Edifying as the Need May Be

A Visit to Louisville, Ky.

The writer of this page spent Christmas day and the following Lord's day visiting relatives at Louisville, Ky. On Lord's-day morning it was his good pleasure to preach for the King's Hall congregation. These brethren and sisters will be obliged to select another name to identify their congregation, since they have moved from King's Hall and now worship in a new building all their own. While it is small and unpretentious in appearance from the outside, its interior is very convenient and reasonably commodious. Its erection is due to the unstinting sacrifices of its members, assisted by other congregations and individual Christians, who made an appreciable response to the appeal which was printed in the Gospel Advocate. It was indeed a painful experience for these faithful members to be driven from the Highland Church, which was started largely through their efforts, but they have shown both faith and courage in going forward. Now they have the credit of not only standing firm in their opposition to speculative teaching, but also of persevering in the face of mistreatment and misrepresentation. Really they seem so happy in their new environment that they are apt to forget their troubles. The prospect for greater growth seems very encouraging. These brethren are still in debt for their new house, and will appreciate any offering that may be sent to C. A. Taylor, 438 West Market Street, Louisville, Kv.

On Sunday evening the writer received a warm welcome from the Campbell Street congregation, with which his colaborer, Brother Kurfees, has been identified for, lo, these many years. Our beloved brother in his preaching shows how the vigor and enthusiasm of youth may be retained and combined with great sagacity and profound Bible knowledge which only age and experience can bring.

Good Prospects at New York City.

Reports that come to us from the great metropolis are bright. The little band of loyal disciples gathered together through the efforts of Brother Morgan H. Carter has never ceased to meet on Lord's days, and there have been several recruits. Brother W. S. Long, Jr., recently paid them a visit, and was favorably impressed with the outlook. He has also written me a letter relative to the situation. As this matter is one of widespread interest, I give it in part to our readers. Writing from New York under date of December 18, he says:

For several days I have been working with the church in New York, and, realizing the graveness of the cause of Christ here, I am writing you for a little help for them,

Here is the way the cause stands: There are about thirty members who are willing souls, and they feel that the cause needs attention. A good, live, hard-working man is needed here to work every day, and a good support can be easily raised to pay him two hundred or two hundred and fifty dollars per month. Several churches are sending ten dollars each month now, and there are some members here from Birmingham, England, and the church over there has been writing and offers to help. The Campbell Street Church, in Louisville, Ky., is sending ten dollars monthly. (I called on Mrs. R. J. Carpenter at 325 Lenox Road, Brooklyn, who was one of your members when you were in Louisville. She is true to the Book, and spoke so highly of you.)

It will be easy to support a good man here for one year beginning on January 1, 1921. Can you find a man? The members here asked me to write you and ask you to put a call in the Gospel Advocate and to help get a good man.

The most encouraging note in the above is that several congregations have already been impressed with the importance of carrying this work forward. Others, no doubt, will respond when the matter is called to their attention. It is something to be thankful for to know that there is a loyal congregation established in Washington, the nation's capital, and that another has been started under such favorable auspices in New York City. Surely there could be no mistake in sending a gospel herald to a place where there are more than a million souls in need of the Savior.

What One Congregation Can Do.

It is not generally known that the congregation worshiping at David Lipscomb College is one of the most liberal supporters of missions in the land; but the financial reports attest this fact. Believing it would be a matter of public interest, Brother A. M. Burton asked the treasurer of the congregation to write a brief report covering its activities for the past six years. This report follows:

Dear Brother Burton: In reply to your request for a respect as to what our congregation is doing for missions, I will say the church at David Lipscomb College believes that, to be apostolic in faith and practice, they must carry out the commission. A church without the go in it is not doing its duty. Our congregation is now supporting two missionaries, besides assisting five others in mission work.

I believe other congregations could do as much or more, if they realized the great need. The church is not fully awake to the immensity of the harvest and the need of laborers. When we honestly pray our Father to send laborers, as Christ taught his apostles and afterwards all twelve sent, we are to expect him to send us, circumstances permitting. If we cannot go, let us send some one else.

"'Go break to the needy sweet charity's bread;
For giving is living,' the angel said.
And must I be giving again and again?

'O, no,' said the angel, piercing me through,
'Just give till the Master stops giving to you."

As far back as my record as treasurer of this congregation I find the following: In 1915 we used for missions, $355; in 1916, $397; in 1917, $490; in 1918, $868; in 1919, $2,075; in 1920, $3,760. Yours respectfully,

R. S. King, Treasurer.

In connection with this report it is fair to state that this congregation was one of the most liberal contributors to the building fund for the girls' new dormitory. Should this amount be added, it would bring the total to about six thousand dollars. Such a report should prove a stimulant to other congregations that are lagging behind and who need the force of a good example. It should be especially gratifying to those parents who have sent their children to this college. Among other things, they have been taught the great truth that "we only live when we give." And I must not fail to commend the careful, painstaking way in which Brother King has received and disbursed the funds. Note, if you please, in studying the report, that there has been no going backward, but an appreciable increase each successive year. It takes a live congregation to jump from three hundred and fifty-five dollars in 1915 to thirty-seven hundred and sixty dollars in 1920. A new year is now given to every congregation in the land. Let us make it the banner year for giving in the name of Jesus.

The Pen and the Sword.

BY MRS. NELLIE ELNORA SINGLETON.

"More mighty the pen than the sword" has been said,
More powerful for good or for woe—
For the hopes that have fied and the hearts that have bled,
And the tears that have been made to flow.

Just the stroke of a pen by a gambler's hand, Bidding a mother good-by:

"I have played my last game, and must die in my shame; And, mother, it's no use to cry."

Just the stroke of a pen in a young maiden's hand,
Who had trodden the dark ways of sin:
"Dear mother, forgive; I can no longer live!"
Yet 'twas only the stroke of a pen.

Just the stroke of a pen by a young mother's hand, To the father far over the sea; "All of life's joy has fled, for our baby is dead; But heaven seems nearer to me."

Just the stroke of a pen in the letter that fell From the hand of a noble young man; For the letter had said, "For you my love's dead;" And life seemed a vast desert land.

O, be not depressed by the sorrows of life,

When hope from you seems to have flown!

In the sweet by and by, may our Father on high

With his pen write, "Thy work is well done."

Thousands of people demand amusements. Thousands of dollars are spent in that behalf. But there is absence of plan, concert, and cooperation. The devil steps in and takes the profit. The people want but little here below, nor want that little long. Why may we not have more of the amusement which strengthens and enlightens? One rich man by his own unaided beneficence might provide health ful amusement for a whole city. Why does not benefaction turn in this direction?—Humphrey J. Desmond.

Troubles.

BY H. C. FLEMING.

In the history of man, his first trouble was his expulsion from the garden of Eden. The next was the curse upon Cain for slaying his brother, Abel. These were both caused by the violation of the commands of the Creator.

As we trace man's history from that time, we find his troubles are from the same kind of action. Notwithstanding this, he is still trying by his own inventions to end them, irrespective of the will of God. But what has been the result of his actions in this manner? Has he been able, in a single instance, to lessen his troubles? Has not this course always increased them and brought sufferings instead of reducing them?

Note the pitfalls and distress of such through this life. For instance, note the following: the building of the tower of Babel; the wandering of the Israelites for forty years in the wilderness; their determination to have a king; their worship of idols; their continual rebellions against the law of God; their extreme suffering from time to time; and their final overthrow.

Note also the schemes and failure of the world's great rulers to bring peace in their sinful state; the elaborate schemes and plans of the false teaching of all false religions and the corruption of the true; the falling away from the paths of virtue into those of vice; the wars and rumors of wars; famines, pestilences; the upheaval and commotion among the inhabitants of the earth; the thefts, murders, violence, outrage, rape, incest, white slavery, dens of degradation, and the destruction of all moral principles.

Since all such as these have all been failures and increased troubles, why follow a similar course to get rid of them? Why cannot men understand the folly of such?

If we will notice the workings of men's minds in their tendency to reject the counsel of God against themselves, we can understand why troubles increase and failures follow.

Upon a certain time in the life of Christ many of his disciples turned back and walked no more with him. "Then said Jesus unto the twelve, Will ye also go away? Then Simon Peter answered him, Lord, to whom shall we go? thou hast the words of eternal life." (John 6: 67, 68.)

A life of peace and happiness on this earth is the desire of men, but the majority want it in a sinful state; therefore they reject the counsel of God against themselves, thinking they can secure it by their own wisdom. But such actions always have been and always will be failures.

Yet we find them still turning away from the words of eternal life and happiness. And why? Because they inject into the words spoken by Peter thoughts and interpretations of their own, thereby rendering the word of God of none effect and causing more troubles.

Although many of these may be conscientious in their inferences, troubles follow just the same. Hence, parties, divisions, strifes, heresies, wrangles, and a war of words, to the destruction of their hearers.

Note the isms and schisms among men in the present age, and the thousands that are being led to ruin by them, all because of the turning away from the words of eternal life.

But listen to this: "Woe unto the world because of offenses! for it must needs be that offenses come; but woe to that man by whom the offense cometh!" (Matt. 18: 7.)

There are many woes pronounced upon sin and wickedness in the word of God; and these will be certainly the greatest of troubles.

What, then, is to be done? Will harsh words and vindictive expressions from man to man turn men from their errors that produce trouble for this life and for that which is to come? "Offense" is an affront or an insult. If we insult our fellow man, we drive him away from us and make him an enemy.

It is an insult to God not to believe what he has spoken; yet he is long-suffering, not willing that any should-perish. Why, then, not accept of his words without any of our inferences or modifications?

Accepting the word as stated above will end many troubles in this life and save us from the woes of destruction at the great judgment day.

There will be a time when our troubles will end or be increased in a fearful manner.

"Should sorrow o'er thy brow
Its darkened shadow fling,
And hopes that cheer thee now
Die in their early spring;
Should pleasure at its birth
Fade like the hues of even,
Turn then away from earth.
There's rest for thee in heaven."

Between the Extremes.

BY W. H. CARTER.

I have noticed what seemed to me to be a weakness in almost all men I have read after in discussing controverted questions; and that is, not to represent an opponent correctly and fairly. I may have been guilty myself, and some may think me somewhat afflicted with the malady before they get through reading what I shall say in this article. Just here I want to say that I have no desire to "butt in" or to become "a busybody in other men's matters;" nor is it my aim to criticize any one, but, rather, if I can, to point out "the more excellent way."

I have noticed, too, that, in my own judgment, men are not always misrepresented when they claim to be. It is wrong to misrepresent; it is also wrong to accuse one of misrepresenting when he is not guilty. Such charges are not pleasant to the one so charged, and do not have the best effect on the mind of the reader. Good, kind, brotherly criticism is beneficial to the one criticized and to the critic. Otherwise, "silence is golden." It has been said that consistency is a jewel. It is good to be consistent with one's self, but best of all to be consistent with the word of God. Paul says: "For I say, through the grace given unto me, to every man that is among you, not to think of himself more highly than he ought to think; but to think soberly, according as God hath dealt to every man the measure of faith." (Rom. 12: 3.) I have read from some who impressed me that they had an idea that, on account of their education, learning, logical skill, etc., no one should dare to call in question a position they take. But I have become convinced that the smartest of men can get wrong.

But what are the extremes? First. Speaking of those who go into denominations, one says: "When persons do what God has commanded them to do for that purpose, they enter into, and become a part of, his church." Again: "Whoever believes with all his heart that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God, repents of his sins, and is baptized into the solemn name of Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, that one thereby becomes a member of this one church or one body of the Lord Jesus Christ." Again: "Whosoever it is and wherever he may be, the person who believes with all of his heart in Jesus the Christ, who repents of his sins and, in obedience to the command of Christ, is baptized into the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, he thereby becomes a member of the church of Christ."

But where is the extreme in this? Is this not a plain statement of truth? That depends upon our application of it. Speaking of certain characters, Paul said: "Who changed the truth of God into a lie," etc. (Rom. 1: 25.) Perhaps they did not intend to do it. Neither would we charge one with intentionally doing so. In New Testament times, when there was but the one church and no denominational preachers preaching some truth and some error to corrupt the faith and lead into denominations, the above statements might have been accepted without question. But is there not a difference now? How are we to determine when one is baptized to obey Christ, and for "the purpose?" What is the scripturally expressed purpose? Is there an assumption here, either expressed or implied? If so, then watch for the extreme.

But another extreme. Some teach that God has a people in Babylon, that denominationalism is this Babylon, and he is calling upon them to come out of her; and from this the conclusion is drawn that God has a people in the denominations who have been baptized into the one church, and it is not necessary for them to be baptized any more. But how do we know that denominationalism is the Babylon of Rev. 18: 1-4? How do we know that what was meant by John has not already come to pass or is yet to be fulfilled? Is there not too much assumption here to base an argument on? Is this not speculative?

But we must notice some extremes on the other side. One says: "No man can be a Christian and a Babylonian [denominationalist-W, H. C.] at the same time." "Out of the teaching Brother -- here sets forth has come the practice of receiving into the fellowship of the church people from the denominations without baptizing them." Where is the extreme? Is not the above true? It may be, and then it may not be. "For what man knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of man which is in him?" (1 Cor. 2: 11.) My eyes are not keen enough, nor my perceptive powers strong enough, to enable me to look back and see what the thoughts and purposes of one's heart were when he was baptized. "Judge not, that ye be not judged." (Matt, 7: 1.) "Who art thou that judgest another man's servant?" (Rom. 14: 4; see, also, Rom. 2: 1.) Faith, repentance, confession, baptism, prayer, giving, loving, serving, worshiping, etc., are individual matters, and must be left to the individual and God. I do not know, neither do you, what the purpose in the heart was when one was baptized; but God knows, and the individual should know. "To his own master he standeth or falleth." One comes forward and says: "I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God." We take his word for it and baptize him. Another comes forward and says: "I have been baptized in obedience to the gospel." We discredit him and repudiate his baptism. We credit one and discredit the other. Is that right? Do we not become legislators in the church of God?

But where is the medium ground upon which one and all may safely stand? There is but one safe ground, or place, or thing, upon which we may stand, and that is the word of God. By it we are to be judged, and Jesus says it shall never fall. What saith the law? It says, "be baptized." Then, if one is baptized, has he not obeyed the law? Maybe so, and maybe not. There are preparations and purposes that all understand must go before and enter into baptism that it may be done in obedience to the law. On this men differ and go to extremes. Can I suggest a little here without danger of controversy? I will ask some questions and point to some truths that all will accept. Is there, or should there be, one leading purpose in the heart of the one baptized? If so, what is that purpose? How are we to determine what it is? Is to "obey God" that purpose, or is to "be baptized for the remission of sins" that purpose? What saith the law which is to be obeyed? Does it say "be baptized to obey God," or does it say "be baptized for the remission of sins?" Can you turn and read where it says "be baptized to obey God?" Can you turn and read where it says "be baptized for the remission of sins?" If we find both, then both include a direct purpose. If we find only one, then does not that one include the direct purpose—or, we might say, rather, the leading purpose.

Let us not fly to extremes here. Do not all agree that, in the Law, baptism is for the remission of sins, and that when one is baptized for the remission of sins he obeys God? What does it take to constitute obedience to God, if it is not to obey his law, to do what he says for the purpose he says do it? If God says, "be baptized into Christ," and one is baptized into something else, does he not fail to obey God because of a wrong purpose? Did the Pentecostians understand that they were to be baptized "into Christ," "into his body," "into his death?" Possibly not. But did they not understand that they were baptized for the remission of sins? Is that not what they were told to do? Can we preach the gospel now and not preach the same thing? If people believe, as they are taught, that baptism has no place in the plan of salvation, that they are not "baptized for the remission of sins," but "because of remission," and confess before their baptism that they believe that "God for Christ's sake has pardoned their sins," how can they be baptized with the scriptural purpose? And if the purpose is wrong, is it obedience? The point is, if one does what "God commands for that purpose," what is "that purpose?" Do not all agree that "for the remission of sins" expresses a purpose, if not the purpose?

Do you ask me if I always demand that one be baptized for this purpose—for the remission of sins? In my teaching I do. But when one comes forward after hearing the teaching, and claims to have obeyed and is satisfied, I leave it with him and God, where it belongs. I warn him of the danger of deception, urge him to read the Word and pray that he may know and do God's will. I do not demand that he be baptized, lest he do it to please me. I recognize that it is possible that some, not all, have obeyed God in spite of erroneous teaching. I try to avoid extremes.

Now, brethren, my judgment is, if we will all "preach the word," "shun not to declare the whole counsel of God," "speak as the oracles of God," there will be less debating, less friction; but there will be more faith, love, obedience, fellowship, and souls saved. Let us not speculate nor preach our opinions, but the gospel, and leave results with the Lord. In this I may have failed of my purpose, and some may think I need to be gouged. If so, let them gouge. It will not hurt me, for I have been gouged before; and maybe I can survive it. But, as said in the outset, that has not been my purpose in writing.

"Judge Ye What I Say."

BY JOHN TAYLOR.

Brother Kurfees says that I failed to represent him correctly in my article in the Gospel Advocate of November 11; but if he will give due consideration to what I said, he will see that he is mistaken.

I will give that part of my article over which we differ, and I am sure it will be seen that he failed to get the thought which the language contains. It is as follows: "If he join the denomination in the same act that Brother Kurfees says makes him a member of the church of God," etc. Then he says: "But Brother Kurfees says no such thing." Why did he not quote all of my statement? What does that statement say Brother Kurfees says? I will give it in full so you may see what it says: "If he join the denomination in the same act that Brother Kurfees says makes him a member of the church of God, then in that act he sins, and can such be obedience to God? What does that say Brother Kurfees says? That some "act" makes a person a member of the church of God. Then "I" say: "If he join the denomination in 'the same act,' . . . then in that act he sins, and can such be obedience to God? No." I had just shown that baptism (?), according to the Baptist, makes one a member of the Baptist Church. Brother Kurfees and I believe that baptism is the "act" that makes one a member of the church of God. Therefore, if one is a member of a denomination and the church of God at the same time, "the same act" that made him a member of the one made him a member of the other. I do not believe a person can be a member of the church of God and a denomination at the same time; but if he is, as Brother Kurfees contends, then "the same act" that made him a member of the one made him a member of the other. And since it is a sin to join a denomination, and "the same act" that makes him a member of the denomination makes him a member of the church of God, then a sinful act makes him a member of the church of God. This shows that one cannot obey God and at the same time join a denomination. As I said in my former article: "If one could obey God and at the same time join a denomination-that is, be practicing sin, for it is a sin to join a denomination-he could become, and be. a member of the church of God and be a member of a denomination, too; but that is what he cannot do, for no man can obey God and at the same time be practicing sin." That is my statement in my other article which led up to the statement which my brother said misrepresented him. I urge that he turn and read that article again. It represents me. It misrepresents no one.

Again, Brother Kurfees says: "It is altogether unnecessary to reply to Brother Taylor's other misrepresentations of me as to whom I would or would not baptize, or to make any further reply at all to his irrelevant article." Those who read my article, as any article should be read before judgment is passed on it, will see that I did not misrepresent you, Brother Kurfees. As to whom you would or would not baptize, I simply pictured you or any other man who receives people from the denominations into the fellowship of the church without baptizing them. Answer these questions, and people can see whether or not I misrepresented you: (1) Would you baptize a person on the confession that a Baptist preacher demands? (2) Would you receive into the fellowship of the church one from the Baptist denomination baptized (?) upon the confession which a Baptist preacher demands? According to the Bible, you will have to answer "no" to the first question. According to-your position in your articles on "Bible Things by Bible Names," you have to answer "yes" to the second. Therefore, I pictured you aright. There is no use in your saying "misrepresentation." People who read the article can see that there is no misrepresentation.

I respect great men and give due consideration to what they say, but I do not accept anything that any man says when I find it out of line with the teaching of God's word.

Christ's Presence Within.

Our immediate obligation is that of being witnesses for Jesus Christ. How many of us know him? How many of us have had a talk with him to-day? How many of us dare trust our future into his hands? How many are willing to take that pierced hand and walk by his side until he calls you up higher, going where he sends you, speaking what he gives you to speak, carrying the burden that he lays upon your shoulders, enduring the ache of heart if need be that should come, taking the providences of God as they come? "You are to be witnesses for me," he says. How many of us can certify in the presence of a congregation that there is such a person as Jesus Christ? When did he talk with you last? When did you realize, as the two disciples did who are spoken of in the story, that as you are walking in the pathway of life you have found that there was a silent Person walking by your side, and you discovered the Man of sorrows, the Man of Galilee, was with you?-Selected.

Then and Now-Should There Be a Difference?

While I have heard but little, if anything, about it, I feel sure that some of my writings have been disliked in some quarters just because I contend that we can do things if we will. Aggressive writing and working is not pleasant to people who dislike to exert themselves. I here freely confess that my conscience, at times, smites me, because it looks like I am not doing enough to save souls and extend the cause of Christ. If my insistence that we can and should do more is in the slightest degree unpleasant to any of our readers, let me beg them to be charitable, for it is a matter of life or death with me; I feel that I must do it.

I have been thinking seriously, of late, of the difference in the results obtained in the days of the apostles and now. That there is a difference, a very great difference, we must all admit. But I want to know, should there be a difference? If so, why? I am frank to confess that I am not satisfied with the results in the little I have tried to do during the whole of my ministry. It looks so little in comparison with the results obtained in the days of the apostles. Listen to the following: "And believers were the more added to the Lord, multitudes both of men and women." (Acts 5: 14.) So great was the success of the work of the early Christians that their enemies spoke of them as "these that have turned the world upside down." (Acts 17: 6.) Have we ever made such an impression?

Let me ask again: Should there be such a difference in results obtained then and the results that we obtain now? I must contend that there should not be. It would be a mistake to say that people then were less prejudiced than now, hence the difference. Never in the history of the church was a doctrine so intensely hated as then. Every apostle was put to death but one, and the last we hear of him he is on the isle of Patmos, banished by the enemies of the cause of Christ. Read the blood-stained pages of history, and it will be easy to see that progress then met the most bitter and determined opposition-more so than in our day. Then why the difference? Well, I think I can tell you why the difference; and in doing so I will call attention to another difference-viz., the difference in the love, zeal, and unlimited sacrifices made by those early workers and the little we do. Let us take a few descriptive statements. First, hear Paul as he talks to the elders of the church at Ephesus: "I shrank not from declaring unto you anything that was profitable, and teaching you publicly, and from house to house," (Acts 20: 20.) Again, he says: "By the space of three years I ceased not to admonish every one night and day with tears." (Verse 31.) This looks like continued work, does it not? We see too little of it to-day. But more. Please to note the wisdom of those early workers. "For though I was free from all men, I brought myself under bondage to all, that I might gain the more. And to the Jews I became as a Jew, that I might gain Jews; to them that are under the law, as under the law, not being myself under the law, that I might gain them that are under the law; to them that are without law, as without law, not being without law to God, but under law to Christ, that I might gain them that are without law. To the weak I became weak, that I might gain the weak: I am become all things to all men, that I may by all means save some. And I do all things for the gospel's sake, that I may be a joint partaker thereof." (1 Cor. 9: 19-23.) In what Paul here says he did, I understand he simply put into practice the saying of our Lord: "Be ye therefore wise as serpents, and harmless as doves." (Matt. 10: 16.)

Time and space forbid a full delineation of the character of those early workers from a standpoint of their aggressiveness and intense love and devotion to the cause that made them gladly make any kind of sacrifice. The fact in the case is that those men believed with their whole being what they preached, and knew that the salvation of the souls of the people depended on their getting the message to them. Their message and conduct were perfectly consistent.

Now, may I not ask if we cannot find just as great difference now in the way we go about things and the way we feel about things and that of the early workers as exists between the results they obtained and the results we now obtain? Think of it as much as you please, and produce the man who can show any greater difference in the results they obtained and ours than exists between their love and ours, their zeal and ours, their sacrifices and ours, the time they put into the work and the time we put into the work. Where is the man who could possibly believe Paul could preach two little sermons on Sunday and attend Wednesday-night prayer meeting and stop with this? No, the daily business of those early preachers was to win souls to Christ and extend the cause of our Lord and Savior.

Let others feel and do as they may; but for me, I will state that I am not satisfied with any work I have ever tried to do; in other words, after it was finished, I could not but feel that I should have done more. And may the Father who loved me, and gave Christ to die that I might live, keep me ever feeling thus, and let me live till with my own eyes I shall see "believers the more added to the Lord, multitudes both of men and women." And, somehow, I cannot keep from feeling that this prayer will be answered.

The Lord willing, this will be posted on my forty-third birthday. I am glad to say I have never felt more like work in my life. Here is my hand and heart to every disciple who will join me in the prayer that shall be put into action for 1921 to be the greatest year in the history of his church, especially in our own day, as we will have to grow more before we are good enough to duplicate the work of the early preachers.

"Ye Shall Find Rest."

By three chief ways, I think, peace comes to men from Him who lived and died to make it possible. By his example first. For his example ever holds before us that one manner of thought and speech, of acting and of suffering, in which peace is found. Not thinking of ourselves, refusing to attend to the thought when it arises; not troubling about our own rights, or wishes, or position; never fancying that we are slighted; not dwelling on our own success or failure, not even on our own mistakes and misdoings, save with the one thought of doing better in the future. . . So shall we keep clear of vexing, miserable thoughts that wreck all inward peace whenever they prevail. And secondly, by the great disclosure that he came to make his peace is given. For he made men sure that God is love; and in his life and death we see how God loved and loves the world. As we watch him in the Gospels, we know whom we have believed; and we are certain that he never can betray us, or despise us, or be weary of us. . . . And lastly, by the forgiveness of our sins for his sake .-Francis Paget.

It matters not how strait the gate,
How charged with punishments the scroll;
I am the master of my fate;
I am the captain of my soul. —W. E. Henley.

Three Preachers Go From Pulpit to Plow, and Like the Change.

That preaching and plowing may go hand in hand to the advantage of both has been demonstrated by three stalwart preacher-plowmen in Pennsylvania. On a farm in Bucks County in that State these three men have raised a big crop of potatoes, wheat, and corn, besides chickens, pigs, and dairy products. There is a house on the place large enough to accommodate the families of all three. Their assets when they started, in addition to the farm, consisted of a few horses and cows, some farm implements, abundant enthusiasm, and an abiding faith in prayer. For six days each week they have labored mightily in the fields and on the seventh they have preached. Now at the end of their first season they appear to be more than satisfied. "This is the life," was, in effect, the litany they chanted, says Will R. Hammond, in the Philadelphia Public Ledger, when he asked them about their work the past summer and how they liked the change from pulpit to plow. To quote Mr. Hammond:

The three clergymen were engaged in bringing in "spuds" when our charioteer landed us in the heart of the spacious "ranch" out along the banks of the picturesque Neshaminy creek, just off the Doylestown-New-town pike. Wagon loads of monster potatoes were being taken from mother earth and shunted into the cellar of the clergymen's community house—a cellar piled high with good old-fashioned "Irish fruit" that will grace many a Philadelphia table ere the next ides of March shall have rolled around.

"How do I like farming? I say its wonderfui," was the smiling reply of the Rev. Samuel B. Booth, leader of the farm colony, a tall, upstanding figure of commanding prominence, athletic of build, with legs reminiscent of football days at old Harvard. He was wearing the puttees and khaki trousers that were part of the uniform he wore while serving as a Red-Cross chaplain behind the battle lines in France two summers ago. His black hair waved in the wind as he stood, a picture of outdoor health and happiness.

"What are you doing? Where is your harvest?" was asked of him. For answer he guided us out into the potato patch, where several other agrarians were filling baskets and dumping them into a wagon,

"Fine!" Our exclamation as we inspected several of the "murphies" was underliable. "Like it out here?" we continued, addressing a young spectacled man who was toting along a half-bushel basket. He turned out to be the Rev. W. F. Allen, until recently stationed at the Naval Proving Ground, Indian Head, Md., but now a full-fledged son of the soil for six days and preacher over week-ends.

A broad grin and a one-eyed wink was the answer. Mr. Allen seemed to be very much at home in the potato patch.

Our next introduction was to the Rev. Joseph R. Baird, who is licensed to hold services by his church and is studying theology under the direction of his partners. Mr. Baird was hugely enjoying himself in the potato patch and graciously went out of his way to show us the mounds heaped high in the cellar of the farmhouse ready for the market.

The idea of the Bucks County farm experiment started with Mr. Booth, a Harvard graduate and formerly a preacher in Philadelphia. He was a chaplain in France during the war, and when that was over he had a desire to get away from the conventional. His move to the farm was the result. Further:

Remembering the parable of the sower, sagaciously sought out good ground in which to sow his seed, and found it in the rich rolling Bucks County heath. Before long there came to him Mr. Allen, who had been reading much of the need of getting city folk back to the farm. Like Mr. Booth, this Maryland parson was sick of the crowded city and eager for the fresh air of the country. There they were joined by a third, who was seeking the pulpit by way of the plow-young Mr. Baird, a practical farmer of considerable experience.

They formed a partnership. Mr. Booth became general manager of the cooperative company. Mr. Allen was a handy man to have around, it developed, because he had at one time been a mechanic. With his inherent ingenuity, he became invaluable as the mender of "flivvers" and farm Implements, and is proficient at carpentry and the like. To Mr. Baird were assigned the dairy and live stock and the bookkeeping, for formerly he had been a bank cashier. The three men had one thing in common: they were tired of the city and anxious to make good "out in God's free country." Also, they had abiding faith in the ways of God Also, they had abiding faith in the ways of God and nature.

Through the summer they toiled unceasingly—up every morning at five o'clock, feeding the cattle and milking the cows, carrying the milk to market, plowing, harrowing, planting, weeding, spraying, digging until now—the harvest. Nor was there any week-end rest, for these preacher-farmers are like city firemen—subject to call on a moment's notice. They may turn from the hayrake to go indoors to marry a blushing pair or drop out of the threshing to minister at the bedside of the dying. "I've just come back from such a trip," said Mr. Booth, "Took the milk to the depot this morning, dropped over to administer the sacrament to a dying woman, stopped at another farmside to baptize four children, and at another to confirm a new member."

"And on Sundays?"

"Sunday is our busiest day," volunteered the tall parson. "Our headquarters here is the center of the Bucks County mission district. There are eleven charges in all under our jurisdiction. Four of them have permanent resident clergy, but the other seven are administered by the three of us here. Every Sunday, Allen is at Southampton, Baird at Somerton, and I at Langhorne. We cover up the other four during a part of the day."

Six days of rising at five o'clock to work on the farm and Sunday divided between the obliging auto and the mission pulpit—and still they say: "This is the life."

It was tough sledding from the word "go." The farm had to be restocked. They started out with six head of horses, a herd of six young cows, some fine pigs that have since produced a litter of ten sturdy sucklings, chickens in plenty, and some sheep. Next year they hope to increase their live stock. The farm itself needed improvements. For one thing, water had to be carried from the well by bucket. That was hard work for women folks from the city, so the trio of parsons set about first the installation of a gasoline engine that pumped water in an unceasing flow and made possible the installation of bathrooms. With this same engine they stored batteries that in turn supplied electric lights through all the house and down in the barn, where the incandescent bulb supplanted the oldfashioned lantern for early-morning milking.

"Has it panned out good from a financial standpoint?"

"Well, this first year we shall make enough to pay all expenses. No deficit. I guess that is not so bad," was the smiling leader's answer.

"And the barvest—what have you produced?"
"Our potatoes will run around 1.200 bushels," was his reply. "They are retailing now for about $1.75. We sell them for a dollar a basket wholesale. There is five-clothts of a bushel to the basket, and at 1,200 bushels you can figure out our income there.
"Our wheat will run about three hundred bushels from a fifteen-acre planting. It did not pan out so well, but we expect to do better next year. Corn will give us a big expect to do better next year. Corn will give us a big yield. It is too early yet for figures, for the corn is still to come in. We sold hundreds of ears of sweet corn in to come in. We sold hundreds of ears of sweet corn in season and found it profitable.

"Hay is fine. Look at those bulging barns. Somewhere around a hundred tons in there, of which we will be able to sell about eighty fons. It is worth thirty-two dollars a

"Although we have only a small herd of young cows, we have been doing eighty dollars' worth of milk business monthly.

"Those apples over in the orchard are worth a lot of money if we can find the time to pick and market them. We live on apples out here-a wonderful crop of them. Apple pies, apple dumplings, apple sauce, and just plain apples. Help yourself."

When asked as to his inspiration for this experiment, Mr. Booth stated that one of the things that prompted him to take up farming, aside from his wish to get away from the conventional, was that he wanted to demonstrate that a preacher need not necessarily be a parasite. The account

"For my own part, I like the freedom of the farm and the country. Out here it is possible to get the viewpoint of the workingman. A preacher cannot hope to know expertly of producing, of buying and selling, of business, unless he has actually engaged in it for himself. Out here you will find out the truth of things for yourself.

"Furthermore, after working like this you can go to people and talk to them in a practical way, and they must believe what you are talking about, for you know. sonally, I do not see how a preacher can be spiritually free when he is economically tied down. He has to preach to suit his parishioners: if they do not like his sermons, they soon tell him, and so often get rid of him. It so often happens that the congregation admires the pretty things said to them, but call for his resignation when he begins to tell the truth.

"Eventually we hope to make this a great colony for astors," said Mr. Booth. "We expect to build cottages all over the place. They can come out here and become shareholders in our proposition and farm with us, or they can come week days and work out their own little garden patch. This will be a center for spiritual refreshment and physical strength for all those who feel oppressed with the cares of the world and who want quiet and freedom from the world for a while. We will have here such a retreat center as has been proved out in England."

Upon the estate stands an old-fashioned stone barn that is soon to be converted into a chapel that will become the center of the community church life. Plans have been made for remodeling and improving it with modern church appurtenances.

"All in all, we are a very happy family out here, striving to do our part in producing the essentials of life, and at the same time ministering to the spiritual welfare of mankind," said Mr. Booth. "We are independent, we are not parasites, and, although we have not yet got rightly started, we hope to do many more things by the end of another season."

"And you are quite satisfied with the results of the experiment?

"Quite so; in fact, so much so," he replied, "that I would not change places with any man."

In fact, it was said by a friend that the stalwart parsonfarmer had recently declined two invitations from city pulpits, as he prefers to stay on the farm with his cows and chickens.-Literary Digest.

A Happy Time.

BY W. I., KARNES,

Friday, December 3, was the birthday of Brother J. O. Blaine. On that day he had been in this world eighty-five years. The church at this place, together with a number of his close friends, gave him a surprise birthday dinner. The day was a very happy one indeed. The ladies served a fine dinner at the church house. We met at eleven o'cleck, and had a number of short addresses before dinner. Brother Scobey, a former schoolmate of Brother Blaine's, was there, and made an inspiring talk. Brother David Lipscomb, of the Fanning Orphan School, was also present, and made a fine talk. The other talks were made by friends living in and about Portland. Brother Blaine thanked his friends for their kind remembrance of him in a very loving and tender way. He seemed as happy as a child at Christmas time. Everybody went away filled with dinner and with joy, happy because they had made some one else happy.

Brother Blaine in many respects is a wonderful man. While he is eighty-five years old, he is nevertheless full of life. He has been a useful man the whole of his long life. He is a close student of the Bible, and above everything else he loves to teach the sweet "old story" to others. Every one, so far as I know, loves Brother Blaine. He is a sweet, loving man of God. Every one is willing to trust him and confide in him. When he falls asleep, the church at this place will sorely miss him. I am sure it is the sincere wish and prayer of every member of the congregation at this place that he may live on as our teacher and as an example for both young and old in that which is pure and loving. Brother Blaine is in no respect a sectarian, but at the same time he does not compromise the truth of God.

Below is given a letter from Brother H. R. Moore, of Huntland, Tenn. Brother Moore was invited to the dinner, but could not come. The letter is self-explanatory.

Huntland, Tenn., December 2, 1920.—W. L. Karnes, Portland, Tenn.—Dear Friend: Your esteemed favor of recent date to hand, in which I am invited to attend a birthday celebration in honor of our mutual friend, James O. Blaine. Be assured it would afford me pleasure to attend and touch elbows with all concerned in the happy gathering of old friends. Prudence suggests that I deny myself of this pleasure, in view of the probability of bad weather and my feeble physical condition. Wife stresses these barriers.

Let me repeat, I appreciate the invitation and fully realize the appropriateness of the proposed tribute of respect to our grand old friend. The proposed surprise will afford him great pleasure. While waves of discontent and evil are sweeping over our great country, and so many are on lines of greed and graft, disregarding the nobler pur-suits of life, it is eminently becoming in all who are imbued with the spirit of our progressive Christian civilization to give time and energy to the elevating impulses that characterize such meetings as you name.

It may not be out of place to say that my acquaintance with J. O. Blaine began when students at Franklin College, about the year 1855, and has never been lost sight of, though not often together since I left college in 1857. There happened to be some things in common with us that impressed me on our first acquaintance. In other words, there was something about him that drew him closer to me than others were drawn. He carried the distinct and prominent marks of a thoroughbred and well-kept rural production. His raiment from head to foot was of the comfortable homemade texture and style. His general demeanor presented a blending of the green and the shy; but, with all this, he was a model, aspiring college student. His respectful bearing, good nature, good common sense, studious habits, and inclination to conform to recognized customs and regulations showed improvement from moon to moon and from year to year. His native ability to laugh and sing was cultivated and enjoyed by himself and many others. He as leader, with some others as helpers, offen rendered with much pathos old songs that were new then, such as "Old Kentucky Home," "Down on Suwanee River," "Nellie Bly," "Gentle Annie," "Old Black Joe," "Poor Uncle Ned," and others of the same style. These artists performed well at all religious services.

J. O. Blaine had the happy faculty of disseminating sunshine in his daily intercourse with others. He was a born leader among boys by continuous manifestations of kindness and respect for others. He was a ladies' man on the timid order, an ardent admirer of all, but, somehow, failed to capture one. After leaving college, he found a man's job from time to time amid the active doings and busy scenes of life.

As a citizen, as a teacher, as a church man, and as a man of affairs, he has maintained a place of prominence and efficiency in the front rank. But his shadow is now falling far to the east. He is nearing sunset in this transi-tory state of being. The trail he has made and left behind him is an open book, destined to be admired and utilized as the years come and go. May he live long to bold up a beacon light for the safe guidance of others, and may he be honored by many friends in celebrations like unto this.

Yours truly, sincerely, and fraternally, H. R. Moose.

About Our Missionaries.

BY NELLIE STRAITON.

Sister Sarah Andrews has been a missionary in Japan for about five years. The first three or four years were spent in Tokyo, where she helped in many ways, even while learning the language; but the past year has been especially fruitful. With a Japanese young lady as an assistant, she moved to Okitsu, where there were no other missionaries; and by means of a kindergarten, Sunday school. Bible classes, and much personal work, several have accepted Jesus Christ as their Savior, and others are almost ready to obey the gospel. Sister Andrews is very much in need of a complete rest from the strain and work to which she has been subjected since going to Japan. She plans to come to America in January for a visit to her home and the needed relaxation.

For many years Brother Sherriff, of South Africa, has worked and taught the story of Jesus and his message for sinners, and all this time has prayed that we might send others to his assistance; for he, one man alone, was able to touch only the very edge of the great work which is waiting to be done. When we pray earnestly and in Jesus' name, God listens to our prayers; and when we work zealously, and pray as we work, God in due time and in his own way, which is always best, answers our prayers. And now Brother Sherriff's prayers are about to be answered; for not only one, or even two, but six—three married couples—have volunteered for missionary service in South Africa. These six—Mr. and Mrs. Max Langpaap, Mr. and Mrs. W. N. Short, Mr. and Mrs. Gibbs—are making all necessary arrangements and hope to sail as soon as their passports are issued. Funds for their traveling expenses or contributions toward their regular support may be sent to F. B. Shepherd, Amarilio, Texas, or to Z. C. Thompson, or L. W. Babcock, Harper, Kan.; or if you send to me, I will gladly forward your gift for you.

Jesus As a Well-Doer.

BY B. P. CUFE.

On the occasion of the deaf-mute cure (Mark 7: 31-37) those who were recipients of the Master's magnificent mercy, in their utter astonishment at his miracle-working power, said: "He hath done all things well." That but reminds us of a statement closely allied to this, made earlier in the Scriptures: "And God saw everything that he had made, and, behold, it was very good." (Gen. 1: 31.) The reason these people in Mark 7 give for their conclusion is: "He maketh even the deaf to hear, and the dumb to speak." Their attitude toward the Savior's work is striking and pleasing

Sometimes those who fail to show an appreciation of the Christ are left by those who pose as friends to him and who have been befriended by him to be the first to acknowledge the greatness of his power. During the stay of Jesus in the world his enemies were sometimes constrained to speak in his praise. Two instances may be remarked here. The scribes and Pharisees said: "He saved others." They seem not to have understood the meaning of that judgment, however, for they followed it with a most unjust inference, couched in the statement: "Himself he cannot save." Pilate saw no way out but to say: "I find no crime in him."

In the opening of this deaf-mute's cars and in the destruction of the impediment in his speech we have an instance in which those who have been favored are apparently appreciative. Gratitude is always in order. It is acceptable on the sea and on the land. Ingratitude is always a bad symptom.

But had there been no voice that day to speak the praises of Him who ever did and ever does all things well, yet it is true that time, with its thousands of tongues, and eternity, with its own emphatic one, chime in to sing the strains of the ever-potent truth: "He hath done all things well." Myrials of witnesses attest the well-doing of Jesus. The many who were elevated by his miracles—the blind whose eyes were opened to look for the first time upon the stars of heaven and upon the flowers of earth; the deaf whose ears were unstopped that they might listen to the sweet songs sung to the glory of the Highest; the dead who were lifted from their tombs to the fervor of life as once possessed—all these and others, too, remind us that "he hath done all things well."

Jesus made the universe. "All things were made through him; and without him was not anything made that hath been made." (John 1; 3.) No star shines from the firmament above us but received its sparkle and its glow, all its respiendent beauty, from the Bright and Morning Star. No flower springs up to add luster and happiness to life on earth but that his breath give it fragrance and his touch its exquisite tints. No pebble on the shore, but that came "through him," He is the Maker of all; "and, behold, it was very good." He hath made all things well. Old age, heartaches, and all the pangs of this earthly life were not made by him primarily. These are the accounterments of sin. Sin came into the world, and by it death entered. One day the purging time will come. "No sin shall enter there," All the inhabitants of heaven would be justified in raising the happy anthem: "He hath done all things well,"

Jesus is "Lord of all" to his people. In his capacity as Supreme Ruler he does all things well. Must we, according to his rule now, drink at times from bitter cups? Let us learn to be as truly grateful for those as for the cups that seem sweet to us. Let us learn that when he dries up the stream on the hillside, it is only that we may wander to the valley below and there in a sequestered glen find a fountain so deep that the wintry snows cannot freeze it; a fountain so overshadowed by the hills above that it cannot be dried up by heat from the summer sun.

It would be almost superogation to say as regards his redemptive work: "He hath done all things well."

Of the intercession that Jesus makes for his own; of his presence with his church; of his never leaving nor forsaking the child of God; and of his every action one might truly say. "He doeth all things well." "Let us not be weary in well-doing." (Gal. 6: 9.)

A Unique Meeting.

BY JOHN E. DUNN.

The elders and the preacher of the church at Madili, Okla., arranged what I consider one of the most pleasant and profitable meetings it has ever been my pleasure to attend. Twenty-one preachers from Arkansas, Oklahoma, and Texas attended the meeting, which began on December 6 and closed on December 10. There were three sessions a day of two hours each. Some preacher who had been assigned to a subject would lead out with a forty-five minutes' discussion, and after the leader had finished there would be a number of ten-minute speeches on the same subject. This was an educational and profitable meeting. The Madill church is one of the very best. The elders, M. E. Ewing, E. E. Ayers, and Dr. J. D. Hart, are efficient. O. M. Reynolds is one of the best men and one of our most active preachers in the West. Everybody who attended this meeting enjoyed it.

The Courage of Faith That Wins.

They had toiled all the night long for nothing. Their experience was an argument against further adventure. "What's the use?" They had tried and failed. Fishing had proven to be unprofitable business. Then the Master came on board the empty boat. Did he accept the verdict. based upon a night's fruitful toil? No, but into the deeper water he bade them go once more with their nets. "O ye of little faith!" How easily discouraged and depressed! How often driven to despair! Throughout a single night we, too, have toiled for naught, but with every vain effort we have allowed ourselves to drift nearer the shore. Master's voice is heard on Galilee: "Out into the deep! To your ears and to your nets again!" Shall we not obey that challenge, even though last night's failure is written In statistics that cannot lie? Success lies in the way of all such obedience. Whatever the record of the past, the future holds rewards, for which we may be unprepared .-W. L. Goldsmith.

We shall awake from the dream presently to find that not pain, but sin, was the soul's menace, and that no true heart has ever lost its treasure. Ours is a troubled slumber; but let our eyes open for an instant to the glory about us, and all the terrors of the night are gone.—R. J. Campbell.

A Glad New Year.

BY MRS. T. L. POARCH.

With nineteen hundred and twenty gone,
To which we say farewell this morn,
With all its sorrows and its tears,
With all its hopes and all its fears,
With all the sunshine and the rain,
With all the anguish and the pain,
With all its days both good and bad,
With all its days both good and bad,
With all the glad days and the sad;
But let us keep the good it brought,
And all the lessons it hath taught,
Through days three hundred and sixty-five
Till we shall fade and die likewise.

And now we must bid thee adieu
To welcome the glad year so new;
To welcome thee, O rising sun
Of nineteen hundred and twenty-one;
To welcome thee, O stars of night,
And thrice to welcome pale moonlight.
For when the dusky shadows creep,
And all the world is fast asleep,
How beautiful if then is seen
The glimmering of its silver sheen,
Which makes a world of darkness light
When clouds have vanished from our sight!

And now, O glad New Year, so great, We trust that there will be no hate Within the breast of any one In nineteen hundred and twenty-one; But that the breezes of the spring Will blow sweet peace on zephyr wing, And that the summer winds shall blow Sweet peace as pure as crystal snow; And that the chilly autumn weather Will then have found the world made better, So that the snowy frosts of winter Shall find no footprint of a sinner.

But could this great, good work be done
In nineteen hundred and twenty-one,
This world would be a paradise
'Neath heaven and the starry skies,
Where all could in contentment dwell
Too sweet for mortal tongue to tell.
But—ah!—how sad, how sad the thought,
'Tis hard to live just as we ought!
But may we all more careful be
While sailing o'er life's rugged sea,
So that our frail boat drift no more,
But gently glide to heaven's shore.

And when the first glad rising sun
Of nineteen hundred and twenty-one
Shall fade behind the western sky,
O may our souls be wafted high
Upon the banner of our King,
Whose praises holy angels sing.
And may we to him daily pray
That he will lead us o'er life's way,
And that our frail boat he will guide
Until we reach death's riverside,
To there await the summons home
When he shall sweetly whisper, "Come."

And if life's short race should be run In nineteen hundred and twenty-one, O may there be sweet memories dear, Like memories of the fading year, To live and bloom somewhere within Their hearts if we have made sweet friends Along life's pathway here below, Where chilly winds so oft do blow. And if we should this year pass through To nineteen hundred and twenty-two, O may our few short days be spent For Him whose peace brings sweet content.

If one is silent when he hears what he knows is not true; if he fails to contradict what he knows is false, he becomes to some extent responsible for the falsehood and helps to give it currency. His responsibility is increased if he is in a position where he is supposed to know the truth, for his silence is regarded as a confirmation of the falsehood.—Selected.

In sending contributions, be sure and state whether they are intended for the Home Orphans' Fund, the Armenian and Syrian Fund, or the Poland Fund. I should be glad if more of the contributions were designated for use in providing for orphans in this country, since there are constant appeals from destitute families close to us. The Great Moment.

There are many great and exultant moments in our lives -moments in which some new, heretofore unfelt motive takes us into its power, when some new work for us and some new power in us starts forth and makes life seem fresh and green, like a spring morning that forgets all the stains and storms that have gone before. But among all such moments there is none that can compare with that in which duty passes into love-when morality, reaching itself out into eternity, asserts its sameness of nature with the service that the glorified nature is to render to God in the heavenly city, so that the obligation of honesty in our bargains is seen to rest on the same sanctions and to be lustrous with the same beauty now that will belong to the singing and everlasting songs and the casting of the crowns before the Savior's feet-the moment when our life thus knows Christ and the power of his resurrection.-Phillips Brooks.

The Christian Pilgrimage.

BY C. V. EVANS.

On a pilgrimage we journey
Through the wilderness of life
To those mansions Jesus promised
When we pass this world of strife.

On the way are rugged mountains Over which our feet must tread; Stormy seas must we sail over, Fraught with Satan's snares to dread.

Should we sail into a tempest
Through the course, which Jesus made,
Jesus gives us strength and courage
In the words, "Be not afraid."

When we feel that we are weary,
Or the journey seems too long,
Thoughts like these are soon forgotten
In the joyous words of song.

So each day we journey nearer
To that blest eternal home
Where there's peace and joy forever,
Where we'll never need to roam.

"Did Jesus Ever Live?" By U. G. WILKINSON.

I have just been reading a little tract bearing the title, "Did Jesus Ever Live?" which purports to be a debate between John Haynes Holmes, a Unitarian preacher of New York City, and Prof. George W. Bowne, A.M., one of the editors of the Truth Seeker, a leading infidel paper of the country, also published in New York City, Professor Bowne being a genuine infidel of a very pronounced type. As I do not agree with either, it shall not be my purpose in this article to undertake to prove that Jesus ever lived (a question which, if not self-evident, is at least res adjudicata); but I shall only undertake to offer some criticisms and strictures on the methods of the men in their attempts to arrive at the truth of the matter. Both of them admit that the New Testament is an uninspired history, of no higher authority than any other human production; that it contains many faults and errors, many things that are unhistoric and untrue. They seem to differ only as to the degree of trustworthiness and reliable truth found in the Gospels. The Unitarian seems to accept the fact that Jesus is an historic character, although rejecting his divine character and much that is taught about him in the Gospels as untrustworthy and even untrue. The infidel rejects the whole thing as of no historic value, makes Jesus an unhistorical character, a myth, a creature of the imagination of his disciples. We shall see by what processes these selfexalted critics of things ancient, holy and divine, arrive at their conclusions, and if they can satisfactorily answer the question asked so long ago of good old Job: "Knowest thou it, because thou wast then born? or because the number of thy days is great?" (Job 38: 21.)

For illustration, Professor Bowne almost begins his argument with this astonishing statement: "Mark represents Jesus as being a mere man." The only thing necessary to show the utter falsity of this statement is to read the first verse of the Gospel of Mark, where is the very explicit statement that he is the Son of God. Then read the last two verses of the Gospel of Mark, in which he tells us explicitly, after giving a full and complete account of Jesus' resurrection from the dead, that he was carried up into heaven, and sat on the right hand of God. These two statements are an index to the teachings of the entire Gospel. But this infidel statement is about as reliable as any that I have ever seen them make. He says Mark represents him as a mere man. The facts are that Mark explicitly teaches from first to last just what all the New Testament teaches, that he is the Son of God, and as such is at the right hand of God, reigning as "King of kings, and Lord of lords."

But the infidel proceeds: "According to Matthew and Luke, he was a demigod." This means, of course, that Matthew and Luke give an account of his immaculate conception and birth. But as no other New Testament writer teaches anything in conflict with this fact, but all assume it as a conclusive fact, it must be that all taught it as well as these two, Professor Bowne continues: "John insists that he was God himself." Of course, But John, in perfect harmony with all the others, particularly shows that he is the Word, the Lamb, the Son of God—showing only that he is God in the same sense that any son is the same in nature, etc., as is his father.

But this infidel further states that "Paul . . . represents Jesus as little more than an idea." To show how utterly false is this statement again, numerous passages might be quoted from almost any page of Paul's Epistles, See 1 Cor. 15, where he argues so conclusively as to Jesus' resurrection from the dead as the very fundamental fact upon which all gospel truth depends-without which "our preaching [is] vain, and your faith is also vain;" "ye are yet in your sins;" "and we found false witnesses," etc. (Verses 14-17.) And as the strongest proof of this fact so real to him, he cites as witnesses the very men used as such in the Gospels, as well as the authors of the Gospels themselves. In fact, no truth seemed to be so evident to Paul, so absolutely true, as the fact that Jesus Christ, descended from Abraham through the royal line of David, born of a woman, virgin born, a real man, living as a man, dying for sin, raised from the dead the third day, just as recorded in the Gospels and as foretold by the older scriptures, was, is, and must ever be the highly exalted Son of God, "in whom dwelleth all the fullness of the Godhead bodily" (Col. 2: 9), given "a name above every name" (Phil, 2: 8, 9), who will come again to judge the world, to punish the wicked and reward the righteous (2 Thess. 1: 7-10), etc. This fact not only completely revolutionized his life to an extent unknown to the history of any other man, but as completely controlled him in every act and word of all his future long and most active life. To cite passages in proof of this would be to cite his entire writings and teaching, as well as the Acts of the Apostles, and especially the Gospel of Luke, both of which books he is undoubtedly the principal author of. As special passages, read Rom. 1: 1-4; 2 Tim. 2: 8; Gal. 3; and many others.

Again we quote Professor Bowne: "Now we assert, without fear of contradiction, that the Christ of Paul and the Jesus of the Gospels are two entirely different beings." How remarkable indeed! In fact, I would consider it a much easier task to prove that the Washington of the American Revolution and the Washington who was the first President of the United States were two entirely different beings. The historic criticism by which the last fact might be established would, as I conceive, be much more satisfactory. But this is as substantial as any claim of infidelity that I have ever had my attention directed to.

Another false claim of the infidel is that there is a conflict in the birthplace of Christ, because Matthew makes him to be born in Bethlehem, and yet he is called Jesus of Nazareth and was brought up in Nazareth. Both Matthew and Luke tell us that he was born in Bethlehem. Luke gives the details of his birth, and Matthew tells why he dwelt in Nazareth, in fulfillment of a prophecy, and also gives details. But could an infidel be expected to inform himself as to facts, or to state them if he knew them? A ten-year-old schoolboy could easily learn why he was born in Bethlehem and yet called "Jesus of Nazareth" from the simple statements of Matthew and Luke.

Professor Bowne several times refers to scholars and tells us they are not the least impressed by the wonderful character and matchless teachings of Jesus, etc. But it should be understood that when Professor Bowne speaks of scholars he refers to those materialistic philosophers, so called, who have spent their time and studies in viewing the remains of ancient bone piles, studying "frogology," trying to learn how far back in history our ancestors were tadpoles, or trying to compute the probable length of star beams, etc.; who, perhaps, never gave five minutes of their life in trying to learn the relationship of man to an infinite Being, and his duty as such; disposing of matters of infinity in the realms of spirit, of faith, hope, love, with a sweep of the hand and a guess; making us the helpless puppets of inexorable law, no more responsible for rational conduct nor accountable for our actions, whether good or bad, than an orange is for being pleasant to the taste or a dead carcass for stinking.

But enough as to Professor Bowne; and now just a word as to Dr. Holmes. He makes the statement that what is said about Jesus by the writers of the Gospels "is what we have in every biography-a statement of what a certain writer thinks and believes about his hero." "Our Gospel writers were biographers, stating what they thought about a man named Jesus." Now the truth is that perhaps nothing could be further from the truth than these statements of Dr. Holmes concerning the writers of the Gospels. Instead of stating what they thought or believed about their hero, they state only facts in the most simple and childlike manner, making no comments, venturing no suggestions, deducing no inferences. They record the simple acts and statements of Jesus in the simplest possible manner, as if they were too astounding in their divine sublimity to need more than a simple narration. What human art could gild the refined gold or paint the lily? What art of human invention could garnish more gloriously the blue, star-spangled heavens, or improve by the touch of human hands the matchless jewels of the Pleiades? The parables are related in his own words without comment or attempt at explanation of the lesson intended to be taught, all the explanations given being his own. And with what matchless simplicity are we told of the raising of the daughter of Jairus, the widow's son, and Lazarus from the dead, the stilling of the tempest, the feeding of the five thousand, etc.! The history of that age records no such a character; nor the history of former ages, neither sacred nor secular; nor the history of subsequent ages. The character depicted in the Gospels stands alone. Attempts at comparison with any other history, with any other character in any age, are perhaps as ineffectual as to compare the glowworm to the sun at noonday. All exceptions prove the rule, and all rules prove the exceptions. If he ever for one moment doubted his divinity, the fact that he came from God and went to God, was the Son of God, the heir of all things, was with God in the making of worlds and would forever be with him as their Ruler and Governor-I say, if he ever doubted this overwhelmingly sublime truth for one instant. no act of his, no utterance of his as recorded by his biographers, ever betrayed the fact. He knew whence he came and whither he goeth. "He cannot deny himself." Tim, 2: 13.) Nor is there one act or word that would for a single moment compromise the dignity and majesty of such a Being. "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest," (Matt. 11: 28.) "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth," (Matt. 28: 18.) What sublime, what awful pretensions! But who ever thinks of them as empty bombast, as an undignified boast, a blasphemous robbery of God? They fit in exactly with everything that is said by him, everything done by him, everything claimed for him in the Gospels-yea, in the entire New Testament. How would such utterances sound coming from Moses, Socrates, Paul. or Benaparte-yea, or any other being in heaven or in earth, except God himself or his Son, Jesus Christ, of the seed of David, described and set forth in the New Testament as the Savior of men?

A New Missionary. BY E. N. GLENN.

In 1911, while spending a few days in El Paso, Texas, I came in contact with a Mexican preacher who was at that time peddling fruit for a living; yet he and his wife were doing some missionary work among the Mexicans. I made a talk at their little meeting, and baptized three converts for him. When I returned to El Paso to live, two years ago, no trace of these people could be found. They had moved from their former residence, and I searched in vain for them till I discovered some information last month in some old city directories. I lost no time in following out the clue, and on Thanksgiving Day I found them out on a ranch a few miles from the city.

After a few-minutes' talk I said: "Martinez, the Lord needs you in the city to preach the gospel to your people, who are daily dying without God and without hope of salvation. The day is far spent, and the night will soon come, when no man can work." He said: "Brother, I have often thought of this, and I am ready to do all I can for the Lord."

He was at work in the field when I found him. We went by the house, and I saw his good wife, who recognized me. They treated me very courteously, and I arranged to return and conduct a little meeting at his house to-day (December 5). I saw "The Great Legacy," and "McGarvey's Sermons" in his library. He studied, when young, for the priesthood in the Catholic Church; but he finally learned the "way of the Lord," and says he is content to follow the word of God for his faith and practice.

Brethren, I consider this a rich find, and I want to share it with the Lord's people everywhere who wish to have fellowship in this great work. Can we not start a Mexican mission along the border of Mexico here in El Paso? The field is ready, and now is the time to sow the seed of the kingdom. After due consideration, I have decided to publish these facts to the brotherhood and with their cooperation arrange for Brother Martinez to open a Mexican mission at El Paso. I am ready to receive all funds sent here for this purpose. They will be deposited in the bank. and due acknowledgment will be made to the donors. A place for meetings must be rented, and a few leaflets should be printed at once in the Spanish language, to be used to good advantage in this good work. Brethren, let me hear from you at once concerning this work. I hope, with prayer, that your hearts will be stirred to action, causing you to write at least a word of encouragement, promising to help in a financial way according to your ability. My address is 2310 Pittsburg Avenue, El Paso, Texas.

Humility.

The beginning of strength is to know our weakness, and yet we must not dwell on it. The worst thing possible would be, of course, to hover over the thought, "How very weak I am! I am always going wrong;" to excuse ourselves because of it. "I cannot help this or that," or to moan over it. We thus let humbleness itself canker or choke like a weed the springs of life. Yet we must, from time to time, take one honest look at our weakness; we must have a solid, sensible conviction as to what it is or we shall not find the remedy for it; we must, on the other hand, never acquiesce in it as a necessity of our constitution. And then, if that Accusing Spirit taunt us with our weakness, as he will in order to keep us weak and low; if some of those who ought to strengthen us "cast the same in our teeth," as the sons of the prophets told Elisha that his influence was passing away from him with the departure of Elijah, . . we have but to answer as he answered: "Yea, I know it, hold ye your peace. I know my weakness, but it concerns you not; me and my Lord it does concern; and he out of weakness will make me strong."-Selected.

MISCELLANY

Dave Wallace (for the elders) and A. L. Seymour (for the deacons), Amarillo, Texas, send for publication in the the deacons), Amarillo, Texas, send for publication in the Gospel Advocate a report of funds collected and forwarded to the African mission. Addressing "the brethren in Christ," they say: "We certify that we have audited the accounts of Brother F. B. Shepherd's missionary funds sent to Brother Sherriff in Rhodesia, Africa, and we take pleasure in giving you the results of our examination—to wit: Amount received and sent, August 1, 1918, to July 15, 1920, $1,463.12; receipts from Brother Sherriff for above, $1,463.12; amount received and sent since July 15, 1920, for which receipts have not had time to return, $291.25; amount on hand in Amarillo National Bank to the credit of Forest Vale Mission, December 1, 1920, $39.86." 0 0 0

A brother, B. M. Strother, of McAlester, Okla... sends one of the long imitation typewritten circular letters of Ashley S. Johnson, of Kimberlin Heights, Tenn., appealing to the churches of Christ and to Christians generally to feed some young preachers; and he asks that "the brotherhood" be advised from this office "on their duty herein," "or report facts pertaining thereto." If Brother Strother will carefully read the Johnson letter, he will find the following sentence: "I plead with you to read, or cause to be read, this epistle to all the holy brethren—church, Bible school, and C. E. [italics mine—Editor], and to bring it to the attention of the Christians generally." "C. E." is an abbreviation for "Christian Endeavor," and indicates where the writer of the letter stands in regard to that institution. The Gospei Advocate thinks Christians should studiously avoid supporting that institution or being supported by it, and should stand aloof from any association with it. sociation with it. 0 0 0

A. O. Colley writes from Dallas, Texas, December 20:
"This year closes, like others I have seen, with some regrets, but with many thanks and much praise to our Heavenly Father for his goodness toward us. We regret that we were not able to enter every open door and help every weak church to plant itself more firmly. We have not been able to do as much in helping others as we would every weak church to plant itself more firmly. We have not been able to do as much in helping others as we would like on account of our own expense in adding to our building. After a few more months we shall be much better equipped for our work than we have ever been. Our growth is quite gratifying and encouraging. There is scarcely a week that we do not have new recruits. Many are coming to this great city and joining hands with the faithful workers. There is also much to do to meet the demands of the hour. We are trying to give wholesome teaching to our young people, and we have a greater the demands of the hour. We are trying to give whote-some teaching to our young people, and we have a greater number of them here than any church of Christ I have ever seen. We have some good teachers in our Sunday-morning Bible classes, who delight the youngsters under their care with fresh and good lessons for them. I love the work here, and am well respected and sustained by the church as their servant, or evangelist. The elders are the work here, and am well respected and sustained by the church as their servant, or evangelist. The elders are also respected for their good work of overseership, as are also the deacons in their work. There is a general good feeling among us, for which we are very thankful. We hope for greater things the coming year under our Father's care. Greetings to the faithful in Christ."

0 0 0 The following note was addressed to Brother McQuiddy by E. S. Jelley, Kankhal, British India, under date of November 11: "I gratefully acknowledge receipt of your letter of September 27, inclosing a check. Most of us are fairly well. I have just returned from a trip to Bombay and the Ahmednagar District, distant some eleven hundred miles. There has been plenty of rain in the greater part of India, but there is famine in the Ahmednagar District, and hence most of the brethren have been compelled to go to Bombay and elsewhere to work. I visited many of them, and was truly impressed with the squalor of the places in Bombay where they are compelled to live. I am arranging for two preachers to systematically visit the brethren of the dispersion and break bread with them. On this trip I had the pleasure of bringing five persons the brethren of the dispersion and break bread with them. On this trip I had the pleasure of bringing five persons to Christ, including a Hindu preacher of the Reformer sect named 'Vithoba.' I had been trying to win him since 1912. Also some brethren were reclaimed. A heathen monk visits us. He confesses Christ, and I have hopes that he will openly preach him even before he decides to be baptized. We are distributing many Scripture portions—mostly selling them at one-half cent per copy—of Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John. We make no profits; but I would rather sell them than to give them away, for a man will read what he buys. There is a Brahman resident of the same tenement with us, who is striving hard to get us driven out. He has not succeeded so far, but has made a lot of unpleasantness."

Arthur B. Tenney, Harper, Kan., sends the following readable report of work being done in and around Harper, as well as abroad, by the brethren at that place: "It is to be hoped that Southern Kansas will soon be having more mission work done than is being done at present. The demand for preachers is supplied better than in most The demand for preachers is supplied better than in most sections of the country, judging by reports in the papers. The first Sunday in each month I preach to the brethren and others at Amorita, Okla. A. E. Freeman did the preaching in their meeting in October. He is to return next year. On the second and fourth Sundays I preach at a mission point twenty-five miles from here. The prospects are encouraging. S. A. Bell has some mission work started at Rago, where he goes each Sunday evening. H. J. Sudbury assists the Rosedale brothren, near Walstarted at Rago, where he goes each Sunday evening. H. J. Sudbury assists the Rosedale brethren, near Waldron, each Lord's day. B. F. Rhodes does some preaching on Sundays. The Sunday-morning services at Harper are given to teaching the lessons in consecutive chapters, one each Sunday. Several good speeches are made by different members, and some one of the brethren preaches at the evening services. The church here has grown much, chiefly through the locating of brethren for the college. About twenty-five students of Harper College have obeyed the gospel this year thus far. The Harper church is assisting various mission enterprises, home and have obeyed the gospel this year thus far. The Harper church is assisting various mission enterprises, home and foreign. Harper College is constantly growing, and has a student body of around three hundred. Three new buildings are used this year for the first time. The endowment of the college is now considerably over two hundred thousand dollars, and the school is only about six years old. Bulletins are issued each quarter. Two literary societies furnish valuable training to the students. The church and school are in harmony, and the town is favorable to it. The faculty is strong in literary attainments and in devotion to Christian work."

With pleasure we give to our readers the following commendatory note from Foy E. Wallace, Sr., sent from San Benito, Texas, December 14: "I have just read in the Gospel Advocate of December 9 an attack on the editor on his war record. I have been aggrieved for sometime at what seems to me to be an unholy war that is being waged in certain quarters on the Advocate, a paper that has stood for the defense of the gospel before these men were ever heard of. We owe much to the Advocate just at this time, because it appears that it is the only weekly that we have that is coming out boldly against this mathat we have that is coming out boldly against this malignant form of materialism that is hurting the churches lignant form of materialism that is nurting the churches everywhere. We have a large sentiment of it in this Lower Rio Grande Valley. One who is not in touch with it cannot understand the undercurrent that goes with it. It is not only wrong, but the spirit of it is had wherever it gets a hold. I do not accuse the other papers of being converted to the false ideas, but that they seem to be under the influence of those men who do hold to it. Silence on these important things in these times of distress here on these important things in these times of distress because of these false issues makes it just about as bad as cause of these talse issues makes it just about as bad as if they did accept it. It appears now that any kind of a hold that can be gotten on the Advocate to break down its influence is the thing to do by this opposition. I do not say this because of any special hold the Advocate has on me. If it has ever spoken one word for me or to help me in the least way, I have never heard of it. I was never in the Advocate office but about twice in my life. me in the least way, I have never heard of it. I was never in the Advocate office but about twice in my life. I just met Brother McQuiddy, who was too busy to pay any attention to me at the time, and I do not know by his manner that he was even glad to have me in the office. Brother Sewell and our dear old Brother Lipscomb were exceedingly kind and courteous to me. I have never met any of the other men on the Advocate except my good old friend, F. W. Smith, who has helped me to make some hard fights for the cause in Texas. He is one of God's noblemen. So what I may say is not from selfish motives or because of any strings that the paper may have on me, but in pure love of the truth and for protection of the church against some false issues. It appears that we must turn to the Advocate for this defense. So far as I can see, and I am opposed to war, Brother McQuiddy took the only course during the war that any man could take and not be an anarchist or a Bolshevist. May the Advocate live long to battle for the truth in its plain defense of it. If it had not been for the Advocate, the cause of digression probably would have swept the State before the people knew of these fellows who are now fighting the paper."

Remittances will be at our risk when sent by express or post-office money order, in registered letter, or by draft payable to our order.

When changing your pest-office address, tell us your old as well as your new address; otherwise two papers might be charged to you. This paper is mailed regularly to all subscribers until definite orders in writing are received and all arrears paid in full. If you wish us to stop your paper, write us to that effect; but do not ask it unless you have paid all arrears, if there are any. Do not ask your postmaster to attend to it for you, but do it yourself.

The date on your tab shows the time to which your subscription is paid. When money is received, the date will be changed, which will answer for a receipt. Two weeks' time must ordinarily occur from the time your remilitance is sent before the tab on your paper is changed; if not changed by that time, notify us at once.

Subscribers, after paying for their papers, will favor us by noting whether the date on the address label is changed, and, if it is not changed within a month, by writing to us. We are careful, but mistakes may occur or letters may be lost. Our rule is to change the date on the day payment is received; but the mechanical work of correcting and printing the list takes time, and payments even from near-by places may not appear the first week. Credits for payments from a distance may be even more delayed. Mistakes are easily rectified if prompt notice is given.

The Duty of Churches and Preachers. BY J. C. M'Q.

On page 6 will be found an article copied from the Literary Digest, entitled "Three Preachers Go from Pulpit to Plow, and Like the Change." The article treats preaching simply as a profession, whereas, if I understand the Bible, every child of God is under obligation to teach the truth to the full extent of his ability. It is true that there are certain men who labor in word and doctrine and who are public proclaimers of the gospel, while others are not; yet the early disciples that were scattered abroad went everywhere preaching the word, announcing the glad

The Literary Digest writes as if it were something new for preachers to farm while preaching. It has been customary with the preachers of the church of Christ throughout the South to make a living with their own hands and then preach as the opportunity presented itself. I call to mind many preachers, such as John D. Floyd and W. H. Dixon, who labored on the farm, looked after the farm during the week, and then preached every Lord's day. They not only did this, but they preached funerals, married people, held protracted meetings, and did all that any regular preacher of the gospel does. I have in mind an insurance company that has in its employ some ten preachers, more or less, who labor during the week at the insurance business and then preach every Lord's day. Some of these preachers hold protracted meetings, conduct prayer meetings, preach funerals, and marry people.

