruction. It was constructed in the wisdom and grace and power of God, and its construction is as perfect in all respects as God's wisdom and mercy and power could make it. Can the wisdom and spirit of the "new age" improve upon God's building and his construction of it?

There is one body, and one Spirit, even as also ye were called in one hope of your calling; one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is over all, and through all, and in all. (Eph. 4: 4-6.)

All these things of God are the same yesterday, to-day, and forever.

It is still true and will be forever true that God's thoughts and ways are not man's thoughts and ways, and that as high as the heavens are above the earth, God's thoughts and ways are above man's thoughts and ways. (Isa. 55: 8, 9.)

It is still true that the way of man is not in himself and that it is not in him—his wisdom—to direct his steps. (Jer. 10: 23.)

It is still true that in the "new age" and "reconstruction period" the wisdom of the world is foolishness with God.

It is still true that in the "new age," as it has been in all ages of the past, men in their wisdom—the wisdom of the world—begin at the wrong end of things in religion to reconstruct. It seems that they would reconstruct God, Christ, the Holy Spirit, the scheme of redemption, the Bible, and the church, if not heaven, to fit the wisdom and theories and practices of the age; whereas it is themselves that must be reconstructed. Men must yet be born of God, born from above, in order to become the children of God; born of water and the Spirit in order to enter into the kingdom of God. (John 3; 1-15.) Men must yet do the will of God in order to be saved, and his will cannot be changed. (Matt. 7; 21-27.)

God, Christ, the Holy Spirit, and the Bible must be rejected and repudiated, or the gospel must be preached and obeyed as in the days of the apostles and the church must stand as constructed by the Lord in the New Testament. This must be, or men must make gods, saviors, spirits, and religious organizations ad infinitum to suit their vain conceptions and the wisdom of the age.

Many preachers must reconstruct both their practice and their preaching. How many have turned from preaching the word-Christ, and him crucified-to preaching that which is called for by the world! Their former sermons had to be changed to a great extent or set aside all together to suit the spirit and demand of "the age." Now they must repent, go back to preaching the gospel-pure, simple, and powerful-preaching peace on earth and good will to men; lead their audiences back to the principle of setting their affections upon things above, of being not conformed to this world, of seeking first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, of bearing the fruit of the Spirit, of loving their enemies, of loving their neighbors as themselves, and of loving God with all their minds and hearts and souls and strength; or they must suffer the fearful consequences of not doing so. These are most fearful considerations. But the space is full.

One of the greatest blessings of life, if we only stop to think of it, is the separateness of all its little days. Once in a great while there comes a time of stress and fear and peril—sickness, perhaps, and weeks of watching—when the days and nights all run together. There is no little bridge between and no new start anywhere. We could not bear it long to live that way. Thank God for nights and mornings and glad, fresh, new beginnings.—Selected.

"The Conquest of a Continent."

(Being a lesson learned for Christ at King Solomon's Mines,)

BY F. L. HADFIELD, BULAWAYO, AFRICA.

We, a company of missionaries, are being jolted along in a springless wagon behind a team of trotting oxen. After passing through an extensive valley, we see in front of us a high granite ridge. We mount this and are descending the other side, when suddenly there bursts upon our view a sight that for sheer romantic interest cannot be surpassed in all the world. Buried amidst rocky hills, with tall, green trees overhanging its roofless walls, is the great gray-granite temple of Zimbabwe.

In what remote age was it built? Who were its builders? What was the form of worship conducted there? These and kindred questions are constantly being asked, but never convincingly answered. Yet one thing is sure: that before the disappearance of water, possibly many centuries ago, left the place an uninhabitable waste, it was the center of great activity in the getting of gold. The basin-like hollows worn in the solid rock and the rounded stones used for pounding the quartz that are still found lying among the grass are evidently the primitive stamp batteries, while the endless maze of walls surrounding the temple and the fort speak of a considerable population.

Thus it comes that some authorities linking ancient history with ancient buildings say that Great Zimbabwe was once the site of King Solomon's Mines.

But it is not the elliptical temple with its narrow entrances, each one blocked by a solid circular tower of granite, so that no view of the interior can be gained from the outside, nor the fort with its perpendicular walls rising from the steep face of the rocky hill near by, that claims our chief attention. We are there at the invitation of the Dutch Reformed missionaries of Morgenster (Morningstar), a mission station about three miles distant, and are helding our Rhodesian Missionary Conference. There I learned a lesson.

Murrays and Louws were around you on every siderelations by blood or marriage of the saintly Andrew Murray, whose devotional writings have attained world-wide reputation. It is not, perhaps, too much to say that his influence was, by the grace of God, responsible for planting in the wilderness the Morningstar Mission and many other missions of the Dutch Reformed Church of South Africa.

The earlier attitude of the Dutch here toward the native in spiritual things is well remembered. It is almost needless to recall the story of Robert Moffat, who asked to be allowed to preach to the native servants of a Dutch farmer. The man sprang up exclaiming that he would as soon call in the baboons from the hills to hear the gospel. Yet today the Dutch Reformed Church is one of the foremost missionary bodies in the country, its money and its workers coming almost entirely from South Africa.

Chatting about this wonderful transformation with a Presbyterian missionary, I find that others are learning a lesson from it; that the Presbyterian Church at home systematically reduces its contributions to this country by twelve hundred and fifty dollars per year, and that the Presbyterian Church in South Africa automatically takes it up.

The lesson is a striking one. The church that, desiring to evangelize the native races of South and Central Africa, devotes its direct efforts only to those natives and to raising money overseas, is making a strategic blunder. We should be doing in the spiritual war what we hear so much about in the European war—striking in two directions at once. It should have one division of its soldiers of the cross striking at the white population, while another is attacking the black. The Dutch Reformed Church has clearly demonstrated that it is possible to have a church composed of South African whites so imbued with the missionary spirit that they themselves will do great things for the evangelization of the natives.

Is not our little cause on the Rand a striking case in point? Our European membership there is a mere handful; but if you have read George Khosa's report that was attached to our last article, you will have seen that he has started eight schools on mines and two or three small causes in Portugese East Africa, and that he has won for Christ about one hundred and seventy souls, but that he never could have done it without the help of those few whites.

Is not the conclusion obvious? In urging our great plea for the union of all God's people in a church formed upon the beautiful and simple New Testament plan, and in seeking the conversion of the South African native, we must never ignore the European population. The one is the natural stand-by of the other; and though it is, as a rule, necessary to have separate congregations, yet they should move forward hand in hand, so far as progress is concerned.

That funds for the native work would eventually be forthcoming from the white congregations is not the greatest advantage. Each of these congregations would develop if from the first those who gathered them inculcated the true gospel spirit, and in time we should be drawing our missionaries themselves from these same congregations. Thus, instead of having to get men from overseas to come to a country whose race problems are most difficult to understand, we should gradually have a body of men in the mission field who from their earliest days were acquainted with these problems.

Our white population is not, as it is in India, chiefly an administrative class. In our large towns it is as dense as in Australia or the middle-sized towns of America; but on this point I hope to speak more fully in my next article.

A great change is coming over the white folks here. The influence of missionary and nonmissionary writers is making itself felt. Men are conceding that the native has a right to expect of us uplifting and upbuilding of mind and heart. There is still a large and unreasoning section who think that the native is here only for our benefit, but with a considerable and a growing class it is otherwise. Typical of this better attitude I may quote the words of the Director of Education for Rhodesia, who, when he heard that I was leaving for the Rand, wrote to me on the subject of native education: "I have been glad to be associated with many missionary friends in work which I believe to be an essential part of the duty of the white race toward the native and colored populations in the midst of which our homes are placed."

God is opening a great door in South Africa. Who will help to enter in? We need men of consecrated common sense, full of zeal tempered with discretion, and, above all, filled with the Holy Spirit, to help in either European or native work. In the former they must be men who will inspire with a true missionary spirit the congregations that God will help them to gather, for thus they will be greatly serving the native cause also.

Dear reader, be swift to show, in a practical way, that, like the writer, you have learned the lesson so clearly taught at King Solomon's Mines.

At the Place of the Red Sea.

Have you come to the Red Sea Place in your life,
Where, in spite of all you can do.
There is no way out, there is no way back,
There is no other way but—through?
Then wait on the Lord with a trust serene
Till the night of your fear is gone;
He will send the wind, he will heap the floods,
He says to your soul, "Go on!"

And His hand will lead you through—clear through—Ere the watery walls roll down.

No foe can reach you, no wave can touch,
No mightiest sea can drown.

The tossing billows may rear their crests,
Their foam at your feet may break,
But over their bed you shall walk dry-shod
In a path that your Lord will make.

In the morning watch, 'neath the lifted cloud, You shall see but the Lord alone, When he leads you on from the place by the sea, To the land that you have not known, And your fears shall pass as your foes have passed, You shall be no more afraid; You shall sing His praise in a better place—A place that His hand has made.

The Last Man in the Line.

Uncle Jack's business errand upon an upper floor of the building kept him a long time. It was late, nearly dinner hour, guessed the Emperor waiting below at the door. He drew the five-dollar gold piece from his pocket again. Five dollars! In token of that many years. Earlier in the day he had wondered what to buy with his birthday gift. Finally he had decided. He smiled contentedly as it lay shining in the palm of his plump little hand. How surprised everybody would be at the dinner table! They would open a mysterious package and would find-what? Well, something that cost just five dollars-something which this very morning he heard his father wish for Uncle Jack, who gave him the money, was told confidentially of the proposed investment, and seemed surprised. The Emperor could not understand why. He was only five years old, you see, and he saw nothing unusual in giving instead of getting. The quicker his Uncle Jack came downstairs and the sooner he took him to buy the gift for his father, the better pleased would the Emperor be. He was becoming impatient.

Over a doorway a few steps down the street hung a large black sign. White letters upon it spelled "Paymaster's Office." A long line of roughly dressed men straggled into the doorway. The last man in the line made very sow progress. Every five minutes or so a laborer forced his way out from under the swinging sign, stuffing something in his pocket. Then the man at the end of the line moved a step nearer.

"loor fellows, they work for their money even after they have earned it!" said somebody,

"Yes, indeed. That chap at the end of the line is likely to din by lamplight," was the reply.

"In company with his family," rejoined the other. "Chances are there'll be no dinner for them until he brings hone the week's wages. I can tell you it's no fun to be the last man in the line."

The Emperor walked down to the end of the line. The man there, young and neatly clad, was clearly ill at ease. Toilhad not yet set in his face those grim lines which labo eventually carves. There was stolid expectancy in the other men's eyes; in his, impatience, hardly restraited. Presumably he knew the Emperor was looking at him, and their glances met. The Emperor's scrutiny was shyly curious, wholly sympathetic. Withal, he was evidently thinking very hard. With his cap pushed back on his head he stood with his hands in his pockets, his legs apart, his feet firmly planted.

We said of the Emperor in those days that he was continually on the watch for honest faces, and that he could never meet an honest person's glance without nodding and smiling in return. A mere coincidence, if true, some people answered. But we believed it was superior insight. Meeting the glance of the last man in the line, the Emperor nodded and smiled. Then they began a conversation.

"No; he wasn't in a hurry because dinner hour was near Nobody was waiting hungry at home for his coming. But there was a wife—ill." "The last man in the line" said this with an embarrassed air. "She needed a doctor and—and a good many things, very promptly, too. This was Saturday. He could not wait until Monday and come back then for his wages. He must use some to-night—a little—enough to make sure of the doctor. No, he had not seen her since he went to his work early this morning. Yes she wanted him to come—just as much as he wanted to go to her."

The man at the end of the line suddenly stopped talking and stared at the swinging sign. It seemed very far away from him just then, but that was because his eyes were blurred. Then he looked down and saw the Emperor gravely proffering the gold piece. Of the conversation which followed, and its outcome, we are only told that the Emperor informed "the last man in the line" where he lived, and that the money changed hands. A moment later, when Uncle Jack joined him, he was waving good-by toward a street that led to an East Side tenement.

Of course, the Emperor had to tell, and he was not wholly happy in the telling. Nobody scolded; nobody ever did. But something was wrong. Else why did his mother look reproachfully at Uncle Jack? And why did his father pretend to feel so badly when he was laughing at Uncle Jack at the same time? The matter weighed upon the Emperor's mind as he went to bed. After the evening prayer he looked up soberly at his mother's face and found there, as ever, the assurance of sympathy. To her be repeated the circumstance which unconsciously taught him to-day his lesson of charity; and when he finished he said good-night, content; for the mother, bending to kiss the sweet lips, whispered, as if to herself: "Christ, send to all of us my Emperor's compassion for 'the last man in the line.'"

That is all of the Emperor's connection with this story, except that his five-dollar piece was returned to him on Monday night.

There is a further history. One of its scenes is in an East Side tenement, where, at the dawn of another child-life, a brighter day came to a man and woman who are no longer last in the line.—Francis Knowles.

Our every principle and foundation is in the love of God and our neighbor alone; all our other activities are instruments and buildings placed on this foundation. Therefore thou shouldest not, for pleasure in the instrument or the building, desert the principal foundation in the honor of God and the love of our neighbor. Work, then, in that field where thou seest that God calls thee to work; and do not get distressed or anxious in mind over what I have said to thee, but endure manfully. Fear and serve God, with no regard to thyself; and then do not care for what people say, except to have compassion on them.—Selected.

Spirit of the Press

The "Good Old German Spirit."

The German bent of mind is not yet dead and the gentle Hun will still bear much watching. We should be free from a spirit of vengeance and should heed these words from the London Guardian:

We feel no vindictiveness toward Germany; we have no desire to destroy her. But we do intend to make her powerless for evil and to compel her to make good, so far as humanly possible, the destruction she has wantonly, deliberately, and of set purpose wrought.

The German expects sympathy, help, and kindness shown him; and when he is required to deal justly, truthfully, and sincerely, he cries persecution and mistreatment. The Guardian continues:

If, however, we expect any real "change of heart" in Germany, we are hugging illusions. The leopard does not change his spots because he is put into a cage; the German is what he always has been and always will be. He is utterly incapable of recognizing that in this war he has done anything meriting the reprobation of mankind. One of the German delegates who discussed the details of the armistice has been complaining that "not a humane word" was spoken to them at Marshal Foch's headquaters. This is the sublimity of impudence, and gives the measure of Tentonic insensibility to the world's detestation of the crimes that have been committed. Germany thinks she is a poor innocent who is being wronged and ill treated; the sentence passed upon her is "inhuman." That is exactly what Bill Sikes often thought, and what the Artful Dodger actually remarked on a historic occasion.

Have We Outgrown "Acts 2: 38?"

"And Peter said unto them, Repent ye, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ unto the remission of your sins; and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit." (Acts 2: 38.)

We are sure no one has forgotten that this is in the New Testament and that none would dispense with the priceless promise of it for any consideration. But it is seldom quoted even, and few there are to-day who develop its precious doctrine in sermons.

There are several reasons for this. One of them is that most of our ministers are pastors to-day, and that work demands less pioneering in the spiritual realm and more tirging that people go on to perfection. Within our own memory, J. S. Lamar, the father of the late Chief Justice Lamar, felt it necessary for the sake of an all-around development among the Disciples to write a book on "First Principles and Going On to Perfection." It was a noble plea for a full-rounded spiritual life.

Following this our church has grown intensely busy with the great and manifold tasks of the whole Christian life, and the work is so fascinating that attention has been diverted from the still more fascinating work of calling men to repentance and showing them the way through the straight gate into the kingdom. But in eating the fruits we should not forget the roots of the Christian life.

Perhaps another cause for the neglect of the sublime doctrines of this verse may be found in the kind of evangelism that has been forced upon the church by its divided condition. Popular evangelism is not a complete evangelism. It has been more or less indeterminate. It has not signed, sealed, delivered, and anchored the man seeking the way to God to definite commandments and revelations.

The times call for "Acts 2: 38" again. We cannot outlive that verse, nor outgrow its spiritual categories. It certainly has been a long time since its message was so appropriate as now.

We face a world with hazy notions about the soul's pathway to God, but in this verse the way is made plain. It will give men the things for which their hearts are hungry. It speaks in no halting, uncertain tones. It gives direct answer to the heart's question of what to do to be free from sin. It proclaims the challenge of the lordship and the Messiabship of Jesus. It demands of man inwardly, repentance, and outwardly—that is, visibly and socially—that he be baptized. It promises him that sweetest of all heaven's boons, forgiveness; the divinest of all heaven's endowments and enduements, the gift of the Holy Spirit. What greater need has a man than forgiveness and the indwelling of the Holy Spirit? And what more wonderful or precious promise than that he may have these by repentance and baptism?

This is one of the most deeply spiritual verses in the New Testament. It pertains chiefly to the inner life. The part of the verse that has been neglected most is the promise of the gift of the Holy Spirit. No one can quite satisfactorily explain the meaning of this, but it is essential to being a Christian. Men should be baptized not alone with reference to remission of sins, but for the purpose of receiving the gift of the Spirit also. Every Christian should to-day be pressed and sifted with the question, "Have ye received the Holy Spirit since ye believed?"—Christian-Evangelist.

There is no reason why any one should cease to quote and read Acts 2: 38, which is so intimately related to the salvation of human beings. The preacher who preaches to the same people every Lord's day should not cease to quote it. As the most profound scholar never outgrows his A B C's, so no preacher should cease to preach the fundamentals of salvation. The conditions of salvation are the same now as when Peter commanded believers on the day of Pentecost: "Repent ye, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ unto the remission of your sins; and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit."

I am pleased to pass the fact on to the editor of the Christian-Evangelist that there are many preachers and writers in this section of the country that have not ceased to quote Acts 2: 38.

Professing vs. Doing.

Professional piety repels rather than wins. An attempt' to look religious is anything but effective. Dress can never indicate the true state of the heart, though some good people make the mistake of trying to put on the garments of piety. Preachers have been pushed into this error by conventionality, very much to the hurt of their cause. People do not care for a clerical cut or a ministerial collar. They much prefer a real man behind both coat and collar.

A pietetic tone is positively provoking. It is not natural; it is not winning; it is not indicative of a deep devotion, necessarily. "Put on" ought to be put off in religious matters quicker than anywhere else. A facial elongation is aggravating. An affected solemnity of mien suggests meanness, though this does not always follow. A mere air of being good is far from being convincing. Sin cerity is an imperative essential of character.

It should not be overlooked that the real man can break his way through the handicap of pious appearance, clahing, or demeanor. A Sister of Charity can be a veritable angel of mercy in spite of her grotesque bonnet. A piest can be a good Samaritan in spite of skirts flapping bout his ankles. A Protestant clergyman can be a gauine brother to man in spite of a choker tie or a longtailed coat. So on down the line. The world does not like ritualistic garments, but it will not allow any mere garments to hide a real soul.

Being somewhat is worth infinitely more than appearing somewhat. Down in the depths of the heart is the thing which counts. Doing talks more decisively han posing. Reality goes faster and surer than appearance. The world needs genuine doers of deeds which tell for human happiness. The world will not be satisfied with any sort of mere show.—Midland Methodist.

AT HOME AND ABROAD

Mrs. Ina Kerr says: "The Gospel Advocate is one of the best papers printed."

From W. O. Crowder, Appleton, Tenn.: "We cannot do without the dear old Gospel Advocate."

A. B. Lipscomb reports a good service at Russell Street Church last Sunday. A lady obeyed the gospel at the evening service.

Morgan H. Carter reports a very inspiring service at Belmont Avenue Church, this city, on Sunday. A noble young man made the good confession.

From M. E. Weaver, Armstrong Springs, Ark.: "I consider the Gospel Advocate a great and good paper, one that deserves the patronage of every Christian."

A. N. Trice has a new and very interesting lecture on New Testament archæology. He delivered the first half of this lecture at the David Lipscomb College last Monday evening and will finish it next Monday evening.

From Ben West, Ennis, Texas, January 20: "Yesterday was a fine day at the Ennis Avenue Church. Large crowds attended all services, and there were eight additions to the church. We are preparing for our April meeting."

On page 98 of this issue you will please to note description of "Peloubet's Select Notes" and "Tarbell's Teachers' Guide." We have reduced these books to $1.25 each. Either of these books is almost indispensable to a teacher. Order to-day, for our supply may soon be exhausted.

From Austin Taylor, Uvalde, Texas, January 22: "I bave just been down in the Rio Grande Valley, in the little city of San Benito, with H. W. Busby, of Fort Worth. We had a very fine meeting there. Eleven persons were baptized and several others lined up for duty. The little congregation now has a membership of fifty-one. The mild climate allowed us to hold the meeting under a tent. The rain hindered some, but we never missed a service. We were well cared for in every respect."

From L. Meade Williams, Tulare, Cal.: "We have changed our place of worship from Ryan Hall to the Women's Clubhouse. It is located on the railroad reservation just west of the Southern Pacific depot on Tulare Street. Any one passing this way and desiring to find a place to worship 'as it is written' will find a welcome. L. D. Perkins was with us to-day and preached for us. T. B. Larimore is now located near Armona, and we expect to have him with us at an early date."

From W. M. Oakley, superintendent of the Potter Orphan Home and School, Bowling Green, Ky.: "Mrs. Oakley and thirty-five out of thirty-seven of our dear children are ill with 'fiu.' Only two littles ones up. A nurse sent from Louisville arrived yesterday. Only one case of pneumonia, now convalescent. Nothing to fear now but an epidemic of pneumonia. If I am not stricken, and with proper care and nursing, I expect to see all recover. My little grandson is very ill to-day. We need your love, sympathy, and prayers."

J. G. Allen, of Muskogee, Okla, writes to Brother McQuiddy under date of January 24: "Please correct a mistake I made in the 'Query Department' in last week's Gospel Advocate. The church here does not teach its members to take the Supper at both services on Lord's day. The main body of Christians here take the Supper at the eleven-o'clock service. Then, for the benefit of several members who work for the railroad, the Supper is prepared at the evening service. Of course, those who take the Supper at the morning service do not take it in the evening."

F. C. Sowell writes from Columbia, Tenn.: "We received quite a number of offerings through the Christmas box, as was suggested to be done some weeks before Christmas; but as I failed to get all the names of the persons who sent the offerings, perhaps it would be best not to publish any of them. Our treasurer, John W. Fry, however, has acknowledged the receipt of all of them. The Lord will bless the teachers, parents, and good children who so kindly answered this call. There are now fifty-seven children in the Home, and they are being well cared for. Many congregations and individuals are coming nobly and heartily with their offerings to this splendid institution."

From W. S. Long, Jr., 46 R Street, N. E.. Washington, D. C., January 18: "People cheerfully help a winning cause, and now I feel that we can say with all safety that we are sure to win in our efforts here in Washington. The attendance is better and the male members are learning to make good talks in public. About thirty-eight hundred dollars has been raised toward the new home for the church. Those who have waited to see if we mean business can throw their hearts and money into the work now; and if they will follow the good example set by others, we will soon go 'over the top.' I hope that soon we may hush saying, 'We are going to build,' and be able to say, 'We have built.'"

From L. S. White, Sherman, Texas, January 22: "The work at the Houston Street Church, this city, is doing fine. Last Sunday there were twelve additions, the Sunday before there were eight, and the Sunday before that there were nine, making twenty-nine additions the first three weeks of the new year. About twenty of these are heads of families. Some were baptized, some were restored, and some had moved here and took fellowship with us. The congregation has outgrown the house, and last Sunday the church decided unanimously to build a larger house. We have bought a very fine lot adjoining the Carnegie Library, and expect to build a good house. Peace and harmony prevail, and all seem happy over the rapid growth of the church. As this is my first report of this work, I will say there have been one hundred and sixteen additions since we came here."

From N. C. Derryberry, Hungerford, Texas, January 13: "I left home on November 27 for Brownville, Fla. It was a Macedonian call. I am now seventy years of age, and have never turned down a 'Macedonian call' yet. After fiboring as best I could under the disadvantages I had to labor under for nearly three weeks, I came to Southern Texas. This is the place where I established the cause of truth in 1910; and after laboring as best I could for four years, W. S. Morton took up the work. I have conducted meetings at many places in this section, but have succeeded in establishing only one congregation, and that is at Hungerford; and while they are few in number, they are a faithful little band. I hope to succeed in establishing another congregation on this trip. Brethren, while we pray the Lord to send forth laborers into his vineyard, we ought to help God answer that prayer by going and laboring with all the powers of mind and body that we can command."

From Tice Elkins, Nocona, Texas, January 20: "Yesterday was a great day for the church here. It was the first time in several weeks I had been able to get out. We had a fine crowd at each service, and we had an old-fashioned confession and experience meeting, and many confessed their faults and sought the pardon of the church and of The members shook hands all around and pledged themselves to better and more concerted work in the future. Tears rained down many faces as the members talked of their hopes and told of their sorrows and fail-My health is improving, but I am weak. I preached the funeral of John Rolls in the afternoon. He was sixtynine years of age, and was a faithful member of the church for twenty-four years. We will miss him here. I want to acknowledge and offer our thanks for the financial help we have received from distant brethren since our severe sickness set in. Many have sent to our relief, and later, when I feel able to write, I will give a correct account of it all."

From J. W. Dunn, Fort Worth, Texas, January 22: "After laboring with the church of Christ at Paris pleasantly for sixteen months, I am now with the Central church of Christ, in Fort Worth. I left the Paris church reluctantly and regretfully. Our labors had been very agreeable and, I am sure, mutually pleasant; but thinking I was needed more and possibly could accomplish more good, I began here the first of January. The Central folks have a good house in the heart of the city, with about one hundred members. We should do lots of good and be a great blessing to a mass of humanity. Thus far I can see uothing in the way; and if we do not do a great and good work, it will be our fault, and only ours. Paris is a lovely place to live, as good as the very best, and there are some very noble, godly men and women there. I shall always consider it a treat to visit with them. I wish them great success and happiness. I know I am a friend to every member, and feel sure they are among my best friends. My family will not move until spring. I receive mail at either place. My address is Room 312, Fort Worth National Bank Building, Fort Worth, Texas."

Myers.

Much sorrow was brought to the many friends and loved ones of Mrs. Lula Luttrell Myers, who passed beyond this world on December 4, 1918. She was born, near Cornish, Okla., on February 9, 1899. She was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Luttrell and wife of J. M. Myers. She had lived at Charlie, Texas, for the past eleven years. She was baptized in 1913, at the age of thirteen, by Brother E. Fitzgerald, and died a faithful and will her devoted Christian. Much presence be missed among her many friends, especially in the worship of the Lord; but, if we follow in her footsteps, we will meet her in a better world. CLARE HAMMOND.

Leglie.

Death has again visited our home and claimed for its victim our darling, Cora Leslie. She was dearly loved by all the family and all who knew her. She was born on March 27, 1900, and departed this life on July 30, 1918. She leaves a father, a mother, four brothers, and five sisters to mourn their loss; but we hope to meet her some sweet day. The most comforting thought of all is that she died in the Lord. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them." A great number of friends and relatives followed her remains to their last resting place, where our hearts were made sad indeed; but we sorrow not as those who have no hope. Be faithful to the end, trust in the Lord, and do good, and he will withhold no good thing from you. MRS. CLAUDIA WEBB.

Adams.

Brother James Harvey Adams departed this life on November 25, 1918, at his home near College Grove, Tenn. If he had lived until January 18, he would have been seventy-six years old. He was laid to rest where he had lived for forty years. Brother Adams was married about fifty years ago, to which union were born three children. His faithful wife died over ten years ago. One of his children departed this life several years ago; the other two have never married and lived with him as long as he lived. He died of dropsy, which had been working on him for over ten years. Brother Adams was baptized by the Baptist people: but marrying a member of the church of Christ, she "pulled blind bridle off of him," as S as Sister Josie (his daughter) said her mother called it. Brother Adams did not have much of this world's goods, but what he did have was not too good for his friends and neighbors. In fact, he was one of the most free-hearted men I ever knew. He regretted very much that he was not able to attend our protracted meeting this summer. It was said by several who attended his burial that if he was lost, it was no use for the rest of us to try to reach heaven.

SUCCESS IS ACHIEVED

by vigorous men and women.

When one is lacling in attength and endurance, when good health is wanting, when physical power is at low obb, it is impossible to secomplish one's work.

One of the causes of ill health and low vitality is the improper functioning of the kidneys. Trouble results when they fail to eliminate waste and poisonous matter from the system and rheumatic pains, backache, still joints, sole muscles, and other symptoms quickly follow.

Foley Midney Pills

banish effects of kidney and bladder trouble by troubing the cause. They are healing and curative. They tone up and strengthen the weakened or diseased organs.

H. D. Castleberry, Marine Engineer, Port Vincent, La., writes: "I consider Foley Kidney Fills the greatest medicine for kidney and bladder trouble I ever used. I recommend them to all who suffer with kidney and bladder trouble,"

LESS MEAT IF BACK AND KIDNEYS HURT

Take a Class of Salts to Flush Kidneys if Bladder Bothers You Drink Lots of Water

Eating meat regularly eventually produces kidney trouble in some form or other, says a well-known authority, because the uric acid in meat excites the kidneys, they become overworked, get sluggish, clog up, and cause all sorts of distress, particularly backache and misery in the kidney region, rheumatic twinges, severe headaches, acid stomach, constipation, torpid liver, sleeplessness, bladder and urinary irritation.

The moment your back hurts or the kidneys are not acting right, or if the bladder bothers you, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good pharmacy, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days, and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity; also to neutralize the acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts cannot injure any one. It makes a delightful effervescent lithiawater drink which millions of men and women take now and then to keep the kidneys and urinary organs clean, thus avoiding serious kidney disease.

Clark.

Sister Malcom Clark was born on October 20, 1890, and departed this life on December 4, 1918. Her maiden name was Sarah Elizabeth Agee. By the death of her mother she became an orphan early in life. As a child and a young lady, she was a Methodist, faithful and true; but about two years ago she made an effort to convert her husband, and in so doing she saw fit to leave her former teaching and was baptized into the body of Christ and continued faithful until her death.
Tender as a mother, faithful as a friend, and true as a Christian, she won many friends who mourn her death, though cherishing a great hope of meeting her in the sweet by and by. Sister Clark was the mother of five children, and all of them plainly show the marks of a Christian mother. She taught them to pray and attend services regularly, and it was a weekly occurrence to see her at services with the five little children clinging close beside her. Her influence will ever live in the hearts of her babes and her example will be an inspiration to many. Funeral services were conducted at the cemetery by the writer. Blessed are the dead who die in the G. F. GIBBS.

Hudson.

On April 25, 1918, the death angel entered the home of Mr. and Mrs. M. C. Hudson and claimed for its victim their beloved son, Amos. His death was a great shock to his family and many friends who knew him. He was twenty-three years old. His father, mother, four brothers, and three sisters survive him. He was a true and faithful member of the Christian Church at Hebron. He was true to his Master and lived a pure, consecrated life, always trusting in that never-failing Friend. Amos will be greatly missed by all who knew him. Amos will be He was an obedient son, a companionable brother, always kind, loving, and true to all. His cheerful voice and winning smiles are missed so much. It is hard to part with our loved ones and to know that we can have them with us no more in this life. We cannot understand why the dear Lord took him from us and his loved ones, but we know that God doeth all things well and that some day it will be made clear. The realization is slowly dawning upon us that God can bring good out of this providence for us and that earth has no sorrow that heaven can-not heal. The fruits of the Spirit were daily manifested in his pure and innocent character. Crushed and broken in spirit are the lonely family. Only He who comforts the broken-hearted can lead them, through faith, to look beyond the dark clouds that have gathered so thickly across the sunny sky of this once happy home to where the Sun of Righteousness shines. There is a vacancy in our home that no one can fill. While our hearts are aching, yet we would not call him back into this world of pain and sorrow, for we have the blessed assurance that he has gone to the Savior who re-deemed him. To the bereaved ones I would say: Weep not as those who have no hope, and let us live so that when the summons comes to us we will be prepared to meet our loved ones in a brighter and fairer world above. The funeral was conducted at the gravevard by Brother Nix amid a large concourse of sorrowing relatives and friends who had gathered to witness the last rites and look on the placid face of our loved one for the last time in this world. He was ten-derly laid to rest in the Baird graveyard, there to await the resurrection morning. A FRIEND

In cases of indigestion or dyspepsia, the contents of the stomach, for lack of a proper supply of digestive juices, first ferment, forming gases, and later decompose. This precess is attended with more or less disc infort and reacts to the 'njury f all the digestive organs, with the result of poisoning the entire system, a condition known as auto-intexication. Three prime considerations arise in treatment of such conditions:

First, the process of decomposition must be arrested, by neutralizing the acid condition of the stomach, thus giving prompt relief from pain.

Second, the salivary glands and other glands which produce the various digestive juices must be stimulated into active secretion in order that the food may be proparly digested.

Third, the stomach nerves must be toned up into a healthy state and inflammatory conditions of the membranous lining allayed.

Everyone Should Drink Hot Water in the Morning

Wash away all the stomach, liver, and bowel poisons before breakfast.

To feel your best day in and day out; to feel clean inside-no sour bile to coat your tongue and sicken your breath or dull your head; no constipation, billous attacks, sick headache, colds, rheumatism, or gassy, acid stomach—you must bathe on the in-side like you bathe outside. This is vastly more important, because the skin pores do not absorb impurities into the blood, while the bowel pores do, says a well-known physician.

To keep these poisons and toxins well flushed from the stomach, liver, kidneys, and bowels, drink before breakfast each day a glass of hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it. This will cleanse, purify, and freshen the entire allmentary tract before putting more food into the stomach.

Get a quarter pound of limestone phosphate from your pharmacist. It is inexpensive and almost tasteless, except a sourish twinge which is not unpleasant. Drink phosphated hot water every morning to rid your system of these vile poisons and toxins; also to prevent their formation.

To feel like young folks feel-like you felt before your blood, nerves, and muscles became saturated with an accumulation of body poisons-begin this treatment, and, above all, keep it up! As soap and hot water act on the skin, cleansing, sweetening, and purifying, so limestone phosphate and hot water before breakfast act on the stomach. liver, kidneys, and bowels.

Signs of a True Christian.

BY S. W. BERBYMAN.

A true Christian is willing to act as an example for others, in words, deeds, and thoughts. The man who claims to be a true Christian, but conducts himself in such a way that he is not willing for others to follow him, to my mind, there is something wrong in his life. Paul, for instance, was willing for others to follow him. "Those things, which ye have both learned, and received, and heard, and seen in me, do: and the God of peace shall be with you." (Phil. 4: 9.) "Brethren, be followers together of me, and mark them which walk so as ye have us for an ensample." (Phil. 3: 17.) "Wherefore I beseech you, be ye followers of me." (1 Cor. 4: 16.) How many of us can truly repeat this language of Paul's and apply it to ourselves? Are we willing for others to think as we think, speak as we speak, and act as we act? Have we so lived, even during the past week, that we are willing for others to pattern after us? Our lives should be worthy of example at all times.

A true Christian reads the Bible continually and meditates upon God's word day and night. "Blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly, nor standeth in the way of sinners, nor sitteth in the seat of the scornful. But his delight is in the law of the Lord; and in his law doth he meditate day and night." (Ps. 1: 1-3.) "O how love I thy law! it is my meditation all the day, . . . I have more understanding than all my teachers: for thy testimonies are my meditation," (Ps. 119: 97-99.) There are few people who read the Bible as they should. .There are thousands in the church to-day that seldom, if ever, read the Bible. I know whereof I speak. Go into their homes and see for yourself. You will find them reading books of adventure, love stories, novels, and farm, stock, and newspapers; but they do not read the Bible. In many such homes everything else is read before the Bible. The rulers of such homes do not pray, and many of them do not even offer thanks at their tables. Too bad, indeed, for people who pretend to be Christians!

A true Christian meets regularly on Lord's day for worship, and truly loves the meeting. We cannot neglect this assembly and remain true children of God. Luke tells us that the early Christians came together on the first day of the week "to break bread." (Acts 20: 7.) The same is true of the three thousand who were baptized on the day of Pentecost. (Acts 2: 38-42.) And Paul tells us to continue to do this. (Heb. 10: 25.) That the first Christians assembled on the first day of the week to observe the Lord's Supper cannot be denied by scripture, and that it is the duty of every child of God to-day cannot be disproved by the Bible. Then, dear brother, seek not to stay away from this meeting. Jesus requests you to do this in remembrance of him. (Matt 26: 26.)

A true Christian is humble and forgiving. A brother, once, teaching a lesson on humility, said: "See yourselves and be humble." The Savior said: "Blessed are the meek: for they shall inherit the earth." (Matt. 5: 5.) 'Whosoever shall exalt himself shall be abased; and he that shall humble himself shall be exalted." (Matt. 23: 12.) James (4: 6-10) says: "God resisteth the proud, but giveth grace unto the humble. . . . Humble yourselves in the sight of the Lord, and he shall lift you up." We must not only be humble, but also forgiving. "For if ye forgive men their trespasses, your heavenly Father will also forgive you: but if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses." 6: 14, 15.)

A true Christian is sympathetic and compassionate. The wisest man that ever lived said: "Withhold not good from them to whom it is due, when it is in the power of thine own hand to do it. Say not unto thy neighbor, Go, and come again, and to-morrow I will give; when thou hast it by thee." (Prov. 3: 27, 28.) "He that hath pity upon the poor lendeth unto the Lord; and that which he hath given will he pay him again." (Prov. 19: 17.) Our Savior says: "Give to him that asketh thee, and from him that would borrow of thee turn not thou away." (Matt. 5: 42.) Many times the poor, the sick, the hungry, have come to those who say they are Christians, and were turned away. This is contrary to the spirit of Christ and the teaching of God's word. (See Matt. 25: 34-46.) The man whose heart is filled with the love of God has love and sympathy for others and will go his length to aid them. (1 John 3: 14-17.)

A true Christian is prepared unto every good work. "But in a great house there are not only vessels of gold and of silver, but also of wood and of earth; and some to honor, and some to dishonor. If a man therefore purge himself from these, he shall be a vessel unto honor, sanctified, and meet for the Master's use, and prepared unto every good work." (2 Tim. 2: 20, 21.) Does the community need a church house? The true Christian is ready to help build it. Does a brother need assistance? The true Christian is ready to help him. The true child of God never shirks, but is always ready to do his duty in everything. He works to the interest of the meeting and does all for it he can. He supports the gospel to the limit of his ability, but does not boast about what he has done.

A true Christian is always growing. "Wherefore laving aside all malice, and all guile, and hypocrises, and envies, and all evil speakings, as newborn babes, desire the sincere milk of the word, that ye may grow thereby." (1 Pet. 2: 1, 2.) As the little infant must have the milk from the mother's breast to sustain physical growth, so must the new babe in Christ have the " sincere milk of the word" to sustain spiritual growth. The baby that never grows is a burden to its parents instead of a blessing. The Christian that never grows any is a burden to the Lord instead of a blessing. We must grow spiritually or we will die spiritual dwarfs. God demands a continuance in knowledge and in grace. "But grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ," (2 Pet. 3: 18.)

A true Christian hates all worldliness and looks forward continually to the day of redemption. "Ye adulterers and adulteresses, know ye not that the friendship of the world is enmity against God? whosoever therefore will be a friend of the world is the enemy of God." (James 4: 4.) "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him. For all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world. And the world passeth away, and the lust thereof; but he that doeth the will of God abideth forever." (1 John 2: 15-17.) We should let the Lord's hates be our hates. "These six things doth the Lord hate: yea, seven are an abomination unto him." (See Prov. 6: 16-19.)

May God bless us and make us to be true Christians.

My heart doth seek for thee;
The hallowed spot, the secret cave,
Where God to earth his choicest gave,
And Jesus came to thee.

O Bethlehem,
My heart doth long for thee;
The snow lies white upon thy hills,
Thy star with light my spirit fills
When I but think of thee.

O Bethlehem,
My heart-doth joy over thee;
With lightsome feet she walked thy way
Who cradled Jesus in the hay,
And gave him up to thee,

O Bethlehem,
My heart doth dream of thee;
I see thy flocks 'neath midnight skies,
The spell of thee upon me lies,
When sleep doth speak of thee.

O Bethlehem,
My heart doth break for thee;
Too soon did pass the blissful light,
And took from thee thy dear delight,
And Calvary emptied thee,

Doctors in all parts of the country have been kept busy with the epidemic of influenza which has visited so many homes

SAGE AND SULPHUR DARKENS GRAY HAIR

Brush This Through Faded, Streaked Locks and They Become Dark, Glossy, Youthful.

Almost every one knows that Sage and Sulphur, properly pounded, brings back the natural color and luster to the hair when faded, streaked, or gray. Years ago the only way to get this mixture was to make it at home, which is mussy and troublesome. Nowadays, by asking at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sul-phur Compound," you will get a large bottle of this famous old recipe, improved by the addition of other ingredients, for about fifty cents.

Don't stay gray! Try It! No one can possibly tell that you darkened your hair, as it does it so naturally and evenly. You dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, glossy, and attractive.

Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound is a delightful toilet requisite for those who desire dark hair and a youthful appearance. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation, or prevention of disease.

New-Year Resolutions.

BY R. N. MOODY.

"Brethren, I count not myself yet to have laid hold: but one thing I do, forgetting the things which are behind. and stretching forward to the things which are before. I press on toward the goal unto the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." (Phil. 3: 13, 14.)

It is common to make new resolutions at the beginning of a new year. The foregoing quotation was the resolution of the great apostle Paul, and should be the resolution of every Christian, not only on New Year's Day, but at all times.

From one's writings we may get an insight of his tastes and habits. From Paul's writings we may infer that he was a lover of the athletic sports of his day. To the Corinthians he said: "Know ye not that they that run in a race run all, but one receiveth the prize? Even so run; that ye may attain. And every man that striveth in the games exerciseth self-control in all things." Then, to show how much more important the Christian's race is than the races in which men contested for a perishing crown, he says: "Now they do it to receive a corruptible crown; but we an incorruptible," To Timothy he said; "And if also a man contend in the games, he is not crowned, except he have contended lawfully." We may rest assured that if Paul ever participated in the games, he would have spurned to have resorted to any kind of trickery to gain a victory over his opponent: and he would have us understand that if we would win in the Christian race we must, as Jesus says, "worship in spirit and in truth." It was, doubtless, his fidelity to this principle of honesty that made him a "chosen vessel" unto the Lord. To the Hebrews he said: "Therefore let us also, seeing we are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus the author and perfecter of our faith." This he fully demonstrated in his eventful career as an apostle of Jesus Christ. Thus he turns those games to good account to teach us that Christianity is a contest for a great immortal glory, should we not labor to bring ourselves to the highest stage of spiritual development that we may win the race?

Let us now examine the passage quoted at the beginning of this article. Paul says: "Brethren, I count not myself yet to have laid hold." Notwithstanding his long and faithful service to the Lord, he regarded the prize as in the future and yet to be won. He then says: "This one thing I do." Then, planting his feet on the present, he points to the past and says, "Forgetting the things which are behind," and, turning to the future, adds, "and stretching forward to the things which are before, I press on toward the goal unto the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." He would have us see the contestant on the race course stretching his full length and pressing with all his might to reach the prize ahead of his competitor. It is a strenuous moment in the contest when the racer can hear his competitor pressing close on his heels and can see the coveted prize drawing nearer and nearer. So the apostle would have us nal reward is one that should be earunderstand that the race for the eternestly run.

So let us keep in mind that the prize is yet in the future and that the present is the only time we have at our command. As to the past, there is nothing in it that we can change. The events of it have gone to record as facts, and no mortal man can change a fact. If we have done our whole duty, we are taught to count ourselves as unprofitable servants. So there is nothing in the past for us to boast of. We need not keep a record of the good deeds we have done, for God will remember them and reward us according to our works. If we have sinned, and are faithful to confess our sins, God will be faithful to forgive them. As to the future, we only have it in prospect, and the blessings and enjoyments we are to receive from it depend upon how we employ the present. So let us take our stand on the present and forget the things which are behind, and let us set our eye on the great reward. and run with patience the race set before us.

Courage.

You may be well educated, a college graduate, leading your class; you may have influence, pull, a fine personality, a father to push you; but you may I ck courage; and lacking that, you will lack everything, for everything worth while in life depends upon courage. There never was a time when courage was so necessary as today. It is as imperative for those at home as for the soldiers at the front. Not even honesty can take the place of courage. It is the backbone of stamina, of character. A man is a jellyfish without it. Cultivate your courage, and take it with you wherever you go. -Orison Swett Marden.

The Romantic Story of Southland's Favorite Shoe, EzWear.

Some five years ago, a prominent citizen of South Carolina, visiting New York on important business, chanced to meet the maker of a shoe built on new and unusual lines; an enthusiastic admirer of its mos distinctive features, ease and comfort, had suggested the name EzWear; it was premptly adopted. The business man from the South, knowing how welcome such a shoe would be in his part of the country, urged that its remarkable qualities, including not only comfort, but style, durability and economy, he made known there. That this has been effectively done is proven by the enormous demand that has sprung up in the South for EzWear shoes. It is said that its sale there during the last twelve months has increased fully three hundred per cent. The distributor, Mr. J. R. Simon, of 1589 Broadway, Brooklyn, N. Y., says that all who wish to know about a shoe that combines all worth-while shoe qualities, may have a copy of his money-saving shoe book for the asking.

KILLS CATARRH

Famous Hyomei-Mr. Booth's Wonderful Discovery.

Some years ago, the noted Richard T. Booth, founder of the blue ribbon movement and temperance orator and leader of international fame who induced over a million men to sign the pledge, developed a very serious catarrhal trouble. Seeking to regain health, he went to Inland Australia where he breathed day and night the anti-septic balsams as given off by the Eucalyptus

This experience led Mr. Booth to the discovery of the most wonderful catarrhal treatment known to medical science-Hyomei, which is formed from the purest oil of Eucalyptus com-bined with other healing and antiseptic ingredients. Hyomel is a germ killing vapor, absolutely harmless but wonderfully effective in the freat-ment of Catarrh and colds of the head, Catarrhal Coughs, Bronchial Catarrh, Spasmodic Croup, Catarrhal Laryngitis or Hay Fever.

The treatment is simple but most scientific, You breathe Hyomei. It is pronounced the only You breathe Hyonel. It is pronounced the only method of treatment that sends by direct inhalamethod of treatment that sends by direct inmat-tion to the most remote part of the air passages, a balsamic air that destroys germs and bacilli of broachial catarrh in the breathing organs, sooths and allays irritation and enriches and purifies the blood. On page 9, to substantiate his idea of a kingdom and church established by Christ personally while he was on earth, Mr. Bandy calls our attention to Dan. 2: 45-"the stone cut out without hands." I have shown previous to this the futility of arguing against him on instrumentality in God's appointments. Thus Dan. 2: 45 can never be construed to mean that. Again, that was a vision. Shall we make its fulfillment exactly like it? Then the kingdom would be a literal stone. The facts are that the vision meant that while other kingdoms were built by human agency alone, here was a kingdom that human beings did not build. It was organized and edified from on high; but that did not militate against God's using inspired human channels as his agents.

He submits some prophecies which he says serve his cause. His first is Ps. 72: 16: "There shall be a handful of corn in the earth upon the top of the mountains; the fruit thereof shall shake like Lebanon: and they of the city shall flourish like grass of the earth." He tells us this passage was fulfilled when Jesus organized his church on the mount as recorded in Mark 3: 13-15. Figurative and literal language must not be confused. If this is a real mountain, then the corn must be real corn; but if the corn is figurative, the mountain must be figurative. When the mountain is considered figurative, of course Mr. Bandy loses the passage. Mark 3: 13-15 has no more to do with this passage than many others that Mr. Bandy would never mention. If, as Mr. Bandy says, Mark 3: 13-15 is a literal fulfillment of Ps. 72: 16, then the apostles would of necessity had to be a handful of corn. The fact is that Mr. Bandy states the truth in saying that Ps. 72: 16 refers to the origin and growth of the Messianic kingdom; but it is a figurative expression and must be so regarded, and we must consider it absurd to expect a literal fulfillment. The proper interpretation is this: As a handful of corn or a small amount of seed planted on a mountain, on a very unfavorable place, should produce abundantly, or wave like Lebanon, even so from a small beginning under very unfavorable circumstances, or under opposition, the kingdom of Christ should grow until its fruits should be marvelously abundant. Mr. Bandy loses this passage,

On page 10 he says: "Material was being prepared before this, but here we have organization." Also, he says: "He ordained twelve, and the word 'ordain' implies organization." That may be so; but does it imply church organization? Were these twelve organized and appointed to do church work? If so, let Mr. Bandy cite instances of their meetings, their evangelization, their discipline, and their worship. The Book tells for what these individuals were appointed. It was not in a real church capacity at all. He also implies in the same paragraph that this mountain mentioned in Mark was the mountain of Dan. 2: 45. Then, if so, if the figure carries, the kingdom was a stone-a plain, hard stone-and its growth is nothing more than an increase in the size of a rock. Also, if the symbol signified a real mountain where the church was organized, and in the figure the symbol of the kingdom is of the same material as the place of its origin, then, in Mr. Bandy's fulfillment, the kingdom must be of the same material as the mountain, or a material kingdom, Mr. Bandy worked very hard to eliminate the human agency in the origin of the kingdom, so as to make it eminently spiritual; but now he materializes his prophetic mountains, the logical consequences of which is a material kingdom. You know, the more we think of the way he has dealt with these mountains, the more absurd it appears to us. If the meaning of the vision is to the effect that the kingdom must originate in a material mountain. then why may we not expect other symbolic prophecies uttered by Daniel to be literally fulfilled? Thus Babylon was a gold kingdom, everything gold in it: Rome was an iron kingdom, everything iron in it; and the Grecian kingdom was an actual "he goat with a notable horn between his eyes."

Mr. Bandy next says: "Here were all the essential elements of a church or kingdom-king, law, subjects, territory." These are the essential elements of a kingdom or church, but Mr. Bandy's assertion that all these elements were present there is assumption pure and simple. More will be said in answer to this contention, but I shall say enough to disprove it. First, as to the king. If Jesus was a king here, he was without a throne; for we read in Acts 2: 30 that he was raised up to sit on his throne. So he was not a king till after his resurrection. If he was a king here, he was a king without a kingdom. We read in Dan. 7: 14 that he received his kingdom when he "came with the clouds of heaven." We read in Acts 9 that that occurred at his ascension. Then he must not have received his kingdom until his ascension. Again, if he was a king here, he was king without death, burial, or resurrection; and seriously I ask this question: If Jesus could establish his kingdom or church without his death, burial, or resurrection, why did he suffer death, why was he buried in the cold grave, and where was the glory of his resurrection? Of course, I suppose it is in keeping with Baptist theory; for if we are baptized "because of remission," why may Jesus have not died, been buried and resurrected, because our sins had already been procuratively remitted?

How Shiver Mineral Water Relieves Rheumatism.

According to the standard medical books, rheumatism is not a germ disease, but is the result of imperfect nutrition. The food is either imperfectly digested or imperfectly assimilated. Poisons accumulate, and these irritate and inflame the delicate linings of the joints, the heart, and other organs. To relieve rheumatism, it is, therefore, necessary to stop the formation of these poisons and get rid of those already formed.

The celebrated Shlvar Mineral Water acts on the stomach and kidneys. It corrects the digestion and washes out the poisons through the kidneys. This is the opinion of physicians who prescribe it. If you suffer with rheumatism, dyspepsia, indigestion, disease of the kidneys, bladder, or liver, uricacid poisoning, or any condition due to impure blood, read the following letter, then sign it, inclose the amount, and mall it. Only two out of a hundred on the average report no benefit.

INDIGESTION

Love's Miracle.

Beggared he crept unto my door,
And there, 'neath the drifting moon,
I saw his ravaged, leprous face,
His thorn-rent hands, his bloody shoon

"This is the end," he said, "and naught

Is left that even Christ could save; This body spent and stained with sin Not all the ocean's brine can lave."

I drew the heart from out my breast; I wrapped him in its yearning flame; Then from his spirit's golden ore

There fell away the dross, the shame.

And with my tears I washed his feet, I bound white peace about his head; And knelt in loving awe to see His soul awake as from the dead.

The wind whose song had slept, the trees,

The dreaming willows by the shore, Brought back to him the voice of God He thought was dumb for evermore.

The moon unfurled a silver sail
Like ship on blessed errand bent,
And bearing all his past away
Slow o'er the night's deep waters went.

What Doctor Pierce Has Done For Humanity!

BY DOCTOR CRIPPS.

It has always seemed to me that Dr. Pierce, of Buffalo, N. Y., should be placed near the top when a list of America's great benefactors is written. He studied and conquered human diseases to a degree that few realize. Whenever he found a remedy that overcame disease, he at once announced it in the newspapers and told where it could be bought at a small price. He did not follow the usual custom of keeping the ingredients secret, so that the rich only could afford to buy the medicine, but openly printed the name of each root and herb he used. And so to-day the names of Dr. Pierce and his medicines are widely known, and they stand for better health and better citizenship.

One of this great physician's most successful remedies is known as Doctor Pierce's Pleasant Pellets. These are little, sugar-coated pills, composed of Mayapple, leaves of aloe, root of jalapthings that Nature grows in the ground. These Pellets are safe because they move the bowels gently, leaving no bad after-effects, as so many pills do. Very often they make a person who takes them feel like a new man or woman, for they cleanse the intestines of hard, decayed and poisonous matter that accumulates when one is costive. If you are constipated, by all means go to your druggist and get some of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets. They may prove to be the very thing your system requires to make you well and bappy.

Among the Colored Folks

An Encouraging Outlook.

Our year's work in and out of the city closed with some encouraging features. The work at Jackson Street Church, in Nashville, is doing well, and the year 1919 started off with good interest, attention, and attendance. On the first Lord's day in January we had Brethren H. Clay, M. Keeble, and A. Campbell with us, and many good things out of the old Book were said to us. On the second Lord's day, morning and night, the writer spoke for the people.

I am very thankful to all who helped us in 1918, and I hope to have their aid in the future. Brother T. J. Daniel writes from Chicago: "I am sending you of my own money five dollars. Use it as you think best." So half of it will go to the school and the rest for mission work. Who will do like this good brother? The Gospel Advocate, which I have been hearing read and reading myself over forty years, has my many thanks for favors shown me.

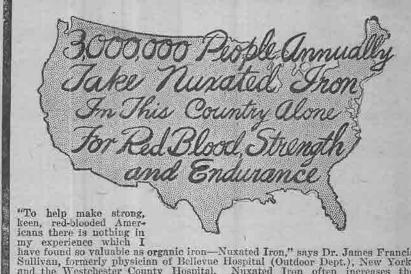

A few of the brethren and sisters of the little band at Sugar Grove, Ky., kindly remembered me for the holidays, for which they have my thanks.

Beginning on Wednesday night, February 12, and continuing till the following Sunday night, a get-together meeting will be held at the Jackson Street Church, corner of Jackson Street and Fourteenth Avenue, North, Nashville. Brethren and sisters, both white and colored, are invited to meet with us and let us have the benefit of their best instruction. There will be day and night services. This meeting is to be held for the purpose of getting a better understanding of the work before us on the part of preachers, elders, and deacons. Take the Jefferson Street car, get off at Fourteenth Avenue, and walk south three blocks to a frame church building.

Lightest Known Wood.

A consular report from Port Limon, Costa Rica, gives interesting details concerning the trade of that region in balsa or corkwood (Ochroma), said to be the lightest of all known woods. It has long been used in tropical America for making canoes and a special type of raft, also known as balsa. It is very porous and a good insulator against heat and cold, and the report above mentioned states that it would be valuable for airplane construction. The young trees are soft and very sensitive to injury from vines. trees are deciduous, the male tree being known as burillo and the female as balsa real. The shipment of balsa wood has apparently not assumed large proportions, owing to the difficulty of transporting it from its native forests to the railway.-Exchange.

The price we must pay for continually proving and possessing the good is eternal vigilance. Often a sort of pig-headedness in self-assertion, in self-management, sets up its ownership. RUPTURE HEALED AT THE AGE
Mr. C. E. Brooks, Marshall, Mich.
Dear Sir.—

Less than a year ago I sent to you for an appliance which came promptly. I at once put I on and it fitted perfectly. I have worn the appliance not quite ten and a half mouths. It has cured my rupture. I tried the other day while the appliance was off, to see if I could force anything out of the opening to make a could not though I could not though I could not though I am tried hard.

Now I think this remarkable, as I am no old the cighty-first year. I am an old veteran of the Civil War, born and raised in the town of New Boston, State of New Hampshire, from which place I enlisted in the 10th N. H. Vol. Inft. in Co. C. commanded by Col. M. T. Donabue.

I cannot feel but that I owe you this testimony for I had never expected to be cured. However, thanks be to God I found a cure through the valuable appliance you made for me.

Your friend,

E. A. BICHARDS,

PENNSYLVANIA MAN THANKFUL
Mr. C. E. Brooks, Marshall, Mich.
Dear Sir.—Perhaps it will interest you to know that I have been ruptured six years and have always had trouble with it till I got your Appliance. It is very easy to wear, fits neat and snug, and is not in the way at any time, day or night.
In fact, at times I did not know, I had it on; it just adapted itself to the shape of the body and seemed to be a part of the body, as it chung to the spot, no matter what position I was in.

It would be a

what position I was in.

It would be a veritable God-send to the unfortunate who suffer from rupure if all could procure the Brooks Rupture Appliance and wear it. They would certainly never regret it.

My rupture is now all healed up and nothing ever did it.

My trupture sente itself I will say a good word for your Appliance, and also the honorable way in which you deal with ruptured recope. It is a pleasure to recommend a good thing among your friends or strangers. I am,

Yours very sincerely,

JAMES A BRITTON,

Edifying as the Need May Be BY A. B. LIPSCOMB

My good friend and brother, R. D. Smith, of Terrell, Texas, sends us another communication bearing upon the above subject, which follows:

Brother Lipscomb: Permit me to thank you kindly for the very courteous manner in which you treated my matter upon the above subject. But I still do not see this matter as you do; and while I assure you I have no desire to extend the discussion at length, I beg your indulgence a little further.

The argument based upon the American Standard Version is not conclusive. When I say this, I hope you do not consider me in the light of questioning the scholars; but I do dissent from the conclusion that the language in question is spurious on the sole grounds of its nonappearance in the Standard. The conclusion does not necessarily follow.

The fact that the committee chose Westcott & Hort to follow in their translation does not, in my judgment, prove that they regarded this text absolutely perfect and all variations as spurious. They considered it the best and freest from faults. It might have faults and yet be the best; others might not be the best texts, and yet some of their variations be genuine. The committee had nothing to do with producing Westcott & Hort, but, having selected it to follow, cannot deviate from the text. They might be disposed to dissent, but could not indicate it in the text.

The committee does not say which text they regard as right; but the facts show clearly that the members did not favor leaving out of consideration every variation from Westcott & Hort. They placed the readings of others in notes, and the note on the passage in question reads: "Many ancient authorities read is broken." They might have said they regarded it as spurious, or, better still, they could have left the note entirely out; but they did neither, and their action leans in favor of its genuineness. Hence, I repeat that the absence of the word from the body of the Standard text is not conclusive of its spuriousness. In addition to this, I wish to present again, more clearly if possible, the argument from Thayer's lexicon. We are not concerned at present about the meaning of a word, but whether the word is genuine. Dr. Joseph Henry Thayer was specially fitted to pass upon this question.

He was for many years professor of New Testament Criticism and Interpretation in Harvard, in which position it was his very business to investigate and pass upon the genuineness of New Testament writings; and after years of research in the whole field, and even having advantage of the Westcott & Hort text, he published his lexicon on the New Testament, but a short time prior to sitting in the A. S. Committee, and ventured to cite and define this very questioned passage. He was defining "klao," and took occasion to call attention to its present participle, "klomenos," and he defined the word, and referred to 1 Cor. 11: 24 as an instance of this use of the word. Evidently he does not reject the word. That he, a little later, sat in the Revision Committee which left the word out does not matter. They were following Westcott & Hort, and yet they took occasion to say: "Many ancient authorities read is broken.

So much upon the question of genuineness from the standpoint of nonappearance.

Your argument that authorities who admit or retain " klomenon" refer it to the bread and not the body does not seem sustained. You would argue that the necessity of the case demands it, since otherwise it occasions discrepancy; that the records show clearly that he was pierced and that his bones were not broken. This conclusion is certainly correct, provided a body cannot be broken without breaking the bones. But where is the proof?

I think I presented ample proof before that this word would not create a contradiction, and I feel that you did not properly consider my arguments. Your teaching that "Thayer refers the word to the body only in a metaphorical sense, which shows that he did not teach that the body was actually broken," and, "The only passage on which Brother Smith relies for proof that the body of Christ was broken, according to Thayer, states that the breaking refers to the bread and not to the body of Christ," is not conclusive. The passage does not state, according to Thayer nor otherwise, that the breaking refers to the bread. The fact that the language is figurative argues nothing at this point, for the bread was a literal substance as well as the body. Hence, your quoting a part of Thayer's definition and leaving out that part which ex-pressly applied to this word would fail to set forth his views on the point in question.

Does Thayer refer the breaking to the bread or the body? Hear him: "Metaph. To soma, shattered, as it were, by a violent death. (1 Cor. 11: 24.)" Never mind the metaphor; it will work on one literal substance as well as another. But what shattered? Whatever is to be or is suffering the effects, "violent death." Was it the bread or the body of Christ? Bread "shattered, as it were, by a violent death." The conclusion that it was the body is inwiteble, as far as Therses's testiments, is concerned. evitable, so far as Thayer's testimony is concerned.

Now, by this same principle, that the breaking refers to the bread and not to the body, let us try out the various passages and see how this application would sound. We would have:

1. "This [bread] is my body, which [bread] is broken for you." (1 Cor. 11: 24.) Only broken bread for you.

2. "This [bread] is my body, which [bread] is given for you." (Luke 22: 19.) Only bread given for you.

3. "This [cup] is my blood of the new testament, which [cup] is shed for many for the remission of sins."

"This cup is the new testament in my blood, (Luke 22: 20.) which [cup] is shed for you." cup [wine, fruit of the vine] shed for remission of sins.
Something was being "given," "broken," "shed," for remission of sins. It was not bread, nor wine, nor yet both of these; but clearly, his body and blood.

But if we are forced by the construction of the language to the conclusion that they refer the breaking to the body, how can we harmonize this with the fact that his body in its entirety was there before them when he was saying this to them? Paul said sometime prior to his death, according to the American Standard: "I am already being offered, and the time of my departure is come." Yet I presume that his body was in its entirety still. Paul could have meant that "the time is near for my offering," or "what I am now suffering is the beginning of the art." I am now suffering is the beginning of the end;" and so with this word "klomenon" (is being broken). It might have reference to the near approach of the violent death or to the sufferings already being endured, the beginning of the end.

How would it do to say it means just what it says—"this [bread] is my body?" Well, this would indeed fetch us dangerously near "transubstantiation" and the rocks of Romanism. He had already broken the bread when he said "is being broken;" so this cannot be urged when he said "is being broken; so this cannot be urged as an argument for applying the breaking to the bread. But how would you explain that the language, "this is my body," is intended to express comparison between the body and the bread? I would quote: "The Lord is my rock;" "The Lord is a man of war;" "God is a consuming fire;" "Behold the Lamb of God!" God is not a rock, a man of war, nor a consuming fire, but in his various characteristics is symbolized by these. Christ is not a lamb, but in his innecence is likened to a lamb, and was symholized by the lamb in the passover. Hence, we conclude that the bread and the wine are symbols to point us back to the broken body and shed blood.

But can it be truly said that his body "is broken?" As truly as language has meaning. We use the word of the breaking of men's bodies constantly and do not conceive their bones broken. Longfellow says of the notary as he enters the home of Belle fontaine:

"Bent like a laboring oar, that toils in the surf of the Bent, but not broken, by age was the form of the notary public.'

And who has not heard and even made use of the expression, when an old wreck came tottering along: "How he is breaking [being broken]!" And yet he hath all his bones, not one is broken. Hence, the process by which a body is weakened, enfeebled, or brought to death may well be referred to as "breaking" the body.

And now, as a last word, I offer once more the testimony of Dr. Thayer, who says, "To soma [the body], shattered, as it were, by a violent death," and refers to 1 Cor. 11: 24.

The very fact that the scholars left out "is broken" is conclusive evidence that they regarded it as spurious and not genuine. No scholar would stultify himself by leaving out anything which he finds in the King James Version that he regards as genuine. The committee did not change the King James Version of 1611 unless two-thirds of the committee favored the alteration. A majority might favor the change, as was the case in reference to the word "Comforter" in the fourteenth chapter of John; but as the necessary two-thirds did not favor the change, the word was retained in the American Standard Edition. No doubt the committee was unanimous in leaving out "is broken," as this is not found in the best Greek text. Having given their position in the text, the committee cheerfully stated in the margin, "Many ancient authorities read is broken for you;" but Thayer refers "is broken" to the bread and not to the body, only in a metaphorical sense.

The Bible does not say that Christ's body was broken. Thayer does not say so, but says the opposite. He says of "klao" that it is used in the New Testament of the "breaking of bread." Such authority should sustain a position with Brother Smith as it does with me. The very fact that Thayer applies "klao" metaphorically to "soma," the body of 1 Cor. 11: 24, warrants the conclusion that he does not hold that Christ's body was really broken. While bread is broken, metaphorically Christ's body was "shattered, as it were, by a violent death." The nerves were shattered, the body was pierced, bruised, and smitten, so violent was the death. If the body had been broken, he would not have stated it metaphorically. A figure of speech is a form of expression which departs widely and strikingly in certain specified ways from what is literal, straightforward, and matter of fact. A metaphor is an expression in which one object is spoken of under the image of another. There is an implied comparison in the images. Longfellow's "Evangeline" speaks of the stars under the image of flowers:

"Silently one by one, in the infinite meadows of heaven, Blossomed the body stars, the forget-me-nots of the angels."

As a matter of fact, stars never blossom; neither was Christ's body broken. Thayer says the bread was literally broken, but the body of Christ was metaphorically broken, just as Longfellow says the stars blossom. When Brother Smith can show that stars really blossom, then he can show by Thayer that Christ's body was really broken. "Pierced," "smitten," "afflicted," and "bruised" are all used in the Bible referring to Christ's body, but "broken" never. These words are not interchangeable with "broken." Take "pierce," for instance. We do not say that the arm that is pierced is broken. The physicians inoculate for typhoid fever and colds. I know a woman who has been inoculated ten times. The skin was pierced each time, yet no one thinks the arm was broken. A boy broke the bone in his arm, but the skin was not pierced or broken. The doctor and everybody else said his arm was broken. The same is true of the leg, the finger, or any member of the body. The paschal lamb was a type of Christ. Not a bone of it was broken. Of Christ it was prophesied: "A bone of him shall not be broken." Longfellow was correct when he represented the notary as bent, but not broken, by age. Every day I see old men bent, but not one of them with a broken body. As Brother Smith holds that the Lord is not a lamb, nor a consuming fire, nor a rock, but that these are figures of speech, it does seem that when Thayer refers breaking in a literal sense in the New Testament to bread, and to the body in a metaphorical sense, that he should understand that the body was not broken. The Bible says, "The Lord is my rock;" yet he says, "God is not a rock."

If our brother's argument from Matt. 26: 26 and Luke 22: 19 proves anything, it is the doctrine of transubstantiation. If the real body is what Jesus gave to them, then they ate the real body and drank the real blood of Jesus. But Jesus took bread, and blessed and brake it, and gave it to the disciples, and said: "Take, eat; this is my body." If this is the real body, then the bread is transformed into the actual body of Jesus. On this passage McGarvey says: "But as his body was still there, and the loaf which he held in his hands was also there, and as his body still remained there after the loaf had been broken, and passed around, and eaten up, it is impossible that they could have understood him as meaning that the loaf was literally his body, and impossible that he could have intended it to be so understood."

This is an end of the controversy. The language declares only that the bread was a symbol of his body, and it is the usual mode of expressing such an idea. For example: "The field is the world; the good seed are the children of the kingdom; the tares are the children of the wicked one; the enemy that sowed them is the devil." The bread symbolizes the body of Christ which is given for us.

Brother Smith and I both feel that we have written enough on this subject for this time. What we have written has been in the love of the truth, and of each other, and of the brotherhood. We hope our efforts have not been tiresome to anybody.

The Tennessee Orphans' Home Farm Not Sold. BY-J. C. M'O.

Some time ago I announced in these columns that the farm donated to the Tennessee Orphans' Home by Brother W. W. Gant, of Shelbyville, Tenn., had been sold for $15,750. After this announcement and after the farm had been bid off at this price, the directors learned that Brother Gant wished the farm to remain the property of the Home perpetually. It was also learned by some of the directors that there were conditions in the deed that led the purchaser, acting under the advice of his attorney, not to accept the deed offered by the directors of the Home. Because Brother Gant, the donor, wanted the farm to remain the property of the Home and to be improved, at a meeting of the Board of Directors on the twenty-first day of this month it was unanimously agreed to revoke the decision to sell the farm. It was urged and agreed in the meeting that his wishes should be respected. In order to carry out the wishes of Brother Gant, it will be necessary to make an effort to raise more funds for the maintenance of the Home and the improvement of the farm. Brother Gant held a note of one thousand dollars with interest, which the Home has paid. This reduces the amount of cash on hand. More eash will be required in order to improve the farm, as the farm is in a very low state of cultivation. It will be necessary to build new fences; to build a new house, costing perhaps fifteen hundred dollars; and to put much of the farm in clover and peas and to sow grass seed so as to bring it up to a good state of cultivation. Three practical farmers, Brethren George W. Johnson, S. F. Morrow, and F. C. Sowell, were authorized to make it their business to look after the farm, get a good tenant, and to see that it is properly handled. I am of the opinion that to rent the farm for money rent means to run it down. If a good tenant can be secured and the farm properly managed, it will enhance in value as the years go by, and it can be brought to a high state of cultivation. As it is the wish of the management of the Home to finance the Home without borrowing money, it is to be hoped and urged upon our readers that they will within the next few months make liberal contributions so that needed improvements can be made promptly. There is no good house on the farm and it will be hard to secure the proper tenant without being able to offer him such improvement. It is true that the board may not realize as much revenue while bringing up the farm to a high state of cultivation, but in the long run it will be much better for the institution.

Brother W. W. Gant, the largest single donor to the Home, suggests that the erection of suitable buildings be begun sometime in next May. He will back the needed improvements in a substantial way. He is greatly interested in the Home and proposes to be one of ten brethren to give one thousand dollars each for the purchase of another farm. "Where are the nine?" It should not be very difficult to find nine brethren who will subscribe one thousand dollars each. Sister Gant will also give one hundred dollars for the erection of buildings on the farm now owned by the Home. This is a good example for our sisters, and it is hoped that others will not be slow to follow it.

If a good farmer reads this who is willing to cultivate and improve the farm, he should write at once to F. C. Sowell, Columbia, Tenn., or to G. W. Johnson, Franklin, Tenn., Route 5. The trustees are anxious to secure a capable farmer who enters into the spirit of the institution. Such a farmer will cheerfully occupy the present building with the assurance that the needed buildings and improvements will soon be provided.

There are more orphans in the Home now than we have had for some time. We now have fifty-seven in the Home; and during the last few months the institution, as I now remember, has handled one hundred and fourteen orphans. Many of these children have been placed in good homes, I know of no better work than the Home is doing; so I appeal to our readers with confidence that they will be liberal in their support of this work. While it is right and proper to take care of the orphans in foreign lands, we should certainly not neglect our orphans here at home. Christians and churches all over the country should feel that they have an interest in the Home, and then should show this interest in a substantial way.

The Home is now on a better basis than it has ever been. It is running harmoniously, without friction, and there is no reason why it should not attain to a very high degree of efficiency and usefulness. This, by the help of the Lord and the hearty cooperation of the people, will certainly be reached. Every time one feeds and clothes an orphan, he rejoices and thanks the Lord that he is permitted to do this work. Make all contributions payable to the Tennessee Orphans' Home, Columbia, Tenn.

The Status of Our Discussion.

BY F. W. SMITH.

The friendly discussion between the editor of the Baptist Flag and the writer started as nearly all newspaper controversies do. There was no prearrangement or cutand-dried propositions with a limited number of articles by each disputant, hence the long-drawn-out affair. Brother Moore saw fit to criticize, through the columns of his paper, a sermon he heard me preach, in which there were no personalities and not the slightest reference to the Baptists. I did not assign anything in my discourse to their teaching, but spoke on general principles. I did not know the editor was in the audience, and would not have recognized him if I had known of his presence. A reply to his criticism was made, and our friendly exchange has continued for quite a while. But I concluded from the following that my friend desired a change one way or another: APOSTASY.

"The word of God not only teaches the possibility of apostasy and warns against it, but actually gives examples of some who did apostatize." F. W. Smith affirms; T. F. Moore denies.

Dear readers, the above proposition is Brother Smith's own statement, and I am happy to negative it. We have run over the entire system of faith as held by each one of us, but not discussed anything very much. As we have one proposition on which we have an issue, I will forego the pleasure of replying to most of his last article, that we may discuss this one with a few articles each.

He says: "We have run over the entire system of faith as held by each one of us, but not discussed anything very much." I am compelled to dissent from a part of this statement. It is true that Brother Moore introduced nearly every subject in the religious category, but it is not true that nothing much was discussed. There has been a pretty thorough sifting of a number of fundamental differences between us, and my friend has been compelled to yield some of what have heretofore been regarded as Baptist strongholds. The editor introduced the subject of "apostasy," and I placed before him actual cases of apostasy in the persons of Hymenæus and Philetus, with others whose faith was overthrown. (2 Tim. 2: 17, 18.) These cases of apostasy were so unmistakably clear that my friend tried to escape from his difficulty by asking me this question: "How do you know but what they repented and were finally saved?" I very correctly replied that it devolved upon him to prove from the sacred writings that those characters did repent "and were finally saved," and not be asking me such questions. In his fallure to find the needed evidence, he seeks another outlet from his inability to sustain his doctrine of "once in grace, always in grace." This time he tries the following route: "If Hymenaus and Philetus were saved, they have only erred in the faith; if not saved, they could not have apostatized, for the reason there was nothing from which to fall," Was there ever in the history of controversy a more complete "begging of the question" than is manifested in this? His plight is this: If they were saved, they could not have apostatized; and if they were finally lost, they were never saved. Mark you, he is not certain just how the matter was; or, in other words, he does not know which way to jump, and, therefore, he will not jump at all. But evidently my friend concluded to let the "apostasy" business alone, for in the next reply he comes with the following:

To F. W. SMITH.

We have now run nearly, or quite, a half year in discussing from Dan to Beersheba and not much yet done. Now the second time I call your attention to the fact that we are certainly agreed on some issue that we won't have to look after so much in one article.

I suggest two propositions on which we differ the Holy Spirit's presence in conversion and the design of baptism. I will affirm the former and you may affirm the latter.

Propositions: "The Scriptures teach that the Holy Spirit himself, personally, is present in hearing, repenting, believing, and being saved." T. F. Moore affirms; — denies. "The Scriptures teach that baptism in water is one of the conditions of salvation." — affirms; T. F. Moore denies.

With reference to the foregoing I remark:

- I cannot agree that "not much has been done;" but, on the other hand, I have been assured by a great many that very much has been done in refuting the errors of Baptist doctrine along a number of lines,
- 2. The editor has had ample opportunity to discuss fully the work of the Holy Spirit and the design of baptism. In fact, the place and importance of baptism in the scheme of redemption has been affirmed and proven almost from the beginning of this controversy. My friend was challenged a number of times to produce one passage that teaches people to be baptized "because of" remission of sins, but he severely let it alone.
- 3. His proposition on the Holy Spirit is too indefinite to be considered. What does he mean by "the Holy Spirit's presence" in conversion? Is he unwilling or afraid to affirm that in the conversion of the sinner the Holy Spirit exerts an influence upon the sinner's heart or mind over and above or independent of that resident in the word of truth! If he wishes to undertake the proof of such a proposition, I am at his service; but if not, let him openly repudiate that cherished doctrine of the Baptist Church.
- 4. I prefer to frame my own proposition on the import of baptism, and it is as follows: The Holy Scriptures teach that baptism in water is the point at which the sinner is justified or saved from past sins by faith. My friend claims that sinners are justified by faith, and so do I. The difference between us is as to when this is done; hence, the proposition I submit is just to both of us.

POINTS GAINED BY THE DISCUSSION.

- That two men can discuss their differences sharply, positively, and holdly with the best of feeling, all the while treating each other as gentlemen.
- 2. It has been shown that the doctrine of "total, hereditary deprayity" leaves infants dying in infancy to an eternal doom. My opponent claims God has only one way of saving people—viz., by grace; but since salvation "by grace" involves faith—"For by grace have ye been saved through faith" (Eph. 2: 8)—and infants are incapable of exercising faith, they cannot be saved by grace—God's only way of saving souls. "Total, hereditary depravity" and intant damnation must go hand in hand. So long as my friend holds to the former, he is compelled to accept the latter.

- 3. The Baptist position on the Lord's Supper shows what great stress they lay on baptism, while at the same time classing it as a nonessential. They recognize people who have not been immersed as the children of God, and then refuse to let these children of God eat at their Father's table because of a lack of water.
- 4. Methodists and Presbyterians are Christians; but should a Baptist preacher immerse one of them, forthwith he or she becomes a Baptist, thereby proving the great efficacy of water in the Baptist system.
- 5. According to Baptist doctrine, people are saved before and independent of the "new birth." My friend has argued that one is saved outside of the kingdom; and since Jesus Christ has inseparably connected the "new birth" with the kingdom, making it the means of entering the kingdom, my opponent has one saved before he is born again.
- 6. The editor has been forced to admit that faith in Christ precedes repentance. This he has done by admitting that the people on the day of Pentecost believed the preaching of the apostles, which produced conviction and led them to ask what to do.
- 7. The Baptist position that the "body of Christ" consists simply and solely in a local congregation has been shown to be unscriptural. Paul distinctly asserts that he and the Corinthians were baptized into the same body (1 Cor. 12: 13), and yet he was baptized in Damascus and they in Corinth, which would have been utterly impossible if he meant by the "body of Christ" a local congregation. My friend persistently refused to tell us into what the eunuch was baptized, if not into a general body. In an effort to sustain his doctrine, my friend placed himself in the ridiculous attitude of having the "general assembly and church of the first-born" (Heb. 12: 23) in heaven and not on the earth. But the writer of Hebrews told people living on the earth that they had come to this assembly and church. (Heb. 12: 22, 23.)
- 8. Baptist preachers have accused those they call "Campbellites" of baptizing "raw sinners," and yet the editor of the Baptist Flag freely admits that he would willingly baptize such characters as those mentioned in John 12: 42, 43—people who would not confess Christ because they loved the glory that is of men more than the glory that is of God. Thus the Baptists would baptize "raw sinners," rather than admit that faith precedes repentance.
- 9. The editor has utterly failed to show one vestige of Bible authority for the practice of requiring candidates for baptism to say, "I believe that God, for Christ's sake, has pardoned my sins," before baptism.
- 10. Finally, our discussion has caused some on the Baptist side to see stars. The editor puts on his front page this:
- I see F. W. Smith, chief mogul of Campbellism in Tennessee, has fallen head over heels into the Baptist camp, and says: "What may be properly termed saving faith, * * * that brings salvation from past sins, comes after repentance." I am glad the editor of The Flag has taught this erring Campbellite the way of the Lord more perfectly. Congratulations, Brother Moore.

The reader will note that the author of the above uses "stars" in what purports to be a quotation from my pen. In order to see stars, men do not always have to look at the firmament, for sometimes they are made to see stars from jolts and jars. He got such a jar from the way his doctrine has been demolished that, instead of quoting what I said, he went to making stars. We must excuse him on the ground that he was addled, and that he put down what he saw—namely, stars. Pleasantry aside. He left out that which teaches exactly the reverse of what he tries to make me teach, and he did it deliberately and willfully, knowing that he was perverting my language. I said:

If he contends that what may be properly termed "saving faith"—that is, that degree of faith that brings us to salvation from past sins—comes after repentance, I have no objections, for this is what I believe and have laught all these years,

Note the two statements and see what dishonesty will lead a man to do.

"Social Service."

BY L. G. KENNAMER.

The purpose of Christian social service is to follow the words of Christ in obedience, his spirit in motive, his example in action, in all our relations with men. These relationships, together with their privileges and duties, begin in the family with our birth and continue to all wider groups of society, uniting us to all men.

Our union with God comes first in order and importance. So soon as we are able to conceive the duty, we are called to obey the first law of voluntary action (Matt. 22: 37-40), that we love God whole-heartedly; and growing out of this, we are to love our neighbor as ourselves. To prove to men that we love God, we must love and help them. (Matt. 25: 34-40.) Knowing this to be our duty is no substitute or excuse for not doing it. God gives us the knowledge in his commandment that we may express it in action. Our purpose in this life should be to translate the will of God into simple words, that those words may be wrought into golden deeds.

Service to men is never a substitute for faith in Christ; rather, it is a proof that such faith exists. (John 14: 15, 21, 23; 15: 12, 14.) Adequate and permanent motive for loving and serving men is found, not in their expression to us of gratitude nor in their visible improvement, but in God, who teaches us to love them. (1 John 4: 11.)

Christ's teachings and commandments are as truly social as individual. The "Lord's prayer" is wholly social in form and essence, for each petition discloses a perfect program of social service. Less familiar words of the Savior are equally social (for example, the Beatitudes and further on in that wonderful Sermon on the Mount). The plain teachings of a large portion of the Gospels, as of the Epistles of the New Testament, are at once to assure direct personal relations with God and intimate and sympathetic coöperation with men in Christlike ways.

It is fostering the most Christlike spirituality in the individual's life to secure his love and service to men, as the proper expression of the love taught him by God, in the intimacy of filial communion through our Lord Jesus Christ.

We shall look upon the Incarnation, the greatest conceivable thought, the greatest conceivable fact, not that we may bring it within the range of our present powers, not that we may measure it by standards of this world, but that we may learn from it a little more of the gospel grandeurs of life, that by its help we may behold once again that halo of infinity about common things which seems to have vanished away, that, thinking on the phrase, "the Word became flesh," we may feel that in, beneath, beyond the objects which we see and taste and handle is a divine Presence, that, lifting up our eyes to the Lord in glory, we may know that phenomena are not ends, but signs only of that which is spiritually discerned.—Westcott.

No one is free. We do not belong to ourselves. There are countless people depending on us, people whom we have never seen and whom we never shall see. What we do decides what they will be.—Selected.

The smallest contribution acknowledged above	18 Very

The smallest contribution acknowledged above is very probably one of the largest in our Savior's estimation. It was sent by a colored washerwoman. Brother and Sister Gant, whose generosity has been bestowed in such large measure upon the Tennessee Orphans' Home at Columbia. Tenn., are among this week's contributors to the War Sufferers' Fund. Miss Margie Hamilton, one of the Sundayschool girls at Elora, Tenn., did a good part in soliciting for the amount sent in by this congregation.

In sending contributions, be sure and state whether they are intended for the Armenian and Syrian Fund or the Poland Fund. Make all checks and money orders payable to A. B. Lipscomb, who will forward them to the proper commissioners.

"The Reconstruction Period."

BY E. A. E.

Continuing from last week, let us consider the following observations:

When the authority-"all authority . . . in heaven and on earth" (Matt. 28: 18)-which Jehovah God, the Almighty and All-wise One, has bestowed upon Christ as the great and only head of the church and "head over all things to the church, which is his body, the fullness of him that filleth all things" (Eph. 1: 22, 23), has been transferred to some human head in the person of one man or in the form of some human organization or ecclesiasticism, the authority of God has been set aside and ruin to the church is bound to follow. As surely as the Israelites rejected God as their king when they went to Samuel and asked for a king to govern them "like all the nations" (1 Sam. 8), so surely does the church—the Israel of God nowreject Christ as head and king and the authority of God when they turn to worldly wisdom and any human head. Furthermore, just as God has made Jesus of Nazareth the Christ and set him upon the throne "to be head over all things to the church," so has he appointed "elders in every church" (Acts 14: 23) and specified their work, and it is as much a rejection of God and his rule over the church to set aside his appointed elders and their work and place the church under the one-man pastor, or oneman minister, or one-man evangelist rule as to displace Christ as head and King. Strife and division, disaster and destruction, inevitably follow this course. We know just what it is and just what it means to take the control of its finances from the church and out of the hands of the elders and to place it in the management of some self-constituted human organization; but this is no worse and no more a rejection of God's way and wisdom than to take the work of the elders out of their hands and bestow it upon some self-constituted one-man rule. This digression is as subtle, as dangerous, as rebellious, and as ruinous as any others.

