"The Model Church," by G. C. Brewer, I have read with pleasure, and can heartily recommend it to those who love to see the church be as nearly what Christ would have it be as it is possible for human beings to let it be. This book was written because Brother Brewer believes in the church's being a living, active power in whatever town or community the church may be established. This book will greatly help the elders and deacons in making the congregations for which they are responsible the kind of churches Christ would have them be, if they will get it and prayerfully read it.

"Prepare to Meet Thy God."

BY MRS. T. L. POARCH.

"Prepare to meet thy God!"
Was long ago to Israel said;
Who long have slumbered 'neath the sod,
And still they sleep among the dead.
But why should they prepare,
If they shall thus forever sleep
In that "long home" we know not where,
And know not when they shall awake?

"Prepare to meet thy God!"
The warning yet rings loud and clear
Which has rung through ages long
And still doth ring in every ear;
And neither shall this warning cease
To ever ring till time shall end,
When we shall see the Savior's face,
Who will then from the skies descend.

"Prepare to meet thy God!"
For Israel will not forever sleep,
But from the grave will come forth
When the dead in Christ awake.
But we neither know the day nor hour,
Neither the angels of heaven know,
When God shall call the righteous higher
And punish the wicked here below.

"Prepare to meet thy God!"
O, let us then this warning heed,
And fight the battles of our Lord
While we have life and every need:
For, "To-day if ye will hear his voice
Harden not your heart!"
Yet man is left to make his choice,
If he will serve his God or not.

Training Little Children

(Suggestions by mothers who have been kindergartners. Issued by The United States Bureau of Education, Washington, D. C., and The National Kindergarten Association, New York, N. Y.)

Importance of Hand Work.

There is not enough time given to constructive work, to the pleasure of "making things," either in the home or at school

In a suggestive book, "Home, School, and Vacation," a mother writes: "A young child's capability and skill grow rapidly. It is a good plan, after he is four years old, to manage so that he always can have something visible to show his father, for instance, at the end of the day-something made with his own hands."

This wise mother adds another reason besides the pleasure this creative work gives. She says: "If the mind after this age (four years) is let to play all day, it rapidly grows averse to ordered application and submission to

Now, to be practical, what can children make? I should like to show you the aëroplane made from a cigar box by a little colored boy of nine. Aëroplanes are naturally interesting to children this year. It is always wise to allow them to follow the life interests of the adult world whenever they appeal to little people.

But you ask what can younger children make in the aircraft line? They can fold stiff paper into darts, and it is surprising to see how high little boys can hurl them. Then, too, they can make pin wheels; and while these do not fly, they buzz through the air and afford much amusement. Let the little people make many pin wheels, large and small and of varied colors, using clothespins for handles, if no older brother is at hand to whittle a stick. Encourage older and younger children to work together, for self-control and adaptability are gained through social intercourse. It is needless to say that almost all children like to blow soap bubbles. How they fly! See whose will fly the highest!

Another source of interest to children is the well-known scrapbook. Little people love to cut out pictures. They may collect them in a box at first, or put all the animals in one envelope, the toys in another, and so on. When they can cut and arrange the pictures fairly well, help them to mount one sheet. After this practice, fold a large piece of paper and let them mount the four pages; then use a book. To manage paper and seissors, make paste, select pictures, mount and press them with a blotting pad, are all activities which interest and instruct children.

Scrapbooks Illustrating Bible and other favorite stories, children's poems, the different countries and peoples of the world, and the various trades and occupations, not only occupy, but educate, little children. Such work is a good pastime for rainy days or Sundays.

When children have acquired skill in making scrapbooks and have learned to select and arrange pictures, they should be allowed the privilege of sending their handwork to some less fortunate children in our country or to some of the millions of little allied orphans across the sea,

While thou art in the world and hast an honest employment, thou art certainly by the order of Providence obliged to labor in it and to finish the work given thee, according to thy best ability, without repining in the least, seeking out and manifesting for God's glory the wonders of nature and art, since, let the nature be what it will, it is all the work and art of God; and let the art also be what it will, it is still God's work and his art, rather than any part or cunning of man.-Jacob Bochme.

Covetousness.

We are forbidden, not merely to attempt to get for ourselves by illegitimate means what belongs to our neighbor, but even to desire that it should be ours rather than his. The statesman must not wish that the glory of his successful rival were his own; nor we, who are poor, that the mansions and parks and libraries of the wealthy were ours. The disappointed lover must not look upon the wife he hoped to win, but has lost, and regret that she is not his; nor the servant secretly covet the happier fortune of his master, or the larger income of a man who is in higher place than himself.

It may be said that this is a hard saying, and that it is one of the impossible precepts of which there are so many in the Old Testament and the New Testament. But what is the moral idea on which it rests? It is only another form of the great commandment: "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." If we can obey that law, we can obey this. If I love the rich man as I love myself, I shall have no desire to live in his house instead of him, and to drive his carriages, and to enjoy his income. If a statesman loves his rival as well as he loves himself, he will not envy his rival's triumph and desire his rival's honor; the only motive which will induce him to strive for power will be the conviction that he is better able to serve the state.-R. W. Dale.

Dreams and Visions.

The young man to-day will find the world no way congenial to the dreamer; it will only be through a thick for that he will see his visions. To-day in every sphere of life the young man will find a subtle penetrating realism banishing all visions. Nevertheless, the prophet Joel was right; dreams and visions are the very salt for all life, its one reality. All life will ultimately be weighed by this one thing: the ideals to which men stood true in spite of every difficulty. History is, in fact, but the science of regulated enthusiasms and their results. Hope makes history a progress instead of a cycle. We must be careful not to narrow down the currency of heaven to realizations only. It is the idealism of Jesus that is the salvation of the world. You can be an idealist even in business, Take your dreams and visions into life as a citizen; into your politics; into your home; into the church.-H. B. Workman.

Life's Mirror.

There are loyal hearts, there are spirits brave, There are souls that are pure and true: Then give to the world the best you have, And the best will come back to you.

Give love, and love to your life will flow. A strength in your utmost need; Have faith, and a score of hearts will show Their faith in your word and deed.

Give truth, and your gift will be paid in kind, And honor will honor meet; And a smile that is sweet will surely find A smile that is just as sweet.

For life is the mirror of king and slave, Tis just what we are and do; Then give to the world the best you have, And the best will come back to you.

Georgia and the Far Southern Field

By S. H. Hall

Good News From McGregor, Ga.

The following letter will be interesting reading to those who are praying for all the waste places in Georgia to be visited and congregations fully established in them:

Brother Hall: I am inclosing names of persons and amount each has sent me to be used on church fund here. I would be glad if you will have the list published in the Gospel Advocate.

On account of so much sickness and bad weather, our little band has failed a few times recently to meet; but other than this, I feel we are getting on nicely. Last other than this, I feel we are getting on nicely. Last Lord's day was Brother Prevatt's appointed time, but he missed connection and did not arrive until too late to preach that night. We were so glad for him to visit us. anyway, as he always gives us such valuable advice. It is probable that he has arranged for a debate in May with This preacher one of the near-by Methodist preachers. said he would like to meet Brother Prevatt in a debate, and Brother Prevatt is going to give him the chance to

The lumber for our church building is now on the ground. If we had funds enough, it would be only a few weeks until we could meet in our own house. It will take four or five hundred dollars to do that.

You will notice that almost all the contributions have been from individuals, and we appreciate the interest each one has manifested. There are so many churches and individuals that have not been heard from that a very small donation from each would help so much. We are so eager to have the house ready for the meeting in May.

Pray for the little congregation here that it may hold out faithful. Your sister in Christ, VINA HOOPER.

Sister Hooper makes the following report of donations: From West End Avenue congregation, Atlanta, $40; church at East Point, Ga., $10; Sister James Fowler, Georgia, $5; Union Church, near Valdosta, Ga., $25; A. P. Chapman, Georgia, $1; "A Sister," Franklin, Tenn., $1; Sister H. J. Canterbery, Huntsville, Ala., $2.50; Hiram Higgins, Tennessee, $5; Sister Kate Mobley, Kentucky, $2; Sister W. T. Marshall, Tennessee, $2.50; Sister M. C. Massey, Georgia, 25 cents; Sister Warren Thomas, Tennessee, $5; Sister J. D. Glenn, Tennessee, $5; Sister Sarah W. Brooks, Tennessee, $5; Sister Prevatt, Georgia, $2; Brother Prevatt, Georgia, $1.75; "A Sister," Tennessee, $1; Sister M. R. McKissick, Tennessee, $5; Sister M. C. Chambers, Kentucky, $3; a sister in Texas (name misplaced), $2; Sister W. M. Allison, Tennessee, $1; Brother A. M. Strickland, Georgia, $2; Sister Jones, Valdosta, Ga., $1; church at Morven, Ga., $6.65; Brother and Sister F. O. Allen, Tennessee, $10; church at Dickson, Tenn., $50. Our sister adds: "The members of the McGregor church of Christ wish to thank the contributors. May the Lord bless each

I wish to add that it seems to me that it would be a shame for the faithful ones at McGregor to have to wait more than a few weeks longer in getting the four or five hundred dollars to enable them to have the house ready for the May meeting. Please note the list above and see how many good sisters are going to the help of the efforts at McGregor. Then note that only four congregations in Georgia, as such, have sent donations. What are the other congregations going to do? Won't you help some, too, and that at once? I am glad to say that a movement is under way for a nice brick church at Cedartown, Ga. A good brother has already given one of the best lots in town on the condition that we complete a good house on it. The local forces there have already pledged above thirteen hundred dollars toward this building. They will need a little help, too; but we want to get the McGregor house assured first. Please, brethren, get busy and do your duty now, and make the faithful happy at McGregor and honor the cause we all should love. Let our friends out of this State still remember that their help will be appreciated. And now I ask the Dickson (Tenn.) brethren to join the Atlanta forces with another check for fifty dollars, which will put another bundred on the list. In a short while we will tell you fully about the great work now under way at Cedartown. 0 0 0

More on Giving.

The following letter should be interesting reading to those who want to see the church do her best as the bride of our adorable Redeemer. The name and place is withheld for the reason that the letter was not sent to me for publication; but I feel sure that its author would not object to my letting the brotherhood have the advantage of its contents, with my reply.

Brother Hall: I read with interest your page in the Gospel Advocate of February 12, and note what you say about the contributions at West End. I always like to get hold of an example like that for the reproof and encour-I find it a task to get churches to agement of others. appreciate the New Testament teaching on giving, I am no man's judge, but I know that churches (generally speaking) do not contribute as they have been prospered. If we could receive a duty like giving and act on it as a pleasant privilege, the cause of Christ would sweep the

But I am writing you to ask you for details concerning your congregation at West End as to their number, working class or people of ordinary standing in finance. have always appreciated Paul's appeal to Corinth by telling them what Macedonia did in much "poverty." When you get time, a note giving such facts as will encourage others to give more will be appreciated.

1. Only a few words are needed in answer to the inquiry about the West End Avenue congregation. As to our number, I will leave this off till later, as just now our record is being revised. We have on our record more than three hundred names, but the membership is scattered practically in all sections, and there are some who attend the South Pryor Street services about as often as they do at West End, and some who attend there all of the time whose names remain on our list. Then we have, say, two or three dozen-we will have to count them as we do apples and oranges, as they never work-that I do not know how to place. I refer to those who claim to be members, who quickly say, when asked, that they are members of the church of Christ, but who seldom attend the services or give one cent toward meeting our bills. Excepting these, with a number of children, who, of course, make no meney of their own, it would be safe to say we have two hundred dependable members-members who produce and with whom we are much pleased because of their deep and abiding interest in the church. We have not a rich man in the church. Our members consist of the laboring class. Then, there are a number of our very best, our most faithful, that we have to help financially, instead of their helping us, due to a failure in health and other causes. I can gladly and conscientiously speak of those who are making this work a glorious success as poor in this world's goods, but rich in faith and good works. I think it would be safe to say that half of our members were sick last month with "flu" and other troubles, and yet our offerings went above three hundred and sixty-five dollars. Last Lord's day the offerings went above eighty dollars, and normal conditions have not returned, as many of our members are still kept away on account of sickness. But allow me to say, in all seriousness, that we are not giving-all of us-as the Lord prospers us. I simply mean that the most of us could give more than we are giving without going beyond what duty really demands. While this is true, I have never seen a congregation that comes so nearly coming up to the demands as this congregation. Words could not express the joy that comes to (Continued on page 304.)

AT HOME AND ABROAD

"There is no such thing as painless education." (Dr. Charles R. Brown.

An article from Brother McCaleb will appear next week, with a reply from Brother McQuiddy.

A. S. Derryberry is critically ill at his home in Nashville. Many prayers are being offered for his recovery.

The many friends of J. D. Walling, of Cookeville, Tenn., will be pleased to learn that he is greatly improved in health. Brother Walling paid this office a brief visit last week.

G. W. Grayson writes: "C. R. Nichol, of Denton, Texas, will assist the church of Christ at Dunmor, Ky., in a meeting beginning on March 26. All congregations near by are invited to attend."

Fred K. Jones, real estate dealer and Notary Public, 43 Arcade, Nashville, Tenn.—Nashville and Tennessee property for sale and exchange—will endeavor to accommodate those desiring his services.

S. H. Hall writes us that a preachers' meeting will be held in Atlanta, Ga., beginning on March 28 and continuing through to April 4. While intended especially for the Georgia preachers and those who have formerly worked in this field, all who come will receive a warm welcome.

From Mrs. W. G. Jernigan, Dolores, Col., March 15: "Yesterday was a splendid day with the faithful few at this place. Brother Jernigan preached morning and evening. Our Bible studies on Tuesday evenings are really interesting. I am glad to report that many new faces are appearing in the audience from time to time. Pray for us that we may abound in the great work of the Master."

From T. H. Matheson, Bowie, Texas, March 17: "I went to Montague again on Lord's day and preached twice. In the afternoon I went out to Mount Tabor Schoolhouse and preached the gospel for the first time there: I am going to preach regularly at Montague. I have conducted several funerals since coming to Bowie. To-day the remains of Sister Mary Alford were laid in the Briar cemetery. I tried to speak words of comfort."

From C. E. Holt, Florence, Ala.: "I want to say to the churches of Christ in general, and to those of Tennessee In particular, that George W. Farmer, one of the sanest and soundest preachers in the brotherhood, is at Cleveland, Tenn. That is the point from which it is hoped to reach several points in East Tennessee. That is a needy and fertile field. They need financial help. Send to Sister Fred M. Little or to George W. Farmer, Cleveland, Tenn."

From T. S. Bain, Muskogee, Okla., March 18: "Work with the East Okmulgee Avenue and K Streets congregation is progressing very satisfactorily. About sixty were present at the morning service last Sunday. A. M. Foster preached at both services. One lady made the good confession and was buried with her Lord in baptism on Tuesday. Brother Oliphant is out of the city this week, being in a good meeting with the church at Porter."

From C. H. Smithson, Ben Franklin, Texas, March 16: "I have been almost too busy to report of late, but must say just a few words now, My work this year has been most pleasant and is sure to be profitable. I am serving four churches monthly, but aim to enter the field for evangelistic work soon. I have about half of my time promised and am now fixing dates for it, and can list some more work; so, if you desire my services, write me at an early date,"

John M. Rice writes: "The work at Altus, Okla., moves on very nicely. The work is always just what the brethren make it. A fine young man returned to the fold last Sunday evening and is going to enter the ministry soon. I preached at Rocky on the fifth Sunday in February. We had fine services. I have no hopes of ever preaching again on the fifth Sunday in February. Our business meeting was very well attended last Sunday evening, and the business side of the church was discussed freely."

Foy E. Wallace, Jr., of Temple, Texas, writes: "The church here enjoys a steady growth. Cled E. Wallace, my brother, will begin a meeting with us on May 1. He will make Temple his home. We will work jointly with this congregation, arranging our work alternately at home and in the field. We will be in a position to arrange for winter meetings, as one of us will be in the field the year round. I will assist the church at Del Rio in a meeting the first two weeks in April. Austin Taylor will lead the singing."

From A. J. Veteto, Amity, Ark., March 16: "Congregations desiring my help in song, either in protracted-meeting work or in teaching, should pen their calls early, as the people around here (my old home) are contracting with me already for midsummer. I closed an eighteendays' school at Macedonia, in Pike County, two weeks ago, and left with a contract for another school of the same duration (August 12 to September 3) at that place. It was not the church that did it, either, but a mixed multitude. I am teaching now at night at Center Ridge. The people are busy, and have 'a mind to work."

From W. H. Carter, Lafayette, Tenn.: "I regret, very much, that I could not be with the brethren in the meeting at Portland, Tenn., on March 14-19. My youngest son, his wife and two children, took influenza, ran into pneumonia, and I would not leave them. At this writing (March 15) they are all convalescent. The youngest child is not out of danger. I had hoped to enjoy the meeting and be edified by the brethren who had been selected to discuss important subjects. But we have long since learned that we meet many disappointments in this life; and as we are taught that all things work together for good, I am now hoping for the good to come to some one. Yet I cannot help feeling sorry that I had to miss it."

From J. A. Hudsen, Oklahoma City, Okla., March 15: "Yesterday I spent at Ada; and Brother Elkins, who preaches for the brethren there, came up here and preached for these good folks, and was greeted by a packed house. At Ada I had good and attentive audiences. I enjoyed the day immensely. In the afternoon I went out and spent a while with our sick preacher brethren, Will M. Thompson and Oscar L. Hays. I think they are both improving. Both are great and useful men. I hope that they will soon be able to resume active work, for there is more than can be done. We need two or three hundred more loyal ministers of the gospel in this State; but we need real men. But let me say that we have some good ones now; some of the best, in fact, in the Middle West are laboring in Oklahoma."

From E. Gaston Collins, Huntsville, Ala.: "Price Billingsley preached here on February 19. Last week R. E. L. Taylor, of Decherd, Tenn., visited us here at my invitation. He preached once at each of the four congregations. The brethren at West Huntsville want him next year for a meeting. Sam Hall is to hold a short meeting for them this year. I have made my regular appointments this winter, except when the "fiu" prevented. In that case it works a hardship on the preacher who depends wholly on preaching or singing for his support. In one such case, however, the brethren remembered me with a portion of that week's pay, which is commendable. Financiers and economists! Preachers frequently learn something of each by experience. I am just back from a prospective trip to Algood, Livingston, and Monterey, Tenn."

The Kingdom of God.

BY J. C. M'Q.

There appears to be some confusion of thought on this subject which grows out of the fact that those who are discussing the subject do not fully understand each other and have not clearly defined the points at issue. It is evident that there is only a slight diversity of view as to the extent of the church and the kingdom when both are applied to the kingdom of heaven which Jesus came to build. It is clear that God had a kingdom over the Jews to which repeated reference is made in the Old Testament; but the Jewish theocracy is not the same as the church of Christ or the kingdom of heaven foreshadowed by John the Baptist, and I have not understood any one to so teach. But according to New Testament teaching and Thayer, the church of Christ or the kingdom of heaven which Jesus came to build have the same laws and the same subjects. Christ affirms: "And I also say unto thee, that thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of Hades shall not prevail against it. I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven; and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven." (Matt. 16: 18, 19.) Here the church of Christ and the kingdom of heaven are used interchangeably, and the same key will unlock both. "Keys" is here used as a symbol of power. It would do no violence to the text to render it, "I will give unto thee the key of the kingdom of heaven;" for the Greek word may be correctly rendered "key" or "keys," as is clear from Rev. 9: 1: "And the fifth angel sounded, and I saw a star from heaven fallen unto the earth; and there was given to him the key of the pit of the abyss." Here we have the same word for "key" that we have for "keys" in Matt. 16: 19. The same is true of Rev. 20; 1. If the church as set up on the day of Pentecost is not the same as the kingdom of heaven, then Peter was a burglar and burglarized when he unlocked the church with the keys of the kingdom of heaven.

Some teach that the church was established on Pentecost, but that the kingdom prophesied in Dan. 2: 44 was not set up at that time. If Dan. 2: 44 was not fulfilled on Pentecost, then it has never been fulfilled and God has no everlasting kingdom on the earth. I firmly believe and teach, if no everlasting kingdom now, then there is no salvation; if no salvation, no saved individuals; hence, the people of Christ are an unsaved body.

Daniel declared six hundred years before the birth of Christ: "And in the days of those kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed, nor shall the sovereignty thereof be left to another people; but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever." The Jews longed for the Messiah and the setting up of the everlasting kingdom. The last of the Old Testament prophets, Malachi, passed away, but the promised kingdom was not set up. When Daniel wrote, the time was not fulfilled; but when Christ began his personal ministry, he declared: "The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand." (Mark 1: 15.) The time for the setting up of the kingdom being fulfilled, we may expect the kingdom very soon after the statement of Christ. It is evident that this statement is correct, for Christ said unto them: "Verily I say unto you, There are some here of them that stand by, who shall in no wise taste of death, till they see the kingdom of God come with power." (Mark 9: 1.) The kingdom of God would come with power before some to whom Christ spoke would die. After his resurrection, Christ commanded his apostles: "But tarry ye in the city, until ye be clothed with power from on high." (Luke 24: 49.) The city was Jerusalem. They were also to wait in Jerusalem for the promise of the Father, the baptism of the Holy Spirit. Christ assured them: "But ye shall receive power, when the Holy Spirit is come upon you." (Acts 1: 8.) (1) The kingdom and power came together. (2) The Holy Spirit and the power came together. (3) The Holy Spirit came on the first Pentecost after the resurrection of Christ, and, as power was to come when the Spirit came, the power also came at that time; but the kingdom was to come when the power came, and the power came on the first Pentecost after the resurrection of Christ, hence the promised kingdom came at that time; so at that time Dan. 2: 44 was fulfilled. It is held by some that while Dan. 2: 44 was not fulfilled on Pentecost, Christ did establish his church or kingdom at that time, but that nothing is prophesied in the Old Testament concerning the church. If there is nothing prophesied in the Old Testament concerning the church of Christ or his kingdom, and as in our present state we are not in the past or future dominion of the kingdom, absolutely nothing is gained by studying the prophecies of the Old Testament. Such an inconsistent position falls of its own weight.

It may be well to briefly consider some of the prophecies of Christ and his kingdom that were fulfilled on the first Pentecost after his resurrection. On that memorable day Peter shows that the wonderful things which were done were a fulfillment of the prophet Joel. He shows also a fulfillment of Ps. 16 and Ps. 110. Having established by the prophets whom the Jews themselves accepted that God had raised up Christ to sit on David's throne, and "being therefore by the right hand of God exalted, and having received of the Father the promise of the Holy Spirit, he hath poured forth this, which ye see and hear." He then commands: "Let all the house of Israel therefore know assuredly, that God hath made him both Lord and Christ, this Jesus whom ye crucified,"

When was Christ made "Lord of lords and King of kings?" "A certain nobleman went into a far country to receive for himself a kingdom, and to return." (Luke 19: 12.) Christ went to heaven to receive his kingdom. "And when he had said these things, as they were looking, he was taken up; and a cloud received him out of their sight." (Acts 1: 9.) When Christ entered heaven and was crowned king at the right hand of God, "there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all the peoples, nations, and languages should serve him: his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed." (Dan, 7: 14.) When he entered heaven, the angels and redeemed shouted for joy: "Lift up your heads, O ye gates; and be ye lifted up, ye everlasting doors: and the King of glory will come in. Who is the King of glory? Jehovah strong and mighty, Jehovah mighty in battle. Lift up your heads, O ye gates; yea, lift them up, ye everlasting doors: and the King of glory will come in. Who is this King of glory?* Jehovah of hosts, he is the King of glory." (Ps. 24: 7-10.) While here on earth, Christ promised his disciples a kingdom. He says: "I appoint unto you a kingdom, even as my Father appointed unto me, that ye may eat and drink at my table in my kingdom; and ye shall sit on thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel." (Luke 22: 29, 30.) As the Lord's Supper will not be eaten in the kingdom of glory or the heavenly kingdom, hence the kingdom he appointed them is here now, and in it the eating and judging are done. So we see that Christ received the kingdom in heaven; and when he had received it, he gave to his apostles.

Speaking of the Roman, the last of the four kingdoms referred to in the second chapter of Daniel, the prophet says: "And through his policy he shall cause craft to prosper in his hand; and he shall magnify himself in his heart, and in their security shall he destroy many; he shall also stand up against the prince of princes; but he shall be broken without hand," (Dan. 8: 25.) That this refers to the breaking of the Roman power and that government standing up against Christ can hardly be questioned. That Christ is "the prince of princes" referred to by Daniel is clear from Rev. 1: 5, where Jesus Christ is said to be "the faithful witness, the first-born of the dead, and the ruler of the kings of the earth." The setting up of the kingdom on Pentecost fills full the prophecy of Daniel. It is an eternal kingdom, one that cannot be shaken or moved. In just such a kingdom all faithful Christians are living. "Wherefore, receiving a kingdom that cannot be shaken, let us have grace, whereby we may offer service well pleasing to God with reverence and awe." (Heb. 12: 28.) In the kingdom of our Father we may say: "Who delivered us out of the power of darkness, and translated us into the kingdom of the Son of his love." (Col. 1: 13.)

It is sometimes objected that we are not in the eternal kingdom as the following scriptures speak of entering into the everlasting kingdom: "Confirming the souls of the disciples, exhorting them to continue in the faith, and that through many tribulations we must enter into the kingdom of God." (Acts 14: 22.) "Wherefore, brethren, give the more diligence to make your calling and election sure: for if ye do these things, ye shall never stumble: for thus shall be righly supplied unto you the entrance into the eternal kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ." (2 Pet. 1: 10, 11.) The prophet speaks of the former dominion of the kingdom. (Mic. 4: 8.) The kingdom of glory is the latter dominion. As the passages clearly show, it is by a faithful continuance in well-doing, by fighting the good fight of faith, and by adding to our faith virtue, knowledge, self-control, patience, godliness, brotherly kindness, and love, that we who are now in the kingdom may at last enter into the everlasting or glorified state of the kingdom. Many who are in the "former dominion" may apostatize and never enter through many trials and much tribulation into the kingdom of glory or the heavenly kingdom. "The Lord will deliver me from every evil work, and will save me unto his heavenly kingdom; to whom be glory forever and ever. Amen." (2 Tim. 4: 18.)

All the prophets of the Old Testament told of "these days" in which the God of heaven set up a kingdom that shall never be destroyed. "Yea and all the prophets from Samuel and them that followed after, as many as have spoken, they also told of these days." (Acts 3: 24.) May the Lord of all lead us and guide us in the way of life everlasting until all the faithful, who have many joys here, may at last enter the heavenly kingdom and "rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory." The Christian in joy here enters into joy triumphant. It was said to the servant who had been faithful in a few things: "Enter thou into the joy of thy lord."

The Parable of the Tares.

BY E. A. E.

On page 290 of this paper our readers will please find and read a review of the lesson in the Advanced Quarterly of 1906 on the parable of the tares by Brother Isenberg.

He says he sent his review to the Gospel Advocate "for publication, but for some reason it was not published." In perfect fairness he published my comments on this parable, which we will not republish.

That was fourteen years ago. None of us remember having received this review. We could not have declined to publish it because it differs from my comments in a point or two. I am glad to receive his review now and to publish it.

In the first place, he says "this is a free country, and every one is allowed free speech." At least, so declares the Constitution of the United States, and that is good authority. I agree with it and with Brother Isenberg. Article I. says:

Congress shall make no law respecting an established religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the government for a redress of grievances.

When a boy I read with a great deal of interest of religious intolerance; of the sailing and landing of the Mayflower; of "the pllgrim fathers;" of the banishment of Roger Williams and the founding of Providence as "a refuge for persons distressed for conscience;" of the persecution of the inoffensive Quakers, such as scourging, boring the tongue through with a red-hot iron, and putting them to death. I then imbibed the spirit of religious liberty and deprecated religious intolerance, even the execution of witches.

This principle of the Constitution must remain inviolate or our liberty dies.

While the Bible requires all to worship God "in spirit and truth," or "as it is written" in the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus—"the perfect law of liberty"—it forces no one to do so. Every one is taught to choose whom he will serve, suffering, however, the punishment of a wrong choice and enjoying the blessings of the right one. Neither the Constitution nor "the freedom wherewith God has set us free" allows religious intolerance. Then, with both the Constitution and the Bible to back him, Brother Isenberg must be right on this point.

There is yet some religious intolerance in human nature. Happy is he that judgeth not himself in that which he approveth.

Yet, with so many contributions and such limited space, editors must use some discrimination in what they receive for publication and may differ in judgment from contributors as to what will accomplish the greatest good. This is not denying "the freedom of speech" or "of the press." Others can do as Brother Isenberg has done-have their articles published elsewhere. But should we refuse to publish articles because they teach the truth or anything contrary to our views, we become so far intolerant and deny "the freedom of speech" to that extent. Brother Isenberg was not so treated. Should a man be denied the liberty to preach and write the truth of God or his conscientious convictions in regard to it, he must still, Paul-like, not shrink from declaring "the whole counsel of God." To be guilty of refusing or falling, either through fear of punishment or hope of reward, to "contend earnestly" for all or any part of "the faith which was once for all delivered unto the saints," and to refuse or to fail to be urgent in season and out of season, is to be guilty of refusing or failing to teach it all.

For whosever shall keep the whole law, and yet stumble in one point, he is become guilty of all.

We can have but one purpose, which is threefold-"but one thing"-if we would please and honor God: (1) to learn the will of God; (2) to practice it; (3) to teach it to others. Back of this as the mainspring must be the love of the truth and the will to do God's will. If we do not will to do God's will, we will never learn and obey the truth and cannot teach it to others. We are warned to take heed how we build on the one foundation, "which is Christ Jesus." (1 Cor. 3: 10-15.) The amount of harm we do in teaching error is commensurate with our ability and influence. We may apparently gain our contention before men and still be in error and do untold harm. We must not be so anxious to sustain our theory and to carry our point as to learn and teach the truth and to lose our contention and point if in error. We are commanded to study the word of God, to teach and preach it, and to rightly apply it. Paul determined not to know anything but Christ crucified. There can be no harm, but good only, in studying logic, history, rhetoric, the languages, etc., when all this is made only a means of teaching the word of God-the gospel of Christ. Jesus and Paul were truly logical; but the Pharisees and the Sadducees and Satan used logic and were too logical at times to answer, one way or the other, questions Jesus put to them. When God states a fact or makes a declaration, it is foolish then to waste time in a long course of reasoning to prove that he is correct. One declaration of God to a man of faith is worth more than cart loads of logic. Concerning the resurrection Paul declares: "And this we say unto you by the word of the Lord." (1 Thess. 4: 15.) God says this. and what he says is sufficient.

Jesus gave the explanation of the parable of the tares in Matt. 13: 36-43: "The Son of man" is the sower of "the good seed;" "the field is the world," not the church; "the good seed . . . are the sons of the kingdom;" "the tares are the sons of the evil one," and "the enemy that sowed them is the devil;" "the harvest is the end of the world;" "the reapers are angels;" "as the tares are gathered up and burned, so shall it be at the end of the world;" "the Son of man shall send forth his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that cause stumbling, and them that do iniquity, and shall cast them into the furnace of fire," and "there shall be the weeping and gnashing of teeth;" "then shall the righteous shine forth in the kingdom of their Father."

No man should presume to change or to improve upon Jesus' explanation. Nothing should be put into this explanation which Jesus does not put in.

See what Brother Isenberg says about sleep. In verse 25, the expression, "while men slept," means nothing more than that in the night while everybody was asleep the enemy sowed tares in this field. Jesus gave no spiritual significance to this. Some try to make out of the lad who had the five barley loaves and two fishes, when Jesus fed the five thousand, some sort of aid society to the church. Let us be satisfied with what Jesus says.

My lesson explained that "the Son of man," the great Teacher, with all "authority in heaven and on earth," is the Sower of "the good seed." He does this sowing in all the world-the field-through the church, or, as in this parable, "the kingdom of heaven," as the great commission shows. The church "is the pillar and ground of the truth." (1 Tim, 3: 15.) I explained, too, how "the sons of the kingdom" in this parable are "the good seed," and how in the parable of the sower the word of God is the seed. (See Matt. 13: 19; Mark 4: 14; Luke 8: 11.) "The sons of the kingdom" are the fruit of the word of God as wheat is the product of seed wheat and as the tares sprang from the seed which produces tares. If I did not then explain this and cannot now do so, I believe just what Jesus says and entirely all he says about it. I shall not try to help him out of a seeming difficulty or to put into the parable something he never said.

Brother Isenberg says some unfortunate and strange things about the Old Testament Scriptures. It is most necessary to keep before both the church and the world that which the Bible so clearly teaches concerning the old covenant and the new covenant, and the great difference between the two, and all connected with these subjects: the blood of animal sacrifices and the blood of Christ, and the need of both; how people reach the blood of Christ; when people become Christians, and how, and when only they could become Christians; the fulfillment of the law and the prophets and the psalms in Christ; that without Christ crucified all promises and prophecies and types would prove failures and falsehood and there could be no gospel; but it is a great mistake to say "there was no life in the Old Testament Scriptures," and in making similar declarations. Such statements, when believed, do harm. God had children before Christ came and was crucified. (Isa. 1: 2; Jer. 3: 14, 22.) These children were to call him "Father." (Jer. 3: 4, 19.) There were saints under the law. (Ps. 31: 23; 37: 28; 50: 5; 116: 15.) Israel was his vineyard; his sheep, and he was their shepherd. Read Heb. 11. It tells of what men did by faith, from the righteous Abel to the last servant of Jehovah, and the word of God in the Old Testament produced faith. It had quickening power. (See Ps. 119: 25, 37, 156, 159.) The word of God was light then. (Ps. 119; 105.) Read Ps. 19; 7-11. Isa. 55; 10, 11 declares that God's word should not return unto him void, but should accomplish that whereunto he sent it. Jesus sums it up thus: "For if ye had believed Moses, ye would have believed me; for he wrote of me. But if ye believe not his writings, how shall ye believe my words?" (John 5: 46, 47.) See what the Old Testament Scriptures are good for "through faith which is in Christ." (2 Tim. 3: 16, 17.) The word of God is none the less his word because in the Old Testament. In the Old Testament it was as powerful to accomplish that which God sent it to accomplish as it is in the New Testament to accomplish that which he says there it will accomplish. Jesus says: "Abraham rejoiced to see my day; and he saw it, and was glad." (John 8: 56.) By faith Abraham looked for "the city which hath the foundations, whose builder and maker is God." Moses did wonderful things by faith; "for he looked unto the recompense of the reward," "as seeing him who is invisible."

Brother Isenberg says "the seed of the kingdom" "in the beginning" "was the Word, which was Christ." "But this word which is the seed of the kingdom was in its germ state." The seed itself contains the germ-the life. That which God teaches in the Old Testament and that which he teaches in the New Testament is equally the word of God, and not "the Word," which was God and through whom all things were created. See what the Old Testament says about the word of God and its power, Think of Christ, "the Word," who "was God," and was in the beginning with God, being then "in the germ state!" When "the Word," although in the form of God," became flesh and dwelt among us, he became "a little lower than the angels," and "emptied himself, taking the form of a servant, being made in the likeness of men; and being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, becoming obedient even unto death, yea, the death of the cross." (Phil. 2: 6-8.)

To such conclusions one's theories and logic lead. No theory or course of reasoning can be true which depreciates the Old Testament Scriptures.

"Crouching by herself in a corner, a little seven-year-old girl was cracking something between two stones," says Melville Chater in an article, "The Land of Stalking Death," in the National Geographic Magazine (November, 1919), describing conditions in Armenia. "I looked closer and found the child was eating the marrow from a bone."

"'Where did she get it?' I asked the interpreter who accompanied me,

"'Yonder in the graveyard,' he replied, after questioning the girl,"

This child, according to Mr. Chater, was subsisting solely on a small dole of rice furnished daily by the Near East Relief representatives in her native city, Igdir. There was not sufficient food in the town to even give one meal a day to all of the children, and shortly after they had received this bare pittance of food all were searching for any bit on which they might chew to appease their hunger. They picked up beetles, straws, and one a piece of a horse's hoof.

"Up goes a childish wail," says Mr. Chater, "which leads us to one of those dark cellars, the scene of an hourly common tragedy. Here on the stones, with two babies at her one side and a screaming ten-year-old at her other, lies a stark, staring-eyed woman, dead among those remnants of the household which she strove to preserve. In time the girl will pick up one child, lead the other, and go forth into the streets to beg. Their best possible future is that they may be found and passed through starvation's clearing house to some orphanage."

In sending contributions, be sure and state whether they are intended for the Home Orphans' Fund, the Armenian and Syrian Fund, or the Poland Fund. I should be glad if more of the contributions were designated for use in providing for orphans in this country, since there are constant appeals from destitute families close to us. The Dance of Death.

The thoughtful observer, even though he be by nature and culture an optimist, cannot fail to note, with a heavy heart, evidences of the lowering of moral standards and ideals of the American people along social lines. One of the many evidences is the dance mania that is sweeping the country. Then, again, the character of the dances now in vogue even in the remotest districts, because of the improper dressing and attitudes, condoned by a slumbering and indifferent public, are the moral and spiritual graveyards of many of the dance devotees. Dissipations of social life are cutting a very wide swath with the sickle of death and hundreds and thousands are going down under these influences. The whirlpool of social dissipation is drawing down some of the brightest crafts that ever sailed the sea of life. We deplore the state of society that tolerates the present-day amusements, that have gradually undermined the sensitive feelings of a large element of the public until to-day actions are tolerated and immoralities practiced at social functions which, until recently, would have subjected the participant to instant criticism and ostracism. The writer for years has been studying this question of social life in its influence in large and small cities of many lands. In a city in Kentucky dances are held at times with the lights turned out. In a recent Sunday-school convention a resolution was offered condemning the dance, but was withdrawn because of opposition. As long as the church sanctions this state of affairs by indifference we will continue to read of girls disappearing from home and of tragedies multiplying in the underworld, while those of position and wealth will continue to corrupt higher levels of society. This hell-born monster has infused a kind of social Bolshevism into young adventurers in life, who will dare any peril.-Joseph D. Waters, in Christian Evangelist.

Special Numbers for 1920.

Actuated by a desire to do the greatest amount of good possible and encouraged by expressions of encouragement from hundreds of our readers, the publishers of the Gospel Advocate are planning to issue some unusually fine special numbers during the current year. Heretofore the special numbers have engaged the earnest study and evoked the best thought of editors and contributors. The forthcoming numbers will be no exception. In fact, we wish to improve them in every way possible. Readers may look for the "Spiritual" Number to appear soon. Ours is a spiritual service. We are taught to worship God "in spirit and in truth;" to be "fervent in spirit, serving the Lord." When we pray, we are to "pray with the spirit and with the understanding." The same rule applies to singing. It shall be our purpose to emphasize the true spiritualism of the New Testament, that it may prove a counteraction to a great wave of another kind of "spiritualism" that is now sweeping the country.

Every reader should have a part in the dissemination of these numbers. They always create a good impression when placed in the hands of new readers. Send us your order for a new subscription to-day. Help us to make a success of the special numbers by extending their circulation.

Farmer-Preachers.

RY H. W. JONES.

Two of our brethren have been writing in the Gospel Advocate as if farmer-preachers, merchant-preachers, school-teacher-preachers, etc., engage in their respective trades, occupations, or work simply "to increase their bank account, pay for a home, or buy oil stock or make some other investment for splendid returns," overlooking the fact that there is such thing as working with our hands the thing that is good, that we may have whereof to provide for our own, specially our own household (see 1 Tim. 5: 8). and "to give to him that hath need" (Eph. 4; 28). They go on to say: "These preachers whose secular business secures them a living are glad to do all the preaching they can do without interfering with their regular business; . . . they give no time to preaching that can be otherwise used. Do you get the point? [Yes, I "get the point" that you misrepresent us .- H. W. J.] The time they use is what we usually term 'spare time.' Their preaching in no sense interferes with their secular business. farm, teach school, etc., and go out on Lord's days after crops are 'laid by' and do all the preaching they can when they have nothing else to do, and take what brethren see fit to give them and place it in bank or use it along with the rest of their money."

Now, when brethren resort to such extremes as the foregoing to make a point, they "have a bad case" indeed. I know of no farmer-preacher, etc., that the above picture looks like. Do you, gentle reader? They write just as if farmer-preachers, carpenterpreachers, school-teacher-preachers, etc., are all in a "get-rich-quick" business and have such an "easy-going time" of it that they, at times, just "have nothing else to do," and so use their "spare time" to preach as a "side line" to "increase their bank account," etc. Such expressions show their ignorance of the other fellow's situation, or a rather too vivid imagination, or something wrong. Exceptional cases won't go; the cases in hand are the ones that are up. The truth is, farmers and others who work at useful employment are very busy men. They (at least I) have no "spare time" when they have "nothing else to do." Every meeting we hold is at a sacrifice, from a financial point of view. Always something to do on the farm, in the store or shop, etc. The frost got my little crop of tobacco a few years ago because I was away from home preaching. Other losses every time we leave, but we do not complain. I quit raising "the weed" (which is the staple

For a preacher to engage in useful work part of the time is not to "entangle himself in the affairs of this life" (2 Tim. 2); but if he does not work some, he is liable to get "entangled" in debts, etc. And his working some in no wise contradicts 1 Cor. 9: 1-14. Sure, they "should live of the gospel" while they "proclaim the gospel," whether they do or not. But what about the fellow who preaches on Sundays to strong churches for "so much per" and does nothing the rest of the week? Is he to "live of the gospel" for six days that proclaims the gospel only one day? Paul and others worked with their hands part of the time and preached in new places part of the time, and that's exactly the "type" of preachers we need to-day. May their tribe increase till thousands of workers "preach the word." Note this, brethren: Farming is a good, healthy way to make a living, but not a fortune. So we farm for the same reason Paul made tents-viz., to make a living so we can preach the gospel to the poor and "where it had not been preached." Three cheers for Brother Morrow's good article and Brother Lamar's true ' remarks!"

Why a Dearth of Preachers?

BY W. A. SISCO.

From what has been written on this subject already, it would seem that it must be completely exhausted; but, to my mind, a few vital points are still on the surface.

So many professed Christians whose hearts are not in the work seem to me to be the shortest and clearest answer to this question. There is so much cold-hearted service. The religion of Christ and the salvation of souls have never gone deep into their hearts. We are required to love Christ more than any earthly being or thing, even more than we love father, mother, wife or children, land or houses. (Matt. 10: 37, 38: Luke 14: 25-33.) The preacher who loves Christ to this extent will answer every call he can for mission work. He will imitate Paul, laboring with his own hands to supply his lack of support. I feel sure that in many places, notwithstanding a preacher is well supported, it would be better to labor with his own hands for an example to others and to convince the world that he does not feel himself too good to work. Several years ago a brother said to me: "I would love to see you between the plow handles." I replied: "I would feel much more natural there than in the pulpit." I have known preachers to drum for places to preach in order to get a support for their family, thereby making merchandise of the gospel.

I love mission work and laboring with my own hands for support, and have spent most of my life in that kind of work. I could not if I would, and would not if I could, give a full detail of my work; but a few examples will suffice.

I have conducted protracted meetings and preached monthly at a number of places without any support. I remember one meeting where I was out twelve days and a dollar and twenty cents in money, and I received twenty-five cents in money and a pair of homemade yarn socks. I remember preaching at another place five years in succession with no remuneration; but the fifth meeting resulted in twenty additions, and then the work began to be self-supporting.

When I began preaching in this house, it was just a large frame with weatherboarding and no ceiling. The first night we had only one small brass lamp for a light; and when I closed, several persons came and shook hands with me that I never knew were in the house. When I left that place, the house was ceiled, very well lighted. and a small congregation.

I do not mean to criticize or censure those who are giving all their time to the gospel, for I am sure many of our strongest preachers are engaged in that kind of work. But I prefer manual labor for health, support, and example. I believe, however, in all Christians living a busy life. I believe that preachers as a class are making a much greater sacrifice to preach the gospel than other Christians. In the country it usually falls on him to call the preacher for a meeting, meet him at the train, take him back, and sometimes give him a greater support than all the other members; but the preacher who does this realizes that he derives much more good out of the meeting than any one else.

In my feeble efforts, I have succeeded in getting a few houses built for worship, but I do not remember ever making an appeal through the paper for help to build a house or hold a meeting. I am not very favorably impressed with so many calls to do a work that we can do ourselves. I sometimes think some brethren would call for help to build a corn crib, smokehouse, or ash hopper, were they not just ashamed to do so.

There is an old proverb which says, "Plenty of help makes light work;" but light work is not the thing that Christians need. Light work prevents a heart service, and we know that God will accept no other kind. So many brethren want to bear all their expenses and render all their service without feeling the effect of it. Such a practice keeps God out of the work, because it keeps the heart out.

Some are trying to spend the least money and render the least service possible, because their hearts are not in the work. I am reminded just here of the old lady who said: "I thank God for free salvation. I have been in the church twenty-five years, and it just cost me twenty-five cents." If all Christians would take Christianity to heart as many did the world war, there would be no more dearth of preachers. Think of the many brethren who invested hundreds and thousands of dollars in stamps and bonds! Then think again, for what purpose were these investments made? Was this a spiritual affair or a carnal affair? If the war had not come up, all the preaching possible could not have persuaded these brethren that they could spare that much money to save souls. But just here I may be met with the objection that this money will be refunded with interest, while money given in support of the gospel will not. This I grant freely, and will say, first, that money that I can live without twenty-five years or longer, I can live without a lifetime; and if we will use our money this freely in serving the Lord and render such other service as he requires, we will receive "an inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away." I am not resorting to this by way of criticism, but only to show the great human weakness or inconsistency in manhow much easier it is to reach his heart in carnal things than in spiritual things, and how much deeper the carnal hand goes into his pocketbook than the spiritual hand. If all Christians would let the love of Christ and the salvation of souls sink deep into their hearts, no one would starve for the "bread of life." Now let me ask, how many are willing to make as great sacrifice to save souls as they have made to save the body or flesh?

You Do More Work,

You are more ambitious and you get more enjoyment out of everything when your blood is in good condition. Impurities in the blood have a very depressing effect on the system, causing weakness, laziness, nervousness and sickness. GROVE'S TASTELESS Chill TONIC restores Energy and Vitality by Purifying and Enriching the Blood. When you feel its strengthening, invigorating effect, see how it brings color to the cheeks and how it improves the appetite, you will then appreciate its true tonic value.

GROVE'S TASTELESS CHIII TONIC is not a patent medicine, it is simply IRON and QUININE suspended in Syrup. So pleasant even children like it. The blood needs Quinine to Purify it and IRON to Enrich it. These reliable tonic prop-erties never fail to drive out impurities in the blood.

The Strength-Creating Power of GROVE'S TASTELESS Chill TONIC has made it the favorite tonic in thousands of homes. More than thirty-five years ago, folks would ride a long distance to get GROVE'S TASTELESS Chill TONIC when a member of their family had Malaria or needed a body-building, strength-giving tonic. The formula is just the same to-day, and you can get it from any drug store. 60c per bottle.

What Makes a Man.

Man is not fully man apart from God. It is the sense of God in the personal life that makes any man an effective man at all. Let him feel that he is in league with Jehovah, working out his work on earth, fighting under his leadership, warring against his foes, moving with and advancing the purpose of the Eternal, and he is invincible. He wins though he falls, for his battles are the battles of God, who never fails; and he rises to triumph, even though he dies; but let him lose that, and all is lost. The sense of his guilty departure from God haunts him, fills him with timidity, and makes him the prey of the first captors that come his way. He is no longer master of himself; for the girdle that binds up the man's powers into unity is the conviction that he is a God-called, God-sent, and God-accepted spirit, a man with a divine mission to his fellows, with a truth he must utter, a work he must do, a cause he must make victorious, a goal he must reach; but that gone, that girdle cut, he is limp and helpless. Languor is in his heart, weakness is in his word, weariness is on his brow. He cannot help anybody.-J. Clifford.

Reliable Information

All American women know of the great success of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound in restoring to health women who suffered from ailments peculiar to their sex, yet there are some who are skeptical and do not realize that all that is claimed for it is absolutely true-if they did, our laboratory would not be half large enough to supply the demand, though today it is the largest in the country used for the manufacture of one particular medicine.

The Facts contained in the following two letters should prove of benefit to many women:

Buffalo, N. Y.—"I suffered with organic inflammation and displacement. When lifting I had such pain and bearing down that I was not able to stand up, and it hurt me to walk or go up or down stairs. I was going to a doctor without any results and he said the safest thing would be to have an operation. I met a lady who told me she had three operations and was not well until she took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

I felt reliefafter taking two bottles of Vegetable Compound and I kept on with it until I was cured. I always use Lydia E. Pinkham's Liver Pills and they are fine. Everything used to turn sour on my stomach and the Liver Pills refleved that."—Mrs. A. Rocers, 193 Fargo Avenue, Buffalo, N. Y.

my soul when I behold their zeal and love for the cause of Christ. And we have just as good things that we can, in all honesty, say of the congregations at South Pryor and East Point.

2. Please to pay special attention to what our good brother says about his knowing that churches (generally speaking) do not give as they should. What preacher is it that does not know this, if he is half awake to duty's demands? It would be a fine thing for each congregation to take an inventory of its financial strength -that is, get each member to turn in a statement as to his or her income and property holdings, and compare the aggregate with the regular collections on Lord's day. There are congregations that are considered among our best that would discover that they are not giving one per cent of what the Lord has prospered them. This one per cent of many congregations will pay a preacher for all his time and meet other incidental expenses; hence they are satisfied. Too many congregations never think of doing more than this. Why not give as you are commanded-namely, as the Lord has prospered you - and use this amount in spreading the cause of Christ? Some churches that are supporting one preacher would find that they could support six instead of just one. Now, if some congregation wants to call this in question, all I ask is that I be allowed to look fully into the earnings of each member and see. We have members here who do not own their homes and whose salary is such that the best they can do is to keep even with the world, who have no bank account, that give three dollars each Lord's day because their salary demands that they do this While I think of this, I remember attending services, several years ago, at a rich church in Tennessee, and one man in that church who was worth thousands of dollars and had a large weekly income made it a rule to give one dollar each Lord's day, and they thought he was a most liberal giver. If the members of the church would look into this question as they should, many who give only one dollar a Lord's day would become doubtful about their eternal salvation because they are not giving ten dollars each Lord's day.

How true are the words of our Abundant Health is assured when there is good blood in the veins. Hood's Sarsaparilla is the medicine to make good blood. Begin taking it now. It is just what the system needs at this time and will do you great good. Sharpens the appetite, steadies brother: "If we could receive a duty like giving and act upon it as a pleasant privilege, the cause of Christ would sweep the earth!" Just here let us remember the fact that Paul, in teaching the Corinthian church to give, called their attention to the spirit of our Savior in the following words: "For ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that, though he was rich, yet for your sakes he became poor, that ye through his poverty might become rich." (2 Cor. 8: 9.) If we would only think of how much Christ has loved us and done for us and is willing to do for us, then we would be more willing to give. I am quite sure that our giving, to a large degree, is governed by our appreciation of God's love and goodness to us through his Son.

Now, will not the elders of all the congregations see to it that the churches over which they have been placed as overseers give as they should? The best way to get results is for these elders themselves to become brimful and running over with the giving spirit. Let the preachers do the same.

After our record is revised, I will have no objections to giving any and all a correct statement as to our numbers, and, if you want it, an inventory of our income. This latter might embarrass a few of our members who are not giving as they should; but it would be better to have them embarrassed now than at the judgment, when they will have no chance to repent and amend their ways.

Book Review.

I have carefully perused a new book, "The Coming of the Lord-Will It Be Premillennial?" by James H. Snowden. I consider it a complete refutation of premillenariaism. I consider it one of the strongest arguments against that false theory that I have seen. The strong argument he makes on the great commission is unanswerable. One good thing, the whole work breathes a spirit of fairness toward those whose doctrine he is combating. While I may not agree with every idea advanced in the book, yet, as a whole, it is a great work and every preacher should read it. It may be had of the Macmillan Company, 66 Fifth Avenue, New York City. Price, H. W. Jones. $1.75.

The Scarcity of Preachers.

BY G. F. MILLS.

In reading the articles on "The Dearth of Preachers," by different writers in the Gospel Advocate, I am constrained to compare the former days with these. When I was a boy, it was common for young people to walk three or four miles to church, day and night. People with more conveniences went horseback or muleback. I remember about the bestfixed farmer in our neighborhood. He had three or four grown girls, and they went to church muleback on sidesaddle. Time went on, the old farmer got in better shape, and then he bought an open-top buggy, and for some time it was the only one that was seen at church. In those days the preacher lived in the country on his farm, worked through the week and preached on Sunday. Men and women were earnest worshipers; whether their faith was right or not. they were not hypocrites.

I left the hills of Buncombe, in North Mississippi, twenty-five years ago and came to Texas to the famous black-land belt. I found it a rich, prosperous country, more style and wealth than I had left in Mississippi. Buggies were more plentiful. The people did not want to go to church without a new buggy and a fine horse to pull it. The richer a people get, the less time they have to give to religion or the study of the Bible; to think of their duty to themselves. their fellow man, or to the God who made them and permits them to live. Give a man plenty of money and he doesn't need many friends. The inventive genius of man is almost unlimited. With his power to make conveniences and luxuries, the people will not turn to religion. I am not looking for the millennium yet. The people want automobiles to go to church in now.

But what about the dearth of preachers? There are several reasonsmainly, though, the love of money. I have in mind two of our preachers, and they were fine, too. They went into the oil business. One of them is gone to the bad-very bad; the other has managed his oil business in a way to beat his stockholders out of their money. I fear that they are going to a country where they will not need coal oil. There is plenty of infidelity among the laity. The man CLEARS THE THROAT of phlegm and mucus, stops that tickling, opens the air passages for easier breathing and coats the raw, inflamed surfaces with a heeling, soothing medicine.

Grateful Father Tells What It Did W. E. Curry. 130 Up 6th St., Evansyille, Ind., writes: "I have a little girl 6 years who has a good deal of trouble with croup. I have used Foley's Honey and Tar Compound, giving it to her according to directions, and obtaining instant relief for her. My wif and I use it whonever bothered with a bad cold of cough, and I will say that it is the best cemedy for a bad cold, cough, throat trouble or croup that I ever saw."

Parents who use Foley's Hone and Tar know it is safe and no harm will come even if an overdose should be given by accident. It tastes good and children like it. It won't upset the delicate stomachs of young children, delicate persons or elderly people.

SALTS IF BACKACHY AND KIDNEYS HURT

Stop Eating Meat for a While if Your Bladder is Troubling You

When you wake up with backache and dull misery in the kidney region, it generally means you have been eating too much meat, says a well-known authority. Meat forms uric acid, authority. Meat forms uric acid, which overworks the kidneys in their effort to filter it from the blood, and they become sort of paralyzed and loggy. When your kidneys get slug-gish and clog, you must relieve them —like you relieve your bowels—re-moving all the body's urinous waste, else you have backache, sick headache, dizzy spells; your stomach sours, tongue is coated, and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine is cloudy, full of sediment, channels often get sore, water scalds, and you are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night.

Either consult a good, reliable physician at once or get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days, and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralize acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is a life saver for regular

or woman that will put up a few hours of worldly pleasure against an eternity of bliss does not believe the Bible; he is an unbeliever and disbeliever, and a disbeliever is an infidel.

Well, what about the preachers? Well, I will leave that mainly for them to answer. But I have in mind one of our preachers who is a younglike, strong, and hearty man, raised on the farm, who could pick five hundred pounds of cotton per day. If that brother is working any, we do not know it. That grand old soldier of the cross, Paul, worked, and thought it not dishonorable. Some of our preachers are so situated that they cannot put in any of their time at secular work; but there may be some who could arrange to put in some of their time at tentmaking or some other honorable work. The most of our preachers live in town (and nearly everybody else wants to, as to that matter), and, in the lingo of the "drummer," want to make their appointments in an automobile or a Pullman, and their railroad fare eats up about half of their pay; but we must not get dismayed nor discouraged. I venture the prediction that young men now living, if they live as long as I have lived, will see some of our preachers making their apppointments In aëroplanes. They will only visit the county towns and larger cities. They may be nearer heaven in altitude, but it will not make angels of them. It has been my notion that the world would pay us what we are worth. Brother Larimore has been preaching a long time-is preaching yet. I hope he is well paid, for he is worthy of his hire. We have many men that ought to be better pald than they are, but, on account of the love of money, they fail to get the support that they should have.

I verily believe that there is more wickedness in the world now than at any time since the flood. Wickedness has been in the world a long time. It was here when the Savior was here. Hear him: "Strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it." And: "Wide is the gate, and broad is the way, that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat."

The decadence of Christianity can be attributed to several causes, as said before; but the leading causes are the love of money and wealth, and disbelief, or infidelity. There are differing degrees of infidelity. The church member that will pray for the kingdom of God to grow and expand until its influence covers the earth as the waters cover the channels of the seas and then drop a nickel in the contribution box is close to the stingy kind of infidelity.

Brethren and sisters all, I have written these thoughts with malice toward none, but love to all. It is said that an honest confession is good for the soul and that a doctor should be conscientious enough to take his own medicine; therefore, I take this castigation to myself. I think that I have given the facts, if they are a little plainly put. But we must not give up nor scuttle the ship; the sun still shines behind the clouds, and, best of all, our God and Father reigneth. Let us rededicate ourselves to the service of God and humanity, and in the days that are before us let us live right.

CHURCH NEWS

Florida.

Esto, March 16.-I am now in a good meeting at this place. I aim to go from here to Hoomesville, in Es-cambia County, Ala, twenty miles east of Brewton. I am still in the evan-gelistic field, giving my time to the work wherever brethren are willing to But some seem to be asleep as to their duty, while their children and their neighbors' children are dying in their sins. Brethren, we do not know how short a time we have to work to save some poor soul from death; so let us work together in love one toward another, not in strife and envy, hating one another. Let us not try to hinder the preaching of the word. Let us have the same care one for another, so the world will know that we are disciples of Christ. Brethren, let us talk for Jesus more, pray more, and labor more, lest we fall into temptation.-G. W. Jarrett.

Decherd, March 16 .- I was at Rans, in Bedford County, on the first Lord's day in March, and preached to the little band of disciples there. I was at Huntsville, Ala., four days, beginning on Tuesday night after the first Lord's day in March. I preached in West Huntsville, at the Merrimack Mills, at the Dallas Mills, and up in Huntsville. This is the home of Brother E. Gaston Collins, who led the song service each night. Any one securing him to sing or to preach will make no mistake. I preached at Tracy City last Lord's day, morning and night. This finished my work there for the present, as I will have to begin my protracted-meeting work soon. The Tracy City brethren have stood by me well. They are doing a good work. They certainly care for a preacher when he is with them. I was at Coalmont on Monday night.—R. E. L. Taylor.

Possibly you have imagined that you could never get your own consent to write a testimonial letter; but if you have ever experienced the excruciating pains of rheumatism, you can at least appreciate the feelings of those who have been relieved of this terrible disease by drinking the Mineral Water from the justly celebrated Shivar Spring. This water overcomes many diseases, including indigestion, gout, uric-acid poisoning, and liver and kidney diseases; but no patrons of the Spring are more enthusiastic in their praise of the water than those who have been relleved of their rheuma-

Dr. Crosby, a South Carolina physician, writes: "I have tested your Spring Water in several cases of rheumatism, chronic indigestion, kidney and bladder troubles, and in nervous and sick headaches, and find that it has acted nicely in each case, and I believe that, if used continuously for a reasonable time, it will give permanent relief. It will purify the blood, relieve debility, stimulate the action of the liver, kidneys, and bladder, adding them in throwing off all poisoneus matter."

Dr. Avant, of Savannah, writes: "I suffered for years with a most aggravating form of stomach disorder, and consulted a number of our best local physicians; went to Baltimore and consulted specialists there; and still I was not benefited. I had about despaired of living, when I began using Shivar Spring Water, and in a short time was entirely relieved."

Mr. Rhodes, of Virginfa, writes: "Please send me ten gallons of Shivar Spring Water quickly. I want it for rheumatism I know of several who were relieved of rheumatism with this water."

Editor Cunningham writes: "The water has done me more good than any medicine I have ever taken for rheumatism. I am smilely free from path."

Mr. McClam, of South Carolina, writes: "Mrs. Carter, of Virginia, writes: "Mrs. Carter has had enlarged joints upon her hands, caused by rheumatism. Shivar Spring Water removed every trace of the enlargement. The water is simply excellent."

speak the whole truth and nothing but the truth. No doubt that many of the ministers occupying the pulpits of the various churches of this wonderfully populated country are failing to declare the whole truth as it was intended to be taught by our blessed Savior and the brave apostles. Who is your best friend? Why, it is the man who in a Christlike spirit makes plain to you the error of your way and tells you just what the Bible says you must do to be saved. We notice a great deal being said on the subject of the support of the ministry. I am a member of the Highland congregation, in Jackson. We pay several hundred dollars every year for preaching and contribute often to the building of churches in other sections of country. We need a greater cooperative work upon the part of both members and ministers, and more inclination upon the part of the ministry to go into destitute sections to sow the seed of the gospel or the spreading of the gospel instead of preaching so much to enlightened congregations. How can congregations who have the very best preaching year in and year out make so little effort to aid in enlightening the thickly populated neighborhoods just a few miles away in every direction, who may have never heard the gospel as our people preach We need a great reformation. There is a wrong somewhere. There is something more for us to do than simply go to church on the first day of the week, hear a fine sermon, partake of the emblems, put your nickel in the contribution basket, go home, and not think of your Christian duties again until the next Lord's day. believe that every congregation should have a preacher, and the congregation and the preacher should work together in the very greatest harmony. Help him to secure places suitable to preach, go with him to help him to preach, see that he fares just as sumptuously as you do and that he owns a home as well as you. If these plans were carried out, then we would see more clearly the way of the great Book—"that they which preach the gospel should live of the gospel."-John T. Hall.

Childress, March 15.-We had two good services here yesterday. One man who had been a leading Methodist made the good confession and was baptized last night.—W. E. Morgan.

McKinney, March 18 .- I filled my regular appointment at Salem yesterday and last night, with an appreciative audience at each service. My time is not yet all taken for protracted meetings, and I would like to hear from congregations that have not yet arranged for their meetings. Address me at Box 272, McKinney, Texas. —A. N. Kennedy.

Marshall, March 15.-We had a fine service at the City Hall yesterday. We had twenty members present, two visiting members from the Hallsville congregation, and twenty-one children. Collection, fifteen dollars and twentythree cents. Seven members expressed a willingness to make a personal note for four thousand dollars to help finance the church building. -C. W. LaGrone.

Fort Worth, March 7 .- I visited the faithful over at the Southside-Central church of Christ to-day. When the preaching hour arrived, Brother Straiton requested me to preach, as he had been contributing his services to the congregation that they might continue to support Brother Tice Elkins while It was rather unexpected, but, realizing the situation, I consented. Brother W. K. Rose waited on the Lord's table, after which Brother Elkins made a short talk in which he commended the church for their good work in his absence. He also thanked them heartily for their material support while unable to carry on his work. The congregation at Southside-Central is a good one, their work is and their spirit fine. commendable They spoke in the highest terms of Brother Elkins and his patient devotion to the work of the Master .- J. OBITUARIES

Edwards.

Friends and neighbors of C. A. Edwards are very much grieved over his death, which occurred at his home on March 2, 1920. Brother Edwards was a consistent member of the church of Christ at Vista. He bore his suffering with patience and appreciated every little act of kindness his many friends bestowed upon him. He was ready and willing to take his departure, only waiting for the summons from the other shore. Funeral services were conducted by Brother J. F. Sanders, at his home. He was laid to rest in the family burying ground. Brother Edwards lacked only seven days living out his threescore years and ten. He leaves a wife and a host of friends to mourn his death.

Vandiver.

Mrs. Rosa Brown Vandiver, of Broadview, Tenn., was born on No-vember 19, 1883; married C. V. Vandiver on April 28, 1901; and died on February 18, 1920. She identified herself with the church of Christ in early girlhood and lived in the faith until her death. She is survived by her fa-ther and mother, two brothers, her husband, and six children. One little girl preceded her nine years. One par-ticularly sad feature of this death was that every member of the family had been sick with influenza and none of the children could attend their mothburial. They have recovered the funeral services were conhave recovered ducted by Brother Will Morton, after which her body was placed in the Gibsonville Cemetery. Thus another happy home has seen its greatest sor-May the Heavenly Father comfort them in their sorrow.

A FRIEND.

Minor.

Bettie May Fuston Minor, daughter of Brother and Sister I. M. Fuston, of Waxahachie, Texas, a pioneer Christian family of Ellis County, was born on August 22, 1888, in Waxahachie. She entered and completed her publicschool education in the Waxahachie schools, graduating in May, 1905. She was engaged as teacher for three years prior to her marriage. Sister Minor obeyed the gospel under the obeyed the gospel under the minor obeyen the gospel under the preaching of Brother George W Farmer in August, 1901, and always loved the church. On Christmas Day, 1910, she was married to Brother M. L. Minor, at her mother's home in Waxahachie, by Brother Isaac E. Tackett, her brother-in-law. To this union two children were born—Ruth Hazel, born on March 6, 1914, who survives, and Olive Geneva, the infant daughter, born on February 6, 1920, who lived only two days, being buried with its mother in the same casket. Sister Minor leaves her devoted husband, Brother Luther Minor; her mother; one brother, Walter Fuston, of Dallas, Texas; two sisters, Sister Isaac E. Tackett, of Weatherford, Texas, and Sister Guillie Fuston, with the mother in the family home in Waxabachie. The writer of this tried to speak words of comfort to the bereaved ones, after which her body, together with the little daughter of two days, was laid to rest in the Pleasant Valley Cemetery, six miles north of Midlothian, Texas, HOBACE W. BUSBY.

Stephens.

Sister Maggie Stephens was born on April 28, 1868, and departed this life on January 23, 1920. Of her father's family, she is survived by her father, one brother, and three sisters, all of whom are in Texas. Her husband and five daughters also are left to mourn her loss. She was sick about five weeks during her last illness before the end finally came. Her loved ones always remained near her, hoping, yet almost afraid to hope, that sweet life might be spared. that loving hearts could devise and tender hands perform was done to allay her suffering and restore her strength, but all was of no avail. The voice of the Master had called her and she could not but obey. Nor did she seek to question his providence in calling her, but faced death calmiy and peacefully, and frequently re-marked: "I am ready to go." Although she was cut off before she had lived out her "threescore years and ten," her life was more fruitful of good works than are the lives of many who are much older than she. She was a faithful worker in the church, and her loss will be deeply felt in her home congregation at Woodbury, Tenn. Any preacher of the gospel might always find a welcome in her home. Of a quiet, rather timid na-ture, she was, nevertheless, ready at all times to do, not merely what might be termed "her part," but all that she could do for the glory of God and the service of humanity. As a result of her noble work, together with that of her falthful husband, the five daughters-four of whom are married are all active and loyal workers in the church of Christ. Verily, she hath wrought a good work.

What We Need.

It has been often said that we can only help men by putting ourselves in their place. Want of tenderness almost certainly involves want of tact, and want of tact renders us ineffective in reproof and in persuasion. Along with sympathy, there must be a spirit which is profoundly convinced of the reality of the divine rule. No man is or can be a prophet to whom the kingdom of God is not the most real thing in the universe. Repentance must be deep and natural. It must be the hatred of the moral evil that hinders them. It must be the awakening of the spirit to the gulf which small and unobserved sins may make between them and God. The vaingloious spirit which so often follows in the wake of earnest and victory-seeking desires robs away the protections which humility affords. What is needed is repentance for the whole spiritual tone-repentance which implies a recognition of the claims of God upon our whole spirit; repentance for the deviations from true and inward righteousness; repentance for the dullness and downwardness of our spirits! What, then, do we all need? We need the strong and vivid conviction of the reality of the kingdom of righteousness to make true our efforts for good. We need spirits which are united in sympathy with the Spirit of Him who sent us, for are we not fellow workers with him? Quick in tenderness, firm in righteousness, and with spirits possessed of the consciousness of God, we may attempt our work.—Selected.

Another Neglected Field.

BY FRED C. BLANCHARD.

If there is a place in America that offers a greater harvest of souls than Pemiscot County, Mo., I am unacquainted with it. In October, 1919, while on a visit to relatives, I preached twice at Hayti. The congregation asked me to return monthly, and in November two schoolgirls came forward and demanded baptism, Sickness in my family prevented my filling December and January appointments, but I was privileged to be there on the fifth Lord's day in February, and it has been decided that I am to labor for the church during this year at least. This section is not suffering especially from sectarianism, but from worldliness. The denominations are weak, and most people seem to worship mammon alone. The brethren at Hayti are few in numbers, most of them day laborers or renters, but they are planning to have a real old-fashioned singing school taught by me, and a protracted meeting which I will hold if we are not able to secure the services of a better-qualified man. How I wish that some preaching brother of Tennessee, who for most of his career has been "pastorating" for well-established congregations, would get an insight into the commission (for surely he never has) and go to Missouri, Pemiscot County preferred, and hold a mission meeting! It would do him good by enlarging his soul and his vision, and would do invaluable good for the cause we love by teaching this people the way of life. I plan to hold at least two meetings in this section during the summer. I am going into the byways and find those who are perishing for the "bread of life."

The church at Bethel, in Crockett County, Tenn., is prosperous and has a mind to work. The new meeting-house is about completed and is a credit to the congregation and community. Brother Holland, of Greenfield, is the regular preacher and I am the "irregular" one. Perfect peace and harmony prevail among all, and the brethren are contributing to several worthy causes. I think it has been decided that Brother W. S. Long, of Washington, D. C., is to hold the annual meeting in September.

The best of order prevailed, and the people at Stidham learned to love Brother Black. I moderated for Brother Black. Edifying as the Need May Be God's Treatment of Evil.

God is inevitably and irrevocably opposed to all kinds of evil. We may, however, logically and historically distinguish between two classes of evil in God's treatment of them. There are some evils which in their very nature and existence are antagonistic to the Christian religion, and the Christian religion in its very nature and existence is antagonistic to them. There is no room for compromise, for neutrality, or for postponement of action; they demand immediate abolition in so far as Christian influence goes. There are other evils with which God has borne patiently and with remarkable long-suffering through the ages; here the remedy involves mitigation, counteraction, and, finally, abolition, through the power and influence of Christian teaching. For the sake of illustration, we may mention as belonging to this class of evils polygamy, slavery, and the legalized drink evil.

We often speak of Abraham as the "father of the faithful," and the greatness of his character remains undimmed through four thousand years; but if Abraham should be living in our midst to-day and should practice certain things which he practiced in his day, he could not find a place in any good society. For Abraham was both a bigamist and a slaveholder. The apostle Peter calls Noah a preacher of righteousness," and the apostle Paul gives him an honorable place in the muster roll of faith; but if Noah should repeat his life in the twentieth century, he would likely land in jail or at least draw a heavy fine. Whatever else may be said to his credit, it is an indisputable fact that he got on an awful spree. Again, there was David, called the "friend of God," and the sweet singer of Israel; yet if David should repeat all his exploits in modern times, he would be socially ostracized. What would the general public think of him? Just imagine, if you can, General Pershing deliberately plotting to kill one of his colonels, executing his plot, and then taking the widow for his wife, and you have the answer.

Why Evil Was Permitted.

How was it that God permitted such evils to exist in past ages, and that, too, among his tried and trusted servants? We might facetiously suggest that one reason why God did not destroy all liars, adulterers, drunkards, and hypocrites was because he did not wish to depopulate the earth for a second time. But, more seriously, we might observe that if God had taken such drastic action, it would have vitiated the splendid ideal of his character which the Bible reveals. Patience, goodness, and long-suffering are cardinal virtues; his love overtops his omnipotence. What a picture do we find in the ninth chapter of Isaiah, where the prophet closes each statement of Israel's sins with the solemn asseveration that "God's hand is stretched out still!" We should bear in mind that the elimination of all evil from the earth would interfere with man's moral freedom and the self-determining power of his will. There can be no such thing as obedience where disobedience is impossible. Take the problem of evil out of the world, and man becomes a willess automaton. Again, as I have already suggested, God found a more excellent way in his treatment of certain evils. In his wisdom and goodness he determined upon a course involving patience, forbearance, and final ending through the power of his Son. Thus we are enabled to see how Abraham could be accounted a father of the faithful and Noah a preacher of righteousness in their respective ages. Just so we can understand how some of the best Christian people who ever lived were slaveholders in their time. These evils now belong to the past. God's remedy has proved to be finally effective. Polygamy and slavery in this country are almost unknown; the legalized drink evil is rapidly becoming a thing of the past. It has taken ages of patient work and counteraction, but the good results may now be plainly 0 0 0

May We Look for Abolition of War?

There is another evil which, it appears to me, belongs in the same class with polygamy, slavery, and the legalized drink evil. I refer to the great evil of war. Prior to 1914 it may have been necessary to state facts and figures in order to impress the public mind with the terrible consequences of war, but this is no longer necessary. Having received a great baptism in blood, every one understands full well its horrible meaning. Will war finally be abolished? There are many who say "no," but I firmly believe that universal peace will become a glad reality. Perhaps some of us may live to see it, perhaps it may come later, but I firmly believe that the problem will be worked out. I might in this connection cite the prophecy which speaks of beating spears into prunning hooks and swords into plowshares; but, deeper than any prophecy, the fact remains that Christ lives, and because Christ lives, war, which is so plainly antagonistic to his teaching, must be abolished. But it must come as a fruit of patience, long-suffering and education. In order for this to be accomplished, all the great nations must be Christianized to the extent that they shall see the folly of war. It will not be sufficient for one or two nations to be converted. It lies within the power of one belligerent nation to make others fight through sheer defense; but when all the great and powerful nations of the earth bonestly oppose war and legislate against it, we may see the happy solution of the problem near at hand.

Settlement of Controversy.

There are three kinds of controversies in which men engage. There is the personal controversy, where one man is opposed to another; there is the class controversy, where one class is opposed to another, such as the feeling between capital and labor; there is the international controversy, where one nation is opposed to another. Jesus Christ has prescribed teachings for the settlement of every controversy. For one Christian gentleman to deal blows upon another is now recognized to be both unnecessary and unchristian. Personal controversies are not settled in this bloody way. Why should there be a difference in the settlement of class differences or even in the settlement of international differences? One good result that we may observe from the great war is the fact that it has brought about closer and more intimate relations between the nations themselves. One nation is no longer isolated from another; there are close, direct communications and friendly overtures. Each Christian may do his part toward the abolition of war. Every time a Christian converts another to the religion of Jesus Christ, he adds that much toward the solution of the problem. When once the majorlty of citizens in a nation has adopted the Christian view, then the problem for that nation is solved. This shows that each one of us, however humble or remote in our circumstances in life, has something to do with this great international problem. Ours should not be a disinterested policy of aloofness. We cannot say, as did the old Scotch preacher: "I have nothing to do with the betterment of this world. I am only passing through it on my way to glory." In regard to the final solution of this problem, I believe the Christian's motto should be: "We can, and we will!"

"The Ancient Order of Things."

BY E. W. SMITH.

The above was a very favorite heading for many strong, clear, and convincing essays from the pen of Alexander Campbell on the New Testament way of doing things in the work and worship of the Lord. It should, by all means, be kept before the readers of religious journals as well as sounded from every pulpit; for only that order, employed by the disciples of New Testament times, under the guidance of the inspired apostles, is worthy of any consideration. It is, therefore, a matter of rejoicing to see such a course commended by the religious press. The lamented J. D. Floyd, in harmony with the "ancient order of things," started a work at Tracy City, Tenn., a history of which the Christian Standard of March 13, 1920, publishes, with a few words of favorable comment. Following is the history:

The late J. D. Floyd, of Tullahoma, Tenn., went to Tracy City some years ago, when the principal distinction of the city was a coal mine worked by the long-term State prisoners. He was supported by a little country church of Christ a few miles out from Tullahoma, which has the distinction of having never had a located minister, and yet, which from the beginning, and for more than forty years, has never failed to meet on the Lord's day for worship and to partake of the Lord's Supper. This little church has incidentally sent out some of the ablest preachers of the Restoration plea.

Brother Floyd set in order the things in the church at Tracy, and later a Brother Northcut came to Tracy City as principal of the public schools and lent his services to the church of Christ. Here is where the real history of a wonderful work begins.

Instead of demanding all his time, the church at Tracy City "fellowshiped" Brother Northcut and sent him out to the neglected fields of the mountains, as Tracy City is in the Cumberland Mountains.

On Saturdays Brother Northeut would mount a saddle horse and go to some outlying community, and there hold a service. In place after place churches of Christ were established and set in order. This continued until, on account of inroads made into denominational folds, the school board called on Brother Northeut and told him that he could not keep the school and preach. He closed his school work, but continued to preach. The church made up the difference and continued to send him out.

When a building was needed for one of these churches, the church at Tracy City would place some of their trained men on a board of trustees, secure the property for the new enterprise, and later transfer it to the local trustees of the newly established church.

After having done a most remarkable work, Brother Northeut fell a victim to the influenza. The church found another evangelist, and later employed a second evangelist, and is keeping them both at work, though the church itself has no resident minister. One of these evangelists is a young man who obeyed the gospel in March, 1919, and left his work as express messenger to preach the gospel. The other evangelist now has a record of five years' work, in which time seven hundred and sixty-two have been added to the churches and six new meetinghouses have been built.

Had Brother Floyd's labors begun and ended with that work at Tracy City, his life would have been a glorious success, but that was not a tithe of the fruits of his labors. But the Standard's comment which follows should be a lesson to all:

We give this story this week as furnished to us by Brother Ludlam, and feel that comment would but mar the great message it carries. It proves that a group of local churches can spread the plea. It proves that a single church can do it. It proves that the small church can do this thing. It proves that even the preacherless church can do it. With such a spirit in our churches, the plea would be irresistible and the vision and purpose of the heroes of our cause would be realized. You and your church can do this thing. Write and tell us that you will.

It is so fine and in such complete harmony with the simplicity of the gospel unencumbered with human machinery that the Standard could not refrain from "a few" words of comment, and to these words attention is directed. "It proves that a group of local churches can spread the plea." Yes, but why did it require the history of the church at Tracy City to convince the Standard of that fact, when a peep into the New Testament could have done the same thing? A group of local churches assisted Paul in planting the plea in several places, but there was no such thing among those churches as the societies advocated by the Standard. Again, the Standard says: "It proves that a single church can do it." To be sure it does, but the question arises: Since a single church can do it, why should that church turn its work or money over to the board of some society to do what the church itself can do. and evidently, from the "ancient order," it was intended that it should do? If a single church can begin, carry on, and consummate such a work, then by what law of reason or scripture teaching should that church put something between it and the work to which it must be subject and by which it must be controlled? Would not even the policy of economy suggest that the church keep to itself in the work? But, better still, would not the church's interest in the work be enhanced by having nothing to come between it and the work with its workers? Undoubtedly so, and that, no doubt, is one reason God so arranged the matter of missionary work. Once more: "It proves that the preacherless church may do it." Any church that absorbs all its means in maintaining a preacher, leaving nothing with which to follow the example of the New Testament as practiced by "the little country church of Christ a few miles out from Tullahoma," would better dispense with its preacher and try to save souls.

Let us join hands with the Standard in the statement that, "with such a spirit in our churches, the plea would be irresistible and the vision and purpose of the heroes of our cause would be realized." On the assumption that "our cause" is the cause of Christ, what finer thing could the Standard have said? But the problem of getting "such a spirit in our churches" will involve upon the part of the Standard a return to the "ancient order of things." Is the Standard ready for such a reformation? Is it ready to divest itself of everything for the propagation of the gospel, save what may be found in the New Testament? It may understand once for all that such a spirit can never be infused into the churches by the plan and machinery with which it has affiliated, lo, these many years. The machinery with which the Standard is linked is weighted down with the clergy system of the professional type, and the spirit of such a system is foreign to that for which the Standard pleads in this most favorable

The Standard concludes by saying: "You and your church can do this thing. Write and tell us that you will." That sounds well, and let us all pray that the Standard may succeed in getting all the preachers and churches under its influence to fall in line with its suggestion. If that journal succeeds in this laudable undertaking, then away goes the society, and the divided hosts of Israel may yet come together and dwell under the same vine and fig tree. If there is anything the Gospel Advocate can do to assist the Standard in this matter, it will be glad to render the service. This urgent request upon the part of the Standard for the churches to imitate "the little country and preacherless" church furnishes a gleam of hope for a better day—the day when all of God's people may be one. Let nothing, therefore, be done or said to dim that hope, but rather to increase its luster.

The Only Way the Truth May Be Ascertained.

BY C. G. VINCENT.

Regarding the matter of selecting, appointing, and sending out missionaries and supporting them and their enterprises, a brother preacher from Canada writes: "I am opposed to the one-man idea of selecting and appointing missionaries and soliciting support for them." Another brother exhorts the churches "not to leave the selection, the sending out, and the handling of funds to a self-appointed secretary."

These statements lead me to ask: Is it so, and who is guilty? I rehearsed in my mind my own experience. The logical way to learn if the criticism has foundation in fact is to secure a statement from our present and former missionaries as to whether any "one man" or "self-appointed secretary" selected, appointed, and sent any of them out and assumed to solicit their support. Another way of arriving at the same information is to ask the church or group of churches now or formerly having missionaries in foreign or home fields to make a statement telling us whether they or some "one man" or a "self-appointed secretary" selected, appointed, and sent out their missionary and supported him. The truth should be known. This is the way to learn the exact truth. If the charge is true, effort should be made to correct the error; if it is not so, the criticism should be withdrawn with apologies. request is hereby made for statements from all our former and present missionaries, from J. M. McCaleb, our pioneer worker, regardless of the field, to Harry Fox, our latest volunteer for overseas service; also statements from churches that formerly supported or are now supporting missionaries are requested. These statements will be examined and the exact facts published, or the full statements published. They should not be too long-just the facts stated. My address is 1210 North Fourth Avenue, Knoxville, Tenn.

I herewith submit my experience. The thought of becoming a missionary to a foreign land was first planted in my heart by our lamented brother, William J, Bishop, about fifteen years ago. He was on his furlough, and addressed us students of the Potter Bible College. In 1907 I married Miss Hannah Klingman, who also entertained a strong desire to do missionary work. While we were working with the Cameron Avenue Church, Detroit, Mich., in the spring of 1911, we received a letter from Brother McCaleb, who had been informed by Brother C. C. Klingman of our purpose, asking if we still desired to go as missionaries. He said, in case we decided to go, he knew of a group of churches in Bedford County, Tenn., looking for a couple, and that he would be glad to recommend us to them. We decided to go and wrote him to that effect. Accordingly, we gave up work in Detroit, sold our furniture, and proceeded to Shelbyville, Tenn. Brother McCaleb was good enough to arrange his work so as to meet us there. On a Lord's-day morning-the second in July, I think-Brother McCaleb introduced us, having been invited by the elders to do so. I preached morning and evening. I met the elders in a conference. They told me that they believed that we were the very people they wanted and that they would be glad to have us as their missionaries to Japan. They drew up a letter of introduction to the other churches in the county and promised to help me to visit them. This was done. Brother McCaleb left two or three days after he had introduced us to the Shelbyville church. After visiting these churches, it was clear that their combined offerings were insufficient to take care of our living and have enough to buy our passage. I talked to the elders and wrote Brother McCaleb. Announcement was made through our papers and offerings requested. Some offerings came directly to me and some were forwarded by Brethren McCaleb, D. C. Janes, J. A. Harding, and others who knew us and were interested. We were still short when we started for the coast. So I used the money received for our furniture to pay balance on tickets. We sailed on November 11 and reached Japan on November 28, with nineteen dollars and sixty-five cents to the good. After being on the field for some time, opportunities for work requiring money opened up to us. I accordingly made appeals for offerings, using our home papers, personal and circular letters, and later the Missionary Messenger, published by Brother McCaleb and myself. Some offerings were sent directly to me by the donors; others were received and forwarded by the managements of our home papers, by J. M. McCaleb, C. C. Klingman, Mrs. W. J. Bishop, C. C. Merritt, D. C. Janes, Homer E. Moore, S. H. Hall, John Straiton, W. W. Freeman, J. J. Horton, and others. Not one of these brethren, so far as I can recall, ever attempted to dictate policy or assume to manage me or my work; only, they often asked about the needs of the work and exhorted us to zeal and faithfulness. After a period of five years, we returned home, spent about six months in the Battle Creek Sanitarium recuperating, Later we visited the churches in Bedford County and told them of the work and asked them to continue to do missionary work, and I offered to help them in any way I could. I also visited other churches that helped us. Is there anything in these facts to indicate that any "one man" or a "self-appointed secretary" selected, appointed. sent us out and handled our support?

Personally, I am still interested in the work we had to leave unfinished; so I am praying for it, giving to it, and trying to induce others to help. As a matter of accommodation, I have volunteered to receive and to forward offerings for all who, for any reason, hesitate to send directly. My authority is the example of Titus, approved by Paul, in 2 Cor. 8: 17, where Paul approvingly writes of him: "Being himself very earnest, he went forth unto you of his own accord," The purpose of his voluntary service was to collect funds and to minister to the poor, a work of the church, and no one concluded that he usurped the authority and functions of the churches.

[A review of Brother Elam's comments on the Sundayschool lesson of May 6, 1906, in the Advanced Gospel Quarterly, by Benjamin Isenberg, of Cave City, Ky., Route 4, Box 118, and printed in pamphlet form. See Brother Elam's reply on another page.]

We had just as well talk about being born into the world temporarily, before there was a world into which to be born, as to talk about being born into the kingdom, or church, before there was a kingdom, or church.

Now, as everything wherein there is life comes from a seed after its kind (Gen. 1: 11), let us look for the seed of the kingdom, without which there can be no life, or, rather, look for the reproduction of the seed, which is Christians. We do not find any one called "Christians" in the garden of Eden. We do not find any one called "Christians" in the patriarchal or Jewish age of the world, So we are forced to come this side of the resurrection of Christ in order to find the first Christians. (Acts 11: 26.) Why could we not find Christians before the resurrection? A very good reason. We had no seed to sow of which to make Christians until after the resurrection. The Word or seed that we find in the beginning had not matured. (John 1: 1.) "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. . . . And the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us."

You go back to the garden of Eden and take in the whole world in this parable. Jesus did not say the universe was like a man that sowed good seed in his field. He said the kingdom of heaven (the church) was like unto a man that sowed good seed in his field. This seed is Christ crucified and risen, as already shown.

So, then, the New Testament is Christ in a doctrinal sense. (John 6: 36-38.) So, then, the New Testament is the seed of the kingdom. When was it first sown? After Jesus arose from the dead, he met his disciples in Galilee, and gave the last commission to the apostles, saying: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel [sow the seed] to every creature." (Mark 16: 15.) So we see that Jesus was first to sow the seed, as stated in the parable. "He that soweth the good seed is the Son of man." (Matt, 13: 37.) But said Jesus: "Tarry ye at Jerusalem until ye be endued with power from on high." So, on the notable day of Pentecost, the apostles began to sow the incorruptible seed as they were commanded by Jesus of Galilee. So we see the New Testament was not in full force and effect until after the resurrection.

Now we will consider the fleshly birth. Where are our forefathers and mothers in the flesh? They have long since passed away. So we see they were born of a "corruptible seed." But when we are "born again" (John 3: 7), this birth is of "incorruptible" seed (1 Pet. 1: 23): and when we are born into the kingdom, or church, no one on earth can get us out. We had just as well try to throw a child out of the world as to try to throw a child of God out of the kingdom, or church. We are born into the kingdom of the water and of the Spirit, the word, the New Testament, being the seed. So when we are born into the kingdom, we are there to stay until the harvest, the end of the world, when Christ, the Son of man, shall send forth his angels and gather out of his kingdom, the church, all things that offend and them which do iniquity. (Matt. 13: 41.) So, in the parable of the wedding supper, one was found not having on the wedding garment. (Matt. 22: 12.) He had been born into the kingdom, but had failed to work out his own salvation with fear and trembling. (Phil. 2: 12.) He had failed to add to his faith courage, knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly kindness, and love. He had allowed an enemy, the devil, to sow the "evil seed," the tares, in his heart, the field, which once had nothing but good seed in it; so, like the field in the parable under consideration, had nothing in it but "good seed" until an enemy, the devil, came while men slept and sowed the "evil seed," the tares, in the same field.

We learn from those who have traveled in the East that tares are supposed to be darnel. Darnel is not bastard wheat nor a degenerate kind of wheat, but a "distinct species," an "annual plant," and resembles wheat, and can hardly be discriminated from wheat until the heads begin to form. Then the difference is quite discernible. So you see we cannot tell wheat from tares until it heads out. What a beautiful pattern from which to cut! But let us be careful and not cut the pattern as Brother E. A. Elam did in his comment on verse 25. He says: "This sleep is at night." I say it means spiritual sleep. (Eph. 5; 14; 1 Thess. 5; 5, 6; Rom. 13; 11; 1 Cor. 11; 30.)

"The multitude of them that believed were of one heart and one soul." So it is one field, with nothing but good seed in it. Now go with me to Acts 5: 3, also Acts 8: 18, and you will find where Satan sowed "evil seed," the tares, in the heart, the field. So Peter, being an inspired man, could discern the tares, but an uninspired man cannot until they head out. That is why we are commanded to let them grow until the barvest.

So when they head out we are commanded to withdraw from them, according to 2 Thess, 3: 6. "For by their fruits ye shall know them." (Matt. 7: 20.) So withdrawing from them does not put them out of the kingdom, or church. Jesus is to send forth his angels and gather out of his kingdom, the church, all things that offend and them which do iniquity. (Matt. 13: 41.)

The parables were very little understood, even by the apostles, until the Holy Spirit came. "But the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you." (John 14: 26.) That is why Jesus said: "What I tell you in darkness, that speak ye in light." (Matt. 10: 27.)

So let us remember one thing more. All the parables point forward like prophecies. None of them point back, as Brother Elam has it in his commentary on the Sundayschool lessons.

So I hope I have given some light on the subject. Search the Scriptures to see if these things be true.

"Take Heed Lest Ye Be Consumed."

BY J. M. M'CALEB.

I am afraid that by the time Brother McQuiddy gets through there will be but few who are either safe or sound but himself. To the thoughtful reader much of Brother McQuiddy's long criticism contains its own refutation and needs no review. He says I "did not grant an interview." The facts are these: While in Florence, Ala., I received a letter from him asking me to come to Nashville, saying: "I want to go over matters with you pertaining to your work." Thinking possibly he really did have something in mind that meant a forward move, I wrote him to know particulars, and, if it seemed to me of sufficient importance. I would drop all and come; but imagine my disappointment when he wrote back that he wanted to make sure that I was sound on the kingdom. As I hold the same views I have always held-namely, that the kingdom was established on Pentecost-I saw no necessity for such an interview. I like the way Brother G. Dallas Smith writes about the kingdom.

Then, if I had written Brother McQuiddy to drop his work and come to see me all at his own charges, that I might make sure he was sound on the war question, it would have been perfectly in order for him to ask: Who is McCaleb, that he has such authority over his brethren? He and I are about the same age, both busy men, neither of us very good-looking, and, so far as I know, are just brethren, and I am frank to say that I cannot bring myself to feel that I must hold myself subject to his call to appear at Nashville that he may sit in judgment as to whether I am sound in the faith. When that time comes, I shall insist on the scriptural order.

I did not accuse Brother McQuiddy of favoring war; 1 only said "others" favored it. Our brother may have felt that his course during the war exposed him to such criticism. Since he feels he must deny being in favor of war, I am frank to say that his course during the war needs explanation. As matters now stand, it appears to me that while the war was on he favored it; but now that the war is over, he is against it. But whether he is against war or for it does not in the least affect the statement that some brethren do favor war, and that I exercise forbearance toward them, and in like manner feel it my duty to do the same toward those who err on prophecy. It is a poor way to meet this, and wholly illogical as well, to say: "One wrong does not justify another." As any one can see, I "justify" nobody's wrongs, but am trying to correct them. I do not believe, however, that to cut fellowship with brethren, silence them in the papers, raise a false alarm and warn the churches against them as dangerous teachers is the proper way to do it. The "speculative movement" is no more a "settled and accepted system of doctrine" than the war movement. Both are causing some confusion; with both we should be patient. Christ was patient with warlike Peter, and Paul bore with the Thessalonians in their errors about prophecy.

But listen: "Reliable information is also furnished that Brother John Glenn, son-in-law of Brother McCaleb, advised Brother Janes to forward to these erring missionaries the September contribution, which he did, and also that Brother McCaleb was praying for Brother McHenry and Martin and asking the church at Florence, Ala., to pray for them. It is reasonable to conclude that the father-in-law and the son-in-law were parts of an 'inner circle.'" This couples the September contribution and the request for prayers at Florence, Ala., together. But I was at Florence on January 18, 1920 (not in September, 1919), when the McHenry-Martin defection had fully developed and had been announced in the papers. Some of the brethren there remarked about it and we all felt that it was too bad. It was at this time that I suggested that we ought to pray for them in the hope that they might repent. If this shows that I belong to some "inner circle" trying to keep the church in the dark, how is it that I asked the church to pray for them? By the way, this brings up another little matter that I had not thought of again till now. I spoke in Florence on January 18; on that very day Brother McQuiddy was also in Florence. He could hardly have been ignorant of my presence, for the brother I was stopping with met and talked with him. At that very time, too, our brother was writing me for a conference with him in Nashville. Looks like he would have called on me while in Florence.

Again: "Brother McCaleb should tell the churches why Sister Lillie Cypert pulled out from the school with which he is connected and started an independent work. Is there not already friction brewing between the workers in Japan because of his sympathy with the speculative movement?" Our sister resigned from the Girls' Sewing School after I left Japan because there was "friction" between her and the principal. There has never been any "friction" between us on anything. The nine missionaries in Japan and myself are in the most happy accord. All of them are as good as gold, and I only wish we had a hundred in Japan like them. I am sorry Brother McQulddy seems to be hunting for "friction."

But unless I cut fellowship with the "speculative movement," It "definitely locates" me with it. Then, till Brother McQuiddy cuts fellowship with those who favor war, cuts them out of the papers and warns the churches against them as dangerous teachers, he is "definitely located" with them and is in favor of war whether he wants to be or not. There is absolutely no escape for him.

But McHenry and Martin went to the Adventists. Yes, and I have known other missionaries to go wrong, and probably others will follow, who were never under "speculative teaching." After many years' labor in Africa, Brother Strother M. Cook turned his work over to the Baptists. Brother R. L. Pruett more than twenty years ago, a Nashville Bible School boy, went to Japan, sent by some of the Nashville churches and indorsed by the Gospel Advocate. He and Sister Pruett went to the Foreign Christian Missionary Society in less than a year. Brother C. C. Klingman, who went from Dallas, Texas, after a period of service in Japan, also joined the societies. Will Brother McQuiddy be good enough to tell us whose "speculative teaching" these are the fruits of? Brother E. C. Fuqua takes a very sane and sensible view of the India situation, and I heartily agree with him that missionaries should be thoroughly prepared before going to the foreign field. But the fact is, some people will go wrong in spite of all that can be done, and it is only playing the part of the children in the market place, who always found fault with the other side for the failure in the game, saying, "You

But the gist of my offense is that I not only will not denounce those who teach unfulfilled prophecy, but even teach it myself. Brother McQuiddy need not labor to prove this, for I have no inclination to deny it. I have been teaching unfulfilled prophecy ever since I have been teaching at all, and it is certainly something new under the sun that, in these latter days, we have the rule laid down for us that we should study unfulfilled prophecy, but should not teach it! Now, since my liberty to do this is called in question, while I have but little time or inclination for it, I most courteously invite Brother McQuiddy to a written discussion of the following proposition: "Resolved, That it is a Christian's duty both to study and to teach publicly unfulfilled prophecy." This is plain, straightforward, and strong as language can make it. All I ask is the rights usually granted the one in the affirmative.

"If ye bite and devour one another, take heed that ye be not consumed one of another." "Wherefore exhort one another and build each other up, even as ye [ought to] do."

Said In Paragraphs.

BY JAMES A. ALLEN,

What is new in religion is not true, and what is true is not new. The newest item in the Christian religion is as old as the New Testament. What we object to in the religious world is teaching things that are younger than the New Testament.

If all truth was revealed to inspired men by the Holy Spirit, who spoke through them, then it follows that everything not preached by inspired men is falsehood. And there is no falsehood as injurious and hurtful as theological falsehood. The most hurtful lie in the world is the one told from the pulpit. The souls of men are at stake.

The spirit of Christ is not a sweetish, backboneless, and sickish spirit that condones error and winks at sin. When, after the many centuries, the Lord came to the Temple, in great meckness and love, but with equal fidelity and firmness, he cleaned it out. He "cast out all them that sold and bought in the temple, and overthrew the tables of the money changers, and the seats of them that sold doves; and he saith unto them, It is written, My house shall be called a house of prayer: but ye make it a den of robbers." If God's people would do innovators the same way to-day, they would be nearer to Christ.

The Holy Spirit said: "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins." No man has heartfelt, Holy-Spirit religion who gets mad at anything the Holy Spirit said. Unless he obeys the Holy Spirit, he cannot have his witness that he is a child of God, but has either deceived himself or been deceived by another.

Many Christians in name only can go to shows every week, rain or shine, who cannot meet with the disciples on the Lord's day. They are able to meet the high cost of shows, but they are too poor to contribute a dime to the service of the Savior of the world.

Also, many keep thoroughly posted on the magazines and novels who are hardly on a speaking acquaintance with that much-neglected little book, the New Testament.

Sam Jones said a man had as well pray God to send him down a barrel of potatoes as to pray God to send him down faith. Faith does not come that way. It "cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God." (Rom. 10: 17.) No hearing the word of God, no faith.

Listening to some preachers trying to fit the Bible fo their views, instead of fitting their views to the Bible, reminds us that sometimes a big gun goes off half cocked.

A man should not shoot off his mouth before he loads his head. In religion, if no man would speak until he speaks "as the oracles of God" speak, then all would "speak the same thing" and there would "be no divisions among" them.

General Andrew Jackson's Mother.

It is claimed by historians that Andrew Jackson's mother died on the roadside between her home and Charleston, S. C., where she had been attending our sick soldiers, and that, if buried at all, her remains were interred on the roadway. Jackson sought in vain to locate her grave. All this so appealed to me that about 1913 I tried to get the facts. I wrote a number of letters. Mr. T. D. Faulkner, an undertaker of Fort Mill, S. C., wrote me as to the burial of Jackson's father's remains, and also that "Mrs. Agnes Barton" attended Jackson's mother in her last illness and buried her remains, and that his father was "a first cousin of Jackson's," and inclosed a printed notice of the life and funeral of Mrs. Barton which reads thus:

"Departed this life on the 30th of July, 1846, in the Waxhaws Settlement, Lancaster District, S. C., Mrs. Agnes Barton, in the 89th year of her age.

"The subject of this notice was born in the county of Antrim, Ireland, about 1757. Her father emigrated to America when she was in her twelfth year and settled in the vicinity of the Waxhaws, after which she was married to Mr. Barton. During the former period of the Revolution, she, with her husband, a carpenter by trade, went to Charleston and settled in the suburbs of the city.

"It was during her settlement in that city that Mrs. Jackson, the mother of the hero of New Orleans, went to relieve the sufferings of the prisoners then incarcerated in that city.

"In consequence of the fatigue and hardships endured in making the journey from Lancaster to that place, as is supposed, she was taken sick shortly after her arrival in the city; and although a stranger and in a strange land, yet in Mrs. Barton's heart she found a welcome and in her house a home. Night after night did she sit by the sick bed of the stranger, ministering to her wants and soothing her sorrows with all the solicitude of an Irish heart; and when she died, she closed her eyes; and, although in humble circumstances in the world, yet she furnished from her own wardrobe the clothes in which the mother of the immortal Jackson was committed to the dust. Her husband, being a carpenter, furnished her coffin; and they two, with perhaps a few others assisting them, performed the mournful rite of sepulture to the mother of a future President of this great nation. And although there be no rude stone to point the stranger to the place where her ashes rest, she has left to posterity the example of her deeds of valor and of mercy. These are her monument, and their continued remembrance shall be the everlasting memorial of her greatness.

"After the close of the war, Mrs. Barton returned to the Waxhaws, where her husband died and where she spent forty years of widowhood, in humble circumstances, beloved by all who knew her; and for the last fifteen years she lived with her son-in-law. Thomas Faulkner, second cousin to General Jackson. She was regarded by those who knew her best as eminently plous, a member of the Associate Reformed Church. Being too infirm to attend church for some years previous to her death, she had her pastor to visit her and preach in her home on birthdays. In the prospect of death she was calm and composed, and retained her mental faculties in a remarkable degree to the last. Her end was peace."

Speaking of Jackson's mother's grave, Foote's notes (N. C.) says: "Her unknown grave is somewhere between what was then called 'Quarter House' and Charleston." (Lossing, 665.)

Be this grave where it may, we at least now know she was well attended when fatally ill, and that her remains were given a Christian burial; but Jackson never knew that.—John W. Gaines, in Nashville Banner, August 18, 1918.

EDITORIAL

Brother McCaleb Locates Himself.

BY J. C. M'Q.

On page 317 of this paper appears an article from Brother McCaleb on the subject, "Take Heed Lest Ve Be Consumed," for which I ask a thoughtful reading. I not only had the best of reasons, but very serious reasons, for inviting Brother McCaleb to my home; and if he had complied with the brotherly request, even if it had failed of its purpose, it would have been much more to his credit than the suicidal course which he has chosen. In spite of testimony in my hands which I could not doubt, I hoped a private interview might make it unnecessary to go before the public with certain rumors and charges about him that had come to our office. I had been supporting the work in Japan and encouraging others to support it, through the columns of the Gospel Advocate, and I felt it my duty to know the truth and to make it known to our readers. A number of brethren had written inquiring to know if Brother McCaleb was affillated with the "Louisville movement," and, notwithstanding the strong testimony which I had, I determined to pursue a brotherly course with him, and one which I knew was proper in every way; and hence I invited him to my home so that we could quietly talk over his position, and, in case the rumors to any extent misrepresented him, to give him an opportunity to state his own case and possibly forestall the necessity for a public statement.

But he not only refused the requested private interview, but is so lacking in the disposition to meet the issue fairly as to distort my request into the following statement: "I am frank to say that I cannot bring myself to feel that I must hold myself subject to his call to appear at Nashville, that he may sit in judgment as to whether 1 am sound in the faith." This unkind evasion is the very same turn which the destructive critics in the Bible College at Lexington, Ky., took when called on to answer in regard to certain rumors about their teaching, and it is the course usually taken by those guilty of the thing charged. I had no wish to "sit in judgment" on his soundness "in the faith" in any improper way such as he insinuates; but when it is rumored of a brother, whom I and others with our money and otherwise are supporting in religious work, that he has accepted and is upholding teachings that we cannot support, we have the unquestionable right to know whether the rumors are true or not, and it is not only ungenerous, but unfair, in him to thus distort my request and evade answering a very proper inquiry.

The reader will be impressed by the noteworthy and significant fact that he does not deny the rumors, and thus, by evasion, virtually confirms them by his own course; but I will now show why he does not deny the rumors. He could not truthfully deny them. Reliable information comes from a worker in Japan who is identified in the work with Brother McCaleb that the work has been injured by his close affiliation with the "Louisville movement" and that Miss Cypert pulled out from the school because Brother McCaleb had employed an Episcopalian principal. See now how he explains Miss Cypert's course: "Our sister resigned from the Girls' Sewing School after I left Japan, because there was 'friction' between her and the principal." But why did he not tell why there was friction? Yes, "friction," indeed; and no wonder "there was 'friction' between her and the principal," when Brother McCaleb turned over the work to an Episcopalian principal! Miss Cypert would have been untrue if there had not been friction.

And this is the brother whom churches of Christ have been supporting, who not only is identified with the speculative movement, but actually places the work in part in the hands of Episcopalians! Yet he thinks it terrible that we should ask about his soundness "in the faith!" I am not at all afraid that our readers or any others who understand and reason properly will think I did wrong in asking Brother McCaleb for an interview. Yea, they would have a right, under such circumstances, to think me criminally remiss if I did not do so, and thus protect the churches from being entrapped into supporting either the speculative movement or Episcopalianism.

This all throws light on some other matters in Brother McCaleb's course. No wonder, when he landed in America the last time, he at once associated himself with the Highland Church and the Portland Avenue Church in Louisville-churches not only identified with those who interpret unfulfilled prophecies, but are leaders in the speculative movement. He has blamed and criticized those who have opposed that movement; he has given his influence to those who withdrew fellowship from two of the purest and best brethren in Louisville for no other reason than that they persisted in opposing speculative teaching; he has found fault with the persistence of Taylor and Rubel; in every exchange of views that he has had with brethren on the subject, he has shown that his sympathies were with those guilty of the vicious act of withdrawing fellowship from these brethren, and has never spoken or written one word, of which the public knows, against the wicked perpetrators. These brethren were withdrawn from for the sole reason that they persisted in their opposition to this speculative doctrine. To thus rend the spiritual body of Christ is a greater crime than those men committed who natled Christ's physical body to the cross. Christ prayed for the criminals who pierced his side and nailed him to the cross, but he has never shown any sympathy and compassion for those who divide the spiritual body to establish which he sacrificed his life. The division in Louisville is not all. Examples of it have appeared at Gallatin, New Orleans, and Horse Cave. This same speculative teaching kept as good an evangelist as E. A. Elam from holding a meeting at Gallatin.

Brother McCaleb speaks of exercising "forbearance," His is a peculiar sort of forbearance. He "forbears" with those who oppose the "prophetic teachers" and the speculative movement by criticizing them and blaming them for all the trouble and division that have resulted from the movement; and he corrects the errors of the "prophetic teachers" by affiliating with and upholding their views to the full extent of his ability without offering any objection to or public criticism of their errors. A strange way of opposing and correcting error! He even uses the stereotyped methods of evasion adopted by the speculators. The only change is, he refers to war and they referred to Christians' voting, to which Brother Lipscomb objected. There is no "war movement" dividing churches, and Brother Lipscomb had no "voting movement" working up a combination of preachers that divide churches over the subject of voting. No churches are withdrawing from members for opposing Christians' going to war, nor does any of them have a "war movement" to propagate war. If he will point to one church that has such a "war movement" which is dividing churches, I will pay my railroad fare across the continent to seek to correct the evil, and will put all the resources of the Gospel Advocate in the fight to destroy the movement.

Brother McCaleb names other missionaries that have gone wrong; but, unfortunately for his contention, the very cases he cites help to confirm the point which he is opposing. Some of them did not have far to go. Like Mc-Henry and Martin, they seem to have been already half converted before they crossed the ocean. Adventists and the present speculative movement hold many tenets in common, some of which are premillennialism, the imminence of Christ's second coming, the future setting up of the kingdom, Christ's thousand-years' reign on earth, and that he will rule with a "rod of iron." Certainly those who hold such views are good subjects for Adventists, and McHenry and Martin left here under just such influences. He commends Brother Fuqua's view as "sane and sensible," and yet not one sent to Japan by the speculators has the qualifications as set forth by Brother Fugua. Yea, they not only lack these qualifications, but undoubtedly in the case of McHenry and Martin, they left here so imbued with the principles of the speculative movement that it was not difficult to go the rest of the way to the Adventists.

The casual reader will observe that Brother McCaleb does not deny being in the "inner circle" of the "Louisville movement." He misses the mark when he attempts to make me couple the September contribution with his praying for the erring missionaries in January. The point is this: In a letter of November 20, 1919, Brother Janes said that prayer was being offered for their restoration. On January 17 a brother in Florence, Ala., informed me that Brother McCaleb had been praying for McHenry and Martin as early as Sunday, January 11, and certainly not later than Wednesday night, January 14, both of which dates were before he could have received the Firm Foundation of January 13 from Austin, Texas, in which paper the first announcement was made. Therefore, it follows that he must have had information in advance of the publication in the papers, just as Brother Gill was furnished with information by Janes. Where did he get the information, as he did not get it from the papers, unless he got it from the brethren in Louisville? I do not know what he did in Florence on January 18. 1 worshiped in Nashville on that date. "Praying for them" is a novel way of telling it to the church! We often pray for members of the Russell Street Church, but have never thought that we were telling anything to the church. I had no time to call to see Brother McCaleb while in Florence. I reached Florence at two o'clock on the afternoon of January 17 and worked until late at night. Besides, the correspondence with Brother McCaleb was closed at that very time, and I had no assurance that he would consider the matter of sufficient importance to demand his attention. Why, then, did he not hunt me up, as Florence is not a very large town, since he knew I was there?

In his effort to defend his course, he is at sea and in confusion just like the others. In my last letter to him I suggested that I had understood him to say in a conversation that formerly he had felt sure that the kingdom was here, but now he was not so sure about it. To this he replied: "I have always believed, and believe now, that the kingdom is here, and am wholly surprised that you should get the impression that I believed anything else. I certainly did not say, nor even intimate, that I formerly felt sure that the kingdom of Christ is here, but now I am not so sure about it." I certainly so understood him, and do not see how I could have received the impression had he not said something to make it. I wonder if he is not now playing on an assumed difference between "the kingdom of God" and "the kingdom of Christ." At any rate, when he says, "I like the way Brother G. Dallas Smith writes about the kingdom," he casts some doubt on what he really believes about the kingdom, for Brother Smith says that he does not know that the church and the kingdom of heaven are one and the same institution. I have heard a number of the speculators say that the church or kingdom of Christ was set up on Pentecost, but that Dan. 2: 44 was not fulfilled on Pentecost; and as Brother Mc-Caleb has stated that he was not sure that the kingdom prophesied in Dan. 2; 44 was set up on Pentecost, then what does he mean when he says "the kingdom was set up on Pentecost?" What kingdom was it, if not that mentioned in Dan, 2: 44? As he is now among the interpreters of unfulfilled prophecies and says the kingdom of Dan. 2: 44 is yet to be set up, of course he can tell us when it will be set up, what will be its nature and what the terms of admission into it. It has also been taught by those engaged in this speculative teaching that the church is the vestibule of the kingdom and that the kingdom is here only in a very small way; but they are expeeting a crisis very soon in the kingdom when it shall be set up with great power and when Christ shall rule his subjects with a "rod of iron." Brother McCaleb criticized Brother Sewell for changing the word "coming" to "spreading" in the song, "The Kingdom is Coming," and said it was not unscriptural to sing, "The kingdom is coming," which indicates that he believes in a future setting up of the kingdom, all of which still further indicates that I did not misunderstand him in our conversation. If the kingdom is here and growing, why say it is "coming?" An explanation is due.

To divert the mind of the reader from the issue, he tries to direct attention to war matters. But he will have to excuse me from joining him in this. The issue now is not how other brethren stand on war, but how Brother Mc-Caleb stands on the speculative doctrines in question, and I shall not permit this issue to be clouded or confused by any such evasion. As to his reference to my record during the war, I can dispose of that at once by the simple declaration of fact that I never wrote one sentence nor uttered one word either during or since the war which advocates war or favors Christians' going to war. As an American citizen, I am loyal to our government when it does not conflict with loyalty to God. A lack of discretion in some brethren frequently injures the cause we all love and makes the impression that one is a slacker. I am glad that I live under a government that protects and respects the conscience of its Christian subjects. Hence, even if he has found some brethren with a wrong position on war, that has nothing to do with his position on other matters. The churches are not concerned just here about the teachings of persons, whether for or against war, to whose support they are not contributing; but they are concerned, and very vitally concerned, about the teaching of a man to whose support they have been contributing, and they have the unquestionable right to know about it, his insinuations to the contrary notwithstanding. I have kept strictly within my own rights and the rights of the churches in the effort to put before them the facts, and his groundless insinuations that I am assuming undue authority will neither intimidate nor deter me from it.

His challenge "to a written discussion" with me is not only ridiculous, but it is another proof of his identification with the speculators. Just as they have been doing heretofore, he now offers to affirm, not what somebody denies, but, so far as I know, what everybody believesnamely, "that it is a Christian's duty both to study and to teach publicly unfulfilled prophecy." It is difficult to believe that he is ignorant of the fact that such a proposition is a clear evasion of the only point at issue. Hence, when he says, "But the gist of my offense is that I not only will not denounce those who teach unfulfilled prophecy, but even teach it myself," he is guilty of an unjustifiable misrepresentation. The Gospel Advocate with all of its editors believes as strongly as he does "that it is a Christian's duty," to the extent of ability and opportunity, "both to study and to teach publicly unfulfilled prophecy." just as it is his duty to study and teach any other part of the word of God; but the Gospel Advocate does not believe that it is a Christian's duty to teach publicly or to teach in any other way his speculative views, or the speculative views of anybody else, about what, when, and how is going to be the fulfillment of unfulfilled prophecy, on which God's word says nothing. Study and teach the prophecies, of course-all of them-teach just what they say, no more and no less, just as it is proper to do with all other parts of the word of God, but not what the teacher or some other uninspired man thinks will be the fulfillment of them. On all biblical subjects, let a Christian teach the word of God, and all of the word of God, of course, but let him keep his opinions to himself.

"There Was Nothing New in Them." BY M. C. K.

A brother who did not hear all of my lectures delivered at Abliene Christian College, Abliene, Texas, the last week of February, 1920, has sent to our office in Nashville the following report:

Our school and outsiders have received the fundamental themes of Brother Kurfees with much enthusiasm. There was nothing new in them, so far as I could detect, but they represent some mature and clear thinking on matters involved in "Walking by Faith." Another lecture was needed to clear up matters of incidentals or things about which there is left freedom, no specifications having been made.

In view of their enthusiastic reception and the very pronounced and unequivocal estimate of the value of the said lectures so generously and openly expressed by the authorities of the institution and by numerous representatives from its student body, that report, so far as anything thus far reaching our office is concerned, is not only exceptional and unique, but is rendered signally conspicuous by standing solitary and alone in a class all by itself; and whatever may have been the purpose of its author, which we do not presume to decide, what he says is so significant and vital at this particular time, when both colleges and churches are given to speculation and seeking for something "new," that we make it the occasion of a serious and much-needed lesson for the people of our time. In fact, no lesson, in our judgment, is more seriously needed throughout our land in all its churches, its schools. its colleges, and its homes, than is the lesson suggested and called for by this same unique report. It is brief, and we ask the reader to peruse it carefully and to note in detail its different items.

1. It concedes that the lectures were "received ..., with much enthuslasm." Their author feels duly grateful for this statement of fact and wishes to add that they were not only received with genuine enthuslasm, but the chief glory of the lectures, according to the enthuslastic verdict of the authorities of the institution itself and that of numerous visiting preachers, was that "there was nothing new in them." Moreover, he is equally glad to record the fact that he regards it as highly complimentary to Abilene Christian College that it particularly indersed and commended the lectures because "there was nothing new in them"—because, indeed, they contain nothing but the old doctrine that was proclaimed and heralded far and wide as far back as the apostolic age. That the authorities of a present-day Christian college with an enrollment of four hundred and fifteen students are not only satisfied with a course of lectures with "nothing new in them," but actually indorse and publicly commend them before hundreds of people because of this very characteristic, speaks volumes in favor of the college itself and is one of the happiest signs of these times. All honor to the churches and schools of to-day which, in the way of religion, have "nothing new in them!" They are a large part of "the salt of the earth" and a great future awaits them.

2. The report further concedes that the lectures "represent some mature and clear thinking on matters involved in 'Walking by Faith.'" But here again the reporter only emphasizes and magnifies the fact that "there was nothing new in them;" for "Walking by Faith" is itself a little book not only with "nothing new in" it, but whose author at the very time he wrote it was actuated by the one special object and controlling desire to leave out every new fangled thing under the sun and to advocate and magnify in it nothing except the same old doctrine that was thundered thousands of years ago by prophets and apostles. We may further add in this connection-it is a simple matter of fact-that while, with both churches and schools in general like Abilene Christian College, which are not looking for something "new," the little book, "Walking by Faith," has been somewhat popular both in the United States and in England and Australia, yet with both churches and schools everywhere that want something "new" it has never been popular, and very likely never will be. Moreover, it is also a fact, more or less lamentable according to the point of view from which it is considered and the wishes of those who consider it, that churches and colleges that want something "new" almost never call on the author of that little book for any lectures. We have not the remotest right to say nor even to think that they mean by this to cast any improper reflection upon anybody, and the author of the little book assuredly does not take it that way. He believes that the controlling reason why they do not call on him for lectures is because they do not want him, it being a fact that they want lectures with something "new" in them, and none of his is of that sort. Of course no one can justly accuse them of inconsistency in this.

3. The report under consideration closes with the statement that "another lecture was needed to clear up matters of incidentals or things about which there is left freedom." It is proper to state here that the author of the lectures was not alone in the selection of his themes in the recent lectureship, but the duly accredited authorities of the college communicated to him in advance the themes which they would like to have him present, and he thought at the time and still thinks they were wise in their selections, and so endeavored to carry out their request. Possibly they were under the impression that, if the word of God, without the admixture of anything "new," should be faithfully and fully presented on the themes suggested, the ' incidentals," whatever this term may be intended to include, would take care of themselves, and this view of the matter is no doubt correct. There are times when the clamor for "freedom" for "incidentals" is of doubtful import. Moreover, in defense of the authorities of the college in failing to name "incidentals" as a theme, the author of the lectures is prepared to say, in the light of history both ancient and modern, that when folks are clamoring for "freedom" to teach or do things not divinely authorized, they usually take shelter under "Incidentals" and commit themselves to the false logic that because the method of doing divine commands is sometimes not specified in the Bible, and men, in such cases, have "freedom" to adopt different methods of procedure. therefore they have the "freedom" to do other things not specified in the Bible, such as baptizing babies, burning incense, and using instrumental music in the worship of God, which are not methods of doing divine commands at all. At a time when there is a clamor for "freedom" to speculate on things not revealed and otherwise "to go beyond the things which are written" (I Cor. 4: 6), it is a little dangerous to magnify "freedom" for "incidentals" without proper definition and discrimination.

Finally, from the religious point of view as well as otherwise, we are living in a stirring and exciting period of the world's history. Speculations are rampant and sometimes extravagant and wild. Men with prurient curiosity and unrest are attempting to pry into the future, presuming to tell what is to be, while the Athenian proclivity "to hear something new" (Acts 17: 21) is dominant and widespread in both churches and colleges throughout the land. Never before was the simple doctrine of "Christ, and him crucified," stripped of all else whether "new" or old, more greatly needed than now. With the Pauline determination and simplicity it should ring from every pulpit and from the columns of every religious journal. With freshness and buoyancy it should be proclaimed from the housetop and on every hand. Let the simple facts and commands of the gospel be preached as if the world had never heard them before. This we are distinctly told by Inspiration is God's power to save, and his own command is that it be proclaimed "to the whole creation." (Mark 16: 15.) The preacher of to-day has a rare opportunity to exhibit fidelity to this divine commission.

The Parable of the Tares.

BY E. A. E.

See the remainder of Brother Isenberg's review on page 316.

Although he makes some strange statements in regard to the seed of the kingdom and other things, the crux in my comment on the parable of the tares in my lesson is what "his kingdom" in verse 41 embraces.

In this parable there are three expressions which must be considered: (1) "The kingdom of heaven; (2) "his kingdom;" (3) "the kingdom of their Father." Does each one of these mean the same thing, which is the church, or embrace the church only?

I have studied this parable no little since I first wrote this lesson and since I received Brother Isenberg's review. I am pleased to say I agree with him that "the kingdom of heaven" in this parable is the same as "the kingdom of heaven" in the parable of the fish net and other parables in this chapter, and that this is the church. Just as much as the church is the body of Christ, the house, the household, the family, the temple, the building of God, God's husbandry, it is also Christ's kingdom. Into this kingdom one enters by a birth "of water and the Spirit," as Jesus states in John 3: 3-8. Jesus uses the church and "the kingdom of heaven" interchangeably in Matt. 16: 18, 19. Christ is King over his kingdom, head of his body, "head over all things to the church," head of the corner and chief corner stone in his temple, the husband of his bride, according as God's children and his disciples are represented in the New Testament-that is, whether as a kingdom, or body, or house, or family, or temple, or called-out ones. The church, God's household or family, and Christ's kingdom are "the Israel of God" to-day. (Gal. 6: 16; Rom. 9: 6, 7.)

As Christ "is the head of the body, the church," and "head over all things to the church," he is King to-day on David's throne, as God promised in the Old Testament Scriptures. (See Luke 1: 32, 33; Acts 2: 25-36; Heb. 2: 9.) But in the end he will "deliver up the kingdom to God who gave it." He has it now, but will then deliver it up to God. He must reign now until "he shall have abolished all rule and all authority and power," "put all enemies under his feet," and destroyed death. (1 Cor. 15: 20-28.)

Any one can see what "kingdom" means and is by examining any standard dictionary; also, what "church" means. Some good man says that one thing which convinced him that the kingdom of heaven and the church are not identical is that neither the term "kingdom" nor any of its definitions can be substituted for "church" and convey the idea of the writer, "and in no more than one instance can church and its lexical idea be substituted for It and make good sense." One is enough. If sprinkling can in one instance only be substituted for baptism and "make good sense"-that is, "convey the idea of the writer"-I will practice it. Truth is, the definition of the word "church" is not the definition of the word "house," the word "temple," the word "tabernacle;" yet "the house of God . . , is the church of the living God" (1 Tim, 3: 15), "the true tabernacle" (Heb. 8: 2), and the temple of God (1 Cor. 3; 16, 17; 6; 19, 20; Eph. 2: 20-22; 1 Pet. 2: 4, 5). The definition of the word "body" is not the definition of the word "church;" yet Christ "is the head of the body, the church." "Body" cannot always be substituted for "church" and "make good sense." How will this do, for instance: "On this rock I will build my body?" The definition of the word "church" is not the definition of the word "kingdom;" yet "the faithful in Christ Jesus," both Jews and Gentiles, are "fellow citizens" with one another, "of the household of God," "a holy temple in the Lord." (Eph. 2: 19-22.) "He made us to be a kingdom, to be priests unto his God and Father" (Rev. 1: 6); then "we" (all God's peoplethe church) are a kingdom, and "our citizenship is in heaven" (Phil. 2: 20). God's people are spoken of in the New Testament under whatever association and form of work they are being considered-"family," "house," "household," "tabernacle," "temple," "building," "husbandry," "a kingdom," "an elect race, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a people for God's own possession," "the Israel of God." (Gal. 6: 16.)

People are through faith "baptized into Christ" (Gal. 3: 26, 27), are "baptized into one body" (1 Cor. 12: 13), are "born of water and the Spirit" Into "the kingdom of God" (John 3: 3-8), are translated from the power of darkness "into the kingdom of the Son of his love" (Col. 1: 13). What is the difference, then, between the three things into which people are baptized? This good man says, if there is an audience of five hundred in a building and then another person comes into that building, he becomes a part of the audlence, but not a part of the building. To be sure, but he is as much a part of the building as the audience is; if he is not, they are not parts of the building. He is whatever the audience is, and became such in the same way. But all who through faith are baptized into Christ, his body, his church, his kingdom, become "fellow citizens with the saints, and of the household of God."

Some one has said it is hard to argue against facts. I would not exchange one fact for a library of fallacy. Why darken counsel and disturb the church now over that which our fathers clearly taught and the church so well understood?

It is also as clear as light that the word "kingdom" every time it is used in the New Testament does not mean the church. This truth may help us to a better understanding of the subject. What "the kingdom" embraces must be determined by the context. The meaning of the word "kingdom" is always the same, whether man's kingdom, Satan's kingdom, or God's kingdom; but these are different kingdoms. Then the kingdom of God so often mentioned in the Old Testament is not identical with the church and cannot be the church. So in the New Testament it cannot always be the church. "Inherit the kingdom," said at the end of the world to those who have proved faithful in the church, is an instance,

Thayer says the word means: "(1) Royal power, king-ship, dominion, rule." (2) "A kingdom—that is, the territory subject to the rule of a king." (3) "Frequently in the New Testament in reference to the reign of the Messiah, as in the following phrases." He then gives the phrases and comments upon them: "'The kingdom of God,' or the kingdom over which God rules; 'the kingdom of the Messiah,' which will be founded by God through the Messiah and over which the Messiah will preside as God's vice-gerent; 'the kingdom of heaven'—that is, the kingdom of heavenly or divine origin and nature; . . . once the kingdom of David, because it was supposed the Messiah would be one of David's descendants and a king very like David (Mark 11: 10); once the kingdom of Christ and of God' (Eph. 5; 5)." Thayer further says:

But Jesus employed the phrase kingdom of God or of heaven to indicate that perfect order of things which he was about to establish, in which all those of every nation who should believe in him should be gathered together into one society, dedicated and intimately united to God, and made partakers of eternal salvation. This kingdom is spoken of as now begun and actually present, inasmuch as its foundations have already been laid by Christ and its benefits realized among men that believe in him: Matt. 11: 12; 12: 28: 13: 41 (in this passage its earthly condition is spoken of, in which it includes bad subjects as well as good): Luke 17: 21; 1 Cor. 4: 20; Rom. 14: 17 (where the meaning is, the essence of the kingdom of God is not to be found in questions about eating and drinking); Col. 1: 13. But far more frequently the kingdom of heaven is spoken of as a future blessing, since its consummate establishment is to be looked for on Christ's solemn return from the skies, the dead being called to life again, the ills and wrongs which burden the present state of things being done away, the powers hostile to God being banished. Matt. 6: 10; 8: 11; 26-29; Mark 9: 1; 15: 43; Luke 9: 27; 13: 28 sq; 14: 15; 22: 18; 2 Pet. 1: 11.

Whether or not one agrees with Thayer in his application of every one of these and other scriptures cited, much will be learned by looking them up and studying them, and by studying all he says. One will gain thus better conceptions of the kingdom. Or it will be still better to look up every passage in the Bible which contains the kingdom of God, of Christ, of heaven, and any reference to them, or kingdom at all.

Thayer further says: "God's heavenly kingdom, in 2 Tim, 4: 18, denotes the exalted and perfect order of things which already exists, and into which true Christians are ushered immediately after death." He cites also Phil. 1: 23; Heb. 12: 12 sq.

Here let us remark that "the city of the living God," innumerable hosts of angels," "the general assembly and church of the first-born who are enrolled in heaven," etc., in Heb. 12: 22-24, and the "kingdom that cannot be shaken," in verse 28, are the same. If so, the church includes the saved on earth and the redeemed in heaven.

Thayer says "the phrase," kingdom of God and kingdom of heaven, "must be understood according to the requirements of the context." He also speaks of "the beginning," "potency," "fortunes" "of the divine kingdom;" the "conditions" of entrance into it; "its blessings and benefits, whether present or future;" of preaching "the near approach of the kingdom," "as close at hand," and "to be established." "In the Old Testament," he says, it "denotes God's rule, the divine administration; . . . the universe subject to God's sway, God's royal dominion."

Then God's rule on earth and throughout the universe is God's kingdom. He "sat as King at the flood" and is King "forever." (Ps. 29: 10: 10: 16.) "Jehovah shall reign forever and ever." (Ex. 15: 28.) God is "an everlasting King," (Jer. 10: 10.) His "throne is from generation to generation." (Lam. 5: 19: Ps. 45: 6.) In the New Testament it is said, "Unto the King eternal, immortal, invisible, the only God, be honor and glory forever and ever." (1 Tim. 1: 17: Rev. 15: 3.) All people God rules over on earth are not necessarily his willing and spiritual subjects. He makes the wrath of men to praise him. (Ps. 76: 10.) He "ruleth in the kingdom of men and giveth it to whomsoever he will, and setteth up over it the lowest of men." (Dan. 4: 17, 24, 25.) "His dominion is an everlasting dominion, and his kingdom from generation to generation; and all the generations of earth are reputed as nothing; and he doeth according to his will in the army of heaven and among the inhabitants of the earth; and none can stay his hand, or say unto him, What doest thou?" (Dan. 4: 34, 35.) He "changeth times and seasons; he removeth kings, and setteth up kings." (Dan. 2: 21.) Then God's rule over all the kings and armies and nations on earth, over all the angels in heaven, and throughout the universe is more than the church—the saved.

Furthermore, Christ, at God's "right hand in the heavenly places," is "far above all rule, and authority, and power, and dominion, and every name that is named, not only in this world, but also in that which is to come;" "all things" have been put "in subjection under his feet" and God "gave him to be head over all things to the church, which is his body, the fullness of him that filleth all things." (Eph. 1: 21-23.) What is there on earth over which Christ does not rule and over which he has not dominion? He is "King of kings, and Lord of lords." (1 Tim. 6: 15.) Of what kings is he the King, and of what lords is he Lord? He is the ruler of the kings of the earth. (Rev. 1: 5.) These kings and lords are not his willing and spiritual subjects, but he overrules them all. If not, there is nothing in praying for "kings and all in high place" (1 Tim. 2: 1-4) and to "be delivered from unreasonable and evil men; for all men have not faith" (2 Thess. 3: 1, 2). It is wonderful that Christ overrules all and yet allows all to exercise their own choice as to whom they will serve and what life they will lead. He has all power, not only to cast out of his church-"the kingdom of heaven "-as out of the fish net, but also to east out of "his kingdom" or his dominion over all things and his universal sway, "all things that cause stumbling, and them that do iniquity," to cast them into the furnace of fire, and to save the righteous "in the kingdom of the Father," his "eternal kingdom." (2 Pet. 1: 11.)

Now what have we? (1) Christ's kingdom, which "is not of this world," his church, "the kingdom of heaven," in which people are willing and spiritual subjects; (2) "his kingdom" or rule over all things, over all kings and lords, and men without faith and evil men, working all things together for the good to all who love him and are the called according to his purpose (Rom. 8: 28); (3) "the eternal kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ," which the righteous inherit.

But whether or not "his kingdom" in this parable means the church or his universal rule over all principalities and powers, kings and lords, it is true that he will "come in his glory with all the angels," sit upon his throne, and separate the good from the bad. This shows he has the anthority and rule over all nations. "THE KING" will then "say unto them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." Then he must be King of all or he could not do this. Those on the left hand "shall go away into eternal punishment." (Matt. 25: 31-46.) It is also true that he will cast out of his church into the furnace of fire all the wicked, as in the parable of the net. So all the wicked of the world and the indifferent and unsteadfast and unfaithful in the church will be lost, regardless of what "his kingdom" in this passage embraces.

If this is incorrect, then what is the difference between the parable of the tares and fish net? Would Jesus speak two parables at the same time which mean exactly the same thing?

Good News From Florida.

The following letter will be appreciated by all who really love the cause in "The Far Southern Field:"

Bradentown, Fla., March 20, 1920.—Brother Hall: I surely do enjoy reading the Gospel Advocate, but especially your page. I wonder if your reports from "The Far Southern Field" could be extended as far south as Bradentown? I came here the first of January and found a band of as faithful men and women as ever met to keep house for our Lord. They had been persecuted by the sectarians, deceived by the "digressives," betrayed by false brethren, and had gone without a preacher for some time, and yet I found them very much alive. Persecution, opposition, and betrayal, seemed to make them more determined to stand loyal to the word. Our coming seemed to encourage them to greater activities. Our Lord's-day worship continually grows in attendance and the services are as rich as can be in interest. We are looking forward to better things in the future.

At Cortez, six miles east of Bradentown, is another splendid band of loyal brethren and sisters. They, too, are standing nobly by the Lord's work. At Oneco, seven miles southeast of here, is another band who are not deceived by every wind of doctrine.

The Gospel Advocate is no stranger in this section of Florida. May God abundantly bless those who are making it what it is, together with all those who faithfully serve our glorious King,

W. M. Brumtt,

We are glad to say to Brother Brumit that "Georgia and the Far Southern Field" certainly includes Florida, and all his reports will be very much appreciated. We rejoice with him in the splendid work being done in that section. Brother W. A. Cameron, of Largo, Fla., recently helped them in a meeting, and this means the best help that can be had.

The Revival Is On.

At our regular Lord's day services last Lord's day (March 21) every appearance of a revival was with us-a large crowd, the best of singing, every one looking happy. with two confessions and baptisms, one from the Baptists, and one reclaimed. Both South Pryor and East Point report the best of services. Garrett has baptized three more at East Point recently. One of the best things last Lord's day was our having the venerable S. H. Jones, of Harrodsburg, Ky., with us. He is old and feeble, but he cheered us with two glorious messages. He seemed to be so happy, and remarked to Brother Stroud as he was taking him to the train on Monday morning that he felt better than he had felt in five years. I could not keep back the tears as I looked at his beautiful head made white with age and thought of the battles he had fought for Christ. Sad is the day when the tenderest feeling is not found in our hearts for these great and good men.

Brother F. B. Srygley is due here April 11 for a revival, and we are looking forward to it with no little pleasure.

Memorial of Mr. McDonough. BY T. B. LARIMORE.

Francis Marion McDonough, nearly all of whose days were spent in Tennessee, principally in Sequatchie Valley, was born on December 22, 1822, and passed away on Monday morning, February 23, 1920, being ninety-seven years, two months, and one day old; and his body was buried at Mount Zion, near his home, Warren County, Tenn., the following day, the funeral services being conducted by our heloved brother, J. R. Stubblefield, of Viola.

In the early fifties he paid me four dollars a month for plowing for him—as much as I was worth, notwithstanding I plowed as much, day by day, as he did. Still, strange as it may seem to boys and girls now, if I had been black, I could have been easily sold for a thousand dollars in gold. Mr. McDonough was never a slave owner, however, I am glad to say.

He was a quiet, modest, unassuming man, active and industrious; and whatsoever he did, he did with all his might. I never heard him boast of anything; but he told me, the last time I saw him, that he once walked six hundred miles in thirteen consecutive days. Apparently, it never occurred to him that that was very remarkable. He simply related it as a commonplace connecting link in the little bit of life story he was relating. In his latter days he walked with a cane he called "Andy" because his cousin, Andrew Johnson, gave it to him. He fell, and hurt himself, last June—June, 1919—and was never able to walk again.

The quiet life of an honest farmer was as satisfactory to him, I am sure, as was the stormy political life to his illustrious cousin, "Andy" Johnson, tailor, councilman, mayor of Greeneville, Tenn., member of the legislature of Tennessee, member of the Congress of the United States, governor of Tennessee, United States Senator, Vice President and President of the United States. Francis Marion McDonough and Andrew Johnson were first cousins.

I visited Mr. McDonough when he was ninety-four, and hoped to visit him again; but we shall meet on earth no more.

He was my friend, faithful and true, and was always good and kind to me. When a catfish three feet long ran away with my only fishhook, line, and pole, and thus nearly bankrupted me and deeply distressed me, I appealed to Mr. McDonough for help. Though busy, he cheerfully came to my relief, poling and paddling his cance a mile up the Sequatchie River to "the deep hole," and landed the fish for me. But, of course, I caught the fish. He claimed no part of the glory, but conceded it all to me. He once took me-let me ride behind him on his horse-to Liberty, to a revival. "Tom" King, who was conducting the revival, was examining candidates for membership in the Baptist Church. An old bachelor candidate, relating his "experience," said: "I finally concluded I was the biggest liar in the world." When he said that, Mr. McDonough said, softly, to me: "Well, that was so."

A few years ago he offered his home and farm to Mrs. Larimore and me, as long as he and we might live, saying: "It shall not cost you a cent."

Peace to his ashes, salvation to his soul.

In sending contributions, be sure and state whether they are intended for the Home Orphans' Fund, the Armenian and Syrian Fund, or the Poland Fund. I should be glad if more of the contributions were designated for use in providing for orphans in this country, since there are constant appeals from destitute families close to us. Make all checks and money orders payable to A. B. Lipscomb, who will forward them to the proper commissioners.

AT HOME AND ABROAD

Ш

Correspondents will please note that J. W. Grant has changed his address to Bridgeport, Ala. He will engage in evangelistic work as opportunity is offered.

From Mrs. J. W. Dunn, Irving, Texas, March 21: "Brother Dunn is dangerously ill. Pneumonia in both lungs. The doctor says he is holding his own so far. Pray for us."

J. P. Sewell, of Abilene, Texas, preached twice for the Campbell Street Church, in Louisville, Ky., on March 21. Brother Kurfees writes us that his visit was greatly appreciated.

Our readers are reminded that next Sunday, being the first in a new quarter, will be an opportune time for remembering the little orphans at the Tennessee Orphans' Home, at Columbia, Tenn.

Fred K. Jones, real estate dealer and Notary Public, 48 Arcade, Nashville, Tenn.—Nashville and Tennessee property for sale and exchange—will endeavor to accommodate those desiring his services.

From Robert Alexander, Paducah, Ky., Route 1: "Because my school closed two months before expected, I shall be able to hold two or three more meetings in May or June, and would be glad to arrange for same."

Claude Woodroof, of Anniston, Ala., is in a good meeting with the Green Street Church, this city. He brings an encouraging report from the Anniston church. They have started a new congregation at Peaceburg, seven miles distant.

Edward Clutter, evangelist, writes from McCune, Kan., March 22: "The meeting here is eleven days old. Interest is growing and souls are confessing Christ. M. M. Hughes has been preaching here for over five years. He is an able man and loyal to the gospel. Mrs. Clutter leads the singing."

E. C. Fuqua writes from Fort Collins, Col., March 23: "I closed 2 meeting at Bellvue on Sunday night. Begin another next week at Waverly, twelve miles from Fort Collins, where the gospel has never been preached. Most of my work this year will be at places where the pure word has never been heard."

Miss Elizabeth Cummins and Mr. Frank Legler, Jr., were married, at the Russell Street Church, on Thursday, March 25, 1920, at 8 P.M. The wedding was elaborate and beautiful in every detail and was witnessed by a large number of people. A. B. Lipscomb pronounced the ceremony. The Gospel Advocate extends congratulations.

J. Leonard Jackson, of this city, writes: "The church at South College Street has had four more additions since last report. Yesterday was a good day for us. There were two confessions at the morning service—a husband and wife. There has also been one restoration and another one to come from the Baptists recently, making a total of eight that have come to Christ during the month of March."

From W. M. Mann, Lockhart, Texas, March 22: "I am still preaching for the church here at Lockhart. The church is holding its own very well. We are now trying a new plan here. The elders and I paid a number of calls Sunday evening to delinquent members. We intend to keep on until we get them to working hard. I am now booking my time for summer, and have some time to spare to those who would like my services."

Margaret Louise Bohon, five-year-old child of Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Bohon and a grandchild of Mr. and Mrs. William Bohon, of the Campbell Street Church, Louisville, Ky., was recently seized with double pneumonia and, after lingering ten days, died. The funeral services were conducted by M. C. Kurfees and R. A. Craig. Little Margaret was a sweet and promising child, always anxious to attend Sunday school. The Gospel Advocate extends Christian sympathy.

From G. Dallas Smith, Cleburne, Texas, March 23: "Splendid services here last Sunday and Sunday night. Our large auditorium was packed Sunday morning and quite well filled at night. The interest is good, with additions frequently. Our county evangelist is now in the field. At present he is in a meeting at Burleson. I go to Weatherford next Monday for a two-weeks' meeting. I lived and labored with the good people of the Weatherford church nearly three years, some sixteen years ago, and it is quite a treat to me to have the pleasure of working with them again. G. C. Brewer will begin a month's meeting with us on the third Sunday in April. The members of the Cleburne church are at peace and at work."

From Will W. Slater, Atoka, Okla., March 23: "I was with the brethren at Atwood on Saturday night and Sunday morning, and sang for them Sunday afternoon. We had splendid services, and I was glad to be there again. I preached to an appreciative audience at Allen at night. I am now at Atoka singing for J. Will Henley. This is rather a mission point, as there are but few faithful ones here. We will be here two weeks or more. The first and second Sundays were good days with us at Fort Smith, Ark. Two additions. Interest is increasing, Bynum Black will preach in my place next Sunday, and Brother Barber, of Morrillton, Ark., will fill the pulpit the first Sunday. I hope to return home by the second Sunday, if we can leave Atoka by that time. Pray for us."

From W. S. Long, Washington, D. C., March 22: "About two thousand new clerks have come from the States to work in the Bureau of Census. Out of this number we ought to have several Christians; but members of the church often come to the cities not knowing where to find a place of worship. All who have relatives or friends here who have lately come will please write me, giving their street address, and I shall be glad to call on them; or you may write them direct, giving them the location of the place of worship. Remember, we meet in the Masonic Temple, at the corner of Eighth and F Streets, N. E. Besure to tell them to go to Northeast, because some miss the place by not remembering to go to Northeast. Take a car marked Eighth and F Streets, and it will stop in front of the Masonic Temple; then come to the second floor. My address is 110 Second Street, S. E., Washington, D. C."

From L. F. Mason, Whitewright, Texas, March 23: "The church here is to have a preachers' meeting from April 26 to May 1. All preachers and elders in reach of Whitewright, in Texas or Oklahoma, are invited to be with us and enjoy the entire week. The church here will furnish homes for all who attend. We will mail programs to all preachers in a few days. We are to have a number of our leading singing evangelists with us during the week. So come and be with us and enjoy the week. We have asked F. L. Young to open the meeting, to be followed by G. Dallas Smith, T. W. Phillips, W. F. Ledlow, John E. Dunn, and Thomas E. Milholland to preach the closing sermon on Saturday night. We expect to have fourteen preachers on each day's program. The work here is increasing by leaps and bounds. We are having large crowds at each service. We are at work and determined to win against all odds. The best people to be found are here, ready for every good work. I have some time in July and August not yet engaged. Any church desiring my services should write to me at Whitewright, Texas. I have two meetings in Tennessee for the first of August, and could hold two or more meetings while there."

Garner.

At 11 P.M., February 9, 1920, the ath angel visited my home and death angel visited my hom-claimed my wife, Ella Garner. was born in Boone County, Ark., on November 19, 1878. She leaves her fa-ther and mother (Brother and Sister J. W. Sanders), her husband, six children, two brothers, and one sister to mourn their loss. She was baptized by Brother Joel Armatig in August, 1894, and was a devoted Christian until her death. She married Brother S. C. Garner on December 14, 1901, and was an ideal preacher's wife. She guided the home and was everything to the children for months at a time while her husband was away preaching the gospel. She did all she could for the young preachers during the six winters her husband was teaching the County Line Bible School. She was an obedient daughter, a true companion, a faithful mother, and a friend and helper to her neighbors. death is our loss and her gain. we mourn such an inestimable loss, the is at rest in the arms of infinite Love. We do not sorrow as those who have no hope. S. C. Garner.

Gillentine.

After having completed sixty-eight years and one day, R. L. Gillentine bid adieu to things material and crossed over to the other side. If I have any conception of success, then Brother Gillentine's life was a rounded suc-cess. He was born on January 28, 1852, and died on January 30, 1920. At a very early age he formed the habit of reading the Bible, and, under the influence of the pathos of the stories, he told me that he would leave the presence of the family circle and when to himself would cry, all because of the persecutions of Christ and the apostles and early Christians. He was one of the later pioneer preachers of Middle Tennessee, and has ridden horseback thousands of miles to his appointments to teach the plan of salvation to those who had never heard it. His birth took place in Van Buren County, Tenn., and his death in Harmon County, Okla. Brother Gillentine never shirked hardship or duty and was loved by a great number of people. Peace to his ashes and blissful rest in the paradise A. M. CLARK.

Allen.

Brother Simmie Oliver Allen was born on December 10, 1893, and died. in Henderson, Tenn., on February 23, 1920. He obeyed the gospel of Christ in October, 1913. From the day of his becoming a Christian he resolved to prepare himself and to devote the remnant of his days to preaching the story of the cross; accordingly, he entered the Freed-Hardeman College and spent a part of three sessions in the literary and Bible departments. Brother Allen was a young man of high ideals and of a worthy ambition to adorn the doctrine of Christ wherever he went. He had preached in his native State of Arkansas for three or four years, held a few debates, and had planned an active summer's work in mission fields already selected. The immediate cause of his death was influenza augmented by heart failure. Brother Allen was greatly loved and appreciated by his schoolmates, class-mates, and all who knew him. A short service was held at Henderson by the writer, after which the remains were shipped to Cash, Ark., his old home, and duly buried. He is sur-vived by one brother and two sisters. N. B. HARDEMAN.

Fussell.

Mary Donegan Fussell was born in October, 1827, and died in January, 1920. She was ninety-two years old at her death. She and her husband lived her death. She and her husband lived together sixty-nine years. She was the mother of nine children, five of whom survive her. She leaves thirty-nine grandchildren and forty-seven great-grandchildren. Her husband survives her and is ninety-two years and a few months old. Sister Fussell was a most excellent woman in many respects. If her example as a true and faithful wife for sixty-nine years were taken as a pattern to-day, the divorce law would be killed. Her life speaks well, as a mother, when we see in the lives of her five faithful sons and one daughter the devotion to Christianity. The confidence and the respect her neighbors had for her proves she was a most excellent neighbor. best of all, she was a devout Christian. Her faith grew stronger and her love broadened as she grew older in life. She lived a beautiful, Christian life, and died in the hope of a better life than this. We wish for her children, grandchildren, and great-grandchildren long, happy, and useful lives. F. C. SOWELL.

Carlisle.

The Psalmist says, "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints," but looking at it from our point of view, we sometimes wonder why, yet withal doubting not its veracity. Sister Cassie Stephenson was born, near Petersburg, Tenn., on November 24, 1889. She obeyed the gospel in September, 1910. On March 1, 1919. 1912, she was married to Brother E. D. Carlisle. On the morning of February 17, 1920, she "crossed over Jordan," at their home in Huntsville, Ala., after an illness of influenza and pneumonia. Her father, mother, three brothers. and six sisters are mourning her loss, besides her husband, one son, and a little daughter scarcely more than a babe. As to her faithfulness to God, she never wavered. And the last Lord's day of her pilgrimage here, while suffering the most excruciating pain, she did not forget the Savior's "Do this in memory of me." Her de-sires in this respect were satisfied after eating of the bread and drinking of the cup, emblems of His body and blood. What a lesson to those in good health who are thrown aside from this duty by the most flimsy excuses! It matters much where and how we live; but little, where and how we die.

E. GASTON COLLINS.

Miller.

It is with an aching heart that I write of the death of my dear mother, Mrs. Mary L. Miller. She was born on June 30, 1857, and passed over into the glory world on November 17, 1919, thus making her some over sixty-two years of age. She was the mother of four children, three of whom, with her beloved husband, preceded her across the river. She had been a Christian since young womanhood, and was always a faithful follower of the lowly Nazarene. Especially was this true in the latter years of her life. As the physical body weakened, the inner body grew stronger in the faith. She was a regular attendant at the Lord's house on the first day of the week, and no frivolous excuse kept her away. My mother was a woman of superior intellect, and she has left me a priceless heritage—a good name. Brother L. K. Harding conducted the funeral services, after which her body was placed beside those of her loved ones in Miller's Cemetery, near Boni-cord. I can hardly realize that her snowy head will be seen no more in our little home here on earth, but I love to think of a sweet reunion on the other side, where our family circle will be forever complete. I believe she is happy to-day in a Savior's love, and I sorrow not, as those who have no hope. Bertha Miller Ages.

Summitt.

Brother John F. Summitt was born, in Lawrence County, Ind., on September 26, 1870, and died, in Henderson, Tenn, on February 22, 1920. His fa-ther moved to Dyer County, Tenn, in 1877, and reared a large, Christian 1877, and reared a large, Christian family. Brother Summitt obeyed the gospel in 1885 and lived it every day till the end came. About twenty years ago he moved to Dunklin County, Mo., where, by hard work and good man-agement, he became possessed of several hundred acres of some of the finest land of that section, which he put into a high state of cultivation. During all these years he devoted quite a lot of time to preaching the gospel at home and in other fields. looked upon life as a solemn, sacred reality, and believed that the grave was not the end. Humble, quiet, patient, and faithful, he went about the Master's service, and thus he was a living epistle of Christ favorably known and easily read of all men. Brother Summitt moved to Henderson in September last for the benefit of the Freed-Hardeman College, bought splendid property, and was well fixed for enjoying the remnant of his days. Seized by pneumonia, he was hur-riedly called to plant his feet on higher ground. So far as the writer ever knew or heard, he had scarcely a spot or blemish upon him. He is survived by a wife; three sons—Ewell, Paul, and Knox; a father, J. L. Summitt; six brothers—Homer, George, Virgil, Robert F., Judge N. F., and Chester; and one sister, Mrs. C. B. Beasley. The funeral service was conducted at the church of Christ by the writer, and the remains were laid to rest in the cemetery at Henderson, Tenn.

FROM THE FIELD

Alabama.

Pineapple, March 22.—I preached at Awin on the second Lord's day, morning and night, and at Antioch on the third Lord's day. I shall go to Boles, a mission point, next Lord's day. Liberty, Fatama, Finklea, Salem, and Pleasant Home are asking for my services. All are mission points. This is as hard a field as anywhere in the South,-A, B, Blazer.

Arkansas.

Millville, March 23 .- I have located at this place for the remainder of this year. I preach here once each month, and have three other churches-Hampton, Sneed, and Whitefield—that I preach for. I will go back to Tennessee to hold meetings through July and August; also I will spend part of my time in the mission fields around these places. The churches in South Arkansas are few and far between However, the brethren of this part of the State are at large discharging their strength to feed the starv-ing people upon the spiritual food. Dallas County has not a loyal congregation. Brother S. O. Allen, of Cash, had planned to spend the most of the summer in this county, but death took him from this life. Is there not another that will take his place in this great work?-R. L. Colley.

New Mexico.

Artesia, March 22.-The church of Christ at Artesia has received a number of donations to its church building fund from individuals and churches in Tennessee and Texas, in reference to which I desire to make a statement in the Gospel Advocate. For the last ten years or more the little band of loyal disciples at Artesia have struggled against sectarian odds and digressionism, handicapped and hindered greatly by having no suitable house of worship. At first they met from house to house for worship, being led by such faithful men as T. R. Chisholm, S. B. Ray, W. H. Beasley, J. S. Worley, and Walter Daugherty. All of these brethren but Brother Worley having moved away, the church was very despondent when I moved to this place in November, 1918. During the winter months of that year we met from house to house, but during the summer months we used the Carrington Hall, Brother Beasley having arranged for our using it before he moved away by buying and seating it with chair seats costing him between four hundred and five hundred dollars. In June, 1919, Brother Sewell Jones and J. E. Hoffman, from Roswell, held us a ten-days' meeting, resulting in two baptisms and a good interest among the brethren and religious friends who attended the meet-

During this meeting Brother Jones suggested that we buy the hall and repair It; but as we were at that time so few in number and very weak financially, we let the proposition drop. About the first of November, 1919, Brethren W. A. Watson and J. M. Tuttle moved here, and we were encouraged to take it up again. A canvass was made with the following results: Harvey, Nugent, Texas, $5.10; J. R. Stubblefield, Morrison, Tenn., $5; church of Christ at Centerville, Tenn., $20; Mrs. L. S. Stivers, Amarillo, Texas, $5; H. R. Moore, Huntland, Tenn., $5; H. N. Mann, Riverside, Tenn., $25; J. D. Tant, Rogers, Ark., $5; J. E. Hoffman, Roswell, N. M., $30.05; church at Luenders, Texas, $5.01. Total, $505.16, With this amount available, Brethren J. S. Worley, W. A. Watson, W. F. Daugherty, J. M. Tuttle, and I closed the deal for the house on the following terms: $500 cash and church of Christ at Centerville, Tenn., the following terms: $500 cash and balance in two notes of $200 each, due on December 15, 1920, and December 15, 1921, with eight per cent interest. The deed contains the restrictive clause and was made to J. S. Worley, W. F. Daugherty, and J. M. Tuttle, and their successors, as trustees for the church of Christ at Artesia. As nearly all of the window lights had been broken out by bad boys during its use as a house for public entertainments, we must of necessity spend between two and three hundred dollars for replacing them, screening them, and in making a baptistery, pulpit platform, and other necessary changes. Since commencing this work of repairing, Brother Worley has received a con-tribution of $83.50 from his old home congregation in Tennessee, and we would appreciate donations from any individuals or congregations who desire to cooperate with us in advancing the cause of Christ in Artesia. Send to J. S. Worley or Mrs. Sallie Smith, who will duly acknowledge receipt of same. We need your help.-A. J. Cox.

Howe, March 22.-The work at this place is slowly moving on, and we hope to accomplish the building of the walls of Zion. We have had some help from those interested, which we have acknowledged, which has been applied on the church building, and we have the first payment made and time until fall for the rest, which we hope to meet. I am doing my work gratis, looking to the future for my reward. I expect to be in Mississippi for some meetings during the summer, and bave time for about two more. I shall enter the field again in June, and will go to Montana for a meeting, and could hold one in Colorado on the way.

If any brethren are interested in that State, I shall be glad to come by, ei-ther on the way or on the return trip, and hold a meeting. Pray for me in the Lord's work.—W. F. Lemmons.

Holdenville, March 18.—Family and I have moved. I took up my regular work with the congregation at Holdenville on the first Sunday in March and have preached each Sunday since that time. The attendance has been splendid at each service, also at our midweek Bible study. I have a faithful band to work with. There is growing interest and attendance at each service. ice. Several have placed their membership with us since taking up the work here. I am glad to note the interest manifested in the class work by the little folks. Thirty little tots were in the class last Lord's day. The other classes, both for the old and young people, manifest great interest in the work. Our greatest need at the present time is more room to take care of the classes. We hope to be able to supply this need in the near future. One thing I admire is the peace and harmony that seems to prevail in this congregation. We have several good song leaders and the song service is excellent. I will be in a meeting at Kemp, Texas, beginning on April 13 and running over the night of April May God bless all faithful workers in Christ.-W. D. Black.

Yesterday we had large crowds and two additions one from the Christian Church. Galveston, March 22.-Yesterday was the first Lord's day for several months that I have failed to be in the pulpit. A recent operation on my throat was the hindering cause. The hospital physicians say I will soon be able to resume my work. During the fall and winter I have labored strenuously. I do not know what has been accomplished. My plan is, and has always been, to do my duty as I see it and let the results take care of themselves, believing that the word of the Lord will not return unto him void. I will be in the pulpit again as soon as I sufficiently recover.-J. P. Kimbrell.

St. Joe, March 20.-In my work for the church at Palestine, I am impressed more and more every day with the need of a good religious paper in every home. I see at every place a few who are opposed to almost everything that our best-informed brethren want to do, and, like the dog in the manger, cannot eat the hay and will not let them that can eat it, or, like the people to whom Christ spoke, who would not enter or let those that would enter the kingdom. I would be glad if Brother Lipscomb would put his ar-ticle of October 2, 1919, on "Teaching Them in the Sunday School," in pamphlet form, that I might scatter it in many places in this State, for it is needed badly in many places where I go. I am glad the objectors are growing less every year. I am glad to report that the brethren everywhere are having fellowship with our work at Palestine, and we feel sure we shall soon be able to see a neat little house of worship in our beautiful town, the prettiest town of all West Texas .-J. K. Walling.

EAT LESS AND TAKE SALTS FOR KIDNEYS

Take a Glass of Salts if Your Back Hurts or Bladder Bothers

The American men and women must guard constantly against kidney trouble, because we eat too much and all our food is rich. Our blood is filled with uric acid, which the kidneys strive to filter out; they weaken from over work, become sluggish, the elimina tive tissues clog, and the result is kid-ney trouble, bladder weakness, and a general decline in health.

When your kidneys feel like lumps of lead, your back hurts, or the urine of lead, your back nurs, or the areas is cloudy, full of sediment, or you are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night; if you suffer with sick headache or dizzy, nervous spells, acid stomach, or you have rheu-matism when the weather is bad, get from your pharmacist about four cunces of Jad Salts, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days, and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used to be acid of the sale of the sal has been used for generations to flush and stimulate clogged kidneys, to neutralize the acids in the urine so it no longer is a source of irritation, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, cannot in-jure, makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water beverage, and belongs in every home, because nobody can make a mistake by having a good kidney flushing any time.

Who Is Responsible for the Dearth of Preachers?

BY J. H. M'BROOM.

The brotherhood is beginning to realize that we have a dearth of preachers. This dearth has been approaching for several years; and unless conditions are changed and causes removed, it is going to be ten times greater twenty years from now.

The dearth has come because Christian young men have refused and neglected to enter the ministry, while many preachers have quit, or partly so, to enter various secular professions, and many have been called to their eternal reward.

Who is responsible? God? No. Christ? Nay, verily. Who, then, is responsible?

In the first place, Christian parents are responsible. Generally speaking, they have not had a clear vision of the church of God and her work. They have not taught and encouraged their boys to become Christians, church workers, and faithful ministers of the gospel, as they should. Now, Christian fathers and mothers, if you, after due reflection, meditation, and prayer, can get the consent of your mind that you have done what you could along this line, rest assured that this is not for you. I mean for it to apply to and arouse those fathers and mothers who cannot honestly conclude that they have done their duty in this great work. I will leave this phase of the question here, as Brother J. W. Brents has already touched upon it in the Gospel Advocate, and suggest that you re-read his article with a free mind and an honest heart.

In the second place, Christian young men and young preachers are responsible. I do not mean for this to be a rebuke, but a charge and exhortation in the spirit of 1 Tim. 5: 1. All along, and especially in recent years, young men have had a hesitancy in becoming willing to make a reasonable sacrifice to tell the "glad tidings" to the people for whom Christ gave "himself a ransom."