I am satisfied that these preachers could do more if they were devoting all their time to teaching the truth, if they were visiting and teaching from house to house every day in the week. The most efficient teaching is the teaching that is done in a private way and that is done every day in the week, backed up by a consistent, Christian life. It is probable that some of these preachers are wronging the churches in failing to receive support from them, as did Paul the Corinthian church, "For what is there wherein ye were made inferior to the rest of the churches, except it be that I myself was not a burden to you? forgive me this wrong," (2 Cor. 12; 13.) The man who has the gift and the ability to preach the gospel should do so. and should not turn aside to some secular calling. consecrated, faithful minister, thoroughly equipped to preach the word, will find it necessary to make tents, provided the church of God does its duty. The word of God is clear upon this subject. "Even so did the Lord ordain that they that proclaim the gospel should live of the gospel." (1 Cor. 9: 14.) It is true that Paul did not always avail himself of this means of support which the Lord had provided for the faithful minister. While he made tents in Corinth and was not a burden to the Corinthian church, he begged of the Corinthians to forgive him the wrong that he had done them. Whenever churches failed to support him, he labored with his own hands, ministering unto his own necessities and to the necessities of those that were with him. "I coveted no man's silver, or gold, or apparel. Ye yourselves know that these hands ministered unto my necessities, and to them that were with me. In all things I gave you an example, that so laboring ye ought to help the weak, and to remember the words of the Lord Jesus, that he himself said. It is more blessed to give than to receive." (Acts 20: 33-35.) He thus left us an example that we may do likewise. If churches fail to supply the necessities of the faithful minister, then he should. Ilke Paul, support himself with his own hands, and do so without murmuring or complaining. Paul says: "Not that I speak in respect of want; for I have learned, in whatsoever state I am in, therein to be content. I know how to be abased, and I know also how to abound: in everything and in all things have I learned the secret both to be filled and to be hungry, both to abound and to be in want. I can do all things in him that strengtheneth me." (Phil. 4: 11-13.) We learn also that his labors in Thessalonica were arduous. "For ye remember, brethren, our labor and travail: working night and day, that we might not burden any of you, we preached unto you the gospel of God." (1 Thess, 2: 9.) But while Paul was thus toiling and laboring in Thessalonica, he was not forgotten by the Philipplans, for he tells us: "And ye yourselves also know, ye Philippians, that in the beginning of the gospel, when I departed from Macedonia, no church had fellowship with me in the matter of giving and receiving but ye only; for even in Thessalonica ye sent once and again unto my need. Not that I seek for the gift; but I seek for the fruit that increaseth to your account." (Phil. 4: 15-18.) Churches should rejoice when they have an opportunity to cooperate with a faithful minister as he preaches "Jesus Christ, and him crucified," in a destitute field. No preacher who thus labors and toils should feel that he is a parasite and that he is not as independent as any other man simply because the churches support him while he is doing this work. He simply goes as one sent by the Lord Jesus Christ and as a messenger approved and indorsed by the churches that support him. We learn also that while Paul was making tents with Aquila and Priscilla in Corinth and reasoning in the synagogue every Sabbath he was in want. This same Philippian church relieved his want, so that he began at once to devote all of his time to testifying to the Jews that Jesus was the Christ. He tells us in 2 Cor. 11: 9: "And when I was present with you and was in want, I was not a burden on any man; for the brethren, when they came from Macedonia, supplied the measure of my want; and in everything I kept myself from being burdensome unto you, and so will I keep myself." While he was thus laboring with his own hands making tents with Aquila and Priscilla at Corinth, the Philippian church sent unto him Silas and Timothy with a gift.

From such scriptures and examples it is evident that churches are under obligation to support the minister of the gospel, and that no minister of the gospel should consider himself a burden simply because he is receiving support in the way that God has ordained that he should receive it. The man who is able to do more good in preaching the gospel than in any other way and who is gifted in that respect has no right to turn from preaching the gospel to a secular calling; to do so is a prostitution of the talent that God has given him. A minister who is truly called of God to preach the gospel and who, with Paul, realizes that "woe is unto me, if I preach not the gospel," will never cease to proclaim it simply because Christians fail to do their duty. If the necessity is forced upon him of supporting himself, he will still preach the gospel as he has opportunity, being content in want as well as in abundance. Paul has left every minister of the gospel an example in this respect that is worthy of imitation. Every minister of the gospel should educate the churches to support those who proclaim the gospel, and should teach them this truth as clearly as they teach alien sinners, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." No preacher should be so fearful and timid as to fail to teach Christians that the Lord has ordained that they who proclaim the gospel should live of the gospel. All ministers should say boldly and fearlessly to the church: "If I have sowed unto you spiritual things, is it a great matter if I shall reap your carnal things?" No one is fit to preach the gospel who feels that he can do more good in some other calling than in preaching Jesus Christ. A man who would preach simply for money is foolish and is not fit to preach the gospel of Christ. While it is the duty of the preacher to labor for the salvation of souls, so it is the duty of every Christian to work in that way in which he can do most for the honor and glory of God.

L. R. Burress, Again. BY F. W. SMITH.

Continuing the notice of Brother Burress' kindly criticism, I call attention to the following; "There is no centralized church revealed in the Scriptures this side of heaven. Our Lord did not give to any one church, nor to all of the churches, the right to make control over each other," By "centralized church" he means, I presume, a religious body with localized headquarters presided over by some human head. Of course the New Testament knows nothing of such an institution, and he is quite right in saying "our Lord did not give to any one church, nor to all of the churches, the right to make control over each other." Each church or congregation was left free and independent of all others, bound together by no organic law. The only tie that was intended to bind them one to another was the law of Christian love.

Our friend is also right when he says the churches of the New Testament "did not legislate, but meditated upon the things taught by the holy Book;" but that is not the way Baptist churches proceed. They have legislated regarding a number of things. Take, for instance, their practice of requiring candidates for baptism to relate an experience before baptism in which they say: "I believe that God for Christ's sake has pardoned my sins." That is purely Baptist legislation in matters religious, for not one word of it can be found in the New Testament. Again, they require the church to vote on receiving members into its fellowship, which is nothing less than legislating—making a law that is wholly foreign to the New Testament.

Brother Burress shoots wide of the mark when he says of New Testament churches: "Majority rule was given to the churches," The passage he submits to prove this assertion places Baptist doctrine in a bad plight. The church at Corinth was commanded to withdraw fellowship from the man guilty of fornication. (1 Cor. 5: 1-5.) Because it is said, "Sufficient to such a man is this punishment, which was inflicted of many" (2 Cor. 2: 6). Brother Burress seems to think that the church at Corinth took a vote as to whether they would withdraw from the fornicator or not, and that the word "many" proves his "majority rule." In the first place, the word "many" does not necessarily mean a majority, and, in the second place, it has our friend's church voting as to whether it will obey a command of God.

Our friend also says: "Baptists make much of water." That is a fact, and yet, according to their "theory," it has nothing to do with one's salvation. I cannot see why so much should be made of a thing that plays no part in the salvation of a soul. Now, since it takes water baptism to make one a Baptist and a member of a Baptist church, we can understand why "Baptists make much of water;" but since they deny that it has anything to do with one's salvation, we are at a loss to understand why they want to be Baptists and members of the Baptist Church. They also lay great stress on the administrator of baptism, none being scripturally baptized except at the hands of a Baptist preacher. Why lay such stress on the administrator of an institution that is nonessential to salvation? After stating several things regarding baptism, Brother Burress says: "Hence the carefulness of Baptists concerning baptism." It is impossible to suppress the constant recurrence of the question, why such carefulness regarding a thing that cuts no figure in one's salvation? He says: "None but new creatures in Christ Jesus can be buried with him in baptism." If they "are new creatures in Christ Jesus" before baptism, why be so careful about baptism? The apostle Paul does not agree with our Baptist friend, for he says: "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ." (Gal. 3: 27.) Brother Burress has people in Christ Jesus before baptism; while Paul has them in Christ Jesus after they are baptized, and not before. After mature consideration, I have decided to stand by the apostle Paul on this matter.

The practice of "majority rule" in religion is responsible for the doctrines and tribulations of men that have cursed the religious world for centuries. Where God speaks, man has no choice but to obey or disobey his Maker.

Are There No Christians in the Denominations? BY M. C. R.

On page 4 of this issue of the Gospel Advocate, under the heading, "Judge Ye What I Say," the reader will find another article from Brother John Taylor criticizing the recent series of articles appearing in these columns on "Bible Things by Bible Names." From the original three who wrote near the same time—by oversight I gave the number incorrectly in our issue of December 9—my critics up to this time have increased to six in all, and I am glad to say that the most of their criticisms have been helpful, enabling me to make clearer some points of vital importance, for which I feel grateful. Although Brother Taylor's present effort, in part, is a repetition of what he had already said, nevertheless, in deference to his wish, we gladly publish this additional article, in which the following points seem to call for attention:

1. Concerning the question whether a person can be a member of the church of God and of a denomination at the same time, he now says: "If he join the denomination in the same act that Brother Kurfees says makes him a member of the church of God, then in that act he sins, and can such be obedience to God? No." But "Brother Kurfees" most assuredly does not believe and has nowhere taught that anybody "joins the denomination in the same act that makes him a member of the church of God." The New Testament does not teach such a doctrine.

2. He says: "If one is a member of a denomination and the church of God at the same time, 'the same act' that made him a member of the one made him a member of the other." That does not by any means follow. Our brother is simply mistaken, and could just as consistently say: "If one is a member of a" business firm "and the church of God at the same time, 'the same act' that made him a member of the one made him a member of the other." If not, why not?

3. He further says: "I do not believe a person can be a member of the church of God and a denomination at the same time." There we Lave a plain categorical statement definitely locating Brother Taylor, and it shows that I did not misunderstand him on this point. I honor him for his frankness; but, according to him, there is not one solitary Christian, not a single child of God anywhere in any denomination on earth! What a sweeping statement! Of all the multiplied millions of men and women among Baptists, Catholics, the Christian Church, Congregationalists, Dunkards, Episcopalians, Lutherans, Methodists, and Presbyterians, who have believed in the Lord Jesus Christ, repented of their sins, and, upon acknowledging Jesus as their Lord, have been buried with him in baptism, there is not a solitary Christian! Away goes the plea of the Reformation of the nineteenth century inaugurated over a hundred years ago for the union of all Christians of all denominations, for the simple reason that there are no Christians in any of the denominations! Hence, the great reformers, Campbell, Stone, Scott, Johnson, and others, with all their illustrious successors, Fanning, Franklin, Lipscomb, McGarvey, and a host of others, were all wrong in calling upon all Christians in the denominational world to come out of it and be simply Christians, because there were no Christians in it! But, speaking historically, here is another fact which furnishes food for thought. Not a single editor of the Gospel Advocate throughout its history, from Tolbert Fanning and William and David Lipscomb down, ever believed such a doctrine; and while I thank Brother Taylor for his frankness, I am equally frank to say that I, too, do not believe it, and I do not think anyhody else now connected with the Advocate believes it. There never has been a time, not excepting the time when Paul wrote, when men who obeyed the gospel and thereby entered the church of God did not, in some instances, become entangled in error. Hence, it is right now, just as it was right then and has always been right, to call upon such Christians, whether entangled in denominational errors or in any other kind of errors, to come out of them and to conform to nothing except a "Thus saith the Lord."

4. Again, he says: "Since it is a sin to join a denomination, and 'the same act' that makes him a member of a denomination makes him a member of the church of God, then a sinful act makes him a member of the church of God." But "'the same act' that makes him a member of a denomination" does not "make him a member of the church of God." I agree with Brother Taylor that it is wrong "to join a denomination;" but compliance with the conditions which God has appointed for that purpose makes one a member of the church of God, and not of a denomination; but compliance with the requisites of error in some form "makes one a member of a denomination."

5. He calls for an answer to two questions: (1) "Would you baptize a person on the confession that a Baptist preacher demands?" That depends on what "a Baptist preacher demands." I would not knowingly "baptize a person on" anything "that a Baptist preacher demands" unless I could read it in the New Testament. When I baptize persons, I do so upon their claim of penitence and belief that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God. I have no theory about it that I cannot read in the New Testament. Hence, anything to which the Baptist denomination or anybody holds, which I cannot read in the New Testament, I not only oppose, but I call upon Baptists and all others to turn away from it and stand upon nothing that they cannot read therein. In short, among Baptists and all others alike, I indorse all that they do and teach which can be read in the New Testament, and I eschew and oppose everything else. Brother Taylor might do the thing better than I do, but I doubt if he could improve on this principle. (2) "Would you receive into the fellowship of the church one from the Baptist denomination baptized upon the confession which a Baptist preacher demands?" I do not "receive into the fellowship of the church" any "one from the Baptist denomination," nor from anywhere else. Brother Taylor should read the New Testament. According to it, persons are baptized "into the fellowship Paul expresses it by saying to the Coof the church." rinthians that they were "all baptized into one body" (1 Cor. 12: 13); and hence, persons are baptized "into the fellowship of the church" and into everything else to which being in the church entitles them. When persons come to me "from the Baptist denomination," I accept and indorse all they bring with them that I can read in the New Testament; and, if they have not already done so. I teach them to turn away from everything else, whether taught them by the Baptists or anybody else. I know not how otherwise to follow the New Testament, which distinctly says: "Prove all things; hold fast that which is good." (1 Thess. 5: 21.)

6. And now, while this article is in course of preparation, Brother John T. Lewis, responding to my challenge in our issue of December 9 for a New Testament passage with any name of God's church which did not include all Christians or people of God "in the territory to which it was applied," sends in another question with a counter challenge as follows:

I have never yet read where any one ever said that "the church of Christ" did not include all Christians. Did you? If so, where and by whom was it said or written?

I reply promptly that it has been "said or written" many times by different brethren at different times and in different places. For example, the Apostolic Review, as I understand, still has on sale a tract on the difference between "the church of Christ" and "the Christian Church," but some of God's people are in what is meant by the latter. Again, in the Gospel Advocate of October 14, 1920, Brother J. B. Nelson, reporting a successful meeting in Greenville, Texas, said: "The Greenville church has had a hard pull, as one of the strongest Christian churches is there. We let them know that the church of Christ is in the town." But to the extent that there are any Christians or people of God in the "Christian Church" there, to that extent a part of the "church of Christ" is in it. Again, Brother J. A. Collins, in the Apostolic Review of December 14, 1920, said: "The church of Christ is the only church, so far as I know, that does believe in doing mission work in the Bible way-through the church. . . Most others believe in organizing missionary societies, Bible colleges, etc." But to the extent that there are any Christians or people of God in the "others," to that extent a part of the "church of Christ" is in them.

Again, in current and now popular parlance, brethren frequently speak of "the church of Christ in St. Louis," "the church of Christ in Washington City," "the church of Christ in New York City," etc., but those they include are only a part of the church of Christ in those cities. Such instances are now occurring in the papers almost weekly. Still again, Brother Lewis himself taught it sometime ago, unless he denies there are any Christians or people of God in the denominations. See the Gospel Advocate, July 26, 1917, and January 10, 1918. In the former issue, answering a question from him on the proper use of the term "church of Christ" and the unscripturalness of applying it to two local churches in Birmingham, Ala., as "the church of Christ in Birmingham," I said: "If our brother were called upon to speak of 'the church of Christ in Birmingham,' to whom would he apply the term? He could not apply it scripturally if he did not include in it all the people of God in Birmingham. He would not dare to apply it exclusively to the two mentioned local churches as 'the church of Christ in Birmingham,' for the simple reason that there are other people of God in Birmingham that do not belong to these two churches." On this, in the latter issue, Brother Lewis made the following comment:

I have been laboring here in this great city for nearly ten years contending simply for the New Testament order of things. During this time members have moved here from Tennessee and Kentucky, some of them not only from strong congregations, but close kin of some of our strongest gospel preachers, and when they got here they cast their lot with other people. I have never been able to understand before how they could do that, but I see now they had evidently learned before they left their home congregations that there were other people of God in Birmingham that do not belong to the two mentioned churches. And since we use the term "church of Christ" in an unscriptural sense to designate the two local churches, to avoid this blunder also is possibly another reason for their casting their lots with other people of God. In fact, what difference does it make as to where you are, just so you are with the people of God?

He here acknowledged in so many words: "We use the term 'church of Christ' in an unscriptural sense to designate the two local churches." It was I who had taught that it was "unscriptural" to designate, as he acknowledged they were doing, the two churches as the "church of Christ" in Birmingham; and when Brother Lewis thus used it, he either "did not include all Christians" or people of God in Birmingham or there were no Christians or people of God in Birmingham outside of the two churches, one or the other. Possibly, like Brother Taylor, he believes this. By the way, his explanation that Christians moving to Birmingham "had evidently learned before they left their home congregations that there were other people of God in Birmingham that do not belong to the two mentioned churches" seems to imply that he really does not believe there are any people of God elsewhere in Birmingham. If he does, why does he ask: "What difference does it make as to where you are, just so you are with the people of God?" which, of course, implies either that there are no people of God in the denominations, or, if there are, then, according to him, it makes no difference whether you are with them in a denomination or anywhere else. I wonder if, in any of his meetings, Brother Lewis ever had immersed Methodists or immersed persons from any other denomination to come forward. If so, I wonder if he reimmersed them. If not, where were they before they came forward?

Finally, to speak as the Bible speaks, the "church of Christ" in Birmingham, Nashville, Louisville, New York City, or anywhere else, includes all the people of God in the city to which it is applied, no matter what denomination or how many denominations they are in. It is in point here to quote a paragraph from the article referred to in the issue of July 26, 1917: "We should recognize the fact that 'the church of Christ in Birmingham,' in Louisville, in Nashville, and in practically all other cities of modern times, is divided, and this recognition will very materially help us in the effort to restore the church to its ancient and original condition of unity and harmony; whereas to attempt to limit this church to those alone whose faith and practice are supposed to be wholly scriptural is virtually to say that we already have unity and harmony and that division in the church does not exist. Such a conclusion is contradicted by the plain facts in the case."

The Great Question to All.

BY E. A. E.

AM I GROWING BETTER?

The question, "Is the world growing better?" is frequently asked, and is of very great importance. But there is a question of still greater importance, the settlement of which will help us to settle the one in regard to the world. This one is, "Am I growing better?"

As the old year, with its joys and sorrows, mistakes and misfortunes, disappointments and wrongs endured, lies buried in the grave of the past, and as the new year, with its aspirations and hopes, its work and responsibilities, dawns upon us, let us first settle this question before we sit on the case of others in particular or the world in general. This every one in the light of the Bible must do. What if the world, upon the whole, is growing better, and I am no better? Let us obey Christ: "Take heed unto yourselves." Am I more studious of the Bible; more prayerful; more dutiful; more forbearing; more longsuffering; more merciful; more forgiving; more charitable and more generous; less selfish; less egotistic; less worldly and ambitious of place and preëminence; gentler; kinder; meeker; humbler; more zealous; more conscientious; purer in heart; more practical and faithful in all relationships in life-as citizen, neighbor, friend, brother, son, husband, father, employer, employee; more godly; and more Christlike than I was last year at this time, or ten years ago? What progress have I made? Have I put on the whole armor of God, that I may be able to stand against all the wiles of Satan? Am I firmer in the faith and more determined to contend earnestly for it as it was once for all delivered to the saints? Am I fixed in my purpose to worship God "as it is written?" Have I wronged any one without trying to right it? Or have I in any way refused or failed to follow the Golden Rule? Really, am I growing better? How can I grow better? By practicing that which I teach others to do that they may grow better. I am commanded to "grow in the grace and knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ;" to give diligence to make my own calling and election sure; to so live that I "may be found in peace, without spot and blameless" in Christ's sight; to study that I may "be approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, handling aright the word of truth;" and on and on, until I myself have escaped from the corruption that is in the world by lust, have the spirit of Christ and the mind of Jesus, have become a partaker of the divine 'have fought the good fight," "have finished the course," "have kept the faith," and am ready to receive "the crown of righteousness," which the Lord will give to all who "have loved his appearing." If I would devote more time to the study of the word of God in order to practice it myself; more time to building up my own uprightness and integrity; to my own rendering to all their dues; to my own owing no man anything except love; to my own taking thought for things honorable in the sight of all men, as well as in God's sight; to doing my own daily duties at home and meeting my own obligations away from home; to my own personal piety and godliness, I would have less time for faultfinding, theorizing, hairsplitting, and ungodly contentions. The Pharisees had more theories and display than any other sect, yet there were no greater sinners in the world, and none more condemned by the Savior. They could teach more and do less than any people on earth.

SELF-EXAMINATION.

Robert Burns wishes that we could see ourselves as others see us. This, indeed, would be a great help and free us from many a blunder. Oliver Wendell Holmes is one point ahead of Burns. He says there are three persons in one-John, for instance, as he sees himself, John as others see him, and John as God sees him. We see ourselves from our own viewpoint; others see us from theirs; but God alone sees us in the true light. Our greatest concern must be about how we appear in God's sight. Is this not our least concern? We should say with Hagar: "Thou God seest me." Many times while in school I heard our president quote this in order to impress his pupils with its truth. Realizing that God knows all our thoughts, hears all our words, and sees all our deeds, we will become purer, humbler, meeker, and will be governed the more by godly fear; we will more and more endeavor to do all we do in word and deed in the name of the Lord Jesus-that is, if we want hearts right before God. Do we really want this? Paul makes a clear and encouraging point on self-examination when he says to his critics at Corinth that with him it was "a small thing" that he should be judged ("examined"-margin) by them, or by man's judgment; that he knew nothing against himself, yet for that reason he was not justified, because he who judges all is God, and one stands or falls according to God's judgment. Let all read 1 Cor. 4: 1-5 in the Revised Version until all both see and feel the force of this truth, and the further statement that the Lord "will both bring to light the hidden things of darkness and make manifest the counsels of the heart," and that "then shall each man have his praise from God." The judgment of men cannot fix one's character or settle one's destiny. Neither the condemnation nor praise of men moved Paul, because both the judgement and praise of men are human and partial and partisan, and by such no one can be justified. The judgment and praise of God are the only judgment and praise which count. Even when Paul examined himself and found nothing against himself, he realized that he was not for that reason justified, because God is the Judge, and God knows all persons far better than they know themselves.

If we would see ourselves as God sees us, we must study his word more and more, and receive it, as it is indeed the word of God, and not the word of man. This means the word of God must be received in faith into good and honest hearts-hearts that will deal with it honestly and truly and be developed by it. Then, as seed in the ground, it will work effectually-that is, in all who believe it. (See 1 Thess. 2: 13.) We must study and practice the word of God until we drink in the very spirit of Christhis humility, lowliness, meekness, forbearance, forgiveness, gentleness, quietness, gravity, genuine goodness, and implicit submission to God-and until we reflect "as in a mirror the glory of the Lord," and "are transformed into the same image from glory to glory, even as from the Lord the Spirit." (2 Cor. 3: 18.) The transformation of our impure hearts and imperfect characters into the image of our Lord's heart and character "from glory to glory" is the glory all must seek. If we would see ourselves as God sees us, we must exercise the courage to bring ourselves up squarely before the mirror of Godhis word-with all our deformities of character, and view ourselves there. This is the way to "bring to light the hidden things of darkness" in our lives and "make manifest the counsels" of our hearts. Let us stand still! Let us not draw back! We may be frightened at our own spiritual deformity and horrible appearance, but this is our only salvation from ourselves and from our sins.

A CONTRAST.

What a contrast exists between that which seems right in our own eyes and that which is right in God's eyes!

There is a way which seemeth right unto a man; but the end thereof are the ways of death. (Prov. 14: 12.)

God forbids that we shall do "every man whatsoever is right in his own eyes." (Deut. 12: 8.) We must "do that only which" is "right in" God's eyes. (1 Kings 14: 8.) And let us not forget that

Every way of a man is right in his own eyes; but Jehovah weigheth the hearts. (Prov. 21; 2.)

Left to ourselves and to our own logic (!), we can justify our own way and our own theories, at least, to our own satisfaction; but before God we stand or fall.

Doing as We Would be Done By.

On "Nobility" Alice Carey writes:

True worth is in being, not seeming;
In doing, each day that goes by,
Some little good, not in dreaming
Of great things to do by and by.
For whatever men say in blindness,
And spite of the fancies of youth,
There is nothing so kingly as kindness,
And nothing so royal as truth.

We get back our mete as we measure,
We cannot do wrong and feel right;
Nor can we give pain and gain pleasure,
For justice avenges each slight.
The air for the wing of the sparrow,
The bush for the robin and wren,
But always the path that is narrow
And straight for the children of men.

We cannot make bargains for blisses,
Nor catch them like fishes in nets,
And sometimes the thing our life misses
Helps more than the thing which it gets.
For good lieth not in pursuing,
Nor gain of great nor of small;
But just in doing—and doing
As we would be done by—is all.

Through envy, through malice, through hating,
Against the world early and late,
No jot of our courage abating,
Our part is to work and to wait;
And slight is the sting of his trouble
Whose winnings are less than his worth;
For he who is honest is noble,
Whatever his fortune or birth.

GOD PROTECTS HIS OWN.

Let us all strive to make this the best year of our lives by doing right under all circumstances and conditions, leaving the results with Him who takes account of even the sparrow, and in the end all will be well; for though

"Careless seems the great Avenger; history's pages but record

One death struggle in the darkness 'twixt old systems and the Word, Truth forever on the scaffold, Wrong forever on the Truth forever on the scaffold, Wrong forever on the throne—

Yet that scaffold sways the future, and behind the dim unknown

Standeth God within the shadow, keeping watch above his own."

There is one way of regarding the smaller trials of patience, to which every one is subjected in his intercourse with others that may ennoble and dignify the work even to the most sensitive. It is to look upon each as it comes—not as one little provoking circumstance, not as an insignificant vexation to which an evil lot has exposed us, but as a part of the great work of life. Did we but always feel that God is with us ever; that it is his will that through patience we should be made perfect, how would each hour of our life be sanctified, and each trial of our patience become a glorious opportunity!—Selected.

Will Not Publish My Article. BY J. C. M'Q.

Under the caption, "McQuiddy Quits Again," D. Austen Sommer says in the Apostolic Review of December 28, 1920: "He declines on a technicality." D. Austen Sommer may call his refusal to live up to the understanding that he would publish what I wrote in the Review and that I would publish what he wrote in the Gospel Advocate a "technicality," but, with me, his refusal to live up to his understanding and to allow his readers to see what I had to say is far more than a technicality. He charged me with being a "new digressive" simply because I would not act as a little pope and kick out a brother whom the church had selected to be an elder. He charged me with being a "new digressive" when I did no more than take the same position which Milligan took and which was published in the Millennial Harbinger of 1855 by Alexander Campbell without dissent. Because I exposed his errors in a manner that he did not relish, he declines to publish my article, and calls this a "technicality." "Technicality," indeed! Recently he wrote me to know if I intended to continue the discussion with him. To this I promptly replied as follows:

Dear Brother Sommer: Replying to yours of recent date, I must call your attention again to the fact that the article I published last August in reply to your attack on me, entitled "That Creed Again," has never been published by you. After declining its publication, contrary to established usage between publishers, I am not encouraged to continue to publish anything from you. If, however, you will publish the article, as it seems you are not satisfied with our discussion of my affirmation that it is scriptural to teach the Bible everywhere, while I am perfectly satisfied with what has been accomplished in the discussion for the truth, yet if you wish to continue to deny this proposition and will publish what I say on the subject in your paper, I will consider favorably a continuation of the discussion.

Yours fraternally, J. C. McQuidot.

This shows that I intended to continue the discussion with him, which he very well knows, provided I could get a hearing before his readers. Why should he demand of me to carry on a one-sided discussion? So, rather than let his readers see what I said last August, exposing his unjust charge that I was a "new digressive," etc., he says: "We shall consider the debate closed." Since he calls his refusal to give his opponent a hearing before his readers a "technicality," and further says of me, "He tried to lead us away from the discussion of the college question, but we would not lead; and he refuses to now go on with the college question on this technicality, though he has printed an article from us since we refused to be led off into his bypaths, thus giving the lie to his present technical excuse," I must ask to be excused from discussing religious questions with such a man. Whenever he is ready to treat an opponent with fairness and justice and to treat him as honest and as his equal, desiring to know the truth, I am ready to defend the Christian's right to teach the word of God anywhere and everywhere. I lived up to the Bible teaching that "if a man compel you to go with him one mile, go with him twain." While he had refused to publish my article, I even published one of his written afterwards, in the hope that he would repent of the wrong he had done and give my article to his readers. I still call upon him to repent of his wrong and let his readers see my article of last August, and also this brief article showing how I quit the discus-

Our prayers for restored health, for safety from impending danger, for relief in famine or other distress, are in line with the divine will; for they are the heart's hurry call for heavenly aid from Him who has promised all things needful to those who sorely need His aid, and His word stands that He "will never leave nor forsake thee."—Exchange.

Work Will Bring Results.

A number of our old subscribers are inclosing subscriptions with their renewals. Recently we sent out renewal blanks, and requested old subscribers to send at least one or two new subscriptions with their renewal. We have been very much gratified to receive a number of new subscribers during the last week. If every preacher in the brotherhood who is interested in the Gospel Advocate would only speak to the people at his appointments about taking the paper, and would urge them to do so, our list would soon be doubled. Preachers who know the value of a good religious paper in the congregation certainly should work to increase the circulation of the paper. Often preachers and others tell us that wherever the Advocate is read there is good interest in church work. The salvation of souls is more important than any other thing, and it does seem strange that a great many people professing to be Christians take absolutely no interest in extending the circulation of our religious papers. We wish to urge upon every subscriber the importance of continuing his subscription to the paper. This is the first issue for 1921. Let each one of us determine to do our very best to make this the best year in the history of the paper. In closing, I wish to remind our readers that a copy of the Teachers' New Testament will be given to every one who sends us two yearly subscriptions. Will you be one of the number to secure a copy?

A Solid Carload of Presents to the Tennessee Orphan Home.

Probably it would have taken a railroad car to have held all of the presents that were sent to the Tennessee Orphan Home. The children were literally deluged with gifts, not only from the people here, but from elsewhere. There were several wagon loads of gifts that came by express and parcel post, and an entire room set apart for the reception of the gifts was filled to the ceiling.

There were toys and clothing for every one of the sixty-five children. There were old hams and chickens and sausage and fruits and nuts sent in by the wholesale. Churches and organizations and individuals in all parts of the State remembered the Home. A church at Martin, in West Tennessee, sent a present for each one of the sixty-five little ones.

The Girls Civic Welfare League, of Nashville, headed by Mrs. Luke Lea and the Big Brothers, of Nashville, sent boxes of useful articles as well as toys to each of the children. Money was telegraphed from McMinnville, and eighty dollars came by wire from Santa Claus as far off as Shreveport, La., with instructions to give each child one dollar to spend just as he or she desired to expend it.

The presents were distributed to the children on Christmas morning at ten o'clock in the presence of all the children and a large number of friends. Prayer was offered by Elder F. C. Sowell, who expressed appreciation for the fellowship and friendship that had been shown to the children of the Home. It was a great sight to see the pleasure in the faces of the youngsters as their names were called and the gifts distributed. Not a single one was overlooked.—Columbia Daily Herald.

Consider how the conscious possession of that higher life in Christ brings with it an absolute incapacity of believing that what men call "death" can affect it. "Christ in us" is the "hope of glory." The true evidence for immortality lies in the deep experience of the Christian spirit. It is when a man can say, "Thou art the strength of my heart," that the conviction springs up inevitable and triumphant that such a union can no more be severed by the physical accident of death than a spirit can be wounded by a sword, and that, therefore, he has the right to say further: "And my portion forever."—A. Maclaren.

A Fellow's Mother.

"A fellow's mother," said Fred the wise, With his rosy cheeks and merry blue eyes, "Knows what to do if a fellow gets hurt By a thump or bruise or a fall in the dirt.

"A fellow's mother has bags and strings— Bags and buttons and lots of things; No matter how busy she is, she'll stop To see how well you can spin your top.

"She does not care—not much, I mean—
If a fellow's face is not quite clean;
And if your trousers are torn at the knee,
She can put in a patch you'd never see.

"A fellow's mother is never mad, And only sorry if you are bad; And I'll tell you this, if you are only true, She'll always forgive you, whatever you do.

"A fellow's mean who would never try
To keep the tears from her loving eye;
And the fellow's worse who sees it not,
That his mother's the truest friend he's got!"

The Kitchen Beautiful.

What sort of a place is your kitchen? Is it a room where you endure the ugly and the routine for a while until you can escape to the pleasanter parts of the house, or is it a place which you have made pleasant and artistic in a way consistent with its utility?

When I was buying a bowl the other day, I asked if it were possible to get a blue one instead of the brownish yellow which is the characteristic color of mixing bowls. The face of the woman who served me lit up. "I try to keep everything blue in my kitchen, too," she said. "I don't see why a kitchen shouldn't be pretty just as much as other parts of the house."

Why not, indeed? This clerk was evidently a married woman of limited means, but she evidently had imagination and a love for the beautiful.

I would like to go into her kitchen. I love any kitchen in which the desire to do away with unnecessary ugliness manifests itself. And there are so many ways in which this can be done.

I know one woman, who loves old things, who has fitted her quaint little kitchen in her old-fashioned house entirely with copper utensils. I have not yet seen it, but I know just how beautiful they must look (although I must say I should think they might be a bit unwieldy).

In another little cottage kitchen, curtains of blue-checked gingham and a red geranium on the sill between have given a touch of color that has made the kitchen twice as livable a place as it was before.

Another kitchen, a dark northern room, has been made much more cheerful by bright-yellow curtains. The owner of this kitchen had some unbleached cotton on hand; she dyed it the desired yellow with a good cotton dye, and now she has some imitation sunshine in her room. She has heightened the effect by using one or two bits of yellow pottery that she happened to have on hand, and has asked her family to give her more at Christmas and birthdays. She has also brightened up her pantry by doing away with all paper bags and such slovenly arrangements and putting in their places glass jars with bright-yellow labels.

Since kitchen things became so costly it has been the style to give showers of kitchen utensils as well as linen and china, and these occasions can be made even more auspicious where the bride-to-be is consulted on the color scheme of her kitchen and an effort made to produce a harmonious whole.

Of course, one cannot have an ideal kitchen unless one can build it oneself with a view to having everything as convenient and attractive as possible, but one can add some feature at no great cost that will transform an impossible room into a possible one—a window over the sink at which the housewife must stand so many hours (or sit—the new housewife knows that she can save herself this way) is one feature.

Perhaps some of my reader friends will want to tell the rest of them, through me, of some small ways in which they have made their kitchens more useful and more beautiful. I hope so.—Ruth Cameron.

The New Dress.

"But I don't want to be 'tried on,'" Marcy pouted. "I just promised Dot I'd be out to play in a minute!"

"It will take only a few minutes, dear. I want to see about the length of your arm. The dress is all finished except the sleeves, and I have one sleeve basted in, ready to try on."

Marcy sighed deeply.

"O, well, if I must!" she said, crossly. She took off her play dress and stood up on the stool while her mother tried on the new dress. Of course it was pretty and Marcy really liked it, but it certainly was a nuisance to be "tried on."

It seemed to take mother very long, and Marcy grew impatient. "I wish I never had to have a new dress," she complained, "especially one with long sleeves." The little girl regarded the arm with the sleeve on it unhappily. "I—I don't like long sleeves! I—"

But the look on mother's sweet, tired face kept Marcy from finishing her sentence.

Mother took the dress off, and the child hurried into her play dress and out of doors

Two days later Dot, one of Marcy's friends, had a party. After luncheon, mother laid out all the clean clothes on the bed, as usual—white shoes, clean stockings, clean everything, and a dress which was clean, too, but rather shabby.

Marcy looked puzzled, "Why-why, where's my new dress, mother?" she asked.

Mother stood in the doorway. She looked at Marcy questioningly, but said nothing. Then Marcy burst into tears. She knew that her mother was punishing her and that she deserved it.

"O, dear!" she wailed. "You—you didn't finish it, because I said I—I wished I never had to have a new dress.

Marcy's mother stroked the dark hair tenderly. "You are sorry, aren't you, dear?" she said. "You'll never be unwilling to be fitted again when mother tries so hard to please you?"

"No, mother, I think I never shall," sobbed the little girl.

Marcy lifted up the shabby little dress, and there, hidden snugly underneath, was the dainty new dress.

The little girl gave mother a big hug.

"O, you darling," she said; "please, please forgive me, mother!"

And Marcy lifted up her tear-stained face to be kissed.

—The Sunbeam.

A semicivilized state of society, equally removed from the extremes of barbarity and of refinement, seems to be that particular meridian under which all the reciprocities and gratuities of hospitality do most really flourish and abound; for it so happens that the ease, luxury, and the abundance of the highest state of civilization are as productive of selfishness as the difficulties, the privations, and the sterilities of the lowest.—Colton.

Charles Holder recently conducted a meeting at College Station, Tenn.

Sister Lottle Johnson is now located at Burbank, Cal. Her correspondents will please take notice.

J. Leonard Jackson reports two good services at the Lindsley Avenue Church, this city, last Lord's day.

We enjoyed a visit from J. L. Hines, of Monticelle, Ky., recently. He reports the church as moving on nicely.

A card from Z. T. Sweeney, of Columbus, Ind., tells us that he will be from home, traveling, for several months.

- J. V. A. Traylor, of Smyrna, Tenn., preached to a very attentive audience at Philippi, on the Couchville pike, on Sunday, December 19.
- T. I. Curtis reports the church at Edenwold, Tenn., as progressing nicely. J. W. Beasley and Lytton Alley each preach monthly for this church.

John Pullias, of Philippi Church, near Castalian Springs, Tenn., was in to see us a few days ago. He reports things going well with his congregation.

R. E. L. Taylor and family are now at Lecanto, Fla., for the winter. We are glad Sister Taylor is so far recovered as to be able to make the change.

Stlas E. Templeton called to see us on his way from Kentucky to his home in Atlanta, Ga. He expects to move to Altus, Okla., the first of the year,

- J. W. Grant preached at the Fifth Street Church, East Nashville, at both services last Lord's day. There was one confession at the morning service.
- M. Keeble was in to see us last Friday, and reports having closed a very interesting meeting at Detroit, Mich., recently. There were two baptisms.

Frank Ross, of Smyrna, Tenn., was among our callers last week, and renewed his subscription for a year. We are always glad to have Brother Ross call on us.

We enjoyed a pleasant visit from John T. Lewis, of Birmingham, Ala., last week. We were very glad to see him and to hear from him that the work in Birmingham is prospering.

J. C. Mosley preached at Dunlap, Tenn., Sunday and Sunday night, December 19. He says that he recently conducted a fine meeting at Orme, with eight baptisms and one confession.

Changes of address: C. E. Coleman, from Macon, Ga., to Box 196, Springfield, Tenn.; Vernon Rozar, from 315 Ohio Street, Athens, Tenn., to 208 Thirty-fourth Street, Cleveland, Tenn.

From Edward Clutter, evangelist, Albany, Mo., December 21: "In the second week of a meeting here. Mrs. Clutter leads the singing. Twenty added to date, with prospects good for more. Have some open dates."

From W. D. Bills, San Antonio, Texas, December 13: "Sunday's services were well attended and interest was good. Three were added to our fellowship. We rarely pass a week that we do not have additions."

From W. E. Morgan, Quanah, Texas, December 15: "The Lord's work in all departments of church work here goes grandly on with increasing interest. One more made the good confession and was baptized this week."

A. M. Jones and wife, of McMinnville, Tenn., are at Lakeland, Fla., for the winter. Brother Jones and his good wife were among the first to give this editor and his wife a hearty welcome to Miami, Fla., seven years ago.

From W. A. Schultz, El Paso, Texas, December 20: "We had large crowds at every service yesterday. I preached at the morning service on 'The Conflict Between Christianity and Paganism.' Two persons were baptized."

W. E. Morgan, of Quanah, Texas, sends the following report: "The outlook for the cause here gets brighter day by day. Two more made the 'good confession' at prayer meeting last week and were baptized. We feel encouraged."

We enjoyed a visit from S. Houston Proffit last Monday morning. He is teaching at Hohenwald, Tenn. His family is in East Chattanooga. He spent last Sunday in Chattanooga, and reports the church in East Chattanooga as doing well.

H. Leo Boles preached at Foster Street Church, this city, last Lord's day, morning and night. He reports the largest audiences he has ever had there, and the services very enthusiastic and encouraging. Glad to know they are doing so well.

From R. E. Wright, Wartrace, Tenn.: "I want to see the Gospel Advocate succeed, and I am going to do more for it. The fellow who wants to preach his opinions in place of preaching what God says—the gospel—just keep after him, but kindly always."

H. C. Harris sends in his renewal to the Gospel Advocate and says: "I hope to send in a list of new subscribers. I appreciate the Advocate. I have read it many years. I will send in reports of my work during 1921. I have sent only a few reports this year."

W. H. Sandy, of Pearl, Miss., has been in very poor health for some time. He submitted to a very serious operation recently, and, contrary to the expectations of the surgeons, recovered and is now well. His friends will rejoice to be advised of this fact.

From James B. Redd, Rocky Comfort, Mo., December 27: "I filled my regular appointment at Ridgley Mission on the second Lord's day in December. Two made the good confession and were baptized. I returned home Monday and baptized another lady that afternoon."

Fred M. Little, of Cleveland, Tenn., has gone to Montgomery, Ala., to labor with the Catoma Street Church. His work started on December 19 with a good interest. He and his family propose to make Montgomery their future home. Great results are anticipated.

It would be encouraging to know that all our readers appreciate the Gospel Advocate as does Sister N. S. Setliff, of Flat Creek, Tenn. She has passed her eighty-third milestone and her eyesight is poor, but she has some one to read the Gospel Advocate to her each week.

From A. E. Freeman, Guthrie, Okla., December 28: "I have been engaged in the evangelistic work in Texas, Oklahoma, and Missouri for the past fifteen years, and in some respects this has been the most successful year of my work. I hope to be able to place the Gospel Advocate in many homes next year."

We would be glad for every reader of the Gospel Advocate, or every family having a reader in it, to send to E. C. Fuqua, Fort Collins, Col., for "The Whole Counsel" (Tract No. 7), and read it, then give it to some one else to read. Send him a few postage stamps to help pay for mailing the tract. You will not regret it.

W. Silas Moody preached to large audiences at Twelfth Avenue, North, on Lord's day, morning and night. The attendance at the Bible school continues good. There were three hundred and six present last Lord's day. The elders and teachers are going to work for still greater attendance and more genuine interest in Bible study.

J. S. Daugherty, of Kirbyville, Texas, sends a report as follows: "I preached to two splendid crowds yesterday, December 19, at Port Arthur. A young brother was restored at the evening service. This congregation is alive in its services and devotions. Their treasurer reported more than two hundred dollars cash on hand, with all debts paid."

Charlie Taylor has recently been in a fifteen-days' meeting at Avon Park, Fla., which resulted in three additions. I. B. Bradley is continuing the meeting indefinitely. One has been added since he began the work with the church at Avon Park. He will work there through the winter and spring, after which we shall expect him to return to Tennessee.

- E. E. Shoulders, who has been in Denver and Colorado Springs, Col., has almost decided to quit that field for a while. The change appears necessary on account of the lack of support. We had hoped that sufficient funds would be contributed to the Colorado work to keep Brother Shoulders there. He could be very helpful indeed to Brother Fuqua in the work.
- J. R. Stockard writes: "I am pleased to say that F. O. Howell ably took care of the truth during the four-days' discussion at Rutherford. J. L. Sanders, of Paris, the Nazarene preacher, made a strenuous effort to uphold his doctrine, but utterly failed. We feel sure the good seed Brother Howell sowed there will result in much and lasting good for the cause of Christ."

Speaking of the Gospel Advocate, E. M. Massey says: "I cannot do without it while it remains so true to the old paths." R. A. Lowery says: "Inclosed find check for five dollars for two years' renewal to January, 1923. I do not want to be without the Advocate." H. A. Lasley, Jasper, Ala., in renewing his subscription to the Advocate, says: "I am well pleased with the paper yet."

Sister Mary Delk writes from Santa Rosa, Cal., December 27: "Since last report we have had four baptisms and one reclaimed. On December 19 one lady from the Episcopalians was baptized. Yesterday three boys, two from our school, made the good confession and one was reclaimed. Three of the boys that were baptized are from families that are not members of the church of Christ."

J. H. Hines, of Montgomery, Ala., knows the value of a good religious paper in the home. He says: "I desire to visit every home in Montgomery and urge every member of the church to take a religious paper. Please send me a list of subscribers so I can be prepared to pursue the work. I shall begin just as soon as I hear from you. We must push this work." Will not others do likewise?

Dan Beastey, one of the elders of the church at Dickson. Tenn., was on his way to Nashville on Tuesday, December 21, and accidentally fell from the truck in which he was riding, fracturing his skull. He is at the Protestant Hospital in a very serious condition. The physician holds out hopes for his recovery, though it will necessarily be slow. The Gospel Advocate extends its sympathy to his entire family.

- M. C. Cayce has been at home for the past ten days or two weeks. We have enjoyed a number of visits from him and have conferred with him relative to his work in Mississippi. Our readers will remember that his headquarters are at Jackson, the capital of the State. He is very much in earnest, and it is to be hoped that the churches will give him sufficient encouragement and support to keep him in his work.
- T. H. Matheson writes from Midwell, Okla., December 23: "Since last report I have held a short mission meeting at Cheek, Okla., with one baptism, and have preached at Guymon, Optima, Texhoma, and Midwell. To-day we will have to cut the ice several inches thick to attend to baptizing. I will preach at Dalhart, Texas, over next Lord's day, and then home (Bowle) to 'pack our grips' and move to Guymon."

From J. E. Wainwright. Texarkana, Ark., December 31: "I have just attended a four-days' debate between Rue Porter and W. E. Sherrill (Baptlst) at Bethel, near Waldo, Ark. The best of feeling prevailed throughout. Brother Porter proved himself equal to the occasion, and no doubt placed the truth in many honest minds, which we trust will be fruitful. The work in Texarkana continues to progress nicely."

From R. N. Moody, Albertville, Ala., December 27: "I spent the last Lord's day of 1920 with the congregation at Elora, Tenn., where, on Christmas Day, at 5:30 P.M., I spoke the words that made Mr. A. E. Robertson and Miss Inez Counts one for life. I preached to a good audience on Lord's-day morning, but was rained out at night. I shall preach for them on the fourth Lord's day in each month for a part of next year, at least."

Frank Baker, who has been working with the telephone and telegraph company at Belmont, Miss., expects to give up his present work and go actively into the work of preaching the gospel. He has been out of the field for some time, and is anxious to do all that he can to build up the cause of Christ in destitute fields. He wishes to form the acquaintance of the churches in Tennessee and Kentucky. Any church desiring his services should write him at Belmont, Miss.

From W. H. Sandy, Pearl, Miss., December 21: "I preached at Union Grove, La., on Sunday, December 12, and three nights following; then at Emerson, Ark., two nights; then came back to Haynesville, La., where I preached on Sunday and Sunday night. At all of these places I met a warm reception and was greeted by good crowds. At the latter place I united in marriage Mr. J. L. Kendrick and Miss Clara D. Ware. We wish for them a happy future."

Flavil Hall writes from Trion, Ga., December 30: "The meeting at Dade City, Fla., closed on the evening of December 19 with unusual interest. The church, though always aspiring to be faithful, was much built up, those added to the fold were whole-hearted in their obedience, and others were enlightened. J. H. Moore and wife, from Salem, Oregon, were with us and assisted zealously. He is a true preacher, and should have the support of true disciples wherever they go."

J. O. Blaine, of Pertland, Tenn., in remitting for his Bible-school supplies, says: "I am also sending you many thanks for your repeated acts of kindness, with my very best wishes for the New Year. May it bring much prosperity and happiness to the editors and every reader of the dear, old Gospel Advocate. I have been a constant reader of its pages ever since the first number was published in 1855." Such words, coming from such a man, are very encouraging and very much appreciated.

Thomas E. Milholiand writes: "I am now located at Clarendon, Texas, trying a 'Western field.' I have been very busy the first month of our stay—the last month in 1920. I preach one-half time at Lelia Lake, seven miles east of here. I have a training class on Wednesday night at Clarendon, and on Thursday night at Lelia Lake. We hope to accomplish much good during 1921. May the Lord bless the editors and writers of the good, grand, old Gospel Advocate. May it live on and on, to bless its readers and teach the world."

A fellow soldier in the army of the Lord says: "I have a daughter who obeyed the gospel while in the Nashville Bible School in years gone by, but—alas!—she has lost her first love'—married out of Christ. Do you know, I had three daughters do this, against my wishes and teaching. Not one of the men has become a Christian. It is a fearful deed to disobey God. Fail not, brothren, in your teachings, to warn the young people against making this fatal mistake. I shall go to my grave in sorrow for mine having committed this grave mistake."

From John A. Hudson. Oklahoma City, Okla., December 20: "Four were added to our number yesterday. Our services were inspiring. In the afternoon I said obsequies over the body of a Brother Mitchell at the Hahn Funeral Home. Interment was made in Rose Hill Cemetery." Another note from Brother Hudson, dated December 27, says: "Our service yesterday morning was great. We had four additions. The ladies of this congregation are having some interesting and profitable meetings now. They seem to have a greater vision than they have ever had in the past."

Brother Elam has a splendid article in this week's issue on the question, "Am I Growing Better?" This article not only teaches some needed truths, but it also serves the purpose of showing that there is nothing in the rumors circulated by some and the insinuation of D. Austen Sommer that I am responsible for Brother Elam's ceasing to write for a time for the Advocate. Such a charge is not only false, but Brother Elam's contributions to the Gospel Advocate have always been, and are now, appreciated by the management of the paper and read with interest by the public.

From L. D. Perkins, Armona, Cal. December 22: "I was with the congregation in Fresno last Sunday, and spoke to a crowded house at 11 A.M. Will J. Kirk, the singer, was there, and preached at the evening hour. He is to conduct the singing at Armona during C. R. Nichol's meeting. George Dickson was at Hanford morning and evening. Brother Walker at Dinuba, Brother Trice at Patterson. Thus the good work goes on. The church at Fresno has about decided to keep Brother Trice for a year longer. A letter from Brother Hall, of Los Angeles, reports a great work there."

- T. C. Fox says: "During 1920 I labored ten months behind the counter selling groceries. My company (H. G. Hill) allows me the privilege of holding meetings during the summer. So I held five meetings, which resulted in eighteen baptisms and two restorations and about seventy-five dollars loss to me financially. I have arranged one meeting for next summer, beginning the first Sunday in August. I would like to arrange for meetings during July, August, and September. Those desiring my assistance during these months will please write me at 1603 Russell Street, Nashville, Tenn."
- J. C. Mosley writes from Moffett, Okla., January 1: "I am here in the town of Moffett with William Still. Our preachers' neeting closed, but we have not left yet. I left my home in East Tennessee, came to Bridgeport, Ala., and took dinner with Brother Holder. Then I went to Nashville and preached in David Lipscomb College. I found some godly people there. They are so kind to me. Then I went to Fort Smith, Ark., where I met over thirty of our good preaching brethren. My home was assigned with a family named 'Long.' They showed me much kindness. We are going back to Morrillton, Ark."

Mrs. A. J. Ross, of Olathe, Col., wants to know the meaning of this scripture: "And when he had said this, he breathed on them, and saith unto them, Receive ye the Holy Spirit." (John 20: 22.) She asks: "Did the disciples receive the Holy Spirit at this time?"

I think not. They did not receive the baptism of the Holy Spirit until the day of Pentecost. This simply foreshadows the baptism of the Holy Spirit. As Christ had formerly given to Peter the keys of the kingdom of heaven (Matt. 16: 19), so now he gives to all the apostles the power to remit or retain sins. It is the great commission to preach the gospel that the Savior gives for the first time in verse 21. While at this time he gave them the authority to present the commission to the world, they were to tarry in Jerusalem for the promise of the Holy Spirit, which was the baptism of the Holy Spirit.

Mrs. B. Canida wishes an explanation of Eph. 2: 8, 9, which reads: "For by grace have ye been saved through faith: and that not of yourselves, it is the gift of God; not of works, that no man should glory." She is of the impression that the word of God means the same as grace. She quotes in proof of this the twenty-third verse of the sixth chapter of Romans, where it says "the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." In connection with this, she quotes the Savior's prayer, where he says: "This is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent." The meaning of this is that the one who knows Christ, by believing in him and obeying him until death, will enjoy eternal life through Christ Jesus our Lord.

The word "grace" means the same as favor. When sinners were lost and without hope, it was God's mercy that brought to them the offer of salvation. This salvation is the gift of God. Men did not have sufficient wisdom and power to provide this salvation. We have a clear illustration of this when the children of Israel came to the Red Sea. They could not provide a passage through the sea; God had to provide this for them. It was the mercy and favor of God that opened up the way for them. There was but one passage opened; and when the command came to march through that passage, the children of Israel had to obey. Just so God, in his mercy and favor, offers to a lost race salvation. Man must accept the salvation on the terms stipulated by Christ.

J. G. Mitchell, of Albany, Ala., is having some discussion with the Seventh-Day Adventists concerning the time duration of punishment. He sends the following query: "Please tell me if Rom, 6: 23 and Matt, 25: 41-46 refer to the same thing. Also, is the penalty for sin eternal torment or finally the annihilation of the sinner?"

Rom. 6: 23 reads: "For the wages of sin is death; but the free gift of God is eternal life in Christ Jesus our Lord." Matt. 25: 41-46 is as follows: "Then shall he say also unto them on the left hand, Depart from me, ye cursed, into the eternal fire which is prepared for the devil and his angels: for I was hungry, and ye did not give me to eat; I was thirsty, and ye gave me no drink; I was a stranger, and ye took me not in; naked, and ye clothed me not: sick, and in prison, and ye visited me not. Then shall they also answer, saying, Lord, when saw we thee hungry, or athirst, or a stranger, or naked, or sick, or in prison, and did not minister unto thee? Then shall he answer them, saying, Verily, I say unto you, Inasmuch as ye did it not unto one of these least, ye did it not unto me. And these shall go away into eternal punishment; but the righteous into eternal life." The Greek word "aionios" qualifies "life" in Rom. 6: 23, and also qualifies "punishment" and "life" in Matt. 25: 46. If the life is eternal, so is the punishment. A separation between the righteous and the wicked will take place at the judgment. The righteous shall inherit eternal life, the wicked shall depart into everlasting fire. The duration of the two states is precisely the same. The same Greek word is used to qualify "life" and "punishment;" hence, it follows if the state of punishment has an end, so has the state of life. If life is eternal, so is the punishment everlasting; if the punishment has an end, so has the life an end.

Mrs. D. L. Smith, of Artesia, N. M., sends the following query: "In explaining the parable of the sower, a pupil asked if the angel reapers were those heavenly beings. The memory verse had implied that we reap what we sow. How about inculcating responsibility at this point?"

The memory verse was impressing the duty of a right-cous life. The Bible teaches that we shall reap what we sow: "Be not deceived; God is not mocked; for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. For he that soweth unto his own flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth unto the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap eternal life." (Gal. 6: 7, 8.) It is well to show children that as we sow, so shall we reap. If we sow to the wind, we shall reap the whirlwind; if we lead a corrupt, wicked life, we will reap the wages of sin, which is death. The angel reapers were certainly heavenly beings who separated the tares from the wheat in the end of the world.

Sister Angle Haynes, of Fosterville, Tenn., wishes to know (1) if there is any scripture that teaches that we shall know our loved ones in heaven. She also is concerned (2) about whether bodies are being prepared for us in heaven.

1. There is no scripture that says in so many words that we shall know our loved ones in heaven. However, there is a case of actual recognition in the New Testament. The rich man knew Lazarus. Not only so, but he knew himself, and knew who he was in this life. He also remembered his five brethren. If a man knows himself and knows with whom he associated in this world when he passes into the great beyond, it certainly seems that he will not lose his memory and that he will know his loved ones in heaven. In the Sermon on the Mount, Christ says: "Many will say to me in that day, Lord, Lord, did we not prophesy by thy name, and by thy name cast out demons, and by thy name do many mighty works?" This shows that they remembered who they were in this life and also remembered what they had done. This certainly shows that in the great beyond they knew themselves; and if they knew themselves, they certainly would know with whom they associated and worked in this life, as did the rich man remember his five brethren.

2. I know of no scripture that teaches clearly that bodies are being prepared in heaven for us. The passage that seems to indicate this is 2 Cor. 5: 1, which declares: "For we know that if the earthly house of our tabernacle be dissolved, we have a building from God, a house not made with hands, eternal, in the heavens." It is thought that that earthly house mentioned here means the body. This being true, the building from God, "the house not made with hands," is held by some to mean heavenly bodies which will be prepared for us.

Hood's Sarsaparilla Makes Food Taste Good

Creates an appetite, aids digestion, purifies the blood, and thus relieves scrofula, catarrh, the pains and aches of rheumatism and gives strength to the whole system.

Nearly 50 years' phenomenal sales tell the story of the great merit and success of Hood's Sarsaparilla. It is just the medicine you need now. Hood's Pills help—fine cathartic.

Try This For Sore Throat

On reliring fill your nestrils with Eucapine-Salve. Sniff the salve back into the air passages of the head and throat until it reaches the fonsils and uvula and you taste the salve. This is just done lying down, pullow under back, head thrown back that the melting salve may reach the head cavities. Also turn the head down and forward and to right and left; to flow the salve over the inflamed surfaces in the cavities of the head. In the morning the pain and acroness will be gone. To make sure place Eucapine Salve on the back of the tongue with your finger. Same treatment for colds, noso sores, catarrhal headaches, catarrh of the head, nose and throat. If you swallow a little if won't hurt you. You'll soon learn to think that one of your very best friends is

Will We Evangelize Saskatchewan?

BY H. A. ROCERS,

I held a meeting in Harptree Schoolhouse, about eighteen miles southwest of Bengough, Saskatchewan, Canada, beginning on October 24 and closing on November 14. The meeting was a glorious one from the beginning. Throughout the three weeks the attendance and interest were the finest, and the entire community was stirred up to a fervent heat. There were no members in this part until I went in. There were thirty-six baptisms, one from the Baptists took membership, and the church was put to work. Of those baptized, there were nineteen men and one boy, fifteen women and one girl.

I would be glad to get more of the brethren's attention turned toward this needy field. I feel sure that Saskatchewan and Alberta are by far the best fields in Canada in which to do missionary work. Many people have come into these provinces from the old countries and the United States, and have been here for from ten to fifteen years without having had the privilege of attending meetings of any kind except on rare occasions, and have, therefore, drifted into a state of neutralism; hence, the first kind of religion which is preached will get a hearing, whether it be Russellism or Adventism or some other. I can establish churches in these provinces just as fast as time and health will permit. This has been amply proven by the work I have done in Brethren, let us face the question. What will we do? We can convert the people of these provinces if we will. We can establish churches all over this country if we will. Who would say, "Don't do it?" Who will say, "Do it?" What does it mean to say, "Do it?" What does it profit to say, "Be ye warmed and filled," and give not the things which are necessary? (See James 2: 16.)

Brethren, will you not consider the situation? If we do not use the opportunity, others will, and they are busy at it. Russellism is being pushed as fast as its promulgators can do the work; and the same is true of Adventism, but not to the same extent. As evangelist, I am all alone with the work on my hands. I have established churches at Schnellar, Lyndale, Knoxville, and Harptree schoolhouses. built up a church which was almost dead at Monmawala Schoolhouse, established a church in Punnichy town, and in the cities of Regina and Mayburn. All of this work, save what faithful work Brother H. L. Richardson did in the Schnellar school district and work done by Brother G. W. Williams in Mac Rorie district, was pioneer work done by me. All can understand that I cannot water all of this work alone. I can continue to establish churches and put such in order, but who will water them?

I have tried briefly to set before you the situation. Why not convert our own people first? We can do it. How much better position we would then be in to convert the foreigner! A good per cent of the people of this country came from the United States. Why not United States brethren help us to convert them?

SIMPLE MIXTURE MAKES HENS LAY

BY W. S. BURGESS.

Any poultry raiser can greatly increase his profits easily and quickly by taking advantage of the thirty-five years' experience of a successful poultryman.

A lifelong study of egg production has resuited in a secret formula of buttermilk and other valuable ingredients that purs pep into lazy hens. Users report increases of two to seven times as many eggs.

This secret formula is now put up in tablet form, and is called Combs Buttermilk Compound Tablets. Simply feed in water or mix with feed.

I am so convinced that this wonderful formula is always successful that I say kill the hen that won't lay after using it.

One million new users are wanted; so for a limited time any reader of this paper can get a big double-size box (enough for a season) on free trial by simply writing for it. Send no money. Use the tablets thirty days If at the end of that time your hens are not laying two or three times as many eggs, if you are not more than satisfied in every way, the tablets are to cost you nothing. If completely satisfied, this big double-size box costs you only $1 on this introductory offer. Berry, December 18 .- Brother Charley Nichols and I recently held a mission meeting at Double Springs, Ala., county seat of Winston County, on December 5. So far as I know, we were the first gospel preachers that ever preached there. We reached the town just at the close of a two-weeks' revival meeting among the sects. The people were wearied of so great a burden, but the entire town turned out to our meeting, coming through mud and falling weather. We began the meeting on the first Lord's day in December, with about two dozen present, and we closed on last Wednesday night, with about four hundred people in attendance. Much and last-ing good was done. Men and women who had never heard the gospel before were present to hear. I remember that a blind man was carried from his home to the services to hear. There are only a few Christians there. Baughn children, formerly of Nauvoo, Ala., live there, as well as Brother John B. Weaver, the present tax assessor, who is a man full of faith and good works. The Lord willing, we plan to return next summer and hold a meeting.—Tim Walker.

California.

Santa Rosa, December 12.-At this morning's services two young men made the good confession. They baptized this evening. After a strong sermon by Brother Love on baptism, a young lady, one of our pupils, who had grown careless and indifferent in regard to Christ, acknowledged her wrongs and reunited with the church. There were at least seventy-five people present at our mission meeting in Sebastopol this afternoon. We feel very much encouraged over our work there. Several of our schoolboys made talks which showed they had studied. There is a marked improvement in their talks from time to time. Our school is moving along nicely. I never saw a school where every one seemed so willing to do his share. We are doing our best to teach our children, who are from almost every denomination, the true way. By the grace of God and all working together, we can and will do much good. Brother Love and family are giving all their time to this cause. They are doing so much good in caring for the orphans, feeding the poor, etc. Pray for us, that we may bring many to Christ who are without the light of his word.-Mary Delk.

Washington, December 20.—I have just closed a three-months' preaching tour through this State. I preached at ten places, with good success. I closed a twenty-days' meeting yester-day at a place called "Waco," just out of this city. They were in a very cold and sleepy condition, but we got some of them aroused, and we hope that they will see the way and walk therein. Four were baptized, others were restored, and great good was done otherwise. I preached here last night, and shall leave in the morning for Kentucky, for Bethel Church, near Brodhead. At this point I am to meet H. B. Taylor, of Murray, Ky., a Missionary Baptist, in a four-days' debate, to begin on January 11, at 10 A.M. He is to affirm the proposition, "The church of which I, H. B. Taylor, am a member, known by me and my brethren as the Missionary Baptist Church, is scriptural in name, origin, doctrine, and practice." I deny. I affirm the proposition, "The church of which I, J. L. Davis, am a member, known by me and my brethren as the church of Christ, is scriptural in name, origin, doctrine, and practice." He denies. christ, is scriptural in name, origin, doctrine, and practice." He denies. Brethren, if you want to have the greatest time of your life, come and see Mr. Taylor try to find a Missionary Baptist Church. He is a scholar; I am not. (See 1 Cor. 3: 19, 20.) Come, and you will be taken care of. His brethren are declaring he will fix me so I will never trouble them again. If I live over it, I shall stay in Kentucky this winter, preaching and teaching the word. In the spring I shall start back to Missouri. I am to hold several meetings in Indiana also, if the Lord wills, conditioned on arranging suitable time. Brethren, if any of you need me, write to me at Quail, Ky-J. L. Davis.

St. Louis, December 20.-I was here yesterday with the brethren, and enjoyed two good sermons. Cleveland, December 21.—The services with the Cleveland church for the last two Lord's days have been fine. Two baptisms Lord's day week. Interest increasing at each succeeding service. I am working hard and am making a great sacrifice for the East Tennessee work; but this I willingly and gladly do for the sake of the noblest cause ever committed to mortal man. This we buoyantly do when we get responses. The church here been doing some charity work, and it is planning to do more. first and third Lord's day special contributions are made to a regular charity fund. Brother Vernon Rozar filled an appointment with Union Chapel, at Rockwood, on the second Lord's day. Brother Phillips was at Ooltewah last Lord's day. They both report good and encouraging audiences. We are trying to locate another good worker in the form of a preacher in this country.-George W. Farmer

Name Address

Cincinnati Mission.

To the Churches of Christ in America-Greeting: Permit me to again remind you of the importance of the Cincinnati territory as a mission point and the necessity of a house of worship for the city congregation. Two thousand printed appeals are being sent to churches which own their house of worship free of debt. We do not wish to place any limit upon the amount you may feel able to give, but take the liberty to suggest that if each one of the two thousand congregations will contribute, we will say, ten dollars for the work-and a very modest sum indeed, considering the great benefit it will accomplish for the cause of Christ-we can build a church house and residence for the minister upon the lot which has just been purchased for that purpose.

Could any better resolution be made for the new year than a liberal response to this worthy call for your fellowship? These brethren here have proven their loyalty and devotion to the truth by manifesting strong opposition to certain false prophets, whose object was to introduce speculative teaching and destructive heresy, which would certainly have driven the congregation into a digression of the worst form. This work is known to several prominent eyangelists, who have given it their full and unqualified indorsement.

Can we expect to have the fellowship of all the churches by a small donation, or one-half of them in a larger sum? Please remember that we do not expect responses from all churches; so if any feel able to give more than the amount mentioned above, it will be gladly and thankfully received.

Send all communications containing funds, payable by bank check or postoffice money order, to J. A. Higginbothan, 506 Mount Hope Road, Cincinnati, Ohio.

We pray the Lord to open the eyes of all to this great mission field in this our own free homeland. Amen!

Two Reasons for Obeying God. BY H. M. PHILLIPS.

To escape hell and gain heaven are two prominent reasons held up in the word of God for obeying him. To be free from punishment and receive the blessing is the desire of every normal human being. This we know from childhood, and our efforts are thus directed from the cradle to the grave. The fear of punishment and the hope of reward are two principles that keep mortal man working under the burning heat or against the chilling wind. Life here, as well as hereafter, has these two incentives,

Soon after man lost the blessing of the garden of Eden we see him groaning under the burden of punishment and saying it is greater than he can bear. He looks for some glimmering hope to be realized, that a blessing at last may take the place of the curse. In the Old Testament God continually threatened his people and offered to give a land of blessing. The Jews then knew what it was to be chastised by the nations about them, and longed for the time to enter the promised land. The New Testament abounds in statements telling of the punishment of the evildoer, as well as the joy of the Lord to those who do well. The Christ spoke of both soul and body being destroyed in hell. The apostles told of everlasting punishment. If such seemed good to the Lord then to be taught, why not now as well. since we are under the same law? But some say God is a God of love. This is true; but he is also "a consuming fire." (Heb. 12: 29.) hates as well as loves. Every one who is a true servant of God must hate some things as well as love others. I do not think any one will ever love too much, but I fear some are about to neglect the other side of the real life. It used to be that a great deal of preaching was filled with the awfulness of hell, but many now never mention that. Are we able to improve on the work of the Savior and apostles guided by the Holy Spirit, and say we do not need such The gospel Christ commissioned his apostles to preach was a promise of salvation to the one who believed and was baptized, and of damnation to the one who believed not. Is the last part of this of no value, or is it all right to leave it off? If so, may I not leave off other parts as well, since the Lord did not suggest what to reject? According to some, just preach love to a being, and you do not need to talk to him of hell. If that is true, is it not a pity that Christ, the apostles, and the Holy Spirit did not find it out before the Bible was written and just leave it out? Some preachers seem too refined to speak of hell, and some members have ears too delicate to listen to such an awful word; but both may be prepared to dwell in hell forever. There is a scarcity of articles in papers dealing with the awful punishment for those who fail to obey. Too many want a paper that condemns nothing and says nothing very strong, so all can rest in ease in Zion, so as to speak and do as they please, with no fear of any one's condemning the course taken. There has been so little preaching about hell one can hardly see any smoke. Heaven has been pictured so much of a sentimentality that it is hardly real to the listeners. So little is written and preached about hell that one might think most people are not aware of a hell as taught in the old Book. need more Scripture and less worldly talk in the preaching. Back to the law of God is the redeeming way. I would not overstress any one subject to the exclusion of another, but I would love to see this neglected subject forcibly pressed as the word of God places it. I wish a few of the old writers would give us a series of articles along this line, and I believe it would help to stir a few hearts to duty. How much do you, my preacher brother, preach about hell? There is a hell to shun and a heaven to gain. We should warn against the one and uphold the other. Get all to obey God to escape hell and gain heaven.

The Phillips-Saddler Debate. BY VERNON ROZAR.

The debate between W. C. Phillips (church of Christ) and Mr. Saddler (Methodist), which was held at the Sugar Creek Methodist house, south of Cleveland, Tenn., beginning on November 22 and continuing four days, was a complete victory for the truth. Brother Phillips presented strong arguments which were never answered. The following propositions were discussed: (1) "Water baptism is in order to the remission of past sins;" (2) "Sprinkling is scriptural baptism;" (3) "Immersion in water alone is scriptural baptism;" (4) "We are baptized with the Holy Ghost to-day as in apostolic days." Brother Phillips affirmed the first and third propositions, and Saddler denied; Saddler affirmed the second and fourth, and Brother Phillips denied.

Saddler tried to win the sympathy of the people by ridiculing Brother Phillips. He was applauded several times, but because of his fun making, and never for any point made with Bible proof, as he could make none.

We hope that much good will be the result of Brother Phillips' defense of the truth. He is a young man, but strong in the use of God's word. We believe that he is fully able to defend any scriptural subject.

Work With Churches in Tennessee.

BY W. DERRYBERRY.

On the fourth Lord's day in November I began a few-days' work with some churches in Dickson and Hickman counties.

On Sunday I was with the Friendship church at Stayton, in Dickson County. We had two services, morning and afternoon. We have some good people there, and it is a pleasure to be with them. I have known this church thirty-three years, having taught several singing classes there. However, some things in their history are very sad. Years ago it was not any trouble to get a large crowd there. and they seemed to appreciate being together so much. But division and trouble came in and did their work. and the attendance is now far lessthan it once was. But there are some who seem determined to keep things going, and the interest is shown in different ways. One thing noticeable is that they keep their house in such nice repair. They have been meeting in the same house for thirty-three years, and it looks better outside and in than when I first knew it. One thing that caused their crowds to decrease is the fact that some of their best members moved away, and some, of course, have crossed over. But It is sad indeed to see some who once were active members now seeming to delight in things that will drag the church down.