Let us further apply this principle. The effort of many preachers of all denominations and of not a few who claim to be of no denomination at all, but Christians only and only Christians, to adapt God, Christ, the church, the Holy Spirit, and Christianity to the wisdom and spirit, ambition and carnal warfare of the world and their comparing the soldiers who suffer and die on the field of battle to Christ and his death on the cross for the sins of the world is as much perversion of the gospel, as much counting the blood of the covenant "an unholy thing," and as much rejection of "the Prince of Peace" as turning from the church to some human organization or ecclesiasticism with its human head. What is the difference? Only this: The first departure from God-his wisdom and spirit-to the wisdom and spirit of the world leads to greater departures-to the spirit of vengeance and bloodshed, to the rejection of the blood of Christ, and to the woeful deception of counting the sacrifice of human victims to the cruel and fierce war god as acceptable worship of Jehovah,

When the authority of Christ over men's consciences has been transferred to some human religious organization or to the civil government, then religious liberty becomes a thing of the past and the church becomes only a means in the hand of the State to serve its political and worldly

The government which respects the religious convictions of a religious sect, as the Quakers, cannot do otherwise than respect the conscientious convictions of the individual. This must be done or there can be no religious liberty. This the President finally ordered to be done.

Sometimes young Christians were put to severe tests; but this resulted only in good, when properly received. The gold tried in the fire was only purified.

The truth is, this terrible war took the boys of the church, young and tender and inexperienced, unawares. When they turned to the elders of their home congregations in some places and to some preachers for instruction and guidance, they were dumfounded and paralyzed to find themselves almost without support and in some instances subjects of ridicule. Who should be astonished if many failed?

It is impossible but that occasions of stumbling should come; but woe unto him through whom they come! were well for him if a millstone were hanged about his neck, and he were thrown into the sea, rather than that he should cause one of these little ones to stumble. 17: 1, 2.)

"One of these little ones!" These young boys are "little

The Bible teaches that the spirit of the world and the spirit of Christ are two quite different and antagonistic spirits. It is the spirit of the world that leads to carnal warfare; the spirit of Christ is the very opposite to all that is embraced in carnal warfare. The weapons of the Christian's warfare are not of the flesh. (2 Cor. 10: 4.)

I repeat, the God of heaven. Christ, the Holy Spirit, the gospel of peace, the church, and Christianity do not need reconstructing. The teaching and spirit of Christ to love one's enemies, to not avenge oneself, but to pray for and to do good to those who would harm one, are always the same, or unchangeable. God cannot be obeyed by acting contrary to these.

I have heard it said that many preachers had to change their former sermons to suit the spirit and conditions of the war period; now they have to reconstruct them to suit the present conditions of peace on earth and good will to men.

It is easy to go with the multitude and to preach war when the multitude want war and preach peace when the world cries peace. To preach what is popular is the easiest and most comfortable thing to do. But God forbids that his people should go with the multitude to do evil or to justify a minority in wrongdoing. (Ex. 23: 1-3.) God would have his people to follow the right—to obey him—regardless of the many or the few and regardless of consequences. All must say with Joshua: "But as for me and my house, we will serve Jehovah." (Josh. 24: 14, 15.)

Every preacher knows, or should know, what the gospel is; what it is to know nothing, "save Jesus Christ, and him crucified;" what it is to declare "the whole counsel of God," "all things that pertain unto life and godliness," "the faith which was once for all delivered unto the saints;" and what it is to avoid all the questions which Paul instructs Timothy and Titus to let alone; and their sermons must be constructed or reconstructed, as the case may be, so as to please and honor God and to lead men into obedience to his will.

This is a time of strife in not a few congregations and of contention among brethren, a time of unrest and unsettled conditions, and it behooves all Christians to pray most devoutly for that wisdom which comes down from above, which is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, easy to be entreated, and full of righteousness and good fruit; to labor to build up their congregations in love; to be forbearing and forgiving; and to endeavor to be of one heart and soul and to "keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace." To draw nigh to God is the one thing needful. As men draw nigh to God, they come closer and closer together.

Mission Work.

BY J. C. M'Q.

Brother C. C. Merritt, of Davis City, Iowa, sends me a number of questions with a letter urging me to write an article on some phase of the important work of preaching the gospel. I am noticing his questions, but not in the order given.

He inquires: "Is mission work an essential or an option?" In the light of the New Testament, all that should be necessary is to state that it is essential. Christ is the greatest missionary the world has ever known. He left the glories of heaven and came to the poverty and degradation of this world in order to save and redeem mankind. ' For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have eternal life." (John 3: 16.) God did not give his Son to a life of ease and luxury, but gave him to a life of toll, poverty, and trial. On one occasion Christ declares: "The foxes have holes, and the birds of the heaven have nests; but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head." (Matt. 8: 20.) Again, we hear him saying: "We must work the works of him that sent me, while it is day; the night cometh, when no man can work." (John 9: 4.) Christ's life was a day filled with deeds of devotion and sacrifice for a lost and ruined race. Hungering and thirsting to save souls, he gave himself wholly, freely, and uncomplainingly to that work. The Holy Spirit declares: "If any man hath not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his." (Rom. 8: 9.) Christians are the "light of the world" and the "salt of the earth" only as they walk in the light of the Lord Jesus Christ, Christ has left us an example that we should walk in his steps. It is not sufficient to have a form of godliness; it is not enough to have a theory in religion; but Christians must have a practice modeled by the life of the Lord Jesus Christ, otherwise they fail to accomplish their work. Churches that are the pillar and support of the truth must have the same spirit that Christ had. Their consuming desire must be to do the will of God. As Christ came to do his will, so it must be the ambition of every child of God to do the will of our Father who is in heaven. In vain do we pray for the salvation of souls, in vain do we make great pretensions to be the servants of God, so long as we do not make sacrifices and devote ourselves to the work of preaching the gospel to those who are in darkness. When the divine philanthropy had accomplished its work; when the divine plan of salvation had been completed and the time was near for lost and ruined men to be saved, Christ said to his chosen apostles: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to the whole creation. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that disbelieveth shall be condemned." (Mark 16: 15, 16.) "Belief cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of Christ." (Rom. 10: 17.) It was obligatory on the apostles to obey this command to go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature. The Holy Spirit tells us that they preached the gospel to every creature under heaven. The apostles were not among the number that held the theory that the gospel is not God's power unto salvation. They had faith in the gospel. They realized that Christ and the gospel were so associated together that when they preached one they would preach the other. Hence, Paul says to the church at Corinth: "For I determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ, and him crucified. And I was with you in weakness, and in fear, and in much trembling. And my speech and my preaching were not in persuasive words of wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit and of power: that your faith should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God." (1 Cor. 2: 2-4.) This great apostle, glorying only in the cross of Christ, declared to the church at Rome: "For I am not ashamed of the gospel: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek." (Rom. 1: 16.) The apostles made great sacrifices in order to preach the gospel; for they realized that when the gospel was preached, that when men heard it, believed it, and obeyed it, they would be delivered out of the power of darkness and translated into the kingdom of the Son of his love. Under their preaching thousands upon multiplied thousands were brought into the kingdom of the Lord Jesus Christ. The man who has the same spirit to-day and has imbibed deeply of the Spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ will be the humble instrument in the hands of Jehovah in leading many into the kingdom of our dear Savior. As the Christian spirit and the Pauline spirit are missionary spirits, so we may conclude that any spirit that is antimissionary is antichristian. No man who has the Spirit of Christ is antimissionary. I never call a Christian an "antimissionary." The Christian spirit is essentially missionary. It pants and thirsts for the salvation and redemption of souls as pants the hart for cooling springs.

Brother Merritt inquires further: "Do you think the brethren are pushing mission work in an apostolic way?" All that I know about the apostles' doing missionary work is this: Men who had the Spirit of Christ were sent out by the church, or by the Spirit, and the churches sent to their support while they were in the field. Paul, in writing to the Philippian church, says: "Ye yourselves also know, ye Philippians, that in the beginning of the gospel, when I departed from Macedonia, no church had fellowship with me in the matter of giving and receiving but ye only; for even in Thessalonica ye sent once and again unto my need." (Phil. 4: 15, 16.) The Holy Spirit separated Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto God had called them: "So they, being sent forth by the Holy Spirit, went down to Selucia; and from thence they sailed to Cyprus." (Acts 13: 4.) When they had completed this missionary journey, they reported to the church at "Antioch, from whence they had been committed to the grace of God for the work which they had fulfilled. And when they were come, and had gathered the church together, they rehearsed all things that God had done with them, and that he had opened a door of faith unto the Gentiles," (Acts 14: 26, 27.) As the Holy Spirit used wisdom in separating these men for the work to which they had been called, so the churches to-day should use wisdom in sending men into the mission field. The men selected should not be those who had failed and would fail in almost any calling of life. They should be men peculiarly fitted and adapted to the work. The one thing that fits Christians for their work above everything else is a consuming desire to tell the old, old story of the cross to lost and ruined men. I know few churches, if any, that are working as did the apostles for the salvation of men. This also answers the next question of our brother, which is: "If so, is it done to an apostolic degree?" I have learned from observation and experience that many of our missionaries are not fitted for the work. They fail to report systematically to the churches that have sent them out. There are envies and jealousies among the missionaries that find no countenance and recognition in the New Testament. A decided reformation is needed in these things. Because a man is a Christian and is doing missionary work is no reason why he should not do the work in an intelligent and systematic way. A clear and truthful report of work done and all money received is a protection to any faithful and honest worker. The churches should demand of all their missionaries a full report of the work they are doing; and when they fail to give it, the churches should know just why. Inefficiency in missionaries should be corrected as well as inefficiency in any one else. The man is not doing real charity who tosses a dollar to a beggar to get rid of him; so the church is not doing real missionary work simply when it gives money to a missionary without inquiring to know whether the gift is being wisely and efficiently used. If, on investigation, the churches find that the missionaries are not preaching the gospel, but are continually striving with and seeking to destroy each other, this evil should be corrected; and if not corrected promptly, the support of such missionaries should be withdrawn by the churches. I am satisfied that churches who have the Spirit of Christ will walk in the light of truth as they learn it. This is also true of the missionary. The thing for the churches to do is to faithfully preach and practice the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. A faithful practice of the gospel will correct evils.

We are more responsible for the use of our vacant than of our more serious hours, for thought is more dependent on our own will when no constraining outward eall binds us.—T. T. Carter.

It is not the dying for a faith that is so hard. Every man of every nation has done that. It is the living up to it that is difficult.—Thackeray.

Attention, Sunday-School Teachers!

The conscientious teacher of the Bible is anxious to secure the best help available in the preparation of the lesson. Patient research not only improves and enriches the mind of the teacher, but makes the class work doubly interesting to the scholars. In addition to our quarterlies, we carry two excellent books that cover the International Sunday-school Lessons. The publishers of "Peloubet's Select Notes" claim that it is the "most valuable commentary in the world," because it is "scholarly, comprehensive, condensed, and practical." It covers every phase of the lesson, from treatment and explanation of text, with notes from the best commentators, to list of special books for further study along the lines of thought suggested.

"Tarbell's Teachers' Guide" is edited by Miss Martha Tarbell, Ph.D., and has been a general favorite for many years. The author has covered everything in the field of research and investigation that the enterprising teacher or scholar would like to know. Primary, Junior, Intermediate, Senior, and Bible-class teachers find in it full explanation of Bible texts, light upon difficult passages by the best biblical scholars, and discussion of present-day problems in teaching.

We will send either one of these valuable books for $1.25, postpaid; or, in combination with a new subscriber, we will send the Gospel Advocate for one year and either one of these commentaries for $3 to the same or separate addresses.

The Young People, edited by A. B. Lipscomb, is a highclass illustrated weekly of four pages. The editor's comments upon the lessons occupy one page. The price is fifty cents per single copy for a year, or five or more copies to one address for forty cents each.

The old year is gone with its changes; It has passed like the wind o'er plain; And naught of it lingers, save what Memory's fingers Have gathered of pleasures and pain.

As I muse o'er the days that have vanished,
And sum up the bad and the good,
This question I ask, while reviewing each task;
"O soul, have I done what I could?"

"O hands, have you wrought in full measure?
What sheaves did you garner last year?
Have you reaped the ripe grain or labored in vain—Say, how does the harvest appear?

"O feet, has your journey been upward, Or down in the valley of strife? Did your steps go astray in the broad beaten way, Or pursue the King's highway of life?

"O heart, from the fires of thy altars, What incense of love did arise? Have the offerings been to the deities of men, Or the Lord of the earth and the skies?"

Let my life through the days of this new year Be attuned to the true and the good; Or if death come to me, grant, Lord, it may be Truly said: "He hath done what he could."

AT HOME AND ABROAD

Change of address: Thomas D. Rose, from Monterey, Tenn., to Mackville, Ky.

We had a very inspiring service at Russell Street Church, this city, Sunday. Three took membership with the congregation.

Correspondents will please note that C. E. Coleman has changed his address from Macon, Ga., to 917 Russell Street, Nashville, Tenn.

The new list of preachers of churches of Christ for 1919 is off the press. Send fifteen cents for a copy to F. L. Rowe, Publisher, Cincinnati, Ohio, or to the Firm Foundation, Austin, Texas.

Miss Mamye Maupin, of this city, and Mr. Aaron Hill, of Evansville, Ind., were married, at the bride's home, 1512 Laurel Street, at 4:30 P.M., Saturday, February 1, Morgan H. Carter officiating. We extend congratulations.

On page 128 of this issue you will please to note description of "Peloubet's Select Notes" and "Tarbell's Teachers' Guide." We have reduced these books to $1.25 each. Either of these books is almost indispensable to a teacher. Order to-day, for our supply may soon be exhausted.

From Ben West, Ennis, Texas, January 27: "Yesterday was a glorious day here. Four spirited services and five additions. There have been nineteen added during January. The crowds are the largest we have had since October. All rejoice in the good work and are faithful to every call."

Married, on Saturday, February 1, at 7 A.M., Mr. Ralph S. Sowell to Miss Mary Elizabeth Barton. The contracting parties have many friends among the readers of the Gospel Advocate who wish for them unalloyed happiness. A. B. Lipscomb performed the ceremony at his residence in the West End.

The muse is working in Tom Bean, Texas. W. P. Skaggs sends the following:

"Long live the 'Advocate' to proclaim the Master's name! Long live all who earnesty defend the Master's cause! May we all strive to advance the Master's fame, May we all faithfully proclaim the Master's laws."

From B. U. Baldwin, Oklahoma City, Okla., January 27: "Our work here has continued to grow, with much interest. Three good services yesterday; one addition Our sisters meet each Thursday and make garments for the poor. We will have five to clothe next Thursday. We are trying to do good work, that others may be constrained to glorify our God."

From L. E. Carpenter, Itasca, Texas, January 27: "We enjoyed two good services here yesterday. I preached twice here and once at Files Valley yesterday. Brethren, there is so much that needs to be done, so much that we need to do and that God expects of us, that we cannot afford to be idle. Remember, our time, our talents, and our all belong to God. Let us do our best in using them for him."

From C. E. Wooldridge, Murfreesboro, Tenn.: "The work here starts off nicely. I hope to do the best work I have ever done. I have a big job to get acquainted as I want to, but I know how and like the work. I hope to get in touch with all the brethren in the county soon and serve them in many ways, especially in such emergencies as often arise. I have conducted four funerals out in the county already. My address is Box 239."

Many of our readers will be pleased to learn of the high honor conferred upon Lieut. Elam Srygley, a son of F. B. Srygley. He was decorated with the distinguished-service medal by General Pershing for bravery on the battle field. While the fire was the hottest he left the shelter of his tent and ministered to the wounded and the dying. Lieutenant Srygley is connected with the medical corps and is now with the army of occupation in Germany.

From Joe Ratcliffe, Bardwell, Ky., January 28: "The church in Bardwell is doing well. I hope all of the gospel preachers will be busy this year preaching the gospel, the whole gospel, and nothing but the gospel. I am ready for the battle. Brethren, if you need me, do not hesitate to send for me, for I have plenty of time; and if you are not satisfied with my humble efforts, it shall not cost you anything. I have some work in Tennessee and some in Texas. I will go anywhere I am needed. If you want me, address me at Bardwell, Ky."

From Tice Elkins, Nocona, Texas: "I have lately received thirty-seven dollars from brethren and sisters to aid us in our afflictions, and I noted every name down, but have mislaid the paper, so that I cannot give the names of all the donors. Some requested me not to publish their names. I have written a personal letter to every one of them, and now acknowledge it all this way, and hope that none will feel offended that I do not give their names. May God bless every one of them. My health is getting better, and I am able to be at the work of the Master again."

From G. Dallas Smith, Cleburne, Texas, January 30: "The work with the Central church of Christ here is moving along quite nicely. Our crowds are getting back since the 'flu' situation is improving and everything is in good working order. Last Sunday afternoon about seventy-five of our members undertook to canvass the whole city—to visit every home. This canvass was made in the interest of members who might have moved into the city and who for any reason have not made themselves known as members of the church. The results of our canvass, according to reports made Sunday night, were quite gratifying. We are planning to bring out a directory of the church soon."

From W. L. Watters, Bogota, Texas: "So far as I can learn, there is but one loyal gospel preacher in this county, and there is room here for a great many more Christians. In this town we need more good church workers, and in a business way we need a shoemaker and a good gunsmith also. We would like to see the cause of Christ built up at this place, and we need more live Christians to help to do this. We have a good country for farming and a live little town, and we invite people who want to do something for the cause of Christ to come and help us. I do not intend this for an advertisement to try to get people to come to this county so that I may profit by it, but to try to induce some who might be wanting to make a change to come and help us."

The following program has been arranged to be given in Harding Hall, David Lipscomb College, during the week beginning February 10: The New Testament Church—"What Is It?" Monday evening, half past seven o'clock, by C. M. Pullias; "Its Discipline," Tuesday evening, F. W. Smith; "A Missionary Society," Wednesday evening, F. B. Srygley; "An Adequate Charitable Institution," Thursday evening, A. B. Lipscomb; "The Effects of the War Upon It," Friday evening, E. A. Elam. Following this series of lectures emphasizing the New Testament Church, T. Q. Martin will deliver a series of sermons to the college and church, beginning on February 16, at 11 A.M., and continuing through the week. All of these meetings are open to the public, and brethren and sisters are cordially invited to attend.

From W. S. Long, Washington, D. C., February 3: "It will be of deep interest to all who love the Lord to see the growth of the cause of Christ in Washington. On November 1 the few members said: 'Let us rise up and build.' At that time we were shut out of the use of any house, with nowhere to meet, only a few from house to house. Now we have about one hundred present each Lord's day. We now have enough money on hand to pay the spot cash for the building site, and we have had help from less than three per cent of the churches. We believe that there are yet twenty per cent of the congregations that are going to send as much as one Lord's-day's contribution. On February 22 this whole nation, and other nations as well, will rally around the monument of George Washington and pay honor to his name. But February 23 is the birthday of our Lord's resurrection from the tomb, and we are asking the churches of Christ to set apart the offering of that day to help us erect a house of worship in the nation's capital. Brethren, will you do this? We have given of our means to erect a monument to the 'Father of Our Country' which cost many thousand dollars, and as I look upon it, towering five hundred and fifty-two feet above the city. I wonder why the church of Christ in the United States cannot erect one plain building in this city in which to preach the primi-tive gospel and worship God 'as it is written.' The call is now before the children of God through the Gospel Advocate, the Christian Leader, the Firm Foundation, and by personal letters which will reach more than twenty thousand church members. Let us see how well we can respond to the call one time."

Our Treasurer Slightly Disturbed.

I was a bit amused at our treasurer, a few Sundays ago, when he came to me after services and said: "There was a roll of bills amounting to twenty dollars dropped in by some one this morning. Do you recken some one made a mistake and put in more than he intended?" "No," said I, "I am quite sure there was no mistake." Brethren who travel sometimes drop in for services, and I have known them to leave a check for five or ten dollars. Occasionally our soldier boys who cannot attend every Lord's day give what they purpose to give for a whole month. But on the Sunday referred to we could not think of any such person present who might have put this amount in.

After I got home, I got to studying about the fact that I had been preaching quite a good deal about my having doubts that God forgets some things that we forget. For instance, a brother fails to give anything, scarcely, to the church for a year or so; then he hears a sermon that wakes him up, and he decides he will give regularly as the Lord prospers him, and does this. But he begins now to do this, and it never occurs to him that he has been neglecting his duty for a year or so along this line. I had raised the question, will God forget this neglect just because he sees he has not lived right and gives from now on as he should? Or does he have to undo this past neglect by giving to the treasury the past dues? It occurred to me that some one, perhaps, was paying up past dues. Let this be as it may, it is a dangerous thing to forget our sins of omission and commission when God has not forgotten them. Brethren, think on these things. If all the money should to-day be put into the treasuries of the hundreds of congregations that is really due there, we would be flooded with money. In conclusion, let me say that it is the salvation of these neglectful souls we want, and not the money. With Paul, every true elder can say: "Not that I seek the gift; but I seek for the fruit that increaseth to your account." (Phil. 4: 17.) You had never thought of the money that you put into God's service drawing interest, had you? Well, it does. It is not only placed to your account, but "Increaseth to your account." It sets in motion a power for good, and it continues. Well, what about that you hold back? Even if you should put it all in now, the interest has been lost-that is, the good it would have been doing.

A Word to Our Scribes.

The preacher who stands before an audience to address it on the subject of religion and salvation is confronted with a very weighty responsibility. The man who writes for a paper like the Gospel Advocate is confronted with a more weighty responsibility. None of us ever address an audience in our oral addresses so large as the audience we address when what we say appears in the Advocate. If only one in each home where the Advocate goes should read the paper, fifteen thousand or more would be listening to you; if an average of three in each home should read what you say, you are talking to about forty-five thousand. Do you ever think, as you write, what kind of impression what you are saying will make? The salvation of not one soul only, but thousands, may rest on what you say. Hence, we should never think of sending an article to the paper unless it has been prepared in the spirit and power of prayer.

A few times in life I have been sufficiently unfortunate to have to listen to a man preach who seemed not to love the salvation of those before him; in fact, it seemed that the speaker was thinking nothing about the salvation of souls, but had his mind on some one or two persons in the audience that he seemed to hate and on whom he was striving to land a few "knocks." It is very unfortunate that such men ever get into the pulpit. Then, I think I have read articles in even the Advocate that seemed to me could do no good, and I was left to wonder if the writer had any desire whatever to save a soul or encourage a struggling Christian. Of course, we certainly know that there are times when the injunction to "rebuke them sharply" (Tit. 1: 13) must be obeyed, but never should such be done to gratify a personal grudge or give vent to our own fleshly feelings; but it must be done, if done aright, with the tenderest love for the one rebuked and that the cause of Christ may be safeguarded and defended.

Every paper like the Gospel Advocate, if it meets God's approval, must be filled with soul food; must ever contain such matter as will edify, enlighten, and build the readers up in "the faith." Along this line may it ever grow.

A Good Example.

A good sister came to me after services yesterday (January 26) and said she wanted the Gospel Advocate sent to a certain sister who lives out of the city and cannot come into the city for services so conveniently as some of us. Too, she is so far from the other members she cannot be visited as often as some of them. This good sister thought the next best thing to being at the services regularly and being visited by the members would be the weekly visits of the Gospel Advocate. She is right about this, and I am sure that every member, if he or she would only think and look about him just a little, could find some one to whom the weekly visits of the Advocate would mean so much. Suppose you try, my brother. May I not ask the Atlanta members who can to take a bit more interest in this kind of work? Then, sending the paper to friends and loved ones who are not members is one of the best ways of converting them.

The King's Hall Congregation in Louisville.

We take pleasure in announcing that Brother R. A. Craig, recently of Chaplin, Ky., has begun work with the King's Hall congregation, in Louisville, Ky., dividing time, for the present, between it and the Cedar Springs Church, another congregation a short distance from the city. In view of the peculiar circumstances surrounding the work in the King's Hall field, he deserves credit for possessing the mettle of true courage and conviction in firmly and resolutely standing by truth and right in spite of opposition and discouragement. Brother Elam recently held an interesting and successful meeting of a few days with this congregation and was impressed with the promising outlook for building up the cause of Christ.

Brother Craig is a young man of good ability and address, has a burning desire to preach the gospel backed by a consistent and consecrated life, and gives promise of a successful career in the ministry. He has already achieved a good measure of success in the evangelistic field, having held a number of successful protracted meetings, and we congratulate the two congregations in the arrangement to have him labor with them. Cedar Springs has been a wide-awake church and noted for good works for many years, and the King's Hall congregation has in it some of the best families of Louisville, including some of the city's stanchest Christians, and the Gospel Advocate bids both the churches and their preacher Godspeed in the work and bespeaks for their united labors a record of continued growth and prosperity.

Brother McQuiddy: Do you consider Luke 16: 19:31 a parable or facts? I have always thought it a parable, but one of our preachers used that as a text and explained it as facts.

J. E. Sanders.

There is no way of knowing definitely whether the language found in Luke 16: 19-31 is a parable or a presentation of facts as they occurred. In Matt. 13: 3 we read, "And he spake to them many things in parables;" but in the case of the rich man and Lazarus, he does not tell us whether the language was a parable or facts. I am inclined to the view that this is a relation of actual facts, from the fact that he says that there was "a certain rich man," just as Luke, the same writer, in Acts, says that the eunuch came unto "a certain water." However, it is wholly immaterial whether it is a parable or fact, for the truth is impressed in either case.

Brother McQuiddy: Does the Bible justify the singing of quartets and solos when we come together to worship on the first day of the week or at the midweek prayer-meeting service? It seems to me that the practice of singing quartets and solos in the worship is a step toward digression.

A BROTHER.

The Bible says nothing about soles and quartets; hence, no one can claim that the Bible authorizes the singing of quartets or solos. The New Testament teaches Christians to sing. Singing is an item of worship, and, therefore, should be engaged in by all of the congregation-at least, all of it that is able to sing. Of course, a man's responsibility to sing is measured by his ability to do so. Paul says: "Speaking one to another in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing and making melody with your heart to the Lord." (Eph. 5: 19.) They were to speak to each other in the singing. This must have been when they were called together. Again: "Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly; in all wisdom teaching and admonishing one another with psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing with grace in your hearts unto God." (Col. 3: 16.) The singing should be done in order to honor and glorify God. If a person singing a solo does it to the honor and glory of God, or if a quartet sings for the same purpose, I do not understand that it would be a step toward digression. If a quartet or solo is used in the worship simply to please men, it is dishonoring to God. This is true of anything that is done for worship. But if persons by singing quartets or by engaging in a solo can more effectively advance the cause of Christ, there is no reason why such singing should not be used at times. However, when the congregation is come together, congregational singing should be used in the worship.

Brother McQuiddy: How do you harmonize the seeming discrepancy between Matthew and Luke in giving the genealogy of Christ? Matthew says Joseph, the reputed father of Christ, was the son of Jacob, while Luke says Joseph was the son of Heli.

The two passages are Matt. 1: 16 and Luke 3: 23. Matthew says: "And Jacob begat Joseph, the husband of Mary, of whom was born Jesus, who is called Christ." Luke says: "And Jesus himself, when he began to teach, was about thirty years of age, being the son (as was supposed) of Joseph, the son of Hell." The apparent discrepancy or contradiction has given much concern to students. There is nothing, however, in this to shake the faith of any Christian, for the Jews were very accurate in keeping their genealogies. The enemies of Christ were watchful, and if there had been any real discrepancies or contradictions in the genealogy of Christ, they certainly would have pointed it out when all the facts were fresh. The very fact that they did not point out any such discrepancy is strong circumstantial evidence that there is no real discrepancy. The genealogies among the Jews were reckoned in two ways: (1) according to nature, as in the case of natural generation; (2) according to law, as when a man died childless, his brother was compelled to take his wife. and the issue of that marriage was accounted to the deceased brother. In this genealogy some succeeded their fathers as natural sons, but others succeeded who hore their names only. So the genealogy of Christ was reckoned. The one reckoned the pedigree by the natural line; the other, by the legal line. Africanus, in his Epistle to Aristides, says: "The race both of Solomon and Nathan is so interwoven by those second marriages, which raised up issue in the name of a deceased brother, that some appear to have two fathers-him whose natural issue they were though they did not bear his name, and him to whom, having died childless, the children of his wife and brother were accounted for a seed, assuming his name. If we reckon the generations according to Matthew, from David by Solomon, Matthan will be found the third from the end, who begat Jacob, the father of Joseph; but if we reckon according to Luke, from Nathan the son of David. then the third person from the end will be Melchi, whose son was Heli, the father of Joseph; for Joseph was the son of Heli, the son of Melchi. Matthan and Melchi having each successively married the same wife, the latter begat children, who were brethren by the mother. Matthan, descending from Solomon, begat Jacob of Estha. After the death of Matthan, Melchi, who descended from Nathan, being of the same tribe, but of another race, took his widow to wife, and begat Heli; thus Jacob and Heli were brethren by the mother. Heli dying without issue, Jacob married his widow and begat Joseph, who by the law was accounted the son of Heli, because the law required the seed to be raised up to the deceased brother. Matthew, therefore, properly says Jacob begat Joseph; but Luke says he was the son of Heli; and it is worthy of remark that this evangelist never uses the term 'begat' or 'begetting,' because he traces up this genealogy by putative, and not by natural, sons." This is the substance of Africanus' account, which he says he received from the relatives of our Lord. It appears that Matthew related the genealogy of Joseph, and Luke that of Mary, the mother of Jesus. As Matthew's genealogy proved only the legal right of Christ to inherit David's throne, another should be added by Luke fully to prove that Christ according to the flesh derived his descent from David, not only by his supposed father, Joseph, but also by his real mother, Mary. Luke's genealogy supplements Matthew's by showing that Jesus by his mother inherited the blood of David; but Luke does not follow the line of kings, and consequently he proves nothing in regard to Christ legally inheriting the throne. Thus we see that by a line of ancestry which brought Jesus no inheritance he received the blood of David, and by a line which established no blood connection he inherited the throne of David. So it is clear that Matthew's genealogy established his legal right to the throne; while that of Luke shows that he inherited the blood of David, and was, therefore, by inheritance fitted to sit on the throne. We admire the providence which first brought about this striking coincidence and then caused it to be recorded in so singular a manner by two independent historians. Thus it is clear there is no contradiction between Matthew and Luke, one showing his legal right to the throne, and the other showing that by natural generation he descended from David.

In Paris at Last.

BY C. G. VINCENT.

I think my last note to this paper touched only upon the voyage over. We remained in Liverpool twenty-four hours. The English have overcome a very difficult docking problem caused by the tide, which varies from three to fifteen feet, by building an elaborate system of walls and locks. The ships are docked at high tide and the locks closed. At low tide the ships in the docks are several feet above the waters of the Mersey River.

We were sent to Southampton. Luckly for our group, we had the pleasure of riding by day, and were able to get a fair conception of the English farms, villages, and cities. All of us were impressed by the beauty of the well-laid-out and well-kept farms and pastures. Frame houses and rail, wire, and plank fences were conspicuous by their absence. Instead, they use stone and brick for houses and stone and hedge for fences.

We spent two days in a "rest camp" at Southampton. We had a "lot of fun" sleeping between damp and lately disinfected blankets, on soft pine floors! There are many interesting places in this old port city. There are definite traces of the presence of the ancient Romans. To visit that section of the Roman wall, though rebuilt, now called the "God House," in which the pilgrims met and decided on a great adventure, and to see the place where the "Mayflower" was fitted out and from which she set sail, was a privilege never to be forgotten. Through the travail of those heroic and devout souls a great nation was

We crossed the Channel at night, and, contrary to its reputation, it was calm. However, owing to the large number of troops aboard, none of us, except by turns, got in more than two full hours of sleep. The decks and a limited number of cots served as beds. At an early hour we found ourselves docked in the port of Havre, France. We disembarked and marched about two miles to another "rest camp," where we were placed six to a small tent. Rain and mud ever present.

After two days we were instructed to get ready to entrain for Paris, and we almost shouted. We went to Paris by night on a densely crowded train. Only "cat naps" possible. We were met at Paris by a smiling "Y" man, who made an announcement that nearly knocked us off our feet. It surely knocked our smiles sky-high. It was about as follows: "Men, it is practically impossible, owing to the congested condition of the hotels, for us to find accommodations for you as a group. It is up to you individually to find a room in a hotel or a rooming house. I am very sorry." That was the "worst ever." But, being thus by circumstances compelled "to dare and to do," the group scattered. Three of us hailed by gestures a "taxi." One of our number-in fact, all of us-knew "some" French and thought he could explain to the driver, but the driver could not "get him." As the taxi was about to leave us, a French soldier came to our rescue and interpreted for us. Finally we found a very good hotel not far from headquarters. So all of our group, except two who took the "flu" on shipboard and were sent to a hospital, reached Paris safe and in good health.

The Romantic Story of Southland's Favorite Shoe, EzWear.

Some five years ago, a prominent citizen of South Carolina, visiting New York on important business, chanced to meet the maker of a shoe built on new and unusual lines; an enthusiastic admirer of its most distinctive features, ease and comfort, had suggested the name EzWear; it was promptly adopted. The business man from the South, knowing how welcome such a shoe would be in his part of the country, urged that its remarkable qualities, including not only comfort, but style. bility and economy, be made known there. That this has been effectively done is proven by the enormous demand that has sprung up in the South for EzWear shoes. It is said that its sale there during the last twelve months has increased fully three-tundred per cent. The distributor, Mr. J. R. Simon, of 1589 Broadway, Brooklyn, N. Y., says that all who wish to know about a shoe that combines all worth-while shoe qualities, may have a copy of his money-saving shoe book for the asking.

A Soldier's Letter.

The writer of this letter is well known to many of our readers; but all who read it will enjoy it.—EDITOR'S NOTE.

Cook William A. Neal, Contagious Hospital, Justice Hospital Group, A. P. O. 784 A. E. F., France, December 24, 1918.—Dear Brother Lipscomb: I do not know whether or not you publish in your paper letters from soldiers in France; nevertheless, I will attempt to write a few scattering lines, as I wish that my many friends of the Nashville Bible School, and others, whose addresses I do not know, may know how well I have been blessed during this year of trials and temptations. Yes, I have been in this service one year plus two weeks; or should I call it service? 'I often think not, when I remember the passage which reads: "No man can serve two masters."

I must tell what prompted me to write this letter at this time. I have just received a copy of the Gospel Advocate (November 7) from my mother, and have enjoyed reading several articles in it for two hours, and in which I saw the names of several friends. I wonder how many of them are over here? And how I wish that I could only be with one or more of our brethren! I have not met a single friend from home, neither a schoolmate: have met only three boys from Middle Tennessee during the six months I have been over here. A Tennessee Division has been much farther north, while I have been in this and one another hospital here near Toul. I have been in some danger of air raids, and it was only by chance that I was not on the front and in much greater danger. Thanks to God that all has been so well with me, for I have had excellent health since coming over here; and if it be his will, I hope to soon be with my dear loved ones again, and, above all, be able to assemble with his children on the first day of the week. Several times have I attended the "Y" services (such as they are), but more often have I not been able to do so.

When I read Brother Hall's article, I thought of how he might see this letter; and if so, I would that he thank the brethren of the Rossville (Ga.) congregation, for me, for their much kindness shown me the few Sundays that I was able to meet with them while I was in camp at Fort Gentlemen:—I was bothered with Kidney and Bladder Trouble for about twelve years, and finally got so I could not walk without a cane and had to be careful how I stepped. I tried everything I could get that was recommended for it, but nothing did me any good until I tried Alkavis. I sent for a bottle, which did me more good than anything I had tried. I then sent for six bottles of it, and it cured me. I advise all sufferers from Kidney or Bladder Trouble to try Alkavis, for I believe that it saved my life.

Walls.

Mary Elizabeth Wells, daughter of Blaine and Elizabeth Wells, was born on July 26, 1918, and departed this earthly life on December 25, 1918, aged five months. She leaves a father, mother, brother and sisters, Oral, Mabel and Irean, who are still among the living. She has gone to meet her brothers and sisters deceased, Emmett and infants unnamed. A more loving and promising child we could not ask The family thought they could not give her up, but she is in hands far more able to care for her than the best of care on earth. FATHER.

Hodson.

Late in the afternoon of Wednesday, December 11, 1918, at her home, nine miles west of Athens, Ala., came the angel of death, and claimed our sister, Mrs. Cora Hodson, the wife of our brother, Luther F. Hodson. But a few days before an attack of influenza had developed into pneumonia, and, in spite of all that could be done by loving hands, death would not be stayed. The greater part of her life from girl-hood to the present was spent in earnest and sincere service to our Master. She was a most devoted wife and mother, and the attachment between her and her husband and children was touching to see. Besides the heart-broken husband are left five little ones-two boys and three girls. May God grant wisdom and discretion to the father in training them all, that they may meet their mother and the little sister, Vera, already gone to the heavenly home. To whom can we turn in our sorrow but to Him, the great Father? And before him we bow and entreat him to sustain us in this hour of trial. Services were held at the home and concluded at the neighborhood burying ground by Brother EARL M. HODSON. Walter Ball.

Gentry.

Whenever any great misfortune befalls any one, especially such as has been raging in almost all the countries of this earth, we all wonder who will be the next to receive the blow. So when we received word from our parents in Tennessee, telling us of the sickness and death of my nephew, Dewey Gentry, we were sadly grieved. He was born and reared near Cookeville, Tenn. He was just entering ville, Tenn. He was just entering upon a hopeful young manhood. He was born on December 6, 1901, and died on October 20, 1918. He was taken suddenly ill, with but little hopes for his recovery. The saddest part of his sickness and death was that, at the same time, all of his brothers and sisters were down with the same dread disease, Spanish influenza; and the fond mother, who so dearly loved him and that he so much adored, was unable to render him any attention, being herself confined with another form of sickness. It would have been such a consolation to her have administered to his wants. She being a woman of the most tender nature, it was doubly hard to have to

The Quick Way to Stop a Cough

This home-made syrup does the work in a hurry. Easily pre-pared, and saves about $2.

You might be surprised to know that the best thing you can use for a severe cough, is a remedy which is easily prepared at home in just a few moments. It's cheap, but for prompt results it beats anything else you ever tried. Usually stops the ordinary cough or chest cold in 24 hours. Tastes pleasant, too—children like it—and it is pure and good.

Pour 2½ ounces of Pinex in a pint bottle; then fill it up with plain granulated sugar syrup. Or use clarified molasses, honey, or corn syrup, instead of sugar syrup, if desired. Thus you make a full pint—a family supply—but costing no more than a small bottle of ready-made cough syrup.

And as a cough medicine, there is really nothing better to be had at any price. It goes right to the spot and gives quick, lasting relief. It promptly heals the inflamed membranes that line the throat and air passages, stops the annoying throat tickle, loosens the phlegm, and soon your cough stops entirely. Splendid for bronchial asthma.

Pinex is a highly concentrated compound of Norway pine extract, famous for its healing effect on the membranes.

J. C. MAYBERRY.

Hogan.

On the morning of November 22, 1918, the death angel visited the happy home of Brother Homer Hogan and claimed him as Its own. Hogan was born on September 17, 1882. He was baptized when a boy of thirteen or fourteen years of age and lived a faithful Christian until about twenty-eight, when, like many others, he drifted away from the fold; but in the summer of 1914, seeing his wrong, he repented and returned to Christ, and from that time on until death he lived a faithful and devoted Christian He was married to Onie May Wallace on May 28, 1915, and on August 28, 1917, they buried a sweet baby boy. It was sad for them to give the little one up, but now it is much harder to give up Homer. His wife is left with a three-months-old child to care for. Homer was a kind and loving husband, a tender father, and a helpful friend, and will be missed by all who knew him. He always led the singing at church and had been teachthe Bible class at Bethel for some time. It was sad for the dear wife to give up her husband; but, while she weeps, she should not weep as those that have no hope, for Homer was a true Christian. He cannot come back to us, but, if we will live as he lived, we can go to live with him in that land where there are no more partings, no more sad good-byes. Besides his wife and baby, he leaves a father, one sister, and three brothers to mourn his death. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord."

A FRIEND.

Hayes.

On November 28, 1918, "somewhere in France," Brother Thomas L. Hayes died of typhoid fever, according to official report sent Brother John Hayes, of Mooresville, Ala., on January Brother Tom Hayes was a graduate of the National Teachers' Normal and Business College at Henderson, Tenn. He was a good and efficient teacher and was lavishly loved wherever he served in this capacity. About two years ago he connected himself with the Tennessee Valley Bank, and was held in loving favor by his employers, being rapidly promoted until at the time he was drafted into the United States Army he was intrusted as manager of one of its chain of banks, at Paint Rock, Ala. This institution was holding a place for him, and he was counting on being discharged soon and returning to his former post of The headquarters of this instiduty. The headquarters of this insti-tution being here at Albany, Brother Hayes was thrown with us in church work often, and he was loved and respected by the whole congregation. While engaged in secular work, he was always interested in the church. A number of times he preached to the While in congregation here.

Weekly Health Talks A WORD ABOUT THE KIDNEYS

BY DOCTOR WATSON.

People are easily frightened when they think something is the matter with their lungs or heart, and well they may be; but few people understand the dangers of diseased kidneys. These organs have a duty of vital importance to perform, and if they are diseased. there is no telling how or where the symptoms may appear. The kidneys are filters, and when they are healthy they remove the poisons from the blood and purify it. When the kidneys are diseased, the poisons are spread everywhere, and one of these poisons is uric acid. The uric acid is carried all through the system and deposited in various places, in the form of urate salts-in the feet, ankles, wrists and back - often forming bags under the eyes. Sometimes the resulting trouble is called rheumatism, lumbago, sciatica and backache. Finally, come stone in the bladder, diabetes and Bright's disease.

Dr. Pierce, of Buffalo, N. Y., in recent vears, discovered that a certain combination of remedies would dissolve uric acid (urate salts) in the system. He found this combination to be harmless, so that he made it up in tablets, of double strength, and called them Anuric Tablets. They dissolve uric acid in the human system as hot coffee dissolves sugar. If you have uric acid troubles, don't delay in taking Anuric Tablets, which can be secured in the drug stores. You can write Dr. Pierce, too, and he will tell you what to eat and how to live so that more uric acid will not form in your system. Dr. Pierce will not charge for this advice.

For

Rheumatism and Indigestion.

Practically all physicians and medical writers are agreed that there is a close relationship between indigestion and rheumatism. This view is substantiated by the fact that Shivar Spring Water, which is probably the best American mineral water for dyspepsia and indigestion, relieves rheumatism and the rheumatoid diseases, such as gout, sciatica, neuralgia, and nervous headache. All of these diseases are probably related and all are probably due, in whole or in part, to imperfect digestion or to imperfect assimilation of food. Physicians who have studied this water and who have observed its effects in their practice believe that it relieves these maladies by rendering the digestion complete and perfect and thereby preventing the formation of those poisons which inflame the joints and irritate the nerves, and also by eliminating, through the kidneys, such poisons as have already been formed.

The following letters are interesting in this connection:

In this connection:

Dr. Crosby, a South Carolina physician, writes: "I have tested your Spring Water in several cases of rheumatism, chronic indigestion, kidney and bladder troubles, and in nervous and sick headaches, and find that it has acted nicely in each case, and I believe that, if used continuously for a reasonable time, it will give permanent relief. It will purify the blood, relieve debility, stimulate the action of the liver, kidneys, and bladder, aiding them in throwing off all poisonous matter."

Dr. Avant, of Savannah, writes: "I suffered for years with a most aggravating form of stomach disorder, and consulted a number of our best local physicians; went to Baltimore and consulted specialists there, and still I was not benefited. I had about despaired of living, when I began to use Shivar Spring Water, and in a short time was entirely relieved."

Mr. Rhodes, of Virginia, writes: "Pleass send me ten gallons of Shivar Spring Water quickly. I want it for rheumatism. I know of several who were relieved of rheumatism with this water."

Editor Cunningham writes: "The water has done me more good than any medicine I have eyer taken for rheumatism. I am entirely free from pain."

Mr. McClam, of South Carolina, writes: "My wite has been a sufferer from rheumatism, and, after drinking twenty gallons of your Mineral Water, was entirely relieved of the horrible disease."

Mr. Carter, of Virginia, writes: "Mrs. Carter has had enlarged joints upon her hands, caused by rheumatism. Shivar Spring Water removed every trace of the enlargement. The water is simply excellent."

If you suffer from rheumatism or from any curable disease, accept the guarantee offer below by signing your name. Clip and mail to the NOTE.—"I have had the pleasure of serving the little church at Shivar Spring as pastor for years, and am therefore well acquainted with Mr. Shivar and his associates, whom I gladly commend as honorable business men and worthy of the confidence of the public. modesty he would not call it "preachyet his lessons were plain and practical and his audiences were ever impressed with his earnestness and He was intensely interested sincerity. in the welfare of the church at his old home, Mooresville, and he would go over every Lord's day he could to assist and encourage them in the work of the Lord, and a boy never shared more fully the love and confidence of the home people than Tom Haves. While in the army and surrounded with many obstacles, he was mindful of his Lord, and a letter written to his father on December 15 told how that day, the third Lord's day in December, he and some boys met in his room and worshiped God. He mentioned the chapter read and discussed and gave an interesting account of all they did. In the same letter he stated that he was never in better health in his life. His father and friends were, therefore, thoroughly unprepared for the shock. Tom handsome, polite, congenial, faithful, and good, and his friends were numbered by his acquaintances. His mother, a faithful Christian, I have often been told by those who knew her, died when Tom was but a child. She was the mother of only two children, Tom and his little sister, who died in early childhood. Thus the last fragment of Brother Hayes' first famlly is gathered home and he only is left. How sweet the thought that mother, with her own precious children, their humiliated bodies fashioned anew, like unto the body of the Son of God, free from sorrow, sickness, pain, and death, shall abide forever, where the angels sing, in the city of God, the sweet home of the soul! The writer had no truer, more faithful friend than Tom Hayes. He made me his confidant and oft revealed to me his sorrows and perplexities, his purposes and plans. The Lord bless and poses and plans. The Lord bless and comfort his father, his many loved ones and friends, and help us so to live that it shall also be well with our J. PETTEY EZELL. souls.

EVER SALIVATED BY CALOMEL? HORRIBLE!

Calomel Is Quicksilver and Acts Like Dynamite on Your Liver.

Calomel loses you a day! Do you know what calomel is? It is mercury quicksilver. Calomel is dangerous. It crashes into sour bile like dynamite, cramping and sickening you. Calomel attacks the bones, and should never be put into your system.

When you feel bilious, sluggish, constipated, and all knocked out, and believe you need a dose of dangerous calomel, just remember that your druggist sells for a few cents a large bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone, which is entirely vegetable and pleasant to take and is a perfect substitute for calomel. It is guaranteed to start your liver without stirring you up inside, and cannot salivate.

Don't take calomel! It makes you sick the next day; it loses you a day's work. Dodson's Liver Tone straightens you right up and you feel great. Give it to the children, because it is perfectly harmless and does not gripe.

The Work at Washington.

BY T. F. COLVIN.

Generous contributions are being made to the work here, as will be noted from the reports being made by Brother W. S. Long, for which we are most grateful. The fund will soon be provided with which to pay for the building site. There is a strong sentiment expressed by those who are contributing that this work must be made a success. With a fund of three thousand eight hundred and sixty-five dollars and sixty-eight cents, there is a most substantial start. As was the case when our boys began arriving in France last year, when the first few thousand were landed, the feeling in their hearts was for more to be sent over until victory would be assured. Again and again ship loads of soldiers went forward until success was gained. The contributors of the present fund are praying and hoping that the nation will respond with sufficient funds to complete the work that has been started. Preachers are working for the success desired. Personal workers over the States are sending lists of contributions. Families are making most liberal contributions. All desire early success. For congregations that have not yet contributed and that feel an interest in this work, we are again asking you to set a day on which you will contribute to the Washington work-say, Sunday following Washington's birthday, or, in case of no meeting because of stormy weather or some other cause, the first Sunday in March. If overseers will kindly put this matter before the congregations and offer an opportunity to contribute to this work, there will be a hearty response. If Christians who were absent on contribution days in congregations where contributions have been made to this work will kindly club together or send individual lists, they will help very materially. This is a mission work that will have lasting effect. The sons and daughters of homes from all the States are here and will continue to come to work in the government service during future years. You will help to have a place of worship for them, where otherwise the city attractions may lead them astray, as has been done in too many cases in past years. You can also be proud of the fact that the church of Christ of which you are a member is represented in the capital of this great United States by a band of Christians who have a place of worship without renting ledge rooms that are used for dance halls a few nights each week. A general nation-wide contribution from the followers of Christ will erect a building here where the gospel can be preached with telling effect and a strong congregation be built up. Will you help us? Send all contributions to G. W. Gibson, 2500 Pennsylvania Avenue, S. E.; E. L. Mills, 2002 G Street, N. W.; or to the writer, 2536 Eleventh Street, N. W., Washington, D. C. We thank the many contributors who have so liberally responded to this call and urge that all become personal workers for the completion of this work.

CHURCH NEWS

Texas.

Denton, January 21.- That all may be informed, I here make a brief statement regarding the work at Deming. The brethren at Deming asked me to come there and help build up the cause in that part and do what work I might be able to do in Camp I heard the call for help, went Cody. without delay, and remained there almost two months. Going and coming, I spent more than two months' time. The 'flu," other sickness, and death hindered much in the work. This field is, indeed, a needy one. The church will never do her duty till she looks out beyond the boundary of the home congregation and sends the good news to places in our neighboring States that are so destitute of the gospel of Jesus Christ, the power of God to save the lost. The church at Deming is weak in numbers and in finances and not able to support a man in the field without some help from other places. They thought they could secure some assistance by informing the churches of the work through the papers. This they did, but only one or two churches gave any attention to the needs of the work there. I am now at home without money to meet my bills. I told the brethren at Deming, as there was so much sickness and Christmas coming on, it would be best for me to return home at least till things get down to a normal con-I have not had a word from them since I left there. I do not want any one to send money there, thinking I am there now in the field; but any brother could write to S. W. Ruebush, Deming, N. M., and let him know how much the church would give each month to sustain the work there. But a poor preacher just cannot go there and run on the wind till the brethren wake up to their duty. I received, all told, about one hundred and sixty dollars while there, and the brethren there did what they could; but, going and coming, I was out about sixty-five dollars. As I thought I would be there some time, I took two hundred pounds excess baggage, and on my way home I was snowbound more than five days, and the hotel was not a free place for preachers. This left me only ninety-five dollars for two months' time. No wonder preachers cannot pay their bills. I am today sad beyond expression. I should have received at least two hundred dollars and my expenses for my time spent in this gospel work. If any one would like to help me make this up, let him order my Bible chart on the "Division of the Word," on cloth, three by five feet, $1.50; my book, "A Great War," which shows the Bible teaching of the "unknown tongue" question, twenty-five cents per copy; fifty assorted post cards, only fifty cents; Bible pictures and mottoes, from twenty-five to seventy-five cents each.-D. An Appeal.

In July, 1915, a few disciples in Ridgedale, a suburb of Chattanooga, Tenn., banded themselves together to worship God as it is written. Ridgedale is a splendid field for work, being in the center of a territory of twenty square miles and a population of many thousands. The Ridgedale congregation is the only congregation in this field. The congregation has grown from about nineteen members to a membership of sixty. About onefourth of this number are men, most of whom will take public part in the service. We have not been idle, but have met regularly from the beginning in a hall, for which we have been paying ten dollars per month; have held three protracted meetings, and have employed a man one-fourth of his time preaching. With help from brethren In Chattanooga and elsewhere, we have purchased a nice lot, well located, and fully protected by clause in the deed, for which we paid the sum of eight hundred and eighty-five dollars. We have on hand for building purposes the sum of five hundred dollars, and hope to begin the erection of the building as soon as the weather will permit. The Ridgedale congregation has given liberally to this work, and will continue to give until the work is complete; but we need help, and feel that every active and loyal disciple of Christ will be interested in this great field and the work we are trying to do. The past year has been a year of liberality; and while we have given to maintain other things, we can hardly afford to be slackers in things religious. Won't you help us to erect this house of worship?

We have selected Brother J. D. Gunn, of Sparta, Tenn., to solicit and collect funds for this purpose, and all contributions made by mail should be sent direct to him.

[Signed] Jesse Beal, J. D. Bronson, Charles E. Stranahan, O. B. Payne, C. W. Gibbs, elders.

FOOT TROUBLES

No Need of Them, Says Brooklyn Man, Who Has Evidently Solved a Big Problem.

According to the testimony of hundreds of people living in the southland and elsewhere, J. R. Simon of 1589 Broadway, Brooklyn, N. Y., has successfully developed a system of shoe building having for its prime object the conquering of foot and shoe troubles. It appears that Mr. Simon's establishment has become national headquarters for people whose feet require his remarkable comfort shoe, known as the EzWear, but obtainable only of the inventor. Mr. Simon's new catalogue shows several hundred shoes that combine comfort with style at amazingly low prices and is now ready for free distribution.

Renew Your Health At Nature's Fountain

Without the Expense and Loss of Time Necessary for a Visit to the Spring

THE CRISIS

There comes a time in the life of practically every man and woman when their digestive or eliminative organs, or both, fail to respond to drugs prepared by human skill. In fact drugs seem to do them about a much harm as good for their systems 1 bel against all drugs. These are the cases which physicians call "stubborn" and "chronic" for the reason that they persist in spite of drug treatment. I do not refer to incurable diseases such as cancer and consumption, but to that larger class of functional disorders which we meet every day, where the organs of digestion and elimination are impaired.

For this class of cases our best physicians and our big city specialists send their wealthy patients to the mineral springs where, in the great majority of cases they are permanently restored or decidedly benefited. But what about the poor man who has not the money or the busy man or woman who cannot spare the time to spend several weeks or possibly months at a health resort? Shall circumstances deny them the restoration to health which Nature has provided? Read my answer in the coupon at the bottom of this page.

I have the utmost confidence in the Shivar Mineral Spring Water for to it I owe my Restoration to Health and probably my Life. It has made me tens of thousands of friends in all parts of America and even in foreign countries, whose faces I have never seen. Yet I count them my friends for the Shivar Spring Water has bound them to me by lasting gratitude.

l ask you to read their letters, a few samples of which I publish below for your benefit, and if you find among them any encouragement as to your own health do not hesitate to accept my offer which has no limits or conditions except those shown on the coupon. If you could read the letters that come to me daily, numbering about ten thousand a year, and the vast majority of them similar to those printed below, you would not wonder that I make this offer displaying my absolute confidence in the restorative powers of Shivar Mineral Water.

INDIGESTION

Savannah, Georgia.

I was suffering with indigestion, stomach and liver disorders and all its train of horrifying phenomens for several months. I had lived on milk, soft eggs, shredded wheat, a very insufficient diet for an active working man, and, of course, from disease and starvation was in a very low state of nervous vitality and general debility. I ordered ten gallons of your Mineral Water which I used continuously, reordering when necessary, and in four months gained twenty-nine pounds, was strong and perfectly well, and have worked practically every day since. It acts as a general renovator of the system. I prescribe it in my practice, and it has in every instance had the desired effects. It is essential to use this water in as large quantities as possible, for its properties are so happily blended and in such proportion that they will not disturb the most delicate system. It is purely Nature's remedy.

I feel it my duty to suffering humanity to make public announcement of the benefits I have derived from Shivar Spring Water. I have been a sufferer for the past twenty-five years from indigestion and dyspepsia. After one week's trial of Shivar Water I commenced to improve, and after drinking it for four weeks I gained fifteen pounds. I feel better and stronger than I have in twenty-five years. I strongly recommend this Water to any one with stomach trouble of any character, and truly believe it will care ulcer of the stomach. I am writing this voluntarily and trust it will fall in the hands of many who are so unfortunate as to be afflicted with indigestion and nervous dyspepsia.

For many years I suffered with stomach trouble as a direct result of asthma. I consulted the very best specialist in this country, and spent quite a large sum of money in my endeavor to get relief. However, I had about come to the conclusion that my case was hopeless, but by accident, I happened to get hold of one of your booklets, and decided to try Shivar Spring Water. After drinking the water for about three weeks I was entirely relieved, and since that time have suffered but little inconvenience from my trouble. I cheerfully recommend the use of your Water to any one that may be suffering from stomach trouble.

RHEUMATISM

Leeds, S. C.

I have tested your Spring Water in several cases of rheumatism, chronic indigestion, kidney and bladder troubles, and in nervous and sick headaches, and find that it has acted nicely in each case, and I believe that if used continuously for a reasonable time will produce a permanent cure. It will purify the blood, relieve debility, stimulate the action of the liver, kidneys and bladder, aiding them in throwing off all poisonous matter.

I suffered with indigestion and kidney trouble, and a year ago was stricken with acute articler theumatism; was helpless for months, and since using your Spring Water I am walking without any crutch and improving daily. Indigestion much relieved. I wish I could write Shivar Spring Water in the sky so that the world could become acquainted with it.

BILIOUSNESS

For over two years, following a nervous breakdown, I have suffered with a liver so torpid that ordinary remedies were absolutely powerless. Under such direumstances, I came to Shivar Spring, and began drinking the Water. Upon advice however, the first night I took a laxative; the second night a milder one. Since then I have taken none at all. The effect of the water has been remurkable—its action on my liver most marked, and my health and spirits greatly improved. I am satisfied that the laxative, followed by the Water, was the proper treatment in my case. My condition is now perfect.

GALLSTONES

Shivar Spring Water cured my mother of gallstones, or, I might say, it snatched her from the hospital door, as the doctors had said nothing short of an operation would do her any good. After drinking the Water she was able to get out of bed, and is today stout and healthy. I hope these few lines will be of help to some one suffering as my mother did.

The dector advised an operation, which I would not consent to. Your advice was to put an Ar Cushion Appliance on him, and I must say that it is worth ten times what it cas.

I wish you could have seen him before we used the Appliance and now, when he is fully as sound as he could be. I cannot thank you too much for what you have done for my boy.

The Cities of Refuge.

In the provision for the six cities of refuge there was no condoning of criminality. Even God's altar afforded no refuge for the willful criminal, nor could any ransom be accepted. A willful murderer was on no account to be suffered to escape, but was afforded a respite until inquiry could be made. These cities were provided for the refuge of those who had committed unintentional homicide. A list of such cases is given in detail, and includes slaying another, not seeking his harm (Num. 35: 23); when no dangerous weapon, indicating design to injure, was used (Num. 35: 16-18); accident (Ex. 21: 13); sudden collision (Num. 35: 22); something thrown upon a man without the thrower seeing him (Num. 35: 23), as an ax slipping from its handle (Dout. 19: 5).

The cities were established so as to insure the easiest access from all parts of the country, and roads were built to them that must be kept free of obstructions. Once received into one of these cities, the manslayer must remain away from his home and business till the death of the high priest in that city. This seeming hardship was necessary and just, because there is usually some fault of passion or carelessness in even accidental tragedies, and this great inconvenience would tend to insure carefulness and safety. There is often real guilt in carelessness, and innocent persons should be protected from its effects. While an imperfect plan, the cities of refuge was the best provision that could be made for that time, when the patriarch was ruler, priest, and judge. The race was yet grouped into nations, and there were no selected judges or established places of judgment.

Symbols of Grace.

That the cities of refuge were symbolic of the provisions of grace is plain. We have an incomplete picture of the privileges enjoyed by sinners "who have fied to him for refuge." Deliverance is based only upon the death of the High Priest of our profession, Jesus Christ. Security only comes by abiding in hlm. Apart from him, the transgressor is constantly exposed to dangers. The way is made so plain that "the wayfaring man, though a fool, shall not err therein." "Offenses will come; but wee unto him through whom they come!" Every effort is to be made to restore the offender. Charitableness in judgment and consideration in dealing are grounded in personal liberties and shortcomings. "In many things we offend all;" and, "Considering thyself, lest thou also be tempted." The method of procedure is given by Jesus himself. "Tell him his fault between thee and him alone" before telling any other man. Forgiveness is to be granted unto "seventy times seven." The law, which said, "An eye for an eye," has been superseded and excelled by the gospel, which says: "Love your enemies."

Surely there has never been, nor shall be, such a refuge as we find in Jesus Christ. "Our Lord's wide-stretched arms are a harbor; being lifted up, he calls all men unto him."

The Company We Keep.

"Evil companionships corrupt good morals." We never hear this saving but that we think of some poor soul who was lost for this very reason. Again, we tremble when we think of how perilously near the brink of ruin we ourselves came along the same pathway. Perhaps more lives are ruined through the corruption which comes from evil companionship than from any other external cause. "Go with the wolves," says a Spanish proverb, "and you will learn to howl." "Go with mean people," says an English proverb, "and you will find life mean." No one is strong enough and wise enough to be safe in constant touch with persons of wrong principle and false religion, any more than one is healthy enough to be safe physically in malarial or feverish atmosphere. Indeed, one who goes by choice into bad company and loves to remain there is already more than half fallen. The only time when one is safe in bad company is when he is laboring to do them good. It is all right sometimes to work with pitch, but it is folly to play with it. On the other hand, "keep good company, and you will be of the number."

Keeping from bad company means more than being careful of one's companions. One's company may mean the books he reads or the moving pictures that fascinate him most. Temptations do not come in the forms of dragons or snakes, but always in ways that seem both harmless and pleasing. In his famous lecture Russell H. Conwell gives this bit of wholesome advice: "Unload bad books and papers. They poison you." A magistrate once refused me a warrant for a young man until he could look further into the case. He looked further, and found a man who said: "By accident I changed overcoats with him a few days ago, and did not discover my error till I found a vile book in the pocket." The warrant was issued at once. Pure character and vile reading do not go together. Nor do innocence and the patronage of vile pictures mix to any good advantage. There can be no truce with sin.

"Removing Three Stumblingblocks."

A careful study of the churches in Mississippi reveals that if we count the number of membership and the work done, it is about the most inefficient thing in our midst. It is therefore befitting that we find out, if possible, what the cause of the failure is, and how it may be remedied. We dare not let it go on that way, for we are facing extraordinary times. The whole world has suddenly been thrown at our feet for instruction, and a church two-thirds of whose number are doing no missionary work whatever cannot save us from disaster. Surely something is wrong. There are some stumblingblocks in the way. The three that are causing the most trouble are (1) wrong ideas of organization, (2) wrong ideas of woman's place in the kingdom, and (3) wrong notions of the use of musical instruments in the worship.

We are a scripture-loving people; and if we can show by the Scriptures what the authority of divine writers is, we ought to be able to remove these stumblingblocks and clear the way for real work.

1. Scriptural Organization for Missionary Work.

It has been a common thing among us to hear men say they see nothing in the Bible about missionary societies and that they have never seen C. W. B. M. in the Bible. Surely, if we find scriptural authority for these, there will not be any objection from any one henceforth to doing his part in the work.

Jesus near the close of his ministry said with great sorrow: "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, that killeth the prophets, and stoneth them that are sent unto her! how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not! Behold, your house is left unto you desolate." If the Jews had allowed Jesus to organize them into a compact body for work as a hen gathers her chickens under her wings, they could have taught one generation of Roman children ere the authority of the church was put into their hands and Roman Catholicism would never have come into being, and a thousand years of Dark Ages would have been averted. But untaught, the Romans could not have made anything better. If there is any blame for Roman Catholicism, it must be laid at the door of the recalcitrant Jews.

The early church, led by the apostles, dld organize itself the best it could in the face of the persecuting Jews. They showed us how it should be done, and how they would have done it under more favorable circumstances. On the day of Pentecost three thousand souls came into it. Some time later five thousand more came in, and soon there were ten thousand Christians in Jerusalem. They were organized for worship only. When the number was seen to be too large for worship in one place, they divided into many small congregations. It says they broke bread from house to house. When a serious demand for charity work came up, they called for contributions, and Barnabas gave the value of a plantation, and Ananias came near doing it; and if others did equally as well, that offering must have amounted to twenty or more thousand dollars. Peter and the other apostles attempted to administer this in their unorganized condition. They failed. They would have failed equally great if it had been a hundred thousand dollars. When serious murmurings came up, Peter called the multitude of these small congregations together. This was a convention. He told them to choose out seven men, of good report, full of the Spirit and of wisdom, to put over the business. Stephen with six others was chosen and the work was well done. These seven men were a board. They were not so named in the Bible, but were called "the seven." If there had been other sevens, they would have had to find a name, and most likely it would have been a Board of Greek Widows' Relief, or, for short, B. G. W. R. This gives us full authority and a good example how to organize for church work.

2. Woman's Scriptural Place in the Work of the Church. The original society of all heathen peoples was organized on the principle that woman is man's slave. She must always walk behind him, must never eat while he eats, and must do everything he bids her. During that time man was a very brutal creature, for he did not have the refining influence of the woman in his home. When he lifted her up and allowed her to sit at the table with him. he began to produce great men like George Washington, Aifred Tennyson, and Alexander Campbell. For a long time woman dared not be educated and was not allowed to be man's equal in the church, and during that time we men spent all our time debating over and fighting for dectrine. When we admitted her into church work as our equal, real church work began and doctrinal feuds began to die out.

New, it was this kind of a situation that Paul had to meet. He had to meet the woman question in its most serious forms. At Cenchrea he found a highly developed society and a very mature woman, Phœbe, and he at once put her to work in the gospel work with him and sent her on to her churches with her mission and asked them to receive her freely. But when he came to Corinth, he found conditions very different. Men there lived in polygamy, and some were guilty of incest. They saw no wrong in converting the communion table into a picnic. The women were of the kind that had to keep veiled lest some man be tempted by them. They were crude, as harem women usually are. Under these circumstances he told them to keep silent in the churches and to ask their husbands at home and to keep their heads covered. We would do the same if we were sent to a Turkish village as a missionary. But surely none of our women in Mississippi are so crude as to make that necessary. If there are any, then we will tell them, too, to keep silent, but elsewhere will treat them as Phœbe and send them on their great missions.

3. The Scriptural Use of Musical Instruments.

A great many people think that it is unscriptural to use the organ in worship, and they let this hinder them from doing their duty in the church.

To answer this, let us state that all will admit that there is no "Thus saith the Lord" in the New Testament forbidding the use of musical instruments in worship. Some quote Amos 6: 5. But if they would read Amos carefully, they would see that he condemns everything they do because they are hypocrites. He says he despises their feast days, that he will not smell of their food. Surely God does not despise the Passover which he commanded Israel to keep. Nor does he despise musical instruments which David invented. But he does despise every act of the hypocrites who lived a voluptuous life about the altars of Ashtaroth, just as we would despise the singing of a woman from the segregated districts of our city.

The New Testament church used the pipe (cornet) and the harp (organ). This is clearly shown in 1 Cor. 14. Paul found the church there putting a false value on the ase of tongues. He argued with them that unless the use of tongues conveyed a message, it was of no value. It in itself had no virtue. To illustrate it, he referred them to their singing. He said: "And even things without life giving sound, whether pipe or harp, except they give a distinction in the sounds, how shall it be known what is piped or harped?" The illustration is that talking in tongues could be of no benefit if no message is conveyed, even as a lifeless cornet or organ could accomplish nothing if it did not keep the tune or strike the right pitch. Paul was referring to something right in their midst. To strengthen the argument, he also refers to the bugle sound by which the soldier charges and retreats. If the bugler should sound the wrong notes, the soldiers would not know what to do.

The human voice needs aid and great training to be able to give a message in song. Sometimes a man seeks aid in notes, and so before he starts he hums "do me fa sol do." At other times he strikes a tuning fork to get the pitch. But the better way is to use the organ to both catch the tune and hold it throughout. Surely God would not overlook in one the use of the tuning fork to catch the tune and send to perdition another who uses the organ to hold on all the way through to the end. Surely this is not the God we worship.—J. B. Lehman, in the Southern Christian Courier.

Handling Sharp-Edged Tools. No. 1.

BY F. W. SMITH.

It is an old saying, "Children should not handle sharp-edged tools;" but notwithstanding this very wholesome advice, we frequently find "grown-up" children, and those, too, who pride themselves upon their supposed superior wisdom, violating this good advice. The result is, they get their fingers badly cut and scarred. I have never seen a clearer case in print than the following from a certain religious periodical:

"THE KINGDOM OF GOD."

1. God's kingdom in type—Israel under David and Solo-

2. God's kingdom in prophecy. Ps. 2; 72; Isa. 60.

3. God's kingdom in mystery.

The mystery of temporary rejection. Matt. 21: 43. [Rom. 11: 25.]

The mystery of obscuring and admixture. Matt. 13. The mystery of unforeseen delay. Luke 19: 11-27.

Note this: "1. God's kingdom in type—Israel under David and Solomon." Here it is affirmed that the kingdom presided over by David and Solomon was typical. This admitted fact is an exceedingly sharp instrument in the hands of that class of men who are teaching that when Christ comes he will re-establish the kingdom of David and sit on a literal throne in literal Jerusalem. Why do I say this? Because a type and its antitype are never identical, which would have to be true for the kingdom answering to the one over which David and Solomon presided to be a literal kingdom with a king of flesh and bones seated on a literal throne. Thus the author and those who indorse him unwittingly cut their own heads off. No one will deny that the kingdom of Israel was "typical" of the kingdom to come promised by God and prophetically outlined by inspired prophets, but he who would contend that the prophet kingdom was to be a literal affair needs instruction in the elementary principles of divine revelation.

"2. God's kingdom in prophecy. (Ps. 2; 72; Isa. 60.)" The psalms here cited to prove the kingdom in prophecy are highly figurative, but were evidently relied upon to establish the "literal-kingdom" idea because of the words, Yet I have set my king upon my holy hill of Zion;" and: "Ask of me, and I will give thee the nations for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession. Thou shalt break them with a rod of iron; thou shalt dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel." (Ps. 2: 6, 8, 9.) Assuming for the argument's sake that this language refers to the kingdom of Christ in prophecy, would it not be overstraining on one's faith to interpret "holy hill of Zion," "break them with a rod of iron," and "dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel" to be literal! is it possible that any sane person believes that Christ will take a literal rod of iron in his hand and literally break in pieces the bodies of human beings? Can it be possible that men posing as teachers of God's word believe that Jesus Christ will literally dash in pieces the bodies of human beings? That is exactly what they must believe, or else abandon the claim that a literal kingdom is to be established by Jesus Christ.

"3. God's kingdom in mystery." It is true that the kingdom of Christ was in purpose, promise, prophecy, and preparation, before it existed in perfection or as a complete organization, and while in such a process of development was more or less of a mystery. But since its establishment and the revealing of its law of induction into it, with the directions for work, worship, and service in it, there is no mystery about it. But we are told that there is "the mystery of temporary rejection," and Matt. 21: 43 is cited to prove it: "Therefore say I unto you, The kingdom of God shall be taken away from you, and shall be given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof." This passage is made to serve this doctrine-viz.; that while Christ was on earth he offered to reëstablish the literal throne of David and sit upon that throne in Jerusalem, and rule over literal Israel; but the Jews rejected that offer, and thus the reëstablishment of that kingdom remains in "mystery," designated as "the mystery of temporary rejection." To help the doctrine along, Rom. 11: 25 is rushed to the rescue. It reads thus: "For I would not, brethren, have you ignorant of this mystery, lest ye be wise in your own conceits, that a hardening in part hath befallen Israel, until the fullness of the Gentiles be come in." The passage has in it the word "mystery," and I suppose the author deemed that sufficient; no matter if the kingdom is not even remotely hinted at. But he seemed to overlook the fact that the very next verse says, "And so all Israel shall be saved;" while his other passage (Matt. 21: 43) says: "The kingdom shall be taken away from you," etc. Children should be careful in handling sharp tools. Any one ought to see that two different things are under consideration. The kingdom referred to by (Matt. 21: 43) says, "The kingdom shall be taken away this passage is parallel to Matt. 21: 31: "Verily I say unto you, that the publicans and the harlots go into the kingdom of God before you." Again: "But woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye shut up the kingdom of heaven against men; for ye neither go in yourselves, neither suffer ye them that are entering to go in." (Matt. 23: 13.) How could people be entering a thing not in existence in some form? "The mystery of rejection!" What a delusion, and what a perversion of God's word! The next thing on this bill of fare is, "The mystery of obscuring and admixture," and the list of parables in Matt. 13 are pressed into service. These parables were given for the purpose of unfolding and making plain certain features of the kingdom, to reveal the kingdom in its beauty and power. But we are told of another mysteryviz., "The mystery of unforeseen delay," with Luke 19: 11-27 as a support. These passages are used to prove that a kingdom is yet to be established upon this earth; that Christ is not yet on David's throne, and will not be until he comes to establish, or, rather, to reëstablish, the kingdom of Israel and sit on her literal throne in literal Jerusalem. This parable was given to teach the lesson of personal responsibility for our opportunities as servants in the kingdom of Christ. To his servants are committed the interests, the growth and progress of his cause and kingdom in this world, and it has no reference whatever to a delayed kingdom yet to be set up and revealed.

Old Testament Characters—Enoch Walked With God. BY H. LEO BOLES.

Enoch was the seventh from Adam. There were Adam, Seth, Enos, Canaan, Mahalaleel, Jared, and Enoch. Enoch was three hundred and eight years old when Adam died; Adam's life and Enoch's overlapsed three hundred and eight years. Enoch had the opportunity of associating with Adam and of talking with him about the fair, fresh earth before it was cursed with sin; he could have learned something of Jehovah's talk with Adam in the garden of Eden in the early dawn of creation. It may be that he could have seen a clearer image of Jehovah in Adam before it was marred and dimmed by the curse of sin. So Enoch lived back in the dim distance of time and in the early infancy of the human race. He lived back before the twofold curse upon the earth had spent its force; he lived back before history began, as man reckons it; long before the pyramids were built and long before Cain's progenitors had multiplied and filled the earth with wickedness. At this early date we have the significant statement that "Enoch walked with God."

Nations have risen and played their part in the affairs of the world and gone into oblivion, leaving only uncertain fragments of history to tell of their doom, since Enoch lived: teeming millions of earth have gone down into the tongueless silence of the dreamless dust and are known no more, since Enoch lived; ancient and medieval history of nations and peoples is fast fading from the memory of men and losing prominence in the annals of time, but the history of Enoch is ever fresh and renewed. So long as aged men shall turn to the record of God's heroes for encouragement and trust in their declining years; so long as middle-aged men and women shall search holy writ for examples of piety and endurance; so long as mothers shall take their children upon their knees and tell them of God's wonderful love and mercy to his faithful servants, the record of Enoch's walk with God will be there to furnish inspiration and hope. So long as God's word shall stand, and it shall stand forever, the brief record of Enoch's walk with God in the infancy of the human race shall endure. His example, like that of righteous Abel, speaks unto us lessons of hope, piety, and salvation.

So far as we know, Enoch had no written revelation from God to guide or instruct him in living as God would have him live; yet he lived with God, was pleasing unto him, "walked with God." If Enoch, with such meager instruction and such dim light, with such disadvantages as he had in that age of the world, could walk with God, why cannot we to-day, who have all the splendor and light of the truth of the Son of God shining along our pathway, walk as faithfully with him as did Enoch? Every man, as he wears dimly the image of his God, should aspire to be as faithful to God as was Enoch. With the superior advantages and clearer vision of the living way, it becomes the burden of life, with all, to walk with God. A life so faithfully spent cannot be a failure.

His moral and religious character is expressed in these few comprehensive words: "Enoch walked with God." A holy walking with God is the honorable mission of all men. This expression is very comprehensive, as it expresses the mission of life and the full relationship between man and God. It implies harmony at all points. The prophet has inquired: "Can two walk together, except they be agreed?" (Amos 3: 3.) It is interrogatively stated that two cannot walk together, except they agree. When Enoch walked with God, he agreed with God. If there are two independent wills or minds, there are only three possible disjunctions. Either the first must change or bend his will to suit the second, or the second must make his will agree with the first, or the two must compromise. No other possible disjunction can exist. For agreement between God and man, we may be sure that man makes his will coincide with God's. God does not cater to the sentiment, to the conceptions, to the thoughts, and to the feelings of man; the wishes, ways, and will of man must be brought in agreement with Jehovah. God would be surrendering his sovereignty if he changed his will to suit man's will; he would become a servant instead of a master, should he bend his will to suit man's. If God should change his will to suit one man's will, he would be under equal obligations to change his will to suit every man's will; this would make him the abject slave of man, instead of an eternal, sovereign God. Jehovah's will is not a plaything of man's whims, notions, and passions. This is a fundamental fact which man is slow to learn, a fact which man must recognize and honor with all the true dignity of his soul.

The same principle is involved, if God should compromise with man. A compromise suggests the idea of each party surrendering or yielding in will. We are familiar with the statement that Paul makes to the Corinthians, that God was in Christ reconciling the world to himself. There is no intimation that God would in any way yield or compromise to get man to accept him and his salvation. All the inducements that heaven offers to man are to persuade man to be reconciled to God, to agree with God. The last disjunction is the only one that is left: man must make his will agree with God; he must take God's way. If he would walk with God, he must, as did Ehoch, agree with God.

There is also implied friendship and fellowship with God in walking with him. Wickedness and sin had begun to multiply in the earth, and Enoch lived in the midst of a corrupt and evil age, yet he made his companionship with God; his friend was Jehovah. No one can walk with Jehovah without being blessed with a companionship and friendship of God. The superior sanctity of his life would bless those of his fellow men who had a tendency to yield to the holy influence of his character. We are to understand that Enoch fulfilled the duties of the ordinary human life while he walked with God. We should not forget that a holy walking with God is a useful and helpful walking among men. No man can isolate himself from the society of his fellow men and stand aloof from the needs of the human family and be a friend of God. One who pursues such a course robs his fellow creatures of services which they have a just right to expect from him and dishonors the God who has created him.

There is also implied love and faith in God when one walks with him. Love of God implies obedience to him. "If ye love me, ye will keep my commandments." (John 14: 15.) This was a statement that Christ made to his disciples while here upon earth. This was true in the days of Enoch. Christ gave expression to an eternal truth, and was not merely coining one at the time that he was speaking. I am sure that Enoch was the happiest man living at that time. No one could walk with God, having the sweet fellowship and companionship of Jehovah, without being happy. An unfaltering trust and a never-dying hope leads one into large fields of usefulness and the greatest happiness known to man on earth.

I commend the example of Enoch to all the people of God to-day. I know of nothing more sadly needed than a closer walk with God. All of his people should sing with the poet:

O for a closer walk with God, A calm and heavenly frame, A light to shine upon the road That leads me to the Lamb!

So shall my walk be close with God, Calm and serene my frame; So purer light shall mark the road That leads me to the Lamb.

The Need at Muskogee, Okla.

The following letter is self-explanatory:

Dear Brother Morrow: I have intended writing you a personal letter on a subject that is near your heart, if I am not very badly mistaken. I have been here now almost two years, and believe I know whereof I write. No one could have made me believe that there was a place the size of this where Christ is scarcely known, but such is true. Coming as I did from a place like Nashville, where there are so many churches and preachers, to a place like this is the strangest experience I have ever had. Why our preachers have never invaded this territory is something I cannot understand. This field has practically been untouched by our brethren. There is a small part of the southern and western sections of this State that some brethren work in, but the center and northeastern part has been avoided. Muskogee is the oldest and most im-portant town in the State, and I believe that many times more people come to and go from this town every day than from either Nashville or Memphis. This is where the government transacts all its business with the Indians. The main agency is located here, and every three months the Indians flock here to get their money, and spend it as soon as they get it. This is one explanation why there are so many people coming and going all the time. This is naturally a very rich country, so much oil, gas, and coal, with good farming land. This place has four independent railroads, with about sixty-five thousand inhabitants, not one who came here to learn of Christ. When I first came here, I arrived on Wednesday evening, and the next morning I began to hunt for some brethren. I continued to hunt until Friday. I found a good sister who told me of five who met on Lord's day in a house on Okmulgee Street. Well, I went there and found them sound in the faith, and I told them I had come to work with them. I believe they gave the most cordial welcome I had ever received. I have been preaching for them ever since, and now we have sixty-one enrolled, with as much faith manifested as I We have several brethren now who are adever saw. vancing rapidly, and I think they will develop into preachers. I have been begged many times to go to other places near here to preach, but I am not able to do this and look after the work here.

Another thing I wish to tell you is this: I used to think, when I was in Nashville, that if I could go to some place where there was no church and begin and build up one, that I would gladly do it. Well, in the providence of God, I am in such a place. The first thing I did was to took me up a job, so I could support myself while I was preaching. You know I learned the trade of locomotive builder when I was young; and while I had not worked at it for years, I still knew it. Well, I found me a job with the Midland Valley Railroad and went to work, and now have a good job. It was pretty hard on me at first, but now it is easy; and do you know that I believe I understand Paul's making tents now for the first time? It furnishes an unanswerable argument in favor of the preacher against preaching for money. About five or six of my shopmates are Christians now, with others interested.

Now, Brother Morrow, I have written somewhat at length for the purpose of informing you of the great need of this place. We are meeting in a house that can be bought for twelve or fifteen hundred dollars, and we need help to buy it. I believe the churches of Nashville and Tennessee would gladly assist if they understood the true situation, and I know of no one that I believe could interest them more than S. F. Morrow. Several times others have tried to rent the house away from us, but have failed so far. If we had the house, we could fix it up in good style for about two hundred dollars, and then have money to begin at other points. We hope to do some tent work here just as soon as we are able, but until we can stop the rent we are not able. This place is large enough to support four good congregations and several missions. Another trouble we have here that is not found in old places is, we have to pay seven and one-half cents a line for every notice we get in the paper. These editors here will laugh at you if you ask them to publish a church notice without pay.

Now, Brother Morrow, please take this matter up and push it. I know that many appeals are made for help, but I do know this is a most worthy appeal. All money received will be promptly reported through the Gospel Advocate, Christian Leader, and Firm Foundation. My address is 1412 Baltimore Avenue, Muskogee, Okla.

Sincerely and affectionately, your brother in Christ,

The above letter should be read by all with fear and trembling to know there is a city of this size in America which has so few disciples of Christ. I am here reminded of the question Pilate put to the mob who was crying, "Crucify him!" What shall we do with Christ and his kingdom which he died on Calvary's cruel cross to establish for our salvation? Can we be saved unless we make more sacrifice than we as a mass are making? May the good Lord help each one of us to examine ourselves in the light of his precious word. What are we doing to take the world for Christ? Certainly, Brother Allen did just as Paul would have done, and as we all should do-locate the church, then some honorable occupation to support it, as our brother has done. All who know Brother Allen know he has preached for years mostly at his own expense to establish the church which we all, I trust, dearly love. From his letter we can all see what a great misfortune it would be for them to lose their house of worship. May each one who reads this letter say: "Lord, here am I. I will help liberally and soon, and solicit others to help." We will set apart the first Lord's day in March to collect all we can for this noble work. I will ask every preacher and elder who knows Brother Allen to mention this appeal at the first opportunity so that all may be ready. As our brother has stated, he knows that many appeals are being made now. I wish to say I do not look on appeals as I used to. I now thank every one who calls my attention to a worthy cause. May we all learn to love our God more and our brethren tenderly and affectionately.

S. F. MORROW.

Things in this world do not come by chance, but a soul is set in a certain place; and happiness is to be found by interpreting the events of life rightly, by facing sorrows bravely, by showing kindness, by thankfully accepting joy and pleasure.—A. C. Benson.

It is but common to believe in him who believes in himself. But O, if ye would do aught uncommon, believe yet in him who does not believe in himself. Restore the faith to him,—Muriel Strode.

Reality.

How glad I am the old proud life is done!
No longer do I need to seem to know;
Released, at last, from seeming and from show,
How evenly I see my moments run,
And packed with true achievement every one!

No vagrant longing for the stately years
Disturbs my peaceful hours. I have no place
That asks of me a certain form and grace;
Reduced to nothingness, I lose my fears,
And turn to action all my fount of tears.

Deaths.