Let us look for a moment at this unwillingness to sacrifice in the hearts of many of our young men. Upon entering the business world for them: selves, they seem to have the spirit of "get rich quick," and at the beginning they want a well-equipped farm or an established business, and, in fact, everything better than their fathers have after many years of toil, economy, and sacrifice. I know we live in a faster age than our fathers, but I believe our spirit is not in proportion with the swiftness of the age. It is all right for us to have all these things, but we should be very careful lest we lose the spirit of honest work, hardship, endurance, patience, self-denial, thrift, and sacrifice. I believe this same spirit keeps many young men out of the ministry. If they knew they would become "big preachers" in a few months without much work and sacrifice, and from the beginning preach for the strong, well-supporting churches, no doubt many would gladly enter. But the idea of a few years' hard work and study in preparation; the sacrifice of time, pleasure, and money; passing through the practice and starvation periods; and preaching for the poor, undeveloped, and nonpaying churches-such a prospect causes the great majority to crush the impulse and shrink back. I think, too, this spirit has caused many young preachers-and older ones, perhapsto quit the ministry. The glorious success they had in mind did not come as soon and as easy as they expected, and they became discouraged, downhearted, and blue, and had to quit.

Again, our young men and preachers, in their ambition for material possessions, have compared the homes, conveniences, luxuries, and bank accounts of preachers and men spending their energies in other callings, and have found the preachers wanting. They have read and heard the hearttouching appeals from many of our good, old, faithful preachers, who have spent their lives in preaching the gospel without sufficient support. In these days young men with health and ambition dread the idea of calling on others for help. Under present conditions, should we not be very careful about criticizing young men for not entering the ministry or for quitting it?

Young men, as a young man with you, let me ask you to join me in vividly realizing that the future growth of the church of Jesus Christ and the salvation of souls depend largely upon us. We readily understand that if no more babies are born it cannot be long before the earth will be left desolate. Then, cannot we clearly see that if young men quit entering the ministry it cannot be long until there will be no "men of God" to "contend earnestly for the faith which was once for all delivered unto the saints?" Think a minute, and see the thousands of people in darkness-under the burden of sin-lost! As we lift our eyes toward Calvary and see Jesus in the agony of death, the blood of the Lamb of God trickling down the cross, all for the redemption of these people, are we not moved to go and tell them Constipation ?

FIFTEEN YEARS OF BLACK-DRAUGHT

Black - Draught Highly Recommended by Illinois Man for Liver and Stomach Disorders Used it for Fifteen Years

Singerton, Ill.-"For fifteen years we have used Thedford's Black-Draught, and have not as yet found anything that could take its place," writes Mr. W. F. Rister, of this town. "I have used it for indigestion a number of times, and it gives relief," continues Mr. Rister.

"For sour stomach, a heavy, bloated feeling, it is splendid; and when the liver gets torpid, so that when you stoop and raise up suddenly you feel dizzy, a few doses will set you straight.

"We keep it and use for constipation and the above troubles, and find it most satisfactory. I can recommend it to others, and gladly do so. For the number of years I have used Black-Draught now, I ought to know."

In its seventy years of usefulness, Thedford's Black-Draught has relieved thousands and thousands of persons suffering from the results of a disordered liver; and, like Mr. Rister, many people feel that after using Black-Draught nothing can take its

Among the Colored Folks

Beginning on June 8, Brother Henry Clay and I held a ten-days' meeting at Beard's Mill, about nine miles south of Lebanon, Tenn. Three were baptized. We preached under a brush arbor. I believe that much good can be done at that place. In July I preached at Algood and baptized four. Brother T. H. Busby and I held a week's meeting at Vervila in August, with five added by baptism and seven reclaimed. I began a meeting at Lynchburg, Tenn., on September 21, which continued for one week. Nine made the good confession and were From there I went to baptized. Boon's Hill, where I held a week's meeting the latter part of September, with one restored to fellowship. I began a meeting at McMinnville on October 4 and continued it two and a half weeks. Nineteen persons made the confession during the meeting, and all except one were baptized "the same hour of the night." Several were restored to the faith. I am young in the cause, and I desire the prayers of all the faithful that I may do more work this year than last.

GILBERT A. JOHNSON.

I have just closed my first meeting with the Mitchell Chapel church of Christ. The meeting began on the third Sunday in February and continued eight days, with large crowds and fine interest throughout, persons were baptized and one was restored to fellowship. Among those that were baptized was John Mitchell, eighty-five years old. He was the first colored man to settle in this part of the country. He gave the lot, many years ago, on which the meetinghouse now stands. I found a loyal band of Christians here, and they are willing to do all they can to help make Texas what it should be. They are having fellowship with me in the Beaumont work, which is so badly needed. Let all help the Beaument brethren to build a meetinghouse. Those who wish to aid these brethren in this work may send their contributions to G. W. Middleton, Caldwell, Texas, Route 1, Box 140, or to me. Correspondents will please note that my address has been changed from Dallas to Beaumont, Route 1, Box 2-a. All that are expecting me to hold meetings in other States should write me at an early date.

JOHN THOMAS RAMSEY.

Letter to McHenry and Martin.

BY J. MADISON WRIGHT.

Niagara Falls, Ontario, Canada, March 11, 1920,-Messrs, W. Hume McHenry and S. O. Martin.-Brethren: Your tract, "In the Roll of the Book It is Written," has come to hand, for which I thank you. I have read and re-read it. I see your purpose in sending it is to convert me to your present belief, which is commendable. The man who does not want to convert others to his belief has not the right thing yet. I see you propose to do it by what is written in the Book-the Bible-which makes it safe for me. "Let mistaken beliefs and human traditions crumble before the voice of our God." And to make sure that our conclusions are safe, you leave it all to the Holy Spirit's guidance, so that I am not to rest on human opinion, or human reasoning, in anything, but only what is written in the roll of the Book. I accept this and proceed to consider your message to me.

I. THE TEN COMMANDMENTS.

(1) You quote Ps. 40: 8; 19: 7, to show God has a law. We understand from "the roll of the Book" that God has given law to man in three modes, dispensations, or economies-the patriarchal, in which, by voice or angel, he spake his will to the patriarch of a family or people; the Jewish, in which, by Moses or the prophets, he wrote his will to the Jews; and the Christian, in which, by his Son or apostles, he gave his will to all men.

(2) "The law is the standard by which the world will be judged." (Rom. 3: 19, 20.) You say Rom. 1: 18-32 shows the Gentile world is lost. Rom, 2: 1 to 3: 20 shows the Jewish world is lost. As Jews and Gentiles make up the entire world, hence all the world is lost in sin, and brought under the judgment of [become guilty before | God. But this does not say all the world, Jew and Gentile, will be judged by the law God gave the Jews through Moses. If it did, it would conflict with Rom, 2: 11-16, in which it is written that men will be judged by the gospel. The Jew who lived before the gospel was given to the world will be judged by the law given by Moses. The Gentile who lived before the gospel was given to the world, to whom God gave no law, will be judged by the work of the law in their hearts, their thoughts, their consciousness of what is right and wrong. But John 12: 48-50; Rom. 2: 16; James 2: 12 (James 1: 21-25); and Col. 1: 23 show the gospel given will judge all men, Jew and Gentile, in the day of judgment.

(3) "God's law is the Ten Commandments." You quote no scripture for this statement. But as it is connected with your next statement, we will consider it there.

(4) "These are . . upon man from Eden to the farthest expanse of eternity." The only writing you quote for this statement is A. Campbell and Professor Grubbs. But their writing is not inspired writing. They are not God, nor a prophet, nor the sons of prophets. And we are agreed not to take man's opinion in anything, but be guided by the Spirit. What saith the Spirit in the roll of the Book? Twenty-five hundred years roll into the past, and in the roll of the Book, from Eden on to the end, we do not find one word about any one being bound to keep the ten commands. The roll of the Book is silent; let us be silent. But from Sinai's dreadful summit God's voice breaks the silence of the centuries, and we hear Ex. 20: 2-17. This is the first time we read in the roll of the Book of the ten commands being bound on any one. Our agreement is to be guided by what is written in the roll of the Book, and to "let mistaken beliefs and human traditions crumble before the voice of God." 1 stand by the agreement. Do you? Then, our faith, based on what is written in the roll of the Book, stands agreed that no one from Eden to Sinai was bound to keep the ten commands. But God says further: Deut. 5: 3-21. You call the ten commands God's law, God calls them his covenant. (Ex. 34: 27, 28; Deut, 5: 3-22.) "Jehovah made not this covenant with our fathers, but with us," says Moses to Israel. Then the ten commands were not bound on Adam, Noah, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. Nothing can be more positive than God's words on this point. If all the learned men from Adam to the pretentious present should rise up and say they were binding on men from Eden to Sinai, I would stand by "the roll of the Book" and say with God they were not. Will you? But you take a sweep in the other direction and say they are binding on men to the farthest expanse of eternity. That is too far for me to see; let us turn to the Book. (Jer. 31; 31-34; Heb. 8: 7 to 10; 31.) God, Christ, and the Holy Spirit make it positive in these words that the covenant made at Sinai passed away at the death of Christ and that his blood sealed the new covenant, the new testament, the gospel of Christ, And this gospel is God's eternal covenant with man. (Heb. 12: 24; 13: 20, 21.) So the covenant of ten commands reached no farther toward Eden than Sinai and no farther toward eternity than Calvary. To the antediluvian world in open atheistical disregard of duty, with never a suggestion of a thought of idolatry, what purpose could the commands serve: "Thou shalt not make a graven image, nor bow down to it?" To these times of the Gentiles, when every nation on earth is Gentile and not one Jewish, to what point could be the words: "Remember thou wast a servant in the land of Egypt, and God brought thee out thence; therefore God commanded thee to keep the Sabbath day?" And in the eternal world where there is neither male nor female, to what end the decalogue, "Thou shalt not commit adultery?" And where they neither marry nor are given in marriage, "Thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's wife?" The absurdity is apparent. As unreasonable as it is unscriptural. But to Israel, and at the time named, nothing could be more peculiarly appropriate in all its parts than "the ten commands on holy Sinai given."

Grandma Used Sage Tea to Darken Hair

The Mixed Sulphur With it to Re-store Color, Gloss, Youthfulness

Common garden sage brewed into a heavy tea, with sulphur added, will turn gray, streaked, and faded hair beautifully dark and luxuriant. Just a few applications will prove a revelation if your hair is fading, streaked, or gray. Mixing the Sage Tea and sulphur recipe at home, though, is troublesome. An easier way is to get a bottle of Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound at any drug store all ready for use. This is the old-time recipe improved by the addition of other ingredients.

While wispy, gray, faded hair is not sinful, we all desire to retain our youthful appearance and attractiveness. By darkening your hair with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound, no one can tell, because it does it so naturally, so evenly. You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning all gray hairs have disappeared, and, after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, glossy, soft, and luxuriant.

DIPP-ACHES

"Scarcity of Preachers" Reviewed.

BY F. O. HOWELL.

A strange thought is being harbored in the minds of some of our good preaching brethren with reference to the financial side of the preacher's life. A few preachers who plow to live, and who preach a little on the side, think all preachers should plow or do something else for a livelihood and preach at odd times. Those who hold to this position seem to think that preachers who do not have some other business on the side, or, rather, who do not have a business to make their way and preach on the side, have nothing to do except. "loaf around town, whittle boxes, tell jokes, and watch the trains." This is an unfortunate conception which tends to destroy the usefulness of those who hold it.

Such preachers write about the need of preachers of the "Pauline type;" but their contention is in defiance of the teaching of Paul rather than in harmony with it. What did Paul teach on this subject? Hear him: "Even so did the Lord ordain that they that preach the gospel should live of the gospel." (1 Cor. 9: 14:) Again: "I robbed other churches, taking wages of them that I might minister unto you." (2 Cor. 11: 8.) Paul told the Corinthians that he committed a sin when he preached to them for nothing (2 Cor 11: 7), and further on he said: "Forgive me this wrong" (2 Cor. 12: 13). When did Paul make tents to support himself and those that worked with him? He did this at no time, save when he had no other means for bread. The Philippian church had fellowship with Paul for eleven years as he went forth and preached the gospel. In writing to Timothy, Paul says, "The laborer is worthy of his hire for wages];" and. "Thou shalt not muzzle the ox when he treadeth out the corn;" and that they that "labor in the word and doctrine" are "worthy of double honor." (See 1 Tim, 5: 17, 18.)

I deny that Paul or any other inspired man ever taught, either by example or precept, that the preacher of the gospel should have any other occupation, profession, or business, other than preaching the word. It is permissible under the divine law for a preacher to engage in any business that he wishes, provided it is honorable and he conducts his business hon-

In the spring of 1893 I was attacked by Muscular and Inflammatory Rheumatism. I suffered as only those who have it know, for over three years. I tried remedy after remedy and doctor after doctor, but auch relief as I received was only temporary. Finally I found a remedy that cured me completely, and it has never returned. I have given it to a number who were terribily afflicted, and even bedridden with Rheumatism, and it affected a cure in every case.

I want every sufferer from any form of rheumatic trouble to try this marvelous healing power. Don't send a cent; simply mall your name and address, and I will send it free to try. After you have used it and it has proven itself to be that long-looked-for means of curing your Rheumatism, you may send the price of it, one dollar; but, understand, I do not want your money unless you are perfectly satisfied to send it. Isn't that fair? Why auffer any longer, when positive relief is thus offered you free? Don't delay, Write to-day.

orably; but the preacher is not commanded to look to any source for a living other than the churches to whom he ministers in spiritual things. Some preachers who farm think every preacher should farm; some who evangelize all the time think every preacher should evangelize all the time. The divine law does not bear such a construction, and he who thus contends violently tortures the truth and manifests his ignorance of its teaching.

To-day we are confronted with conditions for which there is no excuse. Many preachers of brilliant intellect and splendid education along literary lines are devoting their time to teaching, farming, keeping books, and other lines of business, and are not qualifying themselves to feed the babes in the kingdom of God. Such preachers usually recite well "first principles" and wield "the sword of the Spirit" vigorously against sectarianism; but when this is said, all is said. They know nothing of the weightier matters of the law.

Personally, let me say that I have always engaged in some kind of business other than preaching the gospel. I have exercised my privilege along this line, and I expect to continue thus to do. But it is my privilege; it is not God's decree that I should do this.

The churches who know the need of real spiritual teaching along practical lines are often hard pressed to find a preacher who can do this character of work, due to no cause other than that preachers have been so busy farming, teaching school, and a thousand other things, that they have not qualified themselves to do this much-neglected and much-needed work.

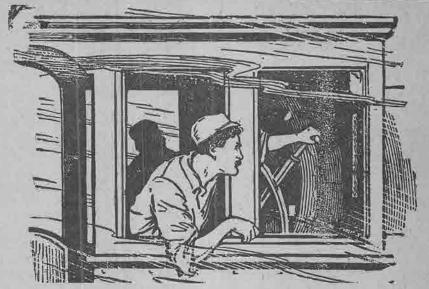

I do not mean to criticize any one unduly, but we should study to know the fullness of the truth along these lines before we write so much. Let us not envy one another.

EDITORIAL FOREWORD

E may properly call this the "Brotherly Discussion" Number. An exchange of views among our contributors on the question of the identity of the church and kingdom awakened considerable interest in the discussion. Other brethren sent us articles bearing on the same subject, with the request that they be printed as early as possible. We did not have space in our regular numbers to print these articles, and, rather than hold them longer, we decided to let them appear in this special number. The articles are written in vigorous and pointed style; there is no lack of Christian courtesy and brotherly love.

The editors of the Gospel Advocate do not wish to be one-sided in their selection of themes, favoring one subject in the contents to the exclusion of others; nor do they wish to prolong any discussion beyond the limit of what its importance deserves. We hope, therefore, that those who have kindly favored us with the articles on this particular subject appearing in this number will be pleased with the generous position and the wide circulation accorded them and will agree with us that it would not be wise to prolong this discussion further. It has been fully covered, and that, too, in a thoughtful and scholarly way.

In addition to the discussion of the church and the kingdom question, our readers will find some very helpful articles bearing upon subjects of practical importance. Each one deserves a careful reading in the light of Bible teaching.

"Grace to you and peace from God the Father, and our Lord Jesus Christ, who gave himself for our sins, that he might deliver us out of this present evil world, according to the will of our God and Father: to whom be the glory for ever and ever. Amen." (Gal. 1: 3-5.)

Identity of the Church and Kingdom

R. D. Smith's Exposition.

This question is important chiefly because of its effect upon other of our teachings; and the discussion grows out of the fact that each of the disputants thinks his position necessary to the harmony of all the scriptures upon the subject. Hence, if it is possible to harmonize all passages with one or the other of the positions, that should be considered the safe position.

It seems to me that the difficulty in identifying the church and the kingdom arises from the assumption that "the kingdom" always means the same at every place. Of course, if this is true, the church and the kingdom are not identical. But a little investigation reveals the fact that the identity of "the kingdom" is perhaps as difficult to prove as the identity of the church and the kingdom, and the same may be said of "the church," if no regard is paid to the contextual meaning of words.

The words "church" and "kingdom" come from the Greek words "ekkleesia" and "basileta," to which are attached several shades of meanings. And since, surely, no one is trying to identify all of the definitions of these words, broadly speaking, it is wise to begin by making some distinctions, that we may understand what we are trying to identify.

Let us first distinguish between kingdoms (basileia). This word is used in the New Testament of the devil's kingdom; of the temporal kingdoms; of the old Jewish economy; of that institution over which the reign of Christ extends at present; and of that institution into which the faithful Christian is promised an entrance. It is believed that proof will be asked for only the last two statements. For the first we cite Col. 1: 13, where Paul says to the Colossian Christians: "Who hath delivered us from the power of darkness, and hath translated us into the kingdom of his dear Son." These Christians were in the kingdom. For the last we cite 2 Pet. 1: 11, where Peter says to these Christians: "If ye do these things, ye shall never fall: for so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom. Obviously these last were in the kingdom, as well as the Colossian Christians; but, for all that, Peter promises them that upon compliance with certain conditions they shall enter "the everlasting kingdom."

From these facts it would seem plain enough that God's people are in a kingdom now and they are yet to enter another. But we are told that this only means two states of the kingdom: that we are in one state of the kingdom now and shall enter the other state later. If this is true, it is certainly strange that no scripture intimates such; while there are two very plain passages, as cited above, revealing as many kingdoms. Some fears are entertained that the "state" argument rests upon no better evidence than seeming necessity. The proof is here kindly asked for.

What, then, are we trying to identify the church with? Certainly it could only lie between the last two kingdoms mentioned. So, then, it is not with the one of 2 Pet. 1: 11, but with the one mentioned in Col. 1: 13.

Hence, the proposition is affirmed that the New Testament uses the terms "church" and "kingdom" as identical. Let us first define our proposition. By "the church" is meant that institution over which Christ is the Head; by "the kingdom" is meant that institution over which he reigns as King; and by "identical" is meant that the church and the kingdom comprehend one and the same thing.

We shall not here review the usual affirmative arguments for the identity of the church and the kingdom, but shall strive to reach a conclusion by the shortest possible route—that is, by answering the objections to this position. This done, it is believed that the analogy of the church and the kingdom is so strong that there should be no further question.

The first objection urged is that "the Bible nowhere says that the church and the kingdom are the same"—that is, in so many words. To be sure, it does not. Nor does it say that baptism and immersion are the same; but we are all confident that the Bible teaches it, nevertheless. And it may be that the same is true of this question. The proposition does not demand such proof. They may be the same whether the Bible says so in so many words or not. In answering the next objection this will appear, and will, therefore, also cover this objection.

The second objection noticed is one from Brother Ira C. Moore's article in a recent issue of the Firm Foundation. This objection to the identity of the church and the kingdom is urged upon the grounds that the "lexical" ideas of the words "ekkleesia" and "basileia" do not justify it. In presenting his argument for "lexical" authority, Brother Moore assures us of just how many times these words occur in the New Testament; and having made a careful count ourselves, we concede him corregt in his estimate; but, to save us, we cannot see what this proves one way or the other. It certainly is not a question as to how many times, nor in what various senses, these words are used, but clearly whether they are used with reference to the same thing. The fact that the lexicon does not define "basileia" by "ekkleesia" and "ekkleesia" by "basileia," and, if true, that the definitions of the two words cannot generally be interchanged, does not settle the question. If it can be shown that the words are used with reference to the same thing, the proposition is then Brother Moore admits that one of "basileia's" definitions can be interchanged with something in "ekkleesia's" definitions. This, we presume, is "kingdom." And while this is a small admission, it is ample for our purpose. Indeed, it is all we claim—that is, that the church is the kingdom. But this also puts him in good company, as will be seen from the following in regard to the "lexical" meanings of the words in question. If Thayer's definition of "basileia," as "a kingdom," and "ekkleesia," as "the church," had been given by Brother Moore, it would have defeated his "lexical" argument completely.

Let us then examine the lexicon. If the lexicographer, in defining these words, brings them to a like meaning, so that it can be seen that the same thing is being described, it is the thing contended for.

In defining "basileia," Thayer gives as one of the meanings "a kingdom;" and he does not leave us to guess what he means by the "basileia" as "a kingdom," but proceeds to tell us. After other meanings, he says: "But Jesus employed the phrase kingdom of God or of heaven to indicate that perfect order of things which he was about to establish, in which all those of every nation who should believe in him were to be gathered, together into one society, dedicated and intimately united to God, and made partakers of eternal salvation."

We will now notice his definition of "ekkleesia." After giving various meanings, he then says, "in a Christian sense," and after other meanings under this head he says: "The whole body of Christians scattered throughout the earth; collectively, all who worship and honor God and Christ in whatever place they may be."

Thus it seems to me that in these two instances the description is of the same thing; and, therefore, the identity is proven by "lexical" authority.

The third objection involves the question of harmony. It is said that some of the language used of the kingdom could not apply to the church. It is answered that the distinction in kingdom relieves the most of the passages of all difficulty, for it is easy to apply them to one or the other of the kingdoms; and the seeming difficult ones may be explained without much trouble.

The chief trouble in this respect is what seems to be the impossibility of identifying the attribute of eternity, belonging to the kingdom, with any such attribute in the church. They say they can read of eternal kingdom, but not of eternal church. Brother Scobey employs this argument, using Luke 1: 33 as a basis, and says: "I cannot by any stretch of the imagination see how this language can apply simply to the church as we see it to-day. The church will end." You will notice the reason he cannot see why is that he holds the church as temporal and the kingdom as eternal.

Perhaps we need not to stretch the imagination to see that the language may thus apply. It does not tax the intellect to read of that same quality, eternity or everlasting, in the church, as in the kingdom. At Eph. 3: 21, Paul says: "Unto him be glory in the church by Jesus Christ throughout all ages, world without end." But of the reign of Christ it is said: "He shall reign over the house of Jacob forever." (Luke 1: 33.) It will be noticed that the duration of the giving of glory in the church (ekkleesia) is expressed by the same word that is used to express the length or duration of the reign of Christ. In the first passage we have "eis pasas tas geneas tou aionos ton aionon "-" throughout all ages, world without end;" in the last we have "eis tous aionas"-" forever." Thus we have "eternal" or "everlasting" church as well as kingdom.

Then we are asked: "What will you do with Dan. 2: 44; Luke 1: 33; and other such passages?" The answer is: Apply them to the church, the kingdom, of which Christ is the Head and over which he reigns as King. But what shall we do with the eternity of the church, the kingdom? Would not this militate against the position that God's children are yet to enter "the everlasting kingdom?" Certainly, unless we can show the end of the eternity or everlasting ascribed to the church, the kingdom.

It is doubtless only necessary to mention that "aionos," in reference to duration of time, may mean anything from the length of a life to that of endlessness. Its meaning, therefore, must be arrived at from the various uses of the word as shown by the context. That "aionos" is sometimes illimitable or never ending is conceded; but does it mean this respecting the reign of Christ? Paul is doubtless the best authority; we shall hear him. At 1 Cor. 15: 24-28 it is said; "Then cometh the end, when he shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father; when he shall have put down all rule and all authority and power. For he must reign, till he hath put all enemies under his feet. The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death. . . . And when all things shall be subdued unto him, then shall the Son also himself be subject unto him that put all things under him, that God may be all and in all." From this it is seen that the "forever" of the reign of Christ has an end. Why, then, should the "forever" of the kingdom (Dan, 2: 44) give trouble? The kingdom can "stand forever," and yet end, as such, at the end of the reign of its King; and the church will stand as long as this kingdom,

My conclusions, therefore, are that the New Testament uses the word "kingdom" for that institution which God (Dan. 2: 44) promised to "set up;" and that this is the church which Jesus (Matt. 16: 18) said, "I will build;" and that this kingdom, the church, is preparatory to another kingdom, "the everlasting kingdom," into which the Christian is promised "an entrance" upon conditions.

Ira C. Moore Presents His Views.

Brethren Scobey, Srygley, and Smith have been indulging in an interesting discussion in the Gospel Advocate lately over whether the terms "church" and "kingdom," as modified by the phrase "of Christ," are synonymous, mean the same thing or institution, or whether they are different "institutions." I may be regarded as "butting in" where I have no business; but I am always interested in the discussion of this subject, and under the present circumstances I cannot well hold my peace after having read Brother Srygley's last in the Advocate of March 11. Possibly Brother Scobey will look after him in proper style, but my contribution may aid in clarifying the subject and encourage some one.

To start with and to prevent any faulty prejudging, I will say that I have no sympathy whatever with any "future-kingdomist" or "vestibule" theory. That the kingdom of Christ has been "set up" and is now the ruling government of heaven, whether there are any obedient subjects of it or not, I feel my ability to prove against any foe that may arise; and that the church of Christ is the body of people who are subject to that kingdom or ruling power, I feel equally able to show. But now I have "done gone and done it"—taken issue with Brethren Smith and Srygley and all those grand, good brethren who contend for the identity of the church and kingdom.

It is not stating a new fact to the readers when we say that Christ and the apostles did not speak and write in the English language. They spoke and wrote in Greek, and in order to ascertain their meaning we must have access to lexicons of that language and from them get welldefined conceptions of the meaning of the words they use, and then use those words with that significance, or else we misrepresent the apostles. On other questions, such as baptism, brethren promptly refer to the lexicons to ascertain the meanings of "baptizo," "rantizo," and "cheo," and they usually stand by those definitions valiantly. But it really appears that those who write in favor of the identity of church and kingdom have but little regard for the lexical definitions of the two words from which they are translated. The fact that they have no meaning in common has no bearing on the question. I myself was once as they are, having been taught from the beginning of my religious life that the two are identical. I have observed, too, that every one who writes in favor of their identity never falls to use terms and arguments and scriptures that recognize their separate identity and consequent difference. A favorite argument in favor of their synonymous character is that the same act by which a person is inducted into the church also puts him into the kingdom; therefore the church and the kingdom are identical and the terms synonymous. The fact that Paul declares in language that cannot be misunderstood that the church is in the kingdom (Col. 1: 13) has no weight against the conclusion. If there are five hundred people in a building having but one place of ingress, and some one else comes into that building, he thus becomes a part of the audience. But the same act of entering which made him a part of the audience also put him into the building. Shall we conclude from this that he also became a part of the building -perhaps a sleeper-and conclude that the audience and the building are identical-" mean the same institution?" Of course not. Then might it not be possible that persons can enter the kingdom and not be the kingdom, though they enter both church and the kingdom by the same act and at the same time?

Every opponent of their separate identity admits the difference in the meaning of the words "church" and "kingdom," and then they proceed at once to stultify their admission and to show that they mean exactly the same thing! The standard meaning of words furnishes us with the only sure and safe foundation for a safe, sane, correct conclusion on this or any other question involving the teaching of scripture. Without well-defined conceptions of the standard meaning of the words in controversy in our minds as we speak and write on the subject, we will be like a mariner at sea without compass, chart, or rudder. Words are signs of ideas, and the standard definition of the word is the proper idea the word, used correctly, expresses. As the apostles spoke in Greek, we must ascertain from dictionaries of that language (lexicons) the meanings of the words they used.

I have but two lexicons by me, but I have examined many of them on the words "ekkleesia" and "basileia," the ones from which "church" and "kingdom," respectively, are translated, and find that "ekkleesia" is universally defined as "the called-out, the assembly, church;" and "basileia" is as universally defined as meaning "authority, dominion, power, realm, rule, reign." These are the elements of a government. The first is used one hundred and fifteen times in the New Testament, in not more than one of which can the word "basileia" or any of its meanings be substituted for it and convey what evidently was the design of the writer. The term "basileia" is found one hundred and sixty-one times in the New Testament, and in no more than one instance can the lexical meaning of "church" be used in its place and make good sense. In the lexical definitions of the words, no meaning of one is also used as the meaning of the other. This is not the character of synonymns: they, like "commence" and "begin," the only two perfect synonymns, are defined alike. How can two words "mean the same institution" when they are of no akin in their meanings? As well say that "rantizo" means "baptize."

These facts are worthy of the serious consideration of other brethren as they are worthy of mine. They converted me from the theory of identity many years ago; but neither they nor any other facts concerning the proper use of words converted me to the absurd position that "the church is but the vestibule of the kingdom," nor to the other equally absurd position that the kingdom of Christ is not yet "set up," but is to be in some indefinite time and way. The kingdom of Christ, which is the rule, reign, authority, dominion, power, government of Christ, was set up at Jerusalem in the year 30 A.D., on Pentecost. It is true, as Brother Srygley says, the church came into existence at the same time and place, but not true that both "were built of the same material." The kingdom "was built" of the authority, power, and dominion of Jesus as expressed and defined in his commandments, promises, and instructions which mark out and limit human thought and action; while the church "was built" of men and women who submitted themselves to the authority, dominion, power, and reign of King Jesus. The coming into existence of the kingdom is what made it possible for the church to come into existence. "Church" and "kingdom" are correlated terms, the first implying the other. just as "citizens" and "government" are. There can be no legitimate use for the word "citizen" where there is no government. The first implies the existence of the other, and the term "government" assures us that citizenship is a possibility. The term "church" implies the existence of the kingdom, while the reality of the kingdom assures us that citizenship in it is a possibility and glorious prive ilege; or, in other words, that the church may come into existence where it now does not exist. The church did not come into existence on the day of Pentecost simultaneously with the setting up of the authority, dominion, power, reign, rule, dominion, of Christ. These must of necessity be established first, and shown to the people to be established, before any of them would change citizenship from the Jewish theocracy into the new kingdom. The kingdom rule, reign, authority, dominion, power, and kingship of Christ were in the minds of prophets and bards through many centuries prior to his coming. Preserving the seed of Abraham that Christ might come according to the divine purpose; the types and shadows under the law; the prophecies concerning Jesus and his reign and the forgiveness of sins; the promise of the Holy Spirit baptism; the crucifixion of Christ and his glorious resurrection-these are but steps in the setting up of his kingdom. But the culmination of the whole matter occurs at Pentecost at Jurusalem. The authority, dominion, power, rule, reign, kingship of Christ was then shown to have been set up by the God of heaven, and there established in the minds of the thousands who cried out and asked what they must do. They see that a new kingdom, rule, reign, authority, dominion, power, government, has been established or set up, and that the privilege is extended to them of becoming citizens in it. The conditions of entering into the new kingdom are announced to them. They obey, and thus, with the apostles, become the church. They do not become the kingdom, but they and all others who obey the same things come into the kingdom.

The kingdom is not "ruled by Christ," but the church is: "But as the church is subject "-subject-SUBJECT to Christ." (Eph. 5: 24.) It is subject to Christ by being subject to his rule, reign, authority, dominion, power, the gospel. The term "dominion" has special reference to the extent of the application of Jesus' authority as expressed in the gospel; and the prophecy in Luke 1: 31-33, that "of his kingdom there shall be no end," evidently refers to the extent or universality of his dominion. No one can go deep enough into the earth, high enough into the air, far enough to sea or in any direction, to be beyond the dominion of Christ; everywhere that man may be found he is under obligation to obey Christ-is under his dominion; and when and wherever he obeys the conditions of entering the kingdom, he becomes thereby one of the called-out, one of the spiritual assembly, a member of the church or body of Christ.

Let us approach the Lord's fundamental law concerning entering the kingdom, as announced to Nicodemus, keeping the established meaning of "ekkleesia" (church) in mind. It means the called-out, the assembly-those called out of darkness into light; out of the kingdom of Satan into the kingdom of the Son of God's love; and as "light" must exist before any one can be called into it, so must the kingdom of the Son of his love exist before any one can be called into it. And when Jesus said to Nicodemus, "Except one be born of water and the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God," he certainly implied the establishment and existence of that kingdom before any one could enter into it. If the called-out, the assembly, are also the kingdom, how is any one going to enter into that kingdom when there is no assembly or called-out ones? According to our identity brethren, no church, no kingdom; "they are the same," as frequently affirmed by my esteemed brother, Srygley. Then when we go back to the time when there were no called-out, no church or obedient people, how is any one going to enter into that body or assembly when no body or assembly exists?

If we keep in mind that the kingdom of God or of Christ is his reign, rule, power, dominion, authority, realm, or government, and that these elements are represented and expressed by his commands, instructions, laws, and promises in the gospel, and that he is the King in his government, all is plain enough. The church consists of people; while the kingdom is the spiritual realm, the authority, the rule, the government, in which and under which they are citizens. The difference between the church and the kingdom is that between citizens and government; between the ones ruled over and that which rules over them; between the reigned over and that which reigns over them; between the fish in the net and the net which caught and holds and controls the fish; between the meal into which the leaven was hidden and the leaven which was hidden in the meal.

Jesus said: "Upon this rock I will build my church, and the gates of Hades shall not prevail against it. I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom." Is this the same as saying, "I will give unto thee the keys of the church?" If we keep in mind that the church consists of people, human beings, it becomes ridiculous to think of it that way. "Kingdom" here, as elsewhere, means infinitely more than the "church" is defined to mean. It means that realm, rule, reign, dominion, authority, government, power, to which if one submits he becomes a part of the church, a citizen in a new kingdom. We become the church or called-out ones by entering the kingdom; but we do not become the authority, dominion, power, reign, rule, government of Christ, and there is no process by which we can become the kingdom. We can become the reignedover ones, the ruled-over, the governed, the ones in the realm or the dominion of Christ; but we never can become the reigning, ruling power, the realm, the dominion, the kingdom. The church consists of people, human beings, possessed of the kind of faith and life and character which the government or kingdom of Christ creates, having a different kingdom, realm, domain, sphere, dominion, in which to live and exercise their God-given faculties and powers than in the kingdom of Satan. Jesus furnished the realm, dominion, authority, government, or kingdom, for us, and invites all who are in the kingdom of Satan to pass through that transforming and translating process known as "the new birth," by which they sever connection and citizenship with the kingdom of Satan and enter into the kingdom of Christ, by which entrance they become the called-out, or church, those who are assembled in the kingdom of Christ, there to live and labor as his servants.

Further Discussion by James E. Scobey.

I have read with interest the article of Brother Srygley in the Gospel Advocate of March 11. I wish to notice some of his statements and give attention to some of his conclusions.

Brother Srygley is more than confident that the church and kingdom are identically the same institution and the limitations of the one is the extent of the other.

Brother Srygley says: "It is freely admitted that these two words do not mean the same thing." Of course not. Words are the signs of ideas. So the idea of "church" is not the idea of "kingdom." The inference, then, is unavoidable that "church" and "kingdom" are two different things. Now, I state that the kingdom of Christ is not limited to the church and embraces more in meaning than "church"

So far as the beginning of the reigh of Jesus which God, his Father, bestowed on him, as well as the building of his church, is concerned, I readily agree with him that it was on Pentecost. At that time and in Jerusaiam there was the beginning of the church. But all power and authority had been conferred on him and assumed by him prior to the founding of the church. None could become plembers of his church who were not already his disciples, unless they should enter his kingdom; and Jesus himself stated (John 3: 3-5) the condition. Peter had the keys of the kingdom (not of the church), and he opened up the way into the kingdom, and about three thousand souls were added unto them. They had thus been translated out of the kingdom of darkness into the kingdom of God's dear Son. In the kingdom they were saved; and the Lord added to the church daily those being saved. (Acts 2: 47.) Every living soul which has been translated into the kingdom belongs to, or is in, the church.

There is no point of difference between my brother and myself, except as to whether the kingdom which God bestowed on Jesus embraces more souls than those who belong to, or have belonged to, the church.

It will not be denied that God, the Father, promised his Son to give him the kingdom or throne of his father David (Luke 1: 31-33) and that he was to rule over the house of Jacob forever. And God "set up" this kingdom on Pentecost. Now, to understand this phrase, "set up," I refer you to the use of it in reference to God setting up a throne. "To translate the kingdom from the house of Saul, and to set up the throne of David over Israel and over Judah, from Dan even to Beersheba." (2 Sam. 3: 10.) "set up" the kingdom for his Son by translating all power and authority in heaven and in earth to Jesus Christ. I have said that Jesus never "set up" a kingdom; that I found no such statement in the Book; but I had overlooked, Brother Srygley says, Acts 15: 16, where "set up" is used, which is a quotation from 2 Sam. 7: 16. Now, I agree with him that "set up" is the proper term to use, as is demonstrated by its use in the Book. But that is not the question here. "Who 'set up' the kingdom?" is the question. I have affirmed and shown, as I believe. God in those days "set up" a kingdom, one which should have no end. The only way to escape this conclusion seems to be, on the part of my brother, to make a long quotation from John 1: 1-3. This he concludes "is broad enough to include the kingdom." No one will deny, I suppose, that in the beginning of creation the Word was the means of the creation of the universe. But the church was not one of the things created then, was it? In writing to the Colossians, Paul, who would give them an exalted conception of the power, majesty, and dominion of the Christ, says for "by him" (as the means) God uses and did use in the creation of all things the Word, and without him there would be nothing to "consist." Then the apostle adds: "And he is the head of the body, the church." But this by no means proves that the church and the kingdom are the same institution, because the quotation begins with "kingdom" and ends with "church."

Certainly Christ is the head of the church, and it is his body. He built the church; he purchased those who form his church with his own blood. (Acts 20: 28.) Now I raise the question: Did not Christ purchase more souls by his blood than those who have become members of his church? He shed his blood to blot out the sins of all God's people in the past, as well as those in the present, whether living or dead. It hardly will be denied that Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and the prophets are still living (Matt. 22: 32) and are in the kingdom of God (Luke 13: 28).

Brother Srygley seems to be sure that "house" and "kingdom" in the quotation from 2 Sam. 7: 16 refer to the same institution. He admits the words do not mean the same thing. Certainly they do not, and for that reason are not in apposition as he states, nor does one explain the other, and for another good reason they are connected by the conjunction "and." "House" in this quotation refers to the progeny of David, who would become king of Judah and of Israel. We read of the "house" of the Hohenzollerns, of the Hapsburgs, etc., referring to those families. But I know of no instance where "house" refers to a kingdom. My brother should have read all of 2 Sam. "House" often refers to a collection of people, as the "House of Lords," "House of Commons," "House of Representatives," but never to a nation or people as a whole in this age. It might properly be used when reference is made to a people springing from one progenitor. So our brother's argument, founded on his think so, that "king-dom" means "house" and "house" means "church," then the church and the kingdom are the same, falls through.

In the last quotation from Heb. 12: 22, 23, etc., which speaks of coming to "the church of the first-born," and in verse 28, which says, "Wherefore we receiving a kingdom which cannot be moved," etc., I am unable to see that "the church of the first-born," with other great things to which we have come, should be regarded as the kingdom they had received more than the company of angels. If an inference is to be drawn at all, we might conclude that all the things mentioned constituted the kingdom, and not the church alone. If Brother Srygley is right in his "think so's," then I am wrong; but if I am right, he is wrong. Please read his criticism in connection with my answer; and then you may be in doubt, as some others have been; and still you have before you about all that can be said on the subject worthy of your consideration, from which you may be able to be satisfied. I now leave the whole matter to the reader.

General Reply by F. B. Srygley.

In the present and a former issue of the Gospel Advocate there are no less than three men—Brethren Scobey, Jackson, and Moore—after me because I said that I was positive the church of Christ and the kingdom of Christ are the same. Since all have had their say, I am allowed to take one shot at the bunch and be done with it. My position is so clearly and plainly taught in the New Testament that I do not see how any one could fail to see it. I feel like letting the dear, good brethren alone and let them see it themselves.

Why would the Lord establish two perfect institutions at the same time for the same purpose? If there are two institutions, as they say, both were established to save man, and either one will do it without the other. Then why should there be two? "Ye are complete in him, which is the head of all principality and power." (Col. 2: 10:) To be in him is to be in his spiritual body, the church. New, if we are complete in the church, how much "completer" can we be by being in the kingdom, too, provided there are two institutions instead of one?

In my last article I gave three passages where the two words "kingdom" and "church" are used to describe the same thing. (Matt. 16: 17, 18; Col. 1: 13, 18; Heb. 12: 23, 28.) If either of my reviewers explained this matter, I failed to see it.

But let me try it again: "Now therefore ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow citizens with the saints, and of the household of God; and are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone; in whom all the building fitly framed together groweth unto a holy temple in the Lord: in whom ye also are builded together for a habitation of God through the Spirit." (Eph. 2: 19-22.) seems to me that every one ought to be able to see that the "building" in this passage is the church, and that the "household" is the same. But how about "fellow citizens?" "Citizens" implies a government, either a republic or a monarchy. In this case it is an unlimited monarchy, and Jesus is the Monarch or King. All Christians are citizens of that kingdom; but all Christians are in the household, or church, for the reason that "kingdom," "household," and "church" are all used to describe the same thing.

But again: "Ye also, as lively stones, are built up a spiritual house, a holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God by Jesus Christ." (2 Pet. 2: 5.) I suppose that all three of my reviewers will agree that the "spiritual house of this verse is the church, and that the "lively stones" and "holy priesthood" are the people that compose it. But in the same chapter the apostle says: "But ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a peculiar people." (Verse 9.) The "royal priesthood" of this verse must be the same as the "holy priesthood" of verse 6; but the "holy priesthood" of verse 6 is the same as the "spiritual house," or the church. But in verse 9 he says: "Ye are. . . . a holy nation." A nation implies a government—a holy government. This holy government is the kingdom of Christ; but the kingdom of Christ is the same as the "spiritual house," which is the church.

I am willing to risk my case on these five passages; but for fear my reviewers might feel slighted if I should not mention anything they say, I will now give attention to some questions raised by them.

Brother Scobey says that I have admitted that the two words "kingdom" and "church" do not mean the same thing; and as words are the signs of ideas, so the idea of "church" is not the idea of "kingdom." Very well, I grant that; but when the word "kingdom" is so described as to mean the rule of Christ now on the earth, and the word "church" is so described as to mean the called-out body of Christ, they describe the same institution; therefore, the church of Christ and the kingdom of Christ are the same thing. Let me ask, if because these two words mean different things proves that there are two institutions, why could I not prove by the same logic that there are a half dozen institutions and not just two, as Brother Scobey says? The word "household" does not mean the same thing as "church" or "kingdom," and the apostle uses that word. Why not say now that Christ established three different things on Pentecost-the kingdom, the church, the household? These all mean different things, and, according to two of my reviewers, they could not be applied to the same thing. The "house" of God, which Paul says is the church, is a different word from either of the other three. "Body" does not mean the same as "house," "household," "church," or "kingdom." Therefore, according to my reviewers, there are five institutions.

But let me try another way. Brother Scobey is a citizen of Nashville, a husband, and a father. Now these three words are different, but they can all be applied to Brother Scobey. This does not prove that he is three different and distinct men, one in the other, but only one man described by all three of these words. If I were talking about him and had reference to the relations that existed between him and his wife, I would say he is a good and faithful husband; but if my mind were on his sons and daughters, I would say he is a Christian father. Does this make two of him? No more than it makes two institutions for God to talk of his kingdom and his church. This is the very reason that more than one word was used. All these ideas are in the one institution. When the writers of the Bible would emphasize the rule or government of God, they would call it a "kingdom;" but when they wished to bring out the idea of a called-out body, they spoke of it as the "church." If worship were the idea to emphasize, they referred to it as the "temple" of God. Of course, words are the signs of ideas, and all these ideas are in this glorious spiritual institution.

Brother Scobey is right when he says Peter had the keys of the kingdom, but wrong when he adds "but not of the church." Peter had the power to bind and loose in the kingdom, here called "the kingdom of heaven." "And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven: and whatsgever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven." (Matt. 16: 19.) It will be remembered how that the Savior had said in the verse just preceding this, "I will build my church." But Brother Scobey cannot see that he was talking about the same thing; for he says Peter did open the kingdom on Pentecost, but not the church. That might be so if there were two institutions "set up" on that day; but since there was only one, he is wrong in saying "but not the church." But notice, this power that Peter or the apostles had to bind and loose on earth is in the kingdom; but in Matt. 18, talking about the church, he uses precisely the same language. "And if he shall neglect to hear them, tell it unto the church." (Verse 17.) "Verily I say unto you, Whatsoever ye shall bind on earth shall be bound in heaven; and whatsoever ye shall loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven." (Verse 18.) So, my brother, if the keys were not used in both institutions, as you say, the binding and loosing were in both. But there is but one, and it was built, set up, or established, and opened on that day; and Peter, as the spokesman with the apostles, bound on the world the conditions of entering it. Brother Scobey is now so near right on "set up" and "bestowed," I believe I will just let him alone on that.

Yes, the God of heaven set up the kingdom on Pentecost, and he did it through Christ. I quoted John 1: 1-3 to show that God worked even in the creation of the material world through Christ; and working after his own pattern, he created the spiritual kingdom, or church, in the same way, through Christ. God planned all, Christ worked out all, and the apostles revealed all. No, it is not denied that Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob are living and are in the kingdom of God; but it is denied that they are living on the earth or that they are in the kingdom of Christ on the earth. Your trouble comes, brother, by trying to mix the eternal state of the kingdom with the present state of it. I did say that 2 Sam. 7: 16 refers to the same work when he says, "and thine house and thy kingdom shall be established forever before thee." . Whatever the word "house" may mean, in the New Testament the "house of God" means the "church of God," for Paul says so. things that were spoken to David referred to him directly, but to Christ in a secondary sense. This is one of them.

But I must give a little attention to Brother Moore, though I feel that I have about answered him in answering Brother Scobey. No. Brother Moore, you are stating no new fact when you tell us the New Testament was written in Greek; and if you feel that you can give any information from the Greek not found in our various translations of the New Testament, we are ready to consider it. He says he finds that the word "ekkleesia" is defined "the called-out; the assembly, church." Very well, that is exactly what the different translators found, and it is exactly my contention. So I do not see that you gained much by that reference to the Greek. But he says he finds that the word "basileia" means "authority, dominion, power, realm, rule, reign." Well, I believe our translators found that, and "kingdom," too. I do not see that you gained much by your reference to the Greek, except you seemed to have lost the word "kingdom." Perhaps that was an oversight on your part because so many translations of the New Testament use the word "kingdom." Thayer, perhaps the best modern New Testament lexicographer, says under the word "basileia:" (1) "Royal power, kingship, dominion, rule;" (2) "a kingdom-that is, the territory subject to the rule of a king." Thayer then says: "But Jesus employed the phrase kingdom of God or of heaven to indicate that perfect order of things which he was about to establish, in which all those of every nation who should believe in him were to be gathered together into one society, dedicated and intimately united to God, and made partakers of eternal salvation." Thayer, in his definition of "ekkleesia," gives just as Brother Moore says, "called out or forth; a gathering of citizens called out from their homes into some public place; an assembly;" and then, after reference to many passages in the New Testament where the word is used, he says: "The whole body of Christians scattered throughout the earth; collectively, all who worship and honor God and Christ in whatever place they may be, Matt. 16: 18 (where perhaps the evangelist employs teen ekkleesian, although Christ may have said teen basileian mou)." In Thayer's mind, the two words so certainly referred to the same thing that he says Christ may have used one, while the evangelist in reporting it might have used the other. I do not say this, but it is the statement of one of Brother Moore's witnesses, the greatest lexicon of New Testament Greek we have. No, Brother Moore, you are doing no better with the question than Brother Scobey.

All that Brother Moore says about synonyms might be correct and still have no bearing on the question at issue. I do not believe that the words "kingdom" and "church" are synonyms; but neither are the words "body" and "church," and yet both words are applied to the same thing. But what I said in reply to Brother Scobey on this point applies just as well to Brother Moore. Brother Moore says: "It is true, as Brother Srygley says, the church came into existence at the same time and place, but not true that both were built of the same material. The kingdom was built of the authority, power, and dominion of Jesus." No, the kingdom was not built of authority and power, but built upon the authority and power of Jesus. Christ said before he established the kingdom: "All authority [or power] hath been given unto me in heaven and on earth. Go ye therefore," etc. All authority was primarily in God, but he delegated the authority to establish and rule his kingdom to Christ, and Christ transferred it to the apostles, the ambassadors of his kingdom; hence, we have God in Christ, and Christ in the apostles, and the apostles in the world. But Brother Moore says the kingdom is not ruled by Christ. Strange! He is the King: and if he does not rule the kingdom, I wonder who does: Brother Moore says the rule or reign is the kingdom, and not the citizens. Well, in an accommodated sense that might be true, just as a part sometimes may be used for the whole; but in reality the kingdom is the citizens and the King. All Christians are citizens and Christ is King, just as all Christians are members of the church and Christ is Head; and I still feel confident they are the same, or the words "kingdom" and "church" describe the institution Christ established to save the world.

But I must not slight my friend and brother, Lee Jackson. In the Gospel Advocate of March 18, after telling how he had enjoyed the discussion between Brother Scobey and myself, he adds: "As I have no disposition to 'butt' into a discussion between other men, I will say no more at present." If Brother Jackson had lived up to that statement, I would not have said a word in reply to him; but instead of doing that, he wrote more after he said he had quit than he had before, and all that he said after he quit was directed right at me by name. He wants me to tell how Diotrephes cast the messengers of John out of the kingdom. I know of no way he could have done such a thing unless he caused them to stumble and they stumbled out of God's favor. The word "church," perhaps, in this passage, is used in a local sense, or in the sense of the congregation; but the Savior did not use it in this local sense when he said, "Upon this rock I will build my church." But Brother Jackson says, if I prefer, I can tell whether the prophet Daniel meant to say, "in the days of these kings will the God of heaven set up a church which shall never be destroyed." No, I think he said what he meant; and so did Jesus say what he meant when he said: 'Upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it."

Brother Jackson wants to know why the inspired writers "picked up" a word that meant "congregation" or "assembly" and used it. They did not pick it up; the Holy Spirit selected it for them, for the reason that the institution over which Christ is head had in it the idea of a called-out body. I care nothing about the origin of the English word "church." Christ and the apostles used the word "ekkleesia," and it was applied by them to the only institution that Christ built. Since Christ placed his table in the kingdom (Luke 22: 30) and Brother Jackson says the kingdom and the church are different, why does he eat the Lord's Supper in the assembly? Should he not wait till the kingdom meets to have the Lord's Supper? Yes, I am positive there is only one.

Observations of H. C. Harris.

I think I have read about all that has been said in the Gospel Advocate lately on the church and the kingdom, and I must say that I am surprised that our brethren differ so much on this question.

Are the church and kingdom one and the same institution? If not, in what do they differ? In order to intelligently understand this question, it will be necessary to define the words "church" and "kingdom."

Let us first find what the word "kingdom" means. Any kingdom, human or divine, consists of a crowned king, laws, subjects, and territory. In addition, any kingdom, human or divine, must have other belongings, such as money, minerals, animals, or other resources. A kingdom with nothing but subjects would be ready to go into the hands of a receiver.

The word "church" is from the Greek word "ekkleesia," and means a called-out assembly. This assembly may be political, religious, or otherwise. That all depends on who called them out. There can be an assembly (ekklesia) without a kingdom, but there can be no kingdom without an assembly or a called-out people. The kingdom of Christ is a complete kingdom. It has a ruling King, laws, subjects, and territory. In addition, the King possesses great wealth in property of various kinds, including "the cattle upon a thousand hills." They belong to his kingdom as property and not as citizens. A king without nothing but laws, subjects, and territory would be poor indeed. A father with nothing but sons and daughters would be poor. They would be ready for the poorhouse. So a spiritual king who possessed nothing but subjects would be ready for the spiritual almshouse.

But what is the church? Laws, subjects, territory. The subjects of the kingdom are the church. They were called out by the King's laws. They are the citizens. Our government has public buildings, forests, and other property; in addition, unruly tribes of Indians who are not citizens and who reject our laws. But they belong to this government, and this government overrules them for their good, and also for the good of the government. Then, to be a part of this government, one must be a citizen or some kind of goods or chattels.

I once happened to get into an argument with a modern "Holiness." Something he said caused me to ask him what church he belonged to. He said he belonged to no church, but belonged to Christ. I told him the Lord's church is the Lord's family; that my father once had a large family, and, in addition, owned a mule; and that if he belonged to the Lord and did not belong to his church, or family, he must be the Lord's mule. This good fellow jumped up and said he was able to take care of himself. I quietly told him not to bray any more, and he cooled down and went away in a good humor.

The Father planned, the Son created, and the Spirit vivified, systematized, and beautified the earth. The Father planned, the Son created man, and the Spirit gave him life. The Father, as the great Designer, was Commander, Ruler, King, in heaven and earth. By disobedience the spiritual rule was transferred to the wicked one. The Father's territory was heaven and earth. By creation man belonged to the Lord. By service he left the Lord's kingdom and enlisted in the devil's kingdom. As a result of this intermeddling with the Lord's creation, a great spiritual battle was inaugurated, or, if begun before, was transferred to the earth. That battle has been raging till now, and will rage till the last enemy is destroyed and the victory is won.

During the patriarchal age the Father was King. He gave his laws by prophets and messengers. Many listened to the King's call, obeyed his laws, and enjoyed citizenship in his kingdom. Many more refused to leave their wicked ruler.

In the Jewish dispensation the Father held the same position as King. He gave his laws by Moses. During this dispensation the Lord called many more into his kingdom. The Gentiles yet had the privilege of worshiping under the patriarchal law, and the Jews had the law of Moses.

But this arrangement never met fully the needs of man, nor did it please the Lord. As a great Designer, he planned a world-wide and age-lasting invasion of the devil's subjects. He had created them for his glory, but they were in dishonor. The Father loved them and would forgive and redeem them. But how?

It seems as if he would say to his Son: "I love the sons and daughters of men. You go and redeem them. All the resources of heaven and earth are at your command. All power is yours. Angels and archangels are at your service. The Holy Spirit shall be your guide and helper. I will turn over to you the spirits of the righteous dead. The few faithful now living on earth I give you. Evil rulers, and all governments of the earth, and all the wealth of the world are yours. Go and redeem man. Loose the faithful of the past ages from their sins. Satisfy the demands of the law for sin, and call out those who will, of their own accord, obey you. You shall have my advice, my coöperation, and my crown. You shall be King, and rule in heaven and earth till your mediatorial reign shall end."

The Savior is King. Heaven and earth is his territory. Not only "the cattle upon a thousand hills" are his, but all the wealth of the world is his. The wicked kingdoms of the world, though rebelling against his authority, are his possessions. He makes them serve him, even though they will not worship him. All these are parts and parcels of his kingdom; not subjects, but possessions.

The Savior, as King, has issued the gospel call. All who heed the call are his subjects. They are the church, the called out. They belong to the Lord as citizens. They are his family. They were born of water and the Spirit. The "cattle upon a thousand hills" and all "holdings" are his, but they were not born of water and the Spirit.

When the mediatorial reign of Jesus shall have ended and he turns over to the Father the redeemed of the earth, then, and not till then, will we "sit down with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob in the kingdom of God." The judgment will be called, and the righteous of all ages, with all the infants and all who were not responsible to either spiritual ruler, will be admitted into the everlasting kingdom. (2 Pet. 1: 5-14.) The gospel, to redeem the sons and daughters of men, will have served its purpose, and the Son will deliver the kingdom over to the Father. The redeemed of all ages will be permitted to live in the Father's home, with Jesus as their elder Brother. We do not know the rules of that family home, but they will please the Father and meet the needs of the redeemed. Let us, as citizens of the Lord's kingdom, so live that we may dwell in that home.

The emancipation of human nature can never come except through Jesus Christ. What the armies and the inventions of the world cannot do, Jesus Christ can do.—Sir Alfred Yeo.

Flavil Hall Defines "Everlasting Kingdom."

Can "the everlasting kingdom" (2 Pet. 1: 11) mean the church? Brother G. Dallas Smith says he does not think so. It cannot mean the earthly state of the church, it is true; but may it not mean the heavenly, or everlasting, state of the church, the same as the heavenly, or everlasting, state of the kingdom? The readers of the Gospel Advocate understand that the word "church" is translated from "ekkleesia" and means the congregation of the redeemed in Christ, and that this word is always translated "congregation" in the version of the New Testament called "Living Oracles," Does not "the everlasting kingdom" mean the congregation of people in heaven that were redeemed and faithful on earth, or will it be another people? Is not the "kingdom which cannot be moved" at Heb. 12: 28 called "the general assembly and church [congregation] of the first-born" at verse 23? If the kingdom is the congregation of the redeemed here, will it not be the congregation of the redeemed in its everlasting state? If not, of what congregation will the everlasting kingdom consist? If it be answered that the kingdom will not be the congregation, but will be the rule of Christ over the congregation, I answer that the kingdom here is the congregation of the redeemed, with Christ as King over them, and that no one can give any scriptural reason for believing that the congregation is excluded from the meaning of "kingdom" when applied to the everlasting state. "And he made us to be a kingdom, to be priests unto his God and Father." (Rev. 1: 6; see also Rev. 5: 9, 10.) That the priests are Christians, the congregation (church) of the redeemed, none will deny. They were made "to be a kingdom." The church (congregation of the faithfully redeemed), with Christ as Head over it (Col. 1: 18), is the kingdom with Christ as King over it here. Will it be another kingdom and King in the everlasting state? No, no. Nor will it be another congregation and Head. The kingdom being the church (congregation of the redeemed) here, it will not cease to be the church (congregation of the redeemed) there.

Brief Summary of A. M. George.

In the Old Testament (Dan. 4: 17) we find that God ruled in the kingdoms of men and gave them to whom he pleased, as in the cases of Nebuchadnezzar, Cyrus, and others, showing that the rule or kingdom of God antedates the kingdom of Christ.

In the New Testament the word "kingdom," from the Greek "basileia," occurs one hundred and fifty times, or about that. It is "kingdom of God" about seventy-five times. It is "kingdom of heaven" about thirty-five times. It is "kingdom of Christ" a few times, "kingdoms of the world" a very few times, and "kingdom of Satan" a very few times.

The kingdom or rule of God is coexistent with God. The kingdom of Israel and the kingdom of Christ are not. The kingdom of Israel (Jewish dispensation) began fifteen hundred years before Christ and ended at the cross. The kingdom of Christ (this dispensation) began A.D. 33 and will end when Christ comes again and hands back his kingdom and power to his Father, from whom he received it. But the kingdom of God, which existed before either the kingdom of Israel or of Christ, will go on forever. In other words, the kingdom of God has neither beginning nor end, unless we can find where God began and will end.

The Jewish and Christian dispensations are, as I see, agencies established by God in his kingdom to accomplish certain purposes in time. One has passed, the other is passing. They are in the kingdom of God, but not equal in duration.

The church of God is in the kingdom of Christ and also in the kingdom of God. It is equal in duration to the kingdom of Christ, but not to the kingdom of God. When the kingdom of Christ ends, the church will end; but the kingdom of God will never end.

Are they the same? If so, ought they not to be alike in every particular?

I have a home, and live in the town of Albany, and I am a part of Albany; but am I all of it? I might move away, but Albany would remain.

To take a broader view, I am in time, and my life is a part of time; but is it all of it, or equal to time? I live out my brief part and fall out, but time goes on.

To enlarge the view still further, liken God's kingdom to a great drama, with the universe for a stage. Every man, every institution, every nation acts his or its part on that stage and passes off, but the play goes on forever. Is each actor equal to the whole?

Book Notices.

If you are in need of a good abridged Bible dictionary, send us $2 for a copy of Smith's Peloubet Edition. This is one of the best dictionaries of the Bible that I have examined.

"The Model Church," by G. C. Brewer, treats of live subjects, and is a book that should be distributed among the churches. This book has been almost universally commended and is being read with interest by many people. Price, $1.

Have you read "Sunshine, or Uncle Minor's Stories?" This is a very attractive book for children as well as for old people. Children read it with much interest. It is profusely illustrated, and contains many interesting incidents and stories. Price, $1.50.

A good book for young people to read is the "Life of Mrs. Charlotte Fanning." Mrs. Fanning was noted for her piety, zeal, and good sense. Hers was a life remarkable for the good accomplished. She always exerted an ennobling, refining, and uplifting influence. This book is ably edited by Mrs. Emma Page Larimore. Price, $1.

Send us $1.25 for a copy of "Sweeney's Sermons." This is a book of sermons by John S. Sweeney—one of the best books of sermons published. Sweeney carries conviction with the statement of his position. He is noted for brevity, clearness, and force of statement. Every young preacher should have a copy of this book of sermons.

Send us fifteen cents for a copy of "What Was Nailed to the Cross?" It is a live tract, and is made up of some stirring thoughts of F. W. Smith. Adventists were active in North Nashville, and Brother Smith delivered a few sermons on the subject. The tract embodies the substance of these sermons. Buy a dozen copies and distribute them among the people. Price, $1.50 per dozen.

Have you seen a copy of "Adventism and the Bible?" This is one of the very best books for you to buy at the present time. Adventism is a live subject. Adventists are active and are propagating their doctrines. If you want to be thoroughly prepared to meet them and to expose the errors of Adventism, you should send us at once $1.25 for a copy of "Adventism and the Bible."

We have on hand a few copies of "Biographies and Sermons," edited by F. D. Srygley. This is a book of sermons by a number of our best-known preachers. It is well worth a careful perusal. A brief history of the life of each preacher accompanies his sermon. A picture of the preacher also is given with each sketch. Price, $1.50. If you want this book, you should order at once, as we have just a few copies that have been left over through mistake.

O God, please help a little boy to keep from crying when he is hurt, and to keep from laughing when any one else is hurt. Amen.

Authorship of Letter to Hebrews.

Having devoted considerable study to this subject, it may not be uninteresting to Standard readers for me to lay before them my conclusion, with some of the grounds upon which it is based. This has been a disputed question for quite a while, and perhaps the preponderance of critical judgment is against the Pauline authorship. While this fact gives me some embarrassment in taking the opposite view, this is a matter which is not to be decided by a majority vote. It is not to be inferred that the Pauline authorship is without the support of scholarship and critical ability, for some as good scholars and critics as the world has produced maintain that Paul wrote this Epistle. Let us impartially consider the following propositions:

- 1. Paul might have written the document, for it was written during his lifetime. The letter bears ample internal evidence that it was written before the destruction of the temple in Jerusalem, as the following two passages clearly show: "Now if he [Christ] were on earth, he would not be a priest at all, seeing there are those who offer the gifts according to the law, who serve that which is a copy and shadow of the heavenly things." (Heb. 8: 4, 5.) "Which [the old tabernacle] is a figure for the time present; according to which are offered both gifts and sacrifices." (Heb. 9: 9.) The present tense of the verbs printed in italics show plainly that the temple was then standing, and that its ritual was being observed according to the law.
- 2. From the standpoint of competency, Paul could have written the Epistle. Indeed, it is doubtful whether there was another man living who was as capable of running the parallels and making the contrasts between the old covenant and the new covenant as was the apostle to the Gentiles. He was perfectly familiar with the old institution in all of its appointments, and, of course, was well acquainted with the gospel order of things, and would have been perfectly at home in writing the contents of our Epistle.
- 3. He had very strong motives for writing such a document. He was in a constant struggle with the Judaizers who contended that Christians should keep the law of Moses, and he would naturally have a strong desire to show that the Mosaic system had passed away and given place to the Christian system with its better covenant, better priesthood, better promises, etc. This the Epistle does in a most efficient manner.
- 4. Internal evidence points to Paul as the writer. The following passage is itself, as it seems to me, almost conclusive upon this point: "Know ye that our brother Timothy hath been set at liberty; with whom, if he come shortly, I will see you." (Heb 13: 23.) Who would have been as likely to be acquainted with the circumstances of Timothy as Paul, his father in the gospel? It matters not whether the word rendered "set at liberty" means released from prison or sent away on an errand, for it might have been either. Paul and Timothy were bosom friends and close companions, and no one could have been more agreeable to the apostle as a traveling companion upon his journey to Palestine than Timothy, whom he loved so dearly. That Timothy was with Paul during his imprisonment in Rome is certain from the fact that the apostle includes him in salutations to the Philippians, Colossians, and Philemon, contained in letters addressed to these parties while Paul was a prisoner in Rome. The effort to evade the force of this argument on the part of some, by suggesting that this Timothy was not the same as the one who was Paul's companion, is utterly vain, and shows the weakness of the negative side of this question.

Again, the closing benediction of our Epistle is decidedly Pauline. It runs thus: "Grace be with you all. Amen," In 1 Corinthians it is as follows: "The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ be with you," In 2 Corinthians it is as follows: "The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Spirit, be with you all." In Galatians we have it thus: "The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with your spirit, brethren. Amen." In Ephesians we read as follows: "Grace be with all them that love our Lord Jesus Christ with a love incorruptible." In Philippians it stands thus: "The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with your spirit." In Colossians: "Grace be with you." In 1 Thessalonians: "The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you." In 2 Thessalonians: "The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all." In 1 Timothy: "Grace be with you." In 2 Timothy: "Grace be with you." In Titus: "Grace be with you all." In Philemon: "The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with your spirit. Amen." The similarity between all these benedictions is quite striking, and with the exception of Revelation, Paul's writings are the only ones that close with such a benediction, and all of his Epistles so close, for in Romans, which was overlooked in its proper place, we find the following: "The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you." The use of this benediction seems to point to Paul as the author of Hebrews.

Moreover, certain words and phrases occur in our Epistle that are found nowhere else in the New Testament except in Paul's writings and speeches. In Heb. 1: 5 the writer, quoting from one of the Psalms, says, "Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee;" and in his speech in Antioch of Pisidia Paul quotes the same passage; and in both cases the passage is applied to Christ. In Heb. 1: 6 Christ is called "the first-born," and with the exception of Revelation, this appellation is applied to the Lord only by Paul, who thus designates him in Rom. 8: 29; Col. 1: 15, 18. In Heb. 2: 8 the writer says, "Thou didst put all things in subjection under his feet," and in 1 Cor. 15: 27, Paul says: Testament except in Paul's writings and our Epistle. In Eph. 1: 22 the apostle says: "And he put all things in subjection under his feet." In Phil. 3: 21 Paul uses this language: "According to the working whereby he is able even to subject all things unto himself." Such language to indicate Christ's sovereignty is found nowhere in the New Testament except in Paul's writings and our epistle. In Heb. 8: 6 Christ is called a "mediator," and this designation is applied to him nowhere else in the New Testament except in Paul's writings.

This comparison might be carried much further, but it is not at all necessary. I do not pretend to pose as a "higher critic," but I do claim to have some common sense, and that, in view of the foregoing premises, tells me that Paul wrote Hebrews.—J. B. Briney, in Christian Standard.

A Better Ministry.

BY JOHN E. DUNN.

Under the above caption an article appeared in the Gospel Advocate of February 26, written by Brother S. F. Morrow. This article breathes a kindly, Christian spirit and offers some timely suggestions and gentle admonitions to us ministers of the gospel, to all of which I give a most hearty amen. But there is one line of thought offered to the preachers in said article which I believe is not according to New Testament teaching.

Brother Morrow fears we "want to wear the crown, but are not willing to carry the cross." He asks: "How many are making any sacrifice worth while?" He further adds: "Just here I fear most of us are deceived." I happen to be acquainted with the lives of most of the preachers who have written on the above subject, and I am acquainted with a considerable number of other preachers who have said nothing on this subject in the papers. Many of them are very poor, do not own homes, have no automobiles. Their families often are deprived of the necessities of life and their children often feel that they are deprived of et chances with other brethren's children who are engaged in business callings while the preacher goes on preaching the gospel with an inadequate support.

Brother Morrow further teaches and advises young preachers as follows: "I want it understood that I believe the Bible teaches that elders and preachers who give their time to the churches, preachers going to destitute places, should be well supported, and will be if they will follow the commands of Jesus." It is true such preachers should be supported well; but will they be? The New Testament does not teach that they "will be if they will follow the commands of Jesus." True, the New Testament teaches that they should be supported, and shame on the churches that they do not support the worthy preachers! It is hurtful to the spread of the gospel, injurious to the cause of true religion, and discouraging to the preachers and more so to their children. Who are the preachers "who give their time to the churches, preachers going to destitute places," and are "well supported?"

I once believed this doctrine, and I practiced it for more than a quarter of a century (I am preaching now, and expect to preach all I can till God calls me hence), and by so doing my wife had to endure hardships beyond her powers of endurance, and it did my children an injustice. They have gone cold and hungry, have gone without the pecessities of life, and Mrs. Dunn has endured hardships which she should not have suffered. I have repented of this. I now see I started out with a wrong conception on the support of the preacher. Whoever teaches young men and young women to "give their time to the churches, . . . going to destitute places, and they will be well supported," teaches them contrary to the teaching and examples of the New Testament and contrary to the experiences of nowadays gospel preachers.

I do not complain at what I have endured. I have suffered hardships. I have gone cold and hungry. In more than one instance I have risked my life in order to preach the gospel. I am willing to do it again whenever duty demands it. A man who will not endure these hardships is not fit to preach the gospel.

Young men should not be filled with the idea that if they will go and preach the gospel they will always be supported. Sometimes for a short period of time they will be well supported, but much of the time they will not be supported. I now teach young men to endure hardships like Paul and Christ and to look for a heavenly reward and not an earthly one. The purpose of the Christian religion is to save the soul and not to save the life here on earth. Heaven should be our object, and not earthly rewards. I have been poor, suffered much, and worked hard all of my life. I expect to continue along this line till I die. I also expect when I leave this world to go to my Heavenly Father and be with him, with Jesus, with the holy angels and all the redeemed hosts of heaven, through the ceaseless ages of eternity in the enjoyment of all of God's rich blessings. When I have been there ten thousand times ten thousand years, the end of the enjoyment of that delightful home will be no nearer than when I first went there. Life here is a commingling of the bitter and the sweet; hereafter, to the Christian, it is eternal happi-

Young preachers should be taught to endure hardness as good soldiers. They should be warned that they may not be supported. They should be taught ways of making a living by honest toil. They should be taught the trades and professions; they should be taught common business sense and to hold themselves cheerfully in readiness of mind and body to do anything that is honest and honorable to make a living and still preach the gospel both in words and daily life all they can. God does bless the faithful preacher and will give him a heavenly home, but he is not in this life immune to poverty and hardships.

The churches certainly need an awakening, a shaking up. They need a revolution. The whole world is crying, bleeding, and dying for want of the bread of life. It is not being given to the world. We quote the "great commission" long and loud, but we do not practice it. When in Europe, I saw and realized as never before the immensity of the urgent need of us American disciples carrying the gospel to the Eastern world. I came home from France with one deep regret, and that is that I could not make myself twenty-five years of age, so that I might go there and spend a life preaching and teaching the Christian religion. I know I could succeed in getting them to hear me, because I tried it. I have wanted to go among the churches and into the papers and try to arouse more interest in world-wide preaching the gospel. Especially do I want to see the gospel sent over the seas. But circumstances have prevented my doing this.

Preaching the Gospel.

BY C. E. HOLT.

In this article I wish to lay emphasis upon the work of preaching the gospel as the God ordained means of saving the world. It is, as I understand the divine teaching, a work of first importance as regards human agency in the salvation of men and women. It is something in the divine arrangement that must be done before sinners can turn to the Lord for salvation. Our Heavenly Father fixed it this way and will not accept a substitute. Other agencies there are, of course; but this one, in the very nature of things, comes first.

One of the most heart-thrilling and soul-inspiring utterances of inspiration is: "For whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved." (Rom. 10: 13.) Then follows an argument, sensible, clear, and unanswerably strong, in support of the affirmation. This argument is interrogatively stated thus: "How then shall they call on him in whom they have not believed? and how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher? and how shalt they preach, except they be sent? . . . So then faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God." (Verses 14-17.)

Out of these very pointed questions I select the one that contains a perpetual obligation upon the churches of Christ. One of the most unreasonable, as well as one of the most hurtful, ideas connected with this subject is that the entire obligation and responsibility of preaching the gospel to the world rests upon the preachers. The idea is that upon the preachers this responsibility exclusively rests. It is a painful fact, as well as a sad commentary upon the people who make the high claim of restoring pure, New Testament Christianity, that hundreds of congregations, to use a figure of speech, sit down and wait for some preacher to "drop in" and preach for them. This has encouraged a kind of haphazard and unresponsible way of supplying the churches with preaching. That means that the most of the preaching that is done is to and for the churches. To dead and dying churches, strong sermons are preached on baptism for remission of sins, the importance of meeting on the first day of the week, etc.-matters of importance, of course, but things which are means to an end, and not an end within themselves. Too many annual protracted meetings are held for the delectation of the members of the church and for the benefit of their children and a few special friends. "Able" preachers who live hundreds of miles away are employed to conduct meetings in which very few people of the world, comparatively speaking, hear the gospel.

Another fact worthy of a serious and sensible consideration is that we have large sections, including some towns and cities of importance, where we are not known, so far as our real teaching, aims, and purposes are concerned. If we believe what we teach and mean what we say in our teaching, we should make every effort that is legitimate, proper, and consistent with inspiration, and common sense, and sound reason to get these things before the people.

In the study of this subject, I am impressed with the clear and forcible translation of the apostle's language quoted already from the King James Version, the version from which the most of us read. "For every one who invokes the name of the Lord shall be saved. But how, it may be asked, are they to invoke one in whom they have not learned to believe? And how are they to believe in one whose words they have not heard? And how are they to hear his words unless some one proclaims him? And how are men to proclaim him unless they are sent as his messengers?" (Twentieth Century New Testament.) this connection it is pertinent to ask, who shall do the sending? If you answer that the Lord does this, then again it is pertinent to ask, how does he do it? To this latter question there is only one correct answer to be given, and that is that God does this work through his church. Upon the church alone does this duty and obligation rest. To organize societies to do this work is wholly at variance with God's order and an impeachment of God's wisdom.

Again, we should not seek to justify our neglect of this duty by pronouncing anathemas upon those who have made the inexcusable mistake of organizing societies through which to do the work which alone devolves upon the church. We too often reject and condemn sensible and businesslike methods used by human organizations with the organizations which use them. There is nothing in the way of sensible and businesslike methods used by unscriptural organizations that could not be employed by the church itself. If societies can select men and send them out to preach the gospel, and provide for their support, so can the church do the same. There is not a human agency of a legal and a moral kind used by human organizations that cannot with perfect safety and scriptural opriety be used by the church. The printing press, the United States mail, the express companies, the railroadsin fact, everything that is sensible and practical and accelerative-can be used by the church in the evangelization of the world. God intends for his people to use the very best methods and agencies that we have at our command. The missionary societies often use good methods in their work. The denominations, many of them, do so. We should not reject and condemn a good plan or agency or method because such may be in use by some denomination. This is not the way we are to be different from other people. To illustrate: A very sensible and sanitary method of serving a congregation with the fruit of the vine in the Lord's Supper is to use the individual cup. Not long since a very intelligent doctor suggested that this method be adopted by a certain congregation. One man objected on the ground that the "digressives" use that method. The doctor met the objector by saying that that is one good thing the "digressives" have. Did you ever stop to think that there is not a single good thing that cannot be found in some denomination? The Roman Catholics, the Greek Catholics, the Mormons, the Dunkards, and other religious bodies unknown to the apostles baptize "for the remission of sins." Is that an argument against the doctrine? I found a Baptist preacher who thought so.

We should learn, if we do not already know it, that the method of obeying a command is not a part of the command, unless God has so specifically ordained it that way. Millions of words have been worse than wasted in efforts to prove the Lord's plan in preaching the gospel. With some, any plan not in use by a missionary society or by the denominations would pass current for the "the Lord's plan." This has been exceedingly hurtful to the spread of New Testament Christianity.

Things That Do the Most Good.

BY E. C. SOWELL

The essentials and good things the Lord requires man to do will take his time and keep him busy.

It appears to me too much time is consumed about things not essential to the salvation of man's soul. When the Lord says little or nothing about things we desire to look into, it would be well for us to say as little as he has said about it, for I am sure we cannot give any more light upon the subject. We need to write and preach more on such subjects as love, prayer, fellowship, Lord's-day worship, kindness, hospitality, long-suffering, gentleness, meekness, self-control, and many other such like subjects; for these are essential to the salvation of the soul. When these become our daily topics, there will be a greater growth in grace and the knowledge of God's word which will result in the realization of our kinship in Christ.

We do not have to argue these subjects, but we reason about them in the divine light the Lord has given us. This builds up and makes strong material in the house of God. When we come to the knowledge of the truth, we are made better and God is pleased.

"Put on therefore, as God's elect, holy and beloved, a heart of compassion, kindness, lowliness, meekness, long-suffering, forbearing one another, and forgiving each other, if any man have a complaint against any; even as the Lord forgave you, so also do ye: and above all these things put on love, which is the bond of perfectness." (Col. 3: 12, 13.) When God is loved with all the heart, soul, and mind, it makes it easy to do what the Master saith. This is why Jesus said to his disciples: "If ye love me, ye will keep my words."

These things that Paul says for Christians to put on make a most beautiful robe; and the more and longer we wear them, the better we will appear. Jesus means for his bride, the church, to have on the wedding garment when he comes again. If we are not ready when the summons comes, the fault will be ours. "Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." If the heart is filled with good thoughts, the words will be wholesome, and this makes a better life. If your life is pure and good, somebody will try to be like you. Paul knew this; therefore, he said: "Follow me, as I follow Christ."

Remember, we cannot remain long upon the earth; and Solomon said: "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave, whither thou goest."

Self-living, of whatever sort, by whatever name we call it, by whatever religious or social philosophy we disguise or defend it, is the essence of sin. It is the outrage against which nature lifts up its voice, and which has desecrated and laid waste the garden of the Lord with hands of violence. The mission of the Bible-from Genesis to Revelation-is to cry out against the wantonness, the imbecility, the inhumanity of selfishness. The impracticability of selfishness is the lesson of history. The eternal hopelessness and helplessness of selfishness is the warning of the gospel. Selfishness is slavery. It is the bitter bondage of the race to falsehood. Its clanking chains deafen us to the voice of God and the cry of our brothers for help; they beat and bruise and gall the soul in every attempt to rise to the realization of divine ideals. Selfish purposes blast and wither the germs and blossoms of human nobleness; they are the moths that eat out the divineness of our humanity; and yet they are the giants of evil that battle with Christ for the possession of the soul-Christ increasing as they decrease-Christ advancing over their death. The dying self is the growing Christ; we who live being evermore delivered to death for Jesus' sake, that the life also of Jesus might be made manifest in our mortal flesh. -J. D. Herron.

"The word of God is the real weapon. It is the only thing the devil fears."

The answer to all new assaults upon the faith is to continue to preach Christ.—The Christian.

C. M. Pullias will begin a meeting for the Lawrence Avenue congregation, this city, on April 18.

John C. Taylor is now located at Waverly, Tenn., and is doing successful evangelistic work in that section.

Moody said that the Christian man is the world's Bible, and that in most cases a revised version was necessary.

There is nothing that so despoils the strength and beauty of life as to be continually asking, "What will men think of it?"

"Some statesmen are more interested in America living as she pleases than in a Christian world order." (Frederick Lynch.)

From W. E. Morgan, Childress, Texas, March 29: "We had splendid services here yesterday. One was restored to fellowship at the evening service."

Fred K. Jones, real estate dealer and Notary Public, 43 Arcade, Nashville, Tenn.—Nashville and Tennessee property for sale and exchange—will endeavor to accommodate those desiring his services.

From Ben West, Waxahachie, Texas, March 29: "We had excellent services here yesterday. One was restored to the fellowship. Interest is fine, and the membership is at work and in prayer for a great meeting in May."

If you have relatives or friends in Helena, Ark., who should be interested in the establishment of a loyal congregation, please have them communicate with Mrs. W. L. Jones, 922 Plaza Street. She is anxious to see the work started.

We have received a prospectus relative to the forthcoming publication of "The Gospel Preacher," a new religious monthly. D. P. Craig, of Ingomar, Miss., will be the editor. We wish for these brethren success in their undertaking.

From W. D. Bills, San Antonio, Texas, March 31: "Excellent services at Denver Heights congregation, this city, yesterday. Attendance and interest good. Five were added to the congregation. Our interest has never been better during the five years I have been here."

S. F. Morrow writes: "G. W. Riggs, of Los Angeles, Cal., will come to Tennessee, August 1. He has meetings engaged to October 1. Any congregations wanting him from that date to December 25 can write him, 3319 Barbee Street, Los Angeles, Cal. Brother Riggs needs no words of commendation in Tennessee."

A subscriber writes: "J. W. Dollison has given up his work at Jonesboro, Ark., and moved to Marvell, Ark., and will labor in Phillips County principally, giving two Sundays in each month to the Cypert church of Christ. The other two Sundays will be given principally to mission points. We hope to do much work for the Lord in this field during 1920."

From Thomas E. Milholland, Denison, Texas: "The weather is fine, our audiences large, singing good, interest growing. Many strangers within our gates. One baptized last night. Our prospects for future growth in Denison were never better. We believe that to 'instruct those who oppose themselves' is better than going around with a 'chip' on your shoulder."

From C. G. McPhee, Carman, Manitoba, Canada, March 29: "The work at this place is very encouraging. Interest and attendance are on the increase. Following the service last night three were baptized; five were baptized two weeks ago. The prospects for the future are very bright. This is a great mission field. 'The harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers are few.'"

A. J. Traylor writes: "Let us learn to sing and make melody in our hearts unto the Lord. Every Christian ought to know how to sing. If you do not know how to sing; you can learn very easily. Between May 20 and J ly 1 I have vacant, and would like to teach singing or single for meetings. If you need a singer at that time, please the me at David Lipscomb College, Nashville, Tenn."

From J. Logan Molloy, Spencer, Tenn., March 25:
school here at Burritt is as good as ever in the histery of the school. President H. E. Scott is an admirable young man, full of loyalty and honest endeavor. It is wonderful the way President Scott and his teachers managed during the recent 'fiu' epidemic—near a hundred cases and not a single death. The school is again in progress and moving along nicely."

From Robert E. Henson, Benton, Ky., April 2: "We have just closed a very interesting meeting at Antioch, near Cave in Rock, Ill. There were no additions; but I never saw better attention, and interest grew to the close. I am sure much fruit will be gathered from the seed sown. I promised to be with them again in September. I will have some time for meeeings in October and November. I would like to hear from brethren in Mississippi or Louisiana."

From A. A. Bunner, 1800 West Fifty-fourth Street, Cleveland, Ohio, March 23; "The place of meeting of the church of Christ in this city is 10106 Virginia Block, Superior Avenue. Take a Superior Avenue street car at the Public Square and get off at East One Hundred and Fifth Street. Bible study begins at 10 A.M. every Lord's day; other services begin three-quarters of an hour later. Everybody made welcome. Meet with us, and we will do thee good."

From C. H. Smithson, Hatfield, Ark., April 1: "I am here In a fine meeting, but that is not the best of all. We are working on our new church building, and we are all rejoicing to know that we are to soon leave a mere hut and enter our new building with new energy. The cause is bound to grow here, for all have a mind to work. I go next to De Queen, Ark., for a few days, and hope for the best while there. I have never been there, but hear they are some of the best. I have time the last of May for a meeting. If interested, address me at Ben Franklin, Texas."

From J. A. Hudson, Oklahoma City, Okla., March 29: "We raised money yesterday at the Tenth and Francis Streets Church for our July meeting. J. D. Fine told me this morning that seven hundred and two dollars was subscribed for that purpose. We are going to work hard to have a successful meeting. There were five additions at the morning service yesterday. The evening service was well attended. The song service was especially good. Our Sunday school has made rapid progress recently. On New Year's Day we had seventy-three enrolled; yesterday we had one hundred and fifty-three."

A. O. Colley writes from Dallas, Texas: "Our church house is far too small to accommodate the crowds on Sunday mornings. We are nearing the completion of an annex which will seat one hundred and fifty or more. It will also serve for class rooms in our Bible studies. Our membership is rapidly growing; new members are added each week. We are planning for a great work during the remainder of this year. Brother G. Dallas Smith has agreed to assist us in a meeting to begin the first Sunday in June. I am to preach at Cleburne in his place on Sundays while he is holding our meeting. We are working and praying for a good meeting."

A Vision.

BY PATIENCE.

A beautiful vision oft comes to me
When the work of the day is done,
When my heart throws off its weight of care
And I sit in my room alone.
I dream of a home where no shadows come,
Or language of strife is heard;
Where anger and bitterness enter not,
But love breathes in thought and in word.

And as musing I sit in this happy home,
Watching the firelight glow,
I hear a step on the graveled walk—
A step I have learned to know,
One stands on the threshold whose tender love
Makes the world all bright to me,
Whose heart keeps the vow that his lips have made—
My own, and mine only to be.

But I waken. Alas! it is only a dream
Like the fancies I used to weave
In the far-off days of the happy past.
Ere my heart had learned to grieve.
Yet I know the face I in dreams behold,
Though I've not seen it, it seems, for years;
I still hear that voice, and its tender tones
Are the sweetest of earth to my ears.

I'm a sad and lonely woman now,
No love words are breathed in my ears;
Life's lesson to me has been sternly taught
In weariness, pain, and in tears.
But I love to sit in the twilight hour,
When the shadows around me fall,
And dream of that beautiful, sunny home,
And the love that is dearer than all.

There is a beautiful home preparing for me,
Surpassing all earthly dreams;
That home by faith I can almost see,
So vivid and near it seems.
And I am glad in His Word He commands us to love;
And though rough is the way I have trod,
I'll forget all the pain when I see His dear face
In the beautiful home of my God.

"Destructive vs. Constructive.

BY F. W. SMITH.

There is, to my mind, a very great misconception and misapplication of these terms with many to-day as regards religious teaching. With many, what is called "practical" teaching-that is, teaching along the line of visiting the sick, feeding the poor, and doing mission workis "constructive," while opposing false doctrine or teaching the fundamental principles of the gospel is "destructive;" but I do not so understand the matter. While pulling down or destroying false doctrine on any phase of the Christian religion, there is at the same time and by the same process a building up or a constructive work being done. Out of false conceptions of the truth and the espousing of human traditions arises a true and pure faith which is but the laying of a firm and strong foundation on which to build the Christian character. false notion of any part of the gospel is destroyed and is supplanted by the truth, if that is not "constructive" as well as "destructive," then I am badly mistaken. Hence, this being true, why all of this objection to religious controversy even among those in the church of Christ? Is error less dangerous when advocated by one in the church than by those without? Really, in so far as the church itself is concerned, when a man in the church with ability and influence begins to teach error, that man is more dangerous to the church than a thousand on the outside.

The trouble with so many in the church is, they are simply opposed to all controversy whether in the church or out of the church. They cannot or do not or will not distinguish between an earnest contention for "the faith which was once for all delivered unto the saints" and an ungodly wrangle characterized by abuse and the impugning of motives. What difference, pray tell me, is there in contending for the truth against the false teaching of a man in the church and one out of the church? "O," says one, "he is a brother." I wonder if such objectors have ever read the New Testament. If so, they have done it to little profit, else they have no respect for the example and teaching of inspired men. Do they not know the apostles contended with false teachers in the church with as much vigor and emphasis as they did with those without? How about the false teachers who went to Antioch and taught the Gentile Christians that they must be circumcised and keep the law of Moses? (Acts 15: 1, 2.) Did Paul and Barnabas keep their mouths shut under the pretense, "These are our brethren, and we must have no wrangling in the church?" Away with such sickly talk-yes, empty words, and not a good quality at that! If some of these moralizers in the church had been present, no doubt they would have protested against Peter's writing this: "But there were false prophets also among the people, even as there shall be false teachers among you, who privily shall bring in damnable heresies, even denying the Lord that bought them, and bring upon themselves swift destruction," (2 Pet. 2: 1.) If Brother or Sister "Tenderfoot" or "Sweet Spirit" had been there, their nervous conditions would have received a severe shock. But why did Peter write that? As a warning to the disciples everywhere and for all time. Listen: "And many shall follow their pernicious ways; by reason of whom the way of truth shall be evil spoken of." (2 Pet. 2; 2.) Again, the beloved John would have been censured by Brother and Sister "Sugar in the Mouth," if they had been present when he penned these words: "Beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits [in the church, if you please] whether they are of God: because many false prophets [teachers] are gone out into the world." (1 John 4: 1.) "O, no, Brother John, let us have no wrangling in the church," would have welled up from the hearts of the "sweet-spirited" in the church, if they had been present. Once more: "Holding fast the faithful word as he hath been taught, that he may be able by sound doctrine both to exhort and to convince the gainsayers. For there are many unruly and vain talkers and deceivers, specially they of the circumcision: whose mouths must be stopped, who subvert whole houses, teaching things which they ought not, for filthy lucre's sake." (Tit. 1: 1-11.) "Let them alone, Brother Paul; they are our brethren," chimes in Brother and Sister "Soft Pedal."

What is the mission of a religious journal, any way? Is it not to teach the truth and expose error? Should it be different from the pulpit? In fact, is it not a pulpit from which should be expected a defense of the truth against any and every source of error? But sometimes those who conduct and manage such journals became afraid of their own shadows, and because a few "tenderfeet" enter a complaint about "too much controversy" they close their columns to the investigation of the truth. Much has been written of late on the kingdom question, and brethren have been discussing the matter among themselves, and, in so far as I have been enabled to see, they have done so in the proper spirit and with due regard to each other's desire to know the truth. What, pray tell me, can be wrong with such a procedure? What is true of the kingdom question in this respect should be true of every question on which brethren differ; and if I had a paper, its columns would be thrown wide open to the discussion in a dignified and Christian spirit of every question pertaining to Christian faith and duty. If people refused to subscribe for it because of that fact, then I would shut up shop and quit the paper business. I most certainly would not run a paper to please, as Brother Briney says, "Naneyism" in the church.

Liberty in Christ.

BY W. H. CARTER.

"Stand fast therefore in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free, and be not entangled again with the yoke of bondage." (Gal. 5: 1.)

In Christ we all have liberty; but for what, and to do what? To understand and appreciate this admonition of Paul, it is necessary that we understand what caused him to write this letter and give this exhortation. Judaizers had gone among the Gentiles teaching them that they must be circumcised and keep the law of Moses or they could not be saved. Paul had much trouble on account of their teaching. He met this at Antioch, and, after much disputation, the church decided to consult the apostles and elders at Jerusalem, which they did, and received a decision in Paul's favor. But this did not stop the false teachers. They continued their divisive and destructive work. They were not prompted by revelation, but opinion. This, no doubt, was the chief cause of the writing to the Galatians.

The yoke of bondage he warned them against being entangled in was the law of Moses. Peter so regarded it; for, in his speech before the apostles and elders, he said: "Now therefore why tempt ye God, to put a yoke upon the neck of the disciples, which neither our fathers nor we were able to bear?" (Acts 15: 10.) Paul, in his argument, shows that he means this when he says: "For I testify again to every man that is circumcised, that he is a debtor to do the whole law." (Gal. 5: 3.) Here is logic as sound as inspiration can make it. Circumcision is one command of the law. If I obey that, I make myself a debtor to do the whole law. Now, if to observe this command makes one a debtor to do the whole law, why would not the observance of any other one command make one a debtor to do the whole law? To keep the Sabbath day is a command of the law; and if one observes that now, why does he not become a debtor to do the whole law?

How many different laws did the children of Israel have? Is it not a fact that they had but one law, that given by Moses? We do not read of laws, but the law. This law contained the commandments, the statutes, and the judgments of the Lord Circumcision is one of them, and so is the keeping of the Sabbath. To go back to the law for justification for keeping the Sabbath is to become a debtor to do the whole law. Therefore, Paul says: "Christ is become of no effect unto you, whosoever of you are justified by the law; ye are fallen from grace." (Gal. 5: 4.)

But in Christ we have liberty. To the Romans, Paul says: "For the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death." (Rom. 8: 2.) James (1: 25) calls it the "perfect law of liberty," and Paul calls it the "law of faith" (Rom. 3: 27). Paul and all Jewish Christians had been made free from some law-"the law of sin and death." Was not the law of Moses a law of death?" He that despised Moses' law died without mercy under two or three witnesses." (Heb. 10: 28.) Of course we have liberty and freedom in Christ, but not liberty to go back to the law and single out any of its commands and add it to the law of faith. To do this is to deny Christ and bring ourselves into bondage to the law. Paul was writing against circumcision because that was the question before him. Had they made the keeping of the Sabbath the question, no doubt Paul's argument would have been the same. If not, why not? Paul says to these people: "Ye observe days, and months, and times, and years. I am afraid of you, lest I have bestowed upon you labor in vain." (Gal. 4: 10, 11.)

Yes, we have liberty in Christ to serve God in reverence and fear. To serve God is to do his will—obey him in all that he has commanded—but not to do things because they may seem right to us. We are to acknowledge God in all our ways. To do this is to walk only in the way that he directs. "There is a way which seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death." (Prov. 14: 12.) Jesus says: "I am the way." (John 14: 6.) How is he the way to us, only as we are guided by his teaching? "For, brethren, ye have been called unto liberty; only use not liberty for an occasion to the flesh, but by love serve one another." (Gal. 5: 13.)

No one has the right to add anything to the "law of faith." Only those things we find commanded or practiced by the apostles have we liberty to do. To go beyond this is to transgress; and "whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the teaching of Christ, hath not God." (2 John 9.) To abide in the teaching of Christ is to neither fall short of, nor go beyond, what he teaches. But we are told that Christ abolished only the carnal ordinances of the law and not the Ten Commandments, and that, therefore, the Sabbath command is still binding. But where does God say such as this? It is only man-weak, puny, fallible man-who says it. God says: "Having abolished in his flesh the enmity, even the law of commandments contained in ordinances." (Eph. 2: 15.) "The law of commandments." To keep the Sabbath day was one of the commandments of the law (Ex. 35: 2, 3), and was abolished with the other commandments of the law. The law was to the Jews. There is absolutely no teaching showing that the Gentile converts were taught to keep the Sabbath day, or any other command of the law, unless it be found in the teaching of the Judaizers, whose teaching led away from Christ and back to Moses.

It is wholly of man to divide the law given to Israel by Moses into two separate laws, the one called "the moral law" and the other called "the ceremonial law." A theory, a service, a doctrine, or a command based on this has no higher authority than man for its existence. This, it seems to me, men who have been brought up in a Bible land and in the Christian faith ought to see and understand. As to the Ten Commandments, nine of them are bound by the apostles in their writings on all Christians. In his letters to the Romans, Paul binds five of them in one verse. "For this, Thou shalt not commit adultery, Thou shalt not kill, Thou shalt not steal, Thou shalt not bear false witness, Thou shalt not covet; and if there be any other commandment, it is briefly comprehended in this saying, namely, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." (Rom. 13: 9.) These five are regarded as moral, the other five as positive; and if it be right to speak of the "moral law," then here it is, the whole thing. If there is any other command, it is in the saying, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." This does not include the Sabbath in the law to Christians. As to the five positive commands. We are taught to have no other gods, to have no graven images to worship; we are to not take the name of the Lord in vain; we are to honor our parents. These nine both Jews and Gentiles are to observe, while nothing is said about keeping the Sabbath. To do so is to do it without authority from Christ. He told them to teach us to observe all things he had commanded them. (Matt. 28; 20.) They taught no one to observe the Sabbath day, Therefore it was abolished with the "law of commandments contained in ordinances."

Man cannot live by bread alone, and, therefore, God's far-flung garden is packed with thought, crammed with purpose, and set with high tasks for the making of character; for what we get out of the world is a mere trifle compared with what the world gets out of us. We sow the seed of labor, thought, truth, goodness, sorrow, prayer, into the pregnant, mystic furrows of the universe; and in due season we reap a harvest of godlikeness, of Christian character, and so lift heavenward what Milton called "earth's finest fruit"—good men and good women.— Selected.

Query Department

By J. C. McQUIDDY

W. R. Willcutt, of Bear Creek, Ala., inquires to know, if it is not a sin for a Christian to marry out of the church, what Paul means in 2 Cor. 6: 14 and in 1 Cor. 7: 39. These two passages read: "Be not unequally yoked with unbelievers: for what fellowship have righteousness and iniquity? or what communion hath light with darkness?" "A wife is bound for so long a time as her husband liveth; but if the husband be dead, she is free to be married to whom she will; only in the Lord." The only point about which our brother is especially concerned is whether or not a Christian can scripturally marry one not a member of the church of Christ.

I have always encouraged Christians to marry in the Lord, believing that there will be more congeniality and happiness in the marriage relation when the husband and wife are of the same faith. I do not believe, however, that the Bible teaches that it is a sin for a believer to marry an unbeliever. The Bible does not permit a Christian to be thrust out of the church simply because he marries an unbeliever. For prudential reasons I have stated to the young, "You should marry in the church." But for the information of the querist I quote concerning "only in the Lord" from the Millennial Harbinger of 1831, Volume II. On page 206, one writing under the assumed name of "Parthenos," in speaking of the instructions found on marriage in 1 Cor. 7, says: "But the truth is that this whole chapter is written, not about the persons to whom the Corinthians were to be married, but about marrying itself; and as the apostle wished them to be without 'anxious care,' he told both the unmarried men and widows that it was good for them to remain like him, unmarried; and, therefore, I rather conceive the whole passage ought to be read thus: 'If her husband be dead, she is at liberty to be married to whom she pleases. Only in the Lord is she indeed happier if she so abides, according to my opinion.' That is my opinion expressed in the former part of the chapter-viz., that widows would be happier if they remained single like me."

"Parthenos" asked Mr. Campbell's criticism of his rendering of the verse. I insert in full Mr. Campbell's remarks on what "Parthenos" says. While I knew nothing of Mr. Campbell's position when I began writing on this subject, I am glad to see that he upholds fully every position I have taken. This only shows that I have been studying the same book that Mr. Campbell studied. Mr. Campbell's remarks on "Parthenos" are found on pages 206-208 of the same volume of the Harbinger. If any one else has any information to give on this subject, we would be glad to have it for our columns, but I do not wish an extended discussion of this subject at the present time. Here is what Mr. Campbell says:

Against the views exhibited by "Parthenos" in the preceding essay, and in his first number on this subject, it will be difficult to contend. The questions proposed by myself were designed to meet the objections of others, which we had heard urged against the ground taken in the first essay. It is clear to my mind that we have no law concerning the persons with whom political relations are to be formed; no law saying with whom we may marry, or with whom we may not; yet I conceive it to be manifestly the tendency of Christianity to lead the initiated to form all the intimate relations of life, as far as possible, with those who fear and love the Lord. But where the great King has not legislated, no tribunal, no individual, has a right to legislate; and certainly no Christian congregation can, consistently with their professed subjection to Jesus Christ, exclude a person simply for marrying any person not forbidden by the laws of the land. And if they should put away any person from the congregation on that account alone, they can never restore him or her to their fellowship unless a divorce, virtual or formal, be obtained, for reformation in this case would be a separation from the unbelieving party, as also says the Jewish institution.

There are some things which, to a comprehensive mind, and much more to that all-comprehending mind which originated this institution, would appear inexpedient to legislate upon, and inexpressibly more advantageous to leave to the decisions of experience and the tendencies of things. He or she that marries without regard to the spirit, the genius, and tendency of Christianity, will generally have enough to endure without the superaddition of exclusion from Christian society. Parents and seniors should teach the juniors the expediency of forming not only the marriage relation, but, as far as possible, all the more intimate political relations, with those who acknowledge and honor the same Lord and Savior. Commercial intercourse, the employment of the various tradesmen, the hiring and employing servants, and all other political intimacies, Christianity arranges not by law; yet it is its tendency to induce Christians to prefer to trade with Christians and to transact, as far as possible, all the business of life with the household of faith. How happy is the man who has a sister wife and Christian servants; who walks in the shoes which a Christian made or who rides on a horse which a Christian shod; whose body is covered with the cloth which a Christian wove and the garments which a Christian made! If a Christian plow his field, build his house, or perform for him any service, he feels himself happy in the assurance that it will all be done as if it were done for Jesus Christ. I will not say that he is happy who has these things done by men professing Christianity, but by men practicing it.

We only intended here to say that some important matters Christianity leaves to be inferred and peremptorily decides not. Marriage, as respects the parties who may enter into it, is among these. Every man who reasons well will choose, if he have the power of choosing, a sister wife; but all that "Parthenos" seems to desire to establish, and which he appears to have established, is, that he who can reason well and infer that he himself ought to marry a disciple should not make his own inference a law for his brother who cannot reason as well as himself, and condemn him to exclusion because he either had not the choice of a companion, or, if he had, gratified his eye or his fancy more than his Christian taste and feelings in the

With regard to the criticisms offered by "Parthenos" on the phrase, "only in the Lord," we have to observe that we are sensible of the singularity of the style, if we couple that phrase with the verb "marry." As the punctuation is wholly human, we are at liberty to examine and reexamine the propriety of it. Although we have long felt the difficulty of understanding this phrase if connected with the verb "marry," we have not examined, till since we read the above essay, whether the canons of the Greek language, or the laws of punctuation, or the usage of the apostle, will permit such a punctuation as that which "Parthenos" has suggested. That the common reader may feel the importance of so slight a variation as the insertion of a point or the transposing of one, we shall give a few instances of passages having the word "only" in them and similarly constructed. Gal. 1: 22: "And I was personally unknown to the congregations of Judea which are in Christ only. But they heard that he who had persecuted them," etc. This is exactly according to the arrangement of the word "only" in the original. But the placing the point before only gives quite a different turn to it. Then it reads: "But only they heard of me," etc. Gal. 2: 10 affords a similar instance: "That we should go to the Gentiles, but they to the circumcision only. Desiring that we should remember the poor —only desiring that we should remember the poor. A third instance we shall give from the same writer. Phil. 1: 27: "May abound through my coming to you again only. Behave worthy of the glad tidings."—only behave worthy of the glad tidings. She may marry whom the places only in the Lord or only in the Lord. whom she pleases, only in the Lord, or only in the Lord she is happier if she remain unmarried. From these instances an English reader may judge of the importance of transposing the point in passages, if not exactly similar, so similar as to make them quite analogous. I would not, however, rely upon any change in the punctuation here, as it may be questionable which of the two is more in accordance with Paul's style and with the genius of the language, were it not for the scope of the passage; and as the question was not concerning the persons with whom marriage might be formed, but concerning the expediency of the thing itself in that crisis, it is more in accordance with that object, and the text will bear it to point it as "Parthenes" has done.

Should any person holding different views on this subject wish to lay them before our readers, our pages are open to them. Much more may be added to enforce the necessity of making no by-laws or human arrangements regulating matters which have not been settled by some positive enactment of the great King. In this way all the platforms of church government were originated; and so soon as we make our inferences rules of practice for others, we begin to judge as the sectaries do and to condemn men because they think differently or have weaker heads than we suppose a kinder fate has bestowed on us; for he that condemns a person for a wrong inference condemns his intellect and censures him for being intellectually inferior to himself.

Preachers' Meeting.

BY JOHN C. GRAHAM.

The preachers' meeting at Mount Pleasant, Tenn., previously announced in these columns, was held on March 21-26

All those who took part in the meeting want it clearly understood by the brotherhood that it was not a conference, convention, synod, or any other kind of an ecclesiastical combine. Those who attended were not delegates and, as such, did not represent anybody. There was no effort to call a strike or even to boost prices. The meeting was not for preachers exclusively. It was hoped that the members of the different congregations in the neighborhood of Mount Pleasant would attend. It was felt by those who promoted the meeting that the preachers of this section did not know each other well enough and did not know well enough the needs of the different parts of the field and that a few days of association would help on both these points and prove a great inspiration.

The following preaching brethren were present during the meeting: F. W. Smith, F. B. Srygley, James E. Scobey, H. Leo Boles, S. P. Pittman, J. Paul Slayden, B. C. Goodpasture, R. E. L. Taylor, C. E. Holt, G. C. Brewer, H. N. Mann, J. Pettey Ezell, J. E. Thornberry, F. C. Sowell, H. N. Rutherford, B. A. Harding, W. W. Bates, C. S. Austin, H. M. Phillips, E. Gaston Collins, L. G. Kennamer, B. F. Staggs, and John C. Graham.

There were three meetings per day—one regular sermon and two less formal meetings. Those who preached regular sermons were: J. Paul Slayden, S. P. Pittman, R. E. L. Taylor, F. W. Smith, H. Leo Boles, G. C. Brewer, and J. E. Thomporey.

The meeting proved to be a feast of good things. A spirit of brotherly love prevailed, and all were stirred by the strong lessons presented and the realization of how great is the need to send out the word. This was illustrated in one meeting in which the seven preachers present pledged themselves to each hold a meeting in a destitute place. The plan is to induce a congregation to have fellowship in each of the meetings, but, if that cannot be had, to hold the meeting, anyway. A combined report of the meetings is to be made through our papers. If the inspiration of that meeting of seven preachers results in seven souls being led to the Christ, the good done will not be known until the great and final day of accounts.

The people of the church at Mount Pleasant royally entertained the visiting preachers. Their homes were thrown open and the visitors could accept only a small part of the invitations given. Their hospitality was another instance of the liberality they have shown in their work with Brother Austin.

Every one, as far as is known, went away with inspiration and a determination to do more for the Master. The places where they work will feel the good influence. We cannot teach others faith unless we have faith; we cannot inspire hope in others unless we have hope; and we cannot instill love into the hearts of others unless our hearts are filled with love. An effort to stir up these, the crowning graces of the Christian life, was a prominent feature of this meeting.

An Earnest Protest.

BY DR. W. S. VICKREY.

I must enter an earnest protest against the haphazard and slipshod method of sending money to missionaries in foreign countries. Any one so disposed may constitute and appoint himself or herself an agent to receive and disburse funds to any one, and churches and individuals send donations to such parties without any attempt to ascertain whether they are worthy. I have reference now especially to D. C. Janes. Several months ago the Gospel Advocate published sufficient evidence to convince any unbiased person, it seems to me, that he was in sympathy with, if not really at heart a believer in, Adventism. His association with Jorgenson in a certain church trouble in Louisville ought to have shown any one where he stood at that time, and he has been as silent as the grave so far as explaining to the brotherhood why he acted as he did. Notwithstanding this, brethren and churches have been sending contributions to two Adventists in India through him. Of course, brethren did it ignorantly, I suppose; but their ignorance did not divert their money from an erroneous cause. The early churches did never send their contributions to Paul through a self-appointed agent, and it is wrong to do this now. If any congregation has a member in it who desires to act as a medium to transmit funds, the church should publicly indorse such person or refuse to allow him or her to act in this capacity. The elders of churches are the only proper persons to control the funds to be sent to foreign countries, and I refer to the churches in the days of inspiration as evidence. I could mention other "agents," but I do not think it necessary at this time. Churches and individuals cannot be too careful along this line. Some brethren say: "Well, my intention is good, and I'll give him the benefit of the doubt." The idea is: "If the gift does not redound to the good of the cause, I am blameless." This way of reasoning is false, for any one may be reasonably certain by a little investigation, and no one is under any obligation to give where there is doubt. If members of the church should act in business matters as they do in church affairs, none would succeed at anything. As long as congregations follow slipshod methods in church work, there cannot be the zeal and earnestness that should characterize all of them.

A Cantiele of Love.

"I have always found it safe to follow where Love led." (Sidney Lanier.)

Across a dew-wet, rose-embroidered lawn I heard a poet sing, at break of dawn, A chant that made the garden brighter blow: "Where Love has led 'tis always safe to go."

Again, when daylight's weary sands had run, I heard the poet sing at set of sun
The canticle that benediction shed:
"Tis always safe to go where Love has led."

"Where Love has led"—Gethsemane and loss, Grief, pain, steep Calvary where stands the Cross— "Tis always safe to go." Help me, O God, Always to keep to paths that Love has trod!

$2.00 a year, in advance; to Canada and foreign countries, $2.50, in advance.

The date on your tab shows the time to which your subscription is paid. When money is received, the date will be changed, which will answer for a receipt. Two weeks time must ordinarily occur from the time your remittance is sent before the tab on your paper is changed; if not changed by that time, notify us at once.

When changing your post-office address, tell us your old as well as your new address; otherwise two papers might be charged to you. Remittances will be at our risk when sent by express or post-office money order, in registered letter, or by draft payable to our order. This paper is mailed regularly to all subscribers until definite orders in writing are received and all arrestages paid in full. If you wish us to stop your paper, write us to that effect; but do not ask it unless you have paid all arrests, if there are any. Do not ask your postmaster to attend to it for you, but do it yourself.

Subscribers, after paying for their papers, will favor us by noting whether the date on the address label is changed, and, if it is not changed within a month, by writing to us. We are careful, but mistakes may occur or letters may be lost. Our rule is to change the date on the day payment is received; but the mechanical work of correcting and printing the list takes time, and payments even from near-by places may not appear the first week. Credits for payments from a distance may be even more delayed. Mistakes are easily rectified if prompt notice is given.

Guarantee of Advertising.

All the advertisements in this paper are, we believe, signed by trustworthy persons. To prove our faith by works, we will make good to actual subscribers any loss sustained in trusting advertisers who prove to be deliberate swindlers. We shall not attempt to adjust trifling disputes between subscribers and honorable business men who advertise, nor pay the debts of honest bankrupts. To make this guarantee effective, in all cases say in writing advertisers, "I saw your advertisement in the Gospel Advocate;" and if anything goss wrong, notify us immediately in writing.

Different Things Which God's People Are Called in the New Testament.

BY M. C. K.

The hope is fondly cherished that this "Kingdom" number in the series of special numbers of the Gospel Advocate, may be so used by the different contributors as to clearly reflect the divine light on the subject. This light shines through what the Lord himself and inspired apostles have plainly said, and it is the purpose of the present article to collate and put in brief form a number of these sayings. We preface the collation with the very important and significant fact that, by the employment of numerous symbols or figures of speech, inspired men represent God's people in a variety of ways by which the character of the said people, their relationship to God, to one another, and to other persons, and their general mission in the world are clearly set forth. Much of the confusion on the kingdom question will be obviated by a careful consideration of this fact; and to demonstrate that this is so, let the reader carefully note the following things which are distinctly said or necessarily implied of the people of God in the New Testament:

build my church." (Matt. 16: 18.) "And there arose on that day a great persecution against the church which was in Jerusalem; and they were all scattered abroad throughout the regions of Judea and Samaria, except the spostles." (Acts 8: 1.)

- 2. They are called a vineyard. "I am the true vine, and my Father is the husbandman. Every branch in me that beareth not fruit, he taketh it away; and every branch that beareth fruit, he cleanseth it, that it may bear more fruit. . . . I am the vine, ye are the branches." (John 15:1-5.)
- 3. They are called an army. "Suffer hardship with me, as a good soldier of Christ Jesus," (2 Tim. 2: 3.) "The weapons of our warfare are not of the flesh, but mighty before God to the casting down of strongholds." (2 Cor. 10: 4.) "This charge I commit unto thee, my child Timothy, according to the prophecies which led the way to thee, that by them thou mayest war the good warfare." (1 Tim. 1: 18.) "Wherefore take up the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to withstand in the evil day, and, having done all, to stand." (Eph. 6: 13.)
- 4. They are called a kingdom. "My kingdom is not of this world." (John 18: 36.) "Who delivered us out of the power of darkness, and translated us into the kingdom of the Son of his love." (Col. 1: 13.) "And he made us to be a kingdom." (Rev. 1: 6.)
- 5. They are called a husbandry or titled land. "Ye are God's husbandry." (1 Cor. 3: 9.)
- 6. They are called a building. "Ye are . . . God's building." (1 Cor. 3: 9.)
- 7. They are called a nation: "Ye are . . . a holy nation." (1 Pet. 2: 9.)
- 8. They are called a race. "But ye are an elect race."
- 9. They are called a family. "I bow my knees unto the Father, from whom every family in heaven and on earth is named." (Eph. 3: 14, 15.) "All ye are brethren; . . one is your Father, even he who is in heaven." (Matt. 23: 8, 9.) "After this manner therefore pray ye: Our Father who art in heaven." (Matt. 6: 9.)
- 10. They are called a temple. "Know ye not that ye are a temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you?" (1 Cor. 3: 16.) "We are a temple of the living God." (2 Cor. 6: 16.)
- 11. They are called a habitation. "Ye also are builded together for a habitation of God in the Spirit." (Eph.
- 12. They are called a house. "Ye also . . . are built up a spiritual house." (1 Pet. 2: 5.)
- 13. They are called living stones. "Ye also, as living stones, are built up a spiritual house." (1 Pet. 2: 5.)
- 14. They are called a priesthood. "Ye also, as living stones, are built up a spiritual house, to be a holy priesthood." (1 Pet. 2: 5.)
- 15. They are called a people. "I will call that my people which was not my people." (Rom. 9: 25.)
- 16. They are called brethren and sisters. "All ye are brethren." (Matt. 23: 8.) "To the saints and faithful brethren in Christ that are at Colosse." (Col. 1: 2.) "'To Apphia our sister." (Phile. 2.)
- 17. They are called saints. "To all that are in Rome, beloved of God, called to be saints," (Rom, 1: 7.)
- 18. They are called a body. "Now ye are the body of Christ, and severally members thereof." (1 Cor. 12: 27.)
- 19. They are called the faithful in Christ. "To the saints that are at Ephesus, and the faithful in Christ." (Eoh. 1: 1.)
- 20. They are called God's workmanship. "For we are his workmanship." (Eph. 2: 10.)
- 21. They are called one new man. "For he is our peace, 1. They are called a church. "Upon this rock I will who hath made both one; . . . that he might create in himself of the two one new man, so making peace." (Eph. 2: 14, 15.)

22. They are called fellow citizens. "Ye are fellow citizens with the saints." (Eph. 2: 19.)

23. They are called the household of God. "Ye are fellow citizens with the saints, and of the household of God." (Eph. 2: 19.)

24. They are called servants. "Be servants one to another." (Gal. 5: 13.)

25. They are called lights. "That ye may become blameless and harmless, children of God without blemish in the midst of a crooked and perverse generation, among whom ye are seen as lights in the world." (Phil. 2: 15.)

26. They are called the circumcision. "For we are the circumcision." (Phil. 3: 3.)

27. They are called sons of light. "While ye have the light, believe on the light, that ye may become sons of light." (John 12: 26.) "Ye were once darkness, but are now light in the Lord; walk as children of light." (Eph. 5: 8.)

28. They are called the household of faith. "Work that which is good toward all men, and especially toward them that are of the household of the faith." (Gal. 6: 10.)

29. They are called runners in a race. "Know ye not that they that run in a race run all, but one receiveth the prize? Even so run; that ye may attain." (1 Cor. 9: 24.)

30. They are called an epistle. "Ye are an epistle of Christ." (2 Cor. 3; 3.)

31. They are called sons and daughters. "And I will receive you, and will be to you a Father, and ye shall be to me sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty." (2 Cor. 6: 17, 18.)

32. They are called a tabernacle. "We have such a high priest, who sat down on the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the heavens, a minister of the sanctuary, and of the true tabernacle, which the Lord pitched, not man." (Heb. 8: 1, 2.)

33. They are called sheep. "I am the door of the sheep." (John 10: 7.) "He saith unto him again a second time, Simon, son of John, lovest thou me? He saith unto him, Yea, Lord: thou knowest that I love thee. He saith unto him, Tend my sheep." (John 21: 16.)

34. They are called salt. "Ye are the salt of the earth." (Matt, 5: 13.)

35. They are called light. "Ye are the light of the world," (Matt. 5: 14.)

Thus, God's people—not two or more different things, but one and the same thing—are either directly or by implication called "church," "vineyard," "army," "kingdom," "husbandry," "building," "nation," "race," "family," "temple," "habitation," "house," "salt," "light," "sheep," and on till we have already, by actual count, found them to be called or represented by thirty-five different things.

Now, since the people of God are called all of these things-not all of them at the same time under the same figure, of course, for that would make nonsense, but called one of them at one time under one figure and another of them at another time under another figure, and so on throughout the list, a great and different lesson being taught by each separate figurative representation—if it be proper to take any two of them, for example, "church" and "kingdom," and make them mean two different institutions, then, by the same logic, it is proper to take any other two of them, for example, "salt" and "light," and make them represent two institutions; or "sheep" and "army," and make them represent two institutions; or "vineyard" and "house," and make them represent two institutions. If not, why not? If because Inspiration calls God's people the two different things-"church" and "kingdom"-it follows that "church" represents one institution and "kingdom" another, then because Inspiration calls God's people two other different things—"vineyard" and "house"—it follows that "vineyard" represents one institution and "house" another. If not, why not?

On precisely the same principle, Jesus, the King in this kingdom and the Head of this body, the church, is represented at one time under one figure as a lamb, at another time under another figure as a lion, and at still another time under another figure as a shepherd; but the lamb, the lion, and the shepherd all mean one and the same person—Jesus. But this is no plainer than is the fact that God's people are called "church," "kingdom," "body," "house," "building," "army," and many other things; but all of these things refer to one and the same thing—namely, God's people; and if men will let God speak and keep their opinions to themselves, the truth in both cases will be plain.

The Church and the Kingdom.

BY E. A. E.

At the time it was written, my article last week, embracing the church and the kingdom, represented about the best I could do on the subject. As we study more, we learn more; and we must never conclude that already we know all that can be learned on any subject. Hence, we can never cease to study a subject, and must never be ashamed to acknowledge a mistake and to confess we have learned more.

When, in his vigor and strength and great knowledge of the Bible, Brother Lipscomb wrote his last series of articles on the purpose of laying on of hands—whether an ordaining ceremony or not—he told me that he studied again every passage in the Bible, both in the Old Testament and the New, on the subject. Notwithstanding he had studied the subject and had written upon it from young manhood, he went studiously over the whole ground again. In this way only can we learn the will of God. But too many of us, like lazy Ned of whom we learned in the old-time school reader,

Will never take the pains
To seek the prize that labor gains.

I beg leave now to offer some suggestions and to emphasize some principles absolutely essential to the understanding of the will of God and to the practice of the same. With all our teaching, theorizing, and dogmatizing, all depends upon our practicing the will of God. No practice, and faith and knowledge die.

1. God teaches and requires all to "speak the same thing" and to "be perfected together in the same mind and in the same judgment" on this subject as well as on all others "that pertain unto life and godliness." There must be no division among God's people, (See 1 Cor. 1: 10; 2 Pet. 1: 4.) All must have the mind of Christ, must "be of the same mind," must have "the same love," must be no division among God's people. (See 1 better than himself," and must do "nothing through faction or through vainglory." (Phil. 2: 1-11.) All must be "of one heart and soul." (Acts 4: 32.) So important is this and so great is the sin of causing division over untaught questions or "occasions of stumbling" over things "contrary to the teaching of Christ" (Rom. 16: 17, 18) that Paul declares that "a factious man after a first and second admonition" must be refused or avoided, because "such a one is perverted, and sinneth, being self-condemned" (Tit. 3: 10, 11).

2. All who reject these commands of God, reject the counsel of God against themselves as much so as the Pharisees and lawyers did when they rejected John's baptism. (Luke 7: 28-30.) Sometimes I am compelled to stop and ask: "Do we really mean to obey God, anyway?" Is this our aim? If so, we must regard all he says,

3. All know that in order to "speak the same thing," etc., all must speak as the oracles of God speak; must "hold the pattern of sound words," "even the words of our Lord Jesus Christ;" must determine to know nothing "save Jesus Christ, and him crucified;" must not preach themselves, but Christ as Lord, and themselves servants for Jesus' sake; and must not add anything to the gospel or take anything away from it.

4. All strife, contentions, bitterness, alienations, divisions, and the destruction of many souls have come from the sin of brethren in refusing to obey God in his command to avoid all untaught questions and to preach and teach only "the word"—the gospel—Christ crucified—nothing else. Such men as Jesse and E. G. Sewell, David Lipscomb, Moses E. Lard, Ben. Franklin, and all the godly and wise men who stood with them when the church was one, strove to obey God at this as well as at all other points; but the present rising generation of preachers and young people in the church—at least, many of them—seem to want to show that they know more than these grand old worthies and will teach what they please. There is no one thing more prolific of evil than this disposition to ignore God at this point. It smacks of rebellion.

5. God's word cannot be ignored and rejected at any point. All must know that God means this in saying that "whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet stumble in one point, he is become guilty of all." (James 2: 10.) The one who goes onward and is not satisfied with, and does not abide in, the teaching of Christ, cannot have God and Christ and the Holy Spirit. (2 John 9.) He who is of God hears the words of God. It matters not what a man is in religion, if he has not the words of God, he cannot have the Spirit of God and cannot be of God. (John 8: 47.) It is no wonder that God condemns presumption and that the Psalmist prayed:

Keep back thy servant also from presumptuous sins; let them not have dominion over me: then shall I be upright, and I shall be clear from great transgression." (Ps. 19: 13.)

6. God's word, on the other hand, must be respected and received as it is indeed his word, and not the word of men. (1 Thess. 2: 12.) His word must not be placed on a level with the speculations, theories, notions, doctrines, and commandments of men. All in humility and with a contrite spirit must tremble at the word of God. (Isa. 66: 2, 5; Ez. 9: 4.) All should know what trembling at God's word means.

7. All who in the love of truth and the fear of God speak God's word only, seek only the glory of God. All who speak from themselves—that is, their own theories and notions, wisdom and learning—seek their own glory. It is one thing to seek the glory of men and quite a different thing to seek God's glory. All who cannot be contented to preach Christ crucified in order to save souls and who turn to sensational subjects and worldly philosophy seek the praise of the world and their own glory. (See John 7: 14-18—study this well.)

8. Are those who attempt to build a theory on the supposed meaning of some difficult passage, to the rejection of the unmistakable meaning of many plain passages, seeking to do and to teach the will of God or their own glory? All should know that the plain passages of scripture and declarations of Jehovah, whose meaning cannot be mistaken, cannot be set aside by some supposed meaning of a passage which is difficult to understand. All should know that God never contradicts himself; that every word he utters is the truth; that it is wrong to attempt to array his word against his word; but that all should seek to understand his teaching by explaining the difficult passages of scripture by the unmistakable meaning of that which cannot be misunderstood.

9. If we do not seek first God's kingdom and his righteousness; if we do not place his glory above everything; if we desire praise of men and seek our own glory; if we do not purpose without reservation and do not will with all power of mind and soul and in the face of consequences to do God's will, to do always the things which please him, we can never come to the knowledge of the truth or know the will of God. We must will to do God's will, not our own—not our theories; we must desire above all things that the truth may prevail. Our learning, receiving, and doing the will of God depend altogether upon our own condition of heart, for which condition we alone are responsible; all depends upon what we seek.

10. Then let us, with open Bibles and open hearts, take every passage in the Bible which mentions or relates to the church and the kingdom—the kingdom of God, the kingdom of David, the kingdom of Christ, the eternal kingdom—with the prayer for God's guidance and the determination to do God's will in regard to it, and Jesus assures us that we can ascertain what the will of God is. Then we will become of the same mind and judgment, and be of one heart and soul, and be one as Christ and God are one. Amen.

In sending contributions, be sure and state whether they are intended for the Home Orphans' Fund, the Armenian and Syrian Fund, or the Poland Fund. I should be glad if more of the contributions were designated for use in providing for orphans in this country, since there are constant appeals from destitute families close to us. Make all checks and money orders payable to A. B. Lipscomb, who will forward them to the proper commissioners.

We commend the following from Bryan Collin, in the Christian Index: "A prominent business man in New York, in diagnosing the present unrest in all quarters, is quoted as giving this explanation: 'The world is trying to find a substitute for work.' The search for substitutes is one of the prevailing tendencies of our day. There are numbers of men and women seeking substitutes, not only for work, but for various other necessary, difficult, and commonplace things. We are confronted on every side with advertisements of medical remedies which are declared to be substitutes for certain basic drugs much used in the practice of medicine. Most of the physicians belonging to the regular school of medicine will tell you that there is no substitute for these drugs. A thousand substitutes for oldfashioned religion are offered us on every hand. The old way, which requires repentance for sin and a succeeding life of devotion, is a little too hard, and some easier, less exacting, and more exciting way is warmly commended by first one and then another school of propagandists. It will be a fine thing for us all when we make up our minds that there are some necessary things for which no substitutes can be found and that the only wise course is to demand the genuine and take no imitations."

Mormonism, Alias Latter-Day Saints.

This series of short articles, written especially for the Gospel Advocate, are not, and will not be, copyrighted. Any editor or tract writer is welcome to all or any part of them for service against the "elders" going up and down our land preaching "the gospel of Nephi" with both tongue and tract.

The above heading is used for these articles that there may be no doubt as to the people whose teachings I examine.

A Mormon is one who believes that Joseph Smith, Jr., was a prophet of God and that the "Book of Mormon" is inspired. Scratch a Latter-Day Saint, no matter what his brand, and all agree as to the two items above, no matter how much they differ on other points. Hence, they all, all denominations of Mormondom (and there are several), stand for "Mormonism," though they call themselves "Latter-Day Saints."

Was Joseph Smith, Jr., a prophet of God? This question presents in a clean, clear-cut way the vital issue. The ism stands or falls with the answer to it. This is so evident that comment is not needed to impress the truth.

The only way to a correct answer to this question is an examination of his so-called "Revelations and Prophecies" in the light of subsequent facts. There is no other way to readily and rightly answer the question.

On my table are two pamphlets, one by Oliver Cowdery, printed in 1839, his "Defense" for separating himself from the Latter-Day Saints; the other, by David Whitmer, "Address to All Believers in Christ," published in 1887. The primary student of the ism knows the relation of these two men to Joseph Smith, Jr., and the "Book of Mormon."

Cowdery was the first Latter-Day Saint. Joseph Smith baptized him. He then baptized Joseph, who was the second Latter-Day Saint. David Whitmer says he was the third person baptized into that faith. These men's names go out in every "Book of Mormon" as witnesses of its inspiration. They were the "Aaron and Hur" of Joseph Smith, Jr., the prophet. Hence, they are first-class witnesses on the issue before us.

A word about the Toronto (Canada) "revelation." This revelation is not found in the "Book of Doctrine and Covenants." That it was and is entitled to a place in that book, which professes to hand out the "revelations given to Smith, the prophet," will be made evident. Cowdery says: "The revelation was given from the Lord exactly as came the 'Book of Mormon'-viz., by Urim and Thummin." Whitmer says: "When the 'Book of Mormon' was in the hands of the printer, more money was needed to finish the printing of it. . . . Hyram Smith said that it had been suggested to him that some of the brethren might go to Toronto, Canada, and sell the copyright of the 'Book of Mormon' for considerable money. He persuaded Joseph to inquire of the Lord about it. Joseph concluded to do so. He had not yet given up the stone. He looked into the hat in which he had placed the stone and received a revelation, that some of the brethren should go to Toronto, Canada, and that they would sell the copyright of the 'Book of Mormon.'"

This testimony establishes as a fact that Joseph Smith, Jr., had a "revelation" by the same means he used to get the "Book of Mormon" from the "gold plates" and his other revelations (?) in the "Book of Doctrine and Covenants."

- 1. To sell the copyright of the "Book of Mormon."
- 2. To send the manuscript by some of the brethren to Toronto, Canada.
 - 3. That these brethren would find a man there anxious to buy the "First Elders" copyright of the "Book of Mormon."

4. That this buyer would pay "considerable money" for the convright.

Hiram Page and Oliver Cowdery were the "some brethren" who went to Toronto on this mission. The revelation came in the "orthodox way" and was as clear as a sunbeam.

Cowdery says: "So great was my faith that in going to Toronto nothing but calmness pervaded my soul. Every doubt was banished and it was as much expected that Brother Page and I would fulfill the revelation as that we should live."

Whitmer says: "They failed entirely to sell the copyright, returning without any money. Joseph Smith was at my father's house when Page and Cowdery returned. I was there also and am an eyewitness to these facts."

Cowdery says: "We did not find the man anxious to buy the 'First Elders' copyright and had to return surprised and disappointed. It would be no easy task to describe our desolation and grief."

Whitmer says: "Jacob Whitmer and John Whitmer were also present when Hiram Page and Oliver Cowdery returned from Toronto, Canada. Well, we were all in great trouble. We asked Joseph how it was that he had received a revelation from the Lord for some of his brethren to go to Toronto and sell the copyright of the 'Book of Mormon,' and the brethren had entirely failed in their undertaking."

Reader, we leave Joseph fronting that question for our next article. His way out of it was a "jump from the frying pan into the fire," so far as his reputation as a prophet is concerned.

In the light of this Toronto "revelation" and the results, a breakdown at every point of the revelation, what is, what must be, your answer to the question: "Was Joseph Smith, Jr., a prophet of God?"

Priest Upon His Throne.

BY J. B. NELSON.

There is an idea extant that Christ will some day come back to earth and be seated upon David's throne. If you have such an idea, I hope you will consider carefully the following: "Even he shall build the temple of the Lord; and he shall bear the glory, and shall sit and rule upon his throne; and he shall be a priest upon his throne: and the counsel of peace shall be between them both." (Zech. 6: 13.) "For if he were on earth, he should not be a priest, seeing that there are priests that offer gifts according to the law." (Heb. 8: 4.)

By reading the entire sixth chapter of Zechariah, one cannot help but understand that Christ is the one of whom the prophet speaks that shall be "a priest upon his throne." Paul tells us that if Christ were upon earth, he should not be a priest. Now, if Christ is to be priest upon his throne, and he could not be a priest upon earth, so we cannot keep from concluding that the throne of Christ will never be on earth. Just as sure as the two passages refer to Christ -and they do-Jesus cannot have a throne upon earth. If you should say that he will cease to be a priest and be only a king upon his throne, you pervert the scriptures, because he is to be priest upon his throne, and the counsel of peace is to be between them both; so when priest and throne are separated, the counsel of peace ceases. Away with all materialism, for it will not stand the light of God's eternal truth.

Men's apprehensions are often nearer than their expressions; they may mean the same thing, when they seem not to say the same thing.—Benjamin Whichcote.

SAID IN PARAGRAPHS

Ly JAMES A. ALLEN

If you put thorns en a man's path while he is alive, don't insult his memory by putting flowers on his grave when he is dead

The Jew gave a tenth of his income to the work of the Lord. A Christian ought to feel it a point of honor to do more, and ought to hang his head in shame to do less.

The great philanthropic gifts of rich men are more often to palliate a suffering conscience than they are the fruits of a real love for suffering humanity. A man who steals in his youth ought not to give it away in his old age.

We have no objection to our society brethren playing on a harp in heaven. What we point out is that the Rules don't call for it down here on earth.

You can now get an excellent five cents' worth of almost anything for a quarter. The Wall Street Journal says: "Landlords who have not raised their rents could hold a convention in a telephone booth."

That threatened strike of Baptist ministers probably was called off. John D. Rockefeller handed them three million dollars

Brother S. F. Morrow and I have labored considerably at a place called "Needmore." We can testify that they have an abundance to eat. A city man eats so heartly that he feels like it ought to be called "Eatmore."

Mr. Bryan is perhaps one of the greatest traveling evangelists of modern times. He traverses the world at such a rate that his enemies call him "a bird of passage," and he comes nearer speaking to the multitudes twenty-four hours a day than any man living. If men who preach the gospel would do it with the same industry and ability that Mr. Bryan uses in preaching democracy, no adding machine could compute the number of souls that would be saved.

It is as great a sin for moving-picture actors and actresses to have pictures made of kissing scenes between men and women who are not husband and wife as it would be for those same men and women to do that same kissing behind closed doors. There is no moral difference in doing it publicly. To say that a woman is only "acting" when she kisses a man who is not her husband does not prevent a kiss from being a kiss.

When I was a newspaper reporter at a big meeting once, I asked an Episcopalian rector, who was to deliver the "invocation," if he had his prayer written out. He fixed up a beautiful speech, but I couldn't tell whether it was for the ears of the Lord or the ears of the crowd. A. Campbell once made some sweet-spirited people very angry when he called attention to the fact that a noted divine was in the habit of pulling his specks out of one pocket and his prayer out of another one.

According to population, Nashville, Tenn., has more Christians in it than any place in the world; and when it is remembered that only a very small per cent of even Nashville has ever really heard a gospel sermon, it seems strange that a preacher should advertise that he has a few weeks in July and August that are not filled. Time not filled! What does he mean? The harvest is plenteous.

The best way for a preacher to get a sure-enough good financial support is to blaze away at the first crowd of sinners he can get to and trust the Lord and the brethren to do the rest. Both the Lord and the brethren will pay him according to the "preach." The Lord will do his part, and it is up to him as a teacher to teach the brethren to do theirs. "Like priest, like people; like mother, like child; like cat, like kit."

If my memory is correct, a member of one of our wealthiest congregations once figured that the average contribution of that congregation was about twenty cents a head. Twenty cents is one-tenth of two dollars. Do you suppose the average earnings of that congregation, per head, were two dollars a week?

Douglas Fairbanks was mixed up in a divorce scandal; little Mary Pickford spent the allotted time at Reno; her cousin, Alice Joyce, has two or three living husbands; and now Mrs. Charlie Chaplin fiatly lays the blame of her unhappiness at the door of "a woman Charlie knew before he married me." There may be some few decent men and women in the "movies," but, on the whole, it is a loose bunch to be permitted to exercise such a tremendous influence over the young men and young women of the country. No wonder the County Court Clerk has such a close race with the divorce court.

When a man quarrels about the "kickers," he generally has something that ought to be kicked.

There can be no doubt but that labor has many just grievances against capital. But the pendulum should not swing to the other extreme. If I had to choose between the rule of a monarch and the rule of a mob, I should infinitely prefer the former.

We understand that the people who are nicknamed "Campbellites," while not ashamed of Alexander Campbell, would like for some of their traducers to put their finger upon one thing taught by Campbell that was not taught by Paul and Peter eighteen hundred years before Campbell was born. They claim that unless Campbell wrote the Bible a man who preaches the Bible cannot be a "Campbellite."

In New Testament times persons who were baptized in the Holy Spirit could speak with other tongues. To-day people who claim to have been baptized in the Holy Spirit cannot speak their mother tongue correctly. A vast difference!

Morality, even at its highest pitch, is not holiness; for holiness is something of God, wherever found, like the sunbeams which inhere in the sun and are inseparable from it, even while resting on the earth. Honesty, sobriety, purity—these are the highest qualities of morality; and noble qualities they are. But love to God, communion with God, consecration to God—these are the attributes of true religion. Let us look to it that our orthodoxy has principle, honest and square and straightforward, as well as unction; that our morality has holiness as well as uprightness.—Selected.

Good men study to spiritualize their bodies; bad men, to incarnate their souls.—Benjamin Whichcote.

Valor.

BY LOULA MARIE ADKISSON.

Deep in the forest where the shadows lie,
Where the stars gleam not, nor the moonbeams stray,
With uplifted head, on a leafy bough,
Sits a brave bird singing his sweetest lay.

May we, as the song bird, sing in the night.
A song in the deep of the darkest dale.
Inward and outward joy's streamlet shall flow,
If with a brave song our sorrow we veil,

O let us sing, let us smile as we go,
Till smiling we face the sunset's glow,
And smiling awake when the dreaming is o'er—
Wake in that land no sorrow can know.

COMB SAGE TEA IN HAIR TO DARKEN IT

It's Grandmother's Recipe to Keep Her Locks Dark, Glossy, Beautiful

The old-time mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur for darkening gray, streaked, and faded hair is grand-mother's recipe, and folks are again using it to keep their hair a good, even color, which is quite sensible, as we are living in an age when a youthful appearance is of the greatest advantage. Nowadays, though, we don't have the troublesome task of gathering the sage and the mussy mixing at home. All drug stores sell the ready-to-use product, improved by the addition of other ingredients, called "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound." It is very popular, because nobody can discover it has been applied. Simply moisten your comb or a soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears; but what delights the ladies with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound is that, besides beautifully darkening the hair after a few applica-tions, it also produces that soft luster and appearance of abundance which is so attractive.

Offenses.

BY H. C. FLEMING.

"It is impossible but that offenses will come: but woe unto him, through whom they come! It were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and he cast into the sea, than that he should offend one of these little ones." (Luke 17: 1, 2.)

There are many ways of giving offense, but the most frequent are by thoughts expressed in spoken or written words. (James 3: 2.) A reply in anger always aggravates an offense, "but a soft answer turneth away Harsh words offend, many times, unnecessarily. "A wise man's heart is at his right hand; but a fool's heart at his left." (Eccles. 10: 2.)

Perhaps the greatest offense at the present is the going "beyond what is written" in word and practice. Men were deceived by the false prophets of old, and in like manner false teachers are deceiving many, and thereby causing some to stumble and give offense to their brethren and to God. (2 Pet. 2: 1, 2; 1 John 4: 1.)

The love of God is that we keep his commandments, not some man's think so about them. (1 John 5: 3.)

Sin is offensive to God and to his servants. Woe to him who willingly commits it! Some men's sins are open; others' follow after. So also with obedience and good works. (1 Tim. 5: 24, 25.)

If any man becomes lifted up with pride, he is almost sure to give offense to some one; but no one should be "puffed up for one against another." (1 Cor. 4: 6.) No man should think of himself more highly than he ought to think. (Rom. 12; 3.)

Becoming busybodies in others' affairs is sure to cause offense, it matters not who does it, whether men, women, or public speakers. (1 Tim.

Inasmuch as there is a woe pronounced upon any who give offense, no man or woman should think that he or she will escape the consequences of such sins when they are called before the judgment seat of God. (Rom. 14: 10-12.) Therefore the great importance of avoiding offense to any one, especially to the sons and daughters of our Lord Jesus Christ.

OBITUARIES

Watson.

Sister Waison, the wife of Brother W. S. Watson, has gone to rest. was the only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Fiser, of Morrillton, Ark. She was born in July, 1891, and departed this life on March 11, 1920. She was mar-ried to Brother Watson in 1907. To this union five children were born. Two departed this life before the death of their mother. Sister Watson leaves, to mourn her departure, a husband, three small children, father, mother, four brothers, an aged grandmother, and a host of brethren and sisters in Christ. She obeyed the gospel under the preaching of Brother J. W. Chism in 1908 and lived faithful until death. She will be greatly missed by all who She was faithful to the knew her. cause of Christ and always spoke hope-When possible, she was alful of it. ways found at the place of worship on Lord's day. She believed it was her duty to worship in spirit and in truth. Sister Watson was a dutiful wife, an indulgent mother, a submissive daughter, an affectionate sister, and a faithful Christian. We weep not as those who have no hope, May God bless Brother Watson and those little children. Z. D. BARBER.

Richardson.

Early on the morning of February 28, 1920, the spirit of Sister Myrtle A. Richardson left its earthly tabernacle to abide, we believe, in that city eternal in the heavens, "whose builder and maker is God." The death of Sister Richardson was a distinct loss and shock to the South College Street church of Christ, of which she was a devoted member. She contracted the influenza and its characteristic pneumonia almost simultaneously, and death from the diseases' very incipiency seemed to be inevitable. The writer has many times enjoyed the cordial hospitality of her home. She had three Christian boys of her own, one an active worker in the church, another a proclaimer of the gospel when health permits. Hence, she was in sympathy with, and intensely in-terested in, the writer's efforts at preaching the gospel. The husband of Sister Richardson passed away several years ago, leaving the family cares and responsibilities to her alone. She lived to see each one of her children, as a result of her training, become a Christian, She is survived by five children: three sons-Will, Tom, and Cecil; and two daughters-Sister Nannie Richardson and Sister W. W. Kerr, Jr. Funeral services were conducted at the South College Street Church by Brother James A. Allen and the writer. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors." J. LEONARD JACKSON.

Wright.

Daniel Maurice Wright was born in Tennessee, near Obion, on November 24, 1861, and died in Arizona on Feb-1920. He was buried at his home, Walla Walla, Wash. He obeyed the gospel in his youth, and I think it was in the year 1883, at the age of twenty-two, he entered Brother Larimore's school at Mars' Hill, Ala., where he remained more than In 1885 he entered the Bible years. College at Lexington, Ky., and spent two years there. On November 3, 1887, he was married to Miss Callie Eckeberger, of Mount Hope, Ala., to which union there were nine children born, two dying in infancy, thus leav-ing a wife and seven children (three sons and four daughters), with a host of relatives and friends, to mourn their loss. Truly, another good man has gone. Brother Wright was human and had his faults just as we all have, but he loved the Lord and his word. He loved the worship, and loved to preach the word. He was an excellent mixer and a most successful preacher, but was hindered much on account of throat and lung trouble, of which he finally died. As the end drew near he talked much of his departure and of that heavenly home to which he was going. To many, death seems a great calamity, but he did not seem so to consider it. Neither did the great apostle Paul. In the first chapter of his letter to the Philippians, Paul says he had "a desire to depart, and to be with Christ." So the true child of God looks upon death as a transition, a passing from the sorrows of time to passing from the ... the joys of eternity.

C. N. SPARKMAN.

Carlisle.

On February 17, 1920, the death angel entered the home of Brother E. D. Carlisle, of Huntsville, Ala., and claimed for its victim his wife, Sister Cassie Carlisle. She was born on November 24, 1889, and obeyed the gospel in September, 1911, and, so far as human beings can judge in such matters, was faithful unto death. She was ne of the best women I ever knew. in her home and living neighbor her a year, I had an opportunity find out her loyalty and faith. C tainly, then, we can sorrow as the e who have hope; for when Jesus comes again, all that believe in him will God bring with him; for at the last trump "the dead in Christ shall rise first," and those who remain "shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord. Wherefore comfort one another with these words." Sister Carlisle has gone to a sweeter, better home than earth can provide, and we grieve to give her up; yet we rejoice, as the faithful and hopeful, that she entered the "home where changes never come" and the "rest that remains for the people of God." She leaves a husband and one She leaves a husband and one little daughter, besides a number of close relatives, to mourn their loss. She was a faithful Christian, wife, mother, relative, and neighbor, and certainly we ought to get a great deal of comfort from this; for it is testified that she is "not dead, but liveth" in the land that is "fairer than day." All that mourn I commend "to God, and to the word of his grace, which is able to build you up, and to give you an inheritance among all them which are sanctified." C. M. PULLIAS.

Church Letters. BY J. G. ALLEN.

I cannot recall that I have ever read an article in the Gospel Advocate on the subject of church letters; so I thought it would do good to have this subject investigated so we all would understand it better. We all agree that this is a Bible subject, but to say we all understand the subject is a different proposition.

I heard F. B. Srygley relate a story about an old sister in Texas telling him that she had lived there thirty years, but that her membership was in Dekalb County, Tenn.; that she had never moved it. Now, this sister had the same idea so many others have on this subject-that is, that our membership is transferred only in a church letter. I once asked a good sister where she held her membership, and she answered, "Nowhere "-that her letter was in the bottom of her trunk. Persons holding such ideas as the ones just mentioned are grossly ignorant on the subject and need to be taught.

Another idea that some hold to is just as far from Bible authority as those already mentioned. Some think that you must go through the formality of a church letter in moving from one congregation to another in the same city or community where you are well acquainted. I have tried to find some one that could give me Bible authority for such a course, but have failed to find one so far. While many contend for such a course, they fail to produce Bible authority.

Paul said: "Those things, which ye have both learned and received, and heard, and seen in me, do: and the God of peace shall be with you." (Phil. 4: 9.) I remember that Paul once tried to join a church where he was not acquainted and failed until a brother present introduced him. (See Acts 9: 26, 27.) So one scriptural way of joining a congregation is to have some one that is personally acquainted with both parties to introduce them. Another way of introducing church members is to have letters of introduction. (See Rom, 16.)

With Paul as an example, we cannot make a mistake in letter writing or anything else; so we should always be careful to state the truth. Paul was just as ready to write a letter to warn brethren against "Alexander the coppersmith" as he was to commend Phebe. So it should be to-day. Where a man is known to be a false teacher or an impure man, the brotherhood should be warned.

No honest man will object if asked to give reference about himself among strangers, and the churches cannot be too careful as to who preaches for them. I asked a preacher for reference once, and the best he could do It's Ironing Da was to commend himself. By the way, preachers are not alone in this, but others are sometimes heard doing the same thing.

Paul said: "For we dare not make ourselves of the number, or compare ourselves with some that commend themselves: but they measuring themselves by themselves, and comparing themselves among themselves, are not wise." Yes, indeed, it is a sad day when a Christian man cannot find any one that will say any good of him, and he alone says it of himself.

Middle life is the period of special peril. A little while ago I asked a gathering of ministers and others: "What is the time of the greatest peril to the spiritual life?" The answer was unanimous. Among those men of experience and observation there was no hesitation in saying that it is not in youth, nor yet in old age, that the fires of temptation and trial are at their hottest. No, it is in middle life that the early glow and passion for high ideals cool; that the hand forgets its cunning for good work and tightens round the purse; that the lips are locked in silence against wrong and open in appeal for the gilded trifles of society and the mockeries of the world's vain show; that the feet run in deep ruts of worldliness and avoid the fresh but rugged path of harder service. Each man had visions of those he had known who had lost the elasticity and fervor of their Christian life; lost the fertile wonder of the world and the charm of the noble life; lost the care for the woes of the world and the daily tragedies of want and sorrow; lost the promises that guild the horizon with gold, and the justice and liberty and pity that are the saviors of humanity. Each had visions of men of whom they were obliged to say: "Ye did run well; why do you now move so slowly toward the goal?"-John Clifford.

A Few Things.

BY ED. S. DUNCAN.

The Gospel Advocate of March 11 was read with intense interest. I wish a million copies of this issue could be printed and circulated throughout the country.

The articles of Brethren Srygley and Larimore are of exceptional value. Will Brother Scobey be strictly honest now and admit that he is wrong in his contention? I think that he should. To my mind, Brother Srygley has forever settled the question as to the kingdom and church being the same institution. His position has been mine for thirty years. Brethren, let God's word, as given by our dear brother, end this controversy. Yes. Brother Larimore, your experience has been mine, too. How can God's children be so small? Why, I have had them to take away from me the half rate that the railroads were generous enough to give me, when they (the railroads) were not interested at all in my work. This certainly is robbing the poor, overworked and underpaid preacher. My earnest prayer to God is that no church, reading these articles, will ever be guilty again. Do not fail to read, also, Brother Holt's article on "Preachers and Preaching." It is worthy of your consideration. This is a serious question; but, Brother Holt, how is the poor preacher to help himseif? If he teaches churches their duty, they will say he only wants the money himself and is, therefore, selfish. They then refuse to pay him. If I was able, I would print these three articles in circular form and send them broadcast.

Now, last, but not least, is the reports of the colored brethren. Brethren, help those worthy men. Encourage them to write more. Especially, send some financial help to Brother S. W. Womack. His race will soon be run. His work will live on after he is gone. Help him now.

Apparent Thoughts.

The above is the heading I have used in writing occasionally for our various religious journals. Some of the readers of the Gospel Advocate may possibly recognize it.

I am not surprised at Brother T. B. Larimore's "Money Matters." doubt many preachers could relate similar experiences. I well remember how my heart has been made to ache when I had to go home and tell my wife of the small cash remuneration I received to bring home to her and the children as a reward for their selfdenial, loneliness, anxious care, and privation during my absence of weeks and months at a time. I would gladly

DRUGS EXCITE YOUR KIDNEYS, USE SALTS

If Your Back Hurts or Blade Bothers, Drink Lots of Water Bladder

When your kidneys hurt and your back feels sore, don't get scared and proceed to load your stomach with a lot of drugs that excite the kidneys and irritate the entire urinary tract. Keep your kidneys clean like you keep your bowels clean, by flushing them with a mild, harmless salts which removes the body's urinous waste and stimulates them to their normal activity. The function of the kidneys is to filter the blood. In twenty-four hours they strain from it five hundred grains of acid and waste; so we can readily understand the vital importance of keeping the kidneys active.

Drink lots of water; you can't drink too much. Also get from any pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast each morning for a few days and your kidneys will act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate clogged kidneys; also to neutralize the acids in urine so it no longer is a source of irritation, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which every one should take now and then to keep Try their kidneys clean and active. this; also keep up the water drinking, and no doubt you will wonder what became of your kidney trouble and backache.

have done with half the good meals and good beds and all the words of praise of my efforts, if only I could have handed over to my faithful wife a sum of money that would have enabled her to clothe herself and the children a little better. But she never complained and never objected to my going again. Happy woman! She has long since gone to her reward, and her "works do follow" in the lives of five girls whose lives she led in the right way. But if these thoughts will aid the "clerks" and "treasurers" of the churches in settling with the preachers, my object will have been accomplished. However, I might add that it was not always so.

I have the greatest respect for old Brother "E. A. E.," and regard him as a safe instructor in the Scriptures. In the Gospel Advocate of March 11, on page 251, in his article on "Rearing Children According to the Bible," he says that "1 Tim. 5: 20 refers to rebuking elders," etc. Now, Brother J. W. McGarvey, in a lecture on church government, published in "The Missouri Christian Lectures, 1889-1891," page 201, says: "The term 'them' in the passage in question does not find its antecedent in the word 'elder,' . . . for the very obvious reason that the two words differ in number. If this meaning had been intended, then after the words, 'against an elder receive not an accusation, except at the month of two or three witnesses,' we should have had 'him that sins reprove,' and not 'them that sin.' The facts are that there is no pronoun expressed in the Greek; and that Paul, after saying what he does of charges against an elder, in the next sentence introduces a new topic, that of reproving in the presence of the whole church such members in general as are guilty of sin: from which rebuke, however, elders are expressly exempted in a preceding verse (verse 1)." I have quoted only the essential parts from each writer; but I suppose that it is sufficient for Brother Elam to see the point of difference between him and Brother McGarvey and give any explanation which he may care to make, with the assurance that it will be of interest to at least the writer.

It Is Iron In The Blood That Makes Iron Muscles

Like These---Physician Explains a Secret of the Great Power and Endurance of Athletes -- Tells How Organic Iron--Nuxated Iron Helps Build Rich, Red Blood That Gives Physical Strength and Energy To touch the arm of a strong, sturdy man to feel the steel-like firmness of those mus-cular sinews—to think cular snothe of the tremendous force and power that must lie behind such strength—these are thrills that come to the thin-blooded men and women whose own bodies are weak and physically unfit.

It takes men of red-blooded force and power to hit the sledge-hammer blows that count—and whether you are a pile-driver or a bank president you cannot expect to win out against odds forever unless you are a man of iron—constantly able to strike—and strike hard.

strike—and strike hard.

"There are countless numbers of men today who at 40 are broken in health and steadily going downward to physical and mental decay," says Dr. John J. Van Horne, formerly Medical Inspector and Clinical Physician on the Board of Health of New York City, "Yet there are thousands of such men who undergo a most remarkable transformation the moment they get plenty of the right kind of iron into their blood to give increased energy and endurance. To help build stronger, healthier men and women, better able physically to meet the problems of everyday life, I believe that physicians should, at every opportunity prescribe organic iron—Nuxated Iron—for in my experience it is one of the best tonic and red blood builders known to medical science."

If you are not strong or well you owe it to yourself to make the following test: See how long you can work or how far you can walk without becoming tired. Next take two five-grain tablets of Nuxted Iron three times per day after meals, for two weeks. Then test your strength again and see for yourself how much you have gained. Many an athlete or prize fighter has won the day simply because be knew the secret of great strength and endurance, which comes from having plenty of Iron in the blood, while many another has gone down to inglorious defeat simply for lack of iron.

"It Feels Like Iron"

Manufacturers' Note: Nuxated Iron, which is prescribed and recommended above by physicians, is not a secret remedy, but one which is well known to druggists everywhere. Unlike the older inorganic from products, it is easily assimilated and does not infure the teeth, make them black, nor upset the stomach. The manufacturers guarantee successful and entirely satisfactory results to every nurchaser or they will refund your money. It is dispensed by all good druggists.

In a former report of work here, fifteen dollars from the church of Christ at Sellersburg, Ind., was reported contributed by G. A. Leach instead of the church. Since last report we have received donations as follows: From Mrs. Clarence Johnson, Louisiana, $1; Mrs. J. R. Halstead, $1: Sunday-school class, Seventh and Camp Streets, New Orleans, La., $3; church at Seventh and Camp Streets, New Orleans, La., $20.75; church at Minor Hill, Tenn., $15; church at Spencer, Tenn., $25; church at Texarkana, Ark., $8.50; church at Forest Hill, La., $10.

These gifts have been gratefully received, and we trust that much fruit will be given to their account. It is important that brethren send to us at once, that we may soon complete our meetinghouse which is now being erected. This work is worthy of their consideration, for much is depending upon it. Conforming to the World. BY JOHN T, SMITHSON.

The people of God and the people of the world are two separate and distinct people: one, the children of light; the other, the children of darkness. These are, therefore, in every way diametrically opposed to each other. One in gentleness and meekness seeks to emancipate by leading from darkness into the light of the glorious liberty of the Son of God. The other, through pernicious and diabolical ways, tries to incarcerate in the valley of Satan's dominion. The world with its appurtenances belongs to Satan. He got in possession of it through the fall of man. From that most ancient date to the present he has ruled in the kindoms of men. He is the archdemon of the soul and the hostile enemy of all righteousness. His determinate efforts are to thwart God's plans. To this end he has countless emissaries.

When Jesus was baptized and God publicly declared that he was his beloved Son in whom he was well pleased, the devil tempted Jesus by offering him the kingdoms of this world and the glory that pertained thereto. If the kingdoms of the world and their glories were not the devil's possessions, it would not have been a temptation to Jesus for the devil to offer them to him. If the devil through the temptation had overcome the Son of God as he intended, there would have been no redemption; hence, there would have been no people of God.

The church is the people of God; the world is the people of the devil. The world is lost-condemned. The church is redeemed-purchased. These are two organizations that are composed of human beings. They are clearly seen in the following quotation: "For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whoseever believeth on him should not perish, but have eternal life. For God sent not the Son into the world to judge the world; but that the world should be saved through him. He that believeth on him is not judged: he that believeth not hath been judged already, because he hath not believed on the name of the only begotten Son of God. And this is the judgment, that the light is come into the world, and men loved the darkness rather than the light; for their works were evil. For every one that doeth evil hateth the light, and cometh not to the light, lest his works should be eproved. But he that doeth the truth cometh to the light, that his works may be made manifest, that they have been wrought in God." (John 3: 16-22.) There are two classes designated and their difference denoted by these expressions: the world, believers, perish, eternal life, darkness, light, doeth evil, doeth the truth, cometh not to the light, cometh to the light, works done in darkness, works wrought in God. This difference between the two organizations—the church, or kingdom of God, on the one hand, and the world, the kingdom of darkness, on the other hand—is clearly shown throughout the New Testament.

After seeing so plainly the difference between members of the church of God, Christians, and the people of the world, citizens of the kingdom of the devil, it is amazingly strange that any Christian would turn from his high calling, forget the cleansing from his old sins, and debase himself by conforming to the ways of the corrupt world. Why should a Christian desire to descend from the glory-crowned mountain of purity and supreme happiness, illuminated by the presence of God, to the valley of corruption, misery, and eternal woe? When Christians conform to the world, they are on the way to the dark abode. To think of a Christian's being entangled again with the yoke of bondage and forming an alliance with the world is preposterous; yet the many alluring charms and the fumes of the boiling fleshpots permeating the air have caused many church members to go back into worldliness.

There are many oscillating church members. These always occupy the borderland. At times they are with the world with a great influence; at other times they are with the church, but their influence for good is weakened.

GROVE'S TASTELESS Chill TONIC is not a patent medicine, it is simply IRON and QUININE suspended in Syrup. So pleasant even children like it. The blood needs Quinine to Purify it and IRON to Enrich it. These reliable tonic properties never fail to drive out impurities in the blood.

The Strength-Creating Power of GROVE'S TASTELESS Chill TONIC has made it the favorite tonic in thousands of homes. More than thirty-five years ago, folks would ride a long distance to get GROVE'S TASTELESS Chill TONIC when a member of their family had Malaria or needed a body-building, strength-giving tonic. The formula is just the same today, and you can get it from any drug store. 60c per bottle.

Why should members of the church want to stay close to the world? There is great danger in staying close to any evil. When evil is seldom seen, it is hated; but when seen too often, it is pitied, then it is loved, and then it is embraced. In this way church members are fashioned according to this world. Though the world is wicked and is full of all kinds of evil, and though it is an enemy of God and all that is good, yet it is loved, it is conformed to, and friends are made with it by the members of the church who do not "press on unto perfection." Brethren, let us climb to a higher ground and to a better land. Henceforth may each night find us pitching our tents nearer that land that is fairer than day. If we will move heavenward, our burdens will get lighter and fewer and temptations will lose their power; but if we will not move onward and upward, the burdens of sin will press us hard and temptations will overpower us and we will die in despair, and in the end we will be cast into outer darkness forever, away from the glory of God and the peace and joy of the heavenly home.

Gems of Thought.

Other religions have risen out of man's search for God, but Christianity is God's search for man.

The Master will miss you if your seat is empty. He will mark the empty place. He will observe your willful absence from his house. He will bless the meeting with his benediction of peace, and you will miss the blessing if your seat be empty.

Resignation is too often conceived to be merely a submission, not unattended by complaint, to what we have no power to avoid; but that is less than the whole work of a Christian. Our full triumph will be found when we not merely repress inward tendencies to murmur, but when we would not, even though we could, alter what in any matter God has willed.

Do you say that this is poor solace, to know that others shall find it easier to live because we have found it hard; to see God plainer because we grope for him in darkness? What if generations to come shall possess the land? Does it forbid that our stroke is heavy and our complaining just? Yes, a thousand times, yes. This hope for large good to others through our narrow pains is the glory of every life which blesses the world. It is the secret of mother love, the ardor of patriotism, the luminous center of all that is grand and high; that others may profit by our loss, and be eased through our pains; it is the secret of

I shall stay here a few days or weeks longer, and as soon as safe for me I will be back at Fort Worth at work. I am sick of idleness and long to be busy again. Now I want to thank the host of God's children who are writing me such good letters, and beg them to wait till I get well before they look for replies, for I must rest.—Tice Elkins

Bonham, March 22.-For the last two weeks I have been conducting a vocal-music school for the church of Christ at Terrell. Everybody seemed to enjoy the work, and I think much good was accomplished for the Master. A move is on foot for me to conduct a Normal music school for them in the near future, and I feel sure those brethren will carry out their plans. I have been told that they do whatever they undertake to do. If all the churches would have a singing school taught occasionally, much more good would be accomplished for the Master, and they would not be made to blush if a stranger should be present while they are attempting to sing God's praises.—Frank Grammer.