From Friendship I went to Vanleer on Sunday night and preached for them three nights. I certainly enjoyed my visit there. I helped them begin the work there about twenty years ago. They now have a comfortable house of worship, and, though the membership is not large, they are moving along so well and so harmoniously.

I next met with the church at Dickson in their prayer meeting, and have just now closed a ten-nights' singing class with them. Many good things could be said about Dickson, but it would take too much space to say it all. The kindness and hospitality there is surely commendable. They have lately secured the services of Brother E, P, Watson to preach there and in the country around, and they are delighted with his work. Now 1 would say to those brethren that all these nice things are said in earnest, not overlooking the fact, however, that there are "breakers ahead" unless great care is taken; and there is only one way through, and that is for church and preacher to be true and faithful to the teaching of the Bible, turning neither to the right nor to the left. "Whatsoever is not of faith is sin." "Faith cometh by hearing the word of God."

I was with the church at Burns one night, and enjoyed it. They talk of having a singing, beginning on January 4. There are many good people at Burns

On the first Sunday in December I preached morning and afternoon at Lyle, and at night at the government plant a mile away. I certainly enjoyed my trip there. On the third Lord's day in December I preached twice at Bon Aqua, and enjoyed the visit there very much.

HOTEL CLERK TESTIFIES.

A person often does more good than he realizes when he tells a suffering friend how to get well. J. N. Tohill, clerk Lottie Hotel, Evansville, Ind., writes; "For weeks I suffered constantly with pains in the muscles of my thigh. I was treated by the doctor for rheumatism, but found no reitef. Upon recommendation of a friend, I tried Foley Kidney Pills, and began to get relief almost immediately." Good for backache, rheumatic pains, stiff joints, sore muscles.

POISON, WEEPING SKIN, ETC.

I believe eczema can be cured to stay. I mean just what I say—C-U-R-E-D, not merely patched up to return again. Remember, I make this statement after handling nearly a half million cases of eczema and devoting twelve years of my life to its treatment. I don't care what all you have used nor how many doctors have told you that you could not be cured; all I ask is just a chance to prove my claims. If you write me TO-DAY, I will send you a FREE TRIAL of mild, soothing, guaranteed treatment that will surely convince you as it has me. If you are disgusted and discouraged, I dare you to give me a chance to prove my claims. By writing me to-day I believe you will enjoy more real comfort than you really thought this world held for you. Just try it, and I feel sure you will agree with me.

Teaching the Bible in the Church.

BY A. M. GEORGE.

In the Gospel Advocate of December 9 Brother J. A. Perdue says: "A Christian is in the church wherever he is; and wherever he teaches the Bible, he teaches it in the church, whether it is in his home, the shop, store, or school, unless he goes out of the church when he goes to his shop, store, or school. This must be true."

I say so, too. But the brother fails to make any discrimination between the church at home, in the shop or school, and the church "come together into one place," as in 1 Cor. 14: 23, 26. Christians are in the church wherever they are, but they can do things in the shop, home, or school that they are not allowed to do in the church "come together into one place." For instance, a man or a woman can teach in the home, shop, or school, in the church; but the woman cannot teach in the church "come together into one place," as in 1 Cor. 14: 35.

When one talks or writes on this subject, if he does not consider this difference, he will surely get into confusion. The scriptures above make that plain enough, but many do not seem to see it. Paul says plainly that the woman shall not ask a question in the church "come together into one place;" but he gives her permission to do it at home. See?

The Old and the New.

BY L. E. PRYOR.

Nineteen hundred and twenty, with all of its joys and blessings, with all of its opportunities and privileges, with all of its possibilities and responsibilities, with all of its sorrows and crosses, with all of its faults and mistakes, will soon be numbered with the years of the past. As we thus stand at the threshold of a new year, with its boundless opportunities, we ought to invoice our lives to see if we have anything to our credit that God would honor. If we have not, we ought to realize keenly that we have not made the progress that God intended for us to make. He intends for his children to grow spiritually as the physical child grows physically, and the normal child will.

The unkind words which we have spoken, the uncouth acts which we have done, and the sins which we have committed cannot be recalled. They are beyond our control. The only recourse we now have is to genuinely repent and confess these wrongs and pray God to forgive us. When we do, we have the assurance from Jehovah that he will not hold them against us any more forever.

Can any one imagine a picture more beautiful than for the church of Christ in its entirety to be on the first day of January, 1921, like the infant that is born on that day, without one thing recorded against it by the Almighty God? Is such possible? Most assuredly it is. How? By every one of its members applying the means already suggested, without which it is absolutely impossible. Let each one of us ask himself the question, Am I going to do my part to make it such?

After we have made the proper adjustments in every way, let us do like Daniel did. As he purposed in his heart that he would not defile himself with the king's meat, let us purpose. The elders and deacons, that they will be more watchful over the church this year than ever before; that they will rule in every way as the Bible directs. Let those under their care purpose that they will be obedient to them as unto those who look after the welfare of their souls. Let the preachers purpose to eradicate from their hearts the envy and jealousy, if they have any, against their brethren; also that their lives shall be purer, their sermons more spiritual, and their articles more instructive. Let the editors purpose that their journals shall be more wholesome and constructive; that nothing shall enter their columns but what is edifying to both saint and sinner. Let us all purpose that if we cannot say anything good about our fellow being, we will say nothing at all. Then let us labor and pray for a more perfect union and greater success for the cause of Christ. I feel sure that if we will all do these things, when the end of 1921 shall have come, we can look back over one of the greatest years for the cause of our Lord since the Reformation.

It will be found that some of the best-known people in heaven filled very obscure places while on earth.

Makes a Family Supply of Cough Remedy Really better than ready-made cough syrups, and saves about $2. Easily and quickly prepared. Easily and quickly prepared.

If you combined the curative proper-ties of every known "ready-made" cough remedy, you probably could not get as much real curative power as there is in this simple home-made cough syrup, which is easily prepared in a few minutes.

Get from any druggist 2½ ounces of Pinex, pour it into a pint bottle and fill the bottle with syrup, using either plain granulated sugar syrup, clarified molasses, honey, or corn syrup, as desired. The result is a full pint of really better cough syrup than you could buy ready-made for three times the money. Tastes pleasant and never spoils.

This Pinex and Syrup preparation gets right at the cause of a cough and gives almost immediate relief. It lossens the phlegm, stops the nasty throat tickle and heals the sore, irritated membranes so gently and easily that it is really extensible.

and so gently and easily that it is really astonishing.

A day's use will usually overcome the ordinary cough and for bronchitis, croup, hearseness and bronchial asthma, there is nothing better.

Pinex is a mast valuable concentrated compound of genuine Norway nine extract, and has been used for generations to break up severe coughs.

To avoid disappointment ask your druggist for "216 onness of Pinex" with full directions, and don't accept anything else. Guaranteed to give absolute satisfaction or money promptly refunded. The Pinex Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

The Number Seven.

BY HORRY HODGES,

Among nearly all the early races and nations of the earth the numbers three, seven, ten, twelve, forty, and one hundred had a special significance. In this article I shall refer exclusively to the number seven, both in sacred and profane literature. To write a sketch of "seven" as found in history and literature would require volumes. We will first look at a few sevens in our sacred books. Jacob worked seven years for Leah. He also worked seven years for Rachel. The book in Revelation had seven seals. A lamb spoken of in the Bible had seven horns and seven There were seven Spirits of eyes. God. There were seven lamps. There were seven cardinal virtues. There were seven deadly sins. There were and are seven sacraments. With the ancients there were seven planets. There were also seven elements, There were seven wicked spirits. There were seven sons who were frauds and magicians. There were seven golden candlesticks. There were seven churches in Asia. John saw seven stars. There were seven seals. There were seven angels. There were seven trumpets. There were seven vials of wrath. There were seven plagues given in Revelation (ten in Egypt. The scarlet-headed beast had seven heads. The woman sat on seven mountains. There were seven kings. There were seven attributes of God. Seven thousand were killed in an earthquake. There were seven thunders. There were seven days of the week.

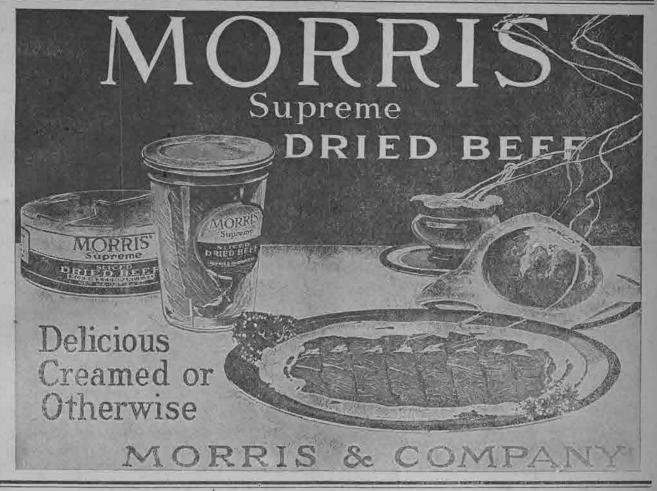

The clean beasts were taken into the ark by sevens. The fowls were taken by sevens. The rain was to begin in seven days. On the seventh month and seventeenth day the ark landed. Noah waited seven days to send the dove out of the ark on its second flight. In seven days he sent it out again.

Other sevens are as follows: The temple at Jerusalem had seven inclosures. The cave of Mithras had seven doors. The tower of Babel had seven stories. Thebes had seven gates. The God Pan played on a flute containing seven pipes. Apollo's lyre had seven strings. Seven books composed the Book of Fate. The Brahmans had seven prophetic rings. There were seven stones in Laconia consecrated to the seven planets. In Egypt there were seven castes of society. In India there were seven, The monument of Mithras had seven altars. The Persians invoked seven great spirits when in trouble. The Chaldeans had seven archangels. The Jews had seven archangels. The Babylonians had seven wicked spirits. Blood was sprinkled upon the altars of the Egyptians seven times. Egyptians had seven mortal sins. The Egyptian priests chanted a hymn of seven vowels. The Assyrian tree of life had seven branches. The Hindoo god, Agni, had seven arms. Sura. the sun-god of the Hindoos, rode a horse that had seven heads. Balaam builded seven altars, and offered seven bullocks and seven rams on each altar. Pharaoh saw seven fat kine and seven lean kine in his dream, The priest of Midian had seven daughters. Before Jericho seven priests blew upon seven horns. Samson was bound with seven green withes, and his marriage feast lasted seven days.

In a newspaper article sometime ago by Lucile Caine many other sevens were given from among the thousands, and we now name several contained in that article. There were seven years of plenty and seven years of famine. There were seven ears of full corn and seven ears of blasted corn. The old law said to forgive seven times, but the new says to forgive seventy times seven times. Seven days were required to cast down the walls of Jericho. The last day they surrouned the walls seven times. On the seventh blast of the trumpets the walls fell. Laban pursued Jacob seven days. Job's friends sat with him seven days and seven nights, and offered seven bullocks and seven rams to atone for their wickedness. The servant of Elijah looked for a cloud seven times. King Ahasuerus had seven chamberlains. Seven maids attended Queen Esther. Solomon was seven years building the temple. They feasted seven days at the dedication. Unleavened bread was eaten seven days by the children of Israel. Abraham gave seven ewe lambs to Jacob mourned seven Abimelech. days for Joseph. There are seven resurrections in the Bible-seven dead persons raised to life again. Seven devils were cast out of Mary Magdalene. There were seven deacons chosen by the apostles. Enoch, who was translated, was seven generations from Adam, There are seven petitions in the Lord's prayer. Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego were cast into a flery furnace seven times hotter than usual. Nebuchadnezzar ate grass seven years. The house of wisdom had seven pillars.

The Inward Effects of humors are worse than the outward. They endanger the whole system. Hood's Sarsaparilla eradicates all humors, cures all their inward and outward effects. It is the great alterative and tonic whose merit has been everywhere established.

Notes From Florida.
BY FLAVIL HALL.

On November 21 I began a mission meeting at Lake Butler, Fla. There are only three faithful disciples there -all sisters, Sister M. V. Dekle called for the meeting. She is one of the truest Christians I ever met, but, with all her earnest efforts and prayers, she has not been able for a long while to induce others to meet with her and keep up regular worship in the house built there by her husband with some help from others during his lifetime. But I believe her work and supplications will be rerewarded some day with success. She succeeded in getting some to attend and hear the word preached, and she experienced great joy in a consciousness of doing her duty and in the knowledge that the truth was fervently, gently, and uncompromisingly preached.

It was five miles from Lake Butler that Aunt 'Manda Thomas, a colored woman and a near centenarian, was baptized last summer when I was in a meeting near her home. Her life has been one of virtue and usefulness. Her days of strength were given to the interests of her owners and their posterity. When she was told she was free, she did not leave the home, but absented herself and remained in seclusion until she was found weeping. She was asked what was the matter. She answered: "I don't want to leave you." Arrangements were made for her to stay, and this no one ever regretted. She was always a faithful attendant at church, and for a long time had desired to be baptized and enjoy the full blessings of the church, But-alas!-she has been denied participation in the Lord's memorial at the assembly. One brother administered to her the emblems for a while in the home, but later decided that he must be allowed to wait on her at the house of worship, else he could serve as deacon no longer. But two or more said they did not want to "worship God with a nigger." So, to keep the peace, another deacon was appointed who was willing to withhold from her the privilege purchased for her by the blood of Jesus. This was worse than "peace at any price." The "all-nations" and "every-creature" commission was discarded and race prejudice given the right of way. I would rather be Aunt 'Manda than to be one of those men who are not willing to worship God unless she is excluded. As sure as the New Testament is true, just that certain will Jesus give Aunt 'Manda a share in his glory, and those men who are denying her her rights in Christ are in danger of being denied a "right to the tree of life." She says she will go to meeting as long as she has strength to get there.

On December 8 and 9 I spoke to interested audiences at Tampa. The strength and growth of the congregation there compares favorably with the best of other congregations it has been my pleasure to visit. G. B. Hoover is a live wire.

I am now (December 19) in a meeting with the church at Dade City, with a good interest and three baptisms. My wife and I think our lot is cast with fine people here.

Every man is a steward unto God. There is no title, office, or trust so sacred as stewardship. It grants to a man full authority to direct, control, and use the property of his Master. The owner has no special oversight of his own affairs, but intrusts them to the care and management of the steward. There can be no doubt but that this is the proper view of our position in the world. We are here to keep house for the Lord. We hold all things in trust and as such we must give an account whenever he asks it. We are at liberty to use anything so long as we prove faithful to our divine trust. It was the infidelity of the steward in the parable, the careless scattering of the master's goods, that led to his dismissal.—Selected.

The California Raisin.

BY L. O. PERKINS.

When I was a small boy, I used to wonder about the raisin. The thing that puzzled me most was as to how the sugar was put in each raisin. We usually received them about Christmas time, and that was about the only time we did get them.

I will tell you about the California raisin if you will listen. They really are grapes, dried in the sun, then carefully selected and packed, and shipped fast in carload lots. The San Joaquin Valley is the greatest center in the State for raisins, if not the greatest in the world.

We first take the small cuttings from the grapevines, cut them off about ten to twelve inches, and set them in the ground, and water and cultivate them for about six months; and the next spring we take them up and set them out in the fields. It takes from four to five years before they bear very much. When the crop is ready to harvest, the ground is first prepared by throwing it up, with a broad place about two feet wide facing the sun somewhat on a slant. Then the grapes are cut from the vines and spread out on wooden trays about two and a half by three feet. These trays are then placed on the ground prepared, facing the sun. They are left in this condition about two weeks, when it will be observed that they have changed color from green to brown. Then men are sent into the fields, and the raisins are turned over by placing an empty tray on top of the tray with the raisins on it and throwing it over. They are left again until the other side has changed its color, which is from a week to ten days. Then men gather up the travs and stack them in the fields in stacks almost as high as a man's head, and they are left again. Later they are gathered up and taken to the packing houses and packed for shipment. The sugar is in the raisin by nature. After the crop has been harvested, the farmers cultivate the ground and get ready for another crop. Early in the spring they prune the vines by cutting off almost the entire top, just leaving the old stump. One who is not acquainted with the industry would believe the vines had been ruined. But not so; for new vines come out and bloom, and a new crop sets, and soon raisins again.

We have two principal varieties, the Muscat and the Thompson seedless. They are very fine to eat when ready to make raisins out of them. The San Joaquin Valley is adapted to them on account of such a long dry season. When raisin-drying time comes, we need dry nights and hot days, and we have them here. Through the summer and part of the fall one can, and many do, sleep out, and there is no dampness.

Now, don't you think I have told you a good raisin story?

In this great valley we are getting a number of congregations of disciples of Christ started.

Faith is the eye by which we look to Jesus. A dim-sighted eye is still an eye; a weeping eye is still an eye. Faith is the hand with which we lay hold of Jesus. And he is a believer whose heart within him trembles when he touches the hem of the Savior's garment that he may be healed. Faith is the tongue by which we taste how good the Lord is. A feverish tongue. And even then we may believe, when we are without the smallest portion of comfort, for our faith is founded, not upon feelings, but upon the promises of God. Faith is the foot by which we go to Jesus. A lame foot is still a foot. He who comes slowly, nevertheless comes.—H. Müller.

Edifying as the Need May Be

BY A. B. LIPSCOMB

Why We Can, and Why We Can't.

The lesson this week is suggested by an epochal event in the history of the children of Israel-the sending of the twelve spies into the land of Canaan. It is important to know that the plan of sending these spies to view the conditions and to bring back a report originated among the Israelites themselves because of their lack of faith in God. (See Deut. 1: 22.) They devised this plan at a time when they were face to face with a great opportunity. God had led his people quickly from the land of bondage to the borders of their inheritance. They were now at Kadeshbarnea. Before them spread the covenanted possession, and their own history and God's pledge afforded assurance. "Miracles had been their daily bread;" and the God whose judgments had devastated Egypt, whose power had opened a pathway through the sea, and whose hand had fed them in the wilderness, bade them take possession. Had they fully trusted him and moved forward, they would speedily have gained possession of the promised land; but they faltered and hesitated and asked that spies be sent to see whether or not the inhabitants of Canaan might be conquered. God acceeded to their request, not because he needed any such information about Canaan, but in order that their faith might be tested. A man of prominence, "every one a ruler," was selected from each tribe to constitute the exploring party. Definite instructions were given as to how they should work. They were to enter Canaan at the south and proceed through the country, observing particularly the nature of the soil, the number and character of the inhabitants, the manner of their dwelling, and the facilities for making a defense. They were commanded to bring back with them samples of the products of the soil. Moses was careful to tell them to make their observations with hearts full of courage.

In the course of time the spies all came safely back. Two reports were submitted to the people-a majority and a minority report. The two reports were alike with respect to material conditions. The twelve spies agreed with regard to the excellence of the country. It was desirable because it was rich and productive. They said it was a land that "floweth with milk and honey." Honey was of greater importance to the Israelites than to us, because it took the place of sugar. In view of the recent scarcity of sugar and the present high cost of milk, we should know how to appreciate a land that "floweth with milk and honey." But the two reports differed in the most essential point. One report was accompanied with unbelief and the other was alive with faith. In the majority report the ten spies said the people lived in walled towns, and there were giants, the children of Anak, in Canaan, who were powerful warriors; therefore, the Israelites would not be able to take possession of the land. On the other hand, Caleb and Joshua, the two spies that constituted the minority, saw the same things the ten saw-that the land was desirable, the cities were walled, and giants were there; but they said: "Let us go up at once and possess it; for we are well able to overcome it." (Num. 13: 30.) Why should there be such a marked difference in the recommendation of the two reports, one of them saying in so many words, "We can;" the other saying, "We can't?" The difference was in the character of the men. While the twelve had been selected because they were rulers of their respective tribes. ten of their number proved to be moral cowards. To use the words of George Henry Hubbard, "they sang the song of the grasshopper," saying: "Conquer them? Never. Why, we are mere grasshoppers beside them! It's of no We can't do it, and we won't try." But there were two brave men who said: "The land is ours. God has given it to us. Let us go up and take it. We can do it, and we will."

In a London paper a while ago there was a series of pictures in which one element was omitted, and the readers were asked to guess what element was left out and the change its presence would make. In one picture there appeared a man rushing forward with wild, outstretched arms, while men and women were scattering in every direction to keep out of his way. He seemed like a lunatic escaped from an insane asylum attacking a terrified and fleeing company. The element left out was merely a pocket handkerchief tied over his eyes. With this added, the scene was transformed into a harmless game of blindman's buff. O what a difference that pocket handkerchief made! Applying the illustration, the one element left out in the report of the ten spies was faith; but leaving that element out spoiled everything. It ruined and belittled their characters to such an extent that we do not even care to recall their names. No man can be a real prince if he has not the element of faith. On the other hand, we delight to recall the names and honor the memory of Caleb and Joshua. For their faith was sublime. It could look past walled cities and giants and see God's power giving Israel possession of the land. Sixty years later, after Israel had partially succeeded in clearing the land of Caanan, we hear the battle-scarred veteran, Joshua, now waxed old and stricken in age, exhorting the people: "And Jehovah your God, he will thrust them out from before you, and drive them from out of your sight; and ye shall possess the land, as Jehovah your God spake unto you." (Josh. 23: 5.) Nothing could extinguish this great man's faith. Paul, in his matchless letter to the Romans, said: "Whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning, that through patience and comfort of the scriptures we might have hope." (Rom, 15: 4.) The story of this crisis in Israel's history is one of the many things written aforetime for our benefit. What needed lessons may we derive from a prayerful study of it?

Let us, first of all, see that God is willing to lead each one of us toward the Promised Land of a Christian character and a heavenly life. The land of Canaan in its richest and most productive state is but the faintest type of the Christian's glorious inheritance. The great clusters of grapes that the spies brought back from Eshcol can hardly symbolize at their best the fruit of the Spirit-"love, joy, peace, long-suffering, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, meekness, self-control." (Gal. 5; 22.) Man has never seen any country that can compare with heaven. "As it is written, Things which eye saw not, and ear heard not, and which entered not into the heart of man, whatsoever things God prepared for them that love him." (1 Cor. 2: 9.) No man has ever gone to the heavenly land and come back with a full and fair report. Even Paul, who was lifted up to Paradise, could not relate his experience when he came back.

"We speak of the realms of the blest— That city so bright and so fair; And oft are its glories confessed; But what must it be to be there!"

In the second place, we should realize the difficulties and the dangers and the manifold temptations that beset along the way over which God is leading us to the promised land. The apostle speaks of Satan as a roaring lion walking about and seeking whom he may devour. (1 Pet. 5: 8.) Paul says: "The door is open, and there are many adversaries." (1 Cor. 16: 9.) Again, he writes: "For our wrestling is not against flesh and blood, but against the principalities, against the powers, against the world rulers of this darkness, against the spiritual hosts of wickedness in the heavenly places." (Eph. 6: 12.) Such passages suggest giants of evil, of passion, of selfishness, of intemperance; enemies entrenched in the walled cities of custom, prejudice, sinful hearts, willful hearts, wealth, fashion, and ignorance. As the children of Israel must contend with and conquer the Anakim, so we must fight against our giant enemies.

"Must I be carried to the skies
On flowery beds of ease,
While others fought to win the prize,
And sailed through bloody seas?"

The answer is plain enough:

"Sure I must fight if I would reign; .
Increase my courage, Lord;
I'll bear the toil, endure the pain,
Supported by thy word."

Finally, we should learn that there is a great work to be done by Christians in this world, and each one of us must do his part. Just as true as when the Savior gave it, the words of the great commission constitute the greatest task ever assigned to human beings. "Go ye into all the world, and make disciples of all the nations." When we look only at the difficulties that surround us, this task, even with the progress that has been made, seems well-nigh impossible. "But what are Christians put in the world for," asks a devout writer, "except to do the impossible by the grace of God?" We can do the impossible only when we keep before us the promises that the Lord our God has given and believe with Paul, "I can do all things through him that strengtheneth me." (Phil. 4: 13.) "If you stand on the mountain of faith and look down," said Mr. Moody, "things will seem easy to you; but if you are in the valley of doubt, they will look like giants." Summed up briefly, the duty of our lives is that we must come out of the valley of doubt and indecision and indifference and reach that point where we are ready to say: "By the grace of God, I will."

"He rarely hits the mark or wins the game Who says, 'I know I'll miss;' while taking aim."

It was the brilliant and polished Virgil who told us why some people can. "They can because they believe they can." But it remained for a later poet not nearly so brilliant, an author "unheralded and unsung," to tell us why some people can't.

"If you think you are beaten, you are;
If you think you dare not, you don't;
If you like to win, but you think you can't,
It is almost certain you won't.
For out in the world you'll find Success begins with a fellow's will;
It's all in the state of mind."

I think it wise that we should apply such splendid rules to the work of the Lord, and especially when I consider that the apostle Paul connects the thought of a Christian's bravery with the hope of the Savior's coming: "For yet a very little while, he that cometh shall come, and shall not tarry. But my righteous one shall live by faith: and if he shrink back, my soul hath no pleasure in him. But we are not of them that shrink back unto perdition; but of them that have faith unto the saving of the soul." (Heb. 10: 37-39.)

The way to come to Christ or to serve him is "just as I am"—not "just as I was," or "just as I shall be," but "just as I am." We never are just as we were or just as we shall be. We only and always are just as we are. That is all there is or ever was or ever will be to us; that is what God wants of us. With no buts or conditions or qualifications of any kind, let us come to him.—R. E. Speer.

PELOUBET'S NOTES FOR 1921 NOW READY.

"Peloubet's Notes" has been issued for forty-seven years with ever-increasing popularity and usefulness, which fact alone is a wonderful argument for its value and helpfulness. It is rich in material, comprehensive in its scope, and practical in its treatment. Every superintendent, teacher, and scholar will find in it his own personal requirements. The editor of The Outlook says: "We give first place to Peloubet's." Marion Lawrance, the noted Sundayschool worker, writes: "How this standard commentary has been able to maintain itself during all these years, growing annually stronger and richer, is a marvel to the Sunday-school world. Personally, I do not see how any Sunday-school teacher can hope to do his best without the rich, full helps found in these 'Notes.'

Human Responsibility.

BY J. V. A. TRAYLOR.

Daniel Webster was approached once by a man who asked him this question: "Mr. Webster, what is the greatest thing in life?" As there are so many great things in life to observe, it seemed to puzzle him for a while; however, he thought and meditated for some time before replying, though many people of to-day do not think before they speak. Finally Mr. Webster answered the man by saying: "Human responsibility."

There is no doubt in my mind that human responsibility is a great thing, though I do not have the ability to say how far Mr. Webster missed it when he said it was the greatest thing in life. We must realize our responsibilities before we can become great in this world, knowing there is a mission for us to fill and a work to perform. Hear Solomon: "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, no device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in Sheol, whither thou goest." (Eccles. 9: 10.)

By examining Adam's life and character we may more clearly see that we will be held responsible if we fail to perform our duties. "This is the end of the matter; all hath been heard: fear God, and keep his commandments; for this is the whole duty of man." (Eccles. 12: 13.)

We notice that Adam's first responsibility was to keep the image pure, and to return it as it was in the beginning. "God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him: male and female created he them." (Gen. 1: 27.) We understand by this scripture that Adam was made in the image of God; therefore, he had a great responsibility resting upon him to keep the image spotless and blameless. However, he failed to comply with God's word and marred the image. We are made in the image of God; therefore, the question may be asked: How can we mar the image of God?

There are many ways of marring the image of God. We well know that all people are made in the image of God; and when we undertake to harm our fellow man, or speak against him, persecute him, or cause him to fall into the black catalogue of sin, we are causing disease to enter into the image. Let us remember that we are responsible for the way we handle the image of God; therefore, let us not do as Adam, but let us hope, pray, and work, that we may return the image back to God as pure as it was when he gave it to us.

"And Jehovah God planted a garden eastward, in Eden: and there he put the man whom he had formed." (Gen. 2: 8.) "And Jehovah God took the man, and put him into the garden of Eden to dress it and to keep it." (Verse 15.) We notice very vividly that Adam's second responsibility was to keep the garden and to return it in as good condition as it was when it was given him; but it seems that his fleshly appetite caused him to drift away from the ordinance of God. Again, we notice that God has always intended for his people to work and to make the world better by his goodness in putting them into it. However, there are not many people who think like Daniel Webster; but many go on, not realizing that they will be held responsible for leaving this world without making it better by their having lived in it.

Just as Adam failed to return the image back to God perfect, and just as he failed to return the garden back in as good condition as it was in the beginning, so we will be guilty of the same crime if we do not consider our responsibilities in this life. There is a beautiful lesson found in Luke 13: 6-9—the parable of the fig tree. The trouble with that tree was it was bearing no fruit, and it also cumbered the ground. You have observed the meaning of the word "cumber." Now, as that tree was cumbering the ground, just so there are many people who are guilty of the same thing.

"And Jehovah God said, It is not good that the man should be alone; I will make him a help meet for him." (Gen. 2: 18.) We can very easily understand that Adam's third responsibility was that of a husband. There is a great work for a man to perform to be a good husband, the kind that God would have him be; and he certainly owes it to his wife. Hear Paul: "Husbands, love your wives, even as Christ also loved the church, and gave himself up for it; that he might sanctify it, having cleansed it by the washing of water with the word, that he might present the church to himself a glorious church, not having spot or wrinkle or any such thing; but that it should be holy and without blemish. Even so ought husbands also to love their own wives as their own bodies. He that loveth his own wife loveth himself: for no man ever hated his own flesh; but nourisheth and cherisheth it, even as Christ also the church." (Eph. 5: 25-29.)

"And Jehovah God caused a deep sleep to fall upon the man, and he slept; and he took one of his ribs, and closed up the flesh instead thereof: and the rib, which Jehovah God had taken from the man, made he a woman, and brought her unto the man. . . . Therefore shall a man leave his father and his mother, and shall cleave unto his wife: and they shall be one flesh." (Gen. 2: 21-24.) Adam became responsible as a husband, so also does Eve become responsible as a wife. There is also a great work for the wife to perform; she must be a helpmeet as God intended. Hear Paul: "Wives, be in subjection unto your own husbands, as unto the Lord. For the husband is the head of the wife, as Christ also is the head of the church, being himself the savior of the body. But as the church is subject to Christ, so let the wives also be to their husbands in everything." (Eph. 5: 22-24.)

In this line of study we learn that the fourth responsibility is that Adam becomes a father and Eve a mother. Motherhood and fatherhood are among the greatest responsibilities of life, and many parents do not fill their mission as they should; but every father and every mother who wants to do his or her full duty will become a Christian, because there is no person that can be a true parent and live in the kingdom of Satan. Hear Solomon: "Train up a child in the way he should go, and even when he is old he will not depart from it." (Prov. 22: 6.) Every child is entitled to Christian parents, and he who tries to fill his mission as a father without being a Christian is certainly making a sad mistake; for a child, to be rightly reared, must be brought up in the atmosphere of God's revealed will.

It was Mr. Carmack who said, after thinking some time, that his son was entitled to a Christian father, though he was pulled out of the church by politics; however, he finally realized the great responsibility of fatherhood and came back to the church so he could train his son in the paths of righteousness and usefulness.

It has been stated that ability plus opportunity equals responsibility. Instead of people going on and doing the work they are to perform, they stop to measure their ability by some other person's ability. Now, don't ever be afraid you will do so much that nothing will be left for the other person, for life is full of duties and obligations. There are many opportunities that come our way, though we do not realize it so much; therefore help somebody today—somebody along life's way. Hear Paul: "So then, as we have opportunity, let us work that which is good toward all men, and especially toward them that are of the household of the faith." (Gal. 6: 10.)

We are not only responsible for sins we commit, but are held accountable for good we fail to do. The sins of omission make a large catalogue. You have observed that the rich man wanted Abraham to send Lazarus to tell his brethren to do work that he had failed to perform. Let us not fail to speak a word of encouragement or to help some one in need. "And the king shall answer and say unto them, Verily I say unto you, Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of these my brethren, even these least, ye did it unto me." (Matt. 25: 40.)

"Withhold not good from them to whom it is due, when it is in the power of thine hand to do it." (Prov. 3: 27.) Let us remember that God is abundantly able to bless us, and is forever bestowing his rich blessings upon us; therefore, let us comply with his teachings, for his hand is not short. We know that "every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, coming down from the Father of lights, with whom can be no variation, neither shadow that is cast by turning." (James 1: 17.) May we always be ready and willing to fill our mission to the fullest extent, because God has said: "To him therefore that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin." (James 4: 17.)

O how sweet it will be in that beautiful land, Free from all sorrow and pain, With songs on our lips and harps in our hands, To meet one another again!

The Eldership.

BY J. L. HINES.

"Elder" comes from the Greek word "presbuteros," and means "elder," "of age," "advanced in life, an elder, a senior" (Thayer, page 535); "aged person" (Young, page 293). "Elders," "presbyters," "shepherds," "bishops," and "pastors," though coming from different Greek words, all mean the same thing. "That they [elders] did not differ at all from the bishops or overseers is evident from the fact that the two words are used indiscriminately—Acts 20: 17, 28; Tit. 1: 5, 7." (Thayer, page 536.)

"Rebuke not an elder, but exhort him as a father; the younger men as brethren; the elder women as mothers; the younger as sisters, in all purity." (1 Tim. 5: 1.) "Let the elders that rule well be counted worthy of double honor." (Verse 17.) "Against an elder receive not an accusation, except at the mouth of two or three witnesses." (Verse 19.) These passages all prove that an "elder" is an "aged person."

"The bishop therefore must be without reproach, the husband of one wife, temperate, sober-minded, orderly, given to hospitality, apt to teach; no brawler, no striker; but gentle, not contentious, no lover of money; one that ruleth well his own house, having his children in subjection with all gravity; (but if a man knoweth not how to rule his own house, how shall he take care of the church of God?) not a novice, lest being puffed up he fall into the condemnation of the devil. Moreover he must have good testimony from that are without; lest he fall into reproach and the snare of the devil." (1 Tim. 3: 2-7.) "If any man is blameless, the husband of one wife, having children that believe, who are not accused of riot or unruly. For the bishop must be blameless, as God's steward; not selfwilled, not soon angry, no brawler, no striker, not greedy of filthy lucre; but given to hospitality, a lover of good. sober-minded, just, holy, self-controlled; holding to the faithful word which is according to the teaching, that he may be able both to exhort in the sound doctrine, and to convict the gainsayers." (Tit. 1: 6-9.) Here are given the qualifications of "elders;" so, brethren, by all means, let us adhere to them.

I believe that a discussion of this question at this time is in place. I believe that we are agreed on the question, with the exception of "an elder must be a married man;" so let us examine that for a little while. "Must be without reproach, the husband of one wife." It has been said that "must be the husband of one wife" means must not be the husband of more than one wife, but he can be a single man. Now, I grant that he must not be the husband of more than one wife, but I deny that a man can be a scriptural "elder" and be a single man. "Having children that believe, who are not accused of riot or unruly." (Tit. 1: 6.) "One that ruleth well his own house, having his children in subjection with all gravity; (but if a man knoweth not how to rule his own house, how shall he take care of the church of God?" (1 Tim. 3: 4, 5.) Then you tell me that an "elder" can be a single man? Set aside these scriptures, and you can by the same reasoning set aside every scripture. Do you say, "Paul meant that an elder must not have more than one wife?" Then did Paul mean by that reasoning that other men in the church could have more than one? If not, why not? The one qualification, "must be blameless," would not permit any man of the church to have more than one wife. Were any received into God's church who had many wives? Chapter and verse, please. Is there on record a single case of a single man's being an "elder" in the church of God? If so, where? Can you exhort single men as fathers and single women as mothers? (1 Tim. 5: 1.) "But," says one, "one means in opposition to many." Of course it does, and so does it mean one more than none. Until it can be proven that polygamists were actually members of the church, all of this argument on "one" falls to the ground. Better stay with the Book.

"Babylon;" A Criticism,

RY LEE JACKSON.

While the heading to this article can be accepted as indicating an adverse judgment as to the correctness of certain premises and conclusions set forth in the discussion between Brethren Kurfees and George, yet I do not want to be understood as writing for the purpose of faultfinding, for I have really been benefited by reading the articles of these two brethren.

Brother George says: "If the denominations are not all in Babylon, then there can be no Babylon. No man can be a Christian and a Babylonian at the same time. John puts every man or woman who is not in God's church in Babylon. (See Rev. 13: 4, 8: 14: 9, 10.)" In his reply Brother Kurfees very correctly says that, according to this reasoning of Brother George, the great leaders who inaugurated our plea for the primitive order were not Christians. Let us re-read and carefully weigh what Brother Kurfees says on this matter. His words are: "When Thomas and Alexander Campbell, Barton Stone, Walter Scott, and other great reformers discovered over a hundred years ago that they and all other religious people in the civilized world, being in denominations, were in Babylon, there was, according to Brother George, not a Christian on the face of the earth! Even they themselves were not Christians! Not a solitary soul among them, who had believed in the Lord, repented of sin, and been buried with the Lord in baptism, was a Christian, because of being in a denomination." Possibly it might be helpful to some of us if we could be led to the conclusion that at best we are all too little acquainted with the real teaching of the Campbells and Stone and Scott on the subject of undenominational Christianity. What Brother Kurfees says leads me to kindly offer the suggestion that we quit reading so much of the matter sent out from the press by some of our modern controversialists and devote more of our time to the Scriptures in the light of the writings of Campbell, Stone, and Scott.

I will offer the suggestion that the name "Babylon," long before the time of John's writing, had become a synonym for confusion. It was in this sense that the name represented the confusion existing in John's own time, and just as properly it represents the denominational and other forms of religious confusion of our own modern time. During the long period of what is known as the "Middle Ages," while Roman Catholicism ruled supreme in both the religious and the civil affairs of Europe, there was ignorance, superstition, and the jargon of religious confusion prevailing in all countries where the gospel of Christ had gene. If there were no Christians to be found anywhere amidst this Babylon of confusion, then verily for the time then being the cause of Christ had ceased on earth. And, more than this, after the beginning of the Reformation under the leadership of Luther and other heroic souls of five centuries ago, this confusion continued. If because of this confusion God had no people in the midst of it, then all of the noble impulses and heroic efforts that brought on the Reformation which gave the Bible to the common people had their origin in Satan's kingdom; and this confusion and misunderstanding yet continues. We need not go beyond the ranks of those who claim to be pleading for the gospel in its simplicity and purity, and for the unity for which Jesus prayed, to find this babel of confusion. While we are thankful for, and can yet glory in the self-sacrificing labors of, a host of noble men who are preaching the gospel in the spirit of love and earnestly contending for the purity of the New Testament worship, yet it must be admitted that the number of those among us who have made themselves factionists over unimportant and unrevealed questions has very greatly increased within the last twenty-five or thirty years. It cannot be said that these men are lacking in faith or lacking in honest conscientiousness; they are apparently only lacking in a knowledge of what is essential in gospel teaching. And because of this lack of knowledge there is confusion, contentions, and divisions in congregations where there should be assurance of faith, harmony, peace, and brotherly love. And, strange to say, apparently these men among us care but little about what was taught by the Campbells, the Stones, and the Scotts of our earlier history. As the old lady said about the way her daughter learned music without a teacher, some of these men seem to have learned what they know all within themselves, and they rest secure in the selfsufficiency of their own wisdom without the necessity for instruction from any superior teacher. I am saying this as a suggestion that it is not necessary for people to belong to a denomination in order to be in the Babylon of religious confusion. And the voice of God still calls: "Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues." (Rev. 18: 4.)

Another source of danger to some of us, in addition to that of being in a babel of confusion over unlearned questions, is that we may be trusting more to the merits of what we think we know than we are to the blood of Christ for our salvation. Is it not probable that a remembrance that it is the blood of Christ that cleanses the obedient believer from the guilt of sin, and not his perfect understanding of the truth, would help toward a solution of some of our problems? In one of the articles referred to. for instance, the writer makes an assertion relative to membership in the "church of God" that indicates that he himself did not have a very clear conception as to the meaning of his baptism when he was baptized. He uses "church of God" in a manner in which it cannot be ap plied without conveying the meaning of a corporate denomination embracing all those who are Christians, and the man who uses such language needs to restudy the Scriptures. The "churches of God" spoken of in the New Testament were local congregations and not general institutions; and neither did all of these local congregations taken together make up one general, world-wide institution, that any inspired writer ever referred to as the "church of God." The local congregation at Corinth was one among the many congregations of God brought into existence in the apostolic age; and when the apostle addressed them as such a body of persons, he used a word that conveyed to their minds the idea that as a congregation they were God's possession. These Corinthians knew nothing about the word "church" in its modern meaning, for no such word was in existence when the New Testament was written. I have long been convinced that if the word "church" could be dropped from our religious vocabulary and the word "congregation" be substituted as the true representative of the original word, much of our present confusion would come to an end. The word "church" may be all right as a designation for a denominational body of religionists, but it is altogether too variant in its usage and too complicated in technical meaning to be a proper representative of the New Testament idea of a simple assembly of Christians worshiping according to apostolic teaching. I am saying this in full cognizance of the fact that our English New Testament speaks of the "church" as the body of Christ, and that it says that Christ is the head of the "church" as his body. But, according to a well-known law of language, the New Testament also says that the head of every man is Christ. Cor. 11: 3.) Christ being the head of every man does not merge all men into the single being or entity of only one man. As Christ is the ruling head of one man, so is he the ruling head in authority over every man. What is true of the one man is true of all men. And just so of the con gregations of Christ's people. As he is the ruling head in authority over one congregation as his body, so is he the ruling head over every congregation of believers that worship in his name. But his being the ruling head over each and every congregation of the apostolic age did not make these congregations simply one institution which men now call a "church."

An Encouraging Beginning for 1921.

The Gospel Advocate has already made a most excellent beginning during the present year. If we can only keep up our rate and increase it a slight per cent, we certainly will be able to enlarge the paper by the time the present paper market settles down to a normal condition.

We believe that our readers will be glad to know this and that they will cheerfully cooperate with us to make 1921 the best year in the history of the Gospel Advocate. The managers of the paper appreciate the fact that they cannot make the necessary gains without the hearty cooperation of all their constituents. It is an easy matter for a reader to send one or more new subscribers. It takes very little effort to do this; and while thus benefiting the paper, the reader who does so is also conferring a favor upon the party whom he gets to subscribe to the Advocate. It is no little thing to have a good paper in the home throughout the whole year. Think of having fifty-two copies of the Gospel Advocate in your home! Many weeks there are articles in the Advocate which alone are worth more than the subscription price of the paper. Preachers who send us new subscribers will be given twenty per cent discount off of regular subscription prices. We are also giving a copy of the Teachers' New Testament with notes and helps suitable for Bible-school workers to every old subscriber who will send us two new subscribers. This is a very valuable book.

As we have often said, no young couple should start to keep house without a good religious journal. It is a mistake to pay too much attention to the things of this world, while neglecting the things that make for our spiritual growth and welfare.

We are now ready to record many new subscribers and many renewals, and we are asking all of our readers to pull with us to make 1921 the best year of all.

We feel very much encouraged and are writing this brief article to earnestly appeal to every reader of this paper to do all within his power to help us extend the circulation just now. Do not wait until to-morrow, but begin to-day.

The Christmas Holidays.

These words are being written on December 29, 1920, and what is known as "the Christmas holidays" are slipping away and the New Year is at hand. I doubt seriously that the Christian should ever have what is commonly called a "holiday." One of the meanings of "holiday" is "a day of exemption from labor." Such days we should never have. Of course there is such a thing as a diversion of labor for the purpose of giving the body and mind needed rest; but this diversion should be taken in the name of Christ and used joyfully to the glory of God. "Whether therefore ye eat, or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God." (1 Cor. 10: 31.) This is the way Paul looked at the matter, and that he is correct will hardly be questioned. Life is short and uncertain, and the little we can do for the salvation of men and women must be done now; for the night will soon come, when we will be powerless to speak to our friends and neighbors about their soul's interest, the spiritualist's view to the contrary notwithstanding.

These have been most joyful days for me and mine. A shower of good things to eat, etc., came to our home on Friday night, a week before Christmas, from many of the good people of this city. Then what might be called a "sprinkle" continued till new. Then a "sprinkle" started from Atlanta two days before Christmas and grew into a shower on Monday following. As our heartfelt thanks have been expressed to our friends here, and those in Atlanta are too far away for us to do this face to face, 1 take this method of saying to our friends there that nothing has cheered us more since coming to this place than the card shower and the gift of sixty dollars from one of the best churches in the world. And while I enjoyed to the fullest your kindness to us, let me state that I enjoyed much more that big heart of yours that caused you to send Brother Beck at Savannah the one-hundred-dollar check. I have known and worked with many a young preacher, but Brother Beck is one of the best I have ever known. His support at the first barely met expenses: but without a murmur he stuck to the job, and he is making a glorious success of the work. And we must not forget Brother Copeland, who secured a position and is laboring with his own hands that he may remain there and help with the work. Noble young men are these; and let us pray that God will send more and more such into the fields sorely in need of workers. 0 0 0

The Success of Christ and His Apostles.

That Christ and his apostles met with the greatest success known in the way of a religious movement will be admitted by all who have given it thought. Never in the history of the world were enemies more bitter and friends more true than in their day. These two extremes seem to go together as a logical consequence. The stronger and more bitter the enemy, the stronger and more undying is the love and devotion of the friends of our Lord to his cause. It is a question which is the cause of the other-that is, whether it is the bitterness of the enemy that makes the love and devotion of the friends intense, or whether it is the love, devotion, and continued activity of the friends that make the bitterness of the enemy so great. I have an idea, however, that the former is the cause of the latter. We all know very well that when the friends of Christ are less active and consecrated, the opposition and hatred of the enemy is reduced proportionately. But let this be as it may, I simply wanted the reader to think of the bitterness and determination of the opposition to Christianity in the days of the apostles, along with the intense and undying love the friends then had for it, and their unprecedented activity and sacrifice to extend the cause of Christ among men.

But in this article I am especially concerned about the success of the work in the days of the apostles. And it must be admitted that never has any work so greatly succeeded as the proclamation of the gospel by those early preachers. I think it is correct to say that their every seeming failure turned out to be a success for the cause of Christ. This is in perfect keeping with the assurance of our Lord "that to them that love God all things work together for good, even to them that are called according to his purpose." (Rom, 8: 28.) Then "believers were the more added to the Lord, multitudes both of men and women," and their success was such that they were spoken of as "these who have turned the world upside down." And while it is true that their enemies were many and determined, it is declared that "they took their food with gladness and singleness of heart, praising God, and having favor with all the people." (Acts 2: 46, 47.) Was it not the unbounded success of those early preachers and their "having favor with all the people" that caused the bitterness of the enemy to become so intense? Have you noticed Acts 17: 1-9? There, at Thessalonica, it is declared that "some of them were persuaded, and consorted with Paul and Silas; and of the devout Greeks a great multitude, and of the chief women not a few." Just what "a great multitude" here means, I will not say; but of one thing I am sure-viz., that it cannot be truthfully applied to any of our successes to-day. But read on in this chapter, and you run across the words: "But the Jews, being moved with jealousy, took unto them certain vile fellows of the rabble, and gathering a crowd, set the city on an uproar," etc. Was it not the glorious success of these early preachers that made the opposition so strong? And here I think it in order to say that I know of no jealousy and opposition of much consequence that our success to-day creates among our enemies; but it is a fact that, if preachers do get down to hard work and meet with reasonable success, in the house of those who should be their friends and should rejoice greatly over their success and strive to make it greater they will get a few knocks, and some will accuse them of succeeding simply to get the praise of men. I say this to the burning shame of some who claim to be interested in the extension of the cause of Christ.

That there is a staggering difference in the success of those early preachers and the success of those who claim to be gospel preachers to-day must be admitted to our shame. May God help me to say something or do something that will provoke thought along this line and make every elder and deacon, and every other soul who claims to be a friend to the cause Christ died to establish, stop and look for the cause of this difference. I submit a few reasons:

1. We do not love the cause as they did. There was no kind of sacrifice that they would not have gladly made for the furtherance of the cause. Paul with grace and absolute truthfulness could say: "But [we] suffer all things, lest we should hinder the gospel of Christ." (1 Cor. 9: 12.) What are you willing to suffer, my brother, my sister? Some of us cannot suffer the slightest disappointment or our preferences not being respected just once. Is it not true that the church is too much filled with mere babes in love, sacrifice, and consecration, and the sore need among us is more men and women who are men and women indeed in Christ? How timely the admonition, and how sorely needed, of the great apostle Paul: "Brethren, be not children in mind: yet in malice be ye babes, but in mind be men." (1 Cor. 14: 20.)

2. We do not love each other as they did. "And the multitudes of them that believed were of one heart and soul: and not one of them said that aught of the things which he possessed was his own; but they had all things common. . . For neither was there among them any that lacked." (Acts 4: 32-34.) "And whether one member suffereth, all the members suffer with it." (1 Cor. 12: 36.) Such love knit their hearts and souls together. Do we have such love to-day? Does one worker rejoice as much over the success of others as he does over his own? Is not selfishness running rampant among us?

3. We do not work as they did. Can it be said of our workers that they are "teaching publicly, and from house to house," and that any of us have "by the space of three years ceased not to admonish every one night and day with tears?" This is the way the early preachers did. Can we speak of what we are doing as "labors more abundantly?" This is the way Paul spoke of his work. Let us set ourselves down by the apostles—well, we could not do this, for the apostles did not stay still long enough for us to do this; but we can imagine such a thing, anyhow. But place what we do by the side of the way the apostles worked, and see the painful difference.

4. We do not pray as they prayed. Have any of us, "in the morning, a great while before day," arose and gone out into a quiet place to pray while all men and nature siumbered and slept? Have any of us become so intensely interested in the success we are trying to attain that we have prayed all night long? Christ did this. (Mark 1: 35; Luke 6: 12.) Have you noticed the continued exhortation of Paul and the other apostles: "Pray without ceasing; . . . for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus to youward." (1 Thess. 5: 17, 18.)

But I must cease, with the hope of more later. Let others do as they may, yet I beg that every friend I have on the earth may pray for me that I may strive with all my power to do and be just like those early preachers, regardless of any and all difficulties.

Ambassadors.

BY JAMES E. SCOBEY.

The world of mankind for four thousand years, from Adam to Christ, had, in the main, refused to be led of God into the green pastures of happiness, to enjoy the blessings God would there bestow. It is true that some men in every age did heed the teachings of God and walked with him, but by far the larger number followed their own devices. The allurements of Satan's ways, the gratifications of the lusts of the flesh, led them into the paths of sin and all species of wickedness, and into rebellion against God. In the days of Noah, "God saw that the wickedness of man was great in the earth, and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually. And the Lord said, I will destroy man from the face of the earth." (Gen. 6: 5-7.) But Noah found grace in the eyes of the Lord, and by the direction of the Lord built an ark to the saving of his family, when God sent the flood of waters, which destroyed all the rest of the inhabitants of the world. While God has said he will not destroy the world again with water, we are assured he will destroy It with fire. (2 Pet. 3: 7.)

Human nature has undergone little or no change in the lapse of years, and the course and conduct of man is to-day very like it has been in ages past. Men are lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God. The gratification of the animal appetites and propensities holds first place in the hearts of the greater multitudes.

I believe the lessons taught of God in the punishments of the rebellious Jews, as well as of other wicked nations, together with the blessings conferred on men and nations which would heed his word, has had, and is still having, a decidedly good effect upon the hearts and lives of many who believe that God in past times and in divers manners spoke to the fathers by the prophets, and hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son.

Jesus came into the world as a mediator between God and man, that sinful man might be reconciled to God. "For if, when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son, much more, being reconciled, we shall be saved by his life," (Rom. 5: 10.)

The ministry of reconciliation was conferred on the apostles. "All things are of God, who hath reconciled us to himself by Jesus Christ, and hath given to us the ministry of reconciliation." The ministry of reconciliation was and is the preaching of the gospel, called "the word of reconciliation." (2 Cor. 5: 18, 19.) God's will was and is that aliens to his government should become reconciled to him and come voluntarily under his authority, willing subjects to his power. But man had gone away from God, and could not of his own power reinstate himself in God's favor. But God's love for man induced him to send his only begotten Son into the world to redeem man from the condemnation of sin and to place him in harmonious relation with God. This Jesus did by the sacrifice of himself on the cross. This was his great mediatorial act, by which man could be at one with God; and hence it is called the at one-ment. God "made him to be sin for us, who knew no sin; that we might be made the righteousness of God in him." (2 Cor. 5: 21.)

Jesus was sent to the world by God, the Father; he was, therefore, an apostle of God. He had a message to deliver; he was, therefore, an ambassador of God.

In order that the blessings of the atonement might be enjoyed by all them living or who should live afterwards, as it did not, without conditions, put man at one with God. it was necessary that man should know the terms, or conditions, of his becoming the righteousness of God in Christ. Jesus, while on the earth, made known the conditions of reconciliation to no man, save to his apostles on Mount Olivet just prior to his ascension to heaven. Nor has he told to any one the conditions since that time, not even to Saul of Tarsus. He committed the word of reconciliation to his apostles, and from no one else can they be learned. The apostles were the ambassadors of Christ, so Paul declared. (2 Cor. 5; 20.) There are recognized two species of ambassadors. One is sent from one government to another to settle all questions of variance according to his own judgment, and the settlement would bind his government to the terms agreed to by the ambassador. Such a one is said to be an ambassador plenipotentiary-of full The other species is one who goes with full inpower. structions as to what he shall say and do in the business intrusted to him. He has no power save to carry out the instructions of his chief without change, modification, or substitution of a word. Of this latter class were the apostles.

Jesus had promised that when he went away he would send them another Comforter, even the Spirit of truth, whom the world could not receive, and he would bring to their remembrance what he had taught them, and further guide them into all truth. Therefore, whatever terms and conditions were proposed by the apostles for becoming citizens of the kingdom of heaven admit of no change upon the part of any man or set of men. Neither the man in Rome professing to be the vicegerent of Christ (that means acting for Christ in governing the church), nor any council, convention, conference, association, presbytery, or assembly has any authority to change or modify any ordinance which has the stamp of genuineness of apostolic teaching or precedent. There is no safe course to pursue religiously, except to take the simple, clear teaching of the apostles and prophets of the Lord Jesus Christ as found written in the Scriptures of divine truth; for they were given by inspiration of the Spirit of God. It is said: "All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness: that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works." (2 Tim. 3: 16, 17.) besides the Scripture does man need? He certainly does not need the doctrines (teachings) and commandments of men to guide him in the paths of peace and righteousness. There are no ambassadors on earth now. The chosen empowered ambassadors of Christ have delivered to the world the full, final instructions given them by the Master. The terms and conditions imposed on men must be accepted or there will be no salvation for rebellious man. A young preacher was recently heard to say he was an ambassador of Christ. He was mistaken. But many men act, speak, and teach as if they really had ambassadorial power, formulating doctrines and making rules and instituting forms of worship for the observance of their infatuated followers, which were unknown and untaught by the apostles of the Lord Jesus Christ.

A REFLECTION.

There is an element of sadness involved in the passing of a year. Time past is forever gone. If a man dies, he shall live again; but it is not so with a year. There is no resurrection for bygone days. We cannot now, we can never, live in 1920 any more. The sand that has run through life's hourglass cannot run through again. "The mill cannot grind with the water that has passed." In a sense, time is the stuff that life is made of. What a crime, then, to waste it or to fail to use it! If a man wastes his money, he may regain it; if he loses his health, through the aid of his physician he may restore it; but if he wastes his time, he can never recover it. The world is full of prodigals who are recklessly and unreservedly spending their time. They seem never to have been impressed with the preciousness of a day and the seriousness of life. They regard lightly the passing of a year; but one sad day, when it is too late, they, like one of old England's queens, would probably be willing to give a kingdom for a little more time. Regardless of how we have used it, 1920 with all its opportunities has passed into history.

The feelings we have on looking back over a year that is gone are, apart from the irrecoverable feature of past time, largely determined by the manner of our living during the year. If, like Paul, we have "lived before God in all good conscience until this day" (Acts 3: 21)-if we have kept his commandments faithfully, though we may have erred unwittingly-we shall have a peace of mind and an approbation of conscience that are worth more than all the gold of Ophir; and more, we shall have the best preparation for noble living in the new year. But if the past year has been one of continual neglect of duty and transgression of law, there are for us bitter regrets and stinging compunctions of conscience. Whether or not we have made the best of 1920, a new year is upon us with its obligations; and these can be met neither by rejoicing over the accomplishments, nor by sadly brooding over the failures, of the past.

Each succeeding year should be better than the one that precedes it. We should profit by the experiences of the past, even by the mistakes and failures. He is not taking heed unto his way who falls twice into the same ditch, nor is he growing who does no better to-day than he did yesterday. The only way we can make amends for the past is to live at our best during the present and the future. O that we might have an adequate conception of the possibilities of this year! The man may be yet unborn who rightly measures and fully appreciate the value of one hour, to say nothing of a year. If every Christian in the world should spend every hour of this year in the service of the Lord, what a change would be wrought in the lives of men! This year would not, like 1920, hold a notorious crime record of history; but, on the other hand, it would contribute its part to the hastening of that long-wished-for day when "the earth shall be full of the knowledge of Jehovah, as the waters cover the sea." "We must work the works of him that sent me, while it is day: the night cometh, when no man can work." (John 9: 4.) Our days are "swifter than a weaver's shuttle," and we should take heed that they be not spent "as a tale that is told." (Ps. 90: 9.) The course of the years of our lives should be, like the path of the righteous, "as the dawning light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day." (Prov. 4: 18.)

PLEASANT SURPRISES.

One of the many fine characteristics of the West End Avenue congregation was manifested in a typical manner on Monday evening, December 20, just before we left for Childersburg, Ala., where we spent the holidays, when Brother R. L. Harwell, one of our esteemed elders, in behalf of the congregation, presented us a set of genuine aluminum kitchen ware. We also received handsome gifts from our Bible classes, besides individual presents too numerous to mention here. For all these things we are sincerely grateful. The ladies of the congregation sent a Christmas box to the Potter Orphan Home, in addition to looking after local needs in the city.

The South Pryor Street congregation gave Brother R. H. Rogers a very thoughtful and acceptable shower on Thursday night, December 23. The sisters of that congregation also sent a Christmas box to the Orphan Home. These congregations know how to make others happy—a rare gift.

NEWS ITEMS.

One took membership with the West End congregation on the third Sunday in December. One was baptized on Thursday night, December 30. One came from the Baptists yesterday (January 2). Our Bible-study attendance last Sunday was more than fifty per cent larger than on the first Sunday of last year.

The three congregations—West End Avenue, South Pryor, and East Point—will conduct three union services, beginning at East Point on Sunday evening, January 9, at half past seven o'clock. The next service will be conducted at South Pryor on Sunday evening, January 16. The concluding service will be held at West End on Sunday evening, January 23.

Brother G. M. Owens began a singing school at East Point on December 27. It will continue thirty days.

LETTER OF APPRECIATION.

New York, N. Y., December 27, 1920.—Mr. A. B. Lipscomb, 317-319 Fifth Avenue, North, Nashville, Tenn.—Dear Sir: We beg to thank you for your splendid letter of December 24 inclosing check for five hundred dollars as a contribution from the readers of the Gospel Advocate for the Literary Digest Child-Feeding Fund. It was splendid of you to give your readers a chance to contribute, and it must be gratifying to you, as we are sure it will be gratifying to them, to know how much it is appreciated and what a splendid evidence it is of the generosity of those who read your paper. Sincerely, The LITERARY DIGEST

From George W. Farmer, Cleveland, Tenn.: "New Year's greetings to the Gospel Advocate and its force. May the year 1921 be the best year yet in the history of the dear, old Advocate. May it and its force continue to live and prosper in the things that are true and good, and may it continue to ever be worthy, in all respects, of a true and faithful brotherhood in Christ. Eternity alone will be able to measure the heights and depths, lengths and breadths, of its worth, and the good it has done. I may come to where I will have to do without it, but that time is not yet. It is worth too much to me to be turned down. God bless its career to his own glory and to his most righteous cause."

Pride E. Hinton, of Hanceville, Ala., writes as follows concerning the work of elders and preachers: "My work in the ministry has been brief, yet the study of the Word and my intimate acquaintance with, and close observance of the lives and work of, other gospel preachers who have been in the thick of the battle, together with my own experience, have taught me the importance of a preacher's declaring 'all the counsel of God,' treating each sin-sick congregation according to its particular shortcoming or disease, with all the firmness, power, love, and unchanging determination he possesses, thus, like a good soldier, imparting the same spirit to others. Speaking to the elders at Ephesus, Paul said: 'Wherefore I take you to record this day, that I am pure from the blood of all men. For 1 have not shunned to declare unto you all the counsel of God.' (Acts 20: 26, 27.) Now, because Paul had fully and earnestly taught those elders their duty, he then places the responsibility upon them. Listen, elders: 'Take heed therefore unto yourselves, and to all the flock, over the which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers, to feed the church of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood.' (Verse 27.) Again, Paul said of elders: "For they watch for your souls, as they that must give account.' (Heb. 13: 17.) Such responsibilities should make poor mortals tremble, yet many elders are sadly negligent. Do you remember, when Moses went up into the mount and left Aaron in charge of the people, how Aaron yielded to their whims? Well, that reminds me of some elders I have seen. Worse than nothing is the elder who is not enthusiastic about teaching God's word, setting the good example of 'holding forth the word of life.' May the day soon come when Christians shall 'awake out of sleep!'

We publish the following earnest words from a brother whose name is withheld, in the hope that they may stimulate to greater activity in the Lord's work: "Now that the hand of time has moved around to 1921, I wonder how many churches are planning to do greater work through the year. If all the careless, indifferent churches could be brought to a sense of their duty, we could make the power of God felt in the world. The denominations are flourishing: many of them have made phenomenal growth through the past year. I have noticed one thing that is strikingly characteristic of the denominations. They have learned the lesson of sacrifice. There is nothing too hard for them to do to show their power in the world. I know of one denomination that has had such stupendous growth in a few years that it electrifies us to think of it. Now I do not believe God intends for a single institution to outstrip the church. Certainly we should be as wide-awake as these denominations. I believe there should be greater sacrifice through this year than ever. Churches should pay their preachers enough to keep them in the work. It is a shame that some of our preachers have to give six days to secular work and then on Sunday preach for some church that is able to support for full time. We have not been benefited much the many articles appearing in the Gospel Advocate urging that a preacher should farm or do something else in the way of legitimate work, rather than devote his full time to the ministry. It is true that Paul made tents; but I am sure Paul did more preaching than making tents. No preacher should refuse to work, and no church should refuse to support the preacher if it is able. I know of a number of cases where young preachers of ability have to work six days and preach one day, all because there are a number of churches so absorbed in the business of robbing God that they never think of having a man in their midst to instruct them in the right way. When churches begin to do their duty, then people will 'know the Lord.' Brethren, let us do more work through the new year."

From H. F. Pendergrass, Louisville, Ky., January 6: "I filled my regular monthly appointment at Fairmount, Ky., last Lord's day. We had splendid crowds both morning and evening. Most of the members seem to have a mind to work. I have never met with finer people at any place than there. I preached at Fairview in the afternoon. This was once a strong congregation, but it has drifted until it is almost dead spiritually. It has members sufficient to support a man every Sunday, if they would do it; but they (like many others) have got it into their heads that they cannot support a man one Sunday a month. But this is only one of a great number around Louisville that are not doing anything but sleeping. I am sure the preachers that never get out in the rural districts are not so well posted as to the conditions of the church as some of us who spend cur time there. The indifference that has swept over the church in recent years is alarming. For instance, a congregation has a preacher to come to a designated town, promising to meet him there; and after he has paid railroad fare out of his own pocket, they, knowing that he is at the station waiting, decide not to go for him, and will not even call up and tell him they are not coming, so he can go back home. But the worst part is, they cannot see that they did wrong, and, of course, will not repent. Now, there is something radically wrong. I can have no hopes for a church that is so indifferent. I fear sometimes we preachers do not teach congregations as we should along this line. We are too afraid of hurting some one's feel ings; and then, of course, people will say we are 'preaching for money,' etc. Well, what if they do? Christians that will lower themselves to such a standard as to be continually insinuating that a preacher is preaching for money have not the mind of Christ. I have resolved to endure such meekly, in the name of Christ; but it seems to me that it is time some one was saying something, or 'what will the harvest be?' It will be a great day for the religion of Jesus Christ when churches will support the gospel and quit starving preachers. We need more preachers around Louisville, as there are several congregations without preachers."

H. Clay Rawlins, of Lancaster, Texas, in sending in his renewal subscription to the Gospel Advocate, says: "I have now been a reader of the Advocate for fifty years, having learned my letters, principally, from its pages when a child; and of all the papers that I have read in the years that are forever gone, I am sure that there is none that has given me as much aid, comfort, and consolation as has the Advo-cate. It would be saying too much to say that it is perfect or that it has always been exactly right; for perfection in teaching and writing comes only by inspiration, and we can only be perfect as we are in harmony with the divine model; but I honor and love the Advocate for its work's sake, for its steadfastness of purpose, for its determination through all these trying years to 'walk in the light, as he It was in the early eighties that men who is in the light.' had been proclaiming loudly to the world that God's word was sufficient and that the church could do the Lord's work began to want something else-'more.' Men and women in this life get whatever they want. If we want the Lord, he is standing at our door ready to come in and sup with us. If we want Baal, he is sure to appear for our service. The children of Israel, while waiting for Moses to come down out of the mountain, wanted a golden calf to worship; so they cast their earrings into the fire, and out came their calf. (Ex. 32: 24.) And so it was in the eighties. Men wanted a society calf, and—presto!—out it came. And as one step in the wrong direction always calls for another, then came the instrumental-music calf, the auxiliary calves, until they now have a whole herd, difficulty to number, the latest acquisition to their herd of calves being the 'Interchurch World Movement.' During all these years, while that great tide of innovations was sweeping over the Lord's people and causing so many hearts to ache and tears to flow, there stood, through the columns of the Advocate, our David and Jesse, and others, like a stone wall against every invention of man to carry on the work of the I thank God for their lives, and for the life of every faithful man from Abel to this day. There was a time, not many years past, when many of us trembled to think of the time when it would be necessary for others to take over the management of the Advocate. We feared what might be the consequence of such a change; but that fear is now disappeared. We now know that it will stand for the truth, and we thank God for it."

Old Mothers.

I love the old mothers—mothers with white hair, And kindly eyes, and lips grown softly sweet With murmured blessing over sleeping babes. There is something in their quiet grace That speaks of the calm of Sabbath afternoons; A knowledge in their deep, unfaltering eyes That far outstretches all philosophy.

Time, with caressing touch, about them weaves
The silver-threaded fairy shawl of age,
While all the echoes of forgotten songs
Seem joined to lend a sweetness to their speech,
Old mothers!—as they pace with slow-timed step,
Their trembling hands cling gently to youth's strength;
Sweet mothers!—as they pass, one sees again
Old garden walks, old roses, and old loves.—Selected.

A Little Boy Who Was a Missionary.

It happened in a little village in an out-of-the-way corner of India.

A missionary had gone there to baptize some men and women and to form them into a Christian church.

When the service had begun, the missionary saw a little boy about the age of twelve years sitting away back in the corner of the building, looking very much interested and listening "with all his small ears." After the missionary had baptized all the grown-up men and women who had professed their-faith in the Lord Jesus as their Savior, he was surprised to see this boy come forward and stand in front of the pulpit.

The missionary said to him: "What, my boy, do you want to unite with the church?"

The boy said: "Yes, sir."

The missionary looked at him lovingly, and said: "But you are very young, my boy, and I know nothing about you, and no one has taught you about the Christian faith; and after a while you may grow careless and indifferent. Perhaps it will be better for you to wait. I will be here again in less than a year, and if during that time you will study hard with the missionary here and prepare yourself, then if you wish to unite with the church, I will receive you gladly."

The boy said nothing. But he turned away to his seat with a very sad heart; and the missionary saw that he was very much disappointed. Before the little fellow reached his seat, the missionary saw all the people standing up, and they all began to talk at once. After a little, they allowed one man to speak for the rest, and he said: "Why, sir, this boy has taught us all we know about Jesus. You know we have no Bible woman here, and the missionary just came two weeks ago."

The boy had learned the story of the gospel at a mission school in a distant village, and he had returned to his heathen home to tell the story of Jesus to his own people and to his friends. He read to them out of the New Testament until they, too, gave their hearts to God and were led to Jesus. So you see this little boy was really the missionary to his own village; and that is why the new missionary had found so many believers and was able to form the beginning of a church.

Of course, I do not think that boys and girls should preach like grown-up missionaries; but I am sure if they love Jesus and live as he would like to have them live—kind and obedient and true—that they will be able to do more for him than they could do, even if they were able to preach great, long, eloquent sermons.—Eugenie du Maurier, in Exchange.

Staying "Throwed."

The boyhood friends of Andrew Jackson, so the story goes, could never quite understand how Jackson became so great a general—not to say President—while the rest of them remained simple pioneer citizens at home.

"Why, Jim Brown, right down the pike here," they said, could throw Andy three times out of four; and look where he is now!"

"How did there happen to be a fourth time?" asked some one. "Usually it's three times and out, isn't it?"

"Sure it is. But Andy, you see, never had the sense to know when he was beat; he would never stay throwed. So by and by Jim would get tired out throwing him and stay throwed himself; and then Andy would think he'd beat him."

There is a whole sermon in a nutshell in that simple little anecdote. The thing that counts is not how many times you are "throwed," but whether you are willing to "stay throwed."

Your adversary, whether he be a person or a misfortune or a difficulty or just a hard job, can be tired out in the end by throwing you just as surely, if not as swiftly, as by your throwing him. It is merely a question of which of you gives in—in his mind—first, and "stays throwed." Remember that!—Youth's Companion.

Taking Care of Them Herself.

"Yes'm, she's pretty well, mother is," said the old man, pausing with his foot on the wagon wheel to answer an inquiry concerning his wife-" pretty well, if only 'wasn't for worryin' about the children. 'Lizabeth's up to Conway this season, and mother's all the time afraid she'll be took sick away from home. Samuel's got a good place at Tanfield, and he's doin' well; but his boardin' place is across the river. Sometimes he goes by skiff, and mother-she can't get over the feelin' that he's likely to be drowned. The two younger ones is home yet; but she says she's anxious about the time John'll be wantin' to strike out for himself, and she's always been afraid we'd never raise Car'line. No'm, there's nothin' special the matter with any of them now, and the truck has done fine this year. Mother hain't had a touch of her rheumatism all summer, and she'd be pretty well off if 'twasn't for worryin'. Christian? Bless you-yes, this forty year! She ain't afraid but what the Lord will take care of her and all the rest of the world, but seems like she ain't got faith to b'lieve he's to be trusted with the children."-Wellspring.