Never in my experience as a minister have I been buried in the efforts to bury the dead, comfort the broken-hearted, and see after the needs of those who are sick as I have been the first month in this year. The dreadful war that continued more than four years, with all of its tragedies, was not enough to make man think, to wake him from his long sleep in spiritual slumber. After it ended, the men of the nations engaged got busy claiming the honor of the victory, one saying, "Our navy won it," and another saying, "The bravery and dash of our soldiers with our navy won it," ad infinitum. So God, it seems, has put his own hand upon the nations, after permitting the terrible war, in another effort to make man stop and think. And in this second war there are no neutrals, although we would all love to be so considered. The medical brains of the different nations are assembling here and there, in small numbers and larger numbers, seeking a remedy to stay the "flu," but finding none, and will not till Jehovali thinks it has continued long enough. With all of this around and about us, men go on unconcerned in their way of living, and-had you thought of it?-there have not been calls for the prayers of the good people in the different nations as much so as there were during the war; our minds are on something else, it seems. Life here is always uncertain; it is dreadfully so these days.

Much has been said about the "flu" being contagious. About this the doctors seem to know as little as they do about what the "flu" really is and how to stop it. Just a few days ago I noticed an account of a family of four, the father and mother and a grown son and daughter, all of whom were found dead in their home. They lived in the country with no near-by neighbors. A man called at the house on business and found them dead. They hardly caught it from the crowds in the city or from each other. They seemed to have taken it about the same time, pneumonia soon developed, and they passed out about the same time, so far as post-mortem examinations could tell. The thought of such deaths is distressing—no one to even give water to moisten the fever-scorched and dying lips!

Just now I could not name the homes I have visited where this disease was raging. I have been in rooms where as many as seven were in bed with it. I have moved families, wrapping children with the fever on in quilts and putting them in my car and carrying them where they could be nursed. Work with the "flu" in various ways I have been doing for four months, yet I have not taken it. Others have done the same kind of work and took it and died, and this I may do in less than ten days. We know nothing about it, so far as being immune or not immune or how to successfully dodge it. The fact is, I do not believe it can be dodged. There are families here whom I know to be the most sanitary and who took every precaution, yet they had it.

Funeral Services.

On Friday, January 31, I conducted the Inneral service of Sister A. C. Lacy in her home at Constitution. Sister Lacy had passed her seventy-eighth birthday, and leaves two daughters, three sons, two brothers, and two sisters, with every one who knew her, to mourn their loss. She was preceded about three years by her splendid husband, who died at the age of eighty-two. Sister Lacy was baptized into Christ in 1910, and her husband in 1912, by the writer. She died in their home which was built before the Civil War, and in which she lived for about sixty years. Her life was beautiful indeed because of its simplicity, patience, and untiring activity. Our hearts go out for Sister Pearl and the younger daughter and son who lived with her in her home, hence will be the ones to miss her most. But how glad we are that none of us sorrow without the brightest and surest hope of seeing this splendid woman again if we will only live as did she!

On Saturday, February 1, I took the cold form of Sister D. Barfield's baby in my car and carried it to the Pleasant Grove churchyard, five miles out from Marietta, Ga., and placed it beside the father, who was buried there on January 10. After arriving there, our sadness was intensified to learn that Brother Paul Barfield's wife passed out at four o'clock that-morning and that Brother Dan Barfield was at the point of death. In spite of the fact that I was sorely needed in the homes last mentioned, the best I could do was to run out to the houses and have a word with the sorrowing and hasten back to Atlanta to meet the train that was bringing our heartbroken sister, Mrs. H. A. Hoffman, with the body of her husband, making the trip of more than fifty miles and attending to the burial in less than four hours. Added to all this, the first call on Sunday morning following was from the husband of Sister White, at Constitution, announcing the death of their youngest child. And the end, it seems, is not yet.

The First Lord's Day in February.

Our service at West End was so good on the first Lord'sday morning in this month that I will have to say something about it. I was so tired that I hardly felt like standing, much less preaching. The language of Christ, "Be ye also ready," was ringing in my ears, with many other such scriptures in the Guide Christ has left with us. I read a few of the scriptures and turned the meeting over to Brother Thomas H. Burton, who had come all the way from South Carolina just to worship with us for that day and get a little rest and advice about the great work he is beginning in that State, and to Brother Silas E. Templeton and Brother Bethurum, of the Belmont congregation, in Nashville, Tenn. Their short talks were so appropriate and were well received by a packed house. I was never in a sweeter service. Brother Burton preached for us at night also. Brother John Klingman preached at South Pryor in the forenoon and hurried back to Marietta for the funeral service of Sister Barfield. Brother Templeton was with the Liberty Hill brethren in the afternoon and spoke at South Pryor at night. Brother Brooks filled his regular engagements at East Point. Professor Morrison, of Camp Jesup, was with Brother Ritchie at Golden Hill.

At three o'clock in the afternoon the writer conducted the funeral service of Brother H. A. Hoffman, who was called from us after passing his forty-third birthday, and who is survived by his most excellent wife, three brothers, and three sisters. I have never met a man I loved more than this splendid man. He worked for years for the street-car company here as inspector. They have never had a man who was more loyal to the company in performing his every duty. The fact is, Brother Hoffman brought on his premature end with overwork when the company was in sore need of more men. West End had no member that loved the simple teaching of the New Testament more than he. How we will miss his bright, pleasant smiles and hearty handshakes! The Lord bless his widow and make her to know that it is all for the best, and that while she cannot call him back, she can certainly go to him.

We have this amount on hand at the present time and will forward it to Jacob Metlob in Assyria as soon as we hear that he has arrived there safely. We are very grateful to all who have helped us during the past year to make this work a success. We have raised, with your help, $2,877.51, of which $2,291.21 has already been sent with Jacob Metlob, and we now have on hand, $586.30. We would like to increase this amount in the next thirty days so that we will have a contribution really worth while to send Brother Metlob as soon as we hear from him. As you, no doubt, know, the government has made an appeal through the Armenian Relief Society of New York for thirty million dollars to help carry on this kind of work. We all appreciate this, as it will be a great help, and they will be able to reach many that we could not reach; but we must not neglect our duty as Christians and depend entirely on others. All who prefer to do this kind of work through the church are urged to send contributions to us at once and keep them up as long as these people are in need. Send contributions to C. Ray Thompson, secretary, Harper, Kan.

Moving Pictures.

Brother Hiratsuka, who recently spent two weeks preaching in and around his native village of Shodamura, wrote as follows: "Since I started to the country I have called on twenty-nine people in four villages, and we had four meetings. One brother determined to be baptized on the coming Sunday. Also, the members have promised to come together in one place and have the Lord's Supper. They are very glad to have us twice a year. Last night there were fifteen people, though there was a heavy rain. I am starting for other villages now. I will come back in the next week. Please pray for me."

American Soldiers Who Cannot Read or Write.

No revelation of the war strikes home more intimately than Secretary Lane's publication of the extent of our adult illiteracy. The facts have set all sections of the adult illiteracy. The facts have set all sections of the country to the wholesome task of self-examination. What proportion of the seven hundred thousand illiterate men of draft age is a responsibility to be laid at our doors? Such is a question put in one form or another by the leading sectional newspapers. What manner of service are illiterates able to render to an imperiled democracy when they cannot read their orders? The question involves, of course, a failure of Americanization as well as a neglect of education; for the number of illiterates contains, besides those of our own breeding, many who speak only the tongues of the foreign lands from which they spring. "There can be neither national unity in ideals nor in purpose unless there is some common method of communication through which may be conveyed the thought of the nation," says the Secretary of the Interior. By a series of searching questions he puts before us the figure we cut to an outside observer " of a world-leading democracy wherein ten per cent of the adult population cannot read the laws which they are presumed to know:"

What should be said of a democracy which sends an army to preach democracy wherein there was drafted out of the first two million men a total of two hundred thousand men who could not read their orders or understand them when delivered, or read the letters sent them from

What should be said of a democracy which calls upon its citizens to consider the wisdom of forming a league of nations, of passing judgment upon a code which will insure the freedom of the seas, or of sacrificing the daily stint of wheat or meat for the benefit of the Roumanians or the Jugo-Slavs, when eighteen per cent of the coming citizens of that democracy do not go to school?

What should be said of a democracy in which one of its sovereign States expends a grand total of six dollars per year per child for sustaining its public-school system?

"What should be said of a democracy which is chal-lenged by the world to prove the superiority of its system of government over those discarded, and yet is compelled to reach many millions of its people through papers printed in some foreign language?

What should be said of a democracy which expends in a year twice as much for chewing gum as for schoolbooks, more for automobiles than for all primary and secondary education, and in which the average teacher's salary is less than that of the average day laborer?

What should be said of a democracy which permits tens of thousands of its native-born children to be taught American history in a foreign language—the Declaration of Independence and Lincoln's Gettysburg speech in German and other tongues?

"What should be said of a democracy which permits men and women to work in masses where they seldom or never hear a word of English spoken?

Yet, this is all true of the United States of America in this year of 1918, wherein were fought the second battle of the Marne and the battle of the Argonne Forest." Literary Digest.

It does not speak well for our civilization that there is so much illiteracy in the United States. It is also discouraging that, of those who are considered educated, so few read and practice the teaching of the New Testament. It is suicidal to neglect to teach the word of God to the people.

All Eyes on R. M. Hopkins.

In the Christian Standard for January 11, Professor Athearn presented an analysis of the two types of organization that are seeking to direct the development of religious education in this country-the ecclesiastical, autocratic type, and the nonsectarian, democratic type. In previous articles he has shown how the Sunday-school Council, representing the ecclesiastical type, had been for years waging war from ambush on every nonecclesiastically controlled agency of religious education. The International Sunday-School Association, after surrendering many fields of endeavor to the denominations, took a final, determined stand for democracy when an attempt was made to force all communities to organize their cooperative work on lines of sectarian cleavage. This positive action of the International Sunday-School Association forced the Sunday-School Council into the open, and at last it appears in an open declaration of war on all co-operative movements that tend to abolish sectarian consciousness

The real purpose of the leaders of the Sunday-School Council expressed itself at Toronto last week in a report of the executive committee of the council, recommending that the council elect an executive staff and proceed to organize State, provincial, county, and city associations throughout North America on strictly denominational lines, and in open hostility to all nondenominational, dem-ocratically organized associations. This report, we understand, was adopted, with the provision that each denominational board must officially approve the action before that denomination could become a member of the reorganized council.

It is hard to believe that any body of men could be so out of harmony with the spirit of the age as to seriously suggest that there is no place in our American life for a democratically organized agency of religious education. The democratic ideals of many religious bodies and the well-organized movement for union involving the out-standing denominational leaders will prevent several of the prominent Sunday-school boards from approving a program that nullifies the spirit of the denominations them-selves. The council may be expected to split into two factions—one favoring democracy, the other favoring ecclesiastical autocracy. Where will the disciples of Christ classify?

Mr. Hopkins must get approval of his board to join the Sunday-School Council in a nation-wide campaign to re-organize religious education on a strictly ecclesiastical basis, repudiating the very genius of the Restoration movement as well as the democracy of the International Sunday-School Association, and compelling every community to preserve and accentuate sectarian cleavages in all coöperative work in religious education.

Will Mr. Hopkins take the churches of our brotherhood into his confidence and ask authority to pledge their support to this new ecclesiastical system, or will he auto-cratically pledge the support of the disciples of Christ and crack his ecclesiastical whip over the heads of our people in an attempt to get them to fight the county and State Sunday-school associations because they are nonsectarian?

Being himself one of the active promoters of the new ecclesiastical system, Mr. Hopkins now has to get his "denomination" to approve his action in pledging the mannial and moral support of the "denomination" to this reorganized ecclesiastical combine. It will be interesting to see by what process Mr. Hopkins will get official authority to enter the name of the disciples of Christ as one of the co-operating denominations in this reorganized council. Will Mr. Hopkins' Bible-school board authorize this sectarian connection? The democratic churches, committed to the ideals of the Restoration movement, will watch with Interest the process by which Mr. Hopkins will attempt to make them participate in this new organization to defeat democracy and to enthrone ecclesiasticism. Att. EYES ON R. M. HOPKINS!—Christian Standard.

The New Testament does not warrant any kind of society independent of the church. Denominationalism is also unknown to the New Testament. The man who believes and cheys the gospel becomes a member of the body of Christ, which is the church of Christ. As a Christian, it is his duty to teach the word of God. Christians who never heard of societies gave their lives in order that they might teach and disseminate the truth. Christians should now stand aloof from human societies and should as members of the body of Christ glorify God in both body and spirit. In the church are embodied the wisdom, the power, and the goodness of God. It is folly to turn away from this blood-bought institution to human organizations.

Reconstruction.

SHALL WE RETURN TO THE PRE-WAR STATUS?

Now that the war is over, the armistice signed and peace soon to be declared, many people are anxious to settle down to that state of rest and quietude that they enjoyed before the war. But this is not possible. The war has made many changes, has imposed many new duties, so that there is nothing for us to do but to go forward. To sit down with folded hands is suicidal. We must meet the new duties that are forced upon us, must meet them courageously and fearlessly, if we do our duty as Christians. We should not expect to be at ease in Zion.

WHAT SHALL WE DO WITH OUR BOYS?

We often hear the question asked: "What shall we do with our boys?" It is just as fitting to ask the question: "What shall our boys do with us?" Many of our boys have learned industry, frugality, and promptness. The war has brought out the best in many of them. They have seen the folly of trusting in the things of this world. They are tired of the fancies and fads of the world and are ready to bravely meet the solemn duties and responsibilities of life. In other words, they are ready to take our measure; and if we do not measure up to the standard that God has set for his people, they will soon find it out. We should give the boys examples of sincerity, virtue, and righteousness. If we fail to measure up to the divine standard, they will be disappointed in us. We at home have a great responsibility, and we should determine now to meet that responsibility fearlessly and nobly.

WE MUST BE GUIDED BY "IT IS WRITTEN."

When our boys return home, they should not find us more in love with the things of the world than we are with the truth. They should not discover in us a disposition to take anything because it is popular and pleasing to the world. It is to be lamented that so many professed followers of Christ do not realize the absolute necessity of being guided by "it is written" in the worship. With them, what God says upon any subject is a matter of indifference. Some imagine that they have outgrown the word of God and that they can erect moral standards by which to guide themselves that are superior to those laid down in the Bible. . With them it matters not whether God commands a thing to be done or whether man's wisdom authorizes it to be done. Such teaching is ruinous and is leading the world away from God. As Christ was guided by "it is written" and came down from heaven to do the will of his Father, so must we be guided by "it is written" in the worship of God. It is not what we like or what we dislike; it is, "What does God require us to do?" The Savior says: "And why call ye me, Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?" (Luke 6: 46.) We must be doers of the word, and not hearers only. Those who hear, and do not, delude themselves.

EXALTING THE HUMAN OVER THE DIVINE.

Many people are ready to exalt the human above the divine. They are ready to teach that those who have fought for principles that they believe are right are saved on this account, regardless of obedience to the gospel of Jesus Christ. People are ready to accept almost anything. save the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. They forget that those who obey not the gospel shall be lost. They preach their own views and theories instead of preaching the gospel, which is God's power unto salvation. The gospel is the same now that it was before the war, the same that it was during the war; and the same gospel will cure the evils of the world, provided it is faithfully practiced. It's ruinous to preach any other gospel. "But though we, or an angel from heaven, should preach unto you any gospel other than that which we preached unto you, let him be anathema. As we have said before, so say I now again, If any man preacheth unto you any gospel other than that which ye received, let him be anathema." (Gal. 1: 8, 0.) The man who relies on the gospel for the salvation of men will not turn away from that gospel simply because it is unpopular with many people. Like Paul of old, he will glory only in the cross of Christ and will continue to preach the gospel, "not in persuasive words of wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit and of power." There is too much disposition now to work with men in error instead of working to lead them out of error into the light of truth. The wisdom of man will no more save the world now than it would have saved it in the days of Paul. As Paul charged Timothy, so we would admonish all now to preach the word."

Those "Three Stumblingblocks."

BY M. C. K.

On page 146 of this issue of the Gospel Advocate we publish, by request, a contributed article from the Southern Christian Courier, of Vicksburg, Miss., by Brother J. B. Lehman, which, under the title, "Removing Three Stumblingblocks," appears in its issue of January, 1919. We are requested to review this article in our columns So far as we can see, the only good to come from publishing such an article in our paper is to show, on the one hand, to what extent men can be led, by a false theory, to pervert the word of God, and to make its publication the occasion of a timely warning against this fearful sin; and to show by contrast, on the other hand, how some things are not to be done. For these reasons, we ask the reader to give the article a careful perusal before reading

It will be observed that the article purports to be an effort to "find out, if possible, what the cause of failure is" among the churches to be efficient in their work, and the writer claims that there are "three stumblingblocks" which constitute this cause-namely, "(1) wrong ideas of organization, (2) wrong ideas of woman's place in the kingdom, and (3) wrong notions of the use of musical instruments in the worship;" and he then proceeds to consider each of these items separately with the specific purpose, as he expresses it, to "show by the Scriptures what the authority of divine writers is" on these three subjects. Of course this is precisely what we all should want to know, not only on these three subjects, but on all other subjects on which "divine writers" have spoken; and yet it would be difficult to find an instance of more far-fetched reasoning and glaring assumption and perversion of the word of God than this article discloses. The way he handles and perverts Paul's language is simply amazing; and, with the view of warning against his course, we now call attention to his disposition of the three items.

1. In order to justify the organization of the different churches of a district into a general body with authority and control over their missionary work located in a central board of supervision and management, he cites the appointment of the seven deacons in the Jerusalem church, mentioned in Acts 6. Of course the Jerusalem church, as a single cursory reading of the record shows, was only one church; but this writer, to make the case fit his general organization of the churches of a district, as in the case of the modern missionary society, represents it as consisting of numerous "small congregations," by which he means churches, and then he finds no difficulty in reaching his conclusion that all of them, when "called together" by the twelve apostles, constituted a general "convention," and "the seven" deacons were its central "board" of authority and control! There is not one word of this in the entire biblical record. On the centrary, under the leadership of inspired apostles, as the reader can verify by examining the sixth chapter of Acts, the Jerusalem church, when it was discovered that certain "widows were neglected in the daily ministration," was called together and instructed to "look out" from among their membership "seven men of good report, full of the Spirit and of wisdom, whom" the apostles would "appoint over this business." (Acts 6: 1-3.) Hence, "this" does not "give us full authority and a good example" for a general "convention" of the churches of a district or State, with authority and control over their missionary work vested in a central board; but it does "give us full authority and a good example" of a church appointing certain men to systematically attend to works of charity in its midst, or to any other work requiring systematic attention.

2. His paragraph about woman and her work in the church is not only diametrically contrary to the facts stated in the New Testament, and particularly in First Corinthians, but it is perfectly absurd. He says "the women" in the church at Corinth "were of the kind that had to keep veiled lest some man be tempted by them." There is not one word of truth in this; and yet he not only assumes and states it to be true, but actually states it as the reason why Paul "told them to keep silent in the churches and to ask their husbands at home and to keep their heads covered!" Paul's own specific words show that If the women in the Corinthian church had been of this "kind." he would have ordered them put out of the church (see chapter 5); and yet this sage commentator represents him as merely giving directions how such low female characters were to demean themselves when they assembled with the rest of the church for worship! Was there ever a greater perversion? Of course we charitably conclude that its author is merely the unfortunate victim of a theory which blinds him to the facts; but if we were to judge from appearances, his perversion would be declared willful and deliberate. When men, for any reason, will thus twist God's sacred word in order to make out a case in favor of their theory about a matter, they should be dealt with precisely as men should be dealt with who pervert and twist facts about anything else in order to carry a point. Referring to Paul's instructions to the women in the Corinthian church and other churches, he says that he would give the same advice to the women if he "were sent to a Turkish village as a missionary." For the sake of both the women and the men, it is to be hoped that he will not be sent "to a Turkish village" nor anywhere else "as a missionary." He then caps the climax by saying: "Surely none of" the "women in Mississippi are so crude as to make" Paul's advice "necessary." That seems to be the main purpose of his reasoning-namely, to get Paul and Paul's advice out of the way of the theory which he wishes to support among the women in Missis-

3. In his paragraph on the "use of musical instruments" he again perverts and twists the facts that are in the record and adds to them what is not in the record, in order to carry his point. He makes the bold and unqualified statement that "the New Testament church used the pipe (cornet) and the harp (organ)" in its worship, and this is the way he proves that it did so at Corinth: he begins by saying that "Paul found the church there putting a false value on the use of tongues. He argued with them that unless the use of tongues conveyed a message, it was of no value. It in itself had no virtue," and then he adds: "To illustrate it, he referred them to their singing." But Paul did no such thing. There is not one word in the record that even remotely hints that he here "referred them to their singing." But this perverter of facts has a purpose to serve by making that groundless statement. That purpose is to make it appear that Paul's reference to the "pipe or harp" (14: 7) was to their use of these instruments in their singing, but there is not a syllable in the record of the entire Epistle that says so. On the contrary, in the very same connection, even the very next verse, Paul says: "If the trumpet give an uncertain voice, who shall prepare himself for war?" Did that "refer them to their singing?" Paul did indeed refer to the "pipe" and "harp" and "trumpet," but he did not say that he referred to these instruments as used by the Corinthian church, or by any other church, in their singing. This is all assumed and read into the text by this contributor to the Southern Christian Courier, and it is a shameful perversion of Paul's language. As a perverter of facts, if any advocate of sprinkling for baptism ever excelled him in taking to pieces and twisting the sacred record in order to bolster up the practice of sprinkling, it never came under our observation.

Finally, with such men in the lead of the churches, how may we ever expect to induce the advocates of sprinkling and other unscriptural practices to be influenced by the appeal to turn away from unscriptural things and unite upon the simple word of God? He ought to write another article for the Southern Christian Courier, confess his sin in perverting facts, and ask God for forgiveness. We should be glad to publish such an article in our columns.

Lessons on the Passage of the Red Sea.

BY J. C. M'Q.

Students are interested in the hardening of Pharaoh's heart. In a number of passages in Exodus we are told that God hardened Pharaoh's heart, and in many more passages in the same book we are told that Pharaoh hardened his own heart. Pharaoh hardened his heart by resisting every good influence and every punishment that God brought upon him. God hardened Pharaoh's heart by doing precisely the same things that he had been doing all along while Pharaoh had been hardening his own heart; and for the same reason—to induce him to do right. But the spring rains and the sun and the other natural agencies which promote growth in a sound tree only hasten the decay of one which is rotten at the heart. As was true of Pharaoh, so it is of any of us that resist God's love: refusing his loving-kindness and all his mercies and goodness by which he desires to serve and keep us tends to harden the heart. The gospel hardens or softens the heart as one receives or rejects it.

God permitted the Israelites to endure great burdens in Egypt so as to bring them to loathe and hate Egyptian bondage. He wanted them to forget the fish, the cucumbers, the melons, the leeks, the onions, and the garlic of Egypt, and not sigh for them any more, but would bring them down to that state of humility that would lead them to realize they had no power to save themselves. They were to pass through many sore trials before reaching the land of promise. So, after they had believed in him and had turned their backs upon Egypt and had taken up their journey to Canaan, they must endure much hardness. When they came to the Red Sea, they were entangled in the land-that is, they were encompassed on either side by the mountains, the Egyptians were in their back and the Red Sea in the front. As was their custom, they cried out against Moses and thought it was better to have died in Egypt than to die there before the Red Sea. They could not possibly see any way of escape. They had no power to remove the sea, to destroy their enemy in their back, or to remove the mountains on either side. They must realize that if salvation were provided for them, it must be done by Jehovah and not by themselves. Until man realizes his inability to save himself, God cannot save him. Man must realize his need of a Savior, must appreciate the fact that he is a sinner lost and ruined without the redeeming mercy of God. As the people were murmuring against Moses and saying it would have been better to have served the Egyptians, Jehovah said unto Moses: "Speak unto the children of Israel that they go forward." Here is a severe test of faith. They could not see any way to go without going through the sea. They must go forward in obedience to the command of Moses and trust God to open a passage through the sea. It is necessary to follow God in the darkness as well as in the light. Where sight ends, faith begins. God, and God alone, could open that passage. By grace the passage was provided for the Israelites. Later Moses commanded them to stand still and see the salvation of the Lord. He stretches out his rod over the sea and God provides the passage through the sea. While all the Israelites were saved by the grace of God, yet each one must obey the command to go forward. It would avail nothing for an Israelite to say that he did not intend to rob God of the glory by going forward, doing what he was commanded to do. God did not take any one by the hair of his head and set him down on the other side. Just so, when God commands us to do anything, it is necessary for us to do it. It is folly, it is absurd, to argue that because we are saved by the grace of God we will not do what God tells us to do. While God gives us our daily bread, he requires us to toll and labor in order that we may enjoy it. While God is good to us, and while every good and every perfect gift comes through him, if we sit down and walt for him to grind our wheat to prepare our food for us and to feed us, we will starve to death. Just so the children of Israel must go forward in obedience to the command of Jehovah. Even so to-day, when God commands us to go forward, we must move in obedience to his command. I like to see men get up and go when God says go; I like to see men do when God says do. After God provided that passage, not a single Israelite would have reached the other shore if he had deliberately refused to go forward in obedience to the command of Moses.

It should be emphasized that there was but one passage through the sea. Many people say now that it does not matter how a man gets to heaven, or it does not matter what route he travels, whether he travels the dry route or the water route, whether he travels by land or by sea, just so he gets there. But the difficulty in this case was that no Israelite could get there unless he went through the passage provided for him. There was but one passage: so there is but one way leading to eternal life. Christ says: "I am the way, the truth, and the life: no one cometh unto the Father, but by me." (John 14: 6.) Again. Christ teaches in the Sermon on the Mount: "Enter ye in by the narrow gate: for wide is the gate, and broad is the way, that leadeth to destruction, and many are they that enter in thereby. For narrow is the gate, and straightened the way, that leadeth unto life, and few are they that find it." (Matt. 7: 13, 14.) If the Lord had different ways, it would be all right to travel different ways; but as there is but one way, if a man would go to heaven, he must go in that way.

It is also worthy of note that while the Israelites were saved or delivered from the Egyptians by faith, they were saved after obedience and not before. Not one of them was delivered or saved from the Egyptians until after the passage of the Red Sea. "Thus Jehovah saved Israel that day out of the hand of the Egyptians; and Israel saw the Egyptians dead upon the seashore." (Ex. 14: 30.) While they were saved by faith, that faith expressed itself in action, in obedience. The faith that does not act, that does not speak out and come out, is worthless. Such a faith never yet saved a soul. Christ said: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." Faith and baptism are inseparably joined together. Baptism grows out of faith, belongs to faith, and is a part of it. Baptism without faith would be sinful in the sight of Jehovah. The faith of the Israelites led them to do what God commanded them to do. Even so our faith must lead us to do what God commands us to do. After the passage of the Red Sea, they sang the song of deliverance. We learn that during the passage of the sea the cloud that had led them came over them and behind them and the waters stood up a wall on either side, and, thus covered by the cloud and by the sea, they passed through the Red Sea on dry ground. This is a type of Christian baptism, which leads us to understand that when one is baptized he is buried with Christ by baptism. The Holy Spirit, through Paul, declares: "We were buried therefore with him by baptism into death: that like as Christ was raised from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also might walk in newness of life." (Rom. 6; 4.) As it was not enough to simply cross the Red Sea, so it is not enough simply to be baptized and stop. We must be led by Christ all the way. We have no miraculous pillar of cloud and fire to guide us, but we have the word of God.

> "So where he leads me I can safely go, And in the blest hereafter I shall know Why in his wisdom he hath led me so."

Safety.

Do you ever think of safety? The sure method is cooperation. If you have a careless friend or a reckless neighbor, ask him to join with you in a campaign for safety. It is not the weak or reckless, but the man or woman with a mind who will cooperate for human good and safety. Your weak neighbor needs your leadership in safety measures. If you have a friend who is strong and generous, see him and tell him that his cooperation is needed for safety. Tell him "safety first" is safety always. Do it now.—Exchange.

There is no service like his that serves because he loves.

"The world relief program now being developed by the United States and the allies contemplates that wherever possible relief work will be financed by the countries affected through the medium of Ioans or other government assistance. Nevertheless, distress and suffering exists in many areas where payment for relief supplies cannot be made. These charity cases will still urgently need private benevolence.

"This is the situation with regard to the Armenians, Syrians, and Persians. There is probably no greater suffering to-day than among the persecuted peoples of Asia Minor who have no funds and cannot secure government loans and have no other credit. It is to aid this distressing situation that your committee for Armenian and Syrian relief is making its appeal to the generosity of the American people. With your financing accomplished, your committee representing these stricken people can come under the direction of the new interallied world relief organization and will receive its cooperation in the purchasing and shipment of supplies.

Attention, Sunday-School Teachers!

The conscientious teacher of the Bible is anxious to secure the best help available in the preparation of the lesson. Patient research not only improves and enriches the mind of the teacher, but makes the class work doubly interesting to the scholars. In addition to our quarterlies, we carry two excellent books that cover the International Sunday-school Lessons. The publishers of "Peloubet's Select Notes" claim that it is the "most valuable commentary in the world," because it is "scholarly, comprehensive, condensed, and practical." It covers every phase of the lesson, from treatment and explanation of text, with notes from the best commentators, to list of special books for further study along the lines of thought suggested.

"Tarbell's Teachers' Guide" is edited by Miss Martha Tarbell, Ph.D., and has been a general favorite for many years. The author has covered everything in the field of research and investigation that the enterprising teacher or scholar would like to know. Primary, Junior, Intermediate, Senior, and Bible-class teachers find in it full explanation of Bible texts, light upon difficult passages by the best biblical scholars, and discussion of present-day problems in teaching.

We will send either one of these valuable books for $1.25, postpaid; or, in combination with a new subscriber, we will send the Gospel Advocate for one year and either one of these commentaries for $3 to the same or separate addresses.

The Young People, edited by A. B. Lipscomb, is a highclass illustrated weekly of four pages. The editor's comments upon the lessons occupy one page. The price is fifty cents per single copy for a year, or five or more copies to one address for forty cents each.

Holy Ground.

Probably the difficult thing for Moses to appreciate, as it is to a greater extent for us, was that any ground is holy. When he was told that the ground whereon he walked was holy ground, he was probably somewhat incredulous, certainly surprised.

And the reason why he would hesitate to believe that it was holy was the simple fact that he was walking on it. The fallacy of assuming that what we can name and touch thereby loses its mystery and often its sanctity has grown upon us. There is a certain sophistication by which we are afflicted and on account of which we are prone to have a contempt for that which the laws of life and the acquisition of partial knowledge enable us to handle,

Because we till the ground and sow the seed and reap the harvest, the spirit of thanksgiving to the God of the harvest has become obsolete. Astronomy is no longer a thing of wonder and mystery because we have measured the distance of the stars and called them by name. Life becomes prosaic to the biologist and the chemist when processes are described and analyses are made.

So, the most sacred and inspiring relationships of life are approached with awe and wonderment; and yet a few souls there are that prove superior to what at first seems the disillusionment of experience, so strong is the tendency to drag everything to our own lowest level.

The pity is that we do not see the greatest mystery of all in the very fact that we can handle and measure and name that which is in itself no less ineffable because it is placed within our reach.

He alone is emancipated from the limitations of life to whom that which is placed within his reach is no less worshipable than when it eluded his prayerful search.—Contributor, in St. John's Evangelist.

From J. T. J. Watson, Canoe, Ala.: "I have been a subscriber to the Gospel Advocate most of the time since 1867, when I became a member of the church, and still like it better than any other paper I know."

The many friends of G. A. Dunn will rejoice to learn that he is getting well after being confined to his bed for several weeks. He reports that all the congregations in his home town, Houston, Texas, are doing well.

Married, in the study of the Russell Street Church, on Saturday, February 8, at 2 P.M., Mr. James Russell Allen to Miss Helen Parker, A. B. Lipscomb officiating. The Gospel Advocate extends heartiest congratulations.

T. C. Little has agreed to serve as minister for the church at Fayetteville, Tenn. His appointments will be as follows: Friendship, first Sunday; Richmond, third Sunday; Fayetteville, second and fourth Sundays. May the Lord prosper his work.

U. G. Wilkinson wishes his friends to know that his forthcoming book on Bible prophecies as related to the great world war will be ready for delivery in a few days. Those who have ordered copies will receive them, and those who now send orders will have them filled at once. The price is fifty cents, postpaid. Address U. G. Wilkinson, Comanche, Okla.

Married, on February 1, at the residence of Elder James E. Scobey, 859 Bradford Avenue, this city, Mr. William C. Mitchell and Miss Lutie C. Chisholm. Blder Scobey officiated in his usual happy manner. Miss Chisholm, the adopted daughter of the late Dr. L. C. Chisholm, is a woman of fine Christian character. Mr. Mitchell is a superintendent of construction work at the nitrate plant near Florence, Ala., where they will reside for the present.

The little band at Arkland, Tenn., has built a new house of worship and are in debt to the extent of five hundred and seven dollars. This money was due on January 1. In order to meet the note, A. L. Neely borrowed the money on his personal account, giving a mortgage for his home. John Fry and Willie Morton, of Columbia, Tenn., are acquainted with the needs of the work. Contributions will be thankfully received. Send them to A. L. Neely, Route 8, Columbia, Tenn.

Charlie Taylor writes from Paducah, Ky.: "The Gospel Advocate grows better with each issue. I hope to send several subscribers soon. I am entering the third year's work with the Gobel Avenue church of Christ, with the largest audiences we have had since I have had the pleasure of being with the brethren at this place. 'Greater things for God' is our motto. The brethren stand nobly by their minister and encourage him in every way possible. We are expecting a splendid year for the cause."

From A. K. Ramsey, Forest Hill, La., February 5: "The local congregation on February 2 set apart our beloved brother, C. C. McQuiddy, to do the work of an evangelist. He is a consecrated man, full of faith and zeal. Through his efforts the congregation at this place was established. It has been my privilege to labor with Brother McQuiddy for the past three years, and I have found him to be an excellent colaborer in the Lord. We commend him to the love and fellowship of the churches of Christ everywhere."

From M. S. Mason, Rogersville, Mo., February 11: "I have returned to Rogersville, of which the brethren will please take note in communicating with me. I promise the brethren in my moving about so much I shall not be moved away from the hope of the gospel or be carried about by divers and strange doctrines. My time for protracted-meeting work for 1919 is not all taken. Brethren may write me when they wish, and if time is taken will so inform them. I have placed the fifth Lord's day in March and June with Bona, in Dade County. I filled all my January appointments, with good results at all places."

From W. W. Slater, Box 510, Muskogee, Okla., February 3: "I was at Fort Smith, Ark., yesterday, and preached for the Jenny Lind Avenue congregation. We had a splendid audience and a most enjoyable service. The brethren paid me well for my visit. I will visit them the first Sunday in each month. These brethren are getting along nicely and have a mind to work. They have asked me to locate with them and take up the work in Fort Smith, but as yet I have not decided just what I will do in regard to the matter. I will assist the brethren in a meeting at Silver Bend, Texas, the first of July, the Lord willing. I would appreciate another meeting in Texas for July."

From J. L. Pummill, Dallas, Texas, January 22: "I will give a report for the year 1918. We feel that we have been wonderfully blessed in many ways. We have had between one hundred and one hundred and fifty additions to the church. More than four thousand dollars passed through the treasury, of which three hundred and eleven dollars went to the Luling Orphan Home. I do not boast of numbers and finance, but the spirituality of the church is fine. Every one seems to love every one else, and, best of all, I believe they love the Lord and aim to go to heaven when they die. We who are trying to take the lead are doing all in our power to lead as the Lord directs. Colley is one of the best workers I ever saw. I believe his main thought in life is to walk the streets of the New Jerusalem and to take every one with him he can when life is over. Our work for this year starts off fine, with the house crowded each Lord's-day morning and a fine crowd each evening. We hope to have a new church or our old one enlarged during the year,"

From E. H. Clark, Tate, Saskatchewan, Canada, January 21: "The brethren on the round plains fifteen miles north of Punnicky held their first meeting, beginning on December 22. The Methodists' building was used till January 13. Then we met in Charles Perry's home till the meeting came to a close on January 15. Mrs. Clark and I attended the meeting from January 9 to the close. H. A. Rogers, of Carman, Manitoba, did the preaching. He is a very effective teacher, and he presented the truth very forcibly, yet in kindness. He did considerable visiting, which not only increased the interest, but gave him an opportunity for private teaching. The brethren, though only six in number, seem to be faithful. Brother York, who is in his eighty-ninth year, attended most of the meetings. I would like to encourage the brethren to coöperate with Brother Rogers in this work. There are hundreds of places in this country where the gospel has not been proclaimed. Brother Rogers is well fitted for such work. Let us help him, brethren, knowing that our labors are not in vain in the Lord."

My Last Appeal for Help in the Mission Field.

BY JOHN HAYES.

Brethren and Sisters in Christ: You have time and again responded to my need when I have been at work in the destitute places, and I feel sure when you read this you will be willing to aid in the spread of the gospel of Christ. You have read an account of the death of my only son, who gave up his life on French soil in defense of the liberty of his fellow man. Just before he left the camp for France, I went to see him. Among the many things he said to me was this expression of love: "Daddy, I may never return to you, and the leaving will not be so hard if I may know that in your old age you will not be dependent on any one. I have left matters so you will draw fifty-seven doltars a month the rest of your life." He well knew how earnestly I have labored in the weak places and how he had time and again responded to my necessities.

Now, brother, sister, 1 want and need a good horse and buggy, that I may put in my time going from house to house in this work. The church where I worship on Lord's day has given sixty dollars; another has given twenty-two. Respond to this call, and I will let the monthly payment from my son's insurance support me in this work. This is not for me. I could forbear working and rest and live. But I love the work; and since my boy has been so thoughtful of my need in this work, I am resolved to dedicate all to the service we both loved so well. I will report through the paper when I receive the amount. You have responded before when I called, and I am glad to know I have never called only when I truly needed the help. But in this case, my brother, it is for the safety of souls I am appealing. Address me, with check or money order, at Athens, Ala., Route 1.

The Many Mysteries of Nature

BY L. W. BOWER, M. D.

You can take an onion seed and a pansy seed, and plant them side by side in the same spot of ground. In one case, you get an onion, with its peculiarly strong odor, and in the other you get a flower of rare beauty. You can plant a poppy seed and get opium (a dangerous, habit-forming frug), or you can plant a rhubarb seed and get something that helps constipation. No scientist, living or dead, can explain these mysteries of Nature. Behind the invisible life germ in each seed is hidden the deep secret that nobody understands. Everything growing out of the ground seems intended for some use in establishing natural conditions. Dr. Pierce, of Buffalo, seed, and plant them side by side in the natural conditions. Dr. Pierce, of Buffalo, N. Y., long since found out what is naturally best for women's diseases. He earned it all through treating thousands of cases. The result of his studies was a medicine called Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. This medicine is made of vegetable growths that nature surely intended for backache, headache, weakening drains, bearing-down pains, periodical irregularities, pelvic inflammations, and for the many disorders common to women in all ages of life. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is made of lady's slipper root, olack cohosh root, unicorn root, blue sohosh root and Oregon grape root. Women who take this standard remedy know that in Dr. Pierce's Favorite Pre scription they are getting a safe woman's tonic so good that druggists everywhere sell it.

Favorite Prescription should have the Favorite Prescription should have the full confidence of every woman in America because it contains no alcohol and no narcotic. Dr. Pierce knew, when he first made this standard medicine, that whiskey and morphine are injurious, and so he has always kept them out of his remedies. Send 10c to Dr. Pierce's Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y. for trial pkg. Tablets.

help weak, overworked or diseased kidneys and bladder to normal and healthy action, so that the system is freed from waste and poisonous matter that causes backache, pains in side, sare muscles, stiff joints, lumbago, rheumatism, puffiness under eyes and kindred symptoms.

Mrs. J. D. Miller, Syracuse, N. Y., writes: "For many years, off and on, I suffered from kidney trouble and rheumatism. I had a severe backache and felt miserable, and I got to a place where I had to do something. I bought Foley Kidney Pills and after taking two bottles I can say my backache is gone, and where I used to lie awake nights with rheumatic pains, I now sleep in comfort and enjoy a good night's rest. Foley Kidney Pills did wonderful things for me and I recommend them."

WHEN YOU WAKE UP DRINK GLASS OF HOT WATER

Wash the poisons and toxins from system before putting more food into stomach.

Says Inside-bathing makes anyone look and feel clean, sweet and refreshed.

Wash yourself on the inside before breakfast like you do on the outside. This is vastly more important, because the skin pores do not absorb impurities into the blood, causing illness, while the bowel pores do.

For every ounce of food and drink taken into the stomach, nearly an ounce of waste material must be carried out of the body. If this waste material is not eliminated day by day, it quickly ferments and generates poisons, gases, and toxins which are absorbed or sucked into the blood stream through the lymph ducts, which should suck only nourishment to sustain the body.

A splendid health measure is to drink, before breakfast each day, a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it, which is a harmless way to wash these poisons, gases, and toxins from the stomach, liver, kidneys, and bowels, thus cleansing, sweetening, and freshening the entire alimentary canal before putting more food into the stomach.

A quarter pound of limestone phosphate costs but very little at the drug store, but is sufficient to make any one an enthusiast on inside bathing. and women who are accustomed to wake up with a dull, aching head, or have furred tongue, bad tasta, nasty breath, sallow complexion, and others who have bilious attacks, acid stomach, or constipation, are assured of pronounced improvement in both health and appearance shortly.

A Tribute to Mrs. John B. Corley. BY E. A. E.

The life and death of many good women and godly men have been recorded in the Bible.

These records have been made for the encouragement, comfort, and hope of the living.

Was it not from these sacred records, above all others, that Longfellow learned the truth that Lives of great men all remind us, We can make our lives sublime?

God, in turning the curses which the covetous and false prophet, Balaam, would pronounce upon the children of Israel into blessings, made him say concerning the righteous Jacob:

Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his.

On the other hand, as warnings to all, the life and death of not a few ungodly women and wicked men have been recorded in the Bible.

What woman could live a more ungodly life and come to a more shameful and tragical death than Jezebel?

With all trials and troubles, sorrows and afflictions, weakness within and wickedness without, unfaithfulness of some and persecution of others, by the grace of God, one can live a righteons life and come to the happy end of the Cl istian journey.

Such a life and such an end was the life and end of the good woman whose obituary I am now writing.

Nannie Bennett, daughter of Col. James D. and Martha Hutchison Bennett, was born near Hartsville, Tenn., on July 20, 1849.

When about fifteen years of age-in the tender years of youth, when the heart is most susceptible of good impressions-she remembered her Creator in the only true way-namely, by confessing her faith in Jesus of Nazareth as the Christ, the Son of God and Savior of the world, and in this faith turning in godly sorrow from sin, and being baptized into Christ. Thus she was added to the church and became a member of the body of Christ.

On February 11, 1880, she was married to Capt. John Burford Corley. Captain Corley died on April 4, 1916. She died on January 16, 1918.

She is survived by one child, a son, L. Bennett Corley; one brother, A. G. Bennett; and two sisters, Misses Mary and Martha Bennett-all now of Nashville, Tenn.

From these statements it is seen that Sister Corley had passed her sixty-eighth milestone in life's journey, had been in the church about fiftythree years, and had been married when bereaved of her husband thirty-

She Saved 200 Chicks

Mrs. G. Hancock, Sturgis, Ky., writes: "I hatched 200 chicks, and didn't lose a single one with white diarrhea. I give Ready Relief the praise." Mrs. H. L. Sutton, of Ramona, Kan., writes: "My chicks were dying twenty and thirty a day. I got two packages of Ready Relief, and now I don't lose any."

You can get the same wonderful results, Reefer's Ready Relief put in your baby chicks' first drinking water will help save chicks first drinking water will help save them from the dreadful white discrines player. This remedy is the discovery of a famous scientist. Send $1 to-day to E. J. That's about the cost of Reefer's Ready Relief. ness qualities and active in the business world, of attractive literary attainments, and is zealous in Christian work. May God bless him, comfort him, and guide him and his still in the good way until all shall meet in the summer land of song.

Sister Corley lived near Hartsville, Tenn., the most of her life, worshiping with the congregation there; but about seventeen years ago the family removed to Nashville. At the time of her death she was a member of the Meirose congregation.

These are interesting and important events in the life of any one; but the most important and most comforting of all events in Sister Corley's history is, she lived a life consistent with her profession of godliness. Like the godly women mentioned in the Bible, she was noted for her Christian charity. Paul speaks of the modest apparel, humility, submission, and homebuilding and home keeping of women professing godliness. That is, godly women lead such lives. This is the most worthy and most beautiful life women can live. Any other life is out of harmony with the God-appointed sphere and mission of woman. Contrasted with the strain and pride, vain ambitions and rivalry, turmeil and strife of the world, such a life, with its sacrifice and work, is a tranquil and quiet one, filled with the peace and grace of God and crowned in the end with his glory. Such a life, in the wisdom and goodness of God, is a benediction to mankind.

I am writing in memory of a good woman and for the comfort of the bereaved, but also for the encouragement of hundreds of faithful wives, godly mothers, and dutiful builders of Christian homes.

Sister Corley went to Hartsville to attend the funeral services of her brother, Robert A. Bennett. After remaining eleven days to comfort his widow, she was taken suddenly sick with acute indigestion and died in thirty minutes.

We sympathize with the bereaved both because they are brothers and sisters in the Lord and personal friends whom I have known for many years. I cite them to the promises, comfort, and hope of the gospel.

And I heard a voice from heaven saying, Write, Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord from henceforth: yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; for their works follow with them.

Get well. You can. It is your duty. You can just as well be free from this dreaded scourge, catarrh, be strong, healthy, happy, as to be sick, suffering, and dreadful of the and.

The Wichita Falls Meeting.

BY U. G. WILKINSON.

The meeting at Wichita Falls, Texas, was a success in every way. It was a general meeting of gospel preachers, and was attended by a number of our best and most wide-awake preachers. It began on Monday night, January 20, and closed on Friday night following. I shall not take space to go into details, but will say that every minute of the time, both day and night, was filled with very interesting discussions of Bible questions by the different preachers present.

I do not know that I can recall all the names of preachers present, but I now remember the following: J. C. White, T. B. Clark, J. P. Kimbrell, A. W. Young, Dr. G. A. Trott, A. F. Thurman, W. W. Brewer, A. C. Huff, J. H. Lawson, R. L. Gillentine, Brother Stewart, J. Q. Taylor, C. L. Taylor, Jesse P. Sewell, J. D. Shipman, U. G. Wilkinson, L. F. Martin, and W. A. Philpot. There may have been others, but I do not now recall them. In addition, Brother Ernest Christian and A. L. Yowell, of Wichita Falls, were also present.

Many good things were said and done and the expression was almost universal that it was one of the best meetings of the kind yet attended by those present.

We adjourned with the understanding that we would all do our best to meet again at the Abilene and Denton meetings, the last week in February and the first week in March, respectively.

All visitors were royally entertained by the home brethren. Wichita Falls has a splendid body of brethren. The writer hereof remained over and preached on Sunday for them. There was one confession Friday night at the close of the general meeting-a noble young man, who was baptized Sunday evening. We are sure that much good was done.

Brother Dunn's Work in France.

The following letter will be of interest to many of our readers:

January 8, 1919.—Dear Brother Lipscomb: I believe I promised to write you a letter when I should arrive in France and get well enough acquainted with my work as to be able to give information that would be worth while. It takes more time than one thinks to comply with all the regulations and reach his destination. I was about six weeks getting over and getting to work. I came over on a transport with soldiers. On our ship we had one hundred and seventy-five officers, twenty-five Red Cross dietitians, two thousand enlisted men, and two Y. M. C. A. workers. In addition, there was the ship's crew of about five hundred men.

We had an interesting trip across the Atlantic. Our convoy was the last to cross the Atlantic before the armistice was signed. In fact, the news of the signing the armistice reached us during our voyage. We came direct across and landed at Brest. One feels that he is in an American port on landing at Brest. It is the chief port You see thousands of for America. Americans busily engaged in every branch of service at the port, where the great ocean-going vessels are coming in and going out of port.

Everywhere I have been the Americans were in evidence. The Americans handle their own transportation and mail system over here. where I go, I am in the hands of the Americans. Any information I need, I can always find Americans to give it.

I am located in the little village of Ballon, about sixteen miles out from the city, Le Mans. Le Mans is an old city with a population of about seventy-five thousand in normal times. Before the fighting ceased there were seventy-five thousand or more refugees here from Northern France and Bel-Within a radius of about twenty miles, with Le Mans as a center, there are about two hundred thousand American soldiers. They tell us they expect soon to have five hundred thousand soldiers here. This is a depot camp into which the soldiers are to be assembled and sent out to the ports of debarkation. The soldiers are camped in the villages and old chateaus. There are usually from about two companies to a battalion camped at a place. They usually sleep on the ground or the concrete floors. These camps are usually from two to four miles apart.

Just now, since hostilities have ceased, is the most critical and most important time since the outbreak of the war for the American soldier. They have nowhere to go, nothing to do, nothing to see, and no purpose in view. They are just waiting in a mentally desperate condition. They all want to go home. This does not express it. They are desperate to go home. Under such circumstances the boys are more an easy prey to temptation than ever before. Temptations are wholesale. Such a situation as we have causes some of them to drift into a don't-care condition and lose all restraining influences.

You hear it said that the demand is great for constructive work along mental, physical, and spiritual lines for the two millions of young men in uniform. I think this is certainly true. The need for such work is greater than before. But the difficulties under which we labor are many. It is very difficult to do what I want to do. We have all kinds of difficult and perplexing experiences. Life is most of the time very hard and trying. The best work one can do is the personal work. The Romantic Story of Southland's Favorite Shoe, EzWear.

Look around at the men and women you meet so valuable as organic from Muxated From in a single day. One glance is enough to tell it often increases the strength and endurance the ones with plenty of rich, red blood, of weak, nervous, run-down people in two strength and physical energy to back up their mental power and make them a success in whatever they undertake.

Some five years ago, a prominent citizen of South Carolina, visiting New York on important business, chanced to meet the maker of a shoe built on new and unusual lines; an enthusiastic admirer of its most distinctive features, ease and comfort, had suggested the name EzWear; it was promptly adopted. The business man from the South, knowing how welcome such a shoe would be in his part of the country, urged that its remarkable qualities, including not only comfort, but style, durability and economy, be made known there. That this has been effectively done is proven by the enormous demand that has sprung up in the South for EzWear shoes. It is said that its sale there during the last twelve months has increased fully three hundred per cent. The distributor, Mr. J. R. Simon, of 1589 Broadway, Brooklyn, N. Y., says that all who wish to know about a shoe that combines all worth-while shoe qualities, may have a copy of his money-saving of the lasking.

OBITUARIES

Dorris.

William Baldwin Dorris, of Saundersville, Tenn., fell asleep in Jesus on October 9, 1918. He obeyed the gospel at Cottontown early in life. He was born on December 23, 1866; was mar-ried to Miss Hattie B. Jones on February 16, 1897. Five children were born to this union, three of whom are livtwo brothers in Gallatin, Tenn., and one sister, Mrs. L. H. Randolph, of Kentucky. He was buried at Gallatin. He was a kind husband, father, and neighbor. He practiced medicine twenty-two years. May God's grace be sufficient to enable his sorrowing ones to bear their trouble. May the mother and children live close to God and meet him where sorrows never come.

JARRATT L. SMITH.

Harrison.

Sister Katie Harrison, wife of S. O. Harrison and daughter of Brother and Sister J. S. Cates, died at her home, near Greenville, Ala. Sister Harrison was a faithful Christian and lived an exemplary life. The community has sustained a great loss. Another child of God has finished her work and gone to rest. Her death broke two homes. Sorrow and gloom filled the home. Her loving husband, broken-hearted, remarked that she was better off than he was and that he was going to live so he could meet her in the soul's sweet home. We should not sorrow as others who have no hope. Sister Harrison believed in her Savior, who is the resurrection and the life. May God help and bless us all in living for Him. JOHN T. SMITHSON.

Rolls.

Brother John M. Rolls was born in Texas sixty-nine years ago, and twenty-four years ago he obeyed the gospel of Jesus Christ, since which time he was one of the most consistent and consecrated Christians it has been my lot to know. Though I have known him only a short while, I knew him to be a man I could depend on—quiet, unassuming, patient with all men, never failing to be present at the worship of God. But on Saturday night, January 18, 1919, the angel of death visited and called him away from labor to rest. The writer spoke such words as would point the living to the home beyond. We will miss him so much from the work here. He leaves a faithful wife, one son, two brothers, and if other kin I do not know; but I do know that no man in this country ever left a more devoted and numerous host of friends. TICE ELKINS.

King.

Henry Clay King, an old and re-spected citizen of the Summertown neighborhood, died on January 9, 1919, at the advanced age of seventy-eight years, two months, and thirteen days. He leaves behind five daughters and one son and quite a number of grandchildren to mourn his death. Brother King obeyed the gospel in early life thus became a member of the

On January 10, 1919, the writer was called to preach the funeral of Brother Mace Mobley, Jr., who lived and died near McAlpin, Fla. His death was the result of influenza followed by pneu-During his short illness he suffered intensely, but was very patient, thus manifesting the spirit of a Christian. He was twenty-six years old, unmarried, and lived at home with his parents. He became a Christian about four years ago, and he died as he lived. He read his Bible daily while well, and during his illness he was heard to pray much and earnestly, and said that he was "ready to go." "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord." It is a happy thought to the bereaved parents to know that he died in the hope of eternal life. Brother Mobley was loved by all who knew him. He bore an enviable reputation for honesty and uprightness. I would point the weeping parents and the brothers and sisters to the Savior who was his Savior, and pray that God will bless them with an everlasting salvation. J. O. Barnes.

Great Difference in Cost.

Think of the difference in cost between taking a professionally prescribed medicine and taking Hood's Sarsaparilla! You know that ordinarily it is considerable. In times like these, when everybody should be economical, it is well worth saving.

Hood's Sarsaparilla affords the least expensive of all treatments for the common everyday diseases or ailments of the blood, stomach, liver, or kidneys. Many physicians use the same substances as its ingredients for these diseases and allments; but these substances are better compounded in Hood's Sarsaparilla than they can possibly be in a prescribed medicine, which is put up in a small way, with fewer facilities, and when the physician's fee is added costs a great deal

Hood's Sarsaparilla is prepared by skilled pharmacists in one of the largest and best-equipped laboratories in the world, is wonderfully successful, and highly recommended to those who would recover health and strength with the minimum necessary outlay.

Letters From Rheumatics.

Possibly you have imagined that you could never get your own consent to write a testimonial letter; but if you have ever experienced the excruciating pains of rheumatism, you can at least appreciate the feelings of those who have been relieved of this terrible disease by drinking the Mineral Water from the justly celebrated Shivar Spring. This water overcomes many diseases, including indigestion, gout, uric-acid poisoning, and liver and kidney diseases; but no patrons of the Spring are more enthusiastic in their praise of the water than those who have been relieved of their rheumatism.

Hundreds of letters like the following have been received by the management:

ing have been received by the management:

Dr. Crosby, a South Carolina physician, writes: "I have tested your Spring Water in several cases of rheumatism, chronic Indigestion, kidney and bladder troubles, and in nervous and sick headaches, and find that it has acted nicely in each case, and I believe that, if used continuously for a reasonable time, it will give permanent relief. It will purify the blood, relieve debility, stimulate the action of the liver, kidneys, and bladder, adding them in throwing off all poisoneus matter."

Dr. Avant. of Savannah, writes: "I suffered for years with a most aggravating form of stomach disorder, and consulted a number of our best local physicians; went to Baitmore and consulted specialists there; and still I was not benefited. I had about despaired of living, when I began to use Shivar Spring Water, and in a short time was entirely relieved."

Mr. Rhodes, of Virginia, writes: "Please send me ten gallons of Shivar Spring Waterquickly. I want it for rheumatism. I know of several who were relieved of rheumatism with this water."

Editor Cunningham writes: "The water has done me more good than any medicine I have ever taken for rheumatism. I amentirely free from pain."

Mr. McClam, of South Carolina, writes: "Mr. McCarter, of Virginia, writes: "Mrs. Carter has had enlarged joints upon her hands, caused by rheumatism. Appeal for the Brethren at Brookport, Ill.

BY W. A. RECORD.

To the brethren and churches of Christ: As I come to you in this appeal, I am mindful of your liberal disposition and the generous manner in which you support the many calls that come for money to be used in the various ways in the kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ. So I believe, if I can get you to realize the importance of this appeal and the condition of this church, you will also respond liberally to this call.

About eight years ago a few brethren, then members of the Christian Church, with its aid societies, instruments of music, etc., had their attention called to the fact that the Holy Spirit, who came to guide us into all truth (John 16: 13), says through the apostle John: "Whosoever goeth onward and abideth not in the teaching of Christ, hath not God." (2 John 9.) Through the apostle Paul he says, " Belief cometh of hearing, and hearing by the word of Christ" (Rem. 10: 17); and, "Whatsoever is not of faith is sin " (Rom. 14: 23). Again, he says: "As many as are led by the Spirit of God, these are sons of God." (Rom. 8: 14.) And again: "If ye are led by the Spirit, ye are not under the law." (Gal. 5: 18.)

These brethren saw, as we all can see, that, as the Spirit was to guide us into all truth, and was to guide or lead by speaking, and as he does not sp ak of societies and instruments of music in the service and worship, therefore they are no part of the truth; that to go beyond the teaching of Christ, either in service or worship, we cannot have God as our Father; that to do as an act of service or worship anything that is not taught in the word of Christ is to do it withcut faith, and, therefore, to commit sin; that, to be sons of God, we must be led by the Spirit of God; that, if led by the Spirit, we are not under the law (where some go for Bible proof for the use of instrumental music in the worship).

These brethren, having been converted from the error of their way, appealed to the church to put away the innovation and be scriptural in their worship and service. This the church refused to do and went on in their unscriptural way. For some time these brethren met in the afternoon and worshiped apart from those who favored the innovations, but were soon locked out of the house. Locked out of the house and persecuted for righteousness' sake, they met for a while for worship in their homes; but they soon secured a nice corner lot and erected a good, neat house,

SALTS IF BACKACHY AND KIDNEYS HURT

Drink Lots of Water and Stop Eat-ing Meat for a While if Your Bladder Troubles You.

When you wake up with backache and dull misery in the kidney region, it generally means you have been eating too much meat, says a well-known authority. Meat forms uric acid, which overworks the kidneys in their effort to filter it from the blood, and they become sort of paralyzed and loggy. When your kidneys get slug-gish and clog, you must relieve them -like you relieve your bowels-re-moving all the body's urinous waste, else you have backache, sick headache, dizzy spells: dizzy spells; your stomach sours, tongue is coated, and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine is cloudy, full of sediment, channels often get sore, water scalds, and you are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night.

Either consult a good, reliable physician at once or get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days, and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralize acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is a life saver for regular meat eaters. It is inexpensive, cannot injure, and makes a delightful, effervescent lithia-water drink.

which is nicely seated and well lighted with electric lights. The building of this house was not an act of malice. but a great sacrifice made by these brethren to erect a house of worship where the New Testament could be taught to the exclusion of every invention of man and God be honored and worshiped by disciples who are willing to take the teaching of the inspired apostles of Christ as their rule of faith and practice. This church now has only eight male members, one of their very best having departed from this life and gone to the reward of his labor. They are poor in this world's goods, but rich in faith and good works. By their liberal contribution and what little help they have received, their incumbrance, which was fifteen hundred dollars, has been reduced to six hundred and sixty-six dollars. They have on hand two hundred and ten dollars. Now, just a little over four hundred dollars will take this burden off of these brethren and free this church of debt, and then they can locate a sound, gospel preacher in this needy field and spread the gospel, which is God's power to save.

Brother, don't turn this call away empty-handed. These brethren deserve this help; they are tried and true; and you may rest assured that every penny you trust to their care will be used to the glory of God. Will not some church or individual who has a Liberty bond give it to this cause? The bank that holds their note will take the bond at face value as payment on the note. Brother, read this appeal to your congregation next Sunday and see how much you can secure for this just cause. Send all contributions to E. S. Kerr, Brookport, Ill., who will report all money or bonds received through the Gospel Advocate.

Edifying as the Need May Be

Understanding of the Times.

In enumerating the tribes which had helped David to become king of Israel, the writer of the First Book of Chronicles mentions the children of Issachar, and, as their distinguishing trait, he tells us that they were "men that had understanding of the times." This was undoubtedly set down to their credit. It meant that their coöperation with David in securing the kingdom was not ill-timed, but intelligent, pertinent, and effective. Their zeal was not misdirected, but was according to knowledge and in keeping with existing circumstances.

The principle of having respect for the time in which we live and the circumstances with which we are surrounded is frequently recognized and emphasized in the Bible. Solomon, in the book of Ecclesiastes, devotes half a chapter to the timeliness of things, in which he declares there is "a time for every purpose under heaven." (Eccles 3: 1.) Haggai, who prophesied in Judah when the temple was in ruins, rebuked the people with a fiery question: "Is it a time for you yourselves to dwell in your celled houses, while this house [of God] lieth waste." (Hag. 1: 4.) When Esther hesitated to go into the presence of the king and intercede for her people, Mordecal sent her a reassuring message that has become proverbial: "Who knoweth whether thou art not come to the kingdom for such a time as this?" (Esth. 4: 14.)

Jesus Christ charged that many living in his generation failed to discern the times and, in consequence, failed to embrace the opportunities which they offered. He upbraided "the cities wherein most of his mighty works were done, because they repented not." (Matt. 11: 20.) He pronounced woes upon Chorazin, Bethsaida, and Capernaum because they were unconcerned and indifferent to his presence. He wept bitterly over Jerusalem because she knew not the day of her visitation and went blindly on to her ruin.

When the apostle Paul saw certain Christians of his day lapsing into a state of spiritual coma, he sent them a stirring exhortation: "And this, knowing the season, that already it is time for you to awake out of sleep: for new is salvation nearer to us than when we first believed. The night is far spent, and the day is at hand: let us therefore cast off the works of darkness, and let us put on the armor of light." (Rom. 13: 11, 12.)

These passages, selected both from the Old Testament and from the New Testament, emphasize the important truth that a knowledge of the times in which we live is necessary for an intelligent discharge of one's duty.

Apostles of Reconstruction.

Much is being said and written just now about the effects of the war upon the churches in the denominational sense. Reconstruction is a favorite theme among religious writers. There are those who tell us that the boys are coming back with radically different ideas about God and Christ and the church and that preachers must respond to their new-born spiritual cravings by giving them a reconstructed religion. Some are freely predicting that the churches will be superseded by the Y. M. C. A. and the Red Cross. Such drastic changes may threaten the denominational world, but they do not threaten the existence and stability of the church of the living God. Granting that war is all that Sherman said it was, Jesus declares that the gates of hell shall not prevail against the church.

Bishon William F. McDowell, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, stated in a recent article that "the war has distinctly destroyed a whole lot of sermons that were supposed to be alive before the war began. Some of them have been torpedoed, some have been struck by submarines, some have been just burned up in the general conflagration." He might have added that some were dry enough to burn. There may be good and sufficient reasons why the denominational preachers should forget and lay aside their old-time sermons, but there is absolutely no reason why the preacher who has been earnestly declaring "the faith which was once for all delivered unto the saints" should change his message, except to make it more earnest than ever before. It is just as true in times of war as in times of peace, or you may say it is just as true in times of peace as in times of war, that the gospel is "the power of God unto salvation;" and the man who changes God's message for any purpose at any time does it at his peril.

But while the conditions of the great war did not warrant any departure from the beaten paths of apostolic teaching, they did open avenues of illustration and of practical observation that we have never before enjoyed. In letters of blood and fire against the great background of human suffering, some of the finest lessons in the Bible have been brought to the fore, so that there is the opportunity now to present some of its oldest and most precious truths in a strikingly new dress. Without assuming the rôle of prophet and telling what the effects of the war upon the church shall be, it is my purpose to simply point out what the effects of the war should be if we take advantage of this opportunity. As a matter of fact, no one can ignore the lessons of the war. It has its haunting memories that shall linger with us so long as we live. They will mold us for good or for evil.

The Lesson of Conservation.

When we think of this war, we will think of conservation. Within the scope of that word will be embodied a program of thrift, frugality, and economy such as the world had never known before. Really, some of us had never appreciated the worth of a lump of sugar or a piece of bread or meat until these commodities had been taken out of our mouths by the establishment of meatless, wheatless, and, we might almost add, eatless days. Things are better now, of course. As the young bride wrete: "Dear Joe: Come home. Forgive and forget. I have destroyed the book of war recipes," But Joe will not soon forget the things he was deprived of and the awful taste of the substitutes.

It is equally true that the man who had suffered himself to become an habitual loafer had it put up to him in the strongest language possible that he must "either work or fight." There can be no denial of the fact that the people of this country have been made to see the superlative importance of being both industrious and thrifty. "Do your bit" was the most popular slogan of the war. Does the church need that lesson? The answer is contained in another question: Do the Scriptures teach the church this lesson? The Scriptures teach us that to work is both Godlike and Christlike. Jesus said to the Judeans: "My Father worketh even until now, and I work." And to the wondering disciples, surprised to find the man they had left faint and weary apparently refreshed, he said: "My meat is to do the will of him that sent me, and to accomplish his work."

There can be no doubt that thrift is a New Testament virtue. Idleness, waste, extravagance, slipshod methodsthese are all contrary to the spirit of the gospel. Paul wrote: "But it any provideth not for his own, and specially his own household, he hath denied the faith, and is worse than an unbeliever." (1 Tim. 5: 8.) To be a burden upon others when one is able to take care of himself and could, if he wished, be a helper of others is not Christian, but distinctly antichristian. Every one can well afford to act upon the noble resolution once made by Washington Gladden: "One thing I am resolved upon: I will not be a sponge or a parasite. I will give an honest equivalent for what I get. I want no man's money for which I have not rendered a full return. . . . No man, no body of men, shall ever be made poorer by their dealings with me. If I can give a little more than I get every time, in that shall be my happiness. The great commonwealth of human society shall not be the loser through me. I will take good care to put into the common fund more than I take out."

Next week we shall write of other lessons emphasized by the great war.

To know how to say what other people only think is what makes men poets and sages; and to dare to say what others only dare to think makes men either martyrs or reformers, or both.—Mrs. Charles.

Handling Sharp-Edged Tools. No. 2.

BY F. W. SMITH.

I give this week the remaining part of the editorial under consideration, and the reader will note that it begins with a continuation of the kingdom question:

4. God's kingdom in manifestation. Rev. 11: 15. How manifested—

(1) Christ will appear. [Col. 3: 4]

- (2) His saints will be revealed. [Rom. 8: 18-24.] (3) Opposition will be overturned. [Rev. 19: 11-
- 20: 6.]
 (4) Fullness of the seasons will be accomplished.
- (4) Fullness of the seasons will be accomplished. [Acts 3: 20, 21; Eph. 3: 10.]

PRACTICAL SUGGESTIONS.

1. We are called upon to receive the word of the king-dom.

2. To become sons of the kingdom.

- 3. To realize its inward power. Rom. 14: 16.
- 4. To prepare for its manifestation. Luke 19: 11-27. 5. To hasten its approach. 2 Pet. 3. (J. B. Rotherham.)

If God's kingdom has not been in "manifestation" on this earth since the memorable day of Pentecost, then a great deal of the New Testament is entirely meaningless. Rev. 11: 15—"And the seventh angel sounded; and there followed great voices in heaven, and they said, The kingdom of the world is become the kingdom of our Lord, and of his Christ; and he shall reign forever and ever"—is referred to as proof of the "manifestation" of a coming kingdom. But the language is present tense. The writer says, "The kingdom of this world is become," etc. But however, this may be, the language refers to "the kingdom of our Lord, and of his Christ," and not to the kingdom of Israel with a literal throne in Jerusalem.

The author proceeds to inform us "how" the kingdom will be "manifested"-viz.: "(1) Christ will appear." And how does he prove a future kingdom to be manifested? Thus: "When Christ, who is our life, shall be manifested, then shall ye also with him be manifested in glory." (Col. 3: 4.) How fruitful are the imaginations of some people, and how flexible and pliable do the Scriptures become in their hands when trying to sustain some pet theory. There is not the slightest reference to a kingdom in the passage he refers to, but it has In it the word "manifested," and that seemed to suffice. The passage simply speaks of the final coming of Christ and the manifestation of his saints with him in glory-not the glory of a kingdom born in rebellion to God, repudiated and destroyed by the Lord, but the glory of the eternal world. "(2) His saints will be revealed. [Rom. 8: 18-24.]" The whole context here shows that the apostle is referfing to the saints entering into eternal life. "(3) Opposition will be overturned. [Rev. 19: 11-20: 6.]" Just what these passages have to do with a kingdom yet to be set up on this earth is exceedingly difficult to fathom. "(4) Fullness of the seasons will be accomplished. [Acts 3: 20, 21: Eph. 3: 10.]" The passage in Acts 3: 20, 21, speaking of Christ, says: "Whom the heaven must receive until the times of restoration of all things, whereof God spoke by the mouth of his holy prophets that have been from of old." The theory of the coming-kingdom folk is that God spoke by the mouth of prophets that Christ would restore the kingdom of Israel, sit on David's literal throne in a body of "flesh and bones," and rule in literal Jerusalem with a literal rod of iron. Hence, such a kingdom with such a king are among the "restoration of all things" spoken of in Acts 3: 21. It would be in order first for these religious teachers to give clear and unmistakable evidence that God ever spoke such a thing by the mouth or pen of any prophet, priest, or king. The words "all things," in Acts 3; 21, must be "qualified," and most certainly "limited." to a certain class of things. To say unqualifiedly that God will "restore" all things spoken by the prophets would prevent the destruction of many things of which they prophesied. The passage, then, must be limited to those things which are to be "restored" without confusing it with simply the "fulfillment" of prophetic utterances. To "restore" means to bring back to an original state or condition, and this was the work for which Christ was sent into this world. The very idea of the restoration of a kingdom born in rebellion to God and only tolerated by him for a time and then destroyed is the most ridiculous thing ever suggested by a teacher of religion. No greater perversion of God's word was ever seen than the effort to force from Acts 3: 21 and Eph. 3: 10 support for such a doctrine. "PRACTICAL SUGGESTIONS."

Under this head is drawn the following: "(1) We are called upon to receive the word of the kingdom. (2) To become sons of the kingdom. (3) To realize its inward power. (Rom. 14: 16.)" Thus far no objections can be made to these suggestions, but in his next he gives us a genuine puzzle-viz.: "(4) To prepare for its manifestation. (Luke 19: 11-27.)" If we can now receive the word of the kingdom, and become sons of the kingdom, why, then, "prepare" for its "manifestation?" Surely, if we do what he urges, there will be a considerable manifestation of the kingdom. His fifth suggestion is still more puzzling-viz.: "(5) To hasten its approach. (2 Pet. 3.)" How could it be possible for one to do the things in his first, second, and third suggestions without the kingdom being present? All of this contradictory confusion from the pen of J. B. Rotherham is most heartily indorsed as the truth of God by the editor as follows:

(The Scripture quotations in square brackets are added by the editor.)

It seems from the foregoing that the alleged heretics and "speculators" have not just sprung up of late, but have taught manfully on such subjects as the above and that acceptable to the church, before some of us were born; for the sermon outline reproduced above is taken from the "Polymathist," a book of suggestive sermon outlines, designed principally for the benefit of, and dedicated to, "all young ministers who are faithfully endeavoring to preach Christ, and him crucified," by the compiler, N. E. Cory, It is a standard work, and enjoys until yet a April, 1876. wide circulation. It is sold freely through the offices of our various papers, by the Gospel Advocate, among oth-Great names grace the list of contributors, and it seems the sturdy student who contributed this outline on the kingdom of God was not afraid of being called before any Sanhedrin on heresy charges, or being stigmatized as a teacher of speculative and divisive doctrines; nor was the compiler nor the publisher of the "Polymathist" afraid of leading young ministers astray by giving them such an outline to work with. And it could hardly have been de-nounced as a "revamp of Russellism," for Russell had not been heard of in that day. Having by accident seen this sermon outline on page 256 of the "Polymathist," I was gratified to see what I consider the plain scripture teaching on the kingdom which has been so bitterly denounced, there set forth. Strange how things work around in the course of time!

I, too, am constrained to say: "Strange how things work around in the course of time!" It is exceedingly strange to note how a man voluntarily admitted that when he first read Russell's teaching he was "nearly swept off of his feet and thought he would have to go with him," and then, when opposed in his teaching of the false doctrine, cries out, "Persecution!" I, for one, have heard enough of the charge of a "Sanhedrin," and do here and now brand this charge as absolutely and unqualifiedly false in every particular. When a man's seniors in years and in the kingdom and service of Jesus Christ ask for a private conference, and in the spirit of the Master and the interest of his cause plead with that man to desist from teaching his speculations about unfulfilled prophecy to the disturbance and division of the churches, they are doing their Christian duty. For a man to rebel against such efforts upon the part of such men is to show disrespect for the word of God and the manifestation of a colossal egotism.

The statement that the Gospel Advocate offers for sale the book entitled "Polymathist" is not true, and neither does the Gospel Advocate offer any other book for sale. It is not in the book business. The McQuiddy Printing Company sells books.

Paul's Ambitions. No. 1.

BY JOHN STRAITON.

The great Cardinal Wolsey, in his last days, said to his friend and follower, Cromwell: "I charge thee, fling away ambition; by that sin fell the angels." But ambition is not always a sin. There is a noble and worthy ambition, as well as an ignoble and unworthy one. The man or woman who is without ambition will not go far or do much in this world or the next. "Ambition is the powerful source of good or ill," and it is for us who are Christians to select worthy ends as the object of our aspirations. "So high a hope that even ambition cannot pierce a wink beyond." The apostle Paul is universally conceded to be the greatest hero of the cross that has ever lived. If we can learn what were his ambitions and seek to emulate them, we will have chosen worthy objects to pursue.

It is true that the word "ambition" is not found in our common English version of the New Testament, but the idea is there; and when we turn to the Greek text or to that splendid translation, the American Standard Version, which every Christian should use, we find the word itself. "Philotimeomai"—to be ambitious—is found in Rom. 15: 20; 2 Cor. 5: 9; 1 Thess. 4: 11; and is, in the Common Version, translated differently each time—(1) "I have strived," (2) "we labor," (3) "ye study."

Taking the last one first, and it is really the first that Paul wrote, we have this text: "That ye be ambitious to be quiet, and to do your own business, and to work with your hands, even as we charged you; that ye may walk becomingly toward them that are without, and may have need of nothing." (1 Thess. 4: 11, 12.)

Oftentimes, when we are expecting something unusual and grand, we receive the usual and commonplace, and are as much disappointed as the rich young ruler was when he was told to keep the commandments. The ambition which Paul places before the Thessalonian brethren seems very ordinary, but a little reflection will show that the ends almed at are worthy and essential to all Christians.

- (1) "To be quiet." The disciples at Thessalonica had become filled with unrest and fanatical excitement by a misunderstanding of the teaching about the Lord's return. They expected the second coming in their own lifetime, at any moment, and had ceased to work, which produced much idleness, turmoil, and poverty. Such excesses and notoriety are inconsistent with the Christian life, and so Paul exhorts them to be ambitious to be quiet.
- (2) "To do your own business." Idleness has a tendency to lead men to be meddlers in other men's matters, which is wrong and is forbidden to Christians. (1 Pet. 4: 5.) Nothing is more displeasing than a busybody who is continually interfering in things which do not concern him. Such conduct brings disgrace on the Christian name and hinders the advance of the gospel. Let us be ambitious to mind our own business.
- (3) "And to work with your hands." When man fell, God placed this responsibility upon him. "In toll shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life: in the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground."

(Gen. 3: 17-19.) God's punishment has been man's great blessing. Idleness is the mother of many evils; but work produces contentment, prosperity, and happiness. Let him that stole steal no more: but rather let him labor, working with his hands the thing that is good, that he may have whereof to give to him that hath need." (Eph. 4: 28.) When Paul exhorts men to work, he is not asking them to do what he did not do himself. When at Corinth, he abode with Aquila, because they were of the same trade; "and they wrought; for by their trade they were tentmakers." (Acts 18: 2, 3.) His glory was that neither did he eat bread for naught at any man's hands, but in labor and travail, working day and night, that he might not burden any of his converts. Not that he did not have the right to live of the gospel, but he decided to make himself an example unto them, that they should imitate him. (2 Thess. 3: 8, 9.)

Recently the government has given orders that men must work or fight. But Paul was before it with an even better law—work or starve. "This we commanded you, If any man will not work, neither let him eat." (2 Thess. 3: 10.) Prince or peasant, millionaire or hobo, that is the law, Let us be ambitious to work.

- (4) The purpose of these three things is twofold—as it affects others and as it affects ourselves. The first end is that we may walk becomingly toward them that are without. We are judged by our friends and neighbors more by our practice than by our profession. We should, therefore, let our lives corroborate what our lips make known. If by our words we confess Christ, but by our works deny him, we are false witnesses for Jesus and hinder the truth. We are of those who hinder or hold back the truth in unrighteousness. (Rom. 1: 18.) Let us be ambitious to walk becomingly toward them that are without.
- (5) The second purpose of the three exhortations is that we may have need of nothing. No person of any true spirit can tolerate the idea of being a burden to others. God has given us the ability to labor that we may supply our own needs and those of our family. If any provideth not for his own, and especially his own household, he has denied the faith and is worse than an unbeliever. (1 Tim. 5: 8.) Let us be ambitious, therefore, that we may have need of nothing.

These five ambitions may seem humble and commonplace, but they are essential parts of the true Christian life. Therefore, we should make them our own.

In the next article Paul's second ambition will be considered.

The Christian's Financial Standard.

BY JOHN R. WEATHERS.

Some thoughts concerning the financial support of the true church are haunting my mind, and now sincerely seek expression in the columns of the Gospel Advocate. I feel that these thoughts are divinely reasonable, springing as they do from faith in the word of God. That word is very sacred to me, for it is the foundation of our hope of salvation. I am not so presumptive as to think that it is possible for me to produce even a ripple in the great ocean of religious thought. But I shall consider myself most happy, O brethren, to be heard on the pressing financial dilemma of the church.

As a religious body, we profess to base all our religious acts upon the written word of God. No act of worship is faithful and divinely acceptable unless it has for its foundation the expressed will of God. The interpretations of that word are numerous and varied, but thankful we should be that man's interpretations cannot nullify the reasonable and imperative thoughts and purposes of God.

After years of earnest and prayerful investigation and thought, I have come to the conclusion that the church is largely controlled in its financial devotion by an erroneous conception of Paul's instruction and appeal as set forth in the first four verses of the sixteenth chapter of his first Corinthian letter. This is Paul's language in that connection: "Now concerning the collection for the saints, as I gave order to the churches [congregations] of Galatia, so also do ye. Upon the first day of the week let each one of you lay by him in store, as he may prosper, that no collections be made when I come. And when I arrive, whomsoever ye shall approve, them will I send with letters to carry your bounty unto Jerusalem: and if it be meet for me to go also, they shall go with me."

This language shows plainly in every feature that the occasion was local and the "order" was special and urgent to meet a special necessity of a community of saints at Jerusalem. I can see nothing in the language of this quotation to sustain the thought that Paul meant thereby to lay down the general principle for the substantial or financial support of the church of Christ. We know that the followers of Christ in the primitive congregations at Jerusalem were sorely distressed by their persecuting neighbors.

Note that Paul asked for a collection to be taken up for the special purpose of aiding the "saints," just as is frequently done now to meet temporarily real, but uncommon, cases of necessity and distress. This thought is not in our minds as we try to meet our financial obligations each Lord's day in the sanctuary. Paul said, "upon the first day of the week," not each first day of the week. This collecting by the Corinthian congregation and the congregations in Galatia was not to be a regular and stated occurrence, hence the spostle did not order it to be done on each first day of the week. In other words, it was plainly not meant as the method of giving general support of the gospel of Christ.

Paul's request or order on this occasion was for the brethren to lay by in store as they were prospered. But he failed to state what part of their prosperity should be given. Just here is the cause of the practical failure in our church finances. The part of each member's income to be paid into the Lord's treasury is not specified by Paul in this chapter. A member of the church whose net income is one thousand dollars a year may put as much or more of his means into the Lord's treasury than another whose net income is ten thousand dollars a year. Yet neither would violate the letter of the quoted text. Such variety and vacillation result from untutored consciences.

If the citizens of a State were assured by their government that they must pay into the State's treasury as they had been prospered during the past year, they would ask with an incredulous smile for the rate of assessment. If the government should direct them to use their own judgment in the matter, what think you, brethren, of that State's financial affairs? It would soon reach a condition of bankruptcy, distress, and beggary. But no civil government is so unwise.

In a preceding chapter of the same letter (1 Cor. 9: 13, 14) Paul had happily, and, as I believe, divinely, provided for the financial welfare of the church. In discoursing to his brethren on the subject of supporting the gospel, Paul says: "Know ye not that they that minister about sacred things eat of the things of the temple, and they that wait upon the altar have their portion with the altar? Even so did the Lord ordain that they that proclaim the gospel should live of the gospel." Here, in verse 14, we have, as I believe, the divine approval and reannouncement by the Holy Spirit of God's original standard of assessment-the tithe, or tenth part. "Even so" means "in like manner." We know that the religious work of the Mosaic commonwealth was supported by the God-ordained tithe of the substance of the faithful Israelites. Their manner of divinely supporting God's cause was to pay into their treasury one-tenth of their increase. "Even so" (in like manner), says the Holy Spirit, through Paul, "did the Lord ordain that they that proclaim the gospel should live by the gospel."

We know that the tithe was pleasing to God in the patriarchal and Mosaic dispensations, and here we are assured by the Holy Spirit, through Paul, that the Lord hath ordained that the gospel shall be supported in like manner The ceremonial laws of Moses were fulfilled at the cross, but the tithe principle, a moral obligation, far antedating the age of Moses, comes on down to us as necessary and pleasing to God now as it ever was.

We know what the tenth part of our increase placed conscientiously and faithfully into the Lord's treasury would do for the spread of the gospel and the general welfare of God's cause in the world; and again we know that there is no divine reason why a Christian may not pay his tithe to the Lord, for we have no other financial standard.

Brethren, if my appeal is unscriptural in any respect, let me know wherein, that I may be wiser; but if, on the contrary, I am adjudged correct from the divine standpoint, I pray you help me to contend for this important principle of faith and practice. Does the Lord condemn it? If so, where? I am anxious to know, for his cause is languishing for lack of support.

Friendship is the transfiguration of service, the creation of a new motive, redeeming life from its drudgery, and sending the pulse beat of joy into the most trivial task. -Donald Sage Mackay.

Mr. W. A. Gorski, secretary of the Polish Victims' Relief Fund, sends us the following information relative to the needs of his people:

To come into her own, Poland needs food, clothing, medical supplies, and also money, cold cash, to rebuild some of the twenty thousand and five hundred villages and three hundred towns which have been wantonly destroyed. lions of people are still shelterless, hundreds are dying daily from exposure alone.

Herbert C. Hoover's recent statement on Poland was that one-fourth of the Polish people had perished during the German occupation. Of present conditions he said:
"The mortality in cities, particularly among children, is appalling for lack of fats, milk, meat, and bread."

The story of Poland's waiting, struggling, pleading for help from the outside world during four and a half long years of destitution and famine can never be fully told. No human catastrophe in the world's history compares with it. Will the civilized world look on in silence now that the curtain of steel has been lifted?

Ships are sailing to Danzig with food for Poland, but the cargoes they carry must be bought and paid for by private relief organizations. Money can reach Poland through official channels. No discrimination as to race or creed is made in its distribution.

In sending contributions, be sure and state whether they are intended for the Armenian and Syrian Fund or the Poland Fund. Make all checks and money orders payable to A. B. Lipscomb, who will forward them to the proper commissioners.

Saintliness always exhibits a likeness to Christ. As the streams of water that gush upward are identical with the spring from which they issue, even so there is a likeness in the saints to Christ, because it is himself, through his Spirit, reproducing himself in the individual forms of character of the separate persons in whom he dwells .-T. T. Carter.

Woman's Influence in the Present Crisis.