Muskogee, March 22.—The meeting at Porter closed last Friday without additions. A good interest was manifested during the meeting. Yesterday was a great day with the church on East Okmulgee Avenue, this city. Larger crowds were present than at any other time since I began work here. Five persons placed their membership with the congregation. I baptized one lady last week. The breth-ren say the church is in better condition than ever before. Our spring meeting will begin on the first Lord's day in April. Brother W. M. Thompson will do the preaching. We are expecting a good meeting. Pray for us. W. L. Oliphant.

Muskogee, March 29.—The work with the East Okmulgee Avenue congregation is progressing nicely. Brother A. M. Foster delivered two sermons Sunday with his old-time eloquence and vigor, closing each address with a masterful plea to the allen sinner to obey the gospel and to the erring Christian to "repent of their wickedness and pray God." We have few men who are better able to present God's eternal truth than Brother Fos-Brother Oliphant will be in Fort Smith, Ark., on the first Sunday in April to fill an appointment or Broth-er Slater, of the Park Hill Church. We are much encouraged, and we ask the prayers of faithful Christians everywhere.—T. S. Bain.

Woodward, March 29.—I am now in a fine meeting near Woodward, with the best interest I have ever had here, and this makes about three or four meetings I have held here. We have a fine little band of disciples here, and they enjoy a preacher's work and have a way of letting him know they appreciate his labors. When a poor preacher gets into a place where he has to pull and tug and tug and pull all by himself, with no one even willing to speak a word of encouragement and show a little appreciation, I tell you it is a hard go. All should do their part in any great work. We are all labor-ers together with God and should show some appreciation of the effort of any faithful servant of the Lord. Famine in the Land.

BY GEORGE W. FARMER.

In some of the countries of the Far East there are all kinds of suffering, distress, squalor, poverty, hunger, nakedness, starvation, and death. The wail is most pitiable and the conditions most horrible. The cry is coming long and loud: "Help, HELP, HELP!" Who is there with soul so dead that he hears not the call and. if at all possible, will offer no help? Against an effort to help these poor suffering, starving people, I would not lift my hand nor raise my voice, but would rather say: God speed the help, God bless the helpers and the helped.

Now, my dear brethren and sisters, East Tennessee, beautiful, picturesque, resourceful, a section that has given to our State and to our nation some of the brightest minds that have ever graced our State's and our nation's Capitols; a section leading, perhaps, in its material developments, any other section of the State; yet, with all this, it is in the clutches of a veritable famine-yes, one of the direst. It is a spiritual famine. People are starving for the "bread of life." People are dying away from God, out of Christ, and without hope in the world. To meet this sad condition, the gospel, pure and complete, must be preached.

Brethren, I want to raise six hundred dollars to supplement a sum to be raised in the field to be worked, to support another man in this fieldmy helper-while he breaks the bread of life to these people. Will you help us in this work? Say "yes." God help you to do so.

What Many Especially Need.

In these days of strain and stress. anxiety and worry, many people become pale, nervous, dyspeptic; in a word, all run down. Their condition calls especially for iron, but iron in a form in which it is pleasant to take, agreeable to the stomach, easily assimilated and nonconstipating. Iron is combined in this form with nux, celery, pepsin, and other tonics and digestives in Peptiron, a real iron tonic, which is accomplishing a great deal in restoring health and strength, vitality, vigor, and vim.

Iron is indispensable to the perfect nutrition of the body. Peptiron supplies it in therapeutic doses, and in a remarkably short time seems to make a new and perfectly working system out of an old and broken-down one, enriching the blood, giving good color to the lips, cheeks, and ears, and brightening the eyes. Peptiron is a product of the C. I. Hood Company, and is sold by all druggists.

I would rather believe all the fables in the legend and the Talmud and the Alcoran than that this universal frame is without a mind.

Life is most beautiful and noble, not when its environment is most splendid, but when it is nourished by the highest thoughts and the purest leves.

Who would not run to prisons and hospitals on errands of mercy if assured that Christ was thus? Yet Christ himself tells us so, and we turn a deaf ear to him.

I believe that wherever guidance is honestly and simply sought, it is certainly given. As to our discernment of it, I believe it depends upon the measure in which we are walking in the light.

Are you ever afraid to tell the Lord about your small things, as if they were not worth his attending to? Your great things are not any more worth his attending to. Cast all your care on him

The Christian life must be in its own degree something like the Master's own life: luminious with his hope, and surrended by a bracing atmosphere which uplifts all who even touch its outer fringe.

We must be ready to make sacrifices for the truth. Prejudices must be sacrificed. Tastes, appetites, and passions, which the truth cannot sanction, must be sacrificed. If we are to get and hold the truth, we must search, trust, obey, and make sacri-

Despondency and disparagement of our own time and of the work that God has given us to do is a thing that tends to fulfill its own lugubrious prophecies. Where there is no faith, even Christ cannot do any mighty work, and we ought to remember these two things: that God's work is always waiting to be done, and that God always needs us; and surely also that if it is little we can do, it is all the more urgent that we should do that little, and leave nothing of it undone.

Edifying as the Need May Be

If one would know what may be accomplished through a boundless enthusiasm backed up by efficient organization, he could not find a better example than that afforded by the life story of Ignatius Loyola, founder of the Society of Jesus, more commonly called "Jesuits." But when the candid student of history reads the story, he will be struck with the fact that not enthusiasm alone is the explanation of success; but shrewdness, finesse, chicanery, superstition, and immorality all play a part in Loyola's product.

Partisans among the Roman Catholic historians place the highest estimate upon his character, and that, too, in spite of the fact that his noted society has more than once encountered the thunders of the papacy. By letting the imagination play upon some of the outstanding facts in this man's career they have done for him what has been done for many others-they have translated common clay into an heroic and saintly figure. They would have us believe that in Loyola's experience we may find much to remind us of the great apostle to the Gentiles. In the ingenuous delineation of the Catholic Encyclopedia we may discover the same dashing enthusiasm and misspent zeal before conversion; there is a remarkable turning point at which Loyola sees a light from heaven and begins an entirely different course; to parallel Paul's stay in Arabia, there is a period of plous meditation and a visit to the Holy Land; in accord with the apostle's resolve to keep his body under, it is Loyola's wish to "rival all the saints had done in the way of penance;" filled with consuming missionary zeal, the great apostle would build on no man's foundation, but carried the gospel to the regions beyond, and so Loyola was fired with the same ambition: in Paul's life visions play a wonderful part, and from the Catholic view Loyola is not one whit behind; we are gravely told that he was" marvelously aided by heavenly lights, intelligence, and visions." We should bear in mind that the Catholic historian, when he has a mind to do it, can make a "saint" for his people as easily as we create a "Santa Claus" with which to dupe little children.

Ignatius was born in 1491 at the castle of Loyola above Azpeitia in Guipuzcoa. His boyhood days were spent in the household of Velasquez de Cuellar, an officer in the court of Ferdinand and Isabella. During this period, we are told, he was given to much dissipation and laxity. We smile at this allusion, because all know that a diamond shines the more brightly when dug from the mire. In 1517 Velasquez died, and his ward, Ignatius, took service in the army. His harshest critics agree that he made a brave and fearless soldier. The turning point was in the year 1521. While defending Pamplona against the French he received the wound which was to cause the monkish tendency to prevail over the martial spirit of the Spanish knight. Although captured, Loyola was kindly treated by the enemy and placed in a convenient hospital. During his convalescence he asked for tales of romance to read, but was given the lives of Christ and the saints instead. We may easily surmise the next step in the evolution to read: "The idea of falling into ranks among the saints braced and strengthened him, and left him full of joy and peace." Then comes the mighty transformation of soul to which we have already referred. Let Loyola speak for himself: "One night I saw clearly the image of Our Lady with the Holy Child Jesus, at whose sight for a notable time I felt a surpassing sweetness, which eventually left me with such a loathing for past sins, and especially for those of the flesh, that every unclean imagination seemed blotted out from my soul, and never again was there to be the least consent to any carnal thought." Thus we see how early in life, through the instrumentality of Our Lady, the fortunate Loyola leaves the less fortunate Paul in the lurch! For it is many years after his first vision that the apostle describes his struggle with the carnal thought: "For I know that in me, that is, in my flesh, dwelleth no good thing: for to will is present with me, but to do that which is good is not." (Rom. 7: 18.)

Between the years 1524 and 1539 Loyola pursued his studies and selected those companions which later formed the nucleus of his famous society. In painful contrast with the pleasures of the Spanish court, we are informed that these years proved to be a period of trials and hardships almost beyond endurance. The testing out is in schools at Barcelona, Alcola, Salamanca, and at Paris. At Barcelona he is "beaten senseless;" at Alcola he endures "imprisonments." But Loyola is patient and unflinching. We have his own word for it; "There are many handcuffs and chains at Salamanca, but I feel that I deserve even more for the love of God." It was among his comrades at the University of Paris that he formed the first associations out of which the order was afterwards formed.

Among these was Lainez, another Spaniard, who had the organizing faculty.

About 1539 Loyola came with his fraternity to Rome. He did not find favor in all circles; but in 1540 Pope Paul III. gave the fraternity his confirmation, thus constituting Loyola's followers an order, which, on its part, engaged "to obey in all things the reigning Pope—to go into any country, to Turks, heathen, or heretics, or to whomsoever he might send them, at once, unconditionally, without question or reward."

It is not difficult to discern the circumstances which made the formation of the Society of Jesus timely and favorable to the Catholics. Experience had shown that the old monastic orders were no longer sufficient. An idea began to be entertained that a new order was needed. The plan was not to abolish the old orders, but to establish a new one which should better answer the required ends. We may readily see how a Spaniard might be regarded as the logical leader for such a movement. A kind of Catholicism still prevailed in Spain which no longer existed anywhere else. Its vigor may be traced to the fact that during the whole of the Middle Ages it was always in hostile contact with the Mohammedan infidels. The Crusades in Spain had never come to an end. As yet untainted by heresy and suffering from no decline, Catholicism in Spain was as eager for conquest as it had been in the West in the eleventh and twelfth centuries. It was from the nation possessing this temperament that the founder of the Jesuits sprang.

Book Notices.

"The Model Church," by G. C. Brewer, treats of live subjects, and is a book that should be distributed among the churches. This book has been almost universally commended and is being read with interest by many people. Price. $1.

A good book for young people to read is the "Life of Mrs. Charlotte Fanning." Mrs. Fanning was noted for her piety, zeal, and good sense. Hers was a life remarkable for the good accomplished. She always exerted an ennobling, refining, and uplifting influence. This book is ably edited by Mrs. Emma Page Larimore. Price, $1.

Send us $1.25 for a copy of "Sweeney's Sermons." This is a book of sermons by John S. Sweeney—one of the best books of sermons published. Sweeney carries conviction with the statement of his position. He is noted for brevity, clearness, and force of statement. Every young preacher should have a copy of this book of sermons.

Send us fifteen cents for a copy of "What Was Nailed to the Cross?" It is a live tract, and is made up of some stirring thoughts of F. W. Smith. Adventists were active in North Nashville, and Brother Smith delivered a few sermons on the subject. The tract embodies the substance of these sermons. Buy a dozen copies and distribute them among the people. Price, $1.50 per dozen.

Have you seen a copy of "Adventism and the Bible?" This is one of the very best books for you to buy at the present time. Adventism is a live subject. Adventists are active and are propagating their doctrines. If you want to be thoroughly prepared to meet them and to expose the errors of Adventism, you should send us at once $1.25 for a copy of "Adventism and the Bible."

We have on hand a few copies of "Biographies and Sermons," edited by F. D. Srygley. This is a book of sermons by a number of our best-known preachers. It is well worth a careful perusal. A brief history of the life of each preacher accompanies his sermon. A picture of the preacher also is given with each sketch. Price, $1.50. If you want this book, you should order at once, as we have just a few copies that have been left over through mistake.

Letter to McHenry and Martin. No. 2.

BY J. MADISON WRIGHT.

THE CEREMONIAL AND MORAL LAW.

- (1) "These two laws [moral and ceremonial] should not be confused. There is no confusion concerning them in the Scriptures." Again, the only scripture you quote containing even the name of moral law and ceremonial law is Barton W. Stone. This scripture is not in the roll of the Book. And we have agreed not to accept uninspired human opinions, but to be led by the Holy Spirit to consider only what is written in the Bible. Where in it do we find moral and ceremonial law even named? When the name is not there, the thing the name stands for must not be there.
- (2) You seem to make a distinction between God's law and Moses' law. In Mal. 4: 4, the law given by God in Horeb (Sinai), which was written on tables of stone, is called "the law of Moses." In Luke 2: 22-24, the law contained in Leviticus concerning purifications and offerings is called "the law of Moses" and "the law of the Lord." Both names are given to the same law. No distinction in moral and ceremonial here.
- (3) "This distinction is not visionary, but is most clearly drawn by inspiration."
- (a) "Christ abolished in his flesh the enmity, even the law of commandments contained in ordinances." (Eph. 2: 15.) In verse 14 this is spoken of as "the middle wall of partition" between Jew and Gentile. The Gentiles had not the law. (Rom. 2: 14.) The Jews had the oracles of God, called "the law." (Rom. 3: 2, 21.) The law was what separated the Jew from the Gentile. (Acts 15: 5-21.) On page 2 of your tract you admit and rightly, that this scripture refers to the five books of Moses. Then the five books of Moses containing the ten commands and all the other commands given by God through Moses, and which separated the Jew and Gentile by a middle wall of partition, is the law of commandments contained in ordinances, which Christ broke down and abolished by his death. No distinction between moral and ceremonial laws here.
- (b) Again, "Having blotted out the bond written in "The bond [handwriting, ordinances." (Col. 2: 14.) something handwritten, legal document, bond] written in ordinances" [Greek "dogma," here and in Eph. 2: 15 translated "ordinances," is in Luke 2: 1; Acts 16: 4; 17: 7 translated "decree"]. Used five times in the Bible, and each time used refers to an ordinance, decree, statute, law, rule, command, edict, given by authority. Any command, law, or decree of God is an ordinance. The ten commands are ten ordinances of God. You made a bad selection this time by which to prove a ceremonial law, for the thought of religious rite or ceremony is not in any definition of the original word. God spoke the ten commands and all the other commands, and Moses wrote them in a book. (Ex. 20: 1 to 24: 7.) Afterwards God wrote the ten commands on two tables of stone. (Ex. 31: 18; 32: 15, 16.) The handwriting of ordinances is one or both of these writings. If the bond written in ordinances refers to what Moses wrote, it includes the ten commands. If it means the tables of stone, that is the ten commands. This bond written in ordinances, decrees, Christ nailed to the cross and blotted it out. No distinction between moral and ceremonial here.
- (c) But you ask, "Does Paul teach any such doc and quote Rom. 3: 31 as proof that he does that, men you array Paul against Paul; for, according to your admission under Eph. 2: 15, the entire five books of Moses were abolished at the death of Christ; and now you say Paul teaches that a part of the law was established. But Paul spoke at the dictation of the Spirit. (1 Cor. 2: 10-13.) What the Spirit said, Paul said. So you array the Spirit against the Spirit, for the Spirit said in verse 21, Rom. 3, apart from the law is a righteousness of God by faith, and in verse 31 you make him say we establish the law by faith. But what does verse 31 say was established? The effect of the law was the question asked. The effect of the law, then, is in the answer given. What was the law intended to effect? (Gal. 3: 24, 25.) The very fact of justification by faith in Christ was evidence that the law had effected its purpose; it established its effect. Having effected its end, the law was done away and we are no longer under it.

- (d) But you ask, "What law is under discussion in the third chapter of Romans?" and quote verse 20 to show it is the ten commands. Where in the ten commands is the long catalogue of sins enumerated in verses 10-20 found? Verse 19 makes the law that mentions these sins the law under discussion in verse 20. Then it is more than the ten commands, and so fails to prove a ceremonial and moral law.
- (e) Yet you contend: "These [ten] commands Paul declares are holy, righteous, good, spiritual." (Rom. 7.) The law being holy and good and spiritual is not the question. But the question is, has God divided his law into moral and ceremonial, the ceremonial passing away at the death of Christ; the moral, the ten commands, being eternal? Does Rom. 7 prove this? Verses 1-6 is Paul's argument to show that being under the law and under Christ at the same time is to be guilty of spiritual adultery. But you have been made dead to the law by the body of Christ, that you might be joined to Christ. (Verse 4.) We have been discharged from the law, having died to it. (Verse .6.) What law? You quote verses 7-22 to show it is the ten commands mentioned here. The law mentioned in these verses is the law which verse 6 says they had been discharged from and verse 4 says they had been made dead to by the body of Christ. Discharged from, dead tothan which stronger, clearer words could not be used to show the entire law, ten commands and all, was made dead and done away at Christ's death. But to make it doubly emphatic, Paul says: "I find a law of sin in my members and a law condemning sin with death. Who shall deliver me? (Rom. 8: 12.) The law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus, the gospel of Christ, has made me free from the law of sin [in my members] and the law of death [the ten commands, etc]. Christ's law, the gospel, saves from sin and frees from the law of ten (and all other) commands.
- (f) But you add: "Without the [ten] commandments there is no knowledge and conviction of sin, and without conviction of sin none would seek a Savior." Convict a man of sin against a law he is not under? Rom. 8: 1, 2 says we are free from the law, which in Rom. 7 you say is shown to be the ten commands. The law of ten commands and all the other laws convicted the Jew, who was under the law. But the law is dead and no man is under it, hence none are convicted by it. The law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus, the gospel, the New Testament, convicts men of all the sins they are guilty of, now. What is not mentioned in the gospel as sin is not sin. The Holy Spirit by the gospel convicts of, and saves from, sin. (John 16: 7-15.)
- (g) But you say: "The law done away was said to be against us; and if it could be said of the ten commandments that they were against us or a burden to us, then we must accuse the Lord of placing at least nine-tenths of the same yoke on us." Who but Christ ever kept the ten comman ? To break one command one time was death without mercy. Who so blinded as to say the ten commands were not against us? But do we have nine-tenths of the same yoke on us? (Rom. 13; 8-10.) Love is the fulfilling of the law. No nine-tenths there. Love covers all. Who loves God delights in pleasing him. Love will not kill the loved one, will not commit adultery; lust, not love, commits this sin. Love will not steal from the loved one, will not bear false witness, nor covet the loved one's property. Love covers a multitude of sins, and love's labor is light. (Matt. 11; 28-30.) Behold the difference between the ten commands and the gospel!

- (h) Under grace. Rom. 6: 14, "Not under the law, but under grace," you make to mean: "Released from the curse and condemnation of the law, but not released from the moral obligation to obey it." What is the curse of the law? (Deut. 27: 26; Gal. 3: 10.) Then every one under the moral obligation to obey the law is under the curse of the law, for no one continues in all things written in the law to do them. The only way to be released from the curse of the law is to be released from the moral obligation to keep the law. This Christ did. He kept the law to the letter in all things. As he could not bear the curse of the law by his failure to keep it, he could bear the curse by hanging on a tree, being crucified. (Gal. 3: 13.) By this he redeemed us from the curse of breaking the law and from the moral obligation to keep the law. Hence, we are not under the law, but under grace. To take the moral obligation to keep the law given by Moses upon us is to fall from grace and be severed from Christ. (Gal. 5: 4.)
- (i) A new ministration. You say: "Paul endeavored to show we are no longer under the ministration of the law. There is a great difference between the ministration and the law itself." (2 Cor. 3: 7-14.) Ministration is the act of carrying out the law. If not under the ministration—act of doing the law—we are not under the law written on stones. And this is exactly what 1 Cor. 3: 7-14 says. The old covenant of death written and graven on stones was that which passeth away, transitory. The new covenant of life, the gospel, was that which remaineth permanent.
- (j) The other references you give, Heb. 8, 9, 10, compare the typical under the Old Testament—old covenant—with the real under the New Testament—new covenant; and none of these references divide either testament into moral and ceremonial law. None here.
- (k) Next, in Heb. 7: 11, 12, we are told that the law mentioned in the New Testament as being changed is the law given after the Levitical priesthood was established and dependent on that priesthood. This could not have been God's moral law, the eternal ten, for this law was spoken before the priesthood was established." Had you read the roll of the Book, you had never written all this. Ex. 19: 22, 24 speaks of the priesthood being in existence. Ex. 20 contains the first giving of the law. The priesthood was in existence before the ten commands were spoken on Sinai, and under this priesthood, as God said, the people received the law. When the form of the priesthood was changed from the Levitical to that of Christ, the law of ten commands and all the other commands given under the Levitical priesthood was changed and Christ became the surety of a better covenant, the gospel, the law of Christ. No moral and ceremonial law here.
- (1) Your next reference is to Lev. 7: 35-38. This was a part of the law pertaining to the priesthood and its work in the tabernacle given by Moses at Sinai. The same law we have just considered, the entire law of Moses as contained in the five books he wrote.
- (m) "This law Moses wrote in a book and placed it inside the ark of the covenant [for a testimony to Israel.]" (Deut. 31: 24-26.) But verses 27, 28 show this law was the law Moses wrote for all the people. (Ex. 20: 1 to 24: 8; Deut. 31: 44 to 32: 47.) He was to place it beside the ark. It was this same book of the covenant, the entire law of Moses, that the priests lost, and it was found in the days of Josiah. (2 Kings 22: 8, 13; 23: 2, 3; 2 Chron. 34: 14.) No ceremonial law here.

- (n) "Nehemiah also clearly draws a distinction between the moral and ceremonial laws." (Neh. 9: 13, 14.) Nehemiah in his prayer to God describes what God did when he came down on Sinal and gave to Moses the ten commands and all the other commands that Moses wrote in the book of the covenant (Ex. 20: 1 to 24: 8) and makes no mention whatever of moral and ceremonial law.
- (o) Christ and the ten commands. "Those who make no distinction between moral and ceremonial laws place themselves in opposition to Christ's teaching when they affirm that all Old Testament teaching was abolished on the cross; for Christ affirms he came not to destroy, but to fulfill it. (Matt. 5: 17, 18.) "His death abolished the law pertaining to ordinances." "The law would remain absolutely entire until all things were accomplished that had ever been spoken through the mouth of the prophets." "Certain it is that one whole command has not passed away." You arrayed Paul against Paul, the Spirit against the Spirit, and now yourself against yourself. If not one command has passed from the law and it must remain entire until all that was spoken by the prophets has been fulfilled, then the entire Old Testament is still in force and you are bound by the curses of the law to fulfill everything written therein. But if you say a part has passed away, then, according to your own words, all has passed away, and we are not under any part of the Old Testament. Take either horn you like. But Christ did what he said he had come to do-fulfill the law in every jot and tittle. On the cross he said, "It is finished." Every jot and tittle of the law has been fulfilled, finished, and was at an end. This is what the Book says. (Gal. 3: 19.) Why given? Because of transgressions. How long was it to continue? (Gal. 3: 16, 19, 24, 25.) Till Christ. I stand by the Book.
- (p) Conclusion. After wading through all this mass of scripture reference that is as slient as the grave about God making any distinction in the Bible between moral and ceremonial law, we reach your conclusion: "Therefore both in the New Testament and in the Old the distinction is clearly made between the two laws, moral and ceremonial. What God has separated, let not man join together," With vandal hands tear in twain God's one harmonious law, and over the wreck place this warning sign! What are the facts?
- (1) We have seen that moral and ceremonial is not in the Bible.
- (2) The entire Old Testament law is spoken of as the law of Moses, and also all is called the law of God.
- (3) No reference of Scripture makes any distinction between moral law and ceremonial law.
- (4) All God has spoken is summed up in one Old Testament to the Jews-law, history, poetry, prophecy, Division and Separation.

BY W. HALLIDAY TRICE.

If every human being were wise enough to know exactly what the right thing is under all circumstances and had a consuming desire to do the right at all times and places, we would never have strife and contention; but as long as our vision of the right is so limited and blurred and our desires to do right so imperfect, we will continue to disagree and have contentions. When I was younger, I thought the reason for disagreements was due almost entirely to the lack of knowledge of the right and the desire to do right upon the part of "the other fellow;" but with more experience and observation, I have lost some of my presumption, and now I know the trouble is often with me. As I have been forced to admit that some of my cherished theories were false and that my knowledge is very limited, I am fully convinced that when division arises over any matter, that one party to the contention is rarely ever entirely to blame.

However, I started to write on "Division and Separation," and shall do so. In that long list of evils called "the works of the flesh" I find some things severely condemned-"enmities, strife, jealousies, wraths, factions, divisions, parties;" and the ringing warning is given, "that they who practice such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God." Hence, all Bible believers believe that strife and division are fundamentally wrong and should be eradicated. But how shall it be done? In most cases both parties to the contention think that the other should yield, and too often neither side will give an inch. The result is that the strife continues or a separation takes place; and the queer thing is, the separation is the thing that is most deplored. All of us should realize keenly that division -being divided in sentiment and feeling-often exists long before separation occurs, and many times separation eliminates strife and contention. There are at least two striking examples in the Bible of where strife and contention were eliminated by separation. "And there was a strife between the herdmen of Abram's cattle and the herdmen of Lot's cattle: and the Canaanite and the Perizzite dwelt then in the land. And Abram said unto Lot, Let there be no strife, I pray thee, between me and thee, and between my herdmen and thy herdmen; for we are brethren. Is not the whole land before thee? separate thyself, I pray thee, from me." (Gen. 13: 7-9.) In order to eliminate "strife," Abram said, "separate." They did, and the contention ended. The other example is taken from the experience of the matchless apostle Paul. "And after some days Paul said unto Barnabas, Let us return now and visit the brethren in every city wherein we proclaimed the word of the Lord, and see how they fare. And Barnabas was minded to take with them John also, who was called Mark. But Paul thought not good to take with them him who withdrew from them from Pamphylia, and went not with them to the work. And there arose a sharp contention, so that they parted asunder one from the other, and Barnabas took Mark with him, and sailed away unto Cyprus; but Paul chose Silas, and went forth, being commended by the brethren to the grace of the Lord." (Acts 15: 36-40.) Paul and Barnabas had "a sharp contention" about John Mark, and to heal the strife they "departed asunder one from the other." I fear good brethren often deplore the wrong thing. Division is always bad and should be deplored; but if separation is the only way to eliminate it, then let us not deplore the remedy. If brethren can so adjust themselves that they can work and worship together In harmony, that is unmistakably the thing to do; but if, after repeated efforts to eliminate strife and contention, they find "the further they go, the worse it gets," the only wise thing to do is to separate. It is both "good and . . pleasant . . , for brethren to dwell together in unity;" but if there is turmoil and strife continually. they had better take Abram's advice and "separate," or do as Paul and Barnabas did-"depart asunder one from the

For a number of years, perhaps four or five, there had been more or less friction in the little congregation worshiping on Nevada Avenue, Fresno, Cal., and the trouble "grew nothing better," but "waxed worse and worse," till a few months ago quite a number of the congregation, led by Sister Sallie Arterburn and her husband, Brother J. M. Arterburn, and Brother Sandy J. Whilte, ceased to meet with the little band on Nevada Avenue and rented a hall down in town and began worshiping there. I had no hand in the separation—in fact, did not know it was going to occur till it happened; but, knowing the situation as I do, I do not hesitate to say that the separation was the only remedy for the existing strife. I deplore the strife that necessitated the separation, but I am thankful that the separation occurred. There is perfect harmony at Nevada Avenue now, and I suppose the other band is at peace: hence, as harmony has taken the place of strife, I think all should rejoice and determine to do more for the cause of Christ. The saddest part of the matter is, the contention was not any doctrinal difference, but was of a personal nature. Some may claim a doctrinal difference; but if so, I have not heard the claim; and with my knowledge of the affair, I hesitate not to say the difference was purely personal.

Allow me to make this suggestion in conclusion: As long as we cling to the individual interpretation of the Bible, and as long as we have people of different temperaments. with different degrees of knowledge of the Bible and other matters, and have been taught by different teachers, we will have many minor differences, and will sometimes disagree about the essentials; and the only way to work and worship together in peace and harmony is to "bear and forbear" with each other. If each member decides that his way is the only way, and must have his way or no way, we will continue to "bite and devour each other," and be the laughingstock of the onlookers, or else we will continue to separate till there will not be enough in any faction to provide a place to meet for worship,

The "Work" and the "Worker."

BY F. B. SHEPHERD.

"Whatsoever ye do, work heartily, as unto the Lord, and not unto men; knowing that from the Lord ye shall receive the recompense of the inheritance; ye serve the Lord Christ." In this language of the Holy Spirit there is an exhortation to servants regarding their attitude toward their masters even in secular things, but at the same time the words contain a principle and admit of an application that seems not to be too much appreciated by the rank and file of the "Christians only."

It is not my desire to appear to criticize my brethren adversely, but yet I believe we are still following some of the customs of Ashdod, which, if abandoned, would give us a broader viewpoint and a deeper spiritualism, the combination of which would make us all better and more efficlent workers in the Master's vineyard. Let us notice the language of the apostle to those of the Colossians who were slaves (bond servants). They were obligated to serve not only from a standpoint of their position and according to civil law, but, in addition, the law of the gospel commanded them to serve their masters, not as those under an obligation from which they could gain no release, but serve as though it were the Lord Christ himself. This would not be the service of constraint so often seen in these times of high wages and low production, but the service of hearty application produced by a love for Christ and a desire to bring him honor through the manifestation of the power of the religion of Jesus Christ to produce better workmen even in the realm of secular things.

But this is not the thought that I would convey by the application of this scripture, although it is intended to be introductory to it. In giving the title of "The 'Work' and the 'Worker'" to my article, I wish to draw attention to a weakness often apparent in our ranks, and one that tends to place the activities of God's people too much upon a mere mercenary plane. A danger, aggravated, perhaps. by the growing tendency upon the part of able churches to locate an evangelist to devote his entire time to the local needs, besets us in our proneness to want to "pay the preacher" for the work accomplished. We see this in the amount given to one man by some congregation differing greatly from the amount given to another by the same | feated.-G. Campbell Morgan.

church for the same amount of time and effort. I know places (and so do all preachers) where, if I should hold a meeting, I would receive considerably more for my services than even a better qualified man, the reason being a purely personal one (which is perfectly natural, if not scriptural). In reading appeals for missionary enterprises, I often read urgent requests to support Brother So-and-So in this or that important work he is doing. The question I raise is: Is it the work or the worker that is to be the object of our deepest interest? "What then is Apollos? and what is Paul? Ministers through whom ye believed; and each as the Lord gave to him. I planted. Apollos watered; but God gave the increase. So then neither is he that planteth anything, neither he that watereth; but God that giveth the increase." Are we not to be consumed with the intensity of our interest in the work, and are not the workers the means to an end? I do not desire to disparage the activities of my brethren, but I would see these matters put upon the higher plane of the ideal and have men working "as unto the Lord, and not unto men." The great principle emphasized three times in Christ's conversation with Peter at the early morning meal beside the lake was, "Lovest thou me?" Whether Christ meant, "more than these fishes, or these apostles, or more than these apostles do," is a secondary consideration. The great question was the incentive to service, and the only true, unwavering, and never-dying one is a love for Christ-first, last, and all the time. A young woman who was going to China as a missionary, when asked if her love for the Chinese prompted her, replied: "No; it is my love for Christ." Blessed incentive! When our love for individuals is responsible for our activities or interest, that interest is liable to flag or grow cold and dead; but when we are inspired by a consuming love for Him who died that we might live, our services will never grow slack or our zeal cold.

After many years of anxious waiting and earnest pleading upon the part of the Forest Vale Mission, a man has been found who is ready to go. The church at Graton, Cal., has indorsed him as sound in the faith and recommended him as an able worker in that particular. The call has gone forth for funds with which to send and support this couple. Let us "work heartily as unto the Lord, and not unto men;" and remember, we are asked to assist the Graton church do a work in the service of the great Commander and unto his glory, rather than to support a man (worker). We may not know the man, and hence our interest is passing and indifferent; but we know the Lord and his work requires haste and interest, consistent and continuous.

"Adventism and the Bible."

B. L. Allen, Fort Lauderdale, Fla., writes: "One of the best books that have lately been printed against Seventh-Day Adventism is 'Adventism and the Bible,' by J. Henry Monk, who was with the Adventists for eight years. He takes up the teaching of this sect and compares it with the plain teaching of the Bible, and shows where the two do not harmonize at all, and that we should take the plain Bible teaching rather than the vagaries of the Adventists. While I cannot agree with Brother Monk in everything he has in his book, in the main it is splendid, and should be read by every one who wants to keep posted on this question. The Adventists are making a strong effort in the Southeastern part of the United States, especially in Florida, and it is well to be posted in order to meet their fallacious arguments. Send and get Brother Monk's book. It costs $1.25, and is published by the McQuiddy Printing Company, Nashville, Tenn."

So I believe that my argument has held the test, that if we can have organized "Bible schools" under the new covenant for the reason that they had such schools connected with the Jewish synagogue, we can also have infant church membership and instrumental music in worship under the new covenant for the reason that they had such under the old law. It is just as "natural and reasonable to suppose" that God permits one to be brought over as the other. The remark of our brother that "the commission forbids infant membership in the church of Christ" is nullified by the command of Paul to glorify God "in the church" (Epp. 3; 21), which forbids our doing it in organized "Bible schools" or any other human organizations. But of this we shall speak fully in the next paragraph.

Our erroneous brother says finally: "Does my critic deny the scriptural authority to teach the Bible in a school, in a saloon, in a Bible school, in classes, or anywhere else? If so, he should cite the scripture that denies the right." I now accept our brother's challenge and proceed to give the scripture. The inspired Paul says "by the church "the manifold wisdom of God is to be made known, and that we should give glory unto God "in the church." (Epn. 3: 10, 21) Now, what is the church? Let the New Testament decide, it consists of the local congregation, working as a congregation, and the individual Christian, working as a mere Christian. It includes also the Christian family, for a man and his wife are said to be "one"—they have a common treasury; and what one gives out of the common treasury for the Lord, the other gives, when they do its by common consent. The individual Christian, the Christian family, and the local church can do aid work, missionary work, sic., and it is the church that is doing it. Paul commanded the brethers to give glory to God "in the church." and they did it in any other way, and we have no evidence that they did it in any other way. Any human organization, with its president, secretary, treasurer, laws, established by Christians to teach the Bible, help the poer or sick, or do any other work of the church, is unscriptural, unnecessary, and dangerous! The David Lipscomb College and the other "Bible" and "Christian" colleges are human organizations established to do work of the church for which Christ died, and thus they are unscriptural!

The fallacy in the reasoning of the "Bible-college" advocates lies in the statement that it is scriptural "to teach the Bible in a school, in a saloon, in a Bible school, in classes, or anywhere class" When a man teaches in the David Lipscomb College or any other of these "Bible schools," he does so as a part of a human organization. When a man works for a railroad company, he loses his identity so far as work is concerned and becomes part of the co

Sleeping and Waking.

God giveth His beloved sleep; They lie securely 'neath His wing Till the night pale, the dawning break; Safe in its overshadowing, They fear no dark and harmful thing; What does He give to those who wake?

To those who sleep He gives good dreams; For bodies overtasked and spent Comes rest to comfort every ache; To weary eyes new light is sent, To weary spirits new content; What does He give to those who wake?

His angels sit beside the beds Of such as rest beneath His care, Unweariedly their post they take, They wave their wings to fan the air, They cool the brow and stroke the hair; God comes himself to those who wake.

To fevered eyes that cannot close To hearts o'erburdened with their job, He comes to soothe, to heal, to slake; Close to the pillows hard and hot He stands, although they see Him not, And taketh care of those who wake.

Nor saint nor angel will He trust With this one blessed ministry, Lest they should falter or mistake; They guard the sleepers faithfully Who are the Lord's beloved; but he Watches by those beloved who wake,

O, in the midnight dense and drear, When life drifts outward with the tide, And mortal terrors overtake, In this sure thought let us abide, And unafraid be satisfied-God comes himself to those who wake. -Susan Coolidge.

Said in Paragraphs.

BY JAMES A. ALLEN.

The fact that a man is convinced that he is one of the world's biggest men is an indication that the sky line of his horizon hangs exceedingly low.

When a man wears himself out getting money that he does not need and finally drops dead, it seems a shame for the preacher to say at his funeral that a mysterious Providence cut him off in his prime. The preacher ought to tell the truth about it and say that he was kicked to death by the golden calf.

A man should not oppose a Bible school until he is able to suggest something better to take its place. He may bring one hundred, or one thousand, indictments against a Christian school, but he cannot get away from the fact that the children have to be educated. Christian parents ought to send their children to a school that includes Christianity in its curriculum. Those who know of a better place to send them are kindly requested to tell us where it is.

We have never yet heard any grief-stricken brother admit that his aching void was in his head, Charity should begin at home; but if it stays there, it is selfishness.

A jury in Oklahoma once brought in a verdict that the defendant was not guilty of drunkenness as charged in the indictment, but that the court was three sheets in the wind.

Instrumental music was introduced into the church in the sixth century against the protest of the most pious and devoted men of that age, and since that time every leading reformer-Luther, Calvin, Wesley, Campbell, Spurgeon, etc.—has rejected it as inimical to true devotion and piety. But when worldly-minded women and the mollycoddling men they control set out to split a church with an organ, they do not care what Jesus Christ, God Almighty, or any one else said or did; they know what they

The Twelfth Avenue Church, this city, has given an example of what a live church can do in combating the Seventh-Day Adventists. The Adventists have a "tabernacle" in their vicinity. But F. W. Smith opened up the heavy artillery, and among those who followed were F. B. Srygley, Price Billingsley, I. B. Bradley, H. Leo Boles, and S. P. Pittman, with the result that the Adventists decided to "move." But they are jumping out of the frying pan into the fire, as their new "location" is in the vicinity of the Foster Street Church, which is one of the most active churches in the city. The Foster Street brethren are already planning to enlighten the public on the heresies of Mrs. E. G. White, Brother Claude H. Woodruff, of Anniston, Ala., has been doing some splendid preaching at the Green Street Church, this city. He is one of a long list of preachers that Green Street started to preaching. His father, Brother Tolbert Woodruff, is an elder of this congregation.

Georgia and the Far Southern Field

By S. H. Hall

"A Feast of Good Things."

The Atlanta churches have just enjoyed "a feast of good things," and a few words about it will not be amiss. Beginning on March 28 and closing on the night of April 4, a series of most interesting Bible studies was enjoyed at the West End Avenue chapel. The local ministers were joined by Brethren J. P. Prevatt and G. E. Claus, of Valdosta, Ga.; E. H. Ijams, Fort Valley, Ga.; C. E. Coleman, Macon, Ga.; Flavil Hall, Trion, Ga.; R. R. Brooks, Chattanooga, Tenn.; J. J. Horton, Elora, Tenn.; Morgan H. Carter and B. C. Goodpasture, Nashville, Tenn.; Thomas H. Burton and S. T. Nix, Union, S. C.; R. L. Ludlam, Carnesville, Ga.; and J. N. Copeland, Savannah, Ga. We can say for these visiting ministers that each one of them did us good. Some of the addresses were masterful because of their timeliness and scripturalness and the fact that they came from hearts burning with love for God and a zeal for the extension of his kingdom among men. As I look back over the work, I cannot now see how it could have been better done. Such subjects as "Our Stewardship;" "Brotherly Love;" "The Christian's Race;" "Individual Responsibility;" "The Church, the Light of the World;" "Individual Effort in Soul Winning;" "Working, Watching, Praying, and Loving;" "The Benevolent Work of the Church;" "Education in the Home, School, and Church;" "Christ Lifted Up;" "The Power of Song, or Church Music;" "How to Be Perfect;" "Giving "-these and other practical subjects were discussed in a way that we were lifted up. Brethren R. H. Rogers, S. E. Templeton, J. A. Klingman, and Hugh E. Garrett added much to the studies with impromptu addresses as the days went by. Brotherly love and a desire to do more for the cause of Christ were the outstanding desires, it seemed, of every speaker. Three baptized, one reclaimed, one from the Christian Church, and all the members who attended reconsecrated to Godthese are some of the visible results of the week's work. Above sixty dollars was raised for the faithful at McGregor, Ga., and Brother Prevatt left us on Friday before the close of the work to be with them and help them in perfecting plans for the spring revival.

Much more could be said of the helpfulness of our joining each other in these studies, but time and space forbid. A number of other ministers desired to be with us, but were hindered. They helped with their prayers and the subjects they suggested for study, however. Many other ministers were very much desired; but the work was arranged, primarily, for the Georgia ministers and those who had formerly worked with us.

More Good News from Florida.

Brother W. M. Brumit, of Bradentown, Fla., writes to me

Services in Bradentown yesterday (March 28) were just splendid. Interest fine. The brethren are determined to make the church here what it should be second to none. The church at Cortez is composed of some splendid people who are on the job fifty-two Lord's days out of the year. I preach for them at 3 P.M. each Lord's day. I have been preaching three sermons every Lord's day since I have been in South Florida.

The brethren are making arrangements to open up work on a larger scale and have made arrangements with Brother John Hayes to have him move in and help us care for the Lord's interest in Manatee County. This is a fine place to spread the gospel, as we have tourists here from all parts of the country. We are expecting a successful year at this place. The "digressives" have made a hard fight to capture the church here, but their music and societies do not appeal to our people in Bradentown.

By LOUISE H. PECK.

Punishments.

Many parents long for the time when their child shall "show reason," and then the majority of them proceed to check the development of their little one's reasoning power by resorting to methods of punishment which tend to fill him with fear. Not infrequently they resort to slapping, spanking, whipping, or even telling terrible lies in order to frighten him into obedience.

This kind of training naturally produces a lawless child, for through fear of unjust punishment he resorts to dishonesty in self-defense; then, too, the example of his parents teaches him to strike when angry. Let parents reverse this process: be honest and kind, but firm, with the timest child, and teach him the importance of obedience and consideration for the rights of others. The cultivation of these qualities forestalls much trouble. When a child is disobedient, let the parent "talk it over" with him in a reasonable, self-controlled way, and reach a fair conclusion.

A mother cannot begin too early to train her little one. Before the child is old enough to understand words, he understands the difference between her smiles and frowns, and by the expression of her face she can teach even a little baby the difference between right and wrong. For example, take the habit of pulling the tablecloth from the table. Let her look directly into his eyes, her smiles all gone, take his hand from the cloth, and shake her head, with "No, no!" She must have patience to do this well; but by these first lessons in obedience she is saving much future trouble for him, for herself, and for society.

Of course, there are times when discipline and punishment are necessary; and when parents need to correct their children, they should do so in private. To permit another person to enter into the discussion or even overhear it and smile at such a time utterly ruins the effect of the punishment, and the lesson is lost if it is not clear to the little one that right conduct brings approval, whereas wrongdoing merits disapproval and discipline.

A very effective form of punishment is social isolation. For example, excuse a child from the room and make him sit facing a corner in another room by himself; at another time, send him to bed early; at another, have him eat his meal alone, away from the other members of the family. If he quarrels with his playmates, make him play alone while the other children are happy together, until he is willing to be agreeable. Another form of discipline is to make a child go without something of which he is very fond. No dessert for dinner and no candy for several days are punishments which have a good effect. But to lock a child in a dark closet or to threaten him with terrifying lies is as harmful and useless as whipping, for such treatment instills dishonesty and cruelty into him.

Parents who use the rod or hand most often are generally the ones who complain that their children are naughty and disobedient. "Spare the rod and spoil the child" seems to be the one scriptural text familiar to some irritable grown-ups. Why is it that the home is the last stronghold of whipping? The whipping post disappeared long ago. Whipping is no longer tolerated in schools; it is illegal even in prisons. Then why is it that many a gentle mother who cannot manage her own little one either whips him or reports his misconduct to his father, too often telling only her own side of the story (for in such cases the child is not allowed to appeal to the father as judge, but must submit to the whipping which his parents mete out to him at a time when they are tired and irritable)? Let grown-ups cultivate self-control and justice, and remember that wise parents never punish when they are angry, but wait until they can see the child's misdeed from an impersonal point of view.

To associate anger with physical blows is to plant the seeds of war in tiny children. Before we can replace war with arbitration among nations, we must do so in the home.

Animals' Sleep.

Animals and birds have curious ways of taking repose—ways which would seem very strange indeed were they to be followed by boys and girls. Birds usually sleep with their heads turned tallward over their back and the beek thrust back underneath the wing; but storks, gulls, and other long-legged birds sleep standing on one leg. The owl has an eye screen in addition to eyelids, and this he draws across the eye to shut out the light; for this bird, of course, sleeps in the daytime. Ducks, when asleep on the water, keep paddling with one foot. This makes them turn in a circle, and prevents their drifting ashore. Foxes and wolves sleep curled up; liens and tigers and members of the cat family stretch themselves out flat on one side; and elephants sleep standing.—Lutheran.

Andrew Perry writes: "As I have not arranged all my time for spring and summer meetings, I want to arrange work again in Tennessee, Alabama, or Mississippi, for June, July, August, and September, in any part of the field where the Gospel Advocate is read. Write to me at once. My address is Box 116, Route 4, Watseka, Ill."

George M. McKee is a Christian brother who has moved to New York City and is trying to get a loyal congregation started in the great metropolis. He advertised for such members in the New York papers, but received no answers. If any of the readers of the Gospel Advocate know of members living in New York, please send their names and addresses to Brother McKee at 105 West Sixty-fourth Street.

A Correction.—In my report in the Gospel Advocate of April 1 1 credited T. M. Karnes with $1. I also credited the congregation at Trenton, Tenn., with $3.55. This amounts to $4.55, and should have been credited to the Dorris Chapel congregation. In sending help to me, please state clearly what it is for. Please do all you can for our church building fund now. Address me at Buffalo, W. Va. We want to begin our church building soon. We are having some good meetings now in private dwellings.—F. P. Fonner.

T. H. Burton, who is laboring to establish a church of Christ in Union, S. C., is traveling among the churches for the purpose of securing funds to build a house in which to worship. He reports that the prospects are very encouraging for the establishment of a church, and states that a house is much needed. Brother Burton is a good man and will properly apply any funds that may be intrusted to him. We bespeak for him a cordial reception by the churches, and hope that it will not take him long to raise a sufficient amount to build the church.

From T. C. Little, Fayetteville, Tenn.: "At the home of C. C. Ingle, in Booneville, Tenn., on April 8, 1920, in the presence of a large number of invited friends, R. A. Largen led Miss Elaine Barnette to the hymeneal altar, where I had the pleasure of binding their hearts with the silken cord of marriage and sending them forth on the sea of life to live each for the other and both for God. The bride is a beautiful and accomplished Christian lady and will prove a valuable helpmeet in his work and life. The bridegroom is one of the most successful evangelists in the church, a workman, indeed, that needeth not to be ashamed, "'And as rich in having such a jewel As twenty seas, if all their sands were pearls, The water nectar, and the rocks pure gold."

Commending the work in South Carolina, F. W. Smith writes: "Thomas H. Burton went to the above field to do mission work in 1918, and has succeeded in starting a congregation in the town of Union. They have bought and paid for a well-located lot on which to erect a building in which to more efficiently carry on the propagation of the gospel. Brother Burton is now in Tennessee visiting among the churches, soliciting funds with which to prosecute this most important work. I am glad to say that he is meeting with encouragement. There are many thousands of souls in that State who know nothing of the simple gospel of Jesus Christ. No greater mission field is open to the disciples of Christ, and out of the abundance of that with which God has blessed the churches they will help themselves in the spiritual life by helping in this work. It should be no trouble where the spirit of missions, the desire to spread the gospel, is, to raise a sufficient amount to build a house in Union. It will be the only property owned by the disciples in the State of South Carolina. Surely the churches will heed Brother Burton's appeal."

Expression of appreciation from J. Henry Monk, 161 Kentucky Avenue, Washington, D. C.: "To the brethren who have written words of commendation of my book. 'Adventism and the Bible,' I wish to express my sincere thanks. It has been eight years since I left that faith, but I have made no effort to advertise the fact either by written statement or by word. Recently I had the pleasure of delivering a lecture before the Baptist-Disciples association of pastors here in our capital city, and since then I have spoken to a number of audiences on this subject, mostly in Baptist churches. If there are churches or communities where Adventism is making progress and the brethren would like to have some one who knows the system to forestall future progress, I wish to state that I will have a month later on in the summer-July, perhapsduring which time I could assist in this respect, and I would be glad to do so. I could deliver lecture-sermons on the following subjects, which ought to be sufficient to set any church or community straight on the question: 'Cleansing the Sanctuary;' 'The Second Advent;' 'Daniel and the Revelation;' 'The Sabbath;' 'The Lord's Day;' 'The Ten Commandments;' and 'Mrs. Ellen G. White and Her Visions.' I would be glad to communicate with any church that needs my services."

The Bible Should Be Taught in Schools.

BY J. C. M'Q.

On page 374 is an article from Brother Sommer, entitled "Brother McQuiddy's Dust and Argument," for which I request a thoughtful reading. Teaching the word of God is of such momentous importance that Christians should not sit idly by while the Roman Catholics, assisted by Brother Sommer, drive it from our public and private schools. Christ did not regard teaching the truth lightly; for when all authority had been given him in heaven and on earth, he said to the eleven disciples: "Go ye therefore, and make disciples of all the nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I commanded you; and lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." (Matt. 28: 19, 20.) This is good authority to every one who accepts the divinity of Christ for teaching the word of God to all nations, in a school, in a Bible school, in a saloon, in a church, in a familyin fact, everywhere.

My critic says: "Brother McQuiddy must not simply show that teaching has been brought over from the Old Testament, but that teaching in schools-organized 'Bible schools'-has been brought over." He assumes that it has not, while all the facts that bear upon the subject are against him. Christ, in bringing over "teaching" without prescribing any special method of teaching, left the disciples free to use the same method of instruction which they had used as Jews. As they were Jews before Christians and as Jews they had learned how to teach, they understood Jesus, in the absence of limitation of the how, to authorize them to teach in schools-organized "Bible schools"-which my critic admits they had done as Jews. Obviously it is in the light of well-known Jewish customs, rather than only in the light of classic Greek or of modern English, that we are to interpret the terms "teach" and "teaching" in the narrative of Christ's life work. In the same way must we interpret "teaching" in Matt. 28: 19, 20. As teaching comes over without limitation, it brings over with it "teaching in schools-organized Bible schools "unless teaching the Bible in schools contravenes the law of Christ. That to teach the Bible in schools is warranted by Scripture is evident from the following: From the days of Abraham systematic instruction had its place among the people of God. From the days of Moses the Jewish commonwealth had a measure of responsibility for the training of the young. From the days of Ezra the Bible school was a recognized agency, among the Jewish people, for the study and teaching of the word of God. In the days of Christ there was a system of Bible schools corresponding quite closely in their general features with what is now generally termed the "Sunday school," The elementary or primary schools in this system emphasized the study of the Bible text. The advanced or senior schools in this system were a department of the synagogue and studied commentaries in addition to the Bible text. The elementary schools were for children only. The senior schools had a place for children as well as for adults. In all the schools the arrangement was that of scholars grouped under a special teacher; the method of teaching was by form of question and answer. The Bible school was the starting point of the Christian church, and it was by means of Bible-school methods that the Christian church was first extended and developed. At Ephesus, Paul spoke, reasoned, and persuaded the Jews in the synagogue school for the space of three months. He then departed from them, taking with him the Christian scholars; and he gathered the nucleus of a Christian Bible school in connection with a daily exercise "in the school of Tyrannus, which continued for the space of two years." (Acts 19: 1-10.) As Paul taught the word of God "in the school of Tyrannus," so it is the duty of every Christian to teach the Bible in school and anywhere else he can. Again, for two whole years Paul was similarly engaged in his own hired dwelling in Rome, "preaching the kingdom of God, and teaching the things [the "all things" commanded by Christ] concerning the Lord Jesus Christ with all boldness, none forbidding him." (Acts 28: 30, 31.) For lack of space, I refrain from quoting other passages of the same import, in which the New Testament abounds. It is worthy of consideration that within a century after the apostolic age Celsus, an able opponent of Christianity. charged Christians with extending their numbers and propagating their views by getting hold of children privately in homes and schools and influencing them by conversation with them without the knowledge of their parents or teachers, and thus leading them away from the religion of their parents. Origen, in replying to this, did not deny the main facts as charged; but he contended and insisted that the children thus reached by Christians were benefited by the lesson imparted to them, and that if their parents were well disposed they would recognize this as the truth. With the authority of Jesus back of the word "teaching," it is easily brought over from the Old Testament into the New Testament schools in which the word of God is taught.

This same Jesus could have spoken the word that would have brought over "instrumental music" and "infant church membership" into the New Testament church; but, unfortunately for the fallacious reasoning of our brother, Christ did not speak the word. Christ authorized in the case of teaching, and it was done; in the case of "instrumental music" and "infant church membership" he did not authorize, and it was not done.

My language was garbled, the meaning was garbled, because while I was writing of "Bible schools" in the churches, which are now commonly called "Sunday schools," it was applied to colleges. I did not misrepresent the position of our brother, so published only the part to which I replied. I did not attempt a "digest" of his meaning. One should not give a "digest" of the meaning of an opponent, but should concede to him the right to do that for himself. If he considers such treatment fair, then we differ. I prefer to define my own position on colleges and schools where the Bible is taught. I teach that Christians have a right under God to associate themselves together, to organize a bank, a grocery store, a printing business, or a school in which the Bible is taught. They are obligated to teach the Bible as Christians in every way they can while working in such organizations. They should not teach in a school, work in a bank, a store, or any business where they are not permitted to teach the Bible.

I deny that when a brother works for a railroad company he loses his identity or becomes a part of the organization. Is the negro cook who cooks for a family a part of the family, and does she lose her identity as a cook? Nay, verily. If the railroad employee is a part of the organization, when he strikes, he strikes against himself. If Brother Sommer be correct, the conflict between capital and labor is a myth, for the laborer is a part of the capitalistic organization. If our brother had not been blinded by his theory, he would not have said: "All these brethren who talk about it speak of the teaching of the Bible done by the college." When he made that statement, he could not know what all the brethren had said. If, as he says, the college does the teaching, then why employ teachers? Such a statement refutes itself. If a man loses his identity because associated with others, then the "black sheep" of a family, the hypocrite in a church, the defaulter in a bank or in a railroad company, can never be identified. Such characters never lose their identity with the Lord, for they shall be rewarded according to their works. A man by no means loses his identity because he is a member of the church and associates himself with Christian people.

When, in response to my challenge for scripture which denies me the right to teach the Bible in schools and colleges or anywhere else, he cites the passages which say that "through the church the manifold wisdom of God" is to "be made known" and that Christians are to glorify God "in the church" (Eph. 3: 10, 21), our brother completely misses the point at issue. I believe both of these things as strongly as I can believe anything, but I disinctly deny that either of them is necessarily violated by mere method of teaching the Bible. The command to Cod's children to "teach" is a general command without a silitary hint as to the specific method by which it shall be eleyed. Jesus himself is the primary author of this comnand to the apostles, and it was afterwards issued by Paul toothers in these words: "And the things which thou hast heard from me among many witnesses, the same commit then to faithful men, who shall be able to teach others alsı." (2 Tim, 2: 2.) Here again there is the general adnonition to "teach," but not even a hint as to any specific method of teaching. Hence, Brother Sommer and I have the right to form a business association or organization of persons called a "publishing company" and teach the 3ible through the Apostolic Review and the Gospel Advocate, or to form another association of persons called a "school" or a "college" and to teach it in classes through oral and blackboard instruction, and still further to form such temporary associations or organizations of persons as a protracted meeting or a Bible reading for the same purpose; and in precisely the same way we have the right to establish any other conceivable method of teaching God's word which does not anywhere contravene a command of God. All these are organizations of individual Christians for doing effective work in teaching the Bible-the thing which God in general terms commands us to do-and it would be wide of the mark for some critic to tell Brother Sommer that he should abandon teaching the Bible through a publishing company or through any other of these methods because the Bible says it must be done "through" or "in the church," Brother Sommer seems to think a human organization is necessarily sinful in itself. In this he is much mistaken. Neither the missionary society nor any other association of Christians is wrong because it is a human organization. human organization is right or wrong depends altogether upon what it does. If nothing were done by individual Christians through a missionary society but preach or teach the gospel, neither Brother Sommer nor anybody else could show that it is wrong. But the missionary society is more than a method of teaching and preaching. It usurps and takes upon itself the authority and control over the churches which God has specifically placed elsewhere; and if a publishing company or a school should undertake thus to contravene a specific order of God, it would be wrong for the same reason.

Hence, I now renew my challenge to Brother Sommer and ask him to name the passage in the word of God that gives some specific method of teaching the Bible, thus telling us how it shall be done. Let there be no evasion. Never mind about passages that say it must be done "through the church." The methods which I have named and which I am defending do it through the church. Please name the passage which gives a specific method of doing it "through" or "in the church." This is the issue, and to this issue we must hold.

The Rochester (N. Y.) Mission.

BY E. A. E.

This letter, which I publish without stopping to get Sister Fisher's permission, speaks for itself. Read it and act.

Rochester, N. Y., March 24, 1920.—Dear Brother Elam: Brother Miller is not receiving the support that he should, and you know that a preacher cannot do his best hampered with financial difficulties. I know that you are not to blame; but when I think of our membership in the South and the wealth that is among them, and then see how difficult it is to get money for missions and other church work, it almost makes one lose faith in the real Christianity of the majority. The Catholics set apart Lent to contribute funds for home and foreign missions, and I intend to get the exact amount contributed, which will run into thousands. Last Easter one of the churches (and it was not the largest) contributed more than twenty-five hundred dollars that day alone. This was not in pledges, but in actual cold cash put into the contribution plate. If a people, believing and practicing a perverted with the truth do? The Catholics in this city probably contribute more in forty days for mission than the churches in the whole State of Tennessee do in a year.

Brother Miller has been busy visiting, and this work, I am sure, will show results when we have our meeting, which we are planning to begin the latter part of April, to continue indefinitely.

I am inclosing a little leaflet which we have had printed. Only a few run off, as we are only temporarily at the above address, and the printer is holding copy until we are permanently located, when the change in address and service announcement will be made, and we will then have several thousand printed.

We need funds to purchase tracts, and there are eight persons in this city to whom the Gospel Advocate should As you know, I have been sick so much and have had such heavy expense in this connection, and am still having, that I am not able to do a great deal in the financial way. I have had to help Brother Miller out the past two weeks, but I do not feel that I am able to do this right along. So far only one hundred and fourteen dollars has been sent him for nearly three months' work. church at Hartsville sent ten dollars and the sisters in Lebanon sent four dollars.

We do not intend to give up, even if Brother Miller has to get a job and go to work, but from now on he should be in a position to put in his entire time preaching and The denominations are raising thousands of and why is it, do you suppose, that the churches of Christ are not more liberal?

I am sending the Advocate to one person I have inter-She wrote me a note to-day thanking me for it and telling me how much of interest she found within its columns. I am sure she will soon come into the church.

I wish I had the time and strength to write personal letters to the churches, but I simply cannot do it with all my other accumulated work and limited strength. This letter has been written hurriedly and between many inter-ruptions. It is disconnected and contains many errors in composition, but I shall not take time to rewrite it.

Brother Miller was offered twelve hundred dollars to preach for a church in Texas, and I do hope the churches will rally to his support here. He is a good man, a sound teacher, a good preacher, and has the ability to accomplish much good in this city.

With kindnest wishes for yourself and dear wife,

Cordially, EUNICE C. FISHER.

This is a brave, heroic sister. We all know her. I have known her from girlhood. She has had to make a strong fight as a widow to rear her children and maintain herself. She was reared near Nashville, but is now heroically at work in the Athenseum and Mechanics Institute in Rochester. Her relatives and many good friends admire her pluck and rejoice in her strong, bright faith and the "good works and almsdeeds" (Dorcaslike) which she does. Besides her daily work in her position in this Institute, she finds time, especially on Sundays, to visit hospitals and other places of suffering and need, to comfort and cheer and bless otherwise, as a ministering angel, the afflicted and sorrowful. In one place for the infirm she found an old Southern negro woman and asked what could be done for her. The woman said: "Misstus, ef I could jes git some old-time corn bred of de South, it would help me so much." The reply was, "You shall have it;" and she went home, prepared it, and made the old woman happy.

Thus Sister Fisher has been all along "a worker for the Lord." Years ago, while living in Nashville, she made the arrangements for a tent meeting in Goodlets, a near-by town, when there was not "a member," so far as we know, in the town. The meeting was held. Last year, as our readers know, she worked up an interest and succeeded in having the meeting held in Rochester. This meeting resulted in the starting of a congregation of about fourteen honest, industrious Christians only, but having little of this world's goods. About the same number of children and young people meet with this congregation on Sundays to study the Bible. In addition to this, at the beginning of this year Brother Hugh Miller, of Corsicana, Texas, a worthy and true man and good preacher, went there to build up this work, and will remain until the cause has been established, or, at least, for the present year. He went without any guarantee of any certain amount of support. We told him the churches would support him, and they will.

We are working to induce churches to contribute, each, a certain amount every month for a year, until a sufficient sum has been raised to maintain this missionary and this work. When enough has been raised, no further appeal will be made. Up to date we have the following: A brother and his wife, Memphis, Tenn., $1 per month; a brother near Pulaski, Tenn., $1 per month; a sister, Lebanon, Tenn., $1 per month; the church at Hartsville, Tenn., $5 per month; the church at Cookeville, Tenn., $5 per month (with promise of more, it may be); the church at Lynchburg, Tenn., $10 per month; the Owen's Chapel church, Tennessee, $10 per month; the church at Viola, Tenn., $10 per month; a sister, Scott's Hill, Tenn., $1 per month, and also an immediate contribution; the Union Church, Sumner County, Tenn., $15 per month, with promise of more if necessary; a good sister, Huntsville, Ala., $1 per month. Campbell Miller sends $17 and promises $10 per month. The Russell Street Church, Nashville, Tenn., has already given $100. This makes, in all, $79.75 per month, dividing this $100 given by Russell Street Church and the $17 sent by Campbell Miller by 12. This, counting other expenses with the support of the preacher, is not half enough. Other churches have been asked to help support this work, and they will do so. Besides, this is an appeal to all. When enough have responded to the work to carry it on, no more will be asked to do so, so the others can help other work.

This is a direct, plain, necessary, and good letter from Sister Fisher. Note what she says about the liberality of some denominations and the lack of it in many places in churches of Christ. No wonder, working in this great and worldly and wicked city with a handful of poor Christians, struggling to maintain the New Testament order of things throughout, she feels discouraged with so little help thus far. I feel discouraged in trying to persuade churches in many places, not only to be liberal and missionary, but to follow the Golden Rule and otherwise to practice Christianity. But if many do not, others will, and the work of the Lord will go on. This work will be sustained. It is one thing to teach and to contend for the all-sufficiency of the church to do all the work of the Lord, but quite another to really do it. Let us do it.

Let other congregations decide how much they can and will contribute monthly to this work, and let us know, so we can tell when the amount has been raised. No more will be received than is necessary. All money can be sent directly to the congregation in Rochester. Send it to Mrs. Eunice Fisher, care Mechanics Institute, Rochester, N. Y.

Really, a few churches, if they have no other work on hand, can support this work; but, with other work, many can give something to this. So can individuals.

There is not a more worthy and not a more inviting field of labor in all missionary realms.

Reports will be made along, full and clear, so that all may know what is being done.

This letter and this article would not have been written but for love for the cause of Christ-the salvation of souls.

The following is an article just received from Brother Miller. Read it and act accordingly. We all know what the Bible teaches on giving.

THE CAUSE AT ROCHESTER, N. Y.

Doubtless it will be a source of surprise to many to know that a small band of Christians in Rochester, so far as can learn, compose the only loyal church in this great State of some ten million inhabitants. The writer took up work here on the second Sunday in January. weak in numbers, the Christians here are strong in the faith, and I have never worked with people who were more zealous for the cause. The prospects for a good congress. tion here in course of time are but the brightest.

While here for only a comparatively short time, I have acquainted myself to some extent with the religious onditions of this great city, and can candidly state that I could not conceive of a time or conditions more favorable for the planting of primitive Christianity. In visiting among the missions and smaller religious bodies of the city, one is surprised to find the degree of intelligence among some of them that in the South have follovings only from the most ignorant - es; also the rapidly of their growth is astonishing. But numbers of the greater their growth is astonishing. But numbers of the greater churches here have become tired of festivities, big social functions, and theatrical performances, which have lirgely taken the place of plain and humble worship, and are looking for something that bears some resemblance to pure religion. If error can have such success, surely the truth can have more.

At present we are meeting for worship in an Odd Fellows' Hall, but we are negotiating for the use of a mission house which is better suited to religious services and more favorably located. The few Christians here, though willing to sacrifice for the cause, are not able to carry on the work that we are launching at this time. When the weather will permit, we hope, if possible, to procure a tent and hold meetings in every section of the city. I have canceled four or five meetings in the South to devote the entire summer to Rochester, and we are determined to put the gospel before the people in its plainness and simplicity. This work will, of course, incur expenses in addition to a regular meeting place; so we are taking this means of getting the Rochester work before the brotherhood, and we assure all that any contribution to this work will not only be appreciated by the small congregation, but will help carry forward a cause the good of which eternity alone can determine. Send all contributions to Mrs. Eunice Fisher, care Mechanics Institute, Rochester, N. Y.

In view of the tent work to be undertaken and other work to be done, we request congregations that have not already pledged a contribution each month to send one Lord's-day's contribution to this work. Be assured the money will be properly used, the work is most deserving, and greatest blessing will come to the donor. Take the matter under consideration and act accordingly.

What Does the Book Say?

BY T. B. LARIMORE.

I have heard and seen so many things recently relative to how those who preach the gospel should live that I have decided to see what the Bible says on the subject; and this is what I see, first in the "authorized" version of the New Testament (version of 1611), and then in the new version (version of 1881)—the Authorized Version and the Revised Version:

"Do ye not know that they which minister about holy things live of the things of the temple? and they which wait at the altar are partakers with the altar? Even so hath the Lord ordained that they which preach the gospel should live of the gospel?" (1 Cor. 9: 13, 14.)

"Know ye not that they that minister about sacred things eat of the things of the temple, and they that wait upon the altar have their portion with the altar? Even so did the Lord ordain that they that proclaim the gospel should live of the gospel." (1 Cor. 9: 13, 14.)

I shall not presume to try to explain or simplify this statement, lest, instead of simplifying, I mystify,

A master, who was a minister, tried to explain conversion to one of his slaves, a faithful old servant who, himself, tried to preach sometimes. Finally, he said: "You understand it now, don't you, Mose?" "No, suh, Massa, I don' believe I does. I did understand it, suh, fo' you splain it, but I don' understan' it now." Explanation in that case was mystification. So it might be with the scripture I have just quoted in two versions, if I were to try to "splain" it; hence I shall simply let it speak for itself. But, if you preach, how do you live, my brother? And why do you live thus, if you preach? And why do you preach, if you live thus? Please explain.

The Secret Place of Prayer.

There is a place where thou canst touch the eyes
Of blinded men to instant, perfect sight;
There is a place where thou canst say 'Arise'
To dying captives, bound in chains of night;
There is a place where thou canst search the store
Of hearded gold and free it for the Lord;
There is a place—upon some distant shore—
Where thou canst send the worker or the Word.
"Where is that blessed place?" dost thou as "Where?"
O soul, it is the secret place of prayer. —Selecter

"When America was able to stretch her hands out and some sustenance was given to these starving people, you should have seen the alacrity with which they threw themselves into manual training, any kind of work, how the roses came back into their cheeks, and you would have said: 'This is not a contemptible people.'

"We are living in a time when there has taken place the deliberate destruction of a million of Christian people, representing intellect, refinement, power, piety, skill in the manual arts, representing everything that was constructive in the Turkish empire. The great question now is: Shall we calmly fold our cloaks about us and say: 'It is none of our affair, let the Armenians and Poles die. We are not responsible for their coming into the world, and it is not our responsibility if they go out of it?"

In sending contributions, be sure and state whether they are intended for the Home Orphans' Fund, the Armenian and Syrian Fund, or the Poland Fund. Jerusalem.

Is there any story in human history like the story of Jerusalem? It has been besieged and captured twenty-four times. Its walls have been again and again leveled. Its very site has been plowed and sown with salt. It has belonged to the ancient Canaanite, to the Jew, to the Greek, to the Roman, to the Syrian, to the Chaldean, to the Arab, to the Turk, to Latin Europe, and to England.

It is associated with the faith of the Jew, the fanaticism of the Mohammedan, and the adoration of the Christian. All the great religions and the great cultures have met before its walls and striven to possess it.

But the story of Jerusalem does not end with the records of time; it projects itself into the expectations of eternity. It owes half its wonder to a deeply-held and often-adjourned, but never-surrendered hope which has made it the symbol of Christian idealism and the far-sought refuge in another world of the weary and heavy laden.

The old Jerusalem is a battle-scarred city which has covered the hills upon which it was originally built with manifold destruction.

But the new Jerusalem, with its walls of twelve manner of precious stones and its gates of pearl, is lifted four-square against the horizons of eternity, unscarred by any battle, not to be darkened by any sorrow, but built by the power of hope upon the foundations of faith.—Gaius Glenn Atkins, in "Jerusalem Past and Present."

What the world is asking is that we be faithful to our faith, then the world will need no explanation of our creed.—Charles F. Blaisdell.

By J. C. McQUIDDY

Brother A. Baker, of McEwen, Tenn., asks an explanation of 1 Cor. 5: 11, which reads: "But as it is, I wrote unto you not to keep company, if any man that is named a brother be a fornicator, or covetous, or an idolater, or a reviler, or a drunkard, or an extortioner; with such a one no, not to eat."

It should be noted that the passage does not apply to eating with the world, but to eating with the fornicator who is named a brother. Christians are not permitted to associate with wicked people in the church in any way that fellowships and encourages their wickedness. Eating an ordinary meal with a brother who is a fornicator, especially in the East, would be encouraging and fellowshiping him in his wrongdoing. Hence, Paul commands Christians neither to keep company nor to eat an ordinary meal with a brother who is a fornicator. This does not have reference to eating the Lord's Supper, for such a fornicator would not be expected to eat that at all.

Brother H. W. S. wishes an explanation of 1 Cor. 1: 17, which reads: "For Christ sent me not to baptize, but to preach the gospel: not in wisdom of words, lest the cross of Christ should be made void."

Every preacher can say, as did Paul, that he is not sent to baptize, but to preach the gospel; but the preacher who preaches the gespel as did Philip and as did Paul and Silas in Philippi will teach his hearers the duty of believers to be baptized. Paul made it his business to preach the gospel; and when he preached the gospel, he also did the baptizing, for he tells us that in Corinth he baptized Crispus and Gaius and the household of Stephenas. He thanked God that he had not baptized any other in Corinth, lest any should say he had baptized in his own name. would not have baptized these if baptism was not required of believers. Philip preached the gospel of Jesus to the Ethiopian nobleman. So far as we can tell, baptism and not been mentioned at this time; but we find, "as they went on the way, they came unto a certain water; and the ennuch saith, Behold, here is water; what doth hinder me to be baptized?" This shows conclusively that in preaching Jesus to the eunuch, Philip taught him that it was his duty to be baptized. Even so every preacher to-day who preaches Jesus will teach men the duty of baptism.

W. Vantrease, of Norene, Tenn., says: "If a Christian has the right to be a policeman, does he have the right to use a club and maul people over the head if they resist arrest? I ask the question for information."

Sometime ago the question was asked if a policeman had the right to teach the Bible. I replied in the affirmative. The best thing to do with a policeman or anybody else is to put him to teaching the word of God. People who know the truth and are able to teach it should be encouraged to do so. Those who have not obeyed the gospel of Christ, if they know the truth and teach the truth, may thereby be led to embrace the full truth. It is the duty of the officer of the law to see that the law is enforced. I would not encourage a policeman or any one else to maul people over the head. Policemen do not do this, unless as a matter of protection to themselves. Instead of discouraging policemen from teaching the Bible, I would encourage all to teach it, in order that by such a course they may themselves be led into a faithful practice of the truth, The Holy Spirit declares: "For rulers are not a terror to the good work, but to the evil. And wouldest thou have no fear of the power? do that which is good, and thou shalt have praise from the same." (Rom. 13: 3.) The life of a policeman may not be the highest Christian life, but I would not take the position that a man cannot be a Christian and be a policeman. I have never known any one to hold and practice such a position by disfellowshiping all policemen who were members of the church of Christ.

James R. Goodman, of Jackson, Ga., writes for (1) an explanation of Acts 2: 27-31. He also asks (2) if a man can organize a scriptural church in his own home, and (3) asks us to explain why Jehovah's name is not mentioned in the book of Esther. He asks (4) if a person who has a church in his house could scripturally give bread and wine to his little children who are not old enough to be members of the church.

1. Acts 2: 27-31 reads: "Because thou wilt not leave my soul unto Hades, neither wilt thou give thy Holy One to see corruption. Thou madest known unto me the ways of life; thou shalt make me full of gladness with thy countenance. Brethren, I may say unto you freely of the patriarch David, that he both died and was buried, and his tomb is with us unto this day. Being therefore a prophet, and knowing that God had sworn with an oath to him, that of the fruit of his loins he would set one upon his throne; he foreseeing this spake of the resurrection of the Christ, that neither was he left unto Hades, nor did his flesh see corruption." This is a quotation from Ps. 16. The language refers to Christ, whose soul should not be left in Hades and whose body should not suffer corruption. The way of life had been made known to him. This was not true of the patriarch David, who had died and had been buried and whose tomb was with them at that time. Christ, therefore, was the prophet who was raised up to sit on the throne of David. David himself, foreseeing this, had prophesied the resurrection of Christ, and had also prophesied that his soul should not be left in Hades, nor his flesh suffer corruption. The apostle continues in verse 32: "This Jesus did God raise up, whereof we all are witnesses." The Jews themselves knew this to be a fact. Then the apostle further states that Jesus, being exalted to the right hand of God and having received the promise of the Holy Spirit from the Father, had poured forth that which they saw and heard.

2. The Bible speaks of the "church in thy house." I can see no more difficulty in organizing a church in one's house than anywhere else. The house is simply a place in which the church meets and worships. It does not take a large number to constitute the church. Christ says where two or three have met together in his name, he will be in their midst. A scriptural church should be in every home where there are two or three Christians.

3. I cannot tell just why the name "Jehovah" does not occur in the book of Esther. The man-given name, "Jew," occurs many times in this book. While Jehovah is not mentioned in the book, he certainly was very prominent in the lives of Esther and of Mordecat. After all, it is better to have Jesus in the life than simply in word.

4. A man certainly should not give the emblems to his children who are not old enough to be sinners or to be members of the body of Christ. The emblems are to be given to Christians, and not to those who are not members of the church.

Sage Tea Darkens Hair to Any Shade

Don't Stay Cray! Here's an Old-Time Recipe that Anybody Gan Apply

The use of sage and sulphur for restoring faded, gray hair to its natural color dates back to grandmother's time. She used it to keep her hair beautifully dark, glossy, and attractive. Whenever her hair took on that faded, or streaked appearance, this simple mixture was applied with wonderful effect.

But brewing at home is mussy and out of date. Nowadays, by asking at any drug store for a bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Com-pound," you will get this famous old preparation, improved by the addition of other ingredients, which can be depended upon to restore natural color

well-known downtown druggist says it darkens the hair so naturally and evenly that nobody can tell it has been applied. You simply dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two it becomes beautifully dark and glossy.

A New Bible for the Blind.

A newly adopted method of point printing for the seventy thousand blind in the United States has been promptly used by the American Bible Society as an opportunity for yet another benefaction to those handicapped by sightlessness. The society has already taken steps toward the publication of the Holy Scriptures in this system. Those who have learned the European Braille alphabet will soon have available the one international Book, which the society supplies in twelve other methods of printing for the blind in this and other lands, in a form which so nearly approximates the European Braille that one who learns the Revised Braille can readily learn to read English and Continental point print.

The newly adopted system is known as Revised Braille, Grade One and A Half, and is a modification of what is well-nigh an international alphabet for blind readers, invented by a blind Frenchman, M. Louis Braille, in 1829. Two systems of American invention used widely in this country at present have an alphabet written differently than in European Braille; so that a need was felt for a possible means of approximating international uniformity, resulting in the adoption of the Revised Braille.

The blind certainly love the word of God, for the American Bible Society has supplied to the blind in this country tens of thousands of volumes of the Holy Scriptures, printed not only in the point print system (English and American Braille and New York Point), but also in the raised-letter types (Boston Line Letter and Moon's System) which many of the aged blind prefer. In fact, the American Bible Society has made a tremendous contribution to the literature in raised type available for the blind by publishing at great expense the complete Bible in both the New York Point and the American Braille, the two systems most used up to the present time, as well as in the Boston Line Letter. The volumes published in these types have all been distributed by the society for much less than their cost, and the larger part have been given to the needy without charge.

Recognition of this service is contained in the most authoritative book dealing with the blind, Dr. Harry Best's recent volume, "The Blind-Their Condition and the Work Being Done for Them in the United States," published by MacMillan, in which he states: "The preparation of special printed matter for the blind, other than regular books and periodicals. has likewise been undertaken. The foremost work of this character is that of the American Bible Society, which became interested in the blind in 1842."

Nor is this beneficent work restricted to the United States, for in other lands also the society supplies the Scriptures in foreign languages printed with raised types: Arabic in two systems; Spanish, Armenian, Armeno-Turkish, Japanese, and Siamese, one system each.

As the blind Christians of the world read with sensitive fingers the sacred pages, will they not be thrilled with a joy peculiar in a sense to them as their keen touch discerns the groups of pointed dots which tell them of "Jesus Christ; whom not having seen ye love; on whom, though now ye see him not, yet believing, ye rejoice greatly with joy unspeakable and full of glory: receiving the end of your faith, even the salvation of your souls?"

Whitefield.

Sister Opal Clark Whitefield was born on August 27, 1898, and obeyed the gospel on October 6, 1917. She was married to Brother C. E. Whitefield on September 1, 1919, and went away to New Mexico to make her home, where she was living happily with her husband; but on March 4, 1920, the white-winged messenger called her away from the sorrows and trials of time to that home where sor-rows never come. She was the daugh-ter of Brother Hascal Clark and wife. Her body was brought back to her old home at Bagdad, Tenn., and laid to rest in the family graveyard, to await the resurrection of the just. I have known Sister Whitefield for some time, and a truer, purer girl I have never known. To know her was to love her. She leaves her husband, fa-ther, mother, three brothers, and many relatives and friends to weep over her departure. I would say to the sorrow-ing ones: Weep not as though we had no hope of seeing her again. Grayson.

Brother Henry Clay Grayson was born in Logan County, Ky., on November 5, 1852, and died at Dunmor, Ky., on December 24, 1919. He obeyed the gospel at Rochester, Ky., and lived a consistent Christian for thirty-two years. Very few times did he fail to commemorate the Lord's death on the first day of the week. He was kind, loving, and self-sacrificing; was always willing to make a sacrifice to advance the Lord's cause. In August, 1912, the gospel was first preached at Dunmor, and through his untiring efforts the church house was erected. He was a faithful father, an honest man, a true Christian. He will be missed in the home, community, and church. He leaves seven children and a host of friends to mourn his departure. Well can we say of him as Paul said of Abel: "He being dead yet speaketh."

Nix.

In the house of worship for the church of Christ, on December 26, 1919, at Cornersville, Tenn., and in the presence of a very large audience of neighbors and friends, the writer of this sketch and Brother W. B. London, elder of the Cornersville congregation, conducted a double funeral service—that of Brother R. N. Nix, eighty-two years, one month, and seven days of age, and that of his son, Brother D. W. Nix, fifty-three years, one month, and twelve days of age. The father was married to Miss Mary E. Davis on January 7, 1864, and had obeyed the gospel some years before. The son was baptized by the writer, about thirty-seven years ago, and was about thirty-seven years ago, and was married to Miss Lou Helmick in the year 1890. Both of these sisters survive their husbands. The son died on Christmas morning, about five o'clock, and the father died the same day at about twelve o'clock. These were both faithful men of God. The father and I were young men at the same time, and of the same neighborhood though and of the same neighborhood, though he was about nine years older than 1. We were always very intimate. While neither of us was in the Civil War, we passed the sad ordeal in the same neighborhood. Though I have been conducting funeral services for fifty years, this was my first double funeral—both coffins (one on my right and the other on my left) in the church at the same time. May God bless all the relatives and friends.

Financial Statement of Funds for Japan Work.

BY C. G. VINCENT.

For the benefit of brethren interested in the Kamitomizaka mission, of Tokyo, Japan, with which I was connected while in that field, I herewith submit a statement of funds received and forwarded since I volunteered last fall, on my return from France, to render this service. The books have been audited by two business men, members of the church here, Brethren William Neese and T. L. Ligon, who make the following statement:

Knoxville, Tenn., February 5, 1920. This is to certify that we, the undersigned, this day have examined and found correct C. G. Vincent's ac-count with the Japan Kamitomizaka lot and rebuilding fund. The records show that from October 15, 1919, to January 31, 1920, total receipts were Vouchers show remittances of $1,054.35 forwarded to Japan, and $2.15 for one hundred stamped envelopes used in mailing circulars. ance in hand, $57.84

WILLIAM NEECE. T. L. LIGON.

I think that the suggestion to the effect that all who receive and forward offerings for any and all purposes, our papers as well as individuals, have their books audited by able and disinterested persons and reports published, is a good one and is calculated to produce confidence. I have implicit confidence in the integrity of all who are now rendering this accommodation; for, with the exception of two brethren, I personally know them all. But the custom of having books examined by disinterested persons ought to be adopted by all who ask for and remit public funds.

On January 1 the Japanese brethren, with the advice and help of missionaries on the field, closed a deal for a lot. It is larger than the one they expected to buy last year, which was sold before we were ready to close. This one is in a better locality, being in a property-owning neighborhood. In fact, it is the lot on which the "missionary home" stands, at 73 Myogadani Street. There is room enough to build a meetinghouse with rooms above for the native evangelist's living quarters. Hitherto land rent amounting to about $12.50 a month has been paid since the land lease was renewed by me five years ago. The land rent for the next period of five years would have been doubled, likely, as real estate has increased wonderfully in Japan. When the time comes for this work to stand alone, without the presence and help of a missionary, the foreign-style house will be an asset, as it can be rented profitably. Until then it will be occupied by the missionary in that mission. With a sultable house of worship on one portion of the lot and the mission home on the other side, each with a separate entrance, we will have a fine "compound," a real workshop for the Lord. The purchase of this lot puts us under a heavier financial responsibility. The Japanese brethren have agreed to raise $1,500 of the amount needed. The lot cost $6,750. The terms are twenty per cent cash, balance in three years at six per cent interest. Deducting the amount already paid and the amount the Japanese brethren promise to raise, it means that we have to secure $1,300 a year on the lot (assuming the missionary in the house will take care of most of the interest), besides raising funds for a meetinghouse, which will cost probably $3,500 or $4,000, unless there is a "slump" in labor and building materials. So, brethren, the Lord in his providence has set for us a larger task. Are we equal to the challenge? There were thirty baptisms in this mission last

There has been some discussion about whether or not offerings may be sent through some brother or paper. We are not going to fall out about that, though no informed brother is going to surrender his right under Christ in this matter. You may send "direct" if you deem it wiser. So offerings for the Kamitomizaka building and lot fund may be sent to Y. Hiratsuka, 15 Kamitomizaka, Koishikawa, Tokyo, Japan, our beloved and faithful native worker; to Brother Orville Bixler, 68 Zoshigaya, Koishikawa, Tokyo, Japan; or to W. W. Freeman, Abilene, Texas; or to me, at 1210 North Fourth Avenue, Knoxville, Tenn.; or this paper will be good enough to see that your offering reaches the field. The all-important thing is that we do our part willingly and liberally.

I take this occasion to again thank all who have contributed to this worthy field either through me or any one else. The Lord bless you "in the doing."

I cannot stand alone, O Christ of God, Since thou didst die for me:

In joy or sorrow, hope or pain or grief, I lean upon thee,

Hands touch my hand, and heart beats by my heart,

Music in the Church.

BY FRANK GRAMMER.

I would like to encourage all members of the church whom it is possible for me to reach with word or pen to put forth a greater effort for the cause of music than they have in time past. When I speak of music in the church, I mean the kind of music we are authorized by the word of God to use, Music is not merely a pleasure or pastime, but a means of education and worship. It appeals to more people than any other one thing. A musical education is one of the most pleasing embellishments of human existence. It is a refreshing spring by the wayside of life from which we draw pleasure and enjoyment, and we are duty bound, to ourselves, to our country, and to our God, to develop the talents with which we have been intrusted. Twenty years of experience in the music field has proven to me that there is nothing more essential in the church than good singing; and unless we possess a musical education, we cannot hope to be good singers. A musical education enriches the mind. stimulates the imagination, purifies the soul, expands the affections, softens the heartaches, and leads to a higher and nobler conception of life and its surroundings. Every church in the brotherhood should arrange with some qualified person to teach for them at least eighteen or twenty days each year in the science of music. Many people will go to church where they have good singing that care nothing for the other part of the worship; and inasmuch as singing brings people to church, why not the brethren advocate it more? I knew a very strong infidel one time at a singing convention to rise to his feet and acknowledge his God, saying that the song that had just been sung had convinced him that there must be a Supreme Being, and I afterwards learned that he obeyed the gospel.

The idle person is not resting; he is rusting.

The Situation at Bradentown, Fla.

BY W. M. BRUMIT.

"Beware of false prophets, which which come to you in sheep's clothing, but inwardly they are ravening wolves."

The faithful band of disciples in Bradentown, Fla., have suffered from this class of deceivers. We are located in one of the finest fruit and vegetable sections in the State. Tourists from all parts of the country come here to enjoy our delightful winter climate. Many of our loyal brethren and sisters come from the North to winter here. Our brethren, not having a regular preacher, have not advertised their services as they should have done. The "digressives" have taken advantage of the opportunity to slip one of their men in on us, and they have caused much confusion by their deceptive work, not only among the local disciples, but also among our visiting brethren. At this time they are advertising their congregation as the Central church of Christ and are trying to assess everybody in order to obtain money to erect a building, so if any of our brethren are asked to donate money for the church of Christ in Bradentown, Fla., please remember that we own our house and lot where we worship and do not owe a dollar on the property. The restrictive clause in the deed has protected us. The cause is in a prosperous condition. Cortez and Oneco, both within a few miles of Bradentown, have good, live congregations. We are hoping for the most successful year that the work has ever known at this place.

BLACK-DRAUGHT AS A PREVENTIVE

When You Begin Feeling Bad With Feverishness, Headache. Cold, or Constipation, Give Your Liver a Tonic-Take Black-Draught.

Candler, N. C .- "I don't believe there is a better medicine made than Black-Draught. I have used it and my mother's folks used it for colds. feverishness, headache, and deranged liver." This statement recently was made by Mr. C. B. Trull, a well-known farmer on Route 3, this place.

"I have, before now, begun feeling dull; a headache would come on, and I would feel all full of cold, and take a few doses of Black-Draught and get all right," adds Mr. Trull.

"Last year my brother had measles. 'flu,' and pneumonia. 'They wired us. I went to Camp Jackson to look him up. Down there different ones were using preventatives. I stayed with him. The only thing I used was Black-Draught. It kept my system cleansed, and I kept well and strong."

By keeping your liver and stomach in good order, you stand in little danger of catching serious ills that occasionally spread through town and country:

Get a package of Black-Draught and have it ready for the first symptom of a disordered liver.

Most druggists sell Black-Draught.

Springfield, April 3.—Since writing I have visited my regular appointments, and found things improving at all places. The faithful minister with the faithful few in the church can accomplish much in very unpromising places, if they will persist. I baptized my father-in-law (eighty-four years of age) about three weeks ago. I am studying hard, preparing for my summer's labor. I have decided to not begin protracted-meeting work till May 1, and have half of May and June open for meetings. I shall be in protracted-meeting work till Decem-I have arranged a meeting for May at Huffman, Ark., and one for June at Portageville, Mo. Brother June at Portageville, Mo. Brother Charles T. Hardin will be with me at Huffman.-M. S. Mason.

Oklahoma.

Muskogee, April 5 .- Work with the East Okmulgee congregation is doing nicely. Brother W. E. Williams, fornicely. Brother W. E. Williams, M. merly of Huntsville, Ark., preached for us twice Sunday. Brother Will M. for us twice Sunday. Brother Will M. Thompson, of Ada, Okla., will begin a meeting with us on April 11. This will be Brother Thompson's third meeting with that congregation. T. S. Bain.

McAlester, April 7.—Since last report I have preached at Chambers Schoolhouse, five miles south of this city. It is a mission point. I went from there to Stidham to attend to Elder M. B. Unzeker, a Seventh-Day Adventist, who was conducting a meeting and challenging the world for a discussion. After it was all over, the brethren assured me that they expected no more trouble with Saturday keepers. I went to a country congregation four miles from Stigler. Here we had splendid crowds. My next point was at Fort Smith, Ark. Here we have some faithful saints. This is the home of Brother W. W. Slater, and he is held in high esteem by the Park Hill congregation. I am booked for meetings as follows: Mount Okla., June 5; Earlsbore, July 3; Millerville, Texas, July 17; Tuckerman, Ark., July 31; Stevens, Ark., August 17; Mineola, Ark., August 25; Ro-mance, Ark., September 4.—Bynum Black

April 5 .- I am just home Altus. from a three-weeks' preaching trip. was at Graham on the second Sunday in March and during the week. These brethren are spiritually dead. They claimed to have been established there thirty years. They have no church house, but meet and preach in the schoolhouse. I preached for them, and paid my own expenses there and away. If it ever entered their minds to remunerate me for my trip and work with them, they failed to put it into action. There are brethren there that have oil wells and gas wells on their places that bring them in much money, yet they are too poor to give for the cause of Christ. I visited other mission points in Love County. Oswalt and Burneyville, and preached to the faithful brethren in Marietta on the third Sunday; then on to St. Jo, Texas, and at Corinth on the fourth Sunday and during the week. At Cor-inth we have some good, faithful brethren, who treated me kindly and paid me well for my work—more than I wanted to take. I hope to be with them again in July or August .- H. H. Turner.

Renwar vs. Rheumatism.

Renwar vs. Rheumatism.

It is certainly a pity that so many people suffer year after year the intense pains of rheumatism, when it can be so easily expelled from the system by the simple treatment of taking Renwar Rheumatic Salts. Rheumatism is caused by uric acid in the blood, and in order to effect a complete cure it is necessary to entirely eliminate this acid from the blood. Renwar is guaranteed to relieve, or your money is refunded. It contains no injurious drugs. It is the one sure remedy, and it does not in the elightest degree injure the stomach or affect the heart. Mr. Joseph L. Boehmer says: "One 50-cent bottle has done me more good than all sanatorium treatments, and what it did for mewhy should it not do the same for others? Should any one doubt the virtue of Renwar and the certainty of curing this malady, refer them to me." Campbell-Booth Debate. BY T. G. M'LEAN.

Alexander Campbell (Christian) and J. B. Booth (presiding elder of the African Methodist Episcopal Church) met in public debate at Lillard's Chapel, Marshall County, Tenn., March 15, and continued three nights. The proposition discussed was: church of Christ, with which I (Alexander Campbell) stand identified, is apostolic in origin, doctrine, and practice." Brother Campbell affirmed and Booth denied.

Brother Campbell led the discussion, affirming the first night that the church of Christ was established, set up, or had its beginning, in Jerusalem in the days of the apostles, on the first Pentecost after the ascension of Christ. Brother Campbell quoted passage after passage in proof, giving book, chapter, and verse. claimed that the church began in the days of Abraham. Brother Campbell replied that if there was a church then, it was not the church of Christ, for Christ's blood had not been shed: therefore, it was a bloodless church, a church without a head, and as the Spirit had not come, and as "the body without the spirit is dead," so it was a dead church.

On the second night the doctrine was debated. Booth made a complete failure that night as he read from his "Discipline" that "we are saved by faith only." Brother Campbell called on him for book, chapter, and verse, and he consumed most of his time hunting for the passage in the Bible, but finally gave it up and said he was mistaken.

On the third and last night the practice was discussed. Brother Campbell gave quotation after quotation showing the practice of the church of Christ to be apostolic. Booth, instead of refuting the argument of Brother Campbell, told the story of his childhood and early struggles and ridiculed Brother Campbell and his argument. Throughout the debate Booth would not stay on the proposi-

At the conclusion Brother Campbell challenged Booth for a debate on water baptism, but he refused, saying he never expected to debate again.

Brother Campbell is an able preacher of the word, and the truth in no wise suffered, but was victorious in his hands.

URIC ACID IN MEAT CLOGS THE KIDNEYS

Take a Glass of Salts if Your Back Hurts or Bladder Bothers

If you must have your meat every day, eat it, but flush your kidneys with salts occasionally, says a noted authority, who tells us that meat forms uric acid which almost paralyses the kidneys in their efforts to expel it from the blood. They become sluggish and weaken, then you suffer with a dull misery in the kidney region, region, sharp pains in the back, or sick headache, dizziness, your stomach sours, tongue is coated, and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine gets cloudy, full of sediment, the channels often get sore and irritated, obliging you to seek relief two or three times during the night.

To neutralize these irritating acids, to cleanse the kidneys and flush off the body's urinous waste, get four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy here, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days, and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate sluggish kidneys; also to neutralize the acids in urine, so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder

Jad Salts is inexpensive. It cannot injure, and makes a delightful effervescent lithla-water drink.

Rheumatism

In the spring of 1823 I was attacked by Muscular and Inflammatory Rheumatism. I suffered as only those who have it know, for over three years. I tried remedy after remedy and dector after dector, but such relief as I received was only temporary. Finally I found a remedy that cured me completely, and it has never returned. I have given it to a number who were terribly afflicted, and even bedridden with Rheumatism, and it effected a cure in avery case.

I want every sufferer from any form of rheumatic trouble to try this marvelous healing power. Don't send a cent; simply mail your name and address, and I will send it free to try. After you have used it and it has proven itself to be that long-locked-for means of curing your Rheumatism, you may send the price of it, one dollar; but, understand, I do not want your may send the price of it, one dollar; but, understand, I do not want your money unless you are perfectly satisfied to send it. Isn't that fair? Why suffer any longer, when positive relief is thus offered you free? Don't delay. Write to-day.

Odds and Ends.

BY H. W. JONES.

W. H. Hopper, Baptist, reports the "Nunnery-Bradley debate" in the Baptist Flag, and says: "Bradley is a Campbellite. . . . A greater victory was never won for Baptists," etc. C. B. Massey, another Baptist preacher, reports the "Sloan-Rogers Debate" in same paper, saying: "Rogers is a Campbellite. . . . Campbellite doctrine is not in Brother Sloan's way a bit. . . . He had a walk-over on the second proposition," etc. Now, isn't it "odd" that intelligent people-and preachers, at that-persist in calling people "Campbellites" who claim to be Christians only? And isn't it "odd" that they claim that "Campbellite doctrine is not in their way a bit," while laboring hard, continually, to kill that haunting specter they impolitely dub "Campbellism." But It just won't stay killed! All their noise, boasting, etc., reminds me of the fellow who always whistled when he passed the graveyard, just to keep up courage.

"No one ever heard of a Baptist that couldn't argue for his doctrine and give a 'Thus saith the Lord' for every doctrine he holds," quoth J. E. Dillard in the Baptist Flag. Yes, they can "argue for their doctrine;" but isn't it "odd" against the "odds" to see them try to give a "Thus saith the Lord " for some of their "doctrine "as, "baptism is an outward sign of an inward grace or salvation," "it is impossible for a child of God to so apostatize as to be finally lost," and their "church succession" theory, etc.? I know of one "Baptist" (L. R. Riley, formerly of these parts) who wouldn't "come across" and "argue for his doctrine," in public oral debate, when his broad challenge was accepted by leading brethren of two churches of Christ in these parts and they called on me to accommodate him. "The Lord shall judge the ends of the earth." (1 Sam. 2: 10.) Yes, "he will judge the world with righteousness, and the peoples with his truth and equity," says David. "Look unto me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth: for I am God, and there is none else." (Isa. 45: 22.) "Better is the end of a thing than the beginning thereof," says Solomon. Yes, the Christian life-"it is better further on." "Go ye therefore, and make disciples of all nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I commanded you: and lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world," says Jesus. But "many walk, of whom I told you often, and now tell you even weeping, that they are the enemies of the cross of Christ: whose end is perdition," says Paul (Phil.

I here make report of contributions received by me for building a house of worship in Micanopy, Fla.: From the church of Christ at Lake City, Fla., $2; church at Cortez, Fla., $28; church at Bradentown, Fla., $10; church at Oneco, Fla., $10; church at (Midway) Lake Butler, Fla., $5; S. Brown, Lake Butler, Fla., $2; church at McAlpin, Fla., $5; C. H. Hall, Fresno, Cal., $5; a widow, Fresno, Cal., $5; a brother, Fresno, Cal., $1; church at Manatee, Fla., $10; J. C. McClellan, Lumber City, Ga., $1. Total, $84. We are very thankful for this, and we pray the Lord's blessings on all. We have deeds with the restrictive clause against all innovations of man, and were about ready to begin work, when we had Brother J. O. Barnes, of Lake City, a godly man and a good preacher, to hold a meeting for us. Prejudice never ran higher among the sects, and, sadder still, the few brethren here would not stick with us and help fight Satan; so, with sad hearts and much discouraged, we had to give up the idea of building. But we are using the money in the Lord's cause. We have sent twenty-five dollars to help on the house of worship at Lake City, and mean to use the rest in mission places.

Faith is the belief in a possibility of something not contrary to reason, but for the time above it.—Prof. W. R. James.

For more than Forty Years Cotton Growers have known that

POTASH PAYS

More than 11,651,200 Tons of Potash Salts had been imported and used in the United States in the 20 years previous to January, 1915, when shipments ceased. Of this 6,460,700 Tons consisted of which the cotton grower knew was both a plant food and a preventive of blight and rust,—with it came also 1,312,400 Tons of which has the same effect on Cotton, but which was used mainly in mixed fertilizers.

Shipments of both Kainit and Manure Salt have been resumed but the shortage of coal and cars and high freight rates make it more desirable to ship Manure Salt, which contains 20 per cent of actual Potash, instead of Kainit, which contains less than 13 per cent actual Potash.

MANURE SALT can be used as a side dressing on Cotton in just the same way as Kainit and will give the same results. Where you used 100 pounds of Kainit, you need to use but 62 pounds of Manure Salt, or 100 pounds of Manure Salt go as far as 161 pounds of Kainit.

MANURE SALT has been coming forward in considerable amounts and cotton growers, who cannot secure Kainit, should make an effort to get Manure Salt for side dressing to aid in making a big cotton crop.

Muriate of Potash

50 per cent actual Potash, has been coming forward also,—100 pounds of Muriate are equivalent to 400 pounds of Kainit or 250 pounds of Manure Salt.

These are the three

Standard GERMAN Potash Salts

that were always used in making cotton fertilizers and have been used for all these years with great profit and without any damage to the crop.

The supply is not at present as large as in former years, but there is enough to greatly increase the Cotton Crop if you insist on your dealer making the necessary effort to get it for you.

Loyola, Founder of the Jesuits. No. 2

As an order, the Society of Jesus deserves a distinct classification. It is incorrect to say that it is similar to the Benedictines, Dominicans, and Franciscans because its labors, like theirs, have been teaching the young, establishing missions, and converting the heathen. The Jesuit body resembles these other religious societies only in external and separable accidents. It differs from them and from all others in its essential character, and that not in degree merely, but in kind also, so as to be an institution absolutely unique in history. A brief summary of its marked differences from other orders is pertinent to this paper because it brings out the marks of Loyola's leadership:

- (1) Habitual intercourse with society. The older orders, including some of military origin, desired to withdraw so far as possible from contact with the world and its concerns, to seek spiritual perfection in a retired life of contemplation and prayer. To the contrary, Loyola's followers were to withdraw from precisely this sort of retirement and to make habitual intercourse with society a prime duty. They must respond to the inevitable "Go."
- (2) Oligarchal control. The constitution of the older societies was for the most part democratic. Each house had a separate life and partial independence of its own. It elected its own superior and officers for a short term, discussed its business, and its members confessed their faults in open chapter. Unlike this method in every respect, the Jesuit polity is almost a pure despotism. While the general is, indeed, elected by the society, it is for life and his powers are absolute. Here we have a papacy within the Papacy.
- (3) Mobility. A distinguishing peculiarity of the earlier communities, dating from the origin of the Benedictine rule, is their hostility to local change. The vow of stability was soon added to the three customary pledges of poverty, chastity, and obedience. It forbade not only moving from one community to another, but even facility of transfer from one house to another of the very same order. But mobility and cosmopolitanism are the very essence of the Jesuit program. It is significant that Loyola first selected the term "company" rather than "order" to describe his new institution. To Plus III, he explained that whereas the ancient communities, were, so to speak, the infantry of the church, whose duty was to stand firmly in one place on the battle field, the Jesuits, contrariwise, were to be the "light horse" capable of going anywhere at a moment's notice. When we consider the perils that beset the Pope from all sides, we do not wonder that he granted the charter in the face of much opposition.

(4) Stuttification. The object of the older monastic societies was the sanctification and improvement of their individual members. Their obedience to a superior and the observance of some kind of fixed rules had no further intention than the improvement of the spiritual character of each person who entered the community. But the founder of Jesuitism started at once with a totally different purpose. To him, from the first, the society was everything and the individual nothing, except so far as he might further the society's objects. Loyola is reputed to have said to his secretary, Polanco, that "in those who offered themselves he looked less to purely natural goodness than to firmness of character and ability for business. for he was of the opinion that those who were not fit for public business were not adapted to filling offices in the society." He even went further than this and laid down the principle that even exceptional qualities and endowments in a candidate were valuable in his eyes only on the condition of their being brought into play or held in abeyance strictly at the command of a superior. On this principle he raised obedience to a position it had never held before, even among monastic virtues. His letters on this subject addressed to the Jesuits of Coimbra in 1553 is still one of the standard formulas of the society, ranking with two other products of his pen, the "Spiritual Exercises" and the "Constitutions." In the old orders the superior is head of a local family and endued with paternal authority. But Loyola, true to his military training and instincts, clothes the general with absolute powers in disposing of the members of the society in every place and for every purpose. There must be the complete identification of the inferior's will with that of the superior. The "sacrifice of the intellect" has become a familiar Jesuit watchword. In the "Spiritual Exercises" we find this statement: "I ought to be like a corpse, which has neither will nor understanding, or like a small crucifix, which is turned about at the will of him that holds it, or like a staff in the hands of an old man, who uses it as may best assist or please him." The master stroke of Loyola's policy was to insure the permanence of this submission by barring access to all independent positions on the part of members of the society, through means of a special constitution that no Jesuit can accept an office, save with permission of the general, not to be accorded until and unless the Pope has commanded under pain of sin.

To this principle of "blind obedience" we may trace nearly all the evils for which Jesuitism is sponsor. It is this faith that has caused them, though calling themselves by the name of Christ, to be instigators of crime, and have to be banished from almost every country. It is small wonder that casuistry is the art in which they most excelled. The doctrines of probabilism, mental reservation, and "the end justifies the means" are the logical consequences of the practice and enforcement of Loyola's ideal. It is against these doctrines that Pascal inveighs so heavily in those cunningly devised letters wherein the sophistry of Jesuits is brought within the comprehension of all through the quaintness of dialogue and the pleasantries of comedy.

I have already referred to the high place which the Catholic Encyclopedia gives to Loyola. This is not surprising when we reflect upon the services rendered the Roman Catholic Church by the order which he founded. The Jesuits were the one great agency in the Counter-Reformation. But other historians give quite a different estimate upon his character and attainments. Thomas Mc-Crie, of Edinburgh, who wrote the Introduction to the Pascal Letters, says: "It may appear surprising that an order so powerful and politic should have owed its origin to such a person as Ignatius Loyola, and that a wound in a man's leg should have issued in his becoming the founder of a society which has embroiled the world and the church." This critic forgets the familiar saying that great issues often hinge upon apparently trifling events. He furthermore avers that Lovola is not entitled to the honor of organizing the constitution of the famous society; that it belongs to Lainez and Aquavia, "men as superior to the founder in talents as he excelled them in enthusiasm." But here the critic fails to take into account Loyola's superb military attainments. Upon the same ground one might contend that Washington was not a genius because he did not write the Constitution. It can hardly be said that a man who knew how to combine the finesse of the court with the discipline of the camp and with the sanctity of a religious community did not possess the power of organization to a considerable extent.

In his "Candid History of the Jesuits." Joseph McCabe, who is neither Catholic nor Protestant, dwells with particular emphasis upon Loyola's winning personality. He believes that wherever diplomacy or secretive measures were needed to carry out the Jesuit program, Loyola was never found wanting. McCabe's best summary is found, perhaps, in a long but well-rounded sentence: "To understand his real life during those fifteen years of twenty-hour workdays, you have to study the adventures of his colleagues far away: to mark how the hostility of bishops and doctors and princes is disarmed by a papal privilege or a papal recommendation; how the Protestant plague cannot break out anywhere but a Jesuit appears; how the most nicely fitted man is sent for each special mission; how that man disappears when there is, rightly or wrongly, a cry of scandal; how the long white arms of Inatius Loyola are seen to stretch over the planet from Sta Maria della Strada, near the Pope's palace." With this description of the vast and obscure activities of its founder and first general the later program of the Jesuit party is in perfect harmony. McCabe's tribute is more colorful than complimentary.

A careful study of Loyola's achievements leads me to the conclusion that he, like many others, wasted his splendld energy in the wrong direction. Some people build wiser than they know; but of this man we might truly say, "He built worse than he knew." Could he have foreseen the long line of miserable hypecrites and perverted morals that followed in the wake of Jesuitism through the ages, no doubt he would have been paralyzed with fear. Jesuitism is, indeed, the soul of popery, and his was "a naked sword, the hilt of which is at Rome." For that reason the Romanist must always be his chief defender.

Loyola died at Rome, July 31, 1556. He was buried with appropriate honors. The same might be said of Jeroboam, who "sinned and made Israel to sin."

A Prayer.

Lord, from the sins which those around me can see Cleanse me to-day.
But for the sins known only unto thee
More grace I pray.
Forgive the deeds in which I bore a part.
To others known;
Forgive still nore the sin known to my heart
And thee alone.

Book Notices.

If you are in need of a good abridged Bible dictionary, send us $2 for a copy of Smith's Peloubet Edition. This is one of the best dictionaries of the Bible that I have examined.

"The Model Church," by G. C. Brewer, treats of live subjects, and is a book that should be distributed among the churches. This book has been almost universally commended and is being read with interest by many people, Price, $1.

Have you read "Sunshine, or Uncle Minor's Stories?" This is a very attractive book for children as well as for old people. Children read it with much interest. It is profusely illustrated, and contains many interesting incidents and stories. Price, $1.50.

A good book for young people to read is the "Life of Mrs. Charlotte Fanning." Mrs. Fanning was noted for her piety, zeal, and good sense, Hers was a life remarkable for the good accomplished. She always exerted an ennobling, refining, and uplifting influence. This book is ably edited by Mrs. Emma Page Larimore. Price, $1.

Send us $1.25 for a copy of "Sweeney's Sermons." This is a book of sermons by John S. Sweeney—one of the best books of sermons published. Sweeney carries conviction with the statement of his position. He is noted for brevity, clearness, and force of statement. Every young preacher should have a copy of this book of sermons.

Have you seen a copy of "Adventism and the Bible?" This is one of the very best books for you to buy at the present time. Adventism is a live subject. Adventists are active and are propagating their doctrines. If you want to be thoroughly prepared to meet them and to expose the errors of Adventism, you should send us at once $1.25 for a copy of "Adventism and the Bible."

Send us fifteen cents for a copy of "What Was Nailed to the Cross?" It is a live tract, and is made up of some stirring thoughts of F. W. Smith. Adventists were active in North Nashville, and Brother Smith delivered a few sermons on the subject. The tract embodies the substance of these sermons. Buy a dozen copies and distribute them among the people. Price, $1.50 per dozen.

We have on hand a few copies of "Biographies and Sermons," edited by F. D. Srygley. This is a book of sermons by a number of our best-known preachers. It is well worth a careful perusal. A brief history of the life of each preacher accompanies his sermon. A picture of the preacher also is given with each sketch. Price, $1.50. It you want this book, you should order at once, as we have just a few copies that have been left over through mistake.

The Baptist Flag's Objections.

BY F. W. SMITH.

Under the subject, "The Two Main Branches," the writer pointed out the very vigorous way in which the Baptist brethren were pulling each other's wool over certain matters about which they differed. Brother T. F. Moore, editor of the Flag, and a man for whom'l have a very high regard, protests against the points the Gospel Advocate made as follows:

Our friend and brother, F. W. Smith, in the Gospel Advocate of March 25, discusses an issue that does not exist in the South among Baptists. The issue being discussed, Brother Smith, is not whether Roger Williams founded the first Baptist church in America, but is whether or not Southern Baptists will erect a monument in a memorial church to Roger Williams and religious liberty or not. All Southern Baptists are agreed that Roger Williams did not found either the first or the last Baptist church in America. In fact, we all believe that Roger Williams never was a Baptist a minute in all his life.

Now suppose you try your hand, Brother Smith, and see if you can find one prominent informed Baptist in the South that believes Roger Williams was ever a Baptist.

You ought to be more careful when you lambaste Baptists for a thing they are not guilty of. Neither do Baptists have to use a series of paid-for articles in a magazine as their history, when their enemies give them a place in history from the days of the Son of man until the present.

That's a small task, Brother Smith, and Matt. 3: 1, tells us of the first Baptist preacher in the New Testament dispensation.

It will be observed that Brother Moore lays a burden upon me-viz.: "Find one prominent informed Baptist in the South that believes Roger Williams was ever a Baptist." If all my burdens were as light as this one, I would never become stoop-shouldered nor have the backache. Why, I can hardly realize that it exists at all; and if Brother Moore had not said it was on me, I would be wholly unconscious of its existence. But before proceeding to unload this heavy (?) burden back upon the editor, let me ask, why this distinction between Southern Baptists and Northern Baptists? Has it not been the boast of the Baptist brethren that their churches are a unit on church history? Do not they claim an unbroken line reaching to Pentecost? Now, candidly, Brother Moore, if you cut loose from the Northern Baptists, as you seem to have done, how are you going to get across the ocean with your chain of apostolic succession, seeing you must go by the way of the Northern Baptists, who hold that Roger Williams was not only a Baptist, but that he founded the first Baptist church in America? My brother, the road is rough and rocky, and I advise you to be well shed before you begin your journey. The Southern Baptists' religious ancestors came from the North, and your chain must take them in.

But to my task, "By 1639 Williams had become convinced that infant baptism was unwarranted by Scripture, and a perversion of a Christian ordinance, and with eleven others introduced believers' baptism, and formed at Providence the first American Baptist Church." (A. H. Newman, in "The Popular and Critical Encyclopedia," page 233.) Now this man was Professor of Church History in Baylor University. Waco, Texas. He is certainly a Southern Baptist, but as to size I can only conjecture from two things—viz., the position he held and as a historian in the Encyclopedia. The "Rev." before his name and the "D.D., LL.D." after his name spell nothing, for I have known many very small men wearing these appendages. Again, Newman says: "The first in America to advocate Baptist principles, so far as we are informed, was Roger Williams." (Page 232, same Encyclopedia.)

Since Professor Newman says that Roger Williams introduced believers' baptism, it will be of interest to know how he did it. Hence, we have this from Thomas Armitage: "He established the city of Providence, and, in the spring of 1639, Ezekiel Holliman, who had been a member of his [Williams'] church in Salem, immersed him. Williams had been ordained first as an Episcopal and then as a Congregationalist minister, and after this [his immersion) he immersed Holliman and ten others. These twelve formed the first Baptist church in America, where their churches now have over 3,000,000 communicants," (Thomas Armitage, "Encyclopedia of Religious Knowledge," page 82.) Armitage is the greatest Baptist church historian that ever lived, and, according to this great man and Professor Newman, snap goes Brother Moore's chain of apostolic succession! Armitage further says: "When Williams withdrew from the Baptists, he was classed with these [seekers]; his theory of the apostolate seems to have been the cause of his withdrawal, and his doubt concerning the validity of his baptism. A few years later, in his Bloody Tenet' and his 'Hireling Ministry,' he denied that a ministry existed which was capable of administering the ordinances; for in the rule of antichrist the true ministry was lost, and he waited for its restoration, much after John Smyth's view, in a new order of succession. Of course he looked upon his baptism as defective, and withdrew from the Baptists." ("History of Baptists," page 660.) Unless some of the leading Baptists in the South regard the above as facts, then why are they so insistent in appropriating a part of the seventy-five million dollars raised by Southern Baptists to the erection of a monument to Roger Williams?

I am indebted to Brother Moore himself for the information given on this phase of the subject. The following was taken from his own.paper, written by Southern Baptists: "Roger Williams founded the first Baptist church on this continent." "No: Roger Williams was not the founder of the first Baptist church in America." Take your witnesses, Brother Moore; but you would better drop that chain, for it can never get you to Jerusalem, much less to John the Baptist.

He says: "Matt. 2: 1 tells us of the first Baptist preacher in the New Testament dispensation." Wrong again, Matthew says, "And in those days cometh John the Baptist," which is quite different from a or the Baptist preacher. The New Testament knows of no such preachers, and neither does the history of the world before the sixteenth century. Your Brother Armitage very correctly says the term "Baptist" was John's official title derived from the fact that he baptized people. On scriptural grounds no one is entitled to be called a Baptist who does not baptize people.

Brother Moore will have a time in divorcing the effort to erect a monument to the memory of Roger Williams from the claim that he founded the first Baptist church in America. The Baptists would hardly build such a monument without the feeling and sentiment of honoring one of their number. Think of it! Brother Moore's baptism is "alien"—he got it from Ezekiel Holliman, who baptized Williams.

The social nature of man makes it needful that, if the redemptive work of Christ is to be made effective for all, it must be done by the creation of a Christian society enveloping the individual like the air he breathes, and leaving no part of him untouched by this atmosphere.—Figgis.

If God's favors were measured by our appreciation, some of us would get about twenty minutes of blessing per annum.—Exchange.

"Preachers and Preaching." No. 1.

BY AN OBSERVER.

Editors of the Gospel Advocate, Nashville, Tenn.

My Dear Brethren: Will you please allow me to express my honest judgment in regard to some things which have appeared lately in your worthy paper on "the scarcity of preachers," "the dearth of preachers," "preachers and preaching," the remedy, etc.?

Some of these articles, so far as I am able to judge, give the teaching of the Scriptures in the main on these subjects; but others are foggy, show a lack of study, and even favor the order of the clergy, and appear smart and captious.

First, however, I wish to say that, while I am not in my dotage, I have been a constant reader of the Gospel Advocate for forty years. But little that has appeared in it during this time from David Lipscomb, E. G. Sewell, Willlam Lipscomb, J. M. Barnes, J. A. Harding, F. D. Srygley, and later writers has escaped my notice. I read with interest the controversy over "laying on of hands" between Jesse Sewell and James E. Scobey and the discussion of Christians' relationship to civil government by Lipscomb and Rowe. When a boy I heard Tolbert Fanning a few times, and I read to some limited extent his "Religious Historian." He said some things in regard to "preachers and preaching," too, which I shall never forget. One is, "a preacher is one who preaches," as a blacksmith is one who works at that trade. Another is, "a man who must be hired to preach can be hired to quit preaching." have seen these things quoted in the Gospel Advocate before. Nothing can be truer. Does this not solve the problem of the "dearth?" I have heard men preach who were associated with Mr. Fanning; also men whom he educated, and men who have lived since his time. Besides, I have read much that wise and faithful men, whom I have not seen, have written. I mean, I have heard and have read what these men have said about preachers, their motives for preaching, the purposes they would accomplish, and their support. The controversy over missionary societies and the righteous contention for the all-sufficiency of the church to preach the gospel and as a benevolent institution for every purpose were rife when I was younger. I have read some things Alexander Campbell wrote against "the clergy" and that idea. I have even read "The Third Epistle of Peter, . . . A Looking-Glass for the Clergy," which book I heartily recommend to all young preachers and to some older ones. Above all, I have read no little the New Testament. If I do not know some things about the right motive, proper spirit, good and grand work, and crown of righteousness of the faithful and self-sacrificing preacher of Christ crucified, it is simply my fault; it is because I have been a very dull pupil, or because my heart "is not yet right" in God's sight. I know, too, that, while the New Testament places before all the right motive, proper spirit, good work, and final reward of the true preacher of the gospel of Christ, it declares that some turn godliness into a way of gain, make merchandise of the churches, peddle their religious wares, pervert the gospel, handle the word of God deceitfully, and preach the truth of envy and strife. All this can be learned by reading 1 Tim, 6: 3-10; 2 Pet, 2: 3; 1 Thess, 2: 5 ["a cloak of covetousness"]: 2 Cor. 2: 17 ["corrupting the word of God," in the margin "making merchandise of the word of God "]; Gal. 1: 7; 2 Cor. 4: 2; 2 Pet. 3: 16; Phil. 1: 15-17, I know also that Paul says some cause divisions and occasions of stumbling, contrary to the teaching of Christ, and by their smooth and fair speech beguile the hearts of the innocent; but in doing this they "serve not our Lord Christ, but their own belly." (Rom. 16: 17, 18.) I have always supposed that these are very suave, polite, noncommittal gentlemen of a genteel air, such as "creep into houses, and take captive silly women laden with sins, led away by divers lusts, ever learning, and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth." (2 Tim. 3: 1-7.) Anyway, I know what the New Testament says about them, and that it farther speaks of some "whose end is perdition, whose god is the belly, and whose glory is in their shame, who mind earthly things." (Phil. 3: 19.) And I know that God did not put all these things in the New Testament for nothing, and that human nature and human weaknesses are the same now.

Alexander Campbell, Moses E. Lard, J. W. McGarvey, I. B. Grubbs, Robert Graham, Robert Milligan, Tolbert Fanning, David Lipscomb, the Sewells, J. A. Harding, and their colaborers taught clearly and scripturally against all religious titles, the modern pastor system, "the kingdom of the clergy," and made the church of the New Testament with its God-appointed elders and their work as faithful shepherds [pastors] of the flock stand out bright and beautiful in all its grand and harmonious proportions. I asked some people not long since—intelligent people of some age in the church—where in the New Testament Jesus condemns all titles in religion, and not one could tell. Try Matt. 23. Paul declares that he and his fellow workers were "bond servants" for Jesus' sake. (2 Cor. 4: 5.)

I am made to wonder if some preachers are determined to try to fasten again upon the church this man-made and man-honoring system. Or, are the preachers who are thus inclined ignorant of the teaching and spirit of the New Testament on these things? Are they following the guidance of the Holy Spirit or the promptings of weak human nature and the spirit of the world? Have they, as did Paul, "anxiety for all the churches" (2 Cor. 11: 28)-seeking the peace and unity, spiritual welfare and development, and greatest good of all the churches, being deeply grieved over the faults and fatlures and worldliness of the churches; or do they seek their own comfort, ease, and aggrandizement from the churches? Do they seek the flock or the fleece? Paul said to the Corinthians, "I seek not yours, but you" (2 Cor. 12: 14), and that he sought not his own profit, but the good of the many. (1 Cor. 10: 33.) And I am made to wonder again, if many young preachers and not a few old ones do really believe the Bible and do really seek the Spirit of Christ, or do they believe it only in spots? Do they study it really to learn God's will or to build up a theory and to entrench themselves in it? All that God teaches in regard to preacherswhat they must preach, what they must not preach, their motive for preaching, their spirit, their lives of pure example, their love for the truth, their "anxiety for all the churches," their support, the importance of their following Paul and the other apostles and Jesus in this as well as in all other things-is all true and must all be respected and obeyed in all reverence as the will of God.

All should be profoundly impressed with everything that God says on any subject. Why cannot these writers put together all that God teaches on these subjects under consideration and in this way learn all the truth on them?

I should like to ask if God in his wisdom and love did not leave all this just as he wished to? Does what he teaches need supplementing by man's wisdom?

The Bible says nothing about "farmer preachers," "merchant preachers," "school-teacher preachers," "Pauline type of preachers," etc. Then, are not some modern preachers making distinctions where God has made none? The Corinthians were dividing over preachers—"the Pauline type," the Apollos type, the Cephas type—when Paul shamed them out of this foolishness and sin. He asks: "What"—not even who—"is Apollos? and what is Paul?" His answer is: "Ministers [not of the cierical sort, but servants working together in a field in order to raise a crop] through whom ye believed; and each as the Lord gave to him. I planted, Apollos watered; but God gave the increase." They were "fellow workers" and the Corinthians were God's "tilled land" [margin], which they cultivated, and "God's building," which they as workmen put up. (1 Cor. 3; 4-9.)

I am going to grant that in the spirit and teaching of the New Testament, if school-teachers, merchants, farmers, carpenters, or any others, run out somewhere on Sundays and preach for near-by congregations for the few dimes they may pick up, they will prove a great detriment to these congregations and the devil will get them all-unless they repent, of course. If these congregations seek such preaching because it is cheap, they will die and go to the devil, too. There is nothing like this, either in spirit or work, in the Bible. On the other hand, if school-teachers, merchants, mechanics, farmers, physicians, etc., can preach the gospel, all for Christ's sake, but refuse to do it, the devil will get them again. The point I am making is that God has made no such distinctions as some brethren are trying to draw, and it is a little and shameful thing to appear even to attempt to stop any one from preaching all he can and where and when he can so long as he preaches the truth in the love of it and in the fear of God. It cannot, however, be too well understood that the merchant, the farmer, the mechanic, or the school-teacher, can no more make a profession of preaching a little on Sunday in order to increase his finances somewhat than can the professed clergyman, "pastor," "minister," or "evangelist." The principle itself-the thing itself-is wrong. It is not wrong because found in and practiced by a merchant, school-teacher, farmer, mechanic, etc., but wrong per se. Sin is sin, wrong is wrong, and making merchandise of the gospel is condemned by the Lord by whomseever practiced. On the other hand, but for the farmers, the schoolteachers, the merchants, the mechanics-godly men who leved the truth and who fifty or seventy-five years ago went everywhere preaching it-there would be no churches now for the modern "ministers," "pastors," "the clergy," to take charge of and to be supported by. For example, take J. D. Floyd, of Flat Creek, Tenn. He was a farmer, but he was instrumental in building and developing twenty-five or thirty congregations; besides, he helped the poor, visited the sick, comforted the bereaved, assisted in burying the dead, kept himself unspotted from the world. and wrote an excellent book of sermons. Now, would these brethren who are writing so flippantly about "farmer preachers" have stopped him from preaching because he was a farmer, or would they have stopped him from farming because he was a preacher? Some of these brethren cannot equal J. D. Floyd in anything. They cannot farm so well as he did; they cannot preach or write or work in the church so well as he did. They have not built half so many congregations as he did. But they can and do complain more than he did, for he never complained. Jesse Sewell farmed and preached. He planted and built up congregations throughout the country, giving himself, too, wholly to his "ministry." During the first fourteen years he preached he received one pair of socks and one dollar. Should he have quit farming, or should he have quit preaching-which? I repeat, had it not been for such men as Jesse Sewell, J. D. Floyd, David Lipscomb, and hundreds of others of the same spirit and "type," there would be now no churches in the land.

To be a "Pauline type" of preacher, one does not have to remain unmarried and homeless. I cannot think that these things constitute a Paul-like preacher. To study Paul's work and life is to learn the kind of preacher he was. Nothing could stop him from preaching—lack of support, imprisonment, freedom, abundance, death—nothing. He and the other apostles preached the same thing, in the same spirit, for the same purpose; the difference was, he "labored more abundantly than they all;" yet not he, "but the grace of God," which was with him. But it made no difference with the people which one of the apostles preached the gospel, so they heard it and believed it. (1 Cor. 15: 10, 11.) Waiving his right to marry and to have a permanent home for Christ's sake is noble in any man; but that cannot be the essential thing in making him a Paul-like preacher. The man with a wife and home, who in self-sacrifice leaves them much of the time for the sake of preaching the gospel and in order to save souls and honor God, is most certainly a Paul-like preacher. The man who will not allow his home, his farm, or any business to stand between him and his work as a preacher at any time is a Paul-like preacher. The man who feels that woe is unto him if he does not preach the gospel, who accepts gratefully the fellowship of the churches (see Phil. 1: 3-7; especially 4: 10-20) in this greatest of all work (see, too, 2 Cor. 11: 6-11), but who will not stop for lack of support, because of persecution, at prison doors, or the block, is of "the Pauline type." The soldier some of these brethren write about, who retreats, and surrenders even, at the first touch of hunger and thirst, the first pinch of privations and hardships, or the first sight of the enemy, is not worthy of the pay he draws from his government, is not a patriot; but, on the other hand, he is a coward and deserter. So the preacher who is scared back by the high cost of living, who will not "endure hardness as a good soldier," who seeks his own profit and not the good of men, cannot be "a soldier of the cross" (he will bear no cross), and is likewise a coward and deserter. I am not arguing that the soldier should not have his pay, the laborer should not have his hire, the ox should not have his feed, and that the preacher's support should not be measured by the high cost of living, etc., for it should; but I am saying that no true preacher will quit for lack of support. The elder who labors "in the word and in teaching" (1 Tim. 5: 17, 18) and the preacher who really preaches the gospel should be generously supported, according to God's will; but when churches fail in this duty, must be quit? Must he suffer souls to be lost and his Lord's kingdom to be devastated by the enemy because others fail? He should teach churches their duty; should rally them as good soldiers, too, to the cross; should set the good example and lead the way, as Paul and Timothy and Titus did; but he cannot, he will not, quit, or surrender, or desert. A preacher cannot quit preaching any more than he can guit living the Christian life or serving the Lord; his preaching is a part of his service to God, or of his Christianity. As clear as light the Bible teaches that whatever Christians have ability to do in the church—that is, in God's service-they are bound to do. If they can accomplish more by teaching the word of God and preaching the gospel, they are called of God to that work, and there can be no going back. They are not preaching for a support any more than they are Christians for a support. The preachers who quit for lack of support should never have begun, because they are not qualified in heart and life to preach Christ, and him crucified. There is no crucifixion in their make-up. The church and the world are better off without their service as preachers-as "pastors," "ministers," "evangelists" in the clerical and titular sense.

But I would have no Christians to forget the reciprocal duty all churches are under to have "fellowship in furtherance of the gospel from the first day" of their existence as churches until the whole "earth shall be full of the knowledge of Jehovah, as the waters cover the sea." (Isa. 11: 9; read verses 1-10, and see what can be seen.) Paul puts the duty of churches thus: "If [since] we sowed unto you spiritual things, is it a great matter if we shall reap your carnal things?" (1 Cor. 9: 11.) Churches do no great thing in supporting well the faithful preachers who proclaim the gospel, when carnal things are compared to spiritual things. On this ground Paul declares that the Gentiles are debtors to the Jews (Rom. 15: 26, 27), and those who reap to those who sow. "Let him that is taught in the word communicate unto him that teacheth in all [not only in some] good things." (Gal. 6: 6.)

We cannot fail to get the teaching of the Bible and the Spirit of Christ, if we hunger and thirst after them.

An Explanation.

BY J. C. M'Q.

I wish to state to our readers that through a misunderstanding the following article from Brother D. Austen Sommer was printed in very small type last week. I am anxious for our readers to see exactly what Brother Sommer says, and wish them to read it under favorable circumstances. As I do not intend to do any one an injustice, I am cheerfully inserting this article for the second time. The article serves the purpose of showing how weak is a strong man when opposing the scriptural position that it is the duty of Christians to teach the word of God everywhere. Christians should teach the word of God in their daily callings. The shoemaker, the garment maker, the merchant, the farmer, the lawyer, the physician who practices the religion of Christ will not fail to teach the Bible in his daily work. Every Christian school-teacher is under obligation to teach the word of God. Alexander Campbell well says: "How happy is the man who has a sister wife and Christian servants: who walks in the shoes which a Christian made or who rides on a horse which a Christian shod; whose body is covered with the cloth which a Christian wove and the garments which a Christian made! If a Christian plow his field, he feels himself happy in the assurance that it will all be done as if it were done for Jesus Christ. I will not say that he is happy who has these things done by men professing Christianity, but by men practicing it."

BROTHER McQUIDDY'S DUST AND ARGUMENT.

Several weeks ago we printed an article on the subject, "The Principles and Spirit of the New Digressives," in which we reviewed some of the arguments and acts of J. C. McQuiddy, managing editor of the Gospel Advocate, and also owner of the McQuiddy Printing Company, which publishes the quarterlies, books, etc., circulated among his brethren in the South, and which also prints the Advocate. We reprint his reply from the Advocate, putting some discussed points in boid-face type.

[Here Brother Sommer printed my reply, entitled, "Should Have Published the Article," which is omitted at this time. J. C. McQ.]

From the heading of Brother McQuiddy's article, it seems that he thinks that we did him a great injustice in not printing his whole article, and yet he criticizes my article and prints no more of it in proportion than I did of his! He should have set us a beautiful example of how one critic should publish the article of another critic; but alas! we are disappointed. I have an old book here which says something about a man pulling the beam out of his own eye before he tries to pull a mote from his brother's eye.

eye before he tries to pull a mote from his brother's eye.

He says, "Had he published all that article, I would have been satisfied to leave it with his readers without another word," and, "He elects to answer a perversion" of his article. Brother McQuiddy talks also about how we "garbled" his writings, and heads his criticism, "Should Have Published the Article." From these remarks, one would suppose that he considered that we put a wrong construction altogether on his words, and would think he would have spent his time in showing how we had garbled his language and perverted his words; but, behold, he spends nearly all his time in answering my arguments' it seems, thus, that all his talk about "garbled" extract, "perversion," etc., is merely dust thrown into the air to prejudice his readers against my fairness."

tract, "perversion," etc., is merely dust thrown into the air to prejudice his readers against my fairness.

The word "garble" means "to pick out such parts of as may serve a (usually unfair) purpose; mutilate misleadingly; pervert." Now, I deny that any such meaning can be applied to my use of Brother McQuiddy's words. Let the reader peruse closely what I copied from his article and the language which he tried to show I "perverted" and "garbled," and see if we have done injustice to his language. We gave in one concise statement of his article his whole argument. This is often done. The Literary Digest every week gives the opinions of different papers on current political news in a few sentences, or one sentence, and often in merely a few words of a sentence, and I have never heard any criticism of that practice. Brother McQuiddy's whole argument in favor of the "Bible colleges," which he gave in the article we criticized, is contained in his statement which we quote; "As the apostles were Jews and were trained in the synagogues, it is but natural and reasonable to suppose that Christ in the commission gave them authority to organize Bible schools everywhere as the very basis or foundation of the church." This is not a garbling nor perversion of his language, but a digest of it in his own words.

Brother McQuiddy says; "I am surprised that Brother Sommer did not know"—that "infant church membership is not ordained of Christ." If Brother McQuiddy will rub his glasses and read my words again, he will find that I did not say that infant church membership was "ordained of Christ." I said that "it was ordained of God" "among the Jews," the connection showing that I was talking of the Jews with their schools, etc. Thus he spends two paragraphs trying to disprove something I never said! Stephen speaks of the "church in the wilderness" (Acts 7: 38), and this church was composed of Jews; therefore was the Jewish church in the wilderness, the word "church" being used in the sense of "congregation." In Brother McQuiddy's reference above from Schaff, that historian speaks of "the Jewish church," and it is in that sense that I used it. If Brother McQuiddy had used more care and less passion in his criticism, he would not have made this blunder.

But let us notice the argument for the "Bible colleges." McQuiddy said, as I quoted: "As the apostles were Jews and were trained in the synagogue schools, it is but natural and reasonable to suppose that Christ in the commission gave them authority to organize Bible schools everywhere as the very basis or foundation of the church." My argument was that the same reasoning could be used in favor of infant baptism and instrumental music-practices which our brother opposes. But he thinks it strange that we mention infant church membership and instrumental music as parallels with teaching when teaching has been brought over from the Old Testament. But, reader, if you note closely the argument which I made, I did not compare infant church membership and instrumental music with mere teaching, but with teaching in organized "Bible schools," Suppose teaching has been brought over from the Old Testament—that has nothing to do with the dis-cussion. We are talking about the "schools" connected with the synagogue being authority for colleges, such as the David Lipscomb College, connected with the church, McQuiddy says: "As the apostles were Jews and were trained in the synagogue schools [not mere teaching], it is but natural and reasonable to suppose that Christ in the commission gave them authority to organize Bible schools [not merely to teach the Bible] everywhere as the very basis or foundation of the church." Brother McQuiddy must not simply show that teaching has been brought over from the Old Testament, but that teaching in schools—organized "Bible schools"—has been brought over. The only way he does that is by saying, "it would be naturally strange" if they didn't bring it over; the apostles "naturally understood him [Christ] to command them to organize Bible schools: and, "It is but natural and reasonable to suppose that Christ in the commission gave them authority to organize Bible schools"—all of which reminds me of Cardinal Gibbons' argument for infant baptism in his book, "The Faith of Our Fathers;" "Although it is not expressly stated that there were infants in the household of Lydia, the presumption is strongly in favor of the supposition that there were!" Although Brother McQuiddy calls to his aid Trumbull, Schaff, and Fisher, relying on them more than on the word of God, the strongest point which he can make in favor of his human organization of a "Bible college" to do work of the church is that of a supposition that Christ indorsed such schools. [Cardinal Gibbons: "I give you the right hand of fellowship, Brother McQuiddy; for we are both standing on traditions, presumptions, and suppositions!"T

So I believe that my argument has held the test, that if we can have organized "Bible schools" under the new covenant for the reason that they had such schools connected with the Jewish synagogue, we can also have infant church membership and instrumental music in worship under the new covenant for the reason that they had such under the old law. It is just as "natural and reasonable to suppose" that God permits one to be brought over as the other. The remark of our brother that "the commission forbids infant membership in the church of Christ" is nullified by the command of Paul to glorify God "in the church" (Eph. 3: 21), which forbids our doing it in organized "Bible schools" or any other human organizations. But of this we shall speak fully in the next paragraph.

Our erroneous brother says finally: "Does my critic deny the scriptural authority to teach the Bible in a school, in a saloon, in a Bible school, in classes, or anywhere else? If so, he should cite the scripture that denies the right." I now accept our brother's challenge and proceed to give the scripture. The inspired Paul says "by the church" the move accept our broader. The inspired Paul says "by the church" the manifold wisdom of God is to be made known, and that we should give glory unto God "in the church." (Eph. 3: 10, 21.) Now, what is the church? Let the New Testament decide. It consists of the local congregation, working as a congregation, and the individual Christian, working in the church? ing as a mere Christian. It includes also the Christian family, for a man and his wife are said to be "one" they have a common treasury; and what one gives out of the common treasury for the Lord, the other gives, when they do this by common consent. The individual Christhey do this by common consent. The individual Christian, the Christian family, and the local church can do aid work, missionary work, etc., and it is the church that is doing it. Paul commanded the brethren to give glory to God "in the church," and they did it this way, and we God "in the church," and they did it this way, and we have no evidence that they did it in any other way. Any human organization, with its president, secretary, treasurer, laws, established by Christians to teach the Bible, help the poor or sick, or do any other work of the church, is unscriptural, unnecessary, and dangerous! The David Lipscomb College and the other "Bible" and "Christian colleges are human organizations established to do work of the church for which Christ died, and thus they are unscriptural!

The fallacy in the reasoning of the "Bible-college" advocates lies in the statement that it is scriptural "to teach the Bible in a school, in a saloon, in a Bible school, in classes, or anywhere else." When a man teaches in a saloon, etc., it is he alone that it is doing the teaching, if indeed, he is working merely as a Christian; but when he teaches in the David Lipscomb College or any other of these "Bible schools," he does so as a part of a human organization. When a man works for a railroad company, he loses his identity so far as work is concerned and becomes part of the organization. If he runs his train over a man, the friends sue, not the man, but the company, When soldiers under the jurisdiction of the government commit depredations, the government, not the soldier, pays for it, though the government will probably punish the soldier. An ambassador to a foreign country signs his name to papers; but it is not his name simply, but the name of the nation back of him. And when a man is chosen to teach the Bible in a "Bible college," is paid for it out of the funds of the college, and the study of it is made part of the curriculum, and the institution is called a "Bible" college or "Christian" college because it teaches the Bible, it is evident that it is not the individual Christian as an individual that is teaching the Bible, but the college that is teaching the Bible, All those brethren who talk about it speak of the teaching of the Bible done by the college. Even Brother Elam does that, the fellow editor of Brother McQuiddy on the Advocate. editor of Brother McQuiddy on the Advocate. So when you are thus teaching the Bible, you are not doing it "In the church" as Paul commands, but in the human organization of a "Bible college;"

But enough. Brother McQuiddy asked me to cite the scripture which denies him the right to teach the Bible "in a Bible school," and I have given it; now will be give it to his readers?

At another time I shall reprint that part of his article which was in reply to our charge that he indorsed the Deuver voting for elders and the selection of an old bachelor for the office, the former a heresy and the latter a rank digression from the command of Paul that an elder must have had experience in the married life.—D. Austen Sommer, in Apostolic Review.

Let's work harder, produce more, waste less, give more, and always in judging put ourselves in the other man's place.—Selected.

SAID IN PARAGRAPHS By JAMES A. ALLEN.

It has been said that self-conceit is a heavy load of nothing.

A headline says, "Japanese Emperor Dissolves the Diet." High prices are trying to dissolve it in this country.

A "want" advertisement in the Charleston Post says; "A baby fifteen months old wants two rooms with privilege of bringing its parents,"

Recently when Norway went "dry," the universal verdict was that "the women did it." We admit that the women can do a few things,

If husbands and wives would do half the courting that they did before the wedding, a lot of divorce lawyers would have to seek a better kind of employment.

When congregations send money to missionaries as they did in New Testament times, one hundred cents of a dollar gets there. When they send it through a human corporation, chartered as a "missionary society," only a few cents out of a dollar ever gets there.

There is no reason why evangelists in foreign fields should not preach the gospel and "get results." When a man sent there by the churches spends most of his time writing missionary articles for American papers, it would be cheaper to let him stay at home and write them,

A body of mill workers in Wheeling, W. Va., who were on the verge of going out on a strike recently, received and acted upon some splendid advice. They were told: "Take your troubles to the Lord; he's your Big Boss." Really, that is the only happy solution to the problem.

There is a vast difference between "pastoral visiting" and the work of the elders. In the one instance a well-groomed and tailored clerical dude stops his limousine in front of a man's house, gossips with his wife, and kisses his baby according to Hoyle; in the other, holy men of God go from house to house preaching and teaching that Jesus is the Christ.

The "Interchurch World Movement" is already topheavy. A description of its organization sounds like a political campaign. And up to January 1, 1920, twenty-six denominations had initiated financial campaigns for a total of more than six hundred million dollars. And, gentle reader, if you think that large a roll of yellow boys is for the poor, you have another guess coming.

One of the main causes of the schismatic speculation that is hindering the gospel to-day is that a few young "bloods" have become inflated with an idea that they were born to take up the work of Alexander Campbell and carry it on to a higher perfection. They are trying desperately to live up to the idea that they are great reformers; but as the church is not in the wilderness, it doesn't need any more Joshuas to lead it out.

I have just been looking over some tables giving the receipts of the "American Christian Missionary Society," "The Christian Womens' Board of Missions," "The Foreign Christian Missionary Society," "Board of Temperance and Social Welfare," "National Benevolent Association;" "Board of Church Extension," "Board of Ministerial Relief," etc. All these, and more, belong to our society brethren. For five months ending February 29, 1920, the amount collected was $719,058.04. For the same length of time in 1919 the collections were $545,219.78. Possibly the average person would be amazed to know what part of these immense sums contributed by the people go to pay big salaries attached to fat jobs. Any man who contributed a dollar of these amounts expecting the poor or some evangelist in a missionary field to get it was an E Z Mark, Finis Welker, of Fort Henry, Tenn., wishes to know if the Bible teaches that God now warns Christians through dreams.

Formerly, under the old dispensation, God did warn his people through visions and dreams. Under the Christian dispensation, dreams and visions are not encouraged. God does not propose to teach us the truth in that way. He has given us a revelation of his will as to our duty, and we are required to go to that for instruction, encouragement, and warning.

W. W. McCullough inquires to know if a man can pray without saying or uttering a word. He refers to Luke 11: 1, 2; Matt. 6: 6-9.

The scriptures referred to have reference to the disciples' formula of prayer, in which Christ taught the disciples how to pray. A man can certainly pray without uttering or speaking a word. For proof of this, see 1 Sam. 1: 12, 13. In prayer thoughts are formed into words; these words may be spoken aloud or they may not be spoken. I am sure that all who pray must do their thinking in words,

Brother David Jordan writes to know the meaning of 1 Cor. 15: 29. The passage reads: "Else what shall they do that are baptized for the dead? If the dead are not raised at all, why then are they baptized for them? why do we also stand in jeopardy every hour?"

The apostle Paul had under consideration the resurrection, and in this passage he gives a reason why one rises from the dead. If Christ be not risen and if the dead rise not, then why should any one be baptized for the dead? Why are we baptized in order to death, if the dead rise not? If there be no resurrection from the dead, what shall they do who are baptized in view of the resurrection from the dead? In view of their dying and of their resurrection from the dead they are baptized, and are baptized in order to their well-being after death. If the dead are not to be raised, why are they baptized to prepare them for the resurrection?

*Brother D. S. Black, of Wilmington Street, Hamilton, Ontario, Canada, wishes (1) an explanation of 1 Cor. 2: 14. (2) He also wishes to know the difference between the baptism of the Holy Spirit and the gift of the Holy Spirit.

I. The passage on which information is desired reads: "Now the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: for they are foolishness unto him; and he cannot know them, because they are spiritually judged." The thought is that the natural man cannot receive the things of God without the revelation which God has given of his will. With his natural faculties or reason he cannot understand what is in the mind of God. "Natural man," therefore, means the man who has never heard and obeyed the will of God. He cannot know it, save by hearing it as spoken by the apostles, to whom God revealed his will. The passage means very much the same as 1 Cor. 1: 21, which reads: "For seeing that in the wisdom of God the world through its wisdom knew not God, it was God's good pleasure through the foolishness of the preaching to save them that believe." The natural man, left to himself without the revelation which God gave through the apostles and the word, cannot know God or his word. He must learn the will of God by hearing the things revealed to the apostles, or his faith must come by hearing, and that hearing by the preaching of the word of God. The spiritual man is the man who knows and does the will of God. The Spirit of God, which knows the things of God, was transferred to the apostles and made known to them God's will, and the apostles spoke it to the people.

2. The baptism of the Holy Spirit enabled the recipient to speak with tongues, to heal the sick, to raise the dead, and to work miracles. The gift of the Holy Spirit spoken of in Acts 2: 38 may be the Spirit itself as a gift or the remission of sins. The gift of the Holy Spirit does not enable the recipient to work miracles.

L. M. Wells, of Fort Smith, Ark., asks (1) an explanation of Acts 16: 3; 1 Cor. 9: 20-22. He wishes to know if these scriptures mean that the apostle Paul would conform to the customs and laws of the country in order to remain in a particular locality to preach or teach. (2) He inquires also to know when the New Testament came into existence as a bound volume—that is, when the New Testament was bound as a whole, having all the books in one volume.

1. Acts 16: 3 reads: "Him would Paul have to go forth with him; and he took and circumcised him because of the Jews that were in those parts: for they all knew that his father was a Greek." 1 Cor. 9: 20-22 reads: "And to the Jews I became as a Jew, that I might gain Jews; to them that are under the law, as under the law, not being myself under the law, that I might gain them that are under the law; to them that are without law, as without law, not being without law to God, but under law to Christ, that I might gain them that are without law. To the weak I became weak, that I might gain the weak: I am become all things to all men, that I may by all means save some." These passages mean that the apostle Paul was ready to sacrifice incidentals and his own preferences, which had nothing to do with one's salvation. If by having Timothy eircumcised he could win the Jews to Christ, he dld not hesitate to do this, and so with reference to other practices which were not fundamental to one's salvation. When he could live as a Jew without violating the law of Christ, he was ready to do this in order to gain Jews. When he could submit to the law without disobedience to the law of God, he did not hesitate. In such matters he was ready to become "all things" to all men in order that he might win the more to Christ; but this does not mean that he was ready to give up any truth that was fundamental to one's salvation. He never compromised any fundamental truth or essential of salvation in order to win or please any man.

2. The New Testament was bound into one volume in the beginning of the sixteenth century, about the year 1534. John Wycliffe gave us the first complete English Bible in 1384. Wycliffe was compelled to stand trial for heresy, and his version was derided and flereely criticized, like previous translations. While the Bible he furnished was a manuscript, it was read loyally throughout the kingdom. A century and a half later William Tyndale, a scholar, theologian, and friend of Erasmus, and contemporary with Luther, gave us his famous English translation of the New Testament. At that time printing had been invented, so Tyndale printed the Bible. He printed, in the first edition, six thousand copies, which were smuggled into England. When the ecclesiastics and critics of that time found that they could not suppress Tyndale's open Bible, they strangled and burned him at the stake. So passed from the earth the heroic William Tyndale, father of the open Bible, to whom the world owes a debt it can never repay.

They are doing what they can, and they need and deserve aid."

From C. W. Holley, Childress, Texas: "The debate at Victory, Okla., between J. M. Rice, of the church of Christ, and a Mr. Mincy, Baptist, began on April 9 and closed on April 18. The main specific propositions were discussed. The crowds were overflowing. W. E. Morgan, minister at Childress, Texas, moderated for Brother Rice, and a right good job, too, he did of it. Brother Morgan is himself an experienced debater of no mean ability and a great general in handling a crowd. Our brethren were highly pleased with the work of Brother Rice, and to say that the opposition was crushingly defeated is putting it very mildly."

Reunion at Harper College.—The faculty of Harper College, Harper, Kan., is planning some good things for the approaching commencement, among which is a reunion of old students of Cordell Christian College and of Harper College. This reunion will take place on Wednesday, May 19. A program will be rendered both in the forenoon and the afternoon and a bountiful dinner will be served on the college grounds at the noon hour. All speakers for the day will be old students either of Cordell Christian College or of Harper College. Every old student, patron, or friend of either school is most urgently invited to attend this reunion and also to assist in notifying all students or friends of either school of the occasion. Remember the date, May 19.—David Thompson.

From W. S. Long, Washington, D. C., 110 Second Street, S. E., April 14: "Contributions received lately for the new house of worship in this city are as follows: Church at Lubbock, Texas, through John T. Smith, $65; church at Murfreesboro, Tenn., $25; G. F. Roberts, $25; Mrs. Earle H. West, $1; church at Shrewder, Okla., $10; J. Y. Me-Quibbs, $3; Mrs. A. L. Grubbs, $1; Mrs. G. McKeehan, $5. For these donations we are indeed grateful, and are pushing forward with renewed strength. At this writing we have on hand about $13,000, and, adding to this what we paid for the building site, the total is about $18,300. This is about half the amount needed to secure the house the brotherhood needs for the national capital. People are being turned away from the church house on Sunday morning because the house is too small. Let us not make a mistake, but build for the future. There are many brethren who are willing and anxious to help us in this great work; and if you are, send your check or money order at once. You may address E. L. Mills, treasurer, 2421 Pennsylvania Avenue, N. W., J. W. Gibson, 1618 Twenty-eighth Place, S. E.; or the writer."

The date on your tab shows the time to which your subscription is paid. When money is received, the date will be changed, which will answer for a receipt. Two weeks time must ordinarily occur from the time your remittance is sent before the tab on your paper is changed; if not changed by that time, notify us at once.

When changing your post-office address, tell us your old as well as your new address; otherwise two papers might be charged to you. Remittances will be at our risk when sent by express or post-office money order, in registered letter, or by draft payable to our order.

This paper is mailed regularly to all subscribers until definite orders in writing are received and all arrearges paid in full. If you wish us to stop your paper, write us to that effect; but do not ask it unless you have paid all arrears, if there are any. Do not ask your postmaster to attend to it for you, but do it yourself.

Subscribers, after paying for their papers, will favor us by noting whether the date on the address label is changed, and, if it is not changed within a month, by writing to us. We are careful, but mistakes may occur or letters may be lost. Our rule is to change the date on the day payment is received; but the mechanical work of correcting and printing the list takes time, and payments even from a distance may be even more delayed. Mistakes are saally rectified if prompt notice is given.

"The People Had a Mind to Work."

BY J. C. M'Q.

This language refers to the Jews who, under Nehemiah, rebuilt the walls of Jerusalem. When Sanballat heard that the Jews were rebuilding the wall, "he was wroth, and took great indignation, and mocked the Jews." And he scoffed, "and said, What are these feeble Jews doing? will they fortify themselves? will they sacrifice? will they make an end in a day? will they revive the stones out of the heaps of rubbish, seeing they are burned? Now Tobiah the Ammonite was by him, and he said, Even that which they are building, if a fox go up, he shall break down their stone wall." But in spite of the mocking the walls went steadily up, because "the people had a mind to work."

The people need the same mind to-day. We hear complaints on every hand about the high cost of living, and yet, despite this fact, it appears that we are having less production than ever before, because the people have a mind not to work. While some few people are ready to work, it appears that most of them are singing: "We are gwine to work no more." God ordained that man in the garden of Eden should work, and he ordained also after his fall that he should work. Work is a panacea for our evils, and not a curse. One of the greatest evils that can befall one is to be "born with a silver spoon in his mouth" and not to be required to work. We can never bring down the high cost of living, we can never reduce our worries and trials, until we devote our energies and talents to some useful work. God ordained it so, and it must be so. We need more work in the industrial world, we need it in the commercial world, and we need it in the church, Recently the Methodists set about raising a large fund, and a fund of $40,000,000 was soon raised, because they had a mind to work. The Baptists raised even more than this, raising something like $90,100,000. This was not done without effort; but the Baptists, having a mind to work, went vigorously forward, so that the goal they had set was soon passed. It is not difficult to accomplish great things if we are ready to pay the price. A man cannot secure an education without toil; a man cannot enjoy good health without self-sacrifice; one cannot obtain a fortune without great labor and self-denial. Heaven itself awaits those who tread the strait and narrow way.

Comparatively speaking, the constituency of the Gospel Advocate is small; numerically, when compared with the Southern Baptists and Methodists, they are few in number; but, despite this fact, the constituency of this journal has recently contributed for orphans, missions, preaching the gospel in destitute fields, and schools, something near $150,000. Far be it from us to boast about this work; for while we are glad this work has been done, even the readers of the Gospel Advocate are able to do much greater things, if they only have a mind to work. Be it said for their encouragement that they have been very ready indeed to respond to calls for the orphans, calls for missions, and calls for preaching the gospel in destitute fields. Just yesterday I received a letter from Brother Fuqua, of Fort Collins, Col., stating that through the goodness of the Lord he had been enabled to meet his indebtedness and was now ready to give all of his time fully to the great work of preaching the gospel in Colorado. We rejoice with him that this is so, but would encourage our readers to go forward in doing more and more in the great work of saving souls. We have no disposition to dictate to any one just how he shall work, but we do wish to stimulate every one to have a determination to do more in the future in the service of the Lord than he has done in the past. Let each one pray:

"Lead me, lead me, Savior, lead me lest I stray; Gently down the stream of time lead me, Savior, all the

Every one should give "according as he hath purposed in his heart." We should not give grudgingly, or of necessity, for "God loveth a cheerful giver." If we are doing our duty; if we are using the ability that God has given us, as we experience the joys and sorrows of life, as we pass through its shadows and its sunshine, we come to appreciate more and more the truth of the statement of the Savior when he says, "It is more blessed to give than to receive."

Some months ago we set out to raise the sum of $50,000 for the purpose of improving buildings at the David Lipscomb College and of erecting a girls' dormitory. In comparison with the great sums raised by the Methodists and Baptists, this, indeed, appears insignificant. I regret to say that this amount has not been raised in full. We are still some $15,000 short of the goal. The work is almost completed, but we have bills to the amount of $15,000 yet to be paid before the building is paid for and equipped. We would not intimate that if any one does not give to this work he will thereby be condemned and lost. We have no disposition to intimate that a man is selfish or stingy because he does not see proper to make a Hberal contribution to this work. We do believe, however, that the individual Christian who is most interested in the great work of having the word of God taught to the people and who is deeply concerned about the advancement of the kingdom of God in the world will rejoice at this opportunity of having fellowship in this work. We feel that our readers should congratulate themselves on what has already been done and that, like Paul, forgetting the things that are behind, they should press forward to the goal unto the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus. By having fellowship in every good work and having the same mind that was in Christ Jesus we can really secure the greatest good in this life and life eternal in the world to come. Those who engage in such works really get more out of life than any others. The man who selfishly lives for himself, who spends all of his money for selfish gratification, sinks down to misery and despair in this world and to eternal degradation in the world to come. man who rises upon a subdued nature and whose ideal is to honor and glorify God with his gifts, his time, and his talents, rises to the highest good in this life and life eternal in the world to come.

It does seem that we should have among our readers a sufficient number of brethren to contribute the remaining $15,000 and only be the better for having made the contribution. To all who are interested in the work and who are ready to give a contribution, either small or large, we would encourage them to do so immediately. Demands are being made upon us how every day, and we shall not feel satisfied until we have accomplished the work that we started to do and then reach forward to greater things. All contributions should be sent to A. B. Lipscomb, chairman of the Board of Trustees. We hope to be able to announce in a very short time, and we confidently expect to do so, that the entire amount has been raised. We should like, also, in this connection, to encourage our readers to make a contribution to the Freed and Hardeman School at Henderson, Tenn. These brethren are doing a good work and should have the encouragement of faithful Christians who are ready to have fellowship, as individuals, in every good work.

When Christians do not give, they are the chief sufferers; they bring injury on themselves. "To give is to live; to deny is to die." If you wish to dwindle and die spiritually, then live a close life, deny yourself the blessings that come by helping every good work, and soon, very soon, will you realize that this world cannot give the bliss for which we sigh.

Enlightenment Wanted.

BY E. A. E.

Read carefully the following letter:

Allensville, Ky., April 6, 1920.—Brother Elam: In your lesson helps for April 4 you say: "It is dangerous now for Christians to marry any but Christians, and in no way should they be unequally yoked with unbelievers. If you have ever uttered a biblical truth, that is one. I am so giad you said that, and am sorry you did not say more about it. Being unequally yoked has caused many a child of God to stumble, and has caused sorrow and heartache to others. The church needs more teaching along this line. We need to be "separate from the world."

But before you write any more on the subject, I want to ask you this question: "How can one child of God yoke, or assist in yoking, another child of God with an unbeliever?" I know you have done this, and I wonder why you did it. At least, three Christians from this congregation have been yoked with unbelievers by you. Surely you won't justify yourself by saying that your refusing to assist in the yoking would not have prevented the yoking, as I have heard others say, and justify yourself on that ground. That won't do, as the same argument could then justify you in all sorts of wickedness. So I still ask, "Wby?"

You say: "It is dangerous." It is, and is, therefore, wrong. No Christian has a right to endanger his spiritual life; neither has a Christian the right to endanger the life of another Christian. "Ye are not your own: for ye were bought with a price." We do not belong to ourselves and cannot place ourselves in danger. I ask: "How can you do it?"

Brother Elam, I even understand that you married your own daughter to one who was not a Christian. Brother Elam, "How can you do it?"

Do you perform such ceremonies with a clear conscience? If so, please tell me how! Because, if you do, you have evidently studied the question thoroughly and found a way. If not, can you sin and expect God to forgive you?

Sometimes young Christians let their love overrule their judgment and teaching. I believe they always regret it. If they do not, they should. God does not want his children yoked with unbelievers.

Brother Elam, the young Christians (as I am) look to the older brethren for sound teaching. We place confidence in you. But 1, for one, cannot understand such flagrant discrepencies between teaching and practice.

I have heard you say that it was a poor preacher who could not preach better than he could practice. That is true. I believe we should quit letting ourselves do that flagrant discrepancies between teaching and practice.

I shall be glad to have you enlighten me on this, as I do not want to sin in the same thing. WILLIAM KERR Criticism frequently accomplishes more good than praise, for patent reasons.

One has the same right to criticize as to indorse.

Were I managing a paper, I would publish, as a rule, the criticisms and reasons some give for discontinuing their subscriptions to it. This is their right.

Criticisms frequently answer themselves by showing that all knowledge and wisdom, goodness and grace, godliness and the spirit of Christ are not on one side, and all error and mistakes, perverseness and bad spirit, wrong and sin on the other.

Above all things, if I can in any way understand my own heart and am, therefore, not deceived, I desire first to practice and then to teach the whole counsel of God"—not my own or any other man's deductions and logical (!) or illogical conclusions and speculations. I must leave "all things that pertain unto life and godliness" just where and just as God left them, and must not vainly try to draw conclusions for God or to make rules, ironclad and hard and fast, where he has not done so,

I work for, I pray for, I preach for, and I write for the unity and peace of God's children. It is in my soul, if not deceived I repeat, to earnestly teach all churches of Christ to give "diligence to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace;" that in order to do this, they must "walk worthily of the calling" of Christians, "with all lowliness and meekness, with long-suffering, forbearing one another in love" (Eph. 4: 1-6); and that they must do "nothing through faction or through vainglory, but in lowliness of mind" each must count the "other better than himself" (Phil. 2: 1-11).