Antiquity.

It has been observed that a dwarf standing on the shoulders of a giant will see farther than the giant himself; and the moderns, standing as they do on the vantage ground of former discoveries and uniting all the fruits of the experience of their forefathers with their own actual observation, may be admitted to enjoy a more enlarged and comprehensive view of things than the ancients themselves; for that alone is true antiquity which embraces the antiquity of the world, and not that which would refer us back to a period when the world was young. But by whom is this true antiquity enjoyed? Not by the ancients who did live in the infancy, but by the moderns who do live in the maturity of things.—Colton.

CURRENT THOUGHT

Sympathy With Error.

The fact that we all make mistakes evidences the fact that we are all human, and therefore liable to err at any time. There are many mistakes that we can well afford to overlook, owing to the fallibility of the best of men. There are mistakes, however, that are unpardonable because they are made with eyes wide open, and reveal a reprehensible, if not a criminal, ignorance.

Probably one of the greatest mistakes of many Baptists is their toleration of, if not sympathy for, that which they know to be untrue—yea, deadly error. It should be remembered that all any heresy has ever asked, at least in its early stages, is sympathetic toleration. It is the old story of—first pity, then endure, and then embrace.

While it is true that we are not to carry with us the "big stick," we dare not allow our love for others to cause us to be disloyal to our Lord or his truth. While we cannot Christianize persecution, we may fail to witness for our Lord by not testifying against destructive error. Christ is as destructive as he is constructive, and combats error with the same intensity that he affirms truth. In this connection, the phrase "a constructive Baptist program" has sometimes been used to cover a multitude of sins. The phrase is desirable enough when rightly understood: but it is not infrequently used to convey the idea that we must affirm truth, but not deny error.

The contention is often heard that an affirmation of truth is equivalent to a denial of error. This may be true by way of implication; but certainly the Lord did not content himself with an inference or implication in treating error. With scathing invective he denounced the scribes and Pharisees and their deadly doctrines. He manifested utterly no sympathy with evil deeds or doctrines, and he who is silent concerning falsehood, in faith or act, cannot cite Christ as authority for his conduct. Christ was never noncommittal in the presence of sin. He might have pursued a so-called "constructive" program and saved himself a world of trouble, and from a human standpoint, crucifixion. He chose truth and antagonism to error and popularity.

Any apparent sympathy with false doctrines naturally strengthens and encourages those who hold them. better illustration of this fact can be found than in the rise of Christian Science. Many ministers, in the early development of this Christ-dishonoring doctrine, not only gave it sympathetic consideration, but would frequently refer to the "good that is in it." Those who were possessed by this deadly delusion were allowed to remain unmolested in the church membership while they were seprovagating their soul-destroying doctrines. prompt and vigorous denunciation of this accursed cult would have saved to the faith many well-meaning souls. But, alas, the gentlemen of the ultra-constructive school urged a waiting sympathetic policy, and the inevitable result is, alas, too well known. This, too, in spite of the fact that this misnamed "church" denies a personal God: denies that Christ came in the flesh, that he was crucified for us, and every vital doctrine of the Scriptures. time we have witnessed the début of a thousand and one unspeakable heresies, yet we do not recall one that has not found a Christian apologist, and a worse-a Baptist apologist. Take, for example, the late unlamented Interchurch Movement: Southern Baptists were supposed to commit themselves as opposed to this movement, yet some are still found to weep at its inglorious grave. "Why these found to weep at its inglorious grave, weeps?" Why this postmertem sympathy?

It should not be necessary to say that advocates of truth and denunciators of error should never lose their temper. To do so is not only unchristian, but foolish. A bad spirit can never help a good cause: to the contrary, it often discounts a good contention. Yet the advocates of truth should be neither tame nor tardy.—Western Recorder.

The above from the Western Recorder is not only true of Baptists, but is also true of other religionists. The editor of this journal has found it next to impossible to make a strong, forceful, and clear statement against heresy without being accused of "wrangling." He has found this the case when he had but one thought in view, and that the honor and glory of God. No one should write unless his heart is free from malice against any man. But simply because one preaches boldly and fearlessly the truth against error is certainly no reason for charging that he has a bad temper. Such reasoning would make Christ an irritable, ill-tempered man; for he certainly reproved in the most vigorous way all wickedness, wherever found. Papers and Christians can most effectively build up heresy and error by sympathetic silence and toleration. any one is determined to propagate heresy and error, he only asks to be let alone by those who do not agree with him. For a man to say that he does not agree with a brother in error and yet continue to work with him, fellowship him, and encourage him in his error by silence, is no opposition at all to his error. Such men really help to propagate heresy, and will probably be more severely condemned by the Master than those who are deluded by error. Ahab, in his apostasy and rebellion against God, wanted Elijah to let him alone. When men are in heresy, they eulogize and praise those who let them alone in their error, while they cry persecution against those who have the courage to contend for the faith once for all delivered to the saints.

It is not wrangling for one to contend for the truth. This journal has no sympathy for bitter personalities and wrangling. The editor of this journal has never felt it necessary to turn aside from preaching the truth in order to defend himself against false accusations. No, brethren, we have no desire to wrangle or indulge in bitter personalities with others; our only purpose is to declare to all the whole counsel of God, boldly and fearlessly, in the love of the truth. I am sure the fault is not so much with the papers as it is with the people. This is only the fulfillment of 2 Tim. 4: 3, 4, which reads: "For the time will come when they will not endure the sound doctrine; but, having itching ears, will heap to themselves teachers after their own lusts; and will turn away their ears from the truth, and turn aside unto fables."

What Religion Has Done.

O, the ingratitude or ignorance of the men who ask, "What has religion done?" when there is not a blessing in civilized society that is not, directly or indirectly, a product of religion; when it was religion that built the first school, the first home, the first hospital, the first court, wrote and printed the first book, painted the first picture, sculptured the first statue, composed the first picture, sculptured the first note of liberty, started the first wheel of industry; when it was religion that sanctified the marital tie, hallowed parental and filial duty, made life and property inviolable! O, the blindness of those who ask, "What is religion doing?" who cannot see that, where vice and crime are rampant, where animal passion and brutal force enslave the reason and subjugate the heart, there the fell brood of irreligion, such as anarchy, law-lessness, Bolshevism, are at work!

Had Washington a premonition of a time coming when the American people, blessed as is no other people, would turn blasphemous mouths against the source of their blessings: a time when people, drunk with prosperity, will knock from under it the pillars on which it rests; a time when the racy novel will take the place of the Scriptures, and the dance hall the house of worship, and ribald song the place of hymn, and the vaudeville performer the place of preacher?—Rabbi Joseph Krauskopf, Philadelphia. Pa. (Quoted in the Hebrew Standard, October 1, 1920.)

Those who complain that the religion of Christ has done nothing for the world usually do so in the hope of justifying their own wrongdoing. No man has ever practiced the Christian religion without realizing that it does all for a man that it claims. The man who practices the religion of Jesus Christ is the most just, the most useful, and the happiest one. It is impossible to make a failure of life so long as one is true to the principles of the religion of Christ. Those who have contentions and strife, those who have aches and pains and feel that life is only a burden, are those who have wandered far from the teaching of the meek and lowly Christ. No man can come to him without being made purer, happier, and nobler.

AT HOME AND ABROAD

J. W. Grant preached at Donelson last Lord's day. No night service.

We recently enjoyed a very pleasant visit from W. S. Morgan, of Columbia, Tenn.

- J. Leonard Jackson reports fine attendance and services at Lindsey Avenue last Lord's day and at night.
- J. H. Daniel has changed his address from Route 2 to 101 West Morton Street, Denison, Texas. He asks correspondents to note the same.
- C. R. Nichol, of Clifton, Texas, will begin a meeting in Aromas, Cal., on Sunday, January 16. He will be in California for several weeks.
- J. H. Horton writes that he will do regular work with the church at Haleyville, Ala., and he is changing his address from Kimberly to that point. His correspondents should take notice.

Married, on January 6, at Lavergne, Tenn., William Carter to Julia Tune; on January 8, in the parlors of the Maxwell House, Frank L. Ferrell to Lovie McCormack. J. Leonard Jackson officiated.

S. Houston Proffitt preaches for the mission on Twentysecond Avenue, North, this city, on the fourth Lord's day in each month and on Saturday night before. He reports the work as prospering there, and hopes for good and subtantial growth with them.

From Leslie G. Thomas, Flint, Mich., January 3: "After a two-weeks' visit with my mother and other relatives in the South, I am back in Flint to continue our work in this State. We had two good services here ysterday. The work in other parts of the State is growing better."

Miss S. A. Nicholson, Louisville, Ky., in a business letter to us, says: "We enjoy your paper, and often at the noon hour we read some of the good articles to our girls in the workroom." We appreciate this good use of the Gospel Advocate, and thank the writer for her kindness in telling us of it.

W. P. Gray, Kansas City, Mo., writes: "The church of Christ in this city is increasing in zeal and numbers, with bright hopes and prospects for greater work this year than was done last year. We extend to brethren a cordival invitation to stop and worship with us when passing through our city."

From O. M. Reynolds, Madill, Okla., January 3: "The Madill church has taken on considerable life the past two months. We enjoyed two very fine services yesterday. Our plans are to do more and better work during 1921. We start with a two-weeks' vocal drill to-night. Long live the Gospel Advocate and its editors!"

Fred M. Little writes from Montgomery, Ala., January 3: "The Catoma Street Church started the new year right by a full attendance, except where sickness prevented. One interesting feature of the financial report was that the ladies of the church had spent over five hundred dollars in providing for two orphan children and in provisions for the poor on Thanksgiving and Christmas."

Claude Woodroof, of Anniston, Ala., called to see us last week. He is visiting his father's home, in this city. He came here on Monday from a meeting at Hohenwald, Tenn. There were no additions, but a good attendance and interest. He reports the work doing well at Anniston. The congregation there has recently been instrumental in establishing a congregation at Jacksonville, Ala., twelve miles from Anniston.

From T. B. Larimore: "As Christmas drew near, we supplied ourselves liberally with Christmas cards to send to friends everywhere; but, when the time to send them came, Mrs. Larimore was sick, hence we falled to send them. This also explains why we have not acknowledged receipt of remembrances from our friends. She is rapidly recovering, however, and I am expecting her to be herself again in the very near future."

Thomas H. York, our colored evangelist, of Detroit, Mich., was in to see us last week, and renewed his subscription for a year. He reports the work among his people doing well in that city, but much more needed than he can do. He reports a very fine meeting held by the congreation (white) that Claude Witty serves. The preaching was done by Brother Botner, and excellently done, he says. There were more than twenty baptisms.

John M. Rice writes: "I wish to report the results of three meetings, which closed my work for 1920. At Comanche, Okla., two were baptized; at Hobart, Okla., three were baptized; at Cordell, Okla., seven were baptized, four members returned to duty, and one came from the 'progressives.' The brethren at Cordell have the best class work that I have seen. I began regular work at Munday, Texas, on the first Sunday in January, 1921."

From J. D. Patton, Springfield, Ark.: "Please state in the Gospel Advocate that I have withheld engaging to teach during February, March, April, and May this year, in view of offering my services to congregations and preachers to sing in meetings and engage in training congregations in practical singing. As is generally known throughout the South, I have been regularly engaged in this work for more than thirty years, thus giving me experience in the work such as few now actively engaged have had." No mistake would be made in calling Brother Patton for this work.

From A. O. Colley, Dallas, Texas, January 8: "The services at Pearl and Bryan Streets church of Christ, this city, on last Lord's day were a very great inspiration to all of us. There were eight accessions to our fellowship—three by confession and baptism and five by membership—About all the seating capacity was occupied at the eleven-o'clock hour, and a really large crowd at night. We are planning for the greatest year's work this year that we have ever done. It is like a really good protracted meeting here every Sunday. The church is at peace, and all trying to serve the Lord, and not their own selfish motives."

From J. C. Mosley, Mayflower, Ark., January 6: "From Oklahoma I went to Morrillton, Ark., and met with the congregation there. It is wide-awake. I met about seven preachers. They all showed me much kindness. Will Still and I came to Mayflower to hold a mission meeting. We were furnished a lodge hall to preach in. We have carried chairs, benches, and planks, and cannot seat our crowd. The Baptist people have given us their house, but I do not believe it will hold our crowd. They are building a Christian training school at Morrillton. They have forty acres of ground. Brethren, do mission work, and do it now."

From D. S. Ligon, Denton, Texas, December 24: "I preached last Lord's day at Havana, Ark., and gave a lecture in the afternoon at Waveland, and then preached at night at Booneville. My talks at all these points seemed to be enjoyed by all. H. D. Jackson lives at Waveland, and Brother Hall at Booneville. Both these brethren are good preachers and should be kept in the field preaching all the time. I have just received a telegram to come to Ravia, Okla., to-morrow and be with the brethren there over Sunday. I have held two meetings at Ravia and have delivered a course of lectures there. The church there is weak, but there are a few faithful members."

Beginning on November 1, John E. Dunn began regular work as preacher of the church at Waxahachie, Texas. Brother Dunn reports that there is a good, live, working church at Waxahachie. The members are at peace, a fine Bible school, good singing, and good attendance at all meetings. The following is the weekly program of church activities: Sunday—10 A.M., Bible school; 11 A.M., preaching; 11:45 A.M., Lord's Supper; 7 P.M., preaching; young people's meeting, 6 P.M.; midweek service, Wednesday, 7 P.M.; teachers' meeting, first Friday night in each month; elders' meeting, first Sunday in each month. This church has a large number of fine young people.

From W. F. Lemmons, Somerville, Texas, December 31: "Before this is read the old year will have passed, with all its ups and downs, and the new year will have been entered, with its possibilities. Whatever we have accomplished in the past for the advancement of the Master's kingdom will live on. The wrongs we may have done cannot be undone; but we may atone for them in genuine repentance and possibly turn them to profit in the future, both to ourselves and others. My work during the past year was not satisfactory to me. I have never been satisfied with myself. The satisfied man is a fallure in every department of human life, a signal failure in the church of Gcd. I was very busy in 1920. I preached in Oklahoma, Texas, Montana, Colorado, Kansas, Arkansas, Mississippi, and Tennessee. Much good was done, visible and invisible. My support was good in all my meetings, and my work seemed to be very satisfactory to all concerned. I can enswer some calls for meetings this year. I am preaching for the church at Somerville, Texas, this winter."

From Alexander C. Campbell: "I hereby submit the following brief report of my meetings for the year 1920: Meeting at Scott's Chapel, 11 additions; near Deason, Tenn., 5; near Chrisman's farm, 1; at Cornersville, Tenn., 1; at Dickson, Tenn., 2; at Charleston, Miss., 1. In meetings conducted at Rockwood, Smyrna, College Grove, Farnington, Ashland City, Chapel Hill, Cookeville, Lebanon, and Nashville, Tenn., there were no additions."

From Mrs. G. Dallas Smith and children, Cleburne, Texas, December 31: "We wish to extend sincerest thanks to the many friends for the many letters and telegrams, and for their words also, of comfort and consolation, extended to us in the hour of our yet greatest sorrow. It would be almost impossible to make personal reply to all of these messages, and we therefore ask that this be accepted as sufficient to assure them of our deepest thanks."

From A. A. Bunner, Fairmount, W. Va., January 4: "I preached last Lord's-day morning. I was with the faithful few at Canton, Ohio I never saw a seemingly more devoted band of Christians than the Canton Christians. Through their great zeal and devotion they certainly will accomplish great good in that city. A letter from my son. E. E. Bunner, of Columbus, Ohio, informs me that he baptized one young man at their morning service last Lord's day at Reynoldsburg, Ohio."

From Tice Elkins, Fort Worth, Texas, January 5: "The work at Southside-Central Church is in fine condition, with new additions frequently. Our young people are allve to the work. I expect to enter the evangelistic field again in a very short while, and would be glad to hear from brethren anywhere that want meetings for the spring and early summer. My time is all taken for July and August, but I will be glad to book meetings for May and June, also late fall. My wife's health has so far improved that I feel that I can promise definitely to do your work. One confession at Southside last Lord's day."

From W. M. Oakley, 326 Grace Avenue, Nashville, Tenn., January 4: "I was with the church at Lafayette, Tenn., last Saturday night, Sunday, and Sunday night. Each service was well attended. The church seems to be taking on new life, and is planning to do much work at home and around them this year. We have promised, the Lord willing, to labor with this church monthly through the winter and spring. I am now booking meetings for 1921, and have promised some, but have some time not taken. I will answer calls for meetings wherever needed. I will also answer calls for regular work on the second and fourth Lord's days in each month when not in protracted meetings."

Changes of address: J. S. Pulliam, from Fayetteville to Huntland, Tenn.; Joe McDonald, from Crandall, Texas, to Marshfield, Mo., Teague's Star Route; Mrs. Walter Murray, from Oklahoma City, Okla., to 1512 East Jefferson Street, Los Angeles, Cal.; Mrs. M. M. Billingsley, from Spaulding to Holdenville, Okla.; George Pickle, from Dossville to Center, Miss.; Mrs. Margaret Davenport, from Scott's Hill to Sardis, Tenn., Route 1; John McMahan, from Valley View to Pilot Point, Texas, Route 3; R. E. Scoggins, from Floydada, Texas, to Durant, Okla., Route 3, Box 90; T. H. Etheridge, from Kirkland to Marshall, Texas; C. A. Traylor, from Lavergne to Smyrna, Tenn.; T. H. Matheson, from Bowie, Texas, to Guymon, Okla.; J. W. Dollison, from Marvell to Paragould, Ark.; J. P. Prevatt, from Valdosta to Lake Park, Ga.; W. E. Wilson, from Spring Hill, La., to Patmos, Ark.; J. A. Usrey, from Lelia Lake to Hedley, Texas.

From M. S. Mason, Springfield, Mo., January 4: "I am now in Springfield, giving my whole time to the work at this place. The work is encouraging. I shall continue here till May 1, when I shall again enter the field and continue till December 1. I shall work in Southeast Missouri and Northeast Arkansas, and my time is practically taken for the entire period. I visited Rogersville, Mo., on New Year's Day, and preached morning and evening. The congregation there is doing exceedingly well. I officiated the marriage of Evangelist C. L. Wilkerson and Miss Mae Freeman on December 8, at Springfield. They are a very worthy couple and begin life under very fair skies. Last year was a good one for me in every way, and I look forward with great hopes to my efforts during 1921. Our slogan for 1921 in Springfield is: 'Better prayer meetings, better Bible sudy, tract distribution, better business, and more individual effort.'"

In a note to Brother McQuiddy of recent date, A. S. Reynolds, of Electra, Texas, says: "I received your communication sometime ago in reference to working for the circulation of the Gospel Advocate. I have been very feeble for three months. I expect to make an extended trip to Alabama and Florida in February or March. I will place the Advocate in as many homes as possible. Please state to the brethren that I will visit Clay, Randolph, Coffee, and Geneva counties, in Alabama, to preach and work for the interest of the Advocate. Any congregations wanting n.eetings can write me at Electra, Texas, Box 1014. I would be glad to visit all of the congregations with which I labored years ago. I will be sixty-seven years old if I live to see March 28, 1921. I have read the Advocate since it was a small pamphlet. I admire the stand its editors have always taken in regard to innovations in the church. exposure of Adventism is greatly needed. Some of our papers have not fought it as they should have done. The writings of Brethren Kurfees, Elam, and Lipscomb will be Every preacher of the word felt for generations to some. should strive to place the truth as expounded by such men before the people everywhere. May every reader and writer for the paper do more for its circulation during the coming year. I will say to my old acquaintances among the preachers: Be faithful to the Lord. Our work will soon be done on earth. A few more years and the reward will be ours. Pray for me and my success in the Christian warfare."

The following statement, which was furnished us on behalf of the congregation in St. Louis, Mo., is published "for the benefit of those interested in the St. Louis work: The contributions received during the past year from congregations and individuals outside of this city for our building fund amounted to $539.43, and we now have in the bank for the building fund account $255.86. A reduction of $1,000 in the indebtedness on our lot was made during the year. Interest, taxes, and the expenses of a new loan of $2,500 for three years, aggregating $275.61, were also paid during the year. There are now just thirty members in this congregation, and our total cash contributions during the year were $1,082.25, or an average of about About one hundred thirty-six dollars for each member. and thirty of the two hundred and eighty contributors of one dollar per month for thirty-six months, to raise our building fund of $10,000, have been secured, leaving it necessary to secure one hundred and fifty more yet, if to get the fund together in this manner. One dollar per month is a little less than twenty-five cents per week, and you would not say that your congregation could not contribute this much. Many are contributing more. you going to do? Moody, 3667 Botanical Avenue, St. Louis, Mo."

From Will W. Slater, Fort Smith, Ark., January 3: "The Fort Smith preachers' meeting was a great success. Not a hitch nor a jar throughout the entire session. Every one did his part, and did it well. We had about thirty-eight preachers here, ten States being represented. Following is a list of those who attended the meeting: T. W. Croom, Center Point, Ark.; Hal P. McDonald, Berry, Ala.; D. T. Broadus, Wichita, Kan.; F. L. Rowe, Cincinnati, Ohio; F. L. Young, Paris, Texas; Frank Baker, Belmont, Miss.; J. D. Tant, Rogers, Ark.; W. L. Oliphant, Muskogee, Okla.; H. L. Basscre, Brookline, Mo.; W. H. George, Wewoka, Okla.; Frank Grammer, Mena, Ark.; A. L. Elkins, Ada, Okla.; R. L. Ludlam, Hopkinsville, Ky.; Jesse P. Sewell, Abilene, Texas; W. W. Still, Morrillton, Ark.; J. A. Leach, Fayetteville, Ark.; M. S. Gabbard and wife, Delaney, Ark.; F. M. McGlasson, Sulphur, Okla.; W. F. Hall, Booneville, Ark.; H. D. Jackson, Waveland, Ark.; C. O. Chappell, Wewoka, Okla.; John C. Howard, Springfield, Mo.; H. M. Phillips, Tuscumbia, Ala.; W. D. Sanders, Fayetteville, Ark.; I. D. Ames, Chillicothe, Mo.; J. M. Harrison, Clinton, Ark.; W. D. Black, Holdenville, Okla.; J. C. Mosley, Whitwell, Tenn.; J. P. Kimbrell, Antlers, Okla.; A. A. McClelland and wife, Topeka, Kan.; S. K. Terry, Stigler, Okla.; S. R. Cassius (colored), Guthrie, Okla.; G. H. Hickam, Locust Grove, Okla.; A. S. Croom, Harper, Kan.; and three local ministers. Several visitors were in attendance. We feel that we are under obligations to all these good men, and thank them from the deeps of our hearts for their presence and for making it possible for this meeting to be the greatest of the kind ever held in the South. Our thanks are especially due to Brother Black and Brother Elkins for their assistance in arranging the program and for helping so much in carrying it out; and to Brother George, who so ably and faithfully performed his duties in acting as chairman for the meeting May God, in his goodness, mercy, and wisdom, bless each and every one as he deserves."

God's Care for His Children. BY J. C. M'Q.

How rapidly the years come and go! This is the second issue of the Gospel Advocate for 1921. It seems but a short time since I came to the Gospel Advocate as manager in January of 1885. But there have been many changes during the intervening years. Many of our plans have failed, and we have realized that life is a failure unless it is centered in Him who doeth all things well. Realizing that God has a providence over his children, we shall endeavor in the coming years to rely more strictly on him and to exercise, if possible, a greater faith in the midst of the trials and temptations of this life. No man can believe with all of his heart that God is, and that he is a rewarder of those who diligently seek him, without at the same time appreciating the truth that God cares for those who put their trust in him. If God cares for the lilies of the field and for the sparrows, he will certainly care for his children so long as they are faithful and true to him. The Savior declares: "Are not two sparrows sold for a penny? and not one of them shall fall on the ground without your Father: but the very hairs of your head are all numbered," (Matt. 10: 29, 30.) In all of our calculations and in all of our plannings and aspirations, we should realize that we are dependent upon Jehovah. Without him, no life can be a "For in him we live, and move, and have our being." (Acts 17: 28.) As God's faithful children, let us endeavor to appreciate how great is his knowledge and mercy and care for us. In his boundless love for the children of men, he is not willing that one should perish. Not only are the hairs of our head numbered, not only does he know the pulsations of our hearts, but he continually searches us and knows all our ways. "O Jehovah, thou hast searched me, and known me. Thou knowest my downsitting and mine uprising; thou understandest my thoughts afar off. Thou searchest out my path and my lying down, and art acquainted with all my ways. For there is not a word in my tongue, but, lo, O Jehovah, thou knowest it altogether. Thou hast beset me behind and before, and laid thy hand upon me. Such knowledge is too wonderful for me; it is high, I cannot attain unto it. Whither shall I go from thy Spirit? or whither shall I flee from thy presence? If I ascend up into heaven, thou art there: if I make my bed in Sheol, behold, thou art there. If I take the wings of the morning, and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea; even there shall thy hand lead me, and they right hand shall hold me. If I say, Surely the darkness shall overwhelm me, and the light about me shall be night; even the darkness hideth not from thee, but the night shineth as the day: the darkness and the light are both alike to thee. For thou didst form my inward parts: thou didst cover me in my mother's womb." (Ps. 139: 1-13.) The righteous are ready to recognize God's protection and care over his children. The righteous, like David, would rather fall into the hands of the living God than to fall into the hands of man. "Man's inhumanity to man makes countless thousands mourn." In these days of carping criticisms and hairsplitting, the children of God should not be dismayed, but should do the will of God and leave the results with him. No man who fully trusts God fears to be guided and controlled by him. He is pleased with the thought that God's providence and wonderful care are over him.

It is different with the wicked. Men who live for this world and who prosper on the downfall of their fellow creatures, who seek the cover of night in which to perform their wicked deeds, really like to feel that they are hidden from God. "They encourage themselves in an evil purpose; they commune of laying snares privily; they say, Who will see them?" (Ps. 64: 5.) How foolish for any man to imagine that he can flee from God! How strange that men, like Jonah, will seek to hide themselves from Jehovah! God knows man; he knows every aspiration and thought of his heart, and will reward him accordingly. His righteousness will be vindicated at the judgment. Vain is the thought of the wicked that he can conceal himself and his wickedness from Jehovah. But still the wicked imagine vain things: "He saith in his heart, God hath forgotten; he hideth his face; he will never see it." (Ps. 10: 11.) How strange that the wicked, who accept in a sense that there is a God, imagine that it is possible for them to conceal their wicked deeds from him! Yet we learn that they do deceive themselves: "And they say, Jehovah will not see, neither will the God of Jacob con sider. Consider, ye brutish among the people; and ye fools, when will ye be wise? He that planted the ear, shall he not hear? He that formed the eye, shall be not see? He that chastiseth the nations, shall not he correct, even he that teacheth man knowledge? Jehovah knoweth the thoughts of man, that they are vanity." (Ps. 94: 7-11.)

While this is true of the wicked, it is not true of the righteous. Men who rely upon God for protection after they have done the very best that they can for themselves appreciate the fact that they do not have the shaping of their own destiny, "There is a destiny that shapes our ends, roughhew them though we may." How many of us, in reviewing the past, realize that we are not what we expected to be! There is not one of us who does not know that a Power beyond him is shaping and controlling his destiny. I am not to-day what I thought fifty years ago I would be. My aspirations and purposes are different. Things that I then thought best for me, I see now would not have been best. While I grieved at the time over the failure of some of my cherished plans, I now see that God knew better than I, and that what I thought would be best would have proved a curse. Such experiences bring us to realize the truth of the statement of Solomon: "A man's heart deviseth his way; but Jehovah directeth his steps." (Prov. 16: 9.) Every man, no matter how high or low his position in life, is in the hands of Jehovah. We may rebel:

we may vaunt ourselves and imagine that we are great and able to guide ourselves through life; yet, as the years come and go, we will be brought to a realization of the truth that Solomon spoke when he said: "The king's heart is in the hand of Jehovah as the water courses: he turneth it whithersoever he will. Every way of a man is right in his own eyes; but Jehovah weigheth the hearts. To do righteousness and justice is more acceptable to Jehovah than sacrifice." (Prov. 21: 1-3.) God has more pleasure in obedience than he has in sacrifice. When we look upon our own imperfections and realize how far short we are of just what God would have us be and how great our failures in controlling and directing those intrusted to our care, we feel less like criticizing and finding fault with others. But the child of God, in the storms that come or in sunshine, in poverty or in wealth, as the years pass, comes to appreciate more and more the declaration of Solomon when he says: "A man's goings are of Jehovah; how then can man understand his way?" (Prov. 20: 24.) The meek and contrite in spirit, as they grow more humble in the coming years, become reconciled to the failure of their plans and accept more cheerfully the counsel of God. "There are many devices in a man's heart; but the counsel of Jehovah, that shall stand." (Prov. 19: 21.) The man of God, filled with lofty aspirations and seeking to do the will of God, realizes that he can never manage himself in this life, but that he must look to God for guidance and protection. Instead of relying upon his own wisdom, he points others to the wisdom of God, and proves himself to be the servant of all because he lives a life that is devoted to the will of God and to lifting up the fallen. "O Jehovah, I know that the way of man is not in himself; it is not in man that walketh to direct his steps." (Jer. 10: 23.) I am sure the man who will be guided by such principles cannot make a failure in this life. God's answer to such a life will be a glorious crown in the life to come. I would encourage all in the years that are to come to rely more and more upon Jehovah. Let no one imagine that God is far from his children or that he will at any time neglect one who puts his trust in him. When the males were required to appear before the Lord Jehovah three times in the year, God assured them: "For I will cast out nations before thee, and enlarge thy borders: neither shall any man desire thy land, when thou goest up to appear before Jehovah thy God three times in the year." (Ex. 34: 24.) If God was with the children of Israel, is he not with his people now? He gives us the blessed assurance: "But the loving-kindness of Jehovah is from everlasting to everlasting upon them that fear him, and his righteousness unto children's children; to such as keep his covenant, and to those that remember his precepts to do them." (Ps. 103: 17, 18.)

Words of Commendation.

The following letter from Brother Petty is published not so much for its commendation of my feeble efforts, but because of the distressing situation which it discloses:

Pineapple, Ala., December 22, 1920.—F. W Smith, Nashville, Tenn.—Dear Brother Smith: I am so glad you wrote that piece, "The Test of Love," that I must write and thank you for it with all my heart. For I believe if any man can break all of us preachers from prejudice, carping criticism, and faultfinding, you can, and it will be worth more to the cause of Christ than almost anything else just now. So just lay on, my brother, until you have caused all the preachers of the church of Christ to cease having hide-and-tallow meetings about each other. But instead of hide-and-tallow meetings about each other, let us all read Ps. 39: 4, 5, and John 8: 7, and pray for each other and commend each other and help each other. What a glorious thing it would be for all of us preachers to be standing by each other and going in a solid breast, facing the enemy with the same gospel, the same spirit, the same love and good will for all! I believe if the preachers will get right, that elders and congregations will get right, and one preacher will not be afraid to go into another preacher's territory and preach; for that idea would be buried forever and all the territory would be the Lord's, and we would all labor together for the great common cause, and thousands would be saved that do not get to hear the gospel now. So I come promising you and all the brotherhood that I will try and sweep around my own door and let the other fellow sweep around his. Let us hope for a more glorious and better day among us: and may the Lord bless you, my brother.

Yours in the hope.

C. Petty.

While I appreciate Brother Petty's words of commendation, I am keenly conscious of the fact that he lays entirely too great a stress upon my ability to rectify this grievous fault among preachers. Rather would I-and, no doubt, appropriately so-include myself among the list who need to be brought to repentance and reformation regarding the matter under consideration. Mightier pens than the one I am capable of wielding have been dipped in the fountain of love and bedewed with the tears of grief in efforts to correct this evil so prevalent among preachers. Brother E. A. Elam went to a certain city a number of years ago to preach the gospel of Christ, whereupon a resident preacher calling himself a "Christian preacher" demanded of Brother Elam by whose authority he came into his territory to preach. Very promptly and scripturally Brother Elam replied: "By the authority of the Lord Jesus Christ." I have heard of some preachers who looked with jealous suspicion upon every preaching brother that chanced to come into their (?) territory. One said in my presence that he was not afraid of any preacher's taking "his" field away from him. Nice thing indeed to be the "owner" of a field-a gospel field, if you please-and to feel so selfimportant and such a consummate master of the situation as to defy any man to step in and relieve him of his prize! I have always thought the "field" belonged to the Lord, and that preachers should simply be humble and God-fearing laborers in it. At least, it seems that Paul so considered the matter. He said: "What then is Apollos? and what is Paul? Ministers through whom ye believed; and each as the Lord gave to him. I planted, Apollos watered; but God gave the increase. So then neither is he that planteth anything, neither he that watereth; but God that giveth the increase." (1 Cor. 3: 5-7.) This was not only a sharp rebuke to the church at Corinth because of their division over preachers, but the true estimate of preachers in general. Every preacher should regard himself as nothing more than a servant of Christ, willing to labor in any field where the providences of God seem to lead him. All should feel that it is one great, big field, and we are all fellow laborers in it, not for self-glorification, but for the glory of God and the salvation of souls. We all should realize that we can labor to better advantage in places for which we are fitted, and not aspire to places we cannot successfully fill. Above all, we should not feel discouraged because others can preach better and are more successful in persuading people to obey the gospel. Let us use the powers God has given us to the best of our ability and leave all the results with him. The spirit that leads a preacher to desire to appear learned and great in the eyes of men is not of God. It is a fine thing for a preacher to realize and admit that there are others his superiors in wisdom, learning, and pulpit ability. Let us be humble, God-fearing, and helpful to one another.

Must an Elder Be a Married Man? By J. C. M'Q.

On page 36 of this paper appears an article from J. L. Hines on "The Eldership." I am glad to give our readers the benefit of his views, though I will not prolong the discussion. The word "elder" means an old or aged person. The elders of Israel were old men, and in this sense the word "elder" is used in 1 Tim. 5: 1, 2, which reads: "Rebuke not an elder, but exhort him as a father; the younger men as brethren: the elder women as mothers; the younger as sisters, in all purity."

If the Holy Spirit had said that an elder "must be a married man," then he might be the husband of three wives and yet a married man, thus allowing polygamists to be elders of the churches, the very thing which the Bible forbids.

Brother Hines should not lose sight of the fact that polygamy was prevalent when the church of Christ was established, and that some, doubtless, believed and were baptized who had more than one wife. Such members were not to be elders. Note the condition of the church at Corinth. (1 Cor. 5: 1.)

Celibacy is commended in the New Testament, and is also represented as being productive of a more consecrated service to God than is marriage. Paul says: "But I would have you to be free from cares. He that is unmarried is careful for the things of the Lord, how he may please the Lord: but he that is married is careful for the things of the world, how he may please his wife, and is divided." (1 Cor. 7: 32-34.) I do not believe that the Holy Spirit would force a man into a divided service in order to qualify him for an elder.

Alexander Campbell with evident approval published in the Millennial Harbinger of 1855 the following from R. Milligan on the qualifications of elders:

1. A bishop "must be blameless;" a man who gives his adversary no hold upon him; against whom no evil charge can be sustained.

2. "The husband of one wife." Considered abstractly, these words would seem to imply that either celibacy or polygamy disqualifies a man for the office of a bishop. But there are some reasons which seem to imply that the latter only is intended.

First. Celibacy is not in itself an evil. In no part of the Bible is it so regarded; and at least two of the most eminent members of the Christian church were unmarried men. Hence it is not probable that Paul would condemn in others what he considered right and expedient in his own case. It is unreasonable to suppose that the chief of all the apostles would lay down, as a necessary qualification for the inferior offices, what is proved, by his own example, to be unnecessary for the superior; and which would have rendered both him and Barnabas ineligible to the eldership or deaconship in any Christian congregation. Second. But polygamy is an evil. It is a violation of Second. But polygamy is an evil. It is a violation of the implied will and purpose of God in man's creation. "In the beginning he made them a male and a female." Its tendency is also full of evil. It destroys or weakens conjugal affection; it excites envy and jealousy where love and harmony should always reign; and hence, its history has been a melancholy illustration of the weakness and the follies of human nature.

It is, therefore, probable that monogamy only is here opposed to polyamy; and that to free the church and the world, as far as possible, from this prevalent evil, was the benevolent object of the apostle. On this subject, Thomas Scott makes the following judicious remarks: "Christ and his apostles expressly condemned polygamy, as well as divorces, except for adultery. Yet there was no direct command for a man, who had previously taken more wives than one, to put the others away when he embraced the gospel; such a requisition might, in some instances, have produced very bad consequences in domestic life, and increased the opposition of the civil powers to the preaching of Christianity. But the rule that no man, however qualified in other respects, should be admitted into the pastoral office, who had more than one wife, or who had put away one to take another, tended to show the unlawfulness of polygamy and divorces on frivolous pretenses, and their inconsistency with the Christian dispensation; and concurred, with other things, to bring them into total disuse in the Christian church, yet without violence and confusion."

Pass this on to D. Austen Sommer and let us see if he holds Campbell and Milligan to be "new digressives."

Annoyance or ill temper at the disturbance of settled plans ought not to make us weary in well-doing. Many are idle in the church because they cannot get the particular thing they like best. But the greatest discoveries and reforms have been effected by the determination to do what we can.—A. F. Muir.

Ingratitude. BY A. G. FREED.

In Luke 17: 11-19 we have recorded one of the saddest lessons in all the Bible. Ten miserable outcasts, covered with leprosy, are standing "afar off" from the rest of the people in a Galilean town. Perpetual exile is theirs-nevermore to feel the warm embrace of loved ones. They must warn friend and foe alike at their approach with the cry: "I am unclean! I am unclean!" The Child of Mary, the sinless Son of God, passes this way. He hears their piteous cry: "Master, have mercy on us." His ear is ever ready to catch the cry of helpless, hopeless misery; his hand is every ready to heal. "As they went they were cleansed." One "turned back, and with a loud voice glorified God." He was a Samaritan. No one but the "stranger" returned to give glory unto God. Jesus is not remembered by the nine. The Source of life and blessings is forgotten in their selfish triumph. "Where are the nine?" Sometimes I think the leprosy returned to these ungrateful wretches.

The sin of ingratitude is one of the most reprehensible that any man, woman, or child can commit. We often refer to ungrateful characters as "snakes in the grass." A "snake in the grass" is where God put it. But a snake in the bosom, biting the hand that has fed and warmed it, is the snake to be crushed.

Sometimes parents are forced to spend their last days in the poorhouse, while their ungrateful children are living in ease and luxury.

I know of boys who have denied the mother who gave them being and made possible their worldly success.

I know of a preacher whose wife "took in washing" and cooked, that her husband might get an education. This man (?) as he grew into prominence, in his self-conceit, became ashamed of his wife.

I know a physician who said to me: "My wife is not my equal." I could not keep from saying: "You told the truth one time." His wife was an excellent woman.

I know of fathers in their feeble days to be driven from the old homestead, the accumulation of years of hard toll and sacrifice—driven away by ungrateful children.

I know of many boys and girls whose teacher has made their education possible by furnishing money, books, board, home, and tuition. Some of these have returned all with a hundredfold of loving gratitude. Others, I regret to say, have no kind word for their teacher or the institution that gave them prestige in the world.

I know God said to Saul: "When thou wast little in thine own sight, wast thou not made the head of the tribes of Israel, and the Lord anointed thee king over Israel?

. . . Wherefore then didst thou not obey the voice of the Lord?"

I know it is written: "But Jeshurun waxed fat, and kicked: thou art waxen fat, thou art grown thick, thou art covered with fatness; then he forsook God which made him, and lightly esteemed the Rock of his salvation."

If I were asked to give one word that expresses more blackness and darkness, misery and woe, than any other, I would write the word "ingratitude." If I were asked for a name of the most despicable wretch, the most benighted soul the world has, I would write "ingrate."

The most inexcusable thing in all the world is "man's ingratitude to man."

"Yet in the maddening maze of things, And tossed by storm and flood, To one fixed trust my spirit clings; I know that God is good."

Blessed is the man who has sense enough to wear his own breeches; and twice blessed he, if he has not that much sense, if he only has enough sense to let a good woman wear them for him.—Selected.

WHY HAVE CATARRH?

So Disagreeable to Yourself and All About You.

Catarrh is generally conceded to be a constitutional disease. Therefore it requires a constitutional remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla which reaches every part of the system by thoroughly purifying and enriching the blood. This medicine removes the cause of the trouble, which if not checked may lead to more serious disease.

In 46 years of use and test Hood's Sarsaparilla has relieved many cases as told by voluntary letters of commendation. Why not get a bottle today and give it a trial? It combines economy and efficiency. Keep Hood's Pills on hand as a family cathartic.

Beginning the Work in 1921.

BY F, C. SOWELL.

- 1. Regularity in good habits is important to success. Be careful not to offer any excuses for not meeting to worship on the Lord's day. Sickness, high waters, etc., may be given as reasons for not meeting on the Lord's day. There is a difference in an excuse and a reason. A reason is something unavoidable upon your part, and an excuse is something you put in the way yourself. Should you fail to meet with the disciples on the Lord's day, put down in your tablet why you did not meet with the church to worship; then at the close of the year have it read to the congregation, and see how it sounds. Always be on time, and be ready to do your part. By doing what you can willingly and heartily you will encourage others to do something. "And whatsoever ye do, do it heartily, as to the Lord, and not unto men."
- 2. Have something to do. Every member of the church should have something to do. A failure in this will result in spiritual death. "Not slothful in business; fervent in spirit; serving the Lord." Every member should develop his talent to do the greatest good possible; for the most feeble member is necessary. Paul, speaking of the eye, the hand, the head, and the foot having no need of each other, said: "Nay, much more those members of the body, which seem to be more feeble, are necessary." A greater activity among all the members should be encouraged.
- 3. Don't always be a mote hunter; but "first cast out the beam out of thine own eye; and then shalt thou see clearly to cast out the mote out of thy brother's eye." The one who is always looking for the faults of others cannot cast the first stone. The Bible says, "Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh;" and from the abundance of the thoughts of the hearts that are impure, impurity may be seen in others.

Let us begin the year with higher aspirations and with a purpose of heart to make the world better as we pass through it. Life is too short, and time is too precious, to let it pass without filling it with the best things possible.

About Praying.

- I believe in praying for the sick; but when we pray, they do not all get
- I believe in praying for the sinners, and they are not all saved.
- I believe in praying for our rulers, and some of them do not do to suit us.
- I believe in praying for our enemies, vet we have them.
- I believe in praying for them that persecute us and say all manner of evil against us. Still they do it.

We are bound to conclude that we are imperfect beings, and we cannot have all things as we would like.

The thing for us to do is to become more and more submissive to God's will; then we can say: "Father, thy will, and not mine, be done."-Selected.

The laws of our country, made by our Congress and State Legislatures, and backed up, in many cases, by solemn referendum to the people, are laws that demand obedience from every man who treads our soil. Grow your crops at less cost

Many farmers are making more profit from fifty acres properly fertilized than others are making from twice as many acres without fertilizer.

It cost no more for preparation of land, seed and seeding, ground rental or interest on an acre of land yielding 80 bushels of best corn or a big truck crop of good quality than for one yielding half as much of poor quality.

One sure way of growing crops at less cost is to secure more yield per acre and per man. This you can do by using Swift's Red Steer Fertilizers.

The extra bushels or pounds produced per acre by Swift's Red Steer Fertilizers are the ones that add greatly to your profit. Only the cost of fertilizer can be charged against this extra yield.

The Task Ahead.

BY FOY E. WALLACE, JR.

We are standing upon the threshold of a new year. Another milestone on life's road has been passed; another page in life's book has been written. We face new problems, and feel the weight of grave responsibilities. The world is rank with sectarianism; and infidelity, in various forms, "as a wolf in sheep's clothing," is crouching at our door. Brethren, we must have concerted action and unrelenting zeal if we would save the day for Christ and his true church. As a preacher, I pledge you my loyalty to the plain, simple, positive, New Testament gospel; to its method of work and system of worship; and resolve to "declare the whole counsel" with more zeal and fervor than ever before. As a member of the one body, will you not pledge unceasing cooperation in the task ahead? Resolve to attend every service of the church, in summer or in winter, in prosperity or adversity. "Son, go work to-day in my vineyard," is a call to every disciple of the Lord. Will you go? Here is my hand. With firm confidence in God and the right, with unswerving fidelity to our great cause, "let us renew our strength, remember our King, and hold fast our boasted confession unshaken to the end."

Notes from West Tennessee.

BY JOHN R. WILLIAMS.

To-day-December 30, 1920-is my sixty-ninth birthday. In 1885, thirtyfive years ago, I began the work of an evangelist. The most of my work has been done in Lake and Obion counties. In a letter received to-day, with a present, from a good, true, and faithful brother in the Lord, he says: "You have done a great work in this county, and your work is appreciated, although very few tell you how much." This is a compliment I prize very highly from the fact that it comes from one who offers no false or flattering compliments.

Since 1903 I have worked in destitute fields by the assistance of the congregation at Glass. During this time there has been, in all, eighteen hundred and thirty-five additions-eleven hundred and ninety-three by baptism -a fraction over sixty-six baptisms each year. Eight new meetinghouses have been built and many weak congregations have been reëstablishedput to work. The remuneration has not been enough to make me rich, but enough to furnish the necessities for living, and especially enough to keep me from going into debt. I am free from debts.

A preacher in debt is handicapped, his influence for good is curtailed. A preacher and his family have to live, and the church should see to it that he has enough for this purpose. Of one thing I am thoroughly satisfied; and that is, if the preacher will preach the gospel from pure and correct motives, he will be clothed and fed. This I doubt not. When a preacher begins to look after money-making and puts himself in the ring with money-makers and money lovers, then his influence for good begins to wane, and soon he is lost to the church and its confidence.

Preachers are needed who preach because they love God and poor, lost souls, and have a burning desire to do good in this world, to put more into the world than they get out of it. Now that I am sixty-nine years old, I know full well that I have but few more years to work for the Lord; but, God being my helper, I shall continue to work in needy fields, the rural districts; and I shall try to do the work acceptably with God and for the good of my fellow man.

Athens, January 2 .- I am laboring with the churches of Christ in Lime-stone County, Ala. The church in Athens is occupying and demanding most of my time, this being made possible by the cooperation of two nearby congregations-Corinth and Bethel. After spending seventeen years away from my people, laboring in distant States, I am now not far from my childhood home, and, best of all, near my mother and sisters. The work here is fine at all the churches where I labor. With the splendid band here in Athens, we hope to build up a strong church in this beautiful little We had the best crowd to-day city. in the history of the church. Coal City, January 3 .- I came to this point on Friday last and called on several of the members on Saturday. among them being Brother David Ragan, now nearly eighty-four years old. He has been in the past an active and useful preacher. On Sunday and Sunday night we had good meetings. Their protracted meetings this year are to be held by Brother Srygley and Brother Elam. I go to Bethsaida, a near-by congregation, and will preach there two nights. Then I will go on to Lyons, where I will probably remain over Lord's day.-Andrew Perry.

Mrs. Little Tells How She Suffered and How Finally Cured

Philadelphia, Pa.- "I was not able to do my housework and had to lie down most of the time and felt bad in my left side. My monthly periods were irregular, sometimes five or seven months apart and when they did appear would last for two weeks and were very painful. I was sick for about a year and a half and doctored but without any improvement.

A neighbor recommended Lydia E.
Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to me, and the second day after I started taking it I began to feel better and I kept on taking it for seven months. Now I keep house and perform all my household duties. You can use these facts as you please and I will recommend Vegetable Compound to everyone who suffers as I did." — Mrs. J. S. LITTLE, 3455 Livingston St., Philadelphia, Pa.

How much harder the daily tasks of a woman become when she suffers from such distressing symptoms and weakness as did Mrs. Little. No woman should allow herself to get into such a condition because such troubles may be speedily overcome by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, which for more than forty years has been restoring American women to health.

This church held two meetings this year, conducted by Brother Oscar L. Hays and Brother J. W. Brents, respectively. Beginning on January 23, Brother A. M. Foster will conduct a short meeting for us, preaching ten special sermons, the subjects being selected by the church. Brother J. Will Henley is expected to be with us in May. Union, December 31.-On December 20 we raised our first corner post to our meetinghouse in Union, and since that time we have made extra good progress. If the Lord wills, we want to work every day that the weather will permit until it is completed. The spiritual part of the work is moving along fine. Prospects are good for some additions at any time. We have some additions at any time. We have about forty out at the Sunday-morning We have services and several at the evening Our cottage meetings continue with interest. I find this is one of the best ways to reach the people in this place. Many doors are open to us, and in this way we reach many that will not come out to hear us. We believe in taking the gospel to the people. We are going to put forth a strong effort to get the cause well established here during 1921, so it will be self-sustaining. This I feel sure we can do, with a good house to meet in, for we thereby show to the people that we are here to stay and that there is something to us. Our building fund continues to grow. We are about two thousand dollars short, and we do not know where it is coming from; but we are pushing the work as if we had plenty to finish. Brethren, We are exceedingly pray for us. thankful to the brethren for what they have done for us personally and for the cause in this field. May God bless all the faithful.-Thomas H. Burton

Buffalo. January 3 .- I have received twenty-nine dollars to help out on our meetinghouse. I have also received personal help in the Lord's work to the amount of fifteen dollars. We are very thankful for this help. It is very much appreciated. We have reduced our lumber bills to two hundred and ninety-four dollars. We still need some money in order to make the house comfortable. Perhaps a little less than one hundred dollars would let us out on that. As we have done all we can here, and some of us have done more than we were able to do, we now ask our brethren to help us out on this during this month. Please send me your offering for the house We are anxious to get at once. through with the house. We want to turn our attention to other matters. F. P. Fonner.

The Situation in Wayne County, Tenn.

BY C. A. LANCASTER.

I have labored for the Lord in this almost destitute field for five years, I have made some sacrifices, but do not regret it, seeing the good effect of Bible knowledge and a few precious souls saved. Now, brethren, for the first time in life I am appealing through the papers for your help to build a house of worship to gather God's children together in this most needy section. Remember, your humble servant has lived in rented houses, has rented lands, and has sacrificed a portion of all, working with his hands six days a week and burning midnight oil to study the Bible; and now he would highly appreciate your help to secure a house, which can be purchased for a small sum. I see a great opportunity for saving souls who are perishing for the word of reconciliation. I refer you to Pleas Nutt. Waynesboro, Tenn.; L. P. Carroll, Waynesboro, Tenn.; or H. N. Mann, Riverside, Tenn. I will see that any donations given are used for the Lord's work. May the Lord bless all in doing his will.

There will only be about half as many "Preachers' Lists" issued this year as usual. This is on account of the cost to produce. In connection with the Firm Foundation, we will only print what we will most likely sell within three months.

Brother Shepherd has been revising this list for years, and receives nothing but "thank you" for his careful work. It has seldom paid the publisher any return, and may be given up in another year.-Christian Leader.

SIMPLE MIXTURE MAKES HENS LAY

By W. S. BURGESS

Any poultry raiser can greatly increase his profits easily and quickly by taking advantage of the thirty-five years' experience of a successful poultryman.

A lifelong study of egg production has resulted in a secret formula of buttermile and other valuable ingredients that puts "pep" into lazy hens. Users report increases of two to seven times as many eggs.

This secret formula is now put up in tablet form, and is called "Combs' Buttermilk Compound Tablets." Simply feed in water or mix with feed.

I am so convinced that this wonderful formula is always successful that I say kill the hen that won't lay after using it.

One million new users are wanted; so for a limited time any reader of this paper can get a big double-size box (enough for a seasen) on free trial by simply writing for it. Send no money. Use the tablets thirty days. If at the end of that time your hens are not laying two or three times as many eggs, if you are not more than satisfied in every way, the tablets are to cost you nothing. If completely satisfied, this big, double-size box costs you only $1.00 on this introductory offer. Not only do they make this excep-tional offer, but the tablets give such universal satisfaction that a big bank GUAR-ANTEES that they will live up to every word of their offer. With the box of tab-lets you will be sent a letter from the Broadway State Bank which reads in part Broadway State Bank which reads in part as follows: "You, therefore, take no risk whatsoever in ordering a package of tablets from them, as this bank will refund out of this deposit the $1.00 you send them, provided the Milk Products Company falls to do as agreed." Because you are fully protected and are the sole judge as to whether you want your money back, it is asked as an evidence of good fatth on your part that you pay the mail man the $1.00 when he delivers the package. Simply send name—post card will do—to Milk Products Company, 458 Creamery Building, Kansas City, Mo., and the big box of tablets will be mailed immediately, postpaid. Kamitomizaka Progress

BY W. W. FREEMAN.

For a year this mission has been under the direction of the West Church in Abilene, Texas. It is the old Wagner-Bishop foundation. Brethren Klingman and Vincent and their wives spent several years there. Brother Hiratsuka is the native preacher, and is in full charge, with two other able elders at present. In all, there have been over two hundred added at that place. Two missions have been started by this congregation and have now come to be good churches. Shiodamura lately put up its own chapel, and Otsuka needs a house. Otsuka was started by Brother Hon and others, and, under the leadership of Brother Ishiguro, who is now in Abilene Christian College, has grown from six or eight to almost a hundred members. The old church has grown all along, and during the stress of war and high prices has prospered, although Brother Hiratsuka and family sacrificed to stay with the work. American missionaries on the field gave of their own means to enable them to live. Brother Ishiguro looked out a new location, Okitsu, for Miss Andrews; and in this field, which had never had any sort of Christian workers, she has developed the nucleus of a new church. Several have been baptized, and funds are needed for a house and supplies. So the work grows in general. At Kamitomizaka there were about thirty baptisms last year, but not so many this year.

A year ago the brethren there bought a lot for four thousand four hundred dollars, where the Vincent home for the American missionary now stands. Rent has ceased, but some interest is accumulating. owe about twenty-eight hundred dollars more on the lot, and it matures in December, 1922. We planned, however, to pay a third of the amount each year. At present we have little for the first payment. We need at least six hundred dollars now. As treasurer of this fund for the church at Abilene, I have sent out many letters and have visited some places; but we need more help yet. We have barely been able to keep up the regular expenses, which are about a hundred dollars a month, though we have been sending only eighty-five dollars our-

Abilene church has given for the home preacher, for local missions, for calls all over the United States, and about thirty-five thousand dollars for Christian education besides. We think the Japan work deserves the support of every local church or Christian, and we want a general response to help put across this lot fund. After that we hope to put up a mission plant that will furnish auditorium, rcoms, etc., for a permanent and powerful work among these little people. Japan is the key to the entire Orient. Japan and China can both point to their Christian martyrs. No truer souls live than a few of the Kamitomizaka workers. The work is very promising. We need a foothold, and must have it.

For September and October the attendance was lighter, because students were not all back in Tokyo; but Brother Hiratsuka reports fortythree meeting at Kamitomizaka, with six hundred and twenty-five attendants and three baptisms. Also that Sister Togo was married with a Christian ceremony, many being present.

Should I tell you that the early churches cooperated in gospel work? Paul lined up numerous churches in relief work, and support of the gospel is just as scriptural as care of poor Jewish Christians. Some work requires cooperation to make it a success, for many efforts are too large for one congregation alone. We do not approve blanket appeals and promiscuous sending to a mission, but we do ask definite cooperation with our congregation in this huge enterprise. It is easy if we cooperate properly. Send funds through the Gospel Advocate, or send to W. W. Freeman, Abilene, Texas.

The Mexican Mission. BY E. N. GLENN.

Brother Martinez is now ready to begin work in the city as soon as we get sufficient funds to start the work. Inasmuch as he has charge of a forty-acre ranch and is quite busy all the time, he cannot afford to launch out away from home and work without knowing for certain that he can get a support. He has done missionary work here before, and was compelled to abandon it for lack of support.

While Brother Martinez has had good opportunity to make money, he has made a sacrifice more than once to devote his time to religious work; but not having the proper cooperation, he has heretofore been unsuccessful. He has also had a full share of persetion, and knows just what it means to face the world with the full gospel of Christ. He tells me that his enemies once had him arrested here and thrown into jail on a false charge.

I have had a few encouraging words regarding the work from Texas and Tennessee, with promises to help later. One good brother writing "in the spirit" says: "Put the good brother to work, and let us all support him, hoping that he will show some one the highway of holiness. I am inclosing a check for two dollars, and hope to be able to help more soon." Another brother writes that his home congregation will give five dollars a month for this work. A sister from Tennessee says we can depend on her for a regular contribution.

May the good Lord stir up the hearts of many such like men, women, and churches, till the "unsearchable riches of Christ" will be winning many souls of our sister republic to follow the banner of the Prince of Peace.

The Work in Mississippi.

BY M. C. CAYCE.

At the beginning of the new year I wish to give a brief statement of our work in Mississippi. We now have in the city of Jackson a congregation of twenty-five members. We meet regularly in a nice, comfortable room, on the second floor of the W. O. W. Hall, in the business section of the city. In our Bible study at 10 A.M. on Lord's day we have three classes-one of small children, taught by Sister Roduck; one class of larger young people, taught by Sister Blanche Vaughn; and one class of grown people, taught by Brother Ridley. All these teachers are competent and deeply intrested in the work. The classes are yet few in number-four to six in each class. Every Lord's day at 11 A.M. regular New Testament worship is enjoyed. We also have preaching on Sunday night, and prayer meeting on Thurs-

In answering advertisements, please mention the Gospel Advocate day night. Besides these services in the hall we hold some cottage prayer meetings.

All of our male members are learning to take some active part in the services, if only to read a lesson. I am continually impressing the truth that God wants no drones, but only workers, in his vineyard; that each member must realize that God expects him to exert a saving influence, and through him God's purpose must be accomplished in saving souls; and that every fruitless member shall be cut

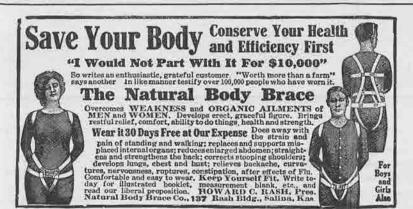

Of those who worship with us, only seven were with us at the beginningnamely, Brother Vaughn's family of six and Brother S. B. Key. Some I have baptized, some have moved in, others have been found who heretofore were not meeting anywhere. Prior to my going to Jackson, so far as I have been able to learn, no New Testament church had met in the city for worship. I feel that little has been done, and that the work is merely started and that our obligation to continue the effort is imperative. cannot afford to leave them until they are able to stand alone and to continue growing. No man, having put his hand to the plow, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God. "Remember Lot's wife."

There are very few churches in the State of Mississippi content to work and worship as "it is written." No large congregation at all; and there are many open doors. Preachers are few, and none that I know of live in or near Jackson. We have long neglected an important field right at our door. Besides Jackson itself, at Ridgeland we have a faithful few who meet in the town hall. At West Point five women and one man meet in the courthouse. In a schoolhouse near Carpenter a discouraged few are meeting. In other places we have some who are not meeting at all. At Ackerman, we have four; at Sturgis, two; in and near Brandon, a few scattered ones; at Madison, two; Greenville, three; Columbus, one; Enid, two or three. Besides these, many other places are loudly sending out the Macedonian cry: "Come over and help us." These calls for help we must heed, or we shall not be found guiltless. The work that has been done in South Mississippi, where done at all, seems to have been of a temporary nature, some one holding a meeting, then going away, leaving those baptized to die. Many thousands have never heard the pure gospel, and few have learned there is such an institution as the "one body." It is not only important that I remain in this work, but many others are needed. Unless we do more for the salvation of others, I fear we cannot be saved ourselves.

THOUSANDS OF WOMEN suffer miserably from periodic attacks of headache, never dreaming that a permanent cure may be had. Headache nearly always results from some disorder of the stomach, liver or bowels. Take Chamberlain's Tablets. They will correct these disorders and there will be no more headache. Many have been permanently cured by Chamberlain's Tablets.

With a Ford or some other means of travel, my usefulness could be greatly increased, as I could effectively reach places now inaccessible with the limited time not only in the suburbs of Jackson, but in the near-by places. I can conceive of no more important work than this in which we are engaged, and my earnest prayer is that we may all be made more keenly alive to our duty. Jesus said to his disciples that one must take up his cross daily and follow him. Our progress will be slow, requiring patience, diligence, faith, and prayer; but let us not stop until the work has been fully established.

[Knowing the great need of the field and the efficiency of Brother Cayce, in the work, we ask if some brother or congregation will not furnish him a Ford car to increase the amount and efficiency of the work. It will be a fine investment.—Editor.]

Edifying as the Need May Be

The "If" That Spoils.

The importance of the word "if" is a matter of frequent comment. It has been called the word with the smallest compass and the largest consequence. It voices an experience common to us all. Each one of us, doubtless, has a great "if" that stands between us and happiness complete. History relates that "if" a certain general had turned up a certain roadway, Napoleon would never have met his Waterloo; "if" a certain king had given the people bread when they asked for it, France might have been spared the horrors of the Revolution; "if" the Hessians had not been feasting with drunkenness and revelry when Washington crossed the Delaware, there would have been a different ending to the American Revolution. "If I had just gone into that little circle of prayer," said a boy in prison, "I would not be here to-day." But there is always that interminable and irrepressible "if" to spoil things.

The "If" That Saves.

But let us not forget that we have some good "ifs" as well as the bad ones. If the air we breathe was not full of oxygen, we would all perish from the earth; if the sun did not shine and the rains did not fall, the crops would fail and starvation would ensue; if the gulf stream did not flow in a certain direction, the isles would be as barren as the coasts of Labrador. But why enumerate more examples? To sum the matter up in one sentence: All God's "ifs" are good. And one of the best of them reads: "If children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ." What glory depends upon this luminous "if!"

A dying judge said to the visiting preacher: "Do you know enough about the law to understand what is meant by joint tenancy?" "No," the preacher said; "I know nothing about the law. I know something of grace, and that is sufficient." "But you should know what the law of cotenancy is," he replied, "that you may appreciate the grace." Then he explained: "If you and I were joint tenants on a farm, I could not say to you, This is your hill of corn and this is mine; that is your blade of grass and that is mine: but we would have share and share alike. I have been thinking with unspeakable joy that Jesus Christ has nothing apart from me, and everything he has is mine." Yes, it helps us to understand what the law of cotenancy is.

The Witness of the Spirit.

Volumes have been written on this subject. But, after all, the Spirit's witness is not so difficult to understand, if we will consider the personal testimony first. Paul says: "The Spirit himself beareth witness with our spirit." Too many try to solve the workings of the Holy Spirit with no reference to their own. What does our spirit witness? Every thoughtful man knows within himself something of his spiritual state, just what is his wish, his intelligent effort. Are these in strict accord with the Father's will as revealed in the word? Have we obeyed the gospel? Are we holding the body under? Over all of its carnal tendencies, is the spirit pure, enlightened, and dominant? All this we know and can testify; and the teaching of this passage is that the Holy Spirit knows as much as our own spirit, and infinitely more. Thus does it corroborate and strengthen the testimony of our own * * * spirits.

"All Things Work Together for Good."

This does not now so appear, but it shall appear in the final consummation of things. When the revelation is complete, we shall have discovered that everything that entered into our lives as Christian men and women has been for our good. W. H. Book offers a very homely, but forcible, illustration of the housewife preparing biscuit. Into that biscuit goes the flour, the soda, the lard, the salt, and the milk. These go through the heating process. All of these, taken together, work out a good biscuit. The salt, when taken alone, does not taste good; the soda is bitter; but when all are taken together, the composite result is good. So it is with our lives. These little things which come into our lives, if they were to stand alone, could not be appreciated, could not be relished; and the heating period, when we are being placed in the ovenwe cannot enjoy it, we cannot understand it; but by and by we shall know. Martin Luther said: "The ways of God are like a Hebrew book, which one can only read from the end." And the late lamented Hoosier poet, James Whitcomb Riley, wrote:

"Make us to meet what is or is to be With fervid welcome, knowing it is sent To serve us in some way full excellent, Though we discern it all belately."

Letter From Brother A. M. George.

Albany, Texas, December 30, 1920.—Dear Brother: Now, as all seem to have had their say, I wish to notice some things in your notice of my article in the Gospel Advocate of October 28. I am not seeking a wrangle, but I am honestly and conscientiously trying to find the truth and to free the church, as far as I can, though in a small way, from many errors that have been brought into it from Babylon. The church is in a deplorable condition, as we all know, and every Christian, no matter how small or feeble, is under obligation to fill his place and do his utmost to keep himself clean, and then the church.

You said in "Let There Be Light" that you thought I did not get your idea in the adverb "precisely." I took it just as you gave it, and I do not think that your explanation clears the matter much. The sentence in question is as follows: "The people of God in this period of their history are unfortunately divided into clashing and conflicting parties precisely as they were divided in the city of Corinth in Paul's day, only the divisions of modern times are on a much larger scale."

Now, Brother Kurfees, in all kindness, and no intention to offend, I cannot see anything in the above, even in the light of your modifying clause, but that the people in the Corinthian church and the denominational religious world to-day are all the people of God. The only difference is in the fact that the divisions now are on a much larger scale. The quality of the division is the same, but the quantity increased.

If the sentence as quoted does not make these denominations the people of God, I cannot understand the language.

In your effort to explain this, you drag the church of God into Babylon, because if members of the denominational churches (Babylon) are at the same time in God's church and Babylon, the church of God must be there, too; if not, then they are not in it.

You think that I am wrong when I say that "no man can be a Christian and a Babylonian at the same time. If I am, I am in good company, for Matt. 6: 24 reads: "No man can serve two masters: for either he will hate the one and love the other; or else he will hold to the one, and despise the other. Ye cannot serve God and mammon." Now the question is: What is Babylon, or mammon? I think that Christ is one Master, and Babylon, mammon, or the devil, the other; and no man can be in both, or serve both, at the same time. If he can, it will seem that Christ made a mistake in Matt. 6: 24. you say about the Campbells, Stone, Scott, and others cuts no cloth. As long as they were in Babylon, they were in sin: and when they discovered their condition and danger and obeyed the gospel, they came out of sin into Christ, and not before. (John 3: 5.) Again, in Rev. 18: 4: "I heard another voice from heaven, saying, Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues." The implication here is plain-that as long as they are in Babylon they partake of her sins and plagues, and they can escape only by coming

There is much talk of honesty and conscientiousness among Babylonians and much "brothering" of them among Christians (?); but the Savior said: "If the blind lead the blind, both shall fall into the ditch." Again: "Deceive not yourselves." Again: "Suffer not others to deceive you." All who are in Babylon have either deceived themselves or they have allowed themselves to be deceived by others, and they are all headed toward destruction.

Brother, can a partial faith and obedience save a man? James says: "Whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all." Did the truth ever put a man into Babylon? If it did not, then a falsehood did; and so every one in Babylon has offended in some way, and he is guilty of all; and he must just simply come out by a full, complete obcdience to the gospel, and then he leaves Babylon and becomes a member of God's family, one of God's people. We are all in either Zion or Babylon; we cannot be in both at the same time, nor can we straddle the fence or wall between the two.

You say: "The proper thing to do is to indorse all the truth taught by the denominations and condemn all the error." To do this, I think I will have to condemn the whole business, for James says one point of error condemns the whole. I want the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, and I can find and indorse that without going over into Babylon to hunt for some grains that they may have stumbled onto.

Almost all false concerns mix in a little truth with their errors, like pill makers sugar-coat their pills to make them more palatable. Take the Baptist Church or any denominational concern, for instance; and while they all acknowledge God and Christ and a few other things that are true and scriptural, at the same time every doctrine that they hold that makes Baptists, etc., and are held only by them, will contradict some portion of the Bible. In other words, every Baptist doctrine will contradict the Bible; and I have no spiritual brothers or other kinsfolk among them.

Finally, I will hold fast to "what is written," no matter what all the reformers of any age, the Franklins, the Lipscombs, and all the great preachers, have believed, taught, and done. Yes, let us "prove all things and hold fast that which is good." I shall undertake to prove by the Scriptures, not by the great preachers. The great preachers are to blame for about all the Babylonish rubbish with which the church is littered to-day.

A. M. George.

P.S. I will agree that all who comply with all the gospel requirements become, in so doing, Christians and members of God's church, and that all who do it are members of the church of Christ in that community. But who, in any sect church, does so? When the minister asks him if he believes that God for Christ's sake has pardoned his sins, and he answers, "Yes," is his faith right? Can you call that faith? If it is not, then his baptism and all is sin.

Noah, a Lonely Vigilant. BY H. LEO BOLES.

Among all the characteristics of this faithful preacher of righteousness, that of loneliness seems to be the most prominent. Noah presents a very pathetic figure or character in his lonely watchfulness. He is a solitary man, isolated, in his loneliness, from the rest of the human family. He is pathetic in his solitary waiting and watching. One has said that the tragedy of Noah's life is that of solitary vigilance. "The long-suffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was a preparing, wherein few, that is, eight souls, were saved through water." (1 Pet. 3: 20.) "The long-suffering of God waited in the days of Noah"—the long-suffering of God waited through Noah, or was manifested in the waiting of Noah.

We have learned that there were two classes before the flood. The great multitude constituted one class, and the lonely and only Noah constituted the other class. The righteous, faithful, waiting Noah is put in contrast with the unrighteous, unfaithful, and pleasure-loving multitude. Noah's solitude is the solitude in a crowd, which is the climax of lonesomeness. I heard Brother David Lipscomb say that the heaviest sense of lonesomeness that he ever experienced was when he was in a crowd. Many a preacher of the gospel to-day can bear testimony to the truthfulness of this statement. Noah's solitude was intensified by the great seething mass of humanity, which was in wickedness and opposed to him.

Noah was not only alone among the teeming millions of earth in life and character, but he lifted a lonely and solitary voice against the wickedness of that age. He stands alone in his crying against the crimes and sins of that day. Without any sympathy, without any encouragement, alone, patiently waiting, Noah keeps vigil for Jehovah. If we are correct in stating that he received the warning concerning the flood one hundred and twenty years before it came, then he was a lonely prophet. He prophesied of the flood; and so far as the record states, he stood alone as a prophet of God. I do not know with what anxiety he waited for the fulfillment of this prophecy; but he was the only one who believed it and was looking for the flood. Of course, his family was included in it. Others were not looking for it; it came upon them suddenly.