That the present is a crisis, not one of us would doubta crisis in home life, a crisis in social life, a crisis in religious life, a crisis for our nation-a crisis in world history. When the time came that our own nation, in honor and humanity, took her place in the great world war, the practical intelligent womanhood of America asked with one voice: "What can we do to help?" The President and his cabinet were besieged with letters from womenindividual women, women's clubs, women's societies and Bible classes-offering their help and asking what there was for women to do. The answer was so simple, so practical, so matter-of-fact, that, like Naaman of old, we could scarcely believe that it was an answer at all. "Go back to your home routine and do your work more carefully than you ever have done. Be economical and thrifty; save the waste; be sparing with meat, with sugar and fats, and use flour substitutes freely, that we may have plenty of substantial food to send to our brave boys and our needy allies."

It seemed such a humdrum, commonplace thing—this daily saving of dribs and scraps, this detailed planning and careful buying, this serving of beans instead of steak, and plain corn bread instead of the old flaky biscuits.

But this was not our government's only task for the women of America. There were garments to be knitted and sewed, comforts and surgical dressings to be made, and comfort bags to be filled for the brave boys flocking by the thousands to our training camps. So the American woman saved not only her food, but her time as well, and yielded her skillful fingers to her country's need.

But equally vital with the work of her hands is woman's personal influence in time of stress and storm. Because of her intense emotional nature, her wealth of love, her deep and persistent feeling, and because she possesses that mysterious gift called "intuition," woman's influence is always felt in times of the world's great crises. Ever since Miriam and her maidens sang, "The Lord hath triumphed gloriously, the horse and his rider hath he cast into the sea;" ever since Barak said to Deborah, "If you go with us to battle, we will go; but if you go not, neither will we venture;" ever since Hannah took the young child Samuel to the house of God and gave him to the old priest Eli: ever since the women of Israel sang, "Saul hath slain his thousands, and David his tens of thousands;" ever since Mary looked into the face of her divine Son and pondered the sayings concerning him in her heart; ever since Priscilla taught the young Apollos the way of the Lord more perfectly, and Eunice and Lois reared the young Timothy in the spirit of the Master-ever since those faroff days, woman's influence has been a mighty factor in the affairs of men and nations.

What influence, then, does our present crisis demand of American womanhood? First of all, an intense, personal loyalty to the worthy cause for which our nation stands. As it has been for the lads to go, so it is for us to give, and sometimes the glving is harder than the going. Yet the American mother, wife, and sweetheart did not lay one straw in the way of that splendid youth with his eyes on the stars and his heart on fire with patriotic zeal!

The influence of the American woman should be felt in a spirit of Christian forbearance toward our enemies. For America, this has been a righteous war. The honor and dignity of her own citizens, the wail of the oppressed, the cause of world democracy and freedom, all bade her bare her arm. She had to fight, and fight bravely, till victory was won. Yet is it not possible to strike, and strike hard, and yet strike in love? Is it not possible to throw all our force against a tyrant foe, because his cause is tyranny, and yet keep from our hearts that malicious hate that tortures childhood and helpless age, that despots womanhood and tears away the shelter of the wounded?

Woman's influence should also be felt in America to-day in inspiring higher standards of moral living. This war has brought us face to face with the terrible waste in young American life through dissipation and sin. Sad is it for the mother whose boy must go to the camp; but sadder far for her whose son sits at her table three times a day, so weakened and diseased by sin that Uncle Sam does not want him. It is time that American women should arouse themselves to save this waste, more precious than grain or gold! It is time that we look beyond our dooryards to the darkened places of our cities and that we exert our every power to drive out the evils that lurk there! It is time that we restore the quiet family altar in our hurried homes, that we find time for that sweet companionship with our own boys and girls that safeguards them before temptations come! Wide and varied and splendid as is woman's work to-day, God never gave her a greater task than the making of a truly Christian home.

But beyond all these things, or rather running through them all like a golden thread, binding them all together and making them possible, is woman's influence for Christ and his world-wide kingdom. Never did the world need the Christ, never did it hunger after his divine presence, as it does to-day. The young lad who left home with its comfort and protecting love behind, who stood in the muddy trenches, surrounded by death in many horrid forms, and faced death each moment for himself-that lad cried out for a love that never fails or is left behind, for a hope that death itself shall leave unshaken. Loved ones who watched him go and then turned back to empty homes, robbed of his cheering presence, reached out wistful hands to the one great Comforter who never yet has failed in times like these. Truly this is no time for the church to be lax in her duty; rather is it a time of mighty need, of glorious opportunity, when hearts are tender and heaven not far away.

This great world war gathered together men from the farthest corners of the earth and lessened by thousands of miles the distance that divides them. Forth from the sunny plains of India came the Hindu to fight in the world's great conflict for democracy and freedom. If he fell in battle, fighting beside our sons and brothers, his wife became an outcast as well as a widow, because heathen superstition has not yet fled away before the light of Christ. Forth from the barren desert of Northern Africa came the Mohammedan to the blood-red battle fields of France. Out of his meager solitary life he gazed in wonder at the Christian civilization of our day. Shall he return to entrench his Mohammedanism behind the customs of the cultured West, or shall the Rose of Sharon yet blossom in his lonely desert home? Women of America, never was the call of the heathen world so urgent, so imperative, so near at hand, as it is to-day.-Mrs. May Griggs Van Voorhis, in World Call.

No virtue can be safe that is not enthusiastic. Unless we have a passion for God, we shall fall into base passions, because a cold virtue, obeying formal rules, is powerless against the mighty and tumultuous forces which seethe in our human hearts.—Susan E. Blow.

MISSIONARY

In the Home of the Lowly.

BY J. M. M'CALEB.

While in the mountains last summer, I visited the hut of two old people who are farmers. The old woman said she was going to Tokyo in January to visit her son, who lived in Hongo ward. Hearing this, I asked her if she knew the hill called "Dangozaka" in Hongo. She said she did. "At the top of that hill," I continued, "a friend of mine, Mr. Iida, has opened a sewing school for girls for the purpose not only of teaching them how to sew, but also to teach the girls of Japan about the great Father. There is one great invisible Spirit who gave us our lives and who is the Father of all men. We are his children, but we have become disobedient children and are unfit to live with him. When young people get married, there is a gobetween (nakadachi) to unite them. Between us and the great Father there is also a go-between, called 'Jesus.' If we renew our hearts and turn away from sin, he leads us back to the Father and introduces us to him." "That is a very thankful thing," she said. "The great Father has a deep heart of love and does not want to cast us away." Again she said: "What a thankful thing!"

But on the wall of their little hut, just up over the rude fireplace, I noticed some paper—once white, but now smoked brown—hanging against the wall. It is called "go hei," and symbolizes the spirits of the ancestors. Before this the old people try to worship—they know not what. It yet remains to be seen whether or not they will ever be able to rise to the lofty conception of the Supreme Being, for neither of them can read.

Living Alone.

BY J. M. M'CALEB.

Living alone has been my lot for the last seven years. It is not the ideal life and I do not recommend it. One should submit to it only when duty makes it necessary. It should be the exception and not the rule. It does not suit me at all and goes much against the grain. Every man is entitled to a home and the companionship of a companion. "It is not good for man to be alone." This is as old as the race and comes with all the force to the present-day man that it had with the first. This earth affords no greater joy nor a more beautiful object lesson than a man and a woman happily united, with all their hopes and aims as one, and to share, in sympathy and love, each other's joys and sorrows.

Yet, in the providence of God, it has fallen to my lot to live much of my time alone, so much so that some may even be so far misled as to think it is my choice. Far from it! Yet I am content with my lot. I make the best of it. There are some compensations. It gives one more time for reflection and self-improvement. I stand in constant need of both. It gives more time for prayer and communion with God. I love to think, and I live much with my own thoughts. Friends sometimes ask: "Don't you get lonely living all alone?" Of course I do, but not so lonely as the situation might seem to indicate. The best remedy for loneliness is to keep busy and to be interested in all you do. With me a week seems scarcely longer than a day, and a year seems but little more than a month, and a whole lifetime seems-O, so very brief! There is not a moment with me that drags. I am constantly urged on by the feeling that I must catch the moments as they fly, lest they swiftly pass me by and some opportunity be forever lost. My meals come too soon, and the time to retire comes before I am ready. I see already that I can accomplish only a fragment, and that I must be hurried on to life's close with but a few incomplete attempts at life's duties. Life is a great and new country across which we hurriedly pass, leaving the greater part of it unexplored and unknown. 0 0 0

BY F. B. SHEPHERD:

Brother Sherriff's daily, October 15, 1918: "Brother Hadfield's birthday. All my colored boys down except Arthur Rhoades, and only May and Florrie up in the girls. Five boys (Kaffirs) working to-day, others sick. Self busy all around disinfecting. I went to town at 11 A.M., and Brother Hadfield went out to help brethren at Intini. Brethren Phillips and Anderson both down. Things bad in town; five hundred cases at Lazeratto; fifteen hundred deaths one day in Capetown (one hundred whites). Sister Mansill and Hazel in bed to-day, but feeling better."

Letter dated December 1, 1918: "Brother Anderson's sudden departure to be with Christ has humanly upset things and plans. 'Man proposes, but God disposes.' Brother and Sister Hadfield and two children left last Wednesday for a three or four months' visit at Capetown, after which, the Lord willing, they will return to their work here in Bulawayo and Northern Rhodesia. Sister Anderson remains with her three children at Intini mis-, sion, seven miles out of Bulawayo, and will help Brother Phillips while Brother and Sister Hadfield are away. Brother Phillips will probably leave for New Zealand in June. Our helper, Sister Mrs. Mansill, purposes leaving for New Zealand about this time next year; so it is high time some one was preparing to take her place. A teacher we must have, if we have to go to the world to get one. Grade 5 is the highest taught here at present. We would like a brother, if one can be secured and supported."

Such is the story of the work and prospects in Rhodesia. Brother Phillips was sent by the New Zealand churches to assist in the field for one year. He left his wife and children at home. Truly, prospects are not bright for the future of this field. The man we have sought diligently for five years is still unfound, and yet no field presents opportunities for immediate results such as this one does. The white settlers are friendly toward us and send their children to school week days and Sundays. We need a man who will reach these parents with the great message, while at the same time sowing the seed of the kingdom in the receptive hearts of the children. Others who have only an alloy are doing things. Why cannot we who have the pure gold? Was Christ not right when he said the children of this world are wiser for their generation than the children of light?

Regular contributors to this work are urged not to slacken in their interest; others who have a love for the truth are earnestly solicited to help. Write me, at 1409-A Jackson, Amarillo, Texas.

Brother McQuiddy: Please explain the fifth chapter of James. Does verse 14 have reference to a person who is sick in sin or physically sick? I am asking this for the benefit of myself and others.

Mrs. E. C. Herren.

The passage is: "Is any among you sick? let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord." (James 5: 14.) It is physical and not spiritual sickness to which the passage refers, and the passage is peculiar to the early church. In the early church some of the elders would in all probability be endowed with the gift of healing. In the early church miraculous gifts were bestowed by the laying on of apostolic hands.

Brother McQuiddy: Please explain 1 Cor. 12: 13, which reads: "For by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body." Also Rom. 6: 5, which is the reference to the above quotation. It seems to me that Rom. 6: 3-5 is the signification of water baptism; but the reading of 1 Cor. 12: 13, with Rom. 6: 5 as reference, is puzzling me. If being buried, planted, and baptized into Christ is significant of water baptism, what does it mean to be baptized by the Spirit? Mind you, I do not say with the Spirit, but by the Spirit. If water baptism baptizes us into Christ, how does the Spirit baptize us into the one body? A Sister.

There is no conflict between 1 Cor. 12: 13 and Rom. 6: 3-5. The passage in Corinthians refers just as much to water baptism as do the passages referred to in Romans. I understand the passage in Corinthians teaches that though people may be diverse in race and conditions, all have been made parts of Christ's body by baptism, and this has been done by the direction or authority of the Holy Spirit. Those who are baptized into Christ are baptized into him by the authority of Christ and of the Spirit, who works in unison with Christ.

Brother McQuiddy: How should the nine congregations in a county confine their efforts in keeping a preacher in the mission work? Please give me a definite, workable plan.

W. CLAUDE HALL.

All Christians are members of the one body of which Christ is the head. Christians are to be one in Christ Jesus and are to be animated and controlled by the same purpose. Genuinely converted men feel called upon to devote their talents, means, and time to the saving of souls. An antimissionary spirit is an antichristian spirit. The man who has not the Spirit of Christ is none of his. Hence, all who are guided and directed by Christ, the head of the church, will be working for the accomplishment of the same end-the saving of the world. Christ, the head of the church, directs Christians to do their work in and through the local congregation. The elders or bishops are the scriptural overseers of the local church. They are to take the oversight; they are to teach and feed the flock, In so far as possible, it is the duty of the elders to see that every member of the body of Christ is effectively and faithfully at work for the salvation of souls. Each of the nine congregations should do its full duty in giving as the Lord has prospered it. Each congregation should easily donate five hundred dollars annually for the preaching of the gospel. The elders of the church should look after raising this amount and should see that it is properly used in the support of the preacher. Each of the nine congregations can do the same. Thus each church would handle its own funds, and each church would be cooperating with the other churches in supporting the preacher in a destitute field. Of course, the Lord's plan will not work unless men work it. If the elders neglect to do their duty, if I men sit down and fold their hands, they should not abuse the Lord's plan because it does not work. If churches would only awake to their solemn responsibilities: if they were to only realize that souls are starving for the bread of life and that the church is the light of the world, and would then devote themselves wholly to the service of the Lord, we would have no difficulty about the plan of cooperation or in getting funds in order to win souls to Christ. As it was in the days of Christ, so it is now: the harvest is ready, but the laborers are few. Christ said unto his disciples: "The harvest indeed is plenteous, but the laborers are few. Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he send forth laborers into his harvest." When Christians really have the spirit of devotion and sacrifice that should characterize the followers of Christ, it will be easy to get sufficient funds to preach the gospel of Christ to those who have it not. A genuine Christianity is needed more than a plan of cooperation, Brother McQuiddy: In the Millennial Harbinger for November, 1832, I find the following language in an article on "Regeneration:" "He cannot show that any person was ever regenerated before the advent of Jesus. No such idea can be found in the Bible (Old Testament). If, then, any of the Old Testament saints ever reached the kingdom of eternal glory, they reached it without regeneration, for there were none regenerated in their day." Please tell me if this is in harmony with the Scriptures.

R. C. McElroy.

The language quoted is from a contributor to the Harbinger, signed "M. C." The contributor did not say that no one was saved who lived under the Old Testament dispensation, but that no one was regenerated, or born again, who lived before Christ, because Christ instituted baptism. The contributor used regeneration and being born again as interchangeable. The querist broke off the quotation at a comma. I quote the remainder of the sentence: "For there were none regenerated in their day nor do the scriptures of the Old Testament say one word about regeneration or being born again, which I suppose to be synonymous." He continues: "Unless men could be born into a kingdom before it was set up, there never was any person regenerated, or born again, before the kingdom of heaven was set up." The contributor is correct when he holds that the word "regeneration" as used in the New Testament means the Christian dispensation. The word occurs only twice in the New Testament, used once by the Lord himself and once by Paul. Its New Testament sense is much more comprehensive than that in which it is now generally used. It is used by Christ as follows: "And Jesus said unto them, Verily I say unto you, that ye who have followed me, in the regeneration when the Son of man shall sit on the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel." (Matt. 19: 28.) Here the passage means about what we mean by the reign of Christ, or the Christian dispensation. The other passage, used by Paul, reads: "He saved us. through the washing of regeneration and renewing of the Holy Spirit." (Tit. 3: 5.) Here the word is used in the same comprehensive sense, and the washing of regeneration means the baptism of the Christian dispensation, which baptism is peculiar to the reign of Christ. If the word "regeneration" is used in the popular and restricted sense of a spiritual change, it would not be correct to say that no one under the Old Testament dispensation had a spiritual change; but Christ and the apostles never used the word "regeneration" to express this change, but expressed it in other words

Q AT HOME AND ABROAD

T. Q. Martin is preaching this week at David Lipscomb College.

Following a Sunday-morning service at the Fanning Orphan School, Eugene Pearson baptized eleven girls.

The lectures at the David Lipscomb College on "The New Testament Church" were largely attended and much enjoyed by all who heard them.

An interesting preachers' meeting is being arranged to be held at Tracy City, Tenn., beginning on March 16. We hope to have the definite program ready for publication in our next issue. All preachers are invited.

From Ben West, Ennis, Texas, February 14: "We had large crowds, spirited services, and one addition here Sunday. Our chorus class is quite interesting on Sunday at 3 P.M. The congregational singing is improving. Foy E. Wallace, Jr., is to begin a meeting with us on April 20."

The time during which the pamphlet, "How to Tithe, and Why," will be sent free, postpaid, to preachers in sufficient numbers to supply one copy to every family represented in their congregations, has been extended until July 1. Send your request to the Layman Company, 143 North Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Ill., and mention the Gospel Advocate.

From W. S. Long, Washington, D. C., February 11: "Fellowship for the work here is reviving again interest is good, and hopes are bright. Birmingham (West End) sent $220. That was better than we have received from any other congregation. I will give another report on March 1. I have changed my address to 1420 Massachusetts Avenue, Southeast."

From George W. Farmer, Cleveland, Tenn., February 10: "Yesterday was cold and snowy here. Attendance rather light on account of so many having not fully recovered from the 'flu.' Classes in the Bible school were small, though good interest was manifested. Preaching and communion services were encouraging and uplifting. Brother Charles Holder preached at Union Grove on Saturday and vesterday."

From H. H. Turner, Altus, Okla., February 3: "I am just home from my first meeting this year. One addition, On this trip I went to the preachers' meeting at Wichita Falls, Texas. Quite a few faithful, good preachers were there. I think the meeting was profitable to us all. One addition there the last night of the meeting. I returned by way of Humphreys and preached to the faithful saints there. May God bless us."

The marriage of Miss Daisy Compton, of this city, to Judge Bancroft Murray, of Chattanooga, Tenn., was one of the important social events last week. The cereinony was performed at the home of the bride's sister, Mrs. J. W. Owen, in Waverly Place, A. B. Lipscomb officiating. Judge Bachman and Mrs. H. M. Jones, of this city, were attendants. Among the distinguished guests were Governor Roberts and the members of the Supreme Court, who came in a body. The bride and groom are at home to their friends in Chattanooga.

From W. Halliday Trice, Fresno, Cal., February 6: "The work with the Nevada Avenue congregation is moving along nicely. The influenza epidemic has about subsided and we are having our services as usual. We had good crowds last Lord's day, and a young lady made the confession and was baptized at the morning service. Yesterday I was called to Dinuba to conduct the funeral of Sister Irene Gillen. Sister Gillen was only sixteen years of age. She had been a Christian about a year and a half, and was a faithful Christian and dutiful daughter. She formerly lived in White County, Tenn., and came to California for her health about two months ago. Her mother came with her and was with her when she passed away, but her father did not arrive till the day after she died. 'Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord.'"

From T. B. Thompson, Avon Park, Fla., February 10: "I began a meeting at Mango, near Tampa, on January 22 and continued it until yesterday. There were no baptisms, and the interest did not get dangerously high at any time, owing to some 'flu' scare and a little prejudice. This is the home of a Brother Northeut, brother of our preacher whose death occurred a short time ago. The mother makes her home with her son near Mango. There are several noble brethren at Mango. Our Brother Hinton, of Avon Park, and his daughter, Amy, are teaching at Mango. These good Mango brethren, like hosts of others, might profit by a little more push. All together, brethren, let us make the kingdom first. There is some good trucking land to be had in that section of country, with a good market close for anything one might raise. Celery can be raised in abundance, and this year the price is excellent. I am to hold meetings at Tampa, Plant City, Seffner, Antioch, and Avon Park, as practically arranged for the present."

From Mrs. D. C. Selby, Linden, Ala., February 10: "There is no church nearer here than Selma, about fiftyone miles. This is a rich farming section, land is cheap, and I would like for some Christians to move in here and help build up the cause of Christ. There are three churches here—Methodist, Baptist, and Presbyterian—and we would like to establish a congregation of disciples. We exchanged some Nashville property on a farm of six hundred and eighty-two acres here and are in debt so much we cannot do much toward a preacher's support; but if any good brother will come and devote his time to preaching the gospel, we will board him free, and he can make his home with us. Or if any brother would buy some good land at forty-five dollars per acre, we would sell some and give a part of the price toward preaching the gospel at this place, for it is badly needed in this country. I hope that some preacher will come and take up the work here.
This place has about one thousand inhabitants or more."

From Harry Hayes, Conservation and Reclamation Company, Q. M. C., Barracks C 2, Camp Jackson, Columbia, S. C., February 9: "We wish to let you know that we are still doing our best. To-day we had seven members present for worship. The meeting was a great one, and all the boys were glad to worship 'as it is written' in the New Testament. We are hoping to increase our attendance. We meet for worship in the First Brigade Military School Building at 2 P.M. I was at both the Sunday school at 10 A.M. and the preaching at 11 A.M. to-day at 'Y' 301. There were twenty-five present for Sunday school and seventeen present for preaching I am the Print Bright Sunday school and seventeen present for preaching I am the Print Bright Sunday school and seventeen present for preaching I am the Print Bright Sunday School and Seventeen present for preaching I am the Print Bright Sunday School at 10 A.M. to-day at 'Y' 301. enteen present for preaching. I am sure there were five hundred in barracks who did not go to any religious serv-This should give the people back at home an idea of the task before them. Picture nights (Tuesday and Friday) are always given a full house-I suppose about six hundred. Stunt nights (Monday and Saturday) are always attended well. I suppose this accounts for it all, for the boys have begun to think that Wednesday and Sunday nights should be stunt nights, too. Three of the most prominent sins among the boys are (1) gambling, (2) profanity, and (3) lust. As to the first, you can see it every day. As to the second, you can hear it nearly all the time. Concerning the third, most of their virtue seems that I have made in living the to be gone. The success that I have made in living the Christian life since I have been here is due to my daily study of the Bible. I have read its pages every day since I came to camp (nearly ten months). It is very easy to do nothing for humanity, but it takes courage to be a Christian.

From F. P. Fonner, Buffalo, W. Va., February 4; "Our meetings are doing well here now, although the 'flu' is hindering us in some places yet. Last Lord's day our living room was full to overflowing, and some returned to duty who had become careless during the 'flu' epidemic. There was great rejoicing among us, and we give God the There is not a greater mission field within the limits of the United States than the Great Kanawha Valley with its many cities, towns, and villages. This includes Charleston, the capital of the State, where our beloved brother, Ira C. Moore, has been working for some time. Buffalo is a point of strategic value in evangelizing the country around—that is, if we had a house of worship in a central location. Last fall, before the 'flu' epidemic struck us so hard. I spoke of this matter once or twice through the Gospel Advocate; but the 'flu' stopped us. I have cash in bank to the amount of one hundred and seventy dollars: in addition, I have some unpaid pledges with numerous other promises. But we cannot build a house fumerous other promises. But we cannot build a house of worship on mere promises. We must have sufficient cash in hand to pay for the lumber. With this secured, we can build the house, as we have carpenters among us. So I request congregations and individuals to make a special contribution to our building fund now or soon. I think that one thousand dollars would pay for the lumber. Let this special contribution be made not later than the first Lord's day in March, or you might set apart that day for this purpose. Please make checks for this fund payable to F. P. Fonner, treasurer. Always address me at Buffalo, W. Va."

Unruly Church Members.

BY J. C. M'Q.

S. S. Lappin has been considering this subject through the columns of the Christian Standard. Recently he had an essay on this subject in that paper, which elicited the following communication from an honored minister:

My Dear Brother Lappin: That was a great article of yours, in last week's Standard, on "Demitted Church Members." However, it is not broad enough to include another class of church members that are more numerous than many would suppose—men who have no claim to decency, yet who want to have a leading part in church work as officials, and will cause trouble if the preacher or any one else interferes. What would you call this sort of an animal, and how should he be handled?

Please give the form of letter of dismissal of this kind of church member. Could anything be done if the congregation were disposed to defend him? Write another article and tell us, Brother Lappin replies: "Such a situation could not be met with a demit, nor with a permit, nor with any other kind of a mit. It would have to be dealt with barehanded." He then proceeds to give some other good suggestions as to the course of action that should be adopted by the church.

I would respectfully suggest that the question from the honored minister indicates that the Bible warrants different ways of withdrawing fellowship from church members. I have never seen anything in the Bible that makes any distinction between the withdrawal from the man who takes a leading part in the church work and withdrawal from one who does not take a leading part. The Bible is no respecter of persons on this subject. Evangelists, preachers, elders, and all who walk disorderly should be treated alike. From all such the church is commanded to withdraw fellowship. It is true that we are not to receive an accusation against an elder, except in the mouth of two or three witnesses. Evidently this is because the elder holds a very responsible position and is liable to have false charges made against him. In order that the facts may be proven before any action is taken against any elder, more witnesses than one are demanded.

It sometimes occurs that a preacher or an evangelist is guilty of conduct that is unbecoming in a Christian. Simply because he is a preacher he is no exception, but should be withdrawn from just as any other disorderly walking member. It is true that when a church exercises discipline through its elders, or bishops, such preachers are ready to turn against the church and sometimes create a division in it. Of course, when this is so, there is something radically wrong. The evangelist or preacher is clearly a bad man or the church has no scriptural warrant for its procedure. In such case, it is to be presumed that the elders are right and have not acted hastily, unless there is very conclusive evidence to the contrary. The preachers who disturb the church by false doctrine or immoral living are guilty before God and should be turned over to Satan for the destruction of the flesh and the salvation of the soul. The preacher who divides a church for personal advantage or maintaining his own opinions, when no doctrine or Christian conduct is involved, is a factionist and should be rejected. Of such the Holy Spirit says: "A factious man after a first and second admonition refuse; knowing that such a one is perverted, and sinneth, being self-condemned." (Tit. 3: 10, 11.) Any preacher who loves his own preference or opinion, or who cares. more for his own personal welfare than he does for the church of God, is a factionist and should be avoided. Of such Paul says: "Now I beseech you, brethren, mark them that are causing the divisions and occasions of stumbling, contrary to the doctrine which ye learned; and turn away from them. For they that are such serve not our Lord Christ, but their own belly; and by their smooth and fair speech they beguile the hearts of the innocent." (Rom. 16: 17, 18.) Learned or illiterate, little or great, elder or deacon, lay member or preacher, all are to be treated alike. Why should a preacher not be subject to the law of God the same as the most humble member of the congregation? "Thou therefore that teachest another, teachest thou not thyself? thou that preachest a man should not steal, dost thou steal? thou that sayest a man should not commit adultery, dost thou commit adultery? thou that abhorrest idols, dost thou rob temples?" (Rom. 2: 21, 22,)

Some one asks: What if the majority of the congregation decides with the disturber even when the elders are right in withdrawing fellowship? This is certainly a bad condition and one to be greatly deplored. In order to prevent such a condition as this, all faithful preachers and members, who love the truth, should give their attention and energy to educating the members of the body of Christ as to the necessity of withdrawing from disorderly walking members, regardless of their position and influence in the congregation. It seems that we had a condition very analogous to this in the church at Corinth. The church had become so corrupt that a man had his father's wife, and yet the church was puffed up and did not mourn, that he that had done this deed might be taken away from among them. Paul commanded the church: "In the name of our Lord Jesus, ye being gathered together, and my spirit, with the power of our Lord Jesus, to deliver such a one unto Satan for the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus." (1 Cor. 5: 4, 5.) This applies to the guilty preacher, evangelist, or leader in the church just the same as it does to the member that attracts the least attention. The church is under obligation to exercise this discipline even if the preacher turn and seek to rend it.

We learn that the church at Corinth withdrew fellowship from the guilty member. The Holy Spirit declares: "Sufficient to such a one is this punishment which was inflicted by the many." (2 Cor. 2: 6.) All who love and practice righteousness will turn away from such vicious characters. Thus, the church that is properly taught and loves the truth as it should will not uphold any member in teaching false doctrine or in living an immoral life. Churches living as the Holy Spirit directs will not keep company with a guilty offender in any way that will countenance his wrongdoing or encourage him to live such a life. They will not associate with him in a way that upholds his wrongdoing, but they will admonish him as a brother and seek to lead him out of his wrongdoing. When men of influence and ability go wrong, the churches should fearlessly inflict on them the punishment required by the law of God. Churches had better suffer for welldoing than for wrongdoing. All regret and deeply deplore the fact that men of power, ability, and influence sometimes go wrong, but this does not justify any member of the body of Christ in upholding any one in the wrong. Their true friends condemn their wrongdoing and seek to lead them out of it.

As we are having cases of this kind to occur throughout the country, it certainly behooves every lover of the Lord Jesus Christ to labor to strengthen the elders of the churches. Doubtless the leadership of the churches is weak. Preachers, evangelists, and teachers have not given scriptural attention to the development and teaching of the elders. God's way will not work itself. It must be worked by men. The elders should be encouraged to exercise their talents in teaching the word of God, in feeding and protecting the flock. These are God-given duties that should not be taken from them.

With the elders of the churches properly functioning, immoral and unfaithful evangelists and preachers would be slow to seek to take advantage of congregations. I would encourage all churches and all Christians to faithfully and fearlessly do their duty when it comes to the exercising of discipline. Again, the Holy Spirit admonishes: "Now we command you, brethren, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye withdraw yourselves from every brother that walketh disorderly, and not after the tradition which they received of us." (2 Thess. 3: 6.)

Bad it is, indeed, that there are churches in different parts of the country that have been divided by factionists. Churches all over the country should uphold the faithful Christians that have stood for the right, that have done right, regardless of the criticism or praise of men.

I have written this article in the hope that others will speak on the subject. I shall rejoice if this article is the beginning of a deep and prayerful effort to correct the evil. I know that preachers cannot correct factionalism while fellowshiping it and never condemning it in a way to lead men out of it. May God give us the wisdom to act wisely, for reformation is necessary and essential Nobility of a Faithful Christian Life.

RY E. G. S.

There is nothing but Christianity that can develop anything to compare with the life of a faithful Christian. I do not mean one that professes to be a Christian, but fails to live out the divine principles of the New Testament. Nothing short of the word of God is able to guide men aright and to exalt them above the frailties of human weakness. "The word of God is quick, and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart." (Heb. 4: 12.) Hence all men should be ever ready to accept all that the word of God says, and to do whatever it says do, without question or doubt. There is no other standard of morality in all the world that can compare with the New Testament.

Some men go so far into sin that it is difficult for them to lay hold of the word of God and change their lives by it. Such as these die in their sins and are eternally lost. When men go so far into sin that they are beyond the reach of the gospel of Christ, there is no chance for them to be saved. The apostle says: "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." When men obey from the heart that form of doctrine given in the New Testament, they are thereby made free from sin and introduced into the church of God, and there is nothing else revealed to man that can accomplish this end. When people rely upon their feelings in what they call "getting religion" before baptism, they are simply following human opinions instead of the word of God and do not thereby enter into the church of God. No acts of human wisdom, no sort of human wisdom, no matter how humbly obeyed, can put one into the church of God. Furthermore, there is no such expression in the New Testament as "getting religion." The whole idea is a delusion, a mere human invention that has no saving power in it. But when people obey the gospel as the three thousand did on the day of Pentecost, then they are following divine directions and have the promise of the remission of sins. What the apostles said was dictated by the Spirit of God and was in no sense the opinions of men. Therefore, we may have full confidence in what these inspired men have said. In the matter of salvation It is exceedingly important that we do just what the inspired writers have said in the New Testament. If we do that, the blessings of the Lord will rest upon us; but if we turn away from what the Lord says and follow what uninspired men say, we will fail to reach heaven and will go down to perdition, in which case it would have been better for us that we had never been born.

Do we ever stop to think of the difference between a faithful and an unfaithful life here, and especially that an unfaithful life will lead us into perdition? No one can be happy in this life knowing that, according to the Bible. he is on the broad road that leads to eternal ruin; but if on the narrow way, he can be sure that eternal life will be the outcome of it. There is much pleasure to be found in that sort of life here on earth. God will not force us to take the strait and narrow way he has laid out for us, but he will take us to an eternal home of bliss if we will faithfully walk in it; and not only that, but he will help us if we will strive to walk in it.

While many Christians suffer persecution in this life, they can find continual consolation in the blessed hope of eternal life; and this hope richly repays us for all the sufferings we have to endure here for Jesus' sake. So let no child of God be discouraged for sufferings he has to endure because he is a Christian, but let him rejoice that he is counted worthy to suffer for Jesus' sake. The Lord will suffer none such to be lost. Even Jesus, who did no sin and in whose life no guile was found, suffered persecution even unto death that sinners might be saved. Christians, therefore, should suffer no distress if they are persecuted for Jesus' sake. Persecution will in no wise hinder their salvation if they continue faithful to the end. Our hope for eternal life is in faithfully doing the Lord's will so long as we live. There is no power under heaven that can drag us down to hell if we serve the Lord faithfully to the end of life; but if we follow the opinions of men instead of the word of God, there is no power that can take us to heaven. Hence it depends on how we live here as to where we shall spend eternity. Let us, therefore, be sure that we are living as the New Testament teaches, so that we may have a scriptural hope of spending eternity in heaven with all the righteous. Let us be sure to lay up treasures in heaven.

The Passover and Christ's Burial.

Brother McQuiddy: (1) Did Christ and the apostles eat the passover on the regular day, or the same day that the balance of the Jews ate it? Please note John 18: 28; 19: 14. (2) Also, how could Christ be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth, if he was buried late on Friday?

K. M. BARBOUR.

- (1) Christ and the apostles ate the passover on the same day that the Jews ate it, but probably a few hours earlier. The first day of the feast of unleavened bread did not begin till the day after the passover, the fifteenth day of the month. Lev. 23: 5, 6 reads: "In the first month, on the fourteenth day of the month at even, is Jehovah's passover. And on the fifteenth day of the same month is the feast of unleavened bread unto Jehovah: seven days ye shall eat unleavened bread." (See also Num. 28: 16, 17.) But as the Jews began to eat unleavened bread on the fourteenth day of the month (Ex. 12: 18), this day was often termed the feast of unleavened bread. The evangelists use it in this sense and sometimes call even the paschal day by this name, as is shown by Mark 14: 12: "And on the first day of unleavened bread, when they sacrificed the passover, his disciples say unto him, Where wilt thou that we go and make ready that thou mayest eat the passover?" (See also Luke 22: 7.) I think it probable that Christ kept this passover the beginning of the fourteenth day, the precise time and hour in which the Jews had eaten their first passover in Egypt. This was between the two evenings, about the ninth hour, or three o'clock, the hour in which Jesus Christ, our Passover, was sacrificed for us. John 18: 28 and John 19: 14 strengthen this position.
- (2) There has been much discussion as to the exact day on which Christ was buried. I cannot hope to settle this question to the satisfaction of all, neither can I hope to give a better exposition of it than J. W. McGarvey has given in his "Commentary" on Matthew and Mark; so I insert his comment here in full:

Three days and three nights.—As Jesus was buried late Friday afternoon, and arose before sunrise Sunday morning, he was in the tomb only an hour or two of Friday, all of Saturday, and between eleven and twelve hours of Sunday, counting the day, according to Jewish custom, as beginning with sunset. It was not, then, according to our mode of expression, three days and three nights, but only two nights and a part of three days. We inquire how the statement of the text can be true, and, in order to an intelligible answer, we note the following facts and considerations.

1. The time between his death and his resurrection is expressed in three different forms. Most frequently it is said that he would rise again on the third day. (16: 21; 17: 23, et al.) Once it is said that he would rise after three days (Mark 8: 31); and once, in our text, that he would be in the heart of the earth three days and three nights.

nights,
2. The Jews, in all periods of Bible history, used the expressions after three days and on the third day as equivalents. Thus Moses says that Joseph put his brethren into prison three days; yet in the next sentence he represents him as releasing them on the third day." (Gen. 42:

17, 18.1 When the people petitioned Rehoboam to lighten their burden, he said: "Depart ye for three days, then come again to me." They departed, and "came again the third day, as the king had appointed." (1 Kings 12: 5, When Esther was about to venture into the king's presence, she instructed the Jews in Shushan to fast three days, night and day; yet she went in on the third day. (Esth. 4: 16; 5: 1.) Still more in point, when the Pharisees petitioned Pilate for a guard, they said to him: "This deceiver said while he was yet alive, After three days I will rise again. Command, therefore, that the sepulcher be made sure until the third day." (27: 63, 64.) Now with us, if he were going to rise after three days, it would be necessary to guard the sepulcher until within the fourth day; and so, the fast for Esther should have run into the fourth day, the people should have returned to Rehoboam on the fourth day, and Joseph should have released his brethren on the fourth day. It is the peculiar and inaccurate usage of the Jews which makes the difference; and that the New Testament writers continued this established usage is proved by the fact, that when Matthew and Mark report the same words of Jesus, one of them uses the expression "on the third day," and the other, "after three (Matt. 16: 21; Mark 8: 31.)

3. In reality, after three days, and, after three days and three nights, are equivalent expressions; for if you count, for example, from Friday at sunset, after three days would be after sunset on Monday, the three days being Saturday, Sunday, and Monday. But in this period would be included three nights—viz.: Friday night, Saturday night, and Sunday night. Now it is not always true in the use of words, as it is in mathematics, that things which are equal to the same thing are equal to each other; but seeing that the expression after three days means the same with a Jew as on the third day, and that the expression after three days covers the same length of time as the expression three days and three nights, the last expression would most naturally be used as an equivalent for the first. That it was so used by Jesus is clear from the fact that, in speaking of the same lapse of time, he sometimes says on the third day, and at least once he says, "three days and three nights." The only escape from this conclusion is to suppose that on the occasion of our text he deliberately and without reason contradicted himself in the presence of his But those enemies themselves, as we have seen, understood and employed the usage as he did, and it appears that all parties among the Jews understood these expressions as equivalents. There is no contradiction, then, between this and other passages on the subject, but the appearance of contradiction arises entirely from a peculiar Jewish usage.

It may be well to remark at this point that the above-mentioned facts refute the hypothesis of some, that Jesus was buried on the afternoon of Thursday. If he had been buried on Thursday, and had risen Sunday morning, he would have been in the grave three nights, but he would also have been there parts of four days, and the Jewish expression would have been: he will arise the fourth day, or, after four days. As proof of this, if we count the time from the appearance of the angel to Cornelius (Acts 10) till the arrival of Peter at the house of Cornelius, we find that it is precisely three days, according to our mode of counting; but it includes three nights and parts of four days, and hence Cornelius says to Peter: "Four days ago I was fasting until this hour," etc. (Acts 10: 30.)

Ah, my friend, God wants to use us in the Christian life as fruit bearers for him; it is our only real purpose for living; and he has given to us a matchless power, one which relates us to him and through which he manifests himself to men. Shall we not, then, every one of us, recognize his responsibility for the use of this power and personal influence and dedicate ourselves anew to him? And when we hear him say, "Whom shall I send, and who will go for me?" shall we not rise up gladly and respond: "Here am 1, Lord; send me!"—Edward Bonsall.

If evil is personified in Satan, good is personified in Christ. If the personification of evil is to be conquered, he must be conquered by the personification of goodness. Christ and his cleansing blood, Christ and the grace of his Spirit and his sacraments, Christ and the virtues which he creates in man are more than a match for evil, whether in the devil or in the world, whether in ourselves or in others.—H. P. Liddon.

Skin Troubles,

As well as a general Spring medicine for catarrh, rheumatism, dyspepsia, Hood's Sarsaparilla is of great value to men, women, children. It does its thorough work in these well-defined diseases by cleansing the blood, on the pure, healthy condition of which depend the vigor and tone of the whole system.

Hood's Sarsaparilla is equally successful in the treatment of troubles that are not so well defined—cases of a low or run-down condition or general debility, loss of appetite and that tired feeling, or cases in which we see now very plainly after-effects of the worly and anxiety caused by the world war and the debility following the grip, influenza and fevers. In all such ailments it has accomplished a wonderful amount of good.

Hood's Pills help as a stomachtoning, digestive cathartic.

Worth-While Wealth.

I longed for wealth-to hold it; I longed for might and fame. My youth? I shrugged and sold it To triumph in life's game. I toiled and toiled, unceasing, To win my place; but when I gained the thing I toiled for, I did not want it then!

For then I found life's flowers

All faded by my door; found the springtime showers Less cooling than before; I found the very sunshine

Had lost its gleaming light And that the stars were pallid That lit the world at night.

I longed for wealth-to hold it; I longed for might and fame; But when I could enfold it, I found it just a name; And that the things worth saving Were youth and smiles and flowers, And that the wealth enduring

Was found in golden hours -Margaret E. Sangster.

In Memory of Robert A. Bennett. BY E. A. E.

Robert A. Bennett, son of Col. James D. Bennett and brother to Sister John B. Corley and A. G., Mary, and Martha Bennett, was born near Hartsville, Tenn., on April 3, 1859; spent his life in that community; and died on January 5, 1918. He was married about twenty years ago to Miss Sallie Vance, who survives him.

in early life Brother Bennett came into the church of Christ and in no way ever doubted that the gospel is the power of God unto salvation to every one who believes it. He was properly regarded by neighbors and friends a most kind-hearted, publicspirited man, possessing fine traits of character. He was, for instance, in every way a very generous man-forbearing with the faults and sins of others, forgiving, and helpful to the needy. He had many friends. Such a man always has friends. "A glad heart maketh a cheerful countenance, and "he that is of a cheerful heart hath a continual feast." It is a happy thing to carry cheer and good will about with one. The one who does this lives not in vain. As light comes from the sun, these come from a heart that is in good humor with men and wishes good to all,

Brother Bennett was not without faults; no man is. But his faults were not insincerity, ingratitude, and lack of the milk of human kindness.

Some men's sins are evident, going before unto judgment; and some men also they follow after. In like manner also there are good works that are evident; and such as are otherwise cannot be hid. (1 Tim. 5: 24, 25.)

But Brother Bennett, as we should all be, was ever ready to acknowledge his faults and to confess his sins. The Bible teaches all to do this, with the promise that God will then forgive.

If we confess our sins, he is faithful and righteous to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness. (1 John 1: 9.)

After all, God is our judge, and will in great mercy and justice judge all.

May God comfort always the bereaved wife and sisters and brother, enabling them to rejoice in the hope of the gospel "with joy unspeakable and full of glory."

Make the best of everything, think the best of everybody, hope the best for yourself, and give to all, all love.-Charles Dickens.

Famous Old Recipe for Cough Syrup

Easily and cheaply made at home, but it beats them all for quick results.

occoccoccoccoccocccc

Thousands of housewives have found that they can save two-thirds of the money usually spent for cough preparations, by using this well-known old recipe for making cough syrup at home. It is simple and cheap to make, but it really has no equal for prompt results. It takes right hold of a cough and gives immediate relief, usually stopping an ordinary cough in 24 hours or less.

Get 2½ ounces of Pinex from any druggist, pour it into a pint bottle, and add plain granulated sugar syrup to make a full pint. If you prefer, use clarified molasses, honey, or corn syrup, instead of sugar syrup. Either way, it tastes good, keeps perfectly, and lasts a family a long time.

It's truly astonishing how quickly it acts, penetrating through every air passage of the throat and lungs—loosens and raises the phlegm, soothes and dreaded cough disappear entirely. Nothing better for bronchitis, spasmodic croup, whooping cough or bronchial asthma.

Pinex is a special and highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract, known the world over for its healing effect on the membranes.

Avoid disappointment by asking your druggist for '2½ ounces of Pinex' with full directions and don't accept anything else. Guaranteed to give absolute satisfaction or money promptly refunded. The Pinex Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

A Prospective Debate. BY W. CURTIS PORTER.

I am to meet A. N. Dugger in a tendays' discussion. Elder Dugger is editor of the Bible Advocate, published at Stanberry, Mo. He is also the champion debater among his people. He claims to be a member of the "Church of God," but belongs to one branch of the Seventh-Day Adventists. He is not of the original type, yet he is "a chip of the same block." The date for the debate has not been set, but very likely it will be sometime in August. It will likely be held at Anderson, Mo.

The following propositions will be discussed: (1) "The Scriptures teach that the kingdom of Christ was established on the first Pentecost after the resurrection of Christ." I affirm; he denies. (2) "The Scriptures teach that man is wholly mortal and unconscious between death and the resurrection." He affirms; I deny. (3) "The Scriptures teach that those who die in disobedience to the gospel of Christ will suffer eternal punishment (endless torment)." I affirm; he denies. (4) "The Scriptures teach that the seventh day of the week as a Christian Sabbath is enjoined upon Christians in this age." He affirms; I deny. (5) "The Scriptures teach that Sunday, the first day of the week, is the day of worship enjoined upon Christians in this age." I affirm; he

I expect much good to come from this debate; and in order for as much good as possible to come from it, I wish to have it stenographically reported and printed in book form. This I am not financially able to do, but I believe the brotherhood will come forward with their assistance. There are many who could donate five, ten, fifteen, or even twenty-five dollars to this work. Others could give smaller amounts; and the necessary funds could soon be raised. I have not consulted my opponent about this. It may be that his people would help finance the work; if not, we can do it ourselves.

Now, is there a preacher brother, or, to include more, is there a brother or sister who is a stenographer, that could be secured to do this work? If so, at what price?

I shall be fully prepared to meet my opponent upon every inch of ground. Shall we have the debate printed? You can answer. I hope to receive many letters in response to this. What do you say, brethren? My address is Monette, Ark.

Where Most Sickness Begins and Ends

BY FRANKLIN DUANE, M. D.

It can be said broadly that most human ills begin in the stomach and end in the stomach. Good digestion means good health, and poor digestion means bad health. The minute your stomach fails to properly dispose of the food you eat, troubles begin to crop out in various forms. Indigestion and dyspepsia are the commonest forms, but thin, impure blood, headaches, backaches, pimples, blotches, dizziness, belching, coated tongue, weakness, poor appetite, sleeplessness, coughs, colds and bronchitis are almost as common. There is but one way to have good health, and that is to put and keep your stomach in good order. This is easy to do if you take Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It is a wonderful tonic and blood purifier, and is so safe to take, for it is made of roots and herbs. Dr. Pierce, of Buffalo, N. Y., stands behind this standard medicine, and it is good to know that so distinguished a physician is proud to have his name identified with it. When you take Golden Medical Discovery, you are getting the benefit of the experience of a doctor whose reputation goes all around the earth. Still more, you get a temper-There is but one way to have good health, the earth. Still more, you get a temperance medicine that contains not a drop of alcohol or narcotic of any kind. Long ago Dr. Pierce combined certain valuable vegetable ingredients—without the use of alcohol—so that these remedies always have been strictly temperance medicines.

If piles are torturing you, get and use Pierce's Anodyne Pile Ointment. The quick relief it gives is hard to believe until you try it. If constipated, Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets should be taken while using Anodyne Pile Ointment. Few indeed are the cases which these splendid remedies will not relieve and usually over-come. They are so good that nearly every drug store has them for sale.

A Preachers' Meeting at Tracy City.

We are arranging for a preachers' meeting at Tracy City, Grundy County, Tenn., to begin on the third Lord's day in March and to continue one week, closing on the fourth Lord's-day evening. Tracy City is located on top of the Cumberland Mountain, about twenty-five miles from main-line railroad, leaving the main line at Cowan, between Nashville and Chattanooga. Preaching brethren from all over the State are invited to attend. We hope to accomplish much good in this meeting, and hope to have a large attendance. This will be the opportune time for those who have never seen the mountains. The brethren have arranged to take care of all who attend. They will also arrange to show them the attractive scenes on the mountain, as many of them have cars. The congregation at Tracy City has over one hundred members. This is the home of our lamented brother, J. D. Northcut, who passed away recently. The loyal Christian brethren will be the only ones invited to take part in the discussions. The meeting will be free to all who wish to attend, and will be furnished with a good song leader. All singing evangelists are invited to attend and take part in the song service. The subjects to be discussed, and by whom, will be published later.

R. E. L. Taylor is manager, assisted by Brethren Bailey Brooks, Dr. W. P. Stone, Dr. E. B. Finney, and George Thorogood.

Anderson.

On December 20, 1918, death claimed Sister Bula McMurray Anderson, wife of Brother John W. Anderson. Sister Anderson was born on December 17, 1885. She obeyed the gospel under the teaching of Brother R. P. Meeks about eighteen years ago. She was married in Nashville, Tenn., on November 26, 1917, Brother T. B. Larimore officiating. The writer was called to the home of Brother James T. Anderson, Hurricane Mills, Tenn., to speak to the sorrowing reatives and friends at the burial. Of all the beautiful things that could be said of Sister Bula Anderson, and they are many, the best of all is, she was a Christian. Her life was one of sunshine. She loved home. She leaves a rich legacy of a life beautifully lived. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord." She was buried in the family plat at Hurricane Mills.

A. G. FREED.

Smith.

Gentry S. Smith, Jr., was born at Hall's Hill, Tenn., on January 1, 1886; was "born again," of the water and Spirit, in September, 1900. He obeyed the gospel at Union Chapel, being baptized by Brother W. D. Barr. He was the son of Jarratt L. Smith, the eldest of five children, four of whom yet remain. His mother was Ida May Wright. He was only seven and onehalf years old when she died. He was married, in 1906, to Rosa Lee Pearcy, who died soon after the marriage, leaving a little boy. The second marriage was in South Dakota, where he was living at the time of his death. On December 4, 1918, the shocking news came of his death from influenza followed by typhoid-pneumonia, which lasted but a few days. He leaves a wife and one little boy there. He was good, but not perfect; was so for-giving and was good to wait on the sick. He bore no malice and seemed to love every one. He believed in the church of Christ as the only divine institution to do the Lord's work and affiliated with nothing ecclesiastical, fraternal, or political. He was buried at Sioux Falls. Farewell, darling son, we will meet thee in a loveller home. Will the brethren pray for us to bear our loss? Jarratt L. Smith. our loss?

Neal.

In the death of Sister W. F. Neal the church in Canada has sustained a great loss. Widow of Brother W. F. Neal, who died in Louisville, Ky., in August, 1917, she had been to him at one time the stimulative force and governing influence, "the fruitful vine in the innermost parts of his house," which, like the try on the castle wall depending upon the strong tower for support, yet its frail tendrils intertwine to bind the great stones together. As his colaborer in church work, she was ever active. She was firm in her convictions, immovable where principles she held dear were involved, but withal always thoughtful for the salvation of others and considerate of their weaknesses and limitations. To the writer she was "mother in the gospel"—a mother To the writer she was indeed, faithful and beloved; and if at last he be deemed worthy to greet her in that better land and have some sheaves to lay at the feet of Jesus, it will be largely because her admirable tact, perhaps her greatest attribute, was brought to bear successfully to guide his feet off the treacherous sands of skepticism onto the solid rock of revealed truth. Besides her immediate relatives, she leaves a host of friends, especially at Meaford, Ontario, Canada, who mourn her departure—friends who have enjoyed the blessing of her acquaintance and the help and encouragement her devotion to the cause has induced. We sorrowand God does not deny it to us; but we sorrow not as those that have no hope, for into our sadness there beams a gleam of happy anticipation that we shall at last again blend our voices with hers in praises of Him who "wipes away the tears from off all faces." F. B. SHEPHERD.

Hicks.

Brother T. R. Hicks was born, in Alabama, on August 26, 1861, and died, in Bradentown, Fla., on November 7, 1918, at the age of fifty-seven years. He obeyed the gospel twenty-six years ago, in Montgomery, Ala. Brother Hicks was a noble, self-sacrificing preacher of the plain and simple gospel plan of salvation. He never tired of trying to save souls, and almost al-ways at a financial sacrifice of himself and family. He worked with his hands to support himself and family six days in the week, and on the first day of the week would preach the gospel to a few Christians and friends in some out-of-the-way place in the country. Brother Hicks often became discouraged in his best efforts; but his love for humanity would cause him to grasp the least opportunity to do good, and he would start out with renewed vigor to help a sinner to Christ. He had been with us in Bradentown six years, and our harmony and sweet fellowship has always been such as Christians could admire. He was always ready to feed the flock, visit the sick, and administer to the poor, the sick, and the needy. He was loved by the church as a whole; and if he had any enemies, we never knew it. To know him was to love him. In the home he was a kind and loving hus-band and father, and his greatest desire was that his children live such lives as to be examples to others. Brother Hicks leaves a wife and six children—four boys and two girls all members of the one body. While his body is dead to us, his spirit still lives with us, and we know that he lives with his Lord. D. B. WHITTE.

Shore.

Little Jimmie Shore was born on April 26, 1913, and died on January 12, 1919. She was the youngest child of Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Shore. She had had the influenza, but had got well, as we all thought, and then she was taken with locked bowels. Physicians said an operation was all that could save her life. Her father carried her to Memphis on Saturday morning. She was operated on at 11 A.M. and died on Lord's-day morning about six o'clock. About three minutes before she died she threw her arms around her father's neck, kissed him several times, and said: "Good-by, daddy; good-by, mamma." She leaves a father, mother, three sisters, grandfather and grandmother, several uncles and aunts, besides many close friends, to mourn her death. Jimmie was one of the sweetest children I ever knew. To know her was to love her. She was always good and quiet. We will miss her at the Lord's day service, for she was aways anxious to be with her Sunday-school class and always knew her lesson. Loved ones, weep not for little Jimmie. She is safe in the arms of her Savior, who said: "Suffer the little children, and forbid them not, to come unto me; for of such is the king-dom of heaven." Just think of her as an angel in heaven who is waiting to greet all her loved ones around the eternal throne of God. It is so sad to give her up, as she was bound so closely to her loved ones by the ties of nature. You will miss her, O so much, hut your loss is heaven's gain. She is one more jewel added in heaven. It should make heaven more precious to you. So you can meet your precious one again, if you will only live as God has commanded in his precious word. The funeral services were conducted at the home by Brother Lewis Jones, after which the body was laid to rest in Troy cemetery. L. H.

No Need of Them, Says Brooklyn Man, Who Has Evidently Solved a Big Problem.

According to the testimony of hundreds of people living in the southland and elsewhere, J. R. Simon of 1539 Broadway, Brooklyn, N. It appears that Mr. Simon's establishment has become national head-manners for people whose feet require, his establishment has become national head-quarters for people whose feet require his remarkable comfort shoe, known as the EzWear, but obtainable only of the in-ventor. Mr. Simon's new catalogue shows several hundred shoes that combine com-fort with style at amazingly low prices and is now ready for free distribution.

CAPUDINE

The Liquid Remedy for Headaches. A Good Preventive Treatment for INFLUENZA also. Relieves Quickly. Try it. Baptists vs. Campbellites. No. 5. BY M. S. MASON.

Mr. Bandy says his kingdom has the proper subjects. If so, they are subjects under two laws. The law was taken away at Christ's death; but this antedates his death, so they would have to be under two laws, or law and grace, which are antagonistic, (Gal. 5: 4.) If so, they are unsaved, for Christ was imperfect till suffering (Heb. 2: 10), and he did not suffer till in his death. So his subjects must have an imperfect salvation before death. If so, what were they subject to? It has been shown there was no law, no king, and no church organization. What were they subfect to?

Mr. Bandy also says his kingdom has the territory. If so, the Gentiles have no part in it; for the commission of that period only embraced the Jews. (Matt. 10: 5.) If so, the evangelistic forces occupied this territory uncommissioned. It was after his death and resurrection, and not before, when he stated his universal authority and gave his world-wide commission. If so, David in Ps. 2 did not tell the truth, for there the heathen and the uttermost parts of the earth are to be given to Christ after the king is set on the holy hill of Zion. Mr. Bandy has this territory tendered before he becomes King. So in summary Mr. Bandy fails to show the essential elements of a kingdom in his period of establishment and fails to prove his point

Mr. Bandy in the same paragraph now raps at the pedobaptists on the church's not being a continuation of the Jewish theocracy, then adds: "Neither could it have been in a state of preparation, as some teach; for, Jesus not many days after says 'my church." Here, of course, he refers to Matt. 16: 18. This passage completely upsets Mr. Bandy's theory, for here Jesus says, "I will build," showing that his church had not then been built, when, according to Mr. Bandy's contention, it had. If Mr. Bandy says "will build" means to edify or build to an original construction, we simply call attention to the fact that Mr. Thayer teaches us that "will build" may come from "aedificare," which means "to edify," or "oikodomeo," which means "to build from the foundation, or to originally construct." The phrase in Matt. 16: 18 comes from the latter. So this places by Christ's own language the origin of the church in the future, when Mr. Bandy says it had been in existence several months.

But we are not through with Matt. 16: 18. Mr. Bandy could not have introduced a passage more against his theory than this. "Upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of Hades shall not prevail against it." When Jesus died, his soul went into Hades, as shown in Acts 2: 30. Jesus stated before his death that the gates of Hades should not prevail against his building his church-that is, his soul would not be confined there, but would break the bars of the gates and come forth and build his church. If Mr. Bandy's theory be true, the confinement of Jesus' soul in Hades could not have interfered with the building of the church, for it was already built; but inasmuch as its construction was contingent on the release of Jesus from the underworld, we know the church was not built until after that time. Mr. Bandy also adds that Jesus not only claims the church, but immediately clothes It with executive power. To prove this, he quotes Matt. 6: 7; 18: 17. I do not see the application of Matt. 6: 7, and Matt. 18: 17 is only legislation when the church should be formed. God gave commandments to the Israelites regarding the king years before they had a king. (Deut. 17: 14.) Why. then, could not Jesus have legislated for the church before it originated? While Jesus was on this earth his teaching was threefold. (1) He taught the Jews the proper observance of the law; (2) he forgave sins according to his will without obligating himself to forgive on the same terms after his death; (3) he taught the disciples such things as they would need in teaching when the kingdom should be built. This teaching of Matt. 17 belongs to that class.

Mr. Bandy makes some statements in the next paragraph, on page 10, which are purely begging the question and will not be noticed now.

Mr. Bandy now gives us twenty passages of scripture which he would have prove that Jesus established his church, or kingdom, during his personal ministry. He asks us to note them carefully, which we do, and especially to show that they are misapplied. First, Matt. 15: 18. I cannot make an application of Matt. 15: 18, so I suppose he means Matt. 16: 18. Certainly enough has been said about that. Second, Ps. 22: 22 and Heb. 2: 12, which are collated passages. What he means to make of these passages is that Jesus was to "sing in the church." He sang at the Supper. Therefore the church existed at the Supper, or before his death. Now, if we shall read both Ps. 22 and Heb. 2: 12, we shall see that the singing was done after the death of Christ, Note Heb. 2: 9, 10; Ps. 22; 18. Heb. 2; 9, 10 speaks of his death and suffering; Ps. 22: 18 refers to his vesture being raffled, which was at his crucifixion. He also uses Matt. 26: 30 with these passages. Third, John 17: 4. Here he wishes us to know that Jesus had his work all done when he spoke to the disciples the night of the betrayal. Think how this minimizes Christ's death, burial, and resurrection; they are nonessentials!

Careful investigation by physicians among drugglists and patients has revealed the fact that there are thousands of geople taking iron who do not distinguish between organic Iron and metallic iron, and that such persons often fall to obtain the vital energy, strength and endurance which they seek, simply because they have taken the wrong form of iron. Therefore, physicians mentioned below, advise those who feel the need of a strength and blood builder to go to their family doctors and obtain a prescription calling for organic ron—Nuxated Iron—and present this to their druggist so that there may be no question about obtaining the propor article. The widespread publication of the above information has been suggested by Dr. James Francis Sullivan, formerly physician of Bellevne Hospital (Outdoor Dept.), New York, and the Westchester County Hospital; Dr. Ferdinand King, New York Physician and Medical Author and others, so that the public may be informed on this subject and protected from the use of metallic fron under the delusion that it is Nuxated Iron or at least something as good as Nuxated Iron.

United States Judge G. W. Atkinsen, of the Court of Claims, Washington, D. Since our last report we have received the following contributions for the work at Ridgely, Tenn.: From Mrs. C. W. Brevard, Union City, Tenn., $2.50; congregation at Hornbeak, Tenn., $5; John A. Huffstutter, Elbridge, Tenn., $5; Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Foster, Glass, Tenn., $5. The church here is very thankful to the donors, and will say to the brotherhood at large that we are doing business for the Lord. The writer has agreed to be with this congregation on the third Lord's day in each month for this year. In addition to my support and the support of their annual meeting, they have pledged to support one of the French orphans. They are a liberal-hearted little band. Remember, they have four hundred dollars to raise by March to finish paying for their seats. Will you not help them do this? I am still asking all who read this, especially all my personal friends, to send one dollar to S. H. Gore, Ridgely, Tenn. Do this, and you will be a blessing and will be blessed in one act.

Fortunes in Old Confederate Envelopes.

They may be worth a lot of money, Among the old letters of many Southern folks there are thousands of very rare envelopes and stamps. Many have been found and sold for fortunes—some as high as $300; many have brought upward of $50. It sounds "fishy," but it's true. They are valuable because they are rare. They are rare, not because there are only a few, for there are many of them, but simply because most of them are stored away and forgotten in old attics.

Look among your old war letters. You are likely to find a fortune. If you find some old Confederate envelopes or stamps bearing the year 1861 and dated or canceled some time during the spring, summer, or early fall of 1861, send them to Mr. Harold C. Brooks, Marshall, Mich., and he will immediately write you, stating whether they are of value, and, if so, will offer you full value for them. He is a private collector of rare stamps and envelopes and will give you full value for them if they are of value. Send only the complete envelopes and

The advertising manager of the Gospel Advocate has known Mr. Brooks for years, and you may place fullest confidence in his integrity. He will advise you frankly, and is willing to pay the highest prices; for the higher-priced ones are the rarest stamps, and he wishes the rarest ones.

In 1861, just after the war was declared and before the Confederacy had time to make their regular issues of stamps, many local post offices were allowed to make provisional issues. These stamps and envelopes were issued in 1861 by the postmasters of different cities. In marking the envelopes, the canceling stamps of the post office were frequently employed. It is often difficult to determine whether such a mark was used provisionally or merely indicates postage paid at the time the letter was deposited in the post office. Occasionally the same mark was used for both purposes. These stamps are the ones that are valuable. The regular issues of the Confederacy are not rare. Look for the local issues. You can identify them. They are known to have been issued by the following towns:

Aberdeen, Miss.; Albany, Ga.; Athens, Ga.; Atlanta, Ga.; Augusta, Ga.; Autaugaville, Ala.; Baton Rouge, La.; Beaumont, Texas: Bridgeville, Ala.; Charleston, S. C.; Columbia, S. C.; Columbus, Ga.; Danville, Va.; Emory, Va.; Franklin, N. C.; Fredericksburg, Va.; Gallatin, Tenn.; Goliad, Texas; Gonzales, Texas; Greensboro, Ala.; Greenville, Ala.; Greenwood, Va.; Grove Hill, Ala.; Hallettsville, Texas; Helen, Texas; Independence, Texas; Jetersville, Va.; boro, Tenn.; Kingston, Tenn.; Knoxville, Tenn.; Lenoir, N. C.; Lexington, Miss.; Livingston, Ala.; Lynchburg, Va.; Macon, Ga.; Marion, Va.; Memphis, Tenn.; Milledgeville, Ga.; Mobile. Ala.; Montgomery. Ala.; Mount Lebanon, Tenn.; Nashville, New Orleans, La.; New Smyrna, Fla.; Petersburg, Va.; Pittsylvania Courthouse, Va.; Pleasant Shade, Va.; Raleigh, N. C.; Rheatown, Tenn.; Richmond, Texas; Ringgeld, Ga.; Salem, N. C.; Salem, Va.; Sallsbury, N. C.; Selma, Ala; Spartanburg, S. C.; Statesville, N. C.; Tellico Plains, Tenn.; Thomasville, Ga.; Tuscumbia, Ala; Tusca-Ala.; Uniontown, Victoria. loosa. Ala.;

Possibly other towns had provisional local stamp issues, but the above are all that are known to collectors. Should you find any of these rare local issues, send them to Mr. Brooks. He will offer what he regards them as worth to him, and, in case the offer is not satisfactory, will return the envelopes and stamps to the sender. Don't deface nor detach the stamps, but send the complete envelopes. Your search may be a very profitable one for you and a greatly welcomed one for Mr. Brooks.

Most of these were probably what you might call "franked envelopes" instead of adhesive stamps. Still, there are both envelopes and stamps in this class of postage. The probability is that they were issued at the time the war began to take the piace of the Federal issues and before the Confederate Government had time to prepare regular rational stamps.

The first regular issue of the Confederale stamps was late in 1861, so that these issues put out by the various cities were in use from the beginning of the war until late in 1861, and consequently all would bear the postmark date of the year 1861.

UGH! CALOMEL MAKES YOU DEATHLY SICK

Stop using dangerous drug before it salivates you! It's horrible!

You are bilious, sluggish, constipated, and believe you need vile, dangerous calomel to start your liver and clean your bowels.

Here is my guarantee: Ask your druggist for a bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone and take a spoonful to-night. If it does not start your liver and straighten you right up better than calomel and without griping or making you sick, I want you to go back to the store and get your money.

Take calomel to-day, and to-morrow you will feel weak and sick and nauseated. Do not lose a day's work. Take a spoonful of harmless, vegetable Dodson's Liver Tone to-night and wake up feeling great. It is perfectly harmless; so give it to your children any time. It cannot salivate; so let them eat anything afterwards.

The Romantic Story of Southland's Favorite Shoe, EzWear.

Some five years ago, a prominent citizen of South Carolina, visiting New York on important business, chanced to meet the maker of a shoe built on new and unusual lines; an enthusiastic admirer of its most distinctive features, ease and comfort, had suggested the name EzWear; it was premptly adopted. The business man from the South, knowing how welcome such a shoe would be in his part of the country, urged that its remarkable qualities, including not only comfort, but style, durability and economy, be made known there. That this has been effectively done is proven by the enormous demand that has sprung up in the South for EzWear shoes. It is said that its sale there during the last welve months has increased fully three hundred per cent. The distributor, Mr. I. R. Simon, of 1589 Broadway, Brooklyn N. Y., says that all who wish to know about a shoe that combines all worth-while shoe qualities, may have a copy of his money-saving show beek for the asking.

How Shiver Mineral Water Relieves Rheumatism.

According to the standard medical books, rheumatism is not a germ disease, but is the result of imperfect nutrition. The food is either imperfectly digested or imperfectly assimilated. Poisons accumulate, and these irritate and inflame the delicate linings of the joints, the heart, and other organs. To relieve rheumatism, it is, therefore, necessary to stop the formation of these poisons and get rid of those already formed.

The celebrated Shivar Mineral Water acts on the stomach and kidneys. It corrects the digestion and washes out the poisons through the kidneys. This is the opinion of physicians who prescribe it. If you suffer with rheumatism, dyspepsia, indigestion, disease of the kidneys, bladder, or liver, uric-acid poisoning, or any condition due to impure blood, read the following letter, then sign it, inclose the amount, and mail it. Only two out of a hundred on the average report no benefit.

An Urgent Appeal.

BY A. L. NEELY.

For more than two years I have been raising money to secure or pay out the debt on our church at Arakland, Tenn., ten miles west of Columbia. Our house is built and the lot paid for, with deed to same, but the house is not seated with benches yet. We still owe five hundred dollars, and this is due. So we come to the brethren, through the Gospel Advocate, asking help to meet this debt. We are few in number, but meet regularly. Now, our plan is this: Let every brother or sister who reads this send us one dollar or more. It will be very easy to meet this debt this way; and I believe there are five hundred good brethren who will respond at once. All contributions will be announced through the Advocate. Should we receive more money than our debt of five hundred dollars, we can use same for buying seats, as we are now using chairs that belong to Brother Felix Sowell. Send all contributions to A. L. Neely, Route 8, Columbia, Tenn.

Report from Senatobia, Miss.

BY J. P. LOWREY.

Since our last report we have received the following contributions to the building fund: From Harbert Avenue Church, Memphis, Tenn., $15; Sister Brevard, Union City, Tenn., $3; Brother Cook, Arkansas, $25. For these contributions we feel very thankful. We are anxious to see the meetinghouse in Senatobia go on to completion, and enough such contributions as the above will soon put us in position to go on toward perfection. Brother, you want to see this work done in Mississippi; why not have a part in it? It does seem that brethren who have the ability would be willing to respond to an appeal from this field when a preacher has had the courage to make the fight against all manner of opposition without calling for help till the cause is permanently established, and then not for himself, but to build a house in which the church ean worship and grow. Do not think for a moment that the church at Senatobia will not pass every dollar on in the establishment of the cause of Christ in new places in Mississippi. We are making a greater effort in Tate County this year than ever before. Now that the war is over and our boys are returning home, we realize that our responsibilities are greater. Help us to build the church house at Senatobia!

Varying Movements of Leaves.

Different species of trees move their leaves very differently, so that one may sometimes tell by the motion of shadows on the ground, if he be too indolent to look up, under what kind of tree he is sitting. On the tulip tree (which has the finest name that ever tree had, making the very pronouncing of its name almost like the utterance of a strain of music-Liriodendron tulipifera) -on the tulip tree, the aspen, and on all native poplars the leaves have an intense individualism. Each one moves to suit itself. Under the same wind one is trilling up and down, another is whirling, another slowly vibrating right and left, and others still, quieting themselves to sleep, as a mother gently pats her slumbering child; and each one intent upon a motion of its own. Sometimes other trees have single frisky leaves, but usually the oaks, maples, beeches, have community of motion. They are all acting together, or are all alike still.—Henry Ward Beecher.

Recipe for Gray Hair.

Full directions for making and use come in each box of Barbo Compound. It will gradually darken streaked, faded, gray hair, and make it soft and glossy. It will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy, and does not rub off.—Advt.

Renew Your Healt At Nature's Fountain

Without the Expense and Loss of Time Necessary for a Visit to the Spring

THE CRISIS

There comes a time in the life of practically every man and woman when their digestive or eliminative organs, or both, fail to respond to drugs prepared by human skill. In fact drugs seem to do them about a much harm as good for their systems : bel against all drugs. These are the cases which physicians call "stubborn" and "chronic" for the reason that they persist in spite of drug treatment. I do not refer to incurable diseases such as cancer and consumption, but to that larger class of functional disorders which we meet every day, where the organs of digestion and elimination are impaired.

For this class of cases our best physicians and our big city specialists send their wealthy patients to the mineral springs where, in the great majority of cases they are permanently restored or decidedly benefited. But what about the poor man who has not the money or the busy man or woman who cannot spare the time to spend several weeks or possibly months at a health resort? Shall circumstances deny them the restoration to health which Nature has provided? Read my answer in the coupon at the bottom of this page.

I have the utmost confidence in the Shivar Mineral Spring Water for to it I owe my Restoration to Health and probably my Life. It has made me tens of thousands of friends in all parts of America and even in foreign countries, whose faces I have never seen. Yet I count them my friends for the Shivar Spring Water has bound them to me by lasting gratitude,

I ask you to read their letters, a few samples of which I publish below for your benefit, and if you find among them any encouragement as to your own health do not hesitate to accept my offer which has no limits or conditions except those shown on the coupon. If you could read the letters that come to me daily, numbering about ten thousand a year, and the vast majority of them similar to those printed below, you would not wonder that I make this offer displaying my absolute confidence in the restorative powers of Shivar Mineral Water.

INDIGESTION

Savannah, Georgia.

I was suffering with indigestion, stomach and liver disorders and all its train of horrifying phenomens for several months. I had lived on milk, soft eggs, Stredded wheat, a very insufficient diet for an active working man, and, of course, from disease and starvation was in a very low state of nervous vitality and general debility. Tordered ten gallons of your Mineral Water which I used continuously, reordering when necessary and in four months gained twenty-nine pounds, was strong and perfectly well, and have worked practically every day since. It acts as a general renovator of the system. I prescribe it in my practice, and it has in every instance had the desired effects. It is essential to use this water in as large quantities as possible, for its properties are so happly blended and in such proportion that they will not disturb the most delicate system. It is purely Nature's remedy.

I feel it my duty to suffering humanity to make public announcement of the benefits I have derived from Shivar Spring Water. I have been a sufferer for the past twenty-five years from indigestion and dysnepsia. After one week's trial of Shivar Water I commenced to improve, and after drinking it for four weeks I gained fifteen pounds. I feel better and stronger than I have in twenty-five years. I strongly recommend this Water to any one with stomach trouble of any character, and truly believe it will cure nicer of the stomach. I am writing this voluntarily and trust it will fall in the hands of many who are so unfortunate as to be afflicted with indigestion and nervous dyspepsia.

RHEUMATISM

I have tested your Spring Water in several cases of rheumatism, chronic indigestion, kidney and bladder troubles, and in nervous and sick headaches, and find that it has acted nicely in each case, and I believe that if used continuously for a reasonable time will produce a permanent cure. Under such circumstances, I came to Shivar Spring, and began drinking the Water. Upon advice however, the first night I took a laxative; the second night a milder one. Since then I have taken none at all. The effect of the water has been remarkable—its action on my invermost marked, and my health and spirits greatly improved. I am satisfied that the laxative, followed by the Water, was the proper treatment in my case. My condition is now perfect.

Edifying as the Need May Be "Efficiency" Written Large.

Another word that is written large in the annals of the great war is the word "efficiency." There are some business enterprises so great in operations and so far-reaching in results that the very thought of them bewilders the mind of the average man. I stand in awe before the marvelous foresight of the brain that conceived and executed the digging of the Panama Canal; I marvel at the world reach of the Bank of England, the Standard Oil Company, the Bell Telephone, the Marconi System, and a dozen other wonders of modern business and commerce. Modern science is a composite miracle; geology brings me to my knees; astronomy makes me worship. Forget for a moment the horrible side of it; eliminate the picture of its carnage, its devastation, and its death, and think only of its marvelous enterprise, of its gigantic proofs of efficiency, and the great war overwhelms the imagination.

No one ten years ago would have thought it possible for hostile air craft to fly over London and drop bombs upon its helpless people. Not even Alexander Dumas in his wildest flights of fancy could imagine the "Big Bertha" cannon firing her deadly missiles sixty miles into the heart of Paris or a merchant submarine plowing its way underneath the Atlantic to bring mail and merchandise to our shores. But these things have been done, They constitute the most exciting part of the history of the war. And how wonderful this modern equipment when compared with the old in museums where knights in shining armor guard the hall!

But, compared with the task of the church, the execution of the great commission, the task that Jesus Christ committed to eleven humble Galileans, and through them to the church, these things are like specks on the sun. Frankly, we shall lose one of the greatest lessons of the war if we do not let it teach us to become more efficient in doing our Master's will. The reconstruction that we need is not a new gospel or a new church, but the reconstruction of the lives of men and women by teaching them the word, "that the man of God may be complete, furnished completely unto every good work." (2 Tim. 3: 17.)

But what is an efficient church? The church that has an unselfish membership, clean in character and united in spirit, is efficient. The church that honors God and uplifts men by its service is efficient. The church that deliberately aims, thoughtfully plans, and unceasingly labors to win the greatest number of souls to Jesus Christ is efficient. The church that gives its little children and its grown people the things that are best adapted to their happiness through faithful teachers is efficient. The church that inspires its members to live straight and helpful lives in the home, in business, in society, and everywhere else, is efficient. These are the fruits of the Spirit, and they may all be included under the two heads of Winning and Training. Every passage, then, that encourages the church to win a soul and to train a soul for Christ is an "efficiency passage."

Who Is a Slacker?

Within the past two years there is scarcely a word that has been brought before the public eye more frequently than the word "slacker." It has been on the lips of men everywhere and has been featured in the public prints. The leading rôle in one of the most popular plays is "the Slacker." The cartoonists, who find humor even in cruel war, took up the theme most readily. One of the metropolitan dailies carried a "slacker" comic every day. It is not my purpose to discuss this subject in relation to the war further than to repeat one important truth which I tried to emphasize during the war-viz.; no man had the right, nor has he the right now, to dub the consistent Christian who has conscientious scruples against killing his fellow man "a slacker." Certainly every man has a right to obey God, and no government has the right to compel a man to do a wrong thing. Be it said to the credit of our noble President that he did not claim that right. The judge of man's relations to God can, of course, be only the man himself. The State cannot be the judge. The United States has never claimed this prerogative.

One of the unhappiest recollections of the war is found in the fact that some conscientious objectors were greatly misunderstood and some were sorely mistreated. On the other hand, it is fair to state that some who had never been recognized as faithful Christians before the war suddenly developed the symptoms of "conscientious objection." Some months ago a noted bishop wrote an article in which he stated that "the conscientious objector will not die for any of these principles, nor will he suffer one hour of agony, nor endure a pin prick." His statement was not true. At the very time he wrote it more than four thousand such men had been imprisoned in England and thirty had been taken to France, condemned to die. Their sentence was afterwards commuted to ten years' penal servitude. Are there no hours of agony in such experiences? I firmly believe that when a true history of men's hearts is known and read, there shall be found written in the book of God's remembrance the names of some of these men "of whom the world was not worthy."

If Church Slackers Were Rounded Up.

But what an army of culprits would be revealed if the slackers of the church were all rounded up, the tens of thousands who once enlisted to the extent of getting their names on the membership roll, but have disgracefully lain down on the job! If the civil authorities are after such characters, hunting them down everywhere and bringing them to a strict account, what should be the attitude of the church, the army of our Lord, toward the shirker and the slacker who refuses to put on the whole armor of God and fight the good fight of faith, the one who is unwilling to lose his life or even endure hardship for Jesus' sake?

Zephaniah is called "one of the minor prophets," but he certainly gives us a great thought in this: "Fear thou not; O Zion, let not thy hands be slack." This exhortation may apply to every one of the Christian's activitiespreaching the gospel, studying the Bible, praying, ministering to the necessities of saints, relieving the poor. In all things that hath been commanded we must be wide awake, make the most of our opportunities, be our best at all times, on the stretch for better and greater things in the Lord. Solomon said: "He becometh poor that dealeth with a slack hand." That is true of any business. It is especially true of the Lord's business. We get out of the church what we put into it. Other people are hurt by the slacker's ways, but the slacker most of all. The all-seeing eye of the Captain of our salvation is upon him and he shall not escape.

The Three Books.

Ever ere thou goest to thy nightly couch place before thee three books which thou must continually possess. The first is old, worm-eaten, musty, written in the blackest of characters; the second is white and beautiful, with red writing; the third glitters in golden letters. First, thou shalt read the old book-that is to say, contemplate thy past life, which, in common with all mortals, is black in guilt and sorrow. Go in and open the door of conscience, which at the last judgment of Christ shall be displayed before God and the universe. Reflect on the evil of thy ways, how indifferent thou hast been in words, works, wishes, and thoughts; cast down thine eyes with the publican and say: "God, be merciful to me a sinner. O Lord, I have sinned, I have sinned; do thou have mercy upon me." Then shall the Lord drive from thee fear and anguish, and bestow upon thee faith and hope. He will excite within thee the desire to praise him, and will make thee faithful even unto death. Now lay aside the old book and fetch from thy memory the white one. Behold, this is the spotless life of Christ, typical of his pure soul, and written in red, in remembrance of his crown of thorns and bleeding wounds. These are the red letters which witness to us his undying love. Gaze upon them in sympathy, and bless him that he has opened to thee the gates of heaven and prepared for thee a place therein. Lastly, raise thine eyes to the heights, and read there the golden writing of the third book-that is, contemplate the glories of eternal life, compared to which all earthly brightness disappears, as torchlight in the blaze of the mid day sun.-John Ruysbrock.

Reflections at the Bedside of a Dying Brother.

BY G. C. BREWER.

How large a part death plays in all life's considerations! If we should take the subject of death out of our hymn books, the sweetest melodies that ever blessed the earth would be destroyed. It was the tragic death of his loved ones that inspired H. G. Spafford to give the world that soul-exultant song, "It is Well with My Soul"—that song of hopeful joy, the cry of a chastened soul thrown helpless on the Savior, which found his grace sufficient. It was the sweet hope that when

"The night is gone, And with the morn those angel faces smile Which I have loved long since and lost a while," that led John Henry Newman to bless poor groping humanity with that classic in hymnology, the sentiment of which should be in the heart of every man constantly, known as "Lead, Kindly Light." And no hymn writer has ever voiced the prayer of a sad and lonely soul more aptly than did Mrs. Smith when she wrote "Tarry with Me, O My Savior;" and she was influenced, no doubt, by the thought that Many friends were gathered round me In the bright days of the past; But the grave has closed above them, And I linger here the last.

If we should take away the influence of death from the literature of the world, our finest classics would be ruined. Two of the best orations this country has ever produced are the address of John J. Ingalls in the United States Senate on the death of Senator Hill and the speech of Robert G. Ingersoll at the funeral of his brother. Both are masterpieces of eloquence. And what of poetry? What gave us Tennyson's "In Memoriam," or Gray's "Elegy," or Milton's "Lycidas," or Bryant's "Thanatopsis," or Poe's "Annabel Lee?" And what is the crowning merit of "The Raven?" What is it that has made "Hamlet" immortal? Did not Shakespeare excel in his philesophies on death?

And yet what is there in either literature, philosophies. or science that will satisfy the heart of one standing at the brink of the grave? Who has solved the problem of death? Who has surveyed his land? Biology gives us a scientific treatment of death. History knows it as a universal fact. Poetry draws near and hovers over it a moment, only to withdraw in terror. Philosophy finds it a mystery of being, the one great mystery of not being. All contributions to the theme are marked by an essential vagueness; every avenue of approach seems darkened by an impenetrable shadow. We can go just so far, and then there yawns before us an abyss, forbidding, dark, dank, and dismal. We can go with our loved ones into the shadows, and then something separates us. That trembling soul that loved our company, that clung to us, that shared our anxiety, suddenly springs from us and refuses to be touched by our tears or to respond to our cries. Then we see the grave close above all that we ever saw or could see and love of our dear one. The form we loved, the features once radiant with life, the eyes that sparkled with joy or were suffused with tears of sympathy, the tongue that spoke to us, the vocal organs that once gave the sounds of a voice resonant and musical-they are all there, but the features are cold and blank, the eyes are expressionless, the tongue is still, and the voice is hushed. All these must now mingle with the dust of the earth and become a brother of the insensible and insensate clod. What a wreck! And yet this is the common fate of all. "Into the night go all," wrote Henely. And Ingersoll said: "Whether in mid-sea or among the breakers of the farther shore, a wreck at last must mark the end of each and all. And every life, no matter if its every hour is rich with love, and every moment jeweled with a joy, will, at its close, become a tragedy as sad and deep and dark as can be woven out of the warp and woof of the mystery of death. . . Life is a narrow vale between the cold and barren peaks of two eternities. We strive in vain to look beyond the heights. We cry aloud, and the only answer is the echo of our wailing cry."

In this beautiful language the eloquent unbeliever uttered the despairing cry of all humanity when it, unaided, tries to read the riddle of life and death. In vain Reason beats its wings against the bars of its cage and falls back in breathless exhaustion. Yet the soul revolts at the thought that endless silence and pathetic dust is the ultimate end of all human hopes and achievements. It refuses to accept the sentence and says with Emerson:

This is not the whole sad story of creation Told by toiling millions o'er and o'er; One day, then black annihilation, A sunlit passage to a sunless shore.

When Knowledge admits its limitations and Reason acknowledges its helplessness, then "Faith sees a star." Faith alone can dispel this mortal darkness; nothing but faith can give us the victory over this ghastly foe. But even faith cannot make death sweet or lovely. Death is an enemy, and it is but natural that the flesh should dread it. Even the psalmist who sang so sweetly of "fearing no evil" in the "valley and the shadow," when sickness overtook him and death threatened him, prayed earnestly: "O spare me, that I may recover strength before I go hence and be no more." And the Wise Man who taught us to fear God and keep his commandments, and who taught that at death the body goes to dust and the spirit returns to God who gave it, when contemplating the fate of the body, grew gloomy and pessimistic. The flesh does not anticipate its ultimate end with pleasure, however much the spirit may rejoice in the hope of dwelling in a "house not made with hands." And as there is often suffering in the flesh, there is also often a struggle in death that faith and hope may lessen, but cannot prevent. Have you ever seen a loved one join battle with death and fight a losing fight? Have you ever seen a heroic soul torn from its earthly tabernacle when the flesh was reluctant to

On the night of October 13, 1918, it was my bitter experience to sit alone by the bedside of a beloved brother who was breathing his last hours away in intense suffering; far from home and loved ones-with the one exception-with no friend or acquaintance near; dying in an army hospital where disease was rampant and where death was holding high carnival, where sympathy was crowded out and where he was known only by the number of his bed. During the day of Sunday, the thirteenth, his bed had been moved out on the veranda of the base hospital, where there were many other sufferers, but where their beds were not crowded so close together as they were in the ward. Now there was room for a chair between the beds, and I was permitted to sit near my brother. This was the ostensible purpose in moving to the outside, but the real purpose was very different. A death in the hospital was kept as quiet as possible and a body was always removed without any commotion. I noticed that there was unusual space between my brother's bed and the beds on either side of it. I observed, too, that his bed was placed near the door (the veranda was screened). This confirmed my fears. But there was evidently no purpose to hide the truth from me, for when I approached the captain-the doctor in charge of the ward-he told me plainly that death was certain and that it was not more than twenty-four hours away, and was likely to occur any hour. It was then my duty to overcome the shock as best I could and control myself and sit near the dying man till his suffering should end. There was nothing to do; just wait for death, and be as cheerful as I could while I waited. The night came on, and the patients on the neighboring beds had all yielded to the sedatives and were sleeping. The heavy groans of my brother had brought the order from the head nurse: "Give number forty-two another hypodermic-double the dose." When this order had been obeyed, he, realizing that he would soon pass into unconsciousness, probably never to wake again in this life, said: "Lean over, brother, and let me put my arms around your neck just as I would mother's if she were here." Then, with his arm still about my neck, he fell into a semiconscious slumber, breathing with short, jerky respiration and emitting groans with every breath.