I preached for the church at Allensville, more or less, for about eight years. My work there has gone to record and I must meet it at the judgment bar of God. I am not conscious of having preached or of having done anything that caused division or gave occasion of stumbling, "contrary to the teaching" of Christ. I performed some marriage ceremonies there because, after due consideration and prayer in all seriousness and consultation with parents and by their parents' consent, and having obtained the marriage license, I considered it my Christian duty as well as my pleasure to allow the dear young people to acknowledge, according to law, each other as husband and wife before me. I had nothing to do with making the match, forming the yoke, encouraging and aiding this relationship. I was asked by the parties to be allowed only to acknowledge each other as husband and wife before me, since the civil law requires such an acknowledgment before some person it designates. But suppose I had done more, would I have been such a sinner before God?

Then why publish Brother Kerr's letter? In order to show the spirit prevalent in many, and to warn against it; to exhibit the stock in trade of many, and to deprecate it: and to say such captiousness breeds strife and destroys the unity and peace which God enjoins. On the contrary, all are commanded by the Lord to give diligence to keep this unity of the Spirit, to maintain this bond of peace, to follow after things which make for peace, to be at peace among themselves, to do nothing through faction or through vainglory, to be meek and lowly, to think of themselves not more highly than they should, to be not wise in their own conceits, to count others better than themselves, and to cultivate and manifest a dozen other Christlike virtues and graces.

Brother Kerr is a young man, as he says, and when he is twenty years older he will doubtless write differently. He was one of our students in the Nashville Bible School. He applied himself; learned well; and asks yet, he says, for enlightenment. I am still willing to try to impart it to him, provided I am able to do so. I do not know whether he has quit preaching or not. I know nothing of his family-whether or not his brothers and sisters are married, whom they married, or whether or not he has any. It is not my business to meddle in his family affairs. He and his home people are not accountable to me. I suppose he has done his best in discharging his duty toward all. I do know that he has been most fortunate in winning and marrying a sweet, most estimable, and very admirable Christian young lady. I most heartily congratulate him, I trust, too, that he will make a faithful Christian husband and father. I pray that his child may always please him and that he may be blessed with others likewise obedient. On the other hand, somehow, I feel that I am not accountable to him for my management of my family affairs. We have been blessed in our home with six children-two daughters and four sons; but one son is not, for God took him. And tisten-I say this thoughtfully and advisedly: I have never seen a purer and cleaner boy or person, one more studious of the Bible, and more intelligently pious at home and away from home, and more obedient to God. These children have an industrious, godly mother, who has been all her life a keeper and worker at home, a helper of the sick and old and poor, and has never meddled with the home and family affairs and business of any one. But for her industry, careful management, good judgment, and wise counsel, I could not have done half of the little I have done. She does not claim to have made no mistakes in the management of our children, even if I do not see them, and I know I have made many as a husband and father and preacher. I have confessed my mistakes along to my wife and to my children and have truly begged their pardon. I have begged the pardon of farm hands and have been graciously forgiven. I begged the pardon of boys at the Bible school when I made mistakes. I could not be saved without confessing my faults and asking forgiveness. Some of my children will acknowledge that they have not always done to please their parents; and they know I do not indorse or even encourage, but condemn, in them, in myself, and in all others, any known wrong. I did not always please my parents. Whose children have always done to please their parents?

I see no sense and no good, however, in doing and hanging the family washing in the front yard.

Our children are all members of the church. Two are married. My son-in-law is a member of the Baptist Church, a nice gentleman, and makes a good living for his wife. The three single ones are at home, keeping house and farming, with all that this work means—cooking, attending to milk and butter, looking after chickens and turkeys, plowing and pitching a crop, caring for stock, going to school, making an henest living anyhow, and attending to their own business. They are good for their contracts and stand well enough with business men. At the same time their mother, who has been almost an invalid for eight years, is away, having gone with her older brother, who is sick, to the mountains to care for him, and I am at Henderson, Tenn., in a meeting. I may appear a doting old father, but I know I could not now prepare the Quarterlies, write articles, and be away preaching but for these children. Somehow, I feel that we all—mother, children, and father—are fellow workers and copartners in preaching the gospel. But we will let that pass. We will judge nothing before the time, and leave all with God.

A rooster in a stable with some horses said: "Look out, gentlemen, let us not tread upon one another." When we begin to compare families, I say: "Look out, gentlemen."

This is all facilish and sinful and unchristian. No good has ever come or can ever come from dragging old skeletons out into public view. It is more like politics—and the commonest sort of politics, at that—than Christianity; it is more a desire to find fault and to condemn than to save.

Some one or more children of numerous faithful and true preachers and of still more godly men who are not preachers have married "out of the church." This, of itself, does not make such action right; but does it prove that all these have failed in their duty and are sinners above all sinners? Again, why call only one to account?

Hundreds of good and true preachers for the past hundred years have pronounced the marriage ceremony for couples when only one was a Christian. Can the charges which Brother Kerr brings against me be brought against all? Did all these men sin? Did they not possess both sufficient ability and godliness to study this question in the light of the Bible and to act conscientiously in regard to it? I do not know but a very few who have ever declined to say the ceremony in such case.

Let us now look at Brother Kerr's letter in order.

The sentence he quotes from me contains two different declarations. (1) "It is dangerous now for Christians to marry any but Christians." I repeat, it is. So say all I have ever read after on the subject-Campbell, McGarvey, Lipscomb, etc. An act or situation may be dangerous and yet not necessarily sinful or wrong within itself. Danger is exposure or liability to loss or some contingent evil, but not necessarily the real loss or evil. Loss or evil is liable to occur, but not certain to occur. (2) "And in no way should they be unequally yoked with unbelievers." I repeat, God forbids Christians' being "unequally yoked with unbellevers" and commands them to come out from such and to be separate. (See 2 Cor. 6: 14 to 7: 1.) I believe that in order to obey God his children must do this. Hence, if for a believer to be married to an unbeliever is to be "unequally yoked," then in obedience to God the believer must come out and the marriage must be dissolved. But God forbids this in 1 Cor. 7, which see. Hence, "be not unequally yoked with unbelievers" cannot refer to marriage. In 1 Cor. 7 the question is raised, when the husband or wife becomes as Christian and the other does not, must the marriage be dissolved? God answers, "No." In this case the unbeliever "is sanctified." (made clean, made fit, set apart, so as to be lived with) in the believer. Were this not the case, the children of such marriages would be "unclean," or, in God's sight, illegitimate; but they are not. Hence, such marriages must not be dissolved and the children are holy-that is, legitimate before God. This being true, when God commands his children to "come ye out from among them, and be ye separate" from thus being "unequally yoked together," he does not mean marriages of believers with unbelievers. for he says these marriages must not be broken.

On this subject, Peter, too, says the Christian wife by her godly life may win her husband to Christ. Then she is not to leave him. But the children of God are commanded to come out of and separate from the "unequal yoke," whatever it is. Hence, I cannot understand that it applies to marriage, but to relationships out of which Christians must come. This is why I say we must leave matters just where God left them and that I, would not give one word from God for cart loads of man's logic. If this marriage of the believer and unbeliever cannot be dissolved, must I then say it is open disobedience to God to enter into it?

It is true that the Christian cannot be yoked or assist in yoking others "unequally with unbelievers" in any way—in business, idol worship, iniquity, darkness, any other service of Belial. Christians can under no circumstances form any sort of connection or business arrangement which will force them of itself—and, therefore, of necessity—to become partners in iniquity, to have communion with or be partakers of darkness, to be in agreement with Satan, to worship idols; if they are in such relationship, they must come out. But the Lord declares that the union in marriage of Christians with unbelievers is not such a relationship, because the unbeliever is sanctified in the believer and their children are holy.

Brother Kerr says he wishes I would write more on the subject. I wrote what I understand to be the will of God. But before I write more, he wants me to consider some questions he asks.

He asks his first question and proceeds to tell me how I cannot justify my action, assuming that I will offer "the justification" he names, and adds, "that won't do."

He assumes, too, that being "unequally yoked" is the marriage of believers to unbelievers, that God condemns such marriages, that I know this, and asks how can I assist in doing it, and says: "I know you have done this." It is a grave and serious charge to say he knows I have assisted in yoking Christians in relationship out of which I know God calls them. I think I shall have to say I know I have not done this—that is, intentionally and willfully. He wonders "why" I did this. "I didn't."

He proceeds to argue that because I say "it is dangerous" it must be wrong within itself, and that I do wrong in saying the ceremony, and again asks with emphasis: "How can you do it?"

But this is not enough; so he says he "even understands that" I married my "own daughter to one who was not a Christian," and comes this time with double emphasis: "How can you do it?" I have been praying all the while that I may answer in the spirit of Christ and so as to accomplish good. It will be in order to ask how he understood this, yet he need not attempt to tell me. Of course, some one has told him. My son-in-law, as stated, is a member of the Baptist Church. He and I talked this over seriously, thoughtfully, and agreeably to ourselves, at least, before his marriage. It never occurred to me to consult Brother Kerr on the subject. But it does occur to me—well, reader, how does all this appear to you? This is why I wrote above about meddling in the family affairs of others.

While Paul is not discussing marriage in the passage under consideration, I want to say, clear and strong, that I am not so lacking in conception of the teaching of Christ or so prejudiced as to say Baptists are unbelievers. Who will say so?

More still, he asks if I "perform such ceremonies with a clear conscience," and wants me to please tell how. To cap the climax, he asks, if I have found no way to do so with a clear conscience, can I "sin and expect God to forgive" me? Our readers can put whatever construction on this It will bear. Brother Kerr is not my judge.

He says the young Christians, as he is, look to older brethren for sound teaching and place confidence in me; but that he, for one, "cannot understand such flagrant discrepancies between teaching and practice." Then he is in no danger of being misled by me. I do not think he was ever in such danger.

He declares he has heard me say "that it was a poor preacher who could not preach better than he could practice." He may have heard me say that once when I was preaching on the Christian life-the Golden Rule, telling the truth, being honest, not taking up a false report against any one, etc.-that a good brother came to me and said he had heard Brother Lipscomb say that, and that I replied: "Yes, and it is a poor preacher who does not try to practice what he preaches." I shall be glad to be correctly represented. Then, people pretty generally know my life, And my mistakes have not been a few, for James declares that "in many things we all stumble." So he who starts out to find mistakes in my life will soon meet with success. My hope of salvation is in the grace of God. I have been preaching for forty years and writing for this paper. more or less, for almost as long, and I wish to-day that all I now preach and write and do may be right in God's eye, that my heart may be pure and clean in his sight.

Then let young Brother Kerr set the pace.

He wishes I would enlighten him, because he "does not want to sin in the same thing." He is not in any danger. I am the one whose "flagrant discrepancies" he cannot understand, about whose conscience he is concerned, on whose practice there must be "put more effort," and who must answer "why." I am the one who needs enlightenment. Well, I am ready to receive it.

I suggest that he read in this paper of April 8 Brother McQuiddy's article and what Alexander Campbell had to say on this subject.

Poland stands in the shadow of Bolshevism. According to latest reports from Poland, five million persons are suffering from undernourishment. The retreating Germans, in 1918, disabled every factory, and as a result the workman has no work and his family is starving. The Bolsheviks are transporting their typhus victims in armored cars to the Polish border and forcing the Poles to accept them. One million Poles have died during this last winter from typhus. Smallpox is decimating the children. Unless these epidemics are soon checked, they will threaten the world with the greatest plague in history.

In sending contributions, be sure and state whether they are intended for the Home Orphans' Fund, the Armenian and Syrian Fund, or the Poland Fund. I should be glad if more of the contributions were designated for use in providing for orphans in this country, since there are constant appeals from destitute families close to us. Make all checks and money orders payable to A. B. Lipscomb, who will forward them to the proper commissioners.

More News from McGregor, Ga.

We give our readers the following letter from our good sister at McGregor, Ga., dated April 6:

Brother Hail: Please accept our sincere thanks for the fifty-dollar check sent from West End congregation. If only a few more congregations would follow the example, we would soon have our church built. The carpenters are ready now to begin it. Most of the saw bills have been pald. We hope to hear from other congregations at once.

Brother Prevatt preached for us last Lord's day, morning and afternoon. At the afternoon service one noble woman came forward and expressed her desire to unite with the church. She came from the Baptists.

I am inclosing names of contributors and amount sent by each since I reported last.

Not knowing Sister J. A. Harding's address, I shall ask you to express to her our thanks for her contribution.

Pray for the members of McGregor church of Christ, that each may hold out faithful. Your sister in Christ, VINA HOOPER.

The following are the donations received since last report: W. L. McClellan, Georgia, $1; G. E. Claus, Georgia, $13.50; West End Church, Atlanta, $50; Mrs. Mary Choate, Tennessee, $2: Sister J. A. Harding, Georgia, $1; a Georgia brother (name lost), $5. Will not others hurry their donations on to this good work, that her next report may be that a sufficiency has been received?

"The Church of the Living Goa."

In 1 Tim. 3: 15 Paul says the "house of God" is "the church of the living God, the pillar and ground [stay] of the truth." If ever, in the history of the church, God's children needed to look this statement squarely in the face and believe it with the whole heart, now is the time, I am submitting the following outstanding facts for the consideration of those who love the truth as it is in our Lord and Savior:

1. It is "the church of the living God," I like that word "living," and well should we remember that our Father in heaven is ever declared to be such. In fact, he is the only God who really lives. How many members of the church appreciate the fact that a God that lives and loves is ever near and that nothing can harm them in the true sense so long as they are faithful? There is another thing that we need to give some thought these days, and that is, this living God is interested in the church and kingdom that he has given to his Son and will overrule all things for the best. We sometimes find brethren very much perturbed over what seems to be a crisis through which the church is now passing. Well, why should they he? It is our duty to see to it that we are ever loyal, faithful, and true to the plain and simple teaching of our Lord, and it is his business to take care of the church; Have we lost faith in the fact that Christ is now reigning? And that " he must reign, till he hath put all enemies under his feet?" Or have we gone over to the unbelievers who would have us think he is not reigning? Can we not trust our King? Can we not rest in the consciousness that so long as he is reigning all will go well with his "glorious church?" Let us not take upon ourselves a responsibility that it is not ours to assume. God will take care of his church and his kingdom will crush all opposition. Ours is a smaller job, yet vitally important, and concerns our own personal salvation, and not so much that of the whole church or kingdom.

2. It is "the pillar and ground of the truth." From a study of this expression we come to that which concerns each child of God. Say and think what you please about the church, yet the fact remains that it is the ground and pillar of the truth. No body of people claiming to be the church of God can be, indeed, the church of our Lord unless they understand that their work is specific-viz., to let their all go toward their being the pillar, the ground, the stay of the truth, and not something else. I sometimes wonder, when brethren get so worked up when trouble seemingly arises, if it is not due to their allowing themselves, consciously or unconsciously, to become the pillar and stay of semething that the Book does not teach. If you have the truth and nothing else, why should you worry? Can the truth ever be destroyed? Men can destroy themselves in opposing the truth, but the truth they cannot destroy-it will stand forever. Where do you find the apostles worrying about the church and kingdom of our Lord? Where do you find them uneasy about the truth? Their concern was about men's going down to death and destruction in opposing the truth. Did not false brethren arise then as well as now? Did not some pervert the truth then as well as now? Did not some then teach unlearned and unprofitable doctrines as well as now? But, instead of their looking at such as a calamity, they considered it a blessing. "For there must also be factions among you, that they that are approved may be made manifest among you," (1 Cor. 11: 19.) It is certainly bad on the "factionist," for he will be lost; but God uses such in separating the good from the bad, that those who love the cause of Christ may do all the more.

The one thing that I would emphasize is that our work is specific; that we are to continually see that we are supporting the truth, not the doctrines and commandments of men; that we are the pillar and stay of this, and not something else. All religionists, I care not by what name known, are the pillar and stay of something. Are they not? It all depends on what we are the ground and stay of. If it is the truth, well and good: but if it is something else, our destiny must be that of the devil and his angels. My prayer, then, would be: Back to the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, if we are to be, indeed, the church of the living God. Brotherly love is great, but love for the truth is greater; for no man can have the former, in its true sense, without first having the latter.

The revival conducted by F. B. Srygley, of Nashville, Tenn., had a glorious beginning yesterday (April 11). Our house at West End Avenue was crowded at both the morning and evening services. One came to us from the Baptists, one was baptized, and our offerings went above one hundred dollars. The people are delighted with Brother Srygley, and we are expecting the very best results. He spoke in the afternoon to a splendid audience at East Brother Garrett baptized another at East Point last week, and more are daily expected.

The Spirit Itself.

BY J. J. VANHOUTIN.

That word "itself" is a neuter reciprocal pronoun and implies "alone." "The Spirit Itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God." (Rom. 8: 16.) That word "Itself" separates the "Spirit" from any and all agencies; the Spirit was alone by itself in testimony. And that word "spirit" is in the singular number and implies but one when Paul said "our spirit." And if the words "our spirit" are in the plural possessive, then Paul and the Corinthian brethren (and all Christians) own that one spirit, which cannot be their individual spirits. Do you not know that the gospel is sometimes called the "spirit of truth?" And did not John say: "Beloved, believe not every spirit?" False prophets. preachers, and teachers establish false spirits. The gospel is the spirit of truth, as much so as antichrist is the spirit of error. John says: "Try the spirits." The gospel is what Paul called "our spirit;" and when the apostles preached and would show how persons became the children of God by obeying it, then the Spirit "itself" would give a demonstration of supernatural spiritual power confirming the truth, and no man on earth could overthrow such testimony. The Spirit itself gave witness on the day of Pentecost that the apostles preached the truth. The Spirit itself gave witness to the truth taught by Peter when it removed Ananias and his wife. The Spirit itself gave witness to the fact that Paul was preaching the truth when it smote Elymas with blindness when he stepped in between Paul and the man to whom Paul was presenting the spirit of truth and tried to prevent it. Here is fair warning to any person who attempts to stand between the people and God's plan of redemption. Every miracle which followed the apostles' preaching was done by the Spirit itself, alone, and without any aid from man. The gospel plan of redemption is the "spirit of truth," and is the one spirit which animates the one body; and as there is but one gospel, and the truth of it is spirit, Paul could say: "For by one spirit are we all baptized into one body." The Holy Spirit itself does not do the baptizing into the one body; that is left for man to do. The spirit of adoption is the "law of the Spirit of life," and it must be obeyed by believers in order to become children of God by adoption. And the Spirit itself would bear witness with the spirit or teaching of the apostles, that all who believed and obeyed were children of God: their faith was above human testimony.

You Do More Work,

You are more ambitious and you get more enjoyment out of everything when your blood is in good condition. Impurities in the blood have a very depressing effect on the system, causing weakness, laziness, nervousness and sickness.

GROVE'S TASTELESS CHIII TONIC restores Energy and Vitality by Purifying and Enriching the Blood. When you feel its strengthening, invigorating effect, see how it brings color to the cheeks and how it improves the appetite, you will then appreciate its true tonic value.

GROVE'S TASTELESS CHIII TONIC is not a patent medicine, it is simply IRON and QUININE suspended in Syrup. So pleasant even children like it. The blood needs Quinine to Purify it and IRON to Enrich it. These reliable tonic prop-erties never fail to drive out impurities in the blood.

The Strength-Creating Power of GROVE'S TASTELESS Chill TONIC has made it the favorite tonic in thousands of homes. More than thirty-five years ago, would ride a long distance to get GROVE'S TASTELESS Chill TONIC when a member of their family had Malaria or needed a body-building, strength-giving tonic. The formula is just the same to-day, and you can get it from any drug store. 60c per bottle.

HELPED HER LITTLE GIRL,

Children need all their strength for growing. A lingering cold weakens them so that the system is open to attack by more serious sickness. Mrs. Amanda Flint, Route is New Philadelphia, Ohio, writes: "Foley's Honey and Tar cured my little girl of the worst tickling cough. I had tried many things, and found nothing to help until I got Foley's Honey and Tar." Gives immediate relief from distressing, racking, tearing coughs; soothes and heals. Good for colds, croup, and whooping cough.

IF BACK HURTS USE SALTS FOR KIDNEYS

Eat Less Meat if Kidneys Feel Like Lead or Bladder Bothers

Most felks forget that the kidneys, like the bowels, get sluggish and clogged and need a flushing occasionally, else we have backache and dull misery in the kidney region, severe headaches, rheumatic twinges, torpid liver, acid stomach, sleeplessness, and all sorts of bladder disorders.

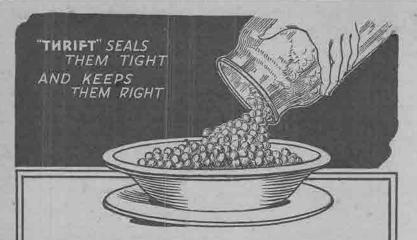

You simply must keep your kidneys active and clean; and the moment you feel an ache or pain in the kidney gion get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good drug store here, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days, and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice combined with lithia, and is harmless to flush clogged kidneys and stimulates them to normal activity. It also neutralizes the acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is harmless, inexpensive, makes a delightful effervescent lithiawater drink which everybody should take now and then to keep their kidneys clean, thus avoiding serious complications.

A well-known local druggist says he sells lots of Jad Salts to folks who be-lieve in overcoming kidney trouble while it is only trouble.

How Many "Spoiled"?

HOW many of the jars of foods that you "put up" last year spoiled? Canning experts state that for every dozen jars packed, processed and sealed the ordinary way, two are lost.

But not the Thrift Way. Foods canned the Thrift Way can't spoil. They are mechanically and hermetically sealed before cooking: sealed just as the big packers seal their jars for market—with all the flavor and juices in the jar.

The Thrift Way is easier and quicker, too. No fussy tops or rubber rings to bother with; no hot jars to handle.

OBITUARIES

Williams.

Bethel congregation has suffered a distinct loss in the death of Brother Edd Williams. He had until recently owned and operated a mercantile business at Tigrett, and all who knew him speak of him as a good citizen and worthy Christian. Brother Williams was born in Carrell County, Tenn., in 1879, and died in his forty-first year, on March 15, 1920. He is survived by his wife, who was a Miss Owen, and five children. The remains were interred at Elizabeth Cemetery in the presence of a throng of sorrowing friends and relatives.

FRED BLANCHARD.

Carter.

Brother R. L. Carter died on February 27, 1920, at the home of his daughter, Sister Mollie Brickell, in Brinkley, Ark. He was born on September 27, 1841, in Smith County, Tenn., near Carthage. Twenty-five years of his life was spent in Bowling Green, Ky. He was a deacon in the Bowling Green church for twenty-one years. He married Margaret Wilkinson in 1872. Sister Carter, his wife; Mrs. Molly Brickell, of Brinkley, Ark., a daughter; and Henisse Carter, of Memphis, Tenn., a son, survive him. Brother Carter was a loyal servant and son of God. Wherever he lived, he was active in the service. Many friends in Bowling Green, Ky., and Memphis, Tenn., mourn his loss. May God raise up others like him.

L. K. HARDING.

Young.

Nancy Ann Young passed from this life into the life beyond on March 4, 1920, aged eighty-three years. Her husband departed this life on April 21, 1907. There were born to them nine children—six boys and three girls. Two of the children are dead. She made her home with Brother Perry Young. He and his good wife looked after her and made her as comfortable as they could. Brother Perry Young and his wife and two of the oldest children are members of the church of Christ; also her widowed daughter. Sister Smith, who is left to fight the battles of life alone. Her body was laid to rest in the cemetery at Victory. Brother Charles H. Holder and I conducted the funeral services. She had been a member of the Methodist Church for about fifty-six years. R. E. L. Taylor.

Woodlee.

Sister Lena Woodlee, wife of Brother Henry Woodlee, died on February 19, 1920. She leaves a husband and four children to mourn her departure. She was a good, Christian mother and a kind, loving wife. She obeyed the gospel at the age of sixteen, while in school at McMinnville. She was full of charity that thinketh no evil. Her Christian character way show reproach. Her faith was loved the house of the Lord and always auxie.

worship She was not afraid to die but wanted to live to see her children reared aright. Having spent her life here serving the Lord, she had a right to the tree of life. She has made an entrance into the paradise of God. She now rests from all her labors. She is "not dead, but sleepeth," funeral services were conducted by the R. E. L. TAYLOR.

McNees.

Brother Henry C. McNees died at his home, near Millport, Ala., on March 6, 1920, after two weeks' illness with pneumonia. He was near seventy years of age. For several years he had been realizing that death is peace to all Christians, and the nearer his life came to an end, the more earnestly didhe pray for his departure from this world of tribulation, saying he had no fear at all of death. His wife (whose maiden name was "Delk") and five children and a number of grandchildren survive him. He had been a member of the church of Christ for more than thirty years, was one of the oldest members of the Mount Pleasant congregation, and to say that he was faithful only expresses the truth. He served as elder for a long time and was faithful in doing that which was required of him. He was always present at the meetings for worship. except when kept away on account of serious sickness. He was kind and gentle toward all. He was one of the most industrious of men, and was always ready to contribute freely for the cause. The Master's Vineyard

Tennessee.

Nashville, April 6.—From January 15 to March 23 I was at Miami, Fla., conducting the song service for the church at that place and assisting in the Sunday-school work and in any other way I could be of any service. We had a song drill before each prayermeeting service, also forty-five minutes before preaching on Sunday nights, and on Friday night we studied the principles of music and learned new songs by singing. There are about sixty or seventy members of the "one body" trying to worship "as it is written." They have a neat frame building at 735 Eighth Street, with a seating capacity of about four hundred. They have also bought and equipped a nice tent, large enough to seat from three hundred to four hundred, for the purpose of evangelizing the city-a work that is very much needed, as this is the only congregation of disciples worshiping according to the New Testament in Miami or Dade County. The brethren had planned to hold two or three tent meetings through the winter and spring, but the "flu" interfered with the work and it was decided to postpone it for a few weeks. Brother Joe L. Netherland, of Yuma, Carroll County, Tenn. is preaching for them all of his time, and he and his wife are earnest workers in the "Master's vineyard" and loyal to the truth. They have a Sunday school with about seventy to ninety in attendance, with an increasing interest. It was decided to set up the tent back of the house and use it as a classroom and try to interest more of the young people in the study of the Bible. Brother P. C. Breeden, of Terrell, Texas, a former Tennesseean, who was spending the winter there, was present at every service and rendered valuable assistance in the work. I had the pleasure of rooming with this godiy, Christian gentleman and associating with him a good part of the state good part of the time, and indeed it was a pleasure and benefit to be with I had agreed to stay until about the first of June, but on account of the serious illness of my brother, A. S. Derryberry, I left for home on March 23. I have promised to go back and conduct the song service for them in the tent meetings, if they so desire. Southern Fierida is indeed a mission field and much in need of the gospel. I was informed that Brother Netherland was the only gospel preacher within a radius of two hundred miles. would be glad to correspond with those needing the services of a song leader from now until June. Serve the Lord from the Heart.

BY S. WHITFIELD.

A great deal of service that is offered to the Lord is never heard or accepted by the Lord, for it is not offered according to God's word. There are two conditions that must be complied with before any worship is acceptable before the Lord. Some give attention to one condition and neglect the other, while others give attention to the other and neglect the first. Man is prone to go to extremes. While watching the ditch on one side, we must be careful or we will fall in the one on the other side. We are very shortsighted and one-sided creatures.

"God is a Spirit: and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth." (John 4: 24.) All service offered to God must be offered according to the truth. We must do the very thing that God has told us to do. Nothing else will do. When we say, "Lord, Lord," we must do what Jesus as Lord teaches to be consistent. We must not add to God's word, take from it, or change it in any way. We are to receive it just as it is, and always let the truth be final. We are to tremble at God's

While we as disciples of Christ have been, as a rule, pretty well schooled along this line, have we given the attention to the question of worshiping God in spirit that we should? one is as important as the other. Both must be complied with before God will hear and bless us. Some have given due emphasis to the manner of worship or the motive, but have neglected the act. While we are trying to give due attention to the truth, let us not neglect the spirit part.

All service, to be acceptable before God, is to come from the heart. The motive must be to serve the Lord, and nothing else. "But ye have obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine which was delivered you." (Rom, 6; 17.) This is the kind of obedience that God is pleased with, and no other kind will do.

" Master, which is the great commandment in the law? Jesus said unto him, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the first and great commandment." (Matt. 22: 36-38.) To love the Lord with all the heart, soul, and mind is to love him with all the powers of the inner man. This would be a whole-hearted service-just the kind that God wants.

We may do the very thing that God wants us to do; but if it is not done from the heart, it is not acceptable. We should come before the Lord realizing our need of him, for we cannot get along without him. It is in God

Where Drugs

Many chronic diseases fail to respond to drug treatment, even in the hands of the best physicians, whereas acute diseases usually respond readily. When a disease has become chronic, drugs often seem to do as much harm as they do good, for the system rebels against them. It is just this class of cases which derive the greatest benefit from Shivar Mineral Water. If you suffer from chronic dyspepsia, gestion, sick headache, rheumatism, kidney or liver disease, uric-acid poisoning, or other curable conditions due to impure blood, do not hesitate to accept Mr. Shivar's liberal offer as printed below. His records show that only two in a hundred, on the average, have reported "no beneficial results. This is a wonderful record from a truly wonderful spring. Simply sign the following letter:

that we live, move, and have our being, and without him we cannot do anything. Even the breath we breathe, we owe it to him.

We need to come to God with a humble and contrite heart, for this is the only spirit we can come in to worship him as we should. One of the seven things that God hates is a "proud look."

A lot of worship that is offered to God is only a form. "Traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof: from such turn away." Tim. 3: 4, 5.) This is a condition that Paul said would come, and surely it is here now. God must come first in our hearts and lives.

Our service must not be to be seen of men or please them; if it is, it is only an abomination before the Lord. God is the one we are to please, and it does not make any difference whether we please men or not. If we do what is right, good people will respect us. But we cannot please God and the world; for the world is against God, and always will be.

Our worship must not be a cloak to cover up our sins before the world; for God knows our hearts. If we are against him, he will be against us.

We should come before God, through Jesus Christ, with praise and thanksgiving in our hearts to God for all his love and goodness to us. All of this is due his great name; so let us bring it freely to him. Let us come into the courts of God with glory and honor to him that liveth forever and ever, and before whom we must all stand at last to receive our reward, according to the deeds that we have done here. To God be all the praise both now and forever.

The Jewish Sabbath.

BY C. PETTY.

There is a good deal of talk now about this day, and men are being led away by false teachers trying to persuade Gentiles to become Jewish, and it is a day that is no more now than any other day. Listen! The Lord, in Isaiah 1: 13, says: "Bring no more vain oblations; incense is an abomination unto me: the new moons and sabbaths, the calling of assemblies, I cannot away with; it is iniquity, even the solemn meeting." They had profaned his Sabbath and he had rejected it. In Hos. 2: 11 the Lord says the "sabbaths" shall cease, but does not say when they shall cease. But in Amos 8: 1, 2, the Lord showed Ames "a basket of summer fruit," representing Israel's end, and we get the idea of decay, and that at once, for summer fruit will not keep; and in verse 5 we have this language: "When will the new moon be gone, that we may sell corn? and the sabbath, that we may set forth wheat, making the ephah small, and the shekel great, and falsifying the balances by deceit?" In verse 9 we are told when the Sabbath should cease: "And it shall come to pass in that day, saith the Lord God, that I will cause the sun to go down at noon, and will darken the earth in a clear day." The sun never went down but once at noon, and that was at the crucifixion; and Paul, in Col. 2: 14-17, says the Sabbath was nailed to the cross. Thus ended forever the Jewish Sabbath. Hosea said It should cease, Amos said it would end when the sun went down at noon, and Paul says it did end when the sun was down; and where two or three testify concerning anything, it is established. So, fare ye well, McHenry and Martin; for you have gone back behind the cross where the sun never shines.

All success in prayer is conditioned on our abiding in Christ by the habit of faith, and having his words abiding in us, because, through these, as applied to us by the Spirit, we acquire the mind of Christ, and fall into harmony with the very thoughts of God. -Selected.

Brewton, April 13.—I preached last Lord's day at Esto, Fla. I keep busy all the time in the evangelistic work. Brethren, if you want me to hold a meeting for you this summer, write me just as soon as you can. I want to do all I can for the salvation of men. Address me at Brewton.—G. W. Jarrett.

Tennessee.

Decherd, April 12.—I have just closed a week's meeting at Atpontley, in Bledsoe County. Three were baptized and eight confessed their wrongs. I am now at Dunlap in a meeting which started off well. We had a large crowd last night. I have been very sick, but am better now. I go from here to Whitwell the fourth Lord's day.—R. E. L. Taylor.

Livingston, Route 1, April 4.—Our services were fine to-day. My brother, W. L. Hunter, preached on "Christ Our Exemplar." At the close of his talk one person came forward and made the good confession, and the baptizing took place in the afternoon. Our home congregation, "Holly Springs," seems to be stronger than ever before. All are working in peace and harmony. The Lord willing, I shall hold a few-days' meeting at Willow Grove, in Clay County. Pray for us.—Willie Hunter.

Livingston, April 12.—Brother Brewington and I have just returned from a short meeting at Willow Grove, in Clay County. We attended a nice entertainment of the school on Friday night. We preached on Saturday night and Sunday to large and attentive crowds. The school is doing a great work under the management of Brethren J. L. Hunter and Chester Ledbetter. The church seems to be strong and doing a good work. The Willow Grove people are a kind and good people. It was a great joy to be with them.—Willie Hunter.

Texas.

Miami, April 8.—Our work here is still moving along slowly. Brother F. B. Shepherd, of Amarillo, recently held a meeting for us. Brother Cox led the singing. While we did not have as many additions as we would like to have had, yet we feel sure that lots of good was done. We had large erowds and good interest. Brother Shepherd did some good work in teaching the church.—Lee Sanders.

Palestine, April 6.—There are thirty members of the church of Christ in Palestine. We have purchased a lot on which to erect a house of worship. We have a clear deed to the lot—a very restrictive deed. I read in the Gospel Advocate of the loss of the property in Louisville, Ky., caused by speculative teaching, interpreting unfulfilled prophecy, and Adventism. I took the copy of the Gospel Advocate to ex-Governor Campbell and asked his assistance in drawing up a deed to prevent the property being taken by a majority vote. We also had a deed from the Firm Foundation with the usual restrictive clause. We feel quite sure that our lot is safe for the church

For Red Blod, Strength and Endurance

THINK of the strong, healthy men and women you know—people who are prominent and who are doing things worth while and you will find that they usually possess remarkable force, vim and energy—the kind that simply brim over when the blood is filled with iron. Iron is red-blood food—it helps put strength and energy into the veins of men and roses into the cheeks of women. Nuxated Iron by enriching the blood and creating new blood cells strengthens the nerves, rebuilds the weakened tissues and helps to instill renewed energy and endurance into the whole system.

If people would only keep their blood filled with strength-giving iron by taking Nuxated Iron when they feel weak, run-down and nervous, they might readily build up their red-blood corpuscles and quickly become stronger and healthier in every way. Unlike the older inorganic products it is easly assimilated, does not injure the teeth, make them black nor upset the stomach. Nuxated Iron often increases the strength and endurance of weak, delicate people in two weeks' time. It is dispensed by all good druggists.

Notes from England.

BY H. F. BRADNUM.

There is congenial sunshine canopied by a serene blue sky, which make these days happy starting points for the mind dreams of a brighter world. The parks and the open spaces are alive with people come out to drink in the tonic air. There is color in the garden and the fresh green of early spring upon tree and hedge. It is as if the earth had suddenly become a magic carpet and transported us to the middle of summer, for the weather is of summer more even than of spring. Only in the early morning and late evening are we reminded by a chill wind that spring is not yet.

Nor is the annual summer holiday, although these glorious days which bring cheer in early March have set We begin to inus discussing them. quire as to the possibility of a holiday at the seaside or in the country, but with a note of anxiety concerning the cost of living away from home. More particularly are we anxious as to railway fares. In pre-war days the cheap excursion ticket was the universal passport to renewed health and exhilarating pleasure. Nowadays one reaches the seaside or country only at the cost of the ordinary fare plus fifty per cent increase.

While we are still hoping that the excursion ticket will again become a reality, the question of the high cost of living in general is likely to provide us with enough material for debate until the day for going away is at hand. Without doubt, it is now a subject of paramount importance. And since it is not possible to alter the days of nature, we have to find a solution to it in spite of, rather than because of, any measures that we have taken against the profiteer. There is that kink in human nature which, given the opportunity, would make us all profiteers. But so far we are unanimous only on one point-namely. that "something must be done."

We are discussing the taxation of our profits; and although its result would materially help, a more permanent and substantial source of income is the main need. The rate of international exchange together with a gradual narrowing of the vicious circle constitute our present difficulties. Thanks to a wide and very sensible form of education in these matters, most people are now conversant with the idea of putting their shoulders to the wheel and so making the task of reconstruction the success we have always hoped it would be. It will be unhill work, but perseverance and cheerfulness will accomplish it.

We have to import less and export considerably more. Owing to the ad-

COMB SAGE TEA IN FADED OR GRAY HAIR

It Mixed With Sulphur It Darkens So Naturally Nobody Can Tell

Grandmother kept her hair beautifully darkened, glossy, and attractive with a brew of Sage Tea and Sulphur. Whenever her hair took on that dull, faded, or streaked appearance, this simple mixture was applied with wonderful effect. By asking at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," you will get a large bottle of this old-time recipe, improved by the addition of other ingredients, all read to use, at very little cost. This simple mixture can be depended upon to restore natural color and beauty to the hair.

A well-known downtown druggist says everybody uses Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound now because it darkens so naturally and evenly that nobody can tell it has been applied; it is so easy to use, too. You simply dampen a comb or soft brush and draw it through your hair, taking one strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears; after another application or two, it is restored to its natural color and looks glossy, soft, and beautiful.

verse balance of exchange, the goods we buy from abroad are dearly purchased, while the commodities we sell bring in correspondingly less than in pre-war days. We have to work harder and produce more and pay more in taxes until we have made up the leeway. This and a very severe economy in public expenditure would appear to be the only solution. As for the profilteer and the trade ring, they resolve themselves into an international, rather than a national, subject, the settling of which is now being discussed.

Bearing this and many other things in mind, we have now come to inform eur legislators of the reforms and policies we need in rather a novel way. The habit has become very prevalent recently of writing to members of Parliament on all kinds of subjects of national interest. "Write to your M. P. about it" is a constant ery. This method would probably never have reached its present dimensions but for the lately acquired woman's vote, in the old days-or, in fact, at any time-the male voter would not spare the moment or take the trouble to worry Westminster by writing letters. But the woman voter is quite different. She has the time and is more conscientiously interested in all the things that matter. And the woman's vote cannot be ignored.

Both men and women are gradually realizing that the building up of a new world is not the easy task it was not so long ago thought to be. The illusion that at the cessation of hostilities a brilliant and prosperous future would immediately open up before us like the breaking of the dawn is gone. All the ideals we set out to secure have not come with a waving of the hand. Indeed, they have not come at all. The pictures that were painted by the imagination only have faded into nothingness. Hard facts alone remain. It is these we are now facing.

The work of reconstruction is a much slower process than we imagined. But the disillusion has set a valuable lesson for those who would profit by it. So far it is not without compensation. But there are those who still harp upon the disappointments of their own short-sightedness. These people are the element of gloom in a land of hope and confidence. They could paint you, at any time, a picture so disastrous as to overshadow even their own hopes. Fortunately for us all, they have little or no influence in the scheme of things, and so they muse only with their own faint-hearteduess. Optimism, quiet, but emphatic, is the general note; and this is halfway to the realization of a successful journey along the road to triumph.

For it is the spirit of cheerfulness and the energy born of sober confi-

For more than Forty Years Cotton Growers have known that POTASH PAYS

which the cotton grower knew was both a plant food and a preventive of blight and rust,—with it came also 1,312,400 Tons of which has the same effect on Cotton, but which was used mainly in mixed fertilizers.

Shipments of both Kainit and Manure Salt have been resumed but the shortage of coal and cars and high freight rates make it more desirable to ship Manure Salt, which contains 20 per cent of actual Potash, instead of Kainit, which contains less than 13 per cent actual Potash.

MANURE SALT can be used as a side dressing on Cotton in just the same way as Kainit and will give the same results. Where you used 100 pounds of Kainit, you need to use but 62 pounds of Manure Salt, or 100 pounds of Manure Salt go as far as 161 pounds of Kainit.

MANURE SALT has been coming forward in considerable amounts and cotton growers, who cannot secure Kainit, should make an effort to get Manure Salt for side dressing to aid in making a big cotton crop.

Muriate of Potash

50 per cent actual Potash, has been coming forward also,—100 pounds of Muriate are equivalent to 400 pounds of Kainit or 250 pounds of Manure Salt.

These are the three

Standard GERMAN Potash Salts

that were always used in making cotton fertilizers and have been used for all these years with great profit and without any damage to the crop.

The supply is not at present as large as in former years, but there is enough to greatly increase the Cotton Crop if you insist on your dealer making the necessary effort to get it for you.

Life Is What We Make It. BY J. W. ATKISSON.

In a very large measure, life is just what we make it. As a rule, we reap just what we sow. Whether it be weal or wee, we gather at the harvest what we sow. Man is a free moral agent, endowed with power and free volition of will to build either on the Rock or on the sand; hence, it is up to him to freely choose as to which it shall be. We have the power of choice in the matter. (See Ezek. 18; Acts 13; 4; Matt. 7: 21-27.)

The soldiers of the cross are all volunteers. There is not a conscript in the Lord's army; no, not one. And the Lord admonishes his volunteers to let their light shine before men in order that they may be induced to volunteer, or that they may, by seeing your good, be induced to "glorify your Father which is in heaven." (See Matt. 5: 16.)

"But," says one, "the alien sinner is dead." Yes, in one sense the allen is dead in his trespasses and sins; but that is no reason why we should say that he, like the little dog, Rover, "when he died, died all over." True, the allen is not living to God as the Christian is, not having been born again, or adopted into the family of God, as the Christian has been. But that he is dead in the sense of being beyond the reach of the gospel, or beyoud the influence of Christian association, cannot be proved. For why would the Savior admonish us to let our light shine before men, if they cannot see it nor be influenced by it? Just think of the blessed Savior admonishing us to let our light shine before men, when he knew all the time that they could not see it nor be Influenced by it! Verily, the doctrine of total, hereditary depravity is a very pernicious error. How beautiful these lines from Longfellow!

Tell me not, in mournful numbers, "Life is but an empty dream;" For the soul is dead that slumbers, And things are not what they seem.

Life is real, life is earnest, And the grave is not its goal. "Dust thou art, to dust returnest," Was not spoken of the soul.

Edifying as the Need May Be

Miracles As Christian Evidence.

Miracles as theistic proof may be considered from two viewpoints. There is the evidence for miracles: did they really happen? and the evidence of miracles: what do they prove? They belong to the category of external evidence. They are direct in that they appeal to the senses. Nicodemus, a ruler of the Jews, who came to Jesus by night, said: "Rabbi, we know that thou art a teacher come from God; for no one can do these signs that thou doest, except God be with him." (John 3: 2.) When Peter and John had healed the lame man at the Beautiful Gate, they were arrested; but the rulers of the Jews, noting their boldness and perceiving that they were unlearned men, conferred among themselves, saying: "What shall we do to these men? for that Indeed a notable miracle hath been wrought through them, is manifest to all that dwell in Jerusalem; and we cannot deny it." (Acts 4: 16.) These are forcible examples of the direct appeal of miracles. Again, miracles are retrospective in that they show the connection of Christ with the miracles and prophecies of the Old Testament. During the conversation with the two disciples in the walk to Emmaus, Jesus said: "O foolish men, and slow of heart to believe in all that the prophets have spoken! Behooved it not the Christ to suffer these things, and to enter into his glory?" (Luke 24: 25, 26.) The next verse is significant: "And beginning from Moses and from all the prophets, he interpreted to them in all the scriptures the things concerning himself." We should bear in mind that the basis of this conversation was concerning the mighty works of Jesus the Nazarene. In the third place, we may say that the miracles were prospective in that they pointed to greater works that would be wrought in Jesus' name.

* * *

Did They Really Occur?

The miracles of Christ were well-attested facts. The proof of their occurrence has kept pace with the everchanging forms of skepticism. Men at one age and another have proposed various objections to their validity, but the defenders of the faith have successfully warded off every attack. Among those who have offered objections to the miracles we may distinguish three schools of criticism. (1) The Rationalistic Theory. The critics of this school, of whom Paulus was the type, endeavored to explain the miracles as ordinary facts either exaggerated or misconceived. They would have us believe that the New Testament writers were a set of Baron Munchausens! For example, the water turned into wine was but a genial way of making a present to the newly married couple; the walking on the sea was really walking on the shore, as seen by the spectators from the lake, the illusion of a mirage; the coin in the fish's mouth was the price of fish caught by the disciples and sold in the market. Dean Mansel very justly remarks that this theory "breaks down under the sheer weight of its cumbrous and awkward explanations." (2) The Mythical Theory. Strauss and his followers may be taken as exponents of this school. They claim that the miracles were metaphor and allegory prosaically turned into fact. Thus the description of Christ's disciples as fishers of men took shape in the stories of the miraculous draught of fishes; the illumination by Christ of the darkened understanding gave rise to the narratives of the opening of blind men's eyes; the healing of the man by the Pool of Bethesda is made out to be a transformed parable of the state of the Jewish people, crippled and restoredfor had not the man been suffering for thirty-eight years, and were not the Israelites thirty-eight years in the wilderness before entering the Promised Land? When we read such far-fetched explanations, we may readily conclude that the mystical school is well named. Indeed, it is ultramystical. (3) The Scientific Theory. During the past century, in every department of natural philosophy and natural science, nothing has been more remarkable than the steady discovery of the unvarying prevalence of laws in accordance with which physical nature uniformly acis. Scientists have achieved some wonderful results. have come to believe that everything must be under the reign of law. There is no room left for miracle. Professor Janus, of Harvard University, resents the suggestion of its possibility, because of "dislike to admit any ultimate factor in things which may rout our prevision or upset the stability of our outlook."

We undoubtedly live in a world where law and order do prevail. In every department of the physical universe there are certain well-defined lines along which things habitually and constantly move. But we also know that, up to a certain point, it is within the power of animate nature, and especially of rational animate nature, to control, supersede, or suspend these laws without violating them. For example, a beaver can build a dam across a stream and check one of the results of the law of gravitation. A Westerner can take a wild horse of the plains and by training make it to become docile and to serve him in ways the very reverse of its original habits. It is certainly not a natural thing that men should fly in aëroplanes over the earth, yet hundreds are doing it every day. Let us not stuitify ourselves by believing that God cannot do what his creatures are doing. He is not so trammeled by the laws of his own making that he cannot interfere with them when for the good of mankind it becomes necessary. To fail to see this only betokens grave insensibility. As Mrs. Browning put it:

Earth's crammed with heaven, And every common bush after with God; But only he who sees takes off his shoes. The rest sit round it, and pluck blackberries.

Every familiar argument against the miracles has been exploded. It is no longer sensible to maintain that the record of the miracles is due to conscious deception or imposture or to assert that they are impossible in the nature of things. Rather would we accept the statement of Professor Huxley that "no one is entitled to say a priori that any given so-called miraculous event is impossible."

The Evangelistic Testimony.

The New Testament writers declare that miraculous acts were wrought by Jesus Christ. Moreover, these acts are ineradicably interwoven with his history. Asking for belief in his miracles is tantamount to asking for belief in Christ himself. The veracity of the record stands or falls with the miracles. Our Savior repeatedly appealed to his works as an evidence of his mission. When John the Baptist, in prison, made the inquiry, "Art thou he that cometh, or look we for another?" Jesus said: "Go and tell John the things which ye hear and see: the blind receive their sight, and the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, and the deaf hear, and the dead are raised up." (Matt. 11: 4, 5.) With impassioned earnestness he said to Philip: "Believe me that I am in the Father, and the Father in me: or else believe me for the very works' sake." (John 14: 11. The details of miracles comprise a large part of the gospel story. He raised the dead, he healed the sick, he restored the sight of the blind in many recorded cases and in some that are not recorded; for it is said frequently that they brought sick people unto him, and that he healed them all. (Matt. 4: 24; 12: 15; 14: 14; 15: 30; 19: 2; Mark 1: 34; 3: 10; Luke 6: 17; 9: 11.) He is declared to have given similar power to his disciples, first to the twelve and then to the seventy. After his ascension the apostles received the power of bestowing this miraculous gift upon whom they laid their hands; so that many others were thus endowed. What a piece of folly for one to accept all of the New Testament except the miracles!

The evidence thus far presented can only be set aside only by supposing a greater miracle than any which the Bible contains. Here we can do no better than to quote the telling and invincible argument of the late Joseph Angus:

If Christ were not from God, we have a Jewish peasant changing the religion of the world, weaving into the story of his life the fulfillment of ancient predictions, and a morality of the purest order, as unlike the traditional teaching of his countrymen as it was superior to the precepts of Gentile philosophy; enduring with composure the most intense suffering, and inducing his followers to submit to similar privations, and many of them to a cruel death, in support, not of opinions, but of the alleged fact of his miraculous resurrection.

We have then these followers, "unlearned men," going forth and discoursing on the sublimest themes, persuading the occupiers of Roman and Grecian cities to cast away their idols, to renounce the religion of their fathers, to reject the instructions of their philosophy, and to receive instead, as a teacher sent from heaven, a Jew of humble station who had been put to a shameful death. And all this mighty transforming influence based upon a series of delusions! (To be continued.)

Distinguishing Between Things That Differ.

BY F. W. SMITH.

It is not infrequently that a failure to distinguish between things that are radically different leads to the injury of others as well as to one's self. Hence, we should be exceedingly careful in our classification of things, putting each in its own place, that no harm or injustice may be done. Much of the unintentional misrepresentation that abounds in the world is due to a failure in this respect. Some are incapable of differentiating where it should be done, and others are so careless in such matters that they often make serious blunders. Again, there are, no doubt, others who purposely make use of language that was neither in the spoken or written word in order to convey a wrong impression.

Now, whether intentional or otherwise, I am absolutely sure a false impression has been created in the minds of some regarding the policy of the Gospel Advocate. The impression has been made that the Gospel Advocate opposes the study and teaching of the prophecies, when, in fact, it has done no such thing. How, then, did such an impression get before the public? By some one or ones failing or deliberately refusing to distinguish between "teaching" the prophecies in the very words of the prophets and the effort to "interpret" or attempt to tell the meaning and application of unfulfilled prophecy. There is the width of the universe between the two things; but by substituting the former for the latter, a false, unjust, and injurious impression has been made against innocent parties. I have been a close reader of the Gospel Advocate for over thirty years, and I have never seen one word in its columns discouraging the study of prophetic writings and the telling what the prophets have written; but the Advocate has, all these years, protested against men trying to tell what no inspired man explained, especially when such interpretations of unfulfilled prophecies were made to sustain doctrines directly opposed to the plain declarations of holy writ. In substituting the word "teach" for "interpret," an entirely different meaning is conveyed to that intended. It may be that some who know better are making a "play" on the word "teach," claiming it to be equivalent to "interpret" or "explain." That, no doubt, is true with reference to any branch of literature with fixed and unvarying rules laid down to govern the teacher in his explanations; but who is so bold as to affirm that such rules were laid down in the Bible to govern one in explaining unfulfilled prophecies?

It took the inspired Peter on the day of Pentecost to explain that the miraculous demonstrations were the fulfillment of the prophetic utterances of the prophet Joel. It required a Philip to explain to the eunuch that the prophecy he was reading had reference to the crucifixion of Christ. Who could ever have known, had not an inspired man explained it, what this meant: "They parted my garments among them, and upon my vesture did they cast lots?" (Ps. 22: 18.) The inspired John explains it thus: "They said therefore one to another, Let us not rend it, but east lots for it, whose it shall be; that the scripture might be fulfilled, which saith, They parted my garments among them, and upon my vesture did they cast lots." Would the Jews ever have known what this meant, had not Christ explained it: "The Spirit of the Lord Jehovah is upon me; because Jehovah hath anointed me to preach good tidings unto the meek; he hath sent me to bind up the broken-hearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives," etc. (Isa. 61: 1-3.) Christ entered a synagogue in Nazareth, and, after reading this passage from Isaiah, said: "To-day hath this scripture been fulfilled in your ears." (See Luke 4: 16-22.) The New Testament abounds with explanations of fulfilled prophecies; and when we read and study the Old Testament prophets in connection with the New Testament, and witness with what remarkable precision and minute detail so many of them have been fulfilled, our faith is made stronger in the divine inspiration of the Bible. What student of the prophets could have told what this meant: "He keepeth all his bones; not one of them is broken?" (Ps. 34: 20.) Those living since the crucifixion of Christ and the New Testament record can tell, but why? Because an inspired man has explained it: "For these things came to pass, that the scripture might be fulfilled, A bone of him shall not be broken." (John 19: 36.) These divine explanations and certain historic facts which cannot be accounted for on any other ground than the fulfillment of prophecy are the only fixed rules by which any one can explain such matters.

There are very many Old Testament prophecies and some in the New Testament with no inspired or undoubted historic explanation of them, and no man has the right to assume that he knows what God has not revealed. To thus speculate about these unfulfilled prophecies, building doctrines and theories on what man thinks about them, is the thing the Gospel Advocate opposes and what it will continue to oppose so long as it lives. Charles T. Russell's stock in trade was his interpretation of unfulfilled prophecies, and he kept a great many people confused and disturbed about the coming of Christ. His false interpretations of these prophecies constantly involved him in trouble. His final and most positive date for the personal return of Christ was October, 1914. That date has passed and Russell himself has gone to his reward, but Christ has not come. Blackstone, in his book, "Jesus is Coming," a book based upon interpretations of unfulfilled prophecies, has Jesus, when he comes, establishing an earthly kingdom with headquarters in Jerusalem; the temple is to be rebuilt and much of Judaism reëstablished.

A brother recently asked: "What should be the attitude of others toward us who believe in studying and teaching the prophecies?" I respectfully submit that that is not the issue; and had I been present when the question was propounded, I most certainly would have corrected it. Let all who speak or write of the issue and the thing that has caused division and strife among brethren state it fairly. Cease misrepresenting and injuring others by raising a false issue.

"Preachers and Preaching." No. 2.

BY AN OBSERVER.

Editors of the Gospel Advocate, Nashville, Tenn.—My Dear Brethren: Since you were so kind as to publish last week some of my observations, will you permit me to continue a little further?

Under the above heading, Brother C. E. Holt wrote an article, which appeared in your paper of March 11, in which he says:

Whatever may be said about all Christians being priests of equal rank in the church of God, it is undeniably and incontrovertibly true that God has always recognized a distribution of work among his children of equal rank. In apostolic times there were men who gave themselves wholly to the "ministry of the word." This was of such importance that seven men were chosen to aid the apostles in temporal things in the Jerusalem church, so that the apostles would not be hindered in their preaching—that they might give themselves wholly to the "ministry of the word."

When I read this, I wondered why some of you editors did not puncture it in places. I heard a clear-headed preacher of ability and experience, of goodness and no little knowledge of the Bible, say that had "D. L." been alive and back in his vigor, he would not have allowed that to pass unnoticed. But pardon me, I mean this as no reflection upon any of you editors. You have plenty to do, and cannot he held responsible for all that your contributors say. I mention this to show what thoughtful and good men are thinking of Brother Holt's language. What does "rank," as he uses it, mean? What is meant by God's "children of equal rank?" Some of God's children are babes, some are older, and some are full-grown; some, therefore, know more of the truth than others and have greater ability; but I have yet to learn that he places them in different ranks.

The Bible does say that all Christians are priests unto God—"are built up a spiritual house, to be a holy priest-hood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God through Jesus Christ"—"a holy priesthood" (1 Pet. 2: 5, 9); "a kingdom, to be priests" unto God (Rev. 1: 6). These priests have all the rights, privileges, honors, duties, and blessings of priests, one as much as another. To be sure, then, they are all "of equal rank," and, if so, they cannot be of different ranks; hence, it is useless to speak of "rank" at all, since the Holy Spirit does not. The only "distribution of work" God makes "among his children of equal rank" is not according to classes, orders, or different ranks, but is according to ability. All are not of equal age and have not the same ability. Every one must serve as he has opportunity and ability.

The apostles did serve tables, or did distribute the contributions of the church as each person had need, until their work became too much for them; then they turned over that of serving tables to others. They did not serve tables, not because it did not belong to their rank to serve tables, but because they had so much other work to do. They had the ability to do this other work, while others could serve tables. But one of the apostles, long after this, did work with his own hands at different times and different places, and not as "an incident or an accident," either. So it was not outside the rank of apostles to soil the hands with work.

What, then, is the truth of the matter to-day? Preachers may have so much preaching to do and so much work connected with their preaching that they cannot stop to collect and distribute food and raiment and other necessary comforts to the poor, or to manage orphanages, widows' homes, and teach school; others who cannot accomplish so much by preaching, in the commonly accepted meaning of the word, can do all this. But the difference is one of ability and not of rank. This being true, there is no such rank of men named in the New Testament as the ones who walk the streets and ramble around through the week, "all dressed up and nowhere to go," and who preach only twice on Sundays and expect a liberal support from the churches. Neither is this giving themselves "wholly to the ministry of the word." Far from it.

Brother Holt says some other strange things-to wit:

It is true that men may and do follow secular callings and also do considerable preaching; but this is not God's way of evangelizing the world. Paul's case of making tents is much abused. That was an incident or an accident, and is not to be exalted into a law for preachers.

. In a previous part of his article he says it has been said in your paper:

That preachers should have a secular business from which they should derive their support, and preach the gospel as a "side line," to use a commercial expression—that is, a preacher should farm, teach school, or do something else to make a living, and go out on Lord's days and after crops are "laid by" and do all the preaching he can when he has nothing else to do.

Was such as this ever taught in the columns of your paper? If so, then some one of the editors should have punctured it, too, and taught the author of it the way of the Lord more perfectly. No man who understands the gospel of Christ would ever teach such as this. But is Brother Holt not mistaken in this declaration? Who has so taught?

Really, I cannot tell where the difference between "secular" and religious or sacred comes in.

Brother Holt admits that men who "make tents" may "do considerable preaching," but declares "this is not God's way of evangelizing the world." It was a very "considerable" part of God's way in Paul's day. God sent out the apostles and early Christians into all the world to "preach the gospel to the whole creation," and before Paul was beheaded he said the gospel had been "preached in all creation under heaven." (Col. 1: 23; see also Col. 1: 6; Rom. 10: 18.) I think this was embraced in God's way, and I cannot think he made any mistake. Paul further says that "from Jerusalem, and round about even unto Illyricum," he had "fully preached the gospel of Christ;" making it his "aim so to preach the gospel, not where Christ was already named," that he "might not build upon another man's foundation;" but that he tried to carry out the scripture which says,

They shall see, to whom no tidings of him came, and they who have not heard shall understand; and that now, "having no more any place" in those regions where the gospel had not been preached, he wanted to go to Rome and thence into Spain. He wanted some fruit of the gospel first in Rome, and by the church in Rome "to be brought on" his way into Spain. (Rom. 15: 18-25.) From all this it appears that one tent-making preacher really did "do considerable preaching." I think, too, that Paul meant he wanted the church in Rome to support him on his way into Spain.

We must not be one-sided; or partisan; or prejudiced; or dogmatic; or ignore, or even overlook, any inspired example, such as Paul and Jesus; or neglect to study and to teach anything and everything God gives on any given subject. Again, Paul "labored more abundantly than all the apostles;" yet not he, but the grace of God which was upon him. If he did not follow "God's way of evangelizing the world," why was the grace of God upon him? But if he did not follow God's way, then he violated that way. Who will say he did? Evidently some of these good brethren have not studied this question sufficiently, or else they have not the spirit of Paul, which is is the Spirit of Christ, which is the spirit of the New Testament.

And again, Paul desired "to preach the gospel even unto parts beyond," the Corinthians, "and not to glory in another's province in regard of things ready to hand." (2 Cor. 10: 16.) This was not "an incident or an accident." Paul was not seeking churches made ready to his hand, which he could "serve" as "the evangelist," or "the minister," or "the pastor," in the "division of work" which God "always recognized" "among his children of equal rank." But this is the tendency now. Preachers want things made ready to hand. Not only so, but they virtually demand so much pay. This old human nature seems on the way to Rome with her pope, prelates, clergymen, and other ranks of workers and officials. Twenty or twenty-five years ago there went out from the schools a number of preachers into the waste places, or into the byways and hedges, to seek the lost and to build up churches of Christ, and they accomplished no little; but now the trend of these schools is to furnish preachers for the churches made ready to hand, and they are "locating" here and there. Whether good or harm in the end will be accomplished is the question. Good only will be accomplished if the entire Bible, with all its principles of justice and mercy, honesty and integrity, industry and economy, square and fair dealing, the Golden Rule, righteousness and godliness, love for God and men, as the will of God, is taught; harm, if professional "ministers," or professional "evangelists," or professional "singers," or other professional workers are made.

Suppose, as Brother Holt suggests, we place some of his strange utterances alongside of Paul's inspired teaching and inspired example and "see the difference."

If we take, not a part, but all that Paul says about his making tents, or working with his own hands, and consider his reasons for doing so, and imbibe his spirit, can it then be said we abuse the case? Does he not abuse it who falls to see why Paul made tents and fails to imbibe Paul's spirit in making tents, and makes his declarations so wide of the mark? (More anon.)

"Harps of God." (Rev. 5: 8; 14: 2; 15: 2.) BY U. G. WILKINSON.

Dear Brother Kurfees: I have just read "Instrumental Music," as published by you in the Gospel Advocate, by M. H. Armour, in the Southern Christian Courier, and your answer; and while your answer is altogether sufficient for his apparent sophistry-for I think I have not seen an article on any subject more inconclusive, more filled with sophistry, than this one taken from the Courier -yet I trust you will permit me to disagree with you, if you even intend to imply that any passage in Revelation teaches instrumental music even by implication anywhere in heaven or earth. The very sophistry of Brother Armour's reasoning would be sufficient to me, had I no other reasons, to prove the unscripturalness of instrumental music in church worship. None of the instruments in Old Testament times were ever used in the sanctuary of the temple; hence, if authority for such music at all in New Testament times, it would be in other places than the worship of the church. But let us examine the passages in

- 1. The passages are the utterances of prophecies, things that must be future (Rev. 4: 1), and hence the "harps" are symbols, not real harps, just as the "beasts" of Revelation and other things are symbols.
- 2. The "living creatures" and others who used these harps are invariably said to "sing," never to play; while David and others in Old Testament times are said to play and not to sing.
- 3. These instruments are said by the prophets to be "harps of God;" so that, instead of their being musical instruments invented by men, such as organs, pianos, cornet horns, etc., the statement proves the exact contrary.

With these thoughts before us, let us remember that the worship John in his vision beheld must have been at some future age on the earth, not in heaven. Let us also remember that in the New Testament there are only two musical instruments authorized in the worship; these are the human voice or lips (Heb. 13: 15) and the "heart" (Eph. 5: 15). Surely, then, the very people that John saw singing the "new song" of "Moses and the Lamb," "having the harps of God," were that company in future agesyea, in our own age-who refuse to use men's inventions with which to praise God, but "offer a sacrifice of praise to him, the fruit of our lips, giving thanks in his name," making melody in the heart to the Lord," the heart and lips or voice being the harps of God. Is not the human voice a harp? It certainly is, symbolically, if not literally, But it is literally the most perfect harp. And it is the harp of God, too, and the only musical instrument he ever gave to man. And what a wonderfully perfect musical instrument it is! For it is, with proper cultivation, not only capable of producing the most beautiful musical tones, but it is the only instrument that can be made to produce vocal, human language, the most wonderful of all sounds. Besides, almost everything that we do in the church as worship is done with this "harp of God," the human voice. With it we not only sing and make melody in the heart, but with it we pray, preach, teach, exhort, admonish, reprove, rebuke, read-that is, translate the written page

Surely this company of people that John in his vision saw were those people in this and all other ages who, as he says (Rev. 15: 2, 3), had "gotten the victory over the beast, and over his image," etc .- that is, the apostate and false systems of religion, innovations, doctrines of men, etc.and with the harps of God, which was their own hearts and voices, were praising God by singing "the song of Moses and the Lamb "-that is, teaching the pure word of God, the Bible, which is the song of Moses and the Lamb, since Moses is mediator of the Old Testament and Christ is the Lamb of the New Testament-I say, teaching it with their voices and practicing it in sincerity of heart. We are taught that false worshipers draw nigh with the lips, but their heart is far from God.

How beautifully and appropriately do these scriptures prophetically symbolize the present day "reformation," so called. After many ages in which the church is seen by the prophet in his visions "in the wilderness," corrupted by doctrines and commandments of men; the gospel perverted; the worship, instead of the simple acts so beautiful and edifying in the gospel, bunglesome ceremonials and discordant sounds produced by inventions of men-1 say that after many ages of this awful apostasy and abomination the prophet again sees a people of God, a company that have gotten the victory over these things, and with the harps of God they again worship him as he directs in his word. Instead of anything for musical instruments invented by men here, it is all against it,

And let me conclude by saying, brother. God has given you an instrument here with which to make your musicyour voice-and he commands you to use it. Then do as he directs; and when you get to heaven-which you will, if you do so-he will there furnish you the kind of instrument he wants you to have, and there he will also teach you how he wants you to use it, not leaving you to man's opinions.

Introducing Christ Into Industry.

"Take your troubles to the Lord-he's your Big Boss," was the counsel recently received and acted upon by a body of mill workers in Wheeling, W. Va., who were on the verge of going out on a strike; and in Cleveland, Ohio, a dispute between Swift & Co. and five hundred and fifty packing-house employees was settled after the strikers and the management of the plant had listened to a homily on the love of God and the necessity of returning to his teachings by John J. Walsh, Conciliation Commissioner of the United States Department of Labor. "We must get back to God's teachings, and must have brotherly love in our hearts to make the world's great undertakings go forward," exhorted Mr. Walsh. In the West Virginia town applica-tion of the principles of the Sermon on the Mount to the solution of modern industrial problems has been suggested to the Ohio Valley Trades and Labor Assembly by Will H. Colvig, a locally prominent business man known as the "peacemaker," and that body has definitely indorsed the teachings of Christ as a platform on which both capital and labor can meet and agree. Mr. Colvig has been successful in many instances in settling labor troubles to the satisfaction of both employer and employee, and on several occasions he has found a scriptural truth coupled with a mild exhortation to be sufficient to persuade an agitator to turn from his self-appointed mission of stirring the ashes of discontent. The Golden Rule often has been suggested as a means toward bringing capital and labor to a common understanding; but in Wheeling and its vicinage it seems for the first time to have been put into practice with effective result. There it is planned to rely on this principle and on the virtue of brotherly love to compose the differences which may arise between employers and the workingmen. The local press generally agree that the Christian doctrine may be found to be permanently practicable, and one paper suggests that its local enunciator be placed on the next Federal Industrial Commission. The resolutions adopted by the labor assembly announce:

First, Be it hereby resolved, that we, the duly elected delegates representing all of the organized crafts of the Wheeling district, do hereby unanimously declare it to be our belief that the teachings of Christ constitute a platform upon which all men can agree.

"Secondly, That we believe they can be applied to modern industrial problems.

Thirdly. That we will cooperate with those who will join with us in an earnest endeavor to apply his teachings in the Wheeling district,

"Fourthly, As further evidence of our sincerity, we have duly appointed a committee of three to confer and decide what methods shall be pursued."

The local and neighboring labor press warmly commend the movement, the Columbus (Ohio) Labor News remark-

"This is perhaps the first time that either capital or
"This is perhaps the first time that either capital or of Jesus Christ. And yet it is simply the fundamental principles of the great American Federation of Labornamely, the second command as taught by Jesus: 'Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself.' On such a stand labor and capital would have no trouble to get together, and with the principle carried out by labor, capital cannot resist the influence and would have to make conditions right, both of wages and hours of employment, because the publie would not stand for them to do otherwise. mend the Wheeling Central body for their stand on the teachings of Jesus Christ, and know with such teachings carried out in spirit and practice they will win.'

The Wheeling News thinks:

"Criticism of such a movement will come only from communists or soviets, and fortunately few of them are found in Christian institutions. The principle of doing unto others as you would be done by is a pretty good one to follow and its observance would tend to remove many difficulties, industrial or otherwise, and a little closer attention to the principles of Christianity in our daily life would make a world of things look brighter.

Opportunity to test the practicability of the Christian principle in settling labor disputes is now presented in the strike of the teamsters in Wheeling, who are demanding a minimum wage of twenty-four dollars a week. They are having every morning religious services conducted by a regularly ordained minister. "They have to strike be-cause the employers will not act as their brothers' keepers," says the Wheeling Majority, official labor organ, and the only labor paper in that section of the Ohio Valley. reminding its readers that "on the theory that we are our keepers, we have in Wheeling to-day at least thirty-two churches, worth more than $3,000,000, maintain upwards of fifty salaried ministers and other church workers with an annual pay roll of $100,000, and pay out upwards of fifty salaried ministers every year, to keep $150,000." Continuing: to keep the churches comfortable, another

The teamsters are more consistent. There are a few highly paid men among them-one or two who receive forty dollars a week; but they have gone to the aid of their brothers who receive less than twenty-four dollars: they recognize that they are their brothers' keepers.

The employers have been going to church on Sunday, and singing their psaims, and, if they thought at all about such a secular thing as the wages of their workers, they have dismissed the teamsters from their minds as 'roughnecks,' men outside the pale of consideration, thus violating another express command of the Leader in whose teachings they have built $3,000,000 worth of churches and are spending $250,000 a year, $20,830 per month, $231 per eight-hour day, $28.93 per hour, about a half a dollar a

The teamsters are accepting the teachings of Jesus at their face value, with no mental reservations. laid their case before the churches of this city. signified their willingness to test out the declaration of the Ohio Valley Trades and Labor Assembly that the teachings of Jesus can be applied to modern industrial problems. They have invited ministers of all denominations to address their meetings; they have attended services in churches; they have proved that they are not 'rough-necks,' or irresponsible disturbers of the peace; proved that they are merely American workingmen, trying to be husbands, and citizens, and fathers of the children who are to be the citizens of the next generation.

The little-minded may say they are doing this for effect, for an ulterior motive; the ministers who have addressed them, who have met with them-and studied them, will not say that. But how about this: One of their members died, leaving a widow sick in bed, with a week-old baby that afterwards died, and two other helpless young children; it requires no imagination to picture the condition of this little family left suddenly without the protection of the breadwinner who earned less than twenty-four dollars per week when he lived and worked. Three million dollars' worth of churches in Wheeling did not know about it, though, nor did $350,000-per-year worth of church workers; the golden sun that streamed through the stained glass of the churches did not reach around the alley corners into that bare sick room. But the teamsters knew about it, they appointed themselves their brothers' keepers, they created a benefit fund by immediate and unanimous action, and they assessed themselves one dollar each, and took the cash to the widow.

"The teamsters have issued a challenge to every church, to every minister, and to every member of a church in Wheeling, they can answer that challenge only by practicing what they preach, by doing what the Master they follow told them to do."-Literary Digest.

III. THE SABBATH.

- (1) Moral Law and the Sabbath. You introduce the Sabbath by a long quotation from Grubbs' Commentary on the imperishableness of the moral law. Again, I repeat, this is not a part of the Bible. It is strange you take so much space trying to prove from uninspired writing what you said was to be what was written in the "roll of the Book," the Bible. It is a waste of time with me to quote uninspired men. I want to know what God says in the Bible. And on the Sabbath being a part of the imperishable moral law God says nothing, according to the evidence given.
- (2) "The Sabbath instituted at creation and not at Sinai." (Page 14.) Gen. 1: 1 to 2: 3 says God created all things in six days, and rested the seventh day, blessed and hallowed it, because he rested on it. But this does not say God commanded man to keep it. And there is no record of any man keeping it for twenty-five hundred years. The next mention of the Sabbath is Ex. 16: 4-30. When God sent manna, he commanded the people to gather twice as much on the sixth day as they gathered on other days, for on the seventh day there would be none. The people disobeyed and went out to gather it on the seventh day. This argues that they were not used to resting on the seventh day, but kept it as they did other days.
- (3) The Sabbath given at Sinai. (Ex. 20: 8-11.) The reason God chose this day instead of one of the other days was because he had rested on the seventh day. The reason for commanding the Jews to keep it is given in the second reading of the law. Deut. 5: 12-15: "Thou shalt remember that thou wast a servant in the land of Egypt, and Jehovah thy God brought thee out thence by a mighty hand and by an outstretched arm: therefore Jehovah thy God commanded thee to keep the Sabbath day." It was a memorial of their deliverance from Egyptian bondage, and, therefore, a sign between them and God of their appreciation of God's beneficence toward them. By keeping it they showed their appreciation of what God had done for them; by disregarding it they showed their disregard for God and his goodness to them. But the reason given for keeping it shows the Sabbath day was not intended for any other people than Israel. Gentiles could never keep it for the reason God gave, as they were not in bondage in Egypt. The Sabbath was given to the Jews, and no other nation but the Jews, "the roll of the Book" being our guide.
- (4) Without stopping to inquire when the Sabbath was changed, we accept it as a fact, and strive to make the Bible support us in the matter." (Page 7.) Instead of trying to make the Bible support us, we ought to try to make ourselves support the Bible. The difference between the two is the difference between sectarianism and Christianity, between error and truth. You next make four statements that you seem to put down as axioms, not needing proof.
- "First, the New Testament is not a book of law." It is not law as the law of Moses, and yet it is called "law" in - a few places. (John 1: 17; 13; 34; Rom. 8; 2; 1 Cor. 9; 21; Gal. 6: 2; James 1: 21-25; 2: 12.) "Second, the ten commands involve the character of God and cannot pass away." What you say cannot pass away, God says did pass away. (2 Cor. 3: 7; Gal. 3: 19:25; Col. 2: 14; Heb. 9: 15; 10: 9.) "Third, Christ inspired all the scriptures." (Mal. 4: 4; Matt. 17: 4, 5; John 12: 48-50; Heb. 1: 1, 2.) God gave the law by Moscs, but gospel truth by Christ, "Fourth, had none of the commandments been referred to by the Lord, . . . they were still binding." What! "In the roll of the Book it is written" has falled to find it in the roll, has failed to find it in Stone, Campbell, or Grubbs, or Summerville, and has to fall back on his own reason for proof. This is not inspired, either. Nadab and Abihu could have reasoned this way. (Lev. 10: 1-10.) The old rule, "Where the Bible speaks, we speak," gives way to the new rule, "Where the Bible is silent, we speak." 2 John 9-11 contains God's decision on this point. Your four axioms go to atoms in the hands of God.

- (5) "'A shadow of things to come.' (Col. 2: 14-17.)" (Page 7.) This scripture states that the law, written by Moses at the dictation of God, was nailed to the cross and blotted out. The obligation to keep the Sabbath day of the decalogue was blotted out at the death of Christ. And Christians are commanded of God to let no man judge them in respect of a Sabbath day. The very thing you are trying to do to bind the obligation to keep the Sabbath on man is the thing God tells Christians not to let you do. The law was a shadow of things to come: the tabernacle, a shadow of the church (Matt. 16: 18, 19; Acts 2: 1-17; 15: 16; Heb. 8: 2; 10: 21; 1 Thess. 3: 15); the hollest heaven (Heb. 9: 24); the Sabbath, the eternal rest in the presence of God in heaven (Heb. 4: 1-12; Rev. 21: 25). After the days of work on earth, one eternal day of rest in heaven. Your quotation, Heb. 9: 8-12, contrasts this typical service of the law with the real service of the gospel of Christ. And your quotation, Lev. 23: 37, 38, should be extended to the whole chapter, in which, as in Num. 28 and 29, there is not shown, as you say, the distinction between days called "sabbaths." They refer out to the relative value of the days, but to the comparative number of offerings to be made on the days.
- (6) (a) "The early church and the Sabbath." (Luke 8: 11; Matt. 3: 6; John 5: 16, 17." (Page 8.) You add: "The Savior spent much of his time advocating reform in the keeping of the Sabbath. Would he have taken such pains to reform an institution that he intended to abolish within a few days." The Savior kept the Sabbath himself according to the law of Moses that he came to fulfill. The pains he took in his teaching on the Sabbath was to show his accusers that he was not breaking the Sabbath laws of the Bible, but only their traditions. As nearly as can be got at the time, his last talk on the Sabbath was about one year before his death. Nothing in his teaching or life shows he intended the Sabbath to be more permanent than other parts of the law.
- (b) "Among the controversial matters that had to be decided by the leaders of the early church, is there a solitary word in the record to show that the Sabbath question was ever brought up for discussion?" The Sabbath was a part of the law. The question of keeping the law was brought up and decided. (Acts 15: 5, 10, 19-29.) The decision of the Holy Ghost in this instance, if followed (and you say you were led by it), would settle the Sabbath question with you also. And you would need to write another tract, reversing your statements in this, and send it to as many as you sent this one.
- (c) "Is there a solitary word in the record . . . that the apostles or any Christians were ever accused of breaking the Sabbath? Not one!" Acts 18: 12, 13; 21: 28 show the apostles were charged with breaking the law, of which the Sabbath was a part. Gal. 6: 12 (5: 3); Heb. 10: 32-34 show Christians were persecuted for the same reason, not keeping the law.

(d) "Would those who sought the life of the Savior have remained silent had the whole church of Christ been wholesale Sabbath breakers?" Within one year of Pentecost the entire church were fleeing for their lives through Judea and Samaria from the persecuting Jews. There is no proof to the contrary that this is not one of the things that aroused the Jews against the church.

(e) "The early Christian church observed the Sabbath of the Lord," you say. You do not quote the "roll of the Book" here, nor Grubbs, nor Stone, nor Campbell. Again you fall back on your own opinion as authority. Our agreement is, you are not to give me human opinions, but the Bible. Then, according to the proof offered, we have no record in the Bible of the early church of Christ, in the days of the apostles, ever keeping the Sabbath day.

(f) "Paul and his companions were frequently in the synagogue on the Sabbath day." Acts 13: 14-49 shows Paul and his companions went where the people assembled in the synagogue on the Sabbath and preached. The Jews go out. The Gentiles request them to preach the next Sabbath at the same place. You say: "If the first day was observed, why did not the apostles say, 'Come to-morrow, Sunday, instead of waiting another week?'" This was their first sermon in that city. Paul and Barnabas the only Christians there. No church there. The synagogue was not theirs. It was the place, and the Sabbath was the time the synagogue was open. Hence, the Gentiles ask the next meeting time to hear them again. But verse 43 shows that after the congregation was dismissed many followed Paul and Barnabas, and they spoke to them. The record does not state how often they spoke to them between this Sabbath and the next Sabbath, when they could speak in the synagogue again. But the next Sabbath ended their work in the synagogue, and there is no further mention of the Sabbath in connection with their preaching and work, which continued for some time and spread through all that region. In verse 46, giving their reason for going to the synagogue, Paul said to the Jews: "It was necessary that the word of God should first be spoken to you." This, then, was their reason for going to the synagogue on the Sabbath day. Not because they kept the Sabbath, but they went to the synagogue on the Sabbath to preach the gospel to the Jews. The same is true of Acts 16: 13; 17: 1, 2; 18: 1-4. You say: "His work at Corinth lasted one and one-half years, and the record leads us to the conclusion that all this time the apostle was laboring with his hands during the six working days and resting and preaching on the Sabbath." And yet there is not a suggestion of the Sabbath after he left the synagogue, and not a suggestion of work at tent-making after Silas and Timothy came to him. But he does say in the "roll of the Book," which you claim to present. (2 Cor. 11: 7-9.) Acts 19: 8-11 says he spoke three months in the synagogue at Ephesus, then he separated those who had become Christians from those who met at the synagogue, and in the school of Tyrannus he preached daily for two years. At the same time he spoke by night somewhere. (Acts 20: 31.) The record of the "roll of the Book" shows the apostles spoke everywhere and on every day they could find an audience. There is not the slightest proof in all the record that apostle, preacher, or Christian ever kept the Sabbath day according to the law of Moses.

(7) Conclusion. After going carefully over your references about the Sabbath, we find: (a) There is not a command given to Christians anywhere "in the role of the Book," the Bible, to keep the Sabbath day. (b) There is not an example in the New Testament, from the day of Pentecost, when the gospel was first given to man to the end of Revelation, of any apostles or Christians keeping the Sabbath day. (c) There is no principle of the New Testament requiring Christians to keep the Sabbath. (d) There is no necessary inference of their keeping it. With the law of ten commands and all others abolished, and Christians straitly charged if they go back to the law they fall from grace and are severed from Christ, and specially charged to not let any man judge them in respect of the Sabbath, and no command, example, principle, or inference for keeping the Sabbath day, certainly no loyal subject of Christ could even think of keeping the Sabbath day.

"No rest this side the grave, By Satan's forces driven; No rest God's mighty hosts may have In bringing souls to heaven.

"A few more meetings blest,
Shall cheer us on our way,
And we shall reach the endless rest,
The eternal Sabbath day."

Preachers.

I see much in the papers of late about preachers as distinguished from other Christians. Writers speak of a "dearth of preachers," "self-sacrificing preachers," "preachers of the Pauline type," "preachers who are preaching for the money there is in it," etc. Why thus distinguish the preacher from the "laity," as if the salvation of the world depended solely on the preacher? Why not speak of a "dearth of Christians," "self-sacrificing Christians," "Christians of the Pauline type," and "Christians who are in it for the money there is in it?" So to distinguish the preacher makes it appear that he is the big figure in the salvation of the world, and, therefore, carries the greater part of the responsibility for man's salvation, and smacks of the old clerical idea handed down to us from Rome.

When a man takes up the work of preaching the gospel, It does not increase his responsibility, only as to what he preaches. He faces the same general obligations that any other Christian does. Like all other Christians, he is under obligation to Jehovah to use his talents in his calling to the honor and glory of God. He is under no obligation to make any greater sacrifices than any other Christian. He is under no more obligation to render himself homeless and penniless and to provide nothing for old age than any other Christian. He is under no more obligation to surrender his independence and reduce himself to poverty and make appeals to the brethren far and near for a support, and then in old age to become an object of charity, than his brethren are. I have often thought of what an aspect we would present if every preacher should start out without any plan and keep himself in straitened circumstances, and depend on making broadcast appeals and the haphazard responses thereto for a support. Suppose all the brethren should do this. Who would be left to furnish the finances? Money or its equivalent is an indispensable factor in all the undertakings of man, whether it be running a farm or preaching the gospel.

When a young man chooses preaching as his life work, it is his primary object to advance the cause of Christ, not merely because he is a preacher, but because he is a Christian; and so should it be the primary object of any other Christian to advance the cause of Christ in whatever calling he may choose, not because of his calling, but because he is a Christian. The preacher is like all other Christians; he has the question of support for himself and family confronting him every day of his life. The demands of this question must be met that he may be able successfully to push the cause of Christ. What shall he do about it? I would first say: Exercise good sense, and he will not miss the mark. Like any other Christian, he will have to be governed by his surroundings. Paul did this when he went to Corinth. To provide for his support, he went into business with Aquila and Priscilla (Acts 18:

2, 3) and thus maintained his independence, and supplied his needs till the work made it necessary for other churches to send to his needs. From this example we see that a preacher may supply his need, when it is necessary, by working at some business. As to how much of his time he shall give to a secular calling depends on how much support he gets from those who are equally responsible with him for the spread of the gospel. If he can live on the support he gets, then God has ordained that he should so live (1 Cor. 9: 14); but if it is necessary for him to work at some business, he has the apostolic example to justify him in so doing.

Some insist that it is wrong to make any definite arrangements with a preacher as to how much he shall receive for his work. Such a course is not sensible, in the first place, and it is not necessary when there are any brethren who can and who intend to support him in the work; neither is it treating the preacher as the Golden Rule requires. For none of the brethren would be willing to work at any secular calling without some understanding as to what they should receive. It is insisted that the preacher should trust the Lord for his pay. True, and so should all other Christians, and God's promises apply no more to the preacher's support than they do to the business man's support; and the preacher is under no more obligation to labor without any idea as to what he shall receive than the Christian who follows a secular calling. Preachers should preach for the good they may do, and not merely for the money there is in it. The preacher who makes money his first consideration cannot be depended on to be loyal to truth and righteousness and is not worthy of the confidence and support of the brethren. But he has as much right to make money-getting and money-keeping the first consideration as any other Christian. The Christian that farms merely for the money there is in it, or merchandises for the money there is in it, or follows any other calling merely for money, is as much at fault as the Christian who preaches for the pay he can get out of it.

But few, If any, Christians, if asked what their calling is, would think to say, "I am a Christian." They would say, "I am a farmer;" or, "I am a merchant;" or, "I am a preacher." This is because these things are first in their minds. If they should think to say, "I am a Christian," they might further be asked: "What branch of the service are you in?" If the answer should be, "I am a farmer." It would be understood that he was farming to advance his calling Christianity; or if the answer should be, "I am a preacher," it would mean that he preaches to advance Christianity; and thus it should be. If each Christian were deeply and seriously impressed with the fact that his calling in life is that of a Christian, and that his secular interests are but side lines that must be secondary and tributary to Christianity, then the farmer would farm solely to advance Christianity, the merchant sell goods to advance the cause of Christ, just as the preacher should preach the gospel with the sole purpose of advancing the cause of Christ. Then God's blessings would attend our efforts, the cause of Christ would prosper as never before, and there would be less reason for gloomy apprehensions about a "dearth of preachers" or other evils .- R. N. Moody, in Gospel Advance.

Wanted-A Lead.

Is there not something among us religious people at the present time which is singularly unimaginative, uncourageous, and, in the ultimate issue, unpractical? The moment is ripe "all along the line" for a spiritual revival more glorious in its promise of permanency and achievement than at any other period of history.

And yet—and yet! Well, a faith stunned is better than a faith dead—but it should be quickly recuperative! We cannot afford to wait on events. A new era is inevitable.

If Christianity is a passive witness of its construction, Christianity is likely to be negligible in its subsequent direction. If our religious leaders now exhibit hesitancy and impotence, there are other forces, haply about to receive power, which are ready, with an all too savage impatience, to thrust aside the counsels of true Christian brotherhood.

It is an extraordinary and disquieting symptom of our own feebleness that the cynicism of the time should be allowed to assume so great a degree of plausibility. The lessons of the war, with considerable ingenuity, are being made accusative of the Christian faith, whereas they are clearly illustrative of what happens to mankind when Christianity receives the military command, "Dismiss!"

Surely the lesson of the war is that that command, if ever it dare again be uttered, must never again be obeyed. The failure of the past was the failure of diplomacy and politics minus Christianity. Now all hesitancy should be cast aside, and it should be made abundantly clear that Christianity can offer the world a program for the best of all reasons—it has a program to offer! A program, moreover, with a greater power than merely statutory obligations, forcible as these may be; a program which is more genuinely redemptive of humanity than anything else which has ever been planned.

We have to-day statesmen who are Christians, Yes; I suppose so. But we need rather Christians who are statesmen-men who will visualize for us a new era founded upon the principles of divine revelation. And why not? The essential reality of a Christian impressionism is the one thing needed to give to the League of Nations a prestige and an authority which shall lead out militarism to the execution it has so richly deserved. The League of Nations embodies an idea as distinctively Christian as the emancipation of slaves or any of the great causes of human liberty which awoke the flames of sacred passion and fealty in the besoms of our forefathers. The League is in jeopardy to-day precisely because this fact is not being made dominant to the public mind. Presented rather as a political expedient, it is at once exposed and endangered by political malevolence. It is evident that if it cannot guarantee international good will it can never successfully exert international authority. Ineffectual intentions do but invite the fate of the Hague Conferences. As a weapon of convenience in the hands of victorious allies who desire immediate zest from the wastages of war, it can at best only temporize with history. But surely it stands for more-for very much more-than this, It is giving a practical shape to a principle direct from the mind of God. It is a plan for securing peace-for us, for our children, for our children's children, for all humankind for evermore.

The late German empire was an evil thing through and through. What made it so? Militarism. If the clean winds of a real human emancipation are to sweep through the new era, militarism must go, and the churches should no longer tremble to say so.

The nation, no less than the churches, needs a lead in these matters—some silver-tongued orator or rugged Abraham Lincoln, wise enough to know that the precepts of the New Testament contain truths sufficient to lead us into paths of national righteousness and international fraternity.

Is there no statesman who will be sensitive to the hunger of many hearts and visualize the possibilities of strong Christian guidance, and beseech God to touch his lips as with a live coal from off his altar?

In any event, it seems evident to me that in the world's history doors are now open for Christianity which Time must soon close if we do not choose to enter in. Why do we tarry?—"A Demobilized Brother," in the Bible Advocate.

AT HOME AND ABROAD

After all has been said, eternity is the great remedy for time; heaven is the cure of earth.-William T. Ellis.

John M. Rice commends the brethren at Duncan, Ariz., and asks that their appeal for funds for a meetinghouse be heard.

T. M. Carney writes from San Angelo, Texas: "Our prospects here are encouraging. Cled E. Wallace will begin our protracted meeting on June 13."

We hear good reports from the Nashville meetings. H. H. Adamson is in the second week at Pilcher Avenue, and C. M. Pullias continues with fine interest at Lawrence

Nashville Christians are looking forward with pleasure to C. R. Nichol's meeting in Nashville. He will begin at Foster Street Church in Northeast Nashville on Sunday, May 2. Brother Nichol has recovered from a very severe

From Cled E. Wallace, Weatherford, Texas, April 19: "Five additions-two baptisms-at the regular services yesterday, an aftermath of the excellent meeting G. Dallas Smith conducted for us recently. The church is in good condition.

From William P. Walker, Clarksville, Tenn., Route 4, April 21: "We had two additions at Oakwood, Montgomery County, last Sunday—one by statement and one from the Methodist Church. I would also state that Sister Walker's health is no better."

From W. A. Cameron, Port Orange, Fla., April 23: "I began a meeting here last Sunday. This is a new place. There never has been any congregation here, but the prospects are encouraging. There have been two additions, pects are encouraging. and I think there will be others."

Charles Holder writes from Bridgeport, Ala., April 21: "I am asking the churches in Middle Tennessee where I have meetings promised for this year to secure some one else for these meetings. I am doing this that I may give more time to new and destitute places in North Alabama, North Georgia, and East Tennessee.

From W. P. Skaggs, Itasca, Texas, April 22: "The work in Itasca is progressing very well. The interest seems to be improving very much. I am kept busy most of the time. I preach three times on three Sundays in each month, going to Files Valley, seven miles distant, on two Sundays, in the afternoon, and to Covington in the afternoon one Sunday."

From George W. Farmer, Lebanon, Tenn., April 19: "For the information of those interested in my work, I wish to say that I have been confined at home now for two weeks, and cannot tell for how much longer, on account of wife's sickness. She is very sick. We are praying and hoping for her speedy recovery."

A later report indicates that Sister Farmer is much

From R. L. Whiteside, Wellington, Texas, April 19: "The church here began a series of meetings yesterday. I am assisting them. While we had fairly good attendance at both services, it is too early yet to have any idea as to the probable outcome. Later in the summer I am to hold some meetings east of the Mississippi River. I might have time for one or two more meetings. Address me at Denton, Texas.

Nashville has added another to its long list of congregations. The first service at South Fifth Street, in East Nashville, was held Sunday, E. G. Cullum preaching the first sermon. The Eleventh Street Church has taken the lead in establishing this new work. The meetinghouse was erected at a cost of thirty-five hundred dollars. The lot was contributed by W. V. Davidson, one of the elders at Russell Street Church.

P. Mitchell writes from Grenada, Miss.: "We want to build a house for the church of Christ to worship in at this place, and we need help. We own the lot and have raised part of the building fund. The restrictive clause will be in the deed. There is not another loyal congregation in Grenada County. Will you in this way help us sow the seed here? Send all contributions to A. P. Mitchell, Roscoe Mitchell, or Mrs. Bela Kettle, Grenada, Miss.'

From F. E. Thompson, Grandview, Texas, April 18: "The church of Christ at Grandview has received from the brotherhood of Christians throughout the country to date, for the rebuilding of the church house and relief of the brethren, the amount of $2,006.08. We certainly thank the brethren for their liberality, and assure them that these funds will be used in a just and economical way and where we feel the greatest amount of good will be accomplished."

From J. O. Barnes, Lake City, Fla.: "I have just closed an interesting meeting at Ozark Schoolhouse, three miles from home. While rain interfered some with the attendance, there was fine attention and interest at every service, and God used me to the saving of four souls, three of whom were baptized and one came across the line from the Adventists to the Bible alone. All of these were grown Two were heads of families, whose influence is good in the community and will work good to the cause of We expect greater results yet at that point. This meeting was held wholly at the sacrifice of the preacher."

From J. E. Wainwright, Texarkana, Ark., April 22: "College Hill is in the best of shape. We are in a mission meeting in the Rose Hill section of the city. Fourteen additions the first three nights. I will leave the first of May to engage in evangelistic work in Louisiana. The first two weeks in May I will be at Forest Hill, where I will assist A. K. Ramsey and C. C. McQuiddy, who have proved themselves workers for the Lord in that part of The last two weeks in May I will be at Selma. the State. On May 31 and first four days in June I will be at Womack. Christians near these places are urged to be with us and help make the efforts worth while for the cause."

From W. W. Slater, Fort Smith, Ark., April 23: closed the meeting at Buffalo, near Tuskahoma, Okla., last night. We had a good meeting, all things considered. One baptism. Only eight or ten brethren there, and they have had bard opposition. I succeeded in removing a lot of prejudice and misconceptions concerning our teaching. The brethren were strengthened and built up. May the Lord bless them. J. B. Nelson, of Dallas, Texas, will begin our meeting on Friday night before the fifth Sunday in May. We will have an all-day service on the fifth Sunday. with dinner, and with singing in the afternoon. All brethren in reach of Fort Smith are invited to attend. Pray for us and our work."

From J. B. Nelson, 127 Pembroke Avenue, Dallas, Texas, April 16: "1 feel sure that the personal friends of J. W. Dunn, of Irving, Texas, will be glad to learn that prospects are flattering for a complete recovery from his serious illness of late. Brother Dunn has been right at death's door for several days. He has been sick for over four weeks and is just able to sit up a little. It will be weeks before he will be able to resume active preaching. Sister May, Brother Dunn's wife, has been so thoughtful and self-sacrificing all the way. She is full of vim and very dutiful at all times. The drain has been very heavy on Brother Dunn financially, and he has lost so much time and will lose several weeks more before able to do active preaching. When a preacher's work stops, as a rule, his income stops, and expense pulls on him pretty heavy. Some few have been very thoughtful and have sent and asked to share in the burden.'

D. S. Ligon writes from Denton, Texas, April 22: "The meeting near Woodward, Okla., closed with three baptisms. It was a bad time for the meeting-sand storms, cold weather, wind, and snow-but we had a good meeting. This was my fourth meeting, and many became interested who had never heard me before. After closing the meeting, I went to Wichita, Kan., and preached for the East Side congregation two nights. This is the home of Brethren Broadus and Moore, publishers of the Christian Worker. Broadus and Moore, publishers of the Christian Worker. W. H. Horn also lives in Wichita, and is a good preacher. I was pleased to meet them, and my visit with the church was indeed very pleasant. On the second Lord's day in April I preached for the church at Canadian, Texas. I found a live little band of brethren there. They seem to enjoy a preacher's efforts in preaching the gospel. Last Lord's day I was with the church at Crandall, Texas, and had an enjoyable day. Let the good work go on."

What Are the "Harps of God?"

BY M. C. K.

On page 420 of this issue of the Gospel Advocate the reader will find an article from the pen of Brother U. G. Wilkinson on the "Harps of God." We hope it will receive a careful reading. Both in deference to his wish to be heard on the question and in the hope of impressing and emphasizing an important lesson on speculating about such questions, we gladly give his communication a place in our columns.

Let it be observed, first of all, that, on all matters not clearly revealed, it is one thing for a position to be true, but it is quite another thing for men to know that it is true; and we hesitate not to say that, in all such cases, it is not only best not to be dogmatic in assuming positions, but it is best not to teach any position at all, except what the record itself states. In the present case, Brother Wilkinson thinks it a mistake if we "even intend to imply that any passage in Revelation teaches instrumental music even by implication anywhere in heaven." In the article to which he refers, we did not "even intend to imply" anything except what the record plainly says, and we carefully avoided saying anything else. Even now it is not the purpose to take issue with what Brother Wilkinson says on the subject, further than to decline to join with him in taking a position not stated in the Scriptures. The passages in question read thus:

"And when he had taken the book, the four living creatures and the four and twenty elders fell down before the Lamb, having each one a harp." (Rev. 5: 8.) "And I heard a voice from heaven, as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of a great thunder: and the voice which I heard was as the voice of harpers harping on their harps." (Rev. 14: 2.) "And I saw as it were a sea of glass mingled with fire; and them that come off victorious from the beast, and from his image, and from the number of his name, standing by the sea of glass, having harps of God."

We now note in their order some points in his article calling for attention.

1. Concerning the statements about harps in all of these passages, Brother Wilkinson says: "The 'harps' are symbols, not real harps." Hence, according to Brother Wilkinson, no matter where the worship here mentioned was or is to be, the fact that the worshipers were making music on harps is no proof that they were making instrumental music, because, Brother Wilkinson tells us, they were "not real harps." Of course, Brother Wilkinson thinks they were not, or he would not say so; and maybe he is correct. I do not know. He says they were "harps of God," and, therefore, were not "musical instruments invented by men, such as organs, pianos, cornet horns, etc." While I know that the logic of the situation does not demand the conclusion he draws here, still his conclusion may be correct. I do not know.

2. He also tells us that the worship here mentioned was to be "at some future age on the earth, not in heaven." Maybe this is so, too. I do not know. All that I know is what is revealed.

3. Our brother further tells us that those represented as "singing the 'new song' of 'Moses and the Lamb,' having the harps of God, were that company in future ages-yea, in our own age-who refuse to use men's inventions with which to praise God." While I cannot take the position which he here takes, for the simple reason that it is not taken in the passages themselves, yet I would be far from contradicting what he says merely because I do not find it in the record, for the simple reason that, if the fact about it were revealed, it might show that he is correct. With the present revelation on the point, I do not know.

4. After further saying that "the heart and lips or voice" of men are "the harps of God," he asks the question: "Is not the human voice a harp?" He then gives an unequivocal answer to his own question by saying, "It certainly is symbolically," and then adds, "almost everything that we do in the church as worship is done with this 'harp of God, the human voice." Here again, while I agree with some things he says on this point, for they are in the record, yet I feel handicapped when it comes to either agreeing with or contradicting some other things he says, for they are not in the record, and hence I do not know. All that I am willing to affirm and teach is what is revealed. Beyond this, the divine commission does not permit me to go.

5. Making further application of the Revelation passages, our brother exclaims: "How beautifully and appropriately do these scriptures prophetically symbolize the present-day 'reformation,' so-called;" and he tells us that it means that John saw "a people of God, a company that have gotten the victory over" the innovations and corruptions of men, and that "with the harps of God they again worship him as he directs in his word," all of which may be true. I do not know. I must heed Paul's admonition "not to go beyond the things which are written." (1 Cor. 4: 6.)

6. Finally, with the very proper reminder that "God has given" us "an instrument here with which to make" our

"music"—namely, our "voice"—and that "he commands" us "to use it," our brother closes with the assurance that in heaven God "will there furnish" us "the kind of instrument he wants" us "to have, and there he will also teach" us "how he wants" us "to use it." That is to say, he admonishes us, in substance, to leave the matter of worship in heaven to God himself, with the assurance that he will arrange it precisely as it should be and at the proper time. This is good advice, and to it I cordially subscribe.

Christ, the Light of the World.

BY J. C. M'Q.

On page 421 of this issue appears an article copied from the Literary Digest, entitled "Introducing Christ into Industry," for which we bespeak a careful reading. I make this article the occasion of saying some things that should be said.

The church is not intended for capitalists nor unionists exclusively, but is intended for all alike. Neither did God ordain the church as an organization for the regulation of conflicts between what is known as capital and labor. The truth about it is that any man who owns any money is a capitalist, and also any man who labors is a laborer. All men do not own the same amount of money, and all men do not do the same amount of labor or the same kind of labor. As Christians, we should not enter into any organization that requires us to violate strict Christian principles. Every man should be true to his own conscience. A Christian should not uphold a strike against his employer that is without reason or grievance. Radicals in unions sometimes do violence to others. Christians upholding such action become partakers of other men's sins. While every man should be treated honorably and fairly, and while naturally my feelings are with laboring people, yet I have always felt that, as a Christian, I could not uphold violent action that is without reason. Even in the church I cannot uphold wrongdoing, unjust dealing, or hypocrisy. The Bible condemns all such and requires Christians to withdraw fellowship from them.

It is a mistake for the laboring man to join a union and then to scoff and mock at the church. The church is as much intended for the laboring man as for any other man, and in it he has the same rights and privileges as does any other man. In the church all men are to do justly, are to love kindness, and are to walk humbly with God. The principles of Christianity are as applicable to one class of individuals as to another. Christ tasted death for every man; he died to redeem all alike. The church is not to be regarded as a business institution running a hardware business, a mercantile business, or any other character of business. Christ ordained the church for the salvation of the world, and in the church all responsible beings are to lead a life that is patterned after the life of the Lord Jesus Christ. Every Christian, whether regarded as a capitalist or as a laborer, should deal fairly and justly with his fellow men. We cannot bring about that reign of peace on earth that is intended by Christ by attempting to array one class of individuals against another class. The church is composed of saved individuals, who deal justly and who do unto others as they would have others do unto them. The church is the light of the world, the salt of the earth, the pillar and the support of the truth. Whenever a man who is regarded as a capitalist or as a laborer, or any other kind of being, turns away from the church, enters some sort of union, and does his good works in that instead of in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, he is giving his influence to that and pulling down the institution that Jesus shed his blood to establish. Instead of this, churches should see that the poor are cared for, that the hungry are fed, that the cold are warmed, and that the thirsty have drink. The church may be subject to criti- I cism in that some local churches seem to glory more in appearances than they do in the cross of Jesus Christ. But nothing is gained by going into unions and criticizing the failures of the churches. The individual Christian is under obligation to feed the hungry and to let his light so shine that others, seeing his good works, may glorify our Father who is in heaven. If Christians will only observe the Golden Rule, they will certainly not find any necessity for looking elsewhere in order to get justice among themselves. If every Christian will deal uprightly, justly, and walk humbly before God, the seeming necessity for organizing one against the other will vanish away. Every man will regard himself his brother's keeper and will do his full duty in bearing the burdens of others. It is a mistake to turn aside from the church and give credit for the good works that we do to some human organization. I do not have a doubt but that the religion of Jesus Christ applied to all of our troubles would prove a perfect panacea. Every Christian pledges himself to do this. Our troubles have arisen out of the fact that we have departed from the religion of Jesus and are not applying it in our daily business transactions as we should. The religion of Jesus Christ applied in business, lived in the home, and practiced everywhere would usher in a reign of peace on earth and good will toward men that has never been known before. It is semi-infidelity to intimate that we must try the religion of Jesus Christ and apply it in our industry to know whether or not it will work. It has never failed to work. The works of God have never failed, while man's inventions and devices have always failed and will fail. I would like to encourage all to live as the Golden Rule directs, to be active and diligent in working for the salvation of souls, knowing that such a course is the only wise course and the only one that will really benefit the human family.

I feel constrained to say, while on this subject, that our fathers and mothers should be careful and train their children to employ themselves in some useful occupation. Too many of our boys are leaving the country and coming into the cities. No better training can be given boys of this country than to keep them busily engaged on the farm. Farmers are needing help; and while every one is crying scarcity of production, there can be no remedy so long as we cannot get sufficient help to properly cultivate and work the farm lands of this country. By all means encourage the boys to stay on the farm, encourage them to work from morn until night; thus keep them employed, and you will keep them away largely from the temptations of the Evil One. Christian fathers and mothers living quietly in their country homes know nothing of the temptations and vices to which their boys are subjected in our cities. By all means, the young should be employed in some useful work.

David Lipscomb College-A Correction.

BY E. A. ELAM.

Justice demands the following statement.

Last fall, in the urgent need of this school of money to complete the work on the dormitory for young ladies, already in course of construction, the directors requested me to call off my meetings and some other appointments and make a vigorous effort from place to place and from man to man in order to raise this money. To reimburse me for my time and the loss of support this work would necessitate, the directors agreed to pay all my traveling expenses and to allow me ten per cent of the amount I might raise. I have succeeded in raising up to the present time, directly and indirectly, with the hindrances of continued sickness and also a death in my home, between five thousand and six thousand dollars. But I have taken not a penny for my services: I have given the ten per cent to the school, which is more than five hundred dollars. I shall not accept a penny of all money that may pass yet through me to the school.

I have been connected with this school as director for a number of years, and was president of the faculty for seven or eight years. In all, I have raised directly at different times fully twenty thousand dollars for it, and I cannot say how much more indirectly; but I have never taken one penny's commission. Only a few times, and that when long journeys were made, have I accepted traveling expenses. Also, except two or three times when thousands of letters or cards were sent at one time, I have furnished the stationery and paid the postage. Besides, at different times, when there was urgent need, I have given in different ways different sums out of my own cold cash, amounting to six hundred or seven hundred dollars.

I know as much about the work and purpose and mode of operation of this school as any living man.

Living farther from the school than other directors, until a short while ago, it has cost me more time and more money in railroad fare and hotel bills to attend the meetings than any other one.

Again, more than thirty-five years ago the trustees of the Fanning Orphan School engaged me to solicit funds for this school, offering me one hundred dollars per month, a fair salary then. I did this for several months, but I never collected my salary, but donated it to the school. I raised several thousand then, but cannot say how much since then all along I have been instrumental in raising: but I have never taken one cent as commission. I have done what little I have done in love for the orphans.

If this appears personal, my reason for it is, justice requires it.

The Golden Rule is fine to preach about, but finer to practice.

Reunion With Dinner on the Grounds.

We believe that all our readers are true friends of David Lipseomb College and ready to rejoice with us in its accomplishments and to help us plan for the future. make this remark prefatory to inviting you to attend the Alumni exercises which will be held on the college grounds on Wednesday, May 12, at 10 A.M. The program committee has arranged a very pleasing and instructive program. Charles R. Nichol, of Clifton, Texas, will be one of the speakers; a selected quartet will render several numbers; dinner will be served on the grounds; and, any way you take It, there will be a feast of good things for all who attend. We are particularly anxious that all the friends and patrons of the college who have so generously contributed toward the building of the new girls' dormitory shall be present to inspect the new building, which is now practically completed. We ask that you make announcement of this invitation to your congregation and that you give it widespread publicity.

Speak a good word and do a good deed for David Lipscomb College!

Confidently counting upon your attendance, we are, Sincerely yours,

R. C. White, Chairman Program Committee,

A. B. Lipscomb, Chairman Board of Trustees.

Ownership seems to imply bondage, slavery; but in God's service ownership implies liberty, freedom. "I am thy servant, O Lord," said David. "Thou hast loosed my bonds." He makes us free that he may make us serve, and it is the liberty of God that makes us serve with a glad heart.—Exchange.

The Storms and the Sailors.

BY LOULA MARIE ADKISSON.

Eastward, then westward, the black'ning clouds loom, Madly rent by the lightning's lurid ray. Afar the warning thunder wierdly rolls, Anear the brewing winds soft lay. Soon the tempest breaks, the billows rear their crests, The great ships rend, the mad gales spend their fury—And many a derelict's left to drift— And many a brave ship sleeps at sea.

The dark'ning clouds o'ershadow the sky, Great clouds billowed there by the world's stern hand. By the winds contrary the sailors are lashed,

By the siren lured on a treacherous strand. With a song of sin, tossed by the billows of sorrow And the tides of trouble and strife maybe-Many a faith-wrecked sailor sinks, And many a sailor is "lost at sea."

Tis only the brave, dauntless soul who can sail Screnely on, o'er the changing sea, Undaunted by gale and the black ning skies, Out to where the strange, new, far seas lie-On to the harbor, into the port of Paradise.

Loving and Liking.

What is friendship but social magnetism? The positive and negative poles of our being work automatically. We are required to love all sorts of people, but it is impossible to like them all. Loving and liking are totally different things. The former, as set forth in "the first commandment and the second which is like unto it," is distinctly a moral act; but our likes and dislikes are as natural, and perhaps as unaccountable, as our rellsh or disrelish for ripe olives.

We may find it necessary to associate with people whom we dislike, but we get our moral complexion only from our voluntary affiliations. Wherefore, "blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly, nor standeth in the way of sinners, nor sitteth in the seat of the scornful:" because, by the inevitable process of communal infection, he becomes such as they are .- D. J. Burrell.

BY CAROLYN SHERWIN BAILEY

(Suggestions by mothers who have been kindergartners. Issued by The United States Bureau of Education, Washington, D. C., and The National Kindergarten Association, New York, N. Y.)

The Dwarf and the Giant Boy.

Once upon a time there was a family of giants who lived in the land of Let's Pretend, and they had a young son who was not afraid of anything.

He was so strong that he could play marbles with bowlders, and he was so plucky that he did not mind in the least when the other people laughed at him because he had a dwarf for his very best friend.

No one could understand why the giant boy loved the dwarf, who lived in the woods, for he was rather a grasping, disagreeable little fellow. But the giant boy used to look for the dwarf almost every day, creeping carefully through the woods on his hands and knees, hunting for him.

When he found the dwarf, the giant boy would set him on the tip of his little finger and run with him over the hills and back again. It was like the steeplechase for the dwarf. Or the giant boy would put him on a leaf and blow him way up in the air, catching him safely when he drifted down. It was like a ride in an airship for the dwarf.

When the giant boy was ten years old, it was time, according to the custom of the country, for him to go out and test his courage; and if he came home as brave as he started, his giant father would give him a beautiful wooded mountain to be his inheritance. His giant mother gave him several bushels of apples and five hundred sandwiches and a barrel of milk to carry with him; and she told him that when these were gone the giants along the way would be glad to give him food and shelter.

So the giant boy started out with his heart full of courage; but he had gone only a little way when he met a storm. It was a terrific black storm that came rumbling down from the sky and crashing over the hills. It brought fire and thunderbolts with it, and it seemed to shake the whole earth. Going into such a storm was like marching alone into an advancing army; but the giant boy did it, and he was soon safely through the storm, just by facing it.

He met bravely all kinds of things—the dark, strangers, and larger glauts, and unknown places, and new kinds of hard work. He grew older and nearer to being a glant man before he turned toward home again. When he was almost there, he entered the forest, and whom should he see but his old friend, the dwarf, digging beside a stream?

"Here I am! Are you not glad to see me?" the young giant called, as he stepped across the stream with one stride.

"Let me alone; I am busy," the dwarf replied. Then, without looking up, he threw a pebble at the giant. It hit his heart, and he heard a loud crack.

"Now I have lost my inheritance," he said to himself; "my heart is cracked."

"How did that happen?" his giant father asked when the boy reached home.

"I met and conquered storms and all kinds of dangers," the giant boy answered; "but my friend, the dwarf, threw a pebble at me, and it cracked my heart."

"O, I should have told you about that before you started out," his glant father said, taking down a big book of rules that could be used in any land as well as the land of Let's Pretend. He read from it: "The misdeeds of others can do us no permanent harm." "So the dwarf's meanness doesn't count against you," he said; "it only counts against the dwarf."

So the giant boy was given a beautiful wooded mountain for his inheritance, and the crack in his heart soon grew together. As for the dwarf, he was always a little, lonely dwarf, and never grew up to be anything else.

A Good Motto.

On the eve of his departure for college, a mother said to her son: "Remember, my boy, if you are to succeed in life, If your service is to be at its best, you must be willing to be third." When that young man had finished decorating the walls of his dermitory with pennants, pictures, and banners, there hung immediately above his study table this motto: "I am willing to be third." Many were the curious glances cast at that motto by classmates and friends during the freshman year, while not a few made light of the very strange and, to them, meaningless words. Near the close of the year one of his chums confessed an intense curiosity and desire to know the meaning of this unusual motto. It was then, for the first time, that the story of what passed between the young man and his mother became known. "But what did your mother mean by such a remark?" was the further inquiry. "Her explanation," he replied, "was that in order to make my life of greatest service, I must be willing to put God first; others, second; self, third."-C. F. Ralston, in Exchange.

O O O I Shine in the Light of God.

I shine in the light of God,
His likeness stamps my brow;
Through the shadow of death my feet have trod,
And I reign in glory now.
No breaking heart is here;
No keen and thrilling pain;
No wasted cheek, where the frequent tear
Hath rolled, and left its stain.

I have found the joy of heaven,
I am one of the angel band:
To my head a crown is given,
And a harp is in my hand.
I have learned the song they sing
Whom Jesus hath made free,
And the glorious walls of heaven still ring
With my new born melody.

No sin, no grief, no pain—
Safe in my happy home;
My fears all fled, my doubts all slain,
My hour of triumph come!
O friends of my mortal years
The trusted and the true!
You are walking still in the vale of tears,
But I want to welcome you.

Do I forget? O. no!
For memory's golden chain
Shall bind my heart to the hearts below,
Till they meet and touch again.
Each link is strong and bright,
And Love's electric flame
Flows freely down like a river of light
To the world from whence it came.

Do you mourn when another star
Shines out from the glittering sky?
Do you weep when the noise of war
And the rage of conflict die?
Then why should your tears roll down,
And your heart with grief be riven,
For another gem in the Savior's crown
And another soul in heaven?

Query Department

By J. C. McQUIDDY

Brother T. S. Humble, of Pikeville, Tenn., inquires to know the meaning of the "seven Spirits" spoken of in Rev. 5: 6. The passage reads: "And I saw in the midst of the throne and of the four living creatures, and in the midst of the elders, a Lamb, standing as though it had been slain, having seven horns, and seven eyes, which are the seven Spirits of God, sent forth into all the earth."

I am sure I do not know what is the meaning of the "seven Spirits." It is claimed that the number seven, which is so often used in Revelation, means fullness or perfection, and that it is a sacred number. In the book of Revelation we read of the seven churches, seven Spirits, seven seals, seven trumpets, seven thunders, seven vials, etc. If "seven" is a perfect number, the "seven Spirits" may possibly mean the Holy Spirit; but I do not know.

Mrs. Elvira Dobson, of Big Sandy, Tenn., wants to know the scripture for God's people keeping a church book, or record. She also wants to know if there is any authority for asking a new babe in Christ, "Do you want to enroll with us?" or, "Do you want to take membership with this congregation?" etc.

There is no scripture for a church record, neither is there any needed. The Lord expects his people to exercise common sense. The elders of the church are commanded to "feed the flock of God." They must know the flock before they can feed it. In order to find the flock, it is necessary to have a record, if it be no more than a notch on a stick. Babes in Christ have membership in the church where they live and worship. They should become identified with the church. The elders of the church should know their place of residence, street and number. In order to do their work efficiently, it is absolutely necessary to keep some kind of record.

Brother J. H. Wommack wishes to know how long Adam lived after his transgression, and also whether he died a spiritual or temporal death when he partook of the forbidden fruit. He quotes Rom. 5: 12, which reads: "Therefore, as through one man sin entered into the world, and death through sin; and so death passed unto all men, for that all sinned."

When Adam disobeyed God, he became a sinner; he died by sin. In consequence of his transgression, he died many hundred years later a natural death. Just how many years this was after his transgression, no one knows. He lived to be nine hundred and thirty years old. Adam did not sin for the race, but sinned for himself. All others sin as did Adam and become personally responsible for their guilt. No one living, who is responsible, can truthfully say that he has not sinned and come far short of the glory of God. What we lost in the first Adam, we regain in the second Adam—that is, Christ. As we sin for ourselves, so we must obey the gospel for ourselves. Hence, Christ says: "Except one be born of water and the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God."

Brother E. W. Sewell, of Dinuba, Cal., asks for New Testament authority, if there be any, for any specific or particular attitude of the body of Christians when praying in worship on Lord's day. The particular point on which he desires information is whether any posture in prayer should be made a test of loyalty to the truth.

I know of no scripture that requires a specific posture in prayer; and unless there is such a scripture, no one has a right to make the posture in prayer a test of loyalty to God. We learn that Daniel kneeled upon his knees three times a day when he prayed with his face toward Jerusalem. The psalmist, David, says: "O come, let us worship and bow down; let us kneel before Jehovah our maker." (Ps. 95: 6.) Solomon "had made a brazen scaffold, five cubits long, and five cubits broad, and three cubits high, and had set it in the midst of the court; and upon it he stood, and kneeled down upon his knees before all the assembly of Israel, and spread forth his hands toward heaven." Then follows his prayer. We learn that when Peter raised Dorcas from the dead he "put them all forth, and kneeled down, and prayed." There are many examples in the New Testament where prayer was offered when the person was in a kneeling posture, and I have always preferred this posture in public prayer to any other. While this is true, I would be slow to lead any one to believe that the posture in prayer should be a test of one's loyalty.

J. A. Roberts, of Fruithurst, Ala., inquires to know (1) to what day reference is made in Heb. 10: 25. He does not know whether it means the day of judgment or the first day of the week. The passage reads: "Not forsaking our own assembling together, as the custom of some is, but exhorting one another; and so much the more, as ye see the day drawing nigh." He also inquires to know (2) who are the "children of the kingdom" referred to in Matt. 8: 12, which reads: "But the sons of the kingdom shall be cast forth into the outer darkness: there shall be the weeping and the gnashing of teeth."

1. There is diversity of opinion as to the day referred to in Heb. 10: 25. I am inclined to the view that it is the first day of the week. The Hebrews could not know that the day of judgment was at hand. The first day of the week was the only day that they could see approaching with certainty. It is a Christian's duty to exhort brethren daily to be faithful; so, as they saw the first day of the week approaching, they should exhort each other to continue in good works and not to forsake the assembling of themselves together on the first day of the week to break bread in memory of the sufferings of Christ, who died to redeem them.

2. The "children of the kingdom" were the Jews, who were the natural descendants of Abraham. On account of their rejection of Christ, they were to be cast into outer darkness.

Book Notices.

If you are in need of a good abridged Bible dictionary, send us $2 for a copy of Smith's Peloubet Edition. This is one of the best dictionaries of the Bible that I have examined.

A good book for young people to read is the "Life of Mrs. Charlotte Fanning." Mrs. Fanning was noted for her piety, zeal, and good sense. Hers was a life remarkable for the good accomplished. She always exerted an ennobling, refining, and uplifting influence. This book is ably edited by Mrs. Emma Page Larimore. Price, $1.

We have on hand a few copies of "Biographies and Sermons," edited by F. D. Srygley. This is a book of sermons by a number of our best-known preachers. It is well worth a careful perusal. A brief history of the life of each preacher accompanies his sermon. A picture of the preacher also is given with each sketch. Price, $1.50. If you want this book, you should order at once, as we have just a few copies that have been left over through mistake.

Tne Amite (La.) Work.

BY W. J. JOHNSON.

The sum of $8.50 has been sent by the church in Texarkana, Ark., and $2 by some brethren in New Orleans, La., since our last report was made. This makes a total of $347.21 received from other sources since we began our appeal three years ago. As we have reached our limit, it is necessary for us to continue our appeal until the required amount is reached. Every dollar has been used to the very best advantage possible. A neat concrete structure, thirty-two feet by fortyeight feet, is almost ready for the roof. Including cost of lot, it has cost but little more than seventeen hundred dollars, and it is in one of the most desirable locations of the town. It is absolutely necessary for brethren to contribute liberally of their means to this work until it is completed, or we shall have to endure a very humiliating embarrassment. Send at once to our rescue. God will bless you. I am now with A. K. Ramsey in a mission meeting at Glenmora, La., near his home, and trust that when I return home our funds will have increased so that we can resume work on the building with renewed energy and soon bring it to completion. Let those who read this realize that one of God's servants is greatly hindered, and will be till this work is finished, in proclaiming the sweet message of peace to lost souls, and send "once and again" until enough has been sent. Ousts Rheumatism.

Ousts Rheumatism.

Here it is. Those awful pains of rheumatism so common during the cold, rainy weather are completely forgotten, and the rheumatism is expelled from your system, by the very simple treatment of taking Renwar Saits, which neutralizes the uric acid in the blood, and Renwar attacks the very cause of this malady and expels the uric acid from the system. Renwar is entirely dependable. It does not in any way injure the stomach or affect the heart. It is prescribed by the best physicians, and your money is refunded if Renwar fails to relieve you of rheumatism. Give Renwar a trial, and you will never regret it. TRAINED NURSE TALKS TO WOMEN

Tells How, Through Years of Practice in Women's Weaknesses, She Found Simple Home Remedy to End Leucorrhea.

It took years of professional practice for me and my two associate nurses in treating weaknesses treating weaknesses of women to find a simple, easy, certain way to end Leucorrhea (commonly called "whites"). In our experience we find that 75 per cent of all women more or less tressed with annoying weakn BIR disweakness, tressed with this annoying weakness. A. Cavanaugh, R. N. which makes them pale, tired, fretful, wasting their feminine strength and often leading to serious illness. Working on our own cases and in conjunction with physicians, we had wonderful success with our own treatment. We brought many women from deep despair to joyful satisfaction. They wanted us to tell others all over the country how our treatment, named "Lukora," brought them out of distress and weakness to genuine feminine strength and health.

If you are a sufferer from Leucorrhea, stop carelessly letting it go on, but learn from me how it may be quickly ended in your own home. I will tell you about this simple home method (without obligation) by your simply writing to me, Anna Cavanaugh, R. N., Room 241A The Nurses' Institute, Buffalo, N. Y. All correspondence and information sent will be confidential and forwarded in plain sealed envelopes.

NOTE.—The Nurses' Institute earnestly advises every woman suffering with Leucorrhea, who wishes to get rid of it, to write Miss Cavanaugh at once. This remarkable offer is sincere, and the fact that the discoverers of the treatment are themselves registered nurses and women makes it a safe and unquestionable treatment.

Bishop-Vincent Mission.

BY W. W. FREEMAN.

The lot on which the Vincent mission home stands has been bought. A fifth was paid down; Brother Gray paid a thousand dollars; Japanese brethren will pay fifteen hundred dollars or more during the next three years; and the balance, about twentynine hundred dollars, is yet to be given by loyal American churches. The location is very fine. The purchase also stopped the rent we had been paying monthly on this land. We shall not have to move the Vincent house or sell it at a sacrifice. Financially the deal is a good one. We pay six per cent interest on the balance quarterly. As fast as we get a hundred dollars ahead, we send it to be credited on the note.

At present a dollar is worth about one dollar and two cents in Japan. This is fine, for we have hitherto suffered a considerable loss as discount. Now is the best time to send funds. for a dollar counts for more. This work is under the oversight of the Abilene church worshiping at the college. Funds should be sent to W. W. Freeman, Abilene, Texas, or to C. G. Vincent, 1210 North Fourth Avenue, Knoxville, Tenn.

QUARTERLY REPORT.

On hand, December 28, 1919, $3.77; received to January 17, $54.33; sent to Bixler, $80; from lot fund obliged to draw, $21.90.

Received to February 11, $87.92; forwarded on February 5, $85, and on February 11, $85, to meet reported emergency in Japan; obliged to draw from lot fund, $82.08.

Received to March 5, $20.96; forwarded, $85; from lot fund again, $64.04.

Received to April 3, $92.45; forwarded, $85; balance, $7.45.

Received to April 8, $21; on hand now, $28.45.

Lot fund: Balance December 28, 1919, $148.80; by C. G. Vincent, $139.-35; to regular fund, $168.02; balance, $120.13

As you see, the regular monthly offerings must be raised.

COUPLE OF MISSIONARIES WANTED

Various missionaries in Japan have assisted in the Kamitomizaka Church since the Vincents were forced to come away. Some church should send a couple to continue the work so well begun. These new missionaries should be sound in body, alert in mind, and consecrated in heart. Cranks, factionists, novices, and aged people should not go. It is hoped that some couple well grounded in the truth of the word of God and well educated may be found soon. What church can report a couple prepared and ready for the work? Other churches will be found to assist in the support. your congregation has no couple ready, when, at the present rate, will it have them? Abilene church is working to have dozens of missionaries not far ahead, but a couple is needed now. Write me if you know of the right couple for this place. Address W. W. Freeman, Abilene, Texas.

A cross Christian or an anxious Christian; a discouraged, gloomy Christian; a doubting Christian; a complaining Christian; an exacting Christian; a selfish Christian; a cruel, hardhearted Christian; a self-indulgent Christian; a Christian with a sharp tongue or bitter spirit-all these may be very earnest in their work and may have honorable places in the church; but they are not Christlike Christians, and they know nothing of religious realities. The life hid with Christ in God is a hidden life, but it must not be hidden as to its practical results. People must see that we walk as Christ walked, if we say that we are abiding in him. We must prove that we "possess" that which we "profess." -H. W. Smith.

Alabama.

Bear Creek, April 18.—The little band of worshipers here continue to meet each Lord's day, morning and night, for Bible study, and on Wednesnights for prayer meetingmostly sisters and children. writer had the pleasure of calling on Brother and Sister A. D. Dies, at their home in Oakman, between trains, He is doing a great work in the church there and in the surrounding country. He is busy all the time when not engaged in preaching. He is working with his hands, painting houses and working in a barber shop. They were in sorrow for the loss of their little girl, who passed away a few days ago. Brother Dies gave us an appointment for the fifth Lord's day in May. I had the pleasure of meeting Brethren Richards, Sweeney, Jones, Brother Morrow and wife, and others while there. Preachers are scarce in these parts. Brother Willcut preaches for us on the fourth Lord's day in each month .- J. R. Phillips.

California.

Tulare, April 14.—The work at this place is moving along as well as could be expected. The little band of faithful Christians are all working together for the advancement of the cause. Two girls who have been in regular attendance at our Bible studies made the confession and were buried with their Lord in haptism. It makes us feel that our labors have not been in vain in the Lord when we see those we have tried to teach as we find it revealed in his word come forward in obedience to the word. We hope to see others come out and take their stand for Christ. Pray for us that we may do much in the Master's cause.—L. Meade Williams.

Georgia.

Rossville, April 12.—The church here seems to be in extra good condition. In our meeting Sunday evening were Brethren I. B. Bradley, J. D. Gunn, Aruna Clark, Brethren Brooks and Boyd, and three or four others whose names I cannot recall. I also met Brother J. W. Grant in Chattanooga to-day. Brethren, let us be steadfast in "the falth which was once for all delivered unto the saints."—J. C. Mosley.

Atlanta, April 21.—The Atlanta brethren are now enjoying a feast of good things in the preaching of Brother F. B. Srygley, of Nashville, Tenn. Six have already been added to our number and more are expected. For the pure teaching of the gospel of Christ, Brother Srygley is unexcelled. His work is doing us all good. Some have asked for suitable songs for "Mothers' Day." Every day is "mothers' day" with me. Brother Flavil Hall has had printed "My Loving Mother," with another one of his best selections, for all who want them. Send three cents and get a copy, or twenty-five cents and get a dozen. Persimon, April 17.—There has been considerable sickness in the Pleasant Hill neighborhood, besides plenty of "fu" and measles, but some of our little congregation have met for worship every Lord's day. We have not had a great deal of preaching, but we are always greatly strengthened by the lessons given us by our good brethren, C. M. Johnston and T. R. Palmore. Brother R. A. Palmore preaches for us on the third Lord's day and Lord's-day night in each month.

Brother Phemister preached for us on the first Lord's day in April. We will have a protracted meeting in August, conducted by Brother Lowry.—Mrs. Gertrude Palmore.

Owe Their Health To

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound—overshadowing indeed is the success of this great medicine. Compared with it, all other medicines for women's ills seem to be experiments.

Why is it so successful? Simply because of its sterling worth-For over forty years it has had no equal. Women for two generations have depended upon it with confidence,

Thousands of Their Letters are on our files, which prove these statements to be facts, not mere boasting.

Here Are Two Sample Letters:

Mother and Daughter Helped.

Middleburg, Pa.—"I am glad to state that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound didmemuch good when I was 35 years old. I was run down with female trouble and was not able to do anything, could not walk for a year and could not work. I had treatment from a physician but did not gain. I read in the papers and books about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and decided to try it. The first few bottles gave me relief and I kept on using it until I got better and was able to do my work. The Vegetable Compound also regulated my daughter when she was 15 years old. I can recommend Vegetable Compound as the best medicine I have ever used."—Mrs. W. YERGER, R. 3, Box 21, Middleburg, Pa.

Fall River, Mass. — "Three years ago I gave birth to a little girl and after she was born I did not pick up well. I doctored for two months and my condition remained the same. One day one of your little books was left at my door and my husband suggested that I try a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I started it immediately and I felt better and could eat better after the first bottle, and I continued taking it for some time. Last year I gave birth to a baby boy and had a much easier time as I took the Vegetable Compound for four months before baby came. On getting up I had no pains like I had before, and no dizziness, and in two weeks felt about as well as ever."—Mrs. THOMAS WILKINSON, 363 Columbia Street, Fall River, Mass.

Another Great Man Gone.

BY ISAAC E. TACKETT.

Notice has already appeared in the papers about the death of Brother Ed. Millwee. Some of the readers of this paper never knew him. Those that knew him remember him dearly. There was only one Ed. Millwee. considered him one of the greatest men living. In fact, his life was more nearly like that of the apostle Paul's than any man I have ever known. He sacrificed much for the cause of Christ. He did what others could not or would not do. Although he was well educated, being a graduate of the old Add-Ran College and at one time professor of mathematics in that great school, professional life did not appeal to him. He chose rather to live among and help the great middle class of people. After leaving Add-Ran College, he taught a number of years in the country schools and preached to the country people. Later he devoted all his time to preaching the gospel in mission fields where others seldom carried the message. When churches with which he labored became strong enough to support a preacher, he passed on to other places.

He was not a failure in business. He had enough of the world's goods to sustain him in his work, and he used it freely for the salvation of men. Before the late rebellions in Mexico broke out he had gone to that country and had learned the native language and was preaching to the Mexicans in their own tongue. He taught school some in Old Mexico and was conducting a promising mission in that country when he was run out by the rebellion. During his mission work in Mexico he distributed many Testaments in the Spanish language at his own expense. Last year he spent with the weak and poor churches of Florida and North Carolina. Before his late illness came upon him he was planning to carry the gospel to Spanish-speaking people of South America.

When I visited him recently at the sanitarium in Dallas, he talked freely of his hopes and of his desires and plans to do more good things in the future. He approached death with the calmest composure of any one I have ever seen approach that ordeal. He said that to die was a matter of supreme indifference with him. He talked as calmly and as sweetly and as cheerfully as when I knew him in his prime. His years were numbered by sixty-three. I wish he could have lived a score more, at least. Those who loved him were numbered by those who knew him, in and out of the church. He was a friend of the poor, and they reverenced him. He had enough means to go at his own charge and asked help of no one. He leaves a

A HOME CURE GIVEN BY ONE WHO HAD IT

A HOME CURE GIVEN BY ONE WHO HAD IT

In the spring of 1893 I was attacked by Muscular and Inflammatory Rheumatism. I suffered as only those who have it know, for over three years. I tried remedy after remedy and doctor after doctor, but such relief as I received was only temporary. Finally I found a remedy that cured me completely, and it has never returned. I have given it to a number who were terribly afflicted, and even bedridden with Rheumatism, and it effected a cure in every case.

I want every sufferer from any form of rheumatic trouble to try this marvelous healing power. Don't send a cent; simply mail your name and address, and I will send it free to try. After you have used it and it has proven itself to be that long-looked-for means of curing your Rheumatism, you may send the price of it, one dollar; but, understand, I do not want your money unless you are perfectly satisfied to send it. Isn't that fair? Why suffer any longer, when positive relief is thus offered you free? Don't delay. Write to-day.

legacy to some of his dearest friends to be used for the glory of God and the salvation of men. If there is a Paradise, he is now resting sweetly in the bosom of father Abraham. As sure as there is a heaven awaiting the pure, good, and faithful, the spirit of dear Brother Millwee will rejoice with God and the holy angels for evermore. He was my friend and erstwhile fellow laborer. I loved him.

The Cause at Atoka, Okla.

In times past our Lord's cause was prosperous in this town, but for some time but little has been done. Some had grown cold, some lukewarm, and others quit entirely. About eight of us decided, a few months ago, that we could no longer afford to live where we could not worship God "as it is written," and so we began to meet for worship and to read God's word in the courthouse. We kept this up for a few weeks, and then decided it would be profitable to have a meeting. We secured the services of Brethren J. Will Henley and Will W. Slater for this work. The church at Coalgate furnished us their big tent and one hundred song books. We began the work on March 23 and continued until April 4, with almost every hindrance known to deter the work. Rain, windstorms, cold weather, shows, a circus, and, worst of all, the cold, heartless indifference of some church members here in town, all contributed to hinder the work. But, after all, we feel that the time was well spent. We heartily commend Brethren Henley and Slater as loval and able ministers of the gospel of Christ. We extend our thanks to the brethren at Durant, Coalgate, Centrahoma, and Calera for valuable assistance rendered. Brethren passing our way are cordially invited to worship with us.

[Signed] C. A. Magness, T. J. Waddle, W. L. Taylor, C. S. Payne, and Bryan Carter.

He Cares for Me.

Among so many, can He care? Can special love be everywhere? A myriad homes, a myriad ways, And God's eye over every place?

So many and so wide abroad, Can any heart have all of God? From the great spaces vague and dim, May one small household gather Him?

I asked: my heart bethought of this. In just that very place of His, Where He hath put and keepeth you, God hath no other thing to do. -Selected.

LESS MEAT IF BACK AND KIDNEYS HURT

Take a Glass of Salts to Flush Kidneys if Bladder Bothers You

Eating meat regularly eventually produces kidney trouble in some form or other, says a well-known authority, because the uric acid in meat excites the kidneys, they become overworked, get sluggish, clog up, and cause all sorts of distress, particularly backache and misery in the kidney region, rheumatic twinges, severe headaches, acid stomach, constipation, torpid liver, sleeplessness, bladder and urinary irritation.

The moment your back hurts or the kidneys are not acting right, or if the bladder bothers you, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good pharmacy, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for few days, and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity; also to neutralize the acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts cannot injure any one. makes a delightful effervescent lithiawater drink which millions of men and women take now and then to keep the kidneys and urinary organs clean, thus avoiding serious kidney disease.

Texas Lady Storekeeper Who Carries Black - Draught in Stock Has Found It "Best Liver Medicine" Obtainable.

Barker, Texas.-Relating her experience with Thedford's Black-Draught, Mrs. A. L. Fromme, of this place, says:

"I had for some time used --- and other liver medicines, which would nauseate and make me feel bad. We have a store; and our customers called for Black-Draught so often I decided it must be good, so thought I would try it myself.

"I began its use, and found it just fitted my case. It neither griped nor nauseated me; was an easy laxative. and not hard to take.

"I had had headaches a great deal, no doubt from torpid liver. The Black-Draught would cure them. The best way I find to take Black-Draught is to take one or two good-sized doses until the liver begins to act, then taper the does to just a pinch after meals.

"It will insure good digestion, do away with the gas or bad taste in the mouth, and is without doubt the best liver medicine in the market. I have found it so. I can recommend it to my friends, for I believe it will do them good."

FROM THE FIELD

Ohio.

Akron, April 19 .- I will be busy in protracted meetings in Arkansas, be-ginning the first of July and on till the first of November. But not quite all of the time is engaged. I would be glad to be busy the entire four months. Any one desiring my services may address me at Akron, Ohio, 49 Arch Street.—Hugh F. Pendergrass.

Oklahoma.

Oklahoma City, April 19.—The audiences yesterday were large and attentive. At the morning service there was one addition. Our Sunday school is still growing. Room is getting to be a serious thing with us. Brother Hogan, of California, preached the evening sermon. It was an excellent discourse. Brother Hogan is a fine, bright young man,-J. A. Hudson.

Muskogee, April 14.—I spent the first Lord's day in this month with the Park Hill Church, at Fort Smith, Ark. I found a band of brethren who seem to be "dead to sin, but alive to God." They treated me royally. Brother W. W. Slater labors with this church, and is held in high esteem by the entire congregation, so far as I could learn. On the second Lord's day visited the church at Porter, Okla. The work in this city is progressing nicely. Our spring meeting began last Lord's day. Prospects are bright for a good meeting. On account of Brother W. M. Thompson's illness, Brother O. L. Hays is doing the preaching. Brother Hays is a great and good man, and is doing some ex-cellent preaching. We are hoping and praying for great results .- W. L. Oliphant.

Tennessee.

Nashville, April 19.—I was at Com-merce, in Wilson County, yesterday. We had two fine services, with much interest shown. I will go to Paradise Ridge next Lord's day. I have some time not taken for meetings; will answer any calls for May, June, or September. I would like to keep busy. Who wants a meeting? Address me at 326 Grace Avenue, Nashville, Tenn. -W. M. Oakley.

Texas.

Sweeney, April 16.—Our meeting, conducted by Brother G. C. Brewer, closed last night. The meeting continued eleven nights. We had a fine meeting, with good attendance and good interest. There were twelve baptisms, one reclaimed, and one from the Baptists. Brother Brewer did some fine preaching, and we were greatly pleased with him. We hope to have him hold our meeting next year.—Grace Chenault.

Del Rio, April 19.-I am about well again, and the disease that wrecked me is entirely conquered, though I am not as strong as I was before my breakdown. But I shall leave here on Wednesday, and will reach home on May 1 and begin my work with the Southside-Central Church on the first Sunday in May. Correspondents will please address me at home-1420 Lipscomb Street, Fort Worth, Texas, after this. I have received some financial help, which I will report when I get home. Brother Wallace and Brother Taylor closed a fine meeting here last night, with several baptized and the church built up. Brother Foy E. Wallace, Jr., is superfine as a preacher, fearless and kindly, a prince among men.-Tice Elkins.

Fort Worth, April 19.—I returned this morning from Newark, twenty-one miles north of this city on the Rock Island Railroad, where I preached yesterday and last night. We had good crowds and good attention. The brethren own their house of worship and are somewhat in the majority in point of numbers at this The church is not doing all it can do, nor all that I believe it will do with the proper encouragement. They have great possibilities; and If the correct efforts are put forth, they can easily have one of the best small congregations in this section of the They seem to be loyal, and are, so far as I could detect, at peace among themselves. They seemed to be encouraged by the services yesterday, and I hope that the interest thus manifested will grow until greater results are enjoyed. Brother C. Mc-Clung has been engaged to hold their summer's meeting, and I sincerely hope that it may be a good one, for he is eminently capable of holding such a meeting.—J. A. Cullum.

CURED HER FITS

Mrs. Paul Gram, residing at 916 Fourth Street, Milwaukee, Wis, recently gave out the following statement: "I had suffered with Fits (Epilepsy) for over fourteen years. Doctors and medicine did me no good. It seemed that I was beyond all hope of relief, when at last I secured a preparation that cured me sound and well. Over ten years have passed, and the attacks have not returned. I wish every one who suffers from this terrible disease would write to R. P. N. Lepso, 198 Island Avenue, Milwaukee, Wis, and ask for a bottle of the same kind of medicine which he gave me. He has generously promised to send it postpaid, free to any one who writes him,"—Advt.

SAGE AND SULPHUR DARKENS GRAY HAIR

It's Grandmother's Recipe to Restore Color, Gloss, and Attractiveness

Almost every one knows that Sage Tea and Sulphur, properly compounded, brings back the natural color and luster to the hair when faded, streaked, or gray. Years ago the only way to get this mixture was to make li at home, which is mussy and trou-blesome. Nowadays, by asking at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sul-phur Compound," you will get a large bottle of this famous old recipe, improved by the addition of other ingredients, at a small cost,

Don't stay gray! Try it! No one can possibly tell that you darkened your hair, as it does it so naturally and evenly. You dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, glossy, and attractive.

San Francisco, April 4.—Brother T. B. Larimore is preaching for us, and his sermons are very interesting and instructive. The attendance to-day was very good, with a few visitors present. The outlook is encouraging. We meet in the Richmond Hall, corner Fourth Avenue and Clement Street .- Mrs. T. J. McRae.

Miami, Box 253, April 12.-Yesterday was a fine day with the church here, with splendid audiences at all the services. At the evening service two (husband and wife) made the good confession and are to be buried with the Lord in baptism. We hope to have our tent in use by the last of We hope next week. There is much here to be done. I am expecting to be in Tennessee during August.-Joe L. Netherland.

New York.

New York, April 5.- I have been running anadvertisement in the Morning World, also in the Evening Sun, trying to locate any members of the church of Christ that live in New York, but have not succeeded in find-ing any. I would be very glad if other members would move here, so that we could have a congregation here. Any young preacher looking for opportunity would make no mistake to come here. He would have to work with his hands for a part of his sup-port or be helped by other churches: but if he comes in the right spirit, he cannot fail. Brother S. H. Hall went to Atlanta, Ga., when there were only very few members there, and now there are several congregations in and around Atlanta which are the fruits of his labors. Greater work can be done here than has been done in Atlanta. The field is white unto harvest, but the laborers are few. No one should be afraid to come to New York. If one can make a living anywhere, he can here. If any members who would like to come here will communicate with me, I will gladly lend them any assistance that I can. Paul heard the cry from Macedonia and went. Will not some one hear the cry from New York and come? God grant that God grant that many may hear and come.-George M. McKee.

the Lord, it was a good day for us. The house was full at the morning service. One man was baptized and one confessed his faults. Sunday before last I performed nuptial rites for Mr. Perry Ford, of Okmulgee, and Miss Icle Richerson, of this city. Their home is now at Okmulgee. Mrs. Ford was a social favorite. She will be greatly missed by the church here. Invitation has been extended me to deliver an address at the commencement exercises of the Harper Christian College on May 19. Special preparation is being made for the occasion, for it is to be a reunion of the students of Cordell Christian College and Harper Christian College. All of the former students of these colleges are invited. We are expecting a great meeting.—J. A. Hudson.

Fort Worth, April 13 .- 1 spent the last two Lord's days in March with the North Side congregation, in this city, in a ten-days' meeting, which was well attended, even to where we could not take care of the crowds on Sunday The meeting resulted in twenty-five baptisms, and about fifteen renewed their obligations or were identified with the congregation. left this meeting and went to the Abilene Christian College for an eightdays' meeting, which closed last Sunday night, with probably nine hundred or a thousand people present. This meeting was one of the best I was ever in, in many ways. The splendid, prayerful interest and the Christian love and hearty cooperation which prevailed throughout made it a real As results, twenty-nine season of joy. confessed Christ, and I think about fifteen either confessed their errors or identified themselves with the congregation. Abilene Christian College is a splendid institution, with as fine a faculty of noble-minded men and women as I have ever had the pleasure of meeting. More than a hundred students had to be turned away this term for lack of room. We should double the present size of the college. I would like very much to see the brethren over Texas who are inter-ested in the Abilene work take care of this needed expense and let the church in Abilene devote one year to building at least a fifty-thousand-dollar church home down in the main part of the city. This is needed.—Horace W. Bushy.

We cannot copy the great work which Christ did for the world, but we may copy his spirit. The smallest trickle of water down a city gutter will carve out of the mud at its side little banks and cliffs, and exhibit all the phenomena of erosion on the largest scale, as the Mississippi does over half a continent, and the tiniest wave in a basin will fall into the same curves as the billows of midocean.—Alexander Maclaren.

The Kidneys and the Skin.—If the kidneys are weak or torpid, the skin will be pimply or blotchy. Hood's Sarsaparilla strengthens and stimulates the kidneys and clears the complexion. By thoroughly purifying the blood it makes good health.

For more than Forty Years Cotton Growers have known that

POTASH PAYS

More than 11,651,200 Tons of Potash Salts had been imported and used in the United States in the 20 years previous to January, 1915, when shipments ceased. Of this 6,460,700 Tons consisted of which the cotton grower knew was both a plant food and a preventive of blight and rust,—with it came also 1,312,400 Tons of

KAINIT .

which has the same effect on Cotton, but which was used mainly in mixed fertilizers.

Shipments of both Kainit and Manure Salt have been resumed but the shortage of coal and cars and high freight rates make it more desirable to ship Manure Salt, which contains 20 per cent of actual Potash, instead of Kainit, which contains less than 13 per cent actual Potash.

MANURE SALT can be used as a side dressing on Cotton in just the same way as Kainit and will give the same results. Where you used 100 pounds of Kainit, you need to use but 62 pounds of Manure Salt, or 100 pounds of Manure Salt go as far as 161 pounds of Kainit.

MANURE SALT has been coming forward in considerable amounts and cotton growers, who cannot secure Kainit, should make an effort to get Manure Salt for side dressing to aid in making a big cotton crop.

Muriate of Potash

50 per cent actual Potash, has been coming forward also,—100 pounds of Muriate are equivalent to 400 pounds of Kainit or 250 pounds of Manure Salt.

These are the three

Standard GERMAN Potash Salts

that were always used in making cotton fertilizers and have been used for all these years with great profit and without any damage to the crop.

The supply is not at present as large as in former years, but there is enough to greatly increase the Cotton Crop if you insist on your dealer making the necessary effort to get it for you.

Keep Your Blood Clean As You Keep Your Body Clean. You Don't Wait Until Your Body is Foul Before You Cleanse It

It is a matter of surprise that many people who are so careful to have clean bodies make no effort to keep the blood clean. Everyone knows that uncleanness breeds disease; that those who do not keep their bodies in a wholesome condition and who dwell in filthy surroundings are the first to fall when some epidemic of disease sweeps the country. But foul blood is more dangerous to the individual than a foul body. An unclean body is a passive rather than an active hindrance to health. But unclean blood is an active threat against the very life—it makes the body a prepared breeding place for disease.

It is part of Nature's plan for human safety that in many cases where the blood is impure or corrupt she sets a sign on the body in proof of the corrupt current that is flowing through the veins. Scrofula with its disfiguring sores and sears, eczema with its irritation, salt-rheum, tetter, erysipelas, boils, pimples and other cruptions are only the outward signs of the impurity of the blood. But often in the earlier or simpler stages of the blood's impurity there are no outward signs of this condition; only dull, languid, sluggish feelings, which are commonly attributed solely to the sluggishness of the liver.

In view of the fact that everybody is liable to impurity of the blood why should we not treat the blood as we do the body—keep it clean on general principles? We wash and bathe regularly. We don't figure up how long we can go without cleansing the body or put off the bath until we become offensive. We intend to keep our bodies clean, and we wash regularly whether we appear to need it or not. If we keep the blood pure, we are less liable to fall victims to "flu."

Of all preparations for purifying the blood Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery easily takes the first place. It eliminates from the blood the elements which clog and currupt it, and which breed and feed disease. It acts directly on the blood-making glands, increasing their activity, and so increasing the supply of rich, pure blood which is the life of the body. Put up in tablets and liquid and sold by druggists.

Many thousands in every state testify. Here is what one says:

Memphis, Tenn.—"Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is a splendid blood purifier and tonic. I took it at one time when my blood was impoverished and I became dropsical, my feet and limbs became swollen. Six bottles of 'Golden Medical Discovery' cured me of all this and I have not been troubled with a dropsical condition since that time, which was fifteen years ago.

"I have also found the 'Pleasant Pellets' excellent for sluggish liver and constipation. They ar effective and do not gripe."—MRS. LIZZIE NEFF, 260 Market St.

So shall Love's deeds supreme and high
Enkindle hope again from tears,

The Purpose of Miracles.

What is the meaning of the miracles? What do they prove? We may briefly answer that they emphasize the presence and power of a divine agent. Brief but comprehensive was the saying of the Egyptian magicians when they found themselves helpless before the marvels that Moses wrought: "This is the finger of God." There are times when men feel that things have reached a crisis and that for the best interests of mankind it is essential that their attention should be specially arrested and startled into thought and activity. Thus, in the Old Testament, when God had some new tidings to tell the world, which they could not have found by their own sense, he gave to his leaders the power of working miracles. The miracles were a sort of bell which they rung in the ears of that generation, that people might listen to what they had to say and believe that the message came from heaven. Matthew Arnold protested that "miracles do not happen." Of course they do not happen regularly, else they would cease to be miracles. Rightfully considered, a miracle is not a violation of the laws of nature, as sometimes thoughtlessly stated, but a divine act by which he who governs nature puts forth his power in an extraordinary way for a worthy Durbose.

The Christian thinker must not lose sight of the fact that the greatness of the purpose to be accomplished in the gospel was such as to warrant the expectation of a special divine interposition. The whole civilized world was on tiptoes of expectancy just prior to the Savior's coming. Seneca had asked a universal question: Ubi enim istum invenies quem tot saeculis quaerimus?" "Where shall he be found whom we have been seeking for so many centuries?" It was not only necessary that Jesus should come in this fullness of time, but that he should be recognized and acknowledged through many infallible proofs. If it was necessary for God to call attention to the leadership of Moses and the prophets through the intervention of miracles, it was all the more imperative that his Son should bear such credentials, so that the apostle with the keys might be able to preach "Jesus of Nazareth, a man approved of God unto you by mighty works and wonders and signs which God did by him in the midst of you." (Acts 2: 22.)

The argument in favor of the miracles is fortified by the consistency of those wondrous works with the character of God and the design of the gospel. A. M. Fairbairn, in his "Philosophy of the Christian Religion," lays great stress upon their sanity and sobriety. The miracles, he tells us, are the "physical counterparts of Christ's moral character and ethical teachings. Without them our picture of his personal teachings would be incomplete." A. B. Bruce has well said that "every miraculous act of Christ must be conceived of as congruous to his Messianic vocation and serviceable to the interests of the divine kingdom. None of the miracles, of whatever class, can be regarded as mere displays of power; they must all be viewed as arising naturally out of their occasions and serving a useful purpose in connection with Christ's work as the Herald and Founder of the kingdom of heaven." It was not to show off himself that Jesus wrought miracles, but to help mankind. The careless reader is likely to miss the main point in the study of New Testament miracles. Walter C. Smith, a popular Scotch preacher, on one occasion tried to explain to an old lady the meaning of the scriptural expression, "Take up thy bed and walk," by saying that the bed was simply a mat or rug easily taken up and carried away. "Na, na," replied the lady, "I canna believe that. The bed was a regular four-poster. There would be no miracle walking away wi' a bit o' mat or rug on your back." Too often we look for the wonder of the miracle without serious thought of its moral lesson.

The miracles are symbols of the "greater works" of the gospel: the opening of the eyes of the spiritually blind, the unsealing of the ears which sin has deafened to the truth, the liberation of the paralyzed spirit to run in the way of God's commandments, and the quickening of the dead in trespasses and sins. In the working of one of his notable miracles, Jesus shows how the physical prefigures the spiritual by saying: "That ye may know that the Son of man bath authority on earth to forgive sins (then saith he to the sick of the palsy), Arise, and take up thy bed, and go unto thy house." (Matt. 9: 6.)

Why Did They Cease?

Miracles have served their purpose and are no longer needed. They would grow cheap by repetition. Andrew Fuller called them the "swaddling clothes of the infant churches." Yet many in our day claim this power and manage to surround themselves with gullible folk who come for fleshly blessing. "If they hear not Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded, if one rose from the dead." (Luke 16: 31.) Augustine quaintly said: "The church has been built and the scaffolding of miracle removed; but the gospel, which is better than miracles, ever proving itself the 'power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth,' is still sounded out."

"Greater Works Than These."

Technically, miracles belong to the physical realm. They are deviations from the known laws of nature through the agency of a supernatural Being. While we use the term "miraculous" to describe certain things that are extra wonderful in the spiritual realm, we understand full well that we are not saved through miraculous agencies or angelic visitations, but through sincere obedience to the plain commands of the gospel. We read of a boy who stood in the middle of a muddy road and promised God he would be a Christian if God would dry up the puddles. He wanted a miracle. Saul, who received a miraculous visitation of Christ, must needs go to Jerusalem and receive further instructions from Ananias. The angel told Cornelius to send to Joppa and fetch Peter, "who shall speak unto thee words, whereby thou shalt be saved, thou and all thy house." (Acts 11: 13, 14.) For as Sabatier says: "God only manifests himself in extraordinary events in order that we may recognize him in ordinary ones." Surely we have outgrown the superstitious idea that being saved is some such process as "coming through" or it is like being struck by lightning.

In our study of the gospel plan of salvation we confine the necessary appearance of miracles to the apostolic age, yet we do not undervalue the greater works which Jesus said his followers would be able to accomplish in his name. To save a soul from death and to hide a multitude of sins is a greater work. To suspend the law of the tyranny of habit and to change the wages of sin into the gift of eternal life is a marvelous deed. Here we may speak of miracles only by way of accommodation. It does not describe the process, but it is the best figure, perhaps, to denote the transcendent blessing. I knew a man so coarse and hardened by sin that he cursed his wife, drove his children into the street, and spoke evil of the Bible. But in some way or other his heart was touched by the gospel message; he was transformed into a kind husband, a loving father, a reverent Christian. When I saw this thing, I said, it is like unto a miracle! I knew a woman so blinded by sin that she left her home and went into a place of shame where she drank the very dregs of dissolution and vice; but in the providence of God she, too, heard the gospel, turned away from that terrible infamy, and gave her life to the service of the Master. When I saw this thing, I said again, it is like unto a miracle!

How do I know he is Jesus, the Lord?
I was leprous, and foul, and mean;
I fell at his feet, and he lifted me up,
Saying: "I will; be clean!"

Faithful in a Very Little.

A raindrop falls silently down from the sky, To freshen a small drooping flower; It speaks of more raindrops to come by and by, When earth is made glad by a shower.

Then tiny wee sunbeams steal out from the sun, To make the world happy and bright; They creep into corners that other folks shun, And gladden and cheer with their light.

And birds do not think they are too small to sing,
And stars think it worth while to shine;
If these have their small bits of work for their King,
I surely, his child, must have mine. —Selected.

"Preachers and Preaching." No. 3.

BY AN OBSERVER.

Continuing my observations, I must say that it appears that Brother Holt with some others (Brother F. O. Howell, for instance, whose article on this subject appeared in the Gospel Advocate of April 1) does not know why Paul made tents. He says it "was an incident or an accident" and must "not be exalted into a law for preachers." But the principle involved is a law for preachers and for all Christians.

Why did Paul make tents? Was it because he was out of money, at times, and the stingy churches just would not support him, but he felt so bound to preach that he supported himself and preached anyway? That is not a bad motive, especially if in the meantime he taught the churches their duty to support the gospel and to extend the kingdom of Christ. No man can say Paul ever failed to teach this duty or any part of the will of God at any place at any time. He taught, not only by precept, but by example. His speeches and his Epistles and his life abound with such teaching. Some who seemingly regard not his example quote freely his teaching on this subject, Did Paul work because he was out of money and was forced by sheer necessity to do so? Then, having made a little, did he, as some do now, quit work until that gave out? Some now, when their money gives out, will not work for more. Let us read thoughtfully 1 Cor. 9: 1-23 and other passages in which Paul mentions his tentmaking, and see if we can discover his high and holy motive and lofty spirit manifested in working with his own hands. We shall find that his working much in different places was not because he had no right to receive a full support and to forbear working; he had this God-ordained right. But in making tents or preaching the gospel it was not the support itself he sought. He clearly states that, while he had these rights, he "used none of these things" and "made the gospel without charge, so as not to use to the full" his "right in the gospel." He informed the Corinthians that, in writing on this subject, he was not doing so that it might be so done in his case. Why? "An incident or an accident " indeed! He answers:

"For it were good for me rather to die, than that every man should make my glorying void. For if I preach the gospel, I have nothing to glory of; for necessity is laid upon me; for woe is unto me, if I preach not the gospel. For if I do this of mine own will, I have a reward: but if not of mine own will, I have a stewardship intrusted to me [he must preach the gospel, anyway, as a steward]. What, then, is my reward? That, when I preach the gospel, I may make the gospel without charge, so as not to use to the full my right in the gospel. For though I was free from all men, I brought myself under bondage to all, that I might gain the more.

Then Paul "did not use to the full" his "right in the gospel." as he could have done; but he worked with his own hands in order to support himself and, at times, those who were with him (Acts 20: 34), in order that he might "make the gospel without charge" in order to "gain the more." He was governed by the noble principles of seeking, not his own profit, but the good of the many (1 Cor. 10: 33), and he did that which would result in the salvation of the greatest number. Must not this principle govern every one? Has not God exalted this into a law for all preachers and all other Christians? That is, does not he command all to so live as to serve the greatest number? Now we begin to understand why Paul, at times, worked at tentmaking and declined to become a burden to some churches. He says to the Corinthians: "In everything I kept myself from being burdensome unto you, and so will I keep myself." (2 Cor. 11: 9.) He says he and Titus manifested the same spirit and walked by the same rule in regard to these Corinthians; that Titus took no advantage of them; and that none whom he sent to them took any advantage of them. (2 Cor. 12: 14-18.) Why? Not because it was wrong to receive support, for he took "wages" of other churches that he might preach in Corinth; but to convince the Corinthians that he sought their souls and not their money (verse 14), that he might stop their impugnment of his motives, and, above all, to save the more of them. To save the more is the principle. Could there be purer and loftier reasons for working with his own scar-covered hands?

Again, to the Thessalonians Paul says he did not "eat bread for naught at any man's hands, but in labor and travail" he worked "night and day" that he might not burden any of them. Why? Not because he had not "the right," for he had that right and could have used it; but purely for their good and not his profit-to make himself an example unto them that they might imitate him. Since he set this good example of sacrificing and working for others, they should follow him, as it was their salvation he was seeking. Also, by the authority of God, he had commanded them to work at some useful employment with their own hands (1 Thess. 4: 11, 12), making it so strong as to say, "If any will not work, neither let him eat;" for there were some who would not work, but were busybodies (2 Thess. 3: 6-15.) God's law is for the teacher to lead the way-to first do and then teach. (Suppose all read Acts 1: 1; 20: 28; 1 Cor. 11: 1; Rom, 2: 21-23; 1 Tim. 4: 12; Tit. 2: 7; 1 Pet. 5: 3-but this is enough; people who will not believe these would not believe though one should rise from the dead.) Paul, therefore, worked "night and day" in Thessalonica in order to set the church and others a good example-to practice what he preached—that all might see the everyday and practical good in Christianity. He exhorted the elders at Ephesus to help the poor and showed them by his own example-"that so laboring"-how to do it. Also, by working there with his own hands, he demonstrated that he "coveted no man's silver, or gold, or apparel."