Noah labors alone upon the construction of the ark, and builds it, according to instruction, with only one door and a single window. There is one ark with one door and one window, with only one faithful man of God building it. After it was finished, the one family entered the ark, and Jehovah sealed it with his hand. For seven days-one week-the lonely patriarch, whose head was whitened by the frost of six centuries, sat in patient solitude for the flood to begin. We do not know what the conversation was during this one week. We are assured that by faith he kept solitary vigil until the rain began to fall; and after forty days and forty nights, when the water completely submerged the earth, there could be seen the solitary ark, with the patient, waiting Noah, floating upon the one sea of earth. For one long, lonesome year the waiting patriarch kept vigil for the token of Jehovah's mercy. We do not know how the other members of his family spent the year, but we are persuaded that there was one spirit whose serene trust in Jehovah had never been shaken. In the voyage that he makes from the antediluvian world to the postdiluvian world, taking him one year to make the journey, he ever keeps a strong faith and bright hope that the hand which closed the door would protect him in its hollow, and in due time would open it again to his only representative upon earth. During all this time Noah is engaged in his pathetic waiting and watching. He sends forth the raven and waits in vain for its return; then he sends forth the dove and watches for its return; again he sends forth the dove, and she returns with an olive leaf as a signal that the waters were abated. Noah waited until God's own good time when he should come out of the ark. Without a murmur, with complete submission, the lonely patriarch watched patiently for Jehovah's signal. 1 do not think that he had any information as to the length of time that it would rain or how long he should remain in the ark. Jehovah had told him to go in, and had shut him in. With faith he obeyed, and with solitary vigilance he waited and watched until God should call him forth.

The poet has beautifully expressed a description of the first morning of a new day in the following lines:

The wave is breaking on the shore,
The echo fading from the chime,
Again the shadow moveth o'er
The dial plate of time.

O, in that dying year hath been
The sum of all since time began—
The birth and death, the joy and pain,
Of nature and of man.

As Noah steps out upon the world, with the waters all gone, and views a baptized earth risen from the corruption of the old, he stands alone, solitary, watching and waiting for orders from Jehovah as to how he should begin the new life. What memories he must have had of the other end of the voyage! How many millions there were upon the earth when he began the voyage! But now, like the "last of the Mohicans," like the last of any tribe, like the last of any race, he stands alone, lonesome, vigilant—he stands alone to begin anew life and to begin anew the human race. We let the curtain fall as we leave the faithful, righteous, lonely Noah standing under the rainbow of hope, keeping eternal vigilance for Jehovah and pointing all to the promises of Jehovah, which never fail.

"A True Christian Man"-G. Dallas Smith.

BY E. G. BURTON.

Brother W. S. Long very aptly and very tersely expressed my estimation of Brother G. Dallas Smith—the man and the Christian I observed him to be—in his reference to him as "a prince among men." As Saul, in a physical sense, towered above his fellows, so Brother Smith, for his rich spiritual qualities, occupied a high place among men, towering and commanding.

My association with him dates from the establishment of the loyal congregation at Mayfield, Ky. Mayfield was a mission point for New Testament Christianity, there being no congregation working and worshiping after the New Testament order. For four years I aided the movement back to the New Testament pattern, having oversight of the little congregation from its first work until the fifth series of meetings. This series was conducted by Brother Smith, at the conclusion of which and through whose assistance the congregation selected three elders. Since that time the congregation has grown and developed and has erected a very adequate and handsome church home, now fully paid for.

But two of the five series of meetings were conducted by Brother Smith, and it was here that I came to know him. During the two meetings he made our home his home. His example was ennobling; and I have often felt that I have never known any other man who so impressed me with the steadfastness and purity of his life in every thought and word and act of his daily walk.

Brother Smith left behind him not only a record that is clear and clean and above reproach, but a work from his pen that, to my mind, is a masterpiece, and a volume that ranks with the greatest penned this side of inspiration. The volume in question is that entitled "Outlines for Bible Study." When Philip approached the eunuch in the chariot, he said: "Understandest thou what thou readest?" The eunuch replied: "How can I, except some man should guide me?" Likewise humanity needs the example and aid of such preachers as Brother Smith to-day; and Brother Smith's "Outlines" are so helpful as a guide, "rightly dividing the word of truth," that the reader who uses them and really makes a study of the Bible will not fail to know much of God's will to man.

Spare Not Yourself.

As a bridegroom rejoices over his bride, so does Christ rejoice over you, and nothing but the bride's surrender will satisfy him. He has given you all, and he asks for all in return. The slightest reserve will grieve him to the heart. He spared not himself, and how can you spare yourself? For your sake he poured out in lavish abandonment all that he had, and for his sake you must pour out all that you have without stint or measure.

O, be generous in your self-surrender! Meet his measureless devotion for you with a measureless devotion. Be glad and eager to throw yourself unreservedly into his loving arms, and to hand over the reins of government to him. Whatever there is of you, let him have it all. Give up forever everything that is separate from him. Consent to resign from this time forward all liberty of choice, and glory in the blessed nearness of union which makes this enthusiasm of devotedness not only possible, but necessary.—H. W. Smith.

The Pacific Christian Academy.

BY EARNEST C. LOVE.

For nearly three years we have been running a Bible school in Santa Rosa, Cal. This school was the first of its kind started this side of the Rocky Mountains. There is now another running in this county, and both are doing well. Since 1906 I have been trying to arrange for a good Bible school on the coast. It was a doubtful proposition with many of our brethren. California, especially, was noted for its fine school system. Many good brethren thought a Bible school would not be sufficiently patronized to justify us in establishing one. Our lamented brother, Michael Sanders, who passed away a few years ago in Los Angeles, was of that opinion.

But actual experience proves that the religious people of California are ready to turn away from the worldly schools and patronize schools where the Bible is taught. Our school in Santa Rosa, while conducted under the most adverse local conditions, has grown from eight or ten pupils to an enrollment of seventy-nine, and is now just completing two years of actual school. These pupils are from all walks and conditions of life and from many different denominations. But all are learning the Bible, and many are yielding to its teaching. On December 26 we had three confessions from three different families; two were pupils of ours. This is truly a missionary work.

As Santa Rosa and vicinity is unfavorable for getting labor at good wages, and as the business conditions are poor in many ways, it was thought that Fresno would be a better place for a permanent location. Also, the San Joaquin Valley offers more open doors for mission work and is, therefore, more favorable for training young men to preach. This, with other things, has caused us to decide to move everything to Fresno.

It is our plan to stay here until June, 1921, and move as soon thereafter as convenient, so as to begin the fall term of school in 1921 in Fresno. We have undertaken a big thing in Fresno, considering the financial ability of those back of the move. We have bought ten acres of good land, which will be deeded to trustees and held for school purposes. This will cost us twenty thousand dollars. We have thought some of selling a part of it, but the school will really need it all; and if we can pay for it, we ought to keep it.

A number of brethren in Fresno—among them J. M. Arterburn, Charles W. Hays, and L. D. Davis from Kentucky; Charles Chess, of Indiana; H. C. Buker, of Nebraska; and G. H. Byars, of Tennessee—have set their hearts to make the school a success. We believe we have a work worthy of our best efforts, and we are going to do our best. There is not much money in sight; but our plans are to build temporary buildings at first, and pay up as we go. The Lord has plenty of surplus money in the pockets of his people, and we believe they will be glad to help an enterprise like this.

Our brethren are spending thousands of dollars now on Hindus, Japs, and Hottentots; but there is not a field to-day on the globe more needy than California, and not one which promises better and more encouraging results. Also, it is a "home field," and will be more easily cared for, and at much less expense.

The men behind this move are a guarantee that the doctrine taught the pupils will be safe and sound. It is our desire to give boys and girls of Fresno a chance to get their education under conditions that do not lead away from Christ. We are not desirous of building up a rival of any of our institutions of learning in the Eastern States, For some years yet we will probably do only grammar-school, high-school, and one or two years of college work.

We expect to conduct this school in Fresno very much as we have here in Santa Rosa, with free tuition, free books, and free lunch at noon. Of course those who can pay will do so, especially church members; but many of our pupils are from families not Christians, and they will not pay tuition. The public schools furnish books, and they expect us to do the same. But this is a small item, anyway, in running a school. The free lunch is a great help to many of the poor. Just recently a mother who has six children in our school said to me: "Brother Love, I don't know what we would have done without the free lunch for the children." It does not cost much to prepare a cheap lunch of good, rich soup and toast; and when I see some of the poor children eating, I think of the scripture: "I was hungry, and ye fed me." So we do not want to stop our lunch for the children.

We are now taking care of several children who are orphans or half orphans. We expect to take more as opportunity affords. That is one reason why we want the ten acres of land. We want to have a place where the children can work at fruit and berry raising, raising chickens, gardening, etc.

Also, it is our plan to build some small houses like some I saw on the church lot at Santa Ana, Cal., for old people who are destitute, with no place to go; and it is surprising how many such cases there are. We think that these old people can wait on one another, and also they can sew and mend for the children, and be very helpful in raising them. Then the children can wait on them when they are sick, do errands for them, etc.; and thus we can all be mutually helpful one to another. This will cut down the expenses and make the work largely self-supporting.

We have a fairly good print shop; and this is to be moved on the ground, so that poor boys can work their way through school and learn a useful trade at the same time. I know Brother Dodd's suspender factory helped several boys through the Nashville Bible School when it was on South Spruce Street. We are trying now to do for the boys and girls of this section what the Nashville Bible School did for boys and girls of Tennessee and adjoining States twenty-five years and more ago.

If any of the Eastern brethren feel interested in our work and want to help us, they may send donations by check to George H. Byars, care of the First National Bank, Fresno, Cal. I have been on this Coast since 1899, and I have never before asked the Eastern brethren for help; but we have undertaken something now wherein we especially need the coöperation of brethren elsewhere. The local support will not be sufficient to put it through; but after a few years we expect to get the work on a self-supporting basis.

We will need help for buildings and equipment later on, but right now we are going to need help on the payment to be made on March 8. We will have plenty of time on the other payments, and will be in much better shape to meet them; and we are going to build in units, and pay for one before we start another.

Pacific Christian Academy, of Graton, Cal.

BY O. W. GARDNER.

The fall term of the Pacific Christian Academy came to a close on December 24, followed by an excellent program on Christmas Day.

While our school work has been hindered no little by intermittent dismissals on account of a mild form of what some thought to be scarlet fever, we have reasons to feel a just pride in the work of the term just closed. It has sure been a delightful work to me. The school spirit and the loyalty among pupils, patrons, and friends could scarcely be excelled.

We have enrolled about seventy pupils from the first grade to the second or third year high school. We are prepared to care for any one who may desire to enter, even up to the second or third year college. Other courses and grades will be added as occasion demands. Graton, though a small place, has proven to be a good school town. We have a fine working church, and, so far as we know, are a unit in the support of the school and other good works.

We have recently organized in connection with the school work what we call a "Parent-Teachers' Meeting," in which live questions pertaining to the school work and parent aids are discussed. These meetings are drawing the patrons, teachers, and pupils into closer sympathy with each other's work and problems.

Our fall term closed with something unusual in school work. The usual Christmas feast of dining our kindred and friends on turkey and sauce in our own homes, thus often smacking of a degree of selfishness, gave way to rather a unique change in the order of things. The school and board of trustees planned to have two programs upon that day, with a big dinner at the college building. Our plans were successfully accomplished. Both the morning and afternoon programs were of a high order, and elicited the praise of a large concourse of friends and visitors from Sebastopol, Forestville, Santa Rosa, and surrounding communities.

After one of the best-prepared and seemingly unlimited feasts, the large audience reassembled in the chapel hall for the afternoon program. One feature of this program, which so beautifully manifested a substantial interest and an abiding faith in the future of the Pacific Christian Academy, was the liberal subscription to our endowment fund. An opportunity being publicly given to renew the endowment pledges, thirty-five thousand dollars was quickly pledged, to be placed on five per cent interest for the support of the school. This is considered a very fine subscription for a start, considering the fact that many of our substantial friends were unable to be present on account of previous business engagements and bad roads.

If any one reading this should be interested in moving to a climate where fruits of almost every kind grow, where some children go barefooted the year round (my two boys have not worn shoes scarcely a day this winter), where your schooling is obtained under the best environment, with Christian teachers teaching the Bible as carnestly and carefully as any other subjects in the curriculum, tuition free, board cheap, and church work alive and harmonious, write for catalogue or other information to the Pacific Christian Academy, Graton, Cal.

First Lord's Day of the New Year.

The first Lord's day of the new year turned out to be the best day for us since my coming to this place. Our auditorium was "packed full," the ushers having to bring from the recitation rooms a number of chairs that all might be seated. At the close of the morning lesson three came forward—one by statement, to cast his lot with us in the work; another, who had been baptized by a Baptist minister, to confess her faith in Christ and be baptized into him; and the third, having been baptized by a Methodist minister, to lay aside all the commandments of men and be just what the New Testament leads us to be. The singing was good, and every one seemed to be happy. The regular offerings went above ninety-eight dollars.

At the evening service Brother Elmore, of Downey, met our elders and deacons for a business talk about the work at his place, and it was agreed that Brother Riggs, with a number of others who usually attend our services, would be there next Lord's day to help him. This business meeting was followed by a round-table talk of the work for 1921. Short speeches were made by Brethren Miller, Lilly, Mc-Intosh, Riggs, Andrews, and the writer. Prayers were offered by Miller, Andrews, and Cordill. The following songs were led by Brethren Lilly and Morgan, alternating: "Sound the Battle Cry;" "Bringing in the Sheaves;" "Lead Us, Savior;" "Savior, Like a Shepherd Lead Us;" and "I Love to Tell the Story." Just before this last song was sung a short prayer was offered for the baptismal service, and the song was used in connection with this service and the Lord's Supper, which was engaged in by those who could not be with us at the forenoon service. Thus ended what might be called "a perfect day."

The First Call for 1921.

Because much of the matter is in line with what was said on this page last week, and hoping that some soul will be induced by it to stir his home congregation to greater work, I am giving "the first call" of "The Friendly Visitor" to the workers at this place. May God sanctify it to the good of every soul who reads it.

The first call for 1921! And do you know I am as happy as I can be? And why should we all not be happy? "Rejoice in the Lord always: and again I say, Rejoice," is the Then, when we think how way Paul puts it in Phil. 4: 4. gloriously the old year ended and the new year began, how Our house was full can we keep from rejoicing? Lord's day, and extra seats had to be brought in. Was it not a glorious sight? Then, to have Brother Dooly cast his lot with us and to hear his wife confess her faith in Christ and see her baptized into him was, indeed, such as to stir our hearts to the fullest. And how happy we are to rejoice with Brother Power in having his daughter take a stand with us for the fullness of the gospel of Christ! This was, indeed, a good beginning for the new year; but let us know that the work for this year has hardly begun. God's people cannot afford to be satisfied with just one victory. us see to it that each Lord's day is better than the preced-This means that we should make next ing Lord's day. Lord's day a greater day than last Lord's day was. Brother Riggs will be at Downey to help Brother Elmore with the work at that place. A few who have been coming to Altura and North Sichel will be there to help him. Let us remember that work in our prayers, and may Brother Riggs have for us a good report when he returns. must have more at our services to take the places of those who will be with him to help win the battle at that place; and these we will have if we halfway do our duty. fact is, if we all should do our best, we would have more than we could possibly seat next Lord's day. May God help us to soon learn to do this, and to do it joyfully. How glorious is the history of the results obtained by the faithcompany of the priests were obedient to the faith." (Acts 6: 7.) Have we had a "great company" to obey yet? And as you have read before, "multifuder both. as you have read before, "multitudes both of men and women" were added to the Lord. (Acts 5: 14.) Acts 17: were added to the Lord. (Acts 5: 14.) women" were added to the Lord. (Acts 5, 14.) Acts 1. 4 says "of the devout Greeks a great multitude, and of the chief women not a few," were converted. Just what it means by a "great multitude," I will leave it to you to judge. But I know we have had no "great multitude" yet. But why not have such now? The good Bock speaks of those early Christians' "praising God, and having favor with all the people," and of the Lord's adding to the church (See Acts 2: 47.) daily those who were being saved. Souls were saved daily—each day—then, and not just every This is what I had in mind when I said this Lord's day. This is what I had in mind of the year's work has hardly begun. We must get the work in such condition and all the members so at work that souls in this wicked city will be saved daily. "Can it be done?" Lord's day. you ask. Just as certainly as God exists to save souls, if you and I will work as we should. Go to work to get more that are not saved in our Bible classes, and the gospel invitation will be extended at the close of each class. will be opened Thursday night of next week, the Lord willing, in the home of Sister Lottie Johnson; and the gospel invitation will be extended there. Let us see that every scul in this city who can be reached is presented with the giorious plan of salvation. The thing that makes me so happy and hopeful is the fact that I know there are people here with whom I have cast my lot who will do their best. What would be the results if all would work as they should? Somehow, I feel that they will. I know the devil will do his best to keep some from working; but we are here to fight the devil, and not to let him control us. Those early Christians worked, and that is why they so greatly succeeded. Listen, will you: "And every day, in the temple and at home, they ceased not to teach and to preach Jesus as the Christ." (Acts 5: 42.) Will you not turn and read it? Tell me not that such work now will not produce the same results to-day! The gospel is as powerful now as then, and the people's hearts no harder now than then. The only difference is, we do not work as they worked then. But let there be one congregation on the earth that does work as they worked then. We are not responsible for what other congregations do, but we are responsible for what we do right here in the field God has given us to take for Christ Do you remember how Paul speaks of his work at Ephesus? Here it is: "By the space of three years I ceased not to warn every one night and day with tears. (Acts 20: 31.) You say that was a long revival? Well. Paul was never in anything else, from the day of his conversion till his death, but a revival. When he entered a place he started a revival, and continued it till he left. am not saying he ran them as we run revivals to-day, but it was his daily business to preach Christ, and him crucified, to the lost, and try to get those who were converted to keep continually at work. We should do the same to-day. If not, why not? No wonder those early Christians were dreaded by their enemies and that when they entered a field we should find their enemies exclaiming: "These that have turned the world upside down are come hither also." (See Acts 17: 6.) We are not in any danger of being so accused yet. We are not enough like the apostles and those early workers to turn the slightest difficulty away-that is, some of us. But we all should, and I believe do, want to work as nearly like the apostles as God can enable us to work.

Now, have you ever taken notice how exceedingly earnest those early workers were, and how willing to sacrifice and suffer for Christ and his teaching? Let us here notice a few statements: "Wherefore I take pleasure in weaknesses, in injuries, in necessities, in persecutions, in distresses, for Christ's sake." (2 Cor. 12: 10.) Do we so love the cause of Christ? But hear Paul again: "I am ready not to be bound only, but also to die at Jerusalem for the name of the Lord Jesus." (Acts 21: 13.) Will you now get your Bible, turn to 2 Cor. 11, and read slowly from verse 23 to verse 27? Think how those early Christians were persecuted for their loyalty to Christ, and never mention persecution to-day; for we receive not enough to be mentioned. Then, after reading this, turn to 2 Cor. 4: 17, and hear Paul use these words: "Our light affliction, which is for the moment, worketh for us more and more exceedingly an eternal weight of glory." How could he call them "light?" How thankful we should be that God is blessing us with a land of liberty, where we are protected by "the powers that be" instead of being punished by them! Since we do not have to suffer as they did, will we not work all the harder, and be not afraid of getting tired or giving too much money and time to the work?

Too, we should remember that those workers had a consciousness of God's continued presence with them. "Not that we are sufficient of ourselves," says Paul; "our sufficiency is from God." (2 Cor. 3: 5.) Again, when speaking of his laboring more than the other apostles, he forgot not to say: "Yet not I, but the grace of God which was with me." (1 Cor. 15: 10.) He knew whereof he spoke, and meant it with all his soul, when he said: "I can do all things in him that strengtheneth me." (Phil. 4: 13.)

Time forbids my going further with this study, but let me suggest that you take the time to read the following scriptures: Phil. 4: 6, 7, 9; Eph. 3: 16-21; 1 Pet. 1: 8, 9. Then turn to Heb. 9: 24 and see that Christ is now at his Father's right hand to appear before the face of God for us. I do not think that we can make much progress at soul-winning unless the joy of salvation we ourselves have. David says: "Restore unto me the joy of thy salvation; and uphold me with thy willing Spirit. Then will I teach transgressors thy way; and sinners will be converted unto thee." (Ps. 51: 12, 13.) If there is a consciousness of sin in your soul, ray I beg that you exercise true repentance and get rid of it, that you may work as you should? Do not forget the timely words of Micah: "He hath showed, O man, what is good; and what doth Jehovah require of thee, but to do justly, and to love kindness, and to walk humbly with thy God!" (Mic. 6: 8.) Do you love kindness and justice? Now, do not think you do just because you love for people to be kind to you. To love kindness in the true way is to love to be kind and just to others.

There Is Hope.

There is hope for those who stumble and fall
And have still the courage to rise;
They journey on with a watchful step
And see through kindlier eyes.
For the mountain peaks would not seem so high
Were it not for the valley between,
And lofty thoughts would inspire us less
If we had not known the mean.

There is hope for those who face the storm With a strong and steadfast trust;
Who wait for the dawn with confidence And turn from the blinding dust
To scan the heavens expectantly—
They shall not look in vain.
Such souls are lifted above the stress,
And strength is born of their pain.

There is hope for those who try again,
Who will not yield to despair,
Who make of failure a stepping-stone
To mount life's winding stair.
For the morning star shall sing for them,
And the rose shall bare its heart.
The hills shall be glad because of them,
And the rivers of hope shall start.

PELOUBET'S NOTES FOR 1921 NOW READY.

"Peloubet's Notes" has been issued for forty-seven years with ever-increasing popularity and usefulness, which fact alone is a wonderful argument for its value and helpfulness. It is rich in material, comprehensive in its scope, and practical in its treatment. Every superintendent, teacher, and scholar will find in it his own personal requirements. The editor of The Outlook says: "We give first place to Peloubet's." Marion Lawrance, the noted Sunday-school worker, writes: "How this standard commentary has been able to maintain itself during all these years, growing annually stronger and richer, is a marvel to the Sunday-school world. Personally, I do not see how any Sunday-school teacher can hope to do his best without the rich, full helps found in these 'Notes.'"

Georgia and the Far Southern Field By B. C. GOODPASTURE

"A Ringleader of the Sect of the Nazerenes."

The impression one makes upon an enemy is not always without significance. The charges of an accuser may contain an element of truth, even if his accusations are prompted by sinister motives. Tertullus, the advocate brought by the Jews to speak for them against Paul before Felix, though he cared not for the cause in which Paul labored and was unfriendly to it, yet recognized and set forth the relative position of the great apostle in that cause. He said: "We have found this man . . . a ringleader of the sect of the Nazarenes." (Acts 24: 5.) This charge contains more of severe reproach and of suggestive fact than any other accusation preferred by Tertullus against Paul.

There may be a bit of reproach attached to the word "sect," but not necessarily so. It was not used so frequently in a bad sense then as now. It designated a body of men, without necessary reference to their kind. The phrase, "of the Nazarenes." to the mind of the Jew of Judea, conveyed the full measure of reproach. As a recent writer says: "The Galileans were despised by the proud Judeans. Judea was the home of orthodoxy, the shrine of Israel's sacred institutions. Here were Jerusalem, the temple, the Sanhedrin, the great teachers; and she boasted on these distinctions and disdained the boorish folk of Galilee. The ignorance of the latter was a byword, and, when they visited Jerusalem at the festal seasons, their manners, dress, and accent were the jest of the citizens. . . . Among the mountains of Galilee was nestled the town of Nazareth, where the holy Child was nurtured. . . . The people of Nazareth had an evil reputation, even among their fellow Galileans, who had a proverb: 'Out of Nazareth can there be aught good?' (John 1: 46.)" Thus this orator, who advocated the cause of the persecuting Jews from Jerusalem, used a phrase which sounded good to his clients when he spoke of Paul as "a ringleader of the sect of the Nazarenes." Jesus had lived in despised Galilee, in still more despised Nazareth of Galilee; and these facts are here associated with his disciples in the charges against Paul.

We must not overlook the fact that Tertullus called Paul "a ringleader of the sect of the Nazarenes;" not merely a leader, but "a ringleader." Thayer defines the word translated "ringleader" as follows: "One who stands in the front rank, a front-rank man; a leader, chief, champion." Commenting on the same word, Adam Clarke says: "This is a military phrase, and signifies the officer who stands on the right of the first rank; the captain of the front rank of the sect of the Nazarenes." There is truth in this part of the charge; Paul was a front-rank leader, he fought in the van of his Captain's army. His life was one of such unreserved consecration to, and intense activity in, the service of the Lord that even his enemies spoke of him as a "ringleader." If you had lived in the time of Tertullus as you are now living, would your labors for the gospel have impressed him with the fact that you were a "ringleader" of what he called the "sect of the Nazarenes?" If they had not, are you satisfied with what you are doing now? Have you thought about what you would do for the Lord this year? Will you be a front-rank man in any good work? Will you be a pioneer of the faith, to carry it into some new field? The church needs men who will do things. Paul and his companions were once accused of having "turned the world upside down." (Acts 17: 6.) Paul's enemies never accused him of being lazy. What does Satan think of you as a servant of the Lord? Is he afraid for you to be among those who live in sin? What does the Lord think of you as his own servants?

A Good Report From McGregor.

Sister L. V. Mitchell, who is better known to our readers as Miss Vina Hooper (having married recently), sends, among other things, the following report: "We have recently received some appreciated help from the following: Brother and Sister Gus Richmond, Atlanta, Ga., $10; Owen's Chapel congregation, Brentwood, Tenn., $30; McCaslin Brothers, Massillon, Ala., $10; Sister W. R. M. McKissick, Culleoka, Tenn., $1. There is still a balance of one hundred and fifty dollars due on the building, besides windows. We wish to thank all contributors through the Gospel Advocate for the interest manifested." It is gratifying to hear that there are those who are responding to the appeal from McGregor. This is a new congregation, and one that needs and deserves help. Send all contributions to Mrs. L. V. Mitchell, McGregor, Ga.

Book Reviews. BY F. W. SMITH.

"Charlie Alexander," by Philip I. Roberts, is a small volume of ninety-five pages, well bound and neatly arranged in its general mechanical make-up. It is a life sketch of a "singing evangelist"-a man who sang his way around the world. Mr. Alexander was born and reared in Tennessee, on the banks of Cloyd's Creek, not far from the town of Maryville. He was gifted with a rare combination of talents the cultivation of which made of him a man of international reputation. He conducted the song service in many of the great revivals of the most noted revivalists of the modern type. He seems to have been a master of assemblies, a man of a lovable disposition, which won for him a warm place in the hearts of the mighty audiences before which he stood. While extremely religious and intensely carnest, he, like the evangelists in whose meetings he worked and sang, had no clear conceptions of the Bible regarding the matter of becoming a Christian and worshiping as "it is written." But, with all of its faults, it is a readable book, and one from which profitable lessons may be gleaned. If a copy is desired, write to Fleming H. Revell Company, New York. Price, $1.

"Life After Death" is the title of a book by S. D. Gordon, consisting of one hundred and ninety-seven pages. The author is one of the most interesting writers before the public. He has quite an original way of putting things that grips and holds the reader from start to finish. He has read much and traveled extensely, all of which he turns to good account with his pen. The subject he treats is one which has always been of more or less speculation, but since the great "world war" it has become immensely intensified. Many books and magazine articles have been written in a vain effort to enlighten the world on a subject about which their authors were profoundly ignorant. Mr Gordon does not believe in the wild and unreasonable speculations set forth by many of the modern writers on the subject. He exalts the word of God, emphasizing its divine inspiration, and adopts it as the only correct and safe standard. But, in my judgment, the author himself draws upon his imagination, thus drifting into unwarranted positions at some places in his book. He holds to the mysterious and altogether modern system of conversion, an influence of the Holy Spirit clearly separate and distinct from the preached word. Without giving extracts from the book pointing out that which is not in harmony with the Bible, suffice it to say that in the hands of a careful and discriminating reader, one with a clear conception of the holy oracles, Mr. Gordon's production will benefit and help to a stronger faith in the Bible and to a clearer conception and appreciation of many scriptures. He shows beyond a doubt that there is no communication between the living and the dead. The book can be procured from the Fleming H. Revell Company, New York, or the McQuiddy Printing Company, Nashville, Tenn. Price, $1.25. It is well bound and splendid print.

AT HOME AND ABROAD

James E. Scobey will preach at Donelson next Lord's day.

From H. T. King, McMinnville, Tenn.: "The church work here continues to move along harmoniously and encouragingly. Best wishes for the Gospel Advocate and its editors."

From John C. Taylor, Waverly, Tenn., January 10: "My second year's work with the church at this place begins with glorious prospects for the work of the Lord in this section."

From C. A. Norred, Memphis, Tenn., January 10: "Last year was a good year for the Harbert Avenue Church. Exactly one hundred persons were added to the church. Something like six thousand dollars was contributed and spent."

C. Petty writes: "I had good meetings last year at Fatama and Blacksher, Ala. I baptized Bruce Jordan at Blacksher three years ago, and I found him developing into a preacher. He wants to go back to Mississippi and preach to his kindred, who never hear the pure gospel."

Earnest C. Love writes to make a correction. He says: "Recently I sent in a short article, 'Another Speculator.' The chart I referred to had Jesus coming in '19??.' The last two characters, as written, were intended for question marks, but were mistaken for 3's. His idea is that Christ will come sometime between now and 2000 A.D."

From Leslie G. Thomas, Flint, Mich., January 10: "Our work here starts off well for 1921. Yesterday we had several new ones present. It is hoped that the interest will continue to grow as the year grows older. The Lord willing, we will begin a series of meetings here the last of this week. The work in other parts of this State still moves onward."

From B. W. Davis, Ashland City, Tenn., January 10: "We had an excellent day at Sycamore Mills yesterday, with one confession and one restored to fellowship. The baptizing took place in the afternoon, just after the beautiful snowstorm, which lasted about thirty minutes. I will be there again on Saturday night, February 12, and on Sunday, morning and night, February 13, the Lord willing."

J. W. Grant preached at Reid Avenue, this city, on last Lord's day, morning and night. The services were both excellent and well attended. The members there have a mind to work. A "balance sheet" of the financial part of their work for last year had been placed on a blackboard, which showed a very creditable management of that part; it also indicated liberal giving, but hardly up to their ability. Few come up to that.

Clayton Gall writes from Wichita, Kan., January 11: "In the hospital here wife is fast recovering from the shock of a very severe surgical operation of five days ago. We have great hopes that after a few weeks she may unite her influence with my ministry for even a greater power for good than ever. Brethren and friends have said and done many timely things in their sympathy in our moments of anxiety and sorrow, for which we thank them."

W. J. McAlister, Fayetteville, Tenn., says: "I read with interest Flavil Hall's 'Notes from Florida,' in the Gospel Advocate of January 6—how the brethren treated Aunt Manda Thomas, colored. I heartily indorse what he had to say about it. We had a similar experience here at Wells Hill some years back. It shows that some of the brethren do not read the Eible; if so, they fail to understand it. I hope and pray that all our preachers and editors will speak out boldly against error in all forms."

From E. Gaston Collins, Algood, Tenn., January 10: "I was here on my regular day—the first Sunday. We had good crowds. I also preached in the afternoon at the mission, at Netherland, where we had a full house. I am following up the meeting there with monthly preaching. I was at Livingston yesterday, with fair attendance. We are conducting a weekly prayer meeting there now. I am there twice each month. I will be at Smyrna next Lord's day. Best wishes to all the brethren."

Will J. Cullum preached for the Twelfth Avenue congregation, this city, last Sunday, morning and evening. Attendance and interest at the Bible study continues to increase. There were three hundred and twenty-nine present out of an enrollment of three hundred and fifty-eight. On the first Sunday in this month the superintendent, George S. Davis, was presented with a beautiful gold ring by the scholars and teachers as a token of the high esteem in which they hold him and in appreciation of his services.

James A. Pauley, Wise, Va., writes as follows: "I would like to correspond with a congregation or with brethren who need a loyal preacher. I am fifty-one years old. I have been a disciple for over thirty years and have been preaching the word twenty-eight years I would like to locate in a small town or in the country, and would preach to one or more congregations. I do not expect a full support from the church, but I would like a place where my boys can farm. I have also good side lines which I follow. I am a civil engineer, a carpenter, and a photographer."

From L. Meade Williams, Tulare, Cal.: "The work is moving along very nicely here now. We began meeting in our new house of worship on January 2. We have a very nice place to meet, located at 322 South G Street. Starting from the post office, go one and one-half blocks south, then four blocks west on Highway till you come to G Street, then just off Highway to the south you will find the Highway church of Christ in Tulare. Strangers coming here will have no trouble finding the place if directions are followed. We hope to accomplish more for the cause of the Master in 1921."

From Otis J. Haynes, Hermitage, Ark,: "I devoted three months of my time to mission work last summer. I held seven meetings and baptized thirty-nine persons. My expenses were two hundred and ninety dollars. I received one hundred and sixty-three dollars in freewill offerings, naking a sacrifice of one hundred and twenty-seven dollars, besides three-months' time. The Lord being my helper, I shall begin the work again on April 1, and continue all the year. Brethren wanting me for meetings should write me not later than March 1. I would be very glad to correspond with brethren who would be willing to help me bear some of the burdens in the good work."

R. E. L. Taylor, of Decherd, Tenn., accompanied by his wife and daughter, is now in Lecanto, Fla., where he will spend the winter months. He writes: "This is a land of flowers, fruits, fish, and wild game. I have preached four times since we came here. I find about forty loyal members here, all wide-awake to their Christian duty. The attendance has been splendid at each service. We will begin a series of meetings here soon. Brethren wanting me to preach for them in the State of Florida will please write me at once, at Lecanto. I would be glad to preach for them while here in the State. My wife's health is improving very fast. This State is thinly settled, but those that are here need the gospel preached to them."

From S. H. Pate, Lebanon, Tenn.: "I have been reading the Gospel Advocate for fifty-four years, and have always found it striving to teach the truth as found in the word of God. I have had the greatest confidence in the editors of the paper. While none of us are perfect, yet, like Paul of old, we can be honest and right-faced, and 'walk in the light, as he [Jesus] is in the light.' I saw, the last time I was at the house of God on Russell Street, in Nashville, my old classmate and schoolmate, E. G. Sewell, whom I learned to love and respect back in the fifties, when he and I were young. But little did we think then of the fiery trials that would sweep over us; but for some cause best known to the great I AM, we are yet living and moving and having our being in him. May the good we have done live after us and the evil be interred with our bones, is my prayer."

J. O. Blaine, of Portland, Tenn., paid this office a highly appreciated visit last Friday. He had been in attendance upon a meeting of the trustees of the Fanning Orphan School, of which he is a member. He reports the school in excellent condition, with only two vacancies, and one of them promised an occupant next week. He also reports the church at Portland as still active, having recently built one additional room to their house and now planning to build another, because their growth demands it. He reports sixty as the average atendance at his Lord's-daymorning Bible class, and other work in proportion. As the readers of the Gospel Advocate know, Brother Blaine recently (December 3) passed the eighty-fifth anniversary of his birthday; but he is remarkably vigorous for that age, able to serve on boards of trust, etc., and to attend their meetings far away from his home, and notwithstanding the winter season and exceedingly bad weather. We congratulate him.

Will J. Cullum will preach at Locust Grove, near Auburn, Ky., next Lord's day.

Sister T. B. Larimore, of Berkeley, Cal., has been ill, but we are glad to say that she was much improved at last report. We shall be rejoiced to know that Sister Larimore has entirely recovered.

- E. A. Elam will begin a series of sermons at David Lipscomb College next Sunday evening. While the lessons to be presented are intended for the special benefit of the students, all are invited. We hope and pray for a profitable meeting.
- F. B. Srygley preached at Belmont Avenue on last Lord's day. He reports very fine attendance and apparent increase in interest. The members seem to be alert and wide-awake, with a great and growing zeal for the spread and practice of the truth.
- James A. Allen disappointed the Charlotte Avenue Church, this city, by notifying them very late that he would be elsewhere. A young brother from David Lipscomb College preached. The attendance was very fine—the largest, so reported, in many Lord's days.
- J. Will Henley is passing through the shadows. His baby has been sick for some time and has recently developed cancer trouble. The churches have been very kind to him, which he appreciates. Any one desiring to fellowship him in his affliction should address him at Coleman, Okla.
- I. A. Douthitt, who is soliciting for the Freed-Hardeman College, Henderson, Tenn., called to see us last Monday. He reports the school as in a prosperous condition. The present enrollment is about two hundred and fifty-four, two hundred and thirty-five being in regular attendance.
- A. B. Lipscomb reports two fine services at Russell Street Church, this city, on Sunday. New members are added at almost every weekly service. The marriage of Mr. M. H. Allen and Mrs. Viola Holloway was a pleasant aftermath of a Sunday-evening service. The sisters spend one day each week making garments for the poor.

Thomas H. Burton, of Union, S. C., reports the death of his sister, which occurred recently, and also writes that while they were filling her grave he received a message from home to come at once on account of the illness of his wife. Upon his arrival at home, he found her suffering with her head and face, but is glad to report at this writing that she is some better. Our sincere wish is, if it be the will of the Lord, that Sister Burton may soon be restored to perfect health, and that out of these sorrows the Lord will bring good to Brother Burton.

W. T. Blalock, of Lead Hill, Ark., enjoys reading the Gospel Advocate very much. He thinks it is the best paper that he has read, and enjoys reading it more than anything but the Bible. However, he is limited in finances, receiving only a small pension, as he is an ex-Confederate soldier. Since the paper has been advanced to two dollars and fifty cents he is not able to take it longer. Will not some brother send us the price of one subscription for the purpose of continuing the paper to Brother Blalock? If so, specify that the amount is for that purpose.

Mrs. C. Petty is very anxious for her husband to remain where he is and devote his time to preaching the gospel in schoolhouses and in halls in that county. Her suggestion impresses us as a good one, and we should be very glad indeed to see the churckes support Brother Petty in this field. Brother Petty's address is Pineapple, Ala. It is not always best for evangelists to travel over a very large territory, for in so doing expenses are very heavy. It would be well to concentrate our efforts and systematize our work and put forth more vigorous efforts for the conversion of sinners.

J. Marshall Harrison, Clinton, Ark., addresses the following words to "the brethren in Christ" wherever it may be read: "There are but few persons in Clinton who are members of the church of Christ, and they are poor. They will do all they can. They cannot build without your help. I am sorry that it is necessary to make this appeal in this way. We should have a building fund. I hope some brother will start the said church extension fund soon. We are locating our well. If it is your pleasure to assist us in building, we will be thankful. Send your contribution to L. D. Usrey, Clinton, Ark. Take it up with your home church."

From C. H. Smithson, 891 Dudley Avenue, Texarkana, Ark., January 7: "I am now located and working with the Dudley Avenue Church, in Texarkana. I have known this congregation for two years, and believe it to be one of the best. Last year was a pleasant one with me, and I hope to make this year not only pleasant, but profitable for the cause of Christ. This is a city of twenty-five thousand, and a ready field for the truth. I believe it is the intention of all to reach the town in a general way with the gospel in love. If any one who reads this knows of a brother, sister, or friend here, give me his name and street number, and I will see them at once. Let our prayers and aims be for good and the glory of God."

U. G. Wilkinson writes from Hot Springs, Ark., January 13: "I am again at Hot Springs, where I shall remain for some time, taking further treatment for my health. While I believe that I am improved in a general way, yet I realize that it will be some time yet, with the utmost care and proper treatment, before I can be active in the work. I have been spending some time at Sulphur, Okla., taking treatment, and have preached a little on Sundays at nearby points. I believe that if I am able to continue treatment here and there for the next few months, I will be able to engage in active work again; and I am sure that, with the help of my brethren, I can do so. Remember me in your prayers, and may the blessing of God be with you all."

Hal P. McDonald makes this announcement: "The church at Berry, Ala., is planning to have a three-days' meeting of the preachers, elders, deacons, and other members of the church of Christ of this section. A program is under preparation. The meeting will be held on Friday, Saturday, and Sunday, January 28-30. A number of preaching brethren and editors from other States will be invited to take part in the program, and all who read this are invited to be present. Matters that concern the kingdom of God will be given much attention, and, in addition, Alabama Christian College will come in for some consideration, as its present management fulfills the five-year contract under which it has been operated up to and including this year. Brethren who are interested in school work might do well to attend this meeting."

In this issue appears a notice of Davis, Rains & Co., undertakers. Two new members have recently been admitted to the firm—W. Russell Crafton and Harold S. Pettus. Most, if not all, the members of this firm are members of the church of Christ. Brother Davis, Brother Rains, and Brother Pettus all attend the Russell Street church of Christ. Mr. Crafton is well and favorably known in Nashville and is an expert embalmer. This firm is located at the old Fort Infirmary, just north of Church Street on Seventh Avenue. When remodeled and refinished, this will make an ideal place. We hope our friends and readers will be spared to labor for and serve the Master; but if any one finds it necessary to call on a good undertaking establishment, he would find himself well protected in the hands of Davis, Rains & Co.

F. E. Exum writes from Houston, Texas, January 11: "The Central Church here in Houston, which meets in the banquet hall of the City Auditorium, has just obtained the services of J. S. Dunn, of Dallas, for the year 1921. Brother Dunn is one of the well-known Dunn Brothers, who began his career in Tennessee. He is a very able man, and we count ourselves fortunate to have him labor with us. W. T. Selley and wife, of Nashville, Tenn, were visitors at the Central Church on Sunday, January 9. The Central Church has a Ladies' Bible Class that meets every Thursday afternoon in the Y. W. C. A. Auditorium. J. S. Dunn is teacher. It might be of interest to the Eleventh Street congregation, of Nashville, to know that Sister F. M. Bourland, who recently returned here from a visit to the Nashville congregations, states that, in her opinion, that congregation is the most active congregation in Nashville.' She probably didn't visit all of them.

Our attention has just been called to the fact that there is an apparently increasing tendency on the part of cartocnists, particularly those cartoonists who make comic strips, to caricature Protestant ministers in a manner which tends to bring a Protestant church in faith into contempt. Sometimes these figures represent advocates of "blue laws," prohibition, or Puritanism. Protestant Christians have the right to demand that when "blue laws," prohibition, and Puritanism are represented by symbolic figures, the figures shall not be so costumed as to represent the Protestant ministry. Catholic priests and Jewish rabbis are not so represented, nor would Jews or Catholics tolerate such treatment. This journal has never contended that it was the work of the church to legislate goodness into the hearts of the people, but it has contended that while afflictions must come, they should not come by Christians, and that Christians should in no way give support and encouragement to that which is evil. A man must either be for or against Christ.

"Wisdom Is Justified of All Her Children." BY J. C. M'Q.

When the great world war was ushered in, many of us felt as though our lives had been failures and the world had failed to accept the principles of peace as enunciated by Christ The angels announced the coming of Christ, saying: "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace among men, in whom he is well pleased." But as we look back on the terrible war that has passed, we should ask curselves the question: "Have we learned the lesson that God wished us to learn?" As much as we may regret that sin exists in the world and that cruel and unholy wars will come so long as sin exists in the hearts of men, we should be deeply concerned about our own hearts and lives. Are we, as Christians, doing our full duty in educating our own nation and the other nations of the world to learn war no more and "to beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning hooks?" It is undoubtedly true that he who shows his people the sinfulness of war and who keeps his country out of war renders the best service to both his country and his God. It is the part of wisdom for men to educate against war in times of peace. After the passions of the nations are inflamed and the nations are flying at each other's threats, not so much will be accomplished by teaching against war as by pointing out its horrors and its sinfulness in time of peace. The man of wisdom and of good judgment devotes his energies to preventing war, just as a good physician seeks to ward off and prevent disease. The successful physician does not wait until his patient is almost dead before using preventive measures. The best lawyer and the one who serves his client best is the one who keeps his client out of law, rather than the one who wins the case after his client has gone into a lawsuit. Little is accomplished by arguing with a drunken man. A successful minister does not wait until his neighbors get into a fight before pointing out to them the folly of such conduct, but he labors to create within them such a state of mind as will not permit them to fight. No man of common sense would stand by and argue with two men against the folly of fighting while they were engaged in deadly combat. So the thing to do now is to teach the religion of Jesus Christ, and to teach men that all war is vicious and wicked and that no child of God should encourage the nations to study or learn war. Reason, common sense, and the Bible all lead us to know that a man should write and teach more against war in time of peace than he does in time of war, when the passions of men are so inflamed that they are not amenable to reason and right. The first thing to do is to bring men to realize that if they would have pure, righteous lives, they must keep all evil out of their hearts. The Savior says: "For out of the heart come forth evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, fornications, thefts, false witness, railings." (Matt. 15: 19.) Christ, in his teaching, goes back of the act itself, and not only teaches his followers that they shall not kill, but also teaches them that they shall not be angry with their brother. Malice in the heart is almost sure to break out in some vicious act. "But I say unto you, that every one who is angry with his brother shall be in danger of the judgment: and whosoever shall say to his brother, Raca, shall be in danger of the council; and whosoever shall say, Thou fool, shall be in danger of the hell of fire. If therefore thou art offering thy gift at the altar, and there rememberest that thy brother hath aught against thee, leave there thy gift before the altar, and go thy way. first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift." (Matt. 5: 22-24.) Many a man who never fired a gun and who never committed a desperate, vicious act is, nevertheless, a murderer. The beloved John says: "Whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer: and ye know that no murderer hath eternal life abiding in him." (1 John 3: 15.) No child of God can afford to harbor malice in his heart; he should endeavor not to return evil for evil, but contrariwise blessing. The man who hates his brother, even though he may have a cause, as he thinks, for his hatred, only renders his own life less useful. Malice, hatred, and animosity destroy the vitals of any man's power for good. In the midst of a sinful world, with tribulations, trials, and temptations on every hand, Christians, going forth as sheep in the midst of wolves, should be "wise as serpents, and harmless as doves." Sometimes one, in his eagerness to teach the truth, may do it in a way that will do harm rather than good. The Savior, recognizing this, admonishes his disciples: "Give not that which is holy unto the dogs, neither cast your pearls before the swine, lest haply they trample them under their feet, and turn and rend you." (Matt. 7: 6.)

Let us hope that the world has learned its lesson and is now in a frame of mind to heed the teaching of the Lord Jesus Christ. The Holy Spirit very clearly admonishes Christians: "But if thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him to drink: for in so doing thou shalt heap ccals of fire upon his head. Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good." (Rom. 12: 20, 21.) There are things occurring even now and publications appearing in the secular press that should admonish all Christians to follow the things that make for peace and in every possible way discourage everything that leads to war.

The Secretary of the Navy of the United States recently announced that if the United States were not to enter into any agreement with the other powers of the earth which are now bound together in the League of Nations, he would feel compelled to approve another three-year building program. Viscount Ishii, Japan's delegate to the Peace League at Geneva, thereupon announced: "Japan cannot reduce her armaments as long as the United States is increasing hers." A sort of deadlock on the disarmament question descended on League deliberations. Of course the papers take a different view of Viscount Ishii's announcemen. The Chicago Evening Post, however, reminds Japan that she has nothing to fear from American armament unless she challenges it by a direct attack upon American rights. The Post continues: "The situation might be stated in other terms. It might be stated that the United States cannot modify her present armament policy as long as Japan maintains a menacing attitude toward the open door in the Orient and hints at a possible casus belli in our treatment of the immigration problem."

Then, again, it appears that there are sympathizers with Ireland in this country who are ready, if possible, to involve the United States in a conflict with Great Britain. The Bridgeport Herald says: "There is no longer any sense denying England has a civil war on her hands which is daily becoming more troublesome to subdue." The same journal adds: "Sentiment plays a leading part in matters of this sort, and the sentiment in America is rapidly growing more strongly toward Ireland. To many in America the treatment of Ireland by England is but a reminder of England's treatment of America when we fought for our freedom. Whether right or wrong, the effect of the burning of Cork will be to intensify the feeling against England and to increase American sympathy for Ireland." I can hardly think that the people of America would be so foolish as to interfere in the affairs of Great Britain and Ireland. No matter how many sympathizers there may be in this country, the good sense of the people of this country should keep them from meddling with Irish independence. The Newark Evening News, in discussing America's interest in a settlement of the Irish question, avers that, next to the British Empire, we are most affected by this problem: "Our political life proves it. Its net effect is to create or keep alive a feeling of hostility to Britain. And as Ireland, by geographical proximity, must always be a major factor in British consideration, so the British Empire for similar reasons must always be a great question in American policy. We are not only too close together, as with Canada, to afford to quarrel, but we have too many things that we either have to work out in common or find ourselves being played one against the other by Japan or a revived Germany or Russia. Canada's problems are more nearly our own than those of any other nation. We share the Asiatic immigration question with Canada, Australia, New Zealand, and South Africa. Through Hawaii and the Philippines we share in the Asiatic issues with Great Britain at Hongkong, Singapore, and India. The Caribbean Sea is guarded by the United States at Panama, Porto Rico, and Cuba, and by Great Britain at Jamaica. Except for the purely European field, it might be said that fate had so arranged it that wherever there is a British interest there is also an American interest. It stands to reason that the more these two interests can work in harmony, the less likely it is that some other interest with different aspirations can get in. It is, therefore, good American interest to wish the Irish question satisfactorily settled, if for no other reason than a selfish one."

President-elect Harding, during his recent campaign, had the good sense to say that "there is a widespread sympathy here for the cause of Irish autonomy;" but he emphatically stated, "It is not a question for official America." This opinion is shared by most of our people, but the quotations from the papers should impress Christians with the threatening clouds and that now is the time to vigorously oppose war.

Where Are the People of God? BY M. C. K.

The reader will please examine another communication from Brother George, found on page 58 of this issue of the Gospel Advocate. While it would not be proper to continue indefinitely a discussion on the same line, yet because of Brother George's worthy place in the kingdom of God, his unquestioned sincerity and high regard for the truth, and his fair, courteous, and brotherly way of defending what he believes, I gladly publish this additional article from him, although it is on the same subject which has been before our readers for several months. I invite attention to the following points in reply:

1. On my statement that "the people of God in this period of their history are unfortunately divided into clashing and conflicting parties precisely as they were divided in the city of Corinth in Paul's day," he says: "I can't see anything in the above . . . but that the people in the Corinthian church and the denominational religious world to-day are all the people of God." It seems strange indeed that our brother "can't see anything in" the statement except something that is not in it! Cannot God's people be scattered among "clashing and conflicting parties" without "all the people" in the said parties being "people of God?" Cannot people of God exist among people who are not people of God? If not, why not? And if this is possible, then why cannot Brother George see that the statement, "The people of God in this period of their history are unfortunately divided into clashing and conflicting parties precisely as they were divided in the city of Corinth in Paul's day," does not mean nor necessarily imply that all in the said parties are people of God? Hence, I respectfully reply that "the sentence as quoted does not make these denominations" in their entirety "the people of God." I meant to teach, and my language does teach, that some in the denominations are God's people; but I did not mean to teach that they "are all the people of God."

2. He says what I "say about the Campbells, Stone, Scott, and others cuts no cloth." That may be so, whatever that means; but, nevertheless, it is not only true that "the Campbells, Stone, Scott, and others" lived and died believing they were children of God while "they were in Babylon," but "when they discovered their condition and danger" they turned away from the errors to which they found they had been holding and held on to all they had believed and practiced in "Babylon" which they could read in the word of God; and if those of them who had been buried with the Lord in baptism while they were in "Babylon" were not children of God when they came out, then they lived and died without ever becoming children of God! I am not teaching here, and neither do I believe, that those of them who had not obeyed God were his children while in "Babylon;" but I am teaching that what is needed by those in Babylon who have done only a part of what God says in order to become his children is to complete their obedience by doing the remaining things required which they have not done.

3. But I will now prove by Brother George himself that, if what he says is correct, some of God's people are in the denominations. I prove it this way: Although he contends that "no man can be a Christian and a Babylonian at the same time," yet he also says the denominations are Babylon. I do not know whether they are or not—possibly they are; but he then quotes Rev. 18: 4 and applies it to the denominational world: "I heard another voice from heaven, saying, Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins." Now, the reader will please note that in that very passage God himself calls them his people, saying: "Come out of her, my people." That is precisely what I am calling upon God's people in "Babylon" to do, but my beloved Brother George objects and says none of those in "Babylon," as he calls the denominational world, are God's people. Why, then, does God say to them: "Come out of her, my people?"

4. Our brother seems to misapprehend, and hence misapplies, the passage in James: "Whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet stumble in one point, he is become guilty of all." (James 2: 10.) This does not mean, and James immediately proceeds to show that it does not mean, that if a man "stumble in one point" he has violated all the commandments of the law. The very next verse says: "He that said, Do not commit adultery, said also, Do not kill. Now if thou dost not commit adultery, but killest, thou art become a transgressor of the law." Of course: but such act would not make one guilty of adultery, nor of violating any other command except the command, "Do not kill." James merely teaches that though a man may keep all the law, except one point, yet disobeying in that one point makes him a transgressor of the law; and so with all who are God's people in "Babylon" or anywhere else. The things they have done at some points which God's law required do not excuse them for failing to do what it requires at other points, any more than being children of God, as I think we both are, would excuse Brother George or myself in failing to do what God's law requires at some point. Of course, "every one in Babylon has offended in some way;" but that does not necessarily mean or prove that they may not be children of God, any more than if Brother George or I "offend in some way," as no doubt we both sometimes do, proves that we are not children of God.

5. Replying to my statement that we should "indorse all the truth taught by the denominations and condemn all the error," Brother George says: "To do this, I think I will have to condemn the whole business." What a fearful statement! Surely he did not think of its full import. When I was a little boy, a denomination taught me that Jesus died on the cross to save the world; that he was buried; that he arose from the dead; that he ascended to heaven; and that he is the Savior of all who obey him. It taught me that I must obey him if I would be saved, and that water baptism is one of the commandments which he required me to obey; but it also taught me that sprinkling was baptism, and I submitted to it. Later I learned that it mistaught me in this last item and in some other items, and I turned away from the mistakes, as far as I saw them, into which I had been led, and did at those points what the New Testament required; but I did not "condemn the whole business," and thus repudiate my former teaching that Jesus died on the cross to save the world; that he was buried and rose from the dead; that he ascended to the heavens; and that he is the Savior of all who obey himyet all these things and much more were taught me by a "sect church." Surely Brother George does not mean to teach that I should "condemn the whole business," yet that is exactly what he says. On the contrary, I repeat, let us "indorse all the truth taught by the denominations," or by anybody else, "and condemn all the error."

6. Finally, he says he "will agree that all who comply with all the gospel requirements become, in so doing, Christians and members of God's church." This is exactly what I believe and all I believe on this point, and it is what I have taught throughout the recent series of articles. But he immediately asks: "Who, in any sect church, does so?" I answer, every one "does so" who, in spite of being involved in certain errors, nevertheless, does what the New Testament requires in order to become a Christian or child of God. When I submitted to sprinkling for baptism, my course would have been acceptable to God if I had been performing the act which he commanded, for I did it to obey him. When I discovered that I had not done what God had commanded, and hence had not obeyed him, I proceeded to do it and thus to obey him. I know not how else to do new except to continue acting on the same principle. Hence, as stated in our issue of January 6, 1921, when persons come to me from the denominations, "I accept and indorse all they bring with them that I can read in the New Testament." The very same point was further emphasized by the strong and timely words of Brother W. H. Carter, who, in the same issue of the Gospel Advocate, and referring to persons coming from the denominations, very properly said:

My eyes are not keen enough, nor my perceptive powers strong enough, to enable me to look back and see what the thoughts and purposes of one's heart were when he was "Who art thou that judgest another man's servant?" baptized. (Rom. 14: 4; see, also, Rom. 2: 1.) Faith, repentance, confession, baptism, prayer, giving, loving, serving, wor-Faith, repentance, shiping, etc., are individual matters and must be left to the individual and God. I do not know, neither do you, what the purpose in the heart was when one was baptized; but God knows, and the individual should know. own master he standeth or falleth." One comes forward and says: "I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God." We take his word for it and baptize him. Another comes forward and says: "I have been baptized in obedience to the gospel." We discredit him and repudiate his baptism. We credit one and discredit the other. Is that right? Do we not become legislators in the church of God? When one comes forward after hearing the teaching, and claims to have obeyed and is satisfied, I leave it with him and God, where it belongs.

If we would avoid becoming "legislators in the church of God," I see no other course to pursue.

Why Circulate the Gospel Advocate?

The progress of the Gospel Advocate from its inception has been largely dependent upon the efforts of its subscribers to increase the list. Were it not for their faithful efforts, we would have been compelled long since to cease publication. True enough, the Gospel Advocate has had many representatives in the field from time to time. Some of these have done exceedingly well. The amount to be collected from each subscriber is so small, however, and the territory is so large, that it seems almost impossible for one man to look after all the interests of the paper. On that account we have been largely dependent upon the zeal of some subscriber in each town or community to see that the good work goes on. A very encouraging feature is found in the fact that the paper itself is its best advertisement. In making a canvass you will soon discover that very few Christian families ask to see a sample copy before giving you their subscription. It is only necessary to bring the matter to their attention. They usually know what the paper is and what it stands for. Parents and grandparents have read it in past years. In many cases it is regarded as a family heirloom. The pity of it is that the spirit of worldliness has so pervaded the church in these modern days that comparatively few are disposed to read any religious journal. They much prefer to read the popular magazines or daily newspapers. This means that they have placed temporal and worldly pursuits above the spiritual interests of the soul. We believe that the circulation of the Gospel Advocate would greatly relieve this condition and correct a dangerous tendency. It is generally true that in those communities where the paper is read the church is stronger and free from the spirit of digression and worldliness. We call upon our preachers and Christians generally to help promote the welfare of the one body by circulating the Gospel Advocate among their friends and acquaintances. A little effort on every one's part will mean much for the success of the paper. Preachers who send new subscribers will be given twenty per cent discount from the regular subscription price. To every old subscriber who sends us two new subscribers we will send the best Teachers' New Testament with notes now on the market. Don't wait for the other fellow. Make your canvass at once, and gladden our hearts by sending in your names.

H. H. Diestelkamp, of Vichy, Mo., in a recent letter to Brother McQuiddy, among other things, says: "I wish to tell you that I have had a sad experience with the Apostolic Review people. They are trying their utmost to rob me of my name, or reputation. While they cannot injure me here where I am personally known, they will hurt me among some of their readers where I am not known. It is over nothing, only that I will not help them ride their hobby against Bible colleges, and I do not believe in their evangelistic courts. I understand they are telling now that I had positively refused to debate the matter with them, and that statement is positively false. They have gone so far with the matter that it is hard for me to think that they are sincere. They seem to be at the bottom of lots of church troubles and divisions among brethren. They surely have never read Prov. 6: 19 and Rom. 16: 17, 18. I really think it is jealousy toward other papers and preachers.

T. S. Bain and J. H. Gawf, of the East Okmulgee Church, Muskogee, Okla., send this: "As we mentioned recently, the church at Muskogee has arranged with A. M. Foster to deliver a series of ten sermons, beginning on January These subjects have been selected by the church at this place, at Brother Foster's suggestion, and are as follows: Christ in Prophecy,' 'The Responsibility of the Church,' Apostasy,' 'The Restoration Movement,' 'Christian Liberty,' 'Opening of the Seven Seals,' 'Future Eternal Punishment of the Wicked,' 'God's Promise to Abraham,' and 'The Judgment.' Those who know Brother Foster recognize his ability as a preacher of the gospel, his great reasoning faculties, and his forceful manner of delivery. Several preachers have expressed their intention of coming to Muskogee to hear this entire series of sermons. Others are earnestly requested to do so. Brethren, the church will be giad to have you come and enjoy this feast of good things. Please advise us by letter if you can arrange to be here. The place of meeting will be at the church, East Okmulgee Avenue and K Street."

Horace W. Busby, of Fort Worth, Texas, gives a brief summary of a busy year's work in 1920 and presents a bright outlook for the coming year. Listen: "As the old year goes into history and the dawn of the new appears, we are reminded that another milestone on life's journey has been passed; also, that all our thoughts, words, and deeds up to the present have gone to record. Knowing that this record is being kept and that we must some day face it, we can but say: 'What shall our record then be?' year just closed was the busiest year of my life as a preacher of 'the unsearchable riches of Christ.' During the year I was engaged in twenty series of meetings, preached four hundred and thirty-five sermons, baptized three hundred persons, and more than two hundred erring disciples were led to repentance. At all places visited I found a determination on the part of God's chosen to accomplish more than ever in the name of Jesus the Christ. Encouraging letters are coming to me about the work this year. My time is promised for the year, and all are enthused over the prospects, which is quite encouraging as we consider the unrest and other disturbing elements of the present. But why should the people of God be fearful? 'If God be for us, who can be against us?'

W. S. Long writes from Washington, D. C., January 4: take this opportunity to express to the churches of Christ and the brotherhood everywhere our sincere thanks and gratitude for your hearty fellowship in helping to secure and equip a house of worship in our capital city. know you are interested in knowing of the work and also how much we yet owe on the property. You will rejoice to know that we have a good house, well located. It is at Fourteenth and Meridian Streets, N. W., and easily reached from all parts of the city over the Fourteenth Street cars. The cost of the house was forty thousand dollars, and the cost of the pews and necessary furniture was two thousand We have raised about thirty-one thousand dollars. dollars. This leaves us yet owing about ten thousand dollars on the house and one thousand dollars on the furniture. So eleven thousand dollars would put us even, and it is our aim to be free from debt before the end of 1921. May we even beat this. The Dickson church of Christ, Dickson, Tenn., gave one thousand dollars, which paid off one of the one-thousand dollar notes. If we had about ten other churches to give us such a fellowship, we would soon clear the debt and be ready to plant some other missions. The papers do not have the space and time to report each donation separately, and for this reason we write each church or individual a personal letter of thanks and receipt. If any one fails to receive such a letter, please let us know. Again let me express to each person who has had any part in this great work our sincere thanks. May we prove worthy of the encouragement and the fellowship. In passing this way, be sure to come to the church and worship with us. We will give you a real welcome. Address all letters or donations to E. L. Mills or W. S. Long, Post Office Box 1650, Washington, D. C., or to the church of Christ, Box 1650, Washington, D. C."

The following report for the past year, sent in by H. N. Mann, of Riverside, Tenn., will be read with "During the past year I went to the place of worship fiftytwo Lord's days, at home and abroad. I helped to encourage the work of the following preachers by word of encouragement and otherwise: Spears, Campbell, Hollis, Gollaher, Lancaster, Burns, and Love, and others. I kept up three monthly visits—to Morrow's Valley, in Wayne County; Brush Creek, in Lawrence County; and Seiber's Chapel. in Lewis County. I also visited and worshiped with the following congregations for one or more services: Grinder's Creek and Gordonsburg, in Lewis County; Centerville, Little Rock, and Lyle, in Hickman County; Mount Pleasant, in Maury County; Etheridge, in Lawrence County; Mount Hope and Topsy, in Wayne County; and Farmers' Valley and Flatwoods, in Perry County. I preached one Lord's-day evening for an aged sister (ninety-three years old), at the home of her son. I preached another Lord's-day evening for a sister confined to her bed with rheumatism, and the brethren broke bread with her. I baptized nine persons and restored four. I was called to assist at six marriages and four funerals. I helped to see after a post office, large store, small farm, and home, known by some Texas preachers as 'Preachers' Rest.' The good wife, known to said preachers as 'Sister Hez,' is, like her husband, a worker not ashamed. The good Lord has blessed us with both spiritual and temporal blessings and health, so that your humble servant could go to the help of the great needy field. Let us work while it is day, brethren, for rest is after this brief life."

Withholding name and place, because the letter said it was not for publication, I give the following excerpt from a letter recently sent to me, and my reply to the same. I hope the matter is of sufficient general interest to be worth a place in the Gospel Advocate.

"Brother Grant: Some days ago I wrote you for information on missionary work, and appreciate your prompt reply. Again I am coming to you for information. There is much discussion in our county as to methods of doing missionary work, and I want to know the inspired scriptural plan for doing the Lord's work. Will you give me the exact scripture for doing missionary work, to which I can point my friends?"

In my reply I said: "I am very much pleased that you manifest so much interest, and gladly undertake to inform you on the matters you ask about. But first I must call your attention to the fact that the expressions 'mission,' missionary,' and 'missionary work,' are not found in the Bible, and that it will be difficult, if not impossible, to find 'the exact scripture' for doing what the Scripture does not mention. See? But the meaning of 'missions' is a sending; 'missionary,' one sent; and of 'missionary work,' the work of those sent. So we can look in the book of Acts of the Apostles for this work, as 'apostle' also means one sent with a message or duty. Much of this work is also alluded to and described in the Epistles, especially the ones to the church at Corinth, to the Philippians, and to the Thessalonians, to which I refer you. But the entire New Testament is a book on sending; for God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life. For God sent orld . . . that the world through him might (John 3: 16, 17.) Much of the work is also into the world . . be saved! directed and described in the letters to Timothy and Titus; for they were 'evangelists,' and an evangelist is 'one sent.'

"I am glad you say, 'I want to know the inspired scriptural plan for doing the Lord's work;' for that is a right aspiration, and the expression 'Lord's work' is scriptural. Where he tells us to do the work, and illustrates the doing of it by telling their acts and teachings who did it and directed the doing of it, he shows the plan. We had a tract on the subject, by Brother McCaleb, called 'Going and Sending:' but we fail, after diligent search, to find a copy in the office, and suppose the edition is exhausted."

But Once.

But once I pass this way, And then—no more. But once—and then, the Silent Door Swings on its hinges, Opens . . . closes— And no more I pass this way.

So while I may With all my might, I will essay Sweet comfort and delight To all I meet upon the Pilgrim Way.

The Acorn Brothers.

One bright autumn day two acorns lay on a bed of leaves under a big tree and stared out at the world. There was a great deal to see, and they agreed that it was good to be alive, seeing it.

The thing they enjoyed most was watching the wind play with the leaves, which were all dressed in lovely colors—clear yellow, gay red, and crisp brown—and were romping gayly through the woods and across the field.

If the leaves stopped for a minute to catch their breath, the wind came racing after them, whistling and whooping, and away they would go scampering in every direction. Sometimes fifty leaves or more leaped into the air and waltzed round in a whirlwind. Then the two little acorns would chuckle out loud.

But though the wind was such a rough playfellow during the day, toward evening he generally calmed down and sang the leaves to sleep. It made the acorns drowsy to hear him. At other times he was mischievous and chased the leaves all night long.

The two acorns made friends with the birds, the bees, and the beetles. They liked to lie and watch the puffy white clouds moving in the sea-blue sky above them like small ships under full sail; and they never failed to watch the sun take off his pink nightcap every morning shortly after dawn.

The moon and the stars kept guard over them during the darkness, and once in a while the rain came through the woods and gave them a drink of cool, sweet water. On the whole the two brothers were very well content, but they could not help wondering sometimes what their future would be.

"Can you make out what the oak tree is saying above us?" one of them asked the other on a clear October day. "She seems to be calling us."

They both listened. The oak tree was calling them, sure enough.

"Look at me," they heard her say after a while, "and see what you may become some day."

The larger acorn laughed at that. "Surely she's making fun of us," he said.

But the smaller acorn gazed upward and was struck anew with the beauty of the great oak tree.

"She must be able to see all over the world," he said to himself. "Her lowest branch is higher than the maple that stands near. How the birds love her! How the leaves cling to her! Many of the other trees are bare now, but she is still dressed in russet brown."

Then all at once he heard the tree speak again.

"Look at me, little acorn," she said, "and see what you may become in time."

"I don't believe," thought the little acorn, "that a noble tree would try to deceive anything so small as I am." He listened again.

At that moment a voice spoke somewhere close at hand. "I am ready at any moment to help you climb," it said.

"We'll help, too!" cried other voices in a chorus; and the acorn was sure, though he did not know why, that it was the sun and the clouds and the winds that spoke. He began to feel very much excited.

His brother only laughed at his hopes. "The idea of your becoming an oak!" he said. "Much you look like one!"

"Here comes the autumn wind," said the little acorn "I will ask him."

The wind halted for a moment to hear his question,

"Can acorns become oaks?" he repeated. "Well, some think so." Then he was off again after the scurrying leaves.

There was silence for a short while. Then the little acorn said clearly: "I believe that I can become an oak. Help me, everybody!"

An hour or two later a little boy came whistling through the woods with his hands in his pockets. Under the big oak he stooped and picked up the acorn.

"Let me see how far I can throw you," he said, and he gave him a far fling. The little acorn had begun his journey!

He fell to earth some distance from his old home and settled down into a little cranny and fell fast asleep.

It was a long, long sleep; and as he slept the air grew colder and colder. The wind came and covered him with a warm quilt of snow, but the acorn did not even turn in his sleep.

When at last he waked, he did not know himself. "What has happened?" he cried. "Am I punished for daring to think of being an oak?"

Then he remembered what the oak tree had told him long ago, and his heart grew braver. "How fat I feel!" he said.

A little later he noticed that his jacket was splitting. He decided to take a long breath and see what would happen. So he did, and rip! went the old coat that had fitted him perfectly before he fell asleep.

"That is strange," the acorn thought. "But everything is strange now."

He stretched himself and began to push upward. Somehow it did not seem hard to push. Day after day he climbed, always cheery, always hopeful. At last, one never-to-be-forgotten morning, he pushed his head up into the sunlight. There was the world again!

"Hello, little oak!" a voice said, and he felt a tap on his arm. It was his old friend, the wind, hurrying by. The clouds and the rain, too, spoke to him, and the big oak he used to know waved to him from the distance.

And so the little oak grew and grew, and before he had finished growing he had shaded half a field.

His brother, the acorn that laughed at the idea of being an oak, had made a good meal for a hungry squirrel and had been forgotten long ago.—Elizabeth Carrington Young, in the Youth's Companion.

More of the Apostolic Review Work.

BY CHARLES H. CUTTS,

In the Apostolic Review of September 21, 1929, is an article, headed "Birds of a Feather Flock Together," written by two men who sign themselves as elders of a church at Fiftyfirst and Brown Streets, Philadelphia, Pa. The article is slandering Brother E. E. Joynes and wife, both of whom are members in good standing in the church of Christ at Tabernacle, N. J. Brother Joynes had visited and preached at annual meetings at Mentone, Ind.; Barrackville, W. Va.; and Marietta, Ohio, in August and September last. This seemed to have rekindled the jealousy and spite of the two men, who are now ruling and ruining the church in Philadelphia, and who are endeavoring to deceive other congregations, so as to uphold their ungodly acts and do the same elsewhere. In the latter part of 1917 some friction arose in the Philadelphia congregation, and the two young elders asked Brother Joynes if they could count on him to cooperate with them. His reply was: "That all depends on what you do." Failing to uphold them in their determination to rule and ruin brought upon Brother Joynes a flood of persecution that is satanic in the extreme. First of all, they sent a letter out to several mission points where Brother Joynes was laboring, stating that they did not any longer indorse him and requesting that we discontinue his services. Be it known that not a word had been said to Brother Joynes as to his conduct or teaching. Is this scriptural? Is it honest? Is it fair? This is only a very small sample of the persecution that this worthy brother has been, and is still being, subjected to. The writer of this article went to Philadelphia and listened to what they had to say, and came back to report ! to the church at Tabernacle, N. J., that it was nothing but jealousy and spite.