Thus surrounded, I sat alone through the night, waiting, expecting, yet dreading, what was to come. It was a chill October night; the night breeze kept up a constant rustling in the yellow autumn leaves of the oaks that stood thick around the hospital. That, with my brother's incessant groaning and the heavy, monotonous breathing of the sleepers around me, was all that could be heard. A heavy and painful stillness had settled over the camp. My mind, agitated and quickened by such conditions, was left free to rove through heavens and earth and to puzzle over the mysteries of life and death. It sped away to a far-away city and saw an anxious mother engaged in prayer for her "baby boy:" it knew, too, that there was a petition for her firstborn son who was with him.- It took notice also that Christian friends had gathered in that home and that there was a prayer meeting. It even knew the names of those in the meeting. Then, with this seemingly certain knowledge, with this almost real presence of those far away, the mystery of telepathy presented itself and occupied the thoughts for a while.

Then Memory with her magic wand called up many scenes of past life. She took me back to childhood—to a happy home when the family circle was unbroken; the dying man before me was again a bright-eyed baby tod-dling from one to another of that happy circle, and all were laughing in affectionate joy.

Then there came a more somber scene. I was again sitting by the bedside of my baby brother. Mother was with me, and her face was full of anxiety. My boy heart was beating rapidly, and I was afraid to leave the bed and yet afraid to stay. As the scene became vivid, the unshaven face of the soldier before me became the round, sweet face of a child of four, and golden curls fringed the baby brow. O, how we prayed that this baby be not taken away from us! And he had been spared these few years, only now to be cut down in the bloom of young manhood, while in love with life and raptured with the world. Would it not have been better had he gone on that sad day long ago? Then, is not life worth living? Have these years been worth nothing to him? Shall I agree with the faithless Byron when he said:

Count o'er the joys thine hours have seen, Count o'er the days from anguish free, And know, whatever thou hast been, 'Tis something better not to be.

No, I do not believe it. Life is sweet; it is the priceless gift of a merciful Creator, and it is good to live even if all our days are not "from anguish free." And who knows what effect our growth and attainments here will have on our life in the great beyond?

But just here my thoughts are disturbed by the movements of the sufferer. The effect of the opiate is dying out, or—death is hovering nearer! Ah, yes! How terrible his presence! Is there no limit to suffering? Why will not cruel Death cease his tortures and release the spirit? Would I not now freely let him go?

Thus the mind starts off on another strain and Memory again begins her work. How often have I heard this noble boy sing sweet songs about death being a dream, about crossing the rolling river, about light at the river, about passing into the Savior's presence, etc.! How often, when we were in meetings together, had he requested me to preach on the twenty-third Psalm! And he always wept when the death scene was presented. How sweet to him had been the promise that the rod and the staff should comfort us when we pass into the valley and are lost in the shadows! Yea, how often had I heard him conclude a prayer with some such petition as, "Be with us in the hour of death!" Now that hour has come to him; he is in the valley and the shadows are growing deeper. But how he suffers! There is no poetry in this! There seems no light here! Where now, O Lord, is thy promise? Then, with a shock, memory seized the very words of our dying Lord: "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" Even he felt forsaken. It must be so. Death has a sting. It brings suffering which must be endured. It is a dark valley. The psalmist did not say it was not; he rather emphasized that fact, but rejoiced that the Lord would be with him.

But is that promise being fulfilled now? Perhaps I do not know. It may be that I cannot see. The dying man has uttered no complaint. He is facing it without a tremor. He is suffering, but endures it with a courage heroic, and even yet, I think, hopes to defeat death.

And there are considerations, too. Was it not the good providence of God that brought me here? Was he not merciful in sparing him till I got here? Are not men dying here every day with no relative or friend near them? Are there not now many bodies lying in the morgue, tagged like so many blocks of stone, awaiting a message from that home that they will never see as to the disposal of their bodies? Then, is there nothing for which we may be thankful?

Such were some of the sad reflections and ruminations of a distressed mind on that never-to-be-forgotten night.

I may state that my brother lived through the night and till two o'clock the next day, and during the forenoon of the day the chaplain came, and we had Scripture reading, prayer, and worship, in which my brother was able to join. Possibly this, too, was a fulfillment of the Lord's promise. The chaplain did not visit all the dying men. He could not; and, then, they often died without his knowing it. How came he to come this time? Peculiarly enough. A new nurse had just come into Ward 29, who was a religious girl, and, seeing that number forty-two was dying, she telephoned the chaplain.

Of course I do not know that the Lord had a hand in that, nor do I know that the chaplain was a true servant of God. He was a Lutheran, but he was tender and sympathetic, and I shall always remember him gratefully. My brother died believing the promise. Then why should I doubt it? "How excellent is thy name, O Lord, in all the earth!"

The Status of Our Discussion, Again.

BY F. W. SMITH.

In reply to my article on the above topic, Brother Moore gives us the following:

Yes, I acknowledge Brother Smith's statement that our dispute has been brotherly and no ill feeling has been en-gendered by reading our articles. This is the only kind of newspaper correspondence I would approve.

Brother Smith is correct again in giving the origin of our discussion, also in my claim for specific questions. think he goes farther astray in saying that I introduced nearly every subject in the religious category following Brother Smith, and to answer him I had to go the rounds-"on both sides of the branch," as the say-

You see he reproduces his proposition on apostasy, but does not seem to want to tie up on it yet. He still believes If a saved man believes an untruth it is nothing less than apostasy, the case of not believing in the resurrection, etc. It was you, Brother Smith, that had the difficulty, that to be in error meant death, then I said all are lost Brother Smith reproduces the two propositions I suggested, but refuses to affirm on the Spirit's work. Now, Smith, you either believe this Spirit proposition or you don't believe it. If you believe it, there is no issue between us on the Spirit's work. If you don't believe it, you can deny it. It is a plain affirmation of the Holy Spirit's preserve in any extreme the work this spirit work. presence in conversion, the very thing that you and your people deny and have denied all these years. If you believe the Holy Spirit himself is personally present in conversion, you can sign the affirmative of this proposition; if you don't believe it, you can sign the negative. I have the names of eight or ten of your brethren who have signed the negative, and all but three have debated it with me.

I will try it in a simpler form and see if you will sign one side or the other;

The Scriptures teach that the Holy Spirit himself is present in conversion or being saved.

If this is not the issue between us, there is no issue on the Spirit work.

Dr. J. A. Harding is one who denied this proposition and debated it with me two days, at Salem, near Henning. Tenn. Brother Trice, of Memphis, debated this with me

This is to show you, Brother Smith, that your leading men deny it.

Will Brother Smith please to cite me where and when this editor was forced "to admit that faith in Christ pre-Here is a square issue between us. cedes repentance?" Now will Brother Smith come across with the goods? deny it emphatically and demand the proof.

Brother Oakley is able to take care of himself, and we turn his reference to Oakley's statement over to him.

Anyway you fix it, Brother Smith, you have said saving faith follows repentance. You had to say it, Smith, or admit that your candidate was saved without faith in

I announced in last issue that Brother Smith had not replied to my last; and if he calls this a reply to it, he has mine. I would much prefer to come to definite subjects if we continue; but I am willing, if he won't sign up, to just caper with him on anything religious he wants to write about.

My friend is very much mistaken when he says in reference to me: "He still believes if a saved man believes an untruth it is nothing but apostasy." A man may, through ignorance, be honestly mistaken; but when one, like Hymenæus and Philetus with those whose faith they overthrew, denies one of the fundamental elements of the gospel, which is God's power unto salvation, I claim that he has apostatized. If those characters had not apostatized, why did Paul warn the saints against their teaching and practice in these words: "But shun profane babblings: for they will proceed further in ungodliness, and their word will eat as doth a gangrene: of whom is Hymenæus and Philetus." (2 Tim. 2: 16, 17.) What is the force of the figure the apostle here uses-viz., " will eat as doth a gangrene"-if it does not mean the destruction of the soul? As the physical disease called "gangrene" eats away and destroys the body, so would the word or doctrine of Hymenæus and Philetus cat away and destroy the souls of men. There is no escape for my brother, and he had as well admit his error on this point. I feel that in teaching the doctrine of "once in grace, always in grace," he has overlooked these cases or else read them too casually.

I did not reply to his last article for the reason, as stated, that he had expressed a desire for a change and actually submitted propositions. There was, however, a question in that article to which I will now reply-viz .: "If you will affirm that the chief rulers believed in Jesus, I would baptize the same characters if any church would ask me to do so." I will affirm just what the divine record says about the matter, and in the very words of that record -viz.: "Nevertheless even of the rulers many believed on him; but because of the Pharisees they did not confess it.

lest they should be put out of the synagogue: for they leved the glory that is of men more than the glory that is of God." (John 12: 42, 43.) Now, an inspired apostle says they believed on Christ, and yet the editor of the Baptist Flag refuses to say whether or not he would have baptized them. Why is he so afraid of this case? Why does he not answer that he would or would not baptize such characters? He is afraid to attempt the drawing of a distinction between believing "on" Christ and believing "in" Christ, with the case of the jailer (Acts 16: 31) staring him in the face. Paul told the jailer to "believe on the Lord Jesus," promising salvation to him if he would do so. John, another inspired apostle, says that of the chief rulers "many believed on him," the very same form of expression. Brother Moore will not hesitate to say that he would have baptized the jailer who believed on the Lord, but he balks when he comes to the chief rulers who believed on the Lord. I press my question: Brother Moore, had you been present, would you have baptized those chief rulers, even if a church had asked you to do so? I know his trouble and sympathize with him. His attitude is this: If I say, "I would not have baptized those rulers," I would have to put my refusal to do so on the ground that they had not repented; but that will be admitting that faith comes before repentance. If I say, "I would have baptized them," then I confess that I would have baptized people without repentance. Poor man! His doctrine of repentance before faith involves him in a hopeless difficulty. In the case of the rulers we have some who believed on the Lord, but were unfitted for baptism; while in the case of the jailer we have one who believed on the Lord who was fit for baptism. Brother Moore does not know the difference between the two cases, but I will teach him when we come to discuss baptism.

My friend denies admitting that faith in Christ precedes repentance and calls for the proof. Well, here it is: "Sure they believed the preaching which produced conviction, and they discovered their lost condition and asked what to do." Now, the preaching was about Christ being the promised Messiah of the prophets, the one God had made Lord and Christ—the Savior of the world. When they heard this, they were pricked in their hearts and cried out: "What shall we do?" Now, if this faith which my friend admits brought conviction was not in Christ, will he please tell us in whom or what it was? Do not forget, if you please, that Peter did not tell them to believe after they asked that question, but did tell them to repent.

Now a word about my friend's proposition on the Holy Spirit. He refers to his discussions with other men who denied his proposition, but I remind him that he is debating with me now. If those men, in order to get a discussion with him, permitted my friend to so frame a proposition that he could roam all over creation, that is no reason why I should do the same. I shall not be so imprudent as to deny the "presence" of the Holy Spirit anywhere any more than I would deny the "presence" of God or Christ. What I demand of my opponent, and what I have the perfect right to demand of him, is this: that he affirm what the Holy Spirit does, and how he does it, when present in conversion. Here is what his brother, J. B. Moody, affirmed on the subject: "The Scriptures teach that man is so depraved that he is unable without a direct enabling power of the Holy Spirit to obey the gospel of the Son of God." In laying down his foundation, he said: "My proposition requires me to prove that in the conversion of a sinner (conversion being used in that wider sense that includes regeneration and sanctification) there is a divine power exerted that does not reside in the word, or that is not of the word." (Page 4, "Harding-Moody Debate.") If this is what Brother Moore means by the "presence" of the Holy Spirit in the conversion of a sinner, let him say so, and I am at his service, for I do not believe one word of it.

Brother Z. T. Sweeney's Letter.

Clearwater, Fla., January 27, 1919.—Dear Brother Kurfees: I am just in receipt of the Gospel Advocate of January 16, containing two or three columns of self-glorification over what you call my "flasco," my "exit from the arena of debate," my "withdrawal without a valid reason," etc., etc.

This article calls for a statement of a few facts from myself.

First: You issued a statement that "God has legislated in the realm of vocal music and provided for and appointed it as an ordinance in the worship of Christians." I was greatly surprised at the statement. I knew you could not prove it, but I denied it in order to let you try it. I had no idea but you meant just what you said, and was perfectly justified in supposing you did.

Second: We had hardly begun the discussion before you turned a double summersault and landed upon another proposition as different from the proposition we were discussing as day is from night—a proposition that does not contain one-fourth of the content of the original discussion. You did this without consulting me—a thing you had no right to do. The second proposition hardly bears a resemblance to the first. There is not a lexicographer in the land that will justify the arbitrary change in propositions upon philological grounds. I do not care to deny the second proposition; but if I wanted to wrangle, I could do so, and you could not prove it if your neck depended upon it. You have not introduced a scripture passage that, fairly interpreted, will sustain your second proposition.

You assume that God told the Ephesian and Colossian brethren that they must use vocal music; you assume he commanded them to do it. Then you assume that you have proved your proposition. Then you assume that if you have not proven it, "Brother Sweeney cannot prove anything in the New Testament." Well, what if I can't? Does that prove your proposition? I don't think I could prove anything on the kind of testimony you have introduced. I wouldn't try it. I would prefer to "assume" it.

But I can prove things. The New Testament bristles and sparkles with texts to prove that God has legislated upon, provided for, and appointed baptism as an ordinance in Christianity. The same is true of the Lord's Supper. If you think I can't, deny that I can, and we will "argy." Moreover, I will do it in clear and specific terms, without resorting to inconsequential deductions and far-fetched inferences.

When I admitted that I had "misunderstood" you, it was not in a spirit of cowardice, but of downright magnanimity. I saw that you had taken on a contract that you could not fill; I felt that you were seeing it also. In this way I accounted for your sudden and otherwise unaccountable "flop." But it seems that you won't be let down easy. I have never refused to discuss the proposition we agreed upon. I simply refused to let you lead me into a proposition that I had never denied and which would place me at a disadvantage in the discussion. I was discussing religious problems when you were in your knickerbockers, and know propositions.

I now call upon you to proceed with the discussion as agreed upon. You made the proposition and I have defined it, and you have admitted that I have defined it correctly. When you offer some testimony to prove the truthfulness of the terms of your proposition, you will find me on hand to examine that testimony.

Until you do that, I must ask you to excuse me from following you all over creation in your meanderings to prove what nobody has denied.

I write plainly, but your article justifies plain writing.
Sincerely and fraternally, Z. T. Sweeney.

Why Foreign Missionary Service Should Appeal to Students in This Hour.

In this hour, as in no other, Christian character demands the moral equivalent of war. Foreign missionary service provides this in an outstanding way. The young man wishing to sustain his high spirit of courage and devotion to a great cause should not leave the missionary call unconsidered. The challenge of the work in non-Christian lands is high and bold and compelling. Foreign missionary conquest is a warfare, and it appeals to the pioneer and dauntless spirit. In fact, a courageous young Christian man in this hour, who has the proper training and qualifications for it, will find himself under the necessity of establishing real reasons why he should not go as a foreign missionary.

A new thrill has come to American manhood. The young men who have gone to the front have been fighting for sacred ideals, for human freedom, for the liberation of women and little children. Many of those who have stayed at home have had the same lofty purpose. There is a new unselfishness in the world to-day. America has been giving her young life, not only for others, but for other lands and other races. We have been crusaders on a distant continent in a great cause. The same dominant note runs through the call for service in distant mission fields.

America has a new acquaintance with the world. We have formerly been the most provincial and confined of the Christian nations. We are now one of the most neighborly and far-reaching in our sympathies. Because our country was satisfied and provincial in its policies, it was difficult before the war for us to think in world terms. It is easy now. Our living and planning for the future will touch the ends of the earth. Every one who thinks will have an interest in foreign lands now. The war has introduced us to mankind. God pity us if we shrink within ourselves again!

It is perfectly natural to discuss self-denial now. The "sacrifice" of foreign missionary service will scarcely be mentioned again. The men or women who have given their all at the front for the freedom of the world will not dare to have mental reservations about the distance of Tibet or the loneliness of Africa again. The parents who were willing to give all their sons for the war will hardly refuse to release one for missionary service now.

The war will leave a great unsatisfied longing in the hearts of men. The soldier who went to the front will not readily adjust himself to an ordinary service when he gets home. The boys who wore the khaki and did not reach the fighting line will be unsatisfied without doing some big thing in the future. The boys of the Students' Army Training Corps are chagrined and adrift. They had hoped to serve, and their camps have been disbanded. The possibility for a rare and unselfish life work will appeal to them more than ever before.

We have become used to the draft principle of service. Our boys have become accustomed to taking orders. If we are leaders and lay upon our Christian young men the burden of the divine draft for sacrificial service, they will accept it. Our men and women will be as true to the call of Christ when they recognize it as they were to the call of the country.

There are more specific openings for specially trained men and women now than ever before. Foreign missionary work is being more thoroughly organized along social lines than formerly. It will now be easier for strong people who have a special type of training to find a place where their specific equipment will fit into the work.

The church at home will not need to be converted to a universal enterprises in the future; with the new world consciousness will come a new sense of the world responsibility. The church will now send people to mission lands with a determination to back them up in the great enterprise as never before.

Distance has been eliminated. The world is a startled and humbled neighborhood. Since two millions of our men have crossed the sea for a good cause, the ocean will be no longer a barrier to a life work. We may indeed say: "I saw a new heaven and a new earth, for the first heaven and the first earth are passed away; and the sea is no more." The ocean which was formerly a mysterious and terrible barrier is now more than a highway; it is a doorway to all the peoples of earth.—World Call.

The Menace of Mormonism.

A vigorous fight against Mormonism is on in Atlanta and throughout the country. It is said that the Mormons have five thousand missionaries at work in the United States and a large number in other countries. In spite of the fact that they have a bad name, they are making converts both in the cities and rural districts. They have a church in Atlanta, which is steadily increasing in numbers. It is well known that one of the fundamental principles of Mormonism is polygamy. While the laws of the various States prohibit polygamy, the Mormons are teaching it, and thereby are increasing sentiment in its favor. Such a sentiment is a menace to the social and domestic life of our American people. If the Mormons could control legislation, no doubt polygamy would be practiced throughout the country.

The total number of Mormons in the United States is very small, as compared with that of the leading evangelical denominations; yet the Mormons support five thousand missionaries in the United States, besides those who are working in other countries. The reason is, they tithe, and therefore make the propagation of their religion a part of their business. Funds available for missionary work increase in proportion to the increase in their numbers. In time they will gain unexpected power, a power that will endanger the fundamental principles of Christianity and of our national government. The best way to fight Mormonism as a menace is for the members of our evangelical churches to practice tithing and thereby put themselves in position to teach the people the better way. The enterprise and liberality of the Mormons should serve as an example to the evangelical churches of this country.—Christian Index.

Christians should overcome evil with good. A Christian should not be guilty of allowing a Mormon to be more liberal in the support of his pernicions doctrine than he is in supporting the truth. A failure to practice the Christian religion is the curse of the church. Paul says: "For to me to live is Christ, and to die is gain." (Phil. 1: 21.) To the Corinthians he said: "For I determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ, and him crucified." (1 Cor. 2: 2.) A consistent practice of the religion of Christ will destroy Mormonism and other pernicious isms.

Woman and the League of Nations.

A claim that women be given a place in whatever bodies may be created for putting into effect the idea of a League of Nations is made in a resolution presented to the Peace Conference by an organization of French women under the presidency of Madame Juliate Adam. This resolution accompanied that passed by the organization in which the demand was made that those responsible for atrocities during the war be punished as criminals so as to prevent the recurrence of barbarities. The text of this latter resolution reads: "In violation of the primitive law of humanity, thousands of women and girls, even children, of all social conditions, have been systematically torn from their families, submitted to inhuman tortures, and treated as slaves." The age-long notion that women are more merciful than men may suffer a reversal. However, our observation is that the responsibility of fixing punishments sobers people. —Christian-Evangelist.

Some women are more bitter than some men. It is far easier for men or women to tell those in responsible positions what to do than it is to practice as they preach.

Georgia and the Far Southern Field

By S. H. Hall

Take a Look at Yourself.

Recently I read in "Collier's" a legend by Count Hya Tolstoy, entitled "The Four Stages of Love." The impression was such that I cannot get the desire from my heart to pass it on to the readers of the Gospei Advocate. Just remember that It is a "legend" and be certain to think seriously as you read. Here it is:

When God created man and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, he called to his side the Angel of Good, and God spake to him thus: "Here is a man. Take care of him and make him happy."

Then quoth the angel: "How can I care for him, and how can I make him happy? For the Spirit of Evil hovers continuously over him and would lure him to a realm of darkness, the Kingdom of Death. How can I link him to Then God counseled the angel: "Awake in man's heart the instinct of love which I gave him, and make him love himself. Let him once learn to love himself, and he will beware of Death.'

And the man began to live and struggle against the forces of Death and to love his own person and hate the semblance of Death. Then the man knew his wife, and she conceived and bore him children, and the generations succeeded each other from children to children, and the families were fruitful and multiplied.

So the Spirit of Evil rejoiced, and he began to plot against them. In their hearts he sowed the seeds of dissent. Each man, loving only himself, began to quarrel. Brother slew brother; parents killed their children, and children their parents.

Then the Angel of Good, grievously dismayed, pleaded with God thus: "I have aroused in man the instinct of love for himself: but the Spirit of Evil has planted in his heart the seeds of strife, and now men, loving only themselves, quarrel with their families; brother slays brother; parents kill their children, and children their parents."
Whereupon God answered: "Raise man to the second stage and make him love his family."

So the love of man burst into a brilliant flame as he learned to love his household as himself. Then the race of men increased as the sands of the sea and peopled the whole earth.

But the Spirit of Evil chuckled in his malevolent designs as he said to himself: "Now that the race of man has multiplied on the earth and families have peopled it, I will make them struggle together for the illusive things 1 will set household against household and family against family, and each will seek the triumph of his own, and they will all strive for earthly fortune, each for his own share."

So the leve of man for his household involved him in strife and murder.

And sadness came upon the Angel of Good, and in his sorrow he spake thus to God: "Behold, what misery the love for family has engendered! Man destroys whole households that his own may survive, while the Spirit of Evil triumphs over the earth."

Then God answered the Angel of Good, and said: "Raise man to the third stage of love, so that he may love his nation."

So families were united into tribes and tribes into nations, and the people learned to love only those of their own country and nationality.

Whereupon the joy of the Spirit of Evil knew no bounds, and he spake to himself thus: "I will set nation against nation. Each man shall fight for the greed of his own country. So the love of man for his nation will burst into flame all over the world, and the rivers will flow red with blood into a sea of destruction, in the frightful fray of nationalities, and nothing can stem the blood that is

So at the head of each nation the Spirit of Evil placed wicked rulers, and crowned their heads with diadems of gold and made their hard hearts bitter as gall. And the rulers poisoned the hearts of their subjects with for foreigners. So men slew brother men in battle because their love was only for their own land and for their own ruler. And a devastating fire swept from one ocean to the other over the earth until at last mankind trembled on the brink of a dark precipice of destruction.

Then with anguish in his soul the Angel of Good came into the presence of God and said: "In the name of love for their country, which people call patriotism, they destroy one another more mercilessly than before, and the Spirit of Evil greatly rejoices in his victory.

Whereupon God answered the Angel of Good and spake to him thus: "Raise man to the highest degree of love, making him to love all nations and races living on the face of the earth, teaching him that all mankind are his brothers. Make him love each human being as he loves his country, and his country as he loves his family, and his family as he loves himself. Then shall my will be done and my kingdom come on earth as in heaven. And man will live to enjoy the happiness which I have prepared for him.

Then the face of the Angel of Good glowed with great joy as he began to fulfill the will of God. And there followed the falling of thrones, and the golden diadems of the rulers were east into the dust. So the Spirit of Evil lost his faithful servants, as mankind assembled together in one mighty family of nations, the strong caring for the weak

And a star of wondrous luster arose in the heavens and a marvelous light of iridescent beauty enveloped the earth. for a new flame of love illuminated a new path and warmed the hearts of men, auguring the coming of an earthly heaven, which was promised by the Prince of Peace—the kingdom of God. Thus mankind at last found hap-

On this legend, Mr. Tolstoy himself makes the following comment:

If we apply the moral of this legend to present world conditions, we may easily determine the primal causes of the social and political chaos which is convulsing the world. The Spirit of Evil that undermines the best tendencies of mankind-the only enemy that makes happiness and peace impossible on earth-is none other than the Spirit of Selfishness-selfishness of individuals, of families, of castes, parties, classes, and nations.

Selfishness is the source of strife in all departments of life; selfishness blocks the best impulses of mankind; selfishness is a ball and chain upon civilization.

Of course, we all know that Jehovah's blessed book, the Bible, teaches us that our Father in heaven put this law of love before man from the very beginning and condemned in no uncertain way every shadow of selfishness. The thought was not attained, finally, by evolution as an outgrowth of Jehovah's experience with man. I think it is true that God so overrules man's experiences here on the earth that by a process that you may call "evolution" man is brought to recognize the fact that his greatest good is to be found in surrendering to the truths that Jehovah, for ages, has been trying to get man to see, love, and embrace. This speaks loudly for the superhuman crigin of our Bible. Its great truths and principles cannot be improved upon. Man cannot suggest an improvement. Man wanders from God with his various schemes and inventions, but ultimately has to come back to the eternal principles that Jehovah has ever declared is best for man-Truly did Micah (6:8) declare: "He hath showed thee, O man, what is good; and what doth Jehovah require of thee, but to do justly, and to love kindness, and to walk humbly with thy God?"

But the thing I had in mind at the beginning of this article was to insist that every one of us take a look at self and see how far we are letting selfishness in us block the progress of the cause of Christ. Does not the teaching of Christ condemn every vestige of selfishness? Can you find any other doctrine which, if received with the whole heart, will develop in man the perfectly unselfish life as will the doctrine of Christ? Certainly you cannot,

Get this: If we are, indeed, what we claim to be, the unselfish life should be seen in us as in no other people. If we are, indeed, what we claim to be, the great and exalting principles of Christ's teaching are seen when people see and walk with us. May every one that reads this pray for the fullness of this life in God's people here on the

A Mission Call.

BY I. B. BRADLEY.

It becomes necessary for me to call attention to the needs of the Japanese work again. Why does it require constant reminders to be placed before the brethren to make them sensible of an obligation that is never fulfilled to the completion? After once taking hold of a matter, why do we need to be constantly told that we must keep it up? Having sent missionaries to the foreign field, why is it that some one must be continually telling them that these workers need supporting? Yet such is the case. If some one does not keep continually reminding those who have sent out missionaries and have supported them for a while that they need supplies regularly, they forget that they have gone out and that they owe them anything. Why is it so? Brethren do not so easily forget business obligations. They do not so soon forget material interests. Having made an investment in material things, they do not cease to keep up with them and send anything that may be necessary to the success of the investment. Then, since they have invested something in the foreign mission work, why drop it and let the money they have invested fail to bring any dividends for lack of a support?

Brethren, you have invested several hundred dollars in a work under the labors of Sister Sarah Andrews. She cannot produce results without supplies. These supplies must be regular that she may not be handicapped and embarrassed in her efforts. You have said by your past investments in this work that you had faith in it and that you fell that it was a worthy undertaking and ought to have help. Shall the work fail now because you do not stand by your past pledges-made when you gave to this work? Shall she, having begun this work, encouraged by your support in the past, be compelled to turn from her desires and from the work already begun? Let not these who have supported the work in the past give it up before it has had time to produce results. It takes a long time to develop the latent powers of a people who have for ages been brought up under the influence of superstition and idolatry and interest them in a religion that is wholly new and strange to them. They must be led by persistent, patient, painstaking, and prudent steps, up to the knowledge of the true God and the Christian religion. It takes a long time for an American to learn the language and get ready to teach them successfully. Your missionary has been there more than three years now, and is ready, or will be by the first of July, to begin work in earnest, Shall she now be made to lack the necessary support for her work? Having furnished her with the means to learn the language and the customs of the people, so that she knows how to approach them and can teach them, shall she want for the means to keep her at work now, when she is in position to really accomplish something?

The United States has made "drive" after "drive" for the sinews of war and for the means to supply the soldiers after they have reached the field of strife. The citizens have responded to every call with a liberality that is praiseworthy. They have given and given, again and again, at the call of the head of the government. As citizens, this was what they should have done. Many of those who responded to this call were citizens of another government—the kingdom of God. Will they be as true to this government as they have been to the civil government? Will they answer the call of the King of kings as they did the call of the United States of America? Let us believe that they will. Let it not be said of the citizens of God's kingdom that they are less loyal than the citizens of the United States. At least, let not those who helped in the war prove less loyal to the church than they did to the country they claim as their own, their native land.

Brethren, let us all resolve that we will take care of the work that has been begun and that we will not let those we have sent out lack for a support. The last month I had to wait several days after the usual time for the draft to be sent before I had funds enough to make up the necessary amount, I dislike very much to delay the monthly allotment to Sister Andrews, but, on account of the neglect of some of those who have been contributing from the first to send their gift, it has to be delayed. I wish I could impress upon the mind and heart of each one who sends this thought: "My contribution ought to be in the hands of Brother Bradley by the twenty-fifth day of each month, so that he can send it by the first of the succeeding month." Let this sink deep into the mind, dear reader, as you see these words, and before you forget or overlook it write me out that check or money order and send it right away. The next check is due to be started to Tokyo, Japan, on the first of March. Please let me have your contribution at once, so that I may not be delayed in sending the amount necessary for her month's support.

This is the King's business, and shall we be found lacking in our loyalty to him? He has said: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature;" and: "Go . . . teach all nations: . . and, lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." Shall we heed his command? Or shall we let the god of this world—money—get such a hold upon us that we will let the Master's work and the workers go unheeded? O that the church would wake up to the great responsibility laid upon her and do her Lord's bidding! O that the men and women who have the means would put a part of it in the investment looking to the salvation of the heathen—every one without the gospel of Christ! Let us do more for the work this year than we have ever done, both at home and in the lands beyond the sea.

But let us be systematic in our contributions. Let us select some one and send regularly to that one, for the support of that one. Do not switch from one worker to another. Send to me for the Sarah Andrews work or for the Lillie Cypert work.

Five Days in the Country.

BY J. M. M'CALEB.

Brother Hiratsuka and the writer, accompanied by Miss Andrews and Miss Cypert, went to his native village, Shiodamura, on November 23. We were met by Shinzo Shibata and Senzo Shibata. We spoke in the latter's home Saturday night, and taught the children a song before speaking. I spoke again Sunday morning. The Lord's Supper in the afternoon. Nine were present besides our company. Monday night we spoke in Mr. Suzuki's home, about five miles away. He is not a Christian, but is the village chief. I spent the night in the home of Brother Hiratsuka's nephew, his birthplace. Tuesday we went to Yamagata, a town of thirty-five hundred people. I spoke in the school building to two hundred young people. On the way home next day we spoke to a waiting crowd at the station. In these meetings the sisters assisted much with their singing. The people of this section had never seen a foreign woman before; naturally, they aroused much curiosity. The Japanese women thought them very fair and beautiful.

We were grieved to learn of the death of Emma Floyd, daughter of the beloved J. D. Floyd, at Tullahoma, Tenn. Funeral services were conducted, Sunday, at Flat Creek, Tenn.

A good physician who is a Christian is wanted at Trezevant, Tenn. If you are qualified, get in touch with I. G. Hurt, the druggist at that place, or write to Elder H. J. Stafford.

Beware of the weepy woman, she of many sorrows. Most of them are of her own making, and her keenest enjoyment consists in retailing them to her friends and enlisting the sympathy of the tender-hearted.—Lloyd.

A person never acquires that indefinable something known as "charm" until he can learn to forget himself; and he seldom accomplishes the big thing of life until he has learned to live in his work and eliminate himself from the equation.

From T. E. Tatum, Hallsville, Texas, February 18: "I am now ready to enter the evangelistic field again. I expect to be in Arkansas soon and in Tennessee later. If I am wanted at your place for a meeting, write me at Hallsville, Texas."

Thus said Gautama: "It therefore follows, if a man is happy, he dwells in happy thoughts; if miserable, he dwells in despondent and debilitating thoughts. Whatever the state of the man, within the soul lies the cause of the state, and never without it."

From R. V. Robinson: "I wish you would state in the Gospel Advocate that after March 1 my address will be changed from Waco, Texas, to Stephenville, Texas. I will move to Stephenville about the first of March and take up local work with the church there."

From E. C. Fuqua, Fort Collins, Col.: "The work here is prospering splendidly. I preached to large audiences on February 9. One addition a week ago. The religious interests are picking up since the lifting of the 'flu' ban and everything will soon be normal again."

William J. Campbell writes: "Brother McCaleb expects to stop on his way home in Honolulu and hold a meeting there. This work will need our prayers and support. The work that we hope to see started there will likely need a laborer to locate there to continue the spread of the gospel. So let us get ready to support this work."

From J. S. Daugherty, Kirbyville, Texas, February 10: "Though I have not been reporting, I have been very busy. I preach for the home congregation each second Lord's day and at near-by points the other Sundays. Besides my preaching, I am clearing and fencing about seven acres of East Texas land, preparing to augment the preacher's salary. My spare time is all engaged for protracted meetings until August 15, with other calls coming in. Brethren, let us proclaim His word faithfully."

A Boy's Prayer.—Give me clean hands, clean words, and clean thoughts; help me to stand for the hard right against the easy wrong; save me from habits that harm; teach me to work as hard and play as fair in thy sight alone as if all the world saw; forgive me when I am unkind and help me to forgive those who are unkind to me; keep me ready to help others at some cost to myself; send me chances to do a little good every day and so grow more like Christ.—President William DeWitt Hyde.

From J. S. Daugherty, Kirbyville, Texas, February 19: "The Lord willing, I am to meet a Mr. Copeland, a 'digressive,' of Waterman, Texas, who styles himself 'a whale fisher,' in discussion at Stockman, Shelby County, beginning on February 28 and continuing three days. He is to affirm that he and his brethren represent the true church of Christ; I will affirm the music question. All wishing to attend the debate from a distance can come to Timpson and then catch the Santa Fé train to Stockman."

From W. G. Jernigan, Grand Saline, Texas: "The churches of Christ at this place and Sand Flat, four miles east of here, are supporting me this year for mission work. This is a step that these brethren have taken which should be followed by several more congregations in this State. C. D. Record, of Whitesboro, Texas, is being supported for the same kind of work by the congregations at Shady Grove and Jamestown. May the Lord bless these brethren who are sending us forth to preach the word to a lost generation."

From O. E. Phillips, Hillsboro, Texas: "Our work here is doing nicely so far. I have been here five months. Our crowds are fine, interest good, and we have had a number of additions by membership and baptism. I spend fifteen minutes with the children every Lord's day just before the regular preaching service. I began with twenty-five and now have one hundred and twenty-five, and hope for quite an increase when spring comes and people get over the 'flu.' I use their toys and such things as they are familiar with one year's training they will hardly yield to sectarianism."

From H. A. Rogers, Punnichy, Saskatchewan, Canada, February 17: "Work here is going along with much en-couragement. I have held meetings for four weeks here, amidst strong opposition from Methodists and Anglicans, with very much increased interest. Seven confessions to date, and many more are convinced of the truth of Christ, and we look for more confessions. This is the first time for the pure gospel to be preached in this part. Brethren. ean you help us in locating a good young man for this province to help me in the work? I can establish and plant congregations all over this field, I feel sure, but need help in keeping up the work. I came in here a stranger four weeks ago, and believe I have the confidence of the greater part of the people to-day. Notwithstanding the people had been prejudiced against me before I reached here and many seemed to despise me, yet I lived through it and consider that I have come out victorious. Now, brethren, we need another man, or two other men, and there are none here; so we will have to look across the lines or to Ontario for this man. Can you not help us in finding a young, willing heart which is loyal and ambitious to come over and help us? We would, on securing a man, need cooperation to support him. Let us find the man, then we will, I think, find the cooperation. Let us take the field for Christ while it is available. adapted to wading in amidst opposition and planting the cause of our Lord; so will you not come to my assistance while the sun shines on my efforts, so that I can continue to establish the church all over this county? I can give satisfactory and abundant references as to what I am doing. Will some young man who reads this come over and help us? Talk this over in your meetings, brethren, and see if you can aid us in this field by securing the right man, and then, if you can, help us to sustain him."

Our "Knickerbockers" and Brother Sweeney's "Magnanimity."

BY M. C. K.

On page 197 of this issue of the Gospel Advocate will be found, breathing out the animus of a flaming philippic, the crowning act in Brother Sweeney's "flasco." When we think of the high pedestal on which our conception of him as a Christian controversialist had placed him at the time he accepted the Advocate's challenge, and then think of the turn which he has taken in our discussion, followed now by such an article as that before us, we are reminded of the Shakespearean exclamation over the fall of Cæsar: "O, what a fall was there, my countrymen!" It is a pity that he did not have a friend to advise him before he allowed this present unique document to pass from his hands. We prefer to make no comment on his claim concerning "a spirit of cowardice;" but instead of this document's exhibiting "downright magnanimity," it exhibits, in a marked degree, the very opposite quality. We ask for it a careful perusal by our readers before they read our comments on the situation.

In view of the rare spirit which he displays, we admonish him to keep cool, respectfully reminding him, in the meantime, that the part which he has played in his would-be discussion with the Gospel Advocate is a matter of record before our readers, and mere assertions cannot change it. Our readers fully understand what he has done and particularly what he has not done in this discussion, and they know equally well the record of the editor of the Advocate; and hence, in spite of our brother's hasty and excited charges to the contrary, they know that we have not "meandered "all over creation," nor "turned a double summersault" nor any other kind of a "summersault." nor written "two or three columns of self-glorification." They also know that, instead of our having "taken on a contract that" we "could not fill," our brother made haste to get out of a discussion which he seems to have entered without due thought. Moreover, as to his ability to take care of his own side in the music controversy, if the part which he has played in this instance is a correct index to it, they know that he has been "weighed in the balances and found wanting," and all his camouflage in the way of excited assertions against facts cannot hide from them the inglorious failure of his effort. As to our being " let down easy," it is sufficient to observe that after his "backdown" we did not need to be "let down" at all.

After such a withdrawal from the discussion as he has so conspicuously staged, most papers would refuse to publish anything further from him on the subject, and this is really what his course merits, but we publish this article and note the facts of the situation as the case now stands.

1. He says: "You issued a statement that God has legislated in the realm of vocal music and provided for and appointed it as an ordinance in the worship of Christians." Not quite that—an adroit change of our language which it seems to have suited his purpose to make-but this is what we affirmed, and still affirm, and what we clearly and incontestably proved by the explicit language of the New Testament-namely, "that God has legislated upon, provided for, and appointed vocal music in the worship of Christians;" and he "was perfectly justified in supposing" that we "meant just what" we "said;" but, strange to say, when we proceeded accordingly to submit positive proof from the New Testament in support of the proposition, he fled the field and we were left without an opponent. Doubtless with an eye to the future, and adopting the principle of Falstaff, "the better part of valor is discretion," he acted on the sentiment of the familiar lines:

"He that fights and runs away, May turn to fight another day; But he that is in battle slain, Will never rise to fight again."

If, as he now claims, he "denied" the proposition "in order to let" us "try" to prove it, but "knew" that we "could not prove it," we certainly thank him for the opportunity; but no doubt our readers will think that his claim finds scant support in the face of the fact that, as soon as the proof was submitted, he could not, to use the language of Lady Macbeth, "screw his courage to the sticking place," but beat a hasty retreat from "the firing We did "proceed with the discussion as agreed upon;" but when we submitted "some testimony to prove the truthfulness of" our "proposition," our fleeing opponent was gone, and there was nobody "on hand to examine that testimony."

2. He makes the following unaccountable statement: "We had hardly begun the discussion before you . . landed upon another proposition as different from the proposition we were discussing as day is from night." In view of the facts of the record, we are sorry that our brother says this. Our readers know that it is not correct, The record speaks for itself and shows, as plainly as language can show anything, that we not only did not "land upon another proposition," but stuck to and defended the identically same proposition throughout. Yea, more, we accepted his own definition of the terms of that proposition, only "admonishing," to quote our former statement, "against hard and fast lines" in the use of them "which would virtually mean that 'God has legislated upon, provided for, and appointed' nothing that is to be done in Christian worship." Hence, his statement that "the second proposition hardly bears a resemblance to the first " is both absurd and preposterous. There was no "second proposition." The one proposition was kept throughout, and the truth of it was abundantly established by explicit passages from the New Testament which show, as formerly expressed, "that God has named, specified, and thus indicated vocal music to be used in Christian worship, just as he has named, specified, and indicated the Lord's Supper and what is to be eaten in that supper in Christian worship." And again we ask; "If that does not prove it, PRAY WHAT COULD EVER PROVE PT?"

3. He says we "assume that God told the Ephesian and Colossian brethren that they must use vocal music." We respectfully reply that we "assume" no such thing; but we gave the specific language of the New Testament showing that God named, specified, and thus indicated that kind of music to be used in Christian worship, and that, through an inspired apostle, he commanded "the Ephesian and Colossian brethren" to use it in that worship. Whether they felt "that they must use" it or not would depend altogether on their respect for the word of God. If they felt as Brother Sweeney and those of his way of thinking seem to feel, they would, of course, use it or not use it as they liked, and would use a different kind of music altogether if they chose.

4. After informing us that he "can prove things," he says: "The New Testament bristles and sparkles with texts to prove that God has legislated upon, provided for, and appointed baptism as an ordinance in Christianity." Exactly so; and it "bristles and sparkles with texts to prove," in precisely the same way, "that God has legislated upon, provided for, and appointed " vocal music to be used in Christian worship. There is not a solitary passage in the New Testament enjoining upon men baptism in becoming Christians that is any clearer or more specific than the passages enjoining upon them vocal music to be used in worshiping as Christians. Moreover, there is not a solitary passage in the New Testament which "provides for and appoints" the Lord's Supper in Christian worship in terms any clearer or more specific than those which "provide for and appoint" vocal music in that worship. Our brother had a fine opportunity to meet the argument here, but, for reasons perhaps best known to himself, he retired from the discussion without even attempting it; and since that spectacular performance, both he and his cause would have suffered less in the estimation of the public if he had had the good judgment to keep still.

5. Notwithstanding the remarkable and conspicuous absence of any act on his part in the present case in the way of either discussing propositions or showing that he knows them, he seems anxious, nevertheless, to appear as a veritable Nestor in the polemic art; and so, as a dernier resort in that direction and with no other visible proof, he tells us that he "knows propositions," and that he "was discussing religious problems when" we "were in" our "knickerbockers!" Of course, we are too youthful to question or to pass judgment on his ancient record in the field of religious polemics; but, even though we be "a youth to fortune and to fame unknown," yet, in view of his conspicuous rôle in playing the "baby act," in the present case, we submit, if we had only preserved our "knickerbockers," it would be fitting to pass them on to But our knickerbockers, like our opponent, are him! gone!

6. Finally, the Gospel Advocate has always believed in religious controversy, if conducted in the proper way, and it has been making a special effort in recent years to contribute whatever it might toward elevating the tone and character of such exchanges, and thus to conserve and hold in proper channels one of the most powerful means of defending and advancing among men the claims of Christianity; and it is a matter of deep regret that it should have been plunged unawares into an altereation such as this has proved to be. It is just such a manner and spirit as exhibited in the thrusts about "flops," "turning double summersaults," "meanderings all over creation," etc., and the turn our brother chose to take in this discussion that, years ago, brought into disrepute the matter of controversy between the pro and con parties over the organ and society. Cannot Christian men differ and express their differences on the high plane of mutual courtesy, dignity, and respect? The defect at this point has existed on both sides of the controversy, and we have no wish to condone, but freely acknowledge it for the antiorgan and antisociety side; and for our own part, we have been making an earnest effort for years to correct the defect and to project all controversy in which we took part to the high plane here mentioned, which alone is worthy of Christians. We confidently expected the high standard to be maintained in this case until we should have a complete and model discussion; and hence, to no one, we think, can the turn taken in it be a greater surprise than to the editor of the Gospel Advocate. Here is a sample of expressions reaching us from intelligent and educated men among our readers:

I cannot see what more Sweeney could expect, to prove that singing such songs and hymns and psalms as the New Testament directs is ordained of God, than that which you have presented. If what you have presented does not prove that, then, as you correctly say, there is no proof that any worship has been ordained of God. Ah, but I was disappointed and surprised that he would "take that turn;" yet from the outset I could but wonder what he meant by denying such a proposition.

We close this not altogether pleasant exchange with the immortal words of Abraham Lincoln spoken when his country was engaged in fratricidal strife and as, with a great heart and a great mind, he looked across the bloody chasm yawning between the North and South: "With malice toward none, with charity for all."

The Churches of America Have a Great Responsibility.

The following is clipped from the Literary Digest of February 15, which shows how America is regarded by the people of the Orient. It is not the purpose of this article to deal with governmental questions or the favorable light in which our government now stands with the other governments of the world, but to call the attention of the churches to our Christian obligations to the people of all nations. Here is the clipping:

AMERICA'S DUTY IN ORIENT EYES,

Our national disposition has always tended to the avoidance of "entangling alliances," a feeling that still persists in many minds despite our participation in the Great War and In the Peace Conference, so that one notes with acute Interest suggestions to the contrary which come, not from this side of the Atlantic, but from the other. Perhaps no more remote source of such ideas could be found than Shanghai, China. in which city is published The Celestial Empire, the weekly edition of the Shanghai Mercury. That the United States should accept a commission from the allies to watch over the development of civilization in the Middle East, including large portions of territory that have lately been of the empire of the Turk, is a proposal said to emanate from an important British source, which receives the warmest approval of this Far-East weekly. No other nation enjoys the reputation won for the United States by its missionaries and teachers, we are told; and while other nations have gone to that land as warriors. concession exploiters, or something equally mundane, the Stars and Stripes have "flown over nothing more worldly than a hospital or a school." Moreover, America would have no ax to grind in the way of territorial ambitions, which makes it the one great power capable of action with the minimum of friction or opposition from the rest. Then, too, she has pienty of money, a great requirement of the Middle East, and The Celestial Empire points out that if the world is quickly to recover its previous food supply in sufficient quantity, American capital will be re-quired in many quarters, and "for a time the nations hard hit by the war will of necessity have to take careful note of their changed positions financially and so be the less ready to risk expenditure that may take time to become fruitful."

The unselfish attitude of our government in the recent war with Germany has impressed the people of the world very favorably with the magnanimity of the people of the United States. From the article clipped from the Literary Digest it also appears that the people of the Orient have been attracted and won by the Christian deportment of American missionaries, which should be encouraging to all Christian people and should lead them to make greater efforts for the conversion of the world. This war has brought the people of the Orient much nearer to the people of this country and made them realize that all the nations of earth are of one blood and that we are kindred people. The effect of this war is to impress the churches with the lact that all people are the same with God and stand in the same relation to him-that is, that all have souls to be saved and that the gospel is God's power unto salvation to all nations alike. As the time is opportune, as a favorable reception is guaranteed to the gospel when it is carried by American missionaries, it certainly behooves all Christians to be active in obeying the great commission, which says: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to the whole creation. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that disbelieveth shall be damned." (Mark 16: 15, 16.) Christians should imitate the example that the apostles have given us. The Holy Spirit plainly declares that the gospel was preached to every creature under heaven. Also, we learn from Rom. 10: 18 that the Holy Spirit, in writing of the preaching of the apostles, says: "Their sound went out into all the earth, and their words unto the ends of the world." When Christians consider the value of the soul and that the world cannot satisfy the hunger and thirst of the soul, it certainly behooves them to make the work of soul saving the business of their lives. The world with all of its glory will fade away in a moment, but the soul is to live throughout the countless ages of eternity. As it was in the days of Christ, so now are the indications that the field is white for the harvest; souls are ready to be garnered, but it is difficult to find reapers. As Christ said to his disciples, so in the light of the article clipped from the Literary Digest we may say: "The harvest indeed is plenteous, but the laborers are few. Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he send forth laborers into his harvest." (Matt. 9: 37, 38.) When Christians truly realize the value of a soul and when they are devoted and consecrated to the service of God, it will not be difficult to raise sufficient means to support the laborer in the field. Consecration and devotion to the cause of Christ are needed a thousand times more to-day than money. When Christians have these in a scriptural degree, we will hear less cry about money and will find more workers ready to enter the field. We are short of missionaries, and even some that are in the field are not displaying the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ. The church should be looking for efficient, sacrificing, and godly missionaries. The church should not be satisfied to recommend a man for a missionary who has made a failure in all his undertakings. The man who is inefficient and incapable here would be inefficient and incapable in China, Japan, or India. How seldom do we find a successful man here ready and willing to go as a missionary to China! Men who succeed here are usually content to remain here. As the time is opportune for preaching the gospel in the Orient and as the responsibility appears to rest mainly upon the American churches, it behooves the churches now to select men who are especially fitted for this work. Failures in every calling of life should not be selected to preach the gospel in the Orient, since they will fail; while men in love with the truth and fitted by natural ability and attainments for the work will accomplish great things in preaching the gospel in a foreign field. The churches should begin their work at the man end of the line and not at the money end of the line. I believe that with the right kind of preacher or missionary in the Orient, it will not be difficult to raise the money to support him in the work. I have found the churches liberal whenever they had confidence in the man or in the work for which an appeal was made. Christians have responded liberally and cheerfully to bring Brother Jelley home, to relieve war sufferers, and for the support of orphan children.

When Paul was in the missionary field, the church at Philippi contributed to him. The Holy Spirit declares: "And ye yourselves also know, ye Philippians, that in the beginning of the gospel, when I departed from Macedonia, no church had fellowship with me in the matter of giving and receiving but ye only; for even in Thessalonica ye sent once and again unto my need." (Phil. 4: 15, 16.) This shows that the church did not do its work through a missionary society, but that Paul knew that the church at Philippi was contributing to him. It is not possible for a missionary to see through a missionary board and know just what local church contributes to his support. When churches undertake to support a missionary, the missionary should report back to that church. For instance, we learn that Paul and Barnabas were sent on a missionary journey by the church at Antioch. (See Acts 13: 3.) After they had preached the gospel in Iconium, Lycaonia, Lystra, Derbe, Perga, and Attalia, they reported back to Antioch, "from whence they had been committed to the grace of God for the work which they had fulfilled. And when they were come, and had gathered the church together, they rehearsed all things that God had done with them, and that he had opened a door of faith unto the Gentiles." (Acts 14: 26, 27.) The missionary who is anxious to act as did the apostles will rehearse the work that he has done to the churches supporting him and will cheerfully make report of all funds contributed by the supporting churches. Missionaries and churches claiming to be guided by "it is written" have been derelict along this line. Missionaries have damaged their work because they did not have sufficient respect for divine example to lead them to report as did the apostles. It is to be hoped that efficient missionaries may be secured for the work in the Orient. The Gospel Advocate is ready to give full support and encouragement to such missionaries.

Attention, Sunday-School Teachers!

The conscientious teacher of the Bible is anxious to secure the best help available in the preparation of the lesson. Patient research not only improves and enriches the mind of the teacher, but makes the class work doubly interesting to the scholars. In addition to our quarterlies, we carry two excellent books that cover the International Sunday-school Lessons. The publishers of "Peloubet's Select Notes" claim that it is the "most valuable commentary in the world," because it is "scholarly, comprehensive, condensed, and practical." It covers every phase of the lesson, from treatment and explanation of text, with notes from the best commentators, to list of special books for further study along the lines of thought suggested.

"Tarbell's Teachers' Guide" is edited by Miss Martia Tarbell, Ph.D., and has been a general favorite for many years. The author has covered everything in the field of research and investigation that the enterprising teacher or scholar would like to know. Primary, Junior, Intermediate, Senior, and Bible-class teachers find in it full explanation of Bible texts, light upon difficult passages by the best biblical scholars, and discussion of present-day problems in teaching.

We will send either one of these valuable books for $1.25, postpaid; or, in combination with a new subscriber, we will send the Gospel Advocate for one year and either one of these commentaries for $3 to the same or separate addresses.

The Young People, edited by A. B. Lipscomb, is a highclass illustrated weekly of four pages. The editor's comments upon the lessons occupy one page. The price is fifty cents per single copy for a year, or five or more copies to one address for forty cents each.

No earthly prosperity need perforce enchain the soul and dull all its finer sensibilities, and kill out of it its sense of high destiny, if only the love of God is there to extract whatever is of lasting value and to cast the dross away.

Grandma Used Sage Tea to Darken Hair

She Made Up a Mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur to Bring Back Color, Closs, and Youthfulness.

Common garden sage brewed into a heavy tea, with sulphur added, will turn gray, streaked, and faded hair beautifully dark and luxuriant. Notes from Dallas, Texas.

BY A. O. COLLEY.

We cannot tell in these peculiar times what will come next. All cities have their problems to face. It is sometimes very hard for a gospel preacher to know just how far he can go without dishonoring God or insulting man. We are asked to take part in many questionable things, and our friends think that we just want to be "curious" if we "run not with them to the same excess of riot."

Praises have been heaped upon George W. Truett, a Baptist preacher, of Dallas, for the part he played in the world war until there can little more be thought of to say.

I heard a digressive preacher, John G. Slaytor, of the East Dallas Christian Church, offer a prayer in a union service at the Collseum in Dallas, in which he did not use the name of Jesus Christ. At the close of the prayer he said: "We ask these blessings in the name of the flag of the United States." When I became a Christian, I had no idea that a Christian preacher would ever drift so far from the "simplicity that is in Christ" that he would for any cause sacrifice the name of Christ to please Jews or Brethren, when you oppose a regular preacher to work under the eldership of a city congregation, you are opposing and discouraging a very necessary work. If there is any place in the Lord's creation where a good, Godloving, faithful preacher, one that will be faithful to the Book, is needed above other places, it is in the large cities, where fashion, fad, and fancy seem to dominate the thought of many religious people. I do not say that the Pearl and Bryan Streets Church needs me, but it surely needs some one to proclaim, in an uncompromising manner, the gospel in its primitive purity. I do not know how long or how short my stay may be here. I love the work and love the church, and think they love me, but I only want to stay as long anywhere as I think I can be of real use or service in building up the church. I shall gladly spend and be spent in the Lord's cause here or going "everywhere preaching the word."

Washington Thriftograms.

The one hundred and eighty-seventh anniversary of George Washington's birthday was celebrated on February 22. Washington, the successful builder of a nation, gave voice to rules for personal and national success which are as applicable in this 1919 year of necessary thrift as in his day. Here are some of his words on the use of money and resources that might have been written for the present situation in America:

- "I am no more disposed to squander an to stint."
- " Economy makes happy homes and sound nations. Instill it deep."
- "It is not the lowest-priced goods that are always the cheapest."
- "I cannot enjoin too strongly upon you a due observance of economy and frugality."
- "Keep an account book and enter therein every farthing of your receipts and expenditures."
- "Promote frugality and industry by example, encourage manufactures, and avoid dissipation."
- "Reason, too late perhaps, may convince you of the folly of misspending fime"
- "There is no proverb in the whole catalogue of them more true than 'A penny saved is a penny got.""

"Nothing but harmony, honesty, industry, and frugality are necessary to make us a great and happy nation."

These statements by George Washington as to wise personal economy might be paraphrased to-day in the injunction of the National Thrift Campaign: Spend wisely, save intelligently, avoid waste, and invest safely. Buy War Saving Stamps and Thrift Stamps.

She Saved 200 Chicks

Mrs. G. Hancock, Sturgis, Ky., writes: "I hatched 200 chicks, and didn't lose a single one with white diarrhea. I give Ready Relief the praise." Mrs. H. L. Sutton, of Ramona, Kan., writes: "My chicks were dying twenty and thirty a day. I got two packages of Ready Relief, and now I don't lose any."

You can get the same wonderful results. Reefer's Ready Relief put in your baby chicke first drinking water will help save them from the dreadful white diarrnea plague. This remedy is the discovery of a plague. This remedy is the discovery of a famous scientist. Send $1 to-day to E. J. Reefer, poultry expert. 6252 Poultry Building, Kansas City, Mo., for a package that will certainly help you save your baby chicks. Aren't your delicate, downy baby chicks worth saving? You take no risk. Mr. Reefer will refund every cent of your money if you are not entirely satisfied, and a million-dollar bank backs up this statement. Send for a $1 package to-day, or, better still, send $2.35 on special discount for three regular $1 packages and lusure every hatch you get. Aren't your baby chicks worth five for a cent? That's about the cost of Reefer's Rendy Relief. Hopes Women Will Adopt This Habit As Well As Men

Glass of hot water each morning helps us look and feel clean, sweet, fresh.

Happy, bright, alert-vigorous and vivacious-a good, clear skin; a natural, rosy complexion, and freedom from illness are assured only by clean, healthy blood. If only every woman and likewise every man could realize the wonders of the morning inside bath, what a gratifying change would take place!

Instead of the thousands of sickly, anemic-looking men, women, and girls with pasty or muddy complex-ions; instead of the multitudes of "nerve wrecks," "run-downs," "brain fags," and pessimists, we should see a virile, optimistic throng of rosycheeked people everywhere.

An inside bath is had by drinking, each morning before breakfast, a glass of real hot water, with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it to wash from the stomach, liver, kidneys, and ten yards of bowels the previous day's indigestible waste, sour fermentations and poisons, thus cleansing, sweetening, and freshening the entire alimentary canal before putting more food into the stomach.

Those subject to sick headache, bilnasty breath, rheumatism, colds, and particularly those who have a pallid, sallow complexion and who are constipated very often, are urged to obtain a quarter pound of limestone phosphate at the drug store, which will but a trifle, but is sufficient to demonstrate the quick and remarkable change in both health and appearance awaiting those who practice in-ternal sanitation. We must remember that inside cleanliness is more important than outside, because the skin does not absorb impurities to contaminate the blood, while the pores in the thirty feet of bowels do.

BY H. M. PHILLIPS.

Giving to the cause of the Lord is a great thing, but seldom is it practiced as it should be. There seems to be no limit or end to giving, for the need is ever present; and the more you give, the more you can give, for you get in practice and it becomes an easy matter. The church at Miami, Fla., is not rich nor large-about fifty members-but it is liberal when the need is seen. Here are some late acts of this body: About three weeks ago fifty-one deliars and twenty-one cents was given for the orphans at Bowling Green, Ky.; two or three weeks before fifty dollars was contributed for the church at Washington, D. C.; a week ago thirty-two dollars and fifty cents was given for Brother C. S. Osterhus. who lost his home by fire; then five dollars each month is given for foreign missions. So we, being in the habit of giving and practicing for a while, got ready for the giving last night. We needed three rooms for class work, which were to cost seven hundred dollars. So to raise that was the task. The baskets were passed and about eighteen dollars was lacking. We went again, and got about seventeen dollars more than we asked; so I had to tell the brethren to quit, for we had enough and too much already. We will start to build to-morrow. Now did you ever have such to happen? It is the first time in my experience to see a congregation give more than was needed to build. But it really did happen here. This is a fine example, to my mind, how the church ought to go about the Lord's work. No outside begging, no assessing, no long waiting, but just a freewill offering Brethren, go thou, and do likewise; it will do you good.

Rheumatism and Indigestion.

Practically all physicians and medical writers are agreed that there is a close relationship between indigestion and rheumatism. This view is sub-stantiated by the fact that Shivar Spring Water, which is probably the best American mineral water for dyspepsia and indigestion, relieves rheu-matism and the rheumatoid diseases, such as gout, sciatica, neuralgia, and nervous headache. All of these dis-eases are probably related and all are probably due, in whole or in part, to imperfect digestion or to imperfect assimilation of food. Physicians who have studied this water and who have observed its effects in their practice believe that it relieves these maladies by rendering the digestion complete and perfect and thereby preventing the formation of those poisons which inflame the joints and irritate the nerves, and also by eliminating, through the kidneys, such poisons as have already been formed.

The following letters are interesting In this connection:

In this connection:

Dr. Crosby, a South Carolina physician. writes: "I have tested your Spring Water in several cases of rheumatism, chronic indiseation, kidney and bladder troubles, and in nervous and sick headaches, and find that it has acted nicely in each case, and I believe that, if used continuously for a reasonable time, it will give permanent relief. It will purify the blood relieve debility, stimulate the action of the liver, kidneys, and bladder, aiding them in throwing off all poisonous matter."

Dr. Avant, of Savannah, writes: "I suffered for years with a most aggravating form of stomach disorder, and consulted a number of our best local physicians; went to Baitimore and consulted specialists there; and still I was not benefited. I had about despaired of living, when I began to use Shivar Spring Water, and in a short time was entirely relieved."

Mr. Rhodes, of Virginia, writes: "Please send me ten gailons of Shivar Spring Weter quickly. I want it for rheumatism. I know of several who were relieved of rheumatism with this water."

Editor Cunningham writes: "The water has done me more good than any medicine I have ever taken for rheumatism. I am entirely free from pain."

Mr. McClam, of South Carolina, writes: "My wife has been a sufferer from rheumatism, and, after drinking twenty gallons of your Mineral Water, was entirely relieved of the horrible disease."

Mr. Carter, of Virginia, writes: "Mrs. Carter has had enlarged Joints upon her hands, caused by rheumatism. Shivar Spring Water removed every trace of the enlargement. The water is simply excellent."

Many of the congregations have already written to Sister Northcut asking her for permission to contribute to this monument because of the much good he accomplished while laboring among them. The monument has already been selected by his wife, and it is something nice. I am sure every one contributing to this cause will be proud to visit the cemetery at Tracy City and see it. I am asking every congregation that he has labored with in each State to send a contribution to me at Decherd, Tenn. EAT LESS AND TAKE SALTS FOR KIDNEYS

Take a Glass of Salts Before Break-fast if Your Back Hurts or Bladder Bothers You.

The American men and women must guard constantly against kidney trouble, because we eat too much and all our food is rich. Our blood is filled with uric acid, which the kidneys strive to filter out; they weaken from over work, become sluggish, the elimina tive tissues clog, and the result is kidney trouble, bladder weakness, and a general decline in health.

When your kidneys feel like lumps of lead, your back hurts, or the urine is cloudy, full of sediment, or you are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night; if you suffer with sick headache or dizzy, nervous spells, acid stomach, or you have rheumatism when the weather is bad, get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days, and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate clogged kidneys, to neutralize the acids in the urine so it no longer is a source of irritation, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, cannot injure, makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water beverage, and belongs in every home, because nobody can make a mistake by having a good kidney flushing any time.

The Romantic Story of Southland's Favorite Shoe, EzWear.

Some five years ago, a prominent citizen of South Carolina, visiting New York on important business, chanced to meet the maker of a shoe built on new and unusual lines; an enthusiastic admirer of its most distinctive features, ease and comfort, had suggested the name EzWear; it was promptly adopted. The business man from premptly adopted. The business man from the South, knowing how welcome such a shoe would be in his part of the country, urged that its remarkable qualities, including not only comfort, but style, durability and economy, be made known there. That this has been effectively done is proven by the enormous demand that has sprung up in the South for EzWear shoes. It is said that its sale there during the last twelve months has increased fully three hundred per cent. The distributor, Mr. J. R. Simon, of 1589 Broadway, Brooklyn N. Y., says that all who wish to know about a shoe that combines all worth-while shoe qualities, may have a copy of his money-saving shoe book for the asking.

"It Is More Blessed to Give Than to Receive.

We never know how much happiness an encouraging word will create. Little did the editor dream when he sent the Gospel Advocate to an invalid sister for a year that he would receive a letter like the following. We omit the name and address of the beneficiary:

Tenn., February 4, 1919 .-A. B. Lipscomb, editor Gospel Advo-cate, Nashville, Tenn.—My Dear Sir: I have just been referred to the following most beautiful and touching letter penned by you:

"Nashville, Tenn. Mrs. A, Tenn.—Dear Sister: As a little token of our esteem, we have marked your paper paid up to January 22, 1920, free of charge. We do not wish you to be without it. We hope by that time you will be feeling better every way.

"Yours fraternally,
[Signed] "A. B. Lipscomb."

This was an act of yours that merits much and means more than words can express. On February 22, 1906, Mrs. became afflicted from a hurt and has been bedridden for these long thirteen years. I have made a practice of visiting her in her sickness during all this time, and have averaged of late years, I should say, twice a week, and during this time her life has reflected sunshine and courage and has been a stimulus to others to battle for the right, and without complain-She has borne her afflictions patiently and with fortitude, and her example has been such as to lend inspiration to those coming in contact with her everyday life and a beacon light to the worth of Christianity. During this time she has been a subscriber to your valuable paper, and by dint of hard application has managed to take it at times when it seemed impossible to do so; and she has pleaded its cause and worth to others; and I do not remember that I have ever found her alone that I did not see her reading either the Bible or the Gospel Advocate, and always found one or both lying on the bed beside her. She has made sacrifices to take and pay for the Gospel Advocate. She has talked it all these years, and oftentimes gave the paper to me and others to read. It has given her the consolation greatest during these years, and has been a solace to her and armed her with courage to fight on against all odds, so far as this life is concerned, and brightened her prospeets for the life beyond. And just as clouds hung heaviest over her physical life here, and as she lay on her bed in the deep of winter while all things were fitted to add to her sadness, and while realizing that force of circumstances had impelled her to undergo the crucial ordeal of writing you to discontinue the Gospel Advocate for the time, and as the cruel hand of fate was thus sealing the decree, a rift in the clouds appeared and the sunlight came to view again and found way to her heart and soul and her hope was strengthened. Tears trickled from her eyes as she broke the seal of the letter and read the above lines of yours, and apparently a new lease of life possessed her, and happiness unbounded; and now, through the chill of winter in the mountains far out, in her Christian home, she will be seen with the loved Gospel Advocate and Bible as her constant companions. making light the burdens and tessening the ills to flesh-she will enter last days as the happiest-and all for this favor of yours. No goal could supply the appreciation nor wealth counteract the influence.

I was not asked to write this letter, but the thought of it all just made such an impression upon me that I could not refrain. No greater blessing could you have given her than this act of yours; and while I am a member of the Baptist Church, such experiences as these, and the notice taken thereof, I must say, as indicated by your act toward her, and hers as a result, is the londest preaching on earth that can be given an outsider.

Surely, Christianity means something, and is most forcibly reflected in personal acts. Sincerely yours, L. V. WOODLEE.

In Memory of Douglas Patterson, BY E. A. E.

On the fifth Sunday in last December I preached in the courthouse to the small and struggling congregation of Paris, Tenn., and it was my good pleasure to stop with Brother and Sister J. A. Patterson. There were then three bright children-one daughter and two sons-in that home. filling it with sunshine and gladness. poetry and music. All were interested in the work we were doing in the courthouse. On January 19, at 10:20 o'clock, the youngest one, Douglas, eight years of age, succumbed to pneumonia following a severe attack of influenza and passed to the great beyond.

Douglas loved to sing, loved Bible stories, and felt an interest in the congregation and its work to a remarkable degree for one of his years. The day before he died and while conscious he repeated the twenty-third Psalm.

It is a source of great grief to his parents and his surviving little sister and brother to give him up; but how precious and bright are the promises and hope of the gospel in reference to him! He is as a flower removed from the home garden to grow and bloom in the garden of God on high. Without personal sin, innocent and pure, he was ready for the presence of God.

Suffer little children, and forbid them not, to come unto me: for to such belongeth the kingdom of heaven. (Matt. 19: 14.)

A good friend of Douglas and the family, who lived a close neighbor for seven or eight years, having heard of his death, started to send five dollars to purchase flowers for his burial, but changed her purpose, saying she knew Douglas would prefer that the five dollars go toward buying food for starving children over the sea; and she sent it with the request, in harmony, as she thought, with the little one's feelings, to send it on to the needy. So it goes through this paper on its happy mission. We are glad to record this.

In Christian love we sympathize deeply with these parents and surviving children; we weep with those who weep. In their own faith and trust, these parents have already expressed their resignation to this bereavement and declared, with David, that while they cannot bring Douglas back, they can go to him. May God's grace be sufficient for them!

My First Visit to the Church at Tullahoma, Tenn.

BY ISAAC C. HOSKINS.

On Saturday afternoon, February 1, I accompanied Brother Smoot to his home, where I was hospitably entertained till Monday morning. Visiting the church Sunday morning, I found about fifty-five or sixty of the faithful, and among the number our venerable brother, J. D. Floyd, of whom I had often read in the Gospel Advocate-a grand, good man and a falthful preacher of the gospel. He is somewhat feeble in body, but active and alert in mind, preaching occasionally. I met another patriarch-Brother Camp, who has been a reader of the Advocate for nearly forty years, and at whose former home, in Southern Indiana. Brother Floyd held a meeting fortyone years ago, and now they both live in Tullahoma. I met Brother Moore and a nephew of Brother J. C. Mc-Quiddy and many others, all of whom gave me a royal welcome. The brethren meet in a very neat house with a seating capacity of about two hundred. Everything is paid for, and they have an excellent opportunity to grow. A good prospect is before them. May Heaven's blessings attend them.

The Master's Vineyard

Kentucky.

Van Buren, February 17.—I am recovering from a light attack of "flu," and am glad to be out again. I could not fill my appointment at Van Buren yesterday, but Brother L. G. Milton, our bank cashier gave an interesting our bank cashier, gave an interesting lesson. I am very anxious to have some seasoned man come and take my place in this part of the vineyard when I received several letters I leave: some time ago, but some matters had not fully developed and I had to dismiss the matter at that time. No, we miss the matter at that time. No, we are not seeking a salary man or place hunter, for we believe he is a curse to the church. We want the man who seeks "first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness." These brethren where I labor will give the temporal necessities. Now, if you can give the proper references as to consecration, ability, etc., we want to hear from you. Please send stamps when writing. Write me, and I will give you a full description of the work.—R. A. Craig.

Tennessee.

Cleveland, February 17.—At yester-day's services the attendance was better and the interest deepening. The Bible classes are getting larger each succeeding Lord's day. One feature of special interest is our Bible class for grown people. Much interest is being manifested in this class. Attention has been called to the work here time and again, and we want to still keep it before the brotherhood. Cleveland is the capital of Bradley County, twenty-nine miles above Chattanooga toward Knoxville, on the Southern toward Knoxville, on the Southern Railroad. It is a beautiful town of ten thousand or more people, and is quite a manufacturing and business town for one of its size. For the benefit of those who might be interested I give the following list: One stove foundry, one hollow-ware foundry, one large woolen mill, three hosiery mills, one coffin and casket factory, three one coffin and casket factory, three lumber plants, two flouring mills, one overalls factory, one large chair fac-tory, one canning factory, one excel-sior factory, one ice and cold-storage plant, the home office of the Tennessee plant, the home office of the Tennessee Power Company, eight garages, two newspapers, two large public-school buildings, one magnificient county high-school building, and Centenary College (a fine school plant for girls). The church of Christ is not strong either numerically or financially, though there is some as good material though there is some as good material as can be found anywhere. A neat church building has been put up. It is of brick and will be very nice when completed. While we meet in it and it is very comfortable, yet it is not quite completed and there is a note of about five hundred dollars still due. Brother Fred M. Little's family is still here, though he has been forced to look to business pursuits that carry him away from here all the time. I am hoping that he will soon be able to return and join us in the work of building up the cause here. Brother C. W. Phillips lives here, though he works in Chattanoga through the week and preaches every Lord's day somewhere. He is a good man and He is a good man and somewhere. a good preacher and should be kept in

What Doctor Pierce Has Done For Humanity!

BY DOCTOR CRIPPS.

It has always seemed to me that Dr. Pierce, of Buffalo, N. Y., should be placed near the top when a list of America's great benefactors is written. He studied and conquered human diseases to a degree that few realize. Whenever he found a remedy that overcame disease, he at once announced it in the newspapers and told where it could be bought at a small price. He did not follow the usual custom of keeping the ingredients secret, so that the rich only could afford to buy the medicine, but openly printed the name of each root and herb he used. And so to-day the names of Dr. Pierce and his medicines are widely known, and they stand for better health and better

One of this great physician's most successful remedies is known as Doctor Pierce's Pleasant Pellets. These are little, sugar-coated pills, composed of Mayapple, leaves of aloe, root of jalapthings that Nature grows in the ground. These Pellets are safe because they move the bowels gently, leaving no bad after-effects, as so many pills do. Very often they make a person who takes them feel like a new man or woman, for they cleanse the intestines of hard, decayed and poisonous matter that accumulates when one is costive. If you are constipated, by all means go to your druggist and get some of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets. They may prove to be the very thing your system requires to make you well and happy.

This destructive scurf robs the hair of its luster, its strength, and its very life; and if not overcome, it produces a feverishness and itching of the scalp; the hair roots famish, loosen, and die; then the hair falls out fast. In raising this money, I have received with donations many good letters containing good wishes and prayers that the debt would be paid. Something more is involved in membership in a church than mere formal union; there should be a consciousness of responsibility for its edification, extension, and perpetuation.

Each dose of two tablets of Nuxated Iron contains one and one-half grains of organic iron in the form of iron peptonate, of a special specific standard, which in our opinion possesses superior qualities to any other known form of iron. By using other makes of Iron Pertonate we could have put the same quantity of methal fron in the tablets at less than one-fourth the cost to us, and by using metallic fron we could have accomplished the same thing at less than one-welfth the cost; but by so doing we must have most certainly impaired their therapeutic efficaey. Give-rophosphates used in Nuxated Iron is one of the most expensive tonic ingredients known. It is especially recommended to build up the nerve force and thereby increase brain power, as give-rophosphates are said to soutain phosphorus in that particular state so similar to that in which it is found in the nerve and brain cells of men.

As will be seen from the above, two important ingredients of Nuxated Iron (from Peptonate and Glycerophosphates) are very expensive products as compared with most other tones.

Under such circumstances the temptation to adulteration and substitution by unscrupulous persons, is very great and the public is hereby warned to be careful and see every bottle is plainty labeled "Nuxated from" by the Dae Health Laboratories, Paris, London and Detroit, U. Nuxated Iron will not belp you.

Manufacturer's Note—Nuxated Iron is not a secret remedy, but one which is well known to drugglats everywhere. Unlike the older inorganic iron products, it is easily assimilated, does not injure the teeth, make them black, nor upset the stomach. Nuxated from is not recommended for use in cases of acute illness, but only as a tonic, strength and blood builder. (In case of illness allows consult your family physician and be guilded by his advice.) If in doubt as to whether or, not you need a bonic, ask your doctor, as we do not wrish to sell you Nuxated Iron if you do not require it. If you should use it and it does not help you, notify us and we will return your money. It is sold by all drugglats.

English Lavender and Mint.

The great secret of English lavender and mint lies in the soil-a light, friable, chalky soil, not often found in a climate congenial to both plants, yet essential to a perfect result. Each, in fact, may be grown with a certain measure of success on hill, in marshland, or meadow, for both are hardy, and when well rooted are nearly impervious to drought and frost.-Exchange.

G. S. Used by Soldiers at Camp Hancock With Splendid Results.

W. H. Morse, M.D., 449 Zion Street, Hartford, Conn. Dr., Gross, Little Rock, Ark.
Dear Sir: I inclose a consulting chemist's certificate on your G. S., which came to my notice as the "Great Stuff" used by our boys at Camp Hancock. That which they said made me curious to know the "why" and "wherefore" of its chemical character and therapy. The certificate states results.

I have said to the boys that at the camp, or anywhere else, where the renal, hepatic, and splenetic functions become deranged, if G. S. is used, "Hie Habitat Felicitas" may be written over the door.

Finally, I congratulate you on your preparation, and am sure that, with it in the house, one will not find any pleasure in having rheumatism, gout, or a billous spell.

W. H. Morse, M.D., Consulting Chemist. This is to certify that I have had the opportunity of examining the preparation, G. derangements are indicated by rneumatic, rneumatoid, and gouty disorder.

The exact cause of rheumatism is unknown, but it is generally supposed to be due to an excess of urle acid in the blood. That excess occurs when the functions of the kidneys, liver, and spicen are deranged.

Therefore, and thus freet these functions, and thus frees the

Therefore, as G. S. restores those functions, and thus frees the blood of uric acid and all else that is contaminating, it stands to reason that it is remedial of rheumatism, gout, lithemia, urleacidemia, and auto-infection from all suboxidation products of the uric acid type.

Respectfully and heartily submitted, W. H. MORSE.

Edifying as the Need May Be

The Lesson of Cost.

Viewed from another angle, the most colossal feature of the great war was its cost. Financially speaking, it cost so much that it was hardly possible to estimate the tremendous expenditures of a single day. Suffice it to say that our people have learned to think in terms of millions where formerly they thought in terms of thousands, and in terms of billions where formerly they thought in terms of millions. The people of Tennessee, always generous in providing for the establishment of philanthropic institutions, have risen to such amazing heights of liberality in the purchase of Liberty bonds as to excite the wonder and admiration of the whole country.

I am told that Louis Hill, of the Great Northern Railway, has over the desk in his private office a picture of a cow. "It is the only common cow that has ever been killed on our tracks," explains Mr. Hill. "Thousands have been killed, and we have always found, when we came to adjust the loss, that the animals were full-blooded prize winners. But one farmer was frank enough to admit that his cow was just a common cow. That is her picture over the desk. I am proud of it." This story reminds us of the high cost of living during the war. Nothing was so common as to be cheap.

But our dearest price has been in the blood of our sons—a sacrifice that can never be told in dollars and cents; one that is spelled by tears of anguish, by broken hearts, and by shortened lives. What lesson should the tremendous cost of this war bring to the church? Is it not the lesson that everything worth while has been accomplished by paying the price? This is true even of the common commodities of life. Did you ever think of the hundreds of hands that bear the food before you eat it? Did you ever think of the sweat and the blood that are woven into the texture of the garments you wear? Of pale, nervous women and even children toiling far into the night? Think of medicine—of the lives that have been exhausted in labe-ratories to find remedies for our physical ills. Think of invention—of perfecting the aëroplane, for example. Already they are carrying the mails, and within a short time, no doubt, they will be transporting passengers from one city to another; but before that time some must fall to the earth and die. There must be the price of human suffering before these human birds can fly to perfection.

What does it cost to be faithful? It cost Abraham the yielding up of his only son; it cost Esther the risk of her life; it cost Daniel imprisonment in the lions' den; it cost Stephen the death of a martyr; it cost Peter the same; it cost Jesus his life. What does it cost you?

Surely we cannot find a grander principle to govern us in our service to the church and to the world than that enunciated by David when he was commanded to build an altar on the threshing floor of Araunah the Jebusite. The heathen king was magnanimous and offered to give David not only the threshing floor, but also the wood and the oxen for the sacrifice. But David, unlike the average man who seeks to worship God as cheaply as possible, said: "Nay; but I will verily buy it of thee at a price; neither will I offer burnt offerings unto Jehovah my God which cost me nothing." (2 Sam. 24: 24.)

The Lesson of Liberty.

Now that the war is over, the one great result hoped for by the victorious armies is spelled in one word—liberty. To-day the human family is thinking more of liberty than over before. Freedom is the keynote of every national anthem. In France they are singing the "Marseillaise." Our British cousins join in one mighty chorus:

> "While Britannia rules the waves, Britons never can be slaves."

And here in the United States there is no hamlet so remote but what we do not hear them singing:

"My country, 'tis of thee, Sweet land of Hberty!"

Others, perhaps, can speak more consistently, and certainly with greater eloquence, of this kind of freedom Therefore, I shall not dwell upon it further than to say that I appreciate the glorious privilege of being an American citizen and believe the sentiment which says:

"Better to sit in Freedom's hall With cold, damp feet and moldering wall, Than bend the neck and bow the knee In the proudest palace of slavery."

But shall not this great world cry for liberty make us more eager for the "glorious liberty of the children of God?" (Rom. 8: 21.) That there is such liberty cannot be gainsaid by any faithful student of the word. The possession of it is one of the distinctive marks of the Christian religion. Jesus makes it an object of promise, saying: "If therefore the Son of man shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed." (John 8: 36.) Paul guards it with righteous jealousy in his warning against false brethren "who came in privily to spy out our liberty which we have in Christ Jesus." (Gal. 2: 4.) Again, he writes: "For freedom did Christ set us free: stand fast therefore, and be not entangled again in a yoke of bondage," (Gal. 5: 1.) James (I: 25) also gives us his contribution along this line: "But he that looketh into the perfect law, the law of liberty, and so continueth, being not a hearer that forgetteth but a doer that worketh, this man shall be blessed in his doing." There is no liberty that can be compared with the freedom of the spirit, the escape from the bondage of sin.

"In Every Loss Some Gain to Match."

George Alfred Townsend tells of a visit he paid not long ago to the ground upon which the battle of Bull Run was fought: "I saw pure, delicate flowers growing out of empty ammunition boxes; I saw a wild rose thrusting up its graceful head through the top of a broken drum, which doubtless sounded its last charge in that battle; I saw a sweet-scented scarlet verbena peeping out of the fragment of an exploded shell, in which strange pot it was planted." Even so shall the beautiful and graceful ever grow out of the horrid and terrible things that transpire in this changing, but ever-advancing, world. Men shall "rise on stepping-stones of their dead selves to higher [and better] things." The loss sustained in this great war is beyond human description; it cannot be conceived of. But if we learn and apply the lessons of our chastening, it is glorionsly possible > "To find in every loss some gain to match, Or stretch through time a hand to catch The far-on interest of tears."

Young.

BY E. A. E.

"At rest" is a very significant and quite an appropriate inscription on the casket or on the tembstone of one who has been as busy, generous, and useful as was Sister Young. It is meaningless, with a tinge of irony, too, to write "at rest" over the body of one who never in life did anything of real worth for the good of humanity and in the fear of God.

While many men and not a few women in every generation are unfaithful and untrue, wicked and ungodly, and great numbers whose names are on some church roll are frivolous and worldly, are covetous and unrighteous, or are lukewarm and self-satisfied; yet, since the life and death of the righteous Abel or the faithful Abraham and his godly wife, there have been true and righteous men and women on earth upon whom the Father has bestowed "his precious and exceeding great promises." From every age have gone up "the faithful few" who will form a great multitude, which no man could number, out of every nation and of all tribes and peoples and tongues." who stand "before the throne and before the Lamb, arrayed in white robes," with "palms in their hands," and who "cry with a great voice, saying, Salvation unto our God who sitteth on the throne, and unto the Lamb." All this is true of all human beings who in the imperfections and weakness of humanity faithfully serve God. All who endure to the end. Jesus declares, shall be saved. Then weak and frail human beings can be saved.

Many are the encouraging, hopeful, beautiful, and, therefore, true things written in the Bible concerning all who die in the Lord. The righteous and holy will be righteous and holy still, and yet more so.

Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord from henceforth: yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; for their works follow with them. (Rev. 14: 13.)

Precious in the sight of Jehovah is the death of his saints, (Ps. 116; 15.)

God "giveth unto his beloved sleep." (Ps. 127: 2.)

Jesus said of Jairus' daughter: "Weep not: for she is not dead, but sleepeth." Of Lazarus he said: "Our friend Lazarus is fallen asleep; but let us go, that I may awake him out of sleep."

But we would not have you ignorant, brethren, concerning them that fall asleep; that ye sorrow not, even as the rest, who have no hope. For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also that are fallen asleep in Jesus will God bring with him. (1 Thess. 4: 13, 14; see verses 15-17.)