Jesus was a carpenter, and worked at the trade, until his public ministry began. Paul exhorts all to follow him as he followed Christ. (1 Cor. 11: 1.) Christ came to bless mankind and to seek and to save the lost; Paul lived and worked and preached for the same purpose, and so as to save the greatest number. All preachers and Christians should do the same now.

Jesus was a carpenter, but not by "accident." Paul was not a tentmaker by "accident," and he did not as a preacher make tents by "accident," or simply because he ran out of money. Jesus and Paul sought the greatest good here and salvation hereafter of men. People cannot be useful and happy here or saved hereafter without useful employment, and Jesus and Paul led the way in all this.

Brother Holt says as the soldier does not belong to himself, neither does the preacher. But God declares that no Christian belongs to himself. All have been bought with a price, and the same price, and are not their own. (1 Cor. 6: 19, 20.) The same rule applies to all. Again, "The King says to his preachers: 'Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature.'" Does he not now say this as much to the church? He has made the church "the pillar and ground of the truth." (1 Tim. 3: 15.) I grant that many preachers and more who are not preachers are looking entirely too much after the flesh, and I join Brother Holt in his efforts to arouse all to earnestness and zeal and self-sacrifice.

How is this? The church at Jerusalem-thousands-when scattered abroad, "went about preaching the word." (Acts 8: 4.) Some "traveled as far as Phenicia, and Cyprus, and Antioch," and preached "the word" to the Jews. (Acts 11: 19, 20.) Was this "God's way of evangelizing the world?" Paul reproved the Hebrew Christians for not being able to teach others the word of God. (Heb. 5: 11-14.) Then all Christians should teach and preach as they have ability and opportunity.

Now, what do we have? We have Paul determined, regardless of consequences-supported or not supportedhungry or well fed, naked or well clothed, in stripes and prisons or at liberty, on land or on sea-to preach the gospel, and to work in such a way as to gain the more, He took wages of churches, was supported by the church at Philippi and different places, received help from individuals, worked with his own hands, but never quit. So preachers may or may not be supported to-day; but they must never quit, but must give themselves wholly to the work and must not entangle themselves in the affairs of this life, so that they may please God, whose service they are performing. They must be true and faithful; they must not temporize or trim; they must not court the favor of the world or seek popularity, and must not make any compromises with error and sin. Paul stood before rulers and kings of the earth for the gospel's sake, but he was on one side and they were on the other; he was clothed in the whole armor of God, and they were equipped with carnal weapons. He was courteous and dignified and most respectful; but he never cringed, crawled, fawned, or flattered. He never straddled or swerved from the right. He never shrank from declaring the whole counsel of God, never kept back anything that was profitable to saints or sinners, and always set a good example, even to working at times with his own hands.

Now, here comes Brother Howell making some affirmations and denials about Paul's working with his own hands. I repeat, that all Paul says about the laborer being worthy of his hire, the soldier, the ox, the vineyard, the flock, those who serve at the altar, is true; because God has ordained that "they that proclaim the gospel should live of the gospel." But that does not destroy the fact that Paul made tents or his reason for doing so. Brother Howell says Paul "did this at no time, save when he had no other means for bread." This convinces us that Brother Howell, with not a few others, has not studied this matter sufficiently. If so, he could not make such bald assertions. It is grievous, too, because people look to preachers for correct information from the word of God. Brother Howell further says:

I deny that Paul or any other inspired man ever faught, either by example or precept, that the preacher of the gospel should have any other occupation, profession, or business, other than preaching the word.

The language used by some of these brethren does not agree with "the sound words" of the New Testament. Where does Paul or any other inspired writer talk about preaching the gospel as an "occupation," "profession," "business," in the ordinary meaning of these words?

Would Brother Howell and others join Brother Holt in his "equal rank" statement and place preachers in a class or order to themselves? I do not so understand the Bible I cannot accept any teaching or theory which casts reflections upon Paul, or would place him out of harmony with God's will. It is true—that is, it is taught by Paul, and, therefore, by the Lord—that "no soldier on service entangleth himself in the affairs of this life; that he may please him who enrolled him as a soldier." (2 Tim, 2: 4.) No soldier—no preacher or other Christian will do this. (See 2 Pet, 2: 20.) Hence, Paul, when making tents for the reasons which he gives while preaching the gospel, was not entangled in the affairs of this life; he was making full proof of his ministry and giving himself wholly to it. (1 Tim. 4: 15, 16.) So does the man who works with his hands for the same reasons and preaches the gospel.

Was not Paul in obedience to God when he worked with his own hands—not to make money, but to set a good example, to show the elders at Ephesus how to help the weak, to prove that he coveted no man's silver or gold or apparel, and to "gain the more?" Are not all preachers and all other Christians commanded to do the same?

But Brother Howell says "it is permissible under the divine law for a preacher to engage in" any honorable "business that he wishes." Not if that business entangles him "in the affairs of this life" and hinders him from saving the more and causes him to seek his own profit and not the good of the many. It seems to me he is about to reverse God's order—namely, deny that which God teaches and teach that which God denies. God does command preachers and all other Christians to work with their hands at something useful when by so doing they can save more souls than otherwise.

Let all preachers study to show themselves "approved unto God," workmen who need not to be ashamed, "handling aright the word of truth" (2 Tim. 2: 15); let all "hold the pattern of sound words" (2 Tim. 1: 13); let all speak "as it were oracles of God" (1 Pet. 4: 11); let all learn all that God teaches on a given subject and learn, too, "all things that pertain unto life and godliness;" and, above all, let all will to do God's will and to be filled with the Spirit of Christ.

And Brother John E. Dunn recently has written on "A Better Ministry," saying some timely and good things, but telling of the hardships he and his family have endured and of once risking his life in order to preach the gospel.

It seems to some that this comes with poor grace, since Brother Dunn turned to a man-made religious institution—the Y. M. C. A.; drew a salary of about twenty-four hundred dollars a year, or two hundred dollars per month, either from it or the War Work Council; and followed the army which was engaged in carnal war to France and lent his influence to the destruction of human life. I should be very glad indeed if Brother Dunn and other preachers and Christians who did the same could see their mistake and would come out squarely and plainly and say they did wrong. There is much good work for Brother Dunn to do yet, and we should all be glad to assist him into it.

Those who stood firm in the faith of "the gospel of peace" under "the Prince of peace" were the ones who suffered. But they were happy in that the Lord counted them worthy to suffer for his sake. They are the ones who deserve the sympathy.

As stated previously, Brother J. D. Floyd was never heard to complain, and he never suffered for the comforts of life. There are hundreds of faithful men and preachers whom the awful war did not shake in faith and service, but who wisely, courteously, and respectfully pursued the tranquil and quiet life in all godliness and gravity, trusted God without murmur or complaint, and were blessed with the peace of God which passes all understanding. Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ!

The Interchurch World Movement. No. 1. BY F. W. SMITH.

This conglomeration of "denominationalism" is giving the Christian Standard with its large constituency quite a deal of trouble just now. Judging from the present tone of the Standard, it has grave fears for the "Restoration movement" and for the "United Societies," whose leaders have committed the centralized societies and the Restoration movement, soul, body, and breeches, to the Interchurch World Movement. That our readers may have the benefit of first-hand information on the subject, I will treat them to a most excellent article from the pen of Brother H. C. Williams, which appeared in the Standard of April 10. Owing to the length of Brother Williams' paper, it will have to appear in installments. This week's issue will contain only his introduction or foundation for the full exposure of the whole situation. He writes under the caption of "Drifting Back to Babylon," with the text: "Beware of false prophets, who come to you in sheep's clothing, but inwardly are ravening wolves." (Matt. 7: 15.) Give it all a careful reading.

The Master knew the difficulties and dangers which would beset his followers in the world. He knew there was little to fear from the open opposition to his program by his avowed enemies, but that the only real menace to its triumphant progress and final victory would develop in the house of his friends. For that reason the climax of this outstanding discourse of Jesus concerning his kingdom is the warning: "Beware of false prophets, who come to you in sheep's clothing, but inwardly are ravening wolves." Arrayed in the garments of disablacking the are enabled to destroy at their will, as the opportunity presents itself, without danger of detection. ness of this menace is emphasized by his illustration which follows: "By their fruits ye shall know them." may be planted for years before the true character of its fruitage is manifest, and so false prophets may associate with the disciples, covertly and insidiously undermining the foundations of their faith, turning them into the way that leads to Babylon, with comparatively little danger of detection until too late and the fruits are manifest.

In his Olivet discourse, as recorded in the twenty-fourth chapter of Matthew, he points out the fact that in the progress of the church "many false prophets shall arise, and shall lead many astray." This gives point to the warning given in the previous discourse. The menace of the false prophet is ever present in the church of Christ. It can only be frustrated by the disciples themselves. They must "beware." They must be careful. They must prove all things, and "hold fast to that which is good," knowing that "not every one that saith unto me. Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father who is in heaven." (Matt. 7: 21.)

Paul warned the Ephesian elders of this same insidious danger: "I know that after my departing grievous wolves shall enter in among you, not sparing the flock; and from among your own selves shall men arise, speaking perverse things, to draw away the disciples after them." (Acts 20: 29, 30.) Here not only is the fact of the appearance of false prophets revealed, but the underlying motive of their action is given. They are possessed with the desire to be leaders among their fellows. In his instruction to Timothy, this same great apostle told him of the apostate conditions which the "Spirit saith expressly" would develop in the church, and what his attitude as a teacher should be. (1 Tim. 4: 1-6.) In his last letter to his "son in the gospel," he makes extended reference to the same subject again in the third chapter. In the closing of the Christian dispensation the apostasy from the truth would attain its greatest magnitude. Even in "the last days" the "form of godliness" would be maintained, but "the power there-of" would be denied. As the Christian would be denied. As the Christian dispensation draws to a close, the dangers surrounding the disciples, because of the activities of false prophets, shall not grow any less, but, rather, grow more serious. "Evil men and impostors shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived.' The apostle does not attribute deceit and improper motives to all of these impostors. He says that some of them are "but they are none the less "evil men A man living "in all good conscience," "being deceived," and impostors." and sincerely thinking he is doing God a service, may lead the disciples astray as easily as one who acts from improper motives. All sincere disciples of Christ may carefully examine the acts and words of those who assume to be leaders among us without imputing suspicion as to the sincerity of motive of any man or woman.

In outlining the dangers that would certainly surround the church in its closing days, Paul was careful to give also a course of action in view of the facts revealed. This course of action may be summed up in a few words: (1) Abide in the great verities of the gospel as preached by the apostle; (2) maintain his faith in the ability of the sacred writings, which he had known from a babe, to make one wise unto salvation through faith in Christ Jesus; (3) to recognize the fact that the Scriptures would furnish a man completely unto every good work; and (4) to preach the word in the fear of God and of Christ Jesus, who shall judge the living and the dead.

We are not without warrant, therefore, if we would pause and investigate and analyze the various movements in which our self-proclaimed leaders seek to involve the Restoration movement at the present time. Especially is this true since the apostle has forewarned us of the increasing activity of impostors, "deceiving and being deceived," as the history of the church draws to a close. I know of no reason why the Christian dispensation should be extended indefinitely. God alone knows just how long he will permit present privileges and opportunities to be offered to the children of men, or how long he will suffer the flagrant violation of the teaching of Christ by his professed followers. We can only judge by his dealing with The entire time that elapsed from the men in the past. first call of Abraham to Calvary, and the slaying of our Passover, was about nineteen hundred and twenty-one years, according to the chronology available. He suffered the apostasy of the Jews for only about fifteen centuries, until he cast them off and rejected them.

There would be no reason, in view of God's will as manifested in the past, for hoping and expecting that the Christian dispensation will be extended indefinitely. It has already continued almost as many years as elapsed between the call of Abraham and Christ. No one can question that Peter, John, and Paul have described conditions as we see them prevailing in the religious world to-day, and, as well as the Master, have warned us to be watchful and to carefully discern between true and false teaching, lest we be led astray. The cry of "heresy hunting" and other false issues raised by "broad-minded" men should not deter any faithful disciple from being "careful to maintain good works," and from examining the teaching and program of religious teachers, without raising any question of their sincerity.

There are three factors in the present religious situa-tion that easily take first place in the thought of seriousminded disciples of Christ identified with the Restoration movement, They are: (1) The United Christian Missionary Society, (2) the Interchurch World Movement, and (3) the Plan for the United Churches of Christ in America. One is already an accomplished fact. We helped bring it to birth. For the sake of harmony many advised that it be given a trial, and so the United Christian Missionary Society is established, and is ready to function at the same moment that the Interchurch World Movement begins to function. This we are informed by a leader in the United Christian Missionary Society, although why it awaits the functioning of the Interchurch World Movement, we are not informed. The second of these is in process of development. Its promoters, with considerable reason, hope soon to have the majority of the "denominations" definitely "cooperating" according to a fixed plan, with themselves as overlords. The third of these factors only awaits the very immediate future, when the same leaders hope that the loose organization of the Interchurch World Movement may crystallize and take definite and permanent form in the United Churches of Christ in America, and when they "shall undertake inspirational and educational leadership in the fields of evangelism, social service, religious education, and the like."

Thus we see that the hosts of the Restoration movement are to be delivered into denominational Babylon, very easily and speedily, if the program of our leaders is carried out without hindrance, and as outward prospects give them every reason for assurance. The crucial hour is upon us, and the time is come when those who are identified with the Restoration movement must decide, without temporizing, whether it will disappear from the face of the earth as other movements in time gone by, or whether it will remain a vital factor in bringing about the answer to the Master's prayer. I am confident that the great body of the faithful followers of Christ and the lovers of the Restoration plea have no conception of what is going on, False prophets-deceived themselves, perhaps-have digged the pit into which we may fall before another year passes by. Disaster can be avoided only by recognizing the trend of events, and by concerted action. It is vital, therefore, that every disciple of Christ thoughtfully consider the three factors aforementioned in their relation one to the other. Facts and realities are the things which we have to face, and not theories and uncertainties.

The tendency to persevere, to persist in spite of hindrances, discouragements and impossibilities: it is this that in all things distinguishes the strong soul from the weak.—Carlyle.

The Sommer-McQuiddy Discussion.

BY E. C. FUQUA.

[The following encouraging letter was written by Brother Fuqua to Brother McQuiddy. We give him and others permission to print the articles if desired.—Editor's Note.]

I have just received the Gospel Advocate of April 15 and read your reply to Brother Sommer; and I cannot resist the impulse to write you a line to say that I believe your reply the best and most thorough refutation of the deflection of anti-Bible-college-ism I have ever seen. It settles the issue as emphatically as it needs settlement. Brother Sommer is undeniably trying to force a law where God has made none, and is "at law" merely because others will not recognize the authority (?) by which he enacts said law. That has always been the only thing ever attempted by him and his colleagues regarding this agitation. This is the one root of dissension from which they spring their divisions, as at Denver, which results, in every instance and without exception, in alienations, merely because brethren will not concede to these men the right to make law where God has made none. You show that up in a most thorough manner. I am glad you do this through the Advocate, for the brethren throughout the world ought to know that his whole trouble comes of the lust of these men to make laws for and rule over disciples of Christ in the absence of law from their Head. You "hit the nail on the head" exactly when you say, "Roman Catholics, assisted by Brother Sommer," are endeavoring to drive the Bible from our schools. That is precisely the "team" that is pulling in this direction. Continue to press Brother Sommer (1) for the scripture which specifies the method of teaching the Bible and (2) for the right of your articles to appear in the Review. This will settle the matter in the minds of all who love God and the truth.

May I reprint, with proper acknowledgment, your reply to Sommer, for use here? I see where these two articles alone can be made to rout much of the evil this modern popery has done in Colorado. I propose to reprint Sommer's article in full, and your reply in full, for free distribution here where this trouble is encountered by me in the future of this work (and I am sure to encounter it).

Keep pushing your points; you have the downhill pull on him, as surely as truth is truth. While you are "at it," give it a thorough expose and show the "Review family" that at least one "new digressive" is not afraid of their banterings. The Lord bless you, strengthen you, and guide your pen to save the church of God from much of the ravages of this modern monster.

Hugh Miller and Rochester, N. Y.

BY R. L. WHITESIDE.

The Atlantic Coast States have been neglected. Whether the fault is theirs or ours is not for me to say. But when a door is opened for us in those neglected fields, the fault is ours if we do not enter. Such an opening seems now to be presented to us at Rochester. I have known Hugh Miller from the time he was a little boy. His parents are among the very best Christians in the land. Hugh is capable, consecrated, and level-headed. He did not go to Rochester for money, but he cannot do his best work without support. I write this to give what assurance I can to Christians everywhere that they will be supporting a worthy, Godfearing man when by their means they keep Hugh Miller at Rochester.

Confidence.

I turn to thee, O Christ, because I know Thy human heart Exhausted mortal anguish, learned each woe Earth could impart.

Therefore I venture, unafraid, and roll
My burden's weight
On thee, because no burden for thy soul
Can be too great.

Georgia and the Far Southern Field

Brother Srygley's Stay in Atlanta.

Last night (April 25) brought to a close Brother F. B. Srygley's fifteen-days' stay in Atlanta. He preached each night (excepting Saturday nights) and twice each Lord's day at the West End Avenue house of worship, and spoke at East Point and South Pryor Street in the afternoon of the first two Lord's days that he was with us, respectively.

No one has visited Atlanta during my nearly fourteen years of labor here whose services have been more nearly universally appreciated. He made friends with every member of the congregations here who heard him and many friends of those who are not members. It was the unanimous wish of all the members that he visit us again in 1921, coming a little later in the season, when we can stretch our tent in a more central location. This he has agreed to do, if it is the Lord's will.

The one thing, most of all, the Atlanta brethren appreclated about Brother Srygley's preaching was its soundness and simplicity. "Foolish and unlearned questions" he avoided, except to condemn the idea of preachers and churches running off after such things. The pure word of God on every question he handled he gave us, and it greatly strengthened the work at this place and made many friends for the cause of our Lord whom we had not formerly reached. The churches need more and more of such preaching as our brother gives to the people, and it is strange to me why any one who claims to be a minister of the gospel of Christ could think of doing any other kind of preaching. May he live many years yet to do such preaching and favor the readers of the Gospel Advocate with such sound teaching as he recently gave us on "the kingdom and church" question.

Our Work Is Specific.

I know of no bigger bunch of rebels than any congregation calling itself "the church of Christ" that loses sight of its mission and goes off after the doctrines and opinions of men. For certain it is that we have too many denominations already and not enough churches of Christ, As stated last week, "the church of the living God" is declared to be "the ground and stay of the truth," and not something else. Whenever we begin to support something else, we cease to be the body of people God would have us be. The charge he has given us is specific-viz.; "Preach the word." (See 2 Tim, 4: 2.) When we preach anything else, we are obeying a charge from Satan and not from God. We are absolutely without excuse when we preach anything else; for preaching the word of God, just this and nothing more, is easier than preaching something else. It seems that some long to appear wise; hence, very much desire to preach unheard-of things. All such you find digressing from the gospel of Christ and making for themselves parties of their own. A human organization has never started except by some man or men teaching things that are not in the Book. When we take our stand for "the truth," recognize the fact that if we would be "the church of the living God" we must ever be the ground and pillar of it, we will not be out starting new churches, new movements, but will be busy supporting a movement that was inaugurated on the first Pentecost after Christ's resurrection. Here is where we find strength indeed, and a joy and peace that goes beyond our understanding. People who take a stand here are not irritated when they are asked to state what they believe and why they believe it; they have a reason for their hope, and gladly give it to any one who asks for it. Firmness and stability of character is the outstanding characteristic of those who rest on the rock of God's truth and preach and teach this and nothing else. But one of the most easily seen marks of those who teach the vain speculations of men is their dodging, evading, and ever fighting a running fight, and dreading the ldea of taking a stand fairly and squarely on what they do really believe and letting it be tested. If you insist upon their doing so, as a rule, they will consider you an enemy and accuse you of persecuting them. How sensible it is to stand just for the truth! How foolish to try to support anything else in religion!

Brother Flavil Hall is now helping Brother Ludlam, at Carnesville, Ga., in his efforts to preach the gospel to the people and teach them how to sing the gospel as well as preach it.

Five automobile loads went to Austell yesterday afternoon to encourage the "faithful few" at that place and to arrange for the spring and summer campaign in that town. The preaching brethren who went were: Hugh E. Garrett, R. L. Smelser, R. H. Rogers, John Klingman, and the writer. Brother Klingman will visit that place every fourth Lord's day for a while. Brother J. T. Hunton preaches there on the second Lord's day in each month.

Brother S. E. Templeton was at Rockmart last Lord's day and reports an interesting service.

Brother R. H. Rogers continues to do a good work at the South Pryor Street congregation. Two more were added to their number recently.

When this reaches our readers, I will be in a revival with the church at Savannah, Ga., the Lord willing.

Book Notices.

Have you read "Sunshine, or Uncle Minor's Stories?" This is a very attractive book for children as well as for old people. Children read it with much interest. It is profusely illustrated, and contains many interesting incidents and stories. Price, $1.50.

"The Model Church," by G. C. Brewer, treats of live subjects, and is a book that should be distributed among the churches. This book has been almost universally commended and is being read with interest by many people. Price, $1.

A good book for young people to read is the "Life of Mrs. Charlotte Fanning." Mrs. Fanning was noted for her piety, zeal, and good sense. Hers was a life remarkable for the good accomplished. She always exerted an ennobling, refining, and uplifting influence. This book is ably edited by Mrs. Emma Page Larimore. Price, $1.

Send us fifteen cents for a copy of "What Was Nailed to the Cross?" It is a live tract, and is made up of some stirring thoughts of F. W. Smith. Adventists were active in North Nashville, and Brother Smith delivered a few sermons on the subject. The tract embodies the substance of these sermons. Buy a dozen copies and distribute them among the people. Price, $1.50 per dozen.

We have on hand a few copies of "Biographies and Sermons," edited by F. D. Srygley. This is a book of sermons by a number of our best-known preachers. It is well worth a careful perusal. A brief history of the life of each preacher accompanies his sermon. A picture of the preacher also is given with each sketch. Price, $1.50. If you want this book, you should order at once, as we have just a few copies that have been left over through mistake.

Training Little Children

On Teaching History to Children.

As a child, I had a profound dislike for history; and considering that a history recitation in those days was hardly more than a struggle to recite "the lesson" as nearly verbatim as possible, I am inclined to think that my childish judgment was very good. Poor little youngsters that we were, we had to draw plans of battle grounds, to learn the numbers killed and wounded on the opposing sides, and to recite lengthy lists of dates, adjusting its proper event to each. We had so little idea of the relative importance of the events that the burning of a tiny village by the Indians seemed to us quite as momentous as the surrender of Quebec.

A child has little background of knowledge. Dates mean nothing to him; and proper names, if he knows nothing of their bearers, might just as well be Greek.

In teaching history to children, there is just one fact that we can generally depend upon, and that is their unfailing interest in people. The children's librarians say that they cannot begin to supply the demand for short, interesting biographies, stories of people and what they did, told in a simple way. "Columbus set sail from Spain to try to find China" will make a child listen. "An attempt was made by Spain to discover China" will make him wonder how soon he can get away.

If I were going to teach the history of the United States to boys and girls of nine or ten, I would try to do it by inducing them to read simple, picturesque, well-written stories of the men who have made our country what it is. Then I would let the children talk of what they had read and ask questions about it. Some of these questions I would answer; some, I would ask them to try to answer for themselves. I would say nothing about exact dates; but I would make four or five general divisions of our history, such as discoveries and settlements, colonial days and Indian wars, the Revolution, etc., and put a copy into every book. There would not be many stories of our American heroes that the children would not soon be able to put into their proper divisions. Then, if more than one book had been read, I would go through the stories rapidly in their chronological order, bringing out any information that the children might have gathered and occasionally adding a word to connect the stories or to make some point clearer.

What would this accomplish? At the end of the reading the children would be on good terms with twenty-five or more of the chief actors in the story of the United States; they would be well prepared for a "real history;" and, best of all, they would look forward to it, not with dread, but with pleasant anticipation.

Working With the Eternal,

Above all, man looks out beyond his own wingless mortality into the regions of the whirling heavens and watches innumerable suns speed on eternal ways, and he says, "I, too, am up there; I, too, play a part in the wheeling of the stars through their orbits;" and from the thought he draws in peace to his soul, knowing the smallness of his part in the great scheme, and knowing, too, that he cannot so much as pluck a flower but the movement will reach into the farthest, starriest way, and cause a sun to tremble in its course. So his life, changing, lasting for a breath and fading from sight, is yet a part of this matter he names eternal life, and he identifies his little momentary breath with all that is immortal.

These are the thoughts that rise in our hearts, as we make our little marks in time, to divide off a year from a year. These are what we stay our pace to listen to, lest life flit by us unnotched, and too little of its meaning and significance sink into our consciousness. For such calling of ourselves to account do we set apart days for recollection, days for preparation that more ample years may yet unfold, and we tell ourselves once more to take heart, however fleeting the pageant we call life may be.

" For the dream of a world is a dream in a dream, But the great One is, or nothing could seem.

Discussion of truth is one thing; argument is another and a very different thing. The discussion of a question by two persons whose common and only purpose is to get at the truth ought to be a profitable exercise, and the truth is likely to be revealed in richer measure than it can be when studied by an individual alone. But the moment the discussion degenerates into an argument, the usefulness of the conversation is pretty sure to be lost, for the chief purpose of an argument is to prove that my side is the right side, and two persons on opposite sides of an argument are never likely to get together. It matters little whether I am right or wrong in a discussion; it matters a great deal that I should see the truth, and all the more so if the truth proves that I have been in the wrong. Moreover, the moment it appears that what one is saying is antagonizing. rather than helping, the other person in a discussion, that moment is a good time to change the subject; for no good ever comes of a collision between friends.—Selected.

Gethsemane.

In golden youth, when seems the earth A summer land for singing mirth; When souls are glad and hearts are light, And not a shadow lurks in sight; We do not know it, but there lies Somewhere, veiled under evening skies. A garden all must sometime see; Somewhere lies our Gethsemane.

With joyous steps we go our ways: Youth lends a halo to the days; Light sorrows sail like clouds afar; We laugh, and say how strong we are: We hurry on; and hurrying go Close to the borderland of woe That waits for you and waits for me: Forever waits, Gethsemane.

Down shadowy lanes, across strange streams, Bridged over by our broken dreams, Behind the misty cape of years, Close to the great salt font of tears, The Garden lies: strive as you may, You cannot miss it on your way All paths that have been or shall be Pass somewhere through Gethsemane.

All those who journey, soon or late, Must pass within the garden gate; Must kneel alone in darkness there And battle with some fierce despair. Alas for those who cannot say,

"Not mine, but Thine!"-who only pray,

Let the cup pass," and cannot see The purpose in Gethsemane.

JOURNEYINGS OFTEN

By B. C. GOODPASTURE

"What theu seest, write, . . . and send it to the churches."

The Town.

Henderson, the county seat of Chester County, is a beautiful town of more than two thousand inhabitants, on the rolling highlands of West Tennessee. It is a town that has been well known for the past fifty years on account of its schools. As to the people, they are very hospitable and high-minded; they live up to a fine standard of morals. Henderson is such a place as one would remember pleasantly and want to visit the second time.

Ø Ø Ø

The Church.

In January, 1903, the church divided-those who were pleased to worship God "as it is written" and to speak only "where the Bible speaks" left those who were bent on introducing the modern innovations. The congregation existed before this time, but my notes fail to show how long. For some time previous to the separation there had been two opposing elements in the church. These were about equal when the division occurred. Immediately following this trouble, Brother E. A. Elam preached a series of sermons in the Baptist meetinghouse, which greatly encouraged the brethren to "continue in the faith." They erected a new meetinghouse in the latter part of 1903. During the meantime their services were conducted in the courthouse. How often since Paul's time men have been driven to "appeal to Cæsar!" Within the years that have passed since then the church has held several mission meetings, established a few congregations, and preached the gospel regularly to the great student body that has gathered in Henderson from year to year. Perhaps the congregation has done its greatest work among these young people, hundreds of whom have heard and obeyed the gospel and returned to the various States from which they came. The brethren have purposed to "fight the good fight of faith," "to strengthen the things which remain," and to "sound out the word" in the "regions beyond."

Among those who have preached regularly for the congregation, A. G. Freed and N. B. Hardeman are chiefestthat is, they are "in labors more abundant." T. B. Larimore served the congregation one year as regular minister. At present A. G. Freed, N. B. Hardeman, and L. L. Brigance, in behalf of the congregation, give themselves continually to "the ministry of the word." Brother Elam conducted the first meeting for the congregation in 1903 and the last one, so far, in 1920. Between these, A. G. Freed and N. B. Hardeman have conducted several each, Other successful meetings have been held by F. B. Srygley, Joe S. Warlick, T. B. Larimore, and A. B. Lipscomb. The elders are A. G. Freed, M. D. Hartley, N. B. Hardeman, J. G. Hardeman, and A. M. St. John. Those who "serve as deacons" are J. E. Ledbetter, W. I. Hardeman, John McDonald, and F. G. Cheatham. C. A. Ward, who died recently, was a deacon. Ø Ø Ø

The College.

Freed-Hardeman College, in 1919, succeeded the National Teachers' Normal and Business College, which succeeded, in 1907, the Georgie Robertson Christian College, which, in 1897, succeeded the West Tennessee Christian College. Here is an instance of true evolution. The present administration building was finished in the summer of 1908. The first session was taught in it in 1908-1909, with A. G. Freed, president, and N. B. Hardeman, vice president. The enrollment for this session reached approximately two hundred. Since then many have come and gone, representing nearly all the Southern States, some of the Northern and Western States, and foreign countries. The Bible has been taught daily all these years, and a goodly number of young preachers have received their training there.

Prior to 1919 the college was owned and controlled by A. G. Freed and N. B. Hardeman. Early in 1919 a movement was inaugurated to raise one hundred thousand dollars to pay them for the building and place the management of the college in the hands of a board of trustees. The greater part of this fund, however, was to be used in building a dormitory for the young ladies. Practically three-fourths of the amount has been pledged, much of which has been paid, and the campaign still moves on encouragingly. The new dormitory is now being creeted, and it is expected to be ready for use at the opening of next session.

At this writing the faculty consists of A. G. Freed, president; N. B. Hardeman, vice president; W. H. Owen, L. L. Brigance, J. F. Chambers, Mrs. A. G. Freed, Mrs. N. B. Hardeman, Mrs. J. F. Chambers, Miss Lula Allen, Miss Lelia McKenney, and Miss Alice Cheatham. The college maintains primary, intermediate, grammar school, high school, and collegiate departments. The special departments are Bible, business, music, and expression.

Personals.

While in Henderson I was hospitably entertained in the home of Brother N. B. Hardeman, which is one of the preachers' homes in Henderson. Brethren Brigance, Freed, and others helped me a great deal in securing one of the longest lists of new subscribers that it has yet been my privilege to obtain. They further expressed their intentions to continue the good work in this campaign for new subscribers in West Tennessee. The management of the paper greatly appreciates their generous support.

Attention, Readers?

To every one who sends us two new subscribers to the Gospel Advocate we will give a "Teachers' New Testament." This is a very popular edition of the New Testament with notes and helps suitable for Sunday-school workers and Bible students. "The notes and helps were prepared by a joint editorial board of the foremost biblical scholars in the world. The introductions were written by men of international reputation. The text is that of the American Standard Version—the latest translation—with proper names marked for pronounciation and the words of Christ emphasized in heavy-faced type." This is the book for the family circle, home study, and Bible class. If you want to get the Testament in connection with your own renewal or one new subscriber, add fifty cents to the regular price of the paper. Send your order to-day to the Mc-Quiddy Printing Company, 317-319 Fifth Avenue, North, Nashville, Tenn.

The Call to the Church.

O bride of Christ! beloved by Him, Why are thine eyes of faith so dim? Dost thou not know His mighty power Is thine to use this very hour?

The world in awful anguish lies And heavenward lifts its pleading eyes; Body of Christ—His Hands and Feet— Thou must the mighty issue meet.

Fullness of Him who fillest all, Who never heedless hears thy call, His glorious gifts are thine to share With all his creatures everywhere.

O church of God! Why dost thou deem His promises an empty dream? Shake off thine unbelief and be His angel to humanity. —Frederick W. Neve.

AT HOME AND ABROAD

- C. E. Wooldridge is in a good meeting at Tracy City, Tenn.
- E. S. Jelley sailed from England to his post in India on April 24.
- C. R. Nichol's meeting at Foster Street, this city, is growing in interest every day.
- J. D. Gunn will begin a meeting for the Eleventh Street congregation, this city, next Sunday.
- B. C. Goodpasture reports four confessions at Dickson, Tenn., at the regular service last Sunday.

Jarratt L. Smith has some time for meetings. Address him at 167 Fourth Avenue, North, Nashville, Tenn.

A. A. Bunner was in a meeting last week at Naish Springs, W. Va. He also heard Brother Elam one night, who is holding a meeting at St. Marys, W. Va.

From W. G. Jernigan, Delta, Col., April 25: "I am in a meeting at this place. As soon as I finish here, I will go to Olathe, then to Lebanon, and from there to Dolores, where I will be in a tent meeting for thirty days."

J. D. Smith, of Dry Fork, Ky., came to see us last week. He had a splendid meeting at Spencer, Tenn., resulting in sixteen baptisms and four reclamations. Brother Smith said that Burritt College was doing a fine work.

From Flavil Hall, Carnesville, Ga., April 26: "I am teaching vocal music in the public school here, mornings, and preaching in the Presbyterian meetinghouse at night. The outlook seems hopeful. Only about seven disciples here."

F. C. Sowell writes from Columbia, Tenn.: "Our annual May meeting will be on the second Lord's day in May, at South Harpeth, Williamson County, Tenn. Preaching on Saturday night, two discourses on Lord's day, and much good singing, and a feast of good things in the service of the Lord."

From Ben West, Waxahachie, Texas, April 26: "Yesterday was a good day here. We are in the midst of a mission meeting in the Cotton Mills addition. Good interest and good attendance. The prayer services at the church are deeply interesting. One baptism last Thursday. Brother Busby will begin our meeting on May 2."

W. E. Williams writes from Tulsa, Okla.: "I am now located with the church at Tulsa I preach two sermons each Lord's day, and during the weekdays I preach from house to house. The brethren are loyal and have a mind to do things. By the help of the Lord, we expect to accomplish much good and bring many souls to Christ."

From Samuel Bond, 2001 Brainard Avenue, Cleveland, Ohio, April 28: "On April 17, 1920, S. Russell Bond and Lou E. Hardison were united in marriage at their home at the above address. Both are faithful members of the church of Christ here. May they ever be faithful and true to each other. We bespeak for them a bright future as they travel down life's pathway."

From W. E. Morgan, Childress, Texas, April 27: "The church here has promised to let me off for some protracted meetings this summer. I am booked for a revival at Comstock, Texas, July 1-15, and at Lake Victor, Texas, August 1-15. I am ready to answer calls for meetings in Texas, Tennessee, Arkansas, and Oklahoma for the latter half of July, latter half of August, also September and October."

W. J. Johnson writes from Amite, La.: "The Amite work should be put on such a footing that those laboring for our Lord here can do more for him than they are doing. One sister has promised to raise one hundred dollars. Of this amount, she has already raised fifty dollars, and promises to send the other fifty dollars soon. That sounds like business. Will not some one else do likewise? Send to me, Box $7, Amite, La."

Dr. S. T. Hardison writes from Lewisburg, Tenn.: "Thomas J. Cathey was born on September 6, 1841, and died on October 21, 1919. He had been a member of the Berea congregation, Verona, Tenn., more than forty years. While not demonstrative, he was devoted to the cause of the Master. His devoted wife and children have a well-grounded hope of meeting him in the land where there is neither death nor separation."

From Lee Jackson, Oakland, Miss., April 30: "I would like to make appointments for one, two, or three meetings, to be held between this date and the first of October, in Tennessee, Alabama, or Arkansas. I have been in my present field of labor for a number of years, and hence I feel like getting into new territory and meeting other brethren before I pass beyond my active life. I am a plain preacher of the simple gospel, knowing only the gospel and the practical things of the gospel."

R. A. Craig writes: "Beginning on May 1, I shall devote all of my time to evangelistic work. For quite a while I have felt that a greater effort should be put forth to reach the country people with the gospel. There are so many churches that have lost their 'first love,' and something must be done to bring them back. My work with King's Hall and with Cedar Springs has been pleasant indeed, and I regret to leave these brethren. Brother Rainey will take up the good work. I shall be glad to hear from churches in Kentucky, Indiana, and Tennessee needing meetings for this year. Address me at 1740 Chichester Avenue, Louisville, Ky."

From J. J. Vanhoutin, Paris, Ill., April 26: "I have never written an article, preached a discourse, baptized a person, or solemnized a marriage, but what I felt under renewed obligations to be faithful to the cause of Christ. Yesterday, after riding seven miles on the car, I was able to walk two and one-fourth miles in fifty-five minutes, then gave a thirty-minutes' talk on the origin, design, and work of that church, which was organized just ninety-four years ago, but is weaker now in numbers than ever, since its first year. Unless hindered, they meet every Sunday. My membership has been there since 1865. About all the trouble that was ever there was caused by persons who wanted the place."

F. B. Srygley writes: "The meeting at Atlanta, Ga., closed on April 25, after having continued fifteen days. It was a great pleasure to me to be associated with S. H. Hall and the good brethren and sisters of West End Church in a protracted meeting. Like the ancient people of God in Nehemiah's day, 'the people had a mind to work,' and it was a pleasure to work with them. They are satisfied with the ancient gospel as preached by the apostles, and this was no more than was to be expected under the training and leadership of Sam Hall and the elders which are over them in the Lord. If there were any difficulties or differences among them, I failed to discover it. They seemed to be at peace among themselves. I could but note with pleasure the growth in the congregation since I was last there, notwithstanding two other congregations have grown up or started in the city since then. The influence of these good people has not only been felt in the city of Atlanta, but in the country around. If they continue steadfast in the faith, and all the indications are that they will, their good work and usefulness have just begun. If Brother Hall never does any more, the Atlanta work will be a monument to him for many years yet to come; but his work and usefulness have just begun. There were seven additions to the congregation from all sources during the meeting. The Lord bless the work and the workers in Atlanta."

Make Disciples of All Nations. BY J. C. M'Q.

Christians are under obligation to see that the gospel is preached to every creature under heaven. The church is the light of the world, the salt of the earth, the pillar and ground of the truth. The Bible makes no distinction between foreign and home missions; in fact, it does not recognize foreign and home missions. When all authority had been given unto Christ in heaven and on earth, he commanded the eleven disciples: "Go ye therefore, and make disciples of all the nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit." (Matt. 28: 19, 20.) When Christ uttered this language, he had all authority, and so will not have any more in the future. It is not possible for him to have more omnipotence than "all authority in heaven and on earth." If it were his purpose to force people into obedience by the use of a red of iron, he has omnipotence to do so now, and it is wholly unnecessary for him to wait for more power. The very fact that he does not compel obedience now shows that compulsion is not in the plan of salvation. By moral and spiritual forces he proposes to lead mankind to a purer, nobler, and better life.

Some people quote Matt. 24: 14 to prove that the gospel is not intended for the conversion of the world. The passage reads: "And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in the whole world for a testimony unto all the nations; and then shall the end come." Premillenarians scarcely ever go further in Matthew than this verse when considering preaching the gospel to the world. They hold out the view that the gospel is to be preached for a witness or a testimony unto all nations, and not for the conversion of the world. If they would just continue their reading until they reached Matt. 28: 19, 20, they could easily learn that the command is to "make disciples of all the nations." "Make disciples" is a strong phrase, and means to convert sinners into followers of the Lord Jesus Christ. The very purpose for which they were commanded to preach the gospel was to make disciples of those to whom they preached, for Paul tells us that "the gospel is the power of God unto salvation." (Rom, 1: 16.) The apostles were not simply to preach the gospel in Palestine, but they were to preach the gospel to the wide, wide world. The order says: "And ye shall be my witnesses both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea and Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth." (Acts 1: 8.) As the apostles went making disciples of the nations, they were commanded to baptize them "into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit." This commits the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit to the great work of preaching the gospel for the conversion of sinners. Christ did not say, "And lo, I will be with you;" but he says, "I am with you." He was with the apostles in preaching the gospel for the conversion of sinners, and is with every faithful Christian who goes forth to-day bearing the precious news of salvation to a lost and ruined race. If we simply had Matt. 24: 14, we might not know for what purpose the gospel was to be preached and might conclude that it was simply to be preached as a testimony to the nations, and then the end would come; but with Matt. 28: 19, 20 before us, we cannot doubt for one moment that the gospel is to be preached to bring about the conversion of sinners. The gospel, God's "power unto salvation unto every one that believeth," works through human beings for the salvation of sinners. If sinners are not converted, if the progress of the gospel is slow, it is not the fault of the Father, Son, or Spirit, but the fault is with us.

When the early church sent teachers into destitute fields, they selected the very best men that could be found in the church. The church, under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, sent Paul and Barnabas to preach the gospel in territory where it had never been declared before. The church, in sending missionaries to preach the gospel to-day, should follow the example of the church at Antioch. There is no excuse for selecting men who have never succeeded in this country and sending them into a far-away country among strangers and heathens to preach the gospel of Christ. How can we expect men who have never been a success at home to be a success abroad? I am not writing this to reflect on any one missionary or individual, but simply stating a fact that demands our most serious consideration. The great trouble with the church to-day is not to get money to support competent missionaries, but it is to find laborers who are willing to make the necessary sacrifices to make disciples of the nations. "Then saith he unto his disciples. The harvest indeed is plenteous, but the laborers are few. Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he send forth laborers into his harvest." (Matt. 9: 37, 38.) As it was in the days of Christ, so it is now: the fields are white for the harvest, but the laborers are few. How few men do we really find in earnest, who are willing to work vigorously and steadily, making the necessary sacrifices in order to make disciples of the nations! There are thousands who are ready to accept the positions of successful men, but who are not willing to put forth the labor and sacrifice necessary to attain to such heights. Naturally, there is little difference in the abilities of men; the great difference is in their acquirements. One is ready to work, toil, and labor, while the other seeks a life of ease and luxury; one is industrious, the other is lazy. It is certainly a subject for prayer, and Christians everywhere should pray the Lord of the harvest, that he send forth laborers into his harvest.

The Gospel Advocate does not assume the rôle of selecting and caring for missionaries; it has too much respect for God's word to do this. But it would encourage the churches to select men who are fitted to the work of preaching the gospel, to send them into territory where the gospel has never been preached, and to hold up their hands while they are engaged in this work. As the soul is of more importance than any temporal consideration, the churches should exercise great wisdom and prudence in selecting men for the work. They should select men rooted and grounded in the faith; men who have been tried and proved true, and who are ready to make the necessary sacrifices in order to preach the gospel to those in darkness. The preacher must endure hardness, as a good soldier of the cross. The churches should not be indifferent to this work. The demand for faithful preachers is greater than ever before; so let our churches leave nothing undone until they prepare and send forth laborers into the harvest. The work of development may be slow; but if Christians everywhere would lead the godly, holy, unblamable lives which they should lead-if they would practice faithfully the religion of the Lord Jesus Christ in the home, in their business, in church and everywhere-it would not be long until we would find disciples who were ready to be laborers for the Lord.

Is it not possible that Christians can exercise the same wisdom in handling the funds necessary to support missionaries that they exercise in handling their own funds? If not, why not? Simply because we have not succeeded as we had hoped and because some serious mistakes have been made should lead us to more prudence and greater effort and sacrifice. Because there have been serious defections in the missionary field is no reason why we should despair and cease to pray and labor. We should renew our zeal and determination and press forward more vigorously than before. If men are not sound in the faith, it is better for them to go where they can work in full sympathy and accord. The church of Christ is better off without all such. Storms and cyclones purify the atmosphere. While the destruction that follows in their wake is awful and terrible, yet they are God's purifiers. Just so we should get good out of the failures that we have made. In humility, in deep trust and devotion, we should go forth sowing the seed of the kingdom, knowing that our Heavenly Father will give the harvest at the right time,

When the Military Spirit Entered Into the Church. BY E. A. E.

The military spirit is not the spirit of Christ. He did not put the military spirit into his church or into any individual Christian. He drove it out of Peter when he told Peter to "put up again thy sword into its place: for all they that take the sword shall perish with the sword," and that he could call "more than twelve legions of angels." (Matt. 26: 52, 53.) He drove it out of James and John when he told them they would have to drink of the cup which he would drink soon and endure his baptism of suffering, and also when he rebuked them for wanting to call down fire from heaven to consume a Samaritan village, saying, "for the Son of man came not to destroy men's lives, but to save them." (Luke 9: 54, 55, Authorized Version.) He convinced Pilate even that he had not come to set up a political, military kingdom, in rivalry to Cæsar's government, by saying: "My kingdom is not of this world: if my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight, that I should not be delivered to the Jews: but now my kingdom is not from hence," Jesus told Pilate that he was a King; that he was born to this end and to this end came into the world. (See John 18: 36, 37.) So Pilate knew Jesus' kingdom was not a temporal, political kingdom, to be established and maintained by the sword, as all earthly governments have been. All earthly governments have the military spirit and fight; the church of Christ has not this spirit and cannot use carnal weapons. (2 Cor. 10: 8.) There came a time when the military spirit entered into the church, and the church began to drift farther and farther from God until the Dark Ages.

Professors Hardeman and Owen, excellent teachers in Freed-Hardeman College, Henderson, Tenn., and clear and strong and most worthy preachers of the gospel, called my attention recently to what Myers in his school history, "Rome—Its Rise and Fall," says about the way and when the military spirit and the spirit of the world in general entered into the church.

On the celebrated battle field at Milvian Bridge on the Tiber, near Rome, when Constantine gained the signal victory over his rival, Maxentius, his standard was "the Christian cross."

Of Constantine, Myers says:

He had been led to adopt this emblem through the appearance, as once he prayed to the sun-god, of a cross above the setting sun with this inscription upon it: "By this sign conquer." Obedient unto the celestial vision. Constantine had at once made the cross his banner, and it was beneath that his soldiers marched to victory at Milvian Bridge.

We may entertain doubts about Constantine's ever having received such a sign from his sun-god, or his motives in making this his banner; but it is a fact that he adopted it as his standard and that he conquered. Myers says:

Whatever may have been the circumstances or the motives which led Constantine to make the cross his standard, this act of his constitutes a turning point in the history of the Roman empire, and especially in that of the Christian church. Christianity had come into the world as a religion of peace and good will. The Master had commanded his disciples to put up the sword, and had forbidden its use by them either in the spread or in the defense of the new faith. For three centuries now his followers had obeyed literally this injunction of the Founder of the church, so that a Quaker, nonmilitary spirit had up to this time characterized the new sect. By many of the early Christians the profession of arms had been declared to be incompatible with the Christian life.

Now in a moment all this was changed. The most sacred emblem of the new faith was made a battle standard, and into the new religion was infused the military spirit of the imperial government that had made that emblem the ensign of the state. From the day of the battle at the Milvian Bridge a martial spirit has animated the religion of the Prince of peace. Since then Christian warriors have often made the cross their battle standard. This infusion into the church of the military spirit of Rome was one of the most important consequences of the espousal of the Christian cause by the Emperor Constantine. (Pages 393, 393, 394.)

Following the battle at Milvian Bridge and the defeat of Maxentius there were ten years of rivalry between Constantine and Licinius, and two wars in which Constantine was victorious. But a year after his victory at Milvian Bridge, Myers says that by decree "Constantine placed Christianity on an equal footing with other religions of the empire." Constantine's "famous edict of toleration, the Magna Charta, as it has been called, of the church, was as follows: 'We grant to Christians and to all others full liberty of following that religion which each may choose."

Myers further says:

But by subsequent edicts Constantine made Christianity in effect the state religion and extended to it a patronage which he withheld from the old pagan worship. By the year A.D. 321 he had granted the Christian societies the right to receive gifts and legacies, and he himself enriched the church with donations of money and grants of land. This marks the beginning of the great possessions of the church, and with these the entrance into it of a worldly From this moment can be traced the decay of its primitive simplicity, and a decline from its early high moral standard. (Page 395.)

Let me emphasize these most significant declarations: "decline from its early high moral standard?" "decay of its primitive simplicity:" "the entrance into it of a worldly spirit;" "this infusion into the church of the military spirit of Rome;" "by many of the early Christians the profession of arms had been declared to be incompatible with the Christian life;" "nonmilitary spirit had up to this time characterized the new sect;" "for three centuries now his followers had obeyed literally this injunction of the Founder of the church;" "the Master had commanded his disciples to put up the sword;" "had forbidden its use but them either in the spread or in the defense of the new faith?" "Christianity had come into the world as a religion of peace and good will."

Christianity is all this yet. The teaching of Jesus is just the same now-is always the same. "The gospel of peace" and its spirit can no more be changed at these points than can the conditions of entrance into the church be changed.

No observant one can denv or doubt that the world war has filled the religious world and to a great extent the church of God with the military spirit and spirit of worldliness in general-namely; profiteering; love of money; greed of gain; extravagance beyond measure; immodest dress; immoral dances; plays of different sorts, which excite the passions and lusts of the flesh; and a character of preaching which panders to much of this and brings none to repentance and obedience to the gospel. A few righteous men and godly women say preaching is not what it was some years ago: that the church is drifting and that sinners are perishing for the truth. Who doubts that to-day the church has "declined from its early high moral standard," or its standard of a few years ago? Who doubts the "decay of its primitive simplicity," or the simplicity it maintained a few years ago? The few who would teach "all things that pertain unto life and godliness," "contend earnestly for the faith which was once for all delivered unto the saints," and maintain the simplicity of the gospel appear overwhelmed with the desire and cry for something else-something entertaining, sensational, appealing to the intellectual, literary taste, artistic, philosophic, scientific, of worldly wisdom, EARTHLY-and are paralyzed that they seem to have lost courage to continue aggressive and to cry aloud and spare not and show the Israel of God to-day their sins. In its present love of money, wickedness, idolatry, and licentiousness, the religious world to-day needs some Elijahs, John the Baptists, and Pauls, who, in courage faith, love, and wisdom, can turn people to God.

About the time, mentioned by Myers, when this military spirit, this worldly spirit in general, was infused into the church, "pouring" for baptism was first practiced, and then upon a sick man. About three hundred years later an organ was first introduced into the worship of God, but not without great controversy. Now what have we? "Pouring" for baptism, instrumental music in worship, and the military spirit in the church, all from Rome. Constantine did not get his fiery cross and standard from Christ, but from his "sun-god;" his military spirit, not from the New Testament, but from idelatry and the heathen world. People are wont to talk now about "the dogs of war," "the bloody war god," and a "god of battles."

If I cannot "walk by faith" and practice "pouring" for baptism; if I cannot "walk by faith" and use instrumental music in the worship of God, can I "walk by faith" and manifest the military spirit which came from the same source? Christians can practice pouring for baptism and use instrumental music in the worship of God with as | more of the things that are possible.-Hooker.

much consistency, as much in obedience to God, and "walk by faith" as fully as they can take the lives of fellow Christians, shed the blood of innocent and helpless boys, make thousands of widows and tens of thousands of orphans, burn dwellings, and spread ruin over prosperous and happy countries.

The historical proof that for the first three centuries the church stood aloof from military service, or bloodshed, and participation in political affairs is abundant. Also, there is abundant proof that from Constantine's time on, as many Christians yet would not engage in such things of the world, the same arguments were used to induce them to do so as are now used, the same spirit against them was manifested as is now manifested, and the same ugly things were said as are now said. The spirit of the world now and the spirit of Christ now are not the same. People then were persecuted and suffered martyrdom on account of this conviction and faith.

And except those days had been shortened, no flesh would have been saved: but for the elect's sake those days shall be shortened. (Matt. 24: 22.)

I have heard thoughtful men, who have "anxiety for all the churches." say, if the world war and that state of things had continued a few years longer, they doubt if one church member in a thousand could have been found free from the military spirit, the spirit to kill and to burn and to destrov:

Let us thank God for his salvation. And let us thank God, too, for salvation, so far, from compulsory military training as a law of the government. Let us give God the praise, because we are permitted and taught, "first of all," to make "supplications, prayers, intercessions, thanksgivings" "for all men; for kings and all that are in high place; that we may lead a tranquil and quiet life in all godliness and gravity" (1 Tim. 2: 1, 2.) Let us believe God has heard his people and has saved their Christian sons from this training and spirit. Let us never cease to trust God, to rely upon him, to pray to him for protection, and to thank him for this religious liberty. He overrules all world powers and all other things for his glory and the good of all who love him, and to love him is to obey him.

Reunion at David Lipscomb College.

We believe that all our readers are true friends of David Lipscomb College and ready to rejoice with us in its accomplishments and to help us plan for the future. We make this remark prefatory to inviting you to attend the Alumni exercises which will be held on the college grounds on Wednesday, May 12, at 10 A.M. The program committee has arranged a very pleasing and instructive program. Charles R. Nichol, of Clifton, Texas, will be one of the speakers; a selected quartet will render several numbers; dinner will be served on the grounds; and, any way you take it, there will be a feast of good things for all who attend. We are particularly anxious that all the friends and patrons of the college who have so generously contributed toward the building of the new girls' dormitory shall be present to inspect the new building, which is now practically completed. We ask that you make announcement of this invitation to your congregation and will appreciate the thoughtfulness of those who help with the dinner by bringing a basket.

Speak a good word and do a good deed for David Lipscomb College!

Confidently counting upon your attendance, we are, Sincerely yours.

It is estimated by the Near East Relief Committee that at least 800,000 Armenians will need assistance until the next harvest. Of this number, 250,000 are helpless orphans and aged persons for whom all necessities must be provided.

Armenians were killed and driven from their homes to starve because of their religion. Now they must be saved because of it. They are the oldest Christian people, the first to follow Christ, and rather than turn from him have died by thousands.

Owing to conditions throughout Europe, the greater part of the relief will have to come from the United States. The minimum requirements to keep these starving people alive will be seven thousand tons of flour monthly until the harvest of 1920. Besides this, there will be needed large quantities of clothing and other supplies for the additional relief of parentless children.

Money as well as many other things will have to be subscribed to complete the task of taking relief to those starving people. Without it the distribution of articles and the maintenance of the work now going on would be impossible. In the Caucasus alone five hundred thousand dollars will be needed to purchase food.

HERBERT HOOVER'S INDORSEMENT.

Mr. Cleveland H. Dodge, 1 Madison Avenue, New York -My Dear Mr. Dodge: I wish again to express my deep interest in the success of the work being done by the Near East Relief. The proposed action by Congress, if consummated, will practically provide only bread supplies to the Armenian population. The care of the three hundred thousand orphans and the provision of clothing, of hos-pital and medical supplies, must yet be consummated by private charity.

The whole action proposed by Congress is that out of the surplus bread supplies in the control of the government by virtue of the guarantees, wheat should be sold on credits to those countries who are unable to pay cash. This, therefore, leaves the eminent service that your committee performs still as necessary as ever.

Faithfully yours, HERBERT HOOVER.

In sending contributions, be sure and state whether they are intended for the Home Orphans' Fund, the Armenian and Syrian Fund, or the Poland Fund. I should be glad if more of the contributions were designated for use in providing for orphans in this country, since there are constant appeals from destitute families close to us. Make all checks and money orders payable to A. B. Lipscomb, who will forward them to the proper commissioners.

In its final form the Christian life is not a life of renunciation, but a life of consecration-a life that means giving up only in so far as giving up is giving upwardgiving upward of the whole self, its gifts, its present, and its future. It is the life of courageous freedom, the life of security in peril, the life of abundance in the midst of want, the life of peace in the midst of care, the life of large fellowship in the heart's loneliness.-Charles H. Brent.

SPRING AILMENTS

Relieved by A Well-Known Medicine of Superlative Merit.

Spring ailments are due to impure, impoverished, devitalized blood.

Among them are pimples, boils and other eruptions, loss of appetite, that tired feeling, a run-down condition of the system, and sometimes chronic machiness.

of the system, and sometimes chronic weaknesses made worse.

Hood's Sarsaparilla combines the roots, barks, herbs, berries and other medicinals that have been found, in many years of intelligent observation, to be most effective in treatment of these allments.

Successful physicians prescribe these ingredients for diseases of the blood, stomach, liver and kidneys, and in cases where alterative and tonic effects are needed.

Hood's Sarsaparilla is the spring medicine that purifies, enriches and revitalizes your blood, increasing power of resistance to disease,

SALTS IF BACKACHY AND KIDNEYS HURT

Stop Eating Meat for a While if Your Bladder is Troubling You

When you wake up with backache and dull misery in the kidney region, it generally means you have been eating too much meat, says a well-known authority. Meat forms uric acid, which overworks the kidneys in their effort to filter it from the blood, and they become sort of paralyzed and loggy. When your kidneys get sluggish and clog, you must relieve them —like you relieve your bowels—removing all the body's urinous waste, else you have backache, sick headache, dizzy spells; your stomach sours, tongue is coated, and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges.
The urine is cloudy, full of sediment, channels often get sore, water scalds, and you are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night.

Either consult a good, reliable physician at once or get from your phar-macist about four ounces of Jad Salts, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days, and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, com-bined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralize acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is a life saver for regular meat eaters. It is inexpensive, cannot injure, and makes a delightful, effervescent lithia-water drink.

May I, Dear Lord!

BY H. C. BRYANT.

May I, dear Lord, walk with thee While traveling through life below; May my life reflect of thee, And to others kindness show.

May I, each day, some kind act do, Thus proving to be loyal; May I to thy cause be true, And by Satan ne'er be folled.

May I, while reading in thy Book, Not be among the blind; But each time therein I look, Sweet consolation find.

May 1 be to others As I'd have them be to me; And while serving them, Realize I'm serving thee.

May I, all along life's way, To kind deeds be given, Thus paving the beauteous way To that celestial heaven.

What to others will tears be After they have passed away? May I help them on to-day, While thy word illumes the way.

"I Can't."

BY D. M. HYDER.

"I can do all things through Christ which strengthenth me." (Phil. 4: 13.)

My dear reader, in and out of Christ. we hear so many people offering excuses for not becoming obedient to the gospel of Christ. They say: "I can't understand and obey certain commands," It is often the case that we hear a brother say: "I can't pray;" "I can't talk in public;" "I can't read in public;" or, "If I knew I could do service as good as my neighbor, I would gladly do so." Would to God they would study the language of Paul and be able to say: "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me!"

I want to analyze the expression, "I can't;" and I want you, my friendly reader (though I may never meet you this side of the judgment), to give heed to what I say, and try and profit by it, and never say, "1 can't," but show that you are willing to do the Master's bidding.

The first letter is "I," which may stand for "idle." Christ does not want us to idle our time while working for him, but commands that we work while it is day; "for the night cometh, when no man can work." To be sure, if we are idlers in the vineyard of Christ, we will do more harm than good. Let's awake, my brethren, and go to work in behalf of our souls' salvation, or we will be lost in hell. Next, "Indifferent." True, we have indifferent church members-indifferent to all that God and Christ have done for them.

The next letter in the expression is "c," and may mean "contentious," "crazy." Some people seem to think if they take much interest in the

It must be admitted by every fairminded, intelligent person, that a medicine could not live and grow in popular ity for over forty years, and today hold a record for such wonderful success as does Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, without possessing great virtue and actual worth. Such medicines must be looked upon and termed both standard and dependable by every winking person. ninking person salvation of heaven they will go crazy. It may be, now and then, some one does go crazy over the subject of religion; but that is no reason why you should say, "I can't." How many go crazy from the service of Satan! Yet some church members keep right on in the practice of things contrary to the gospel and never think of going crazy. If any person can be called "crazy," it is certainly the one who deliberately neglects his duty after having started in the glorious work of God.

The next letter is "a." It may mean "annoyer," "angry." Some church members are given to anger too much to make good workers in the Lord's cause. As members of the body of Christ, we should put off all anger with the works of the flesh.

The next letter is "n," which may mean "naughty," "no good." If a person can be of no good in the church, it is one who says, "I can't." Paul asks the question: "How shall we escape, if we neglect so great, salvation; which at the first began to be spoken by the Lord, and was confirmed unto us by them that heard him?" (Heb. 2: 3.) There is simply no way of escape to the member of the church who neglects the duties and privileges of the great salvation.

The next letter is "t," which may mean "tongue" "taking things." A person who says, "I can't," is in danger of becoming a taking-things church member. There are some people who are all talk or tongue, but no do or work about them. Dear friend, Jesus died, was buried, and arose, and sent the apostles into all the world to preach the gospel, so all could hear, believe, repent, confess, and be buried with him in baptism for the remission of sins. Jesus never said, "I can't." If he had done so, we would have been lost in hell for eternity.

In conclusion, dear brethren, I want to exhort you not to say, "I can't," but say, as did Paul: "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me." You can render wholehearted obedience to the teaching of God's dear Son and be permitted to enter in through the gates into the golden city prepared for all the righteous.

As sometimes a flame is found
Clear-shining through the night,
So bright we do not see the lamp,
But only see the light—
So may I shine, His light the flame,
That men may glorify His name.

Fortitude.

Though you should neglect one or more of the many shrines in your heart, never be neglectful of the shrine of fortitude; offer there frequent worship, exalt fortitude among the highest objects of your prayers. To bear pain well is to be not only man, but also god. All through our lives fortitude remains above the possibility of explanation, a divine act, a downright interposition of Providence to help us to be good. It so rules and sways the admiration of mankind that Christianity was founded and built on the Passion, and the line is unbroken down from that example to the least of us bearing well the least moment of pain.

Fortitude illumines pain like sunshine or like a procession through dull streets. It writes Victory across the very page where Failure was written; and the best of it is that no occasion is too trivial for its exercise, no point of our lives too low to catch its light.—Stephen Paget.

For more than Forty Years Cotton Growers have known that POTASH PAYS

More than 11,651,200 Tons of Potash Salts had been imported and used in the United States in the 20 years previous to January, 1915, when shipments ceased. Of this 6,460,700 Tons consisted of which the cotton grower knew was both a plant food and a preventive of blight and rust,—with it came also 1,312,400 Tons of which has the same effect on Cotton, but which was used mainly in mixed fertilizers.

KAINIT

Shipments of both Kainit and Manure Salt have been resumed but the shortage of coal and cars and high freight rates make it more desirable to ship Manure Salt, which contains 20 per cent of actual Potash, instead of Kainit, which contains less than 13 per cent actual Potash.

MANURE SALT can be used as a side dressing on Cotton in just the same way as Kainit and will give the same results. Where you used 100 pounds of Kainit, you need to use but 62 pounds of Manure Salt, or 100 pounds of Manure Salt go as far as 161 pounds of Kainit.

MANURE SALT has been coming forward in considerable amounts and cotton growers, who cannot secure Kainit, should make an effort to get Manure Salt for side dressing to aid in making a big cotton crop.

Muriate of Potash

50 per cent actual Potash, has been coming forward also,—100 pounds of Muriate are equivalent to 400 pounds of Kainit or 250 pounds of Manure Salt.

These are the three

that were always used in making cotton fertilizers and have been used for all these years with great profit and without any damage to the crop.

In our experience we find that 75 per cent all women more or less dis-tressed with this annoying weakness, more or less distressed with this annoying weakness, which makes them pale, tired, fretful, wasting their feminine strength and often leading to serious illness. Working on our own cases and in conjunction with physicians, we had wonderful success with our own treatment. We brought many women from deep despair to loyful satisfaction. They wanted us to tell others all over the country how our treatment, named "Lukora," brought them out of distress and weakness to genuine feminine strength and bealth.

If you are a sufferer from Leucorrhea, stop carelessly letting it go on, but learn from me how it may be quickly ended in your own home. Think of the fullness of bread and prosperous ease, both temporal and spiritual, in the brotherhood, and not even one meetinghouse in the State of South Carolina! What a sad condition! How my heart is made to ache when I think of the congregations that have been preached to until they can find but few preachers who can interest them; where thou-sands of dollars have been spent in support of the gospel and where numberless sermons have been preached, and it seems that there is but little response. It is different here. I find many who are hungering for the bread of life and are praying for some one to come their way who will preach the word of life as it is. Calls are coming from various parts of the State: "Come over and help us." A more fruitful field is not to be found for "the seed of the kingdom." Some whom I have baptized have been praying for two years for some one to come their way who would preach the word. Our greatest need now is one tent (one is being furnished by the brethren at Lebanon, Tenn., through the efforts of some of the faithful sisters) and a meetinghouse in Union, a town of about seven thousand, where we have a lot. We have about twenty faithful members, and many others have expressed themselves as being converted to the truth, but are unwilling to come with us until we show that we are here to stay and have a house to meet in. We are not asking for a fine house. All we want is one that will demand some respect and show to the people that we really stand for something. I am spending sixty days on the road soliciting funds and am meeting with some success everywhere I go, but I am needed at home to be preaching every night. Many of our religious neighbors, when called upon to help put their drives for millions "over the top," did not stop at hundreds, but gave thousands, and thousands gave hundreds, and the top" they went, for they "had a mind to work." Certainly we have a "had a few who will give a thousand dollars, and several who will give at least one hundred, and others will gladly do what they can to help build this first house in the State of South Carolina, and let me get back and begin building and in the meantime be preaching every night. Brother, if you and your loved ones were in this condition, would you not like for some one to come to your rescue? "Do unto others as you would have them do unto you." Again, "it is more blessed to give than to receive." Try it once and be considered. to receive." Try it once and be con-vinced. Address all communications and make all drafts, money orders, and checks payable to me. Government bonds and stamps will be gladly accepted.—Thomas H. Burton.

SAGE TEA BEAUTIFIES AND DARKENS HAIR

Don't Stay Gray! It Darkens So Naturally that Nobody Can Tell

You can turn gray, faded hair beautifully dark and lustrous almost overnight if you will get a bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound" at any drug store. Millions of bottles of this old, famous Sage Tearecipe, improved by the addition of other ingredients, are sold annually, says a well-known druggist here, because it darkens the hair so naturally and evenly that no one can tell it has been applied.

Those whose hair is turning gray or becoming faded have a surprise awaiting them, because after one or two applications the gray hair vanishes and your locks become luxuriantly dark and beautiful.

This is the age of youth. Grayhaired, unattractive folks are not wanted around; so get busy with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound to-night, and you will be delighted with your dark, handsome hair and your youthful appearance within a few days.

Preaching the Gospel Through the Medium of Literature.

BY HARRIET L. KNIGHT.

The more we study the situation and watch results, the more, I am sure, we will become impressed with the high standing that literature holds among other mediums through which to get the gospel to the people.

Conditions have changed to such extent that now, to each one hundred people who attended public worship fifteen or even ten years ago, not more than ten can be found here in New England; and from general reports it seems that this condition is not confined to New England, but is prevalent throughout the country. People have become so completely engrossed with money and pleasure seeking that it seems more possible to reach them through the medium of literature than by that of public preaching, as they sometimes pause in their mad rush for these things for a few moments' rest in their homes, and so a small tract on a near-by table will sometimes be read, when it would be impossible to induce them to attend a gospel meeting.

We have a convincing example of this fact in the rapid increase in numbers of the Seventh-Day Adventists here in New England, which increase has been made almost exclusively through the circulation of their literature, showing that people will read religious literature when they will not attend religious meetings.

Some sixteen years ago Brother Lcomis O. Hinton, of Spencer, Ind., started a "Free Reading Library" for "shut-ins:" and in making an investigation of the success of his work, he informed me, in reply to my inquiries, that at that date $1,068,66 in money had been donated him for this work. He had kept no account of the number of books, tracts, etc., that he had sent out, but knew that they would number into the millions, as he had sent to invalids and shut-ins in every State in the United States, besides to many in Canada, South America, Australia, and Newfoundland.

Now, I shall take special pleasure in making special mention of one instance, showing the success of his endeavors and the great good he is doing. Brother Hinton saw in a paper for shut-ins the name of a young woman living near Augusta, Maine, about forty miles from Unity. In the spring of 1915 he paid for and sent her a year's subscription to the Word of Truth, then published by Brother E. C. Fuqua. Seven years before that this shut-in (who has requested that her name be withheld from publication) had been one of several "seekers" in a sectarian "revival meeting." and thought until she began to read the Word of Truth that she could be a Christian without being baptized: but after reading a few copies of this paper she began to get her eyes open. Brother Hinton followed the subscription to the Word of Truth with books and tracts, which she in turn handed on to others; and, as the result of this circulation of literature, she and four others have been baptized into Christ, Brother Charles M. Neal, of Portland, Maine, holding a short protracted meeting there a little over a year ago. Now, is not that a pretty good showing for Brother Hinton's work? Surely his work is worthy of the continued support of the brethren.

As it is equally as important to hold members as to get them. I am sure. judging from my own experience as a young convert and that of others, that the medium of literature should be more largely employed in establishing new members in the truth than is the general practice, thus safeguarding them from being drawn away into error. Truth taught through reading is more readily imbibed and longer retained than when taught through public speaking. For this reason, I believe that every church should have a library of books taking up such subjects as new converts especially need to thoroughly understand.

This need of such books for beginners in Bible study led me to write and have published a book which I gave the title, "The Story of the Bible," in which I have given such information as I myself needed as a beginner, the lack of which kept me groping in the dark for years. I find the title has been somewhat misleading, as some have supposed it to be a book of Bible stories, or just a narrative of Bible history; but it is neither. The book gives an account of the fall and restoration of man, showing the development of the plan of salvation by which he is restored, in its different stages of development from Eden to the day of judgment, all of which is, of course, the story of the Bible. The book shows the correct divisions of the Bible and many other things a beginner needs to know in order to cursue a comprehensive study of the Bible and make correct interpretations and applications.

To give us a complete outfit for working through the medium of literature, in addition to this book for beginners, it is our aim to have a series of tracts printed, called "'A Search for the Truth' Series." We had one of the series printed some three years ago, and the sale of the above-described book, after paying printing and binding expenses, credits me with sufficient money for printing another.

My husband and I are considering the advisableness of making a change of residence, and, if it appears that God is leading us in that direction and opens up the way, we will leave Unity to locate at the place near Augusta where work has been started as the result of Brother Hinton's efforts, to assist the five members there in continuing the work, or else at some other place where the true gospel has never been preached, as it seems to us that we could work to far more profit upon such new ground than to continue here at Unity where the people have been given so many opportunities to hear the truth. Because of the possibility of making this change, we are especially anxious to complete the printing of this series of tracts, that we may be prepared for immediate work in the new field, should we make the change.

Now, I am going to ask the brethren to deluge me with orders for my book, "The Story of the Bible," price $1, that I may be able to get these tracts printed. A dollar thus expended would do the work of two, as the buyer would receive for his money that which could be used for doing good, and the dollar would enable me to procure that which could be used for good. Any church or individual member that will order a quantity of these books for circulation among our new members, will be given a discount of two dollars for each dozen ordered; or, in other words, may have one dozen or more at the rate of ten dollars per dozen. Brethren, make my heart glad by sending me a "shower" of orders at once. Address Harriet L. Knight, Unity, Maine.

Why Lack of Iron Keeps Women Weak, Nervous, Fretful and Run-Down

While Plenty of Red Blood Rich in Iron Helps Make Them Strong, Healthy and Beautiful.

How Organic Iron-Nuxated Iron-Helps Solve Problem of Supplying Iron Deficiency, Thereby Increasing the Strength and Endurance of Delicate Care-worn Women in Two Weeks Time in Many Instances.

Many a woman who ought still to be young in feeling is losing the old-time vim and energy that makes life worth living simply because her blood is thinning out and possibly starving through lack of iron. It is through iron in the red coloring matter of the blood that life-sustaining oxygen en-of the blood that life-sustaining oxygen enters the body and enables the blood to change food into living tissue, muscle and brain.

In commenting upon the alarming iron deficiency in the blood of the average woman of today, Dr. George H. Baker, formerly Physician and Surgeon Monmouth Memorial Hospital of New Jersey said:

"What women need to put roses in their cheeks and the springtime of life into their step is not cosmetics or stimulating drugs, but plemy of rich pure red blood. Without it no woman can do credit to herself or to her work. Iron is one of the greatest of all strength and blood builders and I have found nothing in my experience so effective for helping to make strong, healthy, red blooded women as Nuxated Iron. Exchange Your Old Body for a New One

You can do it in three weeks and thereby renew your health. This article is written by a physician who has seen it demonstrated in numerous cases and explains how it is done.

Listen! If your weight is one hundred and thirty-three pounds, your body contains eighty pounds of water, for, according to standard medical books, the human body contains sixtyseven and one-half per cent of water. Now, disease is invariably caused by impurities which we call "poisons," and these are readily dissolved by the right kind of natural mineral water. Drink ten gallons (eighty pounds) of Shivar Mineral Water (use no other water for twenty-one days), and you will have exchanged your old body for a new one, so far as the soluble part is concerned. The impurities will be dissolved and pass away. If you suffer from dyspepsia, indigestion, sick headache, rheumatism, kidney or liver disease, uric-acid poisoning, or other curable conditions due to impure blood, accept Mr. Shivar's liberal offer which appears below. Read the fol-lowing letter carefully, then sign and mail It:

Shivar Spring, Box 21J, Shelton, S. C.

Gentlemen: I accept your offer and inclose herewith three dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Water. I agree to give it a fair trial, in ac-Water. cordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send; and if I report no benefit, you agree to refund the price in full upon the receipt of the two empty demijohns, which I agree to return within a month.

Mulberry, Route 1.—April 26.—I have been a reader of the Gospel Advocate since December 18, 1919. I certainly enjoy it. Brother B. C. Goodpasture preached for us at the New Hermon Church on December 7, and I subscribed that night. I enjoy its weekly visits more and more all the time. Brother Goodpasture also held our protracted meeting last fall. The meeting continued one week. On the last night a young man and I made the confession and were baptized. Brother R. A. Largen preaches every month for us. He is one of the most successful evangelists in the church.-Elma Obion, April 26 .- The work of the church at Obion is moving along nicely. We have added forty members to our enrollment since our last pro-tracted meeting. On the second Sunday in this month we had six confessions and baptisms at our regular service. Our protracted meeting will begin on the second Sunday in May. Brother C. E. Holt will do the preaching. We are planning for a great meeting. This will be the twenty-fifth anniversary of the church here. There will be three services on that day, Dinner will be served on the grounds of the church. Brother John R. Williams will be with us, and we are planning to have preaching in three church houses in the town. There will be the roll call and reunion of the church, Brother Williams will have entire charge in the afternoon. All the churches in this part of the State are invited to be present. We are expecting a great day and a great meeting.-F. O. Howell.

West Virginia.

Waverly, April 26 .- I began yesterday a meeting with the new, strug-gling, and faithful band of disciples of Christ at Naish Springs, and we hope for a profitable meeting. Since I went from here considerable trouble and division have been worked up here among the brethren by a set of hobbyists over the baptistery and the rebaptism hobby; but we hope to be able to restore peace and harmony once more, and hope the dear Father will bring good to the cause out of this sad state of affairs. I write to thank Brother E. A. Elam for the most clearcut article it has ever been my pleasure to read on the subject of marriage of Christians to those who are not members of the church of Christ. It is the best article I ever read on the subject. It is the end of all controversy with reference to the matter. God bless Brother Elam and his work. -A. A. Bunner.

Haley.

Mrs. Telitha Haley was born near Granville, Tenn., eighty-four years ago. Early in life she married Henry Donoho, and they settled at Bagdad, Tenn., where she and her husband became faithful members of the church. reared an interesting family, all yet living: Dr. S. D. Donoho, Sherman, Texas; L. K. Donoho, Gunter, Texas; Charles Donoho, Durant, Okla.; Mrs. Belle Duke, Red Boiling Springs, Tenn.; and Mrs. Alice Fisher, Bagwell, Texas. About thirty years ago Brother Donoho was killed by a team of horses running away. Some years later she married A. S. Haley and moved near Rome, Tenn. A few months ago she and her husband decided to come to Texas and spend their remaining days with their children, he also having some children out here. She came on, and he remained in Tennessee to settle up a few little affairs. Both became sick. Neither could get to the other. After a long illness she died, March 14, 1920, at the home of her son in Sherman, and was buried here. A large audience attended the funeral. Brother E. H. Rogers and I made talks at the funeral. She and my mother were lifelong friends. I have known her well all my life, having been reared in the community where she lived. She was present when I became a Christian, and gave me much encouragement when I began to take a public part in the worship. She was a fine character, and left a priceless heritage to her children and the church. All her children, except one, were able to be with her much in her last illness and to be at the funeral. I see no reason why we should not meet her in the "home where changes never come."

L. S. WHITE.

Carter.

Sister Emma Carter, of Lavergne, Tenn., was born on June 27, 1867, and departed this life for a better and brighter world on November 19, 1919. She lived, therefore, in this beautiful world but a short time, comparatively; but the most of that time she lived for God, and God took her. She obeyed the gospel under the preaching of Brother Srygley and was loyal and faithful unto death, so far as human beings can judge in such matters. It was my privilege to know her quite intimately for a number of years. She requested of me, some years before she died, that I should preach her funeral if I should be living when she went away, which I was thankful to do. Sister Carter was one of the finest characters and one of the most loyal and devout Christians I ever knew. Her mother died early, and she took her place and succeeded admirably. Her father also went away many years ago, and still she bravely filled the vacant places in the home, and around her the family circle was soon formed. She was never strong in body, but possessed a strong will power. She leaves several brothers and sisters, together with many relatives and friends, to mourn their loss. To all of them I say: "Weep not as the rest, who have no hope." "Now, brethren, I commend you to God, and to the word of his grace, which is able to build you up, and to give you an inheritance among all them which are sanctified."

Some weeks ago there appeared an article in the Firm Foundation, over the signature of Brother J. D. Tant, concerning the division of the church at Fort Smith. Following that there appeared another article in the Gospel Guide and Christian Messenger, over the signatures of Harbour, Wells, and Neece, concerning the same matter. I have been accused of preaching for a "faction" in Fort Smith. I wish to state, without taking space by going into details, that I was not responsible for the division of the church here. I came here after the division of the church and the establishing of the Park Hill congregation. My action in preaching for, and taking a stand with, the Park Hill congregation is indorsed by J. D. Tant, J. B. Nelson, W. T. Kidwell, Joe H. Blue, J. Will Henley, Bynum Black, A. LeRoy Elkins, Will M. Thompson, W. D. Black, W. L. Oliphant, and R. H. The Church at Duncan, Arizona.

With Christian love for the brethren everywhere and a burning zeal and love for the souls of men and the glory of God, we, as elders and trustees of the church of Christ at Duncan, Ariz., located in the beautiful and fertile valley of the Gila River, with a population of eighteen hundred, realizing the great importance and the zeal that we have for the promotion of the gospel of Jesus Christ, are prompted to make a personal appeal to all congregations worshiping in the name of Christ for help to build a house to worship in. We ask that you prayerfully consider this humble and honest appeal and come at once to our relief with your contribution, which will be greatly appreciated and used as best we can for the glory and honor of God. We have bought two choice lots, with the restrictive clause in the deed. The membership is small and poor in this world's goods, but rich in the faith once delivered to the saints; and we have faith in God and our brethren and feel sure of their personal support in this hour of absolute need, both of whom we are earnestly praying to help us raise the necessary funds to put up a modest house of worship in which the faithful few may worship God as the New Testament requires and in which the gospel can be preached in its simplicity. All of us are doing our very best and must succeed. We are making our prayers unto Him day and night, for it is the Lord's business and we are his servants, and he is with us. But we need your prayers and financial aid to help us do his will. Will you send us a contribution for this purpose at once? Thus we will be workers together with God. Re member the Golden Rule. All donations will be acknowledged.

The Unpardonable Sin.

BY J. H. WOOD.

The doctrine which places the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost prior to Pentecost appears to be gaining favor, judging by answers I see in some religious papers to the question, "What is the unpardonable sin?" (See Matt. 12: 31), and also talks I have had with a few of my preaching brethren. I am sure that those who assume that position have neglected to give both sides of the subject a thorough investigation. Since God first gave law to a people, he judged those who were under that law strictly by it. Now, while Christ was on earth, God was judging the children of Israel by the law of Moses. It covered all crimes against him at that time and was in force to the hour that it was nailed to the cross. But, according to that position, God announces another sin more terrible in its results than all other sins combined, but withholds the information as to the act or acts constituting the crime itself, whether it was in words or by an overt act, or both. The Book is absolutely silentthat is, provided we confine the possibillty of that sin to the time that Christ was on earth; the position absolutely does away with both repentance and pardon, so there is no place found for them. It is the opposite of the purpose of Christ's coming according to his own statements oft repeated. It puts the Son of God against himself, for in less than two years after he announced that sin he offered pardon of sins to every individual under heaven who was capable of believing. The Holy Ghost had not yet come to testify of himself by a public display of his miraculous power, establishing his claim according to promise as world leader and guide to the apostles into all truth.

If that sin was possible back of Pentecost only, then what is it? It is not a command, it is not a promise, it is not law, but could be a threat of vengeance; but, if a threat of vengeance, how would it look placed beside Jesus' prayer while dying on the cross: "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do?" I am trying to show what the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost cannot be. If these thoughts should reach the public through your valuable paper, I am prepared to tell what the crime itself is, and why it is alleged to be against the Holy Ghost.

A MESSAGE FROM DR. CUPID

Cupid has been a successful physician in many a case. Dr. Cupid often brings cheer, happiness and contentment to the mind, and the blood feels the invigorating stimulus. Dr. Cupid is almost out of business at times, because the young girls are frail, pale, ill and suffering from weaknesses of their sex. Listen to this woman's advice:

"I am glad of an opportunity to give this testimonial of what Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription did for me when I was at death's door-only sixteen years of age. I carelessly got my feet wet at a critical time and for months I suffered from functional derangement and so failed in health that my people thought surely I would die. I only weighed 65 pounds and my complexion was simply horrible. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, which I procured at the drug store, restored ne to such absolutely perfect health that I never had any form of woman's weakness afterward. My weight doubled itself and my complexion became so rosy that my friends scarcely recognized me less than six months after I started to take the 'Prescription.' I am now over fifty and still praising Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription for the great benefit I received from it in my girlhood in enabling me to become a strong and healthy woman. I would advise all young girls who suffer to give this good medicine a trial."

THE HISTORY OF TRADE-UNIONISM.

BY A. B. LIPSCOMB.

A trade-union as defined by Webb's history of the movement is "a continuous association of wage earners for the purpose of maintaining or improving the conditions of their employment." The word "continuous" as used in this definition is important. The student of the labor problem finds that union of laborers may be traced back in European history for at least six hundred years. Strikes, we might add, are older than labor unions. One may find in Bible history, in the story of the Hebrew bricklayers in Egypt, who revolted against making bricks without straw, the earmarks of a modern strike. We might change a proverb to read, "It is human to strike;" for men in all ages have struck for one cause or another. But effective organization is a later development. It is probable that in whatever period and in whatever country we are able to find large masses of free laborers thrown together, there we may find, too, the germs of labor organization. ciation is so natural to man, and its benefits so great, that it is ever sought with the progress of civilization.

Some have endeavored to trace the origin of the modern trade union back to the guilds of the Middle Ages. But this claim is now regarded as being untenable. There were three or four classes of these guilds, and each class had important functions. The peace guilds were organized chiefly for purposes of defense and were based upon mutual obligations. They were "sworn communities for the protection of right and the preservation of liberty." English law recognized the responsibility of the guild for the action of its members. During the Reformation these guilds were abolished in Protestant countries on the ground that they flourished through superstition. But the trade guilds attracted more attention than those of a more social nature on account of their wealth and varied functions. Here we must distinguish between two orders, guilds-merchant and craft guilds. In England the first order was composed of the wealthy landowners, while the second order was recruited from the landless men of the handlerafts. The craft guilds gained the upper hand on the continent in the struggle for liberty during the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries. Webb asserts that "the supposed descent of the trade-union from the medieval craft guild rests upon no evidence whatever." The historical proof is to the contrary. It is his observation that the trade-union sprang from no particular institution, but from every opportunity for the meeting together of wage earners of the same trade. His explanation of the tardy growth of stable combination is very plausible. He attributes it to the fact that the journeyman in the skilled handicrafts belonged, until comparatively modern times, to the same social grade as his employer, and economic conditions were favorable to his advancement.

Coming now to a study of the movement in our own country, we find no traces of anything like a modern tradeunion in the colonial period of American history. It is evident on reflection that there was little need, if any, on the part of labor during this period. Unions of working men always rise where there is a large and distinct laboring class gathered together in industrial centers; but then there was scarcely such a class, for there was no great city. In 1790, when the first census was taken, there was but one city in the United States with a population of seventy-five thousand inhabitants, and it was not until 1840 that we could boast of a city of a half million people. The population was chiefly agricultural and land was cheap and plentiful. The labor of the farm was for the most part performed by independent farmers who tilled their own soil. Doubtless the "hired man" could always be found, but no thought of organization occurred to him; and if there had been reason for organization, his isolation would have made it impossible. As an individual, he could treat with his employer, and abundance of unoccupied land furnished him a ready escape from a subordinate position should be become dissatisfied. Such manufacturing as was found consisted largely in the production of commodities. Clothing, for example, was spun and woven and then converted into garments in the household for its various members. The artisans comprised chiefly the carpenter, the blacksmith, and the shoemaker, many of whom worked in their own little shops with no employees, while the number of subordinates in any one shop was almost invariably small. It would have been difficult to find a journeyman who did not expect, in a few years, to become an independent producer.

The most primitive form of labor organization in the United States is the union of one class of employees in a single place, with no connection with laborers working in other localities or at other callings. Such unions were found here and there from 1800 to 1825. The "New York Society of Journeymen Shipwrights" was incorporated on April 3, 1903, and a union of the "House Carpenters of the City of New York" was incorporated in 1806. The compositors of New York must have been organized early in the century, for they seem to have had a strong society in 1817 when Thurlow Weed was elected a member.

The inauguration of the Industrial Revolution is popularly identified with the application of steam to machinery. But on this point we should think closely and speak guardedly. While the discovery of steam marks an important epoch in industrial progress, it is only part of the truth to say that here we may find the real beginning of the trade-union movement. We may more accurately claim that trade-unionism starts with division of labor. This is the true revolutionary force. It is the great and important factor in the economic field. It is quite true that division of labor exerted no special influence up to the time of the Industrial Revolution, but since that time it has been the dominant force. It is so far-reaching in its possibilities that no one can forecast its final effect upon the world's civilization. Labor organization has kept pace with division of labor. For that reason there can be no very effective organization where division of labor has not been established. In illustration of this point, we have already referred to agricultural pursuits in which no labor troubles occur. Division of labor brings out large-scale production, and such production does not belong to agriculture. The reason is obvious. Farm work does not represent a continuous process. The farmer does not do one thing all the year round. At one time he plants corn, at another he pulls fodder. The same thing that makes division of labor impossible to the farmers also prevents any extensive use of machinery. To be employed economically, machinery must be constantly in use. In a word, it must

An interesting question is raised when one asks why division of labor did not come into vogue sooner. First, we might mention a psychological process. Thinking people did not center their minds upon business until about one hundred years ago. Before that time they had delved into polltics, art, literature, and society. But the discovery of science changed the thought and directed it toward business. The discovery of physics turned man's thought toward machinery; the discovery of chemistry turned it toward the soil: the discovery of biology turned it toward agriculture. The evolution is described in three words: thought, science, business. While trade-unionism was first inaugurated in England, it witnessed a more rapid growth in the United States, where progress has never been hampered by the evils of landlordism or autocratic rule. The discovery of steam was, of course, the greatest factor in this evolution. Before the discovery business and commerce were dependent upon hand, horse, or water power. But steam did two things. (1) It made it possible to convey power to an accessible place. (2) It created lines of transportation to the consumer. As a logical consequence, we find the division of labor and the rapid improvement and utilization of machinery. The next step naturally would be the formation of group labor or specialized work. It is important to remember that group labor fixed a man's work as an employee. Up to that time every employee was what we might call a "potential master;" but thence forward real mastership becomes an unknown quantity.

"And Why Beholdest Thou the Mote?"

BY J. M. M'CALEB.

If I were managing editor of a paper which is supported by the brotherhood and a brother were to send in a statement of his position, I would not withhold the statement for several weeks till I could put a double-header of a rider on it more than eight times as long, to come out in the same issue so as to destroy its force as far as possible. When a reply was made to the double-header, I would not hold back that reply till I could put another heavy rider on it more than twice its length to appear in the same issue. I would endeavor to be perfectly fair and publish a brother's articles as they came in and would put in my reply afterwards.

Again, if that brother were to send in an article on prophecy, I would not suppress it for three or four years, then make one or two brief quotations from it that suited my purpose, but I would publish the entire article and let others judge as to which was the "best part" of it. This would look like I wanted to be perfectly fair, with no desire to take advantage of my position as managing editor to dominate the thought of others by forcing my views on them.

Brother McQuiddy's course recently toward the missionary work as a whole has been singular. To the careful observer it is a question as to whether he is not almost To the careful Early last fall he wrote me he was going antimissionary. to stop the "Missionary" page in the Gospel Advocate and write "editorially" on missions, and he is certainly doing He classed Brother E. S. Jelley and myself together (something not especially relished), put us in the same boat, and sent us adrift. Since then he has maintained an ominous silence toward this sole missionary to India. it be that he is leaving him and his work to die a natural death? Or, as silence precedes the storm, are we to expect that it will break out later against Brother Jelley, his favorite missionary, as it has now against me? Is it possible that our brother suspects that he, too, has become contaminated with "speculative doctrine" or something, and that sooner or later a note of warning must be sounded against him? Or, if Brother McQuiddy classes the man whom he has backed so long among the "better missiona-aries," again I ask why this silence and seeming indifferagain I ask why this silence and seeming indifference toward him and the work in India? Since there are no speculators there now and that vast field is open, Is it not an opportune time to urge others to hasten to India to join the only surviving missionary there and enlarge the work? True, our brother has suggested that the churches should send "more and better missionaries," but his statement is only a bracketed statement and is so vague that it will result in nothing. Why does he not really get in earnest and hunt up some of the better sort of missionaries, get them linked up with the churches, and send them forth? It would then look like he meant it.

In saying the churches should send out "more and better missionaries," the connection is unfortunate. The statement is this: "[Sister Sarah Andrews and Sister Lillie Cypert were not sent to Japan by these brethren. The churches of Christ should select, send, and support more and better missionaries—missionaries full of faith and of the Holy Spirit]." This is what is called a "squinting" sentence looking in two opposite directions. Does our brother mean to say that the churches should select "more and better missionaries" like these two, or "more and better missionaries" than these are? If he means the former, then I add a most hearty "Amen;" but if the latter, and he intends a reflection on these noble and consecrated women, then there is a distinct issue between us.

I have heard many brethren on the prophecies, but I have never cut fellowship with any one because of any views he may have held or taught, not even Doctor Thompson, whose recent book, according to the Advocate's own admission, has "speculation on every page." The McQuiddy Printing Company, however, printed this book, and the Advocate commended it as containing good reading. The attitude of the Advocate toward Doctor Thompson is mine toward all; for if we can bear with him, we certainly can toward all the rest.

Our brother reminds one of the traditional practitioner who was not so well up in other matters, but was an expert on fits; so, whatever might be the disease, he threw the patient into fits, then treated the fits. In like manner, whatever be the spiritual maiady among the brethren, Brother McQuiddy resolves it into "speculative doctrine," then doses heavily for that; and the indications are that he will meet with no more flattering success than did the traditional doctor.

If some of those "other missionaries" who went wrong "did not have far to go," what can we say for the good judgment and discretion of the Nashville churches sending them, backed also by the Advocate? Is not our brother again almost "criminally remiss" toward the churches at large in letting this matter go unexposed for over twenty years? He has been very gentle toward himself and others responsible for the going out of these missionaries who were "half converted" to error "before they crossed the ocean." Would not a little of this grace shown toward himself for over twenty years be in point toward others?

No one has ever read a line of criticism from me in the papers against Brother Rubel and Brother Taylor. I am against making newspaper gossip of local church troubles. Local troubles should be settled locally and kept out of the apers. They usually make bad matters worse. Brother McQuiddy asks; "But why did he not tell us why there was friction between Miss Cypert and the principal of the Sewing School?" Because I was answering his charge that there was "friction" between me and Miss Cypert. I wanted the readers to see that his charge was false. If our brother had not so suddenly "closed" our correspondence and with a genuine interest for the work had written me to clear up his "rumor," I would have given a full statement of the case and this would have saved him from the hurtful mistake of hastening to publish something he knew but little about. Josh Billings is credited with saying, "It is better not to know so much than to know so many things that are not so."

Persecuted in one point, our brother flees to another and seeks to cover up his mistake by asking a different question. Having shown him to be in error in the first instance, I will also show him to be in the second. As to why there was "friction" between Miss Cypert and the principal, I shall now proceed to tell. About fifteen years ago I was teaching a Bible class in Tokyo and had as one of my students a serious-minded young man of a plous turn of mind. When the Zoshigaya Gakuin was opened in the fall of 1907, he was one of the first to enter. During his stay of about three years with us he was a most exemplary young man. It was he who, on beholding fox worship at Anamori, in March, 1909 (see "Christ, the Light of the World," pages 95, 96), said: "There are towns all over Japan of ten thousand people and under where there is not a missionary. When you return to America, tell them about it and send us more workers." He afterwards got married and located near me. When their first-born was a few days old, he and the mother brought it over to my room and asked me to pray for the little boy that he might be trained up in the way he should go. From the day he had seen the fox worship, or about that time, he had had a desire to establish a school for girls. In the spring of 1918 he came to me saying he had found a suitable house for his long-cherished school and that it would cost him about three thousand dollars to fit it up. We talked and prayed over the matter for over a month. talked again with him about his being affiliated with a denomination. He assured me he did not hold with the Episcopalians; that he liked the way we worshiped at Zoshigaya, and this he had shown by meeting with us frequently and asking permission to make talks, which were always scriptural and good. At opportune times I would endeavor to show him that sprinkling was not valid. I did not press the matter, because I wanted him to do it from conviction. I saw in his long-cherished school an open door for the enlightenment of the daughters of Japan, many of whom have never seen a Bible nor heard the name He said he desired one of our lady missionaries to teach English and the Bible in the school and in time to establish a dormitory over which he desired her to be matron. I felt that since it was only a school and not a church, and that he gave us all the freedom asked in teaching Christ, I could without compromise join him in it. I allowed my home to be mortgaged to get the money for him, and he gave me a written agreement that he would return it in five years. When his wife learned that he had succeeded, she told him that her prayers were answered, for she had been praying and fasting by doing without her dinner for a month. The school was opened on September 2, 1918, with twenty-two girls. I was present and made a speech. About this time Miss Cypert arrived in Japan, and I told her all about the school and who the principal was religiously. She agreed to join me in the project and try to bring all the good out of it possible. Under her efficient cooperation the school grew to seventy and the prospects seemed good. When she taught the Bible to the girls, the principal interpreted. On the subject of baptism, she was pleased that he gave it full and straight just as she gave it to him. He had repeatedly told me that he be-lieved immersion was right. The only question with him was whether or not sprinkling would not also do.

There is a similar arrangement to this school at Lawrenceburg, Tenn., with excellent results. Also, in 1891, when Brother W. K. Azbill first proposed to me to join him in a missionary band to Japan, I conferred with Brother Lipscomb about the propriety of it, and he advised that though Brother Azbill had been cooperating with the socicties, he seemed to be coming away from them, and we ought to encourage him by working with him. I acted on the same principle in joining the "Episcopalian" in running a Girls' Sewing School. Miss Cypert will cheerfully second me in saying she knew the situation perfectly from the first. Not only so, but I stated it in the Advocate and have also announced it from the pulpit, as well as talked it privately. Like so many other things Brother McQuiddy strikes at with only a wild guess for his guide, he is wholly mistaken again when he says there was "friction" between me and our sister because "Brother McCaleb turned over the work to an Episcopalian principal;" for, as has already been shown, he was head and owner of the school from the start.

But I am not through with that "friction" yet. Our sister had not been teaching in the school very long till she came to me with a serious expression, saying she had semething to tell me. It takes a woman to find out some things. "Mr. Iida smokes," she said. As I had known him so long, I was slow to believe it; but she was almost certain that she was not mistaken. She added that she would not stay with a school where tobacco was allowed. (I wonder what would happen in the McQuiddy printing office if this rule were applied, where tobacco is in evidence and it is even argued that both tobacco and drink are all right if used in moderation, and to oppose them is "poppycock."). I fully agreed with her in her decision and told her not to stay a day longer than she felt she ought; that while I was anxious to see the school succeed and was three thousand dollars involved, I indorsed her fully in the stand she had taken. We both went to see the principal, talked it over with him and prayed with him. He didn't satisfy us that he was not guilty. Later she saw him with a cigarette in his mouth, and he knew that she saw him. They talked it over again, and he promised to reform. She went over the question of baptism with him, and he seemed favorably disposed. Later he seemed obstinate. What brought the "friction" to a climax was a request on her part to make some changes in the classes, which was declined, and she offered her resignation. If I have missed any detail that relates to our sister, she will cor-

If any further proof were necessary to show that Brother McQuiddy has grossly misrepresented the whole situation. it is this: In a letter from Miss Cypert, written on February 4, at which time she was wholly unaware of the attack made upon me, she first speaks about buying the Vincent furniture that is in the mission home there. the next paragraph she asks about the advisability of sending one of our Japanese evangelists to America for further training. In the third paragraph she writes: "So many things to say, I'll just jump off of one thing onto another as fast as I can, gomennasai (excuse me). Well, perhaps you have already heard the final results of the Sewing School, that it has stopped. Am I to blame? If so, my conscience is dame (no good). Nevertheless, I am greatly grieved about it, both for your sake and the work's sake. Still, I thoroughly believe that all things work together for good to them that love God, and I believe you do. us continue to make it a subject of prayer and for Mr. Iida, that at least his mind will be honest about things." Yes, I believe with our sister that indeed all things work together for good to them that love God, and that this letter of hers was timed by the Hand divine.

In closing this part of my defense, I wish to say to all who have contributed to this school fund, that, while in Japan, seeing it might turn out to be a case of misplaced confidence, I covenanted with God that if it should not prove satisfactory I would make it good by donating enough of my own property to the work to cover all that they have given. In this way I save the property from being sold for the mortgage to outsiders, and the loss is only to me personally and not to the work.

Feeling his defeat already as to any "friction" between Miss Cypert and me, our brother hints darkly of friction between me and some one else associated with me in Japan because of my "close affiliation with Louisville movements." Why strike from ambush? When Brother McQuiddy comes out into the open and gives the very words and name of that somebody, rather than his unreliable comments, I will be prepared to meet the "friction" from this source also. It might be in point to remind our brother just here that one of the seven abominable things that the Lord hates is "he that soweth discord among brethren."

By asking me to appear before him in Nashville to be examined, our brother makes three false assumptions: First, that I hold some serious errors of which the churches are not aware; and in the second place, that he is capa-ble in his "own quiet home," unaided and alone, to decide on these errors; and thirdly, that he is qualified and ap-pointed by the churches to make the matter known. I have always been careful that the churches should know just what I believe and teach; but what I object to is Brother McQuiddy's method. During this long and stormy controversy I have, so far as I have had any voice in It, been against the one-man rule. The churches, if so disposed, could not scripturally consent for our brother to decide on another brother's faith, or standardize the belief for the churches. And in my own case, I do not consider him at all qualified to tell the churches what I believe. am as well known to the readers of the Advocate as he; as to our other papers, far better; and as for being personatly known to the churches, I can probably count a hundred to his one. Neither do I consider that he either understands or lives up to the Scriptures any better than I, and for him to presume to be the mouthpiece to the churches on my behalf is a sort of burlesque and is like a comparative stranger attempting to introduce a well-known friend. If this "boasting" on my part is unseemly, as in the case of Paul when belittled by the brethren at Corinth, the situation "compels" me.

Speaking of the situation, it reminds me of a scene that occurred as we first went ashore in Japan, April 13, 1892. Foreign clothes were greatly prized in those days, and any clothing an American might lay aside was eagerly sought after. A semi-official had in some way come into possession of a pair of secondhand boots several numbers too large. He strutted about, seeming to think himself invested with special authority because of the big rattling boots of another. So Brother McQuiddy, having donned Brother David's big shoes, goes shuffling around in them, seeming to think we should show them the same deference as when worm by the owner. Brother Lipscomb could occasionally spank us and we took it in all good grace, for we all felt that he was good enough, great enough, and wise enough to know both how and how not to do it; but when one of the boys attempts to play the rôle of Dad, he may expect a vigorous protest. Though claiming to be under the gospel, he is applying the spirit of the law, and, Teddylike, having drawn the mark himself, stands with a big stick and says: Come on up here and foe this mark, the last one of you, or whack! I take you.

With all due appreciation for what the churches have done in supporting me, including our brother, yet, rather than take the partisan and uncharitable position he does toward those who differ from him on prophecy, I would choose rather never to receive another penny from any one by virtue of being a missionary—yea, I would forfeit the last cent I now possess. I ask no one to have fellowship with me who does not believe I am in every way worthy. And if any church, having any sort of misgiving about what I believe and teach, will, as a church, invite me to a friendly conference that we may talk it over face to face, I am ready at any time to comply with the request. I even myself requested such a conference with the Campbell Street Church, of Louisville.

I fully agree with our brother that "the churches ought to know the truth," but I do not see why this should not apply to him as well as to me; for if I have been helped by the churches, so has he. How came he in control of the Gospel Advocate? And was it not through the medium of this paper that he has built up the McQuiddy Printing Company? And did not this come through the generous support of the brotherhood and the influence of greater and better men than either of us—David Lipscomb and E. G. Sewell? Does any one, save an "inner circle," know how much the McQuiddy Printing Company is worth? Does he ever make a report as to how much he spends on himself and family? What exempts our brother from being under the same obligation to the brotherhood, both as to his faith and his finances, that I am? On what sort of meat doth Cæsar feed, that he hath grown so great? From every viewpoint I claim the same right to question his faith that he does to question mine, and also I claim the same right to follow my own convictions that he does to follow his. Let him explain by what authority I could, with propriety, call him away from his own duties to Louisville, that I might, "in my own quiet home," satisfy myself as to how he stands on war, and he will understand his own mistake better. If he has helped me, I have also helped him. I am one of a constituency that has kept the Advocate alive and helped to build up the McQuiddy Printing Company. If he can get on without us, we can get on without him.

Again, our brother passes on his brethren this harsh "To thus rend the spiritual body of Christ is a judgment: greater crime than those men committed who nailed Christ's physical body to the cross." It all depends on the nature of the teaching objected to as to who is responsible. If the teaching of the brethren on prophecy is subversive of the fundamental teachings of the New Testament, then a vigorous protest should be given; but if this cannot be sustained, and many brethren as capable as Brother Mc-Quiddy believe it cannot, then the charge is unjustifiable and should be retracted. For many years our brother has been urging his Sunday-school literature upon the churches and thereby has occasioned many a split. scattered here and there all over the land. According to his own judgment, then, he is more guilty than those who nailed Jesus to the cross. And while he is hastening "across the continent" with "all the resources of the Gospel Advocate" in the fight to destroy the war movement, he might give some attention to this Sunday-school literature movement which has divided so many more churches than the "Louisville movement" ever has. Just as our brother argues that the Sunday-school objectors have raised disturbance over his literature where there was no ground for it, so say I in regard to the disturbance he is making against his brethren about prophecy.

Then, let me ask, how does he know which is the greater sin? Those who nailed our Lord to the cross committed a heinous crime. This serious charge should be well substantiated by the proof, and I call on our brother to give it.

What Brother McQuiddy did and wrote during the war does not harmonize with what he writes now. It is not to the point to say, "Brother Lipscomb had no voting movement." I am not questioning Brother Lipscomb's position, for it was sound and good, but that of Brother J. C. Mc-Quiddy during this recent war; nor shall I allow him again to hide in Brother David's big shoes. Judging from the animated controversies that have taken place in the Advocate office; from Brother Elam's protest against the flag being hung up in the South College Street Church building, where David Lipscomb was elder so long; from an article by Brother Elam consisting of a string of scripture quotations against war, which I was told was denied space in the Advocate; from such utterances as Brother McQuiddy made like the one where he exhorted the mothers of America to be courageous like the Spartan mothers of old and give up their sons to the war; and from the many flags I have seen in our churches all over the land, I conclude that if there is not a "war movement," it is so nearly like one that the average man cannot see the difference; and if our brother is not in it, it is a late thing-too late, I fear, for him to destroy the movement though he should go clear "across the continent" with "all the resources of the Gospel Advocate" at his command to do it. What many of us thought he ought to have done was to have stood shoulder to shoulder with such men as Elam away back in the beginning of the fight. When our brother "A lack of discretion in some brethren frequently injures the cause we all love and makes the impresion that one is a slacker," I wonder if he means such brethren as Elam, Shepherd, Ward, Hoover, and Armstrong?

But I was praying for Martin and McHenry even before it was certain they had gone to the Adventists and before the matter had been made public. Why, of course, I have been praying for them ever since they went to India, and still do. I think I was also among the first to hear of the rumor about them. But I do not hasten to the public with mere rumors. The churches interested in the support of these brethren were promptly informed and an investigation started to verify the rumors or prove them false, and at the same time all efforts made to win them back. Our brother seems to forget that it takes from three to four months to get returns from India. I think Allensville and Brother Janes both showed discretion in waiting till reports were confirmed before making a public statement; and if Brother McQuiddy only had the same discretion, he would make fewer mistakes and do less harm. In fact, it would have been better if none save those directly Interested in their support should have been informed of their defection. As to his "inner circle," it is purely fictitious.

Our brother was in Florence, Ala., January 17, and left on the early train Sunday morning, the 18th, for Nash-ville. He knew I was there, but I knew nothing of his presence till he was gone. Why hasten away from Flor-ence on the Lord's day, not having, as I suppose, an ap-pointment (for Brother McQuiddy does not often preach, and only "worshiped" in Nashville on that day)? Besides, I knew nothing about the correspondence between us being "closed." He was very busy till late at night; kept himself out of sight, knowing I was there; learned of my private prayers; let it be known that I was cut out of the Advocate; and, rather than meet with the church at Florence where I was to speak, hastened away early Sunday morning to Nashville. I would not knowingly misjudge any one, but it really looks like he was on a still hunt for something,

But I "at once," on returning home, "associated " myself with the Highlands Church and the Portland Avenue Church in Louisville. It is unfortunate that twenty years ago, because of our friends, the Klingmans, and because of the church privileges of the three churches in Louisville, we chose Louisville rather than some other place. Again, it was unfortunate that when my family returned to America in 1907 we again decided on Louisville. It is known to the reading public that, with absolutely no relationship to this unfortunate and needless controversy, Louisville has been our home when in America from the first, and that all the Louisville churches have been in cooperation with us. I associate with all churches that associate with me, and have yet to decline any invitation. That I "at once associated" myself with these churches, as though I had never been associated with them before, is as wide of the mark as the accusation about "friction." But, anyway, my family still live in Louisville and worship with the Portland Avenue Church, and that settles it. What our brother really means is that I did not on returning home disassociate myself and family from this church. How unfortunate that we did not see a great defection was going to break out in Louisville and flee for safety in time! But one point to my good: I have not put in my membership with this heretical church, but still have it in old Tennessee, where I was born and brought up. When home before, some nine years ago, I wrote up the Portland Avenue Church as being one of the best churches I had ever known. Brother Boll was its minister then, and no better man nor safer teacher than he is now; and the church is just as good new as it was then.

When in the Advocate office last fall, talking with our brother on the kingdom, he drew out a slip of paper on which he had copied a little statement of mine made fifteen years ago—in 1905—where I criticized the change in the song from "The kingdom is coming" to "The kingdom is spreading." My point was that we could use "coming" just as well as "spreading," and that the change was gratuitous; that every time a man was converted the kingdom came to him, and that we should continue to pray for It to keep coming till "Thy will be done on earth as it Is in heaven," When a storm has arisen in a distant quarter, we say the storm is coming, though it is already here in some places. If this is "speculative teaching," it was "speculative teaching," fifteen years ago, and I am afraid the churches will again think him "criminally remiss" for neglecting to warn them and allowing them to be "entrapped" for so long. Our brother has taken such fright at "speculation" that he shies at the truth itself.

I am gratified to note that on unfulfilled prophecy our brother seems to be making some progress. In the Advocate of February 26, when reviewing my position, he said: "I know no one who teaches that every inspired word of God should not be studied, but there are many who teach that no one should give the meaning of unfulfilled prophecy when the Holy Spirit has not revealed it. when the Holy Spirit has not revealed it. . . . How can a man teach a thing he does not know? Can a man teach the Greek language who does not know a letter of the Greek alphabet?" Also, he quotes from the "best pari" of an unpublished article of mine and comments thus: "The casual reader will note that in this, the best part of the whole article, he says 'study,' not 'teach.' He started out to prove we should teach unfulfilled prophecy." Now Brother McQuiddy says, "The Gospel Advocate with all its editors believes as strongly as he does 'that it is the Christian's duty,' to the extent of ability and opportunity, both to study and to teach unfulfilled prophecy; only, we must not "speculate," but "teach just what they say, no more and no less, just as it is proper to do with all other parts of the word of God." This narrows the controversy down considerably, only I still wonder why our brother made a point against me by saying I said "study" and not "teach;" and further, if one knows no more about unfulfilled prophecy than one who knows not a letter of the Greek alphabet knows of Greek, I fail to see how it would be possible to teach it at all, much less teach it like we do "all other parts of the word of God."

But seriously and to the point, if Brother McQuiddy will describe to us in detail just what he means by teaching all the unfulfilled prophecies just as we do the other parts of the word of God, no more and no less, he will confer a favor on many who would like to know. Are we allowed to make any comment? Or must we just read these unfulfilled prophecies? If we can get this one point cleared up to our satisfaction, the whole controversy will be happily at an end.

The Interchurch World Movement. No. 2.

BY F. W. SMITH,

The remaining portion of Brother Williams' vigorous protest against the action of the "board" in committing the United Societies to the "Interchurch World Movement" is herewith submitted to the thoughtful reader:

I. THE UNITED CHRISTIAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

With its high and holy purpose proclaimed in its constitution, and with the professions of its leaders, no one could find fault. To all outward appearances, it would seem to be the most effective instrument in the hands of God for the evangelizing of the world. Consciously or unconsciously, it is proving to be a wolf in sheep's clothing.

We are face to face with the working of the United Christian Missionary Society. No more powerful instru-ment has ever been invented to stifle the plea and the proclamation of the primitive gospel than that made at the Cincinnati convention. The reason is apparent, The organization of the United Christian Missionary Society is that of the C. W. B. M. under a different name—an organization which not only was linked up with State organizations, but with its tentacies enwrapped the heart of almost every congregation among us. The C. W. B. M. had a powerful influence in all of the congregations through their auxiliaries-an influence which the other societies had never been able to attain. They had to depend upon the preacher to present their appeal and thus reach the congregation. This is no longer so. By taking over the organization of the C. W. B. M., the United Christian Missionary Society has its grip upon the throat of almost every congregation, and can control, very largely, the utterances

The factor in the situation which enables it to do this is a very patent one. In years gone by, these local auxiliaries of the C. W. B. M. were composed of the most prayerful and spiritual women in the various congregations, and they are now, for that matter. These good women met regularly and studied the world field, caught a vision of the world's needs, and developed the missionary spirit in the congregations. All the while that this good work was going on, they were developing a spirit of loyalty to their national leaders that amounts almost to worship. The average member of these auxiliaries would resent a suggestion that any action of their national leaders was not controlled by the Spirit of God, so complete is their confidence. For months before the convention at Cincinnati the national leaders were spreading the propaganda of the United Christian Missionary Society through these auxiliaries. The auxiliaries were in favor of the proposed organization because the leaders assured them that it was the will of God. Now, through these same auxiliaries, these same leaders of the more powerful organization are spreading the propaganda of the Interchurch World Movement and the Plan for the United Churches of Christ in America. They are being assured that these are great "forward movements" under the hand of God for the new world in which we live. Every preacher is at once face to face with a real problem. He sees outside influences in control of the most spiritual members of his congregation, counteracting his teaching, and sweeping his people toward Babylon. If he raises his voice against it, he has at once the antagonism of a most potent force in his congregation, which means either disaster to himself or division, which would be more disastrons. Thus the United Society has the grip upon the throat of every preacher as it drags the Restoration into the Interchurch World Movement.

II. THE INTERCHURCH WORLD MOVEMENT.

This is the second step into Babylon. What is it? No one seems to know very definitely what it is, except that its exponents all testify that it was born of the Spirit of That is a stock expression of the modern false Every religious fake that has ever been prophet. petrated has been proclaimed as having been born of God. All of the contradictory doctrines of the modern religious world-we are confidently told by divers individuals-are the teachings of the Holy Spirit. In order that they may sweep the religious world with an overwhelming force and secure control of all "denominational" machinery, it would not do to say that it was the "spirit of devils out of the mouth of the false prophet" that was leading in the movement. That would consign it at once to the untimely death. It must have its origin in the mind of God if it is to succeed. It must have on the sheep's clothing if It is to carry out its purposes among the sheep. Then, also, the more mystery with which its origin and progress can be enshrouded and the less clear-cut illuminating explanation that is made serve well for a cloak for the motives back The larger its conception, the more intricate its mazes and ramifications; the more stupendous scale of expenditure that is maintained, the more certain it is that its purpose will be hidden from view, and that the human mind will be awed into submission.

The "Pastors' Conference" for Oklahoma, under the auspices of the Interchurch World Movement, is now a matter of history. About seven hundred and twenty-five ministers from the various religious bodies of the State were present at the sessions as guests of the movement; and they were right royally entertained, with all expenses paid. If opportunity were offered for discussion, it would be a most discourteous thing for a guest to ask leading questions which might embarrass his host. This paying of a preacher's expenses smacks of bribery to keep his mouth shut and to acquiesce in all of the plans that the host seeks to carry out. No "laymen" were permitted to attend this to carry out. No "laymen" were permuted to accomply to conference. The program was a thrilling appeal for the gave vivid pictures of the needs of various fields throughout the world. The presentation stirred the hearts of those present. Of course, all of this is necessary. Any movement which hopes to succeed must have an appeal which will reach the hearts of the people. The promoters must have a thrilling message if they are to direct all of the discordant elements of the denominational world. The Interchurch World Movement was then proclaimed as being the "agency from God" to meet the situation. It was announced that we were now in the movement, and that now was no time to make objections, but that we must carry out the plans of the Executive Committee in New We were advised that when an interchurch worker came to us for information, it was the proper thing to meekly do his bidding without question.

I listened in vain for some one to frankly explain the movement and lay bare its plans. It was repeatedly said that it was not a union novement. I was glad for that information. There is no kinship between it and the Restoration movement, for that is, or was, a union movement. It was also stated that every religious body connected with the movement had entered into it upon a denominational basis. I was glad for that information, for I have never belonged to a denomination, and, of course, would be precluded from any part in the movement. We were also in-formed that it was a "cooperative" movement, although it was not made clear wherein there would be any cooperation, as none of the "denominations" were to work together, but each was to work at its own individual task in its own field. It seems to be more of a simultaneous movement, in which all the various religious bodies are to work at the same task at the same time. During one month, at a fixed date, each "denomination" will raise money for its colleges and missionary organizations, and at another fixed date each "denomination" will engage in evangelism. The only cooperation to be seen in the scheme seems to be that the "denominations" agree to follow the dictation of the Interchurch World Movement as to time and method of working at the same task.

It was at the "denominational" conference held in the First Christian Church that occasional rays of light shone upon points of interest. The program was so replete with set speeches that it was not possible to ask questions that would bring out the information sought, but, inadvertently perhaps, the ebon countenance of the "nigger in the woodcould be seen occasionally. Some one thoughtlessly injected the question of finances, and thus the splendid, inspiring, and tear-compelling program was marred by so sordid a thought as money. The national leader in charge drew aside the curtain of mystery long enough to give a few details in regard to the source of financial supply for this stupendous movement. She said certain financial in-terests were furnishing all of the money to carry it to a successful conclusion. Certain great banking houses in Wall Street gladly furnished whatever amount of money the movement might wish to spend in working out its program. This statement is confirmed by the active participation of one Mr. Rockefeller, who is even devoting much of his time to conference work. Thus another defirite fact has come out. The Interchurch World Movement is headed up in Wall Street. It was explained that when the promoters unfolded their program to these money kings of Wall Street that credit to an unlimited amount was granted without delay. Why are the money kings of Wall Street so ready to provide railroad fare, Pullman service, hotel and all accommodations to all of the preachers of the country to travel as long as they want to and as often as they want to? Ten millions of dollars is the amount estimated as necessary to finance the movement until July 1.

Then the "nigger in the woodpile" appeared momentarily. The speaker said that "labor must be taught the sacredness of a contract." Inadvertently the wolf was dis-Inadvertently the wolf was disclosed beneath the fleece of the sheep. In the war between capital and labor, Wall Street would subsidize the church of Christ, and try to bribe her ministry by entertainment to assist in pressing upon the brow of the toiler the cruel crown of thorns, and nailing his hands and feet to the cross of gold. The sordid money changers care nothing about the evangelization of the world. They only care to crush everything that rises which threatens their power. ing millions are already largely alienated from the church because they have suspected that the church was in the control of the rich. What will be the effect when all the denominations are controlled by this movement, which is headed up in, and financed by, Wall Street to "teach labor the sacredness of a contract?" The church of Christ is not the tool of any class; and when it sells itself to carry out the nefarious schemes of the plutocrat and profiteer, it has made itself worthy of the deepest place in hell, with the false prophets which betrayed it.

Must Wall Street be repaid for this accommodation? Yes, but the "coöperating denominations" will not foot the bill, we were informed. Every cent the "denominations give will go to the "denominational" interests. Here is the secret of this masterpiece of financing. The great reli-gious bodies enter into a great financial canvass, each working its own members when the Interchurch Movement blows the trumpet. Then its agents move upon "No Man's Land," which means the unchurched massesall of those not affiliated with any denomination. These agents will say to them: "See the followers of Christ advancing in unison! Like a mighty army moves the church of God under our direction." Depending upon the psychology of a seeming forward mass movement of the religious world, it is hoped to so stagger the mind of the unchurched masses that they will contribute in a substantial manner to the Interchurch World Movement. All money thus given those unaffillated with the "denominations" will be used to pay Wall Street and leave a handsome sum to carry on future operations. Remembering that the larger per cent of the toilers are in "No Man's Land," it is confidently hoped by Wall Street that they will pay for their own crown of thorns, their own crucifixion, and their own, coffin.

III. UNITED CHURCHES OF CHRIST OF AMERICA.

This is the final step into Babylon. The same leaders ho are representing "our denomination" in the Interwho are representing church World Movement were active in evolving this masterful plan of unity. The chief promoter of the scheme announced at the Missouri State Convention last year that when six denominations adopted the plan the prayer of the Master would be answered and the united church of Christ would be an accomplished fact. The plan which he referred to at that time is the one you published in the Standard of March 6. It is worthy of careful analysis.

When we become a component part of the United Churches of Christ, we give up the time-honored appeal of "no creed but Christ." The preamble says that we "desire to share, as a common heritage, the faith of the Christian church, which has, from time to time, found expres-sion in great historic statements." The Augsburg Confession, the Westminster Confession of Faith, and others which might be mentioned are examples of "great historic statements" that give expression to faith that "we desire to share" if we adopt the plan.

2. We also accept the Nicene Creed as a statement of faith, according to the second article of the preamble.

3. We recognize all the differences of doctrine and practice in the various denominations as being "due to diversity of gifts and ministrations" of the Holy Spirit, and, hence, authorized by the Spirit. Under this plan sprinkling would have to be recognized as authorized by the Spirit, it being a "diversity of administration." It is true the word "Spirit" does not occur in the article, but it was plainly omitted as a chean campufage, as no other word. plainly emitted as a cheap cameuflage, as no other word could fit the partial quotation from the scripture,

4. The associated churches form the visible body known as the "Inited Churches of Christ in America." This body "exercises such functions as are delegated to it by this instrument," but no mention of exercising any functions delegated to it by the Head of the church. However, there do not seem to be any "functions delegated to this body by this unique instrument." Article II. says that this body can only act through the Council or such other "executive and judicial commissions as the Council shall In other words, the Council is the supreme and only functioning agent of this wonderful church of Christ. This visible body manifests no sign of life except as the Council acts.

"The supreme governing and advisory bodies of constituent churches shall effectuate the decisions of the Council," according to Article IV. "Effectuate" is a big word, but it simply means "to carry out." Then, the United Missionary Society must carry out the decisions of the Council as they affect the Christian churches. Our "supreme advisory body" must do the will of the Council, no matter what it may be. We have been told all along that it was the servant of the churches. It now becomes the master to compel the bidding of the Council.

6. The Council takes control of all of our interests, according to Article V., consolidating missionary activities or making any adjustments that it sees fit.

7. Lastly, it assumes leadership "in the fields of evangelism, social service, religious education, and the like." The ministers are no longer leaders in these fields. are but puppets to echo the mouthings of the Council, with its headquarters in Wall Street. This is the time when the toilers will be told about "the sacredness of the con-

All of this will be perpetrated upon an unsuspecting people at St. Louis next October, unless, perchance, the conscience of the brotherhood be roused and the warning of the Master be heeded. Only by a united protest and concerted action of an outraged people can the Restoration movement be prevented from drifting into Babylon. We have been overconfident that the Lord would save the movement from any catastrophe, and have treated these activities of false prophets as only passing incidents which trouble our Zion. We have deceived ourselves. The Lord will certainly raise up a new leadership to maintain the truth as it is in Christ Jesus and to do his will, but he will as certainly cast off a people who suffer themselves to be betrayed into denominationalism.

Book Notices.

If you are in need of a good abridged Bible dictionary, send us $2 for a copy of Smith's Peloubet Edition. This is one of the best dictionaries of the Bible that I have examined.

"The Model Church," by G. C. Brewer, treats of live subjects, and is a book that should be distributed among the churches. This book has been almost universally commended and is being read with interest by many people, Price, $1.

A good book for young people to read is the "Life of Mrs. Charlotte Fanning." Mrs. Fanning was noted for her piety, zeal, and good sense. Hers was a life remarkable for the good accomplished. She always exerted an ennobling, refining, and uplifting influence. This book is ably edited by Mrs. Emma Page Larimore. Price, $1.

Send us fifteen cents for a copy of "What Was Nailed to the Cross?" It is a live tract, and is made up of some stirring thoughts of F. W. Smith. Adventists were active in North Nashville, and Brother Smith delivered a few sermons on the subject. The tract embodies the substance of these sermons. Buy a dozen copies and distribute them among the people. Price, $1.50 per dozen

Bradentown, Fla.

Good news continues to come from Brother W. M. Brumit's work at Bradentown, Fla. Brother John Hayes has recently moved to that place to help in evangelizing that section of the State. This will greatly strengthen the work, and we confidently expect to hear of good results centinuing to crown their efforts.

Our digressive brethren have tried hard to cripple the work there, but have failed. Loyal-hearted disciples in Florida should remember that at Bradentown we have a house of worship valued at two thousand dollars, with a lot more centrally located on which the brethren hope to soon construct a building. The "digressives" tried to get control of this property and failed. They also tried to lead some of the members off after their ways. They now have adopted the name, "Church of Christ," and are begging money to be used in building a house in which to teach their perverted gospel. The following clipping from the county paper at that place will give some idea of the kind of church these erring Christians would have you help them establish at that place:

MEMBERS OF THE CHURCH OF CHRIST ENJOY A NOVEL DINNER.

Central Church of Christ had their first roll-eaH rally and supper last night at the minister's home, 215 Florida Avenue.

Speeches were made by Brethren McLain, eighty-four years old, of Palmetto; the elders, J. W. Hewitt and McLaughlin; Rev. M. B. Ingle, State Evangelist of Florida; and the pastor, Rev. S. A. Strawn.

An excellent supper was served, and all present were kept very busy and happy until they became very fullful of expressions of appreciation of entire satisfaction of the rich repast.

Rev. Strawn has been preaching in Bradentown for near three months, in which time there have been eleven addi-tions to the charter list of the church. The outlook for the church is bright and a vigorous growth is anticipated for the future.

AT HOME AND ABROAD

C. E. Holt is in a good meeting at Obion, Tenn.

C. R. Nichol's meeting at Foster Street, this city, continues with fine interest.

Change of address: J. L. Tennant, from Fairview, W. Va., to Box 305, Barrackville, W. Va.

- L. F. Mason, of Whitewright, Texas, has some time open for meetings in June and July.
- J. D. Gunn, of Sparta, Tenn., is conducting a meeting for the Eleventh Street congregation in Nashville. Go out and hear him.

If you have names and addresses of friends who would like to meet with a loyal congregation at St. Louis, Mo., send them to Sister Lottie Johnson, 2842 Lafayette Avenue.

J. L. Barfield is available for leading the song service in meetings during the summer from June 1 to October 1. Address him in care of Ward-Belmont College, Nashville, Tenn. He can be reached by telephone.

From Lee Sanders, Miami, Texas, May 3: "I filled my regular appointments here and at Lakton yesterday. We had fine crowds at both places. One young lady was baptized at the morning services here. Our work continues to grow in interest."

From Ben West, Waxahachie, Texas, May 3: "Great crowds yesterday, the first day of our meeting, and three confessions. Brother Busby is preaching the gospel with much assurance and power. Many turned away last night for lack of seats."

C. M. Pullias closed a splendid meeting Sunday night, May 2, with the Lawrence Avenue Church, this city. There were seven baptisms, people much pleased with the preaching and the church greatly edified. He is now in a meeting with the Charlotte Avenue congregation. Glorious results are being obtained.

From L. F. Mason, Whitewright, Texas, May 3: "We had a fine meeting. About twenty preachers attended, and in the five-days' meeting we had five baptisms. Our crowds are increasing all the time, and we will soon build us a new house of worship. We have large attendance at our prayer meeting on Wednesday nights."

John M. Rice writes: "We had a fine day at Altus last Sunday. Crowds fine and interest excellent. Eight were added to the congregation here—two at 11 A.M. and six at the evening service. O. M. Reynolds and I exchanged pulpits on the third Sunday in April. Brother Reynolds was appreciated by the brethren at Altus. His work at Hollis is moving along nicely."

From W. E. Williams, Tulsa, Okla., Route 4, Box 116, May 6? "Last Lord's day was a good day with the church of Christ at Tulsa. Good crowds at both services. Three were added to the congregation. Those who read this, who know of members in this city that are not meeting with us, can do them and the cause a favor by giving me their names and addresses."

From J. W. Dunn, Irving, Texas, May 1: "This is to inform those inquiring of my physical condition that I am unable for any work now. I can walk around a little on a level surface. If will be weeks yet, if I continue to improve as at present, before I am ready for service. Regardless of my anxiety, my doctors will not consent unto anything but rest and quietude."

From Charles Holder, Bridgeport, Ala., May 6: "I am soliciting funds to buy a tent to use in my work in North Georgia, North Alabama, and East Tennessee, and I shall sincerely appreciate a contribution from any one who is interested in building up new churches in this field. I am planning to hold meetings this year at five places where we have no congregation. Please pray for my success in the Lord's work."

From F. L. Paisley, 430 Olive Avenue, Memphis, Tenn., May 4: "I wish to use this method of thanking the many who have written me words of comfort and consolation concerning the loss of my precious companion and infant daughter. I hope to write each one personally when possible. Christians here stood nobly by us during the dark hour, both personally and financially. The Lord bless all, Words fail me"

Tent Wanted—The church near Arkadelphia, Ala., wants to rent a tent for about ten days in the latter part of July. The church building is about two miles from the little town herein named. A few members live in the town, and they think much good could be done if the meeting could be run there. J. H. Horton will have charge of the preaching service, and I am to lead the singing. If any one has a tent to spare for the date named, let him write to me.—M. A. Creel, Hanceville, Ala.

From Charles F. Hardin, 843 Phillips Street, Springfield, Mo., May 5: "I have preached at least two sermons every Lord's day this winter, and have found all the churches where I have worked busy in a general way. I am now in a very promising meeting at Huffman, Ark., with M. S. Mason. Brother Mason is doing constructive work. I shall be busy from now until December 1 preaching and leading the singing, with the exception of the last two weeks in June and the first two weeks in October."

J. E. Acuff preached at the Twelfth Avenue Church, this city, Sunday, morning and night, to large audiences. There were two baptisms at the night service. Much interest is being manifested in the teaching service at this church by the children and young people and the attendance is steadily growing. Two hundred and eighty-two were present at Sunday school last Sunday. The overseers of the work there earnestly desire to stimulate greater interest on the part of the adult membership of the church.

From J. A. Hudson, Oklahoma City, Okla., May 3: "The brethren at Tenth and Francis Streets are threatened with hard opposition for the next seven weeks, for Billy Sunday is in town. But we fear no evil; God will take care of us. Two excellent services yesterday. There were four additions at the evening service. Brother Burch, of Wewoka, sent me a notice of a meeting that is being conducted there now by T. W. Phillips, of Fort Worth, Texas. G. A. Dunn is in a meeting at Shawnee. These great and good men and others are on the walls of Zion to build."

All of the commencement exercises at David Lipscomb College were well attended and thoroughly enjoyed. Following is the list of graduates and their theses: Lillian Barry, B.S., Tennessee, Valedictory; J. Bedford Beck, B.A., Tennessee, "The Dying Embers of the Fireside;" Sarah Lou Chandler, B.S., Alabama, "Home Powert" Glenn D. Davis, B.A., Alabama, "The Door to Success is Labeled ' Push: "Nannie Elizabeth Dawson, B.A., Kentucky, "Friendship:" Calvin B. Dean, B.A., Tennessee, Salutatory: Cecil Gardner, B.A., Arkansas, "Master Builders;" Marion Halbert, B.S., Tennessee, "Harmony of Truth;" S. EDITORIAL

Mismanagement of Mission Work in Japan.

BY J. C. M'Q.

On page 466 of this issue will be found an article from Brother McCaleb, entitled "And Why Beholdest Thou the Mote?" He begins his article with a wail and wails throughout. He tells, if he were manager, what he would do. According to him, we should publish his articles as they come in and publish our replies afterwards. He did not have enough effrontery to suggest that we reply not at all, which would serve his purpose much better. He would have my replies delayed until his articles would have time to influence and bias our readers. In order that both articles may be read together, the Gospel Advocate follows the usual custom of religious papers and publishes the editorial comment along with the article reviewed. This gives both sides, and anybody ought to know that this is just and fair. In an editorial experience of over thirty-five years, Brother McCaleb is the first man I have ever known to complain of a course so eminently fair and just to all. It is his untenable position that drives him to seek this unfair advantage. The truth needs no such support.

When the churches first began to be agitated by speculative teaching, Brother McCaleb sent us that article on "Teaching Unfulfilled Prophecy." Both Brother Lipscomb. and I thought its publication would do harm, as it encouraged speculation, the very thing then disturbing the churches, and so we placed it away. I had forgotten it until I unexpectedly came upon it while cleaning out a drawer, and the find seems to have been "timed by the Hand divine," to use his own language,

Brother McCaleb has completely evaded the issue. He has made no reply to my article at all. Instead of meeting the one issue with which he has been confronted-namely, the charge that he has embraced the false and hurtful teachings of the current speculative movement-he writes a long-drawn article with numerous other things to divert attention from that issue. Moreover, he has not denied a single material charge against him nor a single material fact presented in my article; but, on the contrary, as he has been caught up with in his alignment with false teaching and is now forced to speak, he details a story, as the reader can see, that makes the case against him much worse than it was before, and his course will be heartfly resented by a betrayed brotherhood. More of this later on,

But, first of all, why did he not deny that he is lined up with the speculative movement, and why did he not condemn the Russellite doctrines whose propagation by that movement has recently done so much harm? His refusal to do so shows clearly where he stands. It is a part of his plan to insinuate that the said doctrines do not amount to enough to call for the opposition put forth against them. Of course not, in his estimation; but the churches will not be deceived by any such turn. They will know that Russellism and Adventism taught by the young preachers who constitute the current speculative movement are just as wrong and hurtful when taught by the latter as they were when taught by Russell himself and the Adventists.

The many wholly irrelevant matters which he has lugged into the article serve only one purpose, and that is to show how hard pressed he is. If he had an argument to make, he would not be talking about the worth of the McQuiddy Printing Company nor of my family affairs and expenses. The Bible condemns meddling in other men's matters.

The following facts have been established: That he is yoked up with the premillenarions and that he is co-operating with and encouraging the premillenarians in Louisville. This doctrine "is not barren speculation-useless though true, and innocuous though false," says Dr. David Brown. Denominations have been founded on it; it pushes itself on the church, and then its propagators complain of those who oppose it, notwithstanding they oppose it because they cannot regard it as harmless and innocent. Its consequences are positively evil. Even in the days of the apostles it disturbed the first church into which it was introduced and created an excitement which Paul hastened to correct and allay. (1 Thess, 4: 13-18; 2 Thess, 2: 1-4.) The doctrine has a peculiar attraction for people of emotional temperament and stirs their blood to the fever point. Some of its advocates anoint the sick with oil. It has been attended with grave abuses. It is aggressive in spirit and policy; it organizes itself into Bible conferences, conventions, and Bible schools; it holds preachers' meetings, with only those of similar faith present, as was done recently at Horse Cave, Ky.; it distributes books, tracts, and literature teaching this doctrine among Christians. Thus it carries on an active propaganda. The Plymouth Brethren and Shakers are denominations founded by premillenarians Brother McCaleb compliments the premillenarians of Louisville and blames and criticizes those who oppose the doctrine and talks about such opposition as "needless controversy." He puts all the blame on those who stand for the truth in its simplicity, just as Ahab charged that Elijah had disturbed Israel. This is the identical course pursued by all advocates of innovations. See how he commends them in the following: "When home before some nine years ago, I wrote up the Portland Avenue Church as being one of the best churches I had ever known. Brother Boll was its minister then, and no better man nor safer teacher than he is now; and the church is just as good now as it was then." Here he fully indorses one of the principal leaders in the movement in question. Let it be noted, too, that nine years ago the churches were not being disturbed by these doctrines; and if "Brother Boll" and his associates held the same opinions then that they hold now, they were then at least sufficiently prudent and wise to keep such opinions to themselves instead of disturbing the churches with them, and they lack this much, at least, of being as safe teachers now as they were then.

In his eagerness to show that I divide churches over literature he convicts himself. He uses literature, and so is guilty if I am. But there is a difference; the division in the Highland Church was over purely speculative doctrine, which should not be made a test of fellowship. The speculators made it a test, and not those who oppose speculation. They could have held those opinions and not have taught them, and no one would have made it a test of fellowship. If some, because they cannot find a given method of teaching in the church where Christ has appointed no method at all, pull out from it, we should not cease to obey, in some way, the command of Christ to teach, recorded in Matt. 28; 19, 20. In his attempt at argument he upholds the position of the agitators in making opinions a test of Christian fellowship.

He says "no one has ever read a line of criticism from " him "in the papers against Brother Rubel and Brother Taylor." That is not the point. No one has accused him of doing anything "in the papers against Brother Rubel and Brother Taylor;" but his prompt acceptance of the hospitality of Jorgenson and his associates, his public indorsement of them in preaching for them, and his unstinted compliments of the Highland Church, which, under the lead of Jorgenson and Janes, committed the high crime of withdrawing from Brethren Rubel and Taylor, with no charge proved except that they opposed the speculative doctrines, was far more unfriendly and hurtful to them than any words he might truthfully have said "in the papers." If he had condemned the wicked deed as he and I both rightly condemn war, there would have been no criticism. But I fear he will never do so, since he not only upholds the speculative movement, but makes cigarette smoking a test of fellowship and does not cut fellowship with a Japanese Episcopalian sprinkler!

Division is not necessarily a sin; sometimes it is a sin not to divide. There is a conflict between vice and virtue, truth and falsehood. Christ came to create division. (See Matt. 10: 34-36.) But forcing division over things God does not require is a high crime, and I repeat that the man who divides the spiritual body over speculative interpretations of unfulfilled prophecy is a greater sinner than the men who nailed Christ to the cross. I challenge Brother McCaleb to deny this proposition. Will he do it? There is simply no palliation of the high-handed offense committed by the Highland Church, and it will cry to God for retribution until it is repented of.

We have also developed, by his assistance, that he has been working with a Japanese Episcopalian sprinkler for fifteen years. Sister Cypert worked with this sprinkler, with the approval of Brother McCaleb, at the school in Zoshigaya Gakuin, for nearly two years. He attempts to justify his course by comparing it to the Lawrenceburg school; but it is not like the school at Lawrenceburg, Tenn. In the school at Lawrenceburg is a Christian teacher in charge, teaching the truth as it is in Christ. He teaches and practices immersion, and does not believe sprinkling is valid baptism. According to Brother McCaleb's own statement, an Episcopalian was head and owner of the school in question. Brother McCaleb's confidence in the sprinkler was so great that he mortgaged his home, bought with the money of the brotherhood, in order to pay for the building in which the Japanese could teach this school. He had so much interest and affection for this Japanese and his work that he combed the brotherhood with a fineteothed comb to raise money to pay the school building out of debt, and recently announced that sufficient funds had been received for this purpose. I thought, and I presume every one else thought, that Brother McCaleb controlled the funds contributed to this school for the brotherhood; so imagine my surprise, when I spoke of his employing an Episcopalian principal, to have him tell us the Episcopallan owned the school and thus give us to understand, for the first time, that he had solicited the brotherhood to pay an Episcopalian school out of debt! He also tells us that he did not press the matter of teaching him that sprinkling is not valid. He might have told us that he did not make sprinkling a test of fellowship, but that he did make smoking a cigarette such a test! I have never used tobacco in any form, have never encouraged or advocated its use, but this is the first time that I ever heard of any man's making smoking a cigarette a test of fellowship! While he knew that Mr. Iida believed that sprinkling was valid baptism, he wrote about him as a devout believer; he worked with him in the worship of the church, as is evident from a paragraph which appeared in the Gospel Advocate of May 8, 1919. He held that sprinkling was a matter of so little importance that he did not think of drawing the line on the sprinkler; but the very minute he is caught smoking a cigarette, Miss Cypert is encouraged in withdrawing from the school! Certainly this is "straining out the gnat and swallowing the camel."

I did not "strike from ambush." I knew that Miss Sarah Andrews, who was associated with Brother McCaleb in the work in Japan, had written Brother Bradley of the unsatisfactory condition of the work over there because of hurtful influences, and I called attention to the fact to give Brother McCaleb an opportunity to state the case and his relation to it; but he comes back on this, as on other things, with an evasion. Fortunately, however, on the strength of the said letter to Brother Bradley, our office wrote directly to Miss Andrews asking for a statement from her, and we have her reply, which gives further light on the situation. Unlike Brother McCaleb, she does not hesitate to speak out unevasively and declare herself against the speculative movement, promising to send a further statement on it for publication. Being consci-entious, she has had doubts whether she "should be the one through whom these facts should be known to the churches in the homeland, or what steps would be right for" her "to take in the matter;" and she has regarded it as Brother McCaleb's plain duty to frankly tell the churches the situation. She naturally shrinks from controversy and does her best to shield Brother McCaleb as far as she can, but clearly states that, while he was kind to her, "almost like a father," and she did not leave the church and school because of the speculative movement, yet she "loves the truth and must stand by it," and that "with conditions as they were" with the Episcopalian sprinkler "holding sway," she "did not believe the work at either place would amount to anything." It now appears that, if it had not been for Miss Andrews' first letter to Brother Bradley, we would not have found out the situation at all. The following is her letter to us:

Shizuoka ken, Okitsu, Japan. April 5, 1920.-A. B. Lipscomb, Nashville, Tenn.-Dear Brother Lipscomb; letter reached me several days ago, and I should have written you sooner, but my life is a busy one and the opportunity has just now come; so please excuse the delay. The days intervening have given me time to give prayer and thought to the subject of your letter-whether I should be the one through whom these facts should be known to the churches in the homeland, or what steps would be right for me to take in the matter. I at last decided to write Brother McCaleb and insist that he make the report. have a letter ready to be mailed to him stating how that Brother Bradley had asked me to write a statement telling him my attitude toward the Boll teaching and my present connection with the McCaleb work, and how I had Brother Bradley facts about the work which his letter showed he was ignorant of: also how that a letter had come from you asking that I make a statement as to how I feel about the work here; and then that I do not like to let any of these things that I have said go into the papers from my pen, although I believe the churches at home should know the real conditions of the work here, as well as in any other land, but the reports should be made by the missionary who has the work in charge.

Now my earnest desire is, as also stated in the letter to Brother McCaleb, that he make these things known to the churches Of course, as to my own attitude toward the Boll speculative theory, or what I have learned of it, I am against it, and I wish to make a statement through the papers to that effect; but as for Brother McCaleb's part of the work in Japan, I think he ought to do the reporting. Surely he will not delay to make the real conditions, as they have been and are now, known to the churches. I do not remember of ever hearing him express himself as to what he thought of the Boll teaching. Therefore, you will see that it was not because of any speculative theory or belief that he might have held that I refused to work longer with the Zoshigaya church or have any connection with the Girls' Sewing School, for I did not even know it If he was a speculatist then. But with conditions as they were, I did not believe the work at either place would amount to anything as long as Yoshie San and Mr. Iida were holding sway in the respective places. I wrote Brother Bradley these facts simply to show him that whatever Brother McCaleb's belief is or has been, I have had little or no connection with his work, but have been trying to work where my labors would at least not be in vain. Brother McCaleb was very kind to me, almost like a father, and I appreciate all that he did for me, but love the truth and must stand by it. Hoping to see a report of real conditions from Brother McCaleb's pen in the columns of the papers soon, I am, Your fellow servant in the Lord, SARAH ANDREWS.

In a letter to Brother I. B. Bradley, under date of March 12, 1920, Sister Lillie Cypert, after expressing disappointment at the closing of the Girls' Sewing School, says of the school itself: "But a thing that cannot be honorable before God, I cannot work In."

Aside from any entanglements with the speculative movement, in the light of this letter and other facts, I ask here in all seriousness, what right has any man to appropriate money contributed for one thing to another thing without consulting the contributors, and then, when he has lost out on his venture, to propose to remedy his mistake by using some of his own property to replace what he misappropriated? He himself, without consulting the contributors, decides on how much of his property he will thus use! It usually "takes two to make a bargain." but Brother McCaleb takes this matter into his own hands exclusively without a word from the brethren who furnished the money. He tells us he stated it in the Gospel Advocate, in the pulpit, and privately. Suppose he did state It in the Advocate; does that change the character of the deed? Suppose the whole world knew it; does that make any difference as to the right or wrong of his action? On exactly the same principle he could have put the money of the churches into a railroad venture, and, if it failed in doing what he hoped, then replace the money with so much of his property as he might wish thus to use, and never consult the churches at all! Hence, when the churches contribute money to him for missionary work, they cannot know but he may use it some other way and then replace it as he may like! I have never seen a statement in the Advocate, though I have searched for it: and I believe that if he had stated in the Advocate that he had a Japanese Episcopalian sprinkler at the head of that school, the brethren would have revolted and not made any contributions to it. I am sure that I would not have made a contribution of not less than three hundred dollars recently If I had known that the school was so soon to be lost to the Japanese and had understood that an Episcopalian sprinkler was over it and in control of it. "Stating it" in the Gospel Advocate, the pulpit, and to an individual cannot lift Brother McCaleb out of the pit into which he has fallen. When Brother I. B. Bradley asked him why he yoked up with the Episcopalian, his reply was, because he was the only available man, or words to that effect. suppose a Roman Catholic would have been an available man with him, provided he did not smoke! A loyal Christian would not be if he did smoke!

Brother McCaleb puts Brother Lipscomb's "big shoes" on me in the hope that I cannot "shuffle around" in them sufficiently to be able to inflict "Teddylike whacks." But as "the hit dog hollers," judging from his cries, he is sorely disappointed with the force of the whacks! If they were soft enough to please him, they would do no good. Elijah's "whacks" did not please Ahab, neither did Brother Lipscomb's please our brother when given, but they afterwards yielded "the peaceable fruit of righteousness."

If Brother David Lipscomb were here now in his vigor, he would make the welkin ring with the force of his "whacks" against this false doctrine! But the Lord is not dependent on Brother Lipscomb or any other one man. There are many humble gospel preachers who have never crossed the borders of their own native States who are abundantly able to expose the erroneous doctrine indorsed by the learned, widely known, and gifted McCaleb, as he represents himself to be, who is, indeed, so wise that he will not let a brother inquire of him as to what he does believe. "For behold your calling, brethren, that not many wise after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble, are called: but God chose the foolish things of the world, that he might put to shame them that are wise; and God chose the weak things of the world, that he might put to shame the things that are strong; and the base things of the world, and the things that are despised, did God choose, yea, and the things that are not, that he might bring to naught the things that are: that no flesh should glory before Ged." (1 Cor. 1: 26-29.)

in an effort to reflect unfavorably on the McQuiddy Printing Company, he alludes to a conversation with which I had nothing to do that occurred in its office. He had asked my son, L. B. McQuiddy, to read his tract against the use of coffee and tea and tell him what he thought about it. The "moderate drinking" that was referred to by my son was the moderate drinking of tea and coffee. and not whisky, as Brother McCaleb here attempts to represent it. When I heard of what my son had said to him, I expressed regret that he had done so; but I must say that I myself think Brother McCaleb would do well to pay more attention to the fundamentals of salvation rather than to drinking coffee or tea in moderation. If he would boldly and fearlessly condemn sprinkling and preach the gospel as it is in Christ, he would do far more good than by arguing, as he has done, with such men as J. W. Grant and others over the use of tea and coffee.

Brother McCaleb is given to misrepresenting me. He says: "Brother McQuiddy asks: 'But why did he not tell us why there was friction between Miss Cypert and the principal of the Sewing School?' Because I was answering his charge that there was friction between me and Miss Cypert. I wanted the readers to see that his charge was false." If his life depended on it, he could not find where I have ever charged friction between him and any one. I asked if there were not already friction brewing between him and some of the workers in Japan. I can see no excuse for this misrepresentation, because he had already quoted my language correctly in our issue of April 1. He wasted much valuable space on this subject of "friction," when it is only a figment of his own creation.

He labors hard to make it appear that I autocratically demanded him to appear in Nashville for examination. The facts are these: He wrote a statement of his position, for which he demanded publication. Others had questioned his faith on "prophetic teaching," while the Gospel Advocate had not published anything. As I had good reason to believe that he was in sympathy with the Louisville movement, I invited him to my home in order that we might talk over his work. This hospitable invitation to talk over his work he now tortures into a demand for him to appear in Nashville to be examined as to the soundness of his faith. This is ungracious in him. According to his position, no matter what those supporting a missionary may have reason to believe of his teaching, they are autocrats and dictators if they kindly ask the missionary for the full truth! In his judgment, they have no right to ask him anything about it, but must sit idly by and say nothing, no matter what new and hurtful doctrine he may be teaching! I cannot accept such a view, but I most positively reject it and the churches will reject it, for it is our duty to know what those we support as missionaries are teaching; and when, as in this case, we have good grounds for believing that a missionary is teaching false and hurtful doctrine, Brother McCaleb will not intimidate us, as he appears to want to do, from making proper inquiry into the matter. This is precisely what I tried to do with Brother McCaleb; but, instead of consenting to an interview to talk over the matter, he insinuates that I am "trying to dictate one's faith, or standardize the belief for the churches." If we accept his absurd position and follow it out, we would have no right to ask a question or to say anything at all to a missionary, no matter if he has made smoking a cigarette a test of fellowship and affiliated with an Episcopalian sprinkler for fifteen long years. He says if I had not been so hasty in closing the correspondence that he would have told me all about it. He was very slow indeed to tell anything about it; for he worked with this Episcopalian sprinkler for fifteen years, and then put the funds contributed by the churches into a Japanese school for almost two years, and yet never said anything about it until a letter came from Japan telling about an Episcopalian being principal of the school, which was the occasion of a statement from Brother McCaleb when recently at Dickson, Tenn:

He again alludes to the fact that I did not see him in Florence. I was called to Florence to look after work that demanded my attention, and which ran into hundreds of dollars. In order to do my duty and keep my promise, it was necessary for me to leave Florence on the early train and worship in Nashville on that day. I could not worship in Florence, no matter how much I desired to do so, and meet my obligations. But suppose I could have seen Brother McCaleb while in Florence, I would have felt like I was forcing myself on him to do so; for I had a letter from his own hand saying that from the results of a previous personal interview, "I am not encouraged to seek another." "Love thinketh no evil." It has now been clearly developed that Brother McCaleb did not learn of the defection of McHenry and Martin from the papers, as his first utterance would have led us to believe. He tells us that he was among the first to hear the rumor. If he did not hear it from Janes, Jorgenson, or some one associated with them in Louisville, he can tell us from whom he heard the report.

As his affiliation with the sprinkler emphasizes his faith, I see no necessity for him or any one else to state his faith. From the facts in the case, it is easy to see in part, at least, what his faith is. Goethe truly says: "Tell me with whom thou art found, and I will tell thee who thou art." Benjamin Franklin states the truth tersely when he says: "The rotten apple spoils his companion." A greater than either says: "Evil companionships corrupt good morals." (1 Cor. 15: 33.)

Concerning his reference to the Campbell Street Church, of Louisville, I am reliably informed that he was assured an invitation would be quickly extended to him to come to that church, some of whose members had heard he had embraced the Russellite and Advent doctrines in question. and tell it that it was a mistake and that he condemned such doctrines, but he refused to do so. He stated he would go there and condemn anything in the speculative movement that he thought was wrong, just as he would condemn the Campbell Street Church for (as he had been informed) advocating war in its pulpit. He was corrected in this and assured that he had been misinformed, and that while its different members, including the preacher. had done what they conscientiously could do for the government while it was in the war, yet none of them advocated war, but were as thoroughly opposed to it as he was. He thus had the opportunity to go to that church and condemn both war and the speculative movement, but he refused to condemn the latter. He is strong in condemning war, and he is right in this, but he refuses to condemn the other because he is lined up with it. The Gospel Advocate condemns both, and is sorry Brother McCaleb cannot. I challenged him to produce one thing that I had written or done advocating a Christian's going to war. This he failed to do, and will fail to do. But even if it were so, what has that to do with his being lined up with the speculative movement? Those who have been supporting him are concerned just here about his teaching, and not that of others.

He referred to the Spartan mothers. All that I stated about the Spartan mothers I have heard preachers say all my life, and I am in the habit of giving just such exhortations for Christian mothers to bear up under misfortunes that cannot be helped. I never exhorted them to give up their sons to the war; but as many of them had been forced and called upon to do this, I admonished them to be brave in this great trial. Neither did I decline to publish the passages of scripture entitled "A Bible Reading on Peace" because I favored war, but for other reasons. Under the same conditions I would decline to publish the passages at the present time. The Advocate has been grossly misrepresented about this. Brother Elam did not understand that it was my desire to favor the war that led me to decline the publication of the passages, for he has stated to me that he never understood that I favored war. Religious newspapers, preachers, and churches, who were disposed to act with good sense and prudence, respectfully refrained from unnecessary writing, preaching, and talking during the war, not because they had changed their convictions. but because it would only have brought on friction with the authorities and would otherwise have done no good. In declining the publication in a letter of September 6, 1917, which was during the war, I stated: "I believe every scripture you have quoted, and as such we have no objection to its appearing in the Advocate at any time." The letter is on file at this office, and speaks for Itself. Any one who wishes may read it. When a brother who had been led to charge that I was unwilling to publish passages of scripture on peace read the letter, he offered to publish any apology that I thought he should make. Will Brother Mc-Caleb be as honorable? I condemned war during the war, and condemn it now. If there is any war movement in the church, I greatly deplore it. Some of the most loyal preachers in the church of God have been grossly misrepresented as favoring war merely because they tried to be prudent during the war and not to render themselves ridiculous by indulging in loud talk about war at a time when such talk could do no good.

I do not care to say anything further now about the misfortunes that have befallen our missionary work. I am greatly grieved over the situation. But so far as any further controversy with Brother McCaleb is concerned, one thing must here and now be definitely understood. If he wishes to say anything further, he must confine himself to the issue and stay within reasonable bounds, for I will not inflict upon our readers another long-drawn article on irrelevant matters. If this decision is not respected, what he may say will be treated accordingly.

He wants to know if in teaching "unfulfilled prophecies" we are "allowed to make any comment, or must we just read these unfulfilled prophecies?" We may comment on unfulfilled prophecy precisely as we should comment on baptism, the Lord's Supper, prayer, faith, repentance, or any other subject on which the Bible speaks at all, by showing what the Bible says on that subject. How does Brother McCaleb comment on the Scriptures about baptism? Does he not turn from passage to passage and show what God says on it? If he does not, he fails to do what he should do. Then we should comment the same way on unfulfilled prophecy, showing what God says on it, and stop with that. But what he and others in the speculative movement are contending for is the right to comment on unfulfilled prophecy by giving their opinion as to the meaning of the passage. This is exactly what he did when he stated, in the article on prophecy, that the things that were transpiring during the great European war were fulfilling the prophecies of Isaiah, Ezekiel, Daniel, and other prophets. He presumed to speak where God has not spoken, while I contend that we should hold fast the "pattern of sound words" and "speak as it were the oracles of God." We are positively told by Paul "not to go beyond the things which are written." (1 Cor. 4: 6.)

The New Testament on Divine Healing.

[The following is the substance of a sermon delivered before the Campbell Street Church, Louisville, Ky., Sunday morning, April 25, 1920. It was occasioned by the recent visit to Louisville of Mr. J. M. Hickson, English layman of the Episcopal Church and alleged divine healer.
—M. C. K.]

Divine healing is not only a subject of New Testament teaching, but it is very prominent in the New Testament. Whether it was to be and has been perpetuated in the church is a mooted question in some quarters.

The position to be maintained in the present sermon is that it and other supernatural phenomena were not only a reality in the apostolic age, but that they were for a specific divine purpose—namely, the establishment of Christianity upon a divine basis—and that when that purpose was served the New Testament closed without any revelation that such powers were to be perpetuated in the church of the future. Hence, I now affirm three distinct propositions, the proof of which is to be submitted in the form of New Testament teaching on divine healing and other exhibitions of miraculous power.

I. JESUS HAD POWER TO HEAL ALL MANNES OF DISEASES AND TO RAISE THE DEAD.

"And Jesus went about in all Galilee, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom, and healing all manner of disease and all manner of sickness (Matt. 4: 23.) "And when Jesus was among the people." come into Peter's house, he saw his wife's mother lying And he touched her hand, and the fever sick of a fever. left her; and she arose and ministered unto him. And when even was come, they brought unto him many possessed with demons: and he cast out the spirits with a word, and healed all that were sick." (Matt. 8: 14-16.) "And Jesus went about all the cities and the villages, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom, and healing all manner of disease and all manner of sickness." (Matt. 9: 35.) "And there came unto him great multitudes, having with them the lame, blind, dumb, maimed, and many others, and they cast them down at his feet; and he healed them; in so much that the multitude wondered when they saw the dumb speaking, the maimed whole, and the lame walking, and the blind seeing: and they glorified the God of Israel." (Matt. 15: 30, 31.) "And the blind and the lame came to him in the temple, and he healed them." (Matt. 21: 14.) "And they bring unto him one that was deaf, and had an impediment in his speech; and they beseech him to lay his hand upon him. And he took him aside from the multitude privately, and put his fingers into his ears, and he spat, and touched his tongue; and looking up to heaven, he sighed, and saith unto him, Ephphatha, that is, be opened. And his ears were opened, and the bond of his tongue was loosed, and he spake plain." (Mark 7: 32-35.) "And they come unto Bethsaida, and they bring to him a blind man, and beseech him to touch him. And he took hold of the blind man by the hand, and brought him out of the village; and when he had spit on his eyes, and laid his hands upon him, he asked him, Seest thou aught? And he looked up, and said, I see men; for I behold them as trees, walking. Then again he his hands upon his eyes; and he looked steadfastly, and was restored, and saw all things clearly." (Mark 8: 22-25.) "And when the sun was setting, all they that had any sick with divers diseases brought them unto him; and he laid his hands on every one of them, and healed them." (Luke 4: 40.) "Now when he drew near to the gate of the city, behold, there was carried out one that was dead, the only son of his mother, and she was a widow; and much people of the city was with her. And when the Lord saw her, he had compassion on her, and said unto her. Weep not. And he came nigh and touched the bier: and the bearers stood still. And he said, Young man, I say unto thee, Arise. And he that was dead sat up, and began And he gave him to his mother. And fear took hold on all; and they glorified God, saying, A great prophet is arisen among us: and, God has visited his people. (Luke 7: 12-16.) "And he was teaching in one of the synagogues on the Sabbath day. And behold, a woman that had a spirit of infirmity eighteen years; and she was bowed together, and could in no wise lift herself up. And when Jesus saw her, he called her, and said to her, Woman, thou art loosed from thy infirmity. And he laid his hands upon her: and immediately she was made straight, and glorified God." (Luke 13: 10-13.) "He came therefore again unto Cana of Galilee, where he made the water wine, And there was a certain nobleman whose son was sick at Capernaum. When he heard that Jesus was come out of Judea into Galilee, he went unto him, and besought him that he would come down, and heal his son; for he was at the point of death. Jesus therefore said unto him, Except ye see signs and wonders, ye will in no wise believe. The nobleman saith unto him, Sir, come down ere my child die. Jesus saith unto him, Go thy way: thy son liveth. The man believed the word that Jesus spake unto him, and he went his way. And as he was now going down, his servants met him, saying, that his son lived. So he inquired of them the hour when he began to amend. said therefore unto him, Yesterday at the seventh hour the fever left him. So the father knew that it was at that hour in which Jesus said unto him, Thy son liveth: and himself believed, and his whole house." (John 4: 46-53.)