Furthermore, P. Mackey, an elder at the time in Philadelphia, had visited the church at Tabernacle, N. J., occasionally, and had revealed his true nature by trying to undermine E. E. Joynes in the affections of those who had obeyed the gospel through his missionary work. Brother Joynes had been visiting this community for about eight years, and is held in the highest esteem. Be it known to all concerned that the church of Christ at Tabernacle, N. J., recommends Brother E. E. Joynes, and with him invites any representative brethren to come and make a thorough investigation of all that has taken place in the last few years. We are willing for the other side to be heard, and then ask for our side to be given the same right; and not, as a certain preacher did about three years ago, listen to the other side, and condemn any who differ therefrom.

BY J. R. JONES.

To-day (December 26) closed the work of this year for us at this place. We did better in 1919, but said nothing about it. We started here with very few members, but have grown steadily until we now have a working membership of at least fifty men and women. We are all renters but five, and they are not rich by any means. We have a neat, little, stucco building, and have it well seated. The first of the year we had in the treasury $12.36, and we owed a debt of $351.06. On January 5 we borrowed $800 at our local bank to pay off the indebtedness and paint the house inside and to pay on seats. We have in the treasury now $31.22, and owe a debt of $782. The receipts for the year, including the $800 borrowed, were $3,153.58; disbursements, $3,134.72. Some of the principal disbursements were: For preaching, $960; destitute places, $70; seats, $1,176; on debts, $482.50; painting, $197; singing and song books, $92; literature, $46.50; insurance, $36.

[We think this church has done, and is doing, well. We hope some of those who are so insistent on putting their building and other loads on the brotherhood will take notice and imitate the example.—EDITOR.]

Hope Nearly Gone, but Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Saved Her

Star, N. C.—"My monthly spells gave me so much trouble, sometimes they would last two weeks. I was treated by two doctors without relief and they both said I would have to have an operation. I had my trouble four years and was unfit to do anything, and had given up all hope of ever getting any better. I read about your medicine in the

CHURCH NEWS

Arkansas.

Mayflower, January 13.-I been preaching here some. We have had crowded seats and good interest. Some are talking of being baptized. The Baptists, Methodists, and "Rollers" have been attending well. I have preached one funeral and married one couple. I may go to Texas before going back to Tennessee .- J. C. Mosley.

Texarkana, January 10.—Yesterday was a fine day for us in Texarkana, with a large number of Christians to praise and worship God. Our house was nearly full, in spite of the sick-ness here. The afternoon was spent at a mission point in South Texarkana. Our outlook is bright here, and all are rejoicing. I have time for some spring meetings while the church rests from my feeble efforts.-C. H. Smithson.

Fort Smith, January 10.—Yesterday was a great day with the Park Hill Church. Two good services, with four additions. We have had nine additions, two by baptism, since the preachers' meeting closed. We are expecting great things during this year. The year 1920 was a great year with me in a way. I held eleven meetings, taught three singing schools, preached every Sunday save one (was singing for Brother Henley then), baptized eighty-seven persons, and was very busy all the year. I have made some mistakes, but hope to avoid them in the future, and have entered into the new year with renewed energy and greater determination to do more for God than I have ever done before .-Will W. Slater.

California.

Rosa, January 10.-The Santa church of Christ in Santa Rosa has a large attendance at each service. It is said that there are more young people attending this church than any other in the city. Great interest is taken in the singing, and a great many compliments have been given by visiting preachers. One made the good confession on Sunday night.—Ina night.-Ina Duke.

San Francisco, January 9.-Brother Larimore preached an excellent ser-mon to-day. The congregation was larger than usual, and the prospects for the new year are very favorable. The record for the past year shows a great improvement over the former' years. A cordial invitation is ex-tended to all visitors to come and worship with us, at Richmond Hall, Clement Street and Fourth Avenue.— Mrs. T. J. McRae.

Indiana.

Jasonville, January 8.-I have been among the Indiana congregations since the close of the year. I was with the congregation at Covington at a Thursday-night Bible reading and prayer meeting—the last meeting before Christmas. A good number of the members were out. We had a good meet-I next visited Clinton, and saw a few of the members; but as Brother Gepford had an appointment for Saturday night and Lord's day and night, I retraced my steps a little way and came to Montezuma, where we have a small congregation. Here I preached one time, and assisted in the worship also. Next I came to Brazil, and was entertained by Brother Joe Miller, a good preacher of the word, who is now working in the coal mines, and doing all he can to develop the congregation in Brazil along Bible lines. Quite a good band of worshipers is being got together there. I preached on Monday and Tuesday nights. I came to Coal City next, and here I preached twice to good and attentive audiences. I find this congregation planning for two meetings this year, one to be held by Brother Srygley and another by Brother Elam. I next visited and preached two nights at a near-by congregation called "Beth-saida," Then I came to Lyons, where I preached last Lord's day, morning and night. This congregation is growing in numbers and power. I am now at Jasonville, where I will preach to-morrow night and on Lord's day. I find the outlook reasonably good for work during this year.—Andrew Perry.

Forest Hill, January 10.—I have just closed a week's meeting at a school-house, four miles from town, Good attendance and attention, with five confessions—three by primary obedience and a man and wife from the Missionary Baptists, who were well advanced in age. The man had at one time preached Baptist doctrine, until, as he said, they quit the Word, and he had no authority to preach anything else. They will keep house for the Lord, and teach all the young they can gather around them. Brother C. K. Matthews assisted me in this meeting.—C. C. McQuiddy.

Oklahoma.

Durant, January 11.—We had two excellent services at the Seventh and Beech Streets church of Christ on Sunday. I am laboring with these brethren, and our future is very promising. —W. R. Swinney.

Hollis, January 12.—We are now enjoying one of the best singing schools that the church at Hollis has ever had. It is being conducted by Brother Ira Y. Rice. He is a great singer and a teacher of music. The church here is experiencing a healthy growth. We are having the largest regular attendance in the history of the church, so the members tell me. The house is full each Lord's day.—Frank L. Cox.

Tennessee.

Lawrenceburg, January 12.—Last Saturday I went over beyond Collinwood, Tenn., about one mile, to a mill There are about five hundred people there. I preached on Saturday night, Sunday, and Sunday night. The weather was very disagreeable, but we had a large crowd for each service. One young man was buried with his Lord in baptism on Sunday afternoon and two ladies were reclaimed that night. They have about twelve members, and intend to meet each Lord's day from henceforth. This is a desti-tute place and the work is much needed. I intend to hold a short meeting for them in June, if the Lord wills, I hope to be able to do more work of this nature just as soon as I complete my school work .- J. C. Hollis.

Cured His RUPTURE

I was badly ruptured while lifting a trusk several years ago. Doctors said my only hope of cure was an operation. Trusses did me no good. Finally I got hold of something that quickly and completely cured me. Years have passed and the rupture has never returned, although I am doing hard work as a carpenter. There was no operation, no lost time, no trouble. I have nothing to self; but will give full information about how you may find a complete cure without operation, if you write to me, Eugene M. HOW DOCTORS TREAT COLDS AND THE FLU

First Step in Treatment Is a Brisk Purgative With Calotabs, the Purified and Refined Calomel Tablets that are Nausealess, Safe and Sure.

Doctors have found by experience that no medicine for colds and influenza can be depended upon for full effectiveness until the liver is made thoroughly active. That is why the first step in the treatment is the new, nausealess colomel tablets called Calotabs, which are free from the sickening and weakening effects of the old style calomel. Doctors also point out the fact that an active liver may go a long way towards preventing influenza and is one of the most important factors in enabling the patient to successfully withstand an attack and ward off pneumonia,

One Calotab on the tongue at bed time with a swallow of water—that's all. No salts, no nausea nor the slightest interference with your eating, pleasure or work. Next morning your cold has vanished, your liver is active, your system is purified, and you are feeling fine, with a hearty appetite for breakfast. Druggists sell Calotabs only in original sealed packages, price thirty-five cents. Your money will be cheerfully refunded if you do not find them delightful.—(Adv.)

Belle Haven Orphan Home, of Luling, Texas.

BY MRS. JENNIE CLARKE.

In remembrance of the kindness extended to the children of this institution during the year 1920, I wish to tender my sincere thanks and appreciation to all who have so nobly cooperated with me in my efforts to care for the dependent orphan children in my charge. Most especially do I thank the donors for many loving tokens sent to gladden their hearts during the holidays. The gifts were collected and placed on living evergreen trees on the children's picturesque play ground. Such a beautiful scene presented by nature's artistic background, enhanced by the happy, joyous faces of laughing children, is rarely equaled this side of heaven. I consider it a glorious work to be associated with these children, and twentytwo years of hard work does not make me feel a day older. I trust that during 1921 I may do a greater work through my efforts; for there are sad hearts and hungry orphans whose burdens we could lighten by a word of hope and cheer and by aid rendered through the sheltering arms of Belle Haven.

I not only request the financial support of the churches, but their prayers that I may be faithful to the Home and to the cause of Christ; that I may be blessed with the physical strength for many years to direct the work; and that when length of years may make me tired of earthly joys and labor the curtains of death may close gently around the scene of my earthly existence. May I then be surrounded by loving, tender-hearted children, whose presence may soothe the death pang, while my soul takes its flight to that land of everlasting felicity prepared for those who love God and little children.

"The Sin of Substitution."

BY J. W. VANDIVER.

Several years ago at a mass meeting of disciples at Lone Pine, Pa., a president of Bethany College delivered an address in which he said: "It may be that some deacon in some back county may be opposed to the use of instrumental music in the worship to-day." This was said on account of my opposition to instrumental music in the worship, which I had mentioned the evening before in speaking on "The Sin of Substitution," After the sermon of President McDairmid, I was introduced to him, after which, in conversation, I said: "I am that deacon you spoke of in your discourse to-night. I am from the same county as Alexander Campbell and Benjamin Franklin." Said he: "O, yes, I have seen such fellows as you before."

I said: "I have also seen such fellows as you before." Said he: "I have no time to talk to you concerning these matters—time is too precious; we are going on." "Yes," said I, "you are going on." "Whosoever goeth onward and abideth not in the teaching of Christ, hath not God.' (2 John 3: 9.)"

Substituting the will of Satan for the will of God wrecked the world in the beginning, and substituting the will of man for the will of God has brought division and alienation among the people of God to-day; and all along the history of the past this sin has met with marked expression of the disfayor of Almighty God.

The apostles of Christ are the models for all preachers and teachers in things divine. They were chosen, qualified, and sent to deliver the law of life to all people and for all time. They spoke "as the Spirit gave them utterance;" hence, made no mistake. Therefore, the great apostle to the Gentiles said: "Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received, let him be accursed." The apostle John also said: "We are of God: he that knoweth God heareth us; he that is not of God heareth not us. Hereby know we the spirit of truth, and the spirit of error." The apostles were a unit in their preaching and teaching; hence, those who heard and obeyed their message were a unit-"of one mind and one soul." Thus it should ever be; and "if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin."

All sorts of human remedies for present-day ills have been prescribed by voluble men, many of them learned men. But God has been ignored; therefore, quackeries have utterly failed. We are now threatened with new wars, because the great Physician's old, tried medicine has not had even the cork taken out of the bottle, save by the few prayerful souls whose cries have kept us from chaos.—Exchange.

Convalescence after pneumonia, typhold fever, and the grip is sometimes merely apparent, not real. To make it real and rapid, there is no other tonic so highly to be recommended as Hood's Sarsaparilla. Thousands so testify. Take Hood's.

I Can, and I Will.

I can, and I will! Though the road be uphill, And I may have to pause On my way up the hill—Yet if others have made it, I can, and I will.

I can, and I will!
Though at first the long hill
Seems to grow, as I go,
With each step up the hill—
Still, if others have made it,
I can, and I will.

I can, and I will,
Blaze my way up the hill,
What though thorn bush and brier
Block my way up the hill.
What others have done, sir,
I can, and I will.

I can, and I will,
See the lights on the hill.
There are beautiful sunsets,
Where clouds meet the hill.
If others have seen them,
I can, and I will.

I can, and I will,
Give a lift up the hill
To the one who seems skidding
Right back down the hill,
And together we'll make it—
We can, and we will.

A Journey.

BY M. C. CAYCE.

Leaving Nashville, Tenn., at 11 P.M., Sunday night, January 2, I arrived in Henderson, Tenn., on Monday morning. The school was not in session, so I did not see the student body; however, I met and enjoyed talking with Brethren Freed and Hardeman, as well as several other brethren. I wanted to visit and see the school; but a special reason for doing so now was to see them in the interest of our Mississippi work, hoping to have some of them spend their vacation season preaching in this needy field. The new girls' dormitory, with fifty rooms, is to be nice indeed, but Brother Freed said they did not expect to have it ready for occupancy before the fall term.

Leaving Henderson at 6:09 A.M., Tuesday, I arrived in West Point. Miss., at 11:15 A.M., to find Brother and Sister W. N. Morris at the station to welcome me. With them I visited the members there, who are few and discouraged. Having had two meetings without success, they almost feel that it is useless to attempt another. Last summer Brother Herbert Winkler, who did the preaching, and Brother Charles F. Hardin, of Springfield, Mo., who led the song service, were greeted with audiences of from nine to twelve, practically no outsiders attending. The summer before, Brother 1. B. Bradley, as preacher, and Brother H. D. Jeffcoat, as leader of the song service, were unable to get the people to come out. I understand that the "digressive" preacher kept away himself and worked to keep others from attending. Since last summer some of the few members have moved away, leaving only Brother Morris, his wife, and four other sisters, who meet in the courthouse. This is a sad condition, yet continued effort should be made to reach the people there.

On Wednesday I went to Columbus, Miss. One loyal sister, whose husband is a member of no church, is anxious to have the pure gospel preached there. Her husband seemed deeply interested, too. I enjoyed the cordial hospitality of their home until Thursday morning, and promised them a tent meeting this summer.

I arrived in Ackerman, Miss., at 5:10 P.M., Thursday, to find Brother H. D. Jeffcoat waiting to carry me out to Cork Schoolhouse, where, with one day's time to announce my coming, a nice audience that almost filled the house had gathered to hear the gospel. Brother Jeffcoat and his good wife and I sat up and talked until near midnight. discussing themes and conditions in Mississippi. Brother Jeffcoat is doing a grand work in his home county. He lives on a farm, four miles from Ackerman, makes a crop, and preaches all he can. Four members living in Ackerman want a tent meeting, which we hope to give them this year.

I arrived in Jackson, Miss., Friday afternoon, and will write more of our Jackson work next week

CHURCH NEWS

Texas.

Denton, January 11 .- All meetings at the Pearl Street church of Christ were well attended Sunday and the interest was good. Three ladles pre-sented themselves for membership and one made the good confession at the morning service. The baptizing will be attended to at the midweek prayer meeting on Wednesday evening .- R. D. Smith.

Miami, January 10 .- 1 preached at Lakton yesterday and last night. crowds were good at both services. Our crowds at Miami on the last Sunday in December and the first Sunday in the new year were good. Brother Sheets entered the Harper Bible College last week; so Brother Hollis and Brother Smith, two of the young men, conducted the services here Sunday. -Lee Sanders.

Fort Worth, January 10 .- The Southside-Central Church had a good day yesterday, with a large crowd at each service. The church has enjoyed a steady growth for some months and is now in the best condition to do good it has been in for a long time, singing has greatly improved. Our young people take a good interest in the work, and the church has stood by me in every effort to build the cause. I believe this church is doing more and better work than I have ever seen before. I am proud of being connected with them in the work.-Tice Elkins.

Patience.

BY F. E. EXUM.

"For ye have need of patience that after ve have done the will of God, ye might receive the promise." (Heb. 10: 36.) It is obvious from the above language that a person might do the will of God for a time, and then lose the reward of eternal life because of a lack of patience. Patience is one of the cardinal virtues of the Christian's life. The apostle Peter includes it with virtue, knowledge, temperance, godliness, brotherly kindness, and love, which he says we should give diligence to add to our faith. Patience gives to the Christian's life what the balance wheel gives to an engine. It gives stability and equilibrium under strain. When vexatious and trying circumstances present themselves, if you lose your equanimity, you may do something or say something for which it will be hard to make reparation. Our Savior said: "In your patience, possess ye your souls." Reverse the language and you have this result: lose your patience and you will lose your souls. It is through "patient continuance in well-doing" that we finally are rewarded with eternal life. Patience need not be expended on things in advance. Use it always for the time being and the future will be taken care of. It is the aggravating things that come into conflict with your life to-day that tries your patience. Paul refers to our lives in this world, or to the time when Jesus shall come, as "a little while." says: "For yet a little while, and he that shall come will come, and will not tarry." Hold your patience, then, through a few short years, and the promise is a crown of life.

God's Instruments.

The great sterling duties, the exact truth, the resolute refusal to countenance wrong, the command of temper, the mastery of indolence, the unstained purity-these and such as these form the character and fashion our souls into instruments in God's hands for high and heavenly purposes in his providence. But the carefulness over details; the watchfulness against faults which we know to be faults, but which, notwithstanding, seem venial; the devout regularity and attention in our private prayers; the invariable good humor of our manners; the seeking for occasions of kindness and unselfishness; the avoidance of little temptations; the care not to cause little annovances and little troubles-to attend to all this for the sake of Christ, our Master, is the natural and fitting expression of a loving heart.-Frederick Temple.

"As a Man Thinketh."

Every day we are becoming more like our thoughts. If they are mean and selfish, we cannot prevent ourselves from becoming so; if they are unclean and evil, our character and conduct will inevitably be shaped by them. It is true that "as a man thinketh in his heart, so is he." As Charles Kingsley says: "Think about yourself-about what you want, what you like, what respect people ought to pay you-and then to you nothing will be pure. You will spoil everything you touch; you make sin and misery for yourself out of everything which God sends you; you will be as wretched as you choose, on earth or in heaven, either." And, on the other hand, loving thoughts will produce loving acts; and a generous, kindly way of regarding others in our own minds will bring us to a generous, kindly treatment of them in daily life. -Selected.

Among the Colored Folks

Report for 1920.

I worked hard last year for the benefit of my race and all that would hear the truth. I have been placed where a gospel preacher had never preached, and it pleased the Lord for me to baptize six persons in that one place. I preached six days, and the people put me out for preaching the one faith.

During the year I preached one hundred and seven sermons and baptized twenty for the remission of sins. I thank God for that much, and I hope to have the prayers of every Christian that I may continue in the work for the Lord. Let us all be as one in the work for the Lord, and be saved at the end of life's journey.

The total contributions received by me for 1920 amounted to $278.33, and my railroad fare was $151.49; so you can see my need. But I have never felt bad over it. I mean to do my part and teach them their duty although my help is small. Brethren, remember me in your prayers.

G. A. JOHNSON.

Mission Work Among Negroes.

For the last seven years I have been engaged in mission work among my people, and during this time nine hundred and fifty-seven souls have obeyed the gospel under my preaching. My support during these seven years has not been at all times what I would have liked for it to be; but I have pressed on, trusting Jesus to supply my needs. Since entering the work I have been encouraged by such Christian men as A. B. Lipscomb, A. M. Burton, S. W. Womack, and a great many others. Several of the white brethren remembered me during the holidays, and a good many colored brethren and sisters among whom I have labored.

I am glad to see such a great missionary spirit among the white churches, trying to reach all nations with the gospel; and I am forced to say right here, brethren, do not forget, in arranging your plans for this year, to include mission work right at your door among my race. To use all the time and money to reach the foreign nations, and neglect your cooks. house girls, farm hands, chauffeurs, and nurses, I think, is a sad and serious mistake; because if we can get the gospel to those who serve your homes and care for your little ones, you can put more trust in them, and save them from ignorance of the blessed gospel of Jesus Christ. The white brethren tell me in a good many places I go to do mission work that they hope all of the negroes in their section will obey the gospel, because when one accepts the gospel it seems to make a different man out of him in every respect. While I was at Tuscumbia, Ala., last fall, several of the leading white brethren there wanted to see a colored Christian preacher; and when they saw me and heard me preach, they seemed to be happy because they had lived to see a colored man preaching the pure gosper. Now, brethren, I do not mention this for any selfish reason or motive, neither am I opposed to mission work across the waters; but please do not forget those who work by your side and in your homes.

I am now at home laboring with the Jackson Street congregation, in Nashville, trying to strengthen and encourage them. Let us hold up Christ to a perishing world. M. KEEBLE.

They That Are Christ's.

They do not want to shine in the world, or to be rich or popular, or to have their own way and assert themselves, or to enjoy the relish of success. . . . With all simplicity their hearts are bent on moving, doing, suffering, as the spirit of Christ in them may will. They have done with worldliness; they have done with seeking; they do not look for an easy life in the world where Christ was crucified. . . . Their faces are set toward God, and the light that glows in them comes from him.—Selected.

"Righteousness, peace, and joy." The human heart welcomes these three characteristics as marking the society which answers the promise of creation. In these three, that memorable trial, the battle cry of revolution, which, in spite of every perversion and misuse, has found a wide response in the souls of nations, receives its highest fulfillment. In "righteousness, peace, and joy," we can recognize "equality, liberty, fraternity," interpreted, purified, and extended. They tell us that the community and not the individual is the central thought in the life of men. They tell us that the fulfillment of duties and not the assertive of rights is the foundation of the social structure. They tell us that the end of labor is not material well-being, but that larger, deeper, more abiding delight which comes from successfully ministering to the good of others. They tell us that over all that is transitory in the form of the kingdom, over all the conditions which determine its growth, there rests the light, the power, of an eternal presence.—Selected.

God's designs will bring us more than our desires.

Sister Kitty Miller Batey was born on July 27, 1846; departed this life on February 10, 1920. She was married Brother B. B. Batey on March 1, 1866, and to this union were born seven children. One died when five years old; the other six were with her during her last illness. Many relatives and friends gathered in her late home near Rucker, Tenn., and after singing the sweet songs that we love so much and a short address by the writer, her body was tenderly laid away in the family burying ground, where sleep many of her people. Our hearts go out in sympathy to her aged husband, a veteran in Israel, a good and noble Christian man. We also deeply sympathize with her children, who loved their mather so tendorly. mother so tenderly. Our sister, Eva Evans, was born on September 24, 1888, and died on November 11, 1920. She became a member of the church of Christ on August 24, 1905, and lived a Christian until death. A nobler or purer Christian I never knew. She was a daily reader of the word of God. She attended church at Joe Johnston Avenue, in Nashville, Tenn. The church has lost a faithful member and the family its most beloved sister and best friend. She is survived by her father, Evans; five sisters-Rena, Florence, and Deby Evans, Mrs. Mana Sullivan. and Mrs. Dollie Goins; and one brother, Harry Evans. As she was the oldest child, she had the responsibility of a mother resting on her. Our mother passed over to the other bright shore in 1905. Funeral services were conducted by Brother W. Silas Moody, and her body was laid to rest in Mount Olivet Cemetery. May the Heavenly Father help us to bear our sad loss, and may we keep on the heavenly way. Lasley.

The subject of this obituary, Mrs. Sallie R. Lasley, died on December 15, 1920. She was a few months past fifty-four years old. Death came after several months of lingering illness. She became a Christian early in life. Her life was indeed a conscientious, self-sacrificing life. Her spirit has gone back to God who gave it, and her body lies moldering in the tomb. One brother, her husband (F. B. Lasley), three sons, and an estimable daughter-in-law are those who miss her most. To them we extend our sympathy as by nature we weep on account of the absence of our loved ones, but our loss is her eternal gain. She leaves near relatives and many friends who appreciated her as a her as a woman of true value. Man's words do not picture or describe the character of so noble a woman. Hence, we say: "She has fought a good fight, she has kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for her a crown of righteousness." "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord." Her quiet and peaceful life is ended, and the angels rejoice to welcome home. HER COUSIN. her

Mrs. F. J. McRee (née Miss Nora Nason) was born at Grenada, Miss., on October 12, 1874. She entered the Methodist College there at the age of twelve years, and remained in that institution until her graduation. She became very prominent in educational affairs and an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. She was married to Brother F. J. McRee, of Macon, Tenn., on December 14, 1899. To this happy union one daughter was born. She obeyed the gospel, under the teaching of Brother J. D. Tant, about ten years ago, and lived a consistent Christian life until the end came. Her remains were laid to rest in the Macon Cemetery on October 12, 1920, which was her forty-sixth anniversary. She leaves a husband, a daughter, a mother, a brother, five sisters, a host of relatives and friends, to mourn their loss. Sister McRee will be greatly missed in religious and social affairs in and around her home. The high esteem in which she was held by those who knew her was at-tested by the concourse of friends that gathered at the cemetery to pay their last tribute of respect. Edifying as the Need May Be

Spiritual Exercise.

Spiritual exercise is encouraged by Paul's admonition to Timothy: "Exercise thyself unto godliness." In our study of this text we should note that it was originally addressed to a young preacher of the gospel, one who had been brought up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord and from his youth had been acquainted with the holy Scriptures, which had made him wise unto salvation. From this fact we conclude that there is no preacher so gifted or so plous but what he does not stand in constant need of spiritual exercise. It is sometimes falsely assumed that the minister's life as compared to others is a sheltered life, free from ordinary temptations. But to show the primary purpose of his letters to Timothy, the apostle Paul writes: "These things teach and exhort." Although addressed to Timothy in particular, it is intended for the church at large-for anybody and everybody who wants to do his or her duty as a Christian under all circumstances and who feels the need of more strength than he now possesses. Before we take up the matter of exercise, let us consider the meaning of the spiritual life. Its very essence is the recognition of things that are unseen and eternal. From start to finish it is a life of faith. Throughout the Christian's course he walks by faith, and not by sight. He must believe that there is a God; that there is a heaven; that there is a hell; that the spirit of man is immortal and of inestimable worth; that the will of the Father is supreme; that he has manifested his love toward man in the gift of his Son for his redemption and ultimate salvation.

It is necessary that we place great emphasis upon these fundamental truths; for there are a great many people who have been more or less influenced by that cheap and superficial talk of which there has been a great deal during the last thirty or forty years, that these great matters of belief are not of vital importance. They say that conduct and character are the only real essentials; that if a man does right it makes no difference what he believes about Christ or what he does about the gospel plan of salvation; that unseen things are necessarily uncertain; that ethics is better than religion, and that our one effort should be to make this world fit for the people who are now here to live in, rather than to spend our time trying to get them ready for a world to come, which they argue may not come.

This kind of unbelief has been strikingly called "the real fall of man." It takes the crown from his head. It takes the glory from his life. It leaves him, so far as his inner life is concerned, with no intelligent or worthy purpose back of him, no authority above him, and no destiny before him. It limits him to the here and how, to things tangible and perishable. It confines his moral relations to his fellow men and takes away God from his thoughts. It draws a small circle around him-the circle of the earthand says: "This is big enough for you. With the circle of the beavens, the unseen and the eternal, you have nothing to do." It is unquestionably true that the noblest belief is worth little or nothing unless put to a practical test and given substance and reality by noble conduct; but to say that the fundamental truths of the gospel are of minor importance as compared with the duty of the present moment is the same as if some ignorant landsman should say to a navigator in midocean: "Why do you waste your time taking observations on the sun and the stars, watching that trembling needle, and studying those mysterious charts? These winds, this water, these waves, this ship-these are the things that demand your attention." Would they ever reach the port?

If the spiritual life be such as we have defined it, the first great requisite for its culture is a study of the word of God and prayer. We must exercise ourselves along these lines. If we wish to guide our lives by the heavenly vision, we must get the vision. If we wish to apply spiritual ideals to our dealings with spiritual things, we must get the ideals. And these are things which can only be accomplished in that place which Walter Lander has beautifully called the "audience chamber of God." No fact in the earthly life of Jesus stands out in bolder relief than that he constantly renewed his strength through communion with the Father.

"Cold mountains and the midnight air Witnessed the fervor of his prayer."

If he could not do without prayer, neither can we. Timothy was versatile and well read, and yet the apostle Paul urged him in this wise: "Study to show thyself approved." If he needed that exhortation, we need it, too. We must exercise ourselves unto godliness.

The second requisite that we shall mention as highly important in spiritual culture is a regular attendance upon God's worship. Without stopping here to point out all the Items of scriptural worship, without considering the question of its comparative quality, let us say that the question of attendance is an inherent duty which no thoughtful man can fail to recognize. The spiritual life is primarily an individual life. Every one must give an account of himself before God; every one must work out his own salvation with fear and trembling. But we must remember, too, that because its essence and excellence is love the spiritual Hife has a social aim. It craves love and friendship, and it wants to give love and friendship. It pines away and starves if this desire is denied. The true disciples of Jesus both need and wish to confess their sins, to render their thanks, to offer their prayers, to enjoy their blessings, and to speak of their hopes together. In order that our social service may not fall short of its scriptural purpose, there are two characteristics which should be kept in mind. In the first place, one must be qualified to worship. means he must be a member of the church. He must have rendered obedience to the divine conditions of salvation. He must be buried with Jesus Christ in baptism and through the open door enter into his spiritual kingdom. Going to church all of one's earthly life will not save a man If he is not completely incorporated into its membership and does not add his contribution to its work and worship. I make this point clear because so frequently we hear it said of a man after his death, as if it were a commendation: "This person was a constant attendant upon such and such a church, although he was never a member of it." That very fact would speak volumes against him before the judgment of God. The question that would confront him then would be: "How could you willfully neglect so great salvation in the face of so many wonderful opportunities?" Our attendance upon God's worship should be regular. If we observe a man staying away from his place of business with great irregularity, we will not be surprised any day to hear that that man has failed. If we observe a pupil attending school only at intermittent periods, we will not be surprised to find that pupil deficient along all the lines of his education. With corresponding exactness, when we observe a man or a woman attending the Lord's worship at irregular intervals, we will not be surprised to find that his or her service ends in serious and disastrous neglect. For the occasional absence means the occasional presence, and irregular attendance is the kind that becomes more infrequent until it ceases altogether.

But the man who worships God must be devout. He must worship him in spirit and in truth. He must realize that he comes to church not to have everything done for him, but to do something himself that will redound to God's glory and praise and help his fellow members. I could not emphasize this thought in a better way than by emphasizing the word "exhort" in the very familiar passage: "Not forsaking our own assembling together, as the custom of some is, but exhorting one another; and so much the more, as ye see the day drawing nigh."

There never was a time when so much care and attention was given to the exercise of the body as there is to-day. The idea of bodily exercise in the open air is the most popular one in the physician's realm. It has pervaded the schools and colleges until it actually threatens to disrupt the study of arts and sciences. It has become the most attractive feature of the various young men's organizations throughout the world. And yet, in the face of all this activity and all this popularity, the apostle Paul said: "Bodily exercise profiteth nothing." The exercise that the world needs is the exercise which builds the soul. The exercise that is worth the time and pains and endeavor is the kind which promotes a spirit of godliness, which always belongs to the perfect man. In this light the text before us becomes more than an apostolic exhortation. It Is the embodiment of a divine law; it is the divinely stipulated price of possession. If we would gain the victory, we must make the effort; we must exercise ourselves for it; we must make constant application of God's teachings to our conduct; we must do the things about which we think and talk and pray and sing. There are too overwhelming reasons that should inspire us. First, there is the infinite value of the soul. There is the question of the Master: "What shall it profit a man, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose" the priceless thing? Second, there is the welfare of those around us. There is the message which says: "Do good unto all men, especially unto them who are of the household of faith." It has been said: "The times are big with change and destiny." God only knows the kind of people with whom we deal. Perhaps the next man we meet will be like Ishmael, son of the desert and son of strife, his hand against every man and every man's hand against him. Perhaps he will be like Isaac, son of laughter, whose tents are spread in green pastures and beside the still waters. But whoever that man is, we must do him good. And for our encouragement let me say in conclusion, if we give to our spiritual exerelse that same thought which some of us bestow upon our bodies; if we bring to his service that same eagerness and enthusiasm that we waste upon the games of life; if we use the tremendous forces that are in our hands, not for the selfish interests of time and sense, but for the salvation of our souls, the strength of our brethren, and the betterment of the world, we shall have done our part in raising the church of Jesus Christ toward that high place of usefulness and goodness toward which it has been climbing for two thousand years.

Book Reviews.

"Sound Doctrine," by C. R. Nichol, is a series of Bible studies. Volume I, is now before the public; and if those which are to follow measure up to the present one, any home will be richly endowed by having these studies. All who know and have heard C. R. Nichol preach will understand what he means by "sound doctrine." It simply means staying with the oracles of God regarding every phase of Christian faith and duty. This book is worth its weight in gold—yea, more, it is better than any man's gold. The reader can obtain this book from Mrs. C. R. Nichol, Clifton, Texas, or the McQuiddy Printing Company, Nashville, Tenn. Price, $1.

PELOUBET'S NOTES FOR 1921 NOW READY.

"Peloubet's Notes" has been issued for forty-seven years with ever-increasing popularity and usefulness, which fact alone is a wonderful argument for its value and helpfulness. It is rich in material, comprehensive in its scope, and practical in its treatment. Every superintendent, teacher, and scholar will find in it his own personal requirements. The editor of The Outlook says: "We give first place to Peloubet's." Marion Lawrance, the noted Sundayschool worker, writes: "How this standard commentary has been able to maintain itself during all these years, growing annually stronger and richer, is a marvel to the Sunday-school world. Personally, I do not see how any Sunday-school teacher can hope to do his best without the rich, full helps found in these 'Notes.'"

"To Whom Shall We Go?"

BY JAMES E. CHESSOR.

Jesus led him into n

The ministry of Jesus led him into many difficult situations. Once the people of Nazareth, "where he was brought up," led him to the brow of the hill on which their city was built, with the intention of casting him off the precipice to a cruel death on the rocks below; but Jesus passed through their midst unmolested. Again, when the Jews took up stones to destroy him in Jerusalem, he thwarted their design by asking them a piercing question: "Many good works have I showed you from the Father; for which of those works do you stone me?" (John 10: 32.) But perhaps the most trying situation of his ministry prior to Gethsemane was the desertion by his followers, when "many of his disciples went back, and walked no more with him." (See John 6: 22-71.) A feeling of pronounced discouragement seems to have crept over his spirit as he turned to the twelve and asked in tenderest solicitude: "Will ye also go away?"

For a time Jesus had been popular and the multitudes had thronged him. If we inquire into the motives that drew the crowds to him, we shall find that some followed him for the loaves and fishes, that they might eat and be filled. Others followed him to find fault-the carping critics who endeavored to entangle hlm in his talk. On the other hand, it is said that "the common people heard him gladly." These were the Galilean fishermen and others in the humbler walks of life who loved the truth and sought it at the feet of Jesus. These three classes made up the vast crowds that pressed upon the Master insomuch that he frequently taught from a boat while the throngs fringed the seashore. Once, when weary, he withdrew apart into a mountain, where also the multitudes followed him. Those were the days of his popularity before he stressed, as he did later, the test of genuine discipleship. It was that acid test that caused the remarkable desertions of the fickle and faint-hearted.

It is well to remark upon the fickleness of the multitude, how they vacillate in the popular breeze. Waves they are, driven by the wind and tossed, and reeds shaken with the wind. The exulting thousands who hailed the Christ upon his triumphal entrance into Jerusalem shortly afterwards eried out with the rabble: "Crucify him! Crucify him!" History abounds in instances of the capricious disposition of the masses. During the "times that tried men's souls" Washington was deserted in no small way by both army and Congress. On the miserable retreat through New Jersey, in camp at Valley Forge, and around New York only a few ragged regiments maintained the skeleton of a patriot army. But no leader or teacher in the world's history was deserted as was Jesus of Nazareth. At the critical time now under consideration he had twelve who had not wavered and gone back. It is worthy of consideration to note that he did not coerce these twelve, but asked: "Will ye also go away?" Peter's answer rings true: " Lord, to whom shall we go? thou hast the words of eternal life."

Great numbers turned away from the Master because they detected mysteries in his teachings. These mysteries they pronounced "hard sayings." When he had taught that remarkable lesson about eating his flesh and drinking his blood, they murmured and said: "This is a hard saying; who can hear it?" They were sorely disappointed. He was not the Messiah they had waited for. They had cherished precenceived ideas of the Christ of prophecy, and Jesus had not met their expectations. His words were full of marvels. Notwithstanding, it is needless to say that the fault lay at their own doors. Because of the hardness of their hearts they could not understand, and turned away from mystery into deeper mystery; for apart from Christ all is mystery.

As to mysteries, it is in point to remark that they abound both in the Bible and in nature. The teacher who declares that there are no mysteries in God's Book does not himself understand the purpose of many things set down by the divine pen. Moreover, by such a sweeping assertion he mystifies-or would mystify-much that in design is clear, such, for instance, as unfulfilled prophecy. If we wish to look for the mysterious anywhere, whether in grace or nature, it is an easy matter to envelop ourselves in the shadows. There are some things about the virgin birth of Jesus, the Godhead, and the new birth which are "hard to be understood "-too difficult, indeed, for the finite to comprehend. Peter declares that the apostle Paul in all his epistles wrote of "some things hard to be understood, which the ignorant and unsteadfast wrest, as they do also the other scriptures, unto their own destruction."

As a matter of course, "secret things belong unto Jehovah our God; but the things that are revealed belong unto us and to our children." But this principle does not apply to those things spoken by Jesus or penned by the inspired writers which are termed "hard to be understood," and yet which may be understood. Those things which Peter says some willfully wrest, though difficult to be understood. were, nevertheless, written to be understood, otherwise we should not be held accountable for perverting them. They are not secret things, for a secret thing and a hard saying are not the same. A hard saying is not beyond the power of the finite mind to understand, whereas a secret thing is beyond our pale of mental grasp. An honest heart and diligent study inspired by a living faith are the prerequisites to an understanding of anything Inspiration has written for our edification and salvation. The gospel Itself is a simple story. The meaning of the commandments is clear in every instance. We may not stumble except through willfulness. Many things are "hard" because we have become "dull of hearing," because our hearts have waxed gross. "Of whom we have many things to say, and hard of interpretation, seeing ye are become dull of hearing." (See Heb. 5: 11-14.)

If we turn away from Christ because we see through a glass darkly the deep things of God, to whom, indeed, shall we go? Shall we see more clearly apart from Christ and in utter darkness? Where, let me ask, is there more light to guide our footsteps? We are told that "God is light, and in him is no darkness at all;" that "if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus his Son cleanseth us from all sin." What teacher shall be able to impart more truth? If we repudiate the teacher that "spake as never man spake," and reject God's revelation, how, for instance, shall we account for the creation? Whence man's origin? Can science answer the question as well as inspiration? To ask the question is to answer it. Moreover, if we turn away from the Savior of men, how shall we account for the great evil of sin in the world? Whence came sin, and what is its remedy? The conclusion is inevitable, that apart from Christ we know nothing of the origin of sin, we know nothing of its remedy, and we are without hope in the world.

There are others who go back to the weak and beggarly elements of the world because they were never fully converted. Many in truth never render primary obedience to the gospel, although after a fashion they "profess" faith in Christ and are buried with him in baptism, so-called. Such action on their part becomes a mockery, since it is not of faith. I have known men to "obey" the gospel for social considerations, in order to stand well with church people. I recall a specific instance in a young man who wished to win the favor of a young lady who had rejected his suit because of his ungodly walk. He succeeded in deceiving her for a time, but soon drifted into the current of worldliness where his heart had ever been and where by habit he belonged. I am guite sure, too, that many a churchman maintains his membership for business considerations, fawning upon Christians for gain. None the less, "all that glitters is not gold," and all that are of Israel are not Israel. The Lord knoweth his own. One day he will separate the wheat from the chaff, the sheep from the goats. All hypocrites will hear the denunciation: "I never knew [recognized] you: depart from me, ye that work iniquity."

There are still other Christians who follow Christ "afar off" and deny him when they deem it expedient. They obey the gospel readily, surrendering to the first strong impulse of religious fervor. For a while they maintain fidelity, but in time of tempiation fall away. They flare up like a meteor, but lack the constancy of the star. Such Christians are more to be pitied than censured, and the church should do its utmost to strengthen and save them. Their interest should be enlisted in church work. But the church is neglecting these weak members. As a consequence they hang on the outskirts of the church, taking a back seat both in the house of worship and in the worship itself. Their voice is not heard in the business meetings. They should be encouraged to come near God's altar where the light of his love glows, to follow Christ as did John, the beloved disciple.

Again, there are Christians who turn away from Christ because of the sorrows of life. They should draw the closer to Jesus in their distress and cast their cares upon him. Sorrow should sweeten life rather than embitter it. But those sorrowing disciples who turn away from religion because of the tribulations of life seem disposed to magnify the trials incident to life. As with Lear, their sorrows come, not single spies, but in battalions. Death, the imperious horseman, rides roughshod over the hearthstone and tramples underfoot the prattling infant. The mother, stunned by the blow, cannot fathom the why of the sudden taking off. She seeks solace in solitary meditation. She neglects church services while her awful sorrow gnaws out her heart. Business failure distracts a man of affairs. He quits the church summarily, seeking to drown his worries in drink. For those whose lives are thus embittered with wormwood there is no balm in Gilead, and the divine assurance that God cares for them with all the tenderness of a father counts for naught. This ought not so to be; for apart from Christ there is no true solace and comfort.

Notwithstanding the note of discouragement in the foregoing, for my part, I want to say that I am hopeful for the church. That many who confess Christ here will be denied hereafter cannot be gainsaid, but that many will finally persevere is clearly taught in the Scriptures. I do not think that a greater per cent of professed Christians fail in the divine than in other professions, if we may thus, for the sake of comparison, speak of the divine life as a profession. People fail in the various vocations for various reasons. In the Christian life no disciple need fail. If he performs his duty faithfully, Jesus will take note of his weaknesses and not suffer him to lose in the end. And when Christ comes to earth again, he will find faith on the earth.

To the wavering Christian I would address a word. Why halt between two opinions? There is only one sane and safe path to choose. Ask yourself the question of Peter: "Lord, to whom shall we go?" Answer in the language of Peter: "Thou hast the words of eternal life." Aye, Peter's words ring true. If we go back, to whom shall we go? What will become of us? If we follow Jesus to the end, we are assured of the result. He has the words of eternal life. We shall reap a sure reward—everlasting life, the bliss of ceaseless eternity. But if we go back, what will become of us? I repeat the question—if we go back, what will become of us? It is evident enough—eternal death, eternal woe, bitter anguish without end. Manifest destiny is written large at the end of the path we take. The narrow way leads to life; the broad way leads to destruction. Lay hold, brother, on eternal life.

Contend Earnestly for the Faith.

BY F. E. EXUM.

When the apostle says, "Contend earnestly for the faith which was once for all delivered unto the saints," he does not mean anything else. There is a great need everywhere for Christians who will contend earnestly for pure and simple faith in the gospel of Christ. There are some members of the church who are so afraid that they will precipitate an argument with some one and be called upon to give a reason for the hope that is within them that they rarely ever say anything in defense of the true faith of the gospel. Other people who are members of various organizations will contend for their faiths and dectrines, and oftentimes never be challenged by members of the church of Christ who may be present. This should not be the case. Brother, when the apostle said to "contend," he meant for you to open your mouth and talk, just as the apostle Paul did when he disputed for the space of two years in the school of one Tyrannus, and when he contended with those whom he met daily in the market places. Those who are afraid to open their mouths usually give as a reason that they do not believe in contending with any one. In taking that position, they are entirely out of harmony with the teaching of the apostle. Of course it is a good thing to work, and let people see your good works; but there are times when you need to speak. You should not go to extremes and contend with every one with whom you come in contact; but when the proper opportunity comes to speak in defense of the true faith of the gospel. do not fail to speak. If people where you work do not know what you are and for what great principles you stand, it is because you are not speaking to them concerning the way of salvation. Many of the early Christian martyrs, while they were being held in prisons awaiting execution for their faith in Christ, converted their prison attendants by their earnest contention for faith in Christ. A person who refrains from speaking in defense of the gospel or from teaching its precepts when the right opportunities present themselves is hiding his light under a bushel so that it may not be seen.

To-Morrow.

BY MRS, NELLIE ELNORA SINGLETON.

O, why do we worry o'er things that are past, And life's little sorrows in mem'ry hold fast, Or think that to-morrow more sorrow may bring, When our voices in praise for his mercy should ring?

Each sorrow, each tear drop, each pain that we bear, Each day that our hearts are bowed down with some care, Each stone in the pathway our feet here have trod, Is but a step nearer to heaven and God.

As sunshine seems brighter that follows the rain, So our rest will be sweeter that comes after pain; And though life's joys be transient and soon pass us by, There will be joy eternal in our home in the sky.

Give up yourself to God's perfect love to work out his perfect will; for all he means you to do, he will surely give light and strength. The throne of the Lamb is surely proof that there is no surer way for us to riches and honor than through his poverty.—Andrew Murray.

Bits of News.

The good work in this city moves gloriously onward. Paul's idea of preaching publicly and from house to house is getting fairly under way. I think there is such a thing as preaching three hundred and sixty-five days in a year, and it is my prayer that the members in this city may get down to hard work along this line. I have never seen a people of whom I believe so large a percentage really want to do something. I am pleased with some letters recently received, commending what has been said on this page about the difference in the results obtained by the early preachers and congregations and the results we today obtain. Take this and think it over: Get each man and woman and each boy and girl in your congregation to work one year just as earnestly and untiringly as the apostles did, and see the greatness of the results in contrast with the littleness of your former results.

Brother Riggs began work with the "faithful few" at Downey on the second Lord's day in this month, and will begin a revival at that place next Lord's day. This is close enough to us for the members here to give him some strong backing. He was delighted, and so were the Downey members, with the great increase in attendance last Lord's day (January 9). Some of the greatest souls on the earth are to be found at the weaker places, where the struggle has to be made with only a few to help. The Dial brothers, at Long Beach, and a number of others who have cars have agreed to stand by that work till it is put Brother L. D. Perkins, of Armona, was with us on the last Lord's day in the old year, and heard Brother Riggs give a strong lesson on "The Work, and Its Success." He preached for us on Wednesday night following. Perkins is one of the best men in the State, full of religion, well balanced, and loves the old-time gospel wagon, filled with grace, truth, and love, too well to get off of it and ride a hobby.

Next Lord's-day evening (January 16) I shall begin a campaign with S. E. Witty at Ontario. Witty is another one of our best, and I am expecting a delightful time. It is fine to be in a country where you can conduct revivals the year round. The meetings at Ontario and at Downey will be our first two for the year 1921.

"Judge Not, That Ye Be Not Judged."

Under the heading, "Judge Not, That Ye Be Not Judged," I recently re-read the following story. It was prepared mostly for children, but I am sure it has thought enough in it for most of us, so I give it to our readers with a few comments:

O, mamma, what do you think?" cried Daisy, rushing in from school with flushed face and elenched fists.

"Why, I don't know," said Mrs. Johnson, calmly.
"That little rich girl," said Dalsy, "that has moved across the street in the big house refused to speak to me. As I passed I nodded, and she went right along like I was not in the world."

Well," said mamma, "I can give you a sure cure for t. They haven't any flowers in their yard. Run and gather some roses and take to her."

Daisy stood speechless for a moment; but she ran out, gathered a large bunch of flowers, and carried them to this little rich girl across the street. "O, aren't they beautiful!" said the little girl. "Come right in! My name's 'Ruth'-what's yours? I am nearly blind, and can't see but just a little way in front of me. But how I do love And she hugged the bunch of roses to her flowers!"

In a few moments the little girls were as friendly as if they had been playmates all their lives. When Daisy said she must go, Ruth held her by the hand and begged her to come often, saying that she could not see well, and got so hungry for some one to play with her. Dalsy assured her that she would.

Rushing back home, Dalsy said: "O, mamma, I'm so sorry I judged Ruth as I did! She is so sweet, and we had a good time!" And she moved closer to her mother, conscious of what she had said and thought of Ruth, and in a lower voice said: "Mamma, she is nearly blind."

"Yes, my dear child, I told you that was a good cure, if the little girl really meant not to speak to you; and I knew, too, that it would help my little girl. So you may carry her flowers every day.

The next morning as Daisy was starting to school, she stumbled over a bundle lying at her door; and when she looked, she saw it was addressed to her. On opening it she found a doll nearly as large as herself, with real curly hair, brown eyes and eyelashes, and a card: "To my dear friend Daisy, from Ruth Murphy." With tears in her eyes and the doll in her arms, she rushed to her mother and said: "Mamma, I must remember the Golden Text: 'Judge And I will name my doll not, that ye be not judged.' Ruth.

This is a simple, sweet story, but it has occurred thousands of times on this old earth. The one great thing about the Bible is that bitter regrets never come to our souls when we do what it says. The one thing the infidel is powerless to do is to name one thing the good Book tells us to do or be that can ever bring remorse, a disturbed conscience, or any unhappiness into our souls. The best man, the safest man, the happiest man, and the one most able to help others, is that man who makes God's word the law of his mind and heart and his rule in all the walks of life.

But while the story was written for children, to make them slow to judge, do not we older children need it? Have you ever misjudged any one? Have you said little things, ugly things, unkind things, about people whom you did not fully know, and learned later that all you had said was absolutely false? Have you? Now-be honest with vourself and God-have you? Is it not better not to talk till you know what you are talking about?

I love to think of the religion of our Lord and Savier with the idea of its justice, its uprightness, its absolutely forcing you, if you let it have its own way with you, always to treat the other fellow right. Yes, it compels you to do to others as you would have them do to you.

But it is time for the Bible class; so I must close here, praying that I may be able to say more later along this line. O O O

"A Great Question to All."

No, I am not writing more, but merely giving the heading of what Brother Elam had to say in the Gospel Advocate of January 6. Be certain to get a copy of that issue and read it, if you have not; and if you have read it, read it again. "Am I growing better?"

"Order is heaven's first law." To be orderly, then, is to partake of some of heaven's joy. A fundamental principle in being orderly is to put first things in our plans. Bible study is to be classed among the things of first importance. If we take or make time for this, other tasks adjust themselves to the plan. A life of true order keeps a place for Bible study and prayer.—Selected.

Anything cherished in the heart which is contrary to the will of God, let it seem ever so insignificant or be ever so deeply hidden, will cause us to fall before our enemies. Any conscious root of bitterness cherished toward another, any self-seeking, any harsh judgments, any slackness in ebeying the voice of the Lord, any doubtful habits or surroundings, will cripple, if not paralyze, our spiritual life. -Selected.

The Gospel.

BY F. B. SHEPHERD.

Of all the wonderful expressions of the Holy Spirit, perhaps none is so comprehensive as the sixteenth and seventeenth verses of the first chapter of Romans. Writing to Jew and Gentile converts, the apostle sets forth in less than forty words in the Greek practically all that is involved in the scheme of redemption, Astounding this statement must have appeared to the Jew, with his bigotry, exclusiveness, and dependence upon his Abrahamic ancestry to insure his salvation; humiliating to the egotistic Greek, who, glorying in self, worshiping the beautiful, adoring the human, deified the world; fearful indeed it must have made the Roman, so conspicuous for his honor, fidelity, courage, chastity, manliness, and possessing an earnest, severe religion of duty second only to that of the Jew. to be told that the "gospel" is the only "power" of God unto salvation of all the nations.

In introducing this, which is intended to be the first of a series of articles on the scheme of redemption, it is well that we examine carefully into the matter that is involved in this great expression. To borrow from the idea of a greater mind, the first thing that strikes us is the authority of this message. It is the power, salvation through Christ being not merely "a" way, but "the" way (see Acts 4: 12, 13; 39: 16, 17), even God himself being powerless to effect the salvation of sinful man righteously except by this means of grace. When the question of its authorship is raised, it is of God. Though intended to be wielded as the "sword of the Spirit" by man, a treasure placed in earthen vessels, yet it is of divine origin; for that only the "seed" of the kingdom can produce "children" of the kingdom is evidenced by the parable of Jesus in Luke 8: 11.

The purpose for which this gospel is given is revealed in the expression "unto salvation," legal righteousness being impossible because of man's weakness and inability to attain to the absolute sinlessness necessary before a legal system can justify. Wonderful is the wisdom and lovingkindness of God, who has made man's redemption possible through faith in Jesus Christ, and not dependent upon his keeping perfectly the perfect law of Jehovah.

The next words of this wonderful text—"every one"—presents the supreme triumph of the Christian system and furnishes us one of the greatest proofs of its divine authorship. All the world is found guilty (Rom. 3: 10-18), and a redemption is revealed as wide as the need. It is the universality of the gospel invitation, with its impartial appeal to every class of men, all grades of society and shades of color, that distinguishes it from every other religion of the world, ancient and modern. All can comprehend it (Heb. 8: 11), all can take advantage of it. Salvation from sin depends upon man's individual choice, and not upon birth, merit, or intellectual attainment

There remains but to examine the one stipulation upon which this power of God becomes operative and efficacious In the case of the "every man," and that is expressed in the clause "that believeth." Faith has always been an absointe prerequisite to acceptance with God. (Heb. 11: 6.) This is no question of God's power to save, but one of authoritative fact. Not how could be redeem man, but how will he? To him who does not believe, the gospel is not the "power," nor is God here responsible; for he neither "gives" man faith, nor does the Holy Spirit "put it into men's bearts," but it is produced by the appealing life story of the man Christ Jesus. The gospel is not lacking in the potency it should possess, but it can be made inoperative by the unfertility of the soil upon which it falls. Like the seed on the wayside, it may find no response from the ground; and though not lacking the germ of life within itself, still it falls to produce because of the absence of the reciprocal relations without which no life can be reproduced. No more is it the mere mental act of believing something religious that assures man God's approval, but the fact or truth believed that is unto man's salvation. Soul-saving faith centers not in an institution, imperial, spiritual, or rational, but in a divine Person. The gospel is the power of God unto salvation, because it produces in man faith in the Person of the living Word, the divine Son of God, who, taking upon himself the form of fiesh and living in absolute obedience to God's laws while upon earth, died a perfect sacrifice in fulfillment of his mission of deliverance, and is to-day seated at Jehovah's right hand, there to make intercession for, and finally to give eternal life to, him that "believeth on the Son," "eateth his flesh," and continueth the acceptable dwelling place of his Spirit. (John 6: 40, 54; Rom. 8: 11.)

An Interesting Correspondence.

Editor's Note; We give the following correspondence for two purposes: first, to show some of the methods adopted by the Apostolic Review proprietors and their party to carry out their divisive and destructive work; second, to show the impression that their work and methods make on some who come to find them out. The correspondence is self-explanatory, and will help some to answer some very serious practical questions with which many Christians are confronted. Study it well.

Indianapolis, Ind., December 8, 1920.—J. D. Clemens, Dixon Springs, Ill.—Dear Brother: Brother A. T. Kerr, of Brookport, Ill., in a letter to me recently dropped the remark that you had a son who attended David Lipscomb College last winter, and that this year he was not attending because of the contention between the fraternities in the school, and because some of the members had bought revolvers with which to protect themselves, and because thus it was a dangerous place for one to go. If this be true, would you, for the purity of the church, permit me to use these facts in the Apostolic Review, without any names? The great plea for begging hundreds of thousands from the brethren for these schools is because of the great good they are doing; but this shows the danger of all hu-man organizations. The Reylew stands for the "one body," the church, and against all human bodies to do work of the church, and I believe you will greatly aid the cause of the contention for the church alone to teach the Bible by your permission for us to make known these facts. I should be glad to hear from you soon.

Your fellow servant, D. AUSTEN SOMMER.

Dixon Springs, III., December 14, 1920.—D. Austen Sommer. Indianapolis, Ind.—Dear Brother Sommer: Your letter of inquiry about my son attending David Lipscomb College is at hand. I am somewhat surprised. I remember having some friendly talk with Brother Kerr about the school, and why I had allowed my son to go elsewhere this year; but I am sure, Brother Sommer, that you have the wrong impression about the conditions there. True, there was some friction among some of the boys at times; but if I am correctly informed, some of these boys were expelled from school.

I am of the impression now that the tender age and inexperience of my son caused him not to be as well satisfied as I had hoped for, and I feel that I made a mistake by not sending him back there for this year's schooling. We find there are imperfections in all the schools; and I am convinced that David Lapscomb College is as well disciplined as any school known to me. And as I read some of the letters now that my son gets from his classmates of last year, and see how zealous they are for the cause of Christ and his church, and that they stand out against so many of the evils that the other schools tolerate, such as the dance and card playing and the clgarette habit, it makes me see that my son should be back there.

Being left as I was without a wife to raise the child and keep him under a mother's love and care, I have had to depend largely on the schools to help me raise my child and teach him; and what am I to do? If I cannot send him to a school where the Bible is taught, and under the influence of some of the best men and women we have in the church, where will I school him? Shall I rather turn him over to the State schools, where the Roman Catholic influence has made it unlawful for the Bible to be read? This is a very serious question to me, Brother Sommer, one that I have given serious consideration; for I realize that we are held largely responsible for the future destiny of our children, and it behooves us to place them under the very best influence possible.

While there were some frivolities among some of the boys there last year, I feel it would be unfair to criticize the school for it, just as it would be unfair to criticize the church because some of the members do wrong. It looks to me like a drowning man grabbing at a straw, and I cannot consent for anything I may have said to get into the papers; for, after many years of close observation and talks with our brethren in many different localities, I am thoroughly convinced that this hairsplitting theology and wrangles among the brethren through the papers is sending thousands of precious souls to hell, and the guilty parties will have to give an account for it in the day of final accounts.

With the kindest feelings and brotherly love, I am,
Yours truly, J. D. CLEMENS.

The Joy of Forgiveness.

BY H. C. ELEMING.

"The greatest joy to mortals given Is inward joy of sins forgiven."

Happiness is a state of mind in which the thoughts are pleasant, and these come sometimes by affairs which we control, at other times by circumstances with which we have very little to do. But unhappiness generally follows after unpleasant occurrences or dissatisfaction with something distasteful.

When we are in deep distress and it is removed, we either whistle or sing, thereby showing the joy of the mind because of changed conditions.

If the former sees his crops about to fail for lack of moisture and rain comes just in time to revive them, we notice a broad smile on his face, because he is happy in the prospect of a bountiful yield.

When any misfortune seems about to occur and the crisis passes, there is joy in the heart.

Even in dyspeptic dreams, when fearful scenes pass through the mind, on awakening how joyful we are that it was only a dream and not a fact!

When any of our friends are sick and nigh unto death and the change comes and they begin to recover, what gladness in our hearts!

When an innocent man is condemned for a crime and is about to be executed, if a reprieve comes in time from the proper authority, what rejoicing because a life is saved!

When devastations come upon the earth, after they are over there is great joy in the hearts of the people because they have ceased.

But hate, the cause of many evils, never brings happiness to him who has it in his heart. Where love dwells, there is joy in that heart.

In 1 Cor. 13: 4-8 Paul gives us the full meaning of love. By these we see that love brings happiness, not only to the possessor of it, but also to those who are the objects of it.

God loves the world; and when man realizes how great that love is, it begets in him a love for God. Therein is a happiness all men may enjoy.

There is joy in heaven over one sinner that repents (Luke 15: 7), because a soul is saved from an eternal death (John 3: 16; 1 John 4: 9).

Sin has brought man to such a condition that he can only have lasting joy when freed from that condition; and this joy will be all the greater if he fully realizes the fearful condition in which sin has placed him. It is well, therefore, that man should fully understand what a hideous monster sin is.

"My sin—O, the bliss of this glorious thought!—
My sin, not in part, but the whole,
Is railed to his cross and I bear it no more;
Praise the Lord, praise the Lord, O my soul!"

When money is the only egg in the nest, misery is the only bird in the brood.—Exchange.

"The Salt of the Earth."

Relative to the mission of the people of God on the earth there is no more significant statement than this: "Ye are the sait of the earth." (Matt. 5: 13.) Looking at it from one point of view, this was a great compliment for the disciples. When Livy, the Roman historian, desired to pay the people of ancient Greece a high compliment, he spoke of them as "the salt of the nations." But Christ was not speaking merely to compliment; he was indicating to his disciples the sublime purpose for which they were to be sent out into the world. He had come "to seek and to save that which was lost" (Luke 19: 10), and they were to follow his example. They knew the value and nature of sait; they knew how indispensable it was to the preserving and keeping of meats and foods in general in their country. The influence of Christianity as exerted through the lives and teaching of God's people is the only thing that will save the earth from moral corruption worse than that even of sin-cursed, fire-doomed Sodom. For a lack of this kind of salt, the antedfluvian world, the cities of the plain, and the idolatrous tribes of Canaan were destroyed. If the disciples of Christ fail at this point, they break faith with him and the world-they mark themselves for destruction; for "if the salt have lost its savor, wherewith shall it be saited? it is thenceforth good for nothing, but to be cast out and trodden under foot of men." As well had one expect the moon to shine after the sun has been obliterated from the universe as to expect the moral and spiritual condition of the world to remain as it is, or to improve. when the church falls short of the full measure of its duty.

Another Good Report From Savannah.

In a recent letter Brother Beck writes: "We had two of the largest crowds since I have been here on last Lord's day (January 9), and one confessed Christ and was baptized. The prospects are good, and we must work now." Our readers will remember that funds are being raised for the meetinghouse in Savannah. The situation is critical. The time is limited. If the brethren buy the house which they are considering, they must do it at once. Send your contribution immediately to J. B. Beck, P. O. Box 1536, Savannah, Ga.

The union service conducted by the East Point, South Pryor, and West End Avenue congregations at South Pryor Street last Sunday night (January 16) was a decided Five took membership with the West End Avenue congregation last Sunday.

Every man is a steward unto God. There is no title, office, or trust so sacred as stewardship. It grants to a man full authority to direct, control, and use the property of his Master. The owner has no special oversight of his own affairs, but intrusts them to the care and management of the steward. There can be no doubt but that this is the proper view of our position in the world. We are here to keep house for the Lord. We hold all things in trust, and as such we must give an account whenever he asks it. We are at liberty to use anything so long as we prove faithful to our divine trust. It was the infidelity of the steward in the parable, the careless scattering of the master's goods, that led to his dismissal.—Selected.

AT HOME AND ABROAD

Brother Elam preached on Lord's-day morning at Union Church, in Sumner County, to a large audience.

J. H. Horton informs us that the church is taking on new life at Haleyville, Ala. He is now living in Haleyville.

Will J. Cullum preached at Locust Grove, in Simpson County, Ky., on Lord's-day morning, and at Franklin at night.

F. B. Srygley preached at Lawrence Avenue Church, this city, last Lord's day, morning and night, to excellent audiences.

William M. Oakley was with the church at Hendersonville, Term., last Lord's day. He reports fine audiences at both services, with the outlook there fairly good.

A. B. Lipscomb filled his regular appointment at Russell Street Church, this city, Sunday. One young lady responded to the invitation, coming from the Baptists.

Attention, Detroit subscribers! Please each of you send us your new house number, that we may change the address of your Gospei Advocate to it, as requested by your postmaster.

G. W. Jarrett changes his address to New Smyrna, Fla. He would like to do mission work in Florida this winter. Any one wishing his services should address him at the above-named place.

Brother Elam is preaching daily this week at David Lipscomb College. His strong, forceful sermons are very much appreciated. Three of the younger boys obeyed the gospel at the last prayer-meeting service.

The members of the Belmont church of Christ, this city, enjoyed two fine services last Lord's day, at which time Brother Hall, from the David Lipscomb College, was with them. The Sunday-school service was also good.

T. E. Tatum and wife and his brother's wife called to see us at this office on Wednesday of last week. They were en route to St. Petersburg, Fla., for the remainder of the winter. They report the work doing well at Jackson.

A N. Kennedy, whose address is Box 286, McKinney, Texas, is now arranging his work for the summer and fall, and has some time open for protracted meetings anywhere he is needed. He would be glad to hear from brethren at an early date.

Changes of address: J. H. Tune, from Belton to Temple, Texas, Route 2; Mrs. J. W. Mahan, from Holland, Ga., to 807 Elinor Street, North Chattanooga, Tenn.; J. C. Moore, from Shelbyville, Tenn., to 105 East President Street, Savannah, Ga.

W. G. Black, of Anson, Texas, sends some subscribers to the Gospel Advocate, and says: "I shall try to secure other subscribers. I appreciate many of the timely articles in the paper. Believing its influence to be for good, I shall do what I can to extend its circulation."

C. W. Helley, 110 West Theo Street, San Antonio, Texas, says: "Mrs. Holley's pronounced mental aberration is now accounted for in that her case has been pronounced pellagra by Dr. Whitacre, of this city. The doctor says that she will have to be treated for some two years."

H. M. Phillips, of Tuscumbia, Ala., says.: "The Gospel Advocate has a splendid ring of the truth in it. Keep the good work going. A few private letters in the place of some articles would help greatly to keep off others. Be sure to understand the other person's statements."

W. R. Frazier, Glenwood, Ark., January 15, says: "I have been reading the paper for the past eleven years, and think it gets better all the time. I appreciate the firm stand that the editors take in defense of primitive Christlanity. May the Lord spare them long in his service."

A letter brings word that Charles Holder is at home very sick with pneumonia. His appointments for preaching must be canceled for the time on account of his serious illness. He asks the fellowship and prayers of the brotherhood for his recovery in order that he may continue in the work of preaching the gespel.

Brother McAbee, from Franklin, Tenn., was in to see us on Monday, and renewed his subscription for the Gospel Advocate. He says he cannot well do without the paper, and has read it regularly for forty years. He reports fine services at Franklin last Lord's day, with a fine sermon by Brother Smith, and an overflowing house.

W. L. Reeves writes from Winston-Salem, N. C.: "Our work here in North Carolina is considerably improved over what it was during the war. The greatest trouble is that there is so much needed to be done and so few laborers. We need a young preacher who is capable of teaching vocal music. Who will write me about this matter? Address me at Winston-Salem, N. C., Urban Street. About ten congregations need training in singing."

J. D. Harvey, Lueders, Texas, writes: "I am located here, giving all my time to preaching the gospel. We have a splendid congregation here, and a very good outlook to build up the work here and in the surrounding country. I preach here two Sundays and at rural churches the other Sundays. I enjoy reading the Gospel Advocate because it stands for some glorious truths. I hope its editors will see fit to bring on some more special numbers."

A. C. Huff, of McLean, Texas, wishes to arrange for a visit to Arkansas, Tennessee, and Kentucky, if he can get meetings to hold while making it. He began preaching in 1884, and has labored in the gospel in Texas, Oklahoma, and New Mexico. He can furnish reliable references, and is recommended strongly as a man of much experience and knowledge and an excellent preacher by T. B. Clark, of Childress, Texas, who knows him personally. Do you need him?

Kendall E. Ball, of Colfax, La., writes that he has been very busy in school work, but has not permitted this to prevent his meeting with the brethren to break bread and study the Scriptures upon the first day of the week. A part of last summer he engaged in protracted-meeting work, and he wishes to devote some time this year to the work of evangelizing. He would be glad to devote all of his time to the work, for he appreciates the truth that "the harvest is plenteous, but the laborers are few." Any one wishing his services in a protracted meeting should write him at Colfax, La.

From John Hayes, Bradentown, Fla., January 16: "The past year has been one of my best in the work, but I am determined to do more this year. One of the brethren drove me out to a mission point twenty miles from here to arrange for a meeting to begin on the fifth Lord's day and continue as long as interest demands. The church at Miami has promised me the use of their tent, and just as soon as it gets a little warmer I expect to keep it busy as long as they will let us use it. The harvest field is great here, and laborers are needed. There is but one other gospel preacher in this county."

From J. C. Mosley, Mayflower, Ark., January 18: "We are having a fine meeting here. The children have not been cultivated in the word, but they are growing fast since we have been teaching them. The Baptist people turned their house over to us, and the seats would not hold the people. We made extra seats. On Sunday nights we are much crowded. There have been three confessions. One man offered us one hundred dollars on a church house here; but the Baptist church house is a good one, and they will not be apt to use it more to any success. One lady from the Baptists is to be baptized to-morrow. The apostle's admonition, 'Prove all things,' has been a deathblow to the sects here."

I worshiped with the Catoma Street church of Christ, of Montgomery, Ala., on the second Lord's day in January, and heard Fred M. Little preach an earnest sermon. At that time it was suggested that the church take up a contribution on the next Lord's day for the relief of the starving children of Central Europe. I have just received the following note from E. R. Barnes, which is self-explanatory and will be read with interest: "Brother McQuiddy: You remember the decision of our congregation made on Sunday, January 9, when you were present, to contribute to the drive for funds for the European Children's Relief, as a congregation? Well, we took the contribution last Lord's day. It totaled three hundred and thirty dollars and eighteen cents cash. In addition to this, we took up our regular weekly contribution. Our amount was published in the daily papers under the name, 'Catoma Street church of Christ.' It seems to me that this is fine—not the amount merely, but the method. The church got the credit and—I may as well say it—the advertisement." Other churchs would do well to follow the example of this church.

James E. Scobey will preach at the Belmont Avenue Church, this city, next Lord's day.

Charles L. Talley, the efficient preacher at Cookeville, Tenn., was in our office one day last week. He reports the work in Cookeville moving on nicely.

Brother Ellis, of Coopertown, Tenn., was in to see us last week. He reports the church work doing fairly well in Robertson County, which work he looks after with great interest.

From Tice Elkins, Fort Worth, Texas: "I will begin a debate with S. T. Brogdon, Methodist Episcopal preacher, at Glenwood Church, this city, on February 7, to continue six nights.

F. C. Sowell will preach at both services of the Lawrence Avenue Church, this city, next Lord's day. Brother Sowell is one of our most faithful preachers of the pure and unadulterated gospel of Christ.

From W. E. Morgan, Quanah, Texas, January 17: "The outlook for the cause at this place is very bright. Two more from the 'digressives' took membership with the church here last week. We feel encouraged."

Persons wishing to know the meeting place of the church of Christ in Akron, Ohio, can learn by writing to W. T. Petty, 246 Torrey Street. We are informed that it is at 1235 Grant Avenue—next stop of Grant Avenue car past Cole Avenue.

C. E. W. Dorris preached on last Lord's-day, morning and night, for the Joe Johnston Avenue Church, this city. He reports large and attentive audiences and interest manifestly growing. Brother Dorris will preach for the new congregation at Clarksville, Tenn., next Lord's day.

From L. F. Mason, Whitewright, Texas, Box 33: "I am arranging my year's work. I find that I am to be in Tennessee in the summer, and have some time not engaged. I would like to arrange some meetings. Those desiring my services should write me soon, as my time will soon be engaged."

Lytton Alley preached an excellent sermon last Lord's day at the Charlotte Avenue Church, this city, to a large and interested audience. He also preached at night. We understand that he will have a monthly appointment with them for the current year, and hope that his ministry will do them much good.