All the righteous dead are in the keeping of God, whom he will bring with Christ when Christ comes.

After saying this Paul adds: "Wherefore comfort one another with these words." God has not appointed us, if we are his children, "unto wrath, but unto the obtaining of salvation through our Lord Jesus Christ, who died for us, that, whether we wake or sleep [are alive on the earth or are dead when he comes—there is no difference], we should live together with him." Then he again adds: "Wherefore exhort [comfort] one another, and build each other up, even as also ye do." (See 1 Thess, 5: 1-11.)

There cannot be a more beautiful, a truer, a more comforting, and a more glorious funeral sermon or obituary than that which is contained in 1 Thess, 4: 13 to 5: 11 and in 1 Cor. 15. The Christian is not afraid to die, because "hope putteth not to shame;" because "there is no fear in love," and "perfect love casteth out fear;" and because God has given him the victory over death and the grave through our Lord Jesus Christ. The Christian rejoices always "in hope of the glory of God."

In 2 Cor. 5: 1-10 are other triumphant and victorious declarations of being "at home with the Lord" when that which is mortal has been "swallowed up of life" and the Christian, upon the dissolution of "the earthly house" of his tabernacle, has entered into "the building from God, a house not made with hands, eternal, in the heavens." This blessedness and glory depend upon being well pleasing unto God during the earthly life. We cannot doubt the promises of God, which are yea and amen in Christ, if we comply with the conditions upon which they rest.

Like the mellow, golden glow of the sunset, precious memories linger behind the departure of such a mother, friend, and neighbor as Sister Young.

Rhoda Foster was born on December 2, 1841; was married to D. H. Young on September 8, 1864; through faith in God and Jesus her Savior and in penitence was baptized into Christ on September 15, 1867; became the mother of nine children—six sons and three daughters, and died on November 23, 1918. From these dates we see she had lived her threescore years and ten, and by reason of strength seven more. Four sons and the three daughters survive her. Brother Young preceded her into the great beyond ten years.

With her literary education, her chief instruction and training were received in the school of Christ with the Bible as her textbook. As she looked into the period law of liberty, she was not a hearer who forgets, but a doer of the word of God, and was blessed in her obedience to it. In all relationships of life-wife, mother, relative, neighbor-she was true and faithful, regular in her attendance upon the public services of the church, and active in the discharge of private Christian duties. She grew in grace and the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. She was kind and charitable. She and her husband appreciated true education and made an earnest effort to give to their children such an education as would fit them for usefulness in life. Almost all, if not all, their children attended Burritt College, at Spencer, Tenn., and are now filling useful places in life.

Sister Young's life was such as the world needs to-day and must have or the race will go to destruction.

The Creator of man and woman knew when he created them what spheres he wanted each to occupy and what missions he wanted each to fill. To say that he does not know this now and that his word, governing these spheres and missions and relationships, has failed is to impeach his wisdom. To say that woman in the present-day enlightenment and civilization (?) has outgrown her Godordained mission is to say she has outgrown the Bible, Christ, the Holy Spirit, and God. Let the women, blinded by the glamour of "woman's rights" outside of her Godappointed sphere and so blinded by the god of this world that the light of the gospel of God's Son cannot shine into their hearts, believe this if they choose, but Sister Young believed the word of God. All godly women now believe the word of God. God knew or he did not know. If he did not know, then let women throw the Bible aside as a last year's almanac, and eat, drink, and be merry, as hosts of them are doing, for to-morrow they die. Their choice is between the Bible and the wisdom and foolishness and wickedness of this world.

Sister Young tried to fill the mission for which God created her, and those who knew her best know how well she succeeded. She was a home builder and home keeper. She was modest and humble and clothed herself in modest apparel. She endeavored to cultivate the adornments of heart and life pleasing to God. The heart of her husband safely trusted in her. Her children rose up and called her blessed. When young and helpless, they never feared the cold of winter and the pinch of poverty because of the willing working hands of a loving mother and the industry and care of a watchful father. Sister Young was strong in body and mind as well as in the Lord and the power of his might. While governed by the same principles and filled with the same spirit and obedient to the same Lord, not many women can do the work at home which Sister Young did, because they are not physically able.

Her brother-in-law writes of her as follows:

I do not know of a woman who comes any nearer up to the standard you held up in your funeral sermon than Rhoda did. She visited the sick and the poor; and when she went to see them, it was to take them something or in some other way to do something for them. When we were all in the country and my children were small, they never visited her home that she did not give them something to bring back with them, and that was the case with many others. In rearing her large family, she rarely ever had any outside help in her housework. Much of the time she milked from two to a half dozen cows, and, besides supplying her own family, had milk and butter to sell. She was from home less than most women I know.

This tells the story of every falthful wife and godly mother—a worker at home. All cannot do the same amount of work, mental or physical; but all, whether in the country or in the crowded city, can live the same true and patient, earnest and home-keeping lives.

Sister Young was my personal friend, and I am glad to be known as her friend and a friend of her family. No tie can be stronger than pure and unselfish friendship, except Christian fellowship.

> Blest be the tie that binds Our hearts in Christian love; The fellowship of kindred minds Is like to that above.

We share our mutual woes, Our mutual burdens bear, And often for each other flows The sympathizing tear.

I am not saying that Sister Young made no mistakes and had no faults. Certainly not; for we all have faults and make mistakes. But she had access through Christ to the throne of God and the promise that when she confessed to the Father her faults he would forgive.

She leaves behind a noble example for her children and a Christian influence over all who associated with her. Let all cherish her memory and endeavor by the grace of God to meet her in the better land.

Uninspired Interpreters.

BY F. W. SMITH.

The prophetic interpreters—men who are "cock sure" that they can interpret to perfection the unfulfilled prophecies of both the Old Testament and the New Testament—are constantly getting themselves in a tangle, crossing and recrossing their own tracks. As a sample of this superior (?) wisdom, note the following:

The Great Tribulation (Matt 24: 19-21).—The time referred to is the beginning of the unexampled tribulation that is to break upon the world, upon Judah and Jerusalem especially, just before the glorious appearing of Jesus Christ. (Matt 24: 29, 30.) The ones to whom the Lord gives this counsel of immediate flight are those believers in him who shall be residing in Judea at that time. When they shall see "the abomination" (the idol image) that maketh desolate standing in the then reconstructed temple, they must flee without delay. The country, being under control again of the Jews, regathered in unbelief (as we see them regathering to-day), would be under Jewish law; the Sabbath day, therefore, would offer little chance for quick departure; so likewise the winter would be an unfavorable time for such sudden flight; and women who are with child or have the care of infants at that time would be certain to be overtaken, because unable to flee as fast as others who have no impediments. A similar situation was predicted for the destruction of Jerusalem which occurred in A.D. 70, in almost identical language. (Luke 21: 20-24.) But that was only a type and foreshadowing of the last distress of Jerusalem in the great tribulation. This tribulation is referred to in the Old Testament, in Dan, 12: 1 and Jer. 30: 7. It is the last stage of Israel's trouble, and is followed by their final and lasting deliverance. (Comp. Zech. 14.)

This wonderful information was given in response to a query by a sister seeking light on the passages regarding "the great tribulation." It shall be my purpose to point out the contradictions, inconsistencies, and absurdities of the author of the foregoing.

1. This same writer heretofore taught with reference to the manner in which the saints would escape "the great tribulation" of Matt. 24: 21, the following: "From this terrible testing time the faithful Christians (these wise virgins) are delivered. How is told us in 1 Thess. 4: 16, 17-an event that necessarily precedes Christ's glorious appearing with his saints. (Col. 3: 4.)" But it was shown then by surface facts, as I shall now show by the same facts, how he perverts the word of God. Mark you, 1 Thess. 4: 16, 17 says that when the Lord comes the saints shall be caught up from the earth "to meet the Lord in the air;" while, in order to escape the tribulation mentioned in Matt. 24: 21, they were told to "flee to the mountain." He now informs the inquiring sister that they were to escape by "fleeing to the mountains;" and she would have a perfect right to ask which position is true.

2. The "abomination" of this prophecy is converted into an "idol image" in order to fill a gap that will aid in making out a theory that has no higher origin than a fertile imagination. Suppose it should be admitted that the word "abomination" is sometimes used in connection with "idol images," then what? Would that prove that the idol itself was the abomination? The very meaning of the word "abomination" precludes any such idea, for it means that which is "impure, detestable, shamefully wicked," etc., qualities which cannot be predicated of inanimate objects such as wood and stone, out of which idols were made. The abomination consisted in the worship of idols; hence, those who worshiped such things were an abomination in the sight of God. Certain kinds of fish were an abomination to God's people (Lev. 11: 10). because to eat them was a violation of God's law; but it was the act of the people in eating that caused the abomination. God created the fish, and all his works were good. The prayers of certain people are said to be an abomination in the sight of God. (Prov. 28: 9.) In the light of these plain facts, it is a perversion of God's word to make the "abomination" of Matt. 24: 15 an "idol image" placed in a "reconstructed temple" in Jerusalem. The "abomination" of this prophecy was to make desolate both the people and the land of Judea, a thing which could only be done by the armies of the Gentile or heathen nation-viz., the Roman armies. The article under review assumes that "the holy place" must necessarily mean the temple in Jerusalem; but since the city was called "the holy city," and the land of Palestine "the holy land," what ground is there for saying it must be the templey Ah! A theory has been set on foot regarding certain things that must transpire just before the coming of Christ, and "missing links" must be supplied, even to the "reconstruction" of the temple in Jerusalem.

3. The temple Itself, as well as the sacrificial offerings made there, were all typical-one typical of the church of Christ, the others typical of the sacrificial offering of Christ himself on the cross: When the things typified became realities, then the types ceased to have any significance at all other than matters of history. Notwithstanding this fact, we are gravely told that God is going to so favor the Jews as to enable them to "regather" in Judea that they may rebuild the temple and reinstate animal sacrifice! And all for what purpose, may I ask? Is Christ to be crucified again? The reestablishment of animal sacrifice could have no other meaning; and yet the Scriptures declare that Christ has suffered once for all. Any interpretation of prophecy that has God favoring and leading the Jews to reestablish a system of religion that was typical and shadowy, that served its purpose and was done away by divine legislation, is so ridiculous that we wonder how sensible people give it one favorable thought There are at least twelve million Jews in the world, and the land of Palestine could not support one-third of them. Besides this, the Jews are a commercial race, and where the flag of commerce floats you will find him. That many of the poorer class of Jews from the lands of persecution will go to Palestine may be true, but that such is the fulilliment of divine prophecy has never been proved, and neither can it be done.

There is absolutely no difference between Luke 21: 20:24 and Matt. 24: 15:30. They are, beyond any doubt, parallel passages, giving an account of the same things. It is a shame to have churches rent asunder over men's teaching these foolish and absurd theories.

What About It?

BY J. D. WALLENG.

What about the tremendous problems that will meet the carnest Christian this year? There will be many, and they will be weighty. The one great purpose of a union of all Christians should and will engage the interest and labors of many, but the prospects seem as gloomy as ever. In the Pathlinder of January 4 we read: "Platforms and creeds are broad and general in their terms, and they have to be in order to appeal to great masses of people, but even then there are all grades and shades of belief. It is true that these multifarious denominations and divisions may be necessary in order to accommodate all the different types of minds. To one person a given doctrine will seem indisputable gospel, while it may strike another as being so absurd as not to be entertained for a moment."

Why have "platforms and creeds" at all? Why not teach the world that Jesus Christ is the Christian's platform and creed and that he needs no other? The Bible contains his rule of action, and is broad enough for all men of faith and general enough to include all who will " fear God, and keep his commandments." The only reason that there are "all grades and shades of belief" is that there are all "grades and shades" of "platforms and creeds" to produce as many "grades and shades of belief." If men had only one creed, they would have only one faith. No. all "these multifarious denominations and divisions" are not "necessary in order to accommodate all the different types of minds;" but all minds, of all types, should be taught that "there is one body, and one Spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling; one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in all" (Eph. 4: 4-6); and that each mind, of whatsoever type, must accommodate itself to the one faith and be content to dwell in the one body. Under such conditions the one gospel will strike all alike as being indisputable, and none will, therefore, for one moment ever have an idea that it is in the remotest senseabsurd.

But the article continues: "Now, if people, being so different, are still able to harmonize sufficiently to agree on general purposes of good, why cannot they sacrifice their personal views a little more and consent to join in one grand unified army and present a united front against evil? As Lloyd George says, there are immunerable rivers and streams, but they all flow to the common sea. There should be a "common sea" of energy which all the forces of righteousness throughout the world could contribute to."

But if they all have one creed, one standard, and that Jesus, they will none of them have to sacrifice any personal views, for the very good reason that they will "all speak the same thing," and there will "be no divisions among them; but they will "be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment." (1 Cor. 1: 10.) They should, therefore, be joined "in one grand unified army, and present a united front against evil." "There are innumerable rivers and streams." But there is one way, and only one, to heaven. Jesus says: "I am the way." That way runs all the distance through the church, and is sustained by a "common sea of energy " contained in the gospel, unto which "all the forces of righteousness throughout the world can contribute." Why not all the world stop long enough to see the simplicity of the way? But the article goes on to say: "The tremendous problems of reconstruction which now confront the world are going to affect our churches, just as they will affect everything else. What about the returning soldiers? They have seen the benefits of cooperation and of having a common purpose. What will they think of churches that continue to haggie over fine points of doctrine and interpretation and that waste their strength on controversies and jealousies when there are such vast labors to be carried on in the world?"

The "tremendous problem" that now seems to confront the world is, how to get men to fit their ideas to the Bible, and not the Bible to their ideas. The Bible has too long been treated as If just any one could twist or change it to suit his peculiar ideas. It is to be wished that, in a reconstruction of things, some one may succeed in persnading the "returning soldiers" that "whosoever goeth enward and abideth not in the teaching of Christ, bath not God: he that abideth in the teaching, the same hath both the Father and the Son." (2 John 9.) In so doing they will not only see the benefits of, but realize, the "common purpose" of the gospel. In that event, there will be no churches haggling over "fine points" or anything else, and there will be no waste of time or strength over "controversies and jealousies," for none of these things will exist. "Returning soldiers" and all other good citizens will find cooperation and "common purpose" among all Christians, if they will go to the New Testament for their faith. O for the voice that can call the world to the open Bible, that the world through the open Book may see the unity there is in Christ Jesus! Just as the "returning soldiers have seen the benefits of cooperation and of having a common purpose," and this cooperation being through the supreme commander. Foch, so will they and all the world see the benefits of the "unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace" through the Lord Jesus Christ, if we are ever able to get the world to see that "these multifarious denominations" only gender strife and division. Suppose Pershing, Haig, Diaz, and others had handled the commands of Foch as the denominations handle the words of Jesus, would the war be over? Now, suppose all denominations should come together and receive the words of the Christ just as each nation of the allies received the commands of Foch; would there not be a world peace through the Lord Jesus Christ? What about it?

Madam Paderewski's Letter.

Through the kindness of her son, the Gospel Advocate is enabled to give to its readers an intensely interesting letter from Madam Paderewski, wife of the eminent musician, who is now the Polish premier. The letter follows:

Warsaw, January 9, 1919,-My Dear Son: At last I have an opportunity of communicating with you by letter and to tell you how much I miss you both.

Probably you have read in the papers about our trip A British cruiser landed us in Danzig. From the very moment we set foot on Polish soil worries and sorrows have not ceased to surround us. The unfriendly reception on the part of the Germans in Danzig, the verbal instructions received from a German general forbidding us to proceed to Posen, the bloody riots which occurred in Posen, which city we visited in spite of orders to the contrary-all these instances were but an illustration of the conditions existing in Poland even to-day.

In Posen the Hotel Bazar, wherein we stopped, was attacked by a German regiment with peculiar and special ferocity. Five dumdum bullets entered Mr. Paderewski's room. During five days we lived in a truly warlike atmos-The hotel was transformed into a redoubt. and ammunition were being carried to it day and night. In every window there was a machine gun, and we were defended by our dear Polish soldiers, who stood guard over us without a moment's respite. Most of these brave boys were still wearing the German army uniforms which the Germans had forcibly compelled them to wear during this war. Oftentimes without food, without any general to command them, they accomplished miracles nevertheless. It was these same Poles who had served in the German ranks against their will, who took Gnesno, Inowroclaw, and disarmed the German garrisons of occupation. And on the night of our departure from Posen they stormed Ostrow (the frontier town) in order that we might be the first ones to pass from one part of Poland to the other without having to undergo German inspection.

Neither pen nor words can describe adequately Mr. Paderewski's entry into Posen, Warsaw, and Cracow. He was greeted as a savior, a liberator. Such a greeting could only be given by a people whose lot had been slavery for over one hundred and forty years and which is coming over one hundred and forty years and which is coming back to life and is standing on the threshold of freedom. Here in Warsaw to-day the skies are black, as though prognosticating the approach of a storm. I feel terribly depressed. The population is without work, without bread, without any possibility of earning its livelihood, and, as a result, the cost of living is terribly high—higher than any one even in America could possibly imagine.

No relief in any shape from outside has reached us so far, although Mr. Kellog, of the American Commission, has arrived, and in spite of the fact that the British have also sent a mission to investigate the conditions. Plenty of investigating commissions, but no actual relief in sight. only trust rests in God, as usual, and that is my sole consolation.

Mr. Paderewski is overworked. He labors practically day and night, insisting upon reading himself every document he signs, preparing speeches, receiving delegations from every part of the country.

I am starting a home for disabled Polish soldiers, and am trying to organize all the Polish women into one large society, all of them without distinction as to creed or race, and am binding them into one fraternal relief organization under the name of Polish White Cross. Shall I succeed? That I shall know in a few days,

We arrived here without baggage, each one bringing only a small suit case. It looks as though we shall have to remain here until March, for there is so much work ahead of us and Mr. Paderewski cannot abandon his post. We travel in the private car of Ex-Governor General Besseler. Polish and foreign officers accompany us everywhere. Sentries stand at our door and watch over our It all seems like a fairy tale. What a pity that you could not be with us to witness the rebirth of our dearly beloved country!

When shall we see you again? It is our intention to return this summer to America, the country of freedom. am longing for California and its beautiful climate.

The skies are getting darker and darker, The storm is here. I am getting more and more depressed. Yesterday I had a terrible day. I visited the military hospitals where are lying the wounded soldiers brought back from Lemberg, and also the Polish prisoners of war whom Germany releases now in a condition beyond description. They arrive here half naked in unheated cattle cars, and so weakened by starvation that they have to be carried to the hospital. There are thousands and thousands of them, and we have no medicine, no hospital supplies worth speaking of. What there is of it must be bought by the ounce, when it is needed by the pound. My heart breaks when I think of it all.

Pray to God that he grants us to be together once more. HELENA PADEREWSKI.

Contributions for the Polish sufferers may be sent to A. B. Lipscomb, who will forward them to the Polish Victims' Relief Fund, of which Mr. Paderewski is chairman,

Attention, Sunday-School Teachers!

The conscientious teacher of the Bible is anxious to secure the best help available in the preparation of the lesson. Patient research not only improves and enriches the mind of the teacher, but makes the class work doubly interesting to the scholars. In addition to our quarterlies. we carry two excellent books that cover the International Sunday-school Lessons. 'The publishers of "Peloubet's Select Notes" claim that it is the "most valuable commentary in the world," because it is "scholarly, comprehensive, condensed, and practical." It covers every phase of the lesson, from treatment and explanation of text, with notes from the best commentators, to list of special books for further study along the lines of thought suggested.

"Tarbell's Teachers' Guide" is edited by Miss Martha Tarbell, Ph.D., and has been a general favorite for many years. The author has covered everything in the field of research and investigation that the enterprising teacher or scholar would like to know. Primary, Junior, Intermediate, Senior, and Bible-class teachers find in it full explanation of Bible texts, light upon difficult passages by the best biblical scholars, and discussion of present-day problems in teaching.

We will send either one of these valuable books for $1.25, postpaid; or, in combination with a new subscriber. we will send the Gospel Advocate for one year and either one of these commentaries for $3 to the same or separate addresses.

The Young People, edited by A. B. Lipscomb, is a highclass illustrated weekly of four pages. The editor's comments upon the lessons occupy one page. The price is fifty cents per single copy for a year, or five or more copies to one address for forty cents each,

Address your order to the McQuiddy Printing Company, 317-319 Fifth Avenue, North, Nashville, Tenn.

Try to make at least one person happy every day, and then in ten years you will have made three thousand six hundred and fifty persons happy, or brightened a small town by your contribution to the fund of general enjoyment. -Sidney Smith.

Spirit of the Press

A Word to Church Hecklers.

(Literary Digest.)

Continued "heckling the church" is a pastime that recent events seem to render futile, for the church in the past two years has shown she deserves something better at the hands of her critics-most of them, says a writer in the Minneapolis Tribune, "ordained servants of the church." Carpers, clerical and lay, who, according to this writer, have delighted "to show the utter insufficiency, fallacy, and insanity of many of the church's methods, and more particularly the gross incompetency and narrowness of the church's leaders," will not be pleased to see the category into which this writer assembles them. It would be more becoming in them, he avers, "to lend their influence through cooperation in bettering conditions as they conceive them than to stand outside this sacred institution and despoil and defame it as the Germans did the great cathedral at Reims." He writes in defense:

We believe it may be stated that the ciergy of this and other lands have averaged up fairly well with other bodies and professions in meeting the demands of the war period. The thousands of Catholic priests in France who responded to the call to the colors and went into the trenches to give their lives for the republic are a refutation of the statement that the church has no concern for the things of the state. The ready response of the clergy and Christian men and women generally in all countries to the call for selfiess service in Red Cross, Y. M. C. A., Knights of Coumbus, Salvation Army, and other noble agencies is a further denial of the frequently made charge that the church is too other-worldly. It is a singular but conspicuous fact that whenever anything breaks down in our social system the church is charged with dereliction; on the other hand, whenever things move along normally and all our various agencies efficiently function, there is little said for the institution that constitutes a large part of the source of inspiration and power.

We do believe that now and again there have been marked evidences of narrowness and bigotry in the administration of religious institutions. Again, we submit that all too frequently the whole accent has been placed upon future bliss rather than present world betterment: but our age has witnessed revolutionary changes, not only in the church's teaching, but in the church's method. There may not be many martyrs in our day, but there are certainly Christian heroes to be found in every town and city ready to spend and be spent, not only that their fellows may have a closer realization of a future heaven, but a more perfect realization of a better world in which we now live, ...

After all, the only kind of criticism that is worth while is constructive and cooperative. The clergy are not by any means free from faults, but it is our observation that the vast majority of them are, with great limitations of both means and money, prosecuting a work that calls for barder service, greater tact, finer diplomacy, and truer consecration than that called for by any other occupation with which we are familiar. The war doubtless will effect far-reaching and salutary changes in the church's system, and we hope we shall have a saner and more consistent religious teaching and practice; but this will be effected through the exacting labors of those on the inside rather than the stone-throwing of those on the outside.

A Huge Drive for Missions.

(Literary Digest.)

The war has taught us not only to think in large figures, but to work in unity. The Methodists started a movement for home and foreign missions with $85,000,000 as an ideal for a working capital; but the plan looked so good to other churches that they have decided to come together, pool their efforts, and raise not eighty-five; but three hundred millions. With five years to do it, and the Liberty Loan campaigns as an educational preparation for the people, the aim looks as good as accomplished. The New York Times estimates some 25,000,000 communicants of thirty or more different denominations, with 200,000 individual churches and at least 20,000,000 Sunday-school pupils to take care of the raising of this fund in five years. The country, we are told, has been "divided into districts, the districts into smaller localities, and the localities into unions of groups of churches." One hundred thousand speakers are ready to herald the story, and no community will fail to hear the message. It is now four years since the movement was first under way, initiated by Dr. S. Earl Taylor, executive secretary of the Joint Centenary Committee of the Methodist Episcopal Church, who began a survey of world conditions, religious, sanitary, educational, etc. The Times points out that not the least important field of the work will be home missions. It seems that there are three important phases of this: First, the treatment of the depressed, belated, or so-called inferior classes; secondly, the teaching of religion to the laboring classes; and thirdly, the activities with the Indians, negroes, Mexicans, Alaskans, and similar groups of the country. On the subject of those, Dr. Taylor's survey bears the following message:

The biggest piece of missionary work possible would be for the people in every Christian church to start to-morrow and be friendly, cordial, and helpful to the immigrants living at their doors. This would mean decent houses and more schools for them, and it would mean a moral education which so far they have not yet received. They are brought in touch with the worst side of American life, and that is the side that is uppermost in letters to their friends and in conversation when they return home. The failure so to apply Christianity is almost fatal. The cost to the allies of the defection of Russia is incalculable. That defection is due to many causes, but to none more than to the stories of exploitation told by returned Russian immigrants from America. Intensive home mission work on Manhattan Island, south of Fourteenth Street, would have more than paid for itself at this juncture.

There is every indication that the laboring classes of the world are to be very much more influential to-day than they have been up to now, and the gravest question to-day is whether their leadership shall be sane, inclusive, and religious, or whether it shall be characterized by narrowness, eccentricity, and contempt for the church. In America alone do you find a free church, supported only by the voluntary contributions of people who like that sort of thing. In fact, it is a most significant tribute to the vitality and power of Christianity that there have been started and are now being maintained in the United States more than 175,000 churches, not one of which receives any subsidy from the State. The religious leadership of the world at the present moment rests unquestionably with the United States.

In a smaller but in somewhat more concrete fashion, specific home missionary activity has international implications. Money spent on Italian work in the United States bears a very intimate relationship to that spent by the Foreign Board in Italy. Money spent for the benefit of Mexican refugees makes more valuable every dollar sent to Mexico by the Foreign Board. The thousands of dollars used for Oriental work on the Pacific Coast and Hawaii are profoundly helpful to the work in China, Japan, Korea, and the Philippines. It is a mistake to talk about "America for Christ," It is also a mistake to talk about "the world" when in the thought that word does not include America. So far as we can see, the world cannot be saved apart from America.

Paderewski, when asked the reason for his success, said: "After my work with the orchestra of four hours was over, I used to practice twelve hours a day. I did this for fourteen years. The other musicians laughed at me and called me a fool. I persevered in this. Now people applaud me and call me a genius."

Query Department

Brother McQuiddy: I have been trying to walk the strait road for more than fifty years. Our congregation is loyal to the word as we undersand it. While I have condemned innovations, I have never been tried until lately. I spent two months at St. Petersburg, Fla., lately, and tried to find the church of Christ, and did—one that had a board out in large letters. The janitor was in. I asked him if they were loyal. He did not seem to understand me; so I asked if they had the organ in worship. He said: "Yes." So I read: "What is not of faith is sin." I met with them only once, and they had a quartet—two ladies and two menuto sing with the pipe organ and then a lady solo. The brother preached all right. I could have gone every Lord's day, but did not. Now, do you think I sinned in not going? I also attended the Catholic Church once, the Episcopal once. The way I look at it, they are not far ahead of our progressive brethren, and I think they will soon catch up. If it is not asking too much of you, please answer through the Gospel Advocate. Mas. Rice A. Maurix.

If to meet with the progressive brethren on the first day of the week would do violence to the conscience of our sister, she certainly did right in staying away. "To him that esteemeth a thing to be unclean, to him it is unclean." Members of the church should be slow to put themselves in a position where they cannot worship God according to the New Testament. I certainly would not. go to the Catholic Cathedral or meet with denominations that I regard more in error than I do the "progressives." It would be better to hunt out some member of the church, get together two or three who are content to worship as the New Testament directs, rather than do anything that one understands the Bible forbids. Before condemning others, however, we should be sure that we are right ourseives. We should give ourselves a heart-searching examination to see whether we have been just as devoted and just as consistent in the worship of God as we should have been. There is danger of straining at gnats and swallowing camels. The point I wish to emphasize is this: that we are not always consistent in condemning others. We are careless and unconcerned and fail to improve the opportunities that we have for building up primitive Christianity. Without condoning or compromising with error, we should first be active and persistent in doing all that we can to extend the religion of the New Testament in its purity and simplicity. When we do this, we will not likely be placed in a position that we cannot worship God acceptably.

Brother McQuiddy: Is the supper mentioned in the thirteenth chapter of John the passover supper, or Lord's Supper, or the Bethany supper? At which supper did Christ wash the disciples' feet?

W. F. CHAMPION.

The supper mentioned in the thirteenth chapter of John is evidently the passover, at which time the Lord instituted the Lord's Supper, and not the Bethany supper, an account of which is recorded in Matt. 26: 1-16; also in Mark 14: 1-9 and John 12: 1-8. That this Bethany supper at which Jesus was anointed is different from the passover supper is clear for the following reasons: We notefrom Matt. 26: 17-19 that after the Bethany supper had been eaten and Jesus had been anointed, "the disciples came to Jesus, saying, "Where wilt thou that we make ready for thee to eat the passover? And he said, Go into the city to such a man, and say unto him, The Teacher saith, My time is at hand; I keep the passover at thy house with my disciples. And the disciples did as Jesus appointed them; and they made ready the passover." (Read also Mark 14: 12; John 13; 1, 2.) Thus all the evangelists show that the Bethany supper was eaten before the preparation was made for the passover supper. There is diversity of opinion, however, as to whether Jesus was anointed twice, at two different times, in two different places, by two different persons, or whether there are three different accounts with some varying circumstances of one and the same transaction. While there is good authority claiming that there were two anointings, I am inclined to the view that there was but one anointing with varying circumstances. It is contended that the supper and the anoints ing recorded by John happened six days before the passover, but the other anointing is fixed on the second day before the feast. A sufficient answer to this is the reply that while it says, "Jesus came to Bethany six days before the passover," it does not say that the supper was made for him six days before the passever. It is probable, and the twelfth chapter of John read in its connection indicates, that Jesus remained in Bethany some days before the supper and anointing. For instance, in John 12: 12, 13 much people is said to have met Jesus on the day after his arrival at Bethany, not on the day after his unction. It is also contended that the supper was in the house of Lazarus, Mary, and Martha, in Bethany, but there is nothing to sustain this view. It seems probable that Lazarus would not have been called if he had been the host. Martha, the sister of Lazarus, might do Jesus honor by ministering to him in any other house as well as in her own. She was Simon's neighbor, and perhaps his relative. While Jesus washed the disciples' feet at the passover supper and while foot washing is an ordinance of the Lord, Jesus did not ordain it as a stated public ordinance of the church, but as a private duty or good work. A wise and safe rule is to let the Scriptures interpret themselves. The apostles under the guidance of the Holy Spirit are the best interpreters of the meaning and intentions of the Savior's language. They observed the Lord's Supper as a public ordinance. (Read Acts 2: 42; 20; 7; 1 Cor. 11: 20-24.) About this there can be no doubt. The apostles did not so interpret the admonition to wash one another's feet. We have no account of their washing feet publicly. There is but one account of foot washing in the Bible, and that is found in 1 Tim, 5: 3-10; "Honor widows that are widows indeed. But if any widow hath children or grandchildren, let them learn first to show piety toward their own family, and to requite their parents: for this is acceptable in the sight of God. Now she that is a widow indeed, and desolate, hath her hope set on God, and continueth in supplications and prayers night and day. But she that giveth herself to pleasure is dead while she liveth. These things also command, that they may be without reproach. But if any provideth not for his own, and specially his own household, he hath denied the faith, and is worse than an unbeliever. Let none be enrolled as a widow under threescore years old, having been the wife of one man, well reported of for good works; if she hath brought up children, if she hath used hospitality to strangers, if she hath washed the saints' feet, if she hath relieved the afflicted, if she hath diligently followed every good work." Here it is placed with entertaining strangers, rearing children, administering to the sick and afflicted, and in engaging in all good works. These were also private and personal duties. Thus the Scriptures interpreted by the apostles teach that it should be a private and social duty to be performed when needed. It is a humble service, and I think it should be so observed now.

The "Janes-McHenry-Martin-Jorgenson Combination."

BY J. C. M'Q.

Sometime ago I published in our columns that the Gospel Advocate could not see its way clear to support the missionaries now in India. This statement was published after much prayerful consideration and deliberation. We have known for some time of the trouble and strife that exist among the missionaries in India. We learned of this through Brethren McHenry, Janes, and Jelley. We were not hasty in taking action, but were hopeful that truth and righteousness would prevail and that the brethren there might work together in a way that would be pleasing to the Lord. But in this hope we were doomed to disappointment, and so now give to our readers the following letter from Brother E. S. Jelley:

Dehra Dun, U. P., British India, 1918.—Dear Brother McQuiddy: I have with interest scanned the Gospel Advocate for October 10, 1918, and find that the serpent which you and Brother Rowe have been pressing to your bosoms is inclined to sting you. This is as it should be. Doubt-less you will get enough of the Janes-Jorgenson-McHenry-Martin crew after I and other lovers of decency have been driven to quit the synagogue. I will say nothing further on that line. I realize far too well that one who went out for Christ full and comes back empty, with the smirch of the hot breath of Secretary Janes upon him, does not I realize that you all have been very tolerant toward me in my uninteresting troubles, that you have even been so good as to befriend me to a certain extent (very much so financially), and I am indeed grateful. But I also realize that in the church of Christ, that part of it with which you and I are directly associated, there is a premium upon dishonesty, because the gullible and inexperienced are liable to accept the statements of crafty men, and the seeming pillars and watchmen like yourself and Brother Rowe are too indifferent to the truth to shut deceptive and unreliable writers out of your columns, but, instead, give them as much liberty for free advertising purposes às possible.

am not a prophet; but if either history or the Bible gives any indication of the results of such a course, I should say that it will bring saddening and bitter fruitnot to yourselves, but to the brethren whom you are supposed to conserve. Of course, it is easiest to drift with the current. You all must have known for the last seven years that "Brother" Jorgenson is a George Müllerite heretic. I answered him in Word and Work when he came out and put down George Müller and Spurgeon as sound disciples, about that length of time ago. also probably known for a long time something of the character of the Janes-McHenry-Martin-Jorgenson combination—certainly you have known how they have treated wife and me; yet up to date you allow them and their proteges, McHenry and Martin, to use your space for the purpose of ruining the work in India, work for which I have given half a lifetime, and work for which wife gave her life, and in so doing you have destroyed my hope of the possibility of reviving the work under "sound" and "safe" auspices; because when once one appoints the " sound enemies of the work to look after it and ruin it, they can be trusted to do a pretty thorough job in two or three years, just as the Germans in France did harm which it will take a score of years to partially repair. You know well that we have the reputation of being antimissionary. We have not the number of massive Brethren, foreign world (twenty-one) that the "River Brethren, foreign world (twenty-one) mambers in the United We have not the number of missionaries in the numbering some five thousand members in the United States of America, have in India and Africa. You know that this is caused by the suspicious attitude of the brethren, and you must know that putting evil men in the saddle and letting them ruin the work of the church in India will not only make it impossible for decent men to come out while they are out here, but that also, when go home or die, or go to some other body, there will be a these adventurers get tired of playing at missionary and reaction against wasting money on missionary work for which nothing can be shown. Aside from this, there is the question of decency. Never mind me; I do not care now about my reputation among us; but there is my wife. Is the attempt on her reputation to be condoned as usual, and her traducers given free advertising in your papers as usual? Kindly answer definitely and oblige.

Your brother in Christ,

I pass without comment the criticisms that reflect unfavorably on me and my associates, but I esteem it my duty to give attention to the unhappy strife and division that have blighted our mission in far-away India, and the cause of this sad condition. That it is a deplorable plight and one that should be remedied, all will readily agree. I am ready to make the sacrifice necessary to help enlighten faithful Christians and to help place the responsibility for this strife among the missionaries just where it belongs. I shall count myself happy, if, by the performance of this duty in the fear of God and with malice toward none, I shall be helpful in bringing the missionaries and others to a strict compliance with the word of God

Something less than a decade ago I was active in raising funds to send Brother Jelley to India. Suffice it to say that he was fully recommended for the work; and the readers of the Gospel Advocate, being assured of this, responded promptly and liberally to the call, so that the funds for his transportation to India were soon in hand and he in India. A brother of means had agreed to supply him thirty dollars per month while engaged in the work in India, which it was thought would take care of his living expenses; but Brother Jelley soon saw that he and his family could not live on this amount, so our readers were called on to supply the amount lacking of his support. which was cheerfully provided and without great effort. I was also active in encouraging the churches to support Brother Bishop (deceased) and other missionaries in Japan. While I was thus engaged in the work, Brother R. H. Boll began to select men and urge the churches to send them as missionaries to the foreign field. As I have never been without an abundance of work and responsibillty, I gladly welcomed the relief, thinking that he could devote more time to advancing the missionary cause than I had been able to do. Among those whom he selected to go to India was Brother Hume McHenry, whom he said the church at Allensville, Ky., would support. This church is to be commended for its liberality and zeal and for the example that it has given other churches. I am informed that this church is keeping up its contribution to Brother McHenry at the present time. Its example also in continuing in well-doing is worthy of emulation and should be commended to other churches. Those who continue in well-doing are to be blessed in the deed, and not those who draw back and fail to execute their good resolutions. But Brother McHenry soon reported that he was not receiving sufficient funds from Allensville to carry on the work and urged that other churches make contributions for him. Brother Jelley had reported through the papers that he needed a helper in India, and this brother was selected and sent to supply the need. Brother McHenry had not been in India very long until clouds began to gather in the missionary horizon and thunderbolts of criticism were mailed to the editors of our papers. Brother Jelley began to complain that Brother McHenry was preaching and teaching speculative views on unfulfilled prophecy, and Brother Mc-Henry charged Brother Jelley with being guilty of unchristian conduct. Brother Jelley also charged a combine against him, consisting of Janes, Jorgenson, and Martin, in addition to McHenry. A letter also came to this office from Brother McHenzy which clearly revealed his sympathy, with the head of the "School of Prophets" in Louisville, Ky. After having learned many things from correspondence from India and through other sources, the truth finally dawned upon my associates and me that the missionaries in India, save Jelley, were teaching speculative views which are not essential to salvation, and the pressing of which is calculated to create strife. Brother Jelley's letter clearly shows alienation, bitterness, and strife, for which he holds especially responsible Janes, Jorgenson, McHenry, and Martin. He charges, and has repeatedly charged, that these brethren were persistent in teaching their views on the meaning of unfulfilled prophecy, and that these views had been featured almost to the destruction of all missionary effort in India. It is the same old story repeated. Years ago a number of us importuned and pleaded with brethren, with tears in our eyes, to hold their opinions as private property instead of propagating them to the disturbance of churches. It was not intimated to them that they should not study the prophecies nor that they should not study the whole Bible, but they were simply urged not to exalt an opinion of the meaning of an unfulfilled prophecy to the position of an essential of salvation. It has been evident for some time that Brother Don Carlos Janes, of Louisville, Ky., had assumed unto himself the control of the missionaries in India and that he was disposed to divert funds from Jelley to McHenry and Martin. Attention has also been called to the fact that he gave his encouragement to drive a wedge into the Highland Church in Louisville. He is a party to withdrawing fellowship from two brethren when there was no ground for such action, as will be developed later. This division in Louisville would not and could not exist if a number of young preachers had not been so far advanced (in their own estimation) in Bible teaching that they would not heed the righteous counsel of their seniors, and men who had devoted their lives to the propagation of the gospel. Like Rehoboam, son of Solomon, they preferred to act on the advice of young men rather than take the counsel of old men. As the result was evil, and only evil, in the days of Rehoboam, so we see that the action of these young brethren has produced the same terrible and awful results. Their unjustifiable action has had the same results in India that some of us have seen it produce here. The exalting of opinions into the position of essentials of salvation will not only blight all missionary effort in India and elsewhere, but it will destroy the congregations themselves. The consequences of such a sin stretch through eternity. I have not the language to fittingly portray the horrible results and the consequences that will follow such action if longer continued.

When the sad condition in India was revealed to us by many letters that came from India, we ceased to publish anything in the Gospel Advocate from the Janes-Jorgenson-McHenry-Martin combination. After full consultation, the Christian Leader, Firm Foundation, and Gospel Advocate decided that the best thing to do was to bring Brother Jelley home; hence, an appeal was made for funds for this purpose. A number of things influenced this decision in addition to the sad condition of the missionary work in India. Some time after we had ceased to make appeals for Brethren McHenry and Martin in the Advocate, Brother Don Carlos Janes, interested especially in them, addressed a letter to the Advocate, under date of January 6, 1919, in which he said: "I wish to inquire what the policy of the Advocate is in the matter of publishing articles and reports from Brethren McHenry and Martin. Also, I urge the Advocate to show more interest in financing our missionaries in 1919 than it has been showing for a good while in the past." As we must answer to the Lord and not to man, we did not reply to Brother Janes' autocratic demand. Moreover, we do not understand just why we are obligated especially to Brethren McHenry and Martin. As already explained, Brother McHenry's support was assured by the church at Allensville, Ky. Brother Martin was practically unknown, except to those who manage the aforesaid "combination." The same is true of the Bixlers and Miss Wheeler, who have been recently announced as the new missionaries to Japan. Janes and Jorgenson selected them and then appealed to the readers of the Christian Leader, the Firm Foundation, and the Gospel Advocate to support them.

Even to-day as I write this article there comes another complaint from Brother Jelley, asking: "Who gets all the money sent for Brother Govind Ram, the new Indian missionary?" He explains that McHenry and Martin ordained Ram sometime ago and appealed for funds in his behalf and that funds were sent, but none were received by the native missionary. Brother Ram himself joins in this protest. They further add: "Lots of things are crooked about alleged work in or for India that could be straightened out if wrongdoers were not screened."

That our readers may see just why the native worker. Ram, has received no funds, I insert here a warning written on September 20, 1918, and sent to the papers for publication:

WARNING.

You are warned against sending money direct to any native evangelist who may claim to be connected with us in the work. They often have to be dealt with before a letter can go to America and back. For this reason please send all funds direct to us for distribution.

W. HUME MCHENRY: S. O. MARTIN.

As we have always urged that speculative views should not be made tests of Christian fellowship, it is evident that we should not be so inconsistent as to uphold those who make such views tests of fellowship. Certain it is that the man who has the spirit of Christ will do no such thing. Brother R. H. Boll had no sympathy for those guilty of such conduct when he wrote me a letter under date of February 19, 1916, in which he says: "The teachings in question could furnish no reasonable ground for division; and a division could be caused on any difference, however trifling, by proceeding exactly as you did in this case," Speculative teachings on unfulfilled prophecy were the "teachings in question." He was simply asked to hold them as private property and not press them to disturbance in the churches, as he freely admitted had been done. The man who does the pressing is responsible for the division. No man creates division simply by asking another not to force an organ into the church over the conscience of Christians, but he who forces it into the church is the guilty party. In view of the sad condition of the Highland Church at Louisville, for which Brother Boll's associate preaches, I am fearful that a change has come over the spirit of his dream.

Years ago Brother Boll said to me that it would be a sad day for the churches when such opinions were made tests of fellowship. In this statement I most heartily concurred, and see no reason why I should change that view now. But this very thing against which we warned the brethren, and warned them only with the purest of motives, has happened in Louisville, and the chief actor in bringing it about is the associate of Brother R. H. Boll. If we are to put any credence in the statement of Brother E. L. Jorgenson, we are irresistibly led to the conclusion that opposition to the "teachings in question" brought about the disfellowshiping of two brethren. It appears that those who led in this mischievous work did not stop to inquire whether the ground was "reasonable" or unreasonable, nor whether it was scriptural or unscriptural, Trying to justify himself and in defense of himself, Brother Jorgenson says: "The issue being purely doctrinal, the church saw that not even 'for unity's sake' could they yield to the opposers. For on that principle one man, with or without a following, right or wrong, could control the teaching and faith of the church; for whatever doctrine he disliked, be it ever so important, he could suppress by an appeal to change preachers 'for unity's sake.' Such action is indeed "unreasonable," unscriptural, and unchristian. Such conduct destroys the very foundation of the church of Jesus Christ and will bring alienation, division, and strife into every local church where it is practiced. While no sane, sensible man would disfellowship a brother because of his peculiar teachings that are not fundamentals, yet no man who loves the truth and who has the spirit of Christ will encourage and support the man who destroys the unity of churches and even works their destruction in order that he may propagate his divisive teaching. No man is an enemy to these misguided brethren simply because he seeks to lead them out of darkness into light. If these brethren believe that their peculiar views are fundamentals of salvation, let them say so clearly without equivocation and then we will know where to place them. No true man will ask another to stultify his faith; but every true man will seek to lead misguided men out of their error, not because they wish to destroy them, but because they must do so in order to obey and honor Jehovah. When a man's erroneous doctrine is brought under fire, he should stand up like a man and boldly and fearlessly defend it. If he should not be able to defend it, he should not cry out "persecution and martyrdom." Such a course is unworthy of a Christian. Instead of so acting, let each adopt the following as his own: "I learn the wisdom of St. Bernard: 'Nothing can work me damage except myself; the harm that I sustain, I carry about with me, and never am a real sufferer but by my own fault." Some years ago I wrote a number of articles giving my objections to this doctrine of unfulfilled prophecies. At the close of these articles I invited any one who wished to review them to do so, assuring him that, if the review was written in courteous language, I would be glad to give it a hearing in our columns. To my surprise, I received no review from any of the brethren, but received one from a genuine Russellite, who resided in Nashville. It is vicious, wicked, and damnable to press any teaching that is not fundamental to salvation to the alienation, separation, and destruction of the churches of Christ. If those who are stressing such teachings will cease to do so and repent of the evil that they have wrought, then every loyal, faithful disciple in the land will be ready to heartily cooperate with them in every good work. While the Christian attitude is one of patient waiting for the coming of the Lord and not anxious expectation, yet no one will ostracize another for his private opinion of what will transpire when he comes. The same proposition that was presented to these brethren a number of years ago is presented to them again. The very fact that Brother Boll himself did cease for months to teach this doctrine, both in the Leader and the Advocate, on his own initiative and his own good judgment, shows that he himself did not regard his teaching on unfulfilled prophecy essential to salvation. Hence, we ask in all seriousness, why not, for the sake of unity, continue to cease teaching that doctrine? Will they choose again to propagate teachings which are not fundamental to salvation, but which produce division in the churches? "Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity!" May the God of all wisdom guide them and help them to manifest due consideration for the church, for the truth, and for their own salvation.

Our Trip to California. BY T. B. LABIMORE.

We—Mrs. Larimore and I—left Nashville for California, Tuesday morning, December 3, 1918—a clear, cold morning—and genuinely enjoyed the trip, on the L. & N., to New Orleans, reaching that delightful city about eight o'clock the next morning.

We had intended to spend Tuesday night in Montgomery, and make the entire trip in daylight; but we were so pleasantly situated on the train that we decided to "let well enough alone," as Samantha Allen would say; so we stayed on that selfsame train till we reached the Crescent City, not missing much by doing so, so far as sight-seeing was concerned, as there was not much new to us in the scenery on that part of the journey.

We found New Orleans basking in a blaze of sunshine, the air being as balmy and pleasant as are the breezes of a typical Tennessee May or June morning—not the slightest semblance of winter there. As we always consider it good to be in New Orleans, we decided to remain there two days, at least—indeed, as long as we reasonably could—which we did.

We visited many points of interest. We traversed historic streets shaded by palms, magnolias, and other beautiful trees; saw fine gardens and such a profusion of flowers of various sorts, sizes, and colors as we had rarely ever seen, likewise the beautiful oak in one of New Orleans' many parks—"suicide oak"—under the boughs of which there have been thirteen suicides in five years.

We crossed the Mississippi many times on one of the ferryboats that ply between New Orleans and Algiers on the right bank of the river. When we reached the Algiers wharf, after making several round trips, a polite officer of the boat informed us that we could not return to the city on that boat, as it was "tied up, on account of a strike," and would not recross the river till the strike was broken or called off. The strike "tied up" all the ferryboats crossing and recrossing there. So we were stranded, with the Father of Waters between us and the place where we wished to be.

"How shall we reach the city?" was the question we had to solve. One reason why strikes should never be is this: they entail trouble upon the innocent, as well as the guilty. But there are two sides to even this question. There should never be any cause for a strike. Capital should never oppress labor. Labor should never disturb capital. Employers should always try to bless their employees; employees should always try to bless their employers; "for none of us liveth to himself, and no man dieth to himself." We should live for the good that we can do, as the days of life are going by. The Golden Rule—"All things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them"—would regulate all these things perfectly and settle the strike question permanently, if all would reduce its beneficent principles to practice.

We finally boarded, at another wharf, a barge on which a Southern Pacific freight train was about to be ferried across the river, and it took us to the other shore.

We went to the vacant spot where once stood the memorable slave market—the old Royal Hotel—always intensely and thrillingly interesting to me because of its horrible history. Tens of thousands of human beings were bought and sold in the basement of that building, before African slavery was blotted out by the blood of the brave. We have been there twice since the building was demolished and the rubbish was removed. Not a brick or stone marks the spot; and, instead of the thrilling, old-time "Going! Going! Gone!" that meant so much to miserable mortals then, only solemn silence meets the imagination of men, women, and children when they see that scar on the bosom of the Crescent City now.

Friday, about noon, we reluctantly and regretfully left New Orleans, crossing the Mississippi on the same boat on which we had previously crossed the river there, and went to Lake Charles, La., where we spent the night, having resolved to make the balance of the journey in daytime, if practicable.

Reaching Lake Charles after sunset and leaving there early the next morning, we saw but little of that little city. That day we traveled to Houston, Texas, part of the way through territory devastated, a few months before, by a terrific tornado that uprooted thousands of trees and demolished many houses, leaving wreck and ruin in its wake.

Saturday afternoon we reached Houston, where we were met at the station by our good friend and sister, Mrs. C. E. Barrick, her daughter Madge and little son Nolan, we having notified the Barrick household when to expect us. We spent a delightful Sunday in Houston. I preached twice that day in the Auditorium, where all the churches of Christ in the city met on that occasion. The scene forcibly impressed upon my mind David's "Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity!"

We met there Brother G. A. Dunn, whom I have known from his childhood. He was sick then, but I hope he is well now. He is the son of a wonderful woman, who, left a widow when her five sons and one daughter were little children, brought them up "in the nurture and admonition of the Lord," making a good, Christian woman of the daughter, a Christian physician and four gospel preachers of the five boys. Verily, she hath a reward here; but a greater reward awaits her Over There.

Monday morning we dropped down to Galveston, fifty miles south of Houston, to see that island city and its wonderful sea wall that cost twenty-five million dollars, I believe. We "stopped"—a few minutes—at the great Galvez Hotel, "the pride of Galveston," but neither ate nor slept there. We enjoyed a walk along the sea wall and on the shell-strewn beach in front of the Galvez. We returned to Houston that evening, and I preached for "the Heights" congregation there that night.

The cause in Houston seems to be in good hands, all the congregations working well, none of them lacking either zeal or liberality, and, therefore, prospering. We neither saw nor heard anything discouraging or disparaging of the work or of any of the workers there.

We decided to remain another day, to visit the San Jacinto battle ground—a place I had long wanted to see—where Sam Houston, whom Tennessee gave to Texas, commanded, was wounded, and won a memorable victory that made Texas free.

Sister Painter kindly volunteered to take us in her handsome Hudson super-six. At a reasonably early hour in the morning, nine of us, including four children, started to San Jacinto, not for a battle, but for a pleasant picnic. As we were passing through Camp Logan, a United States encampment near Houston, having gone somewhat out of our way to visit the camp, a government car, lighter than ours, running "like a streak of khaki lightning," as one of our party expressed it, with four soldiers in it, collided with our car about the middle of two camp streets. The soldiers were all thrown out of their car, which was so completely demolished that an officer, who reached the scene of the wreck a few moments after it occurred, said: "I wouldn't give ten cents for that car."

Our car limped away, to a government garage near by, and was "laid up for repairs." Strange as it may seem, no one was hurt in the smash-up, which protection I attribute to Providence. Sister Painter, our competent chauffeur, seeing the soldiers' car coming at right angles to our way and realizing the danger of a collision, threw on the brakes and shut off the power; thus, while not preventing the inevitable collision, unquestionably preventing serious, if not fatal, results. We were fortunate in having a brave, level-headed woman at the wheel.

Texans are not accustomed to being turned from their course by trifles as trivial as the wrecking of a couple of cars and the shaking up and scaring of a few young people; hence, after a picnic dinner at Camp Logan, friends having furnished us another car, we reached the San Jacinto battle ground early enough to see a beautiful sunset vividly reflected in the waters of the lake or river skirting the western edge of the park.

We said good-by to Houston friends Wednesday morning and resumed our westward journey, reaching San Antonio about nine o'clock that night. We hoped to meet there the friends with whom we spent the greater part of last winter—Hubert Jones and family—but, having failed to make a note of their new address, we failed to find them. Influenza was raging in the city, Thursday was an excessively dark, gloomy, rainy day, and we were anxious to reach El Paso; hence, we left San Antonio Thursday night—that being the most convenient time to start west from that city—and, after traveling a night and a day, through foothills and over deserts, we reached El Paso, Friday evening.

We had notified friends there when to expect us, and were met at the station by Miss Mamie Young, formerly of Sparta, Tenn., now of El Paso, and Miss Mae Anderson, also formerly of Sparta, now of Oneida, Tenn. Later we met Miss Mae's mother, whom we were delighted to see again; also Prof. A. H. Hughey, superintendent of El Paso schools, and his wife, formerly Miss Bess Caruthers—old-time friends—and their little son, A. H., Jr., who contributed as much as possible to our happiness during our brief visit to El Paso, and took us to the station when we resumed our journey.

There is an earnest congregation of Christians in El Paso, with a good house in which to meet for work and worship. The congregation and the house are due largely to the faithfulness, self-sacrifice, and earnestness of Sister Mamle Young, whose whole heart is in the work. We enfoyed meeting the "saints and faithful" there at two services Sunday. Sunday afternoon we visited sisters in two sanitariums, and held communion services at both places.

Monday morning we left El Paso for Maricopa, a little town on the desert, west of Tucson (2-son'), Ariz., where we spent the night, simply because that was the end of a day's travel. We resumed our journey early the next morning and spent almost the entire day traveling through the desert. Many complain that crossing the desert is tiresome; but it is never so to me. There is always something interesting to see. We passed near Salton Sea, where, on former trips on the Southern Pacific, I had fed the fish that crowded close as the train passed over an arm of the sea; but that sea is passing away—drying up—and the train does not now pass over any part of it.

We pursued our Western way—due west—the road so literally straight sometimes that we could look back over the track and see the shining rails seemingly approaching each other till they met in the distance—and, at last, late Tuesday evening, we reached Los Angeles, after passing through beautiful orange groves and other green and growing vegetation that marks the entrance into California.

We remained in Los Angeles only two nights and a day, having promised to be in another part of the State before Christmas. We visited the hospitable home of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Montgomery, our special friends, near Hanford, and then went on to Madera, fifty miles north of Hanford, where we had planned to spend Christmas with our daughter. Ettie, and her family, who live near Madera.

We spent not only Christmas there, but most of the month of January, rearranging our plans that had been somewhat disarranged by the epidemic of influenza that was sweeping over the country then, and, incidentally, helping to saw wood to feed our delightful open fireplace. California weather is very fine, but it is also sometimes a little "sharp," making an open wood fire an appreciated comfort. Indeed, I would not try to live anywhere without an open fireplace.

When two-thirds of January had slipped away, we left the Madera community and returned to the Hanford community, having secured three pleasant rooms in the home of Mr. W. J. Tyler, three miles from Hanford—one mile from Armona, Kings County, which is our post office. We have two open fireplaces in our part of the house—an open fireplace being one of the absolute essentials we demanded in our search for rooms. Indeed, some of our friends say we rented the fireplaces and Mr. and Mrs. Tyler, in the goodness of their hearts, "threw in" the rooms and other comforts and luxuries we enjoy.

We are in the country, where we can walk and work—burn brush, prune trees and grapevines, dig up Johnson grass, raise morning-glories, touch-me-nots, etc., and genuinely enjoy life. Last, but not least, I am so situated that I can preach whensoever I will—and I usually will—likewise give an account of myself to my friends occasionally through the Gospel Advocate, which I am always glad to do when I can Selah.

The ocean lesson most bewildering
Which great waves sing
Is multiplicity in union. Far
On polar seas the snow, blown to and fro,
Falls soft as swansdown, every flake a star.
There without fleck or stain the flakes remain
In utter purity till next year's dawn
On pack and berg and shore, but evermore
Meit as they touch the billows, and are gone.
Are these things four in one or one in three?
Is water ice or cloud or snow or sea?

Clasping the globe the five great oceans lie:

Each to its sky
They differ, beach to deep, ten thousand ways,
And by strong currents strange they interchange
Their single substance after many days.
Diverse they are yet one, when all is done;
Since work betrays its maker, oceans are Type, witness, parable, signs, symbols all:
O blind, bl

Type, witness, parable, signs, symbols all O blind, blind, blind, who cannot read afar The incommunicable mystery Of the five oceans which are all the sea.

Yet blind with over-wisdom landsmen go, And thus, and so,

Have all things been, they say, and shall be still;
Nor dream they any change that leaps their range
Of narrow knowledge: but, on crest and hill
Of the great ocean surge, seamen who urge
Their hollow ships between vast nights and days
Are lessoned of the high wind, sea, and sky
That unto God thunder a threefold praise,
Cities breed unbelief, but great and free
Faith in the living God dwells on the sea.

Regarding the present actual state of the peoples of the Near East, Dr. Dutton said: "Starvation has become so common in these lands that one of our workers sent the following report: "Heroic men and women who have strained every energy to save lives now have the unthinkable task of picking out those who shall perish." This is the human pressure back of the slogan, 'They shall not perish,' being used in the campaign for thirty millions of dollars."

Dr. Dutton was asked if he believed the American people were tired of giving. He said: "America's money is

Dr. Dutton was asked if he believed the American people were tired of giving. He said: "America's money is going out of her pockets faster than ever in her history," because it is America's part in this frightful world cataclysm. It is to these people we owe in part the debt of our untouched homes, our unviolated families, and our almost normally conducted industries. For these things are thirty millions of dollars an adequate return? When the American people come to realize the situation in the Near East as it actually is, I think not."

In concluding his comment upon the President's urgent appeal, Dr. Dutton said: "As the President is trying to lead the nations to a just peace, so he desires that America shall lead the world in this supreme effort to save and rehabilitate the Christian peoples who, because they have clung to their faith and our faith, have been compelled to pass through the surpassing travail of the war."

His Vital Message.

His vital message to us is, that if He is born in the human heart there will be the same strength to overcome sin to which His life bore witness. No wonder the weary world catches the minstrelsy of the skies and flings it on every wind that blows! No wonder the soul takes up the glad overture of the angels and that it spreads over the earth like a holy contagion! For this downward trend has been arrested by a divine interference. God has not forgotten to be kind, for he inaugurated the reign of grace. In every land the joy of this natal day will light up faces with uncommon luster. Young and old will reache the music that comes from heaven to earth; and no subject is higher in range and importance, for heaven with its rapturous symphonies has no grander melody and no treasure that surpasses our living Redeemer. It becomes us to give heartiest welcome to the Bethlehem Babe, "for unto you is born this day a Savior which is Christ the Lord."-Ezra Keller.

Never borrow trouble. If the evil is not to come, it is useless and so much waste; if it is to come, you will need all your strength to meet it.—Selected.

H W. Wrye, and old Tennessee preacher, who now lives at Ballas, Texas, was called home last week on the sad mission of attending his mother's funeral. She had been for many years a faithful Christian. The whole family has our undivided sympathy.

Married, in the study of the Russell Street Church, this city, Thursday, February 6, at 6 P.M., Mr. H. M. Cawthon and Miss Helen G. McCartney, A. B. Lipscomb officiating These young people are fine Christian characters. The Gospel Advocate extends heartiest congratulations.

From Ben West, Ennis, Texas, February 24: "Yesterday was a great day at the church here. Three additions by transier from Denton. Hon, W. A. Johnson, one of our members, spoke last night on 'Christian Education.' Foy Waflace, Jr., is to begin a meeting with us on April 20."

Fron Louis Dasaro: "The Italian Bible school at Bellaire, Ohio, is doing fine. Attendance on February 2, 39; February 9, 49; February 16, 51; February 23, 59. The following money was received to help me in the Italian mission: From Flemington, Pa., $17; Sunbury, Pa., $12; Shadyside, Ohio, $3; Lover, Pa., $10; Bolivar, Pa., $4. I thank all for their help. My address is L. Daraso, Box 1272, Shadyside, Ohio."

J. G. Allen reports the following contributions for the work at Muskogee, Okla.: Previously reported, $197.50; church at Sellersburg, Ind., $5; Twelfth Avenue Church, Nashvile, Tenn., $10; Reid Avenue Church, Nashville, Tenn., $16; G. T. Mustain, Horse Cave, Ky., $5; J. C. Barnett, Rawine, Miss., $1; J. W. Gibson, Washington, D. C., $1; T. F. Anderson, Toone, Tenn., $5; Mrs. J. J. Walker, McMinnville, Tenn., $5. Address Brother Allen at 1412 Baltimor Avenue, Muskogee, Okla.

From R. D. Smith, Terrell, Texas, February 28: "Our work is progressing nicely, and we feel that, considering all thing, it is very satisfactory. The war and influenza have hindered much; but now that both have apparently folded their tents, it seems that life is beginning to reappear in our work. G. Dallas Smith, of Cleburne, will be with us it a meeting, beginning on March 16. We are doing our lest to get things in readiness for the meeting. If you cone this way, stop to see us."

The corgregation at Cleveland, Tenn., would like to locate with it a good song leader. A young or even middle-aged man who can lead songs well and will take an interest in it would be a great acquisition here, and we think we ould secure him a good position at one of the public works or with some business firm. We shall be glad to get in communication with some one, and we shall do our best o get him a good position where it will be good for him and the congregation also. Write George W. Farmer, Cleveland, Tenn.

From P. D. Copeland, Antioch, Fla.; "T. B. Thompson, of Avon Park, is to begin a series of meetings, beginning on the third Lord's day in March. We have suffered a falling-off from the congregation for the last few months. We would be glad for some faithful brother to settle in this part of the country and help us with the Lord's work. We think we have some advantages that are not at some other places. We have grove and truck land connected near together. Do not get it into your mind that the dollars just roll off the trees without an effort. We have to labor for what we receive."

From Horace W. Busby. Fort Worth, Texas, February 26: "Our work in the Glenwood congregation, this city, is increasing in interest all the time. During the month of February the house was well filled each Sunday at both morning and evening services; last Sunday and Sunday night part of the audience had to stand. For the month, nineteen have been added to the congregation. Two of the number baptized were Catholics. At the Tuesday-night Bible study, last evening, two were baptized; about one hundred and seventy-five were present. Our membership now is above five hundred. There was an average of twelve additions per month throughout last year. Besides my work with the Glenwood congregation last year, I held fourteen meetings. As a result, one hundred and ninety-nine were baptized and a large number renewed their relationship to the Lord's work."

From Willie Hunter, Livingston, Tenn., March 1: "I have just returned from a visit to Camp Wheeler, Macon, Ga., where my brother, J. L. Hunter, is stationed. I preached five days at Macon to small, but attentive, crowds. A number of our brethren have labored there, including T. Q. Martin, Morgan H. Carter, and S. P. Pittman, of whom the brethren spoke. C. E. Coleman had just moved from Macon to Nashville, Tenn. The brethren there all love Brother Coleman and regretted very much to give him up. They are now without any preacher. On my way home I stopped over in Nashville and spent one night very pleasantly with Brother Coleman. We went out to David Lipscomb College and heard T. Q. Martin preach a fine discourse on Heb. 12: 28, and saw several of the preaching brethren of Nashville. I was away from home only about nine days, but I enjoyed this trip greatly."

Here is our President's conception of the Bible: "The Bible is the word of life. I beg that you will read it and find this out for yourselves—read, not little snatches here and there, but long passages that will really be the road to the heart of it. You will find it not only full of real men and women, but also of the things you have wondered about and been troubled about all your life, as men have been always. And the more you read, the more it will become plain to you what things are worth while and what are not; what things make men happy-loyalty, right dealing, speaking the truth, readiness to give everything for what they think their duty, and, most of all, the wish that they may have the approval of the Christ, who gave everything for them; and the things that are guaranteed to unhappy—selfishness, cowardice, greed, and hat is low and mean. When you have read the men everything that is low and mean. Bible, you will know that it is the word of God, because you will have found it the key to your own heart, your own happiness, and your own duty."

From F. P. Fonner, Buffalo, W. Va., February 26: "1 have received personal help in my work as follows: From B. F. Criss, $5: Jacob Stamm, $2; Mr. and Mrs. Ira C. Hardesty, $3; A. R. Stalker, $10; Mrs. Alice L. Miller, $5: Mrs. McCoy, $5; James Johnson, $5. I certainly do appreciate this help. May God bless all the donors. We have also received additions to our building fund as follows: From the church of Christ at Odell, W. Va., $100; Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Smith, $10; Mrs. Bertie Smith, $5; Mrs. Teets, $1; Mrs. Lucia Haas, $1; Mrs. Ira C. Hardesty and mother. Thus our building fund is increasing, and we are very thankful We are hoping that other congregations and individuals will respond at an early date to this call and send us a special contribution for this fund. We also hope that these contributions will be of a substantial character. But if you cannot send a large amount, then please do send what you can without further delay. I can use a check. Please make checks for our building fund payable to F. P. Fonner, treasurer; or you can send your offering for this fund to the Gospel Advocate office. I will always get my fund to the Gospel Advocate office. I will always get my mail if it is addressed to me at Buffalo, W. Va. Of course, I still need personal help in the Lord's work. Please remember us in prayers and offerings as often as you possibly can. In sending personal help, you might divide it into two parts and let part of it go to our building fund."

The Second Coming.

BY J. L. HINES,

Is the second coming a Bible doctrine? Of course it is, and it should be taught as much as any other; but there are those who would speculate upon this very thing and say that "he is coming to earth" "in flesh and blood, to sit upon David's throne in Jerusalem, and thereby establish a glorified kingdom and reign for a thousand years." Does the Bible teach this doctrine? No-a thousand times no!-and I challenge any man to attempt to prove it. This thing is what many of us are denying, and not the coming of the Lord; and because we deny this, some say: "You don't believe in the Lord's return;" "You won't preach on it, and you brand those who do believe and teach it as speculators, disturbers of churches. and factionists." Now, that is not the truth. We do believe and teach that Christ is coming, but we refuse to believe and teach that he is coming with fiesh and blood to earth, to sit on David's throne in Jerusalem and establish a glorified kingdom and reign for a thousand years; and those who do teach such are "speculators," "factionists," and "disturbers of the churches." Now let them meet the issue like men, and not misrepresent; for a man that will misrepresent, knowingly, will lie, cheat, and steal.

1. How is he coming? "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye looking into heaven? This Jesus . . . shall so come in like manner as ye beheld him going into heaven." (Acts 1: 11.) "Behold, he cometh with the clouds." (Rev. 1: 7.)

2. Where will the saints be at his coming? "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven, with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first; then we that are alive, that are left, shall together with them be caught up in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord." (1 Thess. 4: 16, 17.) Peter says: "The heavens shall pass away, . . . the elements shall be dissolved with fervent heat, and the earth and the works that are therein shall be burned up. . . . But . . , we look for new heavens and a new earth." Pet. 3: 8-13.) That doesn't look much like Christ is coming to this earth in person to reign a thousand years. Reign with whom? What kind of material would that "glorified" kingdom be made of? Going to give the wicked a second chance, eh? Pshaw! Such speculation!

3. Prepare to die or for his coming? "For to me to live is Christ, and to die is gain." (Phil, 1: 21.) To pre-

Weekly Health Talks A WORD ABOUT THE KIDNEYS

BY DOCTOR WATSON.

People are easily frightened wher they think something is the matter with their lungs or heart, and well they may be; but few people understand the dangers of diseased kidneys. These organs have a duty of vital importance to perform, and if they are diseased. there is no telling how or where the symptoms may appear. The kidneys are filters, and when they are healthy they remove the poisons from the blood and purify it. When the kidneys are diseased, the poisons are spread everywhere, and one of these poisons is uric acid. The uric acid is carried all through the system and deposited in various places, in the form of grate salts - in the feet, ankles, wrists and back - often forming bags under the eyes. Sometimes the resulting trouble is called rheumatism, lumbago, sciatics and backache. Finally, come stone in the bladder, diabetes and Bright's disease.

Dr. Pierce, of Buffalo, N.Y., in recent years, discovered that a certain combination of remedies would dissolve uric acid (urate salts) in the system. He found this combination to be hamless, so that he made it up in tablets, of double strength, and called them Anuric Tablets. They dissolve uric acid in the human system as hot coffee dissolves sugar. If you have unc acid troubles, don't delay in taking Anuric Tablets, which can be secured in the drug stores. You can write Dr. Pierce, too, and he will tell you what to eat and how to live so that more tric acid will not form in your system. Dr. Pierce will not charge for this advice.

pare to die is to prepare to live with Christ. "But I am in a strait betwixt the two, having the desire to depart and be with Christ," (Verse 23.) We are "waiting" for his coming, "watching," "desiring," and praying for it. (1 Cor. 1: 7; Matt. 24: 42; 2 Pet, 3: 12; Rev, 22: 20.) The issue between these men and me is not the second coming, but the issue is this: that Christ Is coming to this earth, clothed with flesh and blood, establish any kind of a kingdom, sit on David's literal throne in Jerusalem and reign in person for a thousand years. I deny that the Scriptures teach that, and challenge any man to the task of proving it.

Idleness.

The hardest work and the most dreary is that of "killing time." There is more genuine gratification in performing the most menial of tasks than is to be found in gilded idleness. Much false sympathy was aroused a few years ago over one of Millet's paintings. The poor peasant leaning on his hoe was the cause of much mental distress on the part of those that thought they saw in him only a victim of heartless menial labor. But it is not the man with the hoe that is to be pitied; it is the man without. The man out of work-and he may be dressed well, at that-is a far more distressing sight than he that performs even the most menial service.—Selected.

Getting Full Value of Flowers.

Highly ornamental vases are attractive in themselves, but as flower holders they may be said to be partial failures, as they do not serve their purpose to the fullest extent. They rather attract attention to themselves than set off the blooms for which they are designed. A vase of plain material or color or one on which the design is obscure is more to be desired, as it presents the flowers in their full beauty and does not distract one's attention. In the same way, a vase of lusterware, of a shade that blends with the flowers it holds, is far more attractive than one of contrasting color. Vases that are to be used for all kinds of flowers might better be green, of a dull shade, as this resembles the plant coloring and is not noticeable.-Exchange.

The Influence of a Bible Class.

BY W. S. LONG.

It is remarkable what influence a class of young people may wield for good in a community when they are taught to work, as well as to study the Bible. I know of a young man who started a class with only three young people, but he urged each one to help him build up the class by bringing some one else to be a member of the class. In a short time the class grew to be one hundred. By saving the money that often goes for picture shows, ice cream, soft drinks, chewing gum, and other such pleasures, and then adding some more to it, a wonderful good may be done.

I often see where a class of young people have sent "once and again" to help an orphans' home, or preach the gospel to the lost in Japan, or to some other good work.

Brother A. O. Colley, of Dallas, Texas, has a young people's class who have just sent ten dollars to assist in building a house of worship in Washington. This was the first class to send. Brother J. T. Westmoreland's Bible class, of Jackson, Tenn., followed with ten dollars. Suppose all the young people's classes in the States should send a donation? The young people could thus turn their money, which is often thrown away, into the salvation of souls. This is Bible economy; this is "gathering up the fragments, that nothing be lost." Now, how many teachers will put this into practice? Not only will these young people be doing good while young, but will cultivate the noble and godly grace of giving, which is a necessary attribute of a good character.

Other classes desiring to help bulld a house of worship in our national capital should send their donations to E. L. Mills, 2002 G Street, N. W., Washington, D. C.; or send to the Gospel Advocate, Nashville, Tenn., and the same will be forwarded at once.

How Doctors Treat Colds and the Flu

First Step in Treatment Is a Brisk Purgative with Calotabs, the New Nausealess Calomel.

Doctors have found by experience that no medicine for colds and influenza can be depended upon for full effectiveness until the liver is made thoroughly active. That is why the first step in the treatment is the new, mauscaless calomel, called "Calotabs," which is free from the skekening, weakening, and salivating effects of the old-style calome! Doctors also point out the fact that an active liver goes a long way toward preventing influenza, and is one of the most important factors in enabling the patient to successfully withstand an attack and ward off pneumonia.

One Calotab on the tongue at bedtime, with a swallow of water—thats all. No salts, no nausea, nor the slightest interference with your eating, pleasure, or work. Next morning your liver is active, your system is purified, and you are feeling fine, with a hearty appetite for breakfast. Drugnists sell Calotabs only in original sealed packages; price, thinty-five cents. Your money will be cheerfully refunded if you do not find them delightful.—Advt.

Girls! Use Lemons! Make a Bleaching, Beautifying Cream

The juice of two fresh lemons strained into a bottle containing three ounces of orchard white makes a whole quarter pint of the most remarkable lemon skin beautifier at about the cost one must pay for a small jar of the ordinary cold creams. Care should be taken to strain the lemon juice through a fine cloth, so no lemon pulp gets in; then this lotion will keep fresh for months. Every woman knows that lemon juice is used to bleach and remove such blemishes as freekles, sallowness, and tan, and is the ideal skin softener, smoothener, and beautifier.

Just try it! Get three ounces of orchard white at any pharmacy and two lemons from the grocer and make up a quarter pint of this sweetly fragrant lemon lotion and massage it daily into the face, neck, arms, and hands. It naturally should help to soften, freshen, bleach, and bring out the roses and beauty of any skin. It is simply marvelous to smoothen rough, red hands.

What the World Needs, and Why
It Needs It.

BY W. L. REEVES.

Much is being written just now about what the world needs, and much that is written is not what is needed, for it is not the great Physician's remedy. Nothing will remedy the situation for time and eternity but God's prescription taken day by day just as prescribed.

The gospel of Jesus Christ is not only the remedy, but it is the only remedy that can do for the nations of the earth what is so greatly needed just at this time.

First, they need the gospel because, if accepted, it will crush out all of the enmity existing among them one toward another. Nothing else will or can do that.

Secondly, all nations of earth need the gospel of Christ as contained in these few words: "Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them: for this is the law and the prophets." (Matt. 7: 12.) If this rule is accepted and observed by all concerned, there will never be any more serious trouble between the nations, for the principle in it covers the whole ground and governs aright every act that could be performed between them.

Thirdly, all kindreds, tribes, and tongues of earth need the gospel of Christ because that, and that alone, can deliver them from the evils so rife among them. This is important to that extent Christ gave his life "that he might deliver us from this present evil world, according to the will of God and our Father." (Gal. 1: 4.) If the world is ever delivered from such evils, God must deliver it,

The gospel is the power of God (Rom. 1: 16) unto this end; so the gospel must in some way reach the people, for by it is the word preached (1 Pet. 1: 25), and "faith cometh by hearing the word of God" (Rom. 10: 17), and the heart is purified by faith (Acts 15: 9), and the life will be clean, just, and upright if the heart is pure. "Keep thy heart with all diligence; for out of it are the issues of life." (Prov. 4: 23.)

The governments of men fail because they do not apply to the hearts of their subjects. The law of Moses was done away with for this very reason. "It could not make him that did the service perfect, as pertaining to the conscience." (Heb. 9: 9.)

Seeing that the gospel is the remedy that will not only drive out the evil in the world, but will actually feed the teeming millions who are hungry, why should any professed Christian even think about making void God's plan by trying to do the work some other way? All other ways are signal failures, and those religionists who work in such ways and through human institutions will see it thus in the end. Think of the wisdom-want of wisdom -in setting aside the gospel way, the gospel institution, and in some other way and through some other institution go to the rescue of men, women, and children when they are in the worst sort of distress; then, after they are thus rescued and peace and plenty abound, get busy proclaiming the gospel of Christ with a view to building up the only institution in which Christ through his sufferings offered to "redeem us from this present evil world." (Gal. 1: 4.)

What answer could such as do so give to the beneficiaries of their labors, if told (and they would be told) by them that they prefer membership in the institution which was a help in time of need? "Pure religion and undefiled before God is this, To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world." (James 1: 27.)

Brethren, we must glorify God through the church. We do this by the practice of pure religion. The church is the only religious institution God has, save the family; so it follows that we must do our religious work, administering to the afflicted, etc., under the auspices of the church of God. It is the business of the church to give to the world just what it needs-viz., the gospel of Jesus Christ. Every member has a part to do in this great work: so let us awake from sleep, and do more this year than ever before.

The Romantic Story of Southland's Favorite Shoe, EzWear.

Some five years ago, a prominent citizen of South Carolina, visiting New York on important business, chanced to meet the maker of a shoe built on new and unusual lines; an enthusiastic admirer of its most distinctive features, ease and comfort, had suggested the name EzWear; it was promptly adopted. The business man from the South, knowing how welcome such a shoe would be in his part of the country, urged that its remarkable qualities, including not only confort, but style, durability and economy, be made known there. That this has been effectively done is That this has been effectively done is proven by the enormous demand that has spring up in the South for EzWear shoes. It is said that its sale there during the last twelve months has increased fully three hundred per cent. The distributor, Mr. J. R. Simon, of 1589 Broadway, Brooklyn N. Y., says that all who wish to know about a shoe that combines all worth-while shoe may have a copy of his money-ok for the asking.

Public Should Demand Original Nuxated Iron

Physician Warns Against Danger Of Accepting Substitutes—Says That Ordinary Metallic Iron Preparations Cannot Possibly Give The Same

Strength, Power and Endurance

As Organic Iron-Nuxated Iron

As Organic Iron—Nuxated Iron

The remarkable results produced by Nuxated Iron and its wise-spread sate (it being estimated that over three million people annually are today using it) has led to the offering of numerous substitutes, and these physicians mentioned below say that health officials and doctors everywhere should caution the public against accepting substitutes for Nuxated Iron, as these substitutes instead of being organic iron may be nothing more than a metallic iron compound which may in some cases produce more harm than good. Those who feel the need of a strength am blood builder, should go to their family doctors and obtain a prescription calling for organic iron—Nuxated Iron—and present this to their druggist so that there may be no question about obtaining the proper article. But if they do not wish to go to the trouble of getting a prescription for Nuxated Iron then they should be sure to look on the label and see that the words NUXATED IRON are printed thereon.

There are thousands of people taking iron who do not distinguish between organic iron and metallic iron and such persons often fail to obtain the vital energy, strength and endurance which they seek simply because they have taken the wrong form of iron. If you are not strong or well, you owe it to yourself to make the following test! See how long you can work or how far you can walk without becoming tired. Next take two five-grain tablets of Nuxated Iron three times per day after meals for two weeks. Then test your strength and see how much you have gained.

Manufacturers' Note: The widespread publication of the above information has been suggested by Dr. James Francis Spillivan, formerly physician of Bellevin Hospital (Outdied Department) New York and the Westchester County Hospital; Dr. Ferdinand King, New York Physician and Medical author and other, so that the public may be informed on this subject and motected from the use of metallis from under the delesion that it is Nuxated Iron as secret remedy but one which is well known to druggists. Unlike the older, inorganic iron products it is easily assimilated, does not in the teeth, make them black nor opset the stomach. The manufacturers guarantee successful and entirely satisfactory results to crety porchaser or they will refund your money. It is dispensed in this city by all good druggists.

Inman.

Mildred Pearl Inman was the daugher of Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Inman, of Campbell Station, Tenn. She was born on December 15, 1912, and died on January 18, 1919. Her time was quite brief on this earth. She had the misfortune of falling and cutting a small gash in her left cheek, which at first was not thought serious; but after eight days she appeared a little stupid, a physician was called, and her condition was found to be alarming. She was carried at once to the hospital at Columbia, Tenn., but blood poison soon developed and death brought the precious little life to a close. Mildred had some beautiful traits of character, and some of these were brought out in her work in studying the Bible lesson on Lord's day. She impressed her teacher as being loyal, intelligent, and obedient. Her tenderness in years and sweetness in disposition bound her very close to her parents and her brothers and sister. Her stay in her earthly home was short, but her little life was so pure and good the Lord took her to a better home. May He May He who rules well heal the hearts of the loved ones and drive away the clouds sorrow with the precious promises in the word of the Lord. I have no fears but that dear little Mildred will live with angels in the heavenly home, where she will be happy forever with the Lord. F. C. SOWELL.

Armstrong-Hopkins.

I have just received letters telling me of the death of Sister Armstrong-Hopkins. It will be remembered by a great many that Brother and Sister Armstrong-Hopkins were for many years missionaries to India on behalf of the Methodist Church. After their return to America, Brother Armstrong-Hopkins served as pastor of several Methodist churches, and it was while holding a pastorate in Pennsylvania that they came to a more perfect understanding of the Scriptures. After having been baptized by Brother L. S. White, they expressed a strong desire to return to India as missionaries, this time with the gospel of Jesus Christ void of all sectarianism. They visited a number of our churches prior to their sailing for India. years since that time they spent principally in Berhampore, Delhi, and Satara, India. Due to sickness and the lack of sufficient support, they were unable to do the work which they really wished to do. However, through Brother Armstrong-Hopkins' preaching and teaching there were several conversions, one of whom was a highcaste native. Sister Armstrong-Hop-kins did considerable medical work, for some of which she was paid. Most of it, however, was among the poorer classes, who were barely able to pay for medicine. The summer of 1916 was an especially hard one on Brother and Sister Armstrong-Hopkins, they were both very ill. It was then that Brother McHenry visited them and, seeing their great need, invited them to his home in Satara, where he and Sister McHenry cared for them and also assisted them financially.

How Shiver Mineral Water Relieves Rheumatism.

According to the standard medical books, rheumatism is not a germ disease, but is the result of imperfect nutrition. The food is either imperfectly digested or imperfectly assimilated. Poisons accumulate, and these irritate and inflame the delicate linings of the joints, the heart, and other organs. To relieve rheumatism, it is, therefore, necessary to stop the formation of these poisons and get rid of those already formed.

The celebrated Shivar Mineral Water acts on the stomach and kidneys. It corrects the digestion and washes out the poisons through the kidneys, This is the opinion of physicians who prescribe it. If you suffer with rheumatism, dyspepsia, indigestion, disease of the kidneys, bladder, or liver, uricacid poisoning, or any condition due to impure blood, read the following letter, then sign it, inclose the amount, and mail it. Only two out of a hundred on the average report no benefit.

Shivar Spring,

Box 21B, Shelton, S. C.

Gentlemen: I accept your offer and inclose herewith two dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Water. I agree to give it a fair trial, in accordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send; and if it falls to benefit my case, you agree to refund the price in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns, which I agree to return within a month.

A Tribute to the Memory of Nannie Smith.

BY CARL BURCHAM.

Another noble Christian life has been cut down in its flower. Little did the friends and loved ones of Nannie Smith think, when she left her home last September to spend her vacation in Washington City and visit friends here, that they would never hear her voice again and never see her living face. Yet it was even so.

En route to Washington she contracted influenza. This soon went into pneumonia, and before any of her people could more than start to her she was dead.

There is so much in the life of Nannie Smith that was noble and beautiful that a brief sketch of her life and character may help other young people to live the life of faith and righteousness.

Nannie Mann Smith was born in Franklin County, Tenn., and was the oldest child of D. L. and Sallie Smith. While she was quite young her father and mother moved to Artesia, N. M., where her father died soon afterwards. Thus early in life was brought upon Nannie the responsibility of helping support her mother and helping support and educate the three younger children. While a mere girl she went to Amarillo, Texas, and assumed the duties of life and the responsibilities of a mature and well-developed character. She was young, at the impressionable and susceptible age of life; but she fought a good fight, she kept the faith, so that even in death she was gloriously triumphant. Nannie's first work in Amarillo was that of bookkeeper and stenographer for the City Gas Company. Here her work was laborious and her employer exacting. But she held the place for two years, where others both before and after her held it for only a few weeks or months, and after her resignation she was offered a good increase in salary to return. From this place she went to the general offices of the Santa Fé Railway, where she began work as a stenographer. Soon she was promoted to the auditing department, and before she had been in this office long she was given supervision of the work of several other clerks, and she herself made out the monthly reports that were sent to Santa Fé headquarters in the North. Her work was thorough and accurate. From this place she was promoted to the office of the vice president and general manager as private secretary. Here her work, though much less laborious, required a higher degree of accuracy and efficiency. But she succeeded here. Her salary was increased. Her employer advised with her as to the proper forms of expression and the hoice of words in his correspondence and commended her ability and faithfulness. A short time before her leath he said to her one day when they had finished some important work: "Miss Smith, it certainly is a pleasure to have one employee I can depend on."