II. HE GAVE THE SAME POWERS TO THE APOSTLES.

"And he called unto him his twelve disciples, and gave unto them authority over unclean spirits, to cast them out, and to heal all manner of disease and all manner of sickness." (Matt. 10: 1.) "Heal the sick, raise the dead, cleanse the lepers, cast out demons." (Verse 8.) Please note here that they did not before possess this authority or power, but Jesus "gave it unto them." "And they cast out many demons, and anointed with oil many that were sick, and healed them." (Mark 6: 13.) "And these signs sick, and healed them." (Mark 6: 13.) "And these signs shall accompany them that believe: in my name shall they cast out demons; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents, and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall in no wise hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover." (Mark 16: 17, 18.) "But Peter said, Silver and gold have I none; but what I have, that give I thee. In the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, walk. And he took him by the right hand and raised him up, and immediately his feet and his ankle bones received strength. And leaping up, he stood and began to walk; and he entered with them into the temple, walking, and leaping, and praising God." (Acts 3: 6-8.) "And Ananias departed, and entered into the house; and laying his hands on him said, Brother Saul, the Lord, even Jesus, who appeared unto thee in the way which thou camest, hath sent me, that thou mayest receive thy sight, and be filled with the Holy Spirit. And straightway there fell from his eyes as it were scales, and he received his sight." (Acts 9: 17, 18.) "And it came to pass, as Peter went throughout all parts, he came down also to the saints that dwelt at Lydda. And there he found a certain man named Æneas, who had kept his bed eight years; for he was palsied. And Peter said unto him, Æneas, Jesus Christ healeth thee: arise, and make thy bed. And straightway he arose." 32-34.) "Now there was at Joppa a certain disciple named Tabitha, which by interpretation is called Dorcas: this woman was full of good works and almsdeeds which she And it came to pass in those days that she fell sick and died, and when they had washed her, they laid her in an upper chamber. And as Lydda was nigh unto Joppa, the disciples, hearing that Peter was there, sent two men unto him, entreating him, Delay not to come on unto us. And Peter arose and went with them. And when he was come, they brought him unto the upper chamber. And all the widows stood by him weeping, and showing the coats and garments which Dorcas made, while she was them. But Peter put them all forth, and kneeled down, and prayed; and turning to the body, he said, Tabitha, And she opened her eyes; and when she saw Peter. she sat up. And he gave her his hand, and raised her up; and calling the saints and widows, he presented her alive. (Acts 9: 36-41.) "And there sat in the window a certain young man named Eutychus, borne down with deep sleep: and as Paul discoursed yet longer, being borne down by his sleep he fell down from the third story, and was taken And Paul went down and fell on him, and emun dead. bracing him said. Make ye no ado; for his life is in him." (Acts 20: 9, 10.) "And it was so, that the father of Publius lay sick of fever and dysentery; unto whom Paul entered in, and prayed, and laying his hands on him healed him. And when this was done, the rest also that had diseases in the island came, and were cured." (Acts 28: 8, 9.) "And God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondly prophets, thirdly teachers, then miracles, then gifts of healings, helps, governments, divers kinds of tongues." (1 Cor. 12: 28.)

III. THESE POWERS WERE FOR A SPECIAL DIVINE PUBPOSE WITH NO REVELATION THAT THEY WERE TO BE PERPETUATED IN THE CHURCH AFTER THAT PURPOSE WAS SERVED.

"Now when he was in Jerusalem at the Passover, during the feast, many believed on his name, beholding his signs which he did." (John 2: 23.) The signs produced faith in his divine character. That was their purpose. "And a great multitude followed him, because they beheld the signs which he did on them that were sick. . . . When therewhich he did on them that were sick. . When therefore the people saw the signs which he did, they said. This is of a truth the prophet that cometh into the world." (John 6: 2-14.) "But of the multitude many believed on him; and they said, When the Christ shall come, will he do more signs than those which this man hath done?" (John 7: 31.) "And many came unto him; and they said, John indeed did no signs: but all things whatsoever John spake of this man were true. And many believed on him there." (John 10: 41, 42.) "Many other signs therefore did Jesus in the presence of the disciples which are not written in this book: but these are written, that ye may believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that believing ye may have life in his name." (John 20: 30, 31.) Their divine purpose was to place Christianity on a divine basis. "Ye men of Israel, hear these words: Jesus of Nazareth, a man approved of God unto you by mighty works and wonders and signs which God did by him in the midst of you, even as ye yourselves know." 22.) "How shall we escape, if we neglect so great a salva-tion? which having at the first been spoken through the Lord, was confirmed unto us by them that heard; God also bearing witness with them, both by signs and wonders, and by manifold powers, and by gifts of the Holy Spirit, according to his own will." (Heb. 2: 3, 4.) "Love never faileth; but whether there be prophecies, they shall be done away; whether there be tongues, they shall cease; whether there be knowledge, it shall be done away." (1 Cor. 13: 8.) "Wherefore tongues are for a sign, not to them that be-lieve, but to the unbelieving: but prophesying is for a sign, not to the unbelieving, but to them that believe." (1 Cor. 14: 22.)

Here it is distinctly declared that "prophecies" or speaking by divine inspiration were to "be done away," and that speaking in "tongues"—an instance of miraculous power—was to "cease;" and the New Testament closes without any regulation that such miraculous powers were to be perpetuated through future ages of the church. Hence, whoever alleges that men still have any such powers, or that they are the channels through which such powers are exercised, assumes the obligation to furnish the proof by exhibiting the signs as did Jesus and the apostles. According to the testimonies submitted, there is no room for doubt in their cases. They not only said they could, but they did heal the sick, raise the dead, make the lame to walk, and the dumb to speak, and give hearing to the deaf and sight to the blind.

Of the famous passage in James 5: 14, 15, it is safe to say that it does not necessarily imply that elders in the church to-day can do anything more for the sick than use natural means in connection with their prayers, though some of them could do more than that in the apostolic age. Peter was an elder. (See 1 Pet. 5: 1.) As to anointing with oil, it was a common practice among the ancient Jews apart from the exercise of miraculous power. (See Isa. 1: 6: Luke 10: 34.)

Thus the divine origin of Christianity was attested by divine credentials: and this, we are definitely assured in the New Testament, was not only the divine purpose of miraculous signs, but that they actually did produce this effect—namely, they made men believers in the Lord. Let those who claim such powers to-day, or to be the channels through which they are exercised, open the eyes of the blind or raise the dead, and faith will be the result again.

The Meeting at Henderson, Tenn.

BY E. A. E.

Time and space have forbidden my report of this meeting before now. And for this reason, together with so much work, I scarcely ever report a meeting. I am pleased for others to do so.

Personally, it was a great pleasure to be with this congregation in another meeting. We were not conducting this meeting for our personal pleasure, but for the glory of God; still, in the congenial association of the teachers of the Freed-Hardeman College and of this congregation, one could not be otherwise than pleased.

Comparatively speaking, this is a live, strong, and good congregation. It is blessed above many others by having connected with it so many clear and faithful and strong teachers of the Bible. I feel an abiding interest in this congregation which I think no other person outside of it can feel, and the good people in Henderson know why. God has blessed it, I believe, greatly for its true and firm stand for the truth in the love of God.

The meeting began on Tuesday night after the fourth Sunday in March and continued until Friday night before the third Sunday in the same month. Ten or twelve through faith and in penitence were baptized into Christ and began the life of obedience to the gospel of their salvation. May the blessings and peace of the Lord attend them and abide with this church and with all the Israel of God!

Our readers know that the Freed-Hardeman College is in Henderson. As in the church there, I have had an abiding interest in this school since its birthday. It stands as a beacon light in all that extended section of country. It has a splendid college, or administration, building, well adapted to its work. There is now in course of construction on the ground a dormitory for young ladies, of modern architecture and with all modern improvements and adaptability to its use. It is being well built and, according to my judgment, will be complete in all its arrangements. It will accommodate one hundred girls. Every room will be an outside room, will be lighted and thoroughly ventilated. These rooms are to be furnished each with two single beds. It will be a pleasure to girls to have a home in this building.

The design is to erect in the course of time, also, such a dormitory for boys.

As it is, both the boys and girls fare well and are in good hands, if all fare as well and are as well looked after as the ones with Brother Hardeman; for I had the pleasure of stopping with him and his better—well, his most excellent wife, and I know.

This school has been under the management of Brethren Freed and Hardeman from its beginning, and has grown under them into its present proportions. These two have the assistance of Brethren Brigance and Owen, worthy Christian men, who love the truth and who love to preach it, and who are faithful and worthy teachers; also of other competent teachers. One is most favorably impressed with the work of this school in its different parts. The Bible is taught as a textbook to all who desire to study it, but taught daily to all in lectures and by good example. It was my pleasure also to lecture to the school daily, except Sundays and Mondays, and to meet an earnest student body, in which are several young men who are preachers of the gospel.

Now, since so much is being said about the support of preachers, it is just and my pleasure to say that this congregation in its generosity does not overlook the high cost of living.

Fort Worth, April 26.-The Oak Cliff meeting closed last night, with a large crowd present. The Oak night, Cliff Christians are as active and energetic, prayerful and persevering, as any I have met, and it is a great pleasure to labor with them. The other churches of the city manifested a splendid spirit by their hearty cooperation. Pearl and Bryan, Garrett Avcnue, Peak and Main, and West Dallas members, with their preachers, were in attendance throughout. And such brethren as Colley, Kidwell, Blansett, Nelson, Reagan, Dunn, Deveny, Pummell, and probably others, were a great help by their prayers and words of encouragement. The singing was a leading feature. Several splendid Several splendid leaders are in the congregation. Their regular evangelist, Brother Warren E. Starnes, is doing a fine work and is greatly loved and appreciated by all. Brother Starnes is a splendid man to work with. He is as free from little, hurtful, disgusting jealousies and such like as any man I know. I am praying for more such men. There were about thirty-two added to the were about thirty-two added to the congregation. They remembered me well in their support, and the sisters sent a special purse to my wife, which was greatly appreciated. While there I promised the Pearl and Bryan Streets congregation to be with them for their June meeting in 1921. Brother Colley is doing a fine work there .-Horace W. Busby.

Buffalo, April 27.-We are having most excellent meetings here now, but we can hold no long meetings until we get our church house. We have contracted for a building site, and after paying for that we will need about two hundred and fifty dollars more money to help pay for the lumber. We cannot buy lumber without the cash. Let every one who reads this note send us an offering without further delay. Please do not wait for me to write you or for others to contribute, but act now. This church property will be fully protected against innovators. We have done all we can. Please do help us out now. Address me at Buffalo, W. Va.—F. P. Fonner:

Concerning the East Tennessee Work.

BY GEORGE W. FARMER.

We are now ready and glad to announce that the man has been engaged for the work for which we have been planning. Brother Vernon Rozar, of Fayetteville, Tenn., is the man. He has been secured and the work will begin about May 15. Brother Rozar has been engaged in teaching school, preaching on Lord's days and holding meetings during his vacations, for some five or six years. He is a young man of sterling qualities and of most exemplary character, and I believe he will prove a faithful servant in this part of the Master's vineyard. We count ourselves fortunate in being able to secure him for the work. I wish to say, further, that as yet we have not a sufficient amount promised for the support of this work. Some have already contributed and some have promised to contribute monthly, and many who have been sollcited have not signified what they will do, whether anything or not. Brethren, we must not fall down on this support. Please write us and state what amount you will help us on this monthly. Send money to me at Cleveland, Tenn., and same will be placed in bank here and drawn out as needed.

Brother Charles Holder is in a meeting this week at Ooltewah. Brother Fred M. Little is to begin a meeting at Etowah next Lord's day. Brother R. C. White is to hold a meeting at a mission point, to be selected, in June.

My wife's health is now improving and I am back with my work here at Cleveland.

Dinuba, April 26.—Yesterday was another great day with the congregation here. Large audiences morning and evening. I baptized two more in Ring's River in the afternoon. In the evening we commenced to train our young people in the service, and they responded nobly to the work. Our subject was faith. Some beautiful thoughts were presented. Our congregation has grown as none other in the West since our coming here. Among the many reasons for this is: as loyal brethren as you find anywhere, the congregation is at peace and love prevails, and as noble and conservative body of elders and deacons as any church is blessed with in the great work. Above all, every one is willing to learn, but have to be shown by the Book before accepting anything. hear of others that are growing tired of the modern inventions of men, such as union meetings with the sects, adding humanisms to the worship, and receiving with open arms and swallowing everything in a conglomerated dose under the direction of the "In-terchurch World Movement," who speak of returning to the Lord's way. These are times that try men's souls. Let us pray that we will be found as pure gold when the test is over.— E. W. Sewell.

Santa Rosa, April 26.—Brother L. C. Haulman, of Oakland, has just closed a good meeting at Forestville and is now in a little meeting here. Brother Haul-man preaches much to the church members on subjects to build up and strengthen the Christian character. He delves deep into the storehouse of God's eternal truth and brings out the rich, nutritious morsels upon which the Christian may feed and grow. This is good, for the world reads the Christians and not the Bible. Yesterday was the last day of the Forestville meeting, and there was an all-day meeting-three sermons, a lot of good singing, and a basket dinner. We have much of this kind in California. and this also is good-to be much together socially, eat, sing, and play to-gether, and the world will see, if the character be there and the good works also, that there is a reality in the religion of the Christ and that there is much of joy along with the hardships. On April 5 I met with the church at Graton Brother E. Badger, who has preached and labored for the Master many years on this coast and who is now teacher of Bible in the Pacific Christian Academy, preached on "Moses, the Shadow of Christ." One young lady made the good confession and was baptized the same afternoon in Green Valley Creek. This baptism in the creek, together with the moral and spiritual atmosphere of the community, took me back to Tennesseeto the days of my youth, when one seldom heard even a byword or a word of slang and when a curse or swear word was horrible and something at which to shudder. It would be hard to find a community more nearly ideal as a place in which to live and rear a family than we have here at Graton. About two weeks before this, two little girls at Graton made the good confession and were baptized—Ruby Bostic and Helen Pearl Scott. The latter is the daughter of Sister George M. Scott, who was instrumental to a great extent in founding the Pacific Christian Academy. At the morning meeting Brother Barbour announced for the benefit of those interested in the school that he had received a letter from O. W. Gardner stating definitely that we may depend upon him, the Lord willing, to be here not later than July 1, to take the presidency of the Pacific Christian Academy, beginning with the 1920-1921 year's work. The school is fortunate in securing a man so competent and so thoroughly fitted for the work. In a recent letter from Brother Gardner, he write: "About the best way to build up the school, in my mind, would be to start no bigger foundation than we would be able to finish. Make a good, modest, little school. Do thorough work and give the pupils and community something that the State and secular schools cannot or do not give. Make a real reason for our existence. I may be too much of a fogy for your work out there, for I am very strongly opposed to building u) schools and securing teachers that have uppermost the idea of making it popular with the world and worldly members, to the detriment of the spiritual man; in other words, to harping on the head culture first and the heart next. I place the heart first in my régime. If we can get the heart plus the head, so much the better, but by all means the heart first." The above paragraph quoted from Brother Gardner's letter was not written for publication, but I insert it nere that the people may know what are the principles for which the school stands. Nothing could please the directors, faculty, patrons, and friends of the school better than to have just such a man at its head. It is for just such a school that the good people here have worked hard and sacrificed much. Remember California and the Pacific Christian Academy.—Felix G. Owen.

Taft, May 3.—I preached last Lord's day to a few faithful ones in Orlando. I go to Cave, Texas, the first of June, for a meeting of two weeks or longer; the first of July, near Maxey, Texas, for four weeks. I have one other meeting for Texas. I can accept one more meeting for August or September. Address me at Taft, Fla.—G. B. Lambright.

Bradentown, April 29 .--Upon invitation from the church of Christ at this place, I moved here from Alabama to labor in this county in planting the cause of Christ in new fields. We have been here just two weeks, and we are delighted with the prospect before us. The church here is alive and wide-awake. Brother Brumit, a faithful preacher of the gospel, lives here and labors with this church, and I find him to be a man who truly loves the cause. I have preached here twice, once at Cortez, and once at Oneco, where we have a faithful band. I shall begin a meeting in Manatee next Lord's day, to continue as long as the interest demands. There are two or three members of the digressive church here, and the loyal brethren have been receiving inquiries in regard to two of them who have been soliciting funds, stating that they wanted to build a church of Christ in Bradentown. I wish to state that there is a church of Christ here, and they own their own house of worship, and, instead of begging for funds, they are wide-awake to the need of having the gospel sounded out in the regions beyond .- John Haves.

Jackson, April 29.—On Friday, April 16, I left home to return to the work in Mississippi. Tuesday night, Wednesday morning and night I preached in Reform, where we have a small congregation, about ten members, who own their meeting-house—an old schoolhouse. Brother David O. Griffith did the first preaching at this place in 1914. Brother H. D. Jeffcoat came to our services on Wednesday night. The next day he took me in his buggy to his home, and Thursday night, Friday morning and night I preached for the congregation worshiping in Cork Schoolhouse, about six miles south of Reform. This little band consists of about fifteen members and began about 1913, through the efforts of Brother J. W. Swofford, a faithful servant of our Lord, who farms and does what he can for the Master in his own neighborhood, where he is held in high esteem. Saturday Brother Jeffcoat drove with me in his buggy sixteen miles west of Cork to Shady Grove, where I preached Saturday night, Sunday morning and This congregation claims a membership of about twenty-five, including those who used to compose a congregation near by, called "Old Antioch." Brother A. H. Smith, of Maben, seems to have been the pioneer in this work. These three congregations, so far as I could learn, are all have in Choctaw we Twelve miles south of Kosciusko, at Niles, a small inland town, lives one man and three women who have obeyed "first principles" in becoming Christians, but do not meet for worship, and are anxious for some one to do some preaching there. A new mill town at Kitchener, twenty miles southeast in Neshoba County, wants a meeting. We have no members there, but an open door. Notwithstanding the season of year and the rain, the people at each of the three places visited came out to hear gladly, and I am deeply impressed with the need of more workers. Too much cannot be said of Brother H. D. Jeffcoat, who, while young in the work, is a fine song leader, an earnest and faithful exponent of the truth, and is held in good report from within and without.

He is a farmer, and, with the cooperation of his good wife, a daugh-ter of Brother Swofford, is working hard to maintain and strengthen these three congregations, and is going to try mission places close by. Acker-man, the county seat of Choctaw Acker-County, has one brother and his wife in it who are anxious for a tent meeting, which I hope to be able to give them, with Brother Jeffcoat assisting and leading the singing. Our cottage prayer meeting here Tuesday night was very interesting. As soon as the weather conditions justify, I want to hold some tent meetings in Jackson. I will be glad for those who have relatives, friends, or acquaintances in this city, in whom they are interested, to please furnish me their names and addresses, that I may visit them. Address me at 352 East Fortification Street, Jackson, Miss .- M. C. Cayce.

For more than Forty Years Cotton Growers have known that POTASH PAYS

More than 11,651,200 Tons of Potash Salts had been imported and used in the United States in the 20 years previous to January, 1915, when shipments ceased. Of this 6,460,700 Tons consisted of which the cotton grower knew was both a plant tood and a preventive of blight and rust, — with it came also 1,312,400 Tons of which has the same effect on Cotton, but which was used mainly in mixed fertilizers.

KAINIT

Shipments of both Kainit and Manure Salt have been resumed but the shortage of coal and cars and high freight rates make it more desirable to ship Manure Salt, which contains 20 per cent of actual Potash, instead of Kainit, which contains less than 13 per cent actual Potash.

MANURE SALT can be used as a side dressing on Cotton in just the same way as Kainit and will give the same results. Where you used 100 pounds of Kainit, you need to use but 62 pounds of Manure Salt, or 100 pounds of Manure Salt go as far as 161 pounds of Kainit.

MANURE SALT has been coming forward in considerable amounts and cotton growers, who cannot secure Kainit, should make an effort to get Manure Salt for side dressing to aid in making a big cotton crop.

Muriate of Potash

50 per cent actual Potash, has been coming forward also,—100 pounds of Muriate are equivalent to 400 pounds of Kainit or 250 pounds of Manure Salt.

These are the three

Standard GERMAN Potash Salts

that were always used in making cotton fertilizers and have been used for all these years with great profit and without any damage to the crop.

The supply is not at present as large as in former years, but there is enough to greatly increase the Cotton Crop if you insist on your dealer making the necessary effort to get it for you.

"Baptists vs. Campbellites." No. 18.
BY M. S. MASON.

We now resume the discussion of the church mode of government. Mr. Bandy makes the statement that the church chooses its own officers. That is true; but by a direct vote by which the majority decides, I deny. He cites Acts 1, where Matthias was chosen to take the place of Judas. He identifies the casting of lots and voting. In other words, they just had a common old election. Now, they prayed there. If it was a democratic affair, the majority would determine the choice; but here they asked the Lord to do it. They cast their lots, but the Lord made the choice of what the lot should indicate. Men's ballots express their own choice. No democracy here. Then there is no situation in the church today for which this could be used as a precedent. He also cites Acts 15: 22 and Acts 6: 5, emphasizing the whole church, neither of which cases establish a democratic principle. If it did, there is indicated a unanimous vote, and such is very extraordinary in democracies.

To further establish his church "autocracy," he says the ministry is also made subject to the church, quoting 1 Pet. 5: 3; Matt. 20: 25-28. Of course, the ministers are under the church, which exercises its power through its elders or rulers; but Peter in the passage mentioned is talking to elders, not preachers. Note that in running away from Rome he has gone clear past Jerusalem! He has the church over the elders instead of the elders over the church. Of course, the elders are not to be tyrants, but still they are to rule.

He says the church tenders the communion, which is so-through the proper officers. Then he says the church holds the commission, which is true to a certain extent. The church supports her missionaries in carrying out the commission: but, of course, what Mr. Bandy wants to establish is that the church must send out all men, they must report every gospel effort to her, and they cannot baptize without the church passing on the candidates. This is not so. What church sent Ananias and voted on Paul before his baptism? The same with Philip in his work in Samaria and with the eu-When Aquila and Priscilla taught Apollos more perfectly, and, of course, dealt directly with the commission, what church was especially behind this proposition?

He says the church must guard her membership. That is so. But if a man obeys the gospel, no vote can "blackball" him; and if he does not, unanimity could never admit him. Jesus "shutteth, and no man openeth;" and "openeth, and no man shutteth." When Baptists admit a member and he falls, then, to save their apostasy doctrine, they say he "never was saved." Then, after all their voting precaution, they got a bad fish on the string. So they miss it on some, And if they miss it on some, why not, possibly, on all, and so what's the use?

Now, after all his efforts, which from the outset were to prove nothing more or less than voting on candidates for membership in the church, he utterly failed, and the dispensation of right-cousness remains a kingdom, governed by His laws under overseers, called "elders," who rule with the knowledge of the consensus of opinion of details of expediency, but who, for the sake of the minority, may withdraw all action at certain times and under certain circumstances.

He says, on page 31, no church can be a scriptural church without scriptural baptism. Here he is correct. He further says that all denominations consider Bantist bantism scriptural. This is not so. If he refers to us as a "denomination," we say the Baptists are right in "mode," but as wrong as any other heretic on design. He further says if he should decide to leave the Baptist Church and come into another, he would be accepted into full fellowship without question. If all were like me, he certainly would not he accepted. His earnest contention for Baptist doctrine shows he is a true Baptist, and true Baptists are not Christians. So he would have to become a Christian if I fellowshiped him.

He says it requires four things for valid baptism—(1) a proper administrator, (2) a proper subject, (3) a proper act, (4) a proper design.

A full discussion of these principles will be embraced in the next article. May the Lord bless us in charitably and studiously considering these great religious problems, that we may all be brought to the unity of the faith.

The Song Service.

BY L, L, BRIGANCE,

Brother J. D. Patton, of Bessemer, Ala., has just closed a twenty-days' session of his famous music school in Freed-Hardeman College, Henderson, Tenn. There were more than a hundred pupils enrolled in his classes, several of whom took harmony in addition to rudiments and sight singing. The interest that he created and the progress made by the school were very satisfactory.

Brother Patton is not an old man, probably fifty, but he is said to have taught more music schools than any man living or dead. He has been engaged in the work constantly for thirty years or more. He is the author of six hymn books and associate author of

The Fiftieth Anniversary

Just fifty years ago this witter Dr. Pierce gave to the world his famous "Favorite Prescription" for the distressing weaknesses and complaints of women. For many years he had been in the active practice of medicine and his specialty was the diseases of women. Later he desired to give this to the public, and he received a trade-mark protection from the United States patent office for this medicine which is an herbal, "temperance" prescription with all the ingredients printed on the bottle wrapper. In his every day practice in the early days he also used a tonic and alterative for the blood, which was so universally beneficial that he determined to place this medicine in the drug stores of the United States, where it could be readily procured by the public. This he called his "Golden Medical Discovery," which he had prescribed many years for the stomach, liver and blood. Both these medicines met with instant success, and during the past half century have sold in greater quantities than any other proprietary medicines. Neither of Dr. Pierce's medicines contains alcohol and both are herbal extracts of native medicinal plants. For the past fifty years forty-eight million bottles have been used by the American public, and they are today the standard tonics for men and women. They are now put up in tablet as well as liquid form, and sold by every druggist in the land. A trial package can be obtained by sending 10 cents to Dr. Pierce's Invalids' Hotel in Buffalo, N. Y. He is known throughout the South as one of the greatest teachers and writers of vocal music. The school here is trying to arrange for his return next year for another session, but his time is engaged so far ahead that it is rather difficult to secure his services. Brother Patton is a member of the West End church of Christ, Birmingham, Ala. There not being a church that worships "as it is written" in Bessemer, he and his family attend the "digressives," but has come out come to know him better and use him more. We ought to be proud that we have a brother of his ability and standing in the musical world, and the churches of Christ ought to keep him busy all the time. He tells me that practically all of his time is taken by the denominations. This ought not to be so. Of all people who should emphasize, teach, and practice vocal music, we are the ones. Every church ought to have a good singing school taught in its midst every year. Brother Patton greatly prefers to labor among his brethren, not only "for the good he may be able to do them, but for the good it would do him spiritually," and because the associations would be so much more pleasant. So I suggest that the churches of Christ use our brother, instead of letting the denominations get the advantage of his great talents and long experience. You will make no mistake to engage him. There is not a doubt about his ability.

How many Christians are commonly spoken of with a "but?" "She is a real Christian woman, but she is a terrible talker." "That is a good sort of man, but he can drive a very hard bargain." Another is a "very worthy man, but he has such a bad temper." What do these "buts" arise from? From allowing ourselves to think lightly of little things; and so we do not walk circumspectly or accurately; and thus we bring disgrace, so far as it is possible to bring disgrace, upon God and his service.-W. Notes From West Tennessee.

BY JOHN R. WILLIAMS.

The constant rains and bad roads have been a great hindrance to the rural preachers as well as to others.

Last week I went to Rehoboth and preached a few nights. The congregation seems to be in good condition. zealous in good works. Brother Whitaker is preaching there once a month, and all seem delighted with his work. I have never met Brother Whitaker; but if the brethren at Rehoboth are not deceived, he is a good man and a good preacher.

This reminds me of late I have read in the Gospel Advocate the many articles on "preachers," "preachers' pay," the "scarcity of preachers," etc.; and as I have been trying to preach for about thirty-five years, I believe I know a few things connected with a preacher's life and work. In many respects preachers are like other people after all, they are human beings. If we make an examination of the membership of a local congregation, we find about four classes of members-retired, tired, tiresome, and tireless. So preachers can be divided into at least four classes-first, second, third, and fourth. We find more preachers in the second, third, and fourth classes than we do in the first. First-class preachers are men that are well educatedof strong mind, and it well trained; men not only well educated, but men of deep piety, whose lives are above reproach. Such men are always in demand, always busy, and have no time to engage in other pursuits or callings. Paul says: "No soldier on service entangleth himself in the affairs of this life; that he may please him who enrolled him as a soldier." (2 Tim. 2: 4.) The preacher should be very careful in selecting something to do to supplement his living. If he sells goods, some one will accuse him of profiteering or cheating in weights or measures. So it is in every calling in which the preacher has to deal with the public. The accusation may be false, but it lessens the influence of that man as a preacher. A preacher, to succeed, should have just as little dealing with the world as possible in trade and traffic. If he succeeds, he must have the confidence of the world, as well as the church; for when the world loses confidence in the preacher, he had better quit until he can restore lost confidence. A third or fourth-class preacher should own a little home, a few acres of land upon which he can raise meat and bread, fruits, vegetables, chickens, etc. It is good for him to work. If a preacher is too lazy to work, the brethren are doing a great wrong in supporting him. When in his own little home raising a few things to supplement his living, he is not "entangled with the things of this life" to his own injury and hurt to the church. I cannot preach like Elam, Lipscomb, Srygley, Smith, Larimore, Freed, Hardeman, etc. Then why should I complain if not supported as well as these first-class preachers? Possibly here is the trouble with some of as little fellows: we are raising a howl because we are not supported well enough to keep us from a little manual labor

I heard of one preacher who said: "It lowers the dignity of the pulpit for a preacher to don a suit of overalls and work a garden." When my boys were growing up, we always rented some land, made our meat and bread, and on what I was paid for my preaching, added to what we raised, we lived and still live. While "I am not ashamed of the gospel," I am not ashamed to get out and work; but of one thing I would be ashamed-to publish to the world that I am a beggar. The dignity of the pulpit is not lowered by honest toil, but often it is lowered by dishonest dealing, and more often by forcing ourselves into a class of preachers where we do not belong, and not content to live and labor in the sphere of our capacity. However, my life as a preacher has been spent where but few preachers would goeast and west of Reelfoot Lake-and my knowledge of conditions so limited that, perhaps, I am not in condition to write on the subject of "preachers," etc. I have no complaint to make against my brethren; they have paid me for what I have done, and, perhaps, more than I was worth to them.

The Work of the Lord in St. Louis. BY LOTTIE JOHNSON

May 1 be allowed to add some to the much that has been said about this work, hoping to interest some who have not noticed the work here? 1 know the brethren in many of the cities are advancing the work in their own and other cities. Let me call the attention of the brethren everywhere to how few loyal brethren there are in the State of Missouri, to say nothing of the amazingly few in St. Louis. There are not as many in the whole State, I dare say, as there are, probably, in one congregation in Nashville, Tenn. I would so much like to reach out and find those who have never taken notice of us. Will you not become interested enough to investigate our needs and cooperate with us in getting a house in this big city where the people can be taught the gospel? Just think, only a few of us meeting in an out-of-the-way hall, not able to rent a place desirable! We do so much wish to build on our lot and be able to get a godly, competent man over the work. There are a few scattered brethren out in different parts of the city, too far to come to meet with us. They are anxious that we put a man in the field, so they may have his services; but we are unable to think of putting a man here and trying to incréase our building fund, too. We do not have a man among us who can devote any time to the work outside of meeting on Lord's days and contributing. We have the use of our hall only two hours on Lord's days. Not much can be done in so short a time. Are there not congregations who can give us one Lord's-days contribution? Are there not brethren or sisters of means who would like to investigate conditions and needs in this city? Would you not like to cooperate and sacrifice with us until this work is an assured fact? Pray for us, work with us, and let me hear from any and all who may be Interested. My address is 2842 Lafayette Avenue, St. Louis, Mo.

You Do More Work,

You are more ambitious and you get more enjoyment out of everything when your blood is in good condition. Impurities in the blood have a very depressing effect on the system, causing weakness, laziness, nervousness and sickness.

GROVE'S TASTELESS CHII TONIC restores Energy and Vitality by Purifying and Enriching the Blood. When you feel its strengthening, invigorating effect, see how it brings color to the cheeks and how it improves the appetite, you will then appreciate its true tonic value.

GROVE'S TASTELESS CHIII TONIC is not a patent medicine, it is simply IRON and QUININE suspended in Syrup. So pleasant even children like it. The blood needs Quinine to Purify it and IRON to Enrich it. These reliable tonic properties never fail to drive out impurities in the blood.

The Strength-Creating Power of GROVE'S TASTELESS Chill TONIC has made it the favorite tonic in thousands of homes. More than thirty-five years ago, folks would ride a long distance to get GROVE'S TASTELESS Chill TONIC when a member of their family had Malaria or needed a body-building, strength-giving tonic. The formula is just the same today, and you can get it from any drug store, 60c per bottle.

A HOME CURE GIVEN BY ONE WHO HAD IT

In the spring of 1893 I was attacked by Muscular and Inflammatory Rheumatism. I suffered as only those who have it know, for over three years. I tried remedy after remedy and dooter after doctor, but such relief as I received was only temporary. Finally I found a remedy that cured me completely, and it has never returned. I have given it to a number who were terribly afflicted, and even bedridden with Rheumatism, and it effected a cure in every case.

I want every sufferer from any form of rheumatic trouble to try this marvelous healing power. Don't send a cent; simply mall your name and address, and I will send it free to try. After you have used if and it has proven liself to be that long-looked for means of curing your Rheumatism, you may send the price of it, one dollar; but, understand, I do not want your money unless you are perfectly satisfied to send it, Isn't that fair? Why suffer any longer, when positive relief is thus offered you free? Don't delay, Writs to-day.

FIELD REPORTS

Oklahoma.

Muskogee, May 3.-Yesterday was a great day for the East Okmulgee Avenue Church. I preached to a large and attentive audience at each service. The church was made to rejoice at the close of the morning sermon when five influential, loyal Christians placed their membership with the congregation, and one fine young lady made the "good confession" and asked to obey her Lord in baptism. The church here has gone through many fiery trials in the past, but the dark night of trouble seems to be over and the bright day of peace and harmony at hand. Nineteen precious souls have been added to our membership since January 1. I have never labored with a more faithful band of brethren than I have never labored with we have here, and practically all our members are working as never before. Brother Hays held a splendid meeting for us last month. By the help of God, we hope to accomplish much for the cause of Christ in this city.-W. L. Oliphant.

Comanche, April 29 .- I had hoped to be much recovered from my sickness by this time, but I find that I am still suffering from serious nervousness and auto-intoxication (so the doctors diagnose my troubles), and I fear that I will not recover until I visit some watering place and take a treatment. I might have been able to do this before now had not some brethren had so much to say against appeals that I was prevented from receiving enough financial assistance to enable me to do I have received only enough to enable me to live at home without suffering until the present time; and while I have done all that I was able, yet I have had no income except what has been sent to me, Perhaps those brethren who "knocked" on me, and who admit that they are in good health themselves and well cared for, too, did not intend to injure me in any way, or others in my unfortunate condition; nevertheless, their knocking had that effect, and was very unfortunate and inopportune, at least, for me. However, I shall not complain, for I am still sure that the Lord and his faithful children will not forget those whose misfortunes sometimes bring them to the necessity of asking for assistance. "Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ." Again I thank those who have sent to my assistance. The Lord will re-ward them. "Blessed be the name of the Lord."—U. G. Wilkinson.

Tennessee.

Nashville, May 4 .- After preaching two nights at Dugger, Ind., I went to Paxton, where I met a few of the members of the congregation. Saturday night, Sunday, and Sunday night being the regular appointment of Brother Wiley Mathis, no appointment had been circulated for me; so I went out to Berea, near Sullivan. I did a good deal of work there some years I was well pleased with the growth in knowledge and spiritual development that I found there. preached three sermons at that point. For over two years, besides doing the work they are doing at home, they have been sending about six dollars per month, or about seventy-two dollars per year, to help hold up Brother Herbert, our French brother, who is laboring so ably in Louisiana. I next came to Nashville, and have passed a pleasant forenoon in the office of the Gospel Advocate. I am now going among several congregations in Arkansas, Missouri, and perhaps Texas. I expect to get mail at Paragould, Ark., for ten days, as I work among congregations in that field .- Andrew Perry."

Fort Worth, May 3.-Home again! How good It is to be here! And such a welcome I never got anywhere else in all my life. I find a fine interest, and the work has grown all the time since I left. since I left. I preached to large erowds yesterday and last night. We will at once begin to plan for the summer revival and mission work. I notice from evidence in hand that Brother Wilkinson is worse again, not getting able to work at all, and will not for months yet. I learn that some of the things said lately through the papers about sick preachers, how they should not let any one know they are sick and how they ought not to ask for help, has cut down the support of Brother Wilkinson, and I just wonder if we will let him and his good wife suffer. They have no way on earth to get help, only through the brethren. Let us help them; let us send to their relief. Help every good cause—that is right; but help every one—and Brother Wilkinson is one of the worthy ones, and his cause is just. There are many poor and worthy ones who need help; so let us be glad that there are chances to develop our souls in loving service to each other.-Tice Elkins.

Most Effective and Economical.

An expert pharmacist says that the best treatment he knows of for those whose blood is poor, nerves are weak, livers torpid, or whose systems are generally run down, is: Hood's Sarsaparilla before eating. Peptiron after eating, and Hood's Pills as necessary.

The ingredients of these medicines are indicated, he says, in most cases of blood impurities, nervousness, paleness, constipation, and are prescribed every day by physicians who ha---ag known their efficacy. They are low up for physicians in preparations whose formulas are similar to those of Hood's Sarsaparilla, Peptiron, and Hood's Pills; but these already prepared medicines so combine them as to have superlative merit and to be the most effective and economical preparations in which to take them.

Hood's Sarsaparilla, Peptiron, and Hood's Pills are products of the C. L. Hood Company, Lowell, Mass., and form their triple combination treatment.

THE HISTORY OF TRADE-UNIONISM.

BY A. B. LIPSCOMB.

It is important to note the distinction between employees and the employee class. The employee of medieval times was satisfied, for there was ever the prospect of advancement and change of condition. There was, as we have already stated, no demand for organization, except upon purely social grounds. But under division of labor the small producer was no longer able to compete with the large manufacturer. Thus it happened that many who were formerly owners of their own shops became employees of the larger establishment. Thousands have been forced into the factories through sheer force of circumstances. Through no plan or will of their own they have left the independent class and now belong to the laboring class. Division of labor has radically affected the spirit of the worker. It has destroyed to a great extent the pride of workmanship. Anything that a man owns or makes brings a feeling of satisfaction not otherwise obtained. Even when working for another man, there is satisfaction to the worker in knowing that he is responsible for the job from start to finish. Take, for example, the making of a shoe where one worker is responsible for its completion. If it is a good shoe, he made it and is proud of the accomplishment. But under division of labor no such feeling of pride is possible. With the advantage of intricate and highly specialized machinery, it is no longer customary for one man to make a shoe. A hundred hands are in the process. Large-scale production has destroyed the element of variety, so far as the individual worker is concerned. The tendency is for the employee to lose interest in his work and to throw down his tools the very minute the whistle blows. Let it be noted, too, that work in large-scale production has ceased to be social. There may be a thousand people in the factory, but, with the whirr of machinery and the attention demanded, there is no time for social conversation. Under the old régime the home was preëminently the workshop. But division of labor has abolished the home as a producer. Furthermore, it has changed the type of the workman's home. It has broken up the suburban home with its ample ground and created a factory district where but few can boast of a garden.

From the viewpoint of the employee, the conditions under the new order of things are indeed depressing. He is face to face with five serious problems, which are briefly summarized as follows:

- 1. Unemployment. He may be thrown out of employment at any time. Under the old regime this would not have been serious, because he had something in reserve.
- 2. Sickness. In the normal course of events, he knows this eventuality is a foregone conclusion.
- 3. Accident. Thousands have been injured in the factories. He may be the next unfortunate victim.
- 4. Old age. There was the prospect under the old regime of retiring from hard labor and working in the garden, or the help of his children; but under the new order there is no place for the old man.
- 5. Death. This, he feels, is inevitable. He is constantly depressed with the thought, "What shall become of my family?

The circumstances are not mitigated when we pointedly inquire: Why doesn't he save from his wages and lay by for a rainy day? We must not forget that he has come into a new social order as well as a new economic order. His wife and children are judged by the money they spend, by the house they live in, by the clothes they wear. It is the constant effort to keep up appearance that keeps him poor. The claims of his own society, poor as it is by comparison, are well-nigh irresistible. He must have distinction at any Having outlined the workings of the Industrial Revolution and having considered particularly the drastic changes wrought by machinery and division of labor, we are prepared to understand the why and wherefore of trade-unionism. Its growth may be explained as the logical result of widespread discontent. The workers feel that they are to live and die in the employee class. They can see no way out. Since there is no way out, the best step, as they see it, is the amelioration of their conditions. Labor organization is the best means toward this end, and the strike is the most effective weapon.

Before concluding, let us note briefly a few of the fallacies and misrepresentations of economic conditions that are held by the unions. The right of labor to organize is not questioned, but the maintenance of certain impractical beliefs is not so readily excused. In fairness, it should be stated, however, that these fallacies are not peculiar to labor organizations.

1. Great production. The laboring classes maintain that there has been an enormous increase in wealth in proportion to population. This is not to be denied. But laboring men overlook the important fact that machinery and scientific methods have been chiefly responsible for the increase in productive power. Again, they fail to distinguish between wealth and welfare. It is frequently true that welfare decreases as wealth increases. Welfare has reference to the amount of consumable goods, while wealth has reference to the amount of value. Value is usually a sign of scarcity rather than plenty. There is a vital difference between rarity and scarcity.

2. The law of supply and demand will regulate production. The unions fall to appreciate the fact that there is a social law that blocks the economic law. The attraction of the crowd in the cities will more than counteract the attraction of larger profits in agricultural pursuits. Every worker lost to the country aggravates the case.

3. The doctrine of the fair price. Labor unions contend that every manufacturer and employer should sell goods at a fair price and that every laborer should receive decent wages. Ethically this seems correct. But sometimes there is a wide variance between ethics and economics. This contention is both unsound and dangerous. It is unpractical to fix a "fair price." One factory through efficient methods may produce more than another. We cannot afford to place a premium on laziness or inefficiency. It is for the best interests of society and civilization for the strong and efficient worker to be recognized. The matter of "decent wages" must be determined by what the worker actually produces and not by the fixing of prices.

All fair-minded men will agree that the interests of the laboring class must be protected and improved wherever necessary, but the work must proceed along safe and conservative lines. Whatever else may be suggested, one thing becomes increasingly evident: strikes must be abolished. We must find some better way.

Christianity, a Spiritual and Physical Blend.
BY JOHN B. WEATHERS.

Christianity is the religion of Christians. A Christian is one who, from his own choice, honors and truly obeys the authority and mandate of Christ, the Son of God. The Christian religion comprises the divinely required activities of the body, mind, and spirit of morally responsible human beings. Christianity is, in character, an embodiment of spiritual and physical force. The spirit occupies a physical casket, the body of man, which is the vehicle and servant of the spirit. Religion is an institution of the world; and to be divinely effective, it must operate through the physical agency of man. Even the manifestations of God, commonly known as miracles, have always been made manifest through the physical. The Spirit of God has been committed to us through nature and revelation, and it is the duty of man to properly apply it. Without man, religion would be unnecessary.

Since Christianity rests upon a basis of mutual cooperation of the spiritual and the physical elements of man, it is important that we, as Christians, should provide for the free and full cooperation of these essential elements of religion. I think that we of the church of Christ agree that God has fully provided for us everything needed on the spiritual side. But the spiritual alone would, under the divine plan, be impotent. God's will is hidden away in his written word, and must remain dormant and inoperative unless discovered, revealed, and properly applied by man. Man has much to do-indeed, may I not say that man, now, has practically all to do in carrying into full effect God's perfected plan of salvation? He must think, study, seek, teach, preach, pray, go, come, help, give, and, in fact, be ever active in this, the most vitally important work of human existence.

The apostle Paul admonishes: "For whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved. How then shall they call on him in whom they have not believed? and how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? and how shall they bear without a preacher? and how shall they preach except they be sent? as it is written, How beautiful are the feet of them that preach the gospel, and bring glad tidings of good things!" (Rom. 10: 13-15.)

The foregoing thoughts bring me to a consideration of the Christian duty in providing substantial support for the church. God could, of course, do it all, but he has willed otherwise. We must do our part or be lost. We have the word and the light of the gospel. We have competent, earnest preachers and the whole world as a field of operation. Pleading calls for the truth and salvation fill our ears, but the lack of adequate financial support weakens our efforts and blights our hopes and aspirations. It is the weakest element in our efforts. Our payments into the treasury of the Lord are inadequate and, I believe, far below the divine requirement. Our religious shibboleth, "as God has prospered," as gathered from Paul's appeal (1 Cor. 16: 2) for a special gift to meet a special temporary emergency, is not sufficient. It is too indefinite, too vague. It does not meet, nor do I believe that it was intended to meet, the necessities and divine requirement of the general and continuous support of the church.

It is not unreasonable for us to think that, in the purposes of God, Christianity is at least as important in his scheme as was Judaism. And from what Jesus said in his Sermon on the Mount (Matt. 5: 17, 18), and what Paul said earlier in his first letter to the Corinthians (1 Cor. 9: 13, 14), I conscientiously believe that we in this, the new covenant, are divinely required to pay into the Lord's treasury at least one-tenth of our financial income. Jesus said in the Sermon on the Mount: "Think not that I am come to destroy the law, or the prophets: I am not come to destroy, but to fulfill. For verily I say unto you, Till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled." Why was this strong assurance from Jesus necessary or appropriate, If the Son of God knew that every provision of the Mosaic law would be abrogated in a few months? Did the need of substantial or material support of God's work of redemption cease at the time of the crucifixion? If so, of what thing in Christianity was the Mosaie tithe a type? Or, more briefly, what is the antitype of the tithe? If the law was our "schoolmaster," what lesson has come to us from the Jewish tithe?

Considering the extent of the territory of Christendom as compared to that of Judaism, the number and variety of people, and numerous other circumstances of the two dispensations, is it not reasonable to think that the church did divinely receive at least as generous a financial provision as did the limited tabernacle of Moses? Some of us conscientiously believe that it did. Others of our brethren, however, shy at the word "tithe" because of its association with the patriarchs and the Jews of former dispensations. But some of these cautious brethren state that they have given one-tenth or more for years to the cause of Christ. This is indeed commendable and "worthy of all acceptation." If all would do likewise, the sun of rightcousness would come out of eclipse and quickly gladden the sorrowing heart of the world. It might be wise to change the divine standard of assessment from the "tithe" to the tenth.

It hardly seems possible that divinity, in providing the consummating "perfect law of liberty" for man, would have overlooked a provision so vital to the work of the church. Indeed, I truly believe that this matter was duly provided for in Paul's first letter to the congregation at Corinth, which reads: "Do ye not know that they which minister about holy things live of the things of the temple? and they which wait at the altar are partakers with the altar? Even so hath the Lord ordained that they who preach the gospel should live of the gospel." (1 Cor. 9: 13, 14.) Here, I think, we have the reënactment by the Holy Spirit of the Lord's standard of assessment. Considering Paul's theme in this ninth chapter and his enunciation, in juxtaposition, of the divine provision for the material support of the Lord's special work in the old as well as in the new dispensation. I feel that we are fully justified in placing this interpretation upon verse 14, which clearly declares: "Even so hath the Lord ordained that they who preach the gospel should live of the gospel." There was to be no change in this divine requirement.

This interpretation is confirmed by no less a light in the Christian world than the lamented David Lipscomb, who says on page 92 of his volume of "Queries and Answers," after quoting said thirteenth and fourteenth verses: "Here it seems to me the order of the Jews is reasserted and the true and proper way is for each Christian, as he is able, to contribute to the treasury of the Lord, and, as the church is able, out of these offerings to sustain those who give themselves to the service of the Lord." In the matter of adherence to gospel truth, I am what the liberals would call a "stickler. But, since it is not transgressive for us to faithfully pay into the Lord's treasury one-tenth or more of our financial incomes, and since it appears to be so vitally necessary for the welfare of the church, I can see no good reason why our pulpit and press should not boldly urge this plea, which is quietly, but slowly, taking root in the consciences of many of our loyal brethren.

We provide liberally for carnal warfare, and almost recklessly contribute to the covert calls of the Red Cross; then why should we hesitate and look with indifference upon the spiritual struggle of our Elder Brother, split our pennies, and turn a deaf ear to the plea that comes from the great White Cross of eternity? The Lord's treasury is lean; we permit it to be so. But we know full well that a liberal hand and full treasury of the Lord would gladden the hearts of the faithful; send the light of the gospel into every dark corner of the earth; checkmate the inroads of the god of this world; provide comfortable places of worship for each congregation of the faithful; furnish each Christian home, not only with a Bible, but also with the necessary current literature of the church; and meet every other possible necessity of God's people. Unlike the occasional spasmodic appeal for millions that ever and anon assail the beleaguered ear of the world, the ceaseless mannalike dropping of the modest. God-ordained Christian tenth would replenish and keep full God's supplemental treasury. This, I feel, could be done without goading a single Christian conscience. Christianity is a vital business in which the spirituality of heaven and the consecrated physical force of humanity are full partners.

Hobbies.

BY L. D. PERKINS.

The word "hobby" is familiar to most members of the church of Christ. I am not going to define what it is according to Webster, but as I see it in everyday life. In brief, I wish to say that it is a horse, and it is one broke to ride, is blind, and is a race horse.

I want to give some examples, brethren, and see if you do not agree with me; and you will be surprised at the number that can be given.

1. I know a man who teaches that if the loaf on the communion table is broken, save by each member as it is passed, it is almost equal to committing the unpardonable

- sin. Of course, the word of God is silent whether the brother who serves at the table shall break it into two or a dozen pieces; he is left to do as he pleases. But the brother assumes the idea that it must not be broken, and he makes a hobby out of it, and rides it even if it separates him from the rest of his good brethren.
- 2. I knew a brother who contended that the loaf must be broken into two pieces before you give thanks, and reasoned if this was not done it could not be truthfully said that It represented the broken body of Christ. This was a hobbyhorse upon which he rode. But the word of God is silent as to whether it should be broken or not. It is left to the brother who serves.
- 3. I know a brother who teaches that if one commit a sin during the week, it is impossible to get the sin forgiven until he partakes of the fruit of the vine. This hobby he rides. The word of God says: "If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." (John 1: 9.) This man rides his horse, regardless of what the word of God teaches. The scripture I have quoted does not say anything about waiting until you partake of the fruit of the vine.
- 4. I know a brother who teaches and believes that it is almost committing the unpardonable sin if the fruit of the vine be put in more than one container while it is being served. Christ said of the fruit of the vine, "Take this, and divide it among yourselves," and left it to each congregation of disciples on earth to do as they please about dividing it. If the Lord had said that all must drink out of one and the same container, then that would have fixed it. It could not have been said that it was a hobby, for we all should divide it that way.
- 5. I know good brethren who teach that when we come together upon the first day of the week to worship we must not have more than one class in the Bible study; and they ride this hobby to the exclusion of many good brethren who are not willing to be bound down to such a method. The word of God is silent as to how many classes we shall have, leaving it to the better judgment of the church.
- 6. I know brethren who teach that it is altogether equal to the unpardonable sin for a brother to write out his views on the teaching of the Scriptures and for this to be read to the classes when he is absent. The word of God is silent as to whether the one who teaches may be present or absent. This hobby is based upon the claim that to allow one to teach when he is not present, as is the case in the literature sent out by the McQuiddy Printing Company, is not a systematic study of the Bible. The truth is, the Bible is silent as to a systematic study of the Bible, and the same preachers who contend for this hobby do not teach in what they term a "systematic study of the Bible" when they hold meetings.
- 7. I know brethren who teach that it is wrong for a sister to teach a class in the regular Bible study, and they cling to this to the end of making a hobby out of it, when the truth of the matter is, the Bible is as silent as the grave on the subject and the matter is left to the better judgment of the leaders of the church as to her teaching a class. She may or she may not. If she is better qualified, then let her teach.
- 8. I know brethren who teach that when the whole church is assembled together a sister may make a public speech to the church. They contend that she may exercise her ability in the worship, and I presume that Brother F. B. Srygley will agree with me that she has the ability to make a speech. But the word of God says: "Let your women keep silence in the churches: for it is not permitted unto them to speak; but they are commanded to be under obedience, as also saith the law." (1 Cor. 14: 34.) "To speak" in this quotation means to make a public speech to the entire congregation, and has no reference to a sister singing or teaching a class. This hobbyhorse has been ridden to the dividing of two congregations in California, and the Lord only knows how many more.

9. For brethren to buy a piece of property, erect a building, and invite children and young men and young women to come and attend school in this building, and in connection with our regular branches of study to teach the word of God as Christ and the apostles taught it—this is more than the unpardonable sin, notwithstanding the fact that Paul set this very example when he taught in the school of Tyrannus. If a certain leader had been appointed as president of a certain school, the probability is, there would have been no opposition to such schools.

10. It is just and right to immerse a penitent believer into Christ, provided you can find a natural pool of water sufficiently deep in which to do the immersing; but if brethren arrange a pool of water, as is sometimes done by the use of a baptistery, this would be a greater sin than to neglect to give as we are prospered. To hear one of this kind of hobby riders, one would think that the river Jordan ran right through Jerusalem and that the three thousand were baptized in the river on the day of Pentecost in place of a baptistery. I heard one of this kind say one day he would go one hundred miles to have his granddaughters baptized in a running stream, rather than to have them baptized in a baptistery. He ought to have given two thousand dollars per year to the church, and I doubt if he gave fifty.

11. In taking up the collection, no hat must be passed, but a song must be sung, and each one who cares to give must go forward and lay his gift on a table. To cling to this practice to the exclusion of any other method makes it a hobby. You may pass a basket, go up and lay it on a table, or put it into a box at the door, or any other way: but if you single out any way and contend for it above the others, it is a hobby. I heard Brother Larimore say that at 2 place where the church was bothered with this one the important thing was whether the buffalo was up or down on the nickel they gave.

12. At the time the penitent believer is baptized he must understand that baptism is for the remission of sins. No one who has anything like a complete knowledge of the word of God will deny that it teaches this to be a truth, but to single this one truth out from the rest and ride it is the worst kind of a hobby. The word of God teaches that we are justified by faith, that the heart is purified by faith, that we are sanctified by faith, and that we walk by faith; but if one single out any of these truths and contend that the penitent believer's faith is void unless he understands it at the time he believes, it would be a hobby. Just so in regard to baptism.

13. Unless we partake of the Lord's Supper at night, we have committed a great sin, and we just won't partake of it unless it is served at night. The people at Troas met during the day to partake of it, and it would seem to me that the day was the time rather than the night; but some men, and good men at that, must ride a hobby.

14. There are those who teach that we must observe the order of worship as indicated in Acts 2: 42 or we will all be lost. First, the teaching; second, the fellowship; third, the breaking of bread; and fourth, the prayers. There is no place for song service, save at the beginning. No song must be sung at the close of the sermon, none at the close of the worship. This is a hobby, and one that has been ridden considerably.

15. We must partake of the Lord's Supper only once a year. The man I knew who rode this hobby is dead, and I hope the horse died also.

The great trouble with these hobbies and others that might be mentioned is, the church has had to carry the horses and the riders. I trust and pray that the horses may die with the riders; and may the Lord deliver us from them in the future, so that the church may go forward to victory.

Deeds to Be Commended.

BY W. S. LONG.

There are so many noble and good deeds that Christians can do to build up the church. Jude says: "Building up yourselves on your most holy faith, praying in the Holy Spirit, keep yourselves in the love of God. Some commendable deeds have just come under my observation which I desire to mention for the encouragement of others.

A few weeks ago a young lady from near Lewisburg. Tenn., came to Washington to accept a position with the government. The church at Farmington, her home congregation, wrote a letter at once to the church here, giving her name and street address and commending her to our watch care. Last week a young man from near Dyer, Tenn., came here to serve the government, and his mother found the address of the place of worship, clipped it from the Gospel Advocate, and sent it to him. The result was that he was at the place of worship bright and early last Lord's day. Not long ago a sister saw the appeal that was being made to build a house of worship in Washington. She went among her associates and raised one dollar from each and sent sixty-six dollars to encourage the work.

Let me suggest that some one get the correct address of all the churches in the cities in the United States and publish them in the leading Christian papers for a few times, at least, and have them put in tract form. This is needed, and would help many persons to find the house of worship when they reach a city. Thousands of church members sit idly by with folded hands and find fault with the workers, when they ought to be busy doing good. Let this be your daily motto: "As we have therefore opportunity, let us do good to all men, especially unto them who are of the household of faith."

Speculation Condemned.

Dallas, Texas, 127 Pembroke Avenue, April 12, 1920.— J. C. McQuiddy, Nashville, Tenn.—Dear Brother McQuiddy: Please pardon me for intruding upon your time, for I know you are a very, very busy man and have no time to listen to me, but I feel that I must write you this letter. When you have read this letter, you may dispose of it as you wish. My mind will be unloaded and you burdened.

What I want to say is this: It appears to me that some few brethren (very few in Texas) are inclined to misstate your attitude upon the teaching of unfulfilled prophecies. or upon the prophecies of the Bible. I have heard it said that you, Brother Kurfees, and others teach that we should not teach the prophecies, etc. I have made the following defense of the position of the Gospel Advocate: No member of the Gospel Advocate staff, not even Brother David Lipscomb in his lifetime, ever opposed the teaching of the prophecies as taught by the prophets themselves. They have taught all along the plain, unmistakable facts as taught by the prophets-such things as taught by Isaiah, Jeremiah, Joel, Micah, Daniel, and others in regard to the gospel, kingdom, reign of Christ, being in prophecy; but when we come to the Acis of the Apostles, they taught these things became facts, because the apostles taught in no mistakable terms that these prophecies had been fulfilled and that there is no ground for misunderstanding them.

I further have said that what these brethren are trying to get the brotherhood to see is that it is wrong for any man to interpret a prophecy or any other scripture so that his position contravenes the well-established truths, in which there is no doubt as to their meaning, as found in other parts of the Bible; that you brethren have no objection to the use of analogy, accommodative terms, just so they do not contradict the plain, unmistakable and well-established truths of the New Testament. It is a well-established truth that the kingdom of Christ was set up on the day of Pentecost and that Christ was seated upon David's throne at that time. But, on the other hand, when one goes to speculating upon these things and setting forth positions that cannot be sustained by the plain teachings of the Bible, he does wrong, for the unlearned may err in hearing such speculation. The Advocate brethren want every preacher to preach all that God says about faith, repentance, confession, baptism, Lord's-day meetings, etc.; but they must not speculate upon these subjects and conjecture something that is not clearly revealed.

Now, Brother McQuiddy, Webster tells us that speculation is "the act or process of reasoning a priori from premises given or assumed." The man who does such reasoning is one who takes a risk with his and other people's souls. He is one who is willing to take a risk or draw conclusions from opinions formed by a venturesome or speculative mind. They are not willing to submit to what the prophet has said in Isa. 55: 8: "For my thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith Jehovah." If Thomas Campbell's rule, "Where the Bible speaks, we speak; and where the Bible is silent, we are silent;" were followed, there would be no getting out into the speculative field and guessing at things. The apostle Peter gives us the same inspired lesson in 1 Pet. 4: 11: "If any man speaketh, speaking as it were oracles of God."

It is like the practice of the digressive brethren. They teach that we can worship God, die, and go to glory without ever seeing an organ; but still they persist in dividing churches over the use of the organ in the worship. Any man who advocates a doctrine or theory which a man does not have to believe to be saved, to the dissension and division of a church, is a worse man than one who takes the physical life; for one destroys the fleshly man and the other destroys the spiritual. Why cannot brethren be satisfied with the plain truths and not always be trying to spring something to bring confusion in the church? God help us to be careful, humble, and teach those things that are clearly revealed in the Book.

J. B. Nelson.

I am pleased to have the foregoing contribution from Brother J. B. Nelson, and wish to assure him that the communication in no way burdens me. All the editors of the Gospel Advocate have always favored teaching prophecy as they teach any other part of the word of God. The best way to teach the word of God is to explain the word of God with the word of God. We should teach prophecy just as we teach faith, repentance, baptism, prayer, confession. or anything else taught in the Bible. The thing to which the editors of the Advocate object is the giving of the meaning of scriptures when the word of God has not revealed such meaning. The editors object to the interpretation of prophecy-that is, giving one's opinion of prophecy. Such speculation is positively condemned by the word of God. It is this speculation that produces division, contention, and strife in the brotherhood. I have explained myself so often on this subject that I do not see any necessity for J. C. McQ. saying more just now.

Christ and the Cross.

The royal banners forward go; The cross shines forth in mystic glow Where He in flesh, our flesh who made. Our sentence bore, our ransom paid.

O tree of glory, tree most fair, Ordained those holy limbs to bear; How bright in purple robe it stood, The purple of a Savior's blood!

To thee, eternal Three in One,
Let homage meet by all be done;
As by the cross thou dost restore.
So rule and guide us evermore.

I wonder why it is that we are not all kinder than we are? How much the world needs it! How easily it is done! How infallibly it is remembered! How superabundantly it pays itself back—for there is no debtor in the world so honorable, so superbly honorable, as love!—H. Drummond.

Opposed to Speculation.

Judging from several statements made through the columns of some of the papers, it is thought, at least by a few, that all the missionaries in Japan are in sympathy with the speculative teaching. For the sake of this work and in self-defense, I, for one, wish to make the statement that I am against speculation in any form. In my God-given sphere I am trying to teach those who will be taught only that part of God's word which is clearly revealed.

SARAH ANDREWS.

Financial Report for First Quarter, 1920.

BY SARAH ANDREWS.

January—A Christmas gift from Sister Lipscomb, $10; through Brother Bradley, $150 ($90 of this was for kindergarten materials bought last year); church at Belzoni, Miss., $7.

February—Church at Belzoni, Miss., $6.33; church at David Lipscomb College, $30; through Brother Bradley, $75; church at Donelson, Tenn., $2.

March—Church at Belzoni, Miss., $5.85; Brother and Sister Bowman, $25; church at Jacksonville, Fla., $17.60; Sister Oldham, $2; church at Donelson, Tenn., $2.

Total receipts for the quarter, $322.78.

Expenditures were as follows: Food, $29.95; rent, fuel, lights, and other expenses connected with housekeeping, $84.49; personal expenses, including $22.25 that I owed Miss Cypert, stamps, duty, train fare, etc., $66.21; to others, $6.60; to the work, including what I gave Olki San and the girl I have been helping through school, also $140.13 on kindergarten materials bought last year, Sunday-school literature, etc., $296.09, Total, $483.34.

It will be noted from the above that expenditures exceeded receipts by $150.56, but I was able to meet all expenses by using the contributions received on the Christmas boats. I am indeed grateful to all contributors.

Report of Work in Okitsu.

BY SABAIL ANDREWS.

It has been several months since I sent any report to the papers of the work which was started here last fall. The past six months have been the busiest, as well as the happlest, period of my life. Olki San and I introduced the work here by starting a Sunday Bible study and a small kindergarten. The people of the town, for the most part, are strict Buddhists, and I have learned since moving here that when I first consulted the officials about coming they held a meeting to decide whether it was best to allow us to come, since we were teachers of Christianity. They were anxious for the kindergarten, and no doubt that was the incentive that prompted them to finally extend to us the cordial invitation to come and to offer us the use of the public hall both for the Sunday school and kindergarten. We have found that the building is too small and has poor accommodations for either purpose, and it is not altogether pleasant to use public property; but we try to make the best of the situation, hoping that some time we may have better facilities. I am glad we accepted the invitation to come, and believe the Lord's hand is in it all. The officials asked that we have neither prayer nor Christian songs in the kindergarten, but we refused to comply with the request. There were about eighty-five applicants for entrance at the beginning, but we took only thirty-two children the first term on account of reasons stated above, and also there was only one teacher. It may be interesting to know that among this number there was a Buddhist priest's son. The mother, thinking when enrollments were first made that the child had not been accepted, asked one of the officials if it was because the father was a priest, which, of course, was a mistake. This child has been a very faithful student at Bible class on Sunday, and even though he has entered the primary school, he continues to come to Sunday school. The first term of the kindergarten closed on March 24, and twenty-four of our children entered primary school.

The Sunday school is very encouraging, too, there being more than one hundred children in attendance-between the ages of five and fifteen; and all of these have permission from their parents to come. Most of these children are brothers and sisters of the kindergarten children. I have not seen a nicer, brighter, and more earnest crowd of children since coming to Japan. One of the larger children wept as she heard the story of Joseph for the first time a few Sundays ago. It is very encouraging to note how rapidly they are getting acquainted with God's word and how most of them seem to love it. We believe that much depends upon the work among the children in getting into the homes of the people and teaching the grown people. "A little child shall lead them." We have been asked to have a Sunday Bible study for the children in a neighboring village, and will go and teach them as soon as a room can be found for the purpose.

We have three Bible classes here in our home each week. Two of these are English Bible classes. When I taught this class the first time last fall, there was only one student present, but the class soon grew to be a class of fourteen or fifteen students. We have studied together the first part of the book of Genesis, the book of Mark, and about halfway through Acts. There is one student who comes on the train from a neighboring town and another who walks about five miles to the Japanese Bible class. Two from these classes were baptized in December and another in February. The baptisms took place in the bay near our home as the moon shone across the waters. All nature seemed to realize the solemnity of the occasion, yet to rejoice with us and the angels. There will be several others baptized next week. I have asked Brother Fujimori to come, and a telegram received this afternoon stated he can. Many seem quite interested, and I hope that others will obey the gospel while he is here. The town chief has expressed a desire to study. It seems quite a slow task to get the majority of the people even willing to be taught; so, the Lord willing, I expect to do some tract writing, hoping to get the truth into every home here whether they receive it or not. The people appreciate what we are doing for the children, and I believe they will be willing to read what I write: We have many callers in the afternoons and some inquirers. I have been asked to teach English one hour each week in a girls' high school in a neighboring town, and will try to do so, if possible, since I believe it a fine opportunity.

The work here has grown to be much larger than we expected it would get to be so soon, and, therefore, requires more workers, as well as more finances, than I had anticipated. I try to encourage those who become Christians to help in both ways, but regret to say that the three who have already been baptized have returned to their native places, but rejoice that they are earnest Christians where they have gone. One of the Bible-class students who is not yet a Christian handed me ven 2.50 a few days ago toward the tract fund. For the past six months I have been helping a girl through school in Tokyo, and rejoice to say that she has graduated and is now with us in the work. Kajl San, the young student who became a Christian while a member of my English Bible class in Tokyo last year, expects to move to this province soon and has expressed a desire to assist in this work.

Georgia and the Far Southern Field

By S. H. Hall

"The Last Days."

"But fice youthful lusts, and follow after righteousness, faith, love, peace, with them that call on the Lord out of a pure heart. But foolish and ignorant questionings refuse, knowing that they gender strifes. And the Lord's servant must not strive, but be gentle toward all, apt to teach, forbearing, in meekness correcting them that oppose themselves: if peradventure God may give them repentance unto the knowledge of the truth, and they may recover themselves out of the snare of the devil, having been taken captive by him unto his will. But know this, that in the last days grievous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of self, lovers of money, boastful, haughty, railers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, implacable, slanderers, without self-control, fierce, no lovers of good, traitors, headstrong, puffed up, lovers of pleasure rather than lovers of God; holding a form of godliness, but having denied the power thereof: from these also turn away." (2 Tim. 22 to 3: 5.)

In the foregoing scriptures we have, first, a beautiful picture, followed by a dark one. Following "after righteousness, faith, love, peace, with them that call on the Lord out of a pure heart," is a beautiful scene. And connecting with this the added scene that such do not only refuse to strive and are gentle toward all men, have forbearance, and strive to correct wrongdoers in meekness, but that they make it a point, always, to refuse and avoid foolish and ignorant questionings, makes the picture sublimely beautiful. And who will say that every man who claims to be a child of God cannot be all of this? And why not be? Remember, it takes all of this to make us just what God would have us be. I think I have seen men who tried to be exceedingly gentle, but foolish and ignorant questions they did not avoid. Why not do this along with your efforts to be gentle?

And did you notice the dark picture that follows this beautiful one, which Paul says is to bring "grievous times in the last days?" I am just wondering if a man could possibly leave off one of the traits in the beautiful character God would have us adorned with and at the same time keep from having some of the black things mentioned in this ugly picture? I am sure we cannot. In spite of any man's efforts to be gentle and meek, if he is holding to foolish and ignorant questions and is trying to defend them, watch and see If you do not discover in him something that could be called "headstrongness"-just a bit, to say the least, too much inclined to be stubborn, obstinate, determined. Too, I would not be surprised, though it may be kept hidden quite well, that you will see self-love cropping out-that is, you will hear this same meek (?) person, when you begin to vigorously attack his untaught questions, cry out, "Persecution!" It is not the rule for any of us to think, for a moment, when some one attacks us for teaching the pure word of God, that he is our perscnal enemy. We seem to let fall all of the attacks where, indeed, they should fall-upon what we teach, and not ourselves. But not so when a man is teaching his own vain speculations; he takes it all, as a rule, as a personal attack. This is significant. I judge that it is because, when we are attacked for teaching exactly what the Book says, we feel that the party is attacking another-viz., the Lord Jesus Christ, who gave us the word and whose own the word is. But when men attack our own ignorant and untaught questions, they are getting on our own property; hence there is some cry of a personal attack, persecution, etc. And I presume that they are not far wrong. It would be well, therefore, for us to teach the doctrine of anotherviz., the teaching of our Lord and Savior-just for the sake of keeping us from being too quick to cry "persecution," if nothing more. Then, in this dark picture we find "false accusers," or "slanderers." I care not how gentle, meek, and truthful a man may claim to be: if he embraces a doctrine not taught in the Book and tries to defend it, you will find him accusing others falsely. He will misrepresent, knowingly, his opponents, and accuse them of taking positions they never thought of taking. But not so with those who take the stand for the pure word of God, just this and nothing more. If they do this whole-heartedly, one of the most outstanding characteristics, you will observe, is a carefulness on their part to correctly represent all about whom they speak. Let me plead, therefore, for the pure teaching of our Lord and Savior as the only remedy for poor, weak, erring man.

O, well, you say you thought you would read an article on "the last days" when you noticed my heading. Well, if you read what Paul actually said, you have; so please do not be disappointed because I did not say semething Paul did not say about it.

The Work at New Hope.

Out about seven miles from Albany, Ga., we have a little congregation by the name of "New Hope." Their number is small, but the faith of some of them is great. Brother H. C. Morgan is living near the church house, and recently baptized a young man into Christ. He was baptized at two o'clock one morning. Brother Morgan was teaching him the way of the Lord, and continued his teaching until he was fully taught. When he expressed a desire to be baptized, they went where there was much water, and he was baptized. This sounds like they did things in the days of the apostles. A young man came forward during Brother Srygley's meeting, one Sunday morning, and said he had no thought of making the confession until after he got there and heard the sermon, hence made no preparation for baptism, and that he did not feel that he could put it off-that he wanted to be baptized right then. I was delighted to hear this, so let him use a part of my suit, and I went home in my baptismal suit. This way of putting off obedience to any command of God never comes from impressions made by the Holy Spirit.

But I started out to say a few things about the work at New Hope. The faithful few there have had a hard struggle from the very beginning of the work, and it has been hard mostly because of some of the members not living as they should. I spent three days there recently (April 28-30) trying to better conditions. Just how well I succeeded, time will have to tell. I hope to run down again soon and be with them, and to help in getting the work in Albany started again.

News Items.

The brethren at Hardie's Chapel have most of the lumber sawed for a larger building at their place. This is a good step in the right direction. "Greater things for the cause of Christ" is their motto.

At this writing I am in a most excellent meeting with the faithful at Sayannah, Ga. Yesterday (May 9) was a glorious day, with three services, four confessions, and one sister who had yielded to sin confessing her mistakes and reconsecrating herself to God. We hope to continue here one week longer.

Two were baptized into Christ at Macon the first Lord's day in this month. Brethren Coleman and Ijams are doing a good work at that place. We are glad to announce that their forces are to be joined soon by Brother R. P. Cuff, a graduate of the David Lipscomb College and one of the teachers in that institution for the past year. Brother Cuff is booked for a meeting at Dalton, Ga., and we are expecting the best results from his efforts.

Q

Charles R. Brewer preached in Washington, D. C., last Sunday. He will begin a meeting at Westbrook, Maine, next Sunday.

From Tice Elkins, Fort Worth, Texas, May 10: "Fine services at Southside-Central Church yesterday. Two obeyed the Lord in baptism. Large crowds."

From W. Curtis Porter, Monette, Ark., May 5: "I preached at Black Oak the last two Lord's days. I will preach there the first Lord's day in each month till I begin my protracted-meeting work."

From Foy E. Wallace, Temple, Texas, May 7: "The visible results of my meeting at Lockney were twenty-six baptisms and seven restorations. The church is in good condition, and under the preaching of Liff Sanders it has an excellent future."

From Ben West, Waxahachle, Texas, May 10: "The meeting here is one week old, with eighteen additions—sixteen by baptism. The new addition to the church auditorium is in use, yet we cannot seat all that come. Interest is great and the meeting continues."

From E. G. Rockliff, Detroit, Mich., May 11: "We have just closed a meeting here, with twenty-seven added to the church; and seven others have made the good confession, but have not yet been baptized. D. Harry Jackson, of Toronto, Canada, did the preaching."

From W. E. Williams, Tulsa, Okla., Route 4, Box 115, May 10: "The church at Tulsa is still growing. The largest crowd yesterday we have ever had. Several new members were in attendance. We expect more next Lord's day. I have time for a meeting or two. If my services are desired, write me at once."

A correction from J. Oscar Paisley, Dresden, Tenn.: "In my last report of funds received for completing a house of worship for the church of Christ at this place, I failed, by mistake, to report ten dollars received from Bible Union congregation, near Dresden. We heartily thank those brethren for their true loyalty to the cause of Christ."

From W. A. Cameron, Port Orange, Fla., May 10: "Yesterday I entered the fourth week of the meeting at this place. The interest has exceeded our fondest expectation. Up to date there have been twenty-nine additions. We organized yesterday with thirty-three members. Last Saturday we secured a lot for a meetinghouse, and preparations are being made to build right away."

From Herbert E. Winkler, Livingston, Tenn., May 10: "I preached to a good audience at Walter Hill yesterday. I wish to secure the services of a singer for a meeting at West Point, Miss., beginning on June 13. I also wish a strong brother to fill an appointment for me on the second Lord's day in June, and maybe longer. Men of either calling may write me at Livingston, Tenn., care of A. J. Moffield. I will be here until June 1."

John E. Dunn writes: "The church of Christ at Terrell, Texas, where I laber in word and doctrine, closed, on May 2. a very successful protracted meeting of twelve days. J.S. Dunn did the preaching and V. O. Teddlie led the song service. Both the preacher and song leader did fine work. Seventeen were baptized into Christ and ten took membership with the congregation, making twenty-seven new members. All are rejoicing over the good meeting."

Shortly before his death, I. B. Grubbs, the lamented exegetical teacher, said: "I am now thoroughly convinced that nothing can equal the perfection of our Savior's offering in behalf of humanity. I wish the world to know that I bear testimony to the perfection of that offering. Nothing can take its place." Sister Grubbs, who sent us this statement, is now eighty-three years of age and is enjoying good health. She has a delightful home with her son-in-law, I. C. Hoskins, at Martin, Tenn.

J. Will Henley calls attention to the serious condition of Will M. Thompson, who is resting in St. Joseph's Hospital, Fort Worth, Texas. Brother Thompson has been compelled to cancel all preaching engagements on account of ill health. He has a wife and some small children dependent upon him. Brother Henley urges that a good donation be sent to A. LeRoy Elkins, 1014 East Tenth Street, Ada, Okla., who will see that it is applied for Brother Thompson's benefit.

From W. P. Skaggs, Itasca, Texas, May 11: "The work in Itasca is doing very well. The interest seems to be growing. The crowd last Sunday was the largest since I came here to work with them. The number present for Sunday school was much the largest. Four united with the congregation by commendation. Our protracted meeting will begin on the third Sunday in July, with Brother Busby doing the preaching and Austin Taylor leading the song service. We are expecting great things."

C. Gall writes: "At our meeting in Denver, Col., we had much help by the talent and zeal of the congregation. The scng leading of Brother Shoulders was masterly. John D. Evans, who is the minister for the church there, seems in some ways an unusually able man, self-sacrificing, full of faith and hope, and with a courage that sees no defeat. Denver should be had in mind by Eastern brethren who want to help bear the heavy burdens laid upon the church there. We enjoyed greatly the brethren's hospitality and Christian fellowship."

An explanation from J. C. McQuiddy: "My failure to reply to Brother McCaleb's criticism of the McQuiddy Printing Company for printing Dr, Thompson's book should not be construed to mean that I acquiesced in his strictures. This, with many other irrelevant matters, needed no reply. Brother Thompson's book is not in a class with the literature of the speculators. Brother Thompson is a Christian gentleman who has not divided any church and would not press any interpretation of his on any part of the word of God to the division of brethren for any temporal consideration."

From Liff Sanders, Lockney, Texas, May 7: "Foy E. Wallace, Jr., of Temple, closed a great meeting here Tuesday night. The meeting began on April 25 and continued ten days. The results were twenty-six baptisms and seven restorations and the church greatly revived. Brother Wallace did some great preaching. The members coöperated splendidly and helped to make this meeting a success. I began work with this congregation last September under very adverse conditions. The congregation was in bad shape. We are all greatly elated over the prospects for the future. We are contemplating building a new house of worship soon."

From E. W. Sewell, Dinuba, Cal., May 3: "Yesterday was a grand day with the church here. Ten precious souls were added to the congregation. I wish you could be with us in this great work. It would rejoice your heart to hear the young Christians preach the word in their meeting, and you would be made glad to hear them sing at each service. Next Lord's day we go from the service to the river, eat our lunch on the bank, and then baptize those who have confessed our blessed Savior. Brethren, the word will win its way if you will teach it, sing It, and preach it. When you come to California, come by and partake of our joy in the Lord."

From W. S. Long, Washington, D. C., May 9: "The attendance at the services to-day was the best we have had this year—more strangers than usual. All are rejoiced to know that we are to have Charles Brewer, of Nashville, Tenn., with us next Lord's day. He will be on his way to Westbrook, Maine, and will spend one day with the church. With delight we look forward to a visit by Isaac Hopkins, of Martin, Tenn., in June; also a visit by Morgan H. Carter, of Nashville, Tenn., in August. Brother Carter is planning to visit New York City with the hope of setting to work a small membership of Christians. Do you want to do good? Help us erect a house of worship in Washington City. Help us also to find scattered members who are here. Write me at 110 Second Street, S. E."

J. A. Cullum writes from Fort Worth, Texas, May 3: "On Thursday I was called to Newark to deliver the baccalaureate address for the commencement exercises. The following night I had the pleasure of making the graduating talk to a class of young ladies. Sunday morning and night I preached to the faithful there. We have some splendid people at Newark, and I have learned to think very highly of them. In the afternoon I drove over to Briar and preached to a splendid congregation. I promised to return and talk for them on the third Saturday night and on Sunday and Sunday night. I preached at Joshua and Caddo, in Johnson County, yesterday. I was at the former place at 11 A.M. and at night, at the latter place in the afternoon. C. H. Robinson, of Austin, has been preaching monthly at these places, and is held in high esteem by the members. My time for monthly preaching is all taken, but I still have the balance of May and the first three weeks in June open for protracted-meeting work, and would like to arrange for one or two meetings for that period of time."

Identity of "Observer."

BY E. A. ELAM.

Since inquiry has come into our office as to who is the author of the three articles written by "An Observer," which appeared recently in this paper, I take pleasure in saying I am. I am glad people are reading and discussing them.

Others have written for this paper without giving their names, having some good reasons for not doing so. I think Brother William Lipscomb wrote a series of articles without giving his name. I know Brother D. Lipscomb wrote an article without giving his name. I know, too, it was about a debate, and he called names. He wrote as "an observer," hoping to cause some to think. I know he was not either "afraid or ashamed" to sign his name, and behind his article was no "preacher jealousy." His only purpose was to accomplish good.

I did not at first give my name, thinking the articles might possibly be read by more people and accomplish the more good. Some good and wise men, not preachers, thought something should be said, and I requested them to say it; but they said they were not writers. So I tried to write as an observer.

Let it be remembered, too, that all I noticed had already appeared in the columns of the paper and was public property. A man, whether he gave his name or not, had the right to notice anything in what had been said which he thought was not true to the teaching of the Bible.

Only let us study the Bible and learn "the whole counsel of God" on any and on all subjects. I may be pardoned for saying I am learning from time to time more and more of the will of God. I am grateful to God for all I learn of his will in my study of it, and I will be thankful to all who will help me to learn more of it.

Changes at David Lipscomb College.

The trustees have elected A. B. Lipscomb to the presidency of David Lipscomb College. He succeeds H. Leo Boles, who has occupied this position for seven years and under whose administration the college has witnessed substantial growth along many lines. The change was announced on Commencement Day, at which time a rising vote of thanks and appreciation was tendered the retiring president. It is not necessary to introduce the new president to the readers of the Gospel Advocate or to write of his qualifications in this new capacity. He has been intimately associated with the affairs of David Lipscomb College for several years and has taken a leading part in securing necessary improvements. Suffice it to say that he will in the office of president devote the greater part of his time and thought to the work, and whatever qualifications he may possess will be used to the greatest advantage in the Master's name.

Moved with a desire to increase the efficiency of the teaching force, the trustees have created the office of Dean and have elected H. S. Lipscomb to this office. He brings to the college the advantages of a long and successful career as a teacher, having taught in the public schools of Nashville for eighteen years, and having served as assistant principal of the Hume-Fogg High School the greater part of the time. He has also served as a member of the faculty of the summer school of George Peabody College for Teachers. H. S. Lipscomb received his M.S. Degree from Vanderbilt University and has pursued special studies at Cornell University and Harvard University. The dean will have special charge of the curriculum and will be in constant touch with teachers and pupils.

It is the intention to enlarge the scope and to increase the usefulness of David Lipscomb College in every honorable and legitimate way. While fully appreciative of what it has accomplished in past years, our motto will be "Continuous Improvement." In accord with the wishes of its founder, teaching the Bible has always been given a place of supreme importance in its curriculum, and this safe policy will certainly be continued. At the same time, we propose to increase the facilities of the academic and literary courses from time to time and to add such new departments as will be most helpful to the students in dealing with the modern problems of life. We wish to bring the standard of scholarship to the highest point and to secure for our graduates full and untrammeled recognition wherever they may go. Our prospects seem unusually bright. The enrollment for the past three years has been very gratifying. We have just completed a new girls' dormitory at a cost of nearly fifty thousand dollars, and this, with our other equipment, will afford the largest facilities for true education.

For the coming session the work of David Lipscomb College will be divided into three terms of twelve weeks each. The opening day and the closing day will be about three weeks later than heretofore. We make this important change in order to coördinate our courses with other colleges and in order to secure for the student full credit for the work taken. Registration of students for the fall semester will begin on Tuesday, September 28, and the formal opening exercises for the public will be held on Friday. October 1. Students are urged to report on the first day of registration.

Rooms will be reserved in Lindsley Hall and in Avalon Home, the new girls' dormitory, only on payment of a deposit fee of five dollars. Credit will be given for this fee upon entering college. To carry out the architect's plan, a few of the rooms in the girls' building had to be constructed a little larger than the others. A slightly additional charge will be made for these rooms, and girls will be given preference in the order of their application. But every room is convenient and delightful. Applications should be made as early as possible.

For Prospectus or detailed information, address A. B. Lipscomb, President, David Lipscomb College, Nashville, Tenn.

C. R. Nichol's Observations.

Brother F. W. Smith has recently brought from the press a tract, "What Was Nailed to the Cross," exposing the false contention of the Seventh-Day Adventists touching the Sabbath question. The tract is characteristic of all that comes from the trenchant pen of Brother Smith—logical, scriptural, and directly on the Issue. All such tracts should be accorded the wide circulation they deserve. Price, 15 cents, from the McQuiddy Printing Company.

J. H. Monk has brought from the press a book on Adventism which is being heartily commended so far as he deals with facts; but he allowed some speculation to find Its way into his production, thereby furnishing his opponents ground to successfully show that he guesses on some points. It is very unwise for one to attack the position of another and not stay safely within the bounds of that which can be established beyond doubt. Mr. Monk announces that he will be pleased to deliver lectures on the different phases of Adventism at such places as his services may be desired. Possibly many congregations do not know that Mr. Monk believes it is right to use instrumental music in the worship of the church of Christ and has on more than one occasion debated the question. To invite a man to labor with you who does not agree with you in doctrine not only gives him prestige, but furnishes him an opportunity to corrupt the congregation by the false doctrine he holds-if his doctrine be false. All over the country there are men quite as able as J. H. Monk who are prepared to expose the doctrine of the Adventists and who teach the truth at all points. Among the number may be mentioned F. W. Smith, F. B. Srygley, W. P. Skaggs, J. W. Chism, and a host of others.

$2.00 a year, in advance, to Canada and foreign countries, $2.50, in advance.

Remittances will be at our risk when sent by express or post-office money order, in registered letter, or by draft payable to our order. The date on your tab shows the time to which your subscription is paid. When money is received, the date will be changed, which will answer for a receipt. Two weeks' time must ordinarily occur from the time your remittance is sent before the tab on your paper is changed; if not changed by that time, notify us at once.

This paper is malled regularly to all subscribers until definite orders in writing are received and all arrearages paid in full. If you wish us to stop your paper, write us to that effect; but do not ask it unless you have paid all arrears, if there are any. Do not ask your postmaster to attend to it for you, but do it yourself.

When changing your post-office address, tell us your old as well as your new address; otherwise two papers might be charged to you. Subscribers, after paying for their papers, will favor us by noting whether the date on the address label is changed, and, if it is not changed within a month, by writing to us. We are careful, but mistakes may occur or letters may be lost. Our rule is to change the date on the day payment is received; but the mechanical work of correcting and printing the list takes time, and payments even from near-by places may not appear the first week. Credits for payments from a distance may be even more delayed. Mistakes are easily rectified if prompt notice is given.

Guarantee of Advertising.

All the advertisements in this paper are, we believe, signed by trustworthy persons. To prove our faith by works, we will make good to actual subscribers any loss sustained in trusting advertisers who prove to be deliberate swindlers. We shall not attempt to adjust trifling disputes between subscribers and honorable business men who advertise, nor pay the debts of honest bankrupts. To make this guarantee effective, in all cases say in writing advertisers, "I saw your advertisement in the Gospel Advocate;" and if anything goes wrong, notify us immediately in writing.

Preach the Gospel.

BY J. C. M'Q.

The value of souls is so great that Christ gave up the glories of heaven and came to earth, became a homeless wanderer, and died on the cross in order that men might be saved. When all authority in heaven and on earth had been given unto him, he commanded his apostles to go "into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature." Christ works in and through his disciples.

The work of evangelizing the world will never be accomplished until we have more godly mothers like Hannah, who was anxious and ready to devote her son, Samuel, to the service of the Lord. She did not stop to count the selfdenial or the sacrifice that she must make for him to engage in the work. Inasmuch as Jehovah had answered her petition, she said: "Therefore also I have granted him to Jehovah; as long as he liveth he is granted to Jehovah." Thus we see that the training of Samuel for the work was begun before he was born. So we should have godly mothers throughout our land to-day to train their children for the great work of preaching the gospel. Sons who are not ready to make sacrifices and who are not ready to give up the luxuries, ease, and splendors of this world in order to proclaim the gospel of Christ will never do any good as ministers of the gospel. Ministers must not confer with flesh and blood, but must be ready to endure hardness as good soldiers, must be ready to endure stripes, hungers, thirstings, and privations, if they expect to be successful preachers of the gospel.

When Israel had fallen into great sin and when one was much needed to go and warn the people, Isaiah heard the voice of the Lord, saying: "Whom shall I send, and who will go for us?" Isaiah answered: "Here am I; send me." If one would be a missionary of the gospel of Christ, if one would be a successful winner of souls like Isalah, he must be ready to be sent of Jehovah. He must be ready to go, having his lips touched with the "live coal" as he gives warning to sinners to flee the doom to come and to accept the offers of proffered mercy. Those who are not ready to suffer privations and to endure scoffs and frowns for the sake of Christ should never attempt the work of a missionary.

Timothy was prepared for his work by the training that he received from his grandmother, Lois, and his mother, Eunice. The unfeigned faith that first dwelt in the grandmother and in the mother also dwelt in his heart. The man that would be a missionary should be so filled with faith and the Holy Spirit, should have been so developed by trials and tribulations, that he may be able to stand any hardships that may come upon him while doing the great work of proclaiming the gospel of Jesus Christ. Christians should be able, by the help of Jehovah, to stand alone.

Yesterday was a beautiful day, and as I was uprooting the dandelions that were growing in my front yard I frequently found one that was standing alone. But I noticed that it did not fail in its mission because it stood alone; where it was growing alone this year, from the seed it was producing, I knew that next year there would be a full crop. From this dandelion we should learn the lesson that everywhere a Christian dwells he should sow the seed of the kingdom; he should so live and so act that his influence will reach out and bring others to the Loro Jesus Christ. While we should rejoice to have Christian association, and while the work may be easier and we may be able to do more in winning others to Christ when surrounded by faithful Christians, yet there is no excuse for a Christian, because standing alone, to fail to win some soul to Christ. Andrew, so soon as he found the Lord, went and led Peter to Christ. This was a great work that Andrew did. Look at the thousands who were turned to the Lord through the ministry of the apostle Peter. When we consider the great work that he did in proclaiming the gospel of Jesus Christ, we will not think lightly of the work of a single individual.

I noted, furthermore, that when the dandelions started in one place, they gradually spread out from that place as a center. Just so the Christian should begin to work at home, and from that home the light should go out to other homes until it reaches to distant lands. The light that is the brightest at home shines the farthest away; and just so the work of preaching the gospel should go from one individual to another, and on and on until the gospel is preached to every creature under heaven. Christians should not be content in sowing the seed in one place, but should endeavor to sow the seed of the kingdom everywhere.

"The sower went forth to sow" his seed; he did not sit down and attempt to put his seed all in one little spot, Just so the Christian should go forth sowing the seed of the kingdom, and, when he has faithfully sown the seed, look to God for the harvest. We do not cease to sow seed because every seed does not bring forth other seed; but we sow in faith, looking to God to send the showers and the genial sunshine and, at the right time, to bring forth the harvest. Just so we should sow the seed in the kingdom of God. We should go forth bearing the precious news of the kingdom to a lost and ruined people. If, when we have faithfully preached the pure gospel, we do not get as great results as we expect, we should not be discouraged. Amid the privations and toils that the apostles endured, we learn that they did not cease in the great work of preaching the gospel until their sound had gone unto all the earth and until they had preached the gospel unto every creature under heaven.

It appears that Sister Lillie Cypert and Sister Sarah Andrews, in the midst of the discouragements that have come upon the work in Japan, have been conscientious, devoted, Christian workers. So far as we are able to judge, they have stood vigorously for the right; they have determined to be on the Lord's side and to know nothing but Christ, and him crucified. Since these faithful missionaries are in far-away Japan. it would be too bad for Christians at home to neglect them in the worship. I would like to say a word to encourage Christians to uphoid and support them in the great work that they have undertaken. While we are not undertaking to rule the missionaries and while we do not feel that we are called upon to select and send them, we stand ready to forward funds to these faithful missionaries for those who wish us to do so. While doing this, we are simply acting as forwarding agents, and are not seeking to control the funds of the church. The churches should be more vigilant and watchful about the work of preaching the gospel in foreign lands. They should select for missionaries Christians thoroughly equipped for the work. The churches will not be held guiltless if they sit idly by and do not endeavor to get the very best men and women for such work. With proper diligence and sacrifice at home, with the proper effort on the part of us all, the work of preaching the gospel in fereign lands will yet prosper and the gospel will continue to grow until the will of the Lord covers the earth as the waters cover the sea.

Do We Really Mean to Obey God, Anyway?

What is obedience to God? Do we know? Do we want to know? Can we be saved in disobedience to God? We quote:

Not every one that saith unfo me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father who is in heaven.

And:

Every one therefore that heareth these words of mine, and doeth them, shall be likened unto a wise man, who built his house upon the rock: and the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell not; for it was founded upon the rock.

But what is the will of God? What are "these words" of Jesus? Jesus makes these broad and strong declarations at the conclusion of "the Sermon on the Mount." Can we do the will of God and the words of Jesus and not live according to this sermon? Can we obey God and do the words of Jesus and not be "peor in spirit?" not be sorrowful and not mourn over our own sins and transgressions? not be "meek?" not "hunger and thirst after right-eousness?" not be "mereiful?" not be "pure in heart?" not be "peacemakers?" not be "righteous," even if we have to suffer persecution on account of it?

I can preach and write the truth on all these beatitudes, I believe, and explain and illustrate them; but that is a different thing by far from practicing them and being them myself in character and life. To have a heart right before God is a very different thing from simply being able to explain to others what the heart is and what it is to be "pure in heart." I can explain what it is to treat others at all times and, therefore, in all things—thought, word, deed—as I would have others in mercy and justice freat me; but the devil can do that. He at times fashions himself into an angel of light, and his ministers are fashioned into apostles of righteousness. I must beat the devil in order to obey God and to be saved. I must actually treat othersthe young and the old, the ignorant and the learned, the poor and the rich, the children and their mother, the employed and the employer, the sinner and the saint, the enemy and the friend, the black and the white, the Jew and the Gentile-in my thoughts of them, in my feelings toward them, in my speech about them, and in all my associations and transactions with them-as I would be treated by them. Since I would have no one misrepresent and slander me and my family, I will not misrepresent and slander any man and his family; since I would have no one steal from me or in any way defraud me, I will in no way steal from and in no way defraud any man; since I would have every man treat me as Joseph treated Potiphar, I will so treat every man; since I would have others to show mercy and exercise forbearance toward me in my mistakes and sins, I will show mercy and exercise forbearance toward others in their mistakes and sins; since I would not have any man lie to me, I will not lie to any man; since I would not have any man to kill me and make my wife a widow and my children orphans, I will not kill any man.

To have something up the sleeve for the other man, to be captious and suspicious and carping, is not following the Golden Rule, but is real disobedience to God. He who pursues his "trade of scandal picking" by nods and hints and innuendoes is not a Christian, but a dangerous and despicable and detestable character. About the most sneaking and meanest way in which to besmirch and slander others is by insinuation, or to tell only a part of the truth, or to remain silent when the truth should be spoken.

To follow the Golden Rule, one must be strictly honest with oneself, with all others in all things, with the truth, and with God. One must think of others, must talk of others, must act in all things toward others—must trade and work, pay and pray—as God commands. One does not obey God who does not do this. We pray God to bless all men; but unless we treat all men as God directs, that prayer is an abomination to God and an exponent of our hypocrisy.

How can any man persuade himself that he is in obedience to God and has the spirit of Christ when he is bitter, shows no mercy, manifests no forbearance, seeks not to save, but to find fault with and to condemn others, and indulges in unchristian feelings and speech and practices?

Can we do God's will and the words of Jesus while refusing or in selfishness failing to practice the self-denial which they require; to buffet and to bring into bondage the body and to mortify its passions and lusts, to crucify the flesh, to keep unspotted from the world, and to set the affections upon the things which are above? Can we obey God without being rich toward him, rich in faith, and rich in good works? Can we obey God and refuse or even fail to preach "all things that pertain unto life and godliness?" Can we obey God and persist in preaching the things which God commands us to avoid? How many of us are writing and preaching in obedience to God, anyway-that is, because HE commands us to? What would we accomplish by writing or preaching or by both? Has God commanded us to cavil and to carp, to speculate and to theorize, to bite and devour, to engender strife and to cause division contrary to the teaching of Christ? Can we obey God and not study to hold fast the sound speech and the form of sound words which he commands? How about this?

Let all bitterness, and wrath, and anger, and clamor, and railing, be put away from you, with all malice: and be ye kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving each other, even as God also in Christ forgave you. (Eph. 4: 31, 32.)

Can we ignore the will of God at any point on any subject in all his counsel and please and obey him? Do we even attempt to do all we do, "in word or in deed, In the name of the Lord Jesus?" And when it comes to being "of the same mind," "having the same love," being "of one accord," doing "nothing through faction or through vainglory," "in lowliness of mind counting others better than "ourselves, and looking to the welfare and peace, good and salvation of others, and not to our own things (Phil. 2: 1-14), can we obey God and not do all this? I should put it, can we obey God and fail, if not refuse, to make the God-required effort "to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace?" God's requirement is to make this effort "with all lowliness and meekness, with long-suffering, forbearing one another in love." (Eph. 4: 1-6.)

Have some of us any more forbearance and lowliness of mind, meekness and long-suffering, forgiveness and love, and any less selfishness and desire for chief seats in the synagogues, vanity and pride, self-conceit and love of applause, than we had ten years ago? Are we any better examples by growth in the grace and knowledge of Christ—any more Christlike and godly—than when we first began to teach and preach or to live the Christian life? Can there be any obedience to God without the spirit of Christ (Rom. 8: 9), without the mind of Christ (Phil. 2: 5), without escaping in reality "from the corruption which is in the world through lust," and without becoming "partakers of the divine nature" (2 Pet. 1: 4)?

What is meant, anyway, by "preaching the truth"—the truth, not something else—"thy word is truth"—"in the love of the truth?" What is meant by "the simplicity of the gospel?" What is meant by implicit obedience to God? What is meant by knowing nothing save Jesus Christ, and him crucified? What is meant by not preaching oneself, but Christ Jesus as Lord, and oneself a bond servant for Jesus' sake? (2 Cor. 4: 5.)

The prophet that hath a dream, let him tell a dream; and he that hath my word, let him speak my word faithfully. What is the straw to the wheat? saith Jehovah. (Jer. 23: 28.)

You have heard of hunting for a needle in a haystack. Hunting for the love of God and men; the plain truth and simple gospel; Christ, and him crucified; the worship of God in spirit and truth—free from the learning and wisdom and valinglory of men, free from the self-conceits and doctrines of men, free from the bickerings and strife and contentions of men—in the great bulk of the preaching and the larger number of the religious journals of to-day is like searching for a few grains of wheat in piles of chaff. Not many religious people read religious papers and comparatively few people attend church.

"Preach the word."

What is obedience to God, anyway?

A Prosy, But Important, Medley.

BY T. B. LARIMORE.

Nearly threescore and ten years ago, when I was studying "Smith's English Grammar," not knowing there was, ever had been, or ever could be another book on that subject, I memorized the following "note:" "Home and nouns signifying which way, how far, how long, time when, etc., are in the objective case, without any governing word." That is a rather ancient rule; but its survival commends it, on the principle of "the survival of the fittest." Morris, however, ridiculed and revised it-ridiculed the thought of anything's ever being the object of nothing, and substituted for Smith's note the following: "Home and nouns signifying which way, how far, how long, time when, etc., are in the objective case, the governing word being understood." Rigdon, a recognized authority on the subject, in his "English Sentence," accepts this as correct, which brings it strictly up to date.

This simple little rule, or note, has long been very serviceable to me, and I believe a universal observance of it might immensely improve our current literature. I have just now read an obituary notice in which there are enough superfluous "on's" to make it ridiculous, if not, indeed, ludicrous; whereas proper observance of the rule herein repeated might have made it, at least, readable, instead of absurdly and ridiculously ridiculous.

"That" is another word which is worked overtime.

"He said that he would go" is an example of it. "He said he would go" is English; "He said that he would go" is not. A good writer, writing about a gospel preacher recently, said: "He speaks English. Few do." Some of us do try to, I am sure; while others of us seem to never even think of trying.

Recently I heard a brother at the Lord's table talk about "the spilled blood" and "the spill blood" of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ. I was sorry he said what he said, but I was, and am, glad the Bible makes no mention of that blood. Our Savior says, "For this is my blood of the new testament, which is shed for many for the remission of sins" (Matt. 26: 28); but he nowhere even intimates that his blood ever might, could, would, should, or did be spilled or spilt, I am glad to say. The expression "to spill" suggests the thought of losing or wasting, especially unintentional losing or wasting; hence is not, and never can be, in accord with the thought of our Savior's shedding his blood, of course.

Moreover, at the Lord's table on the Lord's day is neither the time nor the place to talk much about anything. Then and there solemn, silent, sensible thinking is golden.

The impression seems to be prevalent among us that it is proper and right to encourage any and every man among us to do publicly anything and everything he may wish to do, regardless of his lack of fitness for it. This tends to bring the cause into disrepute.

When, a few years ago, I was passing through a section of country especially dear to me, I went one night to hear one of our preachers preach. The announcement that some women were to be baptized immediately after the preaching had helped to nearly half fill the house. The baptismal scene was shocking and shameful, and I believe it was sinful. The man who did the botch job had on neither coat nor vest-simply and solely a dilapidated, well-worn undershirt, one "gallus," and a pair of trousers that were decidedly too short at both ends. Had poverty been responsible for the grotesque outfit, I should never have mentioned it, of course; but it was not. It would be unseemly for me to describe the scene, hence I shall not try to do so; but such scenes shame the cause to establish which our Savior shed his precious blood. Surely such things ought not so to be. It is true that, in that case, the preacher was a bad man; the baptist, a good man; but that does not discount the point I am trying to make.

Every gospel preacher should be "a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." and the baptizer should know how to baptize, and should always do it decently. I am sorry the impression that " just anybody can baptize, and somebody should relieve the preacher of that part of his work," prevails. The Bible says: "Let all things be done decently and in order." (1 Cor. 14: 40.) This necessitates previous preparation-preparedness. I have always deemed it my duty to do my own baptizing, hence I have nearly always done it. Why should it be considered so much less important that the baptizing should be done decently than the preaching? Proper preaching and proper baptizing are done by the same divine authority. We should try to never make a botch of either. "As said before, so say I now again:" "Let all things be done decently and in order."

Some of us are manifestly slack about some important things. I deem it perfectly safe to say the rites of matrimony have been "solemnized" hundreds, not to say thousands, of times by men who had no legal right to perform that solemn service. In all such cases, both the perpetrator and the victims are subjects of criticism, if not, indeed, of censure, if all the parties understood the situation when the deed was done. We should study to know how to do, and whether we have the right to do, whatsoever we undertake to do.

I believe it is not a very unusual thing for the party of the third part in a marriage service to pronounce the parties of the other parts "man and wife," as if he could make a man of the person of the second part, and thus giving the man a wife, but leaving the wife without a husband. If I could not conscientiously pronounce them husband and wife, I would certainly not pronounce them man and wife. Why not pronounce them man and woman? I believe every worthy wife is entitled to a husband; hence, when I marry folks, I pronounce them husband and wife.

In a peaceful, happy home which was my home during a series of meetings was a sweet young wife who was perfectly satisfied with her religious condition, situation, and affiliation, but who was exceedingly anxious for her father, mother, brother, and sister to obey the gospel. The night before her mother, brother, and sister were to be baptized, she slept very little. About three hours after the noon of that, for her, almost sleepless night, she joyously said to herself: "I see it! I see it! I know I have never been baptized by divine authority; hence, I have never been baptized at all. When I was immersed, I was immersed by human authority, absolutely. The question was submitted by a man to men and women, and they voted on It. If they had voted 'No,' that vote would have kept me out of the water. Hence, I was immersed by human, not divine, authority. This day I will be baptized by divine authority." And she was.

Mr. Monk's Exposure of Adventism.

"Adventism and The Bible," by J. Henry Monk, is a well-written and instructive book of 251 pages. One of its chief objects is the exposure and refutation of the sophistical claims of Adventism, the author himself having formerly been an Adventist. He is fair and honorable in stating the positions of those whom he opposes, and is clear and forcible in his method of argumentation. The book is an invaluable argument against the pretentious claims of Adventism, and a most suitable document to place in the hands of those who need enlightenment on the tenets of that sect. On the Sabbath question, as well as on other subjects, it is full, clear, and conclusive.

Minus its fanciful theories and speculations on the book of Revelation—theories which may or may not be true, neither the author nor anybody else knowing whether they are or not—it is a most excellent book and worthy of careful study by all who seek the truth of God. It is published by the McQuiddy Printing Company, Nashville, Tenn.

Walter George Smith, ex-President of the American Bar Association, recently returned from the Near East, where he spent several months as American Relief Commissioner, gives his impressions of the Armenians:

"I have heard it asked, 'What sort of a people is it that allows itself to be supported by charity?'

"There are those who believe stuff like that; but could you have seen them as I have seen them, could you have studied this people as I have studied them, and studied statistics about them as I have, you would say, as I say, 'Far from it.'

"The Armenian people are without a peer among all the peoples of whom we have read in history for the universality of their tenacity to their faith and their sincerity in the observance of it. They are not a feeble folk, willing to subsist on charity.

"I have seen these people. I have seen little children starving without a complaint, reduced to that condition where a little girl would pick up the crumbs of a Hindu soldier's rations which he had scattered among a starving crowd, picking up these crumbs like a sparrow to try to assuage the sharpest pangs of hunger with no complaint, nothing but pathetic drawn face, those preternaturally large, dark eyes, looking, longing for relief, and the only relief that could come was death.

In sending contributions, be sure and state whether they are intended for the Home Orphans' Fund, the Armenian and Syrian Fund, or the Poland Fund. I should be glad if more of the contributions were designated for use in providing for orphans in this country, since there are constant appeals from destitute families close to us. Make all checks and money orders payable to A. B. Lipscomb, who will forward them to the proper commissioners.

Book Notices.

"The Model Church," by G. C. Brewer, treats of live subjects, and is a book that should be distributed among the churches. This book has been almost universally commended and is being read with interest by many people. Price, $1.

We have on hand a few copies of "Biographies and Sermons," edited by F. D. Srygley. This is a book of sermons by a number of our best-known preachers. It is well worth a careful perusal. A brief history of the life of each preacher accompanies his sermon. A picture of the preacher also is given with each sketch. Price, $1.50. If you want this book, you should order at once, as we have just a few copies that have been left over through mistake.

Training Little Children

By OLIVE ROBERTS.

(Suggestions by mothers who have been kindergartners. Issued by The United States Bureau of Education, Washington, D. C., and The National Kindergarten Association, New York, N. Y.)

A Piece of Bread.

Once upon a time there was a little boy named "Jack," who went home from school very hungry.

"Mother," he called, as he ran into the house, "I'm hungry! I want a piece of bread and butter and sugar, please."

Mother was sewing but she left her work and went out to the kitchen to get Jack something to eat. She opened the cupboard door and took out the sugar bowl and set it on the table. She got out the plate of butter and a knife and set them on the table. Then she went to the bread box for some bread; but when she got there, the bread box was bare, just like the cupboard of old Mother Hubbard—there wasn't a crumb left.

"O, I forgot," said mother. "We are out of bread. You will have to go to the baker's shop and buy a loaf of bread before you can have anything to eat." So she gave Jack a bright, new dime; and away he ran to the baker's for a loaf of bread.

He found the baker dressed in his white cap and apron, looking very clean and neat.

"Baker, baker, I've come for bread; So here's a bright, new dime," Jack said. The baker laughed and shook his head;

"The very last loaf I've sold," he said.
"But go to the miller and buy me some flour,
And I'll bake your bread before a late hour."

So Jack ran away to the miller. He, too, was in a white cap and apron, and he looked very queer, for his clothes were all covered with fine, white flour dust. He looked as if he had been out in a snowstorm.

Jack said:

"Miller, miller, sell me some flour, So that the baker before a late hour Can bake me a loaf of fine, white bread; For the very last loaf is sold," he said.

But the miller answered: "No flour have I; I sold the last sack to the grocer near by; But go to the farmer and get me some wheat, And you'll very soon have all the bread you can eat."

So Jack ran off to the farmer. He found him in the barn feeding his horses.

"Farmer, farmer, some wheat please sell
To take to the miller, who'll grind it well,
And make white flour for the baker's bread;
For the very last loaf is sold," he said.

The farmer stopped working and listened to Jack. Then he smiled and said:

"I've bushels of wheat all ready to sell; I plowed and I planted; I 'tended it well; I cut it and threshed it, and put it away, And I'm ready to sell it whenever I may,"

So the farmer harnessed his horses, Whitenose and Dobbin, to his big wagon. He loaded the wagon with sacks of wheat. Then he climbed away up high on the seat, and Jack climbed up beside him. Clip-clap, clip-clap, clip-clap went the horses' feet as they rode to town; and there they stopped at the mill. They unloaded the wheat; the miller poured some of it into the mill and started the machinery. The great wheels and belts that had been standing so still began to turn round, slowly at first, then faster and faster, making such a noise that Jack could not hear what the farmer said when he spoke to him; and in less time than it takes to tell you, the fine, white flour was flowing into the sacks.

The miller tied up one of the sacks and gave it to Jack, and he took it to the baker. The baker started his fire and got out his bread board and pans, and soen he was mixing and stirring and kneading the dough; and in a few hours he had a tray of fine loaves baked. Jack gave him the bright, new dime for one of them, and ran home with it to his mother.

"Here is the bread, mother," he called, as he ran in. Then he told her why he had been gone so long and where he had been. She quickly cut off a slice of bread, spread it with butter, and sprinkled it with sugar. "I never knew before how many people have to work hard so that I may have bread," said the hungry boy, as he ate his well-earned repast.

When God comes into a man's soul, every faculty is stirred, every power is quickened, the heart is tenderer, the mind is clearer, the senses are keener, the body is healthier; a wondrous tide of life rushes through the whole man. When God's Spirit descends on men, his principal work is to make them realize the spiritual world, and the realization of the spiritual world is the task of the imaginaiton. The choice is strange because it is right, and daring because it is according to the mind of God. All around us there is a world of matter and motion, with its hills and plains, minerals and forests, towns and streets and factories. We see it with our eyes, and are familiar with its features and movements. But vast as this world is, it pales into insignificance beside the great unseen world that is above and around and within us, a world that outleaps all measurement and outruns all duration, more real than the solid earth, more permanent than the everlasting hills: the home of God and Jesus, of angels innumerable, and the spirits of just men made perfect, to be seen by no eyes of flesh, seen alone by the eye of the soul-the imagination. -T. His Little Coat.

BY CLARA COX EPPERSON.

"Moreover his mother made him a little coat, and brought it to him from year to year, when she came up with her husband to offer the yearly sacrifice."

Lovingly and carefully she wrought

The stitches in each dear little garment of love,
And once each year the long journey made
To the temple, her loving remembrance to prove.

This precious son, her pride and great joy,
No more could she cuddle in aching, empty arms;
It was her vow, if God gave this son,
She would return to his service, far from all harms.

But her mother heart was lonely, sad, And tears fell unheeded on the garment she wrought. Each hour of his dimpled babyhood sweet Was for her with jeyous, tender memories fraught.

"O Samuel, my son, my little boy!"

Her longing heart cried in the dragging, empty days,
"Do you know for your dear happiness,
As I make each little coat, constantly I pray?"

Ever she prayed for her boy's happiness, That he might be pleasing in the eyes of her Lord; If his life prove of worth to the world, Any sacrifice could her loving heart afford.

More children came to Hannah, and blessed Was she of God in them, and content in her home; But she knew that nothing more precious Than Samuei and his little coat in life could coms.

Brother J. M. Greer, of Bowling Green, Ky., wishes to know what the Christadelphian Church teaches. The Christadelphian Church, which is also called the "Brothers of Christ," or Thomasites, was founded in the United States in 1850 by John Thomas, M.D. The Christadelphians reject the Trinity and the natural immortality of the soul, believing that the righteous only receive eternal life. They believe in and rely upon the cleansing influence of the Holy Spirit, and practice only immersion for Christian baptism. They have no ordained ministers. The church has very few communicants.

Brother Omer Taylor, of Beaver Dam, Ky., inquires as follows: "Is it all right to use grape juice in the worship?" Certainly it is all right to use grape juice. Grape juice contains all the elements of wine, and will finally ferment and become wine if exposed to the air. Christ says: "I shall no more drink of the fruit of the vine, until that day when I drink it new in the kingdom of God." To use in the worship the fruit of the vine is all that is necessary. Crape juice is certainly the fruit of the vine. I have never had any compunctions of conscience about using either in the Lord's Supper.

Brother M. F. Henry, of Sugar Tree, Tenn., seeks information as to what is the willful sin referred to in Heb. 10: 26. He wishes to know if a man sin willfully, will he get forgiveness? The passage reads: "For if we sin willfully after that we have received the knowledge of the truth there remaineth no more a sacrifice for sins." The willful sin here spoken of is the rejection of Christ. The man who willfully turns from Christ can never be forgiven. Christ is the last sacrifice for sin; he made an atonement once for all, and without the shedding of his blood there is no remission of sin. The blood of animals only passed over sins from year to year. The man who to-day rejects Christ and tramples under his feet his holy will has nothing to anticipate but fearful judgment and fiery indignation.

Sister Elma Noblitt asks an explanation of Matt. 10: 41, 42. This passage reads: "He that receiveth a prophet in the name of a prophet shall receive a prophet's reward: and he that receiveth a righteous man in the name of a righteous man shall receive a righteous man's reward. And whoseever shall give to drink unto one of these little ones a cup of cold water only, in the name of a disciple, verily I say unto you he shall in no wise lose his reward." The meaning is that whosoever receiveth the prophet because he is a prophet will receive a prophet's reward. The apostles themselves were prophets. By the "little ones" I understand Christ's disciples are meant. The "cup of cold water only" is the smallest act of kindness. If one gives a cup of cold water because he is a disciple, out of regard for Christ, he shall never lose his reward. Good deeds are never lost. 0 0 0

A. H. B. inquires to know the meaning of 1 Cor. 7: 13, 14, which reads: "And the woman that hath an unbelieving husband, and he is content to dwell with her, let her not leave her husband. For the unbelieving husband is sanctified in the wife, and the unbelieving wife is sanctified in the brother: else were your children unclean; but now are they holy." The passage means that if a woman have an unbelieving husband, because she is a Christian she is not required to put him away, provided he is content to dwell with her. The unbelieving husband may be saved or sanctified by his wife, and so the unbelieving wife may be sanctified by the believing husband. The passage thus clearly teaches that a Christian should have a purifying influence over those with whom he associates. Nehemiah commanded Jews to part from heathen wives on the ground that they were ceremonially unclean. Paul insisted rather that the believer cleanses the other and that the unbelieving partner or the children are rendered ceremonially clean. The believing wife is not required to put away the unbelieving husband, neither is the believing husband required to put away the unbelieving wife.

A sister who does not desire her name published asks for an explanation of the tenth chapter of the Acts of the Apostles. To give an explanation of this entire chapter would consume more space than I can devote to it in the Query Department. A number of things out of the ordinary appear in this conversion. Peter was given the vision on the housetop in order to prepare him to preach the gospel to the Gentiles. He had regarded the Gentiles as common and unclean and, therefore, unworthy of salvation. He had declined up to this time to preach the gospel to them. Cornelius also had a vision, and was directed by an angel to send to Peter and hear words of him whereby he and his house should be saved. The Holy Spirit also appeared to Peter and told him to go with the three men that came from Cornelius, doubting nothing. While Peter was preaching the gospel to Cornelius and his household, the Holy Spirit fell on them (the Gentiles at the household of Cornelius) as on the Jews at the beginning on the day of Pentecost. (Acts 11: 15.) We learn from Acts 15: 8 that the Gentiles were baptized in the Holy Spirit as a witness of their reception into the kingdom of God: "And God, who knoweth the heart, bare them witness, giving them the Holy Spirit, even as he did unto us." As it took a miracle to convince Peter that he should preach the gospel to the Gentiles, so the Gentiles themselves needed to be baptized in the Holy Spirit and thus enabled to speak with tongues in order that it might be known that the middle wall of partition between Jew and Gentile was broken down. Hence, Peter, in rehearsing this matter, says: "If then God gave unto them the like gift as he did also unto us, when we believed on the Lord Jesus Christ, who was I. that I could withstand God? And when they heard these things, they held their peace, and glorified God, saying, Then to the Gentiles also hath God granted repentance unto life." (Acts 11: 17, 18.) Thus we see the special reason for the Gentiles being baptized with the Holy Spirit before they received the baptism in water. So when Peter was thoroughly convinced that God had given his Spirit to the Gentiles, for he heard them speak with tongues and magnify God, he answered and said: "Can any man forbid the water, that these should not be baptized, who have received the Holy Spirit as well as we?" People are not baptized in the Holy Spirit to-day; and those who claim to be should prove their claims by working miracles, for we learn that men who were baptized in the Holy Spirit in the days of the apostles always had the power of working miracles.

Report from Denver, Col.

BY JOHN D. EVANS.

Since the church of Christ in Denver moved from its former location at Eighth and Ogden Streets to its new home at 125 South Sherman Street, to date (May 1), the following contributions have been made to our "church home" fund: From E. G. Cullum, Tennessee, $25; Eleventh Street Church, Nashville, Tenn., by E. G. C., $50; Russell Street Church, Nashville, Tenn., by J. C. McQ., $100; Lewisburg Church, Tennessee, by J. G. S., $25; Hugh Dozier, Tennessee, $5; H. N. Mann, Tennessee, $25; Roberta Soper, Missouri, $50; Elizabeth Porch, Tennessee, $2: Duck River Church, Tennessee, by A. P. B., $10: Cathey's Creek Church, Tennessee, $32; Florence Elder, Tennessee, $1; Ross Alexander, Tennessee, $20; Mr. and Mrs. R. B. Evans, Tennessee, $10; Mr. and Mrs. Talmage McCord, Tennessee, $10; O. C. Wallace, Tennessee, $1; Foster Street Church, Nashville, Tenn., $25. We have promises from other brethren and churches, for all of which the church in Denver and the writer personally are truly thankful.

It is especially gratifying to me that the congregations with which I was first associated after becoming a Christian and other close neighbors were first to respond to our appeal. May the Lord abundantly bless each giver to the cause in this and other destitute fields.

The church in Denver has been greatly revived by the visit of Brother Clayton Gall, of Wichita, Kan. The meeting continued over two weeks, and, notwithstanding the severe snowstorm, grew in interest and attendance to the last night. The congregation had begun the work several days before Brother Gall reached us. An interesting song drill was conducted by Brother E. E. Shoulders, who directed the singing during the meeting. The visible results of the meeting were two baptized and four to take membership with the congregation. Hearty cooperation with Brother Gall upon the part of the membership, including the local preachers, Speck, Jones, Shoulders, and the writer, added much to the success of the meeting. Brother and Sister Gall endeared themselves very much to the congregation because of their godly walk and conversation, their zeal and enthusiasm in the work of soul saving. They were entertained at the home of Brother Thomas A. Wynn, who is one of our elders and an old friend of Brother Gall. As a gospel preacher and evangelist. Brother Gall has been eminently successful in Kansas, Missouri, and neighboring States, and we are glad to have him annex Colorado to his itinerary.

Since we moved into our new home our membership has increased about fifty per cent. Our new baptistery has been installed and we are planning for greater things in the future.

The longer I live, the more I am coming to feel that what we call our work is really our play. We are very apt to think that our biggest work is done in the shop, in the store, in the factory, on the farm; but may it not be that our really important work is done in the humbler places-how we treat our friends; how we conduct ourselves before our children; how we endure head winds and hardships and some of the other things that are perhaps more perilous, such as sunshine and good fortune and the favoring breezes? Our real work is character building. The business in which we are engaged is only incidental, except as it ministers to that .- M. J. MacLeod.

Perhaps some day a people may be inspired by the Holy Ghost to risk it all upon the Lord. Let us build Christ into our laws, into the administration of our laws, into our treaties with kindred States, into our dealings with inferior peoples. If we set this stone at naught, we may find the Nemesis that awaits us in the desolations of imperial Rome.-J. H. Jowett.

A Healing Spring at Your Door

Here is a very unusual and peculiar offer, one that you rarely meet with. It evidences the greatest faith on the part of its maker and inspires confidence. It is made by an earnest and enthusiastic man who not only thinks, but knows from personal experience, that he is right. He proposes to give you the equivalent of a three-weeks' visit to a mineral spring of most remarkable restorative powers and make no charge if you are not benefited. His offer has been accepted by over a hundred thousand sufferers in all parts of the United States, and his records show that only two in a hundred on the average report no benefit.

If you suffer from dyspepsia, indi-gestion, rheumatism, kidney, bladder, or liver disease, uric-acid poisoning, or other conditions caused by impure blood, take Mr. Shivar at his word and sign and mail the following letter:

Shivar Spring, Box 21K, Shelton, S. C.

Gentlemen: I accept your offer and inclose herewith three dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral I agree to give it a fair trial, in accordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send; and if I report no benefit, you agree to refund the price in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns, which I agree to return within a month.

The Master's Vineyard

Arkansas.

Saratoga, May 10.—Brother Leo Henley, of Atwood, Okla., assisted me in a meeting recently, at Terlton, Okla., where we baptized five and restored three. Lee is one of the very best singers I have had with me in my work. The Terlton meeting will result in much good yet, I think. am now in the first week of a great meeting in Saratoga. This is a fine old church. The ablest preachers of the brotherhood have held meetings here. It is great to me to be back in my native State among the grandest people on earth. Ten added to date. Large crowds and splendid interest. Brother Thomas E. Milholland is in a meeting at Coleman, Okla., my home. I regret to have to be from home at this time. Brother Milholland is a great preacher and a good man, and I am praying for his success there. My next meeting will be in Durant, Okla. -J. Will Henley.

Florida.

Lake City, May 9.—The church at Lake City recently enjoyed a feast of good things during a meeting held by Brother G. C. Claus, of Valdosta, Ga., who worked earnestly with the church here for ten days. Much interest is manifested and the church was greatly edified and encouraged to go forward unto greater usefulness. Three were to the congregation. Brother Claus is an earnest and fearless defender of the truth and a willing worker in the Master's vineyard. We had a good meeting at our mission point, Ozark Schoolhouse, this afternoon, with a crowded house, good singing, and eight additions-six baptized and two from the Mormons. Surely God is with us in this work and is using us for his glory and the salvation of souls .- J. O. Barnes.

Mississippi.

Ackerman, May 7.—The three small congregations in this county had the pleasure of hearing Brother M. C. Cayce, of Nashville, Tenn., three times each the last week in April. We wish to express our thanks to God and the Nashville brethren for making it possible for this man of God to help the faithful few in Mississippi. Gospel preachers are scarce in Mississippi. I was surprised when I read the note in the Gospel Advocate from Brother Lee Jackson asking for work in other States. The field here is white for the harvest and the laborers are very few. We have more calls than we can answer, We need more such men as Brother M. C. Cayce in Mississippi. Pray for the work here.—H. D. Jeffcoat.

Missouri.

Springfield, May 3.—Since writing I have visited my regular appointments. Found work improving at all places. Masters is looking forward with much interest to their meeting in October, to be conducted by Brother S. C. Garner. Flint Hill has not definitely arranged for a meeting yet, but will soon. North Side, Springfield, will have Brother Thaddeus Hutson in a meeting, beginning on the third Sunday in May and continuing three weeks. I will probably be at East Side, Springfield, beginning on the second Sunday in June, for two weeks. I am now at Huffman, Ark., with Charles F. Hardin leading the song service, for three weeks. Only a small congregation here, but zealous. We hope to see it grow. The meeting begins with good prospects. Brother Hardin is developing into a good, substantial preacher, and the brethren should keep him busy. Of course, he has been first-class in the song work for several years. I will probably be at my protracted-meeting work from now on to December I.—M. S. Mason.

The Work Around Albany, Ala.

BY J. P. EZELL.

The past few weeks have been full of trials for us. The crisis of a general epidemic of sickness, during which two or three families have been saddened by deaths, has now passed, and the interest and attendance at the services surpass that of any previous period, for which we are all thankful to Him who "giveth the increase."

Two, man and wife, came forward Sunday. He had been a Presbyterian; she, a Baptist. He was baptized at 6:30 P.M. She claimed obedience to the gospel and expressed her desire to be a member of the body, the church of Christ, and, as a part of the church, the bride, to glorify and honor God in wearing the name of Christ, the Bridegroom, in preference to that of the Baptist, the "best man" or friend of the bridegroom. (1 Pet. 4:16; John 3: 28-30.)

Friday I was at Athens. church there, which was planted less than a year ago, is doing quite well. Brethren S. H. Hall and E. Gaston Collins will assist Brother Jones and the writer in a meeting there in May. Pray for this meeting. The Lord has blessed us in this work. We bought the old house for five thousand dollars; and though we are few there and, in the main, poor, and have made no general call for help, yet a few congregations and individuals have come to our rescue, so that, with the exception of about six hundred dollars, the property can now be paid for. If any desire to fellowship this work, let offerings be sent at once to me at 514 Johnston Street, Albany, Ala., or to L. B. Jones, Paint Rock, Ala., as we desire to have final settlement in May.

Saturday, I was at Hartselle, a beautiful and thriving town of several thousand population on the Louisville and Nashville Railroad, twelve miles south of Albany. I have succeeded already in finding eight or ten fine men and women who desire to help plant a New Testament church there, and it is our desire to have a meeting in a tent in May or June. We shall need a bit of financial assistance for this meeting, but it will be forthcoming. We began our work there in a public way on the night of May 6, with a Bible class at the residence of Sister Morrison.

Sunday afternoon at three o'clock I went to Tanner, ten miles north of Albany, on the L. & N., and conducted what I suppose was the first service ever conducted there by Christians only. Through correspondence and a few personal visits we have been preparing for a year, and the results were gratifying indeed. Though arrangement had been made to have the service in the W. O. W. hall over a storehouse, through the generosity of the Methodist preacher, who is a personal friend of mine and withal an estimable man, we were permitted the use of the Methodist Church. We had a splendid audience, and after the service, at a little conference among ourselves, it was found that we had twenty-one members present. It was unanimously agreed that with this service a permanent work was begun and that henceforth services be conducted each Lord's day in the hall till permanent arrangement be made. All realized the need of a house. Brother Carter, who all say is a good man, gave us choice of eighteen lots which he owns in the little village. The prettiest and most central lot in Tanner was selected, with a cluster of beautiful natural oaks decorating the front and a well of the best water already; whereupon Brother Fudge said that on his farm there was plenty of timber and a sawmill near by, and that he would give every stick of rough lumber for the building.

Truly this was a busy week, far more so, with the sorrows and caresfor I lost one of my beloved uncles, C. G. Ezell, of Coxey, Ala,-than was best for my physical man; so that yesterday and to-day I am somewhat unwell; but who would not, for such sweet experience, be "partaker of the afflictions of the gospel according to the power of God? (2 Tim. 1: 8.) "For our light affliction, which is for the moment, worketh for us more and more exceedingly an eternal weight of glory," (2 Cor. 4: 17.) "Now unto him that is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think, according to the power that worketh in us, unto him be the glory in the church and in Christ Jesus unto all generations forever and ever. Amen." (Eph. 3: 20, 21.)

A Great Day.

BY MRS. NANNIE MATT WALLACE,

Tuesday, April 20, had been set for the breaking of the ground upon which will rest the administration building of the Arkansas Christian College, at Morrillton, Ark. The program had been planned to begin upon the arrival of the morning train, which brought the speaker of the day, Brother N. B. Hardeman, of Henderson, Tenn., and a host of visitors from various parts of Arkansas. The train was met by the reception committee, and visitors were assigned to waiting automobiles for conveyance to the place of program. The Morrillton Band favored the occasion with excellent music, and in every way the hospitality was perfect. It was an immense crowd that gathered on the beautiful forty-acre campus to be present at these ceremonies.

After effective preliminaries, Brother Hardeman was introduced, and for over an hour the audience listened to an appropriate address. This speech was a feast to the lovers of oratory, a credit to the speaker, and an honor to his State. After the program, dinner was in order, and it may be said that no visitor was served at a hotel, but all were royally entertained in the homes of the good people of Morrill-

The school is the realized ambition of Sister W. A. Hill, of Morrillton, whose husband encouraged this hope by offering an initiative bonus of ten thousand dollars upon condition that the membership of Arkansas would rally with a sufficient supplement to make the school possible. Brother O. E. Billingsley and Brother J. H. Blue, both of Arkansas, are soliciting funds for this great work. The membership of the State is responding admirably.

The people of Morrillton are due honorable mention for their generous efforts to induce the school to come to their town.

An especially enjoyable feature of the day was the presence of a number of Professor Hardeman's former students, alumnæ of the dear old Henderson school.

You Do More Work,

You are more ambitious and you get more enjoyment out of everything when your blood is in good condition. Impurities in the blood have a very depressing effect on the system, causing weakness, laziness, nervousness and sickness.

GROVE'S TASTELESS Chill TONIC restores Energy and Vitality by Purifying and Enriching the Blood. When you feel its strengthening, invigorating effect, see how it brings color to the cheeks and how it improves the appetite, you will then appreciate its true tonic value.

GROVE'S TASTELESS CHIII TONIC is not a patent medicine, it is simply IRON and QUININE suspended in Syrup. So pleasant even children like it. The blood needs Quinine to Purify it and IRON to Enrich it. These reliable tonic prop-erties never fail to drive out impurities in the blood.

The Strength-Creating Power of GROVE'S TASTELESS Chill TONIC has made it the favorite tonic in thousands of homes. More than thirty-five years ago, folks would ride a long distance to get GROVE'S TASTELESS Chill TONIC when a member of their family had Malaria or needed a body-building, strength-giving tonic. The formula is just the same today, and you can get it from any drug store. 60c per bottle.

CHURCH NEWS

Missouri.

St. Louis, May 10.—Sickness and an unusual amount of work during the last two or three months have pre-vented our making reports of the work in St. Louis as promptly as we should like to have done, and we trust that the brethren have not forgotten us in the work we have undertaken: in fact, we are assured that they have not, for some contributions and pledges to the support of the cause have been received continually during this time. The congregation is growing gradually, and I believe we have as faithful and zealous a lot of people as can be found. The membership is now about thirty-five, and we can depend on almost every one of them being at the Lord's-day services unless kept away by sickness or other unkept away by sickness or other un-avoidable circumstances. We can get the hall in which we meet, Hope Building, corner of Cherokee and Texas Avenues, for the one service only, Lord's-day morning; and this, of course, is a very serious handicap to building up the cause as should be done by more frequent meetings. Our lot has been purchased for the erection of a meetinghouse, and one hundred and fifteen of the two hundred and eighty subscriptions of one dollar per month for thirty-six months to raise a fund of ten thousand dollars with which to pay for the lot and erect the building have been secured. A deed of trust for thirty-five hundred dollars on the lot will be due on June 23 and funds are now on hand with which to pay the interest and make a payment of five hundred dollars on the principal, leaving a balance of three thousand dollars, for which a new deed of trust will be given. In addition to the one hundred and fifteen subscriptions of one dollar per month, we have received a number of cash contributions and many good letters of encouragement from the brethren throughout the country; and we hope to have the building fund fully assured by the time there is sufficient change in market prices for building material and labor conditions toward a normal level to justify proceeding with the construction. Brethren, if you would like to have further information before you agree to con-tribute, either of the following-elders, deacons, members of the congregation, preachers-will be glad to write you fully upon request: Dr. J. W. Pruett, 6006 Virginia Avenue; P. B. Johnson, 2842 Lafayette Avenue; George Miller, 5071 Arlington Avenue; J. M. Snow, 4847 Page Avenue; J. W. Atkinson, 4757 Northland Avenue: Atkinson, 4757 Northland Avenue: W. W. Moody, 3667 Botanical Avenue, St. Louis, Mo.; John T. Hinds, Rogers, Ark.; A. M. Foster, Muskogee, Okla. Do you realize that if only one of every hundred who read this would respond promptly that he may counted as a contributor of one dollar per month to St. Louis, the amount of the balance now necessary would be far more than subscribed and the ten thousand dollars paid in probably less than half of the thirty-six months. Will you not make up your mind right that you will be the one of a hundred readers to become a contributor to St. Louis, and thereby finish

Hollis, May 1 .- Since last report I have baptized here a Methodist woman and a man just before his death. Recently Brother John preached several good sermons for us, and I was with the good church at Altus in Brother Rice's stead. Brother Frank L. Cox, of Elk City, a fine young preacher, is with us in a good meeting, with three restorations to date.—O. M. Reynolds.

Muskogee, May 10.-Yesterday we had the largest attendance at the Ok-mulgee Church in its history. Our membership is very enthusiastic and earnestly at work. In addition to our regular Wednesday-evening meeting, which has been a feature of our work for a long time, we have also set aside Friday evenings for a young men's Bible class. We will have a two or three days' "preachers' meeting" with the church here about June 1, at which time Brother F. L. Rowe, publisher of the Christian Leader, Cincinnati, Ohio, will be with us. The exact date will be announced later. Brother A. M. Foster preached for us both times Sunday .- T. S. Bain.

Wagoner, May 10.—The meeting at the Brick Schoolhouse, three miles south of Wagoner, continues with in-terest. Large crowds yesterday. I will be here until Friday night. There are only three brethren here. hope to do some good. Brother C. L. Speir and Brother Williams will begin a meeting in Wagoner next week. do not have a brother in the town. Tennessee.

Dyersburg, May 12.—There are a few brethren in the Southeast corner of Dyer County that are trying to build a house to worship in. We have the lot bought and paid for, the deed having the restrictive clause in it; we have the lumber on the ground, partly paid for. The house will be thirty feet by forty feet. We need about two hundred dollars to pay for the lumber. Donations from brethren will be gratefully received and duly acknowledged.—J. L. Summitt.

Decherd, May 11.—I have just closed a good meeting at Whitwell, in Marion County. Eighteen were baptized and eight confessed their wrongs. Six of those baptized were Methodists. The church there was very much strengthended. I am at home this week. My wife is very ill. If she improves so I can leave her, I will go to Lea's Station to begin a meeting on the third Lord's day in this month, and will begin at Daus on the first Lord's day in June. Brother J. C. Mosley was with me at Whitwell and led the song service. Brother Thomas H. Burton Brother Thomas H. Burton visited us and preached a good sermon on the church. Brother Thomas Mosley was with us also .- R. E. L. Taylor.

Texas.

Terrell, April 28.—I have been laboring with the churches at Terrell since the first of October last. We have had a constant increase of interest. We have a beautiful white pressed-brick meetinghouse, not large, on the best-located lot in the city. There are about one hundred members, fine folks. This church has had a hard struggle, and now our outlook is hopeful. On the second Sunday we had one to put her membership with us. On the third Sunday two were baptized. The following Thursday night one more was baptized. The harvest seemed was baptized. The narvest ripe for an ingathering of souls. We decided to protract our efforts. called, by telephone, Brother J. S. Dunn to come and do the preaching in our meeting, and V. O. Teddlie to do the leading for our song services. Our meeting is one week old, with the best attendance the church has had in her history, interest fine, and ten have been baptized. We are having a fine meeting.-John E. Dunn.

Mulliniks.

Sister Josephine Whitfield Mulliniks died on March 29, 1920, at the home of her daughter, Sister Jennie Smith, in Waverly, Tenn. She was born on March 20, 1854; obeyed the gospel in 1874; and was married, to John P. Mullinike, in 1875. John P. Mulliniks, in 1875. Four children were born to this union. Her husband died five years ago. All her children survive her. Sister Mulli-niks was a faithful servant of the Lord, so far as we can know. While her children and friends mourn the loss, Paul says: "Ye sorrow not, even as others which have no hope." Her body was laid to rest in the cemetery at Bakerville, Tenn. John Taxlos.

Speegle.

Oscar Speegle, a most excellent young man and worthy Christian, died at the home of his father, at a thridge, Tenn., on April 19, 1920, aged twenty-two years. Oscar had been in poor health for some time. His father took him West to prolong his life if results. his life, if possible. When the young man saw the end approaching, he wanted to come back to his childhood home and die among the people that knew him best and loved him most. His wants were all supplied by tender hands and loving hearts, and he died happy "in the Lord." Funeral at the happy "in the Lord." Funeral at the home by the writer. His body now rests by the side of his mother's grave in the Kidd graveyard. We sympathize with the bereaved in their loss, which we believe to be his gain. T. C. King.

Paisley.

Sister Jessie Taylor was born and reared at Metropelis, III., and it was there that she was baptized into Christ at the hands of Brother A. O. Colley. On December 24, 1917, she was married to Brother F. L. Paisley. To this union was born one child, little Edith Pauline, whose life at its mother's breast was measured by less than one hour. A few days after the death of hour. A few days after the death of little Edith Pauline, and on April 5, 1920, Sister Paisley entered into rest. Brother Lowrey and I held funeral services here, after which the body was shipped to Sister Paisley's girlhood home, where, surrounded by sorrewing friends and relatives, it was laid to rest after services conducted by Brother Charley Taylor. How near heaven must seem to Brother Paisley now! C. A. Norber.

Carr.

George W. Carr was born on January 7, 1844, and died on November 6, 1919. He was married to Miss Ollie Carr on September 7, 1871. To this union were born four daughters, of which only three—Beulah, Cassie, and Mabel grew to womanhood. One daughter (Mrs. J. L. Cutchin.

On June 17, 1844, near Salem, Ill., there was occasion for rejoicing in the there was occasion for rejoicing in the Cutchin home when the Lord gave to them a little boy named "Martin," or M. V., who, with his parents, twelve years later, moved to Lavergne, Tenn., around which place he spent the remainder of his very useful life. At the age of twenty-one, at the old Seminary Schoolhouse, near Smyrpa. inary Schoolhouse, near Smyrna, Tenn, under the teaching of Brother E. G. Seweil, he obeyed the gospel. On February 19, 1878, Brother Todd performed the ceremony which united him with Miss Harriet Booker, with whom he lived very happily until whom he lived very happily until March 9, 1910, when she went to a better home. Brother Cutchin was indeed a godly man. In fact, I do not believe there has ever been a character in our country who loved and lived for the cause of Christ more than he. His last years were spent in the homes of Brother John Britten and Brother W. E. Carter, whose good wives were related to him and who spared no pains in making him comfortable. During the last eight years he spent considerable time with me in pro-tracted meetings, usually about eight meetings each year. We roomed and slept together, and he was always glad of an opportunity of doing something for the Master. He suffered much in his last days, but never too much to keep him away from the Lord's day worship, even when it took two men to carry him to the car and into the church house. His last Lord's day was spent serving his God at Rock Springs, near Smyrna, while Brother Sim Jones was engaged in a meeting, and that day he made a short talk. The next day, August 25, 1919, just after finishing his dinner in Brother Britton's home, he crossed his knife and fork on the plate, his head dropped on the table, and he fell asleep in Jesus. Then we could see the beauty of God's statements: "Better is the day of a man's death than that of his birth." "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints." Surely Brother Cutchin is at rest; and while we miss him greatly, we submit to God's will and rejoice with "Brother Martin," Let's go to him. Let's go to him. R. V. Cawthon.

For more than Forty Years Cotton Growers have known that

POTASH PAYS

More than 11,651,200 Tons of Potash Salts had been imported and used in the United States in the 20 years previous to January, 1915, when shipments ceased. Of this 6,460,700 Tons consisted of which the cotton grower knew was both a plant tood and a preventive of blight and rust, -with it came also 1,312,400 Tons of which has the same effect on Cotton, but which was used mainly in mixed fertilizers.

Shipments of both Kainit and Manure Salt have been resumed but the shortage of coal and cars and high freight rates make it more desirable to ship Manure Salt, which contains 20 per cent of actual Potash, instead of Kainit, which contains less than 13 per cent actual Potash.

MANURE SALT can be used as a side dressing on Cotton in just the same way as Kainit and will give the same results. Where you used 100 pounds of Kainit, you need to use but 62 pounds of Manure Salt, or 100 pounds of Manure Salt go as far as 161 pounds of Kainit.

MANURE SALT has been coming forward in considerable amounts and cotton growers, who cannot secure Kainit, should make an effort to get Manure Salt for side dressing to aid in making a big cotton crop.

Muriate of Potash

50 per cent actual Potash, has been coming forward also,—100 pounds of Muriate are equivalent to 400 pounds of Kainit or 250 pounds of Manure Salt.

These are the three

Standard GERMAN Potash Salts

that were always used in making cotton fertilizers and have been used for all these years with great profit and without any damage to the crop.

The supply is not at present as large as in former years, but there is enough to greatly increase the Cotton Crop if you insist on your dealer making the necessary effort to get it for you.

An Important Letter

Chattanooga, Tenn.—"About five years ago my health became impaired due to my having feminine trouble. I vas croubled with irregularities and had back-aches, pains in my side, and pains shoot-down into my ing lower limbs. I was extremely nervous, could not eat or sleep. I was so weak and rundown that I could scarcely get around to do anything when I was advised to try Doctor Pierce's medicines. I took the 'Favorite Prescription' and the 'Golden Medical Discovery' alternately, the 'Favorite Prescripton' for the feminine trouble and the 'Golden Medical Discovery' for blood and to clear my system of the impurities, and the combined use of these medicines completely cured me and restored me to perfect health."

Letter to Brother Farmer.

Bloomington Springs, Tenn., April 14, 1920.—G. W. Farmer, Cleveland, Tenn.—Dear Brother in Christ: Your reports of the church work at Cleveland always appeal to me, probably more so because Brother and Sister F. M. Little went from our county over there; another reason is because you were my teacher when I was but a child and gave me so many good, practical lessons that have been so helpful to me; and last, but not least, it was you that buried me with my Lord in baptism and earnestly admonished me to ever be true to the cause I had embraced. So all of these things make me doubly interested in the work over there.

I am sending you a check for five dollars. It is one-tenth of one of the fifty dollars' worth of barter and poultry I have sold. I wish every sister could see that it is right to give a tenth, at least, of what they make. If they could, we alone could take the world for Christ. Use this little for anything that you can to help extend the cause of Christ.

When you see Mrs. Farmer, please remember me to her, and tell her ! would like so well to see her. She was always so kind to me. Present my kindest regards to Brother and Sister Little, if you ever see them.

Wishing you much success in your work, I remain, Your old student,

Mrs. Annie Lee Bartlett.

There is no more sympathetic car than our Lord's into which to speak our woe; but he does more than simply hear. He puts strength in us to bear the burden until its unloading comes.—Selected.

The New Administration.

Filled with a sense of grave responsibility and moved with an ardent desire to make the very best of a glorious epportunity, the new administration for David Lipscomb College takes up the reins of government. Did we not believe that God would answer our prayer for wisdom and guidance and that there would follow the friendly and sympathetic cooperation of friends and patrons, we would not essay the task. The many assurances of support already received encourage us to take heart and press forward.

The new administration is keenly appreciative of the good that has been accomplished in the past through dint of toil and patient sacrifice. David Starr Jordan says: "The sane, strong, brave, heroic souls of all ages were the men who, in the natural order of things, have lived above all considerations of pay or glory." Those who have done the best for this school have been of this type. knowledge a debt of gratitude to every president, to every trustee, to every teacher, to every patron, to every friend, to every pupil who has helped to make David Lipscomb College what it is. Our task is but to carry forward a work that was begun humbly, but which has grown from year to year and which promises much for the future. So long as we can contribute to the pleasure, happiness, or comfort of any human being, we are of importance in the world, and no longer. Our God is not only a sovereign, but a servant. We grow into his likeness when we seek to become the servant of all.

The Old Standard.

The teaching of the Bible has always been given a place of supreme importance in this institution. Its supreme purpose, as set forth in the charter, "shall be to teach the Bible as the revealed will of God to man and as the only and sufficient rule of faith and practice, and to train those who attend in a pure Bible Christianity, excluding from the faith all opinions and philosophies of men, and from the work and worship of the church of God all human inventions and devices." At the same time the charter provides for such other branches of learning "as will aid in the understanding and teaching of the Scriptures and as will promote usefulness and good citizenship among men." That this wise policy will be continued may be stated with absolute certainty. It shall be practiced in the classroom and out of it; for no matter how much the human mind may progress in intellectual culture, in the science of nature, in breadth and depth, it will never be able to rise above the elevation and moral culture of Christianity as revealed in the Bible.

Education may be carried on without any aid from religion and without any recognition of God; but a godless education cannot develop moral character in the educated, and the object of all education is to secure, not intellectual development merely, but even more—a lofty type of moral character in the educated man. By holding to the Bible standard, schools are enabled not only to give due recognition to God and due emphasis to the value of the moral ideal in education, but to attract and guide and command the attention of the educated and thinking men, and thus influence more effectively than would otherwise be possible the highest and best thought of the world.

For this reason we contend that David Lipscomb College honors its curriculum by giving the Bible a place of supreme importance and requiring Bible study of every student.

All Men Believe in Education.

It is a rare thing in these days of all but universal enlightenment to find an open enemy of education. It has been demonstrated so many times in the world's history that the educated man is superior to the ignorant in everything that it is a useless waste of time and worry of patience to undertake to prove that education is necessary to the attainment of a person's highest and best achievement in life. In no department of human endeavor can a man do his best, attain his highest, without education. And this is but right, because education is the development of a man—his unfolding, his "leading out," to borrow the Latin meaning of the word; and whatever contributes to this end must needs add to man's capacity to do more and be more than he otherwise could do or be.

But while we appreciate education, while we would not discount it in the least, while we would strive to realize its fullest possible good in our own life, yet we cannot escape the fact that there are dangers connected with its getting, with the processes of it, that challenge our thought and compel our attention. Have we not known education to ruin men and women? Did not our parents or our guardians, did not many of us ourselves, ponder long what college we should attend? Did not we and they realize that choosing the college that is to be the scene of a young person's mental training ground is one of the weightiest issues of life and carries with it great possibilities-possibilities of both good and evil-of danger and of safety to youth? Are not many of the loved ones at home at this very hour asking the same anxious question propounded the messengers by King David in regard to his brilliant, but dissolute, son: "Is the young man Absalom safe?" Is my son safe? Is my daughter safe? Catalogue of David Lipscomb College will be sent upon request.

Letters of Commendation.

BY F. W. SMITH.

It is seldom that I publish letters commending my feeble efforts in trying to teach and contend for the truth of God. I receive from time to time such letters, and, as a matter of courtesy to the writers, would like to make a public acknowledgment of them; but there are the "professional critics," who would say: "Listen to Smith blow his horn!" However, at the risk of being criticized, I shall give to our readers two letters recently received:

Chattanooga, Tenn., May 10, 1920.—Mr. F. W. Smith. Nashville, Tenn.—Dear Brother: Allow me to express my appreciation of and thanks for your editorial in the Gospel Advocate of April 29 on "Distinguishing Between Things That Differ." which I have read with interest and profit.

In my travels over the country I observe the sentiment that seems to favor the neutral position regarding the "speculative movement," on which much has been written, But the truth, which is easily seen from the reading of your article in connection with the New Testament, is that the position of the opponents of the speculation is not the opposite extreme of those favoring the speculation, no more so than is the position opposing sprinkling for baptism the opposite extreme of the position favoring it; for there is New Testament authority for the opposition at this point and a neutral position on the question plainly manifests a failure to "distinguish between things that differ."

And in harmony with your article in the issue of April 8 on "Destructive vs. Constructive," when confending for and teaching the truth takes on the form of controversy, participating in it on the part of brethren who have ability and opportunity is not a mere privilege that may or may not be exercised, but to them it is a duty. Even in the discharge of this duty by brethren teaching through the columns of the religious journals, there is actually. I am sorry to know, a sentiment, and I think a large one, in the church, opposed to this most effective way of teaching on the grounds that bitterness and the wrong spirit are manifested in the controversies.

Here, again, is a failure to distinguish between controversy and bitterness. Even if it is a fact that bitterness has been manifested in controversy, that fact does not make controversy wrong; it only makes the guilty individual wrong. On the principle that that fact makes controversy wrong, then what would be right?

Some of the opposition to religious controversy is, I think, attributable to mistaking enthusiasm for bitterness, and some of it, no doubt, for another reason. On behalf of readers of the papers who are just thus mistaken, I would like to see more teaching from you on this subject in the hope that all may see that puncturing error is in the interest of the truth, even though it may appear unpleasant at the time, and that all enthusiastic statements and "red faces" are not manifestations of bitterness.

Finally, may we all, in the right spirit and in the fear of God, "contend earnestly for the faith which was once for all delivered unto the saints." P. W. STONESTBEET.

It is encouraging to know that thoughtful, capable, and godly men like Brother Stonestreet will thus stand by and strengthen the hands of one who is trying to teach the truth, not only against downright error and perversion of God's word, but also against the sickly sentimentalism that possesses so many members of the church. There are very many people in the church who, because of a blind and foolish infatuation, will uphold, defend, and encourage religious teachers in the propagation of the rankest errors. Such people array themselves with all of their influence against men and papers who are doing exactly what God has commanded-viz.: "Contend earnestly for the faith which was once for all delivered unto the saints." (Jude 3,) Well, as for myself, I intend, despite all adverse criticism, so long as I can wag my tongue or use my pen, to contend for the truth of God Brother David Lipscomb, some twenty years ago, when asked to recommend a preacher for a certain place where conditions were not the best, said: "Get F. W. Smith, for he has no better sense than to tell it just as it should be." I regard that as the greatest compliment ever paid me as a preacher. I thank Brother Stonestreet for his encouraging words.

Henderson, Tenn., May 11, 1920.—Mr. F. W. Smith. Nashvitte, Tenn.—Dear Brother Smith: I want to commend to the student of the Bible your article on "Distinguishing Between Things That Differ" in the Gospel Advocate of April 29, last. It is gospel truth well told in the light of this splendid writing, how do you account for Peter, in Acts 1, understanding that the time had come for a probecy of Jebovan to be fulfilled? Was he fulfilling the prophecy. "His bishropic let another take," when they chose Matthias to take the place of Judas? If so, may we not understand beforehand just when, how, and where God's prophecies are to be fulfilled? Answer in the Gospel Advocate if you think right and good. A. G. Freen.

The foregoing from one of the greatest educators in the South, as well as one of the ablest preachers and debaters in the church of Christ, is very much appreciated, and to the best of my ability I shall attempt to answer the questions he propounds.

I account for Peter's understanding the time had come to choose one to take the place from which Judas by transgression had fallen, by the aid of the Holy Spirit. He, with the other apostles, had received a measure of the Spirit before Pentecost. They were endowed with miraculons power when sent out under the first commission: "And as ye go, preach, saying, The kingdom of beaven is at hand. Heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, raise the dead. cast out demons: freely ye received, freely give," (Matt. 10; 7, 8.) Christ also said to the apostles: "But when they deliver you up, he not anxious how or what ye shall speak: for it shall be given you in that hour what ye shall speak. For it is not ye that speak, but the Spirit of your Father that speaketh in you," (Matt. 10: 19, 20.) This shows that they had a measure of the Spirit before Pentecost. Again, after Christ arose from the dead, he met with the apostles, and "he breathed on them, and saith unto them, Receive ye the Holy Spirit: whosesoever sins ye forgive, they are forgiven unto them; whosesoever sins ye retain, they are retained." (John 20: 22, 23.) Under the influence and by the aid of this inbreathing of the Holy Spirit by the Master, Peter was enabled to interpret the prophecy which he quoted from the book of Psalms (Acts 1: 20) regarding one to fill the vacancy made by the fall of Judas. The whole transaction in the selection of Matthias to fill the place was approved of God, and he as certainly became an apostle as Peter himself. The fuller measure of the Spirit which came upon the apostles on the day of Pentecost was a greater external manifestation of the miraculous than ever before, and was given to meet new requirements that did not exist before. Their commission was now world-wide-to all nations-and they needed new and many tongues, or languages, to meet the demand. They themselves needed credentials confirming their message of an extraordinary nature. We must not forget the fact, too, that Jesus taught the apostles many things during his personal ministry of which we have no record, and It would be within the bounds of reason to suppose that he taught them some things regarding such an important thing that would take place after his death. It is said during the forty days and nights that he was with them after the resurrection; "To whom he also showed himself alive after his passion by many proofs, appearing unto them by the space of forty days, and speaking the things concerning the kingdom of God." (Acts 1: 3.) To the question, "If so, may we not understand beforehand just when, how, and where God's prophecies are to be fulfilled?" I answer, No. This was never the prerogative of any, save those aided by the Holy Spirit, and even the prophets themselves making predictions for future fulfillment did not understand their own utterances. "Receiving the end of your faith, even the salvation of your souls. Of which salvation the prophets have inquired and searched diligently, who prophesied of the grace that should come unto you: searching what, or what manner of time the Spirit of Christ which was in them did signify, when it testified beforehand the sufferings of Christ, and the glory that should follow. Unto whom it was revealed, that not unto themselves, but unto us they did minister the things, which are now reported unto you by them that have preached the gospel unto you with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven; which things the angels desire to look into." (1 Pet, 1: 9-12.) The cherubim on the mercy seat were typical of the angels in heaven desiring to look into and understand the unfulfilled things of God, but, in so far as we know, presumed not to be wise enough to tell. But there are those who walk boldly over ground on which angels feared to tread. Again, Christ said: "But blessed are your eyes, for they see: and your ears, for they hear. For verily I say unto you, That many prophets and righteous men have desired to see those things which ye see, and have not seen them; and to hear those things which ye hear, and have not heard them." (Matt. 13: 16, 17.) These prophets and righteous men understood that good things were to come to the world, but knew not of the how, what, and when. The whole Jewish nation, who had the law and the prophets taught in their homes and synagogues, were unable to correctly interpret even while being fulfilled before their very eyes. The mighty Saul of Tarsus, before his conversion and inspiration, could not interpret the prophecies of the Old Testament. Let us be satisfied with plainly revealed facts.

"The Spirit and Principles of the New Digressives."

Several weeks ago I wrote an article on this subject in the Review, in which I referred to their work in Denver, Col., showing that they had voted men into the office of elder at that place, one of them being a bachelor. I said that J. C. McQuiddy, managing editor of the Gospel Advocate, and owner of the McQuiddy Printing Company, which puts out the Quarterlies used by those people, indorsed this proceeding.

Brother McQuiddy says that if I had been correctly informed, I would not have made reference to his work at Denver. As I am now at Denver and have the privilege of talking to about twenty disciples who were present, I think I have a correct statement of the facts. These brethren say I was telling the truth.

There was a division in sentiment in Denver over the "Bible college" question and the one-man paster system which had been in vogue here for many years; and the brethren opposed to such, seeing it would create confusion to try to appoint elders, proposed that six brethren be appointed to be leaders in the church till such time as they might have the qualifications of elders or deacons. Mc-Quiddy says that he was "astounded" at such a suggestion, because of its unscripturalness. I see nothing unscriptural in such a procedure, but consider it entirely scriptural. After speaking of the elders, Paul speaks of the deacons and says: "And let these also first be proved." (1 Tim. 3: 10.) How are you going to prove, or try, a man for an office unless you permit him to do the work of that office for a while? And notice that Paul says that the elders as well as the deacons should be tried. I believe, and have stated it in my book, "The Church of Christ," that it is well to have men do the work of elders and deacons for a while before being permanently appointed to that position. This is certainly a safe plan, and the faithful brethren at Denver were proposing something which was entirely scriptural, regardless of McQuiddy's astonishment, and which they thought might bring harmony. It seems that his astonishment was so great because this scriptural plan was not in harmony with their cut-and-dried plan to put an old bachelor into the office of bishop.

The faithful brethren proposed one of the college element for chairman because he was a fair-minded man, but bachelor John D. Evans pulled his ropes and had himself put in as chairman. He called McQuiddy to the chair to take his place when he himself spoke-McQuiddy, who was not a member of the congregation. Twenty brethren say McQuiddy was unjust in his rulings, even going contrary to his own rulings in order to favor the college element. When a vote was called for elders, the faithful brethren would have nothing to do with it; so the college element voted their elders in-one of them being John D. Evans, an old bachelor. McQuiddy made no protest against this, though he made protest against everything he could, proposed by the faithful brethren. When accused after meeting by Brother Peck, he defended the whole proceedings. Publicly as well as privately he said this bachelor was a God-given elder. McQuiddy's brethren here were pleased with his work, as he himself says, which they would not have been had he not indersed their voting and electing an old bachelor to the office of elder. Say what he pleases, J. C. McQuiddy, managing editor of the Gospel Advocate and owner of the publishing company which puts out the quarterlies used by the South, indorsed voting for elders, and indersed an old bachelor for elder-two things which are rank departures from the word of God.

The tactics used by these new digressives-for we can call them nothing else when they indorse such departures from God's word-were the same as the old digressives when they introduced instrumental music many years ago. They gathered up all the old backsliders they could find, many of whom had been absent for many months and some of whom had been absent practically for years. Yes, faithful brethren were outnumbered with all these backsliders; but there is now a fine band of brethren, twenty-four in number, meeting at Eighth and Ogden Streets, who do not believe in human organizations of "Bible colleges" and orphan homes to rob the church of its work and glory ("Unto him [God] be glory in the church"), and who don't believe in voting for elders and putting old bachelors into such office. All who believe in the Bible way of church government, work and worship, are invited to attend; but those who believe in these departures from God's word will have to hunt the bunch which Brother McQuiddy helped mightily to crystallize.

While we are on this subject, I will say that J. F. Smith in the Gospel Herald (Armstrong's paper) takes me to task for accusing all the college people because McQuiddy indorsed such departures, and says that Jesse F. Love gave a boost to a church which had recently voted in elders and had had Y. C. W. classes, and says that we are inconsistent. But this brother would better reason a little. For a man to speak well of a church of which he might not have known that the elders were voted on, etc., and for a man to go and help a church put through such stunts as McQuiddy did here in Denver, are two things quite different. I said that McQuiddy's acts showed the spirit and principles of the new digressives because he is as prominent a man as they have—is a representative man in every way. A fountain can rise no higher than its source.