From M. C. Cayce, Jackson, Miss., January 17: "Two interesting services were held here yesterday in the W. O. W. Hall. Our young brother, Roy Vaughan, preached in Ridgeland, notwithstanding it was raining. Six men besides the women attended our midweek prayer meeting. Three of our members have moved away."

Changes of address: A. B. Gunter, from Lyles to Humboldt, Tenn.; H. C. Morgan, from Leesburg to Blakely, Ga.; H. H. Snow, from Cleveland, Miss., to Haleyville, Ala.; John M. Rice, from Merkel to Munday, Texas: J. R. Stubblefield, from Viola to Morrison, Tenn., Route 6; John T. Smithson, from 666 East F Street to 206 Preston Street, Louisville, Ky.

From R. A. Craig, Louisville, Ky., January 18: "Our Bible-class work at Parksville continues with great interest. We will probably continue two weeks longer, in order to give all concerned a general knowledge of the Bible. I feel that this year will present many opportunities for good. I hope to reach many destitute fields. I want to conduct other Bible classes before the warm months."

From Curtis Taylor, Mineral Wells, Texas: "I want to express my appreciation and approval of the high standard of the Gospel Advocate. I am now teaching vocal music in this city, and worship with the faithful few at the I. O. O. F. Hall. This is a wide-awake and loyal congregation, and they are doing great good. If plans materialize, work will start soon on the new church house. Brethren Wallace and Thomas preach for us each Lord's day."

J. Porter Sanders preached at the Twelfth Avenue Church last Sunday, morning and evening, to large audiences. The congregation received with profound regret the announcement that W. A. Fuston, one of the leading elders, who has been with the church since it was set in order, was going to Chicago, Ill., to locate. Brother Fuston left for that city Sunday night. Good interest is being maintained in the Bible study and the attendance continues large.

Fred M. Little writes from Montgomery, Ala., January 24; "With pleasant weather prevailing, the attendance at the Catoma Street Church, this city, was the best for several Lord's days. We had Bible study at 9:45 A.M.; preaching, 11 A.M.; young people's meeting, 7 P.M.; preaching, 7:30 P.M. We have song practice each Thursday evening. Each Saturday evening we have a social hour for the children, the purpose of which is to study the lesson for the next day and to spend an hour socially, that teachers and pupils may become better acquainted."

From D. S. Ligon, Denton, Texas, January 17: "Since the first Sunday in January I have been busy at home, nursing a sick wife; but she is up now, and we are thankful to the Lord. I have just had a letter from Havana, Ark., where I have held some meetings, and where I am to have a debate with the Adventists, and I am informed that the interest is good. S. P. Risener now lives near Havana. Brother Risener is a good preacher, and I hope the churches in that part will keep him busy in the Lord's work. He is one that farms and preaches, too; and many times these preachers are the very best."

James A. Allen sends in this: "Last week it was stated in the Gospel Advocate that 'James A. Allen disappointed the Charlotte Avenue Church, this city, by notifying them very late that he would be elsewhere.' This is an unfortunate mistake. I notified some of the congregation several days ahead that I could not be present at the morning service on Sunday, and with their consent I sent Brother Mcser to preach in my place. I preached at Charlotte Avenue at the night service. The conflict in appointments was caused by my exchanging another engagement in order to accommodate Brother Srygley."

From T. M. Carney, San Angelo, Texas, January 18; "Since my last report Christmas has come and gone, also a new year has been ushered in. The church here remembered the preacher and his family Christmas with many useful gifts. In addition to this, many sick people, shutins, were remembered by the church here with some gift. All lines of the work seem encouraging, for which we are thankful. The church has consented for me to have July and August or August and September—sixty days—for protracted-meeting work. Those desiring my services may write me at 122 East College Street, San Angelo, Texas."

From W. F. Lemmons, Somerville, Texas, January 18: "I preached for the church at Beaumont last Lord's day, morning and night. We had good crowds and fine interest. I am to begin a meeting there next Lord's day to continue a week or ten days. I have agreed to divide my time equally between Beaumont and Somerville, preaching at Somerville on the first and third Lord's days, and at Beaumont on the second and fourth Lord's days. Brethren visiting Beaumont can reach the church by taking Lake Park car. Get off at last curve on Elgin Street, and walk one block east to the church. Brethren, pray that our work may advance."

During my recent visit to Alabama I enjoyed the privilege of worshiping on one Lord's-day morning with the Catoma Street church of Christ at Montgomery. Fred M. Little, the minister of the congregation, delivered a very earnest sermon, pointing out to the church work that should be done. I should have been glad to also visit the church at Highland Park, but lack of time prevented my doing so. I learned, however, the church was very much pleased with Brother Hines and his work. Both these churches, with their preachers, should accomplish a great work in advancing the cause of Christ, not only in that community, but also in surrounding territory. The church is the light of the world, the salt of the earth, the pillar and support of the truth. The Gospel Advocate will rejoice with these churches and brethren in every good work they do.

William P. Walker writes from Dinuba, Cal., January 10: "The work here is progressing remarkably well. We are at the present time remodeling our house of worship. Yesterday morning Brother Perkins visited us. He preached a thoughtful sermon on "Ruth, and Her Trust in God." Brother Perkins has done a great work in the State. Yesterday morning we took a special collection of one hundred and fifteen dollars. The regular offering was twenty-five dollars and thirty-two cents. Last night I preached a sermon on the subject, 'God's Foolishness vs. Man's Wisdom.' One came from the Christian Church. I have challenged the Christian Church here for a debate. S. H. Hall, of Los Angeles, will represent us. If they accept our challenge, I will publish the date for the discussion in the Gospel Advocate. Our house of worship is at the corner of Kern and College Streets."

The Gospel Should Be Preached.

BY J. C. M'Q.

When the divine philanthropy had accomplished its work, Christ commanded the apostles: "Go ye therefore, and make disciples of all the nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I commanded you: and lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." (Matt. 28: 19, 20.) For Christians to fail to comply with this commission to preach the gospel is to make the impression that one does not have full confidence in the gospel as God's power unto salvation. We should be able to say, like Paul: "For I am not ashamed of the gospel; for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek." (Rom, 1: 16.) If we are not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, we certainly should be active in proclaiming it to every creature, as "belief cometh of hearing, and hearing by the word of Christ." (Rom. 10: 17.)

I have just returned from a trip to Southeast and Southwest Alabama. I never go to Alabama and make a tour of the State that I am not impressed with the fact that there are so few churches of Christ in that section. While we have a number of good churches in Birmingham and also in Montgomery and some other towns in the State, yet, comparatively speaking, there are very few members of the church of Christ in the great State of Alabama. The churches of Christ in the State of Tennessee and other adjoining States certainly have a great work to do, and should not fail to vigorously evangelize Alabama. In many of the towns there are only a few members of the church of Christ. As the church is the light of the world and the salt of the earth, it cannot afford to put its light under a bushel and not spread the gospel in the destitute fields of this great State. I would not intimate that they should confine their work to the State of Alabama alone; but the gospel should be vigorously proclaimed in the destitute fields of this State, and then the churches should reach out to other destitute fields. Christ said to his apostles: "But ye shall receive power, when the Holy Spirit is come upon you; and ye shall be my witnesses both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea and Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth." (Acts 1: 8,) This is not only the scriptural order, but it is the sensible order. should do our full duty in an endeavor to convert those who are near us; and when we have done all that we can in this respect, then we should look for other fields. The brightest light at home shines the farthest away. There are churches that could well afford to give five hundred or one thousand dollars a year for evangelizing in this field and be the better for the doing. Christians should be active, diligent, and faithful in the great work of proclaiming the gospel to a lost and ruined race. Paul says, in writing to Timothy: "These things write I unto thee, hoping to come unto thee shortly; but if I tarry long, that thou mayest know how men ought to behave themselves in the house of God, which is the church of the Hving God. the pillar and ground of the truth." (1 Tim. 3: 14, 15.) The churches of Christ have a responsibility that they cannot shirk and stand approved in the sight of God. The failure to sow the seed of the kingdom in the destitute fields about us is a fallure to do our duty, and whenever we fail in this respect we stand condemned. The churches, in order to quicken their own spirituality, must be energetic and ready to make sacrifices in order to save the lost. When we remember what Christ has sacrificed in order to redeem us, we should certainly propound the question to ourselves: "What have I done in order that I may lead sinners out of darkness into light?" No individual member of a congregation should wait for others to make all the sacrifices in spreading the gospel. It seems that when a Christian knows that people are perishing for the gospel of Christ, that, having full confidence in the power of the gospel, he would not wait to be exhorted and admonished. but would be ready with all of his talents to devote himself to the preaching of the gospel in order that souls might be saved. How much better to spend our money for the conversion of sinners than to spend it for carrying on wars! Herbert Hoover has been making an effort, aided by the Literary Digest, to raise twenty-three million dollars for the starving children of Central and Southern Europe. This starvation is an effect of the terrible war. The Literary Digest tells us that, of all the money paid to the government, ninety-three cents on every dollar goes to the maintenance of past or future wars. Uncle Sam is now building or planning to build eight battleship cruisers that will cost over twenty-three million dollars each.

How much more active should Christians be in making sacrifices in giving of their means in order to sow broadcast the seed of the kingdom! The seed of the kingdom should be sowed in the field, which is the wide, wide world. How many churches, through the elders, will speak out and say that they are ready to give five hundred dollars per year, or even one thousand dollars per year, for the evangelization of this territory? The work should be vigorously pushed. The stronger churches in Alabama, iocated in the cities, should also make sacrifices in order to spread the gospel in the surrounding territory. The cities eventually will draw a membership from the rural districts. The people of the rural districts move into the cities; so, if the gospel has been preached to them and they have been led to Christ, they will become members of the churches of Christ in the cities. In this way the membership of the city churches has been largely maintained and increased. We should be glad to have the churches speak out at once and give us the assurance that they will vigorously enter upon a campaign for evangelizing all destitute fields. It is not necessary for us to go to far-off China in order to preach the gospel to the destitute. We have thousands right at our own doors who have never heard the truth as it is in Christ.

But the fact should not be overlooked that before this evangelizing can be done we must have faithful ministers of the gospel to do the work. We must have preachers who not only know the truth, but who love the truth, and who, like Paul, are willing to make sacrifices in order to proclaim it. Preachers should feel that "woe is unto me, if I preach not the gospel" of Christ. Only preachers of consecration and devotion should undertake such a work. The preacher who is not ready to endure hardness, as a good soldier, who is not ready to sleep on poor beds and to eat food that is not always well prepared, should not proffer his services for such a work. Money lovers and timeservers will be a misfit in this field. Before any one says, "Here am I; send me," he should give himself a thorough examination and honestly convince himself that he is ready to make the sacrifices demanded in such a field. The Lord sends only such to preach the gospel. Any other character will prove a weight rather than a help. No man can accomplish much in any calling if he has not thoroughly counted the cost and has not decided to give all that is within him to the work which he has chosen. Only men who love the Lord with all their hearts will do much in leading others to the Lord Jesus Christ.

"Unity in Christ."

BY E. A. E.

Lately attention was called to the teaching of the New Testament on "giving diligence to keep the unity of the Spirit In the bond of peace." An attempt was made to show what this unity is and what the "diligence" required to keep it embraces. Every individual who does not make every sacrifice of opinion and theory and of self and who does not speak and teach and act as God commands in order to keep this unity and to maintain this peace is to that extent responsible for existing divisions, and to the same extent is disobedient to God.

Every one should feel the force of this truth and should act accordingly. But, on the contrary, each party to any personal difference, or faction, or division, thinks the other party alone is at fault and responsible for the whole affair.

Below we reprint a most excellent and impressive article under the above heading from the mighty pen of our beloved and greatly missed Brother Lipscomb. It appeared in this paper, December 27, 1894. It should not only be read, but studied, by all. Truth is always the same and always consistent, and so long as divisions or church troubles exist this article will be applicable. It is very much to the point at this time.

THE ARTICLE.

The oneness of all Christians is an object to which no Christian heart can be indifferent. No Christian can be indifferent to it, because it was near the heart of the Savior, and, as he told us, is a condition of the world's believing him to be sent of God, so saved through him. He prayed that those who believe on him through the words of the aposties may be one, as he and his Father are. "Holy Father, keep through thine own name those whom thou hast given me, that they may be one, as we are.

Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word; that they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us; that the world may be lieve that thou hast sent me. And the glory which thou gavest me I have given them; that they may be one, even as we are one." (John 17: 11-22.)

They were to be one in Christ—were to be sanctified in the truth. 'Sanctify them through thy truth; thy word is truth.' (Verse 17.) While the importance of the union or oneness of Christians is clearly set forth in these scriptures, the conditions and place of union are also as clearly defined—the union in God and Christ, in his name, in his word. The meaning is that every one may be sanctified by the word. To sanctify is to set apart, separate from, make holy. To sanctify in and through the word is to set apart by the word-separate from all not contained in the word and to consecrate to all the word requires. men are thus consecrated by and in the word, they are one with God, and all who are one with God will be one with one another. This is a truth that ought to startle the reli-glous world in its present divided condition—all who are This is a truth that ought to startle the reliin union with God are in union with one another. The converse of this is true. Those not in union with one an-other cannot be in union with God. This must be true, as all who are united to God are united to each other. Division and separation among professed Christians is an emphatic declaration of separation from God on the part of one or both parties to the division or separation. sons or parties cannot be in union with God and be them-"But if we walk in the selves separated and divided. light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin," (1 John 1: 7.) This sentence shows that those who walk in the light, as he is in the light, walk in the light as Christ gave the light—fand this— Editor) brings them into fellowship one with another, and the same thing that brings them into fellowship with one another brings them to where the blood of Christ cleanses from all sin, and when they are cleansed from all sin they have fellowship with the Father and with his Son, Jesus Christ, That is the very thing that brings into fellowship with God-brings into fellowship with all in fellowship with God. This truth cannot be too earnestly impressed on the religious world.

Another thought connected with this: "Inasmuel as yedid it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye did it unto me." (Matt. 25: 46.) To own one as a child of God and refuse him the fellowship of a child of God is to refuse fellowship to Jesus Christ, who is personated in the humblest of his children.

There is much talk to-day of union among Christians. The union feeling is alive as it has not been for hundreds of years. This is good and hopeful, because men never can learn how and where to unite until they learn they must be one and come to desire to be one. The desire of union leads to seek how and where union may be effected Much of the talk of union is very much at random. It is hopeful, nevertheless, because it leads to seek how and where.

There is one great danger in seeking union among menthat is, in uniting with men we may separate from God. Often when we seek to get closer to one body we move away from another. We must be careful not to separate from God, because a union without God is a union in falsehood, a league with death. In any union of Christians God must be the center and the head. We come into union with God by doing his commandments, by following his directions, and by walking in the light as he is in the light We are sanctified to God through his word, through doing his word, through separating from all not in his word, through doing all that his word requires. All who will do this will be brought into fellowship with God and with all who are in fellowship with him. There is no other pathwho are in fellowship with him. There is no other pathway to fellowship with men that does not break fellowship with God. The only means of fellowship among men that is not "a covenant with death and a league with hell" is to seek fellowship with one another by seeking fellowship with God-by walking in the light, as he is in the light. The things that divide men are not what God has required, not what Jesus did or said, not what is in the Bible, but what men add to the requirements of God. These divide; and these taken out of the way, Christians would come together as one. The only effective work that man can do to promote union among Christians is to look closely to his own walk and faithfully regulate it by the word of God. Every one must look to himself, see what he holds and practices that is not required by the word of God, and he must lay it all aside. He thus removes the obstacles in his own life and walk that hinders other children of God from uniting with him. This is the first and most important work that he can do. It brings him into a closer walk with God, into a more sacred fellowship with Jesus, the Lord and Master. It removes all obstacles out of the way of true and proper fellowship with Jesus, the Lord and Master. It removes all obstacles out of the of true and proper fellowship between him and all other children of God. When he does this, and by his example and teaching tries to induce others to lay aside everything from their faith and practice not required by the word of God, so as to remove all hindrances to union on their part, he has done about all it is possible for man to do to bring about fellowship with man and with God. When all of the hindrances of this kind are removed, Christians, as kindred drops, will flow together as one homogeneous and harmonious stream.

To see God's children must be one, and where and how union must be brought about, is a great step toward it. To see our own salvation, our union with God, depends upon our union with all in union with him, will quicken our efforts toward union, will make us seek to walk in the strait and narrow road that leads to God.

Brother Lipscomb adds: "These ideas are gradually entering the minds and hearts of professed Christians." He gives some quotations to show this.

He further says:

The great difficulty is to undo what centuries of ecclesiasticism and sectarianism have done. The first essential thing to be done is the disintegration of all tienominations, the destruction of all ecclesiasticisms, the rejection of all creeds but the Bible, that people, each for himself in the sight of God, may look to and be led by God alone. The disintegration and destruction of sects must precede the union in Christ of Christians.

Let this clear, strong rule of the word of God, which Brother Lipscomb has pointed out with so much force, be felt and applied, not only to conflicting and clashing religious denominations, but also to all "churches of Christ" in which there are contentions and strife and divisions, then the peace of God will flow among them as a river. But, on the contrary, as James (3: 13-18) says: "Where jealousy and faction are, there is confusion and every vile deed," Jealousy, envy, faction, and division come in regular order,

All who are indifferent to this are indifferent to the will of God and to their own salvation.

The truth that "all who are in union with God are in union with one another" ought "to startle the religious world," but most especially congregations, claiming to be only churches of Christ, in which strife, contention, and faction exist. Where any of these exist, there are necessarily some persons not one with God. The beautiful and wonderful expressions, "one accord," "singleness of heart," "one heart and soul," "same mind," "same love," "each counting other better than himself," "perfected together in the same mind and in the same judgment," "all speak the same thing," "lowliness of mind," "meekness," "long-suffering," "forbearing one another in love," cannot exist between any two brethren or in any congregation where strife and bitterness, contention and faction are. Certainly such brethren are not one as Christ and God are one. These evil things are a shame and a crime against the church of God. To be indifferent to such sins is to trample unity and peace and the will of God underfoot. One party to any personal difference or to any division in a congregation is in disobedience to God, and perhaps both are. True it is that to refuse to fellowship the poorest and weakest child of God is to disfellowship Christ. In view of and under the influence of these solemn truths, "all bitterness, and wrath, and anger, and clamor, and railing, . . . with all malice," should melt away as snow beneath the burning rays of a summer's sun.

Let us be impressed with the truth "that division and separation among professed Christians are an emphatic declaration of separation from God on the part of one or both parties." This is a fearful thing! Yet some seem never to think their own feelings against others, their own accusations against others, their own bitter denunciation of others, are declarations to the world that they themselves have not the Spirit of Christ and are separate from God. One or the other of two houses of worship in a few hundred yards of each other is a monument to strife and division and, therefore, to disobedience to God: and both may be. All strife, all wrong and bitterness, and all factions are scarcely ever confined to only one party to division. Let us examine ourselves. Let us realize that the only way to preserve unity and peace, or to heal breaches already made, and to destroy factions, is for every man to look well to his own individual life and walk before God, and in this way only can he remove all obstacles to gracious speech, unity, peace, and love. "Lord, is it I?" This done, then Satan himself can never disturb the unity and peace of brethren. Reverse this—let each one attempt to make it his business to examine and condemn the other—and Satan will be well pleased and the demons of perdition will shout for joy.

Timothy must "reprove, rebuke, exhort;" but he, although inspired, must do so "with all long-suffering and teaching," and "in meekness" must "correct them that oppose themselves." Such must be done in this spirit today. But to attempt to justify any one in error and wrong is to become a partaker with that one in his wrongs, is to attempt to break unity with God, and to place before the church an obstacle to harmony and peace. Our justification of men, in our partiality and weak judgment, is far from justification before God; before God all stand or fall.

Shading and Shaving the Truth.

BY F. W. SMITH.

There are all sorts of people in this old world, and I suppose that is the reason it is said: "It takes all sorts of people to make a world." But it was not so in the beginning of man's career upon the earth. We are told in holy writ: "And God saw everything that he had made, and, behold, it was very good." (Gen. 1: 31.) Again, the wise man says: "Lo, this only have I found, that God hath made man upright; but they have sought out many inventions." (Eccles. 7: 29.) One of the inventions of man is to "shade and shave the truth," commercially, socially, and even religiously. Some people cannot handle the truth without soiling it with a degree of exaggeration or shaving away a part of it until it becomes a "misfit" upon the tongue or pen that first expressed it. Perhaps there are very few "false reports" that do not have a grain of truth for their foundation-just enough to "start the ball to rolling." Even so good a man as father Abraham so shaded the truth as to get himself into trouble and a blot upon his good name. Under the stress of fear that his beautiful wife might be taken away from him, he told a king that she was his sister. Indeed, she was his half-sister; but in that statement he intentionally cast a shadow over another relation he sustained to Sarah, hoping to hide it from the king. Jacob went further and shaved the truth all away regarding his own identity in the presence of his old, blind father, Isaac.

One way, and a very common way, of shaving the truth is to put a false construction on one's word and then peddle that false construction as the very words uttered at first hand. For instance, A says, "No, I cannot be mistaken as to what B said, for I heard him distinctly say it:" and then some one present goes away and circulates the report that a certain man says he is infallible, leaving the impression that said person regards himself beyond the liability of making a mistake regarding any matter whatever. Such conduct is reprehensible upon the part of any man or woman, and yet it is done all over this country. Such people, because one says he cannot be mistaken about a certain thing, jump to the conclusion that he means he cannot be mistaken about anything at all. Unless men can be absolutely certain about some things, how could the business world proceed, and how could there be any courts of justice or any certainty in the world about anything? If men and women cannot be certain-absolutely certainas to what each other say, at least some of the time, then what sort of a world would this be in which to live?

Again, some people "shave" the truth by cutting it half in two. They are unwilling to stop at trimming off the sharp corners, but proceed to split it wide open, and with what is left make a false impression. Of course, what they tell is truth, but a terribly mutilated affair that lies wounded and bleeding in the hands of the shaver. The writer was preaching at a certain place on the subject of prayer, when the following statement was made: "I do not believe it is right to pray to God to save sinners short of obedience to the gospel." From that statement some of my auditors went away saying: "That man said he did not believe in praying, and we will not hear him any more." Perhaps some may say that was bad and altogether inexcusable, but not a whit more so than to put a false construction on one's language, and from that put a word or words in his mouth he never used. Neither is it any worse than to assign a position to another and then garble his writings, leaving out portions that would disprove the contention of the critic.

Such things in secular papers emanating from men of the world is bad enough, but how much worse it is in religious papers and from the pens of professed Christians! The Holy Scriptures teach us to "lie not one to another" (Col. 3: 9), and they also teach us to lie not one about the other. Some people, when shown that certain positions held by them were contrary to the word of God, instead of renouncing them, begin a campaign of misrepresentation of those who oppose them. Thus the truth is shaved, shaded, and buffeted about; but despite it all she will continue to live, for "the eternal years of God are hers."

Have You Sent Any New Subscribers?

Publishers of religious papers, of necessity, have been compelled to carry losses during the last two years. Postage has advanced, wages have doubled, and paper is costing in some instances four times as much as it did before the war; yet the cash received for advertising and subscriptions has not been any greater than the amount received previous to the war. Religious publishers have been considerate of their subscribers and have done everything possible in order to keep their papers up to their usual standard. Our readers can greatly cooperate with and help us in earrying the heavy load by sending new subscribers. We are glad to inform them that we are receiving a number of subscribers; but we are able to handle many more, and should like to solicit a more decided and vigorous cooperation. Many of our readers, with very little effort, could send us at least a half dozen new subscribers. There are many people who would be greatly benefited by reading the Gospel Advocate who are not now reading it. Wherever the paper is read, there is more liberality, there is more active work done in spreading the gospel of Jesus Christ than elsewhere. The paper stimulates to active endeavor, to spirituality, to growth in Christian life. Do not wait for some one else to do the work, but begin yourself, remembering that we will allow you twenty per cent commission on each new subscriber you send us at $2.50 per year; or, if you prefer, if you send us two new subscribers, we will send you a copy of the Teachers' New Testament with notes, which is very helpful. The publishers of this Testament say of it: "It is the most helpful Testament for the use of Sunday-school teachers, leaders, and scholars ever prepared. The notes and helps were edited and prepared by a joint editorial board of the foremost Biblical scholars in every denomination. The introductions were in by authorities of international reputation.

that of the American Standard Version—the latest translation—with proper names marked for pronunciation and the words of Christ emphasized in heavy-faced type." Now is the time to secure this valuable teachers' Testament. Don't wait, but act at once. Delay may cause you to lose the book.

Mrs. Tennie Hughes.

BY J. C. M'Q. -

I have known Sister Hughes for many years, and have always regarded her as one of the purest, truest, and most earnest disciples of Christ. Of a cheerful, bright, and sunshiny disposition, she was ever ready to speak a word to the erring, lift up the fallen, and to make sacrifices for the unfortunate and afflicted. While she was not the possessor of very much money, yet even in her declining years she was a constant contributor to the needy. A number of times she has come to our office and handed me five dollars or more for feeding the orphans and for helping the afflicted and needy. Such a noble, consecrated life cannot be in vain. In her deeds of sacrifice, in her pure and godly life, she will continue to live to light and guide men to the throne of God. With more like her, the world would be far better off. Here is the estimate handed me by one who knew and loved Sister Hughes:

"Sister Tennie Hughes was one of the most beautiful. consistent, Christian characters I have ever known. Although a great sufferer for several years before her death, she never complained or grew discouraged. Her trials only seemed to make her hope and faith grow stronger. The good qualities of both Mary and Martha were admirably harmonized in her life. While she chose the one thing needful, a good part which should not be taken away from her, yet her family and home were ever very dear to her, and she faithfully performed her duty as she saw it. Sister Hughes came as near to measuring up to the perfect standard as mortals ever do. The beneficent influences of such a life are beyond calculation, so truly did she reflect the Christlikeness; but we know that if she could speak, she would say: 'To him be all the glory.' Ma we not hope that, refined by suffering as a little child, she grew into a noble womanhood and a ripe old age, and that then the Father smiled upon her and called her home? As we realize that her noble deeds live after her and that God will still use her consecrated, devoted life for good, may we all say:

"'God's way was best, with reverent lips we say; God's way is best, and praise our God to-day."

"And I heard a voice from heaven saying, Write, Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord from henceforth: yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; for their works follow with them." (Rev. 14: 13.)

He That Wavereth.

Surely we are apt to be very inconsistent in the view we take of our place and purpose in the world, in some ways vastly exaggerating our importance, and in others failing of the reverence we owe to ourselves. Sometimes a man seems to think of the whole world as revolving round his life, and measures everything with reference to his own wishes and opinions; and sometimes he is content to drift along as though he had no distinct power of choice and will. Sometimes he seems unable to imagine that the lives, the feelings, the convictions of others can possibly mean as much to them as his do to him; and sometimes he hardly seems to have a conviction in him, but yields to any pressure that is on him, and calls himself the victim of circumstances. Sometimes he speaks as though his knowledge were certain and his decisions infallible; sometimes as though he could know nothing at all of that on which all knowledge depends. Sometimes he seems to himself exempt from the defects he sees in others, and incapable of their blunders and misdoings; at other times he takes the poorest view of his own endowments; he thinks that it is of no use for him to aim high, or to attempt a noble life; that he may make himself easy on a low level or a down grade; that there are temptations he cannot withstand, and sins he will never overcome; that people must take him as he is, and not expect too much of him.-Francis Paget.

WESTERN DEPARTMENT

By C. E. WOOLDRIDGE.

After many hindrances and delays, I trust we may now be able to maintain the proposed "Western Department" in a way that will be interesting and of some real value to the cause of Christ. I am asking those who have been patiently waiting on me and my action in this matter to now take hold and by their fellowship guarantee the success of this department. Brethren, please send articles, reports, and items of general interest. In sending reports, send to me direct; or if sent to Nashville, mark them "For Western Department," and they will be included with other matter from our field. Let us have reports of work of congregations, county and city work, etc., for the past year, and give us plans for work this year.

Churches.

I am herewith giving a very modest report of a most excellent work, written by Brother C. A. Buchanan, who is entering his second year as Johnson County evangelist, I know Brother Buchanan and the Cleburne church as so many of us knew Brother G. Dallas Smith and his work, and I know the work there is better and stronger than you would judge from this work. However, read the report and compare this work with what is being done in your county. If it encourages you to do some better work than you have been doing, write us about it. Your report might help others. Brother Buchanan's report follows:

The work at Cleburne is going forward. The church is well trained in the Lord's work. No one has been found yet to take the place of Brother Smith. The church is moving cautiously in the selection of a man, since a church the size of this one, with the work that we have planned, needs a man of rare qualities, especially so since the vacancy to be filled is that made by the death of G. Dallas Smith. Brother Smith was an able teacher and leader, and the work here grew mightily under his more than two years' ministry.

The county missionary work was launched last year and will continue. The church is planning to do more this year than ever before.

Brother R. L. Whiteside, of Denton, has preached more than any one else recently. Brother C. C. Merritt, of Davis City, Iowa, recently spent several days with us, including the second Lord's day in January, and delighted the church with his heartfelt messages on missionary work.

A large part of my work as county missionary has been devoted to reviving run-down congregations. In some places good results are being reaped, but at others I meet with small encouragement. One place I visited in the spring, where we have perhaps two dozen members, has since sold their meetinghouse for a small sum and fixed it so that future generations can have no place to meet in that community. I have started up the work at a few new places in the county. I have gone out of the county for several meetings, and will go anywhere that is consistent with my plans.

It is encouraging to see other congregations in Texas and in other States putting out men to work the neglected places. A great missionary spirit is taking hold of the church, and I believe it is because more preachers are preaching it than formerly. I believe it will take anywhere it is preached.

Let us not be afraid to launch out into the deep and let down the gospel net, for Christ has commanded it. (See Luke 5: 1-11.)

The Preachers.

As a people we have no conventions, conferences, or like meetings, hence no occasions for preachers to meet each other or spend any time together. Most of our preachers are quite busy men; but I am sure most of these men could and would be glad to take time to cultivate the acquaint ance and take counsel with other men in the work. The preaching brethren who live in Dallas and near the city have planned to meet twice each month during the winter months. We have had two such meetings. The meetings are held at Pearl and Bryan Streets meetinghouse on Tuesday evenings after the first and third Lord's days. Elders, deacons, Bible teachers, and other active workers are invited to meet with them. The last meeting was devoted to the subject, "Mission Work." Our next meeting will consider "What Constitutes a Model Congregation." We have no organization. A committee is appointed at each meeting to arrange for the next and appoint a committee to succeed it. These meetings promise to be real study periods for all who attend. We hope to study together a number of important questions. Would not such meetings be both pleasant and profitable for brethren at other places?

Singers and Singing.

We have in most places fallen far short of doing our best about this part of our worship. Hoping to stimulate to action and encourage others, I give the example of Fort Worth brethren and churches. There are now nine congregations in Fort Worth and immediate environs. On each Lord's-day afternoon singers from all of these congregations meet at some one of the meeting places and spend from one to two hours singing together. There are twenty or more men who lead well. As a rule, every leader present takes his turn to lead one or two songs. On the first Lord's day in the year these singers, more than one hundred strong, went to Handley in the afternoon and with the singers there spent a delightful two hours. Handley is eight miles east of Fort Worth. Recently they visited Oak Cliff Church in Dallas. It is hoped this fellowship will be continued and prove very valuable when the season for protracted meetings with these churches and tent meetings throughout the city opens up. After spending seven years in Tennessee, near Nashville, I cannot but think of what fine meetings of preachers and singers could be had there. Do you not think, brethren everywhere, that these Fort Worth brethren-a vast throng of young people-are setting a good example for those who spend Lord's-day afternoons picnicking and joy riding?

Books.

"The Model Church," by G. C. Brewer, now of Austin, Texas. I think so much of this book that I am teaching a class in each of the two churches with which I am now laboring two lessons each month, using the subjects treated and the treatment given in the book as a basis for the lessons. I believe every church in the land should have just such a course of lessons, and believe Brother Brewer's book is the best help provided for such classes. Such study would correct many errors and strengthen the church at points where we have proven shamefully weak and deficient. I most heartily commend the book.

"Sound Doctrine," by C. R. Nichol, of Clifton, Texas. I am using this book as I am using "The Model Church," and have very interesting and interested classes. The book has thirteen lessons, or chapters, each followed by a long list of test questions. Volume I is to be followed by others of like size every three months for three or four years. The work is suited to weekly Bible classes—Lord's day or midweek and each covers the period of a quarter.

These books are well bound and can be used by success midweek, and each covers the period of a quarter,

Blessed is the man who dares to say no when the sins of life call him from paths of purity. For as sure as God lives, if you refuse to go with the crowd, to run with "the bunch," to indulge in hurtful lusts, you will lose your popularity, and be ostracised.—Exchange.

Dream Ships.

If every night at six o'clock, As punctual as the postman's knock, Our dream ships from the dreamland seas Sailed back upon a homeward breeze, Bearing piled high in every hold The treasures that our dream foretold, Books and soldiers, dolls and guns-And chocolates and current buns-How happy would be every face! This world would seem a different place! And yet, if laden stern to stem, They never failed at 6 P.M. To wander back to me and you, And each and every wish came true, And ne'er a vessel came to harm, The thing in time would lose its charm, And wonder light and glad surprise Would fade away from children's eyes, And we might even sit and long For something awful to go wrong-If every night at six o'clock Those dream ships all sailed back to dock. -Selected.

The Rainy Day Visitor.

Probably Ernest was as scarlet as grandma's tomato pincushion by this time. Minnle watched the little rivers run down the garden path into the little lake at the gate. She sighed. Scarlet fever was the only thing Ernest had not divided with her in all the nine years of their twin lives.

Grandpa was asleep on the sofa, with a newspaper over his face; grandma dozed in her easy-chair by the fireside. It seemed as if they were always asleep. She thought of Mrs. Todd's baby, who was always taking a nap when she wanted to take him riding. "People seem to sleep a good deal at the top and bottom of their lives," she said to herself, and sighed again.

Grandma sat up with a start. "Why, child!" she exclaimed, picking up her knitting. "I must have closed my eyes for a second. I was just wondering," she went on briskly, smilling down at the doleful little face, "If you wouldn't like to read the diary your mother wrote when she was ten years old."

Minnie, with wide eyes, followed grandma to the bookcase. A mother only ten years old made one feel solemn. After a few-minutes' search the book was found. It was of faded red leather, with "Diary" printed across the back in gold letters. There was a red pencil tied to it with a ribbon that had once been blue.

As soon as she began to read, Minnie forgot that it was raining—forgot that she was lonesome and homesick.

"Ester Brown and me are going to keep a diry," it began. Minnie stopped reading. Could that possibly be Aunt Esther Brown, who lived at Waterlee—" our adopted aunt," as the twins called her?

"That is just who it was," said grandpa, waking from his nap in time to hear Minnie's excited question.

She could hardly let the book go long enough to eat her dinner. At the very end of the book came the most exciting part. She was going slowly to make it last as long as she could, when she read this: "Esther brown and me are too old to play with dolls any more, so we are going to put our paper dolls all in the seekerit drawer of the old seekeritaree and never look at them again. Cross your hearts and hope to di."

"Grandpa, grandma, grandpa!" cried Minnie, dancing up and down. "Is there a secret drawer in the secretary?"

"Yes, yes," said grandpa, rubbing his chin. "Let me see. Pull out the second drawer from the top. It's right in the back of that."

Minnie did so, trembling with excitement. She found a little drawer, but it was empty.

At the sight of her disappointed face, grandpa came to help her. They hunted for half an hour, but no other secret drawer could they find. They were about to give it up when grandma, who had joined in the search, said suddenly: "Father, didn't she mean the old secretary? You know we bought this one the spring after she was nine, and she and Esther had the other in the attic to play with."

Up into the dark, musty attic went the three. There in the dormer window stood the secretary, covered with dust and cobwebs. If Minnie had hard work to keep from screaming downstairs, she had harder work now, as at last grandpa opened the secret drawer and handed her a pile of what seemed dusty papers. It was indeed the paper doll family put there so long ago by the two little girls.

When they were dusted, they appeared as good as new, and Minnie spent the rest of the day playing with them. She laughed and laughed at the queer style of the clothes they wore. At bedtime, when she gathered them up, she said to her grandmother: "It was just like having my little girl mother come to play with me."—Anna Louise Berray, in Sunday School Times.

A Boy in Fact.

He filled the house with laughter and bother and playmates in squads; a boy of muddy boots and spilled ink bottles and scratched furniture and torn clothes; a boy of sure loyalties, of sudden gusts of affection, of unexpected gentle words, and of shy tenderness when one was alone with him in the firelight—a boy like other boys in fact.

Love such a boy and be patient with him, and develop him, just because he is a warm-hearted fact, not a ready-towear, polished fancy.—Selected.

Forces of Evil.

The moving-picture show is the greatest force for evil on this earth to-day. It educates as no other power can our children to rob, steal, lie, commit adultery, and makes these sins look so good and so attractive that the children even think they are right.

Speaking of the movies, every now and then you will see a picture in which a minister is made to play the part of "the villain." Did you ever see a priest of the Catholic faith play that part? And sometimes a minister is called upon to play the part of "hero." Did you ever see a Protestant play that part?

John Barleycorn is dead! Write it in letters of fire, and then dry your tears, for though J. B. is gone, he left "Jake" to run his business for him, and a man drunk on "Jake" is just as rotten and filthy as one drunk on "John." The open saloon is gone, but the law-defying dispenser of booze is with us yet.—Selected.

The proprietor of a grocery store chanced to glance out the plate-glass window and saw a small boy lingering around a barrel of apples exhibited on the sidewalk "Hey, there, boy!" exclaimed the groceryman, going to the door, "What are you doing?" "Nothing," laconically answered the boy, with his eyes still fixed on the barrel. "Nothing, eh?" doubtfully returned the man. "Aren't you trying to steal some of those apples?" "No, sir," responded the youngster; "I'm trying not to,"—Exchange.

That a love of truth for its own sake, and merely as truth, is possible, my soul bears witness in its inmost recesses.—S. T. Coleridge.

MISCELLANY W

C. A. Lancaster, who is engaged in the work in Wayne County, Tenn., writes as follows: "I filled all of my previous appointments at the close of the year 1920, regardless of cold and rain, conducting six services with good interest. I know that we are not perfect, and I confess all of my mistakes. Brethren, pray for me and all, and let all keep working for the Lord. He has wonderfully blessed us. Please do not forget this needy field, as well as others. Help me in this great work of saving souls for heaven's home."

Fred M. Little writes from Montgomery, Ala., January 17: "We are not boasting because we have done a good thing; but when it comes to knowing that money is needed to save the children of the Near East, Catoma Street church of Christ, of Montgomery, Ala., is there with the goods. Our collection of January 16 was three hundred and sixty-five dollars in cash, three hundred and twenty-five of which goes to the relief fund. That is better than to give the preacher a 'Ford,' any time. We suggest that the way to be happy is to help others. The collection for 1920 amounted to $3,512."

William J Campbell, of Davis City, Iowa, writes: "I want to recommend to the churches in Texas and elsewhere C C. Merritt, of this place, and the work he is doing among the churches to stir up a greater interest in the gospel work. Brother Merritt has taken up this work with the indorsement and recommendation of the churches in this part. He is capable of doing much good to every church he may visit, so we hope the churches wherever he goes will receive him gladly and listen to his great message. Brethren, call for him and give him an opportunity to tell you of the great possibilities and opportunities for the gospel of Christ."

The church of Christ at Duncan, Arizona, makes the following acknowledgment: "We gladly and gratefully acknowledge the contributions received from brethren and friends, amounting to two hundred and fifteen dollars and seventy-seven cents. Since last report we have received twenty-five dollars. We would be glad if we could secure enough help to enable us to start a small building of some kind. We would be glad if all congregations would investigate our need. I am sure that more of them would then send us a contribution. We give as references the following-named preachers, who know our circumstances: E. N. Glenn, 2310 Pittsburgh Avenue, El Paso, Texas; John M. Rice, Munday, Texas; Bynum Black, McAlester, Okla."

From J. E. Wainwright, Texarkana, Ark., January 10: "Promise of the life that now is and of that which is to come is plainly demonstrated in the lives of the humble servants who are busy in the service of our King, discharging their duties unselfishly. Shortly after we entered the field at this point, over eighteen months since, observation encouraged a humble petition in behalf of the colored people, which was recently answered. While busy with secular work during the holiday months I met a colored brother who informed me of sixteen humble souls about four miles west of the city trying to respect the New Testament in its The next Sunday afternoon several purity and simplicity. from the Central congregation motored out to the location, and your humble servant offered words of encouragement. I must say that I have never been more impressed than Their earnestness and readiness to acwith those people. cept the truth with joy would put to shame the majority of my own color. W. C. Cornelius is their minister, and we hope to make him very useful among his race locally."

J. H. Murrell, Route 2, Rogers, Ark., addresses the following to the brethren at large: "Having received so many inquiries regarding Mrs. Murrell, with so many expressions of fellowship, sympathy, and love, I take this method of giving a report and at least partly expressing my thanks to all. Since the twins were born, November 24, Mrs. Murrell's condition has been very serious; but I am glad to say she is better, and we hope she will finally get well. It may yet be a long time before she is well enough for me to get out to do any work other than the necessary chores about the place. Friends and brethren far and near have assisted and encouraged us very much. Some even said: 'Anything in the world you need, let us know.' Others said: 'Pay no attention to expenses; the bills will be paid.'

Perhaps, though, the expenses have been higher than they expected. I hope they will be pald; however, I still owe the nurse one hundred and thirty dollars, and have not yet paid anything on the doctor's bills. One brother wrote me: 'I believe your case ought to be put before the church at large and let them help you. You have been giving your time to the cause for a very long time.' I admit that for more than thirteen years I claimed no occupation other than preaching, and that most of that time was spent at mission points and with small, weak congregations. For part of that time I was offered from twice to three times as much money for other work as I was receiving for preaching. Yet I often feel unworthy of the many good things received. But when I think of how Mrs. Murrell has overworked herself, taking care of things at home while I was away preaching, I certainly believe she is worthy of the best care we can give her. Brethren, remember us in your prayers"

H. M. Phillips furnishes the following information about the church at Tuscumbia, Ala.: "Last Sunday (January 16) was a splendid day for the church here, with two large audiences and one baptism. Since May, 1919, there have been about forty additions to the body at this place. cause looks bright for the future. The financial side of the church work has increased greatly. In 1917 the average contribution was about fifty-eight dollars a month; in 1918 it increased to about seventy dollars a month; in 1919, up to May, it was about sixty-six dollars a month, and for the rest of that year it ran to one hundred and eighty dollars a month; and in 1920 it increased to two hundred and twenty dollars a month. Since I have been with the church here, beginning in May, 1919, I have held seventeen protracted meetings and helped in three or four others. Three of these meetings were supported by the church here. The orphans have been helped, the poor administered unto, the sick waited upon, the David Lipscomb College and the Freed-Hardeman college helped, money sent the church in Washington and six others, some foreign mission money sent off, a splendid furnace installed and two rooms fixed for Bible classes—this is a partial list of things done besides the regular work. Our crowds have almost taxed the capacity of the house in regular attendance. Peace and harmony prevail where division was almost abounding. Visiting is a prominent feature here now, and love and interest are growing. These facts and figures may not impress others with any great degree of deserving praise, but, when compared with what was done before, make us take courage and press on. We are not doing what we could do nor what we expect to do; our aim is not reached These things are written with the sole purpose of letting all see that we can do more if we get at it. We have about one hundred and twenty-five members here, but a number of others attend."

W. D. Bills, San Antonio, Texas, in a note dated January 7, speaks of the good work being done by the disciples in that city. He says: "Last Lord's day marked the beginning of a new congregation for this city. About seven y people gathered for the first service. It was my pleasure to be present and assist in selecting teachers for the class work and also to speak at the hour of worship. This congregation is located in a splendid part of the city, and we expect to have a strong church in a very short time. the past six years I have served as minister for the Denver Heights congregation, this city; and during that time we have built a splendid church building and have grown in numbers from about thirty-five to about three hundred. Among these are to be found some of the truest and best disciples I have ever known. They are not wealthy, yet I have never called for money for the Lord's cause that it was not raised immediately. We now feel that we have more members than really necessary to carry on the work here; so we decided to 'swarm' and thus extend the cause to other parts of the city. We feel that we can do more good by starting the new congregation than if we all remain together. Fortunately, we have enough qualified leaders for both places. I shall serve as minister of the new congregation, and we have secured the services of T. W. Phillips, of Fort Worth, for Denver Heights. C. W. Holley is doing a good work with the South Flores Street congregation, and we expect for these three congregations to work together in extending the borders of Zion in this city. We are undertaking more for the present year than we have ever undertaken before; and with our forces strengthened by the coming of a most excellent preacher, we expect, with the help of the Lord, to succeed. During the last four years the Denver Heights congregation has built two church houses and furnished them throughout without any outside help. We plan to start another congregation on January 1, 1923,"

Mrs. J. C. Anderson, of Electra, Texas, wishes an explanation of the following question: "Can a man live a true Christian and be a Mason? If not, why?" As to what any man can do depends largely upon his intelligence and information. I would not encourage any man to go into Masonry in order to live the Christian life. The truth is, when a man does his full duty in the church of Christ, he is so busily occupied that he has no time to attend open societies, secret societies, or anything of the kind. If one is seeking to live the highest type of Christian life, I am constrained to believe that he would not go into Masoury for this purpose. If one wishes to live the Christian life and make himself a follower of Christ and fit himself in character for service, he will give his talents, means, time, and love to the church of God, with none to bestow on any other association or brotherhood. I do not doubt that Masonry advocates many good things; but I know that Christianity advocates that which is purest and best, and so it is a mistake to turn away from this to any human institution

E. B. Forister, of Calico Rock, Ark., wishes to know if an elder moving from one congregation to another can be an elder in the congregation to which he moves. He also inquires to know if, since his first wife has died and he has married again, he can still be an elder. If Brother Forister has the qualifications for an elder in one congregation, he has the qualifications for an elder in another, but that congregation should select him and indicate their desire to have him act as an elder. If a number of elders are to be appointed, the congregation should signify its choice and they should be appointed in the scriptural way. Because a man has the misfortune to lose his first wife, to marry a second time does not bar him from acting as an elder; at least, I do not understand the Scriptures so to teach. Appointing a man to the eldership does not make him do the work of an elder. The man who has the qualifications to do this work cannot resign his duty, and should do the work wherever he may be. The man who has these qualifications is under obligation to do the work, and he should do it humbly and faithfully, as God desires. Simply appointing one to the eldership does not give him the power or the right to lord it over God's heritage.

David R. Wells, Mount Olivet, Ky., writes: "I have the Gospel Advocate of December 9 before me, and having read your and Brother H. Leo Boles' articles on whether or not an elder must be a married man, and seeing the scripture that you both quoted says he must be 'the husband of one wife,' and being a great lover of God's truth without addition or subtraction, and being limited in my education, I want to ask one question: 'Is it possible for a man to be the husband of one wife and not be married?'" Those who do not accept the plain statement of the Bible that an elder must be "the husband of one wife" contend that an elder "must be a married man," which is the equivalent of "the husband of one wife." Certainly he who is the husband of one wife is a married man, and so is he a married man who is the husband of two wives or of three wives, as the case may be. Hence, it follows that if the Bible had said an elder "must be a married man," he could have been the husband of two or three wives and have filled the qualification. This is not what the Bible teaches; and when any one says that an elder "must be a married man," he perverts the meaning of the scripture which says that he must be "the husband of one wife," When this language was penned, there were men in the church who had a plurality of wives. The evidence of profane and sacred history is clear upon this point. The holy scripture simply meant that a man, in order to be an elder, must be the husband of one wife and not of two.

A. V. Gillum, of Albany, Ala., wishes an explanation of Heb. 8: 7. He says: "I am greatly in need of an explanation of Heb. 8: 7. Was the law imperfect? If so, in what respect was it imperfect?" I have an inquiry also from H. G. Willeford, of the same place, asking to know if the law given at Mount Sinai was Imperfect. Brother Willeford says that he believes the law was perfect, and quotes Ps. 19: 7 and other passages as proof of his claim. Heb. 8: 7 declares: "For if that first covenant had been faultless, then would no place have been sought for a second." We should understand just what is meant by "the law." Monk, in his "Adventism and the Bible," says: "There is not any text in all the Bible that refers to the Ten Commandments as 'the law,' 'The law' is a term that includes the entire Pentateuch, and not just the Ten Commandments." We read of the two covenants (Gal. 4: 24), two witnesses (Rev. 11: 13), two olive trees (Zech. 4: 3). but nowhere do we read of the two laws. We read of some law titles in the following passages: "The law" (John 1: 17); "the law of the Lord" (Luke 2: 24); "the law of God" (Neh. 10: 29); "the law of Moses" (Acts 15: 5); etc. It is undoubtedly true that we are living under a new covenant. "In that he saith, A new covenant, he hath made the first old. But that which is becoming old and waxeth aged is nigh unto vanishing away." (Heb. 8: 13.) In considering the perfection of God's works, we must look to the purpose for which it was intended. The purpose of the law of Moses was to lead to Christ. "So that the law is become our tutor to bring us unto Christ, that we might be justified by faith. But now that faith is come, we are no longer under a tutor." (Gal. 3: 24, 25.) For this purpose the law was perfect; but it was never intended by Jehovah that we should live under the law of Moses after Christ came and sealed the new covenant with his own blood. The horse would not be perfect for the uses of a cow; but a horse may be perfect for his uses, and so may the cow be perfect for her uses. We say that the sun is more perfect than the moon, yet the moon is just as perfect for her uses as is the sun for his. We say that a man is more perfect than a boy, and yet a boy is just as perfect for his uses as the man is for his. Just so the law of Moses served its purpose of leading to Christ.

A sister who does not wish her name signed to her query wants to know what Christ meant when he said that his disciples must leave all and take up their cross in order to follow him. She wishes to know if having a will to do this without doing it is sufficient, or if it means that one must really forsake all in order to follow Christ.

The passage teaches clearly that, in order to be a follower of Christ, one must deny himself of all that is evil. must forsake it even if it costs him something to do so. A man must love Christ more than he loves this world; he must love Christ more than he loves father, mother, wife, brother, or sister. Christ demands an undivided service and love. "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart."

Some Things Worth Considering. BY JOHN HAYES.

Last night (January 8) after our family prayers and Bible lesson, wife and I were talking over the work we had done and the sacrifices we had made during the past year to extend the kingdom of our Lord upon this earth. As we discussed the lesson and reflected over the life and sacrifices of the apostle Paul and the early Christians, we were free to confess that ours was indeed a small work.

When the first copy of the Gospel Advocate for the new year came today, I read Brother Hall's article, and have just finished reading it the second time. Brother, read it over again, and let every word burn deep down into your heart. Also read these words from Him who died for you; "For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son," Yes, when we were without God and without hope in the world, God so loved us that he gave his Son as a ransom for us. If we believe this with all our heart, surely we will not be satisfied with the labor done nor the sacrifices made in the past, but with a thankful heart we will press forward with a more determined effort to live better and do more in the work of saving souls and encouraging the weak. Do you at times feel that you are alone in the fight? Do you at times think there is no use to make the effort? Then go back to the garden and there see the Savior, forsaken and betrayed. Then follow him on to Calvary, and hear him ery: "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" He never faltered, but went forward to accomplish the work of his Father. Believing this, why should you become discouraged? Think of the life and suffering of Paul; and yet he says: "These light afflictions . . . work out for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." Have you ever been stoned, shipwrecked, naked, hungry, or beaten with rods and east into prison for serving the Lord? Brother, sister, let us determine that we will do more than ever before in the work of the Lord.

Before I close, let me commend the words of Brother Foy E. Wallace, Sr., in the same issue of the Advocate (January 6). I have wanted to say something along this line for a long time. In a certain town where I once lived a lawyer ran for county attorney. In all his speeches that I heard he tried to find favor with the people and ride into office by running down the other fellow. For a number of years it has seemed to me that some writers and preachers, instead of gaining prominence by their own worth, have sought to become leaders by writing and talking against the Advocate or some of its editors. But for the firm stand and noble fight made by the Advocate, our Southland would have been overrun with digression. The first copy of the new year is worth the price of a year's subscription. I pray for its continued success through many years to come.

SIMPLE MIXTURE MAKES HENS LAY

By W. S. BURGESS

Any poultry raiser can greatly increase his profits easily and quickly by taking advantage of the thirty-live years' experience of a successful poultryman.

A lifelong study of egg production has resulted in a secret formula of buttermilic and other valuable ingredients that puts "pep" into lazy hens. Users report increases of two to seven times as many eggs.

This secret formula is now put up in tablet form, and is called "Combs' Buttermilk Compound Tablets." Simply feed in water or mix with feed.

I am so convinced that this wonderful formula is always successful that I say kill. the hen that won't lay after using it.

One million new users are wanted: so for a limited time any reader of this paper can get a big double-size box (enough for a seasor) on free trial by simply writing for it. Send no money. Use the tablets thirty days. If at the end of that time your hens are not laying two or three times as many eggs, if you are not more than satisfied in every way, the tablets are to cost you nothing. If completely satisfied, this big, double-size box costs you only $1.90 on this introductory offer. Not only do they make this exceptional offer, but the tablets give such universal satisfaction that a big bank GUAR-ANTEES that they will live up to every word of their offer. With the box of tablets you will be sent a letter from the Broadway State Bank which reads in part as follows: "You, therefore, take no risk whatsoever in ordering a package of tablets from them, as this bank will refund out of this deposit the $1.09 you send them, provided the Milk Products Company fails to do as agreed." Because you are fully protected and are the sole judge as to whether you want your money back, it is asked as an evidence of good faith on your part that you pay the mail man the $1.00 when he delivers the package. Woman's Work in the Church.

BY MRS. P. M. HOWSE.

(Read before the ladies' meeting of the Tenth and Francis Streets church of Christ, Oklahoma City, Okla., December 14, 1920.)

The great plan of redemption, as outlined in the holy Scriptures, has not as its object the salvation of man alone, but it includes woman also. That plan deals with both, and ascribes to each a place, with its resultant responsibility and work. Nor do I believe that God has, in his wisdom, made such a vast difference between the man and the woman, since he has taken the close relation that they bear one another to teach the relationship of Christ to the church, (See Eph. 5: 24.) If the woman must be silent in all things, and her relation to the husband is the same as that of the church of Christ, then would not that destroy the work of the church?

I find that the woman must be in subjection to her husband, with the conditions that the case might warrant. She must not usurp authority over the man. But yet there is a work for her to do. Witness the case of Phæbe. She helped Paul in the work of the gospel. After his parting from her he wrote, in the Roman letter, commending her, and asked that she might be assisted in whatever she might need and desire help for as a deaconess. This case proves that woman may be an invaluable help. under the guidance of a godly man. (Rom. 16: 1, 2.)

Then look at the great example of Dorcas. (Acts 9: 36-39.) She was "full of good works"-the works that any faithful woman in Christ would commend herself by doing. Her loving hands made garments to clothe the poor. What an example for us! We of this place should be up and doing.

Considerable notice is given in the Scriptures to Priscilla. She was a woman of great ability, both in deeds of charity and in teaching the gospel. (See Acts 18, 19.) She, with her husland, taught Apollos, a brilliant orator and able teacher, "the way of God more accurately." So there are women who are good teachers in the private sense. And there are others who are capable of doing more in other ways.

Others might be mentioned, but these are enough for the present, They are examples for the women in the church of Christ to pattern after. We sisters understand that we should not usurp authority over the man. But the Master, through the apostles, has taught the man to recognize the Christian woman as a helper in the church. She should be taught, and should be given a work to do. The man loving and giving honor unto the wife, the wife acknowledging the husband as the head and serving under and with him, the work should go on in harmony and peace. This spirit of unity between the sexes should permeate the entire church of Christ. All should work together for one grand end-namely, the salvation of the souls of the lost.

CHURCH NEWS

Alabama.

Montgomery, January 18.—The work in Montgomery is moving on nicely. Sunday was a big day with us at the Highland Park Church. Seven were added by relationship. A good contribution was made for the starving children in Europe. The church has a mind to work. Our protracted meeting will begin the first Sunday in April, conducted by Brother H. Leo Boles.—J. H. Hines.

Athens, January 20.—I preached last Lord's day to a large and enthusiastic congregation at Corinth. Brother Pepper, one of our true and tried preachers, was with us and made encouraging remarks at the Lord's table. Our congregation at night in Athens was the largest we have had. We have the best prayer-meeting crowds of any place that I have ever labored. The work is promising and encouraging, even though some of our members are having to leave us on account of the financial crisis which has hit this country very hard. I am asking all the churches in the county to assist this work by their presence and prayers.—J. W. Brents.

Arkansas.

Fort Smith, January 17.—Yesterday was a great day with the Park Hill Church. Brother Combs preached at the morning service, while I was out in the country with the faithful few at Flat Rock Church. I preached at home in the evening, and we had three confessions. We have had twelve additions (five by baptism) since the preachers' meeting. I will teach a singing school for the brethren at Wesley during the latter part of February.—Will W. Slater.

Louisiana.

Haynesville, January 17.—I spent the first Lord's day in this month with brethren and old friends at Mount Vernon, Miss., preaching morning and night to good crowds. I have preached for them thirteen years, and they decided to have me preach for them again this year. I preached at Union Grove, La., on the second Lord's day, morning and night; then did some house-to-house preaching, in which I think considerable interest was aroused in some who seldom attend church. I have promised to preach monthly for this congregation. This is the home of Brother and Sister S. J. McKinzie, lifelong friends of the Gospel Advocate, and who on January 12 celebrated their "golden wedding." It was my pleasure to spend the night with them. They have eight children, thirty-six grandchildren, and one greatgrandchild. All of them that are members of any church are members of the church of Christ. From here I went to Haynesville, La., preaching on Sunday and Sunday night. I will preach for them once each month. I will also preach at home—Pearl, Miss.—once a month. This is the only congregation in Simpson County, one which I set in order (with forty-one members) last year.—W. H. Sandy.

Oklahoma.

Elk City, January 17 .- Yesterday was another good day with the faithful members of the church of Christ here. We are growing, both in spir-itual strength and in numbers. Three more ladies were added at the morning service vesterday, which makes a total of sixteen that have been added since my regular work with the church here began, on the first Sunday in last month. We have not been able to do as much personal work as we expect to do when we get better acquainted and the winter is past. At present we have some six hundred or more cases of smallpox. All things considered, we are, I am sure, in better condition than ever before. We are expecting Brother J. W. Dunn to do the preaching in our meeting dur-ing the month of April, and if nothing happens we will have everything made ready to his hand .- J. A. Cullum.

Texas.

Port Arthur, January 19.-I will labor with the church here this year. Prospects for growth are bright. C. D. Crouch.

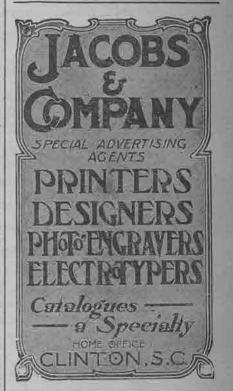

Munday, January 12.-The work at this place starts off in good order. Our crowds are good and the attention is fine. The brethren have a mind to work. Some of the absentees are coming back again. My work for 1920 consisted of six months' work at Altus, Okla., thirteen protracted meetings, and a debate with a Baptist preacher.-John M. Rice.

Austin, January 10.—During the month of December I visited a few of the churches in South Texas-Corpus Christi, Robstown, Bishop, and Sinton. I found the brethren all awake to their duty. Brother C. W. Sewell has worked efficiently in the building of a real church edifice at Corpus Christi. The house is modern and good. Brother F. J. Berry is giving his time to the work there, and all indications are for great good to re-sult. On the fourth Sunday in December, morning and night, I had the pleasure of preaching at Bishop to a full house of zealous brethren and their neighbors. At all the places mentioned the brethren received me gladly and invited me to come again. I met many of my old-time friends on this trip, and it was a source of pleasure to meet them. I know many brethren in Texas would be glad to know how I am progressing with the construction of the tabernacle at Aus-The tabernacle will be ready for use on or about the first of April of this year. When completed, it will cover practically a lot sixty-two by one hundred and twenty-five feet. tabernacle is being built in the Hyde Park addition to the town of Austin, which has a population of about six thousand. It will be of great benefit to the cause in this town. We hope to to the cause in this town. We hope to have it finished in time for the first meeting in it to begin on April 1, 1921. -H. F. Oliver.

Thankfulness tends to quell repining, to enhance enjoyment, to soothe distress, to allay anxiety, to deepen penitence, to brighten hope, and serves to strengthen for endurance and exertion.-Selected.

Cured His RUPTUI

I was badly ruptured while lifting a trunk several years ago. Doctors said my only hope of cure was an operation. Trusses did me no good. Finally I got hold of something that quickly and completely cured me. Years have passed and the rupture has nover returned, although I am doing hard work as a carpenter. There was no operation, no lost time, no trouble. I have nothing to sell; but will give full information about how you may find a complete cure without operation, if you write to me, Eugene M. Pullen, Carpenter, 354 G Marcellus Avenue, Manasquan, N. J. Better cut out this notice and show it to any others who are ruptured—you may save a life, or at least stop the misery of rupture and the worry and danger of an operation.

Look on the Fields.

BY W. J. CAMPBELL.

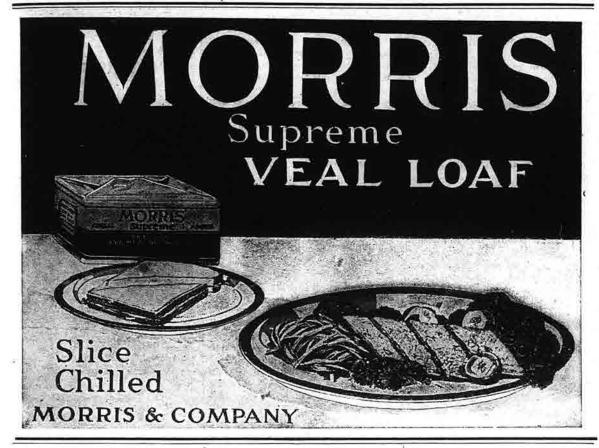

Brethren, we have the truth, but it seems to me sometimes we have been selfish with it and do not care much whether others hear it or not. We have the knowledge of God, at least to some extent, and know his right-eousness; but we have been lacking very much in zeal in spreading the knowledge of his right-eousness.

The zeal of many who hold a perverted gospel should put us to shame and wake us up to carry the truth to others. Take, for example, the socalled "apostolics;" in a few years they have spread their teachings all over the country. They have manifested great zeal, going miles to attend their meetings, pushing their preachers out in every place they could, and going with them to help. If we had only half the zeal they have manifested, by this time we would have carried the true message to all the world. Yet we sit still and do little, and let the false teachers far cutstrip us in zeal, earnestness, and sacrifice. It is high time for us to have our zeal for the church of God awakened and get busy in the work God expects us to do, lest we be cast off by him as unworthy and unprofita-

Take the great number of what we are pleased to call the "loyal" churches. How much are they doing to advance the kingdom of God bevond their own meetinghouse? Most of them are doing little or nothing, I am sorry to say. But internal trouble, bickering, and strife have arisen, and many have grown cold and died. No church that refuses to do its duty along this line can expect to live and prosper as it should. Satan will get in his divisive work and trouble will come when we are not interested in and busy at God's work. 'The churches that are awake and doing their duty along this line will prosper.

Some churches have refused to have meetings held in near-by communities for fear that, if a new church is established, it will take some of their members. Churches that take such an attitude against taking the gospel to their neighbors will soon begin to dwindle in interest and members. Let us take the gospel to the people, even if the establishing of a new church should take half the members of the old one. That is God's way. The interest in the new field will add interest in the older church, and it will grow.

Some churches seem to act as if they thought it altogether out of place for them to support a meeting outside of their own meetinghouse. They will give for preaching if it is in their chapel; but if somewhere else in the neighborhood around, they will not support it with their presence or money. Are such churches and brethren true to Christ and the gospel?

We rightly oppose the organization of missionary societies through which to have the gospel preached; but are we any more approved of God than those who, work through societies, when we refuse to do the work through the church? How does God look on us when we let his work go without our aid and interest?

Let us lift up our eyes and look on the fields; and, seeing the great need of laborers to gather the perishing souls, let us go ourselves or help in sending laborers, that some may be saved.

The Cause of Christ in New York City.

BY W. S. LONG.

The churches of Christ throughout America and England would be glad to know something of the church in New York City. A few brief statements may be in order. There are about twenty-five faithful members who meet weekly, though there are others in New York who should come to the services. The hall where the saints meet is located at 239 West Sixty-ninth Street. The time is from 2 to 4 P.M. each Lord's day. The invitation reads: "The church of Christ, 239 West Sixty-ninth Street, New York City, pleading for a complete return to primitive Christianity. Services each Lord's-day afternoon from two to four o'clock. You will find a real welcome and genuine friendship. You are invited. Will you come?"

Brother Morgan H. Carter labored with them a short time last summer and set them in order, though Brother R. Johnson, his mother and brother's family, had been breaking bread in New Jersey for several years. Brethren Johnson and McKee have been acting as elders, and are faithful in the Lord's work.

The church should get behind a good, hard-working preacher and send him to New York and support him three hundred and sixty-five days in the year. A man who is not willing to sacrifice need not think of going. With outside help, I know this little congregation can pay a gospel preacher a good living wage. Such is worthy of his hire. Think of it, brethren-only twenty-five members in a city of seven million people! Brethren are there from England and from the extreme parts of the United States. The churches should begin right now to send contributions monthly to support a preacher. How many will do it? Maybe a few congregations could send a preacher to this field and give him half his living. If so, the little band there will raise the other half. They are liberal givers and hard workers.

In Washington, Baltimore, Philadelphia, and New York City combined there are not less than ten million five hundred thousand people, and only three small congregations who worship as "it is written." Can we not send more preachers into this destitute field, to live here and plant primitive Christianity?

If you desire to know more about the work in New York, write to George W. McKee, 105 West Sixty-fourth Street, New York City.

RECIPE FOR GRAY HAIR.

To ½ pint of water add 1 ounce of bay rum, a small box of Barbo Compound, and ¼ ounce of glycerine. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it at home at very little cost. Apply to the hair twice a week until the desired shade is obtained. It will gradually darken streaked, faded, or gray hair and make it soft and glossy. It will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy, and does not rub off.

Making Laws Where God Has Made None.

BY W. N. ABERNATHY.

The above caption has been suggested to me by the writings of Brother David Lipscomb. In pointing out the inconsistencies of some brother who was straining out a gnat, he would show that he was trying to make laws concerning things that God had left to human judgment. this article I wish to discuss some things that, in my judgment, are seriously hindering the work of the church. Man is a creature of ex-tremes. In opposing one error, he is prone to fall into another. A pendulum, in overcoming the momentum that has lifted it to one extreme point in its arc, will swing to the opposite extreme; but if left free from any force to resist, it will come to rest on the middle point. The people who have adopted the motto of speaking where the Bible speaks and keeping silent where the Bible is silent, in opposing the humanly devised methods of the sects, have fallen into some very poor business habits. .I cannot take the time to go into details with this subject, but will mention a few things to illustrate what I mean.

There is not a congregation in my knowledge that does not have one or more members who oppose the use of the quarterlies. This is an extreme to which they have drifted in opposing the written creeds of the sects. They do not realize that their arguments, to be consistent, would do away with the concordance, marginal references, and even the spelling book. The spelling book is a very important help in studying the Bible; and though not in exactly the same category as the quarterly, it seems to me about as unreasonable to oppose the one as the other. If one of these same brethren who oppose the use of the quarterlies were to undertake to teach a class in the Bible, he would likely make up an outline and prepare a lot of comments similar to those in the quarterly. Then what is the difference in using his own outline and comments and those in the quarterly, which have likely been much better prepared? If the brother who prepared the comments in the quarterly were present, would any one object to his making the same comments orally to the class? When Christ said to the apostles, "Go, teach," he did not limit their teaching to any particular method. Peter found it expedient to address the multitude in a public way on Pentecost. The Spirit directed Philip to go sit in the charlot and instruct the Ethiopian officer. Priscilla and Aquila saw fit to take Apollos aside and teach him privately. Paul taught in the school of Tyrannus. Timothy was instructed to preach the word urgently in season and out of season. Parents are instructed to teach their children. Aged women should train the younger women. We are to teach by word and example. Could any one object to teaching by pictures? I find the blackboard quite an auxiliary, as well as well maps. I sometimes read a short article from some religious paper to my classes. Sometimes a child is encouraged to recite a piece that teaches a good lesson.

Another extreme is found in church discipline. Our preachers have taught us that we cannot turn a member out of the church. As we cannot find any specific example or form for withdrawing from disorderly members, a shameful laxity has resulted, and many congregations have gone to wreck as the result. Withdrawing from those whose leaven is harmful is a matter for each congregation to consider according to its own peculiar circumstances. Of course a public trial in which all classes, including the young and inexperienced, are called upon to vote their own sentiments, could hardly be thought of. Withdrawal is both congregational and personal. It is the duty of the elders to see that each and every member, as well as the church as a body, withdraws from those whose influence is harmful to the cause of Christ. Doing things "decently and in order" requires the use of a good, well-arranged church register, but this is not absolutely es-

Now, as the opposing force of sectarianism gives way, probably the churches will assume more of a middle ground; but let us hope that they will not do like the pendulum-come to a standstill.

Edifying as the Need May Be

"See That Ye Hasten the Matter."

In the second book of Chronicles we are told that "Joash was seven years old when he began to reign; and he reigned forty years in Jerusalem." He is regarded as one of the best of Judah's kings. One of the signal events of his reign was the repairing of the temple. We naturally associate the name of this king with his chest. But we would not have thought much of Joash or of his chest in this connection, if the chest had been found empty following his noted proclamation. It was the liberality of his people and the quickness of their response that has given that homely receptacle its enviable position in Old Testament history. We should especially note the urgency displayed by the boy king in this matter. "He gathered together the priests and the Levites, and said to them, Go out into the cities of Judah, and gather of all Israel money to repair the house of your God from year to year; and see that ye hasten the matter."

"The Age of Machinery."