In her work, Nannie Smith succeeded well. She was diligent and faithful and mastered all that was given her to do. She was rapidly promoted and her salary was steadily increased. In matters of current interest and in general knowledge she was well informed and manifested the same thoroughness and capability of mind. Although she had never had any college training or higher education, she was better informed and more cultured than many who have received diplomas and degrees from colleges and universities. In this also her life is worthy of being patterned after by young people everywhere.

But above all this and far more worthy of note is the life of Nannie Smith as a Christian. In early life she accepted the Lord Jesus Christ as her Savior and Lord, and she never denied him or forsook him. Her association in a large part was necessarily with the world; and about her at aff times, in her daily contact with the many other men and women among whom she worked, were worldly ideas and ideals. But they all knew the principles for which she stood; and when she said "no," it was sufficient. She said it often. I would not say hat she was not influenced at all by onstant association with worldly people, but she never for one moment swerved from her steadfast purpose to serve and obey the true and living God. She loved the church, gave freely of her means to support its work, and was always present at worship, at the prayer meetings, and at-the Sunday-morning Bible study, if possible. She was familiar with the teachings of the Bible and was nearly always ready with an answer to any question on its teachings. Her mind and heart were set on seeing the church grow and expand, upon teaching, preaching, and helping the poor and needy. The awful war troubled her much, and more and more she came to believe in the church and its work, and she strove to build up the work in Amarillo. She herself made plans to increase the usefulness of the church, talked to the other members about how they all ought to do more, promised to give more of her means toward any worthy effort, and went out among the sick and distressed to minister to them and contribute to their needs. A short time before her death she had been faithful to wait upon the sick, taxing her strength to go and serve them after her work hours and at night. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord from henceforth; yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; for their works follow with them."

And while our human hearts cannot comprehend at all why one so young. who loved life so well, and whose future was so full of promise, should be thus rudely snatched away, there comes to our minds these blessed words: "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints."

"The silver cord is loosed; the golden bowl is broken." We cannot know the ways of life or understand the way of death; but by faith we look forward unto the dawning of that perfect, eternal day when shall be consummated that matchless triumph, the triumph of all God's saints over death,

Jesus said in the most sublime language of all: "I am the resurrection and the life: he that believeth on me. though he die, yet shall he live; and whosoever liveth and believeth on me shall never die."

The greatest thing in Nannie Smith's life was her belief on Jesus. Those who knew her best believe that she has gone to live in his presence and In the presence of God forever

A Theory and a Fact.

There are two ways in which we may find the origin of man. One traces him upward from the ape; the other, downward from the Almighty. The first is a theory; the second is an established fact. Man is the appropriate crown of terrestrial creation, and forms the connecting link between the material and spiritual realms. apostle Paul declares, "We are the offspring of God," which means that which originates from one's own life. You never say "father" to a force, to a mist, to a mile, nor to a million of miles. A machine is the product of the brain, but a son is begotten. Divine fatherhood was originally universal for an unfallen race to be perpetuated in the natural order of generation. This relation, forfeited by transgression and lost through death in the day of disobedience, can only be restored through the provisions of grace in the gospel and by individual determination. Men are the children of God, not by racial descent, but by the birth of the Spirit. (John 3: 5, 6.) He restores the term to human phraseology by restoring the experience to human hearts. (Gal. 4: 6.)

When God Becomes a Real Father.

How many find in God a real father? Job exclaimed: "O that I knew where I might find him!" Philip said: "Lord, show us the Father, and it sufficeth us." This is the heart cry of spiritually orphaned men. We may find the answer in what Jesus said to Philip: "Have I been so long time with you, and dost thou not know me, Philip? he that hath seen me hath seen the Father; how sayest thou, Show us the Father?" (John 14: 9.) All the disclosures of God made in the Old Testament are taken up, combined, and glorified in the revelation of Jesus Christ set forth in the New Testament. There is no aspect of the divine nature that may not be seen perfectly in the portrait of Jesus Christ. The Son of God manifests the wisdom and power of God, his kindness, justice, mercy, and holiness. But since man became estranged from God, our Savior shows us how God may become real to us by showing us how we may be forgiven. God becomes "our Father" in the filial sense only through regeneration. Sin has separated us from him, and the relationship of spiritual sonship is recovered through the forgiveness of sins provided for in the gospel. It is thus that Jesus shows us the way.

Knowledge More Than Acquaintance.

But do we know Jesus Christ? Some might answer in the words of polite society: "Yes, I have received an introduction to him." True enough, in human relationships an introduction to another person entitles us to the claim that we know him. Even a nodding street acquaintance will suffice. But, applied to Jesus, such knowledge is worthless. J. H. Jowett properly says: "It has no content. It is a mere superficies, a thing without depth. It is not implicated with anything vital. We might lose it, and its absence would in no wise impair the volume or quality of our personal life." But knowledge is more than mere acquaintance. How different is the conception of one who knows Jesus as "the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world;" as the "Man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief;" as the "Son of the living God;" as the Brightness of the Father's glory; as the Savior of the world; as the Intercessor for the saints; as the Life, the Light, and the Word!

The purpose that Jesus had in coming to earth is impressively declared in Matt. 20: 27, 28. He came to "give his life a ransom for many." Although he "thought it not robbery to be equal with God," he humbled himself and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross," that he might render supreme sacrifice and service to mankind. His Father was also a party to the gift. "He gave his only begotten Son." (John 3: 16.) Paul tells us that he "spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all." (Rom. 8: 32.) People of all ages need to have a clear conception of who Christ was and what he came to do. How truly said: "Let us use a great word greatly, and settle with ourselves that this word 'know' is marvelously deep and that no man has ever touched the bottom!"

"Come and See."

And Jesus Christ wants us to know him. No doubt about that. He is in the waiting, appealing, entreating attitude. Once we ask, as two of his earliest disciples did, "Where abidest thou?" his answer will be: "Come and see." That is the way to find out about Christ. Do not stand off and criticize, but go to his word for knowledge and light. But he said also to his early disciples: "Follow me." That is Christ's summons to us all. Follow—not fiumafi philosophers, not human teachers, but the Son of God. Any person to be real to us must be known to us. Confidence is a mark of closest friendshift. But confidence must be based on knowledge. If some persons gave no more study or attention to their friendships than they do to the study of Christ, those friends would vanish into thin air.

Oliver Cromwell put it straight when he said: "I know nothing that will give men the like power and strength that the knowledge of God in Christ will."

Scoffers and Scoffing.

BY W. H. CARTER.

In a recent article we have the following: "It is high time to wake out of sleep. 'When they are saying, Peace and safety, then sudden destruction cometh upon them.' (1 Tim. 5: 3.) The apostle here expects his brethren to be informed. He says: 'But ye are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you unawares.' 'So then let us not sleep.' We see these conditions being fulfilled right before our eyes, yet we have among us brethren scoffing at those who are warning to watchfulness in expectancy of his near approach."

I am of opinion that this writer has drawn upon the imagination and failed to set forth all the facts. If one forms an opinion about the coming of the Christ and becomes so dogmatic about it that he preaches it to the division of brethren, and one, for the love of the cause and unity of the body, points out his error, does he thereby become a scoffer? Jesus pointed out the erroneous teaching of the Jews. (Matt. 15: 1-9.) Was he "scoffing" at them?

But where is the trouble? It is not in regard to the coming of Christ, nor that it may be near or far away; but there are some who have adopted Adventism along this line, who have taken a step in advance of them in the field of speculative theories and have taught that his coming is "imminent"—about to take place immediately—and have asserted that he will come in a body of flesh and bones without blood. They also join with C. T. Russell that the kingdom of Christ has not been established and will not be until the Jews are gathered at Jerusalem and Christ comes at the beginning of the millennium.

Some good brethren, in the discharge of their duty to God and man, exposed this teaching and showed that it contradicted the teaching of Christ and his apostles. Were they "scoffing?" Not long after this theory was formulated in a German mind and began to be propagated, I had a conversation with a sister who was a member of a congregation a majority of whom had been won over to the theory; and after talking for some time about the point as to the establishing of the kingdom, with much emphasis she said: "I believe in the second coming of Christ." "I do, too," I replied, and asked if she knew of any of our brethren who did not believe that Christ would come again.

Now, here is not a scoff, but, as I now see it, a "camouflage." The real teaching about the millennium, the kingdom, the second chance, etc., is camouflaged with the one thought that the second coming of Christ is immediately to take place. No one knows whether he will come in a year or in a thousand years. Nearly two thousand years ago James (5: 8) said, "For the coming of the Lord draweth nigh;" and of this event our Savior said: "But of that day and hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels of heaven, but my Father only." (Matt. 24: 36.) "O," you say, "look at the signs; don't you see the signs?" What signs? "Why," you say, "the wars." Well, there have been wars before, and men as honest and as smart as you are thought they saw the signs; but time proved that they were mistaken, and it is, to say the least, possible that you are mistaken. My brother, it is not speculators and theorists on unfulfilled prophecy or anything else that God wants and that is badly needed now, but faithful men who will be content to preach the word and shun not to declare all the counsel of God. Let us do as we are taught-look for, expect, and be ready for the Lord when he comes; but let us not be led into unscriptural speculations as to the nearness of his coming, but live to-day so as to be ready if he should come to-morrow. I know not the day nor the hour, but I do know that my Lord will come, for in his blessed word he has said: "Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in me. In my Father's house are many mansions: if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself: that where I am, there ye may be also." (John 14: 1-3.)

Enoch-A Prophet.

BY H. LEO BOLES.

Enoch has the distinction of being the first prophet that God has told us about; he stands at the head of a long list of prophets. As Abel stands at the head of the Honor Roll of God's heroes of faith, so Enoch stands at the head of the long line of prophets. Prophecies had been uttered before Enoch's day, but these were given, it seems, directly by Jehovah. When Jehovah spake to Eve in the garden of Eden, before the banishment of man from the garden, a prophecy was given. "I will put enmity between thee and the, woman, and between thy seed and her seed: he shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel." (Gen. 3: 15.) This seems to be a prophecy concerning the Christ.

A prophet, according to the uniform teaching of the Bible, is a speaker of or for God. A prophet is God's mouthpiece to the people, while a priest is the people's mouthpiece to God. Sometimes the double function of prophet and priest was given to one man. Samuel was a prophet and also a priest; this is also true of many others. The words of a prophet are not the productions of his own spirit, but come from God; they are the words of God, given to the people through the prophet. Many times the prophets were unfaithful to God. Frequently they would refrain from giving God's message to the people, and again they would speak their own thoughts and claim that they were the thoughts of Jehovah. "Thus saith Jehovah of hosts, Hearken not unto the words of the prophets that prophesy unto you: they teach you vanity; they speak a vision of their own heart, and not out of the mouth of Jehovah." (Jer. 23: 16.) Again: "Son of man, prophesy against the prophets of Israel that prophesy, and say thou unto them that prophesy out of their own heart. Hear ye the word of Jehovah." (Ezek. 13: 2.) Here a condemnation is placed upon the prophets who prophesy "out of their own heart" or "speak a vision of their own heart, and not out of the mouth of Jehovah." All who attempt to speak in the name of Christ to-day can learn a very profitable lesson from the limitations placed upon the prophets of old. "If any man speaketh, speaking as it were oracles of God; . . . that in all things God may be glorified through Christ Jesus." (1 Pet. 4: 11.) God is glorified when his truth or will js spoken faithfully to-day; no one can speak his own thoughts, dreams, will, or way without dishonoring God. This has been true in every age of the world.

A prophet was first called a "seer." "Beforetime in Israel, when a man went to inquire of God, thus he said, Come, and let us go to the seer; for he that is now called a Prophet was beforetime called a Seer." (1 Sam. 9: 9.) He was called a "seer" because by the Spirit of God he could look into the future and see things which do not lie in the domain of natural sight. The curtain was lifted, and he was permitted to see the things of God and ways of Jehovah which ordinary man unaided by Jehovah could not see. However, the element of futurity is not necessary in all prophesying; prophesying in New Testament times simply means to teach, especially teaching which is given by the aid of inspiration.

The prophet who has the fullest function as a speaker for God must have a life consistent with the character of Jehovah. It is true that God spoke through Balaam and even through Balaam's ass, yet these prophecies were not of long duration. Enoch, who walked with God, was prepared in heart, life, and character to become the mouthpiece of Jehovah to the people. The spirit of prophecy must be blended with faith and love in order to reach the highest degree. Balaam prophesied and saw in prophetic vision the star of Jacob arising, but in unbelief shut his eyes against its light; he lived a prophet, but died an idolater. Caiaphas, following the impulse of his own passion and governed by the prejudice of a blinded mind, uttered a truth of which he was not aware, stumbled on a prediction which he was unknowingly helping to fulfill. But such men are not called true prophets. As the prophet was required to adjust his life with the will of God, so preachers and teachers of God's will to-day must be in harmony with God's word.

Permit me to say here that the preachers of this age are largely to blame for the condition of the churches now. Preachers are jealous of each other and have not that fellow feeling that the servants of God should have for each other. This is because in heart and life they are not in harmony with the Spirit of Christ and the teaching of his word. Enoch, impressed with the solemn truth which he preached to others, daily improved by it himself. It is better to possess a humble and charitable spirit with a childlike faith than to "speak with the tongues of men and of angels" and be destitute of the Christian graces.

Some think that Enoch prophesied concerning the flood, which occurred the year his oldest son, Methuselah, died; this may be true. Jude (14, 15) says: "And to these also Enoch, the seventh from Adam, prophesied, saying, Behold, the Lord came with ten thousands of his holy ones, to execute judgment upon all, and to convict all the ungody of all their works of ungodliness which they have ungodly wrought, and of all the hard things which ungodly sinners have spoken against him." Jude makes application of the condemnation of God upon all ungodliness before the flood and after the flood until the coming of our Lord. This prophecy gives us a clearer insight into the condition of affairs on the earth while Enoch was living. Enoch points out to the ungodly of all ages the final judgment of Jehovah upon all ungodliness. From this prophecy we learn that the doctrine of a judgment to come was taught to the world in its early infancy. Enoch was enabled to see down the generations of earth to the coming of the Lord with all of his holy ones to execute judgment on all ungodliness. How vast and how profound must be that intelligence which can communicate unto man the foreknowledge of events so remote! Enoch was enabled to see from the very infancy of the world down the aisles of time to the awful day of its dissolution.

Paul's Ambitions. No. 2.

BY JOHN STRAITON.

Every person who goes forth to preach the gospel has before his mind some ideal to which he desires to attain. Often it is that we may get a good hearing, that large crowds may come out to the meetings; always, we hope, that men and women may be convicted of their sins, confess Christ, and become true and faithful Christians. Sometimes our ambition is that church troubles may be settled and the congregation left in order and peace, in good working shape and full of zeal for souls. Perhaps, once in a while, when pressed with debts and poverty, our main ambition may rise no higher than that the meeting may be financially supported in a generous way. Now and again even less worthy motives may move the preacher.

But if we wish to have the highest ambition of all, we turn to the New Testament and ask what was Paul's ambition as one who proclaimed the gospel as the power of God unto salvation. Would I describe a preacher such as Paul, Paul would himself direct me. Describing the sphere of his labors, he says: "So that from Jerusalem, and round about even unto Illyricum, I have fully preached the gospel of Christ; yea, being ambitious so to preach the gospel, not where Christ was already named, that I might not build upon another man's foundation; but as it is written, They shall see, to whom no tidings of him came, and they who have not heard shall understand." (Rom. 15: 19-21.)

What a contrast this presents to the ambition of the great majority of our preachers! Paul's ambition was to preach where Christ had not been already named. He sought the virgin soil, the pagan darkness, where even the name of Christ was unknown. We seek the well-cultivated soil, the place where the church is strong, where we can be well supported, numerically and financially.

Our folks are well instructed in the commission. You can almost tell the Bible of a disciple by the condition of the one page where Mark 16: 16 is. Turning over the wellworn leaves, where the thumb marks are thick on the margin, like the trample of feet, proclaims where the battle was hottest.

I wrote that our folks understood the commission. I should have said "the second part of the commission." I fear that the full force of the first word is as yet unknown. "Go," said our Lord. "Stay at home," say our brethren, "at least until all the folks at home are converted." The other night at prayer meeting I heard a preacher say: "We have plenty of heathen at home. Time enough for foreign missions when they are converted." What a contrast to Paul's ambition, which was to preach the gospel where Christ was not already named!

The distinguishing feature of the Christian religion when compared with the other great religions of the world is its missionary spirit. "Go out into the highways and hedges, and constrain them to come in." (Luke 14: 23.) "Make disciples of all the nations." (Matt. 28: 19.) "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to the whole creation." (Mark 18: 15.) The only boundary is the uttermost part of the earth. The glory of the apostolic age was that the gospel was "preached in all creation under heaven." (Col. 1: 23.)

I have not troubled to count how many hundreds or thousands of preachers are listed in the yearbook. But there is no trouble in counting those who have gone to where Christ is not named: of men, one in Japan, two in India, and one who is on his way home; of women, two in Japan and two in India. Do you think, if we had caught a true vision of Paul's grand ambition, that there would be such a great disproportion in the number of home and foreign preachers?

Then, when it comes to the giving of money, the New Testament reveals a rather startling condition. Nearly all the money given to preachers was for what we now call "foreign mission work," and that great special contribution named in the letters to the Romans and Corinthians was given by the Gentiles for the benefit of Jews. Our views are altogether too parochial and provincial. We need to realize that God has "made of one every nation of men to dwell on all the face of the earth, . . . that they should seek God, if haply they might feel after him and find him." (Acts 17: 26, 27.) Then will our ambition as Christians and as preachers more nearly approximate to that of Paul's, who was ambitious so to preach the gospel, "not where Christ was already named," that he "might not build upon another man's foundation; but, as it is written, They shall see, to whom no tidings of him came, and they who have not heard shall understand."

[Note.—Those who desire to contribute to the support of our missionaries, Brother McCaleb and Sisters Sarah Andrews and Lillie Cypert, in Japan, should forward contributions to the office of the Gospel Advocate, or to Miss Nellie Straiton, 1030 South Lake Street, Fort Worth, Texas. Attention, Sunday-School Teachers!

The conscientious teacher of the Bible is anxious to secure the best help available in the preparation of the lesson. Patient research not only improves and enriches the mind of the teacher, but makes the class work doubly interesting to the scholars. In addition to our quarterlies, we carry two excellent books that cover the International Sunday-school Lessons. The publishers of "Peloubet's Select Notes" claim that it is the "most valuable commentary in the world," because it is "scholarly, comprehensive, condensed, and practical." It covers every phase of the lesson, from treatment and explanation of text, with notes from the best commentators, to list of special books for further study along the lines of thought suggested.

"Tarbell's Teachers' Guide" is edited by Miss Martha Tarbell, Ph.D., and has been a general favorite for many years. The author has covered everything in the field of research and investigation that the enterprising teacher or scholar would like to know. Primary, Junior, Intermediate, Senior, and Bible-class teachers find in it full explanation of Bible texts, light upon difficult passages by the best biblical scholars, and discussion of present-day problems in teaching.

We will send either one of these valuable books for $1.25, postpaid; or, in combination with a new subscriber, we will send the Gospel Advocate for one year and either one of these commentaries for $3 to the same or separate addresses.

The Young People, edited by A. B. Lipscomb, is a highclass illustrated weekly of four pages. The editor's comments upon the lessons occupy one page. The price is fifty cents per single copy for a year, or five or more copies to one address for forty cents each.

Address your order to the McQuiddy Printing Company, 317-319 Fifth Avenue, North, Nashville, Tenn.

Emerson said: "Nothing great was ever accomplished without enthusiasm." Believe, then, in yourself, your work, and your future with all your heart and mind, and in this way you will positively succeed.

We are requesting the churches to make a liberal contribution to the Tennessee Orphans' Home on the first Lord's day in April. "The gift without the giver is bare." Is there an urgent need and demand for gifts to care for orphan children? Then give, but give also for your "own soul's sake." In giving you are answering the need of your own soul.

In acknowledgment of a check for $1,000 we have received the following letter from the American Committee for Armenian and Syrian relief:

Dear Mr. Lipscomb: For the first time in two years American food and clothing are being sent directly to the sufferers in the Near East. The advance guard is already in Constantinople.

Three ships loaded with supplies and a personnel of two hundred and fifty workers, including twenty-five doctors and over sixty nurses, are carrying a message of good will to the starving and destitute peoples in the war-stricken regions of Western Asia.

The contribution of your readers gives them a personal share and a peculiar interest in the Mercurus, Pensacola, Western Belle, and the ever-increasing activities of our committee.

Sincerely yours,

C. V. VICKREY.

We have also received the following letter from the Polish Victims' Relief Committee:

Dear Mr. Lipscomb: With deepest gratitude I beg to acknowledge receipt of your check for five hundred dollars, which represents another donation from the readers of the Gospel Advocate. Indeed, my dear Mr. Lipscomb, you have shown us more than preference in the distribution of your funds. You may rest assured of our most heartfelt appreciation. With many, many thanks, I beg to remain.

Spirit of the Press

Women Workers of Japan.

We are apt to think of the maid of Japan as a coy little thing, her hair full of ornaments and holding a fan and parasol, poised in some artistic manner. That is the kind we usually see on post cards. It is only the geisha or dancing girls who would permit their pictures to be made so public. Of late years the Empress, Princess Fushimi, and Mrs. Yajima, in the interests of the Red Cross and temperance, have allowed their pictures to go out. Mrs. Nogi's picture, after she and General Nogi committed suicide to be with the Emperor in the next world, when the former Emperor died, was printed on post cards and souvenirs. But the real women of Japan of the middle and upper classes are modest, conservative, shy, gentle. Because of centuries of training, they are submissive where custom speaks, but persevering, persistent, and progressive where they have a chance. From birth they are taught lessons of humility.

The day is coming when the little brown maid is not going to be married off by her parents without her own consent. With higher education now, hers and mingling among foreign teachers and reading of the customs of other countries, she is already asserting her rights in many instances.

Until the missionary appeared, there was no place for the girl in the educational system of Japan. It was not believed that a woman had a soul nor a capacity for learning, nor was there any necessity for her to learn, as she was simply the slave and tool of man. The more simple and childlike she was, the better he liked it. Over the front entrance of one of the famous temples is written, "Women and dogs not admitted." One of the teachers said to us one day: "I do not want an educated wife. She could talk back." One young man, in talking to my husband, said: "Education of women is a failure. They think too much and talk too much."

When the missionaries began their work in Japan, it was impossible to find any parents who would allow their little girls to be taught. They finally began with little Eurasian children that they could pick off from the streets. Eurasian children, you understand, are those born of mixed parentage, European and Asiatic. Most of them at that time were illegitimate children born after America forced Japan's doors open. Everything the missionaries did was very closely watched. There was no little astonishment when it was found that even this low class of girls could learn just like boys. The better-class people began slowly and cautiously to allow their girls to be taught. To-day we find every sort of school for girls in Japan that we have for our own girls in America. The best school for girls outside of mission schools is run by Miss Ume Tsuda, a graduate of Vassar. There is almost double the number of women teachers in the schoolrooms of Japan to-day, aside from boys' schools and collèges, that there is of men teachers. Normal schools are not coëducational institutions, and both kinds are full, with waiting lists.

Formerly dressmaking was a work for men only, but now there are sewing departments in girls' schools. Women as well as men earn a livelihood by teaching and sewing for others. Embroidery work was formerly done entirely by men, but now there are as many women as men doing this work. All the large stores now have women as well as men clerks. You go to buy your railway ticket, and the chances are it will be a girl who sells it to you. This has come about within the past five years. The blame of all the faults of the whole telephone system is laid upon the shoulders of the central telephone girl, just the same as in our own land, While typewriting in Japanese is as yet impossible by any one, those who have sufficient knowledge of English hold positions as stenographers and typewriters. Among this number are women.

Singing girls play the shamisen and a few the biwa. Refined ladies play the koto, and with the missionary came the violin, organ, and piano. The ever-eager-to-learn Japanese wanted to try them, too. Now there is a very large school of music in Tokyo, not connected with any mission work. In this school almost any instrument you could name is taught, and an equal number of boys and girls are learning. One of Miss Kate V. Johnson's girls is a graduate of that school and is now the head of a music department in one of the mission schools in Tokyo. From this school and from mission schools go out music teachers all over Japan.

It is no disgrace for a woman to sing in public now. There are a few very sweet voices. In our mission Miss Bertha Clawson mothered a girl from the time she was quite small. The child proved to have a wonderful voice and Miss Clawson kept her under good vocal teachers. She was always sure of a hearty welcome at any public gathering, and since she married and came to America she uses her voice for Christ in San Francisco. Many girls are teaching vocal music in public and private schools.

It was as much a shock to the Japanese world as to our own when women began speaking in public. Now, wherever Mrs. Yajima goes to speak on temperance, bands greet her if they possess one in the town. She has had a great part in changing the laws of her land regarding women. The Red Cross, until this recent war, was the largest in the world and managed by Princess Fushimi. A man is at the head of it at present. Authoresses are coming to the front, and, too, there are successful women publishers of periodicals for women. In the business world we find Madam Hiraoka really at the head of the great Mitsui Banking System. The business was about to fail when she stepped in and saved the day. A woman in Osaka was the wife of a very successful manufacturer, and at his death she took over the management of his business. Another woman in Tokyo runs a big weaving establishment where several hundred girls are employed. The conditions for girls and women are all that could be asked for in her factory. Until about five years ago there were no women actresses in Japan. The first to appear before the public was the daughter of a famous actor, and it created quite a stir. Thousands of girls have learned to be nurses, and they are quick, quiet, gentle, and willing. An industry that has sprung up within the last few years is that of making a certain kind of lace. Women exclusively are used in this. Girls are being employed as office help by doctors and dentists.

With factory life in our own land and in England and English colonies have come most heart-rending conditions. Japan is proving no exception to the rule. Added to the long hours and pitifully low wages, Japan's dormitory system seems to make the conditions worse than anything we have known.

With the exception of the dark page of factory life and life for woman among the low-class people, there is a beautiful unfolding and developing of Japanese women that has come about through mission work, higher education, and confact with the outer world.—Mrs. Myrtle E. Hagin, in World Call.

"Creatures Without Reason."

We find some strong language in the Second Epistle of Peter, especially the second chapter, when it comes to describing those who give themselves over to fleshly desires and impulses. As you study this chapter, in some of its parts, you wonder if the people described were capable of being anything better than they were. They are spoken of as being "born mere animals;" but there is nothing in it that sustains the idea of "total depravity," or being born "nonelect," for these very people are spoken of as "forsaking the right way, they went astray." (See verse 15.) Just remember that they "went astray."

But some one will ask: "What does it mean when it says 'creatures without reason?'" It certainly does not mean that they were not capable of exercising reason. The "prodigal son" was a creature without reason while he was living in "a far country," away from his best interests, and so remained until he "came to himself," or began to exercise reason. When we let ourselves loose and drift absolutely with the desires of the flesh, certainly we are acting as "creatures without reason" and can be spoken of as "mere animals;" for what better does an animal do? What we do and what we refuse to do determine what we are. It was said on this page some weeks ago that the most unreasonable being on earth is that being that is capable of acting according to reason and does not do it. I am more and more convinced that this is true.

Now, in this effort, I do not care to stay with those extremely unreasonable creatures spoken of by the apostle Peter, but desire to come to those who act hardly so bad, but act without reason nevertheless. I am thinking of the church member who has persuaded himself that he is a very respectable Christian, when the fact is, if all should do as he does, the cause of Christianity would lie writhing in the dust with no one to support it. I am talking about you, my brother, my sister, who come occasionally and give seldomly, very seldomly; and when you do, it is a slick nickel that you drop in because you happen not to have a penny. There is nothing more outstanding in the Holy Scriptures than that every member of the church should work, should give, should pray, should be continually interested in every phase of the work of our Lord. While this is true, there are members who stay at home for the most petty excuses-" It looks like rain," "The street cars may be crowded and I might have to stand up a block or two," ad infinitum.

Now, had we better not stop and think? God may have us written down as "creatures without reason." Is going to heaven something that can be engaged in only when the weather is fair and the sun is shining? Is meeting God in his holy appointments something that we must do only when traffic conditions are good? If so, why did not Christ leave off his sixty-mile journey to the waters of the Jordan, where John was baptizing? No, my friend, let me tell you now and forever, if we do not love Christ enough to "suffer hardship" (2 Tim. 2: 3), to make sacrifices in order to do his will and to walk in his footsteps and keep his banner unfurled before the people, we are not going to be saved.

Can you think of anything so unreasonable as getting cold and careless in the service of God? What could be more reasonable than forever being wide awake and working whole-heartedly in the service of the Lord?

"Creatures without reason." Are you right sure God has not placed his mind upon you and declared you such? I have known people to attend church regularly, to seemingly be willing to do anything within their power to forward the cause of Christ; but just let one thing be done by one member of the church that they consider a little unjust to themselves, and they quit their attendance and seemingly lose all interest in the work. Wonderful heroes they are! How do such look when you set them beside our Lord and his apostles and see the rebuffs they suffered, yet whose interest never waned?

Now let me say, in conclusion, that there is absolutely no condition in which a man can be placed where he can act with the remotest shadow of reason in losing interest in the work of the Lord. How foolish we sometimes act! How weak we sometimes show ourselves to be! May the Lord still be patient and forbearing.

"And It Is Never Settled."

While we have our minds on sometimes allowing ourselves to act as "creatures without reason," let us think of the fusses that come up between brethren that are never settled. When such is the case, somebody is hardhearted, somebody is stubborn, somebody loves self better than he loves God. Certainly every fuss could be settled if both parties would, indeed, pray and live: "Father, thy will, not mine, be done." Who can call this in question? And all these brethren that go on with their unsettled fusses see, doubtless, the unreasonableness of the Mormons in following Joseph Smith or the Catholics in following the pope, and yet fail to realize that they are following one but little better, if any, than the pope or Joseph Smith—namely, self.

In Blindness They Continue.

What could be more unreasonable than a man who has two good eyes blindfolding himself and expecting people to treat him as we do the really blind? Could we pity such? Would we give him alms? To do so would be to act about as unreasonably as the blindfolded man. All religious blindness is about as unreasonable. God has given us his word. It is plain and simple. He says what he means, and means what he says. Yet people, because they love their theories better than they love God, will hold on to them in spite of the glorious light of the gospel of Christ. What is easier than taking your Bible and learning that baptism took place where there was "much water," that they "went down into the water" in order to be baptized, and that baptism is a burial and a resurrection? I say, what is easier than this? Then, why hold on to sprinkling, a practice started and supported by the Catholics? What is easier than opening the Bible and learning just how we must treat our wives, our husbands, our children, our friends, our neighbors-yes, and even our enemies? I say, what is more simple than God's spoken word to us on these duties? Don't tell me that you can't see it; just tell the truth and say you will not see it. For Christ has said-and it must be so-that "If any man willeth to do his will, he shall know of the teaching." (John 7: 17.) 0 0 0

The Good Work Continues.

Both January and February of this year were good months for all the Atlanta congregations. There have been baptisms, members added by statement, and the indifferent brought to repentance at all the places of worship, and the attendance at all the places has increased. Good reports come from the places out from Atlanta. The "flu" seems to be about at an end here, and we are getting ready for our spring drive. Those who have friends to move to this city are asked to notify us, so we can look them up.

QUERY DEPARTMENT

Brother McQuiddy: We have no regular preacher. A number of our members would like to hear the sectarians preach after our worship is over, but our leaders do not approve the idea and will not begin the worship in order to get through in time for the eleven-o'clock service at other churches. Some of the men are leaving almost every Sunday without taking the Supper. Please tell us just what you think-of this condition.

In my study of the New Testament I have never found any condition similar to this. In the days of the apostles there was but one church; hence, such a question as this could not arise. It appears to me, however, that if the church were as spiritual-minded as it should be and were hungering and thirsting after righteousness, it would have no desire to rush through the worship, even if it does have no preacher. We learn from history that the early church met and spent the whole day in reading and studying the Scriptures. If the leaders of this church would study the Scriptures as they should and if all the membership were laboring to have only the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ and to glory only in the cross of Christ, they could instruct and edify themselves upon the first day of the week. The trouble, however, is that there is so little Bible reading, so few people have the spirit of Christ and realize that their business above everything else is to love and serve the Lord Jesus Christ, that they prefer to meet and go through a form of worship and then rush elsewhere to be entertained. The effort of this church should be to correct this condition and to bring itself to that condition of spirituality that will be well pleasing to the Lord Jesus Christ. When this is done, the men will have no desire to run away from the worship.

Brother McQuiddy: There was a division some time ago in the colored church of Christ worshiping on Jackson Street, in Nashville, over some personal matters. Quite a number of the congregation left, secured an amusement hall only about three blocks from the Jackson Street house, and for several months have met there to worship. Recently they all went back to the Jackson Street Church and acknowledged their faults and asked to be forgiven, but they want to continue meeting where they are. The question is, have they repented if they want to continue the division?

When men make confession of wrongdoing and then ask the privilege of continuing in that wrongdoing, it is clear that their sorrow is not godly sorrow, but the sorrow of the world that worketh death. The man who confesses to drunkenness and then continues to get drunk every day in the week has not repented of his sin. When men repent of their sins, they loathe and hate them. This hatred leads them to turn away from them. Repentance is a change of will produced by godly sorrow, which leads to a reformation of life. Christ says: "The men of Nineveh shall stand up in the judgment with this generation, and shall condemn it: for they repented at the preaching of Jonah; and behold, a greater than Jonah is here." (Matt. 12: 41.) What did the Ninevites do in repenting? "And God saw their works, that they turned from their evil way; and God repented of the evil which he said he would do unto them; and he did it not." (Jon. 3: 10.) The Ninevites heard the preaching of Jonah; they believed it; they put on sackcloth and sat in ashes, and they turned from their evil way. So long as there is opposition to these brethren's meeting in the amusement hall and so long as it is deemed divisive and not best for the church, those who have been guilty of doing this, if they have repented, will cheerfully cease to meet in this hall and meet in the church house on Jackson Street as heretofore. After God had very plainly spoken to Balaam and had told him for three times and had warned him by an angel that he should not go and curse the Israelites, yet he had the audacity to stand up and say: "If it displease thee, I will get me back again." This shows the perversity of the human heart. So these brethren, after confessing their wrongdoing, now ask to be permitted to continue to do a thing that they know will be displeasing to their brethren and displeasing to the Lord. So I answer unhesitatingly that unless the entire church should decide that it would be best and no offense for those who went away to continue to worship in the amusement hall, they should not do so. I would not be misunderstood, however. If these brethren can accomplish more good by working in other fields, they should do so. Sometimes congregations get too large and should divide. It is best for them to swarm. Christians should go everywhere preaching the word. Every church should labor to build up churches in destitute fields. There are a number of preachers in this church who, instead of going to Jackson Street every Lord's day and sitting with folded hands and listening to another preach, should go out into the byways and hedges and preach the gospel, endeavoring to build up churches in new fields. There is much work that needs to be done; hence, every member of the Jackson Street Church should feel under obligation to do his best in winning souls to Christ. As an idle man tempts the devil, it is not best for a great number of brethren to remain together in idleness. In New Testament times persecution sent out the Christians into different fields, and so sometimes I think we need persecution to-day to scatter us in order that we may sow the seed of the kingdom broadcast. If these brethren feel that they can accomplish no good in the Jackson Street Church and cannot live harmoniously in that church, then the wise and scriptural thing for them to do would be, not to seek to build up in a way to tear down the Jackson Street Church, but to go into another field and build up a church that will strengthen and feed the Jackson Street Church. It is the essence of folly and shows something different from the Christian spirit to seek to build up another congregation right under the shadow of the Jackson Street Church.

Brother McQuiddy: Please answer, through the columns of the Gospel Advocate, the following question: Was Pharaoh drowned in the Red Sea with his hosts?

JESSE S. BILLS.

Smith's Bible Dictionary, edited by Peloubet, says of "the Pharaoh of the exodus" (Ex. 5: 1): "Either Thothmes III., as Wilkinson, or Menephthah son of Rameses II., whom Brugsch thinks was probably the Pharaoh of the exodus, who with his army pursued the Israelites and was overwhelmed in the Red Sea. 'The events which form the lamentable close of his rule over Egypt are passed over by the monuments (very naturally) with perfect silence. The dumb tumulus covers the misfortune which was suffered, for the record of these events was inseparably connected with the humiliating confession of a divine visitation, to which a patriotic writer at the court of Pharaoh would hardly have brought his mind." The Bible narrative indicates that Pharaoh went with his hosts: "And he made ready his chariot, and took his people with him; and he took six hundred chosen chariots, and all the chariots of Egypt, and captains over all of them. And Jehovah hardened the heart of Pharaoh king of Egypt, and he pursued after the children of Israel: for the children of Israel went out with a high hand. And the Egyptians pursued after them, all the horses and chariots of Pharaoh, and his horsemen, and his army, and overtook them encamping by the sea, beside Pi-hahiroth, before Baal-zephon. And when Pharaoh drew nigh," etc. (Ex. 14: 6-10.) This shows clearly that Pharaoh went with his people. The natural inference is that he went with them into the sea and was drowned. I have seen it stated somewhere that the tomb of Pharaoh had recently been discovered, but this statement is not in harmony with the scripture cited above.

Questions on the Church, the Kingdom, and the Missionary Society. No. 1.

BY M. C. K.

From a long list of questions submitted by Brother J. L. Hines, of Meaford, Canada, we shall note and consider seven of them in this article. They are as follows:

- 1. What does the word "church" mean?
- 2. What does the word "kingdom" mean?
- 3. Does "kingdom" as used in the New Testament al-ways mean "church," or does it ever, and if so, in what sense?
- 4. Are local churches the same in the kingdom that States are in the United States?
- 5. Are the laws for the States the same as the laws for the Union, or do they conflict, and if so, in what way?
- 6. Is one local church independent of all other local churches? Is it complete, and has it organs sufficient for the life of it?
- 7. Can all local churches be bound together in the matter of receiving funds and selecting and sending out mis-

Numbering our answers to correspond with the number of the queries, we shall consider the foregoing list in the order in which they are submitted.

1. The word "church" is of Anglo-Saxon origin and is a modified form of the German "kirche," remotely derived from the Greek word "kyriakos," which means belonging to the Lord. So far as the literal meaning of the term is concerned, there is, strange to say, nothing in common between it and the New Testament Greek word of which, in both the Authorized Version and the Revision, it is given as a translation. The said New Testament word is "ecclesia," literally meaning called out, though in Greek usage it means an assembly, so called because those composing it were called out from their homes and assembled in a given place. The querist probably did not mean to limit his inquiry to the meaning of the Anglo-Saxon term. but meant to inquire also into the thing signified by it and by the original New Testament term to which they are applied in the New Testament. Hence, we add that, in New Testament usage, they are applied to, and mean simply, the people of God; and hence, since the Anglo-Saxon term, used in translation, means belonging to the Lord and the original term means called out, they are both properly so applied, since the said people both belong to the Lord and are called out of the world. As thus applied, these terms have two New Testament senses, the local and the general sense, the former, as in 1 Cor. 1: 1, meaning the people of God at a special place, and the latter, as in Matt. 16: 18, meaning the people of God everywhere in general.

2. The word "kingdom" means the people and territory ruled by a king, or the sphere in which a king has control. The latter part of the term, "dom," is said to be from the same root as doom, meaning authority and judgment, In this case there is a point in common between it and the New Testament Greek word (basileia) of which it is given as a translation, both meaning the domain or territory ruled by a king. In the New Testament, like the term church, it is applied to, and means, the people of God, or the people in whom God's rule or reign has been established.

3. The term "kingdom" never means "church," except in the sense that they are both composed of and mean the same people-the people of God. In 1 Thess. 1: 1 Paul calls the Thessalonian Christians "the church," and in 1 Thess. 2: 12 he admonishes the same people to "walk worthily of God, who," he says, "calleth you into his own kingdom and glory." In Rev. 1: 6, referring to Christians, including himself among them, John says: "He made us to be a kingdom." Thus, God's people are God's church, and God's people are God's kingdom. The principle here involved may be seen by remembering that God's peoplethe same people-are presented in the Scriptures under a variety of images, and hence that they are spoken of and must be viewed from different angles of vision. They are not only called a church and a kingdom, but a race, an army, a vineyard, and by many other designations. A race is a people descended from a common stock; and when God's people are called "an elect race" (1 Pet. 2: 9), they are viewed as the spiritual descendants from a common Father-God-and that he has, in a given way, chosen or elected them. When they are called an army, Christ is their Captain or Supreme Commander, and they are all soldiers and are admonished to "put on the whole armor of God" (Eph. 6: 11), to "fight the good fight of the faith" (1 Tim. 6: 12), to "war the good warfare" (1 Tim. 1: 18), and to "suffer hardship as good soldiers of Christ Jesus" (2 Tim. 2: 3). When they are called a vineyard, Christ is the true vine, they are all "branches," and the Heavenly Father is the "husbandman," and hence, under this image, there is vine dressing, pruning, and growing of fruit. (John 15: 1-8.) When they are called an ecclesia (church), they are viewed as called out of the world and in their capacity as an assembly for specific purposes. When they are called a kingdom, Christ is their King and they are all viewed and spoken of as "fellow citizens" (Eph. 2: 19) and subject to his authority. But, whether they are called a race, an army, a vineyard, a church, a kingdom, or what not, it is always one and the same people-the people of God-to which the different terms are applied; and no one of such terms denotes anything different from that which is denoted by the other, except that each presents the subject contemplated from a different point of view.

4. To this question we answer no. "States in the United States" are empowered to make laws for the government and regulation of their own affairs, but "local churches" have no such power. Different States in the United States are authorized, if they so choose, to make widely differing laws, but "local churches" are all to be governed by the same laws which God has made for them.

5. "The laws for the States" in the United States are not "the same as the laws for the Union," except that they must all be in harmony with the Federal Constitution. Different States may make different laws, but no one of them is supposed to make laws in conflict with the Federal Constitution.

6. Yes. But the independence of each local church and the fact that it is "complete and has organs sufficient for the life of it" does not mean that two or more such churches cannot cooperate in certain works. Each church can retain complete control over its own work, and yet cooperate with one or more other churches in work which is common to all.

7. This question does not seem perfectly clear; but no number of local churches should be bound together in any way that would take out of the hands of any one of them the supervision and control of its own work which God himself placed in each local church. The churches can properly adopt any method or plan of procedure whatever in "receiving funds and selecting and sending out missionaries," which does not take out of the hands of any church the authority and control which God placed in it, and which does not, in any other way, contravene something which God himself has settled.

Recent Adventism.

BY J. C. M'Q.

Last week I published an article from Brother Jelley criticizing me, as one of the publishers of the Gospel Advocate, for publishing articles from those who have accepted the doctrine of Recent Adventism. That our readers may understand this doctrine, I herewith give some of the particulars that are distinctive of Recent Adventism. It treats the second advent of Christ as imminent, "threatening to occur immediately," and, in fact, almost certain to occur at an early date.

W. E. Blackstone, author of "Jesus Is Coming," a book which was circulated so freely by some of our young brethren, says, on page 241 of that book: "Shall we Christians condemn the Jews for not accepting the cumulative evidence that Jesus is the Messiah, and ourselves refuse this other cumulative evidence that his second coming is near?" It regards the looked-for coming as premillennial -that is, antecedent to the thousand-year period mentioned in Rev. 20: 4, 5; It rates this coming as the indispensable condition of any such triumphs of the Christian religion as are to be associated with the millennial age. While champions of Adventism often call themselves "premillennialists," this term does not adequately describe Recent Adventism, but simply names one feature of it. It is quite possible to hold that the second coming of Christ will antedate the thousand-year period without either minifying the possibilities of the present dispensation or greatly magnifying the religious efficacy of the second coming.

Those to whom reference is here especially made teach and feature that Christ's second advent is not only imminent, but that it will be in a body of flesh and bones without blood, and that animal sacrifices are to be restored; that the Jews are to be returned to Jerusalem, the temple to be rebuilt, and that Christ is to sit on David's literal throne in Jerusalem for a thousand years. They also teach that the church of Christ is not the kingdom of Christ, but simply the "vestibule," and that baptized believers are not in the kingdom, but only in the "vestibule" of the kingdom. In emphasizing the doctrine of Adventism, they charge that "postmillennialism exalts the church." They teach that "premillennialism exalts Jesus and fills the heart of the believer with a living, personal, coming Savior.

Aliuding to postmillennialists, they say of them: "They very seldom preach or talk about it." This is the language of Blackstone, found in "Jesus is Coming," page 115.

In the point of view of the New Testament, the church is most closely associated with the person of Christ, so that the one essentially defines the attitude toward the other. No man can exalt the church without exalting Christ and giving due prominence to the thought that Christ is coming again. The same conditions that bring a man into the church bring him also into Christ. The New Testament nowhere warrants the separation of Christ and the church. "He is the head of the body, the church." (Col. 1: 18.)

They also teach that when Christ comes we shall receive an addition to God's revealed word. Blackstone says; "Jesus is coming again, and it is just as consistent that we shall receive an addition to the revealed word of God when he comes as it was when he came before." (Page 114.) The Holy Spirit clearly teaches that God's word is able to make us perfect without any addition to that word. I quote 2 Tim. 3: 16, 17; "Every scripture inspired of God is also profitable for teaching, for reproof. for correction, for instruction which is in righteousness: that the man of God may be complete, furnished completely unto every good work." Also, we learn that if men will not receive Moses and the prophets, they would not be convinced though one rose from the dead. We have the New Testament, in addition to Moses and the prophets: so It is doubly true that if we will not be convinced by the revelation that we already have, we would not be convinced if God should give us an addition to his revealed word. (Read Luke 16: 27-31.) So long as I believe the revelation God'has given us. I know it would be dangerous to preach any additional revelation, fearing that Satan had transformed himself into an angel of light and had given the new revelation. Gal. 1: 8, 9 declares: "But though we, or an angel from heaven, should preach unto you any gospel other than that which we preached unto you, lethim be anathema. As we said before, so say I now again, If any man preacheth unto you any gospel other than that which ye received, let him be anathema."

Recent Adventism is distinctive in that it belittles the universality of Christianity or its transcendence of national distinctions. The New Testament teaching wiped out national distinctions and established an ideal incongruous with the conservation of any temporal or religious preëminence to Israel. The law, which was our tutor, tuifilled its mission in leading us to Christ, and we are told that when faith is come—that is, the gospel—we are no longer under a tutor. We are also told by Christ that the kingdom should be taken from the Jews and given to another nation bringing forth fruits.

Recent Adventism is distinctive in that it teaches that the gospel was not intended for the conversion of the world. It teaches that the world will grow steadily worse under the preaching of the gospel of Jesus Christ; it represents the world as abounding, if not ever growing, in wickedness, even up to the very moment of Christ's second advent. I support this by a few quotations. Tyng says: "They are without warrant in the word who are looking for the conversion of the world by the preaching of the cross and the extending influence of the church. In no portion of the scripture is such a hope justified. All that the gospel was desiged to accomplish was less than this." ("He Will Come," page 144.) F. C. Ottman writes: "Christ's kingdom shall be established, not, as men vainly imagine, by the preaching of the gospel, but by the iron rod that shall smite down all opposition and make the enemies of Christ like the broken pieces of the potter's vessel." ("The Unfolding of the Ages in the Revelation of John," pages 65, 66.) This he says in the face of Christ's own definition of the nature of his kingdom. (See John 18: 36.) It would not be difficult to give many more quotations from Recent Adventism, teaching clearly that the world is growing more wicked and more corrupt and that there is no hope for the present agencies of the gospel to convert many sinners.

Recent Adventism makes a distinction between evangellsm and converting the world. It teaches that the task of the church is simply to evangelize the world, to publish the truths of the gospel, as a testimony, to the end of making up the number of elect, and so hastening the second coming of Christ. It is urged that the gospel must be preached to all nations as a witness against them, and that when this is done Christ will come again. The effect of this teaching cannor be otherwise than discouraging to believers. When believers are influenced to accept the teaching that the gospel will have little effect in the conversion of the world; when they are led to believe that the world is growing more victous and corrupt in spite of their efforts to convert and lead men to Christ, they will despair and do nothing. But to show how such a position contradicts and nullifies the great commission (Matt. 28: 19, 20), please note that it provides for making disciples. followers of Christ, of all the nations.

At one time Brother Jelley was baptizing many people in India. The number was so great and the work so great that he called for a helper. Since the helper arrived in India, who, I am informed, espouses the doctrine of Recent Adventism, we have heard little of conversions. It could hardly be otherwise. Coming again is distinctly Christ's work. He will undoubtedly come at the right time. As the missionaries have already declared the doctrine in India, it can now be used as a witness against the indians, and thus have all the influence it can to make up the number of elect to hasten Christ's second coming—that is, according to their views. Therefore, the work of Recent Adventism is done and its advocates can well afford to anxiously expect Christ's immediate coming. But this is not the doctring of the New Testament.

Another distinction of Recent Adventism is that it assigns more virtue to physical instrumentalities than it does to spiritual. It teaches that evangelism will succeed on a great scale only with the reappearance of the Lord and the inauguration of his visible reign. I hold that this view puts a premium on physical instrumentalities and is thoroughly out of harmony with the New Testament estimate of spiritual agencies. History has nover shown that more physical might and display are potent to effect spiritual transformations. Christ taught his disciples that the efficient working of the Holy Spirit in and through them far more than compensated for his physical absence. To show the fallacy and absurdily of Recent Adventism with reference to Christ's reign of a thousand years on this earth when he comes, we have only to appeal to his own teaching in the parable of the tares and the wheat. (Matt. 13: 24-13.) Here it is distinctly stated that the field is the world, in which both the righteons and wicked dwell, and that the separation of these two classes will not take place until the end of the world, when the angels will gather out the righteous and the wicked will be destroyed.

Inability to Discern the Difference Between Good and Evil.

BY E A E.

Reproving the Hebrew Christians for their lack of growth in the spiritual life and their inability to discern the difference between good and evil, the apostle says;

Of whom [Christ as the anthor of eterna) salvation to all who obey him, and his priesthood (Heb. 5: 7.9)] we have many things to say, and hard of interpretation, seeing ye are become dull of hearing. For when by reason of the time ye ought to be teachers, ye have need again that some one teach you the rudinients of the first principle.

ples of the oracles of God, and are become such as have need of milk, and not of solid food. For every one that partaketh of milk is without experience of the word of righteousness; for he is a babe. But solid food is for full-grown men, even those who by reason of use have their senses exercised to discern good and evil. (Heb. 5: 11-14.)

Let us observe:

- 1. These things about Christ were "hard of interpretation" (It was difficult to explain them to these Hebrews and to cause them to understand them), not because the things themselves could not be explained clearly and understood easily, but because these Hebrews were "dull of hearing." They had not been studious of the word of God, but had been, and were still, inattentive to it.
- 2. They were "dull of hearing" because of lack of earnestness and zeal; they had been, and were still, sluggish and inert as to the gospel and spiritual matters. They had not made, and were still not making, any very perceptible growth in the spiritual life.
- 3: In their study of the word of God, they had not gone beyond "the rudiments of the first principles of the oracles of God," and were still in need of milk, and not of solid food; they were still babes in Christ.
- 4. They were still in this babyhood state and, as babes, were not in a healthy condition. No babe is healthy who remains in a babyhood state longer than natural growth requires. They were in this unhealthy condition spiritually because they were "without experience of the word of righteousness." They had not practiced what they knew; knew but little; could not properly use what they knew; and knew not how to meet false teachers.
- 5. They could not be fed on meat because they were unhealthy babes. They could not become "full-grown men" without studying and practicing "the word of rightcousness."
- ii. By the time this Hebrew letter was written they should have so developed and should have been so concerned about the salvation of others as to be able to teach them; yet they needed the simplest teaching and most careful nursing in order to be kept alive.
- 7. They were unable to tall the difference between good and evil, because they had not tried to learn the difference—had not exercised their senses to discern the difference. There is as much difference between good and evil as there is between Christ and Satan, heaven and perdition, but they had not so exercised themselves as to see this difference.

The church at Laodicea was in this same blinded and self-satisfied condition. It was neither cold nor hot. But while it was in this lukewarm state and while it congratulated itself that it was rich and had need of nothing, it was before God wretched and miserable and poor and blind, and must repent or perish. (Rev. 3; 14-22.)

Just so, to-day, church members and whole congregations are in this self-satisfied and dangerous condition because of these same fearful failures—a failure to study the word of God, a failure in zeal and earnestness, a failure to practice godliness, a failure to exercise their senses or abilities for telling the difference between right and wrong, a failure to cultivate the desire to please God and to have a conscience void of offense toward him and men, and a failure to keep out the spirit of the world.

A butcher can properly slaughter hogs, sheep, and cattle for food, but he cannot perform a surgical operation upon human beings; but the skilled surgeon, with his hand and senses exercised to this work, can perform the most difficult and most intricate operations with the greatest success. The musician, with ear so exercised, can discern the least discord in a great orchestra; while others cannot tell the difference between the finest classical music and the rudest kind. The eye of the artist, exercised to this end, sees the beauty and the lesson in the masterpleces of art; while others' eyes are unable to see the beauty in the blended colors of the rainbow and the clouds, the stars' silver sheen, or the golden glow of the sunset. The diagnostician, by exercise and skill, can detect the presence of lurking diseases; while the quack cannot tell the difference between erysipelas and the sting of a bumblebee.

Just so, with a keen and sensitive conscience, studious of the word of righteousness and with an earnest desire to be always pleasing to God, the godly person can easily detect the worldliness and the sin in a given practice,

On the other hand, the ones who do not study the Bible, do not desire to keep unspotted from the world, and do not seek to please God, will never learn the difference between good and evil, the church and the world, the kingdom of Christ and the kingdom of Satan.

God pronounces a curse upon all that call evil good, and good evil; that put darkness for light, and light for darkness; that put bitter for sweet, and sweet for bitter. Woe unto them that are wise in their own eyes, and prudent in their own sight! Woe unto them that are mighty to drink wine, and men of strength to mingle strong drink; that justify the wicked for a bribe, and take away the righteousness of the righteous from him! (Isa, 5: 20-24.)

There are still people who do these things. Some, at least, do them because they have not their senses exercised by reason of use to discern good from evil. Their vision is distorted. The eye must be single for the whole body to be full of light; the purpose must be one—"but one thing I do"—in order for the eye to be single and in order to please God and be saved.

There are, no doubt, thousands of church members today who, while they should be teaching others the way of salvation, do not know even what "the rudiments of the liest principles of the oracles of God" mean. Thus people can so fall as to even forget that they were ever cleansed from their old sins, or forgiven at all. (2 Pet. 1: 9.)

When people say they can see no harm in certain practices for instance, indulging in strong drink, in eigarette smoking, in card playing, in dancing, in various ways of nambling, or in a failure to follow the Golden Rule in all dealings with men and in all social relationships-I think they speak their own honest convictions. This is fair and charitable to them. But it does not follow that there is no harm in all these and other practices because they can see no harm in them. A child sees no physical harm in polson, drinks it, and dies. A blind man cannot see the sun at noon in a clear sky on the hottest dag in August, but it does not follow that there is no sun, When the blind lead the blind, they both fall into the ditch; but the ditch exists, if they do not see it. So by all these scriptures just quoted our merciful Father in heaven shows that it does not follow that there are no sin and death in certain courses of conduct because those who follow these courses do not see the sin and death,

With these general principles before us, I am ready to attempt to answer certain questions which I have been requested to answer. Without these principles to start with, it is useless to try to teach the church to come out from among the ungodly, to keep unspotted from the world, to be not conformed to it, and to set their affection upon things above, and not upon things upon the earth. For instance, so long as some suppose that godliness is a way of gain, it is useless to attempt to teach them that godliness with contentment is great gain. They must first see that godliness is not a way of gain.

People cannot be driven to see that which they are incapable of seeing, whether this incapacity comes from mental inability or from a refusal to exercise their senses to discern the difference between good and evil and to exercise themselves in the practice of godliness. But if they are incapable of seeing the sin in certain courses of life and the fearful consequences of pursuing these courses, how can they be held responsible for pursuing them? Because they have refused to study the Bible to learn God's will and to exercise their senses to tell the difference between good and evil, and because they have put darkness for light, bitter for sweet, and disobedience for obedience.

Studying these principles for a week, we hope to become able to see the harm in certain evil practices to which attention will be called next week and later on.

The Henderson School.

BY J. C. M'Q.

That the church of Christ needs more and better schools will not be questioned by any one. As much as we dislike to, we must admit that many of the universities and colleges throughout the country are not safe institutions for the education of our boys and girls. It is being openly charged that the leading universities of our country are teaching skeptical doctrine and have been undermining the Christian falth of our young men and young women. I am told that there are leading universities that teach that there was no such man as Adam, and also teach that we can make a better standard for the government of ourselves in the present age than the standard erected in the word of God. Christians who believe the Bible, and who believe that it is inspired of God, do not wish to send their boys and girls to such universities.

Freed and Hardeman, of Henderson, Tenn., have been doing a good work in the educational world for a number of years. They have made great sacrifices in order to bring the Henderson school up to its present high state of efficiency. Just about the time they had cleared the properry of debt and were in first-class condition to continue the work they were doing, a Christian brother suggested. that the Institution should be enlarged and that the Christian brotherhood of the South should permanently scenre it. The magnanimity of Brethren Freed and Hardeman in cheerfully acquiescing in the suggestion is to be commended. Of course, they cannot turn their property over to the brotherhood without making a sacrifice; but they are ready to make a sacrifice in the hope of getting an institution that will prove helpful and beneficial in advancing the cause of Christ throughout the whole country.

While it is the intention of those who are propagating this work to give a university education and to thoroughly educate our boys and girls in mathematics, in the languages, and in science, yet they do not propose to neglect the moral and spiritual development of those intrusted to their care. Instead of doing this, they propose to teach them the word of God daily and encourage all to study the Bible, and thus fit and qualify them for usefulness in the highest sense.

The Gospel Advocate bids this undertaking Godspeed and is ready to cheerfully do what it can to advance the interest of this institution.

There have already been several meetings in regard to it. Another is called to meet in the college hall on March 25, 26. It is hoped that brethren from different parts of the country who are interested in such work will attend the meeting without fail. Preachers should attend and use their influence to induce brethren to improve the opportunity they now have of buying the property for the brotherhood.

Men who are content to be mere negatives in a world of action sin against the light. . . Men glory in difficulties that test their strength in the affairs of everyday work; why run away from like difficulties in work for God? It all resolves itself into the question whether a man is dead in earnest; and that shall be our last question as we urge men to make the experiment of faith. Jesus Christ demands reality. Do we "ring true?"—Selected.

Brother McCaleb will sail from Japan on March 15.

Ira Lee Winterrowd sends us a pleasing report of the work at Noman, Okla.

A. B. Lipscomb will hold the meeting for the church at Henderson, Tenn., beginning on March 23.

If thou desirest ease, in the first place take care of the ease of thy mind, for that will make all other sufferings easy—Fuller.

If a man has any brains at all, let him hold on to his calling, and in the grand sweep of things his turn will come at last.—W. McCune.

Married, on February 27, at Tennessee City, Tenn., Mr. Jasper R. Few to Miss Carrie Mai Freeman, J. H. Murrell officiating. The Gospel Advocate extends congratulations.

Every person influences scores of others, oftentimes unconsciously. The more exalted the position, the larger the number who are swayed. It is said that a "fair measure and test of civilization is the influence of good women."

From H. D. Jeffcoat, Route 3, Stewart, Miss.; "I have bought a farm and moved to this country, where there are but few faithful ones. C. B. Dendy and I, with a few others, are going to do all we can to get Christ's truth before the people."

From T. E. Tatum, Hallsville, Texas, March 5: "I have some time not yet engaged for meetings. I want to complete my program for meetings as quickly as possible and spend all of my time preaching the gospel and circulating good literature. Please write me at Hallsville, Texas."

From Mrs. Joe Pendleton, Alexandria, Tenn.: "The old friends of Sister I. G. Boulton are requested to write her at her new address, Route 2, Brush Creek, Tenn. She has passed the threescore-years-and-ten mark, and will surely appreciate letters from her friends, especially from Texas."

From C. Petty, Pineapple, Ala.: "Success to the dear old Gospel Advocate, for it is worth so much to comfort and console the weary traveler to the better land. May the good Lord bless its editors is my prayer."

Who would have thought of a rose coming from a Pine-apple?

We are requesting the churches to make a liberal contribution to the Tennessee Orphans' Home on the first Lord's day in April. "The gift without the giver is bare." Is there an urgent need and demand for gifts to care for orphan children? Then give, but give also for your "own soul's sake." In giving you are answering the need of your own soul.

N. W. Ware writes: "I am about the oldest subscriber to the Gospel Advocate. I took it before the Civil War, and as long as I can raise the price I want it. According to my judgment, the Advocate is the best paper published. I was eighty-eight years old last February."

The Gospel Advocate is proud to have the friendship and confidence of this noble brother.

From Mrs. Jennie Clarke, superintendent of the Belle Haven Orphans' Home, of Luling, Texas: "Our church house is completed, and G. H. P. Showalter, editor of the Firm Foundation, of Austin, Texas, will preach our first sermon on the third Lord's day in March. We suggest that the contributors to this Home and others who have never contributed start a special fund on that day for the purpose of adding at once better equipment for the Home, such as a sewer system, more efficient waterworks, and a steam laundry."

From J. H. Hines, Hopkinsville, Ky., March 5; "The church at this place is doing some splendid work. Last Sunday there were two additions. Four others have come to us this year. Since January 1, 1918, thirty-two have been added to the congregation. Three weeks ago the church decided unanimously to build a new church house. Our purpose in building is to obtain a more central and accessible location to the people of our growing and prosperous city. We have purchased a very fine lot adjoining the tabernacle on West Seventh Street and expect to erect a good house soon. Peace and harmony prevail, "all are of one heart and soul," and all are very happy over the prosperous condition of the church. H. H. West is instructing the church in vocal music."

From W. D. McQueen, Kirbyville, Texas, March 4: "I regretted very much to have to leave Somerville on account of there being a few faithful ones there with no one to lead in service for them. While living in Somerville I bought two nice lots on the best street in town and joining the business section of the town, with the intention of trying to build a church house on one of them. Somerville is a town of about three thousand population and has a good school with about ten teachers; a large roundhouse, being a terminal for the branch and main line of the G. C. and S. F. Railroad; one of the largest creosoting plants in the United States; and there is some good farming country around. If some good man will go there and secure a position in the school or either of the plants mentioned and build up the cause of Christ, I will donate one of my lots for a church house."

From W. S. Long, Jr., Washington, D. C.: "The church here has been doing some good work lately. On February 22, Washington's birthday, a building site was selected for the future home of the New Testament church. It is centraily located, on one of the best streets in the city, being on Massachusetts Avenue, about eight blocks from the Capitol and the same distance from the Grand Union Depot. The lot was paid for in cash, and the deed is so drawn as to protect the property against all teaching or practice other than that prescribed in the New Testament. Our Lord's-day contribution on March 2 was one hundred and seventy-nine dollars and fifty-nine cents. This is very good for a young and poor congregation. If all the congregations would give one-tenth of their income to the Lord's work (and that is not enough), the church of Christ would do many good deeds that are left to be done by the Catholies or the fraternal orders, to our shame. Peace and harmony prevail, and out of the goodness of their hearts the members are willing to work and do work. Besides our home work, we are sending some help to the war sufferers. The worst thing is that we have no house of worship and are at the mercy of the world, to rent any old place where noise and music are going on in the room adjoining, which is very confusing. On Wednesday evening the place is a dance hall. Brethren, if you only knew how we needed a house, you would help us even at a very great sacrifice. One of our leading preachers has written us, advising that we build a good house regardless of cost. Others have advised that, as it is to be the first one in our national capital. and to be built by offerings from all parts of the United States, we should put not less than twenty or thirty thousand dollars into it. We need about that amount, I wish every member of the church felt that way and would act accordingly; then we would have help from them. There are one million members of the church of Christ in the United States, but only a small per cent of that number will respond to this call. Now, out of one million members, cannot we find twenty thousand good women who can give one dollar each out of their butter-and-egg money? We will wait and see if they will. If twenty thousand women will give one dollar each, we will build a house that the brotherhood will be proud of, and that before 1920,"

PEPTIRON IS GOOD

This Real Iron Tonic Combines Merit Economy and "Pep."

Made from a formula that uses from in most digestible form, pepsin and gentian, great stomach tonics, nux and gentian, great stomach tonics, nux and celery, the best vegetable remedies for the nerves, and also manganese and other valuable nutrients—there's no question of the value of Peptiron as a blood builder and strengthener. The larger size of Peptiron contains

The larger size of Peptiron contains enough for a full month's treatment, while other so-called iron preparations contain only one-half or less. The "pep" or promptness with which Peptiron does its work is noted by everyone who takes it.

From the first dose the system re-

From the first dose the system responds to the treatment, and you realize you are at last using a modicine that begins right, continues and ends right. Better get a bottle of Peptiron today. Take two Peptiron after each meal—then comes good blood, good appetite, and—pep.

Glass of Hot Water Before Breakfast a Splendid Habit

Open sluices of the system each morning and wash away the poisonous, stagnant matter.

Those of us who are accustomed to feel dull and heavy when we arise splitting headache, stuffy from a cold, foul tongue, nasty breath, acid stomach, lame back—can, instead, both look and feel as fresh as a dalsy always by washing the poisons and toxins from the body with phosphated hot water each morning.

We should drink, before breakfast, a glass of real hot water, with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it to flush from the stomach, liver, kid neys, and ten yards of bowels the previous day's indigestible waste, sour bile, and poisonous toxins, thus cleansing, sweetening, and purifying the entire alimentary tract before putting mere food into the stomach.

The action of limestone phosphate and hot water on an empty stomach is wonderfully invigorating. It cleans out all the sour fermentations, gases, waste, and acidity, and gives one a splendid appetite for breakfast, and it is said to be but a little while until the roses begin to appear in the cheeks. A quarter pound of limestone phosphate will cost very little at the drug store, but is sufficient to make any one who is bothered with billousness, constipation, stomach trouble, or rheumatism, a real enthusiast on the subject of internal sanitation. Try it, and you are assured that you will look better and feel better in every way shortly.

I wish to give the readers of the Gospel Advocate the following report:

Total contributions (including regular and Thanksgiving contributions) during the quarter beginning October 27 and ending January 27, 1919, $3.619.35. Number of children on hand at present, fifty-five, and three are supposed to be on their way from California. The Home has escaped the influenza, and there has not been a physician called to prescribe for any of the children for one year.

When the cyclone destroyed a large portion of Belle Haven on April 5, 1918, we had on hand a balance amounting to $10,829. On January 30, 1919, our bank account was rendered, showing that we had on hand up to that date a balance amounting to $12,395. Therefore, we have at present $1,566 more than we had when we were visited by the cyclone. This is our capital after paying in full for the rebuilding and repair work at Belle Haven and supporting the children from April 5 to the present time, besides purchasing many articles needed at the Home, the latest being a large. double-oven Majestic Range costing $175.

The church house is completed, except a few things needed not included in the contract. The contract for the church building was let to Mr. Gus Birkner, of Luling, for $4,200, to be of interlocking tile. Mr. Birk-ner donated liberally by his labor. The Fraser Brick Company, of Dallas, Texas, gave liberal donations on interlocking tile and metal celling. The Southwestern Lumber Company, of Luling, furnished all lumber used in the building at cost. The Gonzales Brick Company, of Gonzales, donated brick. Therefore, I am assured that we have a building worth at least six or seven thousand dollars. My special appeal for funds for the purpose of seating, heating, and lighting the building brought a hearty response. The church seats and school desks, the Smith heating system for the auditorium and small stoves for classrooms, and electric lights cost $575. The alabastine finish on the walls, painting and staining amounted to $136. A few days' work will have the church ready for service, such as placing seats and putting the building and grounds in order for our first service, which is to be conducted by Brother Showalter, of Austin.

We feel profoundly thankful to God, the church of Christ, and friends who have made it possible to place Belle Haven in a better condition than it was before the cyclone. Everything is paid for, and we are now ready to take up the laundry equipment and a more efficient water system. These are very important needs. Brethren. while I now realize that the cyclone proved to be a blessing, not long disguised, but soon revealed, yet I trust that I shall never be called upon to pass through such a trying ordeal again; but it has been a pleasure, though the work has been hard, long, and tedious, to help you rebuild Belle Haven. Do not walt until misfortunes come to send your aid; act for the sweet new and now. We also want to erect the new school building mentioned frequently heretofore just as soon as the present sum is increased enough to justify the undertaking.

Your sister in Christ, MRS. JENNIE CLARKE.

COMB SAGE TEA IN HAIR TO DARKEN IT

Grandma Kept Her Locks Dark, Glossy, and Youthful With Sage Tea and Sulphur.

The old-time mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur for darkening gray, streaked, and faded hair is grand-mother's recipe, and folks are again using it to keep their hair a good, even color, which is quite sensible, as we are living in an age when a youthful appearance is of the greatest advan-

Nowadays, though, we don't have the troublesome task of gamering the sage and the mussy mixing at home. All drug stores sell the ready-to-use product, Improved by the addition of other ingredients, called "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," for about fifty cents a bottle. It is very popular, beapplied. Simply moisten your comb or a soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears; but what delights the ladies with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound is that, besides beautifully darkening the hair after a few applications, it also produces that soft luster and appearance of abundance which is so attractive. This ready-to-use preparation is a delightful toilet requisite for those who desire a more youthful appearance. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation, or prevention of disease.

BY WILLIAM J. CAMPBELL,

Much needs to be done everywhere in sounding forth the word. The churches need to awake to the great work that is before us, and encourage, train, send out, and support men to carry the pure gospel, not only in this country, but especially now in Europe among the nations there as they are being reconstructed, and among the people of Asia and Africa. We need to make this a matter of special prayer. It seems like many of the churches now are the deadest, when they should be the most active. May God grant us all a great awakening along this line. It seems sometimes that the power of the evil one is making his strongest offorts now to block the way of the gospel and salvation. People's minds are filled with the delusive peace of man, and we need to cry aloud and spare not to get them to hear of Jesus.

Many brethren are excusing themsalves from giving for gospol work because they have had to lend money to the government and give to relieve the war sufferers. If the government calls for more, we can get the required amount; many could lend hundreds more. This shows what we cando if we see the need and are required to do H. Now, can we not see the need of the gospel and what the Lord requires of us if we would meet his approval, and shake loose from some of our means and gladly invest il in the kingdom of God to bring an income of salvation of souls here and treasure in heaven in the last days? Many could easily give fives where they give ones, or hundreds where they give fives. Is not the kingdom that will stand when all else is shaken worthy of our investment?

The question before us is: "How can we get at this matter?" We niust get at it if we are the Lord's. We need to see our sin, our atter neglect, our laziness, our carelessness for the kingdom of God, our lack of interest in the salvation of others, and repent, repent, and ask God's mercy and pardon, plead for his forgiveness, cry to him in bitter tears; then with humility and earnestness, putting the kingdom of God first, willing to suffer and deny ourselves of worldly comforts, with our whole selves consecrated to his service, take up the work that God has given us, saying: "Here am I; send me:" "Here am I; use me." If we can get this far, the rest can be easily settled. Fields of labor will be open for us all. Each can do the work best suited to his ability. If it is laboring, investing, making money to support the evangelists, do that. If it is personal work, in the home, among neighbors, among stranFREE TO gers, carry the message. If it is the ability to speak or teach, develop that and use it, leaving all earthly things for the kingdom. Go to the field where it seems God is leading you and work The Lord's business requires haste, if we would save the lost souls now in these last days. If you can do nothing more than live a pure, consecrated life, which God expects of all, do that and let the light shine.

The message was first given to the apostles and other inspired men. They gave it to the church to continue to sound it forth by faithful men who are able to teach. Every individual raidated the gospel. The scattered went about preaching the word. Evangelists went and preached. The churches sent out men to preach. They sent out men to help where churches were already established and needed help, as Barnabas from Jerusalem to Antioch. They sent to the need of the preachers, that they that preach should live of the gospel. The men sent often so labored that the whole country around heard the word, as Paul at Ephesus. They stirred up the brethren to help famine sufferers In other countries. Men were called by others to come to their country and preach. There is abundant teaching in the New Testament as to how the work should be carried on. Our greatest need is to be willing, glad, anxious

The first duty is on us as preachers to awake to the things of God and put away our jealousy, envy, bickerings, fussing, littleness, desire to exalt self, and set our hearts on the kingdom of God. If we get busy in the Lord's work, we will soon forget our petty jeniousies and strifes. Then we will stir up the brethren for the work of God, teach them their duty, push out ourselves, and show them what can be done. Then the churches properly taught and stirred up will be glad to be at this great work God has given ns. May God lead and help us all, forgive us our past, and give us the faith and grace we need.

Rheumatism and Indigestion.

Practically all physicians and medical writers are agreed that there is a close relationship between indigestion and rheumatism. This view is sub-stantiated by the fact that Shivar Spring Water, which is probably the best American mineral water for dyspepsia and indigestion, relieves rheumatism and the rheumatoid diseases, such as gout, sciatica, neuralgia, and nervous headache. All of these dis-eases are probably related and all are probably due, in whole or in part, to imperfect digestion or to imperfect assimilation of food. Physicians who have studied this water and who have observed its effects in their practice believe that it relieves these maladies by rendering the digestion complete and perfect and thereby preventing the formation of those poisons which inflame the joints and irritate the nerves, and also by eliminating, through the kidneys, such poisons as have already been formed.

The following letters are interesting in this connection:

Dr. Crosby, a South Carolina physician, writes: "I have tested your Spring Water in several cases of rheumatism, chronic indispention, kidney and bladder troubles and in nervous and sick headaches, and find that it has acted nicely in each oase, and I believe that, if used continuously for a reasonable time, it will give permanent relief. It will purify the blood, relieve debility, stimulate the action of the liver, kidneys, and bladder, alding them in throwing off all polisonous matter."

Dr. Avant, of Savannah, writes: "I suffered for years with a most aggravating form of stomach disorder, and consulted a number of our best local physicians; went to Baltimore and consulted specialists there, and still I was not benefited. I had about despaired of living, when I began to use Shivar Spring Water, and in a short time was entirely relieved."

Mr. Rhodes, of Virginia, writes: "Please send me ten gallons of Shivar Spring Water, quickly. I want it for rheumatism. I know of several who were relieved of rheumatism with this water."

Editor Cunningham writes: "The water has done me more good than any medicine I have ever taken for rheumatism. I am entirely free from pain."

Mr. McClam, of South Carolina, writes: "My wife has been a sufferer from rheumatism, end, after drinking twenty gallons of your Mineral Water, was entirely relieved of the horrible disease."

Mr. Carien, of Virginia, writes: "Mrs. Carter has had enlarged joints upon her hands caused by rheumatism. Shivar Spring Water removed every trace of the enlargement. The water is simply excellent."

We had the first meeting of this infant church for breaking of bread last Lord's day in same schoolroom. The entire town has been well room. The entire town has been well stirred, and it is said that my work here is the topic of the day. I have induced Brother and Sister E. H. I have undertaken to see that this brother and sister are sustained in so far as they cannot austain themselves and give due attention to this work, and would ask that our Ontario brothren especially look into what we are doing in this province; and, brethren, should it be worthy of your cooperation, lend us a helping hand with some of your means. We must push out if we are to reach the fallen of earth, and I can open up new fields of work if my brethren will assist in helping along in keeping up work begun. These young members need attention and teaching. We need another man, and need him badly, right now. Will you not help us in placing this man on the field, and assist us with monthly con-tributions for a year and see what we can do? I came into Punnichy a total stranger and held meetings for four weeks. The results are very encouraging indeed-six baptisms, one brought in who had been baptized by the Baptists, and many others convinced as to their duty. DRUGS EXCITE YOUR KIDNEYS, USE SALTS

If Your Back is Aching or Bladder Rothers, Drink Lots of Water and Eat Less Meat.

When your kidneys hurt and your back feels sore, don't get scared and proceed to load your stomach with a lot of drugs that excite the kidneys and irritate the entire urinary tract. Keep your kidneys clean like you keep your bowels clean, by flushing them with a mild, harmless salts which removes the body's urinous waste and stimulates them to their normal activity. The function of the kidneys is to filter the blood. In twenty-four hours they strain from it five hundred grains of acid and waste; so we can readily understand the vital importance of keeping the kidneys active.

Drink lots of water; you can't drink too much. Also get from any pharma-cist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast each morning for a few days and your kidneys will act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate clogged kidneys; also to neutralize the acids in urine so it no longer is a source of irritation, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which every one should take now and then to keep their kidneys clean and active. Try this; also keep up the water drinking, and no doubt you will wonder what became of your kidney trouble and backache.

He was, I think, providentially thrown in reach of pure gospel preaching, and as soon as he heard the second discourse he came forward and in broken English demanded Christian baptism, To him the pure gospel was wonderfully plain and superbly grand, and he embraced it with joy and true thankfulness. He and his wife are now both members of the "one body" here. I learned yesterday of one or two more who are ready to obey. They live fif-teen miles from here and are expected Sunday to make the confession and become Christians. Certainly there is much work before me this year, and indications are that it will be most profitable to Christ. My next meeting, the Lord willing, will be in Loveland, fifteen miles south of Fort Col-I went down yesterday and made arrangements for a house to preach in (a "Holiness" meetinghouse), and I expect to begin the meeting as soon as I can distribute handbills and get ready otherwise. The first Fort Collins meeting will follow the one at Loveland. We are having difficulty in getting a house in Fort Collins; hence, instead of waiting, I will put in the time at Loveland. We have no congregation at Loveland, and but one or two members. For the present I am preaching on Sunday, morning and evening, at Bellvue, and conducting a midweek study of the prophecy of Isaiah and preaching on Sunday afternoons in Fort Collins. How I will handle the Loveland work on Lord's days is yet a problem to me, having my hands already more than full with the Bellvue and Fort Collins work. But I love to be busy and will find some way to handle the task. Brethren, let us zealously press the cause of Christ this year more than ever before. The harvest seems riper now than ever before. Let all those who cannot "go" send others into the field immediately and support them according to ability. Forego that usual protracted meeting at home this year and, instead, have a good man hold a meeting or two in some new place. If all would do this, we could cover much new territory this year, for it would mean practically our entire force turned loose in new fields. Why not? -E. C. Fuqua.

I was at the Dale and Johnson Streets Church, in Springfield, last Lord's day, and will be at Cane Hill next Lord's day. I have about all my time arranged for protractedmeeting work-July 1 to December 1. I was pleased to receive an encouraging letter from Brother John R. Williams, of Hornbeak, Tenn., last week. Brother Williams immersed me into the fellowship of the gospel about nine years ago, and it seems that we are both very proud of the fact. Space forbids my speaking my whole heart's sentiment regarding Brother Williams. Suffice it to say that Tennessee knows him and loves him, and only those do not love and appreciate him who have never been fortunate to obtain his services. OBITUARIES

Latham.

While suffering from influenza, Lawrence Grady Latham, the only son and living child of Brother and Sister J. E. Latham, of Town Creek, Ala., contracted pneumonia, which resulted in his death on December 15, 1918. Grady was only ten years old, but was unusually bright and considerate for one of his age. A little sister died a few years ago, and Grady, being consclous of his condition, often asked his papa and mamma not to cry, for he and little sister would fix a place for them in heaven. He gave instruc-tions for the disposition of his bicycle and various toys. He talked so sweetly and serenely of dying, heaven, etc., that all who were with him were amazed and touched. He was the child of promise to Brother and Sister Latham, and in him all their earthly hopes were centered. He was a favorite in the schoolroom and community. The Lord bless and comfort the parents and help us so to live that we shall go to these little ones, to whom the kingdom of heaven belongs.

J. PETTEY EZELL.

Holt.

Raymond Holt was born on May 1; 1915, and died on January 9, 1919. His father preceded him in death about one year and his mother three months, leaving him and his little sister, Lucille, orphans indeed. Through the big-heartedness of Brother and Sister A. M. Burton, of Nashville, Tenn., they were placed in the Tennessee Orphans' Home and maintained by them; but influenza' had already them; but influenza had already started its deadly work and little Raymond had to succumb. He was a sweet little boy and was much loved by his companions in the Home. Sister Cora Davis cared for him during his illness with the love and tenderness of a mother, and his devotion to her was so great that he would often say: "Mamma Davis, rock me to sleep." Precious little soul! He had a good home here, but he has a better one "over there." The good Lord will abundantly bless the kind-hearted people who are remembering with Christian love the motherless and fatherless children. There have been but three deaths in the Home since it began to throw its arms of protection around the orphans, though many have been placed in good homes through its operations. We held a prayer service at the Home in honor of little Ray mond Holt, placed him in a little white casket which was borne by four of the little boys, and laid him to rest in beautiful Rose Hill Cemetery. Lovely floral offerings sent by friends of orphans were placed on the little mound by the hands of some of the little girls. F. C. Sowell.

There is a very effective way to remove freckles and make the skin clear and beautiful. It is in this way that Kintho Cream gradually gets rid of the old, freckled skin, and gives a soft, clear, white, youthful and beautiful skin, which of course should have no freckles.

Just get a box of Kintho Beauty Cream at any drug store and apply it night and morning as directed, and your freckles should begin to disappear in a day or two. It is well to get a cake of Kintho Soap also, as this helps to keep the freckles away, once Kintho has removed them.

of a death that brought sadness on account of separation. On October 23, 1918, Sister Fannie Shepherd Welker departed this life, leaving a young husband of only a few months. One Lord's day in the summer of 1912 Sister Welker made the good confession of her faith in Christ as the Son of God and her Savior and was baptized by Brother James A. Allen. Her membership was at Allen's Chapel church of Christ, Needmore, Tenn. Sister Welker was the first one of her generation to become a member of the church of Christ. She had many discouraging remarks made to her in regard to her religion, but she showed herself a Christian by not answering in like manner, but going on in the discharge of her Christian duty. She was one of the first Sunday-school teachers Allen's Chapel ever had, and she was teacher when she died. She had a fine class of young men and young ladies, and they all loved her. I can remember just how she looked on the last Sunday I was there while she lived. I was making a plea for the church to go forward in the discharge of its duty, regardless of the enemies, which are many in that community. She sat with tears in her eyes. I can see her as, when the classes were asked to take their places, she led the young men and women to the rear of the house and in her quiet and dignified manner taught them the simple word of God. It has been my pleasure to visit the church once since she died, and I can say that she is greatly missed by every one. If she could know the many good things said of her by almost every one of that Sunday school, she would have cause to rejoice. Avoid the Flu By Keeping Liver Active Doctors Find Calotabs, the New Nausealess Calomel, Best Laxative for Colds and Preventive for Influenza and Pneumonia.

To cut short a cold overnight, to stop a sore throat, and to put the system in the best possible condition to avoid influenza and pneumonia, doctors are advising the new, nauscaless calomel, called "Calotaba," which are free from the sickening and salivating effects of the old-style calomel. At the first sign of a cold or sore throat it is best to take a Calotab at once, before the inflammation has gone too far. You may thus save yourself a spell of sickness.

One Calotab at bedtime, with a swallow of water—that's all. No saits, no nausea, nor the slightest interference with eating, work, or pleasure. Next morning your cold has vanished, your liver is active, your system is purified and refreshed, and you are feeling fine, with a hearty appetite for breakfast. Perhaps you can congratulate yourself that a "stich in time" has saved you serious illness. Calotabs are sold only in original sealed packages; price, thirty-five cents. Your druggist recommends and quarantees Calotabs, and will cheerfully give back your money if you are not delighted.—Advt.

Among the Colored Folks

The first Lord's day in the year I met with my home congregation, and it was a joyful day indeed. Brethren A. C. Campbell and S. W. Womack, the two old heroes who have struggled and fought hard to establish a pure worship in Nashville, were present. Brother Womack is now failing in health, but I believe he is stronger spiritually than he ever was. I thank God that, as a preacher of the blessed gospel, I have been spared to go over almost all of the work that this old, humble, and meek servant has established. Just to see the many places where he has labored against great opposition and prejudice and to see strong congregations there now would make any lover of the cause of Christ rejoice. The white brethren and sisters who have been his coworkers ought to be happy and filled with joy. to know that they have had fellowship in such a great work of building up Christ's kingdom on earth. He often states that if the white brethren and sisters had not come to his aid he could not have done the work that he has accomplished.