Brother McQuiddy gloatingly says: "It appears that Brother Sommer's friends got beat at their own game." This shows that McQuiddy considered it a sort of political coup, and rejoices that they were not beaten. Brother McQuiddy has rendered a valuable service to the cause of pure Christianity. Being one of the most prominent men among the "Bible college" advocates, he has shown that the old brother was right when he said to Daniel Sommer: "Brother Sommer, these college people are another people"—yes, they are the new digressives.—D. Austen Sommer.

Bright Prospects at Abilene.

BY J. P. SEWELL,

Prospects have never been brighter for Abilene Christian College than at this time.

This is our first session as a four-year college. Four hundred and twenty-eight students have been enrolled. Excellent work is being done. A fine spirit prevails. The spiritual vitality of the institution has never been better. It has been graded A plus.

At a meeting of the trustees recently, with not half of the members present, twenty-six thousand two hundred and fifty dollars was raised in units of thirty-seven hundred and fifty dollars each. Since that time the members of the college church have brought the total up to thirty-eight thousand nine hundred and ninety-eight dollars. All of this amount is from members of our local congregation, except seventy-five hundred dollars. Other nice gifts are being secured. The campaign will be pushed as vigorously and rapidly as possible until funds sufficient to care properly for this great work are secured.

We recently purchased three and one-half acres of additional ground and two good houses and lots. A deal has just been closed for five acres with a large, beautiful, brick building.

Prospects for the summer quarter are good, and we confidently expect the enrollment to reach more than five hundred for the year. We can easily have six hundred students for next year if we can have room for them. Surely, you, my brethren and sisters, will not allow these hundreds of boys and girls to be turned away from daily Bible study, Christian training and influence, to denominationalism, destructive higher criticism, etc., because of a lack of things that can be bought with money, when there is so much money. We do not think so. Our Father has plenty of money, and we believe he will give it to us for the service of these fine boys and girls. Won't you ask him to give us all we need—all we will use for his honor? Won't you be ready when called on to join in this campaign?

Gospel Trumpet Blasts.

BY A. A. BUNNER.

"And Jesus came and spake unto them, saying, All power is given anto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore. and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." (Matt. 28: 18-20.) "And he said unto them, Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved: but he that believeth not shall be damned." (Mark 16: 15, 16.) "And said unto them, Thus it is written, and thus it behooved Christ to suffer, and to rise from the dead the third day: and that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem." (Luke 24: 46, 47.)

God, our Heavenly Father, and our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, the great Head of the church, has laid down no ironclad, stereotyped plan or plans, method or methods, of carrying the gospel to all peoples of all lands in the great Guidebook which they have given us for our guidance in all matters pertaining to the great work of converting and saving the fallen sons and daughters of Adam's race. Any method that does not contravene any command or appointment of God and that will enable his people to reach with the gospel the unsaved of any community or nation and bring them into the marvelous light and Hberty of the sons of God is open to those who do that work, and this proves that method to be acceptable to God, the Father, and his Son, and the Holy Spirit puts the seal of God upon that work by teaching the church to stand behind the work and to its utmost to support the work. (See Eph. 3: 21; Phil. 1: 3, 4, 5; 4: 14, 15, 16; 1 Thess, 1: 6, 7, 8.) Every so-called congregation of Christ that will not give its moral, spiritual, and financial support unstintingly to every work of God to the full extent of its ability that is in harmony with God's appointments, will die of dry rot, if it does not repent; and the sooner, the better for the cause for which Jesus died. The professed Christian that will not do all in his power to save his fellow man is unsaved himself and is in need of conversion. While I live I want to do all that I can to help save the lost. It matters not to me whether the lost one has white, black, or coppercolored skin, he is lost in sin and needs the salvation which is in Christ, and I want to do all that I can to reach him with the gospel; and whoever I find among the classes named that manifests the greatest readiness to receive the gospel, these are the ones that I mean to go after first. This was Paul's motto. (See Acts 13: 46.)

I never in all my life remember of having said of even my bitterest enemies that "it would be a blessing to the cause of Christ if God would take them out of the world." I never wanted to sit in the temple of God showing myself as God. To make use of such expressions is presumptuous sin and saying to the Lord: "Lord, I know better what would be best for your cause in this world than you do; and if I had the running of affairs. I would manage them quite differently from the way you do." Let us all be satisfied to not only do with our might what the Lord requires us to do, but be willing to leave his work and what he ought to do in his own hands, and it will be done right. As long as there is a son of disobedience in this world, just that long will Satan find men and women to do his work. Let us, then, take the gospel of Christ and get after all of God's enemies that we can and convert and save all of them, thereby making friends of the Lord of them. All who are out of Christ are recognized as God's enemies and belong to the camp of the great enemy of souls. If God would even take our bitterest enemies out of the world to-day, Satan has plenty of material in the world to work on, and he would raise up others equally as bitter for to-morrow. The best way to kill and get your enemy out of the world is to "heap coals of fire on his head." Kill him with the sword of the Spirit, if possible; if not, then "let them alone," and "cast not your pearls before swine." I hope to see better days in the not distant future for the church and her glorious work.

Contentment.

BY H. C. FLEMING.

To be contented is the secret of happiness. Whoever is discontented is always unhappy, and many evil results follow. "But godliness with contentment is great gain. . . . Having food and raiment let us be therewith content. But they that will be rich fall into temptation and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts, which drown men in destruction and perdition." (1 Tim. 6: 6-9.)

But we are sometimes told that being contented with feod and raiment would cause us to become indolent and lazy, with no ambition to make any progress in advancement. But this is a great mistake, especially to the Christian, for Paul says to be "not slothful in business; fervent in spirit; serving the Lord; rejoicing in hope; patient in tribulation; continuing instant in prayer; distributing to the necessity of saints; given to hospitality." (Rom. 12: 11-13.) Obedience to this will leave no room for indolence or laziness; but will keep every Christian well employed, which is a great preventive against discontent. A lazy man, to say nothing of a Christian, is almost a nonentity. Solomon says: "Slothfulness casteth into a deep sleep; and an idle soul shall suffer hunger." (Prov. 19: 15.) "I went by the field of the slothful, and by the vineyard of the man void of understanding; and, lo, it was all grown over with thorns, and nettles had covered the face thereof, and the stone wall thereof was broken down." (Prov. 24: 30, 31.) From these scriptures we can understand that when Paul said, "Having food and raiment let us be therewith content," he did not mean for us to indulge ourselves in "yet a little sleep, a little slumber, a little folding of the hands to sleep: so shall thy poverty come as one that traveleth; and thy want as an armed man" (Prov. 24: 33, 34), but, quite the contrary, to be content in our conditions if we have the necessaries of life, without striving after those things which bring us destruction and perdition. "For we brought nothing Into this world, and it is certain we can carry nothing out." "That ye be not slothful, but followers of those who through faith and patience inherit the promises."

Discontent has brought the world to its present conditions of both capital and labor: the greed of man for those things which are unnecessary, and the oppression of the poor; the unrest of those desiring greater wages and less labor; the class legislation demanded for that purpose, regardless of the effect it will have upon others. This is not progress nor advancement, but retrogression. The following quotation expresses this better than I can: "'It is not in man that walketh to direct his steps.' This is the direct statement of the prophet. Man has never been capable. within himself, of inventing a remedy that will even meet his own needs in human life. The men and nations who have left God out of their work have proved a signal failure. This is the truth about the Jews, the Romans, and the Greeks, as nations. A man may prosper and be an infidel, but an infidel nation cannot be a prosperous nation. I challenge you to cite one-just one." The truth of this quotation no man can successfully question. Then why try to right wrongs by human inventions? Why not be content with affairs which we have no power to control? Why not heed the law of the Lord in prayer and supplication for his watch care and protection, thereby becoming contented and happy? For the promise is: "I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee." Although we may suffer in this life, this promise will be fulfilled in the life to come, to those who are faithful and trust the God of our salvation. Therefore, let us rejoice in the hope of rest with the people of God-hope of rest in heaven; and let us be content with such things as our Lord knows is best for us to have.

Putting New Clothes on Old Sermons.

BY J. B. NELSON.

Every minister of the gospel of Christ owes it to himself, to the church, and to his God to give to his audience the very best he can every time he appears before the public. If I am employed to teach school, I am both duty-bound and honor-bound to do my very best to see that every child understands the things gone over. It is the duty of every man to render the very best service possible to his employer. A man who will loaf on a job, longing for quitting time and full pay at the end, is a dishonest man. I have known mechanics, laborers, clerks, etc., to do just enough service to "get by." To loaf on your employer and then expect full pay is just as dishonorable as to borrow money from him and then refuse to pay back. It seems to me that it is almost theft.

A preacher who goes to fill an appointment and does not give to the audience his very best upon whatever theme he considers, regardless of the size of the audience, is not doing his full duty. You owe it to every place you go to keep your sermons clothed in your very best thoughts. Some men preach sermons that they preached ten and twenty years ago in the same old dress, verbatim et literatim. This is not dealing honestly with all concerned. I made it a rule when I started out to preach to try to improve on every sermon every time I preached it. I try to eliminate superfluous phrases, etc. This method helps me as well as the audience; and the same sermon can be preached over and over and be appreciated. New illustrations and synonymous words and expressions help much in making the sermon appear in new dress.

Some things are told over and over until they become stale to the one who tells them. As a rule, the preacher who quits preaching generally quits studying first, his work becomes irksome, and he loses interest; but if he tries to put new clothes on old sermons, he becomes more and more interested in his work. My brother, you will play out as a preacher if you quit being a student. Count my words as true, or else give it a trial and you will find I am right.

"Therefore every scribe which is instructed unto the kingdom of heaven is like unto a man that is a householder, which bringeth forth out of his treasure things new and old." (Matt. 13: 52.)

Brother J. W. McGarvey commented on this passage as follows: "'Every scribe.' Not every Jewish scribe, but every disciple possessed of the information and powers of thought which would enable him to rank as the Jewish scribes did, 'Instructed unto the kingdom.' More correctly rendered by Mr. Green, 'schooled for the kingdom of heaven '-possessed of such instruction as fits him for a teacher in the kingdom of heaven. 'Things new and old.' The allusion is to the fact that a good householder, in entertaining his guests, brings forth from his treasure of provisions and drinks, both old articles long laid away for special occasions and new ones recently provided. So the Christian scribe or teacher brings forth for the instruction of his hearers both the old lessons with which he has long been familiar and new ones which he has recently acquired. While teaching others, he is himself a learner, and he is able, out of the new or the old, to find something suitable to every class of hearers."

I now quote from McGarvey and Pendleton's "Commentary on the Fourfold Gospel:" "As a householder graces his banquet with things already in the house and with other things which have just been provided, so a religious teacher must refresh his hearers out of both his past and his present experiences and study. Old lessons must be clothed in new garments.

I am very much of the opinion that if we preachers will bring out of God's storehouse things both new and old, we will solve the question of shortage in support, etc. I believe God has given in his Book the remedy to solve the question. So let every preacher preach to the brethren their duty, and do it in the spirit of Christ, and the brethren will rally to his support. We have the best brethren on earth. All they need to know is their duty: so wake up and teach more duty and complain less. I find that when churches are taught more on giving they give more So change the old garb of your sermon by getting up a better lesson. I suspect we all need to be instructed more unto the kingdom of heaven and less unto the kingdom of the world. Can I get an "amen?"

The Hidden Hand.

- I would go forward, stumbling through the dark, After my wayward will;
- A hidden hand withholds me suddenly. Firm, strong, and still.
- I would go back to what I left behind-The laughter and the night:
- The hidden hand quick grips me, turns me round Toward the light.
- I feel the red wound in its heating palm; And, though I cannot see,
- I guess that somewhere that deep bitter scar Was borne for me.
- For me, or such another as myself, Wounding, and pain, and loss, So I go forward, all the way of Love, -Lanchlan Maclean Watt.

Training Little Children

(Suggestions by mothers who have been kindergartners. Issued by The United States Bureau of Education, Washington, D. C., and The National Kindergarten Association, New York, N. Y.)

The Changing Order of Education.

Many changes are impressive in our day, but none more so than the great change that is taking place in our schools and in our whole attitude toward education. It is a hundred years since Froebel began to labor in the interest of freer education, but we are only beginning to apply his principles.

The interest of children cannot be held if they are taught in a cut-and-dried way. From early childhood they should be led into joyous activity. At first, only the parents stand by to help and sympathize; later, teachers, friends, and society assist. The early home influence is of great importance. Comenius, Froebel, and Rousseau studied mothers. They knew that the mother should be the first educator; they emphasized the importance of her sympathy and care, which, though it faltered and halted and fell pitiably short in many places, was necessary for right to start. Pestalozzi expressed this fact in the words: "Maternal love is the first agent in education."

In the ideal school of to-day we find the children choosing their own material, directing their own studies, learning indirectly rather than directly, getting their studies linked up with life, looking to the teacher for guidance. sympathy, and help as well as for actual instruction.

The school should be a sort of miniature world in which the child is prepared for life in the real world. In a kindergarten worthy of the name the child moves freely, though in obedience to law. In old-time schools, of which there are still far too many, he is confined by a sort of prisonlike rigidity.

The hatred of the average child for school is a real misfortune, for the child's natural instinct is to learn and know; that is why he is always asking questions-questions that we in our arrogance and impatience too often set aside.

But the school does not always answer the child's questions; does not always prepare him for life's work; does not usually make things interesting to him, although there is much more vocational training than formerly. The unknown must be linked with the known. Arithmetic in the abstract is uninteresting to any child; but having five cents to spend and knowing how to spend it, is a matter of practical experience.

The reason why the kindergarten method of education is superior is because it teaches the child through actual experience. As a parent, then, you wisely send your child to kindergarten. But you are not equally wise when, later on, you say: "O, Mary's school is all right; a school is a school, anyway!"

We have not all the advantages of schools where sympathy and imagination are used; and we know that most classes are overcrowded and that a teacher gets the best results when she works with small groups and in the right environment. But we all assist in molding the public opinion that shapes the schools and in paying the taxes that underpay teachers for the most important work in the world.

And until we carry the spirit of Froebel right up from the kindergarten through the grades and high school and college, we cannot expect to have the fine flowering of manhood and womanhood that is potential in our civiliza-0 0 0

There must be some suffering at the narrow door by which the imperiled and straitened soul passes through into liberty and rest. It is just as true of most of our richest gains, our noblest advancements in all spiritua! clear-sightedness and strength, that they are reached through pain and privation. It very rarely happens that we receive what we particularly need without being obliged to give up what we particularly prize. If the sacrifice is not laid upon us voluntarily by ourselves, it has to be laid on by a Hand more merciful than our own, and more concerned in our salvation. Trouble is the price of power. From one side of the globe to another, from the beginning to the end, the glory of the earth, the openings of its everlasting hope, are its valleys of trouble. The way to Christ's final majesty lies through the humiliations of pain. From Gethsemane to Calvary was the one true valley of Achor .-F. D. Huntington. 0 0 0

There are two ways of imitating a person-the one making that person our model; the other, our example. The first does the exact deeds, lives in the same way, dresses in the same colors, without regard to the differing circumstances, and this always leads to error. The other way is to imbibe the same spirit, to have the same character, and thus do what our example would have done in our circumstances. Almost nothing is said of what things Christ did as a boy or how he lived, lest we make him only a model, But we are shown his spirit of obedience, and goodness, and growth, that we may take him for our example .--S. T. S. Monich. 0 0 0

There is a dietagraph concealed on every man's soul. What he says and does and is, is duly recorded. This is his contribution to life, to humanity, to the universe, to God. Angels may keep their own set of books, but we ourselves are authors of our own book of life. Like Paul, we may bear in our bodies the marks of the Lord Jesus; certainly we bear in our souls the marks our own wills and choices have made. F. F. Shannon.

Victory in Death.

(In memory of Nathan M. Cox, of Baxter, Tenn.)

BY CLARA CON EPPERSON.

"O grave, where is thy victory? O death, where is thy sting?"

He made a valiant fight with Death And met him standing on his feet, As if his soul went out to greet With even his last struggling breath This merciless enemy, death: Then fell into the loving arms That had shielded him from life's harms With love throughout their wedded life, Devoted, tender, true—this wife, And thus he went to meet his God, A faithful soldier of the cross With soul purified of earthly dress, Like God's prophets in olden times, His faith proved to him a shield And sword to conquer sins of life, And through its trials, cares and strife Made strong to meet death unafraid, And Christ, whom he with love obeyed. While his body sleeps in death's chill. His spirit shines unconquered still; His body crumbles 'neath the sod, His radiant soul is with his God.

Georgia and the Far Southern Field

By S. H. HALL

The Work in Savannah.

It was my good pleasure to be with the "faithful few" at Savannali from May 3 to May 16. This was one of the most pleasant times I have ever had. These good people have in the persons of O. W. Rawlings and J. N. Copeland two of the best leaders a young congregation ever had. I have never met two men I loved more and in whom I had more confidence. Brother Copeland is a "Georgia bey," and was born and reared near Valdosta. His home congregation is Dasher. He is a good singer and preacher; and that he might stay with the Savannah work while it is struggling to get on its feet, he took a position where Brother Rawlings works and supports himself. In this he is to be most highly commended, and it shows that his heart is right before God. Brother Rawlings is from Nashville, Tenn., having married one of her best girls, to which union four bright and promising children have been born. Sister Rawlings was left an orphan and was reared by Sister Emma Page Larimore, and it was well done. I have never seen a family that has more favorably impressed me. Both Brother and Sister Rawlings are deeply interested in the work and are doing all they can to extend the cause in Savannah. Their oldest son is a member of the church, having been baptized last year while Brother Claus was at Savannah in a meeting. These are levely children, and it is easy to see that they have been under the influence of a father and mother who know the religion of our Lord and Saylor.

During my short stay four were baptized into Christ, two came out of Babylon, one was reclaimed, and two members who had been baptized by Brother W. A. Cameron years ago found us and began to work with us. The members were left much encouraged and determined to push the work right on to a glorious success.

We have arranged for Brother J. B. Beck, who recently graduated at the David Lipscomb College, to soon join them in the work. He will give his time wholly to the work, and will mean much to Brother Copeland in keeping in touch with the members, finding new homes where the gospel is needed and will be received. We are expecting the very best results and to see Savannah soon blessed with one of our best congregations.

Just here I would be glad to get the attention of those who love the cause of Christ and want to see it well established in every city and town, but who can do more than they are doing to accomplish this. We want you to join us for a twelve-months' hard pull in that city. We need some outside help for the local forces there till they can become firmly established. They have begun already to look for a permanent home. This they must have, and it will cost money to secure a good house of worship. Then Brother Beck has to be supported. At present they are meeting at Knight's Hall, second floor, on the corner of Duffy and Whitaker Streets. I would ask you to think of the Atlanta work. Fourteen years ago it had not the bright prospect that Savannah now has. My friends sent me here and helped to support me till a self-sustaining congregation could be established. We have one now that not only sustains itself, but has established two other self-sustaining congregations in this city, has helped to establish several others, and is now standing by a number of weak churches till they can get on their feet. Then think of Macon. When the Atlanta brethren sent me there for the first time, a more gloomy prospect I have never seen, and, it seems to me, a bigger failure I have never made. That has not been long ago-about six years. And now we have a congregation there with a house and lot paid for and the support secured for a man all of his time. We can do the same things in Savannah in less time than in Atlanta or at Macon. Who will join us in putting Savannah among the cities that have self-sustaining churches? The West End Avenue congregation sent me to Savannah at their expense. This congregation is willing to help support the work there till it is able to care for Itself. But in doing this, it means we will have to make an extra effort, for we have a place for all the money we are now giving. Will you help us? What individual or congregation will pledge so much a month for twelve months, beginning next month? Let me know at once, and I will give you directions how to send your offerings. We will expect you to send your offerings directly to Savannah, and you will receive monthly reports from them of the progress of the work. Please do not pass this appeal by without giving it the attention it deserves. I want the needed help for this work secured, so we can pass it up and go to another town

The Georgia Work in General.

It gives me no little pleasure to report that the Georgia work in general is at its best. J. B. Beck and A. R. Hill will soon be "lumbering" away in one of our best towns where we have just one member. Beck will be on his way to Savannah; Hill will be here for a three-months' stay to help us. R. P. Cuff will soon be at Dalton, and after hold ing a few more meetings will settle down in the central city of the State for all of his time Macon is to be congratulated in securing his services. "The faithful few" are now meeting at Moultrie, and among the number we have some who know how to stick and do things. We are expecting great success there. Prevatt, at this writing, is shelling the little town of Soperton. The daughter of Brother Robert L. White, of Lebanon, Tenn., lives there, and he is to help with the support of this meeting. Brethren R. L. Ludlam and Flavil Hall have been doing a great work at Carnesville and Baldwin. They make a fine team, and we are expecting them to accomplish great things in that section of our State. They have some opposition by those who want an instrument in worship, but Flavil can just sing that to death and go on. This is the way we have done it in Atlanta. If brethren would only be converted enough to learn how to sing, and sing songs with the gospel in them, the instrumental-music question would die of itself. Instead of this, some have not this much interest, and had as soon buy song books from a firm that is doing all it can do to put instrumental music in all the churches, and others from firms that support infant sprinkling and most of the other relies of Roman Catholicism. I see no sense in opposing the idea of infant sprinklers ocoupying our pulpits and preaching, just so they preach the truth while there, and in depending on them to furnish song books for our churches. Let all the churches learn to sing, and may the membership be taught to use only those words that carry the gospel truths to the souls of men.

No man can avoid his own company; so he would better make it as good as possible.

Wait not for some great cross to show

How much with patience thou canst bear;
Try now thy strength in bending low

To take the cross of daily care;
It may seem poor and small instead,
But it may yet more needful be
To train thee, first of all, to tread

The path of true humility.

AT HOME AND ABROAD U

F. W. Smith is in a good meeting at Winchester, Ky.

E. A. Elam is in the second week of a good meeting for the Grandview Heights congregation, this city.

A matron and a seamstress are needed at the Tennessee Orphans' Home. Address Mrs. Granville Lipscomb, Columbia, Tenn.

The brethren at Marvell, Ark., would like to get in touch with two teachers for a good rural school. Address W. E. Jackson, Marvell, Ark.

Hugh Miller is conducting a meeting in the Assembly Hall at the Liberty Mission on Howell Street, Rochester, N. Y. This is a worthy mission.

From D. S. Ligon, Denton, Texas, May 14: "I was with the church at Crandall last Lord's day. Since my sickness in the winter I have been visiting this place once a month. I am to begin a series of lectures at Kaufman soon."

From Cled E. Wallace, Temple, Texas, May 17: "The meeting just closed here resulted in eleven additions to the congregation—three baptized. The meeting was hindered by rains. Austin Taylor conducted the song service."

From W. G. Jernigan, Lebanon, Col., May 17: "The meeting at Delta closed on May 7. Eighteen were added to the congregation. I was there three weeks. I am now in a series of meetings at this place. This is purely a mission point."

We are glad to announce that E. L. Whitaker, of Henderson, Tenn., has been engaged to represent the Gospel Advocate. He is a good man, highly commended, and we bespeak for him a cordial reception wherever he may go. He will also handle books and church supplies.

From C. C. Brown, Micanopy, Fla., May 16: "I filled my appointment last Lord's day at Ferguson, with good interest. They began to-day to keep house for the Lord. Any one without a place to meet and near enough to meet with those people will receive a hearty welcome."

B. C. Goodpasture writes: "I closed a twelve-days' meeting at Highland Avenue Church, Montgomery, Ala, Friday night, May 14. There were six baptisms. Robert Alexander, the song leader, and J. H. McBroom, the regular minister of the church, were true helpers in the meeting."

From B. U. Baldwin, Shawnee, Okla., May 17: "G. A. Dunn closed a successful meeting with us last Friday. Six were baptized and ten took membership. His good work was highly appreciated by the congregation, and we all love him. Yesterday was a good day for us. One was reclaimed, five took membership, and one made the good confession."

From Ben West, Waxahachie, Texas, May 13: "The greatest meeting the Waxahachie church has ever had closed last night with thirty-four added. Twenty-three were baptized. Half the number were adults. The meeting continued over two Sundays. Brother Busby preaches the gospel with power. T. F. Stovall, of Dallas, did most excellent work in the music."

From H. R. Braden, South Pittsburg, Tenn., May 10: "Our meeting, which began two weeks ago, came to a close last night. The meeting was conducted by Elder E. H. Hoover, of Chattanooga, with A. L. Dixon, of Delrose, leading the song service. One was added and the church was much edified. One hundred and eight were present yesterday for Bible study."

From C. C. McQuiddy, Forest Hill, La., May 18: "The meeting which began here on Tuesday night, May 4, with J. E. Wainwright, of Texarkana, Texas, in the lead and the entire congregation in harness, closed last night. There were seven confessions and two restorations. Brother Wainwright preaches the truth in love with a burning zeal that men shall know the truth and be free indeed."

We were grieved at the news of the death of J. A. Sisco, whose home was near Salem, on Swan Creek, Hickman County, Tenn. He died at the home of his brother-in-law. Douglas Arnold, in Centerville, Thursday, May 13, death resulting from indigestion and complications. W. S. Morton, of Columbia, conducted the funeral from the church on Friday. Burial was in the Centerville Cemetery.

From R. E. Wright, Wartrace, Tenn.: "I still have time for a few meetings. I preached for the brethren at Jefferson on May 9. We have some good and faithful servants there. I have been preaching for them nearly three years monthly. Brother Wrye will hold their meeting, beginning on the first Sunday in July. The third Sunday in each month I preach for my old home congregation at Fairfield."

From T. W. Phillips, Fort Worth, Texas: "I recently held a great meeting in the home town of that prince among preachers, Foy E. Wallace, of Longview, Texas, and another in Wewoka, Okla. Twenty-one additions at Longview and twenty-two at Wewoka. That sweet singer, Tillet S. Teddlie, of Alba, Texas, had charge of the song work. I did my very best in preaching the word. Both churches were left happy."

The church of Christ worshiping on East Okmulgee Avenue, Muskogee, Okla., announces a get-together meeting from June 1 to June 4, inclusive. Among the speakers on the printed program are W. L. Oliphant, A. L. Elkins, W. H. George, J. Will Henley, J. N. Armstrong, A. M. Foster, Bynum Black, J. A. Hudson, Ben J. Elston, F. L. Rowe, A. E. Freeman, W. D. Black, B. U. Baldwin, O. L. Hays. Services will be held at 10 A.M. and 8 P.M.

John E. Dunn, who preaches for the church of Christ at Terrell, Texas, wishes to secure some young preacher to be with the church during July and August, when he will be away in protracted meetings. This is a good opportunity for a young preacher who is still in school and wishes to do a good work with a church that would assist him in going to school and in future cooperate with him in preaching the gospel. Write John E. Dunn, 308 North Frances Street, Terrell, Texas.

R. A. Craig writes: "I preached at Fairmount, Ky. May 8-11. The brethren there have had a little trouble over the hour of worship, but I feel that the work will move right along now. J. G. Malphurs is doing good work at Russell Schoolhouse, Van Buren, Love Ridge, and Fairview. Brother Rose is at Mackville, and his influence is being felt, We will arrange for several meetings in Kentucky this year. King's Hall Church is coming to the front ranks. This congregation will make its influence felt in the Highlands."

Andrew Perry is an authorized agent for our books and the Gospel Advocate. He is working in Arkansas now, and scon expects to devote some time among the churches in Texas. Any courtesies shown him will be appreciated by us. He is a good man, is true to the word of God, and will be helpful to any church where he labors. Brother Perry recently preached a few sermons to attentive audiences at Paragould, Ark. At last writing he was at Marmaduke. He reports the sudden death of Riley Smith, one of their oldest and most-beloved members.

From G. Dallas Smith, Cleburne, Texas, May 10: "We have just closed one of the best meetings the church here ever enjoyed. The preaching was done by G. C. Brewer, of Winchester, Tenn., and to say it was well done is no exaggeration. Brother Brewer is a great preacher. He is fearless and bold, yet earnest and tender, and his messages carry conviction to the heart. The meeting continued over four Sundays and resulted in forty-six additions—forty-two baptisms—and untold good accomplished otherwise. The Lord willing, Brother Brewer will be with us again next spring."

From J. O. Garrett, Thorp Spring Christian College, Thorp Spring, Texas: "Many visitors are promising to be with us during commencement week, May 28 to June 3. We want every old pupil, every patron, and any other friend of Christian education to come and enjoy these days with us. Arrangements are being made to care for every one. Opportunities for camping are fine. The school park is open to all for camping, fishing, and bathing. The programs promise to be superior. Your visit will encourage us and strengthen your interest in our work. Drop us a card and tell us what day you will leave home."

Tice Elkins writes from Fort Worth, Texas: "I feel that I owe an explanation to those who expect me for meetings this year as to why I cannot hold them. First, during the three months I was down sick the Southside-Central Church of Fort Worth supported my family, paid my salary right along, while I was laid up and out of their work all that time. Now they think I should give them the remainder of the year without a break, and I feel sure it is the right thing for me to do. This is one reason I must cancel all my work in the field this year. Another reason is that I am not going to recover my strength fully enough this summer to engage in protracted-meeting work. I will be glad, however, to book meetings for next year."

Missionary Statement, 1919.

BY MISS NELLIE STRAITON.

When singing that old heart-touching song, "Must I Go, and Empty-handed?" have you ever thought of the incident that inspired the writing of it?

After a month only of Christian life, nearly all of it upon a sick bed, a young man of nearly thirty years lay dying. Suddenly a look of sadness crossed his face, and to the query of a friend he exclaimed: "No, I am not afraid! Jesus saves me now! But—O!—must I go, and empty-handed?"

Must I go, and empty-handed.

Thus my dear Redeemer meet?
Not one day of service give him,
Lay no trophy at his feet?

Not at death I shrink or falter,
For my Savior saves me now;
But to meet him empty-handed,
Thought of that now clouds my brow.

O, the years of sinning wasted!
Could I but recall them now,
I would give them to my Savior,
To his will I'd gladly bow.

Must I go, and empty-handed?

Must I meet my Savior so?

Not one soul with which to greet him—

Must I empty-handed go?

And the question comes home to each one of us individually: "Must I go, and empty-handed?" "Not one day of service give Him?" Service is the highest expression of love; service is the keynote of the Christian life.

Every one of us may render service to the extent of the ability we possess. Perhaps one has five talents and another only one. It is not a question of how many we have, but the use we make of them.

But it is especially of the service that a faithful missionary may render that I wish to write. During the past year I have been in very close touch with Miss Lillie Cypert, who has been in Japan a little over two years, and will, therefore, tell you in her words a few things about missionary work:

We have discovered a great work to be done here. Even though missionaries from all parts of the East have been coming here to spend their summers for possibly twenty years, we find that many still have never heard of Christ. They always have meetings at the churches, but perhaps not enough personal work has been done among the working classes. It is appalling to see the great amount of work that is to be done and the few there are to do it.

work that is to be done and the few there are to do it.

I am helping with the Sunday-school work at Zoshigaya now. The Sunday school has fallen off in attendance very much recently, but we hope to build it up again soon. They had no literature and the teachers were just telling the children Bible stories without illustrations. So, when I was permitted to have a part in it, I got a chart and some cards and leaflets for the children and some books for the teachers. They started with them last Sunday, and seemed to be much pleased with them. I hope to use the money sent by the Sunday-school classes to help pay for the literature. The church will also help pay for it.

Last Thursday was a national holiday in Japan. It is one of the days that corresponds to our Thanksgiving. They have two. This one is the thanksgiving for the rice crop. They offer prayers and sacrifice of rice to the god of the harvest for a bountiful rice crop. In the afternoon of that day Miss Andrews and I went to the park, where thousands of people were coming and going all the time, and gave out many tracts. The tract was largely a reproduction and translation of a very good sermon on the love of God to man. We went to the big temple near the park and gave more tracts to the people that came to worship. We were happy to give them something that would tell them of the living God that can love them, and does, instead of the hideous, lifeless ones they seem to be so earnestly worshiping.

Last month we went on a little evangelistic tour in the country and were away five days. It was a very interesting trip, indeed. We stayed three nights in Japanese hotels and one in a Japanese home. We just fared as the Japanese do—slept on Japanese beds on the floor, sat on the floor, and ate Japanese food. At two of the places where we went there were Christians; so we were warmly welcomed by them, and hope we strengthened them.

We spent one night in a town of between three and five thousand people and not a Christian among them, and they seemed so anxious to learn, too. But just no one to teach them! Isn't it awful to think that about nineteen hundred years after Jesus gave the commandment found in Matt. 13: 19, 20, in so small a country as this, there are about thirty-nine millions of people who have never so much as heard of Christ and the true and living God? Will the blood of these be required at the hands of their neighbors who live just across the big pond only about twenty days' journey, who have been reared in a land of Bibles?

You may, perhaps, know that during the early part of 1919 I received money for any of the missionaries and forwarded direct to the missionaries the funds received. However, a better plan was suggested, and beginning with May I forwarded direct only to Miss Lillie Cypert, and sent to those who were looking after the other missionaries all other amounts sent to me. To Miss Lillie Cypert I forwarded $804.75 for her personal support and work and $112 for furniture. For the other missionaries I received and forwarded $1,313.98. Total, $2,230.73.

Both the missionaries and I appreciate the cooperation of all those who have taken a part in the work, and trust that this assistance will be continued during 1920, and that many others will answer Paul's appeal to "present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable to God, which is your spiritual service."

And, after all, all the service we can possibly render is as nothing compared with the great love which Jesus had for us and the sacrifice he made that we might have eternal life in the home above.

> Were the whole realm of nature mine, That were a present far too small; Love so amazing, so divine, Demands my life, my soul, my all.

This is to say that we have looked into the work of collecting missionary funds by Miss Nellie Straiton and her distribution of the same; that we consider it a good work, and that she deserves commendation for the same.

While it is desirable that the congregations, for their own sakes, either singly or in cooperation, do this work, they are not doing it. Hence we say, let it be done in this not unscriptural way till such time as they take it up.

Elders, Southside church of Christ, Fort Worth, Texas.

It is not by becoming like Christ that men will approach toward incorporation with him, but by result of incorporation with him, received in faith as a gift, and in faith adored, and used, that they will become like him. It is by the imparted gift, itself far more than natural, of literal membership in him; by the indwelling presence, the gradually disciplining and dominating influence, of his Spirit, which is his very self within us, the inmost breath of our most secret being, that the power of his atoning life and death, which is the power of divinely victorious holiness, can grow to be the very deepest reality of ourselves.—R. C. Moore.

BY J. C. McQUIDDY.

Brother M. N. Mathes asks a question whose answer is so simple that all should know it. He wants to know if it is a sin for a sister, when she has baked the loaf and prepared it, to bring it to the church, set the table in the church, and then take her seat. This is the very thing that a good, Christian woman should do. Phœbe was a deaconess and Paul's helper.

Mrs. Jessie McBride is concerned about the following question: "Is it right for the church to put a Methodist in charge of a class, provided it has many competent teachers who are members of the church of Christ?" Unless the church prefers to teach Methodism rather than Christianity in its purity, I can see no reason for such conduct. It would be far better and more scriptural for them to develop their own members.

Brother Wilson Vantrease, of Norene, Tenn., inquires to know if it is right to have a musical instrument in his home. He says: "I cannot find anything that justifies me in this thought." I know nothing in the Bible that approves or condemns having a musical instrument in our homes. I know of no scripture either for or against it. We certainly have the same right to have a musical instrument in our homes for our pleasure that we have to have any other article that adds to our entertainment and pleasure. However, we would be expected to use the instrument in our homes, not as a matter of worship, but as one of pleasure. The worship in the home, so far as I know, is restricted just as it is in the church. In the home we should sing with the spirit and with the understanding just as we do in the public assembly.

Brother Porter Norris, of Lacy, Tenn., wishes to know if it would be wrong for a church to ask all who will sing to sit on the front benches. He assigns as a reason for asking this the fact that they do not have enough song books to accommodate the entire congregation. I think it would be well to invite all who can get seats on the front benches to occupy them. The front seats are too often treated as though they were reserved. There is certainly nothing unscriptural in having the song leaders sit together and then encourage the whole congregation to sing with them in the worship. Singing is a part of the worship as much as is praying and teaching; so all who can should take part in this worship. There is certainly no departure from the truth in such a course as this. The word of God does not indicate just where any one shall sit In the public assembly of the saints. Such matters are matters of common sense, conviction, and expediency.

Brother C. A. Lancaster wishes light on Matt. 18: 2, 6, 3, 9. The "little child" in Matt. 18: 2 was simply a small child. The "little ones" of verse 6 embrace not only children who are believers in Christ, but all lowly and humble disciples. We should be careful not to cause any of God's people to stumble. Verses 8, 9 read: "And if thy hand or thy foot causeth thee to stumble, cut it off, and cast it from thee: It is good for thee to enter into life maimed or halt, rather than having two hands or two feet to be cast into the eternal fire. And if thine eye causeth thee to stumble, pluck it out, and cast it from thee: It is good for thee to enter into life with one eye, rather than having two eyes to be cast into the hell of fire." The thought is that if any object is as dear to us and as valuable as an eye or a right hand and leads us into sin or causes us to stumble, we should deny ourselves that object, no matter how desirable it may be. In other words, we had better avoid anything that leads us into sin and finally into hell, no matter if it is as dear and valuable to us as an eye or as the right hand or as any other member of the body. The thought has no reference to entering hell with a maimed body, having lost a right hand or having plucked out an eye. We are to give up habits or any object that is as dear as an eye or a right hand in order to be saved.

Brother John A. Randolph, of Dinuba, Cal., inquires to know if it is scriptural for women to lead public prayers and make talks in the church assembly. It is a fact that not a single woman was commissioned to be a public proclaimer of the gospel of Christ. All the twelve were men. It is also true that a woman's constitution and physical strength do not fit her for the public proclamation of the gospel. It may be that occasionally you will find a woman with a sufficiently masculine voice to make herself heard in a large assembly; but, as a rule, women are not fitted for such work any more than they are fitted for climbing telephone and telegraph poles and running steam engines. The Bible speaks clearly on this point. "Let the women keep silence in the churches; for it is not permitted unto them to speak; but let them be in subjection, as also saith the law." (1 Cor. 14: 34.) "Let a weman learn in quietness with all subjection. But I permit not a woman to teach, nor to have dominion over a man, but to be in quiet. ness." (1 Tim 2: 11, 12.) The same scriptures that prohibit women from speaking in the church assembly also prohibit them from praying in the public assembly of the saints. While it is true that women prophesied and Joel. predicted that in the Christian dispensation the sons and daughters should prophesy, which means to teach, yet these scriptures, interpreted in the light of other scriptures, evidently mean that this prophesying or teaching was not in the public assembly of the saints.

Brother J. O. Barnes asks this question: "Is a mouth confession of an alien sinner absolutely an essential prerequisite to valid baptism?" He asks a number of other questions: but when this is answered, the others will be answered also. The great commission makes known the conditions of salvation to the allen sinner. These conditions as given are faith repentance, and baptism. When we examine the scripture, we find in every single conversion the same conditions and no others. It is true that in Acts 8: 37, in the Authorized Version, it says: "If thou believest with all thine heart, thou mayest. And he answered and said, I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God." But this is left out of the Revised Version. However, the question is asked simply that the preacher may know that he is baptizing a believer. The baptism of believers only is authorized. The preacher should know that he is baptizing a believer, and in order to learn this there is no better way than for him to ask the question. If the preacher is sure of the fact and if the candidate has already stated that he believes with all his heart in Jesus the Christ, there is no necessity of taking a further formal confession. However, after one has been baptized, he should confess Christ all through his life; "for with the beart man believeth unto rightecusness; and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation." Again, Christ says: "Every one therefore who shall confess me before men, him will I also confess before my Father who is in heaven. But whosoever shall deny me before men, him will I also deny before my Father who is In heaven." (Matt. 10: 32, 33.) The man who is really penitent is not ashamed to confess Christ before many witnesses. Timothy did "confess a good confession in the sight of many witnesses."

An Inexcusable Misrepresentation.

BY M. C. K.

One of the chief weapons employed against the opposition to current speculations on unfulfilled prophecy, so freely indulged since the outbreak of the World War, is the weapon of misrepresentation. This weapon has been conspicuously employed by those who have recently disturbed the churches by the advocacy of some of the tenets of Russellism and Adventism. It is astonishing that Christians will resort to such methods in the advocacy of anything, no matter how firmly they may believe it to be the truth, and, of course, Christians who have proper regard for fair and upright dealing with others will not do so. Shrewd evasions and other methods of chicanery are not to be wholly unexpected among politicians, though even among them those who are high-toned men of integrity hold themselves strictly above such things; but that men who profess to be Christians, and even preachers of the gospel, will resort to such a course is both sad and astonishing in the extreme. Men may be excused for honest differences from each other, and under all proper circumstances they have the unquestionable right to defend what they believe to be the truth; but there is no justifiable excuse, under any circumstance whatever or for any conceivable reason, for the employment of unfair means in the propagation of their theories.

The purpose of this article is to call attention to and to expose a glaring instance of such violation of principle as exhibited in an inexcusable misrepresentation. In substance, that misrepresentation consists in making the charge that those who oppose speculations on unfulfilled prophecy oppose studying and teaching unfulfilled prophecy itself. Then, along with this misrepresentation and with a flourish of trumpets, the point is made that such persons set aside a part of the word of God-namely, the prophecies-and deny men the right to study and teach that part. They have even gone so far with this misrepresentation as to say that those opposing the speculations in question have no use, for the prophecies-that, according to them, the prophecies should neither be taught nor studied.

Now, any one who has mind enough to be responsible knows that opposition to teaching certain views or opinions as to what will be the fulfillment of unfulfilled prophecy is not opposition to teaching the prophecy itself. In illustration of this point, we here call attention to a New Testament prophecy. Guided by the Spirit of God, Peter uttered the following prophecy: "The earth and the works that are therein shall be burned up." (2 Pet. 3: 10.)

Now, who cannot see that this prophecy is one thing, and that when and in what manner if is to be fulfilled is quite snother and a different thing. There are certain views or opinions entertained by some men as to how and when it is to be fulfilled which are not expressed in the Bible and which some of us not only do not accept, for the simple reason that we do not know them to be correct, but the teaching of which we distinctly oppose because they are not among "the things which are written." Is not this a good reason for the opposition? But does it follow from this that we oppose teaching the prophecy (tself? It would be just as consistent and quite as near the truth to say such an absurd and false thing as it is to say that, because brethren oppose certain opinions as to the fulfillment of certain other prophecies-opinions long ago taught by the visionary Mr. Charles T. Russell and the Adventists, and which those opposing them believe to be hurtful to the cause of Christ-they, therefore, oppose teaching the said prophecies themselves.

In our issue of May 13, 1920, a question was propounded in a contributed article which is in point here. In that issue, on the matter of "teaching all the unfulfilled prophecies just as we do the other parts of the word of God," an apologist for the speculative movement asks the question: "Are we allowed to make any comment?" The public has now learned at least some of what the author of that question contends for in the way of "comment," but, in addition to the very appropriate answer then given by Brother McQuiddy, we add here that it depends altogether on the "comment" that is made whether God's law will "allow" it or not. If it means a comment that merely gives the views or opinions of the teacher, then the proper answer to the question is an emphatic no. If it means a comment which merely presents different parts of God's word and thus shows what God's word says on the subject, then the proper answer is yes. Why should we not "comment on unfulfilled prophecy precisely as we should comment on baptism, the Lord's Supper, faith, repentance, or any other subject on which the Bible speaks at all, by showing what the Bible says on that subject?" Have men rights in teaching the "unfulfilled prophecies" in God's word which they do not have in teaching other parts of that word? If so, who gave them such rights? Does not Inspiration distinctly declare that the religious teacher must " not go beyond the things which are written?" (1 Cor. 4: 6.) And does not Inspiration, with equal distinctness, say: "Foolish and ignorant questionings refuse, knowing that they gender strifes?" (2 Tim. 2: 23.) The Greek word for "ignorant" means things on which there is no instruction -things not revealed in the word of God, things on which the Scriptures are silent, and which, therefore, the Scriptures do not teach. Such things the apostle distinctly commands us to "refuse." Hence, according to Inspiration, we are not to bring them up in the way of teaching them at all, and the inspired reason assigned for prohibiting discussions of them is because "they gender strifes." Do we not see the correctness of the reason exemplified? In the present sad instance they have created division and destroyed peace and harmony in some of the churches. What a serious and fearful responsibility is incurred by those who introduced them!

Hence, here is a divine prohibition of all speculation on all subjects-a prohibition in the form of two positive commands of Inspiration: First, the religious teacher is solemnly admonished "not to go beyond the things which are written." Second, he is positively commanded to "refuse" all questions not taught in the word of God. Either of these commands rules out the opinions of the teacher on all subjects and restricts him to "the things which are written," and both of them together make the teaching of such opinions a high-handed and presumptuous infraction of divine authority. But, according to this modern speculative movement, Paul, guided by the Holy Spirit of God, should have said that the Christian teacher must not "go beyond the things which are written," except on unfulfilled prophecy! On this latter subject, give him carte blanche privileges and "clear the track!"

On the contrary, in harmony with the two inspired commands just noted, the position is here unhesitatingly taken, and without the remotest fear of successful contradiction, that, no matter what the theme may be, whether baptism, the Lord's Supper, the second coming of Christ, the end of the world, or what not, the religious teacher is under positive divine orders "not to go beyond the things which are written." This is specifically what God says; and if be did not mean that the teacher must stay within what is written, then why did he say it? Of course he said it because he meant it, and no living man can refute the position; and yet when we insist that this divine rule should be observed in teaching unfulfilled prophecies precisely as it should be in teaching any other part of God's wordthat we should teach what God's word says on it, no more, no less, and nothing otherwise, and thus not teach our views or opinions about it-the charge is made that we oppose teaching unfulfilled prophecy itself! This is an inexcusable misrepresentation. If in preaching baptism we should say what God says on it and stop at that, as all on both sides of this controversy admit, then, in preaching the second coming of Christ or any other unfulfilled prophecy, why should we not say what God says on it and stop at that? Moreover, if opposition to teaching more than God says on baptism is not opposition to teaching baptism itself, then why is opposition to teaching more than God says on the second coming of Christ or any other unfulfilled prophecy opposition to teaching the unfulfilled prophecy itself. This position is simply irrefutable, and it will remain so as long as God tells the religious teacher, as he now positively tells him, "not to go beyond the things which are written."

D. Austen Sommer's Creed.

BY J. C. M'O.

Elsewhere in this paper appears an article by Brother Sommer under the title, "Spirit and Principles of the New Digressives." I ask for this article a thoughtful reading before reading what I have to say. There is very little in the article that really needs attention. For the sake of clearness, I will notice the creed, the voting, and the "bachelor elder" in the order named.

When I was in Denver, Col., last September, Brother Sommer's supporters proposed a paper as a basis and guide for the church. After presenting eight "whereases," which are enough to kill it, they presented what purported to be ten resolutions, but, having omitted the fifth resolution, presented in reality only nine. These resolutions read:

- 1. That the management of the spiritual affairs of the church, for the present, be placed in the hands of six of the brethren.
- 2. That these six brethren be elected with a view of their becoming later, when properly developed, the elders and deacons of the church.
- That their qualifications be as nearly as possible in conformity to the qualifications of elders and deacons as laid down in the New Testament Scriptures.
- 4. That these brethren be J. P. Crenshaw, L. H. Sorey, J. A. Ford, Oren Adair, J. T. Menard, and P. B. Davison.
- 6. That the congregation here continue under the advice and leadership of these brethren in this way only until such a time as it is set in order according to Paul's instructions to Titus.
- 7. That, as there is a plurality of preaching brethren here, and in order that no class or part of the congregation be favored to a greater extent than any other class or part of the congregation, the six brethren are requested to divide the preaching equally among or between the preachers, unless one or more of said preachers shall voluntarily relinquish his turn, in which case the time shall be equally divided among the others.

8. That we hold a protracted meeting as soon as it can be arranged for after we get into the meetinghouse at Sherman and Maple Streets, and spare no pains or expense to make the meeting a success.

9. That W. P. Reedy, of Long Beach, Cal., be selected to conduct the meeting and to do the preaching through the meeting, and that the selection and invitation to him be made unanimous just as it was to Brother White.

10. That a complete, permanent record be made and kept by the clerk of the congregation, showing not only the roll of members of the congregation, but also a full and complete record of all proceedings and deliberations of all business meetings of the congregation."

There is no authority for such a paper in the word of God. Brother Sommer says: "I see nothing unscriptural in such a procedure, but consider it entirely scriptural. After speaking of the elders, Paul speaks of the deacons and says: 'And let these also first be proved.' (1 Tim. 3: 10.) How are you going to prove, or try, a man for an office unless you permit him to do the work of that office for a while? Notice that Paul says that the elders as well as the deacons should be tried. I believe, and have stated it in my book, 'The Church of Christ,' that it is well to have men do the work of elders and deacons for a while before being permanently appointed to that position." Brother Sommer is proving his position by the wrong book. The Bible is good authority in this discussion, but Brother Sommer's book, "The Church of Christ," is not good authority. Let us note a few things in Brother Sommer's creed. Why select six brethren to manage the spiritual affairs of the church? Worse still, why select six men who are undeveloped and who are without the qualifications to manage the spiritual affairs of the entire congregation? I challenge my critic to put his finger on one passage in the word of God that authorizes such a procedure. These six men, according to Sommer's creed, are fit to manage the spiritual affairs of the entire church, and yet they are unfitted, undeveloped, and unqualified for the work of an elder. I am really sorry for my critic if he does not know more about the Bible than his indorsement of this creed indicates. I really think that he does know more, but that it is his partisan spirit, his zeal and desire to rule and control a little sect, that really leads him into such errors. God never put any six brethren in a church to manage the spiritual affairs of the church. In this paper no distinction is made whatever between the duties of elders and deacons. It is generally understood that the deacons of the church are to look after the temporal affairs of the church, but the Bible is clear in teaching that no man has the right to lord it over God's heritage and that no man has the right to manage the spiritual affairs of the church. In proof of this, read the following scriptures: "Who art thou that judgest the servant of another? to his own lord he standeth or falleth. Yea, he shall be made to stand: for the Lord hath power to make him stand. . . . But thou, why dost thou judge thy brother? or thou again, why dost thou set at naught thy brother? for we shall all stand before the judgment seat of God. For it is written, As I live, saith the Lord, to me every knee shall bow, and every tongue shall confess to God. So then each one of us shall give account of himself to God." (Rom. 14: 4-12.) "For we must all be made manifest before the judgment scat of Christ; that each one may receive the things done in the body, according to what he hath done, whether it be good or bad." (2 Cor. 5: 10.) These passages show conclusively and beyond a doubt that every man is individually responsible to God for himself. It is preposterous that God would make any man a spiritual manager for another and then hold the other man responsible to himself for his conduct. As he has told us that when a man works for another he loses his "identity so far as his work is concerned," we are led to believe that he wanted the entire church to lose its identity and become puppets, slaves, and vassals to the six spiritual managers of the church. As he, with the Roman Catholics, is striving to drive the Bible out of our schools, so, with them, he would rob Christians of their individual responsibility and make them tools under spiritual managers. I repeat that there is nothing in the word of God that permits, much less sanctions, such a creed. But he asks: "How are we to prove them?" God has given us their qualifications in order that we may prove them. Would Brother Sommer take a drunkard or an adulterer or a murderer and put him into the office of an elder in order to try or to prove him? If simply putting them into the office is the manner of proving them, why pay any attention to the qualifications as laid down in the New Testament at all? The Holy Spirit gives us these instructions; and when men are found blameless under these instructions, then they are to be placed in the position of clders and deacons. He certainly has the cart before the horse. Macknight says in his Epistles on 1 Tim. 3: 10: "However, let these also be tried first by publishing their names to the church, that if any one hath aught to lay to their charge, he may show it; and after such a publication of their names, let them exercise the deacon's office if no person accuses them." The word in the Greek for "proved" in this passage means "to test, examine, prove, scrutinize." Whenever one's name was presented for an elder or a deacon, if he were proved blameless according to the scriptural qualifications and was unaccused, he was then to be put into the position of an elder or deacon. Macknight says: "The rule was this: They published in their assemblies for worship the names of persons designed for ecclesiastical functions, that If any one had aught to accuse them of, they might show it. So we are told by Lampridius, in his life of Alexander Severus, tom. ii. c. 46, quoted at large, 'Truth of the Gospel History,' page 331, who, it seems, wished to have the same method followed in appointing the governors of provinces: and alleged the examples of the Jews and Christians, who published the names of their ministers before they established them in their offices. Now, although Lampridius speaks of a rule observed by the Christians in the time of Alexander Severus, previous to their admitting persons to be bishops and deacons, it was a rule so natural and reasonable that we may suppose it was prescribed by the apostles, and that it is referred to in this passage, where he ordered persons to be proved before they exercised the deacon's office." The trouble with my critic is that he puts them into the office before they are proved and in order to prove them. In this case he puts in men that are admittedly unfitted, undeveloped, and unqualified to manage the spiritual affairs of the entire church. His is not an Innocent, but a pernicious, creed,

Second, he is not disposed to take what I have to say about what I did while in Denver. This is very unfair and unkind in a discussion. I know what I did much better than the twenty brethren to whom he went to get information. It seems that if I favored voting, that he also favors voting by getting an expression from twenty of his partisan brethren when recently in Denver. He votes with the minority, who made the division. The Spirit says: "Mark them that are causing the divisions and occasions of stumbling, contrary to the doctrine which ye learned: and turn away from them." (Rom. 16: 17.) The vote that Brother Evans took was a unanimous vote, as the Sommer crowd had withdrawn their creed. They next withdrew themselves and made the division. Where God has not legislated on a subject. I have never objected to unanimous voting, and feel that I have no right to object to getting a unanimous expression. The object of the Sommer crowd was to get control of the church of Christ in Denver by getting Brother Evans and others out of the way, just as had been done at Colorado Springs, Col., and at Riverside, Cal. Claiming "evangelistic authority," whatever that is, R. G. Edwards and W. F. Reedy met at Riverside, Cal., on March 11, 1917, and went through the form of deposing two elders and withdrawing from two other brethren, all of whom were above reproach. This is the same Reedy who was proposed in the partisan creed to hold a meeting for the church in Denver and who issued a call to action in the Apostolic Review about two years ago. Harper and others were associated with him in the call. As God has not ordained that these men and others of the same character shall exercise "evangelistic authority" over the churches, I shall use my voice and strength against any such papal assumption of anthority. It was evident from the very beginning that Brother Sommer's followers were hopelessly in the minority. They voted by presenting their paper, and stood by it until they saw it was lost. While I am unalterably opposed to voting on any subject where God has legislated, I have never opposed getting a unanimous expression on any subject where God has not legislated. On such subjects, however, I have always striven for unity and not division. This is exactly what I did at Denver. My reason for not objecting to unanimous expression of approval in appointing elders is found in the word of God. Acts 14: 23 reads: "And when they had appointed for them elders in every church, and had prayed with fasting, they commended them to the Lord. on whom they had believed." The Greek word which is here translated "appointed" means (a) to vote by stretching out the hand; (b) to create or appoint by vote; (c) with the loss of the notion of extending the hand, to elect, appoint, create. Thus we see God has given the qualifications and left the church free to express its choice as to the person possessing them.

Third, must an elder be a married man? I will say for the information of all that I have never gone to any church and suggested to it who should be its elders and deacons. Such a course would be presumptuous. On the contrary, however, I told them in Denver that they knew their membership and that it was their prerogative, and not mine, to name who should be elders and deacons. I made this clear both publicly and privately. If Sommer's satellites had heard me when I spoke on this subject, they would have known better how to tell the truth; but when men run away from duty because they are blinded by partisan prejudice, we can hardly expect them to know the real facts in the case. To me it is a very serious thing for a few people to withdraw and to divide the spiritual body of Christ because the church advocates teaching the word of God everywhere. I am frank to say that I would prefer that an elder be a married man, but it should be noted that the Bible does not say anywhere that he "must be a married man." The Bible does say that "the bishop must be without reproach, the husband of one wife." The apostle's meaning is that such persons only are to bewasted with the work of an elder who in their married state have contented themselves with one wife at a time. It does not mean that a man who loses his wife shall not marry again; neither do I understand that it means that an elder who loses his wife must, therefore, give up his work because he is not the husband of one wife. I have never seen in the word of God where any man is required to resign a duty. It is well known that polygamy and adultery were practiced and tolerated in the early church. Persons who divorce their wives unscripturally and marry others are guilty of adultery; such persons should not be chosen as elders. The apostles encouraged and demanded virtue and righteousness on the part of all who desired the office of a bishop. If this scripture be taken to mean that one must be married, regardless of how well qualified he may other wise be, before he can be an elder, then it follows that he must not only be married, but he must have obedient chilaren, before he can be an elder. In this individual case it is not questioned that Brother Evans, barring this one lack of qualification-if it be a lack-is far better qualified for the work of an elder than most men are. He understands the Bible, he loves the truth, he is apt to teach, and he makes great sacrifices in order to advance the kingdom of God in the world. It is also plain that he is better qualified than any one else in the church at Denver to labor in word and doctrine. The Bible is clear that there were such elders in the church. Does the failure to be married disqualify him when he possesses the other qualifications in such a high degree? In the light of the Bible teaching and the practice of the early church, I cannot say it does. We find married elders who are lacking in a number of the qualifications, and yet they are not regarded as unscriptural elders.

Who is the Sinner?

BY E. A. E.

The Bible solemnly warns against the deceitfulness of sin. When one is deceived by sin, right seems wrong and wrong seems right. God pronounces a woe upon those that "call evil good, and good evil; that put darkness for light, and light for darkness; that put bitter for sweet, and sweet for bitter. Woe unto them that are wise in their own eyes, and prudent in their own sight!" (Isa. 5: 26, 21.) God further warns against being wise in one's own conceit, and thinking more highly of oneself than one should think. Again, he says: "Every way of a man is right in his own eyes," (Prov. 21; 2; see Prov. 16; 2.)

Then, who is the sinner? Is he the one who really commits the sin, or the one who suffers from it after it has been committed? The slanderer, or the one slandered? The tattler, or the one talked about? The one who misrepresents another, or the one misrepresented? The robber, or the one robbed? Is the one who refuses to meet obligations, to follow the Golden Rule, to obey God, the sinner, or is the one who points out the sin and teaching against it the sinner?

Does the wrong consist in otherwise kind and good and Christian people writing sharp and harsh and bitter criticisms in any but a sweet and humble spirit to the publishers of religious papers, or does it consist in editors publishing these letters? If writing such letters is the Christian thing to do, then there can be no wrong, but good, in publishing them. If publishing them is wrong, writing them is worse.

People have the same right to disapprove and to criticize as to approve and commend. Since commendations are published, why not criticisms? No man—editor, preacher, any other church member, or even the President of the United States—can hold himself above criticism. No public address, article, sermon, or book can be considered above criticism—that is, no man must dare criticize. The man who desires to teach the truth and to fully obey God does not object to, but prefers, kind and thoughtful criticism. The critic then cannot object to the publication of his criticism. The critic who asks questions for information or to elicit truth deals in principles, not in personalities and in one's family affairs. Right is right, or wrong is wrong, in whomsoever found.

The safe and righteous rule is not to write in criticism of public acts and utterances anything one does not want published or will be ashamed to see in print. Any other course always reacts upon the critic.

Let us be just and fair; let us always follow the Golden Rule. There is a right way-the Christian way-to do everything. A contentious, partisan, captious, carping, censorious, holier-than-thou spirit is condemned by the Lord. To "reprove, rebuke, exhort, with all long-suffering and teaching" (2 Tim, 4; 2); to be "gentle toward all, apt to teach, forbearing, in meekness correcting them who oppose themselves," if peradventure they may be led to repentance (2 Tim. 2: 24-26); to restore the ones who have been overtaken in any trespass "in a spirit of gentleness." looking to oneself lest one also be tempted, remembering one's own faults and shortcomings (Gal. 6: 1), is the command of God and duty of every Christian. To try to "entangle" a brother "in his talk" and to convict him of inconsistencies in order to condemn and not to save is the spirit of the Pharisees.

I have heard since a boy that when one "goes security" for another and has the debt to pay, the other, as a rule, gets mad at the one who "went the security." This is human nature, but not "the divine nature;" It is human to err, to sin, and, therefore, to wrong others, and then to become angry and feel hurt at the one who has been wronged.

When Moses beheld two Hebrews "striving together," and "said to him who did the wrong, "Wherefore smitest thou thy brother?" the wrongdoer became angry and was instrumental in reporting Moses to Pharaoh and having Moses banished from Egypt. (Ex. 2: 11-15.) Stephen says this sin in thrusting Moses away was a type of the great sin of thrusting Jesus away.

The idolatrous and ungodly Ahab and his more cruel and wicked wife accused Ellijah of troubling Israel. All know Elijah's answer: "I have not troubled Israel; but thou, and thy father's house, in that ye have forsaken the commandments of Jehovah, and thou hast followed the Baalim." (1 Kings 18: 16-18.) It is very much like Ahab to accuse others of doing that which oneself does. Those who by their smooth and fair speech beguile the hearts of the innocent and cause division contrary to the teaching of Christ (Rom. 16: 17, 18) were never known to acknowledge it. It is always the Elijahs who do that. But for those who do right, preach the truth, and stand firm, the wrongdoers and those who preach error would have smooth sailing. The Jews of Thessalonica, "moved with jealcusy," gathered "certain vile fellows of the rabble" and "a crowd," "set the city on an uproar," persecuted Paul and Silas, "dragged Jason and certain brethren before the rulers of the city," troubled the multitudes, and then accused Paul and Silas of turning "the world upside down." (Acts 17: 1-9,)

THE MEETING AT ST. MARYS, W. VA.

This meeting began on the fourth Sunday in April and continued until the night of the second Sunday in May. There were no additions. The audiences were good on Sundays and "not so bad" during the week. Several things occurred to interfere at times. The congregation is composed of earnest, faithful, and Bible-loving people. Its influence for good is being felt more and more in the town. Through it the people are seeing more and more the beauties of holiness. An effort was made in the preaching to show the difference between the church and the world—that the stir and upheavals in the world, the selfishness and greed and graft of the world, the partisan contentions and spirit of the world, are not the spirit of Christ, but are the very contrary to the tranquil and quiet life in all godliness and gravity God teaches the church to lead. It was a pleasure to be with these good people. May the blessings and peace of God attend them!

I had the pleasure, too, of meeting Brethren Bunner and Fogle during this meeting. Brother Bunner was in a meeting not very far away. Brother Fogle works with the congregation in Marietta, Ohio, and is held in high esteem by it.

One of the pleasures of the meeting was being with Brother G. W. Varner, now in the decrepitude of age, but who has been a faithful preacher of the gospel. He is cheerful and bright in the hope of the gospel and delights to hear it preached. He never missed a sermon and is always present in the worship on Lord's days. The devotion of the church to him is beautiful.

But we must not think every one in this church "is just as good as he can be;" but, as in all churches, there are some careless and indifferent and worldly ones.

This church is greatly blessed in having Brother T. Q. Martin to work with it. Brother Martin and wife and his faithful sister are very much beloved by the church for their work's sake, and are living epistles, read and known of the people of the town and surrounding country. Brother Martin loves the truth and cannot be tempted away from preaching it. He does not speculate, makes no compromise with error, and was not so well liked by some denominational preachers who once lived there, because he could not join them in their denominational and "interchurch movements;" yet, by his courteous, dignified, friendly, and Christian course, he is most highly respected by all the people, and they hear him gladly. It was refreshing to be out of the stir and agitation and bitterness of the world in the quietude of this family. I have never been associated with a family kinder, gentler, and more considerate of all others. Not one word of unkind and harsh criticism of any brother preacher or of any one else escaped their lips. Brother Martin regrets that all preachers do not preach the truth in the tove of it and in the spirit of Christ, and that every one absolutely is not clean and unspotted from the world; but I never worked with a truer and gentler man. There is such a thing as being kind and gentle and tender, yet true and faithful and firm.

"INSTINCT TO FIGHT."

I have just read from an associated press dispatch in the Cincinnati Times-Star that Charles R. Brown, "dean of the School of Religion at Yale University," declares that "in every real man there is the Instinct to fight," and that he believes "the man who denies the natural lure of a spirited conflict, whether between two men in a prize ring or between two companies of men, or two great armies, is in some manner lacking."

He might say as well that in every real buildog "there is the instinct to fight." - "Dogs delight to bark and bite, for 'tis their nature to." He might say as well that in every monkey, ass, or built there are other instincts and passions, and that he who denies "the natural lure" of these "is in some manner lacking."

Must men fight in prize rings, as two bulls, and must whole armies surge and pitch against each other and butcher millions of innocent and helpless youths to gratify "the natural lure of a spirited conflict" in onlooking men and women governed by nothing higher than "the instinct," not themselves to fight, but to see others fight? God pity the country whose chief educators have no higher conception of human life than to think men should fight and shed blood and butcher one another by the thousands to gratify the barbarous instincts and passions and ambitions of cultured and refined and educated animals called "men!" There is something lacking in the men and women who can gaze on a builfight, a prize fight, and especially two armies, with any degree of pleasure.

If men are to follow "the natural lure" of "instinct to fight" or other animal passions, then the less education they have, the better, and the less harm can they do. I do not doubt that the wrestling, boxing, and match games of ball cultivate the animal "instincts," and even "the instinct to fight."

If fighting—any kind—prize fighting, two companies, two armies—war and bloodshed—are to be justified on the ground that "in every real man there is the instinct to fight," then adultery, fornication, drunkenness, the basest licentiousness, and all brutish passions and lusts can be justified in the same way.

But what is war, anyway, but the gratification of the "instincts" and base ambitions of a few rulers, blood-thirsty and greedy, preying upon the innocent and help-less as hungry wolves upon tender and defenseless lambs?

After the teacher of religion in this great university had made such a statement as this, it makes the blood run cold to think of followers of the meek and lowly Jesus; the Prince of Peace, in any way favoring Christians' taking up carnal weapons, following the camp, or encouraging in any way the gratification of these animal passions.

But what are we to think of such declarations coming from the dean of the School of Religion in one of the greatest universities of America? Is this "higher education?" Some young preachers have a great hankering after university degrees, complying with the spirit of the age. Is this what they seek? Some one says "no," Very well, can they attend such universities without becoming tinctured? "All universities do not teach this," I am told. I am glad to know it; but how many universities stand square on the Bible and teach Christianity?

It is one thing to teach the religion of "the natural lare" of "instinct," and quite a different thing to teach Christianity, which requires the mortification of all animal passions and lusts, the crucifixion of the flesh, and the development of "the divine nature." There is a great difference between Christianity and many religions.

To be sure, we need schools in which the Bible is taught, and taught in the full grasp of its spirit and meaning from beginning to end; in which Christianity, not in name, but in reality, is practiced and taught; but a Christian college or Bible school finctured with the military spirit or encouraging and practicing military training is the most inconsistent thing in the world.

Let young preachers have all the higher education and university degrees they can carry, provided they are not educated higher than the word of God, the Savior, and God himself.

CURED HER FITS

Mrs. Paul Gram, residing at $16 Fourth Street, Milwaukee, Wis., recently gave out the following statement: "I had suffered with Fits (Epilepsy) for over fourteen years. Doctors and medicine did me no good. It seemed that I was beyond all hope of relief, when at last I secured a preparation that cured me sound and well. Over ten years have passed, and the attacks have not returned. I wish every one who suffers from this terrible disease would write to R. P. N. A Plea for Unity.

BY FRED M. LITTLE.

I am at home from a two-weeks' meeting at Etowah, in McMinn County. Etowah is a city of four thousand inhabitants, where the railroad shops of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad are located.

The little congregation there has been struggling along for fifteen years. During the last two years so many of the small number moved away that they failed to meet regularly for worship. But since Brother George W. Farmer held a meeting last year they have kept up the worship, except when the "flu" ban prohibited.

Those who have instrumental music in the worship have a membership of some seventy-five members, who worship on Ohio Avenue; while those who worship "as it is written" have a house of worship on Washington Avenue. We enrolled thirty-five names of Christians who desired to work and worship with the Washington Avenue Church. The Ohlo Avenue Church invited the Washington Avenue congregation to a "get-together" meeting. We accepted the invitation and went over to the Ohio Avenue place of worship on Sunday afternoon, May 9. At this meeting songs were sung and prayers were offered. A talk was made by one of their elders, W. L. Bryan. His subject was "Group Evangelism." After he was through, he called on me to make a talk. I did so, I tried to represent the position we take regarding the work and worship. I stated that we are not antimissionary, antimusic, etc. When I was through, Elder Bryan said they were in favor of doing all I said. We were all pleased with the pleasant spirit manifested upon the part of all. In a day or two Elder Bryan invited us to come to the Ohio Avenue Church to worship with them the following Sunday. I wrote the following reply, giving reasons why the Washington Avenue Church could not accept the invitation:

Etowah, Tenn., May 12, 1920.—Christian Church, Ohio Avenue: We desire to express to you our full appreciation of the interest manifested in us. Our Savior prayed that all who "believe on me through their [the apostles'] word" might "be one." We are fully aware of the fact that the worshiping of God's children as a united body is a matter that should concern us most seriously. In Amos 3: 3 we read this question: "Can two walk together, except they be agreed?"

In appreciation of your most kind and earnest invitation extended us through Brother Bryan to meet to worship with you, we desire to say that it truly manifests a Christian We are now convinced that you are really desirous to have but one congregation in the small city of Etowah. There can be no doubt but that it would be pleasing to God to have all Christians of this town to

ALL WRONG WAS HER LIVER

Before Taking Black - Draught, Missouri Lady Was Troubled With Constipation, Headache, and Bad Taste In Mouth.

Grandin, Mo .- Mrs. Susa Brooks, of this place, writes:

"Sometime ago I was in a bad fix, with stomach and liver trouble. I dld not feel good at any time. I was very constipated and had headaches from this condition, and had a continual hurting in my stomach and bad taste in the mouth. Could tell my liver was all wrong.

"I had known of Black-Draught, so decided to try it myself. I began with a large dose or doses, gradually getting to smaller doses. It regulated my bowels, relieved me of the hurting in my stomach, cleaned off my liver, and made me feel like a new person."

If you get up in the morning feeling as tired as you did when you went to bed-achy, coated tongue, bad taste in mouth, sallow complexion-then your liver has not done its full duty, and your system has absorbed the poisons which your liver should have taken away.

An occasional dose of Thedford's Black-Draught will help this important organ to function properly.

come together and worship him "in spirit and in truth."

It is conceded by all that the worship consists of praying, singing, teaching or preaching, giving, and the communion. Concerning these the Lord has specifically spoken, and in no sense can we please him while we add thereto or take therefrom. Since the Lord has spoken, improvements have been made in ways and means of communication, transportation, supplying artificial light, seats, etc. These we have a right to improve in, because God has not given instruction con-cerning them. But God has pre-scribed the kind of music (vocal) to be used as worship; and when David introduced other music, God was not introduced other music, God was not pleased with it, as is indicated in Amos 5: 23, where we read: "Take thou away from me the noise of thy songs; for I will not hear the melody of thy viols." While to us it is a small or slight addition, yet it is an addition, as uninspired men have two kinds of music (instrumental and vocal), when God mentions or commands only one. And as much as we crave to work and worship with you, yet to go beyond "what is written" would render our worship vain; and, as a matter of "safety first," we desire above all to make sure we do not in any way deviate from the Lord's instructions.

There are also the auxiliary organizations which we consider an ad-dition to the New Testament church that would come in to divert funds contributed into channels that are questionable to us.

We again express to you our sincere appreciation of the splendid and Christian spirit shown in extending the generous invitation, and we have reason to believe that, if we continue our investigations along this line. sometime, we pray how soon, the majority of us, if not all, will love each other more than we love the "bones of contention" and will lay them aside that we may truly say: "Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in

We assure you that we are not discouraged and that we are willing to have other meetings for mutual study and prayer, that we may all be led to see the truth as it is in Christ our Lord. We love you and desire to be Yours in Christ, CHURCH OF CHRIST, WASHINGTON AVENUE, Per F. M. Little.

Brother David Bryant, of Bradford, Tenn., led the song service the last week of the meeting. Brother George W. Farmer, of Cleveland, was with us one evening, and explained to the church the plan to keep a man in the field all the time. Our good brother, W. E. Daugherty, of the Liberty Hill Church, was with us two or three

The church was strengthened. They are repainting and repairing the house at a cost of nearly three hundred dollars. They are going to cooperate with the East Tennessee mission work.

Brother S. S. McMahan, one of the elders, who moved to Etowah recently, is a preacher of ability and will be of great help in keeping the work going in the Eastern part of McMinn County.

Corpus Christi and Galveston.

BY A. O. COLLEY.

Last year when the gulf storm swept away the church house of our beloved brethren at Corpus Christi, outte a number of churches and individuals answered the emergency call and helped them to build a better house than they had before the storm. This was right. Now, those brethren did not need help any worse than the faithful little band of brethren and sisters at Galveston do now. Pearl and Bryan Streets Church, of Dallas, has just completed a two-weeks' meeting at Galveston by sending me to preach for them. There have been three confessions and one by membership to date. The church is now in a fair working condition. They have bought a house for thirty-five hundred dollars, paying five hundred dollars cash. This was raised among the

This truth comes to us more and more the longer we live, that on what field or in what uniform or with what aims we do our duty matters very little; or even what our duty is, great or small, splendid or obscure. Only to find our duty certainly, and somewhere, somehow, to do it faithfully, makes us good, strong, happy, and useful men, and turns our lives into some feeble echo of the life of God.-Phillips Brooks.

Antithesis.

BY J. J. VANHOUTIN.

Webster defines "antithesis" as "a figure by which thoughts, words, or sentences are set in opposition to each other." According to the law of antithesis, there is the exact opposite of everything. God has always deall with man according to that law. He also has forbidden the use of different weights and measurements, requiring use of the same weights or measures in selling as in buying; not to use a big half bushel in buying and a smaller one in seiling. Have you lived so long and never seen where that was practiced? Weighing has been practiced for ages. The idea of weighing and measuring originated with God, and " a false balance is abomination to the Lord: but a just weight is his delight." (Prov. 11: 1.) God requires that all men should deal fairly and bonestly with each other. There must be equal measure or weight upon both sides of the scale of action. The law of antithesis demands II, and God has given to man the power of choice, So, whatever is for man's good, the opposite is equal. Hence, we have truth, falsehood; life, death; saved, lest; jey, sorrow; good, evil; love, hatred; comfort, torment; rest, afflic tion; happiness, unhappiness; heaven, hell; obedience, disobedience; righteous, unrighteous; living, dying; ever lasting life, everlasting punishment, The opposite of blessings offered to men through their obedience is the result of man's disobedience. As God deals with man on the principle of justice, if man does not do right before God and toward his fellow man. there will be a final reckoning when all wrongs will be righted. If wrongs are not righted here in this life, they will be in the great future, as sure as judgment falls from God's eternal throne. And we are informed that the "judgments of the Lord are true and righteous altogether." The first persecutions against the apostles were because they preached blessings or punishments in the future resurrection. "Being grieved that they taught the people, and preached through Jesus the resurrection from the dead." (Acts 4: 2.) A future resurrection implies a future judgment, and a future judgment indicates that justice will be meted out to all. The wicked rulers did not like the idea of future accountability for past acts and undertook to destroy the doctrine by killing its advocates. But they only succeeded in making a complete failure; for the resurrection and a future judgment, with rewards and penalties, still stands.

BY ANDREW PERRY.

Have you read the clear, forcible articles that have been appearing on the kingdom from the pen of Brother F. B. Srygley? It is strange, after our having had so many debates with the Baptists and others, that we have had some in our own ranks who would go back to sectarian ground on the kingdom question.

The special numbers of the Gospel Advocate are fine and of themselves worth much more than the price of the Advocate for one year.

Then, are you keeping in touch with the excellent new books from the Mc-Quiddy Printing Company? I am especially pleased with two of them. "Adventism and the Bible," by J. Henry Monk, I regard as the strongest and best book on this subject we have had for many years. Brother Monk, being an Adventist preacher for a number of years and being in their schools and camp meetings with their ablest preachers, had a chance to know their teaching to the fullest extent, and he has completely answered every point. I bespeak for this book a wide sale. The other book, "The Model Church," by Brother G. C. Brewer, if read and studied as I think it will be, will help in bringing up the church all over the land to a much higher scriptural plan of existence. The chapters are well arranged and are clear presentations of the following important subjects: "What Constitutes a Congregation;" "The Qualifications of an Elder;" "The Duties of the Elders;" "The Relation of the Overseen to the Overseer;" "How Elders are Made;" "The Diaconate;" "Dealing with the Disorderly:" "Figuring on the Finances:" "Church Music;" "A Model Church;" " Prayer-meeting Topics." T have never seen a more useful book. It will surely have a great sale and do unlimited good.

I will now be on the wing among the congregations for some weeks, and expect to handle dozens of copies of these two books and other books.

For more than Forty Years Cotton Growers have known that POTASH PAYS

More than 11,651,200 Tons of Potash Salts had been imported and used in the United States in the 20 years previous to January, 1915, when shipments ceased. Of this 6,460,700 Tons consisted of which the cotton grower knew was both a plant food and a preventive of blight and rust,—with it came also 1,312,400 Tons of which has the same effect on Cotton, but which was used mainly in mixed fertilizers.

KAINIT

Shipments of both Kainit and Manure Salt have been resumed but the shortage of coal and cars and high freight rates make it more desirable to ship Manure Salt, which contains 20 per cent of actual Potash, instead of Kainit, which contains less than 13 per cent actual Potash.

MANURE SALT can be used as a side dressing on Cotton in just the same way as Kainit and will give the same results. Where you used 100 pounds of Kainit, you need to use but 62 pounds of Manure Salt, or 100 pounds of Manure Salt go as far as 161 pounds of Kainit.

MANURE SALT has been coming forward in considerable amounts and cotton growers, who cannot secure Kainit, should make an effort to get Manure Salt for side dressing to aid in making a big cotton crop.

Muriate of Potash

50 per cent actual Potash, has been coming forward also,—100 pounds of Muriate are equivalent to 400 pounds of Kainit or 250 pounds of Manure Salt.

These are the three

Standard GERMAN Potash Salts

that were always used in making cotton fertilizers and have been used for all these years with great profit and without any damage to the crop.

The supply is not at present as large as in former years, but there is enough to greatly increase the Cotton Crop if you insist on your dealer making the necessary effort to get it for you.

Is Your Blood Starving For Want of Iron?

Iron is Red-Blood Food—Nuxated Iron Helps Put Roses Into the Cheeks of Women and Gives Strength and Energy to Men

If you were to go without eating until you become weak, thin and enarclated, you could not do a more serious harm to yourself than when you let your blood literally starre for want of Iron—iron that gives it strength and power to change food into living tissue, muscle and brain. Without plenty of Iron' in the blood, no matter how much or what you ent, your food slimply passes through you without doing you any good—you don't get the strength out of it and instead of being filled with youthful strength and energy you are weak, nervous and all run-down. If you are not strong or well you owe it to yourself to make the following test: See how long you can walk or how far you can walk without becoming Ired. Next take two five-grain tablets of ordinary Nuxated Iron three times per day after meals for two weeks, then test your strength again and see how much you have gained. Numbers of nervous, run-down people who were alling all the while have most astonishingly increased their strength and endurance simply by taking iron in the proper form. But don't take the old kinds of iron simply to save a few cents. You must take iron in a form that can be easily absorbed and assimilated like Nuxated Iron if you want it to do you any good, otherwise it may prove worse than useless. You can procure Nuxated Iron from your druggist on an absolute guarantee of satisfaction or your money will be refunded.

Among the Colored Folks

Since my last report my condition has grown gradually worse, but I am thankful that it is no worse than it is, I am glad to say that the brethren and sisters, white and colored, are faithfully looking after my needs, and I am unable to find words to express my thanks to them. I do not know just how long I will be on this side of the river; but just continue to remember me, brethren. I am sure I shall not be able to reward you, but the good Lord will. I am so glad that when I could I labored hard to win souls for Christ, and never did complain, but went willingly at the task, trusting Jesus to bless my labors; and I can truthfully say that he has wonderfully blessed me, and now I can look back over a life well spent in the Master's vineyard. As I have labored over forty years, I feel like I am able to give some advice to my preaching brethren and to the members in gen-Never fail to contend for the apostolic doctrine everywhere you go, and let your life be just what the old Book calls for, and your influence will be great among men. Brethren, come to see me; and if you cannot come, write me a few words. My address is 1502 Hamilton Street, Nashville, Tenn. S. W. WOMACK.

I am now (May 6) engaged in a meeting in Beaumont, Texas, preaching the gospel to a people that never heard it before. I am glad to be engaged in such a work. The white church here will support the meeting. They have my heartiest thanks. Brother Forrest, the white preacher, is doing a good work here.

Brethren, if there was ever a time when the gospel was needed to be preached, it is now. The world seems to be upset since the great world war. We are trying to make peace with all nations, but this can only be done by preaching the gospel to them. We have but few houses in this part of the country (Southeast Texas), and for that reason a tent is badly needed. I am asking that each brother and sister aid me in getting this tent. I have paid the first ten dollars on the tent; now, who will send the next? The tent will cost three hundred dollars. Will the ministers take the matup with their congregations and help me to get this tent in thirty days? can do a great work in this part of the State with a tent. Let all fall in line and raise the necessary amount by the middle of June. Send contributions to me. My address is Route 1, Box 2a, Beaumont, Texas.

JOHN T. RAMSEY.

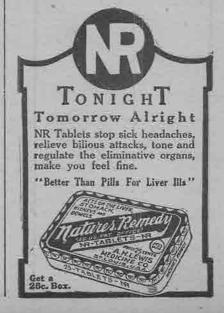

After spending six months in Detroit, Mich., I am now back home to take up protracted-meeting work for this season. Although I went to Detroit for my boy's health, I labored in an automobile factory for our support and preached at the mission on Antoine Street. This was a fine field to labor in. Interest grew in every service, and four were baptized and three restored while I was there. I have been engaged to hold a few -weeks' meeting there this fall. Since being home I have met with the Jackson Street Church, and I am glad to say they are doing well. This is the congregation Brother Womack and Brother Alexander Campbell labored so hard and earnestly to establish some years I shall never forget those good brethren—A. B. Lipscomb, Joe Mc-Pherson, F. W. Smith, S. P. Pittman, and F. B. Srygley—who came and gave us scriptural instruction on two occasions, but those who went out and now worship on Jefferson Street refused to hear or receive their instruction. Although Brother Joe McPherson has gone from us, his labors and his influence among us still live. only ask that these good men bear with us and pray for us that a better state of affairs may exist in the future. We cannot build congregations and schools with division, strife, and hatred existing among us; so I long for the day when we will confess our wrongs and forgive each other and not divide God's people over our faults. pray that I may be instrumental in bringing many precious souls to Christ this season. BY F. L. PAISLEY.

Jessie Taylor came into her parents' home, in Metropolis, Ill., on February 20, 1896. My father moved into that town in 1907, and for one month we lived in talking distance of the Taylor home. I do not remember having seen her who was to have so much to do with my life during those days. Not until 1913 do I remember seeing her, and though I then never dreamed of ever winning her love, I well remember that the happy expression of smiles and sunshine was very noticeable. She smiled, nodded, and spoke to every one passing her, if she got a chance. In a few months I began to be attracted by her sweetness, and soon a courtship of near four years began, much of which time I was away either in school or preaching. We demonstrated the fact that young folks can court and not "fuss," "quit," and "get mad."

On June 24, 1914, Brother A. O. Colley buried her with her Lord in baptism. It never rained too hard, got too cold or too hot, henceforth, for her to go to church. She loved the truth, and though not much outspoken in that line, she learned rapidly. One winter we spent our evenings with the Bible as outlined by Brother Smith, covering the whole book. She had been a Methodist. She said, "I never knew why," but afterwards said, "I do not see how any one can believe anything but the truth."

On December 24, 1917, we were united as life companions by Brother F. W. Chunn. I believe none were ever happier or truer to each other than we. On March 31, last, she gave to me a pretty, sweet baby girl which lived only a few minutes. When we knew that we could not keep it, she did not give way to grief, but calmly said: "The Lord knows best." She never ceased going to church, even going the last well night she enjoyed. From the example of the mother of our Lord. I have always thought that a Christian mother should do that. Every one seemed to love and respect her all the more for this, and it only made me the happier. The dear girl lived only five days after our little one died, during which time she did not suffer enough to cause her to complain. She never realized that she was so near the end, neither did two good doctors. She never hinted death to me, only once asking if she was in danger. On April 5 she told the nurse to fix her pillow, saying: "I feel good; I am going to sleep." Death seized her firmly just as those words were spoken and life lasted only three or four minutes longer. During the struggle I asked her what hurt her, and I am sure she tried to say, "Nothing."

Brother Norred read comforting promises from the Lord's Book, and Brother Lowery addressed the weeping throng of friends, and a more consoling speech never fell from mortal lips. The body was taken to her former home and another funeral was conducted by Brother Charley Taylor in the very room where we were so happily made one a short time before. On April 8 my loved one was given back to earth to become dust again.

I am thankful to the Lord for her peaceful death. I am trying to say, as she had said, "The Lord knows best." I thank the Lord for permitting me to live with such, a loving and lovable girl even so short a time. In the words of Edwin Arnold, I fancy I hear her spirit say:

Farewell, friends! Yet not farewell; Where I am, ye too may dwell. I am gone before your face A moment's time, a little space. When ye come where I have stepped, Ye will wonder why ye wept; Ye will know, by wise love taught, That here is all, and there is naught. Weep a while, if ye are fain—Sunshine still must follow rain, Only not at death; for death, Now I know, is that first breath Which our souls draw when we enter Life, which is of all life center.

Living by the Day.

One secret of a sweet and happy Christian life is learning to live by the day. It is the long stretches that tire us. We think of life as a whole, running on for years. We cannot carry on this load until we are three-score and ten. We cannot fight this continually for half a century. But really there are no long stretches. Life does not come to us all at one time; it comes only a day at a time.—Selected.

The graces of Christian character may be mixed in different proportion, but must all be found in every one who lives the life of Christ. For no man can conquer the world except by faith; no man can resemble God except by love.—F. W. Robertson.

Walker.

Mrs. J. C. Walker was stricken with paralysis on May 9, 1920, and died the next day. She had been in bad health for some time. Sister Walker was the mother of ten children, three of them preceding her in death. Her life was filled with home duties and she made a helpmate indeed for Brother Walker. Her children followed the example of their mother in being members of the church. All the children except one are grown, and four of them are married. A large crowd attended the funeral services, which were conducted by the writer of this. Burial in Oakwood Cemetery, Tuscumbia, H. M. PHILLIPS.

Archer.

The congregation at Refuge has recently suffered a great loss in the death of Brother Logan Archer, who was a devout Christian and a leader among this people. He was born on January 10, 1875, in McNairy County, Tenn., and died on April 24, 1920. At an early age he obeyed the gospel, and from thenceforth was a shining light to those who sought a worthy example after which to pattern their lives. He is survived by his wife and six children; but they sorrow not as those who have no hope, but rather are comforted by the Master's words: "Blessed are they that keep his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and enter in through the gates into the city." The remains were interred at Refuge graveyard in the presence of a throng of sorrowing friends and relatives. L. H. KNIGHT.

Cunningham."

Leslie Clark Cunningham, who was born in Williamson County, Tenn., on August 29, 1882, was instantly killed near his home, Las Cruces, N. M., by a railroad engine striking an auto truck in which he was riding. was the second son of Elder and Mrs. J. A. Cunningham, of Bowie, Texas, and was well known here, having lived in this community several years. Besides his aged father and mother, he leaves three brothers and four sisters; as follows: R. H. Cunningham, of Nashville, Tenn.; Arthur B. Cunningham, of Dallas, Texas; Earl Cunning-ham, of Bowie, Texas; Mrs. Florence A. Foster, of Mount Pleasant, Tenn.; Mrs. Mamie 1. Hudson, of Denton, Texas; Mrs. Irene Worley, of Krum, Texas; and Mrs. Lavisa Lowry, of Wichita Falls, Texas. He also leaves a wife and two little children-Leslie Paul, aged two years, and Flora Mai, one month old at the time of his death, to sorrow because of the loss of their loved one. He lost his life at his post of duty, laboring for the comfort and happiness of his little family, to whom he was very devoted. Leslie loved home and family ties, and in boyhood and early manhood he willingly labored and sacrificed in helping to care for a large family. He was a pleasant companion and was universally liked by his associates. He will be remembered by his schoolmates and friends of the family at Little Lot and Shady

Gillentine.

I am sure there were many hearts made sad and many tear-dimmed eyes caused by the death of Brother R. L. Gillentine, in Oklahoma, on January 30, 1920. Cousin Richard will never die in the hearts of those who knew and loved him, and these are legion. He has simply fallen asleep in Jesus, to awake in that grand, glorious resurrection morn and ascend with Jesus to that celestial city. Cousin Richard not only rode all up and down the hills and hollows, the mountains and valleys of Middle Tennessee, preaching the old, old story, visiting the sick and dying, but he reared a fine family of intelligent, noblehearted, Cliristian boys and girls. His daughters are not only talented and accomplished; they are pure, true, sweet, modest, womanly Christians, like their good mother. Besides preaching, Cousin Richard was a good man and given to hospitality, even to Mor-mons, although he let them under-stand he was entertaining them because they were human beings, and not because they were Mormons. He was an elder in the church at Spencer, Tenn., and one of the directors of Burritt College: (Miss) MATTIE HOLDER.

Riley.

One of the oldest men, if not the oldest man, in Logan County, Ky., died near Allensville, on the morning of April 28, 1920, and the body was laid to rest in the cemetery in Allensville in the afternoon of April 29, in a vault which was built under his own supervision. Brother Lias Riley lived over ninety-two years on the place and in sight of the place where he was For fifty-six years he lived with born. his wife, who, with their nine grown children, survives him. He was a faithful husband, a good father, and a quiet, earnest, Christian man. thalf of his long life was spent in the service of his Master in the church of the living God, and he was, no doubt, brought into the kingdom of Christ under the influence of his faithful, Christian wife. Their devotion to each other and to the church was truly lovely. Brother Riley's life was never like a storm, but was as quiet as a May morning, and it was fitting that his death should likewise be quiet and peaceful, as his life had always been. It had for many years been his expressed wish and prayer that he might die suddenly on some bright, sunny day, and not have to undergo the suffering of a long spell of sickness and be a trouble and worry to his family. His prayer was answered; for a little after sunrise on a clear day he fell in his yard and lived just long enough to be assisted into his room, when he peacefully fell asleep in Jesus, the body to await the resurrection, and the spirit went to God who gave it. Rash.

The church in general, and espe-cially the College Street Church, has suffered a great loss in the recent death of Brother W. A. Rash. Brother Rash was born at Gainesboro, Tenn., in the year 1854 and spent his early life there. He was instrumental in establishing apostolic Christianity during his life there, and used freely his talents toward its maintenance. About fourteen years ago he became a resident of Nashville, identifying himself with the College Street church of Christ. As an elder and overseer of this church, he was always cognizant of the responsibility of the office, always discharging his duties in a scriptural and satisfactory manner. He is survived by his wife, Sister Lucetta Moore Rash; one son, Dr. Rash, a leading physician of this city; and two brothers. The funeral was conducted by the writer at the College Street church of Christ in the presence of many sympathizing friends. The large floral offerings and the many expressions of sympathy showed the high esteem in which he was held among his friends. While a great man in Israel has fallen, we believe that it is a victory; for after a while, if he was as faithful to God as we have a right to believe, he will inherit the crown for faithful service done. "Let not your heart be trou-bled: believe in God, believe also in me. In my Father's house are many mansions." May the bereaved be led to emulate his every Christlike char-J. Thigpen.

G. C. Thigpen, one of the charter members of the congregation at North Carolina, near Killen, Ala., passed to his eternal reward on April 16, 1920. Had he lived eight days longer, he would have lived in this world fourscore and one years. He never had any children of his own, but he has reared possibly six or more, most of whom were orphans. Some of these preceded him to the tomb. He leaves a sad, sorrowing wife, "Aunt Martha," as called, with a host of sad friends. He became a member of the church in the days when Brother R. W. Officer and Brother Askew were shaking this part of the religious world with forceful, gospel preaching. He will be sadly missed. He was one of the best-informed men I ever met. Many times I have called on him for information, in my earlier days, and it was always kindly given. It has been said of Brother Thispen that he was of Brother Thispen that he was among the best in Bible knowledge, especially the Old Testament, and he was not ignorant of the New Testament. In his earlier years he taught school and music, was County Surveyor for a long while, and always tried to do his best. As Lee said, when Stonewall Jackson fell, "I have iost my right arm," so may I and the whole community say in reference to "Uncle Gip," as he was affectionately called. May Heaven bless his widow and his relatives. "There remaineth therefore a rest to the people of God." His body was laid to rest in North Carolina cemetery in the presence of a very large congregation of friends, estimated at fifteen hundred.

The Lion of Judah.

More than seventy times in the book of Revelation its author refers to Jesus as "the Lamb." Once in the same book Jesus is called "the Lion," or, more specifically, "the Lion that is of the tribe of Judah." From this I do not conclude that our Savior was about seventy per cent lamblike and about one per cent lionlike in his nature. I understand that all the names given to Jesus are significant, but that John's favorite appellation for him was "the Lamb," suggestive of his office as the world's greatest Sacrifice and also of the meekness and gentleness of the innocent Savior. But there was also a good reason why he was called "the Lion" of Judah. The lion is metaphorically taken in the Bible and in literature generally as the most powerful and most courageous of all beasts. The tribe of Judah and its kings, who were valiant, courageous, and terrible to their enemies, and made a prey of them, is called a "lion's whelp." That was father Jacob's patronymic for the tribe as a whole. But Jesus, a lineal descendant of David, the great king, is individually called "the Lion that is of the tribe of Judah," because he was mighty, courageous, and revolutionary in his ministry among men. Long before his birth the prophet Malachi had said of him: "Behold, the Lord, whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple; and he shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver." This means that Jesus was to come where holiness was professed, and to sift the true from the false, the worldly and greedy religious sort from the devoted and the spiritual. He was not to make pretense at such a purification, but actually to accomplish the separation. * * *

The Temple Converted Into Stock Yards.

Following the first miracle that was wrought in Cana of Galilee, Jesus and his disciples went up from Capernaum to Jerusalem to attend the passover feast. As they entered the outer court of the temple, called the "court of the Gentiles," a strange, incongruous scene met Jesus' eyes. Instead of viewing a great crowd of worshipers, as one might reasonably expect, he saw what much resembled the stock yards on an unusually busy day. The court, with a space of about fourteen acres, was filled with a noisy assemblage. Dealers were crying their wares in loud and lusty voices; buyers were wrangling and disputing; coarse shouts of the cattle drovers added to the general uproar, while the clink of coins and the cries of animals rose above the din of the jostling crowd. If one should ask how came this strange sight to exist, the answer would be, " We did it for convenience' sake," and to the unthinking the answer might seem plausible. The law required each worshiper to bring a sacrifice to the Lord. Those who lived near Jerusalem could bring their own animals, but those who lived far away could not conveniently do this; hence it was an accommodation to them to be able to procure suitable animals after arriving at the place of the feast. At first the market was established somewhere in the city away from the temple, but afterwards, for convenience' sake, it was carried into the court of the temple, There were not only cattle dealers and pigeon sellers, but also money changers; for every Jew had to pay to the temple treasury an animal tax of half a shekel, and this tax must be paid only in Jewish coin. Hence the need of money changers for those who came from foreign countries. It was convenient enough to get their money changed outside the temple; but the grafters, to make it more convenient for the pilgrims and more profitable to themselves. set up their tables inside the court. As a result, the house of prayer became a "den of thieves." The poor were shamefully treated, and the worship of God was hindered and impoverished instead of being facilitated and enriched. And all of this travesty of worship took place under the pretext of "convenience in the worship."

Innovations for Convenience' Sake.

Instrumental music and other innovations have been introduced into Christian worship in modern times by many who admit that such things are not taught in the New Testament and were not used by the early church, but who make the plea of "necessary for convenience' sake." It is right and proper to have things convenient in the worship, so long as no principle of worship is violated; but when the introduction of a convenient thing changes the spirit and meaning of any New Testament command, then the convenient thing becomes the unholy thing—"becomes more destructive and devilish than it is convenient;" it undermines the power of religion; it divides the hearts of Christians; it turns men away from the truth. We should not forget that the Lion of Judah "made a scourge of cords," then entered into one of the most convenient places of worship that ever existed in the world, "and cast all out of the temple, both the sheep and the oxen; and he poured out the changers' money, and overthrew their tables," In brief, Jesus separated and temporarily destroyed all of those conveniences because they were not in harmony with God's words. Now, I do not learn from this that Christians today, who are zealous for the purity of the worship, should,

Carrie-Nationlike, take a hatchet or a crowbar and violently seek to "bust up" or "prize out" everything that does not meet with their approval; but I do learn that, taking the sword of the Spirit and the shield of faith, and having our feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace, we should go forth and contend earnestly against everything that is not according to the pattern.

Brother McQuiddy's Reply on the College Question.

Above will be seen an article from Brother J. C. Mc-Quiddy, managing editor of the Gospel Advocate, in which he reviews my article of several weeks ago on "McQuiddy's Dust and Argument," published in the Review. I am glad that Brother McQuiddy is disposed to reason concerning the college question before his readers.

Brother McQuiddy's chief argument for "Bible schools" is that they had such schools among the Jews throughout their history before Christ came, and that they had such at his advent, and that therefore "it is but natural and reasonable to suppose" that they were introduced into the affairs of Christians. Our brother makes what seems to be a long quotation from some man to show that "Bible schools" had been brought over from the Jewish to the Christian dispensation, but seems ashamed of quoting men so much instead of God, as he did in his other article, to substantiate his reasoning, and so he leaves out the name of his author, quotation marks, etc. Either Brother Mc-Quiddy or his authority says this: "At Ephesus, Paul spoke, reasoned, and persuaded the Jews in the synagogue school for the space of three months. He then departed from them, taking with him the Christian scholars, and he gathered the nucleus of a Christian Bible school in connection with a daily exercise 'in the school of Tyrannus, which centinued for the space of two years." Now where does it say, Brother McQuiddy, that Paul spoke, reasoned, and persuaded "In the synagogue school?" The inspired text The inspired text says: "And he entered into the synagogue, and spake boldly for the space of three months, reasoning and persuading as to the things concerning the kingdom of God." (Acts 19: 8.) Brother McQuiddy, in his own words or Indorsement, has added the word "school" to the text in order to carry his point on the school question. John says concerning his words (and the same applies to all the rest of God's word): "If any man shall add unto them, God shall add unto him the plagues which are written in this book." Our brother would better be careful!

It is up to Brother McQuiddy to try again to show that organizations of schools for teaching God's word have been brought over from the Jewish to the Christian system. His connecting link is a "supposition," as he himself expressed it. His reasoning runs thus: They had teaching back in the Old Testament, and Christ commands teaching in the New Testament; therefore "it is but natural and reasonable to suppose" that as they taught in schools in Old Testament times, "Christ gave them [his apostles] authority to organize Bible schools." This reasoning is much like the evolution theory of the origin of man: Monkey has eyes, man has eyes; monkey has ears, man has ears; monkey has head shaped like some men, and some men have heads shaped like monkeys; monkey can act like some men, and some men can act like monkeys; monkey has a tail, and man has an appendix—therefore, "it is but natural and reasonable to suppose" that man and monkey are kin! But there is a link out of the reasoning. [Darwin: "Shake hands, Brother McQuiddy; we both are sitting in the 'missing link' row!"]

Now who was this Tyrannus who had this "school?" Echo answers: Who? Men had schools of rhetoric and philosophy in those days, and this might have been one of them. There is not the slightest evidence that it was established by Christians to teach the Bible, and I know of no "Bible college" advocate who affirms it: yet such should be the case to give authority to the example. This man seemed to take a liking to Paul or his teaching and permitted him to reason with his scholars concerning God's word. There is no evidence that Tyrannus hired Paul to teach, and made the Bible a study in the curriculum, and thus had it as part of the organization, as is the case in these "Bible colleges" under discussion. It seems that there was a continuous reasoning—investigation, debate—going on. Paul was doing this simply as an individual Christian, while the teacher of the Bible in these "Bible schools" and colleges to-day is hired by the organization of the college, and his identity "so far as work is concerned" is lest—it is the school which does the teaching, not the individual as the individual.

Our brother challenges me again to show that God commands us "how" to teach, but warns me not to refer again to the command to glorify God "in the church," for he says that the college people glorify God "in the church" when they teach the Bible in their schools. Now we have come to the real point at issue. I deny that these college brethren are teaching the Bible "in the church" when they are doing it in their "Bible schools" and colleges as they are now doing.

This church in which Paul tells us to glorify God is an organization, as can be seen from the following definition of the word "organization" as found in the Standard Dictionary: "A systematic union of individuals in a body where officers, agents, and members work together for a common end." Christ is the head of this organization, the apostles are subordinate leaders, bishops of the flocks are heads of the local churches, deacons are specially appointed servants of the local churches, and as local churches, as Christian families, and as individual Christians, the followers of Jesus worked in the apostolic period in helping the poor and sick, teaching God's word, etc. The church as found in the New Testament is God's definition of what he means by the word "church;" the way they worked in New Testament times is God's definition of what is meant by the expression "in the church."

But there are other organizations; one is a "Bible college." It has a "union of individuals in a body;" has "system" in such; has officers called president, secretary, treasurer, faculty, trustees, etc., and has agents to go out and drum up scholars; has pupils; and these all "work together for a common end"—the glorifying of God. The officers, laws, treasury, etc., of the church are different from the officers, laws, treasury, etc., of the college. They are different organizations, and the college-crazed brethren give glory to God in the college, while Paul commands us to glorify him "in the church." Don't say that those who teach the Bible in the colleges are Christians, for that has nothing to do with the subject. Men belong to both lodges of Odd Fellows and Masons; but what they do as members of Odd Fellows glorifies the Odd Fellows lodge, and what they do as Masons glorifies the Masonic lodge. So what you do "in the church" merely as Christians, as Christian familles or local churches, glorifies God "in the church;" but what you do in a "Bible college" glorifies God in the "Bible college." But Paul says to glorify him "in the church."

Brother McQuiddy does not believe my statement that "when a man works for a railroad company, he loses his identity so far as work is concerned and becomes part of the organization," when I illustrated the point that a teacher of the Bible in a "Bible college"—where he is hired by the organization and the study is made part of the curriculum—has lost his identity of work, and that it is not he, but the organization, that is doing the teaching. He brings up several illustrations to show that people doing a work do not "lose their identity." But I did not say merely "loses his identity," but I said, "loses his identity so far as work is concerned." Thus, much that he says on this point is wasted. But I notice his illustrations, nevertheless.

Here is one of his examples to show that a worker in an organization does not "lose his identity so far as work is concerned:" "Is the negro cook who works for a family a part of the family, and does she lose her identity as a cook? Nay, verily." It is evident from Brother McQuiddy's "Nay, verily" that he does not propose to have a negro cook as part of his family; but, say what he pleases, the negro cook is part of his household, if he has such a cook; and they ghe the weman has not lost her identity as a cook, she has lost her identity as an individual cook, which is the point at issue. Her cooking is no longer her own as such, but is McQuiddy's. She uses McQuiddy's flour barrel, not her own. And when our brother's friends leave, after having enjoyed a good meal, they may say to him or his wife, "I have enjoyed your dinner so much," though perhaps neither he nor his wife did anything actually to prepare it. It was McQuiddy's dinner, regardless of the fact that the "negro cook" prepared it. Why? Because the cook became part of the organization and her work became part of the affairs of the McQuiddy household. So the teacher in the "Bible college" "loses his identity so far as work is concerned," and he becomes part of the "Bible college" organization.

"If the railroad employee is a part of the organization, when he strikes, he strikes against himself." Well, I see nothing strange about that. I have seen many people work against themselves. The employee may be a member of another organization—the "union"—and his love for the labor organization may impel him to obey its orders and leave the capitalist organization. This only shows that a man may be a member of two organizations and that one may work against the other, just as a Christian may belong to the church and the "Bible college," and his work in the "Bible college" may be against the church. Nothing strange about that, for the college brethren are doing it continuously!

"If Brother Sommer be correct, the conflict between capital and labor is a myth, for the laborer is part of the capitalistic organization." Where have I said that when a man worked for an organization he lost his entire identity? I said that "he lost his identity so far as work is concerned and becomes part of the organization." While he is working for that organization, he is part of it. When a laborer works for an organization, he is part of that organization "so far as work is concerned." Nothing "mythical" about that! And, on the same ground, when a Christian is hired by a "Bible college" to teach the Bible (that study being part of the curriculum), that individual loses his identity so far as work is concerned." and becomes part of the organization, and is thus giving glory to God through the human organization of a "Bible college" instead of through the divine organization of the church, as Paul commands.

"If, as he says, the college does the teaching, then why employ teachers? Such a statement refutes itself." On the same principle, we might ask why he applies the name "McQuiddy Printing Company" to his business concern when he knows that neither McQuiddy nor his company does the printing, but the presses! Does this title on your stationery "refute itself?" Tut, tut, my brother; no more child's reasoning! The college does the teaching of the Bible by employing Bible teachers, just as the "McQuiddy Printing Company" does the printing by employing printers and presses. The Bible teacher in the human organizations of "Bible colleges" "loses his identity so far as work is concerned and becomes part of the organization," just as the printer in McQuiddy's Printing Company loses his identity so far as work is concerned, thus permitting this printer's work to go out under the name "McQuiddy Printing Company." As the "McQuiddy Printing Company." As the "McQuiddy Printing Company." As the "McQuiddy Printing Company," not the individual printer, gets the glory for the good work which he does for the company, so the "Bible college," not the church, gets the glory for the good which the Bible teacher does through that organization. But Paul says: "Unto God be glory in the church."

"If a man loses his identity because associated with others," "a man by no means loses his identity because he associates himself with Christian people." Who said he did? Why does Brother McQuiddy use the word "associate?" It is "organization," not mere "association," that we are talking about. Nowhere have I said simply, "he loses his identity," referring to personal identity, though our brother takes that idea and intimates that I teach that he will not be judged as an individual in the last day. I said in my former article, as mentioned several times, that "when a man works for a railroad company, he loses his identity so far as work is concerned." Much that Brother McQuiddy has said is irrelevant, for he has misrepresented continuously my statement.

This reasoning applies to all organizations established to do work of the church, whether they be "Bible colleges," religious journals which are "companies," orphan homes, aid societies, missionary societies, etc. The Christian who does his good works through them loses his identity, "so far as work is concerned," and is thus giving glory to God through the human organization instead of "through the church," as Paul commands.

Brother McQuiddy's effort to break down the line between organization and unorganization, by speaking of the "temporary associations or organizations of persons as a protracted meeting or a Bible reading," shows how a drowning man will grasp at a straw. Such temporary cooperation has no real right to the name "organization;" and, besides, such cooperation is indersed by apostolic teaching; but we have no apostolic teaching for such organization as we have been condemning. The church of the New Testament did all kinds of missionary work, aid work, and Bible-teaching work, and they had no such human organizations. Can't we work the same way, and thus be sure we are right?

Even if these "Bible colleges" are scriptural, they are doing an unscriptural work—they are developing a clergy to take the place of the bishops. In most places where they can support a man, the churches under the influence of these colleges have a preacher to preach practically every Lord's-day morning and night, pastor?" Where are the bishops wh Is he not "the pastor?" Where are the bishops which God ordained should feed and guide the flock of God? At Fort Worth, Texas, in last December, about one hundred preachers, "representative men" from different parts of the State, met (says the Firm Foundation) and formed the colleges and orphan homes into "a corporate body," as they called it, with three men to control it, to raise a million dollars for these human organizations. And this "unification" of these organizations went through this body of "representative men" without any dissension. The Christian-Evangelist has been trying to get such a unification of their societies for twenty years, and only recently overcame the opposition; but here these "representative brethren" put this "corporate body" through, with its triple pope, the first time it is proposed. My brethren of the college craze, are you not going into popery faster than are the old digressives? "Purge out the old leaven" of humanisms, that you may be a new lump,-D. Austen Sommer, in Apostolic Review.

"Money Madness."

BY F. W. SMITH.

The Christian Standard of May 15 contains an article from the pen of our venerable brother, J. B. Briney, on the above topic, and it is so pointed, striking vigorously at the very taproot of the evil that has led to the wide departure from the New Testament order and the "current restorative movement" as it was started, that it is deemed proper to give it a place in these columns:

Did anybody ever see the like before? It's one "drive" after another in such rapid succession as to make one's head swim! Now, I would not discourage the raising of money in large sums to be expended in legitimate ways for legitimate purposes; but money is raised in so many illegitimate ways and expended for so many illegitimate purposes that it is expedient to scrutinize and carefully consider the whole question of the use of money in public enterprises. It seems that money is looked to as the controlling power in pretty much all the affairs of this world in all of their ramifications and relations, and about the first question commonly propounded in regard to a proposed project is: "How much money can be put behind it?" It makes no difference whether the enterprise pertains to church or state, to religion or politics, this question forges to the front, and demands and receives much consideration.

The illegitimate use of money in politics is a matter of common knowledge and common scandal. People are making their way into high places in government by the use of "the almighty dollar." who, but for their money, would spend all their days in private life. Recent developments in regard to a senatorial election are an apt illustration of the fact just stated, and, while one such case may come to light, there are probably many others that clude the public gaze and go unwhipped of justice. While Rome was in her period of decadence and marching on to her fall, her senatorships were sold at public auction; and when we think of that, we experience a sensation of horror; but how much worse was that than the way senatorships are bought in our day and country? These modern methods are perhaps more corrupting to the citizenship of the nation than was Rome's method of trading in political goods, and the nation that follows such methods is sure, sooner or later, to be overtaken by the same fate that befell ancient Rome.

And not only has money laid its hands upon the affairs of state, but it is throwing its tentacles about the church and seeking to dominate its life and work, and now almost any enterprise that comes before the public upon a strong money basis is sure to gain adherents. People are awed into its support by the sheer power of the millions of dollars that are behind it, and the matter of its real, intrinsic merit occupies a place in the background. Money is the greatest menace that threatens the literary institutions of the land at the present time, and especially those of a religious character. If Christian people establish an institution of learning for a special purpose, they can have no assurance that the institution, the creature of their benevolence, will be held sacred to that purpose, unless they throw about it stringent legal safeguards that cannot be evaded, and that is preity hard to do. Endow a college with an amount of money that makes it independent of the perennial benevolence of the people who established it, put it into the hands of a self-perpetuating board of trustees, and the probability is that ere long they will snap their fingers at the real owners of the institution and prostitute it to the promotion of any skeptical theories that a faculty of freak professors of their own appointment may choose to teach, This course of events has been witnessed in more than one instance.

The Interchurch World Movement is a conspicuous example of efforts to push things through with the force of It almost makes the average mind dizzy to contemplate the immense sums of money that seem to be at the disposal of this mushroom enterprise, and it is almost paralyzing to look upon the immense throngs that are bowing before this Moloch. It seems to be relying very largely upon money for success, and whatever success money may bring it will be mostly of a metallic and unspiritual char-These money-grabbing schemes in connection with religious movements appear to indicate that money is supposed to be the great power of God to convert and save the world, and it is a vain and delusive hope. How different this from the program of the Savior when he sent the apostles out by two and two, telling them to take "no money in their purse!" Money will not turn the world to Christ, even if poured out in millions and billions, unless it is backed by a united church and a faithful ministry, who preach the pure gospel of the Son of God as it is laid down in the New Testament; and when these conditions prevail, reinforced by holy living on the part of those claiming to be followers of the Lamb of God, the work will be done, money or no money.

This view of the matter finds abundant support in the history of methods and results during the apostolic age, when the disciples realized that the gospel is "the power of God unto salvation," and went about preaching it in its fullness and beauty. It is remarkable how little we read about money as a factor in promoting the work during those stirring times when men and women responded to the gospel call in companies of thousands in a day! those days success was estimated by the number of souls saved, and not by the amount of money raised and expended. The Interchurch World Movement may astonish the world by the large amount of money that seems to be at its command, but it will not thereby convert to the Lord Jesus Christ the world that it has astonished. When Paul and Barnabas went forth from Antioch on a missionary journey, they traveled through various regions preaching the word and making disciples, and upon their return trip they revisited the same regions, organizing the disciples into churches and appointing them elders, and there is not a word said about money in connection with the whole transaction. They relied on the gospel, and that brought the desired results.

One of the things that opened my eyes to the danger of the societies and had much to do with my turning away from them was an article from the pen of Brother David Lipscomb, quite thirty years ago, on the subject, "A Moneyed-Basis Membership." He showed in that article that the society brethren had placed the management of the affairs of the kingdom of Christ upon a money basis, and that unless individuals and churches paid to the board so much money they could have no voice in the management of their own affairs. He further showed that such an arrangement would rule the Lord Jesus Christ and the apostles out of any voice in the matter, if they were on the earth, for the reason that they would have no money with which to buy representation in those deliberative bodies. He predicted that the importance and power given to money in the society arrangements would corrupt and ruin the church. Brother Briney has lived to see the prophecy fulfilled, and is now lifting his voice against it, but it is too late to do the rank and file any good. He may save some from the wreckage, but, in his own vigorous style, the majority are "money mad," and through the power of money have thrown their "tentacles about the church, seeking to dominate its life and work."

The rule is that a centralization of money brings a centralization of power, and centralization of power brings corruption in politics, commerce, society, and religion. For this reason, it is dangerous for God's people to pile up money for any enterprise, because sooner or later it will begin its work of corruption. Better keep God's money moving in good works—feeding the hungry, clothing the naked, caring for widows and orphans, preaching the gospel, and every other good work enjoined in the Scriptures. There is no human wisdom or power that can safeguard long at a time concentrated wealth—wealth placed in the hands of men to manage for religious purposes. Such men will become dictatorial, self-assertive, and discard the wisdom of God for their own, and assume to manage, control, and direct the affairs of every church within their reach.

Brother Briney is fighting a hard and noble battle against the infidelity and skepticism abounding in the pulpits and colleges of those who have been led astray by this concentration of wealth, but the churches under their leadership continue to shovel it into their hoppers. Witness the following from the Winchester Sun, by a Lexington (Ky.) correspondent, dated May 18:

Two big gifts to Transylvania College in connection with the Disciples' World Movement Campaign in Kentucky, which began on May 9, were announced the past week, one of ten thousand dollars to the athletic field fund from Ben Allen Thomas and W. J. Thomas, of Shelby County, and the other of fifteen thousand dollars from a woman devoted the interests of Transylvania and the Christian Church, but who believes in the scriptural injunction to "let not thy right hand know what thy left hand doeth," and whose name is not to be made public.

Ben Allen Thomas was a student at Transylvania in the classes of 1909, 1910, and 1911. The death of his father made it necessary for him to leave school to take charge of the farm, and he has made a splendid success of it. Two years ago he and W. J. Thomas, who is his uncle, and a curator of the college, gave sixty-two thousand dollars in cash to Transylvania. Ben Allen Thomas was captain of the famous 1911 football team, manager of the baseball team for a time, and a member of the college's track team. He was one of the most popular students the college ever had.

It is probable that the athletic field will be named Thomas Field in honor of the donors of the ten-thousand-dollar fund for its equipment, to which the college will add a like sum to furnish a stadium and complete athletic equipment. The location is expected to be on the present North Broadway athletic field.

Mr. Thomas married Miss Vestina Bailey, also a Transylvania graduate, and they welcomed to their Shelby County home, April 20, Ben Allen Thomas, Jr.

The Kentucky Division drive for $1,200,000, which was scheduled to end Sunday, will continue its campaign probably until June 1, if necessary to complete the quota.

While a large majority of the Christian churches in the State accepted their quotas, and many of them raised them, for local reasons in some cases, it was not possible for the churches to put on their campaign the last week, and these will hold their drives at a later date, some of them this week and others next week.

State Director Joseph W. Hagin preached in his own church in Covington Sunday, returning to Lexington Tuesday to resume his campaign work. Dr. R. H. Crossfield left for New York Sunday night in the interest of the movement.

Dr. A. W. Fortune returned from Montgomery County Monday. He reported that Somerset Church, in that county, whose quota was $1,650, had raised $2,228 and had not closed its work.

Dr. Homer W. Carpenter's church at Richmond has raised $8,000. Its quota is $7,000.

Other churches that have reported in part, but still are at work, are: Antioch, Fayette County, $540; Augusta, to date, $225; Bridgeport, Franklin County, $200; Mortonsville, Woodford County, $1,000.

Thus the churches of Kentucky continue to pour into the lap of this college, which is dominated and controlled by men whose religious faith and teachings are diametrically opposed to the Bible and the founders of the college, their tich gifts of gold, to make it still more powerful in destroying the work of the Son of God. "Money mad!" Yes, that expresses it in a nutshell. Take the money out of these institutions, and the religious skeptics and infidels now in control would seek other fields of employment, and not one of them would lay claim to the Christian ministry. No congregation of disciples should keep large sums in its treasury. Contribute liberally, but keep it going. Do not try to shift personal responsibility onto something else, and imagine that your money thus given will atone for your neglect of duty

Preachers and Preaching.

BY C. E. HOLT.

Under this heading, in the Gospel Advocate of April 29, appears the second installment of "Observer's" observations regarding preachers and preaching as relates to the support of preachers and as to their duties and relationship to secular affairs. Criticism is good when made in the right spirit and when it is fair and honorable and just. Hypercriticism should not be engaged in nor encouraged. It is truly said that our friends criticize us, while our enemies simply find fault. It is true that plain, unambiguous statements can be warped and twisted and distorted in such a way that the ideas which their authors meant to convey is obscured or completely destroyed. When one is so obsessed with a certain idea or theory in religion as to be unable to see any truth that might be held to and taught by those on the other side of a question on which he stands, he is an unsafe and, usually, an unfair critic.

If "Observer," in his observations and criticisms, is not trying to establish the theory that all preachers of the gospel should have a secular calling from which they are to derive at least a part of their support, then I am unable to see any object he has in view or any point he seeks to make. He observes that the present editors of the Gospel Advocate are derelict in their editorial duties in not puncturing, in places, the article on which he so loyally and so generously offers his own critical observations. A preacher of no mean ability thinks if Brother David Lipscomb were alive and as vigorous as he was in his palmiest days, that my article under review would have been badly punctured, as Observer thinks it so richly deserves to be. Now, my friends, it is not what Alexander Campbell or David Lipscomb or any other great man of modern times thought or thinks about some point or plan connected with Christianity and about the methods of its propagation; but the divine record, the word of God, should be our rule and guide.

Now, the question, when stripped of all ambiguity and irrelevancy, is: Does the God of heaven and earth, the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, require and ordain and decree that his preachers of the gospel shall make their own living in some one or more of the many secular lines of business in which all other men may engage? Does he do it? That just simply means, does Almighty God require a man who preaches to farm, teach school, practice law, write insurance, practice medicine, or follow any other secular calling from which to derive a support? Does he? It is not that men who follow these secular lines of business may not do all the preaching they are able to do in connection with their business; that is commendable in any Christian man. When circumstances are such that a man cannot get a support from preaching, then it is praise-worthy and highly commendable in him to work with his hands and do all the preaching he can. You will please observe, Brother "Observer," that I say when circumstances so require. If you will pardon a personal reference, I will state that I have farmed and taught school for a living, and preached all I could at "odd times." I did this for several years.

I did not quit secular business because I was afraid of dirt and sweat and toil. No, sir. I did it to make an honest living. There were few churches in the section of country in which I did my first preaching. There are many now. I traveled thousands of miles on horseback, wore the cheapest kind of clothes (including celluloid collars), slept in the humblest homes, traveled in all kinds of weather, endured all kinds of persecutions from my religious enemies, suffered from misrepresentations of jealous preachers and many other things which go to make up the hardships of a preacher's life among a strongly prejudiced and untaught people. I have never been in jail, nor whipped, nor shot; but I tell you I have been in some "tight" places. But out of all these the Lord has delivered me.

But let this pass. I just wanted to throw a little light along "Observer's" pathway, lest, in his zeal to write me down a modern pastor, "all dressed up and nowhere to go," he should go astray.

According to "Observer," my chief offense lurks in the statement that God has always recognized a distribution of work among his children of equal rank. The phrase "of equal rank" seems to "Observer" to imply that there may be different "ranks" among God's people. A plural always implies a singular, but a singular does not necessarily imply a plural. "Observer" seems to think that the word "rank" should not be applied to God's people at all. It is true that the word "rank" has several meanings. fourth definition of the word given by Webster in his International Dictionary is this: "An aggregate of individuals classed together." This is the sense in which I used the term as applied to God's people. All of God's people in their spiritual relationship to him are of equal rank that is, they have equality as to their relationship to the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit. They are God's children: members of the "one body," the church. Their difference in age and in degrees of knowledge and of ability to perform the different lines of work in the kingdom of God does not place them in different ranks as regards their relationship to God. The greatest preacher in the church of Christ is no higher in "rank" than is the poorest and most ignorant disciple. His superior ability makes his responsibilities greater and fits him for a greater work in the kingdom. This equalness of relationship is clearly expressed by Paul in the following: "For ye are all sons of God, through faith, in Christ Jesus. For as many of you as were baptized into Christ did put on Christ. There can be neither Jew nor Greek, there can be neither bond nor free, there can be no male and female: for ye are all one man in Christ Jesus." (Gal. 3: 26-28.) This is what I meant and what I mean when I use the expression, "God's children of equal rank." Now, Brother "Observer," please observe this, and it will surely allay your fears.

"Observer" quotes from my article under review thus:
"It is true that men may and do follow secular callings and also do considerable preaching; but this is not God's way of evangelizing the world. Paul's case of making tents is much abused. That was an incident or an accident, and is not to be exalted into a law for preachers." My critic calls this a strange utterance. Wherein, I ask, lies its strangeness? Is it the fact that I said Paul's tentmaking was an incident or an accident in the work of the apostle in connection with his preaching that is strange? If this is the thing which seems so strange to "Observer,"

I then ask if making tents was Paul's chief business and if preaching the gospel was the incident or accident in the matter. Which? I take the ground that Paul's chief business was preaching the gospel, and tentmaking was followed on one occasion, at least, as a method of temporarily supplying his physical needs. Hence, it was an incident, and not done to establish a law for preachers of all succeeding time. The incidentals in Paul's life were not meant to be copied by all preachers of all time unless similar circumstances should prevail and the good of the cause at some particular time or at some particular place could be better subserved thereby.

Again, "Observer" would like to know who, in the Gospel Advocate, has been teaching that preachers should have a secular calling in connection with their preaching? The readers of the paper will readily recall the fact that the majority of the writers for the paper who have written on this subject have favored this plan, and they refer to Paul's tentmaking in Corinth in support of their contention. "Observer" bimself seems to be in this class.

Now, while we are examining some strange statements in my recent article on this subject, I find a statement which, for strangeness, far exceeds anything which has come under my observation. It is this: "Really, I cannot tell where the difference between 'secular' and religious or sacred comes in." It seems that a novice, even a small child of average intelligence, could make this distinction. Is preaching the gospel a secular business? Is it to be put in a class with farming, writing insurance, selling goods, school-teaching, etc.? Is it? Is Brother "Observer" like our good Brother Moody, who, in the same issue of the paper in which "Observer's" criticisms appear, takes the position that Christians should farm and follow any other vocation of like nature because they are Christians? For the same reason he insists some should preach the gospel. To me this is an unwarranted mixture of the "religious" and the "secular." Any man, be he saint or sinner, has a right to follow any honest secular business. All men who are capable should have a business whether they are Christians or not. This is right in the very nature of things. But to put these secular callings on a par with preaching the gospel is to make temporal things equal to things divine. Alexander Campbell said in his day, "We have all sorts of men teaching all sorts of doctrine;" and some still

For the benefit of Brother Moody and "Observer," whoever he may be, I shall try to show the difference between things that are purely secular and things that are religious, especially as regards preaching the gospel. While Paul made tents at Corinth and in part supported himself while planting the church in that great city, and while he afterwards confessed that, so far as the influence of his course in regard to the church at Corinth was concerned, he made a mistake, he has given us the Lord's will and way concerning this important work. Here is his masterly and clear-cut presentation of the truth on the subject. "What soldier ever serveth at his own charges? who planteth a vineyard, and eateth not the fruit thereof? or who feedeth a flock, and eateth not of the milk of the flock? Do I speak these things after the manner of men? or saith not the law also the same? For it is written in the law of Moses, Thou shalt not muzzle the ox when he treadeth out the corn. Is it for the oxen that God careth, or saith he it assuredly for our sake? Yea, for our sake it was written: because he that ploweth ought to plow in hope, and he that thresheth, to thresh in hope of partaking. If we sowed unto you spiritual things, is it a great matter if we shall reap your carnal things? If others partake of this right over you, do not we yet more? Nevertheless we did not use this right; but we bear all things, that we may cause no hindrance to the gospel of Christ. Know ye not that they that minister about sacred things [not secular | things, brethren] eat of the things of the temple, and they that wait upon the altar have their portion with the altar? Even so did the Lord ordain that they that proclaim the gospel should live of the gospel." (1 Cor. 9: 7-14.)

Preaching the gospel of Jesus Christ is the highest and the most responsible calling in this world. It is a calling in which the purest and most consecrated men should engage. Preachers of the gospel should be men who are pure in life, noble in purpose, broad in vision, and willing to die, if need be, for the message they deliver. Farmers and merchants and men who follow other secular lines of business may preach the gospel; but it is the preaching that saves the people, and not their farming, merchandising, etc. It should also be understood that it is not the preacher that should be exalted, but the work he does, the message he delivers. In a very important sense the preacher stands between the people and God. The preacher should be a true representative of the Christ, the world's Savior and King. The message he delivers means to the world eternal life or eternal death. The difference, therefore, between preaching the gospel and any secular line of business, as they affect mankind, is the difference between matters which pertain to things that are purely spiritual and things that are carnal and end with this life. A greater difference cannot be imagined, as it affects mankind for time and for eternity.

I regard this a vital doctrine—not a matter of relative importance, but one of absolute importance. It is this fact that moves me to write on this subject. But I must close this article with a promise of more to follow.

To "Observer" I will say that I love you whether you love me or not. All this is submitted in love to you and to all the brethren who stand with you on this subject.

Book Notices.

"The Model Church," by G. C. Brewer, treats of live subjects, and is a book that should be distributed among the churches. This book has been almost universally commended and is being read with interest by many people. Price, $1.

Have you read "Sunshine, or Uncle Minor's Stories?" This is a very attractive book for children as well as for old people. Children read it with much interest. It is profusely illustrated, and contains many interesting incidents and stories. Price, $1.50.

Send us $1.25 for a copy of "Sweeney's Sermons." This is a book of sermons by John S. Sweeney—one of the best books of sermons published. Sweeney carries conviction with the statement of his position, He is noted for brevity, clearness, and force of statement. Every young preacher should have a copy of this book of sermons.

A good book for young people to read is the "Life of Mrs. Charlotte Fanning." Mrs. Fanning was noted for her piety, zeal, and good sense. Hers was a life remarkable for the good accomplished. She always exerted an ennobling, refining, and uplifting influence. This book is ably edited by Mrs. Emma Page Larimore. Price, $1.

Have you seen a copy of "Adventism and the Bible?" This is one of the very best books for you to buy at the present time. Adventism is a live subject. Adventists are active and are propagating their doctrines. If you want to be thoroughly prepared to meet them and to expose the errors of Adventism, you should send us at once $1.25 for a copy of "Adventism and the Bible."

Send us fifteen cents for a copy of "What Was Nailed to the Cross?" It is a live tract, and is made up of some stirring thoughts of F. W. Smith. Adventists were active in North Nashville, and Brother Smith delivered a few sermons on the subject. The tract embodies the substance of these sermons. Buy a dozen copies and distribute them among the people. Price, $1.50 per dozen

A New Field Is Now Before Us.

After enjoying a delightful service at West End Avenue last Lord's day (May 23), I left for Baldwin, Ga., where I was met at the depot by Brethren Flavil Hall and R. L. Ludlam, who brought to a close, that evening, a meeting that had been in progress at that place for about twelve days. I was delighted with the splendid audience it was my privilege te address, the good singing, and the fine work Brother Ludlam has been doing in that section. A more untiring worker, and one who makes greater sacrifices, it has never been my privilege to meet. He is earnestly insisting that churches that have been working through human organizations and using instrumental music in their worship cease such practices and work and worship as the early Christians did, and he is succeeding in getting them to do so. There are some five or six congregations in that section with whom he is now laboring. He is doing some work across the line in South Carolina, and hopes to do more. He seems peculiarly suited for just such work, and I pray the Lord's blessing to ever be with him and his faithful wife. During our recent preachers' meeting in Atlanta it was decided that he should have more help, and Brother Flavil Hall agreed to go. He has just closed some five weeks' work in that section. It is needless for me to say that Brother Hall's work was well done. Brother Ludlam thought no other man could have been secured so eminently qualified to meet the needs of that section. He developed the members in their singing and preached to them the pure word of God with splendid results. The brethren at Baldwin told me that his meeting had made the deepest impression of any revival in the history of the church. Three souls were baptized into Christ, a leader from the local forces was found to take hold of the singing and other work, and the very best is to be expected for its future history. If it is the Lord's will, I will return in July for a week's meeting. Brother Flavil is also to soon return to help, and will make it a rule, for the next twelve months, to spend as much time as possible in that and near-by sections.

Now, just a word to any and all who have a bit more that they wish to put into successful mission work. No one can live the Christian's life without continually striving to extend the cause of Christ. I am glad to say that the Atlanta churches are doing very nearly their best. But there never has been such opportunities before us to go in "and possess the land" as now. New fields are opening in every direction, and we find ourselves unable to meet all demands. Two more men are due here the first of June to help us, and we are trying to arrange for more. Who will have fellowship in this work by sending to R. L. Harwell 153 Oglethorpe Avenue, Atlanta, Ga., an offering for this work? Become a regular contributor to this work, that every new field may be entered and all the ground we gain be held to the honor and glory of God. Please give this your best thought.

Resignation.

A good sister, in writing for our special songs "My Loving Mother" and "They Are Going One by One." makes the following request: "I have been reading after you for the last two years. I like your writings. Will one of you [Brother Flavil Hall or S. H. Hall] please write a short article on 'Resignation?' I have had many disappointments in life, and have thought I was learning to be resigned in all things, but I have not conquered yet. One at the present time is very, very great.'

In reply to this, I would suggest, in the first place, that it might be well for our sister to never get to the place, while living, where she thinks she has absolutely conquered. It is a bit dangerous to get in this condition. (See 1 Cor. 9: 27; 10: 12.) We must ever keep the body under. It never will learn the lesson of resignation of itself so long as life is in it. The best thing I know to say to our sister is to ever live with a living consciousness that God knows her and loves her as no one else can; that he knows her every need, her every sorrow and heartache. We are told to cast our burdens upon the Lord and he will sustain us. (Ps. 55: 22.) We have no promise of his help unless we do as he says: "Cast thy burden upon the Lord." Then we are commanded to cast all of our anxiety upon the Lord; "for he careth for" us. (1 Pet. 5: 7.) Sometimes we seem not to know how to do this, and certain it is we cannot do it unless we have a living faith in the fact that God is, that he loves us as no other can, and that he is able and willing to do for us "exceeding abundantly above all we ask or think." (See Eph. 3: 20.) Have you read in Heb. 13: 5: "For himself hath said, I will in no wise fail thee, neither will I in any wise forsake thee?" Rest in this promise! He loves us better than our mothers can, has his eyes on us, sees our every movement, and knows our every care. He is a Friend we can ever trust. But, remember, we must do something-we must cast our burden on him, with all our "anxiety." We so often fall and try it alone. Prayer and supplication are very essential here. (See Phil. 4: 6, 7.) I have had my enemies-those who hate and would slander if they could. I have seen days when I hardly knew one day what I would have for my wife and child to eat the next day-the days when I was struggling for an education. But-pardon me for the reference-T have never had a doubt nor a fear of doing anything but succeeding, and all of this because of Him who said: "I will in no wise fail thee, neither will I in any wise forsake thee." I have never doubted for a moment the promise of one of the sweetest mothers in the world-my own dear mother-but I feel less like doubting the Father who loves as she cannot. Remember the importance of not looking at the waves as did Peter; keep your mind and heart on Christ, and let him handle the waves. (See Matt. 14: 13, 14.) Sometimes we cannot see our way out. He can: so leave it to him, and believe it will all be for the best. (Rom. 8: 28.)

Brother John Klingman was with the brethren at Austell last Lord's day, and we have just received news from Brother W. P. Johnson that they had a most enjoyable Brother J. N. Armstrong is booked to be here for a month's work, beginning the first Lord's day in June. He is to be assisted a part of the time by Brother L. K. Harding.

When this reaches our readers, I will be in the midst of a revival at Athens, Ala., with L. B. Jones, J. Pettey Ezell, and E. Gaston Collins as colaborers. Do not forget to pray for victory.

Brother Garrett has baptized three more at East Point just recently and is now in a tent meeting at Colonial Hill. There was one confession last night (May 24). The meeting, perhaps, will continue another week.

AT HOME AND ABROAD

John T. Ezzell writes that the new house of worship at Russellville, Ala., is nearing completion.

Dr. Paul D. Srygley announces the removal of his offices to 326 Doctors' Building, on Church Street, this city.

The church at Bogata, Texas, needs a song leader for a meeting to begin on July 1 and continue ten days. Address W. L. Watters.

John Rainey, one of the recent graduates at David Lipscomb College, has been engaged to preach for the King's Hall congregation, in Louisville, Ky.

- H. H. Adamson made us a brief call last week. He reports the church in Lewisburg, Tenn., as active in the work of teaching men the way of life.
- J. D. Derryberry, a good song leader, has some time available for conducting the song service in meetings. Address him at 756 Olympic Street, Nashville, Tenn.

James E. Laird writes from Piggott, Ark., May 17: "I filled my regular appointment at Kennett, Mo., yesterday, and one took membership. The church there is doing well."

E. D. Shelton will labor with the church at Houston, Texas, during the summer and will enter David Lipscomb College in the fall. Address him at 700 Omar Avenue, Houston, Texas.

From John Hayes, Bradentown, Fla., May 24: "The meeting at Manatee closed yesterday, with six baptized and one restored. We will begin at Cortez the fifth Lord's day, to stay as long as interest demands."

From L. R. Wilson, Tupelo, Ark., May 18: "I preached at Charlotte on the third Lord's day in this month. It was a treat for me to be with those faithful brethren, and I promised to return there for preaching."

From a brother at Lucy, Tenn., May 24: "James M. Kyle, of Lucy, preached to a large audience at New Hope church of Christ last Lord's-day evening." Brother Kyle is a promising young man and a loyal Christian."

From R. N. Moody, Albertville, Ala., May 24: "My first meeting for the year began yesterday with the Merrimac congregation at Huntsville Attendance and interest encouraging and prospects for a good meeting fine. I shall be busy in meetings until November."

The meeting conducted by C. R. Nichol at Foster Street church of Christ, this city, resulted in fourteen baptisms. The attendance was very fine throughout the meeting and the church was much edified. Brother Nichol is now in a meeting at Paducah, Ky., and reports a good start.

From J. M. McCaleb: "There are a few copies of 'Christ the Light of the World' in the hands of friends who took them to sell. If they have not sold them, they will please return them to me at 2625 Montgomery Street, Louisville, Ky., and oblige. The stock is all out and I can dispose of them. Much obliged for your effort."

From George W. Farmer, Cleveland, Tenn., May 26: "I desire to say that, owing to circumstances, I am to go to Texas about July I, to be gone about six weeks, and I have time for a meeting, beginning on the first Lord's day in July and running about ten or twelve days. Who wants the time? Write me at Cleveland, Tenn."

From C. A. Buchanan, Handley, Texas, May 25: "The church at Cleburne will support me in mission meetings anywhere. I prefer to hear from points in easy reach of Cleburne and where we have a few brethren who will give their full cooperation. I could give some small town the latter half of June. Write me at Handley, Texas."

From F. L. Young, Paris, Texas, May 24: "After eight months of intense suffering, on May 19, 1920, Mrs. Young went to her reward. It is very lonely for the three little girls and me, but His grace is sufficient for all occasions."

Brother Young has the sympathy and prayers of a great host of friends, including the editors of this paper.

From L. F. Mason, Whitewright, Texas, May 27: "I will be in Tennessee for some meetings the last of July, and have time for one meeting the last of August not engaged. Any church desiring my services for a meeting at that time should write me at once, at Whitewright, Texas, Box 33. After September 1 my time is all engaged for a year."

From J. S. Daugherty, Kirbyville, Texas, May 24: "I closed a three-nights' meeting at Blox, Jasper County, last night, with two restored, one baptized, and a small congregation set to worshiping and teaching Bible school each Lord's day. I am to return for a longer meeting in September. My time is engaged for meetings until fall."

From Lee Sanders, Miami, Texas, May 26: "We are in need of a good singer here. Any one who is a good singer, also a school-teacher, will do well to write me at once. Can get one or two positions in school work here at one hundred and five dollars a month, also can get some help from the brethren by leading the singing for the church."

From R. A. Craig, Louisville, Ky.: "I was at Shiloh on May 23. This church is in a bad condition, spiritually. Many of the brethren have moved away and are now caught in the meshes of error, and only a few of those left are zealous. I hope something may be done that will make this congregation do better and nobler things for the Lord."

From J. R. Stockard, Milan, Tenn., May 24: "I filled my regular appointment at Pleasant Hill yesterday. Large crowd; one baptism. I have a few weeks this summer not spoken for. I should like to spend the time in the Master's service, either preaching or singing. I could also work on third Sundays for some congregation. Address me at this place."

A Request: "Please state in the Gospel Advocate that Charles F. Hardin, of Springfield, Mo., will conduct the song service in my meeting at West Point, Miss., in June; but that I am still in need of a brother to fill an appointment at Walter Hill, Tenn., on June 13. Direct all communications to Herbert E. Winkler, 4504 Idaho Avenue, Nashville, Tenn."

L. S. Lancaster writes from Jackson, Tenn., May 28: "The marriage of Miss Mary Larimore Jones, of Hurricane Mills, Tenn., to Mr. Roy Leon Burford, of Oakland, Miss., was solemnized at noon to-day in the parlors of the Neely Hotel, this city, the writer officiating. Both are members of the church of Christ. May the choicest blessings of our Heavenly Father attend them through life."

From Noah Brothers, Willow, W. Va., Route 1. Box 31: "I wish to acknowledge the receipt of the following donations which I have received through my last appeal to help us to pay out on our house of worship at Naish Springs, W. Va., for which we sincerely thank all donors: From H. F. Mustain, Kentucky, $10; A. G. Bunner, West Virginia, $5; Mrs. C. J. Canterbury, Alabama, $3; James J. Donnell, Tennessee, $2.50; Bert Wisler (per Mrs. Julia A. McClintock), California, $1; J. H. Gearhart, Iowa, $2. Much love to all the donors."

From A. A. Bunner, Waverly, W. Va.: "The church at Naish Springs will have an all-day meeting on the first Lord's day in June. Neighboring congregations and individuals are cordially invited to meet with the brethren there on that day and share in their hospitality and assist them in the work of the Lord. Those who cannot attend are asked to kindly send a donation to Noah Brothers, Willow, W. Va., Route 1, Box 31, to help them pay out on their house of worship. I know these brethren, and I know that they need and deserve your help in this their time of need."

Hugh H. Miller, of Rochester, N. Y., reports donations received for the work there during the months of January, February, March, and April: From Russell Street Church. Nashville, Tenn., $100; church at Lynchburg, Tenn., $30; church at Pulaski, Tenn., $3: Highland Park congregation, Montgomery, Ala., $15; church at Viola, Tenn., $30; church at Hartsville, Tenn., $20; church at Cookeville, Tenn., $15; Sister Luke McMenaway, Lebanon, Tenn., $5; Union Church, Sumner County, Tenn., $30; Patrick's Chapel, Route 2, Waxahachie, Texas, $29; Sister Mattle Bass, Lebanon, Tenn., $1; Sister C. W. Brevard, Union City, Tenn., $12; H. J. Canterbury, Huntsville, Ala., $5; J. P. Tubb, Sparta, Tenn., $100; Miss Maida Austin, Scott's Hill, Tenn., $2.50; Mrs, Henrie Z. Lipscomb, Nashville, Tenn., $15; W. B. Jordan, Smyrna, Tenn., $25; Mrs. M. C. Buchart, Memphis, Tenn., $3; Earl M. Hodson, Moulton, Ala., $5; Miss Tommye, Norman, Water Valley, Ky., $2; Roy Robinson, West Fork, Ark., 50 cents; "A Friend," Bellbuckle, Tenn., $2; "A Sister," Carthage, Tenn., $1; Sister Joe Chandler, Evansville, Ark., $1. Total, $452. He says: "I am enjoying the work here more every day, and am sure much good can be accomplished in time, but it is going to take time and patience."

Training Little Children

By MARGARET WARNER MORLEY

(Suggestions by mothers who have been kindergartners. Issued by The United States Bureau of Education, Washington, D. C., and The National Kindergarten Association, New York, N. Y.)

Where Did I Come From?

This question the child is bound to ask, sooner or later. There are two ways of answering it. One way is to evade the question or answer it untruthfully, telling the child that the stork brought him or some such fiction. This is a bad way, for the child knows it is not true. If, at first, he does not know it is false, he soon will.

The other way is to tell the truth. One mother answered the question of her eight-year-old son with the simple statement: "You came from mother, dear. You grew within her body, and lay close to her heart for a long time. She knew you were coming and got ready for you and thought about you and loved you even before you were born." The boy looked at her, threw his arms about her, and exclaimed: "O, mother; that is why I love you so!" He had been told the truth, and he instinctively knew it was the truth. He did not have to find out later that his mother had deceived him.

When any child finds that he has been deceived by his mother, he naturally loses confidence in her. Usually he will not ask her any more questions, but will listen to vile stories from other people and will think that they are true and that that is why his mother is not willing to be frank with him.

Every mother should tell her own children about the coming of new life, and she should tell them before evil-minded persons have a chance to pollute their minds. The first impression that children get on this subject is the one that lasts. Make the coming of new life seem beautiful to your child. Tell him the story of the bird's life—how the nest is built, how the eggs are laid, how the parent birds sit on the eggs to keep them warm, how happy and excited they are when the eggs hatch out, how they carry food to the young birds and care for them until their feathers grow, and how, finally, they teach the young birds to fly.

Teach the children to respect motherhood; to be tender and careful of all mothers. Tell them when pussy is going to have kittens, they must be very gentle with her and feed her well and help her all they can. They will love the kittens they have thus watched far more than any other kittens they have ever had, and they will learn to understand and respect all mothers. The boy who is cruel to animals will very naturally be unkind to his mother, his sisters, and later to his wife and children. Much can be done to supplant the instinct of cruelty with loving care and thoughtfulness in the impressionable hearts of young children. Mothers, make your children thoughtful and loving; teach them to cherish what is weaker than themselves. Do you realize that the making of the next generation is in your hands? To a great extent you can make your children just what you want them to be. What a glorious responsibility is yours! * * *

Seven Short Sermons.

In many ways life is difficult and its problems are complex, making heavy demands on the heart, brain, and body. But the difficulty and complexity can all be met by the simplicity and sufficiency of God's glorious provision in Christ as we see it revealed to us in the Scriptures of truth.—W. H. G. Thomas.

Encouragement of a most practical and powerful kind arises from considering the examples of others. Those who have conquered difficulties, brushed aside discouragements, and disregarded hardships breathe something of their own dauntless spirit into us and inspire us to rise above difficulties.—Selected.

A man can pile up a palace of marble and live the life of a pauper within it, or he may be able to build only a hovel and yet live a princely life within its poor walls. The things that can really help or hinder a human soul are, after all, comparatively few.—Selected.

Be real about going to church. Go to be charged with power to go out and fight for Jesus Christ; go, too, to show the world where you stand. Going to church is answering roll call; and what kind of a soldier is he who, when the captain calls the roll, is not there to answer?—Fiske.

Second Childhood.

Twilight brings them, Jack and Lizzie,
For their good-night game with me:
She, so tiny, blithe and busy;
Jack, as jolly as can be.
I am always "It," for clearly
One cannot at sixty-two Run and hide so well, nor nearly,
As at five one used to do.

So I close my eyes demurely,
Saying I won't peep at all,
While the others hide securely,
When they give a little call.
Then to guess I start directly
Where they're hiding—but in vain,
For I never guess correctly,
So I'm always "It" again.

Such a burst of childish laughter
Greets my failure every time!
Little trills that linger after,
Like the echoes of a chime.
Then at last, with fond embraces,
In the swiftly fading light,
Both my playmates raise their faces
For a kiss and last good night.

Then I sit alone, not lonely,
And I dream of days no more,
Evenings like the present—only
I was five and not threescore.
And, the bitter griefs reviewing
That must follow youthful zest,
I conclude that, youth renewing,
Second childhood is the best.

Brother Sommer Seeks to Change the Issue. BY J. C. M'Q.

On page 538 of this issue the reader will find an article from Brother Sommer under the caption, "Brother Mc-Quiddy's Reply to the College Question." There is no new argument in his long-drawn, pointless article.

I have shown in this discussion that the word of God should be taught everywhere. "They therefore that were scattered abroad went about preaching the word." (Acts 8: 4.) "Go ye therefore, and make disciples of all the nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I commanded you: and to, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." (Matt. 28: 19, 20.) "And the things which thou hast heard from me among many witnesses, the same commit thou to faithful men, who shall be able to teach others also." (2 Tim, 2; 2.) Thus we see that God makes it our imperative duty to teach the truth in the family, in a Bible school, in the office, in the store, on the farm-in fact, everywhere. Jesus is the author of this command. Brother Sommer only renders himself ludicrous by dragging in irrelevant matters which did not appear in the article to which he was replying in order to make fun with monkeys and evolution, which is beneath the dignity of a religious discussion. Men who are seeking the truth and to teach it should not condescend to such vulgar methods. He had better watch out, or he will lead our readers to conclude that he has supplied "the missing link."

Instead of meeting the issue that has been presented to him from the very beginning of this discussion, he seeks to make a new issue, and says: "Now we have come to the real point at issue. I deny that these college brethren are teaching the Bible 'in the church' when they are doing it in their Bible schools and colleges as they are now doing." This is not the issue. I would not be foolish enough to affirm what the Bible schools are doing, for I don't know; neither would I affirm that all the churches of Christ are teaching the word of God, for I do not know this to be a fact. But he seeks in vain to shift the issue, for I shall hold him to the task which he started out to perform when I challenged him to name the passage which gives the specific method of teaching the truth "through" or "in the church." Instead of coming up to the issue and making the effort, he simply answers the challenge with a flat denial which is not satisfactory or convincing to any one. His one attempt at argument is to assert that the individual who works in an organization loses his identity so far as his work is concerned and becomes a part of the organization. Whether an organization is right or wrong depends entirely upon what it does. A missionary society is wrong, not because it is an organization, but because it is more than a method of teaching and preaching and usurps the functions of the church by taking upon itself the control of the churches. Organization appears to disturb his waking thoughts and makes him perform a number of logical somersaults. He is exceedingly mad at Bible schools-so mad that he charges that I added the word "school" to the text in order to carry my point; I added nothing to the text, and was only giving the meaning of the word "synagogue." Thayer defines the Greek word for "synagogue" as follows: "An assembly of Jews formally gathered together to offer prayers and listen to the reading and exposition of the holy scriptures." Thus it is seen the word means a school in the synagogue, or a synagogue school, as I indicated. The charge that I added the word "school" to the Bible text is a vicious statement conceived in ignorance or sin, on which lies the scorn of intelligence and reason and which the righteous soul spews out as a vile conception. I shall now proceed to show that by his admission he concedes that Paul taught the word of God in an organized school. He cannot deny that Paul taught in the school of Tyrannus, if he would. But he denies "that Tyrannus hired Paul to teach, and made the Bible a study in the curriculum, and thus had it as part of the organization." Thus, according to his admission, Paul taught two years in an organized school. It is clear that Paul was not teaching rhetoric or philosophy, for he tells us that "all they who dwelt in Asia heard the word of the Lord, both Jews and Greeks." Also, we learn that while he was teaching the Bible in this organized school the Ephesians heard and believed the word of truth. (Eph. 1: 13.) It is clear that Paul at Ephesus, as at Corinth, "knew nothing among " them, "save Jesus Christ, and him crucified." If Paul could teach the Bible in a humanly organized school while others were teaching rhetoric and philosophy, why cannot individual Christians do the same thing now that Paul did? Paul, who wrote that we should glorify God "in the church," certainly glorified him "in the church" while he was teaching the truth in this organized school. Again, Brother Sommer, by his admission, though not intending to do so, comes to the support of the truth when he says: "The way they worked in New Testament times is God's definition of what is meant by the expression 'in the church,'" Brother Sommer's position fails, for Paul did not become a part of the organization of Tyrannus, neither did he lose his individual identity. No matter whether Paul was in prison, in Cæsar's household; or guarded on a ship, he did not lose his identity. It matters not whether Tyrannus put the Bible in or out of the curriculum, for Paul always put it in the curriculum everywhere he went, and because he did so Brother Sommer classes him as a "new digressive." He calls me a "new digressive" because I am with Paul. But he tells us Tyrannus did not hire Paul. Whether he did or did not has nothing to do with teaching the word of God in a Bible school. David Lipscomb taught the Bible everywhere the opportunity presented itself, taught it in "the Nashville Bible School," and yet no man ever hired him or paid him for his teaching. Does Brother Sommer hold that it is right to teach rhetoric and philosophy in an organized school and wrong to teach the Bible in the same school? If it had been wrong to organize a school, Paul certainly would not have taught in that school; neither would be have taught In it if it were wrong for Christians to organize and uphold such schools.

But my critic is in desperate straits, trying to establish that when one works in an organization he loses his identily so far as his work is concerned and becomes a part of the organization. He certainly knows that "household" and "family" are not interchangeable words. One may be In a household and yet not in the family. "Household" Is from "oikos" and family is from "patria." In order to be a member of the family, one must be a lineal descendant. Thus it is readily seen that no negro cook can become a part of the organization, or, in other words, become a part of a white man's family where she works. Why did he use "household" and not "family," as I did not mention the word "household?" This of itself shows that because one works in an organization, he does not become a part of that organization. But his reasoning is like that of a sectarian when he is trying to prove the doctrine of justification by faith alone. I have not held that the family loses its identity because it employs a negro cook. The family must furnish the provisions, must furnish the cooking stove and utensils, and must furnish the fuel, before the negro cook can prepare the meal. The cook and the family cooperate together just as the members of the body of Jesus Christ cooperate together in the work of saving souls. Neither the cook nor the family loses identity or becomes a part one of the other.

In his desperation, I did not expect him to make men in an organization no more than machines. He now says the presses do the work! This is so absolutely ridiculous that it is hardly necessary to take space to answer it. The truth is that in the McQuiddy Printing Company it requires the managers, the printers, the pressmen, the bookbinders, the machines, the bookkeepers and stenographers all to do the work on which we put the label, "McQuiddy Printing Company." All work together in order to make the completed job. The label represents the individual work of each one in the organization. If the presses do the work, the company should turn off the managers, the bookkeepers, and all the help, and thus make a fortune. But any man knows that these all work together and that each part of the organization is required to do individual work before we can have a completed job. If the individual workman in an organization loses his identity so far as his work is concerned, then he should not be particular about merit or about doing first-class work. No one will ever know him from the incompetent, according to Brother Sommer's reasening. The hypocrite in the church will lose his identity, so far as his work is concerned, if the position I am opposing be correct. But 2 Cor. 5: 10 assures us this will not be so: "For we must all be made manifest before the judgment seat of Christ; that each one may receive the things done in the body, according to what he hath done, whether it he good or bad."

I close this discussion by again calling upon our brother to present the passage of scripture that reveals a specific presented no new argument, I see no necessity for continuing this discussion further. He must discuss the issue with me or not at all. We are commanded to go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature. The disciples, in obedience to this command, "preached the gospel unto every creature under heaven" and "their sound went out into all the earth." Brother Sommer closes his article by saying, "If these Bible colleges are scriptural, they are doing an unscriptural work," and also refers to some preachers' meeting at Fort Worth, Texas. I know nothing of this, have never taken any part in preachers' meetings, and, therefore, this is entirely irrelevant to our discussion. I may say to him, however, because men wrest the Scriptures unto their own destruction (2 Pet. 3: 16) is no reason why we should chain the Bible as a felon to a post and burn it as a bad book. In the language of another, I would say: "Christianity is a rational religion and grows best in the light of truth. It has always been the friend of education and the mother of schools and colleges, and of science, literature, and art. Christ himself was and is 'the truth' and 'the light of the world.' All things belong to the kingdom of God, whether Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas, or the world.' (1 Cor. 3: 21-23.)"

"God's Children of Equal Rank"- Does "the Preacher Stand Between the People and God?"

BY E. A. E.

Three articles in reply to some things said by "Observer" have been received-one from Brother Holt, one from Brother Howell, and one from Brother John E. Dunn. In due time these will receive proper attention, but each in its own order. Space will not permit the publication of all at one time.

Read Brother Holt's article on page 541. I trust Brethren Howell and Dunn will read both it and mine.

To our readers I desire to say, I am trying to deal with the teaching and spirit of the New Testament and to bring out truth and not to confine myself to a reply in detail only to that which any one has said.

LOVE.

Brother Holt says he loves me whether I love him or not. This declaration is wholly unnecessary. Such declarations become the unlovely features of a controversy. The question is not who loves the other or whether both love alike. I would feel childish to conclude that brethren do not love me because they call in question something I teach. I would feel, too, that my position is weak and vulnerable were I to draw that conclusion. But I can prove that I love Brother Holt. I love him, I love the truth, and I love the church. Love is service, is action. "If any man love me, he will keep my word." (John 14: 21, 23.) "For this is the love of God, that we keep his commandments." (1 John 5: 3.) "Love worketh no ill to his neighbor." (Rom, 13: 10.) Our love is measured by our reverence for. our search after, and our untiring efforts to teach the whole truth, regardless of consequences-not only when it is popular to teach the whole truth, but when it is unpopular. Love causes one to suffer and to die for the truth. The apostles, when imprisoned and abused by the civil authorities, said: "We must obey God rather than men." (Acts 4: 19, 20; 5: 29.) This is love. God says: "But to this man will I look, even to him that is poor and of a contrite spirit, and that trembleth at my word." (Isa. 66: 2, 5.) Paul rejoiced in the consciousness of being "pure from the blood of all men" because he "shrank not" in the face of bitter opposition, "the howling mob," and the wild beasts at Ephesas, "from declaring . . . the whole counsel of God." (See Acts 19: 23-41; 1 Cor. 15: 32; 2 Tim. 4: 14; Acts 20; 26, 27.) This is love. Paul's test of love is: "So method of teaching the Bible "in the church." As he has I then, am I become your enemy for telling you the truth?"

(Gal. 4: 16.) To indorse error in a man is to hate him and his audience. Paul's withstanding Peter to the face was not envy, jealousy, and hate; it was love for Peter, the truth, and the people.

"THE DIVINE RECORD" VS. THEORY.

Brother F. B. Srygley is the one who said that if "D. L." had been here in his usual vigor he would have punctured Brother Holt's article. Brother Holt has woven in the word "badly" and makes it "badly punctured," etc. No, one puncture is enough.

I agree with Brother Holt that all depends upon "the divine record," and "the word of God should be our rule and guide." I am glad he and I want to stick to the word of God. My only desire is to learn and do and teach the will of God. Some younger men, when they would build up some theory, have a "mighty" way, of late, of brushing such men as Campbell and Lipscomb aside by saying they are not following men, and by asking if Lipscomb and Campbell knew all the truth, etc. No one claims for these good men more than they are; but until these younger men show by their lives and teaching that they really have learned more of the word of God than Campbell and Lipscomb knew, their claims are false. "Deliver the goods." and we will say no more. Because "the divine record," " the word of God," is "our rule and guide," I cannot indorse and practice and preach many theories and assertions, challenges and denials, of not a few to-day; and I love them and the church too well to do that. I believe that A. Campbell and D. Lipscomb knew, for instance, why Paul made tents. I thankfully receive, too, all that Campbell and Lipscomb taught of "the word of God," "the divine record," etc., and I will be just as grateful to Brother Holt and to all others of the present time who will teach more of this "divine record" and rule than Campbell and Lipscomb knew. Be sure it is "the divine record," "the word of God," and we will all receive it and be happy.

Another disagreeable thing in some controversies is assigning positions to an opponent which he has not assumed. I have never written a line in an attempt to establish "the theory that all preachers of the gospel should have a secular calling from which they are to derive at least a part of their support." I have no theory at all about this. I believe and am trying, at least, to teach all the Bible teaches on this subject, and I am trying to persuade others to do the same. I think I have never written an article on this subject in which I did not either refer to or quote 1 Cor. 9: 1-14-the lesson from the soldier, the vineyard, the flock, the ox, the service at the altar, and that God has ordained "that they that proclaim the gospel should live of the gospel." But it remains a fact that for some reason Paul worked with his own hands at different times and different places. I may be ignorant of his reasons for doing this, but he did it, and gave his reasons for doing so. What reasons does he give. Let theories go to the wind and give Paul's own reasons for making tents. No guessing. So I believe also and teach 1 Cor. 9: 15-23. Was Paul giving himself "wholly to the ministry of the word" when working with his own hands, or was he entangling himself with the affairs of this life? I cannot believe anything which casts reflections upon Paul.

The only way to avoid being "obsessed with a certain idea or theory in religion" is to learn and practice and teach all the will of God on "all things that pertain unto life and godliness" and to studiously and conscientiously avoid practicing and teaching more.