Brother A. C. Campbell has labored hard and earnestly everywhere he has gone to tell the world of the blessed Christ. I have known Brother Campbell for many years, and I know of no man who has had more difficulties and hindrances than he has had; but it seems that he has set his affections on things above, not on the perishing things of the earth. Though he is nearing the threescore mark, he is just as active as a young man, and we pray that he may live long and continue preaching the grand, old gospel of Jesus Christ. It was these two godly men that caused me to come out from the "digressive" church and take my stand with a people that are contending "earnestly for the faith which was once for all delivered unto the saints;" and, whatever may come, I am determined to be faithful until

The second Lord's day in January I was with the church at McClain's Chapel, near Christiana, Tenn. These people are strong in the faith, and it was a pleasure to be with them.

From McClain's Chapel I went to Center Star, in Hickman County, Tenn., and took part in a deacons and elders' meeting. I stayed over until the third Lord's day.

On the fourth Lord's day I was with my home congregation, and we had fine services both day and night.

On the first Lord's day in February I was with the church near Spring Valley, Ala., and we had an enjoyable time. There was one confession at the morning service.

From Spring Valley J went to Corinth, Miss., and spent Thursday and Friday night. I found the church in fine condition. Brother J. Hannon, an evangelist, is located there, and he is doing, it seems, all that he can to keep the work alive.

From Spring Valley I went to Tuscumbia, Ala., and while in that town I saw so many people who possibly had never heard the gospel of Jesus Christ; so I went to the Chief of-Police and got permission to preach on the street, and for about an hour and thirty minutes I spoke to about four hundred people, white and colored, and they gave the best attention, and many expressed themselves after dismission, stating that they had never before heard such preaching in all of their lives

On the second Lord's day in February I was with the Spring Valley Church again. We had a splendid

From Spring Valley I came home to be in attendance at a ministers' meeting at the Jackson Street Church, in This meeting began on Thursday, February 13, and continued over Lord's day. In speaking of this meeting, I can say it was a feast of good things. There were about thirty preachers present, besides deacons and elders and a host of visitors. There have been great meetings at Jackson Street Church, but never anything like this one, and I was glad the brethren found the old church standing firm on the truth and willing to be governed by God's government. Many good things resulted from this meeting.

The Romantic Story of Southland's Favorite Shoe, EzWear.

Some five years ago, a prominent citizen of South Carolina, visiting New York on important business, chanced to meet the maker of a shoe built on new and unusual lines; an enthusiastic admirer of its most distinctive features, ease and comfort, had suggested the name EzWear; it was promptly adopted. The business man from the South, knowing how welcome such a shoe would be in his part of the country, urged that its remarkable qualities, including not only comfort, but style, durability and economy, be made known there. That this has been effectively done is proven by the enormous demand that has sprung up in the South for EzWear shoes. It is said that its sale there during the last twelve months has increased fully three hundred per cent. The distributor, Mr. J. R. Simon, of 1589 Broadway, Brooklyn. N. Y., says that all who wish to know about a shoe that combines all worth-while shoe qualities, may have a copy of his moneysaving shoe book for the asking.

On the fourth Lord's day in February I was with my home congregation; and at three o'clock in the afternoon Brother T. Q. Martin preached an able and instructive sermon, and it had its effect on all who were present. This man is a white man, but I do not believe he has a spark of malice or prejudice in his heart; and may God bless him with long life, so he may continue lifting up fallen humanity. We also were glad to have the white brethren with us who came with Brother Martin. Let us all pray that God's Spirit may rule in his church.

Hawley's Ointment has been found to be most effective in preventing influenza. Many cases have been especially noted where every person in an organization suffered attacks of influenza, except those who used Hawley's Ointment as a preventative. ointment kills the influenza germ and keeps the nasal passages thoroughly sterilized. It is also wonderfully effective in treating nasal catarrh, colds, cold sores, coughs, croup, and early stages of pneumonia, and general inflammatory conditions of the membranous surfaces.

Hawley's Ointment is readily absorbed by the mucous membranes. According to the testimony of hundreds of people living in the southland and elsewhere. J. R. Simon of 1589 Broadway, Brooklyn, N. It appears that Mr. Simon's establishment has become national head-quarters for people whose feet require his remarkable comfort shoe, known as the EzWear, but obtainable only of the in-ventor. The Most and Best.

The importance of economy has been impressed on our minds in recent years. We want to know that we are getting the most and best for our money, no matter what we spend it for.

In the matter of medicine, there is probably no more economical course of treatment than Hood's Sarsaparilla and Peptiron-a real tonic-taken in conjunction, one before eating and the other after.

The combination of these two great medicines brings into cooperation such well-known substances as sarsaparilla, iron, nux, and pepsin, best for the blood, nerves, and digestive organs.

This combination is especially recommended in cases that are scrofulous or rheumatic, anæmic and nervous, or where the blood is both impure and pale, deficient in iron.

In cases where a laxative is needed, Hood's Pills should be taken.

The Many Mysteries of Nature

You can take an onion seed and a pansy you can take an onion seed and a pansy seed, and plant them side by side in the same spot of ground. In one case, you get an onion, with its peculiarly strong dor, and in the other you get a flower of rare beauty. You can plant a poppy seed and get opium (a dangerous, habit-forming land) and the property are also a property and the property and rug), or you can plant a rhubarb seed and zet something that helps constipation. No scientist, living or dead, can explain these mysteries of Nature. Behind the invisible life germ in each seed is hidden the deep secret that nobody understands. Everything growing out of the ground seems intended for some use in establishing natural conditions. Dr. Pierce, of Buffalo, N. Y., long since found out what is naturally best for women's diseases. He learned it all through treating thousands of cases. The result of his studies was a nedicine called Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. This medicine is made of vegetable growths that nature surely in-tended for backache, headache, weakening drains, bearing-down pains, periodical ir-regularities, pelvic inflammations, and for the many disorders common to women in all ages of life. TAKES OFF DANDRUFF. HAIR STOPS FALLING Save your Hair! Get a small bottle of Danderine right now-Also stops itching scalp.

Thin, brittle, colorless, and scraggy hair is mute evidence of a neglected scalp; of dandruff-that awful scurf.

There is nothing so destructive to the hair as dandruff. It robs the hair of its luster, its strength, and its very life, eventually producing a feverishness and itching of the scalp, which, if not remedied, causes the hair roots to shrink, loosen, and die; then the hair falls out fast. A little Danderine tonight, now, any time, will surely save your hair.

Get a small bottle of Knowlton's Danderine from any drug store. You surely can have beautiful hair and lots of it if you will just try a little Danderine. Save your hair. Try it! The Aim of Education. BY MORGAN H. CARTER.

"The fear of Jehovah is the beginning of knowledge; but the foolish despise wisdom and instruction."

Education is the development of the individual to his highest possible capacity for fellowship with God and man expressed in love and service. It is the leading out of the physical, intellectual, and spiritual powers in harmony with nature and righteousness in whatever direction the personality of the individual indicates. It may be accomplished in or out of college; but colleges are a great advantage, as they systematize the studies, create enthusiasm, furnish guidance, supply fellowship, and reward the diligent with marks of wellearned merit. For some, education means greater capacity to earn money with a smaller expenditure of energy; to others, it means an increased appreciation of art, science, music, and literature for personal adornment and social enjoyment; but to those who really comprehend its fullness, education is a priceless treasure, a power which gives life a new and higher meaning and becomes a constant joy to the soul and a source of wonderful strength finding expression in abundant joy and light and service. Some imagine that education grows, as a stalactite, by accretion. Others know it is a living development growing from within by an organic process. Some attend college for the athletics; some, for the social life; some, to be known as wise; and others, that they may become stronger men, better able to bear the cross of responsibility up the hill of progress to the goal of real attainment. Each man gets what he deserves and often what he is looking for. The more he invests, the more he receives. As you sow, so shall you reap. Many easy-goers and conceited "high-brows" find their Mecca only a mirage and are lost in the desert of despair; while the seeing men are delivered from mediocrity, becoming sons of God and brothers of all mankind in love and service. "And the world passeth away, and the lust thereof: but he that doeth the will of God abideth forever."

He who allows himself to get into the habit of explaining away his failares will soon find himself trying to explain away other people's successes. -- Exchange.

In Memory of a Dear Little Babe. Another little darling has gone to rest, Another little head pillowed on the Savior's breast,

Another mother and father with broken hearts,

Since from their darling they had to part.

It is in much sadness I write in memory of dear little George Thomas Puckett, Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. G. T. Puckett, of Noiensville, Tenn., who was born on May 26, 1918, and died on February 2, 1919, aged eight months and seven days. He was indeed a bright and beautiful baby, so well and healthy until he took that dreadful disease, Spanish influenza. The dear little darling suffered but very little, and a short time before he died he became perfectly easy and died as one going to sleep. Yes, he is Asleep in Jesus! Blessed sleep, From which none ever wake to weep! A calm and undisturbed repose, Unbroken by the last of foes.

And while we will all miss him so much, especially the dear heartbroken father and mother; and while we feel that our loss is great, yet we know that our loss is his eternal gain; for we know he is safe in the arms of Jesus, where sickness, sorrow, pain, and death are felt and feared no more. So we must battle on a few more days, trying as best we can to be submissive to the will of Him who said: "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of heaven." Funeral services were conducted at the family residence by Elder W. L. Karnes, who spoke very comfortingly to the bereaved ones, after which the little body was laid away in its last resting place in the family burial grounds near its home. May the dear Lord comfort the broken-hearted ones and fill the vacant place with his royal presence, is the ONE WHO LOVED HIM.

Edifying as the Need May Be

The Savier's Promise.

During the last conversation Jesus had with his disciples before his betrayal, in speaking to them of his departure from them, he declared that it was to their advantage that he should go away; for by his leaving them he would send to them the Comforter, the Holy Spirit, who would abide with them. He would reprove the world of sin, of rightecusness, and of judgment. He would be falthful in his rk of showing men their true condition and their needs. The Holy Spirit also would be a faithful guide and would lead the disciples and all who would follow them into all brath. Obrist in his bodily presence was with his disciples only as they were all in one place, but the Holy Spirit would be with all who received him in all places, at all filmes. He would glorify the Father and would call to the remembrance of the disciples all that Jesus had said to thom. (See John 16: 7-15.)

Most of us understand that the Holy Spirit did much for the species, but we do not fully appreciate what he should mean to the followers of Christ to-day. I should like to write something encouraging and helpful along the line. There is a real danger that we may "quench" the work of the Spirit.

Our Spiritual Microscope.

It is the work of the Holy Spirit to reveal. He is the light bringer. As a result of the outpouring of the Holy Spirit on Pentecost, the Jews, through the teaching of the aposties, were convicted of sin. Oftentimes the revelation that the Holy Spirit gives to us is decidedly unpleasant. We should not reject it, but should profit by the revelation, bringing forth fruits worthy of repentance. There is a fine point in the following story, which I have used to advantage in describing the office of the Spirit: An English naturalist residing in India had a very line microscope sent out to him. He was examining some minute objects one day when a Brahmin called. The visitor eyed the microscope curiously, and the naturalist, thinking to amuse and interest his visitor, began to show him some of the wonders revealed by the instrument. Among other things, he showed him a drop of his own blood. His eyes grew big with terror when he looked through the glass and saw the countless fittle corpuscles. But the cilmax was reached when he saw a specimen of water taken from the tank where he and his people obtained their drinking water. He looked and looked again. He examined the pitcher minutely. Then he went himself and brought a fresh quantity of water from the tank. But the result was the same; a drop of the fluid seemed swarming with myriads of living and rapidly moving organisms. He put a drop in his hand, and examined it critically with his pulsed eye. It appeared all right. Then he looked at the microscope suspiciously and said with emphasis: "He witch!" The next day he sought to buy "the little witch." To get rid of his importunity, the naturalist named a sum so large that he supposed the price would settle the matter. But the Brahmin drew out a bag of gold and paid the price. No sooner was the bargain closed than the Brahmin seized the instrument and began banging it on the stone pavement, to the great astonishment of the naturalist. In a moment the valuable instrument was rnined, and the naturalist gasped out: "What do you mean?" The Brahmin said caimly: "He tell no more lies."

Let us not despise nor seek to destroy the influence of the Holy Spirit, which is our spiritual microscope.

How Jesus' Enemies Helped.

No fact connected with the life of Christ is more clearly established than that of the resurrection. The enemies of Jesus unconsciously prepared the way most thoroughly for the proof. They were eager for his death, and did not scrupte to commit perjury and murder, but were at the same time so punctillous about observing the law of the Sabbath that they would not allow the body of Jesus to remain on the cross on that day. The soldiers declared Jesus dead, therefore they did not break his bones, as was the custom; but to make sure that there was no mistake, they pierced his side with a spear. As a precaution against Jesus' disciples stealing his body from the tomb, a guard of Roman soldiers was stationed there, and the royal seal was placed on the stone which closed the entrance to the tomb. All these circumstances emphasize the reliability of the accounts of the resurrection which are given by the feat witters of the Gospels and by Paul. While the accounts differ, they do not contradict one another. The order of events on the resurrection morn seems to be as follows: The women approached the tomb, Mary Magdalene in advance, early in the morning; Mary Magdalene, seeing the stone rolled away, hastened to tell Peter and John, the other women arrived during Mary's absence; Peter and John arrived at the tomb, looked in, and found it empty; Jesus appeared to Mary Magdalene, and later to the other women; the women reported to the disciples that they had seen the Lord, poo 0

"Many Infallible Proofs."

Five great personal events are inseparably connected with Christ's work of atonement. They are incarnation, crucifixion, resurrection, ascension, and intercession. Four of these transpired within the realm of the visible and of the material plane; the last on the plane of the spiritual and within the unseen. The first four are finished transactions; the priestly work of the fifth will continue until intercession gives place to judgment. The resurrection stands midway in the plan of redemption. Toward it all the preceding tend, and in it find consummation; from it the succeeding flow.

Jesus predicted his own resurrection, and its evidences must equal those of his death and afford firm footing for Christian faith. The death and resurrection of Christ are always associated in apostolic preaching. The one is completed in the other, and with it the whole gospel stands or falls. Without the resurrection, there is no message, Paul makes it the pivotal point of Christian faith. "If Christ be not raised, your falth is vain; ye are yet in your sins." But no fact about Christ is more fully attested.

The Scriptures contain abundant proofs of the resurrection. Ten distinct appearances are recorded between the resurrection and the ascension. With one exception, the place, and with two exceptions, the time, are definitely stated. On one occasion above five hundred witnesses were present. The writer of the book of Acts declares: "He showed himself alive after his passion by many infallible proofs."

The Calendar's Story.

In one way our calendar is a proof of the resurrection. The scholars tell us that the Hebrews dated their calendar from what they supposed to have been the date of creation, that the Romans reckoned their time from the founding of the city on the seven hills, and that the Greeks reckoned their time from the first Olympic games. But to-day, if we meet a Hebrew, or an Italian, or a Greek, and ask him, "What year is it?" he will instantly reply: "Nineteennineteen." It is just that long since a certain Child was born in Bethlehem of Judea. The birth of this Child has changed the calendars of the world. But this would not have happened had Jesus stayed in the grave. The followers of the risen Lord have influenced the history of the world because they believed in the power of that resurrection.

The indolent dream of success, but turn back at the first rough place in the road, whining over their bad luck; the industrious clamber over the rough places, wade through the muddy places, hang on at the slippery places, and attain their ambition.—Lloyd.

We are requesting the churches to make a liberal contribution to the Tennessee Orphans' Home on the first Lord's day in April. "The gift without the giver is bare." Is there an urgent need and demand for gifts to care for orphan children? Then give, but give also for your "own soul's sake." In giving you are answering the need of your own soul.

"My Body, Which Is Broken for You."

Editor's Note: I thought that Brother R. D. Smith and I had written about all we knew and, perhaps, a little more on the above subject; but he feels that he is entitled to "a third effort," and I shall not deny him space. In a discussion of this kind some one must say the last word, and I am mindful of Paul's rule, "in honor preferring one another." Brother Smith's article follows:

Dear Brother Lipscomb: I assure you that our interchange of articles has been very helpful to me; and while I do not wish to make myself tiresome nor to monopolize your valuable space. I do feel that I am due "a third effort." Hence, at the risk of being put into the wastebasket, I offer my last word without an invitation.

From the start you have argued the action of the committee in leaving out "Is broken" from the Standard conclusive of spuriousness, and I have maintained that this is not necessarily true; but I now affirm that the position is untrue and offer incontestable proof.

"Conclusive. Decisive; concluding the question; putting an end to debate; as, a conclusive argument." According to Webster's definition and the facts before us, can we say the nonappearance of the word in the Standard proves it to be spurious?

Let every one speak for himself. The committee's own statement is the best evidence, and it reads as follows: "It is not superfluous to mention expressly the fact that in this edition the variant readings and renderings are placed at the foot of the pages, but in as close juxtaposition as possible with the passages to which they relate. The reader's attention is thereby called to the circumstance that some degree of uncertainty still cleaves, in the judgment of scholars, either to the text of the passage before him or to its translation, or to both."

To argue that the committee was "doubtless unanimous in leaving out 'is broken,' as this is not found in the best Greek text," proves nothing; for they state plainly that they placed the foot readings there to tell the reader that their action did not settle the matter.

No use to argue majorities; for a two-thirds vote, or even a unanimous vote, will not put the matter beyond doubt. The foot reading is the immediate signal of uncertainty. As iong as there is uncertainty, there is not certainty. Hence, so long as, in the judgment of scholars, there is uncertainty as to the text of a passage, their action, one way or another, cannot establish, with certainty, the status of the passage. So, when the committee translated 1 Cor. 11: 24 and left out "is broken" from the text, they immediately set at the foot of the page note No. 16. "Many ancient authorities read is broken." Attentage reader! This means that "uncertainty still cleaves, in the judgment of scholars." to the text of 1 Cor. 11: 24.

Therefore, be it understood that the committee does not apply the term "spurious" to the "variant readings." Some of them were doubtless preferred by a majority of the committee, and some of them were refused by a vote of two-thirds; but their own statement is the evidence that they do not claim that their action settled the matter.

The most that can, with certainty, be said is that the text of 1 Cor. 11: 24 is in doubt. This is absolutely all the committee claims; and, of course, "doubtful" and "spurious" are not synonymous. Why, then, claim for the committee what they do not claim for themselves? Wait till they claim their action was decisive, or, at least, till they quit denying it. They say they do not know which is certainly correct. "Many ancient authorities read is broken," and so they simply state the preference of the majority of the committee.

So much, once more, as to the genulneness of the passage from the standard of nonannearance in the Standard from the standpoint of nonappearance in the Standard.

Since "many ancient authorities read is broken," and the scholars refuse to take the responsibility of settling the matter for us, we must settle it for ourselves; and I maintain that If the word can be shown to be appropriate, we are on perfectly safe ground in using it.

we are on perfectly safe ground in using it.

Your arguments from the punctured arm and the "pierced" body are unsuited here. There is no Issue here. The question is not whether we would speak of a body that had been only pierced as being broken as a resuit, but whether "broken" may be authoritatively and appropriately used of the condition of a body, though the bones may none of them be broken. Your argument implies that only by making "is broken" synonymous with "pierced," and contradicting "not a bone of him shall be broken," can it be said "his body was broken." Neither of your conclusions is correct. I contend that the body is said to be broken as a result of the sum of all the afflictions, though not a bone was broken.

There is abundance of evidence that a body may be referred to as broken, though the bones are not broken. passage referring to the notary is in point. Longfellow said of him: "Bent, but not broken, by age was the form of the notary public." Now, from this, every one would say Longfellow thinks of age as breaking the form, or body, of a man. Trust you are sincere in your reply on this point, but you missed Longfellow's meaning by a wide

But If Brother Lipscomb will not take the word of Longfellow, I offer, from the very best literature, some exam-ples. Job, when bemoaning his awful condition when smitten "with sore boils from the sole of his foot unto his crown," said: "I was at ease, but he hath broken me asunder," (Job 16: 12.) David said: "For my loins are filled with a loathsome disease; and there is no soundness in my flesh. I am feeble and sore broken." (Ps. 38: 7, 8.) Pretty good authority for "broken body," though no bones were broken.

But you say "is broken" (1 Cor. 11; 24) does not refer to the body, and "Thayer does not say so, but says the opposite. He says of 'klao' that it is used in the New Testament of the breaking of bread." I remind you that Testament of the breaking of bread." I remind you that you are under the necessity of supplying the little word "only" to make Thayer say "the opposite." "Klao" does not mean to break bread, nor, indeed, to break anything; and you could not for your life tell from the word, simply, what was broken. Thayer says of "klao." "To break. Used in New Testament of the breaking of bread. With vis tinus added, a pregnant constr. equiv. to 'to break with eis times anded, a pregnant constr. equiv. to to break and distribute among.' Metaph., to some, shattered, as it were, by a violent death." Now, "bapto" means "to dip;" used in the New Testament of dipping the finger, a sop, a vesture. If "bapto" is used of dipping the finger, can it not be used of dipping "a vesture?" Then, why your argument from "klao?" Does Thayer really say the opposition?

But Thayer refers 'is broken' to break and not to the hody." Now, it is absolutely certain that Thayer refers the breaking to the body, whatever breaking may mean. The construction of the language makes the conclusion Inevitable. Referring to the word in question (klomenon), 1 Cor, 11: 24, he says: " Metaph., to soma (the body), shattered (klomenon, is being broken), as it were, by a violent death." Now, if the breaking refers to the broad and Now, if the breaking refers to the bread and not to the body, as you have said, and we apply the same principle to the parallel passages, why will not the following renderings be correct? "This [bread] is my body, which [bread] is broken for you." (1 Cor. 11: 24.) "This read] is my body, which [bread] is given for you." take 22: 19.) "This [cup] is my blood of the new testament, which [cup] is shed for many for the remission of sins." (Matt. 26: 28.) "This cup is the new testament in my blood, which [cup] is shed for you." (Luke 22: 20.) This sort of application, I contend, would offer nothing but bread and wine, on our behalf, for the remission of sins; and while you seem to have regarded this as unanswerable, I am anxious to be certain as to your disposition of it.

Does this argument teach transubstantiation? You say If it teaches anything, it does. "If the real body is what he gave to them, then they ate the real body and drank the real blood of Jesus." True without the testimony of Brother McGarvey. But a glance at the argument readily reveals the fact that it offers no excuse for such conclusion. This conclusion was doubtless drawn from my implied argument that as the "body was given for them," by the same rules of construction, the "body was broken for them." But this is not to say he gave the body, much less the real body, "to them." "To" and "for" are very little words, but the substitution of the one for the other creates a wide difference in the meaning of the language.

state the substance of the above parallel passage as follows: He took bread, and broke it, and gave it to them, and said, Take it, and eat it; this bread is the symbol of my body, which body is being broken for you, for remission of sins. If this is not the teaching, I know not the meaning of English.

The body was "given," "broken," for (on behalf of) them, for remission of sins. The bread was broken, and o them, o be eaten, as a symbol of his "broken If the b ly was not "broken" for them, the blood it "shed" for them; and if the body was not was not "shed for them; and if the body was not broken for tem, the body was not "given for" (on behalf of) them.

We have seen how it would stand if we referred the "breaking" to be bread and not to the body; but what of Brother Lip comb's latest construction as follows: "Metaphorically Christ's body was 'shattered, as it were, by a violent death.' The nerves were shattered, the body by a violent death. The nerves were shattered, the body was pierced, brilsed, and smitten, so violent was the death." Now, first of all, to say the breaking is referred to the "nerves" militates against your position that "broken" refers to the bread and not to the body.

But by what authority do you replace "to some (the body), shattered (klomenon, is being broken)," with "the nerves" (to neuron) shattered? "Shattered nerves" is not in the Philad but shattered (klomenon broken).

not in the Bible, but shattered (klomenon, broken) some, body; and "nerves" is not interchangeable with "body."

The foregoing seems to make it clear that, just whatever is broken" means and in whatever sense it is applied, it

"to soma" (the body). refers to

But you say Thayer only refers "broken" to the body figuratively. The body was not really broken, otherwise it would not have been metaphorically stated. This argument seems based upon the assumption that the literal is not symbolized by the literal; and it seems also assumed that sufficient proof is that in some metaphors the acts declared of objects were not really performed, or literally performed, as we would say. Certainly it is not a question whether writers ever use the metapher in a way would fail to Illustrate the case in question; but do they ever employ the metaphor in a way that would fit the case? Assuredly, if the settlement of the issue depended only upon your ability to select a metaphor that would not fit the case in hand, you win. You could doubtless find many that would not fit; but this would prove absolutely noththat would not fit; but this would prove assentely nothing here. Such a case is your selection of the passage from "Evangeline." You say of this passage: "Blossomed the lovely stars, the forget-me-nots of the angels.' As a matter of fact, stars never blossom; neither was Christ's body broken." But you selected the wrong sort of figure. Your blossoming stars would go better with Job's singing As a matter of fact, stars never blossom; but Job stars. said they "sang," and they can doubtless blossom as well as they can sing. However, neither blossoming stars nor singing stars have the least bearing upon the question.

Allow me to select a suitable figure from the Standard literature. In Rev. 5: 12, John says he heard the angels saying: "Worthy is the Lamb that bath been slain." Here Christ is represented under the image of the paschal lamb. A real, actual, literal lamb; and a real, actual, literal Christ. His slaying is symbolized by the slaying of the lamb; yet the lamb was really, actually, literally slain. Christ was really, actually, literally slain. One word—that is, "lamb"—represents both objects, and both objects literal; one word—that is, "slain"—represents an action upon both of the objects, and the action took literal effect upon both of the objects, and the action took interal enect upon both. Behold a metaphor!

Truly, a figure departs widely from the literal; but "slain lamb" and "slain Christ" depart widely, yet both literally "slain." So "broken bread" and "broken body" depart widely, yet both literally "broken." If Brother Linscomb, can understand that the pascent lamb and its Lipscomb can understand that the paschal lamb and its slaying symbolizes Christ and his slaying, that the objects were literal and the "slaying" literal, he should under-stand that the body of Christ was "broken."

When Brother Lipscomb can show that the metaphorical character of the language, "Worthy is the Lamb that hath been slain," precludes the possibility of the slaying of Christ, then he can show by Thayer that the body of Christ was not broken. And when Brother Lipscomb has finished this task, Brother Smith will present him with a bouquet of "forget-me-nots," plucked fresh from the evening's sen-tries; and while Brother Lipscomb stands blushing over the nosegay, Brother Smith will introduce for him a vocal chorus by the "morning stars." Please pardon the bit of Please pardon the bit of pleasantry.

I confess I do not know whether "is broken" Paul's original letter to the Corinthians or not. (It is not But I do know, and without doubt possible to know.) But I do know, and without doubt have proven, that the word does not contradict any passage, and that it is a most appropriate word in the connection; and I do, furthermore, know that to regard the word as genuine is to assume a safe position.

Cutting It Short.

BY F. W. SMITH!

Brother Moore closes his reply with this: "Come on, Smith, and let's hitch up." He has been "hitched up" for the better part of twelve months; and, judging from the fact that he wanted a change, we are led to believe the harness was rubbing him sore. Falling to get the "change" in the exceedingly indefinite style of his proposition on the Holy Spirit, he seems determined to get his "change" by cutting the discussion short. Note what little he has to say:

Brother Smith still holds to the view that to err from the truth is apostasy. Hymenæus and Philetus are said to have erred concerning the truth, saying that the resurrection is passed. This is not a flat denial of the doctrine of the resurrection, but they believe it has already taken place. Perhaps they meant the spiritual resurrection of the saved, or they could have had in mind those resurrected with Christ, who came out of their graves after he arose. Maybe they thought this the special resurrection of the faithful in Christ at his second coming. They erred concerning the truth of the resurrection they had in mind, and Brother Smith still believes this error caused apostasy. Wonder if the Christian world is willing to adopt Brother Smith's idea that to err is to apostatize?

The chief rulers—it seems that Brother Smith is getting a little skeptical on the real condition of these rulers. I said: "If you will affirm that the chief rulers believed in Jesus, I would baptize them if asked by a church." Brother Smith says, "I will affirm what the Scriptures say;" and so will I. But, Brother Smith, will you affirm that these chief rulers were sure enough believers in Christ, had saving faith? We will see.

You are the one who introduced the chief rulers, and why are you afraid to say they were true believers in God? I know no difference in "believing in" and "believing on" Christ.

I am sorry that Brother Smith learns so slowly. Now he says, virtually, believing what the preacher says is the same as believing in Christ—that is, if the preacher preaches the truth. Then believing the truth about Christ is the same thing as believing in Jesus. Smith, I'm afraid of you, lest I have labored in vain in trying to teach you the way of the Lord more perfectly.

Those Penfecestians believed that Peter told them the truth about what they, with their own wicked hands, had done. See, will you, Brother Smith now believes to believe a statement concerning oneself is true is the same thing as believing in Jesus. Shucks, Smith! Go back to first principles and examine yourself whether you be in the faith at all.

Yes, I know J. B. Moody's position, but I don't know your position on the chief rulers. Please tell us.

Smith, do you really believe that the Holy Spirit is personally and actually present in salvation of the sinner? If you do, then there is no issue between us. If you don't believe, you can sign that Spirit proposition in the negative. The issue between your folks and mine is not on the how the Holy Spirit operates, but it is, Does the Holy Spirit himself come in actual personal contact with the sinner's heart in being saved?

Here is the issue and challenge either to affirm or deny this. Come on, Smith, and let's hitch up.

He says: "Brother Smith still holds to the view that to err from the truth is apostasy." It seems that the apostle James had this same view, judging from the following: "My brethren, If any among you err from the truth, and one convert him, let him know, that he who converteth a sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death, and shall cover a multitude of sins." (James 5: 19, 20.) Now note: (1) To err from the truth is a sin, and he who does this is a sinner. (2) Unless the sinner (the sinning child of God) is converted from the error of his way, the soul dies, or is lost. This must be true, else how could converting one from the error of his way "save a soul from death?" (3) All of this is affirmed by the apostle James, and lies right upon the surface of the passage quoted, and yet my friend denies that a child of God can so apostatize as to be lost! What a pity that men imbibe a theory in religion that forces them, when defending it, to deny the plain statements of holy writ!

When he introduced the subject of apostasy, I knew the example of Hymenicus and Philetus with those whose faith they overthrew would be all that was needed to disprove his contention, and my judgment has been abundantly justified. Note, will you, how he sidesteps the following question; "If those characters had not apostatized, why did Paul warn the saints against their teaching and practice in these words: "But shun profane babblings; for they will proceed further in ungodliness, and their word will eat as doth a gangrene; of whom is Hymenæus and Philetus?" (2 Tim. 2: 16, 17.) What is the force of the figure the apostle here uses-viz., 'will eat as doth a gangrene '-if it does not mean the destruction of the soul? As the physical disease called 'gangrene' eats away and destroys the body, so would the word or doctrine of Hymenæus and Philetus eat away and destroy the souls of men. There is no escape for my brother, and he had as well admit his error on this point." This man Hymeneus had "made shipwreck" of "the faith" and had been turned over to Satan by an apostle (see 1 Tim. 1: 19, 201, and yet Brother Moore contends that he had not apostatized! When one "puts away" faith and a good conscience as Hymeneus and Alexander are said to have done, if he has not apostalized, then language means nothing at all. My friend, instead of dealing with these scriptures and my questions relative to them, prefers to Ill his space with "perhaps so's," "maybe's," "they could have," etc., etc.

But those chief rulers—what a thorn they have proved to be in the side of my opponent! He wishes to know if I will affirm that those chief rulers "had saving faith." I answer him by saying no, and neither did the jailer have "saving faith" until his faith expressed itself in the act of baptism.

Brother Moore has committed himself to a proposition that completely settles the case of the chief rulers viz.: "I know no difference in 'believing in 'and 'believing on ' Christ." Very well. I will now ask him, Did the chief rulers believe on the Lord? If he says they did not, I will have to confess that I do not know how to carry on a discussion with one who positively and flatly contradicts the word of God, for an inspired apostle says they did believe on the Lord. If he says they did believe on or in the Lord, he has lost his case and his doctrine of repentance before faith is shown to be false. Yes, sir, "believing what the preacher says is the same as believing in Christ," provided the preacher preaches Christ, for faith comes by hearing the word of God. (Rom. 10: 17.) If Brother Moore knows of any other way of believing i Christ other than believing what the preacher preaches, provided he preaches Christ, will he please let us knew?

My friend would have us believe that he is a very "definite" man by demanding "definite" propositions; but when he comes to frame his proposition, it is about the most indefinite thing in the realm of religious discussion. I suppose he is proceeding upon the ground that "a burnt child dreads the fire," and that is the reason he refuses to affirm the proposition on the Holy Spirit so often affirmed by the Baptists, regarding which they have been equally as often defeated. He says: "The issue between your folks and mine is not on the how the Holy Spirit operates." In this I am sure he is mistaken; but I wish to remind him that he has but one "folk" on his hands now, and it matters little with me what either his "folk" or my "folk" teach on this or any other question connected with the subject of salvation. I am concerned about what the word of God teaches, and not about what an uninspired man or set of men teach. The Holy Spirit is a Person and can come in personal contact with the sinner through his word, just as I, a person, am coming in personal contact with my opponent through my words. Is that what my friend means by the "personal contact of the Holy Spirit?" If so, let him say it, and there will be no issue between us on this point. But if he means by "personal contact of the Holy Spirit with the simper's heart in being saved" that the Holy Spirit exerts an influence upon the sinner's heart" that does not reside in the word or that is not of the word," let him say so and we are "hitched." I repeat, I shall not be so imprudent as to deny the "presence" of the Holy Spirit anywhere any more than I would deny the "presence" of God or Christ. What I demand of my opponent, and what I have the perfect right to demand of him, is this: that he affirm what the Holy Spirit does, and how he does it, when present in conversion.

Once more I press the question: Brother Moore, had you been present, would you have baptized those chief rulers, even if a church had asked you to do so? Never mind about what I will or will not affirm regarding the chief rulers, you answer my question.

The Dangers of the Dance.

That the modern dance is lascivious in its influence and tendency is beyond doubt true. Its chief attraction arises from the close contact of the sexes and the excitement of the sensual feelings. If this were not true, men would be as fond of dancing with men as with women, and women would be as fond of dancing with one another as with men; yet you could arouse no interest in a dance confined to either sex. It seems to me licentiousness is on the increase. I feel sure it grows greatly out of the freedom of contact between the sexes in the dance and in other customs of life that prevail of late years. The modern style of men taking ladies by their arms in walking with them invites too much familiarity, and is not tolerated among the best and prudent people. In the Ladies' Home Journal, one of the best papers published, I read this advice to girls by Ruth Ashmore: "To be quite plain, I do not think it modest for a young man to take a girl by her arm." A woman that allows herself to be handled by a man puts herself very greatly at his mercy. Weak and excitable girls especially do so. While we like to see young men and women associate pleasantly and freely-for it is natural that they should-there is a certain degree of reserve and dignity that a woman must maintain, or she is liable to lose the respect of prudent people, if not her virtue.

The following is copied from the New York Independent in the year 1867: "The New York chief of police has deciared that three-fourths at least of the abandoned young women of the city were at first approached through the round dances by the villains who effected their ruin. Have you ever reflected on hideons facts like that? The old magicians were thought to carry demons in the seals of their finger rings. There may be more devils in the grasp with which some whiskered scoundrel presses a fair young girl to his bosom in the delirious reel of a waltz."

The dance is lascivious, and should not be countenanced by Christians. The church should teach, instruct, remonstrate, and pray with and for every member that engages in it. We learn slowly. Christians ought to be appealed to to cease attendance at the dance because it is wrong, because it is held to be evil by the public generally, because to attend the dance is a source of sorrow and grief to Christians. If they can be induced to cease attending from any cause, and be interested in religious study and work, they will lose their interest in the dance and grow to see the evil of it. Religious work and activity will drive all desire and taste for the dance out of the heart. If they cannot be interested in religious work, and so drawn from evil, being nominally a member of the church does them an injury, deceives them as to their standing, and weakens the church; so to withdraw from them, if they cannot be turned from their sinful course, will be a good to them and the church and an honor to God.

The dancing custom is fraught with evil tendencies.

This evil is recognized by those who encourage it. No parent, no friend of the young, would be willing to see a young lady and man go through the mazes of the dance, alone, with no prudent person present to restrain imprudences. In this they recognize the dangers of the dance to the young and the old. The excitement of the dance may lead to further and greater imprudences. Practices that lead to wrong and imperil virtue in men and women ought not to be encouraged by parents or others. I am a better friend to the young people and love them with a better and truer love in trying to restrain them from temptations to evil than their own fathers and mothers, who encourage them to go in the way of temptation. The day will declare it.—David Lipscomb, in Gospel Advocate, June 5, 1913.

While fully in sympathy with the movement to help the war sufferers in foreign countries, some of the contributors to this fund have expressed a preference to have their contributions used for the care and education of orphan children here in the United States. This is a very praiseworthy motive, and I am in position to carry out their wishes. Hardly a week passes but what some poor widow calls or writes to this office asking assistance in the care of her dependent children. We always investigate such cases, and most of them are deserving. The Fanning Orphan School and the Tennessee Orphans' Home are providing for many such dependents, but they are not in position to care for them all. If you wish your contribution used for this purpose, kindly designate It "Home Orphans' Fund."

The latest telegram from Herbert C. Hoover reads: "The conditions of the friendly peoples in the Near East is increasingly acute. The plight of Armenia and Syria is especially distressing, because nearly everything that is done for them must be sheer charity, there being no established governments to give obligations for payment. A systematic destruction of their agriculture and industry has been carried on for four years. The most heroic effort and sacrifice will have to be made by the friends of these people if they are to be restored to their homes and enabled to (hew) back to an independent existence."

In sending contributions, be sure and state whether they are intended for the Home Orphans' Fund, the Armenian and Syrian Fund, or the Poland Fund. Make all checks and money orders payable to A. B. Lipscomb, who will forward them to the proper commissioners.

Is the Church the Vestibule of the Kingdom?

BY J. C. MO.

In our Issue of January 9, 1919, I answered the following

Prichard, Ala., December 13, 1918.—Brother McQuiddy: A young preacher of Louisville, Ky., who held a tent meeting for us several years ago, taught publicly that baptized believers were not yet in the kingdom, but only in the vestibule of the kingdom. He also taught that it is just as necessary to wash one another's feet as it is to partake of the Lord's Supper. Please give me book, chapter, and verse to prove these things, as he did not.

Before answering the query, I wrote the querist for the name of the young preacher of Louisville, but received no reply to my inquiry until almost a month had elapsed after the publication of my answer to the query. When the reply came, it read: "Was quite sick when your letter came. Am sorry to have delayed so long. I do not object to giving you the name of the young preacher; you know him quite well, I am sure. He is E. L. Jorgenson, of the Highland Church, Louisville, Ky."

On February 5, 1919, the day on which I received the above, I copied the query, wrote Brother Jorgenson that his name was given me, and asked him: "Did you, or did you not, preach that baptized believers are not yet in the kingdom, but only in the vestibule of the kingdom? Did you, or did you not, preach that to wash one another's feet is as necessary as it is to partake of the Lord's Supper?" Receiving no reply to this, I wrote him again on February 14, telling him I was disappointed in receiving no reply to my letter of February 5, and repeated the question. To this also I received no reply. So I wrote him again on February 17, to which I received the following reply:

Davis City, fowa, February 25, 1919.—J. C. McQuiddy, Nashville, Tenn.—Dear Brother: Yours of the 17th Inst. has reached me after a delay in forwarding. For some time I have been in meetings away from home, now at my third point on this trip, so that I have had poor opportunity of attending to my mall. I had very little interest in your inquiry, because your "investigation" came after your action (your article), and I feared so little and cared so little about whatever injury the Advocate might try to add to its previous sins against me that I was in no harry to reply, though I intended to write you on the point; and I shall do so, from Louisville, soon, after upportunity to examine the notes used by me at Prichard. Sincerely, E. L. JORGENSON.

If Brother Jorgenson were not a public teacher and were he not preaching a doctrine calculated to destroy every congregation of disciples, I would not give his letter to the public, but would pass it by unnoticed. Since, however, every Christian is affected by this teaching and as it concerns all Christians, they have a right to know the name of the young preacher who preached that "baptized believers were not yet in the kingdom, but only in the vestibule of the kingdom." This clears the innocent and convicts the guilty.

I am at a loss to know why he should not answer a question that concerned himself more than any one else and why he should lose interest in the question because ! was courteous enough to answer the sister's query, and answered it without thinking that he was the young preacher. Neither do I understand what the sins or the virtues of the Gospel Advocate have to do with what he preached at Prichard, Ala. If he would save his doctrine, he should register his protest against the Bible; for evidently the sister had been searching its pages for proof of the doctrine preached, and, failing to find it, she called on me to give the proof, which Brother Jorgenson had not done. Those who read and study the Bible for themselves will not gulp down such teaching as the nestling swallows the food from the mother bird. Before Brother Jorgenson and his associates can succeed in getting the people to accept such teaching, they must get the Bible out of the way, for it teaches: "Who delivered us out of the power of darkness, and translated us into the kingdom of the Son of his love." (Col. 1: 13.)

I have been in the ministry for almost forty-one years. On the fifth Sunday in this month, it will be forty-one years since I preached my first sermon. I do not need any notes to refresh my memory as to what I preached. The subject that day was, "What Must I Do to Be Saved?" I preached then, and have preached through all the intervening years, that the person who believes in the Christ, the Son of God, with all his heart, repents of his sins, and is baptized in the name of Christ, into the names of Fater, Son, and Holy Spirit, is saved, is translated into the kingdom of God's dear Son, and I expect to continue to so teach until I die. Do you think if some good sister at Ephesus had inquired of Paul, "Did you preach at Corinth that baptized believers were not yet in the kingdom, but only in the vestibule of the kingdom?" that he would not have answered without an appeal to his notes? He would have said no, neither at Corinth nor anywhere else, for such teaching is a perversion of the will of God. I would like to put such a question to every loyal preacher: Did you, on any occasion, anywhere, either by mouth or by pen, teach such a doctrine? Can you conceive of one of them waiting to answer until he could get his notes? Nay, verily. Preachers who are satisfied to "preach the word" without addition or subtraction will tell you right now what they preached, without reference to old, musty notes, because they "preach the word."

I certainly would have expected Brother Jorgenson to search the Bible instead of his notes to know what he preached at Prichard, Ala. It does not help him to ride a convenient memory. He surely was not insincere at Prichard and preached something that is not his faith. He and the editor in chief of Word and Work claim to be able to give their faith in the words of the Bible. Brother Jorgenson, in defense of himself and his divisive and destructive teaching, says in the Gospel Advocate of October 16, 1918:

As to the criticized teachings, they are easily stated in the very words of scripture without addition, subtraction, or interpretation. When, in 1916, my recall was opposed on doctrinal grounds, the church invited me into their meeting "to defend my doctrine." The defense I then prepared consisted of nothing but clippings from the Bible which I intended to read without comment. This invitation, however, I decided not to accept, lest some one should say I had influenced the choice. Since then, as Brother Lipscomb shows, I have offered as a unity basis to take no position and to advance no proposition along the controverted lines, except such as I could state in scripture words without interpretation, being careful to introduce no side conclusions of my own. This offer, made both before and after the discipline, has met with no favor; for it is the strange peculiarity of this movement that those who can thus state their faith in Bible words are the "speculators" and those who interpret freely are "safe and sound!"

Hiding behind his notes discredits his claim that he can state his faith in Bible words. He cannot state what he preached at Prichard, Ala., in Bible words if his life were at stake, and no one knows it better than he. I emphasize his teaching:

"BAPTIZED BELIEVERS WERE NOT YET IN THE KINGDOM, BUT ONLY IN THE VESTIBULE OF THE KINGDOM."

He will not make any effort to state such views in Bible words. If he preached his faith at Prichard, and his faith can be stated in Bible words, then he is safe in saying he did not preach the above at Prichard. But he will not say he did not so preach at Prichard. So, admitting his sincerity, we must conclude that he cannot state his teaching in Bible words. This he should be able to do. "Hold the pattern of sound words which thou hast heard from me, in faith and love which is in Christ Jesus," (2 Tim. 1: 13.) "If any man speaketh, speaking as it were oracles of God." (1 Pet. 4: 11.) "But foolish and ignorant questionings refuse, knowing that they gender strifes." (2 Tim. 2: 23.)

It is no new thing for a man to cry that he is persecuted when his sins are uncovered. Ahab complained of Elijah, and "Festus salth with a loud voice, Paul, thou art mad." If the Gospel Advocate has erred in dealing with these young brethren, it has been on the side of leniency and mercy. It honestly tried to save them from the effects of their pernicious teaching. As Paul wrote the Corinthians, so I say to them: "For I am jealous over you with a godly jealousy: for I espoused you to one husband, that I might present you as a pure virgin to Christ." (2 Cor. 11: 2.) In so far as one espouses error the Gospel Advocate will oppose him, will oppose him vigorously, and will oppose him openly without apologies for its opposition. Men who become partisans and factionists may expect not only the Gospel Advocate, but all truth lovers, to oppose them. Paul is opposed to such. "A factious man after a first and second admonition refuse." (Tit. 3: 10.) "Now I beseech you, brethren, mark them that are causing the divisions and occasions of stumbling, contrary to the doctrine which ve learned: and turn away from them." (Rom. 16: 17.)

Great works are performed, not by strength, but by perseverance. He that shall walk with vigor three hours a day will pass in seven years a space equal to the circumference of the globe.—Johnson.

Daneing. .

BY E. A. E.

In an encouraging letter received recently from Brother J. L. Hines, of Meaford, Ontario, Canada, he says;

If you have the time and disposition, I wish you would write an article on dancing. If you know of any good literature on the subject, I shall be glad to learn where I can get it.

Let us read again Heb. 5: 11-14 and remember the comments on it made last week.

When I was younger and heard innocent and unsuspecting young people say they could see no harm in dancing, I thought they were perverse; but I am more charitable now and think they tell the truth. It does not follow, however, that there is not great danger and fearful harm in it because they cannot see this danger and harm.

A boyhood schoolmate and friend once told me that he could secure a job on a railroad train if he could stand the required examination. I inquired concerning the nature of the examination, and he replied that one thing would be to ascertain whether or not he was color-blind. "Color-blind?" I ejaculated, "Yes," he said, in surprise at my stupidity; "I would be a poor flagman, or engineer, or conductor, or almost anything else, if I could not tell a red light or red flag from a green one or one of some other color. If I could not at once see a danger signal, I might dash forward instead of stopping and wreck a train and hurl many souls into eternity." "O," I exclaimed, "I see I do not want to ride behind a color-blind engineer or with a color-blind flagman or with a color-blind conductor."

Many church members are really color-blind to God's danger signals. His danger signals are as discernible as red lights in the dark, but color-blind church members do not see them.

To be color-blind naturally is a physical defect, but to be color-blind spiritually is due to neglect, to sin. Such people have failed or refused to exercise their senses so as to "discern good and evil."

Which is the more charitable, to say of many sensible, refined, and educated church members, as well as of uneducated and uncultured ones, that they have not sense enough to see the harm in certain practices, or that they are perverse and have their hearts set on evil?—that is, of course, not sense enough because they have not "by reason of use" exercised their senses "to discern good and evil."

Can it be true of them as it was of Israel of old?

By hearing, ye shall hear, and shall in no wise understand; and seeing ye shall see, and shall in no wise perceive; for this people's heart is waxed gross, and their ears are dull of hearing, and their eyes they have closed; lest haply they should perceive with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and understand with their heart, and should turn again, and I should heal them.

A brother in the church said to me once that I could not show him by the Bible that a certain course—not dancing this time, not gambling, not defrauding others—is wrong. I admitted at once that I could not. He asked me why I could not, since I was so sure he had done wrong. "Because," said I, "I cannot show the sun to a blind man."

I admit that "in many things we all stumble" and that to our own sins we may be color-blind.

I admit, too, that we should take the beam out of our own eye so that we can see clearly to take the mote out of our brother's eye.

But one sin in one person cannot justify a different sin in another.

By mutual sympathy and helpfulness we should bear "one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ"—should in the spirit of gentleness restore one another, looking to ourselves, lest we also be tempted. (Gal. 6: 1, 2,)

No one can justify dancing on the ground that some church members commit "worse sins." Certainly not Some lie and steal and commit adultery, but that does not justify dancing. No one tries to justify dancing as a Christian virtue. No real child of God believes that it is in harmony with the will of God, or that Christians can dance and at the same time keep unspotted from the world. No one can dance without spiritual weakness, without loss of interest in spiritual matters, and without loss of spiritual influence. No one wants to go from the dance to the judgment. No godly women of the Bible have been commended by the Lord because they could dance well or because they could dance at all. The giddy and silly daughter of the worldly and ambitious Herodias greatly delighted Herod and his lords-men of the world and of wickedness-to the extent that the forerunner of Christ, one of the most godly men who ever lived, was beheaded. Women to-day who are noted for their dancing are scantily attired and are on the stage. Such women are not noted for their modest apparel, meek and quiet spirit, deep piety, and great usefulness.

Yes, I know of "good literature on the subject." The clearest, most direct, most convincing literature against dancing—the revelry and dissipation of the dances of the present—is the Bible. No one can read the Bible and imbibe its spirit of purity and piety and full to see the evils of dancing. It is impossible to have the spirit of Christ, to keep unspotted from the world and to submit to the will of God, and continue to dance. It is impossible to continue to dance and at the same time to be not conformed to this world, or "fashloned according to this world." Church members dance, and their parents encourage them to dance, in order to be like the world. On the other hand, it is impossible to obey God in being "transformed" by the renewing of the mind and to keep up dancing.

As to this life, leaving the spiritual life and the great hereafter out of the consideration, there is nothing educative, intellectual, refining, elevating, and purifying in the dance.

Herodias, an ambitious and worldly woman, who descreed her husband, Philip, for his brother; her transparently dressed and foolish daughter; Herod, his high captains, and chief men of Galilee, doubtless under the influence of the wine of the feast; and dancing are associated together. This is "society" of to-day in its conventional meaning—women are immodestly and sometimes shamefully dressed; the divorce evil flourishes; dancing and feasting and drinking—just as it was in the days when John the Baptist lost his life for reproving the sinners,

There have appeared in the Gospel Advocate from time to time clear and strong articles against the dangers and evils of dancing, written by Brethren F. W. Smith, M. C. Kurfees, D. Lipscomb, E. G. Sewell, and others.

T. A. Faulkner, a professional dancer much of his life and a noted dancing master for six years, turned away from all this, engaged in religious work in mission fields, helping to rescue the perishing and to save the fallen, and wrote a book, entitled "From the Ballroom to Hell." He has perfect knowledge of that of which he writes, and makes some fearful declarations concerning the great number of girls and young ladies who have gone to destruction on account of the dance. He declares that out of two hundred cases he talked with, one hundred and sixty-three attributed their ruin to the dance.

Mr. Faulkner says very truly that there are many true and honest people seeking to know the truth concerning the evils of dancing, and that all who are not seeking such truth should have it. He says:

Let me assure you, in the first place, that I am well aware that there are many church members and professing Christians who dance; but if on the strength of this you deem it a safe amusement, come with me for a few evenings, and when you have seen all that I can show you, let your judgment tell you whether you can with safety place your pure, beautiful daughter in the dance academy or ballfoom.

in 1914 the Western Recorder, Louisville, Ky., published some very clear and pointed articles against dancing, from which articles Brother Kurfees quoted largely, adding many strong reasons why Christians cannot indulge in the voluptuous dance." His articles may be found on pages 742 and 766 of the Gospel Advocate, 1914. The Western Recorder says:

As is well known, dancing is neither of Christian nor respectable origin. The german waltz, which perhaps is the most popular of the dances, was first danced in a bawdy-house, and cannot and should not be allowed to escape the odor of its origin. It is essentially calculated to suggest itentiousness, and is, at best, debasing in its origin, nature, and history. For many years it was confined to dens of vice without a votary among respectable people.

Some years ago Brother D. Lipscomb wrote a long article on the evils of dancing, showing that Christians cannot lend their presence and influence to it. In 1913 he wrote another on "The Dangers of the Dance." This article appeared on June 5, 1913, and is reproduced on page 269 of this issue of this paper. Read it carefully, and especially the quotation he gives from the chief of police of New York City. This testimony of the chief of police of New York City was given in 1867; but the same sad story of shame and woe has been repeated every year since, as it was preceded by the same in every preceding year.

All who wish fuller statistics can find them by referring to a sermon preached in Henderson, Ky., by Kyle Brooks, "minister of the First Christian Church, Henderson, Ky," and published in this paper, September 6, 1917.

These articles referred to should be put in tract form for free distribution. Will not some good man furnish the money for doing this? I will undertake to do the compiling, unless Brother Kurfees or some one else will do it.

I am not attempting to make this article exhaustive; I am writing to point out the folly of not exercising one's senses "to discern good and evil" so as to see God's danger signals.

I am writing to place myself on record against the subtle and dangerous evil of dancing.

It makes no difference how many church members in places dance, how many society people and "nice" people dance, how many well-to-do people and leaders in the world dance, it is of the world, lust-exciting, dangerous, and destructive.

Churches everywhere, with all gentleness, teaching, prudence, but with firmness, should endeavor to correct this evil among their members. This cannot be done by arbitrary methods, but by teaching the word of God in all forbearance and patience until a new heart has been created within the dancers and a right spirit has been renewed within them. The church of God cannot wink at such evils.

It is admitted with regret that seemingly eternal destruction fails to warn and Heaven cannot persuade some church members to give up the dance. They ought to know that they themselves thus give up the good work of saving souls and, therefore, give up the church. To all such the command of God, "Abstain from every form of evil," is of no avail. Dancing church members do not hold to the church as live members of the body of Christ, in order to grow in grace and the knowledge of Christ, to escape from the corruption that is in the world by lust and become partakers of the divine nature, to have the mind and spirit of Christ and to become godly, but to have respectability in their worldliness.

She is a most comfortable friend and a desirable neighbor who, instead of mourning over what she has not, determines to enjoy what she has.—Lloyd

AT HOME AND ABROAD

From J. H. McBroom, Rogersville, Ala., March 11; "The work here is moving along splendidly."

I hope to meet many of our readers at Henderson, Tenn., during the meeting which begins next Sunday. (A. B. L.)

From Mrs. J. A. Wharey, Yorkville, Tenn.: "I have read the Gospel Advocate from my childhood, and now, at sixtytwo years of age, feel that I cannot do without it. Long live the noble editors!"

From Mrs. P. E. Tillery, Vinemont, Ala: "I enjoy reading the Gospel Advocate more and more as I grow older. I have been reading it ever since its first publication, and do not know how I could do without it."

From B. F. Miller, McHenry, Ky.: "I think the Gospel Advocate grows better with each issue. I feel like my home would not be complete without this grand paper. I wish you Godspeed through life's journey."

From Mrs. B. G. East, Michie, Tenn.: "I was eighty-four years old the eighteenth of this month (February). I have been reading the dear old Gospel Advocate almost all the time of its publication. I would be so lonely without it in my last days."

We ask the indulgence of our good friends, the contributors, for delay in the appearance of many good articles. We have much copy on hand awaiting publication. This is also true of many obituary notices. If those who writeobituaries would confine the notice to the regular free limit of one hundred and fifty words, it would help greatly,

We are requesting the churches to make a liberal contribution to the Tennessee Orphans' Home on the first Lord's day in April. "The gift without the giver is bare." Is there an urgent need and demand for gifts to care for orphan children? Then give, but give also for your "own soul's sake." In giving you are answering the need of your own soul.

From J. M. McCaleb, Tokyo, Japan: "From the time this is read in print till April 1 please send all communications to me in care of J. H. Bowman, Box 1174, Honolulu, Hawali. I will give further directions later. At the present another snow is falling in Tokyo, which is the fifth or sixth this winter. On the first Sunday in February I baptized one of our Sunday school girls, Miss Tachebana."

On the fourth Lord's day in March, Henry T. King, of Franklin, Ky., will begin a series of meetings at the College Street church of Christ, in Nashville, to continue as long as the interest demands. Next Lord's day (March 23) has been set apart as "home-coming" day. The church is very anxious to have all Christians in the city who formerly had their membership at College Street to be present on this day."

From J. L. Hines, Meaford, Ontario, Canada, March 10:
"R. V. Cawthon, of Mount Juliet, Tenn., has just closed a two-weeks' meeting at this place, resulting in one young lady's believing and being baptized. The attendance was good throughout, and Brother Cawthon did some splendid preaching and found his way into the hearts of the people of the town. The church was greatly strengthened and built up in the most holy faith. Brother Cawthon's father accompanied him and rendered valuable service. We trust that they can come again."

From Thomas E. Milholland, Denison, Texas: "W. D. Bills, of San Antonio, spent one week with us, preaching at night. Rain and cold weather hindered much. Three persons cast their lots with us. Brother Bills did some fine preaching. The indebtedness of our little band (less than fitty) two years ago amounted to eleven hundred dollars. They paid this, painted and papered their house, and ceiled part of it (paid all), supported a preacher, and grew in numbers till we now reach the two-hundred mark. Now we are planning a new building. Wars are trying to help ourselves, giving our Liberty bonds, war savings stamps, etc. We will build, the Lord helping."

From C. H. Smithson, Kingston, Texas, March 14: "I have not reported to the Gospel Advocate for some time, so I will send a short report of my work. I am located at Ben Franklin, and am giving them one Lord's day in each month. We have just closed a week's meeting with fine laterest. This is one of the best congregations I have ever isbored with. They just keep 'pounding' us, and then the cash offering is fine. I began a meeting here last night and hope for the best. I have some time for meetings in the spring and one August meeting. Any one interested can write me at Ben Franklin, Texas."

From Mrs. Thomas J. Benton, Farmington, N. M., February 2: "Will you please try to find us a preacher through your paper and send us at once? We are certainly in need of one. There are about fourteen members here. We have been here more than a year, and I cannot hear of a gospel preacher's ever having been here. This is a real good country to live in. Three rivers meet here; so you know that means lots of water to irrigate. Mild winters and delightful summers. Worlds of all kinds of fruits and berries raised here and no sand storms. Farmington has one thousand population, but is settled all up and down the rivers. There are lots of people here, and we certainly ought to be doing our duty. To do any good here, we want one to come and live here and put in good time."

From J. G. Allen, Muskogee, Okla.: "The following gifts have been received for a church building in Muskogee: Previously reported, $241.50; from Lawrence Avenue Church, Nashville, Tenn., $17; church at Lewisburg, Tenn., $10; "A Sister," Iron City, Tenn., 50 cents; John T. Hines, Fayetteville, Ark., $2; Mrs. J. P. McMian, Martin, Tenn., $1; L. G. Parks, Council Hill, Okla., $5; C. T. Powell, Nashville, Tenn., $1; G. E. Stanton, Saratoga, Ark., $3; church at Hendersonville, Tenn., $3.75; church at Horse Cave, Ky., $6; church at Buckholt, Texas, $6.90; J. C. Barnett, Ravine, Miss., $2; David Lipscomb College, Nashville, Tenn., $15; Union Church, Trenton, Ga., $7.20; Miss Marguerite Atkinson, Washington, Ark., $1; South Pryor Street Church, Atlanta, Ga., $10; brethren and sisters at Glasgow, Ky., $15.25. My address is 1412 Baltimore Avenue, Muskogee, Okla."

From Charles L. Talley, Cookeville, Tenn., March 14: "I have decided to make my stay here permanent. For the present I will be located at the Arlington Hotel. I will not move my family for a while, owing to the fact that there is not a vacant house in town. The outlook for some good work here is very bright, and the splendid congregation worshiping here seems to have waked up to the great opportunity that is before us all at the present time. The church here is in a position to sound out the word and make itself a factor for good, not only at home, but in regions beyond. It seems that the world is undertaking big things now; but a steady and normal activity is desired, rather than a mad rush, and the traits of the tortoise often surpass the race of the hare. I shall expect to send some encouraging reports later. My address will be Cookeville, Tenn., care of Arlington Hotel."

G. W. Graves and J. W. Duncan, elders of the Lone Oak congregation at Paducah, Ky., request publication of the following announcement: "To the brethren and elders of the congregations of Western Kentucky and Southern Illinois: In the Gospel Advocate of January 2, on page four, notice was given of a brotherly meeting which we are working for. We are glad to say that we have the promise of E. A. Elam's being with us during this meeting to teach on the important church work with disorderly walking members. The meeting is now set for April 1, and all those who have criticized the Lone Oak congregation are especially requested to meet with us in this meeting to assist in the investigation, and all others who are interested are invited to come. If we have at any time done a wrong to any one, we want to find it out and correct it. Brother Elam has planned to reach us on March 30."

From Mrs. J. J. Walker, McMinnville, Tenn.: "So much impressed am I with the work Brother Long is doing in Washington, D. C., that I am convinced that it is the duty of every Christian to help build a house of worship in that great city. In this fair land of ours to-day we find our people eager to build monuments to our noble sons who spilled their lifeblood on the battle fields of France to make the world safe for democracy. Why should we become more concerned in these temporal affairs than in supporting a cause that would honor the greatest Hero the world has ever known, One who spilled his blood on Calvary that man might be redeemed from sin? Let us build a church in the capital of these United States of ours that we will be as proud of when we think of or visit that city as we are of the Statue of Liberty. I am going to ask every sister who reads this appeal to deny herself something to the amount of one dollar and send to W. S. Long, 1420 Massachusetts Avenue, S. E., Washington, D. C., to help build this house of worship; and let us attend to it now, lest we forget if we put it off. The Israelites gave one-fenth of their income and freewill offerings besides. How much do we give?"

Georgia and the Far Southern Field

By S. H. Hall

Atlanta Is for the League of Nations.

In putting the above statement at the head of this article, I simply have reference to the way Atlanta supported the National Congress for a League of Nations at its sessions here, February 28 and March 1. The congress was scheduled to visit nine of our largest cities, closing with its visit to Atlanta; and, Atlanta-like, this city went the ones previously visited one better by giving the congress the largest crowd for its opening session, so declared by one of the spokesmen for the congress. The following words from the Sunday American, published in this city, states well the success of the congress:

The epoch-making Southern Congress for the League of Nations closed here Saturday night with an enthusiastic session at the Auditorium. A great crowd heard the nationally famous speakers and were thoroughly in sympathy with the indorsement and the pledged support of the South to the tentative program outlined at the Paris conference as approved by President Wilson.

The congress brought to the city such notables as William Howard Taft, ex-President of the United States; Edward A. Filene, of Boston, the greatest department-store head in the country; Dr. Anna Howard Shaw, the noted suffragist; Dr. A. M. Lowell, president of Harvard; Dr. George Grafton Wilson, professor of International law at

The caucuses, composed of representatives of each of the eight Southern States which sent delegates to the session. met Saturday afternoon to perfect organizations ducting the work of the league through a definite and strongly organized system of chairmen and committee

W. R. Boyd, Jr., national campaign manager for the league, reported that there were 68 delegates from Alabama, 8 from Florida, 607 from Georgia, 8 from Louisiana, 13 from Mississippi, 42 from North Carolina, 51 from South Carolina, and 44 from Tennessee. These figures represent only the official delegates.

Mr. Boyd stressed the importance of working public sentlment up to an enthusiastic heat in favor of the league of nations, that every rotary club and chamber of commerce, and on down to the smallest organization of whatever nature, prepare resolutions and send them to the President and their representatives in Congress, urging that they vote in favor of establishing the league.

Necessity for quick action was urged, in view of the fact that the covenant to be signed in Paris will come back to this country and be presented to the people for their approval. That will be the time, he urged, for the people of America to strike the great telling blow that will mean the success of the league.

Resolutions indorsing the league of nations and pledging the support of the Southern Congress in obtaining approval of the tentative program as has already been outlined at the Paris conference and indersed by President Wilson were adopted by the conference Saturday morning. The platform committee, which is composed of some of the most prominent men in the South, prepared the platform, which was presented at the opening of the session by Martin F. Ansell, governor of South Carolina. Following is a copy of the resolutions:

"The defeat of German militarism by the united power of the free nations has opened the way for the triumph of the ideals of popular government in the world. The will of free people is that there shall be no more war and that the rule of justice shall prevail among nations,

"The plan for a league of nations plans to secure justice between the nations, preserve their independence, and, by peaceably settling differences between them, prevent need-less resort to war. Such a league, powerful enough for the purpose, cannot be formed unless the United States is a party.

"The constitution or covenant for the establishment of the United The constitution of covenant for the establishment of such a league, drawn up by the delegates of the United States and the allied nations at Paris, is the first instance in which a proposal of such far-reaching significance for the well-being of mankind has, before adoption, been submitted to the people for consideration, and it may well prove to be the most important act of human history. We, the delegates constituting the Southern Congress of the League to Enforce Peace, assembled at Atlanta from the States of Alabama, North Carolina, South Carolina, Mississippi, Tennessee, Louislana, Georgia, and Florida, hereby declare our belief that the establishment of a league of nations is in accord with Tarter States and is essential for the welfare of the United States and of all

"We pledge our active support to secure the approval of the tentative draft of the Paris covenant for a league of nations and call upon our fellow citizens throughout the country to organize to this end, and upon our representa-tives in the United States Senate to maintain American traditions among the nations by its prempt ratification when finally submitted."

The resolutions were adopted unanimously, and it was voted that a copy be cabled to the American peace delega-tion in Paris, to President Wilson at Washington, to the chairman of the Senate committee on foreign relations, and each delegate present pledged to mail a copy to his State representatives in Congress, Observations.

Doubtless some one who is critically inclined desires to ask the question: "Of what interest is the league of nations to you?" The only answer I could give to this would be, first, Paul's language to Timothy: "I exhort therefore, first of all, that supplications, prayers, Intercessions, thanksgivings, be made for all men; for kings and all that are in high place; that we may lead a tranquil and quiet life in all godliness and gravity." If I understand anything, the purpose for our praying for rulers is to the end that we may be able to "lead a tranquil and quiet life." My second reason, therefore, for being interested in "the league of nations to enforce peace" is that, to be rational, I should be glad to see my prayers answered. That God is now answering the prayers of millions of peace-loving people in all the earth in so working upon the leaders of the nations, as a result of the war, in leading them to establish this league, I cannot doubt, the bit of senatorial snorting that we have recently had in the United States Congress to the contrary notwithstanding.

O, how our hearts sicken as we look back over the slaughter of the best young manhood of the nations during the past four years and think of the suffering it brought upon our women and children! But if out of this terrible struggle God brings rulers so disgusted with war and in love with peace that a league of nations is established, declaring that wars shall be no more, should we not (eel that all our suffering was not in vain?

It is well to note the nonpartisan spirit behind this movement, so far as this country is concerned. Here is Mr. Taft, unexcelled in the Republican party, backing, with all his might, our Democratic President. Each man is entirely too big to breathe comfortably within the parrow confines of party politics. For this we are thankful. The scripture cited above indicates that at times we find things about our leaders for which we should give thanks. Such a time is now before us.

A Brief Report.

On the first Lord's day in this month Brother Templeton was with the brethren at Constitution in the afternoon and at West End Avenue at night; Brother John Klingman was at South Pryor, morning and evening; Brother Brooks was at East Point, morning and evening; Brother Garrett was at Dalton; the writer was at West End Avenue in the forenoon, at Liberty Hill in the afternoon and at Ingleside at night. The services at all the places were at their best. It was a great day. Brother Garrett was with the Macon brethren on February 23, and says he has never seen such growth as the Macon work has enjoyed in the last four years. Brother Garrett rejoices greatly in their success.

Brother Hashimoto the elder and the writer take it turn about preaching. Miss Lillie Cypert and five Japanese teachers have charge of the Sunday school. The Sunday school gave yen 7.22 to Brother Yoshihara, who is in the hospital. The church also contributed yen 3.33 to the same end. Both school and church are now financially independent, leaving us free to pass on to some new work. We hope the girls' school will be out of debt and self-supporting in five years.

Annual Report for 1918.

BY NELLIE STRAITON.

During the year 1918, on behalf of brethren and sisters in many parts of the United States and Canada, I forwarded to our missionaries in India and Japan $2,110.65, which is more than twice as much as I was able to forward during the previous year.

I am so very glad to see this increased interest in the work of preaching the gospel of Jesus Christ to those who know nothing of his love, and I pray that the year 1919 may see a still greater enthusiasm and that we may more fully carry out the command to teach all nations.

We need, not twice or three times as many missionaries, but a hundred times as many; for in India, Japan, and several other countries there are still millions of people who have never heard the story of our Savior's life here, his sufferings and death, and finally his ascension to the home above, all that we might have life eternal.

I appreciate very much the cooperation of all those-individual Christians, the classes, churches, and religious papers—that have had a part in this work, and I wish to ask those who have not helped us to do so during this year and thus experience the joy and blessing of giving and working.

The funds were forwarded to our missionaries as follows:

Thus in the course of less than a year these two, who had been so long together, were called to the home above, where there is no more parting, nor tears, nor sorrow.

We've a story to tell to the nations
That shall turn their hearts to the right—
A story of truth and sweetness,
A story of peace and light.

We've a message to give to the nations, That the Lord who reigneth above Hath sent us his Son to save us, And show us that God is love.

We've a Savior to show to the nations, Who the path of sorrow hath trod, That all of the world's great peoples Might come to the truth of God.

For the darkness shall turn to dawning, And the dawning to noonday bright, And Christ's great kingdom shall come on earth, The kingdom of love and light. (C. Stern.)

Where Human Labor Is So Cheap.

For countless generations the little women of China and Japan have been plying their tasks at home. They have been energetic and painstaking and have mastered thoroughly the lesson of hard work.

A generation ago the doors of Japan's homes swung wide open and a host of women and girls hastened forth in answer to the enticing call of the factory owner. Year by year their sisters have followed until to-day in Japan fifty-six per cent of the factory operatives are women. A generation ago Japan had one hundred and twenty-five modern factories; to-day she has twenty thousand, and her factory hands number a million.

The doors of the Chinese homes have not opened so widely, nor has the commercial call been strong in China, but a steadily increasing stream of women workers pours into the manufacturing centers. China, as well as Japan, faces a growing problem of women in industry.

In China forty-six thousand nine hundred and sixty women are at work in one hundred and twenty-one silk mills. The silk reciers in Shanghai toil an eleven-hour day, and for their patient, steady service they are paid a paltry eleven cents. Even under sanitary conditions the silk industry is attended with occupational disease. A seven-day week of long labor days spent amid the rising steam of the silk filatures makes consumption prevalent, and compulsory night work weakens already impaired constitutions.

The textile industry in China has offered the largest employment to women, though paper mills, uniform factories, egg-preserving plants, and other industries have also invited them. It is not unusual to see a long procession of brave women toilers hastening along the streets to their work, carrying their rice bowls in their hands. The cities of China are calling to the industrious woman. There are no statistics to show how widely this call has been answered throughout the great tumultuous republic, but in Shanghai alone thirty thousand women and children from outside the city are at work in the factories. The problem of women and labor is in its incipient stage in China, as is industrialism itself. Now is the time for all thoughtful men and women to attack the existent evils and to guard the republic against such conditions as have accompanied Industrial development in Japan.

In Japan women are held fast in the great industrial machine. As mere children they are apprenticed to a given trade, and moral and hygienic conditions in this period of apprenticeship are so bad that a large percentage of girls are ruined before the beginning of their real productive period. This appalling waste of potential labor is only the beginning of the ills attendant upon industrialism in Japan. Japan is without factory legislation; hence, with the exception of establishments whose employers appreciate the economic value of conserving human energy, the physical surroundings are far from conducive to health. Too often factories are dimity lighted and poorly ventilated. Accidents are frequent, and no precautions are taken against occupational diseases.

And the hours! Giris and women are expected to work with the precision of machines which need no repairs. There is a minimum rest period in which meals are hastily eaten; but rest is no more than nominal, for a wary foreman guards against any disposition to a show of fatigue. Less than a twelve-hour day is exceptional. In the silk industry the women of Japan work thirteen to eighteen hours a day.

Wages in Japanese factories are low, and the evil of low wages is intensified by the factory dormitory system. Seventy per cent of the women in Japan's factories live in company dormitories. Many receive lodging instead of full cash return for their services. Many live in dormitories which are dark, crowded, and ill-smelling. In the larger factories the dormitory rooms are always occupied, for the factories operate day and night. It is not the exception for one woman to jump out of bed and hurry to her day's task, while another, tired out from her long night's work, crawls into the bed just vacated, which stands unchanged, unaired, a source of those malignant skin diseases which pass so readily from one person and from one generation to another. These crowded quarters, bot and Ill-ventilated as they are, contribute to the heavy tuberculosis toll that is prevalent among Japanese women

Japan has in the days of the World War amassed great wealth. Immense fortunes have grown up, forming an upper crust of abundant prosperity. Beneath that crust is the extreme poverty that invariably accompanies wealth. Alongside of the millionaire is the mass of factory hands who have built up his wealth. The women out of that great body of workers draw an average daily wage of from ten to twenty cents.

Japan's women have flocked to the city only to suffer the distillusionment that has come the world over to those who have been enticed by its lure. The waste is sad. The dominant portion never return to their rural homes, but grind away in the factories for a space, hardened into money-making machines which serve their time and then give way to others. Worn out, tubercular or neurasthenic, they drift aimlessly from one factory to another until they finally succumb to immorality or death.

Japan's problem of women in industry is the world problem, intensified by neglect and by the low esteem 'n which womanhood is held. China's problem is great, but it is still local, and an awakened social conscience will be able to cope with the situations that arise. In both countries the employer class must be taught the lesson that chean labor is in the long run the most expensive, a truth which Occidental nations are tardily recognizing. The public must be alertly conscious that if the women of the future are to be mothers of healthy children, their vitality must be conserved. If those children are to be noble and to achieve useful things in the state, the rising generation of women must have the opportunity to choose suitable occupations, and they must have leisure with a knowledge of how to use it. Public opinion must be educated to a new evaluation of humanity in these two great countries where human labor is so cheap .- Lois Ely, in World Call

We are requesting the churches to make a liberal contribution to the Tennessee Orphans' Home on the first Lord's day in April. "The gift without the giver is bare." Is there an urgent need and demand for gifts to care for orphan children." Then give, but give also for your "own soul's sake." In giving you are answering the need of your own soul.

Never such a chance as now to prove that all men are brothers! Jesus Christ is really the door to-day indescribably more than when he walked this earth. He is beekening us to pass through and play a man's full part. Shall we not heed and experience the blessing that always tollows the serving of others whole-heartedly —Selected.

Please Don't Do It.

BY J. H. WHISNANT.

The writer began preaching the gospel thirteen years ago at the age of twenty years. For ten years my time and attention were given almost wholly to preaching the gospel and distributing gospel literature. Five years ago the Christian Literature Depository was established, that through it I might be helpful in getting the literature of our various publishing houses more widely distributed. It has been a success, but not financially. After becoming the head of a family, when the support for preaching no longer paid living expenses, secular work was resorted to. First, though, we tried work of a religious characterpublishing the "Message of Peace." But the brethren were so slow in subscribing for it that the fears of further indebtedness drove us to its discontinuance. Since then the press has been used to splice out the preaching remuneration. This would work nicely but for the three hundred dollars we owe on the outfit, which comes due within thirty days. We thought that while farm products were high a crop would help us out of debt; but-alas! -the drought came. Then we hoped the 1919 edition of the "Church of Christ Educational Calendar" would help us out some. Fifteen hundred were printed, and the subject-matter printed also in neat booklet form for convenient distribution. So far the sales have not covered the cost of production and advertising, and about two hundred dollars' worth of both remain to be sold or for us to give away or let waste at our loss. Will you, for the sake of saving a small sum which might well be used to the furtherance of the Lord's cause, let us bear so heavy a burden? Please don't do it! We are not asking a donation, but your patronage, that the press may be cleared and used to print gospel literature instead of secular advertising. Several have bought one dollar's worth to place where they thought best. They are 22 cents each; six for $1; twelve or more, 15 cents each, prepaid. "Six Gospel Subjects," 10 cents each; dozen, 75 cents. Please give us some encouragement. If you cannot buy, order what you think you can sell in your community. Remember, this is not a get-rich scheme, but a chance to help in a good cause. "Several littles make one big," and now is lots better than never. Address J. H. Whisnant, Coal Hill, Ark.

Doctors Find Remedy for Colds and Flu

Calotabs, the New Nausealess Calomel, Cuts Short Colds and Prevents Flu by Keeping Liver Active.

Physicians have learned from experience during the epidegnic of influenza that one of the most important factors in the prevention of "fin" and pneumonis is to keep the liver active so that the digestive organs may be in perfect working order and the system thereby enabled to throw off colds, check sore throats, and resist serious complications. For this purpose they have found that the new, caussaless calomel, called "Calotabs," is far more effective even thin the old-style calomel, which was formerly the universal favorite, as Calotabs do not weaken or salivate the patient nor interfers with the appetite and digestion.

At the first sign of a coid or sore throat, doctors recommend one Calotab at bedtime, with a swallow of water—that's all. No salts, no names, nor the slightest interference with your diet, pleasure, or work. Next morning you wake up feeling line, your liver is active, and your appetite is keen for a good breakfast. For your protection, Calotabs are sold only in original scaled packages; price, thirty-five cents. All druggists recommend and guarantee Calotabs. Remember, your money back if you are not glad you bought Calotabs.—Adve

BY JOHN R. WITTIAMS

Opportunities to do good create the obligation to do it, and he who has the means must answer for the results An opportunity is now presented to the church of God to own, direct, and control a great school in West Tennessee. Brethren Freed and Hardeman, of Henderson, are the sole owners of the National Teachers' Normal and Business College, the only school in West Tennessee owned and controlled by our brethren. Should either or both of them die, the possibilities are the school would be lost to the brotherhood. Who can estimate what the loss would be? There is a proposition on foot now (the opportunity) for the brethren to buy the present buildings, with their fixtures, and enlarge and improve the same to meet the demands of the age and the necessity of that ancient plea we claim to love and stand for. For the present buildings, fixtures, etc., and the needed improvements, one hundred thousand dollars is needed. With this amount subscribed and paid, the proper deed, charter, etc., will be signed by Brethren Freed and Hardeman and delivered to trustees of the church of God, thus passing out of their possession into the possession of the church, to be owned and controlled by the church. Shall we let this opportunity pass and later on see the folly, stinginess, and lack of "pep" to do things, and made to realize the great loss that we were parties to? proposition presents itself to each member of the church, and each one must decide for or against; and remember, our decision will stand for all time, to be handed down to our children's children.

Some one may be ready to say: "Brother Williams, you are too ignorant and too poor to offer suggestions to the educated and wealthy." Are you sure of this? The necessity of a church school is more keenly felt and realized on account of my Ignorance, and my poverty is the logical result of my ignorance; so I think I am in position to know the needs of the sehnol

As I understand the matter, it is not to be a preacher shop where preachers are molded and turned out like hoe handles from a turning lathe, but where young men can be educated, where the Bible must be studied and learned; and then, if the young man wants to preach, the brethren will not be ashamed of him on account of his ignorance.

What say you, brethren? Speak out. Let the world know how you stand.

Help Needed at Pollock, La.

BY J. E. WAINWRIGHT.

At the suggestion of several brethren, and especially our dearly beloved brother, Evangelist H. W. Busby, of the Glenwood congregation, Fort Worth, Texas, I decided to write concerning the work at Pollock, giving a brief line-up on the work,

I have been in Fort Worth for nearly two years, identified with the Glenwood congregation, teaching in a business college, and preaching in and around the city each Lord's day. The gospel had never been preached at or near Pollock previous to my arrival. I suppose Forest Hill, about sixty miles south, is the nearest point. Brother C. C. McQuiddy is station agent there and preaches as opportunity presents. Upon my arrival here, I preached twice on the first Lord's day, and on the following Monday to a large crowd of prominent business men who never pretend to follow any kind of religious belief (this opportunity occurred at a funeral at which I spoke).

I convinced a few people here of the truth through the mail, and they desired that I try and come over and preach to them and others. This appeared to me in the form of a "Macedonian cry," and I did not resist. The Glenwood folks fellowshiped me sufficiently to make the trip, prayed for me, and bade me Godspeed. The opportunity is ripe, and I have been busy advertising our mission and speaking every chance. I expect to get a meeting started in a short while in Masonic Hall, ground floor. But it will take outside assistance to keep the work moving. If any one should desire to assist in this mission work, remittances should be made through Brother J. H. Walton, 1717 Bessie Street, Fort Worth, Texas, in order to keep the record straight. Brother Walton is one of the elders in the Glenwood congregation.

Germs of Disease should be promptly expelled from the brood. This is a time when the system is especially susceptible to them. Get rid of all impurities in the blood by taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, and thus fortify your whole body and prevent illness

If you feel bilious, headachy, con-stipated, and all knocked out, just go to your druggist and get a bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone for a few cents, which is a harmless vegetable substitute for dangerous calomel. Take a spoonful, and if it doesn't start your liver and straighten you up better and quicker than nasty calomel and with-out making you sick, you just go back and get your money

If you take calomel to-day, you will be sick and nauseated to-morrow; besides, it may salivate you; while if you take Dodson's Liver Tone you will wake up feeling great, full of ambition and ready for work or play. It is harmless, pleasant, and safe to give to children; they like it.

The Romantic Story of Southland's Favorite Shoe, EzWear.

Some five years ago, a prominent eitizen of South Carolina, visiting New York on important business, chanced to meet the maker of a shoe built on new and unusual lines; an enthusiastic admirer of its most lines; an enthusiastic admirer of its most listinctive features, ease and comfort, had suggested the name ExWear; it was promptly adopted. The husiness man from the South, knowing how welcome such a shoe would be in his part of the country, urged that its remarkable qualities, including not only comfort, but style, durability and economy, be made known there. That this has been effectively done is proven by the enormous demand that has sprung up in the South for ExWear shoes, It is said that its sale there during the last twelve months has increased fully three twelve months has increased fully three-bundred per cent. The distributor, Mr. J. R. Simon, of 1589 Broadway, Brooklyn, N. Y., says that all who wish to know about a shoe that combines all worth-while shoe qualities, may have a copy of his money-saving slove book for the asking.

The Tennessee Orphans' Home.

We are requesting the churches to make a liberal contribution to the Tennessee Orphans' Home on the first Lord's day in April. "The gift without the giver is bare." Is there an urgent need and demand for gifts to care for orphan children? Then give, but give also for your "own soul's sake." In giving you are answering the need of your own soul.

Every one casts a shadow. There hangs about us a sort of penumbra-a strange, indefinable something-which we call "personal influence," which has its effect on every other life on which it falls. It goes with us wherever we go. It is not something we can have when we will, as we lay aside a garment. It is like something that always pours out from our life, like light from a lamp, like heat from a flame, like perfume from a flower --Exchange.

Where Most Sickness Begins and Ends

BY FRANKLIN DUANE, M. D.

It can be said broadly that most human It can be said broadly that most aumanills begin in the stomach and end in the stomach. Good digestion means good health, and poor digestion means bad health. The minute your stomach fails to properly dispose of the food you eat, troubles begin to crop out in various forms. Indigestion and dyspepsia are the commonest forms, but thin, impure blood, headaches, backaches, pimples, blotches, dizziness, belching, coated tongue, weakness, poor appetite, sleeplessness, coughs, colds and bronchitis are almost as common. There is but one way to have good health, and that is to put and keep your stomach in good order. This is easy to do if you take Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It is a wonderful tonic and blood covery. It is a wonderful tonic and blood purifier, and is so safe to take, for it is made of roots and herbs. Dr. Pierce, of Buffalo, N. Y., stands behind this standard medicine, and it is good to know that so distinguished a physician is proud to have his name identified with it. When you take Golden Medical Discovery, you are getting the benefit of the experience of a doctor whose reputation goes all around the earth. Still more, you get a temperance medicine that contains not a drop of alcohol or narcotic of any kind. Long ago Dr. Pierce combined certain valuable Dr. Pierce combined certain valuable vegetable ingredients—without the use of alcohol—so that these remedies always have been strictly temperance medicines.