I have not "warped and twisted and distorted" anything Brother Holt or any one else has said. I do not do that. Every one's articles stand for themselves. Cannot brethren in the spirit of Christ discuss questions without indulging in such charges and claiming that their opponents do not love them? "God's CHILDREN OF EQUAL RANK."

Brother Holt's explanation of this does not explain. He never told us at first in what sense he used the word "rank." Words are to be taken in their ordinary meaning unless something forces another meaning upon us. The New Testament does not use the word in any sense. Why not, do you suppose?

He admits all I say—that God's children are equal in "their spiritual relationship to him," and the only difference is in age and ability. Can the children of God sustain any other relationship to him except a spiritual one? I am encouraged that he now sees this.

DOES THE PREACHER STAND BETWEEN THE PEOPLE AND GOD?

It may be he will see another thing. He says: "In a very important sense the preacher stands between the people and God," I simply ask where he learned this. Since all Christians, as he admits, are equal in their "spiritual relationship" to God, then "the preacher stands between the people and God" in no sense different from that of other Christians. All are the light of the world and the salt of the earth. What can preachers do that all other Christians have not the same right to do, provided, of course, they have the ability to do it? No man, whatever his age, ability, rank, station, can "stand between the people and God." All teach, exhort, persuade, warn, preach the gospel, according to ability; but men do not "stand between the people and God." Again, I ask, if this could be done, in what sense different from all other Christians can preachers do it? Where do they get this power?

ARE PREACHERS REPRESENTATIVES OF CHRIST?

Again, Brother Holt says: "The preacher should be a true representative of the Christ, the world's Savior and King." Now, he will have to explain in what sense he uses "representative." In what sense can one represent a king or any government? Is the preacher a "representative of the Christ" in that sense? And in any sense, is he a "representative of the Christ" different from all other Christians? All are of "equal rank" as representatives, if representatives at all. All must be true, pure, righteous, and holy, and all according to ability go "about preaching the word" or teaching others. (See again Heb. 5: 11-14; Acts 8: 4.)

The apostles are the ambassadors of Christ, acting in "behalf of Christ," and they represent Christ. Christ needs no other representatives or ambassadors, and there can be no others. The apostles are still his ambassadors or representatives presenting "the word of reconcillation," or terms of peace and pardon. (2 Cor. 5: 18-21.)

Ah, my good brother, preachers are just common sort of men—common sort of Christians, it being possible for some not to be Christians at all. As all other Christians, they do what good they can in the name of Christ. They should not think of themselves more highly than they ought to think, "but so to think as to think soberly," according to their ability to do good, and this good they must do.

"THE SACRED AND THE SECULAR."

Brother Holt thinks it strange that I should say, "I cannot tell where the difference between the secular and religious or sacred comes in," which means, of course, he can. Please note what I say. I do not say there is no difference, but I do say I am unable to say a thing per se is always secular and another thing per se is always religious or sacred.

Webster's International Dictionary gives five meanings to "secular" as an adjective. The first and second have reference to an age, a century, a long period of time. The third is: "Of or pertaining to this present world, or things not spiritual or holy; relating to temporal as distinguished from eternal interests; not immediately or primarily respecting the soul, but the body; worldly." Fourth: (Eccl.)
"Not regular, not bound by monastic vows or rules; not confined to a monastery, or subject to the rules of a religious community; as, secular priest." Fifth: "Belonging to the laity; lay; not clerical." As a noun: 1. (Eccl.) "A secular ecclesiastic, or one not bound by monastic rules."

2. (Eccl.) "A church official, whose functions are confined to the vocal department of the choir." 3. "A layman, as distinguished from a clergyman."

I give all these meanings not thinking that Brother Holt uses the word in all these senses, but to show in what company it is found and that it came from the religious parlance of the Roman Catholic Church and not from the New Testament. The New Testament speaks of "spiritual things" and "carnal things;" of people being carnal, not spiritual. It tells, too, when church members are carnal.

I say I cannot tell where the difference between the "secular" and "sacred" comes in, because temporal things, things pertaining to this world, and things which people call secular, become religious, spiritual, holy, and pertain to eternal life, when used as God commands. The "carnal things" the church at Philippi gave to Paul became to them spiritual and holy, and unto God on their behalf "an odor of a sweet smell, a sacrifice acceptable, well pleasing to God." (Phil. 4: 18.) All Christians, "as living stones, are built up a spiritual house, to be a holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God through Jesus Christ." (1 Pet. 2: 5.) What are "spiritual sacrifices?" All sacrifices which God through the Holy Spirit commands Christians to make and which they make from the heart-in spirit and truth-in obedience to him. The Lord's Supper is spiritual and holy, although composed of material bread and the flowing fruit of the vine, when eaten as God directs. All offerings of money and food and clothing and other material and temporal things are spiritual sacrifices when made from the heart. (See Heb. 13: 15, 16.) The body must be presented as a living, holy, acceptable sacrifice to God, as spiritual service." (Rom. 12: 1.) Preaching is not the only "sacred" or religious and spiritual thing one can do. When a Christian man works with his hands at some useful calling purposely in obedience to God to help support the faithful preacher of the gospel and to extend the kingdom of Christ among men, his work is as spiritual and holy and religious as that of the preacher. Here it is: "Let him that stole steal no more: but rather let him labor, working with his cwn hands the thing that is good [some useful calling that brings good to others-for instance, not gambling, making and selling whisky, which are not good], that he may have whereof to give to him that hath need." (Eph. 4: 28.) A man may work hard in order to make money to hoard up or to be consumed upon his own lusts and be very carnal and worldly; but, if in obedience to God-in spirit and truthhe works at some useful employment in order to make something to give to the needy, his daily toil is religious and holy and spiritual. Is piety sacred or secular, carnal or spiritual? Children-not babies (they may be grown and in middle life or older)-are commanded to "learn first to show piety toward their own family, and to requite their parents: for this is acceptable in the sight of God." (1 Tim. 5: 4.) Picty in the home every day in working for and caring for widowed mothers and grandmothers or others in decrepitude is a most lovely and beautiful, godly and holy, religious and spiritual service. There is no service or duty which can release children from this. Aged women, in being reverent in demeanor, in teaching the young women the good lessons which God commands them to teach, and in not becoming slanderers and enslaved to much wine, and young wives and mothers, in loving their husbands and children, in being workers at home, soberminded, of a meek and quiet spirit, adorning themselves in modest apparel, etc., are all doing a work as necessary and as holy and spiritual as any preacher can possibly do. These faithful, Christian, hard-working mothers, wives, and home builders, ruling the household in the fear of God. are doing a work far more holy and spiritual and religious than those preachers who sit around to be waited on and who preach only a little on Sundays. I am not applying this to any particular preacher, "minister," or "pastor;" I am dealing only with principles, the truth, and conditions, trying to show hard-working men in their shops and fields and professions and worn-out wives and mothers and home-keepers that their honest work, done in the spirit of the Carpenter of Nazareth, is most beautiful, godly and holy, religious and spiritual. On the other hand, when men, as Paul and Peter declare some did in their time. turn godliness into a way of gain, use religion as a cloak of covetousness, preach things they should not preach "for filthy lucre's sake," and make merchandise of the word of God (1 Tim. 6: 5; 2 Cor. 2: 17; 1 Thess. 2: 3; 2 Pet. 2; 3, 14), preaching and religion in general have become with them anything but "sacred," hely, and spiritual; hence must be "secular" and carnal (see Rom. 16: 17, 18).

Here is the Christian's life: "And whatsoever ye do, in word or in deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God the Father through him." (Col. 3: 17.) Is that which is done in the name of the Lord Jesus and in thanksgiving to God "secular" or religious? How about pure and undefiled religion, anyway (James 1: 26, 27)—visiting the fatherless and widows in their affliction and keeping unspotted from the world? Is that "secular?"

Brother Holt leaves a "promise of more to follow." It is useless to repeat unsustained affirmations about my trying to build up any theories or about the preacher's being a "representative of the Christ" and standing "between the people and God." Let him give the word of God to sustain his statements.

Change in Price. BY J. C. M'Q.

Beginning July 1, 1920, the Gospel Advocate goes to $2.50 a year, in advance; and for Canada and foreign countries, $3 a year, in advance. We have endeavored to hold the paper to $2 per year, and have done so much longer than most publications, but the loss at the present price of paper is so heavy that it is suicidal to attempt to do so longer. We had hoped that paper would decline in price, but, on investigation, we find little prospect of any early decline in the price. It appears that it may become even more difficult to secure paper at all and that prices will go even higher. We are sure that our readers appreciate the effort we have made in their behalf and that all will cheerfully remain with us, considering the very high cost of paper and labor at the present time. We are glad to assure our constituency that whenever the market justifies we shall be pleased to give them the advantage of the decline in paper, but until it does so we must allow the price of $2.50 to stand.

Report and Notes About Kamitomizaka Mission.

BY C. G. VINCENT.

Since my report in March I have received only $147.80 for the work in Japan. This is a tremendous let-down. That is a little less than fifty dollars a month. In order to pay the interest on the balance due on the lot contracted for and to pay our part on the principal (the Japanese brethren are keeping up their part) and to support the native workers, we must raise not less than two hundred and twenty-five dollars a month. Can it be done? Yes, it can, and it must! A few individuals and a small number of churches are giving regularly to this cause: but we need to enlist about fifteen other individuals and ten other churches that will average what the present contributors give, in order to do what we should do and to realize our aim. Who will give one dollar or more regularly as long as the Lord prospers him or her, or until the needed amount is secured? What church will make this a part of their regular budget? Brother Hiratsuka, the native preacher (and there is none better or more faithful), writes most encouraging letters. They had thirty baptisms last year and have had two so far this year. He writes of the love, harmony, and peace that are manifest among all the workers and speaks very highly of the devotion and consecration of our missionaries over there. Let me hear from you, brethren, and that at once. Brother W. W. Freeman, of Abilene, Texas, and I have been accommodating interested brethren in forwarding offerings, but any who desire to send "direct" may do so. I would be glad to send you an addressed envelope, stamped, if you will write me that you want to send an offering "direct" to this work. I have "no ax to grind" in writing about this work and in forwarding gifts. Neither has Brother Freeman, It takes time and money for stationery, and often exchange has to be paid. but we are glad to do this much for this good work. If some church will take up the responsibility of either supporting or securing support for this mission work in Japan, Brother Freeman and I would be more than glad to turn it over to that church. Here is a good opportunity for some well-established church with an eldership that is particular about doing missionary work," direct" and careful to keep all such enterprises out of the hands of "self-appointed secretaries" to show faith by works. The worthiness of the work can be fully shown. This is said in all earnestness, for I am greatly concerned about that work and want to see it succeed. I want to

A Storm on the Sea.

BY CLARA COX EPPERSON.

When rough waves beat upon the sand And my ship rolls from side to side, Thou wilt hold me by the hand,

And through the storms with me abide.

No stormy waves can crush my soul: Though they may rend my body through

And pour the essence from life's bowl, Yet will I live again with you.

So let the storm winds rend in twain My craft of life; some day I'll see, Beloved, thy smiling face again, And harbored safe with you I'll be.

Church Building Bought in Washington, D. C.

BY W. S. LONG.

Every brother and sister who loves the Lord will rejoice to learn that the church of Christ in Washington has bought a new, nice, modern house of worship. The building was known as the Memorial Presbyterian Church, but lately a union took place between this body and the Gunton Temple Presbyterian Church, so the opportunity came to buy much cheaper than we could build. It will be known as the Fourteenth and Meridian Avenue church of Christ. We can now say what the brotherhood has never been able to say before—that the national capital has a house of worship (of which you may be proud) deeded to the New Testament church, with the restrictive clause in the deed. The building site contains 12,258 square feet, and the property will cost us forty thousand dollars. This is far less than the house could have been built for, and, considering the present prices of labor and the problem of getting material, we feel very fortunate in securing this church home. We have about half of the price of the building, and, by the help of God and the prayers and faithfulness of the churches in the United States, we feel sure we can raise twenty thousand by January 1. Let us begin at once and wipe this debt out before the end of the year. Brethren, the house is yours and for you and your children. Let us have one grand forward move at this task and finish it. Make the first Sunday in June "Washington Day," and send us a big-hearted donation. Send all donations to E. L. Mills, 2421 Pennsylvania Avenue, N. W.; W. S. Long, 110 Second Street, S. E.; J. W. Gibson, 1618 Twenty-eighth Place: or T. F. Colvin, Box 51, U Street Station, Washington, D. C.

How Coca-Cola Resembles Tea

If you could take about one-third of a glass of tea, add two-thirds glass of carbonated water, then remove the tea flavor and add a little lemon juice, phosphoric acid, sugar, caramel and certain flavors in the correct proportion, you would have an almost perfect glass of Coca-Cola.

In fact, Coca-Cola may be very well described as "a carbonated fruit-flavored counterpart of tea, of approximately one-third the stimulating strength of the average cup of tea."

The following analyses, made and confirmed by the leading chemists throughout America, show the comparative stimulating strength of tea and Coca-Cola stated in terms of the quantity of caffein contained in each:

Black tea-1	Cupful(5 fl. oz.)	1.54	ğt
Green tea-1	glassful(8 fl. oz., exclusive of ice)	2.02	gr.
Coca-Cola-1	drink, 8 fl. oz. (prepared with I fl. oz. of syrup)		ģг.

Of all the plants which Nature has provided for man's use and enjoyment, none surpasses tea in its refreshing, wholesome and helpful qualities. This explains its almost universal popularity, and also explains, in part, the wide popularity of Coca-Cola, whose refreshing principle is derived from the tea leaf.

The Coca-Cola Company has issued a booklet giving detailed analysis of its recipe. A copy will be mailed free on request to anyone who is interested. Address:

Stephens, May 21 .- I have been very busy this week stirring around among members at several points, and have preached twice during the week. Last Monday I made a trip to Campbell, Mo., and saw some ten or twelve of the members. Tuesday I put in at Greenway, Ark. On Wednesday I went Tuesday I put in at to Rector, where I met Brother W. P. Brother Jelley asked me to write to you and state our position. I am inclosing a copy of an article, which appeared in the Apostolic Messenger of February, stating same. We are not in the cooperation of the churches of Christ in this country, as we feel that we should keep to the old, apostolic teaching as was taught by the first disciples in the early days. He preaches now nearly every Sunday, and intends at some future date to enter school and further fit himself for preaching, Another quarter of my time will be given to the church at Smyrna, an old congregation about four miles from Algood and the same distance from Cookeville. The remaining two quarters of my time will be spent with the church at Livingston, the county seat of Overton County. This, too, is an old congregation, and it has not been without its trials. The "progressive" brethren have a school there, but it was established at the expense of union in the congregation. Now there are two, with a "fig tree" each. Brother B. C. Goodpasture will begin a meeting at Livingston on the fifth Sunday in May. I will assist him. Last Saturday night our home, which is in Algood, was subject to a severe storm. The brethren and others did it in the shape of a "pounding." A bounteous supply was brought, and for a short time we thoroughly enjoyed ourselves. Nashville, May 23 .- I preached five times at Diana, beginning on Thursday evening, May 20, and closing on the following Sunday. The Methodist preacher of that place had delivered three sermons on baptism in which he was very bold and at times rather abusive toward everybody who believed in or practiced immersion. did my best to calm the troubled waters and at the same time teach the truth on the subject of baptism. We had large crowds at every service. There were two baptized, and others, it seemed, were "almost persuaded." Notwithstanding the Methodist preacher was under promise to be present, he managed to stay away three times out of five. I thanked him publicly for starting the "rukus" and giving me such a good chance to teach the truth on one of the conditions of salvation even though he could not (?) be present to hear it. His members attended very well and gave very re-spectful attention to the word of God. While I would have been glad to have given him an opportunity to learn the truth, still, if he does not want it, the next best thing is to try to teach it to those who do want to learn it. I am sure the meeting did good.-F. B. Srygley.

Denton, May 21.—Plans for the improvement of the building of the church of Christ in Denton are being made. The plan contemplates the expenditure of about ten thousand dollars. Three-fourths of this amount was raised within about ten days' time, and it is believed the balance will be easy to raise, since nearly all in the church seem anxious to have the improvements made. It is the earnest prayer that the work may prosper in a way which will please and honor God. I am to assist Brother Tom Walker and the church at Vernon in a meeting, beginning next Sunday.-R. D. Smith.

Houston, May 18 .- I am now laboring with the First Church, of this city. I began work with this congregation on February 1, and the work has been very pleasant and successful to date, with additions nearly every Lord's Last Lord's day I baptized a very fine business man and one took membership. Brother Arceneaux had been with this congregation four years previous to my coming, and his faithful, godly life and teaching had left its imprint upon the membership. As a result, there is unity and love and a desire for greater things. Brethren G. A. Dunn and Oscar Smith are laboring with Central and Houston Heights congregations, and are true yoke fellows in the work in this great city. The Houston Heights congregation purchased a tent recently to be used in the work in the city, and all the congregations will unite their efforts in the tent work. I shall be out of the city during July and August. I am booked for meetings at Roswell, N. M., and at Celeste, Maypearl, and Lingleville, Texas.—J. H. Lawson.

"Ye Are the Light of the World." BY W. B. BAINS.

The language above was addressed by the Savior to his apostles after he had finished his work in the world and was ready to ascend back to his Father. "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven." "In him was life, and the life was the light of men." "Walk in the light, even as he is in the light." Now, when we soberly and righteously study the necessity, purpose, benefits, and value of light, we can more fully understand and appreciate its true value. To illustrate: I am at home with my father. He tells me that there are some people out yonder in the dark, and they will get lost and perish. Hence, he gives me a light (a lantern) and commands me to go out and get them and bring them home with me. Now the question arises, why does my father want me to carry the light with me? First, to guide me in the right way and to keep me out of danger of being lost; second, that I may find the lost ones in the dark; and, third, that I may show them the way out and lead them safely home with me. Another thing in regard to the light which my father gives me is this: if it does not contain the right material to produce the best and brightest light, just in the same proportion I fail to walk in light and to be guided in the right way, and fail to find those who are in darkness and to bring them home.

Christ said to the devil: "It is written, Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word which proceedeth out of the mouth of God." Here, then, is the food to be used to produce the best and brightest light. Christ asked Peter if he loved him more than the other apostles. Peter answered: "Lord, thou knowest all things; thou knowest that I love thee." Christ then commanded him: "Feed my sheep."

Now, it may be true at the present day, under the high cost of living, that a brother will give his brother food to eat that does not and cannot produce light: but this was not so in the days of Peter. He gave all men the same food to eat and live on, to produce light, that he ate and lived uponthe Word; hence was honest toward God. We cannot be honest toward God unless we are honest with all men: but we can be dishonest toward God and honest with men.

In conclusion, I will say to all who are the light of the world, if you are under a bushel, come out and get upon the table where all who are out in the dark can see you and come to the table in order that you may feed them on the word of God and make lights of them, that they may glorify your Father which is in heaven.

Field Notes.

BY C. E. HOLT.

The second Lord's day in May was what might be termed a "red-letter" day with the church at Obion, Tenn. It marked the twenty-fifth anniversary of their existence as an organized body of disciples for the work of the Master.

Brother John R. Williams, of Hornbeak, preached the anniversary sermon. At the same hour I preached in the Methodists' meetinghouse, which is just across the street from our house of worship. It required two houses to accommodate the people, and the Methodist people kindly tendered us the use of their house. This matter was under the direct management of Brother F. O. Howell, and the program arranged by him was carried out without friction or inconvenience. After the services were finished in the forenoon, a bountiful dinner was served on the grounds. Brother Howell's big gospel tent was up, and under it tables fairly groaned with the good things prepared by the people of Obion.

The afternoon service was under the direction of Brother Williams, who made a very feeling and appropriate address. Brother Williams has given thirty-five years of his life to the work of preaching and building up the churches of Christ in West Tennessee. It is not possible to overestimate the importance of his work in that part of the State. He once conducted a sixweeks' tent meeting in Obion. The people there love him dearly, and that is just as it should be.

Brother Williams is strong and active yet, and I trust that he may be with us many years, with his ripe experience as a master workman in the spiritual temple. The congregation at Obion unanimously elected him to preach for them every second Lord's day in May as long as he lives and is able to preach.

Brother F. O. Howell has been with the Obion church four years, and the constructiveness of his work is apparent to all.

Brother Howell is a builder. There are two classes of preachers-to wit, destructionists and constructionists. Brother Howell belongs to the latter class. His executive ability is far beyoud that of the average preacher. His fine personality, his easy manners. his musical voice, his untiring energy, his loyalty to the word of God and to his people, his gift of oratory-all these and more make him a man of wonderful power and usefulness.

But I must not forget to mention Brother Howell's most excellent wife and his five children. He is a young man, but has five beautiful childrenfour boys and one girl. They are somewhat like "stair steps." Four young preachers coming on! Sister Howell is a model wife and mother. I sincerely wish for more such women. Brother Howell loves his family devotedly.

Brother Howell is a very companionable and congenial coworker. He is an excellent song leader, and led the song service in our meeting. After the "big day"-the first day of the meeting-was over, we continued about two weeks. Sixteen were baptized up to the time I left. Brother Howell was to continue the meeting a day or two longer.

There are many fine people in Obion. There is a bright future for the church there. My stay with them was very pleasant.

Loss of Appetite is commonly gradual; one dish after another is set aside. It is one of the first indications that the system is running down, and there is nothing else so good for it as Hood's Sarsaparilla—the best of all tonica.

Thorp Spring Christian College.

BY J. O. GARRETT.

The work at Thorp Spring is doing nicely. The church and school are in harmony. Plans for the coming year are complete. We had a meeting of the board the first of April to discuss plans for the new faculty. A committee, composed of Dr. T. A. Miller, Isaac E. Tackett, A. R. Holton, and Bob Chiles, was named to accept teachers selected. I was elected by the board as dean and acting president, with the power to assemble a faculty which would meet the requirements in scholarship and Christian character. following teachers and helpers were selected and accepted: A. R. Holton, president; A. D. Martin, dean; I. E. Tackett, business manager; W. M. Yowell, R. B. Sullivan, Miss Cravens, Miss Hooper, Miss Hammond, Mrs. Chambers, Mrs. Burns, and Mrs. Ervin.

I feel that the work has been placed on an unselfish basis. The prospects for next year are even better than we expected. The increased interest in Thorp Spring Christian College is very satisfying. The scholarship of our faculty is adequate. The local environments with regard to the health of the pupils and economy of schooling cannot be surpassed.

Four brethren have located here this spring. We are having visitors every week looking out locations for the coming year. The Lord has blessed us above our asking. We are trying to be faithful in the work that he has given into our hands.

At the acceptance of Brother Holton as president my work as acting president ceases. I have resigned my place as dean in favor of Brother Martin. Brother Tackett becomes business manager. These three brethren are the official members of the faculty. Any person wishing further information concerning Thorp Spring College may write either of these men. My place will be dean of the Bible department.

I pray that the brethren everywhere may awaken and see the good that is being done in all of our Christian schools and help to supply the needs of these schools.

A Meeting at Valdosta, Ga.

BY L. K. HARDING.

The United States census figures give Valdosta 10,783. Ask any resident of Valdosta, and he will tell you that many were not enumerated. However that may be, Valdosta is a beautiful little city. If you will not believe me, go there in April, when the roses are in bloom, the grass a fresh green, and see this progressive town of paved streets, concrete walks, and beautiful homes, and you will come away in perfect agreement.

Our meeting began on April 11 and closed on the night of May 12. There were twenty-one additions during the meeting. A number of others who had not been worshiping with the congregation came back to the fold the following Lord's day, making the total near thirty. All the membership seemed to be filled with a desire to work for the Lord. This made the meeting a genuine delight for the preacher.

Brother G. E. Claus has labored with this congregation for years. He is greatly beloved by the brethren. He was away in Florida in a meeting a portion of the time, but more than made up for the time lost when present.

It was a real pleasure to meet again Brethren Strong, Prevatt, Colson, Willis Allen, and Love, and to get acquainted with Brother J. E. Boyd, of Dasher.

The Double Nature of Man. No. 4.

BY TICE ELKINS.

It will be seen by what I have written that we are not to look exclusively to the philological meaning of the words employed to express soul and spirit, to demonstrate this higher endowment of human life. We claim simply that there is nothing, so far as known, in the philological meaning of the words, that would lie in the way of this use. We claim that the terms were actually employed to express this higher endowment, and that the distinction of spirit as something different from the body, something different from animal life, something more divine, more nearly allied to God, and with different relations to eternity, is brought to light in a thousand ways all through the Bible. In fact, it is doctrine that permeates all revelation, and gives to it its sublime applicability and force of teaching, No one can read the Bible without realizing that it as fully recognizes the soul as a distinct essence as it does the body. The inference, then, made by some, that because the term "living soul" is sometimes applied to animals, reptiles, vegetables, etc., therefore each is endowed with intellectual and immortal faculties, or that none are thus endowed, is equally invalid. It no more follows than it does when you say of the wrecked ship, "Every soul on board perished," that the spiritual nature of each was annihilated. rather that their lives were lost.

The full force and contents of the term "living soul" as applied to man is seen only when we place it by the side of that declaration of God, who is both life and spirit: "Let us make man in our image, after our likeness." (Gen. 1: 26.) This certainly means something more than that man was made an upright animal walking on two feet Man became a living soul. The Greek term psuke has for its dominant meaning "life" as indicated by the act of breathing. It is distinguished from another Greek term, zoec, which is also rendered "life." In John 12: 25 we have both these terms in a connection that goes far toward establishing the original sense in which each was used: "He that hateth his life (psukee) in this world shall preserve it unto life (zoee) eternal." It is evident, then, that the former has special reference to the principle of life manifested in connection with bodily organization; the other, to the higher element of spiritual existence. The term "living soul" indicates, as applied to man, a higher than mere animal life. This is the term used by the apostle when he said, speaking of the first Adam, the type of humanity. "he became a living soul." We use the term "soul" to express the spiritual element of our nature-the element which knows, thinks, reasons, and possesses a judgment of right and wrong. The operations of the soul are diversified, but the distinct individuality and the unity of its nature rest upon the firmest basis of reason and Sensation, reason, memory, imagination, will, and conscience are expressive of so many of the soul's modes of action. But they leave its unity untouched. They are so many capabilities, properties, or manifestations, of the intelligent substance whose being and actions are made known to them. These are the phenomena through which we are introduced to the knowledge of the soul, and in the light of which we must study its character.

It must not be thought amiss, or awaken surprise, if we admit that we indeed know not in what the essence of the soul or spirit consists. really acknowledge our ignorance of essence, the subject-being of matter. We make the same confession, and under the same limitations, concerning the soul. But though we are unable to tell what matter is, yet we find ourselves able to define or describe it by the sensible properties it possesses and the laws by which it is governed. So It is with the soul. Though we are unable to throw aside the veil and look upon its essence, yet we may discover its existence, and something of its nature and qualities, from our consciousness of its operation and our knowledge of its effects. Every one is conscious of a principle within him superior to the frame it inhabits. There is something that warms into life and excites to motion the machinery of our bodies, which is beyond the artist's skill or the chemist's powers. There is a beauty lit up in the expression of the human countenance which the painter's skill can never reach, for it is not an attribute of matter. It is the high and indisputable proof of the divinity that dwells within us. It is flame from heaven purer than Promethean fire that vivifles and energizes the breathing form. It is an immaterial essence, a being that quickens matter and imparts life, sensation, motion to the intricate framwork of our bodies, which wills when we act, attends when we perceive, looks into the past when we reflect, and, not content with the present, shoots with all its aims and with all its hopes into the futurity that is forever dawning upon it.

The properties of mind are manifested in perception, thought, feeling, volition, reason, the passions, and the moral judgment. That every one intuitively recognizes in himself a something which puts forth the distinct operations or experiences, the distinct feelings indicated by these words, the universal testimony of man abundantly proves. They are not the acts, the operations of matter; they cannot be predicated of the body. Thought is intangible; you cannot see it as you can see light; you cannot cause it to travel the magnetic wires as you can cause electricity to travel them; but just as the magnetic telegraph is the vehicle of thought, of ideas, which it neither originates nor constitutes, so are our physical organs only the media for the transmission, the outward expression, of ideas they have no power to originate. It becomes, then, one of the clearest dietates of reason, that, if there is that wide difference between the properties, the characteristics of matter and spirit, these two principles must be entirely different in their nature. No one can prove infidel to what he feels; and he who marks the swelling of human thought, passion, and desire, expanding and enlarging to the grasp of infinite eternity, cannot fail to discern within him the elements of a spiritual and eternal existence.

"Who reads his bosom reads eternal life;

Or nature there imposing on her sons.

Has written fables-man has made a lie!"

Thus we are led to the indubitable conviction that there is a spirit in man distinct from the body it inhabits, and, therefore, he has become a living soul.

Prayer.

No answer comes to those who pray And idly stand, And wait for stones to roll away At God's command;

He will not break the binding cords Upon us laid

If we depend on pleasing words And do not aid.

When hands are idle, words are vain To move the stone;

An aiding angel would disdain To work alone: But he who prayeth, and is strong

In faith and need, And toileth earnestly, ere long

He will succeed. -Selected.

On May 12, 1920, Sister Amelia Billingsley passed to her eternal reward. She became the wife of Brother W. G. Billingsley years ago. She was his third wife, and came into his home a stepmother to his three motherless children, and a better stepmother would be hard to find. She was the only mother one of them ever knew. She became a Christian shortly after her marriage to Brother Billingsley, and, so far as one could tell, was faithful until death and could claim the promise of a crown of life. She was buried beside her husband, who preceded her to the tomb more than seven May the Lord help us to be faithful, and let us sorrow not as those who have no hope.

McClendon.

Mary Jane Hill, daughter of Brother and Sister T. M. Hill, of Smith Spring, was born on July 30, 1887. Having been brought up in the "nurture of the Lord," in her early "teens" she was born again of water and Spirit, under the preaching of the late M. S. Buford, and lived a devoted and faithful child of God until she was called away by death, which occurred on March 8, 1920. She was married to Mr. E. W. (Weaver) McClendon on Au-gust 18, 1912. "Sister Janie" (as she was familiarly called) was a woman far above the average. She had a kind and gentle disposition, al-ways wore a smile on her face—even in death she seemed to wear it. She was truly a helpmate to her husband, often going beyond her strength to do her part, especially the last year of her life, yet she bore it all in a Chris-tian spirit. Three children were born tian spirit. Three children were born to them—Milton Curtis, Edward Morris, and Sarah Elizabeth, the last an infant of about a month. Sister Janie was one of the "home-keeper" kind. There was no "put on" about her; she was just her natural self. It does seem so sad to us to have to give up one just in the prime of womanhood and with three little children left who will need her care so badly. But the good Lord knows best, and what he does is always right. Then let us submit to his will and, in the language of Job of old, say: "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord." We believe Cagle.

Thomas Cagle died, at his home at Coble, Tenn., on December 8, 1919, aged seventy-two years. Burial was in the family burial ground near the vil-lage. Besides his wife, he is survived by seven children: Dr. W. D. Cagle and Walker Cagle, Lobelville, Tenn.; J. H. Cagle and Mrs. John Springer, Coble, Tenn.; Mrs. Braden Cooper, Centerville, Tenn.; Roy Cagle, Knox-ville, Tenn.; and Alonzo Cagle, Sagi-naw, Mich. Brather, Cagle, Saginaw, Mich. Brother Cagle began to preach early in life and in course of time became the ablest exponent of the teachings of the church of Christ, as opposed to the creeds, residing in western Hickman County. He was a farmer and later a miller, and, besides preaching without remuneration or the hope of it, helped to build church and school buildings. He continued a pillar in the church to the end. I recall no finer example of sheer native abil-He was denied educational advantages, but he had a potent personality and an unclouded intelligence a mind clear, comprehensive, seemingly slow, but accurate in its processes, and distinguished by a most acute and subtle discrimination. In the pulpit he was dignified and commanding. with that expression of conscious grasp and keen observation that was pleasant to look upon. Vicissitudes came, but such a mind would not sink under any pressure of adversity, being conscious of a power sufficient to buey it above despondency. His cheerfulness of spirit under reverses of fortune attested the manliness of his character, and his Christian fortitude, persisted to the end, rendered the passing peaceful, victorious, glorious. And his was the larger heart; otherwise I am unable to account for his public and private beneficence. There is a long line of witnesses, living and dead, to testify that he befriended orphan and widow, clothed the naked and fed the No other man in his community contributed more of the things he possessed to charity, and no other citizen championed public enterprise with more zest. He read some law, but for the most part the Bible. After the evening meal the ponderous volume was spread upon the dining table, and there sat this man of God poring over the sacred pages whole hours together, the toil and vexations of the day forgot in the divine meditation. Such a picture is as beautiful as it is rare. He was perennial sunshine. He was sympathy personified. His faith pene-trated the shadows. And I think for such a soul as his there is something better—aye, joy, peace, rest evermore—beyond the river "in the shade of the trees." JAMES E. CHESSOR.

Mission Work in Mississippi.

BY M. C. CAYCE.

Our first meeting under the new tent which was so generously furnished us by the Russell Street Church, and seated by a contribution of chairs from Russell Street, Highland Avenue, and Brother A. M. Burton, began here last Sunday night (May 24) under very favorable conditions. The tent is situated on a beautiful corner lot on the Gallatin Street car line. The attendance and attention are good. Brother Joe Ridley, of Nashville, is leading our song service, and it is being well done. We hope to sow the seed, which is the word of God, to the end that souls may be saved and the church of our Savior established and strengthened in this city. Since I came here last February the faithful few have been meeting regularly for worship in the Odd Fellows' Hall, but at no time have we succeeded in gathering an audience of others to whom we might preach the word until we secured this tent, to which they come and listen with interest. One more member has been found who recently moved here from Kentucky and who is glad to find some with whom to worship "as it is written," a thing that heretofore has not been done in this place; but persons coming here and finding no New Testament congregation either attended services they did not believe to be conducted "as it is written" or drifted into complete indifference.

It is surprising how long we allow cities and communities here in our own homeland to remain untaught and without churches of Christ. I am glad there seems to be an awakening to this great need and that it is possible for me to be used in so great a work. I again request that any one having acquaintances in this city in whom they are interested put me in touch with them. Address me at 352 East Fortification Street, Jackson, Miss

Over fifty years ago a young physician practiced widely in a rural district and became famous for his uniforn success in the curing of disease. This was Dr. Pierce, who afterwards established himself in Buffalo, N. Dr. Pierce manufactured this "Discovery" from roots and barks-a corrective remedy, the ingredients of which nature had put in the fields and forests, for keeping us healthy. Few folks or families now living have not at sometime or other used this "Golden Medical Discovery" for the stomach, liver and heart. ADVANCE IN SUBSCRIPTION PRICE.

As has already been announced, the price of the Gospel Advocate, beginning July 1, 1920, will be $2.50 a year, in advance; for Canada and foreign countries, $3 a year, in advance. Other papers have already advanced to this price, as paper is now costing so much. We had hoped that we would be able to continue the price of $2 per year, but our readers will see how futile were our hopes when we tell them that paper has gone from less than four cents per pound to twenty cents per pound. We formerly could buy a better paper for a little over three and a half cents per pound than we can buy now for a price four or five times as great. Paper is going higher and higher, with no prospect for any decline in sight. Every new shipment of paper is costing us more per pound than the preceding shipment.

We take this occasion to thank our readers for their loyal support and for the fact that they have stood by us uncomplainingly during the high price of paper.

While other papers have been compelled to reduce in size because they could not secure paper on which to print their journals, we have been fortunate enough, so far, not to miss a single copy or to reduce the number of pages under twenty-four. We had hoped that conditions would change so that we could give our readers more reading matter, but under present conditions this is impossible. Our readers can greatly help us by seeing their friends and getting them to subscribe for the paper at the advanced price of $2.50. This is no more than $1.25 was a few years ago, We are not increasing in proportion to the price of paper. In addition to this, our labor is costing much more than ever before, which is a necessity, for the men cannot live at prices that they could in the past. We will do our very best for the interests of our constituency, and ask each subscriber to continue his effort to increase the circulation of the Advocate. We shall continue faithfully in the work, ever seeking to honor and glorify God in all that we do. We regret that we make mistakes, but we are determined in the midst of all the changes to be loyal and true to the word of God.

An Interpretation of Luther's Faith.

Martin Luther's faith is made luminous by a critical study of his treatise on "The Liberty of the Christian Man." To the historian, who is a mere recorder of facts, this treatise is regarded with considerable significance, because it was presented as a kind of conciliatory offering to Pope Leo X.; but to the Christian scholar it becomes more than an historical incident. Viewed in its completeness, it can be nothing less than a living monument to a great man's faith. Moreover, its exegetical and definitive value cannot be easily computed.

That there is such priceless liberty as Luther describes in the Christian experience will not be gainsaid. Jesus makes it an object of promise, saying: "If therefore the Son shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed." (John 8: 36.) Paul guards it with righteous jealousy, warning against false brethren "who come in privily to spy out our liberty which we have in Christ Jesus." (Gal. 2: 4.) James emphatically commends the "perfect law of liberty." Luther, then, has set forth with remarkable clearness a favorite theme of New Testament writers. He has made a permanent contribution to the best expository thought of the world.

The Aftermath of Sorrow.

No student unfamiliar with the stormy phases of Luther's career can be fully prepared to appreciate the true worth of his remarkable thesis. It is, indeed, a revelation of the man's heart. "Sorrow," wrote Anna Robertson Brown, "is not given to us alone that we may mourn. It is given us that, having felt, suffered, wept, we may be able to understand, love, bless." We find a striking exemplification of this compensation for suffering in the aftermath of Luther's sorrow and groping for light. Doctor Lindsay observes that "the lurid fires of Hell and the pale shades of Purgatory, which are the permanent background to Dante's Paradise, were present to Luther's mind from childhood." But we can almost feel glad for the days of his mental anguish when in "Christian Liberty" we note the strong, sure foundation upon which he stands in answer to his prayers. It is not uncommon to hear religious enthusiasts declare that they are immeasurably happy because God has suddenly "spoken peace to their souls." But Luther's testimony is different. Peace came to his soul after a long and torturous search. It was the fruit of poverty, serrow, perplexity, and chastening of soul.

The Man Behind the Message.

The world will always respect the consistent teacher. However wonderful one's sayings may sound, they will fall on many dull ears if they are not backed up by the man's life. Napoleon Bonaparte, during his last days on Saint Helena, said one of the finest things ever recorded about the way Jesus Christ had built up his kingdom. The great general's words are frequently quoted, but they do not contain the power they would have otherwise possessed had Napoleon not given his life to bloodshed and earthly conquest. Paul said: "For me to live is Christ." He who would teach others how to live must be able to point to his own clean, well-spent life. Paul had a right to teach others how to live. I like to believe that Luther stands with Paul rather than Napoleon in his effort to tell people what true faith means. There is no lack of sincerity in the prefatory statement which reads as follows: "Now, though I cannot boast of my abundance, and though I know how poorly I am furnished, yet I hope that, after having been vexed by various temptations, I have attained some little drop of faith, and that I can speak of this matter, if not with more elegance, certainly with more solidity, than those literal and too subtle disputants who have hitherto discoursed upon it without understanding their own words." We are led to remark that humility with solidity is a most excellent combination.

Ø Ø Ø

The Testing Out of His Definition.

Unlike the majority of Luther's writings, the "Liberty of the Christian Man" is not pervaded by the spirit of the iconoclast. Contrasting it with the letter to the Pope, Doctor Kostlin calls it "a positive joyous testimony." This fact is all the more remarkable when we recall the fact that it was written during the stress of exciting events and at a time when Luther's fate was problematical. Surely we may say that the trial of his faith was "more precious than gold." His own conduct under fire was the most striking proof in the whole world at the critical moment that the Christian man is "a free lord over all things and subject to no one." This is the first leading proposition. Luther's courage is undoubtedly the counterpart or outcome of his faith. But the supreme test came later when at the Diet of Worms he was asked to recant. His interrogators demanded a plain yes or no from him. The taunt roused Luther's blood. His full brave self was in his reply: "I will give you an answer which has neither horns nor teeth. Popes have erred and councils have erred. Prove to me out of Scripture that I am wrong, and I will submit. Till then my conscience binds me. Here I stand. I can do no more. God help me. Amen," We can hardly agree with Luther that his reply did not have teeth in it. For plain, unvarnished speech that meets the issue clearly, conclusively, and bravely, his statement is unexcelled. We are instantly reminded of the holy boldness of Peter and John before the Jewish council and of Paul's fearless attitude during his trials before various rulers. Luther had wrestled against principalities, against powers, against world rulers of darkness, and had prevailed. He had stood resolutely against the temporal power of the great emperor, Charles V., and against the spiritual power of the great Pope Leo X., and declared the inferiority of both as compared with the power of the living word. With one mighty thrust he had demonstrated the sharpness of the sword of the Spirit. He had subjected his own definition of faith as set forth in the "Liberty of the Christian Man" to the most crucial test. Was there ever a bettter expression of faith as a personal trust than that contained in the three words, "God help me," as uttered on this momentous occasion? Like Job, this man could say, "Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him," and dare the world to disprove it. How could I better state the significance of Luther's stand at Worms than to say it was the victory of Luther's faith.

Historically, Luther's answer meant the dawn of the modern era in world history, the proclamation of every man's right to individual freedom. It is not enough to say that here Luther lighted the fires of the Reformation. It were better to say that here he gained its first great victory.

Two Outstanding Characteristics.

There are two outstanding characteristics in Luther's treatise on "The Liberty of the Christian Man" which we should not fail to note. They are: (a) Its marked simplicity; (b) its faithfulness to the word of God.

His exposition is not addressed to the learned. "It is an easy way," we are told in the Preface, "for the ignorantfor these alone I am trying to serve." Before this time Augustine had said: "He that is good is free, though he be a slave; and he that is evil is a slave, though he be a king." But to Luther it did not seem sufficient that one should be merely good. Emancipation must be bought at a dearer price. One must know that he is both lord and servant. His second leading proposition is that the Christian man is "a ministering servant of all things and subject to every one," That ignorant, simple folks may know these great truths, Luther explains them in the plainest speech possible. We are reminded of the sizing-up of the lamented Andrew Broaddus by an aged ante-bellum negro servant: "White folks, he is no big preacher; I understood every word dat man said."

Luther's two main propositions are drawn from Paul's declaration. (1 Cor. 9: 9.) They are prefaced by a statement based upon Paul's expression concerning the inward and outward man in 2 Cor. 4: 16. The whole argument bristles with pointed scriptural allusions. The first of the two main propositions is made applicable to Paul's "inward man." Luther's leading question here is "how an upright, free Christian, that is a spiritual, new inward man, arises." He insists that no external works can make men free. The thirteenth chapter of First Corinthians comes before us when we read how "it will profit nothing that the body should be adorned with sacred vestments, or dwell in holy places, or be occupied in sacred affairs." We are further reminded that not even speculations and pious meditations will suffice. We wonder if Luther does not recall his visit to Rome when he writes of sacred vestments and pious meditations. It is his contention that faith not only comes by, but continues in, the word of God. The soul has nothing in which to live and be free and pious but in that word. It can be received and honored only in faith.

Book Notices.

"The Model Church," by G. C. Brewer, treats of live subjects, and is a book that should be distributed among the churches. This book has been almost universally commended and is being read with interest by many people. Price, $1.

A good book for young people to read is the "Life of Mrs. Charlotte Fanning." Mrs. Fanning was noted for her piety, zeal, and good sense. Hers was a life remarkable for the good accomplished. She always exerted an ennobling, refining, and uplifting influence. This book is ably edited by Mrs. Emma Page Larimore. Price, $1.

Send us fifteen cents for a copy of "What Was Nailed to the Cross?" It is a live tract, and is made up of some stirring thoughts of F. W. Smith. Adventists were active in North Nashville, and Brother Smith delivered a few sermons on the subject. The tract embodies the substance of these sermons. Buy a dozen copies and distribute them among the people. Price, $1.50 per dozen

Speculation.

BY U. G. WILKINSON.

As Brother Kurfees accuses me of speculating, a thing of which I have never before been accused, I must rise to a question of personal privilege and deny the charge. I have always been especially careful to never speculate on Bible teachings, not even prophecies. But this does not mean that I never study prophecy at all or attempt to teach it to others. I believe that much can be learned from the prophecies as well as other scriptures; that God gave them to us, as the first verse of Revelation states, "to show unto his servants things which must shortly come to pass;" that they are one of the candlesticks that assist in throwing light on dark places; and that the wise virgins will have this lamp with oil in it as well as the others when the Bridegroom comes. Neither does this imply that prophecy will be perfectly understood. Many other parts of the Scriptures will never be perfectly understood, either. Neither does it mean that no one ever speculates on the prophecies; for undoubtedly by far the greatest part of the writings of modern commentators on prophecy is speculation, and much of it very fanciful, even silly. But is not this also true with regard to other portions of the Bible as well? And I think Brother Kurfees should be more discriminating and not make all studies of the prophecies speculation. And if he does not know, as he so frankly acknowledges in his answer to my article, "Harps of God," he should not, for that reason, necessarily take the position that others do not, for the conclusion does not logically follow. In fact, his entire answer contains not one single denial of any of my arguments, does not even raise an issue, but takes the mere agnostic position, "I do not know." This leaves me without the necessity of any answer to any of his conclusions, because all my positions stand absolutely undenied. The only issue raised by him that I care to notice is, as stated, his charge that my position is speculation. None other needs notice.

Now let us see as to this. I took the position that the statements in Revelation concerning the harps of God, instead of meaning musical instruments in use in heaven, invented by men, such as Estey organs, concert grand pianos, etc., as the arguments of our digressive brethren would imply, are really prophecies concerning future events to take place upon the earth. Brother Kurfees says that he does not know; that my position may be true, but the Bible does not say, hence my position is speculation. Now, if Brother Kurfees had read the three first verses of Revelation and the three last, not to mention numerous other statements throughout the book, he would have learned that the Book does say so Especially see Rev. 1: 3: "Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this prophecy: . . . for the time is at hand." John says it is a prophecy, pronounces a blessing upon the student of it, and says the time is at hand for it to be fulfilled. The first verse says it is "things that must shortly come to pass." Chapter 4: 1 says John is to be showed "things which must be hereafter." I think the most skeptical will not deny that the things that were to come to pass were to be in the history of this world, especially with the church, the Lord's people in their relationship to it. What interest could we have had in anything else? And every one who has studied the Bible to any purpose knows that its very purposes and object is to teach the world concerning the destiny of man upon this earth, especially in regard to the great covenants God made with Abraham for his salvation through Christ (see Gal. 3), and to teach man of his future destiny, both the just and the unjust; that the Bible, having begun at the beginning and closed at the end, gives a general description of our future destiny and stops, for there is nothing more needs be said, promising blessings and threatening curses upon all who add to or take from the story thus finished, full and complete, and also with the soul-inspiring promise that the Lord will quickly come again with his reward with him for every man.

From this it can be seen that it is no speculation to say that the transactions of this book are prophecies of future things to soon take place upon earth, for the book itself says so. Neither is it speculation to say that we should read and study and learn what we can about these things and find their fulfillment in the history of the world, for the book itself actually pronounces a blessing upon all who do this. (Rev. 1: 3.) Neither is it speculation to say that many of these things are expressed in symbols and other rhetorical figures of speech, any more than it is speculation to say that to be born of water is a symbol or figure, and countless other Bible statements. Hence "harps," etc., must be symbols. (See Rev. 5: 8; 14: 2; 15: 2.)

Brother Kurfees will certainly not insist that it is speculation to say that "harps of God" are not musical inventions of men. Then, as we can conclusively show that these things were to take place upon earth, that these people represent the true worshipers of God in a future age of the world, is it speculation to say that the harps are the heart and voice of the worshiper? Let us see. Eph. 5: 19: "Singing and making melody in your heart to the Lord." Here the apostle positively makes the heart a harp. It certainly, then, is no speculation to make the heart a harp, for Paul positively does so. The Book does say so. And I think Brother Kurfees, in his book, "Instrumental Music in the Worship," which I have in my library and which I value very highly as the best thing on the subject in print, and to which I am indebted for much help-I say I think he very forcibly develops this thought, showing that the musical instrument of the gospel age is the heart, etc. to the voice being a harp of God, too, we quote Heb. 13: 15: "By him therefore let us offer the sacrifice of praise to God continually, that is, the fruit of our lips, giving thanks to his name." The "fruit of our lips" is, of course, the human voice. And as the worshiper of old was commanded (Ps. 150) to praise him with the psaltery and harp, so the worshiper now is commanded to praise him with the voice. So it is not speculation at all to say that the harps of God which the true worshiper uses in praising God in the gospel age is the heart and voice, for the Book does say so, and this is the very essence of what Brother Kurfees is contending for in his article and in his book-that is, that we should praise him only with heart and voice, rejecting inventions of men, which he will condemn. He has given us no other instrument, nor any authority to use any other, but the heart and voice. From the altar of a pure heart, with the lips, we should offer a sacrifice of praise acceptable to him in songs and prayers, etc. "For with such sacrifices God is well pleased." "If any man speak, let him speak as the oracles of God; if any man minister, let him do it as of the ability that God giveth: that God in all things may be glorified through Jesus Christ." (1 Pet. 4: 11.) Surely, then, those who make melody in the heart instead of on a musical instrument of man's invention, who offer a sacrifice of praise as the fruit of their lips instead of on a musical instrument, are the ones who are using the harps of God in his worship.

In conclusion, then, let us study the prophecies carefully as well as other scriptures—not to speculate upon them, for we should not speculate on any of the scriptures or upon science or anything else, but for the purpose of understanding them; and a correct understanding of the prophecies will greatly assist us in understanding our duty along many lines, for it will serve as a lamp to our wayward feet, just as all of God's word is "a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path." (Ps. 119: 105.) "The commandment is a lamp; and the law is light; and reproofs of instruction are the way of life." (Prov. 6: 23.)

But enough. If there is any statement in my article, "Harps of God," that might be called speculative, again I say that I am unable to see it. It certainly is legitimate Bible commentary.

"Harps of God." BY D. E. HARDISON.

I have read with much interest the two articles in the Gospel Advocate under the above caption by Brethren Wilkinson and M. C. K., in the issue of April 29. Brother Wilkinson proves to his complete satisfaction that harps mentioned by John in his Revelation mean something else than a musical instrument. His reasoning is on a par with the average Methodist when he proves infant baptism. Brother Wilkinson says that none of the instruments used in Old Testament times were used in the sanctuary. No, and we could also say that the singing and the sacrifices were not in the sanctuary. That does not prove that John did not mean musical instruments when he says he saw angels harping with their harps. Just here it is refreshing to note Brother M. C. K.'s ignorance confessed in his article when he repeats six times that he does not know. It seems that Brother Wilkinson believes that when the inspired writer says that he saw angels, the holy city, altars, harps, etc., that he did not mean these things at all. Well, if he did not mean any of them, Brother Kurfees is right-nobody knows. Some of our brethren are anxious to find some new authority combating the use of musical instruments in the churches. There is no question about the Jews using instruments in both the tabernacle and temple.

Consistency used to be called a "jewel," but it is not so highly prized if we want to make the Bible prove our theory, for I find many who are paying large tuition fees for the training of their children in the use of instruments and further fostering the so-called evil by having them in their homes. If the musical instrument is harmful and sinful in its use in assisting the voice in worship, we should use prohibitory methods by discarding it from our homes. To use them there adds responsibility, anxiety, and much training to get our children to believe that it is right in the sanctuary of our homes and sinful in a church building. This, with many, may seem a small thing, yet it is as universal as New Testament religion, and hundreds of parents will bear testimony that I have stated a truth. It is the simplest sort of puerility to attempt to argue otherwise.

Introducing Christ Into Industry. BY W. H. CARTER.

In the Gospel Advocate of April 29, I notice an article copied from the Literary Digest under the above heading. Any movement to accept the Christ and follow his teaching is commendable and should be encouraged. The greatest need in the world to-day, in all classes of industry, is to so shape ourselves in faith, obedience, reverence, and everyday living and conduct, that we may carry our trouble before him in full assurance that he will bring about such adjustment as will be equitable, just, and right to all concerned. The "Golden Rule" contains one principle set forth by the Christ, which is very far-reaching, but that does not set forth all his teaching. If all classes will study the whole New Testament, learn and adopt all his teaching, satisfactory adjustments could easily be arrived at. Principies and rules and regulations which come of the wisdom of counsels of men have been tried for years, and conditions grow no better. It is wise now to begin to look to the Christ and his laws.

Jesus sent his apostles to teach the world the lessons and principles he had taught them, and said: "He that heareth you heareth me." (Luke 10: 16.) In their teaching they tell us to be submissive to "the powers that be." (Rom. 13: 1-8.) We may not think the law wise and good; but if we follow the Christ, we must be submissive to it.

There are always two sides to a dispute, sometimes more. All wrong is not always on one side. To undertake to carry our point and have our way by force, or by the destruction of property, or by the injury and suffering of others, is not following the Golden Rule or the Christ, but is wicked, sinful, rebellious, and destitute of that love that should reach out to all classes.

While I was raised up to labor—to work at the carpenter's bench—and my sympathy has always been with the laboring class, I have tried not to close my eyes against their mistakes and errors. While the Christ teaching is very plain and positive as to those who possess the wealth and tells what their end will be, it is also plain as to the laborer. To talk about Christ in industry should not be a mere sentimentalism, just talk, but a reality. This will lead us to study to learn what it really means and how it is to be accomplished.

When one class of workers quit work and stop the production of that which is essential to the comfort and happiness of thousands of others, what then has become of the "Golden Rule?" Are you doing unto others as you would have them do to you? I am persuaded that economy, more saving, will do more to reduce the cost of living than higher wages and less work. If we really let the Christ rule in our industry and go to him with honest and sincere hearts, he will teach us on saving. (See John 6: 5-14.) The truth is, there is no occupation, station, or relationship In this life that the Christ will not be with us and direct us for our good, if we will let him do it in his way. We cannot have him with us if we undertake to dictate to him. We must learn his will and submit to it. We are taught not to do violence or to seek vengeance. If I do not want to work at a price, I have the right to refuse, but not to say to my fellow man, "You shall not work." That is ignoring the Christ who says: "Let no man seek his own, but every man another's wealth." (1 Cor. 10: 24.) Grand, unselfish principle for all to be governed by! We cannot have the Christ with us without it. Following this principle by one side will go far toward leading the other side to adopt it. When capital becomes interested in the wealth of labor and labor is interested in the wealth of capital, each realizing its dependence upon the other, and both meet on Lord's day and worship together as "it is written," then there will be peace and harmony worth while.

No principle is more foreign to the Christ than selfishness, domineering, overbearance, oppression. We must not be clannish or respecters of persons. If I align myself with a class and contribute to supply their wants, regardless of others who are suffering on account of my conduct, I have not the Christ, nor am I prompted by his Spirit. It means much to introduce Christ into our industry. The way is to introduce him through ourselves—become converted to him ourselves, become Christians, become obedient to the gospel. This means obedience to his commands as set forth in the gospel. We must then learn to endure reproaches and hardships. We should guard against mistakes in this. You will find full instruction in the New Testament. Read it, study it, and obey it, if you want to be happy in this life and in that which is to come.

If it is meant that the Christ principles and teaching are to be taken and followed by one side, for the good and benefit of only one side, it is only talk and will amount to nothing. It means a willingness to sacrifice for the good of others. It means to love those whom we regard as our enemies, and teaches us that love "thinketh no evil" and is not "easily provoked," "endureth all things." It is such a long step in the right direction that I want to say and do what I can to encourage it. The sooner we all learn our dependence on the Christ and become obedient to him, the quicker our troubles will be over and our happiness assured. We will learn that happiness consisteth not in the abundance of that which we pessess. To be willing to give an honest day's work and be contented is necessary to our happiness. Higher wages and shorter days increase the burdens of others. The less the production, the higher the cost to the consumer, to say nothing of the advantage taken by the conscienceless extortioner.

When all men in all walks and pursuits of this life take the Christ along with them and allow him to control, then we will have glorious days on the earth.

The College Question.

BY R. L. WHITESIDE.

By experience, observation, and study I have learned some things about the Bible-college question. It appears to me that both those who favor and those who oppose Bible colleges have said and done some foolish and hurtful things, and that by neither side has the colleges always been fairly represented. This has grown out of the fact that the real function of schools and colleges has not always been clearly defined and stated. Those who oppose them seem to regard them as church institutions, owned and controlled by the church, and those who favor them have generally written as if that were a fact.

But is that the issue? Is it possible for the churches in Texas, in Arkansas, or in Tennessee, to own or operate a college? If so, how? If not, why so much loose talk about building colleges for the church of Christ, turning over to the church of Christ one already built, securing another college for the church of Christ, etc.? I know of no such colleges and deprecate such talk. As a member of the church of God, I have no property rights in any school. nor do I have any control over any. I unhesitatingly affirm that the church of God in Texas cannot own colleges, nor property of any sort; neither has it any way of appointing agents to control such property. A chartered Bible college (and all should be chartered) owns its own property and manages its own affairs. It is owned by no church and no church controls it. The fact that the charter provides that the trustees must be members of churches of Christ does not make it a church school any more than the fact that they must be citizens of the United States makes it a government school.

But it is argued that these schools do the work God intended the church to do. Here again we stumble in the dark. It is impossible for me to think of them as supplanting the church, or as, in any way, doing the work God intended the church to do. A little reflection, a little common sense, will help to clear up matters. It is the duty of parents, so far as they are able, to provide all needed things for their children, including such education and discipline as will best prepare them for usefulness in life. This includes teaching the Bible, as well as other necessary branches of learning. But parents are not usually prepared to give their children all needed education and training, and must send them to school or neglect a parental duty. Then the college or school, for the time being, as the agent of the parents, gives, as best it can, the needed education and discipline; and, as such, it is the duty of the school to teach the Bible faithfully to the students in its care. The function of schools is parental, not ecclesiastical. When parents feed, clothe, and teach their children the Bible and other useful things, no one thinks they are usurping the work of the church. When parents transfer, in part, these parental duties to a college, why should any one of sense think that the college, in accepting such trust, is doing the work of the church? It is manifest to any thinking person that the school is not doing the work of the church, but the work of parents—work that the parents were unable to do.

When, therefore, a school or college for a time takes, in part, the place of parents in the life of the child, it is under solemn obligation to look after the moral and spiritual welfare of the child, as well as its other needs. If it does not teach the Bible, it fails in an important parental duty. Let the schools and colleges realize that they are foster parents to every student committed to their care, and then as faithful parents proceed to give the student the needed care and training. And remember: Educating children is not church work, but parental; and schools are not church agencies, but parental agencies.

[Brother C. R. Nichol, of Clifton, Texas, who handed this article to me for publication, heartily indorses it. Give it a thoughtful reading.—Europ.]

We are continually tempted to forget that it is not what men do that is the vital matter, but rather what they are. In Christ Jesus neither legal observances avail anything, nor the omission of legal observances, but "a new creature." God is a great deal more concerned about our really being "new creatures" than about anything else; because if we are right as to our inward being, we shall certainly do right as to our outward actions. We may, in fact, sometimes ever do right without being right at all; and it is very evident that no doing of this kind has any vitality in it, nor is of any real account. The essential thing, therefore, is character, and doing is valuable only as it is an indication of being.—Selected.

Grief.

BY CLARA COX EPPERSON.

Grief, bitter grief, and all life seems so dark, Frail and unstable seems its little bark; For death hath broken dear love's golden chain— The links that bound our hearts, broken in twain.

Gray is each day, and dark, so dark, the night, And from deep sleep the heart is roused in fright; God seems so distant from me in sorrow, No angel brings glad hope for the morrow.

Ah! could you know, love, in God's clear sunshine, That through the long days only grief is mine, From grim death's cup I drink the bitter rue, And filled with longing is my heart for you;

Then through the veils that thinly intervene Your soul would shine, although your face unseen; And then would cease from all its grief and pain My heart, with hope of seeing you again.

Is the Rejection of Literature a Sure Proof of Loyalty? BY F. L. PAISLEY.

In discussing this question, it is not my purpose to answer it in a direct way, nor to settle the question once for all as to the right to use literature in the study of the Bible on Lord's day, but to give some who may be disturbed over the question a suggestion that is perfectly in harmony with truth and consistency.

Recently my youngest brother, contemplating going to a more northern part of the country, asked a brother of a near-by congregation about the soundness of the Northern churches. The reply quickly came: "To be sure, they are loyal, for they do not use the literature." It is in order to say that the above-mentioned congregation is well under the influence of a religious journal that is radically opposed to the use of literature in the Lord's-day services.

Now, before I show what I believe to be divine authority for the use of literature (for it is surely authorized or it is not, and if not, then those using it are going "beyond what is written"), I wish to point out some inconsistencies in the opposition.

All that I have ever heard oppose its use contend that the Bible alone is sufficient. The contention is well founded and cannot be refuted. But the question, "What is the 'Bible alone?'" comes to me. The slogan, "Where the Bible speaks, we speak; where the Bible is silent, we are silent," properly used, means exactly the same thing as "the Bible alone," in its correct use; but if used as some brethren seem to use the expression, "the Bible alone" must mean that when a verse or any portion of scripture is read, it must be let stand just as read without one word of comment. Would the opposition to literature agree with me should I say that when a man teaches only what a portion of scripture teaches, and all it teaches, though he use a hundred words to express the meaning of ten of God's words, that he speaks where the Bible speaks and is silent where the Bible is silent, that he has given the Bible alone on the question? If not, then it seems to me that to take the "Bible alone" in his meaning stops every mouth from preaching and teaching that would add one word of comment to the exact wording of the Bible. Do you say that none thus contend? I am trying to arrive at the exact meaning of the "Bible-alone" idea. But brethren readily accept oral comments on the Bible in the Lord's day assembly, but reject all comments that are printed because they are "literature." Just here is a difficulty that I have never been able to understand. A teacher of a class who refuses to use "literature" because it is "man's work" will give his cral comments on a lesson, and they are not "man's work;" but as they have the Bible only in hand. and having studied no "literature," all that is said in the class, by class and teacher, is the "Bible alone" and is not "man's work." My brother, if you can see how that is, you can see much that I cannot.

In the above-mentioned congregation is another brother who was opposed to literature before the church came under the influence of the paper and its editors. Sometime past this brother was leading a class through some lessons in the Old Testament. (I got this information through another member of this congregation). At the beginning of the series of lessons he said to the class, "We do not want what the Gospel Advocate says, or what Lipscomb says, but we want what God says-the Bible alone-on these lessons," or words to that effect. The class advanced into the lessons, and though they studied hard, they found that their teacher knew things about the lesson that they did not know. They were at a loss to know how he knew so much more than they; but when they learned that he was reading a commentary written by an editor who opposes "literature," then the difficulty was solved. Just how one can be consistent in opposing the use of literature in the assembly and then use in the class the arguments that are gathered from the papers and writers who oppose its use to show that it is wrong, I do not see, any more than I could see how one can oppose instrumental music in worship and then use it to show that it is wrong.

I wish to further suggest that often there is far more "man's work" in a class not using literature than there is in a class using it, for the simple reason that the literature has more exact quotations of scripture than the average teacher is able to produce, and when not quoting verbatim, perhaps, gives more nearly the exact truth than the oral expressions, or comments, of the teacher using the "Bible alone." If one of the writers of the lesson comments should be at your place of worship and speak the same words that he writes, then could you tell how much less are his oral words "man's work" than are his writings? Or could you tell how much less are your comments "man's work" and how much more the "Bible alone" than what he would say or write?

But I want to again suggest, my dear brethren, that, though you sincerely oppose the use of literature in the Lord's worship, you use it every Lord's day in the assembly and in the worship. When I say this, I am accepting your idea and my idea of the meaning of "literature"—viz., Bible truth expressed in man's words and printed on paper; and you use it to teach the church in the assembly for worship—that is, if you heed this scripture: "Teaching and admonishing one another in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing with grace in your hearts to the Lord." (Col. 3: 16.) I am wrong in this statement, however, provided that you do not sing songs that were ever composed by man or printed on paper. For what is the song book but "literature"—man's work—as much so as the lesson leaf or quarterly?

But do you say that when we have literature we have a "Sunday school"—a thing not mentioned in the Bible? Is it any more a "Sunday school" with literature than with the Bible alone? Neither do I believe in a "Sunday school" that is an organization other than the church, whether we have literature or the Bible alone.

Another objection that goes with that against literature is the dividing of the congregation into classes. I have heard brethren demand an example where the apostles divided the congregation into classes to teach. They might also demand an example where two good singers of one part sat together and separate from two or more good singers of another part. Brethren, whenever and wherever you teach a mixed audience of various ages, you teach them in classes, even if they all sit as close together as possible-that is, if you teach all in the assembly. While you are teaching the more advanced the higher and deeper things of God's truth, you cannot at the same time and in the same words feed the little ones who are babes; for such teaching is "strong meat," and the little ones cannot live on it, for they are "unskillful in the word of righteousness." But if you deal with such "milk" for those who "have need of milk" and do not teach in words that are "strong meat," you do not teach "those of full age." (See Heb. 5: 12-14.) But if you alternate the "milk" and "meat" so that all are instructed, you teach in classes, and your congregation is divided into as many classes as there are degrees of ability to receive instruction, even though they are all in one assembly. The divine authority to teach in classes is in the distinction that God makes in the difference in ability of "babes" and "those of full age."

But we are anxious to see the Bible authority for literature in the teaching of the assembly on Lord's day. In this I do not expect to advance any new truth, for that cannot be done, but to recall to mind God's will toward us. As we have heard and read over and over again, the Lord's command to "teach" and Paul's injunction to "teach" is a generic term, carrying with it the authority to use such means and methods as will best carry out the instruction. This authorizes a preacher or teacher to write his sermon or other lesson and send it to be read to the congregation if he cannot go in person. If it authorizes him to write it. of course it authorizes the congregation to read it and hear It read. This was done in the days of inspiration more than it is done now. But it may be objected that they were inspired men and that what they wrote is the word of God itself. Thus Paul did; when he could not go, he wrote lessons that the church needed. And this is "literature;" for "literature is a body of writings having to do with a given subject," says Webster. Now hear God's command to us to use it in reaching every creature with the word of life. Through Paul, the Holy Spirit says to the Philip plans, who were uninspired as we are: "Those things. which ye have both learned, and received, and heard, and seen in me, do." And then he adds: "And the God of peace shall be with you." (Phil. 4: 9.) Paul taught with his mouth. When absent from the church, he taught with his pen. "Do" "those things." In teaching and being taught by literature, I cannot see a single principle of divine truth violated, but believe it God's will to use that method of instruction.

"Preachers and Preaching. No. 3. By An Observer." BY JOHN E. DUNN.

In the Gospel Advocate of May 6, 1920, appears, on pages 442-444, an article under the above caption. In said article, on page 444, column one, is the following paragraph about me and my work; "It seems to some that this comes with poor grace, since Brother Dunn turned to a man-made religious institution-the Y. M. C. A.; drew a salary of about twenty-four hundred dollars a year, or two hundred dollars per month, either from it or the War Work Council; and followed the army which was engaged in carnal war to France and lent his influence to the destruction of human life. I should be very glad indeed if Brother Dunn and other preachers and Christians who did the same could see their mistake and would come out squarely and plainly and say they did wrong. There is much good work for Brother Dunn to do yet, and we should all be glad to assist him into it." "This convinces" me that Mr. Observer, "with not a few others," who have been firing at me wide of the mark, not knowing the facts in the case, have "not studied this matter sufficiently. If so, they could not make such bald assertions. It is grievous, too, because people look to preachers" (and all other Christians) "for correct information from the word of God" and the truth about matters not in the Bible.

Observer says: "Brother Dunn turned to a man-made religious institution-the Y. M. C. A.; drew a salary of about twenty-four hundred dollars a year, or two hundred dollars per month, either from it or the War Work Council; and . . . lent his influence to the destruction of human life." All three of these statements are not true. Six different editors and contributors-and there may have been others whose writings I never saw (for two years I only occasionally saw a religious paper) -have seen fit to criticize me and the work I did unto the soldiers. I feel sure none of them would ever have written what they have written about me if they had known how I came to be in the army, what I did, how I lived, what I received as salary or rather no salary, what my support or lack of support was and where it came from. These brethren have written a good deal about me, falsely accusing me and misrepresenting me. Not one of them ever wrote me a line or spoke a word to me. Why did they not come to me privately like the New Testament says and try to convert me from the error of my way, if they thought I was doing wrong, instead of publishing me to the world in a false light and trying to ruin my good name and influence before the public.

I have tried to look with charity on all of these brethren, because the whole world was in the throes of the most terrible catastrophe ever known. Almost everybody was excited. Even now the people, the world, and our own country, are in a miserable condition. I have tried to serve, suffer, and bear false accusations patiently. If these brethren had known my heart and life and if they had not been under the heat of war times, they never could have said what they have about me. I have felt that it would do no good to try to correct people who would write and talk about me when they did not know the facts and never came to me for firsthand information.

I have had some desire to write a running story of how I was led to go into the army, how I got in, what I did, how I lived, how my family was supported (my salary?), or you might call it the story of my experiences, observations, and the causes that led me both in the United States and in France, but I have not had the time to undertake it. I believe it would do good and correct many false impressions.

I regret with all my soul the bitterness, discord, strife, nagging, criticism, and "knocking" that is rife among us. It seems to me that the whole world—people in the church and out of it—and the elements also are militant. I certainly desire to see the world readjust itself and get back on a peace basis. We do not see ourselves as others see us, and others do not see us as we see ourselves.

Let me also add here that before I decided to go to the army I carefully studied the matter and counted the cost. I talked much with my wife and children. I remembered what my father told me of army life. I advised with Brethren M. C. Kurfees. A. B. Lipscomb, J. C. McQuiddy, F. L. Rowe, elders of churches, and a number of other good people. I did not go into it blindly. One able brother preacher publicly said to me: "Brother Dunn, my heart is with you. I approve your going. But you will suffer much; you will be under the fire of some of your brethren as well as under the fire of the Germans."

I count the work I did during the two years I was among the soldiers in France and the United States by far the greatest service I ever rendered unto God. I hate war with every fiber of my being. I never said, did, or thought one thing in favor of war. I put in all of my time and lived a life of suffering in hell here on earth saving life, saving souls, and saving boys from wreck and ruin here on earth. I was saving your boys in order that they might be fit to be the husbands of your girls and the fathers of your grand-children. I have positive proof that I succeeded. I have nothing to regret. My conscience is clear.

Yours with an earnest desire to follow Christ in serving suffering humanity and sowing the seed of the kingdom.

Brother Dunn's article is a reply to itself. What he says about one's going to him privately does not apply. When, as he says, he had consulted numerous brethren, had taken their advice, had gone into the war work in the United States and had followed it to France; after his public service in this work; and after he had published in the papers that he had not received from the church the proper support, he cannot complain that one should comment on his course as a preacher of the gospel of the Prince of Peace and as one who has all his life taught the all-sufficiency of the church to do all the work God has committed to it, or complain after all this that one does not go to him privately. This, too, comes with poor grace.

All 1 said was in defense of the churches that could not support such a course and in support of the all-sufficiency of the church. I still believe in the all-sufficiency of the church and that unto God must be "glory in the church by Christ Jesus, throughout all ages, world without end." (Eph. 3: 21, A. V.)

Brother Dunn knows what he did; the Y. M. C. A., "the War Work Council," the church at Cookeville, and Brother Dunn know all that passed between them. My only purpose and effort is to defend and protect the church, so far as I am able, and to uphold it as the pillar and ground of the truth, the manifestation of the manifold wisdom of God, and its all-sufficiency to do all God requires of Christians. The gospel of the Prince of Peace does not lead Christians into any "war work councils," Y. M. C. A.'s, or any other religious institutions.

Observations of "An Observer."

BY F. O. HOWELL.

Let this "Observer" plant himself in the open. Why, sir, withhold your name and hide your identity from the readers of the Gospel Advocate?

This "Observer" tries to tell us that God exalted the fact that Paul worked with his hands in order to support himself and often those that were with him into a law to govern all preachers. This brother is certainly an observer. Paul tells us that he did this in order that he might have something about which to glory. I deny that this incident in Paul's life was exalted into a law to govern preachers, and call upon this "Observer" to give chapter and verse for his "bald assertion."

This "Observer" says that Paul had the God-ordained right to receive a full support from the churches and not to work at tentmaking. Then how does he observe that God exalted tentmaking into a law to govern preachers?

"Observer" says that Paul had the right to demand support at the hands of the churches and could have used it, yet he wants to insist to the contrary for preachers now. When the change, Brother "Observer," in this divine law?

"Observer" continues: "It was not the support that Paul was seeking, but the salvation of the greatest number." This is true, and equally true to-day of preachers of the gospel who are laboring for the salvation of souls. Almost any preacher among us who gives his entire time to preaching would receive much more money for his work in other callings. We have a large number of preachers, Brother "Observer," who are teaching and doing other things for no reason on earth other than to secure sufficient funds to supply life's necessities; and such writings as yours only serve to shut off the support of preachers and force them to give more of their time to entanglements of this world to support those who have a claim upon their bounty.

You say: "All that Paul said about the laborer being worthy of his hire, the soldier, the ox, the vineyard, the flock, and those who serve at the altar, is true; because God has ordained that 'they that proclaim the gospel should live of the gospel?'" This is all Brother Holt, myself, or any one else claims who contends for God's eternal decree. There is no exception in all of the divine record to this rule. Yet, when we thus contend, you are pleased to call it "bald assertion," and insist "that Brother Howell, with not a few others, has not studied this matter sufficiently." It is plain to the contemporary reader that if God is right, we are right and you are wrong. I admit that our contention in this matter is not according to the traditions that some of our preachers have handed down to us, but it is God's eternal decree. Away with orthodoxy! Let God be true. The man of God is thoroughly furnished unto every good work by the gospel and needs no shelter under the wing of orthodoxy, tradition, or anything else.

You say: "The language used by some of these brethren does not agree with sound words." What about the teaching of "Observer," who contends in the absence of sound words that God contradicted his decree, "They which preach the gospel should live of the gospel," and exalted Paul's tentmaking into a law to govern all preachers?

Brother "Observer" says that when Paul was making tents he was giving himself wholly to the ministry, and cites us to 1 Tim. 4: 15, 16. Let the reader observe the teaching of the passage and decide who has studied the word for naught. You make up your own mind as to who is reversing God's order.

After contending in his long article that one should do all he can for the salvation of souls, Brother "Observer" makes a very unnecessary and vulgar attack upon Brother John E. Dunn for his efforts during the war and calls upon him to confess his sins. From what "Observer" says, it seems that he would serve tables, sit idly by, see the government take all our Christians boys to the war, and put forth no effort to supply to them the bread of life while there. What did Brother "Observer" do during the war to feed the babes that were taken the bread of life? And let me lovingly suggest that anybody can criticize and cast reflections; but he that is ignorant, let him be ignorant—that is, if he knows not the law and tries to teach, his teaching does not edify.

Brethren, the church is greatly handicapped to-day because of the fact that so many good preachers are doing other things and have not the time to qualify for the proper ministry of the word; and so many that are qualified, their time is taken in a thousand other things than preaching the gospel, and we cannot secure their services.

What we need most is all preachers preaching all the time, more young men preparing for the ministry of the word, and all preachers of the gospel being encouraged by the proper support. Let us all do all the good we can and as little harm as possible.

In reply to the above, I wish to say, I have never tried "to tell us that God has exalted the fact that Paul worked with his hands in order to support himself and often those that were with him into a law to govern all preachers." I think our readers can understand what I say. I can say a thing straight out and straight forward without trying and failing. I believe that Paul worked with his own hands in different places and, therefore, at different times; I believe he did this for the reasons which he gives. I do not believe that, when he says he had the right to marry, he means he would have married, but no sister in the church anywhere would have him. I do believe he means he could have married, but that he waived this right in order to accomplish the more good. Just so, when he says he had the "right to forbear working" and that he did "not use to the full" his "right in the gospel," he means he could have used to the full this right and, therefore, churches would have supported him, as some did when he saw fit to use this right; hence, he does not mean and does not say that he would have always taken a support, or used "to the full" this right, but that the churches would not support him. He does not say he never worked at all until out of money. The man who denies Paul ever worked until out of money and affirms that his only reason for working was to supply his own immediate needs until some church or churches gave him something does not know all that Paul says or the New Testament teaches on this subject. I do not believe Paul ever quit preaching for lack of support or "struck for higher wages." preacher of the gospel of Christ can no more quit preaching and teaching the word than he can quit studying the Bible, praying, singing the praises of God, being honest, paying his debts, telling the truth, or in any way living the Christian life. Here is the high and holy and eternal principle which governed Paul:

But I rejoice in the Lord greatly, that now at length ye have revived your thought for me; wherein ye did indeed take thought, but ye lacked opportunity. Not that I speak in respect of want: for I have learned, in whatsoever state I am, therein to be content. I know how to be abased, and I know also how to abound: in everything and in all things have I learned the secret both to be filled and to be hungry, both to abound and to be in want. I can do all things in him that strengtheneth me. Howbeit ye did well that ye had fellowship with my affliction. . . Not that I seek for the gift; but I seek for the fruit that increaseth to your account. But I have all things, and abound: I am filled, having received from Epaphroditus the things that came from you, an odor of a sweet smell, a sacrifice acceptable, well pleasing to God. And my God shall supply every need of yours according to his riches in glory in Christ Jesus. (Phil. 4: 10-19.)

Let us all follow Paul, because he followed Christ. (1 Cor. 11: 1.) Let us teach, as Paul did, all the word of God on God's "ordinance" that all who proclaim the gospel should live of the gospel, on helping the poor, on cheerful giving, on the blessedness of giving, and on being "rich in good works" and "rich toward God," and all for the reasons Paul taught these lessons—not that it may be so done to him and not that he sought for the gift, but because he sought for the fruit to abound unto the account of the churches, or sought the salvation of the churches. All true preachers of the gospel to-day seek the good and salvation of all the churches, and they cannot be saved without the grace of giving. Hence, they preach all the will of God on giving, and on the true motive and right purpose of giving. (See 1 Tim. 6: 17-19.)

There was a dearth of preachers in Jesus' day. His remedy for this dearth is the right remedy. His remedy was not more pay, yet he teaches that the laborer is worthy of his hire. His remedy was prayer to God to send more laborers into the harvest. God's law is for the laborers to work for him in his harvest for the salvation of souls for his glory, and then for the churches and the ones who have received such great spiritual blessing to supply "to the full" the needs of carnal things of the laborers. So Paul preached; and riches or poverty, fullness or emptiness, liberty or imprisonment, life or death, could not stop him. One such laborer whom God sends into the harvest is worth a thousand who are governed by the money they are to receive or are not to receive.

It is useless and harmful to discuss false Issues.

I regret that Brother Howell raised a false issue and challenges me in a private letter to discuss this false issue, stating what he wishes me to affirm. No man will go into such a discussion. I believe that Paul worked with his own hands and preached the gospel, and I believe the reasons he gives for doing this.

We can all settle these matters for ourselves by ceasing to discuss for a while and by studying carefully all the will of God on these subjects. Much of the useless and harmful discussions and strife in the papers now can be eliminated by studying the word of God for a while with the determination—the will—to do and teach only the will of God. (See John 7: 16, 17.) Then all will come to one mind, one heart, and one soul—"the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace."

Our readers know that I have tried from time to time to place all the Bible teaches on this subject before them. I cannot do more now, and God forbid that I should desire to do less.

Every man—editor, teacher, elder, preacher, and every other one—must meet his writings, his teaching, his sermons, his influence, his very motives, and his whole life at the judgment.

I trust Brother Howell will read what I say in reply to Brother Dunn. E. A. ELAM.

Letters to McHenry and Martin. No. 4.

BY J. MADISON WRIGHT.

IV. THE FIRST DAY OF THE WEEK.

1. Has God made sacred any day for Christians? (Rom. 3: 21, 22; 1: 16, 17; Gal. 2: 20, 21; Heb. 10: 38, 39; Heb. 6: 11; Rom. 14: 23; 10: 17; Col. 3: 16, 17.) Christianity is a religion of faith, and faith comes by hearing the word of the Lord. So faith cannot exist where the Lord has not spoken. Then the boundary of the New Testament is the boundary of faith in Christ. As the New Testament does not teach Christians to meet on the Sabbath day, or in any way keep it sacred, they cannot do it by faith; and whatsoever is not of faith is sin. To meet for worship on the Sabbath day or keep it sacred to God would be sin. The day the New Testament teaches Christians to meet on is the day they can keep by faith; and to not meet on the day the New Testament teaches them to meet on would be sin, failing to walk by faith. (James 4: 17.)

2. The resurrection day. Was it the Sabbath? (Lev. 23: 9-14.) The sheaf of the first fruits of the harvest offered to Jehovah on the morrow (first day) after the Sabbath (seventh day) was typical of Christ's resurrection, the first fruits from the dead. (1 Cor. 15: 20-23.) The law makes the resurrection to come on the first day of the week. (Matt. 28: 1-7; Mark 16: 1-9; Luke 24: 1-7; John 20: 1.) These scriptures not only make it positive that it was not on the Sabbath, but on the first day of the week. that Jesus arose from the dead; but they also tell us when the Sabbath ended and the first day began. Note this: not on Saturday evening, not at midnight Saturday night. but at dawn of day Sunday morning, was the beginning of the first day of the week. Sunday morning at dawn is the beginning of the first day of the week, and the evening following this day is called the evening on the first day of the week. (John 20: 19.)

3. Jesus met with his disciples on the first day of the week. (John 20: 19, 26.) Sunday and Sunday is eight "After eight" is after the eighth day begins, or on the eighth day or next first day. "After three days" was on the third day. (Matt. 16: 21; 27: 63, 64.) They under stood "after" to mean "on" the third day. The only day recorded of Jesus meeting with his disciples after he arose from the dead was on the resurrection day, the first day of the week.

4. Pentecost was the first day of the week. (a) Lev. 23: 10-16. The morrow after the Sabbath that came during the seven-days' feast of unleavened bread at the passover, on which they brought the first ripe sheaf of harvest to offer to the Lord, was necessarily the first day of the week. Count from this day seven Sabbaths complete, 7×7=49, the forty-ninth day is a Sabbath day; the morrow after is the first day of the week, the fiftieth day—"Pentecost," the Greek word for fiftieth. The morrow after the Sabbath (seventh day) makes Pentecost always the first day of the week. The day on which they waved the sheaf of the first fruits was the day Jesus arose from the dead. The fiftieth day after that was Pentecost, the day the Holy Spirit came to earth to abide.

(b) Pentecest was the beginning of the gospel work The Holy Spirit filled and submerged the apostles (Acts 1: 26 to 2: 4), thus setting up the kingdom and making them charter members of it (Rom. 14: 17); establishing the church Jesus calls "my church" (Matt. 16: 18, 19; Acts 2: 47); beginning the gospel age (Acts 11: 15). The Holy Spirit gave the apostles power to speak with tongues, and by revelation (Acts 1: 8; 2; 1-13), and proclaimed the gospel for the first time in fact and fullness (Luke 24; 46-49; Acts 2: 14-36); and the door of God's kingdom, the church of Christ, was opened by laying down terms of admittance (Matt. 16: 18, 19; Acts 2: 36-28). All doing this were saved from past sin, added by doing it to the church of Christ, the kingdom, and received the Holy Spirit (Acis 2: 39-41, 47); the worship of God began as soon as baptized into Christ (Acts 2: 42), good works (Acts 2: 43-45), every day Christian life (Acts 2: 46), saving souls (Acts 2: 47).

(c) Because the beginning of the worship of God on Pentecost has been questioned, I wish to give my reasons for accepting it without question. (1) Everything else connected with the gospel economy began with that day. The worship is admittedly a most important part of the gospel. If yerse 42 does not refer to the worship, then the first day of the church's existence on earth the apostles directed by the Spirit omitted a most important part of the gospel and failed to record the omission as a part of Christian duty, while they began and recorded every other part. Verse 42 records the next thing done on the first day of the week after baptism and church membership, which would naturally be the worship of God. (3) The items of verse 42 are separated from verse 41 and verse 43 by the conjunction "de," which serves either to distinguish from what precedes and follows verse 42, or to pass from one thing (verse 41) to another (verse 43); but each item of verse 42 is connected by the coordinate conjunction "and" (kai), which serves to join them together in equal importance. The literal Greek reads: "To the teaching of the apostles, and to the fellowship, and to the breaking of the bread, and to the prayers." (4) Each item describes a particular part of the worship of God: Apostles' doctrine-teaching (1 Cor. 14: 26; 15: 1, 2; Col. 3: 16, 17); fellowship-Greek "koinonia" translated "fellowship" (2 Cor. 8: 4; Phil. 1: 5; 4: 15), contribution (Rom. 15: 26: 2 Cor. 9: 13, in each case referring to the particular act of giving); breaking bread-communion (1 Cor. 10: 16); prayer (1 Cor. 14: 15, 26; Eph. 5; 19, 20.) This is connected with Pentecost, the first day of the week: "and they continued steadfastly," implying regular observance.

5. The first day of the week the Christian's day of assembly. (Acts 20: 1-14.)

(a) "Upon the first day of the week, when the disciples came together to break bread, Paul preached to them," implies this was their custom as much as, "Upon the fourth day of July, when the Americans came together to celebrate the Declaration of Independence, the President spoke to them," states a custom. Under the apostles we see the Savior's word (Matt. 28: 19, 20), "teaching them to observe all things I have commanded you," carried out wherever they established a church. They taught them what the Savior had commanded them—to meet on the first day of the week to break bread, contribute, attend to the apostles' teaching, prayers, and praise. (1 Cor. 11: 1, 2; Phil. 4; 9; 2 Thess, 2: 15; 3: 6-10; 2 Pet. 3: 1, 2.)

(b) The Revised Version, which you use in all your quotations in this tract, makes as little sense in Acts 20: 7 as it does in Acts 8: 37, when it says "we were gathered together" and "Paul discoursed with them." The Common Version makes, in both these scriptures, sense and harmony with the context and entire Bible, and I accept it and the Greek text it is based on as containing all the word of Christ to us. But you do not follow the Revised Version in your analysis of Acts 20: 1-14. Here is what it says: (1) Some of Paul's traveling companions came before him to Troas, and tarried till Paul and the writer of Acts came. (2) When Paul came, all abode at Troas (Verse 1-6.) seven days. (Verse 6.) (3) Seven days would include one Sabbath and one first day, but no mention is made of how the Sabbath was spent any more than the other five days. (Verse 6.) (4) On the first day of the week, according to custom, from the language used, Paul, the writer of Acts, and others gathered together to break bread. This being the purpose of their meeting, and as nothing is said to the contrary, we understand they did what they met to dobroke bread. (Verse 7.) (5) Paul, ready to depart on the morrow, discoursed with them, and spoke till midnight. (Verse 7.) (6) Because of the long speech, a young man fell into a deep sleep and fell from the third story and killed himself. (Verses 8, 9.) (7) Paul went down and restored him to life and returned. (Verse 10.) (8) Paul embraced the opportunity to break bread-eat something. No one else is named as eating with him. After long speaking, something was needed to strengthen him for another half-night's speech. (Verse 11.) (9) Then he continued talking till the break of day (Monday), having been the first day and first-day night with that assembly. (Verse 11.) (10) His traveling companions went before he left and took ship to Assos, where Paul could get on. (Verses

12, 13.) (11) Paul went by land to Assos, where he took ship, (Verses 13, 14.)

(e) You say, "This meeting was held on our Saturday night. This was the way the count was made_in Paul's day, as is testified to by all scholars," and quote Conybeare & Howson's "Life of Paul." That life of Paul is not in the "roll of the Book," and, sir, you said it was the Book you were being guided by, and the Holy Spirit was leading. Then let the Spirit lead by the Book. We have already seen (2) that the Spirit in the Book says the first day begins at dawn and the night following is the evening of the first day. Sometime after daybreak Sunday morning they met, and continued their meeting till daybreak Monday morning. Exactly what it says.

(d) Again: "Does Acts 20: 7 prove the early disciples observed the communion weekly? Then why does not the same phrase used by the same writer in Acts 2: 46 prove that the early church observed the Supper daily? 'Steadfastly,' it says; they continued in this act of breaking bread daily." "Steadfastly" is connected with the acts of worship (verse 42), which we have seen is associated with the first day of the week and their daily service at the temple (Verse 46). Breaking bread at home is connected with their daily food. That's the difference God makes.

(e) Also: "Why not accept Acts 20:7 as a mere incidental reference to a meeting that happened to be held on the first day?" The language forbids it. It is the language of a custom, for a stated meeting at a stated time.

(f) "Bul does the phrase 'to break bread' refer to the Lord's Supper in this passage?" Then quote Luke 24: 30, 35; Acts 27: 35 to show it is more applicable to a common meal. Then to break bread means to eat a meal. Supper is a meal. What is the difference, then, in saying "break bread" or in saying "eat supper?" To break bread in the act of sacred service to God is to eat the Lord's Supper (1 Cor. 11: 20-26), is to commune (1 Cor. 10: 16: 17), is to partake of the Lord's table (1 Cor. 10: 16-21), is to keep the feast (1 Cor. 5: 7, 8). What difference which term we use, when, according to the Bible, all refer to the same thing?

(g) You add: "The truth of the matter seems to be this; All the disciples observed the Sabbath according to the commandment." "Thy word is truth," says Christ to God. (John 17: 17.) In this word of truth there is not one word about the Sabbath in the entire twentieth chapter of Acts. Here is the place to bring it in to make a clear distinction between the Sabbath and the first day. Paul and his companions tarried seven days at Troas. It is natural and easy for the Holy Spirit to record: "They observed the Sabbath according to the commandment, and on the first day of the week some started on their journey, but Paul and the others attended a breaking of bread the brethren prepared for him, and he discoursed with them all night." This would have settled it. But the Holy Spirit did not say it; and not saying it, reversed your "truth of the matter," and left the Sabbath no more sacred than Monday or Friday, and by the record shows the first day of the week to be the sacred day for Christians. The last time any servants of God kept the Sabbath according to the commandment (Luke 23: 56) was the Sabbath Jesus slept in the grave. The next dawn brought life and immortality to light, and in this light Christians have since rejoiced and worship God. This is the truth of the matter as shown by the word of truth.

(h) You say: "Why do we refuse to observe Christmas? Is it not because the Lord has not advised us to celebrate the birthday of Christ?" And for the same reason we refuse to observe the Salbath day, because the Lord has not advised Christians to keep the Salbath. But all the advice God has given is that the first day of the week, the day on which Christ arose from the dead, is the Christian's holy day.

A Visit to Winchester, Ky.

RY F. W. SMITH.

This beautiful little city of ten or twelve thousand inhabitants is situated about eighteen miles from Lexington, in the very heart of the famous blue-grass region. This was my fourth visit to the place, the first being at least thirty years ago. Twenty years had glided by since my last visityears fraught with many changes, some for the better and some for the worse. In material things, Winchester seems to have kept abreast of the times, more than doubling its population, increasing in wealth and general prosperity as the world terms prosperity. Up until a few years past it had one of the best churches in the land, but-alas!-the evil hour came when the fellowship and unity of the body was broken. The shame and attendant evils of division followed, until the church of Christ in Winchester was reduced from a membership of three hundred and twenty. eight to about one hundred, who are still worshiping in the old home on Fairfax Street. I remained with the church over two weeks, and believe that much good was accomplished.

After the division came, Brethren J. W. Shepherd, F. B. Srygley, and T. Q. Martin, the latter having been reared in that community, were invited to visit Winchester to counsel and advise regarding the condition of affairs. As a result of their investigation, they advised those who had pulled off to go back, that they had not acted on scriptural grounds in going away. Having known all three of these men intimately for more than twenty years, and knowing them to be absolutely honest and beyond bias, fully competent to judge between brethren in the light of facts and the Scriptures, I could not find it in my heart to override and trample underfoot the counsel and advice of these brethren. Hence, I labored with what I and many thoughtful brethren regard as the true church of Christ in Winchester. More than twelve months ago I proposed to those who went off (in response to a request from them to aid in getting a preacher for them) to come to Winchester and labor with them with the view of bringing about peace, harmony, and the unity, fellowship, and brotherly love which had been rent asunder. My coming on this mission was flatly turned down with the statement that such efforts would be useless. as that matter was a closed incident. I was urged, however, to come on and labor with them, but I declined to do so, because I believed then and believe now that it would have been displeasing to God to lend my influence in helping to perpetuate a division in the body of Christ which was wholly unjustifiable. Even when "doctrinal" questions arise in churches, the greatest efforts in prayer, love, forbearance, and patience should be resorted to upon the part of all to restore harmony and purity of teaching. The church at Corinth were forming factions over preachers, and, instead of advising a separation, Paul rebuked them and taught them the wrong and sinfulness of dividing the church over men. They were exalting preachers instead of Christ. Paul had too much self-respect and love for the cause of Christ to permit any church to divide over him as a man. I unhesitatingly say that any preacher that will permit a church to divide over him, when it is within his power to prevent it; manifests a degree of self-love and egotism that unfits him for ministrations in a church of Christ. When a preacher is aware that even a respectable minority in a church is opposed to him, self-respect, if nothing else, should lead him to change his field of labor. Most certainly, if he has any love whatever for the cause Jesus Christ died to establish, he will quietly fold his tent and steal away. But there are preachers who know that trouble is brewing over them, who will not only remain on the ground, but add fuel to the flames by posing as martyrs, the subjects of mistreatment, thus exciting sympathy for themselves instead of being men. I love babies, real babies, but am not "heels over head" in love with overgrown bables in the pulpit ready to cry if some one crooks a finger at them. Another sad feature about such matters is that some preachers who permit themselves to become "a hone of contention" to the rupture of a church aid and abet their devotees in perpetuating division (though they move into other communities) by selecting and sending such preachers to minister to them as are in sympathy with themselves and will not tell of the sinfulness of such a course. If it were not for the good women in our churches, the cause of Christ would languish: but sometimes women permit themselves to become the tools of Satan in dividing churches. They do this when they undertake to manage and run the church, usurping the work God placed within the hands of the elders or overseers. Some preachers' wives seem to think they have "charge" of the church, Most certainly such women have charge of their husbands, and these poor, pitiable "hubbies" should, as a mark of distinction, put on petticoats, bonnets, etc., that no one mistake them for men.

The church in Winchester has called to their aid Brother M. D. Baumer, an able and godly man. He began work the first of May and will remain at least through this year. He is a prudent and thoughtful man, and it is predicted that he will do a good work in the community.

The church was greatly encouraged by the meeting, and seemed anxious for me to visit them again, which I hope to do some day, If I should live. Two precious souls were baptized into Christ and the church was greatly strengthened. Brother H. H. Adamson will be with them in October, and I predict a good meeting.

Mrs. Barelay Passes Away.

A telegram from George Manifold announces the decease of Mrs. Decima Barclay, which occurred at 10:20 P.M., May 4, 1920.

Mrs. Barclay, widow of John J. Barclay, and youngest daughter of Alexander Campbell, will be remembered by thousands who have, in one way and another, known and loved her. And, while she has been living in the summits of age, the announcement of her passing will come as a shock to the entire brotherhood. In losing her from their midst, a million hearts will be bereaved.

Sister Barclay was intellectual, sweet, lovable. On the island of Cyprus, where she resided for a number of years while her husband was United States consul; in Alabama, where she and her husband lived for thirty years after their return from Cyprus; in Morocco, where she sojourned with her husband, who was again sent East as consul; and at Bethany, W. Va., where her husband died in 1910, and where she resided until the Lord called her home, this good woman let her light shine for Christ, and her life was a blessing to all who came under the touch of her influence.

No one who has visited Bethany to deliver an address in recent years will ever forget the plainly, but elegantly, dressed old lady, with the "sunbeam" face, who sat "up front," listened attentively, and at the close of the meeting said: "I want to thank you for that message." Nor will the visitor to Bethany forget the beautiful face which greeted him at the "Old Homestead"-Alexander Campbell's home-when Sister Barclay, leaning on her cane, said: "Come in, and I'll take you through." Whether pointing to the portrait of "Dear Father," tenderly opening to the eyes of her visitor "Father's Bible," or leading the way to "Father's Study," this remaining daughter of Alexander Campbell was of more interest to her guest than were the things she so delighted to show him. And when he said "Good-by" on the porch, or out in the yard, whither she accompanied him, he felt that he was parting from an old friend.-Christian Standard.

Georgia and the Far Southern Field

A Good Letter.

The following good letter from Brother Adair Chapman, received some time ago, is worthy of notice:

Brother Hall: Before I was called into the army I was teaching in a Sunday school near my home. Because there was no church in this community, we met in the schoolhouse for study

I did not approve of everything that was done there; but I thought by teaching they might be led to see things in the true light. I suggested that we use the literature pulthe true light. lished by the McQuiddy Printing Company, and they all agreed to this. Everything went on smoothly until sometime after I was in the army. They made some few changes then, and when I returned I found the advanced class studying from the Bible (Acts), and the other classes were using the Baptist literature.

I was asked to teach the Bible class, which I did, and said nothing of the other literature until I found that it was misrepresenting the Bible. I could not stand to see such error taught, and I felt it my duty to call their attention to it. I hardly knew what the people would think of this, since most of them were Baptists; but I meant to condemn it, regardless of the outcome. I tried to do this in the spirit of Christ, and to get the people to understand, too, that I was trying to lead them and not drive them. It was unanimously agreed that we should drop that literature and use that published by the McQuiddy Printing Company.

Under separate cover I am mailing you a copy of the book which I condemned. I hope you will review it through the Gospel Advocate if you think best.

I am trying to the best of my ability to preach the word here every other Sunday night, and it is finding its way into the hearts of the people. If possible, we must have a good man of experience for a meeting this summer. Please let me know at once if you can send us a suitable man.

I know, Brother Hall, that you are a busy man, and perhaps I should not have taken up so much of your time with my lengthly letter, but I wanted you to know the condition here. May the Lord bless you. Yours in Christ,

ADAIR P. CHAPMAN.

Certainly we must send a man to help this good brother teach the people "the way of the Lord more perfectly." We are delighted with his uncompromising stand for the pure word of God and for the success he is having in getting people to lay aside such "rot" as the quarterly he sent me contains. In looking it over, I hardly remember of being more disgusted than at some things I find in it. It is entitled "Primary Sunday-school Lessons," and is published by the "Sunday School Publishing Board of the National Baptist Convention of America, Nashville, Tenn." Whoever edited it seemed exceedingly desirous to make the impression on the young and tender minds who studied it that the church Christ built was a Baptist church and all the apostles were Baptist preachers. Please note the following:

1. On the first lesson for the year, he begins by saying: "We are beginning this year's study of the Sunday school, Primaries, with a very interesting bit of history upon which the Missionary Baptist Church, as to time, came into active and equipped existence. It is the day called Pentecost." The idea! Whoever read of a "Missionary Baptist Church" anywhere in the Bible? And when our Baptist friends go to history for this name, they have to come about seventeen or eighteen centuries this side of Pentecost before they hear anything about it.

2. In commenting on the lesson based on Peter and John's healing the lame man, he says: "Well, one day as Peter and John, walking, perhaps, arm in arm, were going to the temple to worship God, this man saw them, and held out his hands, asking them for an alms. But the Holy Ghost spoke to these two Baptist preachers, telling them, Now is a good chance to 'lift up Christ' and do a thing that will turn all eyes and hearts to him." Thus, throughout the quarterly, the apostles are spoken of as "Baptist preachers." Then, to emphasize the thought of their being "Baptist preachers," in the prepared questions to be asked by the teacher, the question is put in these words: "How did the people take this miracle done by these two Baptist preachers?"

This gives our readers a small bitter taste of the kind of literature that covers our fair land and is being continally taught to the children of this generation. How much literature are we putting out that has nothing but the pure word of God taught in it? Should we not be ashamed of the little we are doing? There are two things that the church of Christ should do, and that abundantly-(1) keep every pulpit and place where we can get a hearing filled with a man that will preach nothing but the doctrine of Christ, and (2) flood the country with literature that is as sound in its teaching as our sermons delivered orally should be. Will we not arise to the needs of the day and give as we have never given before and see that all needed funds are available to answer every call? Brethren, we are trying to do this in this field. Will you not strive with us to do more and more along this line?

In the early part of 1909 I had a very interesting correspondence with B. P. Robertson, then minister of the Central Baptist Church, of this city, and he declared that the name "Baptist" was given to them by their enemies; that God never gave it to them, nor did they themselves originate the idea of wearing it; that their enemies gave them the name, and they adopted it. Baptists, therefore, should have more respect for the institution that Christ calls his church (Matt. 16: 18), and which is declared to be "the church of God" (1 Cor. 1: 2) or the church of Christ (Rom, 16: 16), than to call it by a name the devil has suggested. It is all right for them to call the human organization that now exists "the Baptist Church" and to speak of their ministers as "Baptist preachers," but they should shudder at the idea of applying this name to the bloodbought church of God and to its God-ordained ministers. If any one doubts that Mr. Robertson took this position, send me ten cents, and I will send you the correspondence that you may see for yourself.

But all of this emphasizes the importance of those who love the truth, unmixed with the errors of men, doing more to teach it and get it before the people. I have more respect for the Baptist who wrote the quarterly under consideration than I have for that man or woman who claims to be a Christian and is not trying to get the pure word of God before the people.

Out of the chaos of the actual, God is calling the harmony of the ideal; out of the night, the dawn; out of pain and discord, the white peace and melody of man's unrecorded dream. We see not yet all things put under him, but we see Jesus. Blessed is the universe, and blessed are the souls that have caught the light of his vision splendid! For that vision strengthens, sustains, and heals as we go on toward the sunrising of heaven's perfect day. Scientists say that blood flows more freely to the sound of music. And have not the blood and tears of the noble and great of all ages flowed more freely because they heard the golden bells of heaven ring far up among the peaks of eternity, and joined by faith in the song of Moses and the Lamb, and the hundred and forty and four thousand chanting the new song of the wilds before the throne of God? -Selected.

W AT HOME AND ABROAD

God's work is never small work, no matter how unimportant it may look.

A. B. Lipscomb will deliver three addresses at the union meeting of churches in Canada, to be held at Toronto, beginning next Saturday.

From J. A. Hudson, Oklahoma City, Okla., June 1: "J. M. McCaleb was with us last Lord's day. He goes to Holdenville, Ada, and Muskogee next. Two were added last Sunday."

From W. F. Ledlow, Thorp Spring, Texas, June 4: "1 am moving to Austin, Texas, and desire my friends to note change in my address. I have resigned as president of the college and will do graduate work in the State University."

From G. W. Jarrett, Woodlawn, Tenn., June 1: "I am new visiting my old friends and preaching in Hardin County. Any congregation who may want me this summer or fall to hold meetings should address me at Woodlawn, Tenn."

From F. O. Howell, Obion, Tenn., May 25: "Our meeting at this place closed last night, after continuing fifteen days, with nineteen additions. Brother Holt did some splendid gospel preaching. His message was much appreciated by the church."

Mr. and Mrs. John Jefferson Walker announce the marriage of their daughter, Mary Lucille, to Mr. Robert Harrell Bell, on Saturday, May 29, 1920, at McMinnville, Tenn. They will be at home, Springfield, Tenn., after June 5. The Gospel Advocate extends congratulations.

From Charles F. Hardin, 843 Phillips Street, Springfield, Mo., June 3: "I have just closed a week's meeting in Newton County, Mo., with the Waddle congregation, which resulted in four baptisms. I shall go next to West Point, Miss., to assist in a meeting, beginning on June 13."

From B. U. Baldwin, Shawnee, Okla., May 24: "Last Lord's day brought us much happiness. Five more precious souls made the good confession. Three were baptized that evening, two are to be baptized Wednesday evening. I have time to hold two meetings—one the last of August, the other the first of September."

From Hugh Potter, Bowling Green, Ky., June 2: "H. C. Shoulders, of Sellersburg, Ind., who has been asking help to buy a car for the Potter Orphan Home, has more than succeeded in his undertaking. He drove in with the car on June 1, and a check for one hundred dollars besides. We appreciate the love that prompted the gift, and wish to thank all the donors."

Wanted—A loyal brother, who can lead singing and teach vocal music, to locate at Moultrie, Ga. Moultrie is the county seat of Colquitt County, and is a thriving little town of eight or ten thousand inhabitants. There are several industries there, which makes it possible for almost any one to find employment. For further information, write G. A. Shaver, Moultrie, Ga.—A. L. Colson.

From D. S. Helms, Pocahontas, Tenn., June 3: "The brethren at Essary Springs would like to get in touch with a teacher as principal of the public school, which begins about the first Monday in November and runs six months. We would like a gospel preacher who could work for the cause during vacation and preach on Lord's days during school. Address C. P. Caruth, Pocahontas, Tenn., Route 3."

From W. D. Bills, San Antonio, May 24: "My meeting at Port Arthur closed with three baptisms and two from the progressives. The meeting was pleasant, and I think much good was accomplished. The brethren supported me well. W. T. Blackman is doing an excellent work. He is loved by all. Both members and those who are not speak in the highest terms of his life and labors. My next point is Charco."

From John H. Arms, Celina, Tenn.: "May I put a question as an epen query? Inasmuch as there has been much said by the learned scribes on the kingdom question, pro and con, I should like an answer from a scriptural standpoint to the following question: Can one be a loyal citizen of two governments at the same time? I do not mean merely a subject, but a full participant in each, performing all the duties as a citizen of each."

Herbert E. Winkler writes, June 5: "I preached to large audiences at Hilham, Tenn., last Lord's day. B. C. Goodpasture is in an interesting meeting at Livingston, with five additions to date. Brother Collins, of Algood, who is laboring with the church at Livingston this year, is conducting the song service. My meeting at West Point, Miss., will begin on June 13. Charles F. Hardin, of Springfield, Mo., will conduct the song service."

From Tice Elkins, Fort Worth, Texas, June 1: "I will begin a mission meeting in the Vanzandt addition next Sunday night, to run three weeks or longer, if I can hold out so long. I never was busier, and never happier than when busy. Love prevails among us. Brethren, old Brother Mitchell, at Sabinal, Texas, is in need of your help. Old and almost blind, and what money he had all gone, he is not able to preach or support himself. Send him a donation at once."

From Aruna Clark, East Lake, Tenn., June 1: "Our meeting with the Rossville congregation, which has been in progress for the past two weeks, closed last night. Attendance and interest were as fine as I ever had in any meeting. Twelve were baptized, one confessed Christ who has not yet been baptized, and one immersed Methodist gave up her unscriptural name and identified herself with the Lord's people. I think this was one of the best meetings that I have ever held. I feel sure that the cause of Christ has been greatly strengthened. I am devoting my whole time to the Rossville work now."

Wanted—All the churches everywhere to cooperate with us in the month of June and finish the Washington work—I mean pay for and seat the new house. This can be done easily if all congregations will give according to ability. Make June 13 "Washington Day." We have set the brotherhood a good example. On May 30, Lord's day, our little band raised seven hundred and seventy dollars. Where can we find a small congregation that did more on one Lord's day? Brethren, is not that enough to cause you to give a big-hearted donation on June 13? Do not complain and "whine," but smile and push and boost.—W. S. Long, 116 Second Street, S. E., Washington, D. C.

J. W. Grant recently returned to Bridgeport, Ala., from a stay of more than a month in Florida and Southern While away he preached at Avon Park, Mango, Plant City, and Miami, and also visited Moore Haven, Hall Titusville, and New Smyrna, all in Florida, and Dasher, Ga. The churches where he preached seem to be prosperous and wide-awake. He met the following preachers: T. B. Thompson, John B. Peden, and H. C. Hinton, at Avon Park; Joe Netherland and J. P. Prevatt, at Miami; and Brother Rucker, at Mango. These brethren are all active in the work, though not all giving all their time to it. At Miami the church was in a mission tent meeting out in a suburb of the city, with Brother Netherland doing the preaching and Brother Prevatt conducting the song The latter also preached two excellent sermons during the meeting. This meeting had the largest attendance we have ever had in Miami. It has been a hard fight to get a good hearing there. The church at Dasher, Ga., is wide-awake in sounding out the word, and the church in Valdosta (near by) has just closed a most excellent meeting, with more than twenty additions to its number, and a thorough awakening of its membership. Dr. L. K. Harding was the efficient evangelist in this most successful meeting.

Brother Jelley writes from London, England, May 5: "I am sailing to-day for Bombay. I have spent about five weeks in England, and have been much comforted and encouraged the loyal few of England and also by letters and fellowship money from brethren in Nashville, Tenn. I expect to land in Bombay in about three weeks. My address until further notice will be Berinag, U. P., District Almora, Brittish India. I have preached two Lord's days, morning and evening, in London. I received about sixteen dollars from two little congregations, which have withdrawn from the British digressive organization. I held an eight-days' meeting for the brethren in Birmingham, to their satisfaction. There were five baptisms. The congregation contributed about six dollars for the purchase of Scripture portions, and two sisters agreed to support a Christian boy in school at two dollars per month and four dollars per year for clothing. Also we received from another source a promise of ten pounds sterling per year for Scripture portions and also the support of a preacher. Last Saturday and Lord's day I preached in Bristol at two different meetinghouses. The authorities wired to India at my expense (to save time in correspondence), traced my record, found it a good one, and in consequence my passport is indersed, 'With the sanction of the Secretary of State for India' to 'resume missionary work.' Kindly remember me in your prayers.'

"It Is More Blessed to Give Than to Receive."

BY J. C. M'Q.

This is the language of the Lord Jesus as quoted by the apostle Paul. Paul has left an example unto Christians by showing them that they should labor to help the weak. Every Christian should improve the opportunities that God gives him to lift up the fallen and strengthen the weak and to so labor as to advance the kingdom of Christ in the world. When Paul was at Troas, a vision appeared to him in the night: "There was a man of Macedonia standing, beseeching him, and saying, Come over into Macedonia, and help us." Paul was not disobedient to the vision, but - concluded that God had called him to preach the gospel unto them, and set sail from Troas. God seemed to time the winds and the waves so that they were favorable to bringing Paul on his journey to Philippi, which is the first city of that district of Macedonia. Here he tarried a number of days, and first preached the gospel by a riverside, where he supposed there was a place of prayer. He spoke to the women that were come together, and here he made the first converts in Europe. It was here that he founded the Philippian church, which clearly demonstrated the truth of the language that "it is more blessed to give than to receive." When Paul was at Thessalonica preaching the gospel, it was this church that did not forget him, but remembered him by sending to his relief a contribution "once and again." In writing to the church at Philippi he says: "And ye yourselves also know, ye Philippians, that in the beginning of the gospel, when I departed from Macedonia, no church had fellowship with me in the matter of giving and receiving but ye only; for even in Thessalonica ye sent once and again unto my need. Not that I seek for the gift; but I seek for the truit that increaseth to your account." (Phil. 4: 15-17.) We learn that when he was preaching to these Thessalonians, he worked in order not to be a burden to them. He says, in 1 Thess. 2: 9-12: "For ye remember, brethren, our labor and travall: working night and day, that we might not burden any of you, we preached unto you the gospel of God. Ye are witnesses, and God also, how holily and righteously and unblamably we behaved ourselves toward you that believe; as ye know how we dealt with each one of you, as a father with his own children, exhorting you, and encouraging you, and testifying, to the end that ye should walk worthily of God, who calleth you into his own kingdom and glory." Also, he says to the same church, in 2 Thess, 3: 8, 9: "Neither did we eat bread for naught at any man's hand, but in labor and travail, working night and day, that we might not burden any of you; not because we have not the right, but to make ourselves an example unto you, that ye should imitate us." Thus he labored night and day with his own hands and supplied his necessities, as he tells us in Acts 20: 34 that "these hands ministered unto my necessities, and to them that were with me." He did this without murmuring and without complaining, thus showing every faithful preacher of the gospel that, when he is called upon to support himself while preaching the gospel, he should do it without murmuring and complaining. Paul is an example that preachers would do well to imitate in this respect. He tells us in Phil. 4: 11 that he knew how to be content in whatever state he was called upon to be. "Not that I speak in respect of want: for I have learned, in whatsoever state I am, therein to be content."

It seems that whether Paul was in Thessalonica or in Corinth, the church in Macedonia was ever ready to remember him and to look after his necessities. While he was in Corinth making tents and dwelling with Aquila and Priscilla, he reasoned in the synagogue every Sabbath and persuaded Jews and Greeks. It appears that on this eccasion he was actually in want, for he says, in 2 Cor. 11: 9: "And when I was present with you and was in want, I was not a burden on any man; for the brethren, when they came from Macedonia, supplied the measure of my want; and in everything I kept myself from being burdensome unto you, and so will I keep myself." Again, the Macedonian church came to his relief and supplied his need, as we learn from Acts 18: 5, which reads: "But when Silas and Timothy came down from Macedonia, Paul was constrained by the word, testifying to the Jews that Jesus was the Christ" On this verse Adam Clarke remarks; "When Silas and Timotheus were come from Macedonia, Paul set himself together with them wholly to the word-that is, he was fully employed, now that he had their assistance, in preaching the gospel, called 'word' in chapter 4: 4; 16: 6-22; 17: 11." After this, Paul continued to preach the word for a year and six months in Corinth. Many of the Corinthians heard, believed, and were baptized. Paul seems to have been somewhat discouraged in his work; so the Lord appeared to him in the night by a vision and said: "Be not afraid, but speak and hold not thy peace: for I am with thee, and no man shall set on thee to harm thee: for I have much people in this city."

Thus we see that while Paul went to the relief of the Macedonians who called for help, the Macedonians also came to his relief time and again when other churches brought him to want or failed to support him. While we may not always appreciate the fact, and while in our selfishness and greed we may hold on to our dollars instead of helping the weak and ministering to those who need our help, yet it is nevertheless true that "it is more blessed to give than to receive." The sweetest joys and the most lasting pleasures come to us when we make sacrifices to minister to the needs and wants of others. It is certainly pleasant to receive a gift, but it is a thousand times more pleasant to be the one who brings joy to the hearts of others. There is far more pleasure in laboring to feed, educate, and clothe orphans than there is in hoarding up money for our own selfish gratification.

The church at Denver, Col., is calling for help. Brother John D. Evans, who went there an invalid over eleven years ago, has been giving his time, means, and talents for the establishment of a church of Christ in that city. His work has been measurably successful. There are now about seventy-five members meeting at 125 South Sherman Street, None of the members of this church are wealthy people; only a few of them. I think, own their homes. Brother E. E. Shoulders is assisting Brother Evans in the work. He labors with his own hands to make his support. Brother Evans is in the furniture business, and labors six days in the week in order to make a living and to have means to build up the church. These brethren need about fifteen hundred dollars in order to free from debt the house that they have recently purchased on South Sherman Street. There are thousands of churches scattered throughout the country that would bring themselves nearer to God and do a noble work by contributing to the payment of this fifteen hundred dollars. Considering the needs of the Western field, there is no better missionary work just now than this. Will not the churches send a liberal contribution to John D. Evans, 12 Broadway, Denver, Col.? Your contribution will be wisely handled and rightly applied. I only ask those who are able and those who need to give for their own sake to make as Hberal a contribution as possible, remembering that "the Lord loveth a cheerful giver" and that "it is more blessed to give than to receive." I would like to announce very soon to our readers that the liberallty of the brethren has paid this church out of debt.

More Speculation on the Harps of God—Wilkinson and Hardison Both Reply,

BY M. C. K.

On page 563 of this issue of the Gospel Advocate our readers will find another article from Brother U. G. Wilkinson on the "Harps of God," followed by one on the same subject from Brother D. R. Hardison, both of which they will please examine before reading these comments in reply. Brother Wilkinson not only comes back with more speculation, but with a downright misrepresentation of the Advocate's reply to his former article. For no other reason except to use it as an occasion to further emphasize the important lesson against speculating on any part of God's word and the equally important lesson against misrepresenting brethren from whom we differ do I consent to publish Brother Wilkinson's article at all. It is wholly inexcusable to twist a brother's language and attribute to him what he not only never said, but what it would be sinful and wicked to say, and, on their own merits, articles which thus misrepresent do not deserve publication. Hence, respectfully declining to notice the details of his article, I shall confine my remarks to the two points named.

1. He says: "His entire answer contains not one single denial of any of my arguments, does not even raise an issue, but takes the mere agnostic position, 'I do not know.' This leaves me without the necessity of any answer to any of his conclusions, because all my positions stand absolutely undenied." Then, why did he not let them "stand" that way? If they are true, would not that be a good way for them to "stand?" And if, as he says, he was left "without the necessity of any answer to any of" my "conclusions," why did he make "any answer?" "O consistency, thou art a jewel!" When he takes the position that a thing is true, he seems to expect that others must either say with him that it is true, or say that it is not true, thus never taking "the mere agnostic position, 'I do not know.'" But in this our brother is radically and sadly mistaken. To say we do not know is often the quintessence of true wisdom, and hence is exactly what we should say, and this is always the case in our dealing with matters merely mentioned, but not explained, in the Bible. Even if God had not forbidden us to speak where he has not spoken, thus adding to his counsel, what conceivable good could be gained by disturbing the people with our mere guesses and prognostications over things not revealed in the Bible? The one point on which I did before and do now join issue with him is his statement that the "harps of God," mentioned in Rev. 5: 8; 14: 2; 15: 2, "are symbols, not real harps." Since he failed to produce a single passage that says it, I said in reply: "Of course Brother Wilkinson thinks they were not, or he would not say so; and maybe he is correct. I do not know." I was careful then, as I am careful now, not to say that his position is not true, for the simple reason I do not know. What I do know is that the position he takes on this point is not in the Bible. He says: "The Book does say so," This I respectfully deny. The Bible nowhere says either in so many words or in words which necessarily imply that "harps of God" in the Revelation passages mean what Brother Wilkinson teaches they mean. What the Bible does not, in some way, say, it does not, in any way, teach. He says I teach in my book on music "that the musical instrument" to be used in the worship of the church "is the heart." Yes, I teach that in my book and out of my book; but the reason I teach it is because the New Testament, in Eph. 5: 19, says it. It distinetly says that the "melody" to be made is to be made "with the heart." That settles it. But the Revelation passages which he cites do not say that the "harps of God," mentioned in them, are the heart. If Brother Wilkinson could refer us to some Bible passage which says "harps" in the Bible always mean "the human heart," that would settle it, and his position would not only be true, but we would know it is true, and we could all teach it and declare that "the Book does say so." But there is no such Bible passage. Symbolic language abounds in the Bible, but no passage anywhere says "harps" in the passages in question "are symbols, not real harps." He finds statements and facts in different passages which would be entirely in harmony with the position he takes, but no one of them says, nor do all of them together say, anything from which it necessarily follows that harps in the Revelation passages mean the heart; and if his opinion here is the truth, it is not revealed in the Bible. Hence, he cannot and does not know that it is true. It is merely his speculative opinion. That is the reason why, with the present revelation on the subject, I say I do not know; and I modestly suggest that Brother Wilkinson and all others would serve the cause of God better if, in their treatment of all such matters, they would say the same thing for themselves. But he says: "If Brother Kurfees had read the three first verses of Revelation and the three last, . . . he would have learned that the Book does say so." "Does say" what? There is not a word in the whole six verses that says harps in Revelation "are symbols, not real harps," and that is the issue. What if these verses do say that the things in Revelation are "prophecies?" That does not prove that harps in Revelation "are symbols, not real harps." Even if all the things in Revelation "are really prophecies concerning future events," that does not prove what he says.

2. A glaring misrepresentation. He says: "Brother Kurfees should be more discriminating and not make all studies of the prophecies speculation. And if he does not know, as he so frankly acknowledges in his answer to my article, 'Harps of God,' he should not, for that reason, necessarily take the position that others do not." These are the statements which, had I been controlled by their merits alone, would have promptly excluded his article from our columns. There is simply no justifiable excuse for such misrepresentation. I not only never said "all studies of the prophecies" are "speculation," nor that any study of the prophecies is speculation, but I never said anything that is even remotely like it either in my reply to his article or anywhere else at any other time, nor did I ever say anything anywhere or at any time that even implies such a thing; but, on the contrary, whenever and wherever I have spoken on the point at all, I have encouraged the most careful, diligent, and persistent study of all the prophecies. Before some of the young preachers who have been disturbing the churches with their pretentious interpretations and opinions of the prophecies in the Old Testament and in Revelation were out of their ministerial swaddling clothes, I had made a close and diligent study of the said prophecies, and in the case of some of the most important of them, such as that peerless, profound, and sublime world vision of Isaiah, I had not only studied every word of them in both English and Hebrew, but had them, including the book of Revelation, substantially committed to memory; but on unfulfilled prophecies, whether in the Old Testament or the New Testament, I prefer to be modest, and when men come with the cocksureness of Brother Wilkinson about their interpretations and assume to know things that are not revealed in the Bible, I prefer to say I do not know, and thus not to take chances on either going wrong myself or misleading cthers. And because the pretentious interpretations and conclusions of some of these prophetic wiseacres, who have disturbed the churches with their notions, have been called in question, they, like Brother Wilkinson, make the ugly and groundless charge that we oppose studying and teaching the prophecies. In an article in these columns two weeks ago this wickedness was pointed out and exposed. There is absolutely no excuse for such misrepresentation, and Christian men should exercise sufficient care at all times to avoid it. Some of the would-be wise prophetic interpreters, apparently determined to teach and to bolster up their pet interpretations at all hazards, have even misrepresented the beloved and sainted David Lipscomb, twisting his language so as to make it support their theories! This is a shame. When such tactics are properly exposed, the churches will not be imposed on by them.

3. I am glad to publish Brother Hardison's courteous criticism. If he will carefully study the question, I think he will see his failure at one point to grasp the principle involved. He says: "If the musical instrument is harmful and sinful in its use in assisting the voice in worship, we should use prohibitory methods by discarding it from our homes." Now let us look at this closely. Brother Hardison's logic assumes that, if it be right and proper to have a thing in "our homes," it is right and proper to have it "in worship;" or, vice versa, if a thing be wrong "in worship." we should discard it from "our homes." But is this true? Assuredly it is not. It is right and proper to have meat and vegetables on the table in "our homes" and to partake of them there, but would it be right and proper to have them on the Lord's table "in worship" and to partake of them there? If not, why not? And so it does not follow, because it is right and proper to have instrumental music in "our homes," it is therefore right and proper to have it "in worship." The "anxiety and much training" by parents and others should be "to get our children to" learn the vital and radical difference between God's worship and man's entertainment—that the worship of God is not for the entertainment of the people, but to please and honor God, and that the way to please God is to do what he says without addition, without subtraction, and without modification. Jesus says: "He that sent me is with me; he hath not left me alone; for I do always the things that are pleasing to him." His followers should pursue the same course.

CHURCH NEWS

Kentucky.

Chaplin, June 3.—The rain closed my meeting of eight days at Harrisonville, four miles from Waddy. This church was digressive, if alive, and had not met for worship for some time. A few Christians who went to Waddy for worship, and who became tired of the unscriptural practices there, got me to assist in getting the true worship started at Harrisonville, so that they could go there. The effort proved a success for such a short The use of the organ in meeting. worship and fellowship in societies were discontinued for the sake of unity. One of the elders and principal leaders of the Waddy church is to go to Harrisonville in search of New Testament worship.-J. G. Malphurs.

Louisiana.

Haynesville, June 1.—I came here on Thursday of last week and have preached five sermons. Our audiences Saturday night and Lord's-day, both morning and night, were good, and, considering the pressure of farm work, the first two nights also did well. I find a number of good, faithful, earnest disciples of our Lord at this point, and they have some good material with which to build in the future. —Andrew Perry.

Oklahoma.

Wewoka, June 1.—Brother T. W. Phillips, of Fort Worth, Texas, began a meeting with the church at Wewoka on April 28, and closed on May 16, which proved to be the most successful meeting in the history of the church here. It has been said by many, especially by the preachers who have labored here, that this was the hardest place in the State, or perhaps in the Southwest, to get people to hear the gospel; but the "ice" was broken during this meeting and the prospects for the future are very bright for the little congregation here. Twenty-two additions—seven by baptism, one by restoration, one from the "digressives," and thirteen by membership. Brother Tillit S. Teddlie, of Alba, Texas, conducted the song service. He came a week before the meetbegan and had the members drilled in song and a good interest worked up for the meeting. This is This is the home of Brother W. H. George, formerly of Cumby, Texas. He has done much since moving here to help build up the cause of primitive Christianity. This is his second year with the church here. His time is being divided between this place and Stuart, Okla. Brethren Phillips and Teddlie have promised to return for a meeting with us about May 1, 1921, the Lord willing .- T. E. Burch.

Tennessee.

Nashville, June 1.—The revival services conducted by Brother E. A. Elam for the Grandview church of Christ, this city, came to a close last Sunday night. This meeting continued two weeks, and the results are very gratifying and encouraging. There were four additions to the church. I do not believe we have ever had a meeting that was more edifying to the church than this one. On account of what Brother Elam had done for this congregation in the past and because of the great good we anticipated from this meeting, he was the unanimous choice of the congregation to hold this meeting; for truly to the church at large he is a "balance wheel," and, in his kind, gentle, but forceful, manner, comes nearer filling the place of Brother David Lipscomb than any other man.—L. B. Corley.

Franklin, June 1.-I preached at Lyle on May 30, morning and night, to very attentive audiences. One was restored. During the fall and winter I taught school at White Bluff and preached monthly for them and held Bible study on Thursday nights. I have preached every Sunday, except one or two, and I think some good was done as a result. I would be glad to be kept busy in meetings during the summer and fall. I have already arranged for some meetings. I can take some mission meetings, and would be glad to hear from a few places of that I would also like to arrange meetings with a few stronger congregations. I have one Sunday in each month to preach at home (Leiper's Fork), and they are willing for me to use some of them wherever good can be done.-Oscar Parham.

Cleveland, June 1.—I have just arrived home from a ten-days' visit to my old home. It had been nearly two years since I was to see my parents. They are getting old now, and I can see they are not nearly so active, physically, as they were. While visso active, iting, I preached once at Red Hill, near my father's home; and as the Red Hill meetinghouse is on the farm formerly owned by father, who gave the building lot and also paid for the erection of the building, while the other members of the church fur-nished the material, I felt very much at home. At night of the same day I preached at Pikeville. The good peo-ple of Pikeville made me feel that they were glad to have me visit them. Some of the brethren thought I was a little indiscreet in the use of an illustration or two, and in the Christian spirit called my attention to the fact. I appreciated their interest in my welfare and shall love them more for their frankness. I think we suffer sometimes for the lack of confidential advice. If I make mistakes, how am I to improve if some one does not call my attention to them? I preached twice at Whitwell on the fifth Lord's day in May. There was a singing convention in Whitwell that day, also the There was a singing conpicture show was running, yet a fair audience was present each service. Whitwell is a mining town, and there are so many things to attract people that it is hard to get a great number interested in church affairs. Brother R. E. L. Taylor held a meeting there in May, with good results. They love Brother Taylor and appreciate his preaching.-Fred M. Little.

Texas.

Fort Worth, June 1.—We have been having a feast of good things here for the past few days. Brother H. W. Busby has been holding a mission meeting in the Lake View addition of this city. The crowds have been large, and much zeal and interest have been in evidence throughout. Brother George Klingman, of Abilene, began a meeting with the Central church of Christ here yesterday. I preached at Briar on Saturday night and on Sun-day at 11 A.M. and 4:30 P.M., with large and seemingly interested crowds at each service. My first meeting is to begin on June 10 at Leslie, Ark. From that date until late in the fall I will be constantly engaged in meetings. I am desirous of finding a good permanent location where I can settle down and work for the brethren, either in the extreme northwest part of Arkansas or in Oklahoma or Texas. Correspondents should address me 12021/2 Main Street, Room 211, Fort Worth, Texas.—J. A. Cullum.

Getting Ready to Build.

BY F. P. FONNER.

Our meetings are doing well now; but in this locality they are all held in private dwellings. Three more persons will be baptized here soon. Thus it may be seen that we are gaining all the time. With the work here and in the surrounding country, I am kept busy all the time. We eat no idle bread here. We go where we are needed. Many times we go almost entirely at our own charge. Brother T. P. Hall and Brother George E. Hypes are my helpers here. often go with me to our mission points. We are all poor men and need help in keeping up the work. Personally, I am hard pressed financially. Please help me some now. I am not very well; but the work must go on. We have bought and paid for our church lot. The restrictive clause is in the deed. We have seven hundred and eighty-six dollars and fifty cents with which to begin our church building; but that will not pay for the material at present prices. The house will cost more than we expected. We need three hundred dollars more at once to help pay for the lumber. We will do the work ourselves. We have three carpenters in the congregation, but they all have large families to support. We have pinched and saved in order to get a house of worship. Brethren, please do help us out without further delay. Let every one who reads this send us some help at once. Let every congregation do something now. Please do not delay action, Send to F. P. Fonner, treasurer, Box 81, Buffalo, W. Va. Kindly state what your offering is for. A full report of all receipts and expenditures will made later.

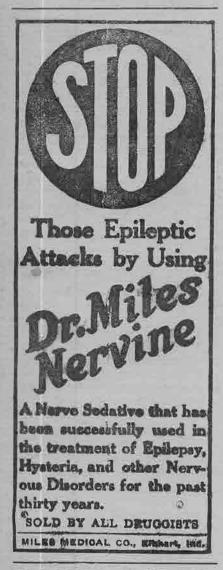

Our supreme aim as Christians not comfort, but holiness—not t make things easy all round for ourselves, but to grow in clearness of spiritual vision and readiness to hear the voice divine.—Selected.

OBITUARIES

Warren

Johnnie Warren, son of Mr, and Mrs. T. W. Warren, was born, in Tennessee, July 10, 1887, and passed from this life to the immortal life on March 25, 1920. His death was caused by pneumonia. His life was an inspiration to all who knew him. He obeyed the gospel ten years ago. His mind was always pure. "Blessed are the pure in heart." He dearly loved these words, as he loved all the words of Jesus. Besides his friends and brethren, he leaves, to mourn his loss, a father, mother, two sisters, one brother, and his wife and two little children, all of whom he dearly loved. Jesus said: "Come up higher." In the wisdom and love of God, Johnnie has been placed in a better world, to wear "a crown of glory that fadeth not away." A Friend.

Burford.

On the morning of April 10, 1920, God, in his love, saw fit to take our darling mother, Mrs. Lou Burford. Since then we have repeatedly asked the questions: "Is it really true that our beloved mother is gone? see her dear old face no more, nor hear the music of her voice with its glad welcome, as hereafter we wend our way to this sad and lonesome old home?" But the answer to this question brings us face to face with that awful reality that forces itself upon us. Mrs. Lou Burford was sixty-five years old. She was married, October 11, 1877, to W. C. Burford, who, with five children, survives her. She obeyed the gespel more than forty years ago and lived a true and faithful Christian. She lived such an unselfish and uncomplaining life that to know her was to love her. Her life story can be told in one brief sentence: She was an affectionate sister, a loving and faithful wife, one of the sweetest mothers, and a conscientious child of God. She devoted her time to her home and its duties; in fact, she seemed so necessary to make our stay on earth worth while that we felt as though she was bound to this life as with hooks of steel. However, we must say: "God's will be done." It grieves us to give. up our dear mother even for a time; yet, no doubt, while through our tears we say good-by, she even now makes the glad response.

HER DAUGHTER.

Willis.

Just as the old year of 1919 was completing its calendar and merging into the realms of the past, the life of Mrs. Marion Stalker Willis was completing its record and passing into the sphere of the future. She had lived more than her threescore years and ten, and of this time she had given one-half a century in service to her Lord, having confessed her faith in Christ; repented, and been baptized into citizenship of his earthly kingdom at the tender age of sixteen years, I was present at her marriage, and I heard her mother say to the bridegroom: "If she makes such a wife as she has a daughter, you will indeed

Hers was a life of service, having watched at the bedside of a father's protracted illness, shared the care of a sick sis-ter, and kept untiring vigil over the declining health of a fond mother, while for years a large portion of her time was spent in ministering to an afflicted brother. Then began another sacrificial career for daughter and grandchildren and all who needed her help and comfort. Her place was sel-dom vacant from the memorial table on the first day of the week. Caneer.

Brother Atlas L. Caneer was born, near Cornersville, Tenn., on October 27, 1858. On September 22, 1881, he married Miss M. E. McClintock. To this union two children were born, Marcus Caneer and Wilma Caneer. Brother Caneer and wife were faithful members of the church of Christ from their days of youth. Brother Caneer departed this life on January 31, 1920. He had been a constant reader of the Gospel Advocate for about thirty-five years, and each week eagerly awaited its coming. He was ever ready to discuss religious subjects, that he might know how to live the Christian life. His chief aim in this life was to live the life of a true Christian man, that when he departed this life there would be a home in heaven awaiting his coming, "a house not made with hands," where all would be joy and happiness, with all life's pains and worldly evils forever vanished. Brother Caneer had been afflicted with a complication of diseases for many years, but always bore his afflictions patiently and without murmuring. He was ever ready to say: "Lord, thy will, not mine, be done." He leaves a wife, one son, one daughter, and two brothers, together with relatives and friends, to mourn their loss. His life was such a noble one that it will stand out as an example to his children throughout their lives. "Weep not as those who have no hope." We must ever be submissive and ready to say: God knows best; his works are all good.

That Black-Draught Is Excellent for Stomach and Liver Disorders, Hence Its Great Popularity.

Mississippi Planter's Indorsement.

Houston, Miss.—Mr. J. A. Trenor, a well-known planter, of this place, recently related his experience in using Thedford's Black-Draught;

"I don't believe there is a better liver medicine made," said Mr. Trenor. "I use it for headache, stomach disorders, and torpid liver.

"It is not bad to take, does not leave a constipated condition, as so many of the liver pills and medicines do. It does its work and leaves you feeling like a new person."

Thousands of others have found Black-Draught as helpful as Mr. Trenor describes, and a valuable remedy for derangements of the liver, stomach, and bowels. It is purely vegetable, having an active effect upon the bowels, gently stimulating the liver, and helping to increase the flow of bile.

k-Draught has been found to in the digestion of food, and ves constipation in a prompt and mal way.

In account of Black-Draught's longcoved merit and immense popularity, nany imitations are being offered for sale. For your own satisfaction it will pay you to insist upon the genuine, and be sure the package bears the name, "Thedford's Black-Draught."

The comfort of having a friend may be taken away, but not that of having had one.

I do not want to possess a religion. I want a religion which will possess me.

Little things are little things, but faithfulness in little things is something great.

We reach the stars sometimes by stooping down to the mud of the world's need.

God has not left himself without witness. The light of the great imperative is in every soul. The church which is not a missionary church will be a missing church during the next fifty years.

When our Lord says, "Take my yoke upon you," he invites us to become linked to his omnipotence.

A heathen could say when a bird, scared by a hawk, flew into his bosom for refuge, "I will not kill thee, nor betray thee, to thine enemy, seeing thou fliest to me for sanctuary;" much less will God either slay or give up the soul that takes sanctuary in his name.

You Do More Work,

You are more ambitious and you get more enjoyment out of everything when your blood is in good condition. Impurities in the blood have a very depressing effect on the system, causing weakness, laziness, nervousness and sickness.

GROVE'S TASTELESS Chill TONIC restores Energy and Vitality by Purifying and Enriching the Blood. When you feel its strengthening, invigorating effect, see how it brings color to the cheeks and how it improves the appetite, you will then appreciate its true tonic value.

GROVE'S TASTELESS Chill TONIC is not a patent medicine, it is simply IRON and QUININE suspended in Syrup. So pleasant even children like it. The blood needs Quinine to Purify it and IRON to Enrich it. These reliable tonic properties never fail to drive out impurities in the blood.

The Strength-Creating Power of GROVE'S TASTELESS Chill TONIC has made it the favorite tonic in thousands of homes. More than thirty-five years ago, folks would ride a long distance to get GROVE'S TASTELESS Chill TONIC when a member of their family had Malaria or needed a body-building, strength-giving tonic. The formula is just the same today, and you can get it from any drug store. 60c per bottle:

I desire to thank the good, loyal, truth-loving brethren and sisters once more for their kind remembrance of the little congregation of loyal worshipers in Metropolis, Ill. Those who have responded to our call for help are as follows: Sister A. J. Kerr, Brookport, III., $2; Brother E. S. Kerr, Brookport, $2; church of Christ at Brookport, $10; Sister Blanch Cletcher, Dixon Springs, Ill., $1. Many thanks to all the donors. Brother J. L. Holland closed a good meeting with us on May 28, in which a brother from Missouri took membership with the church, the church was strengthened in zeal and courage, and the seed of the kingdom was sown.

Must Have Real Merit.

Anybody or anything to command confidence must deserve it.

A medicine that has commanded the confidence of the public for half a century, as Hood's Sarsaparilla has done, has merit, real merit.

This is something for you to bear inemind when you are in need of a medicine for your blood, stomach, liver, or kidneys, the ordinary diseases or ailments of which are cured or relieved by Hood's Sarsaparilla, as thousands of three generations have voluntarily testified.

When you buy Hood's Sarsaparilla, you buy a medicine that has outlived the formative period, in which there is more or less experiment, and has been fully developed for years, during which it has made a unique record by what it has accomplished for the sick and ailing, according to their own story.

How Nuxated Iron Feeds The Blood

They Taste Better Canned the Thrift Way

THE reason is simple: foods canned the Thrift Way are hermetically sealed before cooking.

All the flavor, all the juices, are kept in the jar: none can "boil away" as in old-style canning where jars are but partially sealed during processing.

And Thrift canned foods can't spoil. Jars are never opened after sterilizing until food is served.

The Thrift Way is the modern method of canning. It is being adopted rapidly by home canners everywhere.

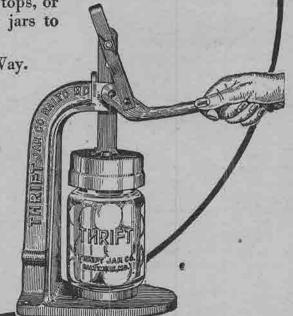

A time and labor saver, too — no fussy tops, or rubber rings to bother with; no hot jars to handle.

Plan to can this season the Thrift Way. Ask your dealer for the Thrift Jars, Caps and Sealer. If not in stock, show him this advertisement; or write us direct for "The Thrift Way Makes Canning Pay"—a free booklet containing prices, canning chart, testimonials and valuable data on canning.

Edifying as the Need May Be

How Faith Justifles.

Luther's explanation of how faith justifies apart from works is unique. He harmonizes Paul and James by bringing out the nice distinction between the application of the precepts of the Bible and the application of its promises. The commandments are incapable of providing salvation. But in acceptance of the promises one may find the happy solution. Luther's advice may be stated thus: "Believe in Christ, in whom I promise thee all grace, righteousness, peace, and liberty." These promises, he contends, give what the commandments demand and fulfill what the commandments require. The first virtue of faith is found in its relation to the word of God and to the efficient power of that word. Luther's estimate of its efficiency in redeeming from sin is boldly expressed in the following statement: "Christ, that rich and pious husband, takes as a wife a needy and impious harlot, redeeming her from all evils and supplying her with all good things." Christ can never be separated from that person who has committed himself unreservedly to him. It is hardly possible to conceive of a closer spiritual union than that which Luther suggests. Not only does the soul become like the divine word, but is bound up with Christ as the bride with the bridegroom in one body. In his exultation Luther leaps from the Canticles to a Pauline epistle. In the one instance it is the assurance of personal ownership: "My beloved is mine, and I am his." In the other instance it is a shout of triumph: "Thanks be to God, who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

*** * ***

Kingship and Priesthood of Bellevers.

To Luther the glorifying of God on the part of the Christian seems as natural as breathing. Worship is the essential characteristic of faith. His exposition of the kingship and priesthood of which believers become participants through this union with Christ occupies an important place in his theology. His elevation of the average man to the highest place of spiritual privilege is no doubt the most distinctive part of his teaching. It is on this point that he sets at naught the whole papal system. The average man can become a king, a lord of all whom nothing can harm; this is his precious liberty and power. But, what is more important, the average man can become a priest, because he is worthy to approach God and pray for himself and others. He may be the humblest of God's servants, but at the same time perform an office that had for ages been the exclusive prerogative of the priestly order. Raising the question as to how the priestly order may be distinguished from the laity. Luther, without calling any names, takes a center shot at the pernicious system of the Roman Curia; "Through this perversion of things it has happened that the knowledge of Christian grace, of faith, of liberty, and altogether of Christ, has utterly perished, and has been succeeded by an intolerable bondage to human works and laws; and, according to the Lamentations of Jeremiah, we have become the slaves of the vilest men on earth." For sharp though polished invective, Luther's lamentation could hardly be improved upon.

Treatment of the "Outward Man."

In analyzing Luther's treatment of the outward man. we hark back to the second of his two main propositions: "The Christian man is a ministering servant of all things, and subject to every one." Here he first speaks of the government or discipline of the body. The time and extent of such duties as fasting, watching, and praying, he contends, must be determined by the man himself. Not the priest, but Christ, is the true pattern. No better mottoes for social service can be found than the following excerpts from Luther's treatise: "They flowed from Christ into us; from us they must flow into others." "I will therefore give myself as a sort of Christ to my neighbor, as Christ has given himself to me, and will do nothing in this life except what I see will be needful, advantageous, and wholesome for my neighbor, since by faith I abound in all good things in Christ." "A Christian man does not live in himself, but in Christ and in his neighbor: in Christ by faith; in his neighbor by love. By faith he is carried upward above himself to God, and by love he sinks back below himself to his neighbor." But Luther, in his appeal for neighborliness, is exceedingly careful not to vitlate his preceding argument concerning the supremacy of the inward man as obtained through Christ and his promises. This cardinal truth must never be lost sight of. It must be remembered that "we do not contemn works and ceremonies -nay, we set the highest value on them; but we contemn the belief in works, which no one should consider to constitute true righteousness." Luther sees in works the strong but temporary value that Augustine saw in miracles. They are like the scaffolding of a rising temple.

Liberty Distinguished From Lawlessness.

We find a splendid illustration of Luther's conservatism and far-sightedness in the word of caution with which he guards against a possible abuse of his definition of liberty. This is given in the Latin edition. Who will say that such caution is not always needed? The worldly-minded crave a liberty that recognizes no law or one that tends toward lawlessness. That is the bane of Bolshevism. But Luther declares against a carnal use of his doctrine of liberty. Here he is following the example of a greater teacher. Paul taught that the very purpose of Christian freedom is found in the fact that we are free to serve. "For he that was called in the Lord being a bond servant, is the Lord's freedman: likewise he that was called being free, is Christ's bond servant." (1 Cor. 7: 22.) Lyman Abbott gives this domestic illustration: "On my lawn is a goat tethered by a rope to a stake. He is not at liberty. Why not cut the rope and let him go where, and do as, he pleases? Because, if I do, he will gnaw the bark of the young apple trees, trample down the garden beds, pull up | bonds."

the strawberry plants by the roots. In a word, because he is not able to perceive and be obedient to the invisible law, he must be subjected to a visible and tangible one. But I have a collie dog who has learned obedience and has acquired his right to liberty." Even in America, the "home of the free," no man without respect for law should be turned loose upon the community. Freedom is not the power to do what we please unless we please to do right.

After all has been said, Luther's definition but serves to repeat and emphasize the oft-repeated lesson of the Scriptures that there can be freedom of spirit only where there is freedom from sin. One is not free merely because shackles have been struck from his limbs. The apostle Paul was wearing the chains of a prisoner when he wrote concerning "the glorious liberty of the children of God." Luther reflects the transcendent happiness of the man who said to Agrippa: "I would to God, that whether with little or with much, not thou only, but also all that hear me this day, might become such as I am, except these bonds."

"Paul's Plan for Christian Unity."
BY F. W. SMITH.

"Paul's Plan for Christian Unity" is a tract of forty-four pages, by John B. Cowden. The author sends this tract to me, I presume, for review, and I take pleasure in giving it such notice as, in my judgment, it demands. Much that our brother says on the subject is commendable in a high degree, and I only wish that I could commend the tract as a whole. The basis he submits for unity, in so far as it pertains to what are termed the "fundamentals"-that is, the one body, or church—what it is, and how to become a member of it-is eminently scriptural, and his argument on these is clear-cut and fully sustained by the word of God. He finds no room and no excuse for denominationalism or sectarianism, and pleads for the one faith and one baptism of the New Testament with commendable zeal. 1 will not undertake to give his line of argument on this phase of the subject, but suffice it to say that the matter is placed in an invincible style.

The author's treatment of his subject on the line indicated had all but disarmed me of the suspicion with which I started to read his production, when-lo and behold!-I stumbled on "the nigger in the woodpile." In referring to the seven things which he terms "the essentials," and warning against leaving out any one of them, he says: "On the other hand, some desire to add to the above essentials rather than omit any." At this, I felt the old suspicion creeping over me again, and began to look for "the nigger in the woodpile." I was not long in suspense, for the very next sentence showed the top of the "nigger's" head-namely: "For instance, some would like to add 'one way of doing missionary work ' and ' one way of leading the singing." I walked around the "woodpile" a few times, and the "nigger" jumped out and ran away like this:

Now, if Paul had put these in his statement of the essentials for Christian unity, and had clearly defined in the Scriptures this one way of doing missionary work, whether by organized coöperation or independent action, and had clearly set out the one way to lead the singing, whether by a man with a tuning fork or by a woman with an organ, we would offer no protest to these being made essential to Christian union; but, since he left them out, we must insist on their being left out of the program for unity to-day, and likewise every other one thing that any one desires to add.

Although the "nigger" ran swiftly, I have caught him, and intend to set him astride of Brother Cowden's back. He makes the following the pivot wheel of his thesis:

As shown in a preceding chapter on the standard of authority in religion, the mind of Christ is found in the words, deeds, and character of Christ, as set forth in the Christian Scriptures, which fully reveal his mind on every essential matter that has to do with the work and worship of the church to-day. Any one to-day that claims to have an added revelation of the mind of Christ should be able, as Paul, to give his credentials for the same; otherwise, it is no part of the mind of Christ.

This is well put; and since the whole of the New Testament is an expression of the "mind of Christ," we must be governed by what we find in it regarding "the work and worship of the church to-day," Now, what do we find in the New Testament regarding the way or ways in which missionary work was done? Mark you, our brother has said the only authority in religion is "the mind of Christ . . . as set forth in the Christian Scriptures;" and I will ask him, Is the society way of doing missionary work set forth in the Christian Scriptures? He knows it is not; hence he is guilty of "adding a way" of doing missionary work not found in the Christian Scriptures. Where are his "credentials" for doing this? Can he find any "organized cooperation" for doing missionary work in the Christian Scriptures other than congregations with their divinely appointed board of elders? When churches and individual Christians do missionary work as Paul and the church at Philippi did, are they not following the mind of Christ? When you do missionary work through your society, are you following the mind of Christ? If so, please cite the place in the Christian Scriptures, which you say set forth the mind of Christ, where we may find it. Paul said he declared "the whole counsel of God" (Acts 20: 27); and I ask: Did not this include missionary work-when, where, and how it was to be done? If not, how can any mortal tell whether or not he is following the mind of Christ? If the disciples in New Testament times were not governed by "the mind of Christ" in the way they did missionary work and the kind of music they employed in worshiping God, by whose mind were they governed? Did they do as they did in those matters by faith? Were they walking by faith (2 Cor. 5: 7) in the way they did missionary work and the kind of music they employed in their worship? If so, how could they have faith without the mind of Christ expressed in his word, since faith comes by the word of God? If they were not walking by faith in these things, why should we walk by faith in anything in religion?

You are welcome, my brother, to the "nigger" you had hidden in that "woodpile," unless you are willing to class such an important and far-reaching matter of doing missionary work, involving, as it does, the salvation of mankind, as among things not essential to Christian unity, whereby the strength and power of the church may be employed. Does it stand to reason that the apostles, guided by the Holy Spirit, did not adopt and instruct the churches in the most efficient way of doing such work? Is it safe to turn away from the examples of doing such work as we find in the Christian Scriptures to one of your own devising?

But he thinks we are at sea about the kind of music to be employed in worshiping God to-day. It is true that he misstates the case under the guise of "leading the singing," That is not the issue at all, my brother, and it is surprising that you would put such a "nigger" in the "woodpile." He deceives no one, but ruins your cause. If the organ did no more than the tuning fork-viz., give pitch to the song-there could be no objection to it; but it does more, and the very thing it does when played in connection with the singing is the very thing the Christian Scriptures excludes from the worship under Christ-viz., instrumental music. The mind of Christ, which you hold as the only authority in religion, is expressed on this point as follows: "Speaking to yourselves in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing and making melody in your heart to the Lord." (Eph. 5: 19.) This kind of music, and this kind only, can you find used in the worship as revealed in the New Testament. Your instrumental music is added; and where is your new revelation, and where are your "credentials?" By stating the kind of music to be used in praising God-viz., vocal-instrumental music, the other and only other kind of music, is excluded as certainly as infants are excluded from baptism when we are told to baptize believers.

Brother Cowden's tract, instead of being a plea for Christian unity, is, in reality, a plea for division, or, rather, to perpetuate division among the disciples of Christ. He adopts a popular theme and puts enough truth in it to catch the unsuspecting and uninformed. I will take the "woodpile," and let Brother Cowden keep his "nigger."

Can We Keep the Sabbath?

BY L. D. PERKINS.

I have noticed the statement in a number of our papers that Brethren McHenry and Martin had gone to the Adventists and were keeping the Sabbath. Let us see if the Scriptures will bear out this statement. Because of the wickedness of the people of God, by the mouth of Hosea he declares he will visit her with many calamities. Beginning with verse 6, chapter 2, he begins to enumerate them, and verse 11 reads as follows: "I will also cause all her mirth to cease, her feast days, her new moons, and her Sabbaths, and all her solemn feasts." In verse 23 he tells those he was writing to when this would happen: "And I will sow her unto me in the earth; and I will have mercy upon her that had not obtained mercy; and I will say to them which were not my people. Thou art my people; and they shall say, Thou art my God." It is easy for us to-day to understand that reference is here made to the time that the Gentiles would have an equal chance with God's chosen people. But the Jews were blinded, the veil had not been lifted from their eyes, and they could not understand, consequently they make further inquiry regarding the taking away of the Sabbath. This inquiry is made of the prophet Amos: "Hear this, O ye that swallow up the needy, even to make the poor of the land to fail, saying, When will the new moon be gone, that we may sell corn? and the Sabbath, that we may set forth wheat, making the ephah small, and the shekel great, and falsifying the balances by deceit." (Amos 8: 4, 5.) It will be observed by the careful student that the children of Israel wanted to know when God would fulfill his threat as recorded in Hos. 2: 11, and, in accordance with this desire, they asked Amos, whom they recognized as a servant and prophet of God, to tell them. I am of the opinion that they went to the right authority, and to-day we may do the same thing. If we want to know about the kingdom being established, about the plan of salvation, about how to worship God in an acceptable way. about how to treat our brethren and those who are unsaved, then let us do as did the people in the days of good old Amos, and get our answers direct from God through his recorded word, and if that does not settle the question, it will never be settled correctly; but the word of God will settle them all, or, at least, enough to save and get us home to heaven. But I know all want to know what answer Amos gave to the children regarding the question they had asked, and I give the answer in the words of Amos: "And it shall come to pass in that day, saith the Lord God, that I will cause the sun to go down at noon, and I will darken the earth in the clear day." (Verse 9.) This statement from Amos is so clear that none but those whose eyes are closed to the truth can but see. The day that the new moon and Sabbath were to be gone was when God would cause the sun to go down at noon and darken the earth in the clear day. For further proof, please note verse 10: "And I will turn your feasts into mourning, and all your songs into lamentation; and I will bring up sackcloth upon all loins, and baldness upon every head; and I will make it as the mourning of an only son, and the end thereof as a bitter day." Christ was the only begotten Son of God, and the mourning for him was by the saints at the cross.

Matthew (27: 45) says in his account of the crucifixion: "Now from the sixth hour there was darkness over all the land unto the ninth hour." All who are at all acquainted with the Jewish count will observe that the sixth hour was noon. The clearest part of the day is around about noon. Amos said the sun was to go down at noon, and darkness was to cover the earth in the clear day, and that when this happened the Sabbath and the new moon would be gone. Mark (15: 33) confirms the statement of Matthew as follows: "And when the sixth hour was come, there was darkness over the whole land until the ninth hour." The statement is made stronger by Luke (23: 44, 45): "And it was about the sixth hour, and there was a darkness over all the earth until the ninth hour. And the sun was darkened, and the veil of the temple was rent in the midst."

In order that none might claim truthfully that this was an eclipse of the sun, all these make the statement that the earth stood in darkness for three long hours; and Luke adds that the sun was darkened, which is never the case in an eclipse. This was the fulfillment of Amos, the prophet of God, telling those to whom he prophesied when the new moon and the Sabbath would be gone. The Sabbath came by the commandment of God at Mount Horeb when the Ten Commandments were given; it went, in fulfillment of the prophecy of the prophet of God, Amos, at the crucifixion of Christ. It has never been established this side of the cross by the authority of God; and this all being a truth proven by the word of God beyond successful contradiction, I am ready to affirm that neither Brother McHenry, Brother Martin, or any one else, is keeping the Sabbath, and never will, from the simple reason there is none to keep. They may keep a day, and call it the "Sabbath," but that is far from making it the Sabbath from a Bible standpoint.

Paul warns as follows: "Beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit, after the tradition of men, after the rudiments of the world, and not after Christ-For in him dwelleth all the fullness of the Godhead bodily. And ye are complete in him, which is the head of all principality and power. In whom also ye are circumcised with the circumcision made without hands, in putting off the body of the sins of the flesh by the circumcision of Christ: buried with him in baptism, wherein also ye are risen with him through the faith of the operation of God, who hath raised him from the dead. And you, being dead in your sins and the uncircumcision of your flesh, hath he quickened together with him, having forgiven you all trespasses; blotting out the handwriting of ordinances that was against us, and which was contrary to us, and took it out of the way, nailing it to his cross; and having spoiled principalities and powers, he made a show of them openly, triumphing over them in it. Let no man therefore judge you in meat, or in drink, or in respect of an holy day, or of the new moon, or of the Sabbath days." (Col. 2: 8-16.) I am sure that Paul pointed back to the cross as did Amos forward to it, and both of them teach that the Sabbath was gone at the cross. Let us all note the warning of Paul not to allow any man to spoil us through philosophy and vain deceit, after the traditions of men, and the rudiments of the world, and not after Christ. He knew if any man kept a day and called it the "Sabbath," it would be by the philosophy and vain deceit and traditions of men; for he knew as well as I do that there is no Sabbath existing by the authority of God, and a day can only be called that by philosophy of men and their traditions. It is to be regretted that, by the philosophy, vain deceit, and traditions of men, McHenry and Martin have been led astray; but it is about as much their fault as any. They had no business to go until they understood the teaching of God's word in the overthrow of all traditions of men, and none others should be sent until they are rooted and grounded in the faith.

May God help us to continue to fight the good fight of faith, that we may lay hold of eternal life.

State the Facts.

BY W. H. CARTER.

I have read with interest what has been written by McQuiddy, McCaleb, and others in regard to missions, missionaries, and speculative teaching. While I have known of these men for quite a while, I am personally acquainted with few of them; hence what I may say is not because of any personal feeling toward any. What I wish to say is meant only for the good of the cause of Christ and those concerned, and all who are interested. I shall not seek to join the discussion on either side, but to set forth and contend for certain principles and truths which should be, and are, of importance to us all. We may be careless, indifferent, and unconcerned, as some no doubt are, but this is a mistake. I cannot see how one can fail to be interested in matters of such great importance. I cannot speak for the brothren at large; I can only speak for myself. As an Individual Christian, I have certain rights; and as a teacher. I have duties to perform It is often the case that congregations look to the preacher for instruction and demand it of him. That he may be able to do this, he must have received instruction himself.

Now to the point. When the trouble first came up over Boll's teaching, McCaleb had a piece in the Gospel Advocate that impressed me that he was in sympathy with Boll. The recent articles written by him confirm that impression. Yet I realize that it is possible that I am mistaken. It may be that some principle, some reason that I know not of, causes him to withhold the information that I so much desire—whether or not he is in full sympathy with Boll in his speculative teaching. If only in part, then what part does he indorse, and what part does he condemn?

To evade is to fail to satisfy. If I am correctly informed, Boll and others teach in regard to the kingdom of God things that are in opposition to what the Bible teaches. I had an article on this subject, which was copied by the Christian Companion, in which I spoke of Russell's teaching. Jorgenson, of Louisville, Ky., felt called upon to reply, and said that Russell taught some truth, and we should not discard truth because Russell taught it. This put him in line with Russell; and when I asked him if what Russell taught about the kingdom was "some truth," he kept silent. Now, if McCateb indorses Boll, Jorgenson, and others in these things, it is right that I and all others upon whom he calls for support as a missionary should know it. Therefore a full, open, frank, and unevasive statement should be made. To do this might clear the water; to refuse to do it will still leave things in a muddled and doubtful condition, with the odds against him.

But it has been said that "It is much easier to stoically criticize a McCaleb or a Bixler than it is to try to create and maintain these strategic outposts." If I were going to criticize, I might ask, is it much easier to get a support by evading-camouflaging-one's real faith than coming out in the open and letting those whom you ask for support know whether you indorse certain speculative theories or not? I have been of the opinion that there has been too much winking at this matter on the part of some preachers and college professors. Paul withstood Peter to his face. I do not know whether he thought it was easier than to have dissembled with them. Is the encouragement of sin the best way to check it? It seems that Paul did not think it best to go on and fellowship Peter and say nothing about it and let his conduct go unrebuked. This same Paul said: "Them that sin rebuke before all, that others also may fear." Is it a sin to join Russell in teaching that the kingdom has not yet been established, and then say the church is the kingdom, and then say the church is only the vestibule to the kingdom? Does this not deny a fundamental point of teaching? This is why I want to know. and am sure others do, how one stands on these things before I encourage and help support him. It is right that the brethren should know just how McCaleb stands on these things, and I see no reason why he should not speak out plainly.