One of the outstanding marks of the age in which we live is speed; so much so that it would not be amiss among other designations to speak of it as the "age of speed." The civilized world has been tending that way for a hundred years. It has hastened the swiftness of production by bringing in what men have called "the age of machinery." The swiftness of output has been truly remarkable. The day of sewing by hand has given way to sewing by machine; the age of homespun, to spinning and weaving by machinery; the age of setting type and printing by hand, to the steam press and the linotype. It is so in transportation. Some of the old pictures of our Presidents appear almost ludicrous in the light of modern invention. Isn't young Garfield a sight to behold in that picture where he is riding a mule that pulls a canal boat? Isn't it almost unbelievable to hear that Andrew Jackson journeyed all the way from the Hermitage to the nation's capital in a stagecoach? The stagecoach has been superseded by the palace car and the automobile; the canal boat, by the ocean greyhound. In the olden days messages were sent by footmen, by couriers, and by carrier pigeons. This is the day of the telephone, the telegram, the cablegram, the marconigram. And the latest convenience is a mail service by aëroplane. We never had so many labor-saving, time-saving, distance-annihilating appliances as we have to-day. What a big world it is in which we live, compared with the world of five hundred or a thousand years ago! A modern writer draws the comparison: "Euripides' world was a little city full of people under a templed hill. Virgil's world was Rome. Racine's world was Paris. Shakespeare's world was London. But what are the bounds of the modern man's world? It is a bewildering multitudinous humanity that lies before our vision. Nothing human is alien to the mind of the modern man. Their line is gone out into all the earth and their words to the end of the world. Our interests are multiplied a thousandfold, and yet life seems so little and so short."

When Speed Becomes a Curse.

The wise man spoke of "feet that are running to mischief." And Paul, quoting from the Psalms of David, describes a certain class by saying: "Their feet are swift to shed blood; destruction and misery are in their ways; and the way of peace have they not known: there is no fear of God before their eyes." These passages bring home the serious and solemn truth that swiftness is often a curse. William George Jordan says: "Hurry is the scourge of America. It is both a cause and a result of our highpressure civilization. Hurry is the deathblow to calmness, to dignity, to poise. The old-time courtesy went out when the new-time hurry came in." To the man who only takes minutes to eat and digest his food this writer sounds a note of warning: "Hurry is the father of dyspepsia. Hurry means the breakdown of health. It is the royal road to nervous prostration."

Our schools and colleges are in a hurry, and parents who would educate their children are in a hurry. A distinguished educator says: "Children are forced to go through a series of studies that sweep the circle of all human wisdom. They hurry the children into a hundred textbooks, then into ill health, then into life."

Business is in a hurry, with all the shoddy goods it turns out and all the pathetic human breakdowns it involves. It explains the mania for gambling and wild speculation. They that haste to be rich fall into many snares.

The pleasure seeker is in a hurry. A friend from Louisville, Ky., who is a physician, told me how he was driving his car on one of the pikes, returning from a sick call, when he came to another car that had been almost wrecked by running into a telegraph pole. The occupants of this machine were four young men, all of them in a drunken, debauched condition. "What was my surprise and grief," he said, "when I looked into the faces, to discover that two of them were the sons of my best friend! I could not help from associating their shameful condition, as well as their accident, with the possession of the car. The speed mania was the cause of both. Their father meant well when he gave them the car, but unconsciously he had set them on the road to hell."

The reformer is in a hurry. He wants to redeem the world all at once. As Theodore Parker said of the anti-slavery cause: "The trouble seems to be that God is not in a hurry, but I am." We are beset with panaceas that are to regenerate human society in some wholesale, external, mechanical way. We are afflicted with half-thought-out, ill-digested legislation. "Raw haste is half sister to delay." We see its effects everywhere.

Travelers are in a hurry. People want to see the world in thirty-five days. The psalmist says to "behold the beauty of the Lord." How little there is in these days of beholding things! Is not seeing—really seeing things—becoming a lost art? What do we know about the "harvest of the quiet eye?" We are on the gallop. No, that will hardly express it. It is the sixty-horse-power motor we want. We have coined a word to supplant the old word "see." We speak of "doing" a place. People rush through the great galleries of the world, with all the accumulated art of centuries, in a half hour and say: "We have 'done it." We forget that the more we hurry, the less we really live, and the things that really make life are the things out of which haste forever cheats a man."

Don't Crowd Out the Best.

We should recognize our human limitations. We can't be everything and see everything and know everything and do everything. As Tennyson says: "The artist is known by his self-limitation." Do not crowd the program of life. Don't try to do too many things. Don't accept all invitations. Don't join everything in creation. Is not the church of the living God big enough for all true purposes in a man's heart? Don't crowd your life with secondary and subordinate issues so that the great issues get no place. Abide your time. Earn your happiness. Remember the words of John Ruskin: "He only is advancing in life whose heart is getting softer, whose blood warmer, whose spirit is entering into living peace."

PELOUBET'S NOTES FOR 1921 NOW READY.

"Peloubet's Notes" has been issued for forty-seven years with ever-increasing popularity and usefulness, which fact alone is a wonderful argument for its value and helpfulness. It is rich in material, comprehensive in its scope, and practical in its treatment. Every superintendent, teacher, and scholar will find in it his own personal requirements. The editor of The Outlook says: "We give first place to Peloubet's." Marion Lawrance, the noted Sunday-school worker, writes: "How this standard commentary has been able to maintain itself during all these years, growing annually stronger and richer, is a marvel to the Sunday-school world. Personally, I do not see how any Sunday-school teacher can hope to do his best without the rich, full helps found in these 'Notes.'"

"Preach the Word."

BY JAMES E. SCOBEY.

So far as I am advised and believe, there never has been a time since the day of Pentecost in which it was more necessary or more important than now to preach the word. No one has ever received a more solemn and impressive charge than that given by Paul to the evangelist Timothy when he said: "I charge thee therefore before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom; preach the word." (2 Tim. 4: 1, 2.) But this charge does not personally and only apply to Timothy; it applies with equal force and solemnity to every man who preaches, or professes to preach and teach, the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. The misfortune of the present age, or, as for that, of the ages past, is that teachers have not universally been content to speak and teach the word of God. Peter, in harmony with the charge given by Paul to Timothy, said: "If any man speak, let him speak as the oracles of God." (1 Pet. 4: 11.)

In the course of my life I have heard charges given to preachers of the various denominations. If a young man feels that he ought to be and wants to be a preacher in or for one of the different churches, he will more than likely seek some school having the cooperation of the church, or denomination, he expects to serve, to study theology, and particularly the doctrines of that church. Then, having completed his course, he appears before a committee, a priest, the presbytery, the bishop, or other church authority, for examination; and if in the judgment of his examiners he is found sound in the faith-the doctrines of the church-he then is ordained to the ministry. When he is sent to a church, or called to become its "pastor." usually a day is appointed for his installation. To install means to put in a stall, where the fodder is usually found for substance. One preacher may deliver the installation sermon. Another may deliver the charge to the preacher being installed; and the charge usually consists in a strong appeal for him to be strong in the Lord and in the power of his might, and to fail not to maintain the doctrines and usuages of the church. Still another preacher, perhaps, may deliver a charge to the congregation, insisting on their full cooperation with their paster as their spiritual adviser, and especially that they muzzle not the ox that treadeth out the corn. Most of these proceedings are somewhat different from Paul's charge to Timothy: "Preach the word."

The value of the word of God to the world has never been appreciated. Early training in families, in Sunday schools, in Young People's Christian Endeavor Societies and other semireligious societies, and in other associations, may do good in training the young to be morally good, but fall far short of inculcating the doctrine of God our Savior in the things necessary to their salvation from the condemnation of sins past and the consequences of sins in the future. Many come to believe that to be a member in one or more of these societies, and thus to do good, is a means of securing life eternal.

The homes are rearing their children to believe the usages and doctrines of the church to which they belong are all of God's word. The children go to the Sunday school, and there the things they have been taught in the home are strongly enforced by the Sunday-school teacher; and then the preacher, the acknowledged spiritual adviser, has his say, and he strongly indorses and emphasizes the teaching of the home and the Sunday school; and thus is crystallized in the mind and hearts of the young what they have been taught. They are thoroughly prepossessed of their religious beliefs, and from this prepossession the strongest prejudice generally is engendered. This would all be well enough if they have received only the truth; but if error, it is a sad circumstance in their lives.

This procedure on the part of families, Sunday schools, preachers, and semireligious institutions can never bring about the unity of the faith and the oneness of professed Christians so devoutly to be wished; but, upon the other hand, they are the formidable barriers to what is called "Christian union." But we cannot expect people, homes. Sunday schools, preachers, and teachers to do otherwise, if they are honest in their beliefs. I grant their honesty, and do not blame them for their teaching; but they are to be blamed for another thing, and which, if corrected upon their part, would prepare them, or some of them, to believe and to teach differently from their accustomed teaching, because while they differ in teaching all of them cannot be teaching the truth. Only one of the parties may be teaching the truth, and, as for that, none may be teaching the whole truth and nothing but the truth.

Now, in the present circumstances, if all the religious teachers are perfectly honest in their convictions, I maintain that they are pursuing the very course they must pursue, and you cannot blame them for it. All admit that error is being taught, but no one of the denominations seems to be willing to plead guilty. If some of the members of these churches should hear a preacher preach something differing from or opposing what they believe, though he quote Scripture to prove it, they would think the preacher either an infidel or a "Campbellite."

As I have said, and as I believe, the teachers and preachers generally in the churches are honest in holding and teaching what they believe to be the truth and to be in harmony with the word of God; and as they could not in honesty pursue any other course while so convicted, and are not to be blamed by men for doing the things which they do, what is to be done that the truth upon all subjects pertaining to life and godliness may be more fully known, and harmony of teaching and worship he restored to those professing to be the followers of the Lord Jesus Christ?

I may have something further to say upon the subject of conscientious convictions and honesty, if circumstances permit. What I have said may not be fully understood unless I follow this with the suggested article.

Are the Tares in the Church? BY E. E. SEWELL.

I am not satisfied with Brother McQuiddy's answer to the query as to the location of the tares, in the Gospel Advocate of December 23, and feel that the lesson taught by our Savior is important enough for a reconsideration of the subject.

In attempting to show that the tares are not in the church, Brother McQuiddy says: "Christ tells us very plainly that the field in which the tares were sown is the world. Then, this settles the question beyond a doubt that the tares were not in the church, but in the world." But where was the wheat sown? Was it not sown "in the world" also? Therefore, according to Brother McQuiddy's logic, neither wheat nor tares are in the church! Brother McQuiddy makes the mistake of confusing the literal and the figurative meaning of the phrase "in the world." The seed was sown "in the world" literally; while Brother McQuiddy argues from the figurative meaning of the phrase "in the world" as contrasted with "in the church." Better "fess up," Brother Mac, that you were nodding all through that article!

As far as the wheat is concerned, no one, so far as I know, denies that it is in the church. Therefore, the church and the kingdom must be identical, or, at least, so related that those who are in one are in the other also.

The only issue, then, is whether the "tares," which are "the sons of the evil one," are in the church. That there are plenty of them outside the church, no one doubts, and no messenger from God is needed to tell us so. But are any of them inside?

In parables, two things are compared, and it is necessary for us to learn what is the point of the comparison. In the parable of the tares, a field of wheat and tares, the sower, his servants, and his enemy are compared with the kingdom of heaven, the Son of man, his angels, his enemy (Satan), and the sons of the kingdom and the sons of the evil one. Now, what is the point of this comparison? In what respect are these two things alike? Is the kingdom of heaven likened unto a field of clean, pure wheat, with nothing else in it whatever? If so, we should conclude, by analogy, that no tares are in the church. But if no tares were in the field, why should the servants bother to gather them out? Why should there be any danger at all of rooting out the wheat with the tares? It is clear enough, therefore, that since both wheat and tares were in the same field, both sons of the kingdom and sons of the evil one are in the same kingdom or church, or there is no point in the comparison. The same truth is repeated and emphasized in the parable of the fishes, in the same chapter. The net which was let down into the sea drew up, not good fish only, leaving the bad in the sea, but good and bad both. Furthermore, if any additional evidence is needed to make the point more abundantly evident, Jesus supplies it when he says: "The Son of man shall send forth his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that cause stumbling, and them that do iniquity." If these things had not been in the kingdom, they could not be gathered out of it.

But Brother McQuiddy says (if I understand him) that this kingdom is not the church, but God's general rule. If so, it is a very strange thing that Jesus should mean one kingdom in his parable and an entirely different kingdom in his interpretation of that parable!

The lesson that Jesus teaches, then, is clear enough: that in his kingdom, or church, here below, both faithful and unfaithful servants shall be found side by side till the end of the age.

In conclusion, let us consider what this truth means to us. In a literal field, it is impossible for wheat to change to tares, or tares to wheat. But it is not so in the world of men. The whole tenor of Scripture teaching is to the effect that sons of the kingdom may change to sons of the evil one, and that sons of the evil one, whether in the church of out of it, may turn to God and be saved. If, then, we number ourselves among the saved, "let us give more earnest heed to the things we have heard, lest we drift away from them." If we number ourselves among the tares, let us thank God that he has willed to "let them alone until the harvest;" that we have time and opportunity to get right with God. And when that last great day of separation comes, God grant that you and I, dear reader, be not of those who say, "Lord, Lord," and do not the things which are written; that we be not among the tares which are to be burned with fire; not among the foolish virgins who put no oil in their vessels and were shut out of the kingdom; and not among those on the left hand, to whom it shall be said; "Depart from me, ye cursed, into the eternal fire, prepared for the devil and his angels."

There is a dictagraph concealed on every man's soul. What he says and does and is is duly recorded. This is his contribution to life, to humanity, to the universe, to God. Angels may keep their own set of books, but we ourselves are authors of our own book of life. Like Paul, we may bear in our bodies the marks of the Lord Jesus; certainly we bear in our souls the marks our own wills and choices have made.—F. F. Shannon.

Georgia and the Far Southern Field By B. O. GOODPASTURE

The Death of a Good Woman.

On Sunday morning, January 23, at four o'clock, the longwished-for, long-expected summons came to Sister Elizabeth Jones, who had been in the Home of the Incurables in this city for more than eighteen years. Through all these years she was bedridden and severely afflicted. She was in "a strait betwixt the two, having the desire to depart and be with Christ: for it is very far better." (Phil. 1: 23.) Five or six years ago she became a Christian under the preaching of Brother Hall, at a service conducted in the Home. At that time she was about seventy-five years old. On account of her not having any near relatives or lifelong acquaintances here, I am not able to be definite in the matter of giving dates. But there are other things connected with her life still more important, as all who knew her will gladly testify. The result of her afflictions was that predicted by Job as the final consequence of his: "When he hath tried me, I shall come forth as gold." (Job 23: 10.) There were many characteristics in her life worthy of our consideration and imitation.

Hers was a sense of appreciation like that of the leper who left the nine and returned to the Master to express his gratitude. (Luke 17: 15.) For the cards, letters, visits, gifts, and prayers of her friends she was sincerely thankful-she saw God in the blessings received and gave him thanks. Gratitude is a crown jewel of a finished character. It is the memory of the heart. Gratitude in her long-protracted baptism of mortal suffering and affliction! What a lesson to us who have in this life a more favored lot! In this particular she impressed one as having always before her Paul's admonition: "In nothing be anxious; but in everything by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your requests be made known unto God. And the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, shall guard your hearts and your thoughts in Christ Jesus." (Phil. 4: 6, 7.)

Perhaps her simple, sweet, sublime faith in God has made the finest impression on the hearts of those who knew her. With a trustful resignation she believed "that to them that love God all things work together for good, even to them that are called according to his purpose' (Rom. 8: 28); that "our light affliction, which is for the moment, worketh for us more and more exceedingly an eternal weight of glory" (2 Cor. 4: 17); and "that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed to us-ward" (Rom. 8: 17). Her faith was such that she "endured, as seeing him who is invisible." (Heb. 11: 27.) To her, faith was, indeed, "assurance of things hoped for, a conviction of things not seen." (Heb. 11: 1.) She loved the Bible because she believed it. I shall never forget the time when I read to her John's description of the Eternal City. When I came to that wonderful statement, "He [God] shall wipe away every tear from their eyes; and death shall be no more; neither shall there be mourning, nor crying, nor pain, any more" (Rev. 21: 4), her pain-racked body quivered with emotion, and, looking up through her tear-filled eyes, she exclaimed triumphantly: "O, I won't have to suffer any more! My pains will all be gone, when I get home to my Father." Then she broke down and went for joy. It was an impressive scene. Her faith enabled her to grasp the promises of God as eternal realities. She looked to the time of her departure as a homesick child would to the time of its home-coming. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord from henceforth: yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; for their works follow with them." (Rev. 14: 13.)

There was a packed house at the morning service at West End Avenue yesterday (January 23). Two took membership with the local congregation.

Fine audiences greeted Brethren Rogers and Garrett at South Pryor and East Point, respectively.

The union meeting conducted by the three congregations at West End last night was "a season of refreshing."

A New Book.

BY F. W. SMITH.

A new book will soon be offered to the public by the McQuiddy Printing Company, edited by M. C. Kurfees, one of the most accurate and painstaking writers of the day. The book is entitled "Queries and Answers," by David Lipscomb and E. G. Sewell, and contains seven hundred and sixty-seven pages of matter, bound in cloth, with splendid type. This work will not be a repetition of the splendid work gotten out by Brother J. W. Shepherd, but deals with the joint labors of Brethren Lipscomb and Sewell untouched in "Queries and Answers." The work of such men as David Lipscomb and E. G. Sewell should be preserved in a permanent form and should be one of the rich assets of every home. These godly men and profound students of God's word have left on record through the pages of the Gospel Advocate one of the richest treasures that could be bequeathed to the world-viz., their life's work, consisting in a rich storehouse of invaluable knowledge of the holy oracles. We can no longer sit at the feet of these servants of God and listen to the living voice, and yet we can hear them through what they have left on record. But this vast material is scattered along the pages of the Gospel Advocate through forty years, and in that form is within the reach of but few people. It is too precious and too valuable to thus remain in obscurity; hence it was deemed wise and for the good of not only the present generation, but coming generations, to collate and put it in book form. It has required much labor and much pains to bring to the homes of the people this precious volume. Owing to the high cost of material and labor, the book will have to sell at three dollars and fifty cents, but this is but a pittance in comparison to the spiritual value of the work. Order the book, read it, and leave it as one of the rich heritages to your children.

CURRENT THOUGHT

Blocking the War Game.

There are no strong signs just now that the civil governments of the earth are doing anything impressive to block the game of war in the future. It appears that the nations are still under the hallucination that diplomacy and "preparedness" will ward off this age-long curse of the human race. All history gives the lie to that; but if our statesmen are reading, they show no evidence that their eyes are open to its most potent lessons. Even dull people cannot be perpetually outwitted by diplomacy, and the imperial spirit of man cannot be awed into cowardice and slavery by big standing armies and powerful military machines.

Perhaps it is too much to expect that governments, whose chief concern, of necessity, must be with matter and force, will easily be brought to trust the cogency of right and the power of reason.

But church leaders have learned the lesson, if the leaders of State have not, and there is great activity on both sides of the sea to grow such a spirit of righteous brotherhood that war will eventually become an impossibility. Very idealistic, certainly; but the man with the ideal proves in the end to be the man with the remedy.

Visitors returning from beyond the Atlantic tell us that urope is sick of war. The nations are trying to heal Europe is sick of war. The nations are trying to heal their sores. There is still desperate hatred between dif-ferent peoples and different religious bodies and there is much persecution-"sometimes directed at Roman Catholics, sometimes Presbyterians and Baptists, and always But, in the face of this, the Christian leaders of the world are urging peace and mutual confidence, instead of suspicion and hatred.

There has sprung up a powerful body known as "The World Alliance for Promoting International Friendship," and its chief object is set forth by its name. This body urges coöperation among the people and affirms that "There is no more urgent need at the present historic moment than to check the progressive dissolution of the moral forces brought about by the war, and the consequent intensification of the passions and hatreds among the races. We therefore point out to the churches and to all believers urgent duty of making and maintaining in all the world, and especially in those countries that have been at war, an intense and fraternal effort to overcome the bitterness and rancor of strife and to move to feelings of generosity and Christian love, so that all may feel themselves to be brethren and unite in working together for the common good.'

Such movements are constructive forces in the Christian education and discipline of the world feeling and are the only hope of exorcising the war spirit.

The world is to be set right by the gospel of Christ. Civilization must be Christianized. This can only be done by thorough Christian education in place of our present half-pagan systems.

The followers of Christ, and they alone, can block the war game. They must, they will, or paganism will drive the nations to pessimism and despair.-Christian-Evangelist.

It is encouraging to note that the religious press is speaking out against war and for peace. It seems that the civil governments of the world, the United States included, have not yet fully determined to stop the war game for all time to come. We learn from the standards of the United States Bureau that ninety-three cents out of every dollar of United States money this year goes for war-past, present, or to come. Only one cent out of every dollar goes for education and improvement of the public health. Those who wish copies of this remarkable analysis of our national budget should write to Dr. E. A. Rosa, United States Bureau of Standards, Washington, D. C. According to this analysis, the national government is levying a tax of fifty dollars this year upon every man, woman, and child in the United States; so that of this amount forty-six dollars and fifty cents goes for war and militarism. These facts are gleaned from the "Record of Christian Work." tianity in the past has been fighting heathenism. now time to fight our civilization. A civilization that fosters and encourages war and militarism is antichristian and should be discouraged.

Losing College Boys and Girls.

We have just read of a rector in an Episcopalian parish who in the presence of the writer of this item took his pencil and crossed out of his membership book the names of a dozen or more young folks who had that morning gone away to college-in this instance to tax-supported colleges. Very well. How easy to cross off those names! How impossible to write down other equal number of names who can take and fill the places of those so easily eliminated in the long years of influence which stretch ahead!

Our own pastors may not take out their pencils and deliberately erase the names of their young folks from membership lists. Really they do not have to do that in order to have the church lose them. They need only to neglect them; they need only to neglect to write the college pastor about them; they need only to let those young folks drift, while their pastors are indifferent to their care by the church at the college town. That is all. No such physical weariness as sharpening a pencil and turning the pages of the membership book and using up the physical energy necessary to cross out the names is necessary. Just neglect the young folks. Let it become plain to them that their pastor does not care for their interest and even salvation the price of a two-cent stamp. That is all that is necessary to have the church lose several hundredssands-of her choicest young lives.-Central Christian Advocate.

Due consideration should be given to the care of the young. Our home life is not just what it should be. Doubtless the teachers in the colleges do not come in close contact with those intrusted to their care. It is hardly safe to put a boy in college away from home and home influences without giving him something to take the place of the home life and influence. Our boys and girls away from home without spiritual training are liable to drift away from a life of purity and godliness. Too much thought cannot be given to this subject.

It must be said for Chicago that it has set an example which should be followed in every city and town. Chief of Police Fitzmorris has issued orders to moving-picture censors to ban any play which displays a crime, even though the end might show the criminal in a prison cell. Even the showing of a policeman disguised as a burglar is prohibited. The chief of police was moved to issue his order when three boys who had been sentenced to a reformatory for crimes committed said that they had gotten the idea from "crook" movie shows. The baleful sug-gestive and inspiring power of a play which displays criminals and crimes is so great that it is astonishing that the moral element of our population have not risen in their indignation and made the evil "movie" an impossibility. Christian Advocate.

While this journal has never condemned indiscriminately the moving picture, yet it has always felt that all moving pictures suggestive of evil and of crime should be discouraged. A stricter censorship should be established by the government. If we would not be perpetrators of crime, if we would not commit evil deeds, we must not see evil or think of evil, and it would be better even not to read of it. The man who is seeking to live a righteous and godly life should shun the very appearance of evil and stay just as far from all wrong as possible. An old pilot who was running on the Mississippi River, when asked if he knew where all the places of danger were, replied: "No, but I know the places of safety." It is certainly best to play safe in living the Christian life.

We need examples of people who, leaving heaven to decide whether they are to rise in the world, decide for themselves that they will be happy in it, and have resolved to seek, not greater wealth, but simpler pleasure; not higher fortune, but deeper felicity; making the first of possessions self-possession, and honoring themselves in the harmless pride and calm pursuits of peace.-Ruskin.

Finding Ourselves.

In the parable of the prodigal son we find the expression, "But when he came to himself;" and it is this expression, with two of the best articles, in my judgment, that have appeared in the Gospel Advocate for a long time, by Brother Elam, "Am I Growing Better?" and "Self-Examination," that suggests the subject at the heading of this article. I would be glad to see the Advocate covered from the first page to the back page with just such matter as Brother Elam has given us; for it is a character established by our letting God absolutely rule and reign in our souls that makes us count for ourselves, our friends and neighbors, and for the honor and glory of God. Brother Elam speaks of "seeing ourselves as God sees us;" and here let me say that when this we really do, we have found ourselves. Until we do this, we are strangers even to ourselves-that is, we are not what we think we are; hence the necessity of our coming to ourselves, rubbing our eyes until we get them well open, and taking a really thoughtful and undimned and disillusioned look at ourselves. Let us see ourselves as God sees us; then the best we do will look so little that we can never be self-inflated, and we will be able to "walk humbly with our God," as we are commanded. Micah says: "He hath showed thee, O man, what is good." In this the primary idea is, what is good for one's self; the best that can be done for me individually; that which will bring the greatest good to my own soul. Certain it is that if I never do one thing that will harm myself, that will do me an injustice, I will never do an injustice to another. Nothing means more to us than to do exactly what God says do. He has never commanded us to do one thing without our good in view. The philosophy of obedience is clearly stated in God's words to Israel when he says: "Keep the commandments of Jehovah, and his statutes, which I command thee this day for thy good." (Deut. 10: 13.) It is correct to say that we are never so unjust to ourselves as when we allow ourselves to be unjust to others; that we are never so unkind to ourselves as when we are unkind to others. So, after Micah says that God "hath showed thee, O man, what is good," he proceeds to specify what was shown.

First. "Do justly." "All things therefore whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, even so do ye also unto them: for this is the law and the prophets." (See Matt. 7: 12: Mic. 6: 8.) Doing justly, ever conducting ourselves toward the other man as we would have him do to us, will compel us to do what is best for the other party, it matters not what the circumstances are. I sometimes wonder if the principle of the "Golden Rule," as it is called, really lives in and controls us when we are trying to lead some prejudiced man in religious error from the false teaching he has embraced. The "Golden Rule" is scmetimes introduced as an argument against our trying to convert people who wish we would let them alone. But this does not apply unless we really wish people to let us alone who love us and believe we are in danger; and this is not true of man in a normal condition. The child that has some terrible poison in its body can see the love beaming from its mother's eyes as she tries to nurse him back to health. She does her best, and he can see that it is done in love. With just such a spirit we must approach our fellow travelers who have embraced religious error. Love is something that can be seen and felt; and people know, when we are talking to them about the error of their way, whether it is done in love or not. The one question that should be uppermost in our hearts as we go about preaching the word is: "Is it love that leads me and compels me to go?" And here it is timely to ask: When we speak to our own brethren or write of their wrongs, does love lead us? I have not one doubt that the reason for the failure of the many efforts that are made to adjust troubles and differences that arise is because love, that undying love we should have the one for the other, is not at the very foundation of what we do, and is not that which compels us to speak or write. But the point that I am trying to get to is this: Whenever we go about anything we undertake to do for those we think need correction, or need to be led from some false doctrine, and love is not the moving cause, we are unjust to ourselves and to the ones approached; for it must stand, even if the heavens fall, that Satan cannot cast out Satan. If we want to get the devil out of others, then let us be just to ourselves and get him out of our own hearts. Then, and not until then, are we fitted for service and can truly be just to others. The principle stands that Satan cannot cast out Satan. The devil in the other fellow is sure to rebel if he sees the devil in us. Better read Acts 19: 13-16, where "certain also of the strolling Jews, exorcists," undertook to cast the devil out of people by calling over them the name of "Jesus whom Paul preacheth." The evil spirits in the people answered; "Jesus I know, and Paul I know; but who are ye?" Let us continually examine ourselves, to the end that we may never fail to practice what we preach to others. If we want to get people to grow, we must grow ourselves. If we want people to love more, we must see to it that we do much loving. If we want people to give, to make sacrifices for the cause of Christ, to keep busy saving souls, we must show the way by doing it ourselves. If we want people to have and ever exercise a forgiving spirit, we must let such a spirit ever live in us. If we want people to stop backbiting and misjudging others, we must be certain that such a spirit never controls us. We can never inspire others and fill them with the right spirit unless that spirit reigns and rules in our own hearts and lives. Let us have more self-examination, therefore; and as we discuss the question, "Is the world growing better?" let us see to it that we settle a more vital question-"Am I growing better?"

Second, "Love kindness." It was stated on this page recently that there is danger of our thinking we love kindness just because we know we love for people to be kind to us. This is not loving kindness, if we stop here; for it would be nothing more than selfishness, a thing the Bible condemns. We love kindness when we are in love with its beauty, its tenderness, its thoughtfulness, and when we delight to exercise it in our conduct toward others. And here some of us would be shocked if we were to see ourselves as God sees us; some of us who think we are kind would see our heartless unkindness. I once was seated at a table in a large dining hall, and heard a conversation conducted by the president of one of our Bible colleges, one of the teachers of the same institution, and a young preacher. The subject under consideration was a young preacher who had gone out from that school and was at that time out in the "sticks" and waste places preaching the gospel to the people, where the support was very, very short. He was being unmercifully criticized because of a few of his mannerisms, and especially because he, in his lack of good judgment, had made the mistake to don what is called "the preacher's suit" or "long-tailed coat." The conversation continued till I looked at the parties and asked: "What good can all that is being said about that poor boy do him?" I pressed the question, and it was admitted that it was not possible for what they were saying to help him or change him. I thought how terribly unkind are the best of us sometimes toward those we have deceived into the idea that we are their friends; for that young man thought he had no better friends than those engaged in the conversation. And the mere fact that the conversation was doing the young man no good raises the question: Was it doing harm? When what we engage in does no one good, harm falls somewhere; and in this case, even if it did the young man no harm, who will say the ones engaged in that conversation were not harmed? can see no way to justify a conversation to any soul's back, or to his face, if the primary object of the conversation is not for the good of that soul. Mrs. Hall and I sometimes discuss our only son to his back, and say much about him, and sometimes some consideration is given to what we think is a defect in his conduct or his ideas of things. But rest assured of the fact that love guards and controls every word and thought, and it is all engaged in for his good. So ought all brethren feel toward each other. Better kindly give your criticisms to the ones you are criticizing. You may be mistaken in your judgment, and this gives the party criticized the opportunity to make himself understood; and true justice to him allows this. I wonder if some of our pretensions to loyalty and consecration, etc., if we should see ourselves as God sees us, would not sound like a joke. Well would it be for us were it only a joke. Instead of its being a joke, it will prove in the end to be a real case of hypocrisy, a millstone about our necks to pull us down to death and damnation.

O O O News Items.

At this writing Brother Riggs is in a meeting at Downey, and I am helping Brother S. E. Witty at Ontario. The work goes on well at both places. I will have something to say later of Witty as a man, and of the fine people with whom he labors at Ontario. We had a house full at North Sichel and Altura last Lord's day, and two were added by letter.

The Banner of the Baptist Persuasion. BY F. B. SRYGLEY.

There is a weekly paper by the name of "The Banner," published at Pineville, Ky., by a Baptist preacher by the name of L. C. Kelly, that persists in misrepresenting the truth on several important scriptural subjects. I feel that some effort should be made to correct the gentleman. Mr. Kelly quotes an article from the Literary Digest in which it is claimed that the Christian Century advocates an abridged Bible. There is no one who is surprised at the Christian Century who knows its tendency toward higher criticism and other forms of infidelity; but what can we say for Mr. Kelly, who takes the bleating of this foolish effort of the Christian Century as an opportunity to attack the plain teaching of Christ and the apostles on the subject of baptism?

Listen to the wail of Mr. Kelly in the Banner: "Reader, get over the shock the above suggestions give you. When Barton W. Stone, in 1809, and Alexander Campbell, in 1827, started out to unite all the denominations into one, the first thing they did was to add to the Bible the doctrine that baptism was essential to salvation. Through the years their followers have contended for that. It is not in the Book, but an addition which mutilates the whole plan of salvation by grace. It was a doctrine that cut out the fundamental personality and quickening power of the Holy Spirit. It made religion an easy-going thing, and lowered the standard of spirituality and let down the bars to world-liness in their churches."

I am not so sure that the first thing that Barton W. Stone and Alexander Campbell did was to preach that baptism is essential to salvation. It is my understanding that they both tried to unite all Christians on the Bible, and the Bible alone, before they knew that the Bible taught that baptism is essential to salvation. It is my understanding that Brother Stone tried to get all Christians to unite on the Bible when he was still using the "mourners' bench" like my friend Kelly; and I am certain that Alexander Campbell accepted his father's famous address, "Where the Bible speaks, we will speak; and where it is silent, we will be silent," several years before he learned the truth on the subject of baptism. He was a Baptist several years after this, and you ought to know he did not preach the truth on this subject while he belonged to that flock. They would not stand for it. But with me it makes no difference what Brother Stone or Brother Campbell taught. But what did our Brother Peter say? "Repent ye, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ unto the remission of your sins." (Acts 2: 38.) Remember, now, it was not Barton W. Stone or Alexander Campbell that said this, but the inspired apostle. It is not strange to me that Stone and Campbell saw that the Bible taught it, but it is strange that the editor of the Banner does not see it. It was Christ, the Lord, who said, in giving the great commission to the apostles: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to the whole creation. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that disbelieveth shall be condemned." (Mark 16: 15, 16.) Why be so shocked over the Christian Century's wanting to leave out some of the Bible, when you do not seem to approve or indorse it? There is another thing, Mr. Kelly: If the Christian Century ever does try to cut out any part of the Bible, these two quotations will go. because he does not like them any better than you do. Baptism is a test of faith, and there is nothing which so staggers the man of small faith as this command,

Mr. Kelly says it mutilates the whole plan of salvation by grace. I can't see it. "Being therefore justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ; through whom also we have had our access by faith into this grace wherein we stand; and we rejoice in hope of the glory of God." (Rom. 5: 1, 2.) It is in and through Christ that we have access to his grace. But how do we get into Christ? Hear the same apostle in the next chapter: "Or are ye ignorant that all we who were baptized into Christ Jesus were baptized into his death?" (Rom. 6: 3.) Is the death of Christ essential to salvation? Then so is baptism, for we were all baptized into his death.

I am unable to see how this teaching "cuts out the fundamental personality and quickening power of the Holy Spirit;" for it was the personal presence and quickening power of the Holy Spirit in Peter on the day of Pentecost who said: "Repent ye, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ unto the remission of your sins." I do not see how preaching the exact words of Peter and Christ would "lower the standard of spirituality and let down the bars to worldliness in the churches." My observation is that the churches that have left down the bars entirely are those who do not preach the truth at all on this subject. The commission of our Lord, under which all the preaching of the apostles was done, and which says, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved," is generally the first bar they let down. If the brother but knew it, this is the main trouble with the Christian Century. It has been trying to cast aside this commission for some time. It wants open membership, or membership without obedience to the Lord's command-salvation without baptism. No, beloved, he is in your class on this question. The next time you want to strike at the truth on this subject, "do not get a broken stick," as you are liable to hit yourself again. The Christian Century is with you in denying that baptism is essential to salvation.

What it is to find God or to be found, every devout man knows, but the secret cannot be told. We feel his touch, and we know that the unseen hand can be only his. There is a power upon us, and we need no visible sign or symbol to assure us that it is the power of the eternal. A light shines; we know that it is divine.—R. W. Dale.

Q

- F. W. Smith reports fine services both morning and night at Franklin, Tenn., last Lord's day. The work there moves grandly on.
- F. B. Srygley preached at South Harpeth Church last Lord's day to a good-sized and interesting audience. They seemed interested, too.

The cheering information comes that the work at South Pittsburg, Tenn., is taking on new interest and life under the ministry of F. J. Rogers.

Brother Elam continued the meeting at David Lipscomb College till Wednesday. He delighted his hearers by his strong presentation of the Scriptures.

Dr. J. S. Ward preached two very excellent discourses at the Charlotte Avenue Church, West Nashville, last Lord's day. His work was commended very highly.

Lytton Alley preached for the Twelfth Avenue congregation, this city, last Lord's day, morning and evening. W. Silas Moody will preach next Lord's day.

From R. E. Wright, Wartrace, Tenn.: "Brother Kurfees' articles on 'Bible Things by Bible Names' have been worth the price of the Gospel Advocate many times."

G. W. Jarrett, of New Smyrna, Fla., wishes to begin about April 1 to do evangelistic and mission work in Tennessee, and wishes to know who wants his services. Do you? Write him.

From Leslie G. Thomas, Flint, Mich., January 29: "We have just closed a two-weeks' meeting here. Two were baptized and others seemed interested. This was a much better meeting in attendance than last year."

J. J. Prosser, of Petersburg, Tenn., who worships with the congregation at Chestnut Ridge, made us a very pleasant visit last Friday. He reports the church as prospering. C. E. Holt preaches monthly for this church.

From Ira L. Winterrowd, Norman, Okla.: "The work in Norman seems to be growing now. I am trying to edify the church as it should be. One baptism recently. We are making some material improvements on our meeting-house."

Brother and Sister Rush Baker, of Chattanooga, Tenn., are receiving congratulations on account of the arrival of twins, George Farrar and Dorothy Anne, weighing six pounds each. We join with many friends in extending felicitations.

From Edward Clutter, evangelist, Blythedale, Mo., January 23: "We recently closed a fourteen-days' meeting at Island City, Mo., with twenty-one additions. The meeting here is eight days old, with thirty confessions. We have some open dates."

- J. P. Thompson, Centerville, Tenn., says: "I am now fifty-two years old and have been taking the Gospel Advocate continually since I was seventeen years old. I am a great admirer of the Advocate, and hope it may live long to continue the good work."
- H. M. Phillips, of Tuscumbia, Ala., in renewing his subscription to the Gospel Advocate, says: "The Gospel Advocate has had many knocks, some of which it may have deserved; but there is too much good in it to miss a single issue. Good things can stand knocks and live on."

Sister Cora Jennings, writing from Pine Bluff, Ark., Rcute 7, says: "I would like to hear from W. F. Lemmons and J. H. Lawson and any of the Schultzes. I heard preachers by these names preach years ago at Powhatan, Ark. I want to know if they are the ones I once knew, or if they are in any way related to them."

J. Will Henley, of Coleman, Okla., is passing through the shadows. His baby is very sick, and he is making every possible effort to save the life of the child. He has our prayers and sympathy in his affliction. If it be the will of the Lord that the life of the child may be spared, we trust that it may grow to a useful and noble life.

From T. S. Bain, Muskogee, Okla., January 24: "A. M. Foster began a series of special discourses here yesterday, to continue each night until ten sermons are delivered. All subjects were selected by the church. There are no better preachers than Brother Foster. One placed membership. Several visiting preachers are expected here to hear these discourses."

- D. H. Williams, who is now living seven miles in the country from Rayville, La., is thinking of moving to Monroe, La., or Vicksburg, Miss. He is anxious to get acquainted with the members of the church with a view to locating at either place. He wishes to get the brethren to meeting regularly upon the first day of the week, and we bid him Godspeed in this endeavor.
- J. M. Dennis, of Franklin, Ky., indorses what Brother McQuiddy wrote about the work in Alabama. He says he has traveled considerably in Alabama, and found comparatively few who were Christians only in that State. He thinks that an effort should be made to evangelize the State, and offers his services, provided a sufficient fund can be raised to maintain him in the work.
- R. C. Hammons, Cincinnati, Ohio, writing to Brother McQuiddy, says: "On behalf of the church I wish to thank you for giving us the use of the Gospel Advocate to help advance the cause of the Master here. My dear mother was a constant reader of the Advocate until she went from us to rest, and I have always admired its fight for truth and righteousness. I am trying to form a club of new subscribers."
- B. T. Miller, of McHenry, Ky., among other things, writes: "I am thankful to my precious Savior for sparing my life for another year. I am thankful to him for everything he does for me, and for permitting me to write again to the Gospel Advocate. I like the paper; it is food to my soul, as I live too far from the church to attend meeting very much. I will close by saying: Blessed are all they that put their trust in Him!"
- N. W. Copeland, Detroit, Mich., writes: "For over a year I have been teaching a class of boys at the Cameron Avenue congregation, this city. We have a good Lord's-day school, and I believe I can truthfully say that we have the most loyal congregation I ever had the pleasure of worshiping with. We often have additions to the one body, coming mostly from the school. There are about a half dozen of us who take our turn in speaking on Lord's-day morning. Charles B. Clifton, one of the elders, does most of the speaking on Lord's-day evening."

The following telegram to Mrs. F. B. Srygley, dated New York, January 30, has been shown us: "We will be married Monday noon." Signed by her son, Dr. Elam Srygley, and Miss Jean King. They will be located with the Michigan State Hospital, of Newberry, Mich., in which he has accepted the position of second assistant superintendent. Congratulations are offered by the Gospel Advocate force.

From Fred M. Little, Montgomery, Ala., January 30: "Good audiences at each service of the Catoma Street Church, this city, to-day. Increased interest in the Bible school. Some years ago several members from Catoma Street began to worship on Highland Avenue. They have grown until they fill their church house at every meeting, and are keeping Brother Hines busy all the time in the vineyard of the Lord. They are doing a work that is very commendable. The old mother church at Catoma is glad indeed to see them grow and thrive. While it may make the number smaller at Catoma Street, yet we know it to be a good work for the worship to be started and kept up at other places by those who may go out from us. So we pray God's richest blessings to rest upon all God's children, wherever they may be."

W. F. Cox writes from Collingwood, Ontario, Canada, January 28: "We have a small band of good, loyal brethren here, and I expect to spend most of my time with them, building up the cause which was almost destroyed some years ago by a digressive element. The meetinghouse was sold to the town and is now being used for a technical school. The brethren purpose getting a hall in which to hold our services until we are able either to build or buy a house of our own. The place where we meet at present is not commodious, being only rooms over a store, and these rooms are also being used for living rooms for a family of two. I see no reason why the cause should not prosper here. Collingwood is a town of nearly nine thousand, nicely situated on the southern shore of the Georgian Bay, having for background a range of mountains. It has a dry dock for building ships, second to none in the Dominion. While things are rather quiet about the ship-building plant just now, arrangements are being made to begin the works as before. Collingwood can be conveniently reached from Hamilton or Toronto by the Grand Trunk Railway. Let any brethren anticipating a trip northward through Collingwood please arrange to be with us over Lord's day. Pray for our Master's work in this well-blessed spot of God's earth."

- J. B. Sowell, of Goodlettsville, Tenn., called to see us last Monday. He reports a small but faithful band at that place, keeping house for the Lord.
- J. V. A. Traylor, of Murfreesboro, Tenn., preached at Corinth, near the Central pike, on the fourth Sunday in January. He has promised to go back on the fourth Sunday in this month.
- Will J. Cullum preached morning and evening of last Lord's day at Reid Avenue Church, this city, to fine audiences, especially at the morning service. He will preach next Lord's day at Joe Johnston Avenue.

From Joe A. Mason, Estill Springs, Tenn., January 27: "S. M. Spears preached for us Sunday, morning and evening, to large audiences. He is going to preach for us this winter on the fourth Sunday in each month."

From Joe L. Netherland, Miami, Fla., January 24: "The church here is now engaged in a series of meetings which are being conducted by I. B. Bradley and are being well attended. I am planning to be back in Tennessee this summer. Any congregations desiring me for a series of meetings while there may address me at this place, Box 253."

Changes of address: D. P. Craig, from Walnut to Ecru, Miss.; H. C. Wylie, from Pine River, Minn., to Bear Creek, Ala., Route 1; G. M. Whittaker, from Gainesboro to Gallatin, Tenn., Route 1; Sam Forrester, from Union City to Rives, Tenn.; G. C. Tucker, from Mead, Col., to Hallsville, Mo.; C. T. Clay, from Granite to Mangum, Okla., Route 3; J. W. Shepherd, from 354 Grand Boulevard, West, to 1429 Vinewood Avenue, Detroit, Mich.

From R. A. Craig, Louisville, Ky., January 27: "Last Sunday I was at the Forks of Elkhorn, in Franklin County, and spoke twice. While there I visited our good brother, J. K. P. South, who has been confined to his bed for a number of months. We hope and pray that he will yet be restored to his family with a strong body. The work in Louisville continues to move forward. I will resume my Bible-school work at Parksville in a few days."

From J. H. Hines, Montgomery, Ala., January 31: "Yesterday was another big day with the Highland Park Church. The house was crowded. Two persons were baptized into the one body. One was baptized the Sunday before. This makes twelve added since October. All have a mind to work and are working. I am teaching four Bible classes, and all are well attended. Interest is good in all the services of the church. This church did a good work last year, far above the average, but this year is going to do a greater work."

From J. C. Mosley, Providence, Ark., January 29: "I have been here for a few days, with large crowds and good attention. Brethren, you are trying to send preachers across the waters and neglecting our own country. A Baptist preacher came here last summer and baptized one hundred and four good, honest-hearted people; and when I began to preach to them they began to say: 'You are the first one of the Christian faith we ever heard." I rebaptized four of them yesterday, and am expecting several more of them to come to us. I have established a little church at Mayflower, Ark."

From J. S. Dunn, 204 South Clinton Street, Dallas, Texas, January 28: "Recently I spent sixteen days with the Central Church at Houston. I found an excellent congregation meeting in the banquet hall of the City Auditorium. We had eight added while I was there. Most of the members are from Tennessee. I am to give some time to this congregation this year; but my home, for the present, remains Dallas, and not Houston. Houston has four congregations and a spirit to build others this year. Brethren Lawson, Smith, Wheeler, Crain, Stanford, and others, are preachers in the city and around. A good spirit prevails and prospects are bright."

From Tice Elkins, Fort Worth, Texas, January 24: "Yesterday was a great day for the Southside Church, with large crowds at each service. John M. Rice preached for us at the evening service, and he is beloved by all. His sermon was fine. But the work is good in every respect. The women are doing fine work, clothing the naked and destitute, and this fact alone is making a host of friends for the cause of Christ. When I praise the work of this congregation, I do not want to be understood as neglecting to praise the others, for all in Fort Worth are doing excellent work for the Master. There have been four added to the congregation since my last report. A noble band of workers I have here to labor with, and I am proud of every one of them."

J. O. Barnes writes from New Smyrna, Fla., January 21: "The churches at Turnbull Bay, Port Orange, and Mims, with which I am working during the winter season, are doing well, and are awakening to more usefulness in the Master's vineyard. I shall begin a mission meeting at Eau Gallie next week, to continue indefinitely, if my wife is well enough for me to leave her. She is now in bed, suffering much pain, as the result of an accident on the train, in which one of her lower limbs was injured. There are no members of the church of Christ at Eau Gallie, nor is there a promise of any financial support behind me, but I go trusting God and hoping to establish the cause of Christ there. I ask the prayers of the churches in my behalf, that I may be the humble instrument in God's hand to this end."

From William P. Walker Dinuba Cal., January 25: "At the business meeting last night the Dinuba congregation presented and perfected plans for a 'preachers' meeting.' The objects of this meeting are: (1) To get all the California preachers together, that we may get better acquainted; (2) that we may discuss the condition of the cause of Christ in the Golden State; (3) that we may devise some plan of coöperation by which evangelistic work can be done through the State. Every preacher of the church of Christ in California is expected to be present during the meeting. Vital subjects will be discussed by all the attending ministers. The program will be prepared and published later. While this meeting is called for California preachers, preachers of other States are cordially invited to attend; also any who are interested in the California work are welcome. The meeting will begin on Monday night, May 2, and will continue through Friday night. Brethren, arrange your plans so that you can be present at all the services. I may say that the most of our good sisters are from Tennessee, Texas, and Missouri. This is enough said; you will be fed in that good old Southern style. Come on, boys; we are looking for you. Remember the date."

L. D. Perkins writes from Armona, Cal.: On the second Lord's day in January I was at Dinuba and preached at the morning hour of worship. A nice audience was pres-They are making improvements on the church building there—new roof, new carpet, new painting in and out, and a general cleaning. William P. Halliday Trice is doing a fine work with this congregation. He is one of our best W. Halliday Trice is doing preachers. I was at Hanford on the fourth Lord's day. and heard two excellent sermons by John E. Plummer. Brother Plummer is a fine young preacher who should be kept preaching all the time. C. R. Nichol is in a meeting at Aromas, a small town about three miles from Watsonville, over the mountain from here, on the coast. I understand he is to conduct a meeting at Santa Cruz after the meeting at Aromas is over. We are glad to have Brother Nichol in California, and welcome all such preachers. Brother Hall is in a meeting at Ontario, and Brother Riggs at Downey. May the Lord prosper the work in California."

R. E. L. Taylor writes from Lecanto, Fla., January 20: "The church here is getting along well. I preach three times a week. The crowds are increasing and the interest The brethren here are wide-awake to their duty. is good. As they failed to secure a place for us to keep house, they bought a lot adjoining the church lot and built a nice house for a preacher to live in. We will move into it in a few days, and will stay until April; then we will return to Tennessee. If any gospel preacher wants to move to Florida and live and preach the gospel, the brethren here will sup port him and furnish him a house to live in while here. My wife's health seems to improve slowly." Another note received from Brother Taylor since the foregoing was put in type, dated January 28, says: "We had splendid serv-ices here last Lord's day and on Wednesday night. The interest is growing. There is no material here to work on except a few sectarians—Methodists and Baptists. The brethren have the new house done for us to live in, and they will furnish it with necessary furniture. We move into it if my wife gets better. She is very ill. will return home with her soon if she does not improve very fast. I cannot leave her to go away to other places in the county to do evangelistic work. I am asking the brethren everywhere to pray for my wife's recovery. My daughter is very attentive to her mother, and sisters here are very kind to us." The brethren

The Question of "Christians in the Denominations" Still Further Considered.

BY M. C. K.

It is simply amazing to note the confusion which denominationalism and sectarianism have created and the extent to which they sometimes influence both the thought and the speech of men. In fact, it is exceedingly difficult, as is here freely granted, for even the best and most thoughtful of men to live and move constantly in the midst of such an environment and not be influenced by it; and sometimes they are unconsciously led by it to condemn what they really intend to indorse, and to indorse what they really intend to condemn. An illustration of this fact, I feel quite sure, is found in the following letter addressed to the Gospel Advocate:

Enid, Miss., January 8, 1921.—Gospel Advocate, Nashville, Tenn.—Brethren: I understand you to teach that there are Christians in nearly all denominations; and if this be true, of course they are on their way to heaven. You then teach that we should call upon people everywhere to wear the name of Christ only and to come out from among de-Pray tell me what my friends would gain nominations. by leaving their denominations, with all of their teachers, books of instruction, societies, D.D.s, and fine meetinghouses with modern conveniences and music and suppers and other instruments, simply to cross the street to a humble few worshiping in a rented hall.

Seeing that according to your teaching the honest worshipers in the hall and the honest worshipers in the denominations are all on one road to heaven, I am asking for information only, as I do not seek discussion on any subject, and I must say that the wrangling among brethren in the Advocate keeps me in confusion; but this may be due to my lack of learning. Faithfully yours,

J. W. BEARDAIN.

Concerning our brother's letter, I wish to remark, first of all, that it is always best to weigh well our words when we speak through either tongue or pen. Both the managers and editors of the Gospel Advocate try to keep "wrangling" out of its columns, and I think they succeed. They are unable, however, in the present condition of religious affairs, to keep controversy out of its columns, and neither is there any wish on their part to keep it out under existing circumstances. As long as men, like Brother Beardain in his present letter, advocate erroneous positions, they must be met and counteracted with the truth, and this is controversy. Jesus and Paul could not avoid controversy and be faithful to the truth, and hence their lives were filled with it. So far as we have a record of it, the whole period of three and a half years of the public ministry of Jesus was, in large measure, a stormy debate with the advocates of error. He kept it up to the very day of his crucifixion, and died because he would not yield to their misleading opposition. As to Paul, from the very day that he was baptized under the leadership of Ananias till he died a martyr for his faith, his life was marked by unceasing controversy with the foes of truth. If rightthinking people, who grow tired of controversy when conducted on the high plane worthy of Christians, would carefully read the New Testament, it would cure them. They would soon see that they cannot follow Jesus and Paul without engaging in controversy.

And now I cannot properly publish Brother Beardain's letter without respectfully pointing out and opposing its erroneous teaching, and this is controversy. Brother Beardain himself is helping to carry it on, and he should not oppose it. Hence, attention is now directed to the following points in his letter:

1. He says: "I understand you to teach that there are Christians in nearly all denominations; and if this be true, of course they are on the way to heaven." Perhaps so, and perhaps not so. At any rate, is it not possible for Christians sometimes to get "on the way" that leads away from heaven? If not, why all the warnings addressed to them in the New Testament to keep them from getting on that way? Every epistle in that inspired volume addressed to either churches or individual Christians is a warning to keep them "on the way to heaven" and to prevent them from getting on ways that lead in the opposite direction. But what is the need of all of this, if Christians may not sometimes, as in the case of those in denominations, be on the wrong way? If such teaching by inspired men does not show that Christians may sometimes not be "on the way to heaven," then why was it put in the New Testament? If they cannot, as Christians, get in the wrong way, then surely such teaching is cruel mockery.

2. He says: "You then teach that we should call upon people everywhere to wear the name of Christ only and to come out from among denominations." Of course we do. Why not? If it is wrong for Christians to be divided into conflicting parties, as the Scriptures so clearly teach, then is it not right for us to call upon them "to come out from among" them?

3. He then asks: "Pray tell me what my friends would gain by leaving their denominations, with all of their teachers, books of instructions, societies, D.D.s, and fine meetinghouses with modern conveniences and music and suppers and other instruments, simply to cross the street to a humble few worshiping in a rented hall?" What your "friends" would gain by such a move would depend altogether on what they preached and practiced "in a rented hall." If they preached and practiced there the wrong things that were preached and practiced in "their denominations," then they would gain nothing by the exchange; but if they preached and practiced "in a rented hall" simply what the New Testament requires Christians to preach and practice, then they would gain much by "crossing the street." No matter what people may do in the service of God, whether "in a rented hall" or in "fine meeting-houses," if it is not taught in the New Testament, it is not right and should not be done; but whatever they do, in any place, that is taught in the New Testament, is right, and they should continue to do it, no matter where they may go. This, and this only, on this point, is the principle that was taught and defended in the series of articles on "Bible Things by Bible Names."

4. In this connection, referring to "a congregation of baptized believers" in a given place, Brother S. R. Drake, of Columbus Junction, Iowa, asks the question: "Would you call it the church of Christ or the congregation of the church of Christ?" "Congregation" and "church" in such connection may be used in the same sense. It would be "the church of Christ" meeting at that particular place, and it would be exactly in harmony with the New Testament to so designate it. Paul speaks of such churches meeting at different places as "the churches of Christ" (Rom. 16: 16) at those places, and of course any one of them would be "the church of Christ" at the particular place wherever it met. It is right to call any congregation or church of Christ "the church of Christ" in the particular place where it meets, precisely as It would be right to call it by any other scriptural designation. No objection has been effered in these columns against calling a local church by any scriptural name, but objection has been offered against exclusively adopting one scriptural name and repudiating all the others.

5. He further asks: "Speaking in a general way, is the term 'Christian church' and 'church of Christ' of the same meaning and scriptural?" The term "Christian church," in the English of our time, is used in two senses. It is sometimes used to designate the people otherwise called the Reformation of the nineteenth century inaugurated by the Campbells, and this use of it is purely denominational. As thus used, it is a general church name; but, not including all Christians, it is sectarian. But when church historians, such as Mosheim, Neander, and Fisher, use it, they include in it all Christians, and this use is undenominational; but they also include in it persons who have not complied with the New Testament conditions of church membership, and this is unscriptural.

"The Field Is the World." By J. C. M'Q.

On page 107 of this issue appears an article from Brother E. E. Sewell under the caption, "Are the Tares in the Church?" I am very glad to give our readers Brother Sewell's matured views on the subject, which have led me to a reinvestigation of it. After much prayerful consideration and thought, I am only confirmed that the Savior meant that the sowing was done in the world. "The field is the world." I did not consider whether he used the word figuratively or literally. I see nothing to indicate that "world" is figurative. I simply quoted his language without giving any comments.

Brother Sewell misses the point of comparison. He says: "In parables, two things are compared, and it is necessary for us to learn what is the point of comparison. In the parable of the tares, a field of wheat and tares, the sower, his servants, and his enemy are compared with the kingdom of heaven, the Son of man, his angels, his enemy (Satan), the sons of the kingdom and the sons of the evil one." He also asks: "Is the kingdom of heaven likened unto a field of clean, pure wheat, with nothing else in it whatever?" This is Brother Sewell's view, but this is not what Christ says about it, and is not the comparison that he makes. Here is what he says: "The kingdom is likened unto a man which sowed good seed in his field." This settles the matter and shows that the kingdom is not likened unto the field in which the tares and the good seed were both sown, nor to Satan, who sowed the tares, but to the "man who sowed good seed in his field." The kingdom of heaven or church of Christ is not like or is not compared to the devil in any particular. As the man sowed good seed in his field, so the kingdom of heaven sows good seed in the field, the world. As Brother Sewell has missed the comparison of Christ, so he has missed completely Christ's interpretation of the parable. He says: "The only issue, then, is whether the 'tares,' which are the sons of the evil one, are in the church. That there are plenty of them outside the church, no one doubts, and no messenger from God is needed to tell us so. But are any of them inside?" The Bible does not teach that any of the sons of the evil one-any of the darnel, which is not wheat-were in the kingdom or church of Christ. It teaches that both the good seed sown by the Son of man and the darnel or tares sown by the evil one are in the world. The sowing was done in the field, the world, and not in the church. This is what the parable plainly teaches, and no sophistry or argument will be able to conceal this truth. The tares are the children of the wicked one. Is it possible that Brother Sewell thinks that children of the devil, or the wicked one, are in the kingdom of God? B. W. Johnson, in his People's New Testament, in commenting on the parable of the tares, very correctly and truthfully says: "By a comparison we may learn: (1) The kingdom is likened to a man sowing good seed in his field. (2) The Sower is the Son of man, who sows by means of his kingdom. (3) The good seed is the word of God as seen in its fruits, Christ's followers. (4) The field is the world. It is Christ's field. All power is given to him in heaven and in earth. His kingdom is rightfully the whole earth; but much of it is held still by the enemy, who has to be conquered. He will prevail finally, and the kingdoms of earth shall become the kingdom of the Lord and his Christ. (5) The wheat raised from the good seed is the 'children of the kingdom,' the disciples of Christ converted by his word. (6) The tares are not bad church members, but bad men; those who have been under the influence of the wicked one. (7) The righteous and wicked are to remain in the earth together. The righteous are not to seek to exterminate the wicked. The evil and the good will be mixed until judgment day. (8) Then all shall be gathered at the throne of judgment. The righteous shall 'inherit the kingdom.' All that are wicked shall be cast out of the kingdom. An eternal separation shall take place." If the good seed and the darnel were both sown in the church, as Brother Sewell contends, then it would not be necessary for a man to be born again in order to enter the kingdom of God. "Jesus answered, Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except one be born of water and the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." (John 3: 5.) The good seed is sowed in the world where the gospel is preached. "And he said unto them, Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to the whole creation. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that disbelieveth shall be condemned." (Mark 16: 15, 16.) The good seed bring forth fruit in the lives of those who accept the gospel, and they become children of the kingdom. When by faith and obedience they accept the gospel, they are thus delivered out of the power of darkness and translated into the kingdom of the Son of his love. (See Col. 1: 13.)

Again Brother Sewell misses the point of comparison. He says the whole tenor of Scripture teaching is to the effect that the sons of the kingdom may change to sons of the evil one, and that sons of the evil one, whether in the church or out of it, may turn to God and be saved. The Scriptures may or may not teach this, but the parable under consideration gives no warrant for such a position. The devil sowed darnel and not wheat. The darnel remained darnel and never became wheat. If it had become wheat, the servants of the kingdom would have had no desire to exterminate it and drive it out of the world. But still reasoning from his contention that the kingdom of heaven is compared to the things named in his article instead of compared to the "man who sowed good seed in his field," he quotes the following from the parable: "The Son of man shall send forth his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that cause stumbling, and them that do iniquity." Certainly this is true, and it refers to the kingdom, the field, the world, in which the seed were sown. The wicked shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into life eternal. It cannot be doubted that God rules over the world. The Scriptures abundantly teach this. Thayer, the leading Greek-English lexicographer of the New Testament, in his definition of "basileia," which means "dominion or rule," says: "The Jews were expecting a kingdom of the greatest felicity, which God through the Messiah would set up, raising the dead to life again and renovating earth and heaven; and that in this kingdom they would bear sway over all the nations of the world. This kingdom was called the kingdom of God or the kingdom of Messiah; and in this sense must these terms be understood in the utterances of the Jews and of the disciples of Jesus when conversing with him, as Matt. 18: 1; 20: 21; Mark 11: 10; Luke 17: 20; 19: 11. But Jesus employed the phrase, 'kingdom of God or of heaven,' to indicate that perfect order of things which he was about to establish, in which all those of every nation who should believe in him were to be gathered together into one society, dedicated and intimately united to God, and made partakers of eternal salvation. This kingdom is spoken of as now begun and actually present, inasmuch as its foundations have already been laid by Christ and its benefits realized among men that believe in him. Matt. 11: 12; 12: 28; 13: 41 (in this passage its earthly condition is spoken of, in which it includes bad subjects as well as good)." So the kingdom, as all authority on heaven and on earth had been given unto Christ, is used in Matt. 13: 41 as representing God's universal rule. "Jehovah hath established his throne in the heavens; and his kingdom ruleth over all." (Ps. 103: 19.)

It is reasonable to expect the angels to gather out of the field where the sowing was done. The sowing was done in the world, in the field, and not in the church or kingdom of Christ which Christ came to establish and into which one can enter only through faith and obedience. If the good and the bad seed were sown alike in the church and therefore became wheat, as our brother seems to imagine, then every infant and every person born into the world is a member of the church of the Lord Jesus Christ. The whole spirit and teaching of the New Testament condemns such a position.

The comparison is: As the man sowed good seed in his field, so the Son of man, by means of the kingdom of heaven, sows good seed in the field which is the world.

"A More Excellent Way."

BY E. A. E.

The article of our good friend and brother, W. H. Carter, of Lafayette, Tenn., which appeared recently in this paper, was in my humble judgment timely, and was read with interest and profit. I had almost finished this one under the above heading when I saw Brother Carter's. In his article I soon found the expression, "the better way," and his exhortation to all to follow it. I felt encouraged to complete mine and to join him in his call for "the better way." The truth and spirit of his article show there is a "better way."

There is a wrong way and a wrong spirit in which to do the right thing. Christ may be preached "even of envy and strife" or "of good will;" he may be preached "of love" or "of faction." (Phil. 1: 15-17.) The one who proclaims Christ of "envy," "strife," "faction," and in a partisan spirit, may teach the gospel to a few; but that one will be lost without repentance and the spirit of Christ. "The Lord's servant" is forbidden to "strive" and is commanded to "be gentle toward all, apt to teach, forbearing," and "in meekness" to correct those who "oppose themselves." (2 Tim. 2: 23-26.) Reproof, rebuke, exhortation must be given "with all long-suffering and teaching." (2 Tim. 4: 2.)

We all know the Revised Version says, "a most excellent way show I unto you." We know that this "most excellent way" is love, which Paul so clearly and strongly sets forth in 1 Cor. 13. We know, too, that he does this just after reproving the Corinthians for being "puffed up for the one [for Paul, for instance] against another [Peter or Apollos]," and for their "divisions," "factions," "schisms." Paul uses the three words with others which show the bad state of affairs at the time in the church at Corinth.

Who wants to-day a Paul faction, a Peter faction, an Apollos faction in the church of God-in other words, factions clustering around different preachers of the present? Paul would not tolerate such for one moment. He did not ask who is Paul, or who is Apollos, but what are they? He declares they are only servants, or God's farm hands, working together in God's field to produce a harvest of souls for God, each working according to his own ability. Paul was not jealous of the bold Peter or envious of the eloquent Apollos. An envious and jealous man is a small man, a very little man; so is a self-conceited, puffed-up one, who feels his own importance. Paul warns elders against trying to draw away disciples after themselves by "speaking perverse things." The man who causes division or creates a faction over himself thinks more of himself than he does of the Lord, and places himself above the church. The Corinthians had not only the literature and learning of their time, but some had miraculous knowledge and miraculous faith. They knew, for instance, that "no idol is anything in the world, and that there is no God but one;" and "concerning things sacrificed to idols" they had knowledge. While all this was true, they lacked the greatest and most excellent thing-love, (See 1 Cor. 8.) So men to-day may have learning, may understand all the principles and rules of logic, and may possess all kinds of knowledge, and lack love. Paul declares that if any man thinks himself to be something when he is nothing, he is self-deceived (Gal. 6: 3); "if any man thinketh that he knoweth anything, he knoweth not yet as he ought to know;" because if he does not know love, he does not know God, "for God is love." "He that loveth not abideth in death." One of the most damaging and most dangerous things is the fact that "knowledge puffeth up." Paul found it necessary to warn the Romans against thinking of themselves more highly than they ought to think. (Rom. 12: 3.) If one has all learning, all logic, all eloquence, all knowledge-miraculous knowledge and miraculous faith-and has not love, he is no more than sounding brass or a clanging cymbal; he is nothing, is worse than nothing; he makes a great noise and show and leads people away from the pure gospel. One simple statement from God is far more than libraries of learning, loads of logic, and rivers of eloquence, without the simple truth.

We all know what love is; that it "is the fulfillment of the law;" that to love God is to keep his commandments (1 John 5: 3), and to love men is to treat them as God directs. We cannot love God without loving the children of God, and without doing so from the heart fervently. Love must "be without hypocrisy." All who love will treat one another and all men—enemies and all—as God directs. Is there any such thing practiced in general as treating others in justice, fairness, righteousness, compassion, forbearance, and forgiveness, as one would be treated? I am not doubting that there are true and good men and women who do this. I am asking if they are the exception. I am saying all should. Our greatest concern must be (and with Christians indeed is), not whether others so treat us, but whether we so treat others. We may be mistreated, wronged, imprisoned, and even killed, and be saved; but, certain it is, we cannot mistreat or in any way wrong others and be saved—that is, without repentance, with all that repentance embraces. Even if we should succeed, apparently or in reality, in making out some ugly case of wrongdoing or unscriptural procedure against another, that will make us no wiser and no better and will not save us. But for our own very thoughts, words, and deeds we must stand before God in the judgment. (Be sure to read 2 Cor. 10: 3-6; Matt. 12: 36, 37; 16: 27; Rom. 2: 6.)

"Love edifies," or builds up. It leaves all better and more Christlike. It never pulls a brother down or divides a congregation into warring factions. Something else does that. "Divisions," "factions," "schisms" are not the work of love. There are eight things which, as God declares, love does. We all know this; but knowledge puffs up. We must know, too, that we must love. (1) "Love suffers long," (2) "is kind," (3) "rejoiceth with the truth," (4) "beareth all things," (5) "believeth all things," (6) "hopeth all things," (7) "endureth all things," (8) "never faileth." But the devil knows this; yet he is a murderer. The demons knew Christ and all that he is, but they were not Christians. When we simply know these things, we are yet not ahead of demons and Satan. We must love; then we are of God. Love could not suffer long, bear all things, endure all things, were there nothing to suffer, to bear, and to endure. Love could not be kind were there no persons in need of kindness. There are eight things which all who love will not do: (1) "Love envieth not;" (2) love vaunteth not itself," (3) "is not puffed up," (4) does not behave "unseemly," (5) "seeketh not its own," (6) is not "provoked," (7) takes "no account of evil," (8) rejoices "not in unrighteousness." This also the devil knows, but he continues to practice

Our deepest concern is whether or not we ourselves are overcoming and putting away these eight evil things, not in trying to prove others guilty. Was a man ever seen who will acknowledge that he is puffed up, thinks too much of himself, is self-important, is inflated with pride, seeks preëminence, is envious and jealous of others, seeks his own and not his neighbor's good, etc.?

Referring again to Brother Carter's article, who will acknowledge that he ever misrepresented another, or accused another of misrepresenting when he had not been misrepresented? But any real misrepresentation of another is wrong. Were a brother discussing with Satan, it would be wrong to misrepresent Satan. It is as much sin to misrepresent Satan as to misrepresent an angel. The sin of misrepresentation lies not in the person misrepresented, but in the fact itself. Satan is a liar, speaks lies, and fights with lies, but he is not to be fought with lies. Slinging mud is not the remedy for mud-slinging. Any one can put Satan to flight with the truth.

On the other hand, it may be possible for a man to discover that the truth is against him. In such a case, the only right thing and the only way to salvation is to acknowledge it and confess his mistake or error. In trying to justify a wrong course he makes himself ridiculous, weakens his influence for good, if he does not lose his soul. To become angry, to indulge in harsh language, to make ugly charges, and to manifest a bitter spirit are not "the better way," but are sinful. When Moses attempted to adjust a difference between two Hebrew brethren, the one at fault became angry and used unbecoming language to Moses. This is human nature. The one in the right can afford to wait in patience. "Michael the archangel, when contending with the devil he disputed about the body of Moses, durst not bring against him a railing judgment, but said, The Lord rebuke thee." (Jude 9.) But I am reminded of what Paul said to Elymas, the sorcerer: "O full of all guile and all villainy, thou son of the devil, thou enemy of all righteousness, wilt thou not cease to pervert the right ways of the Lord?" (Acts 13: 10.) But Elymas was a sorcerer, not a Christian, not a brother who had made a mistake even; and Paul was inspired, he was "filled with the Holy Spirit"—in other words, it was God who said this. We are not God, and no brother we discuss with is an Elymas. Paul never spoke so to Peter, Barnabas, or Mark. The man now who assumes to speak with the infallibility of inspiration in denouncing others is grievously guilty.

If "newborn babes" in Christ should put "away all wickedness ["malice"—margin], and all guile, and hypocrisies, and envies [not one, but more], and all evil speakings" (1 Pet. 1: 22 to 2: 2), what ought full-grown men and women in the Lord to do, and especially those who are teachers in Israel? It will be good and edifying to study just here Eph. 4: 29-32 and Rom. 2: 1-3. The persons who accuse others of doing what they themselves do, and condemn them, are themselves condemned by the Lord.

It would help us to see ourselves as God sees us and to realize that he will judge us according to his will. With what judgment we judge, we shall be judged; and with what measure me meet, it shall be measured unto us. Then something has been said about a mote in the eye of one and a beam in the eye of another, and every way of a man being right in his own eyes (Prov. 21: 2); "but Jehovah weigheth the hearts." After all, God is the judge.

GOOD EXAMPLES.

John Mark withdrew from Paul and his company in Pamphylia and went not with them to the work on their first missionary journey. (Acts 13: 13, 16.) Because Mark did this, Paul declined to take him on the second journey; and over this Paul and Barnabas had "a sharp contention," "parted asunder," and went different ways. (Acts 15: 36-41.) Peter "dissembled" at Antioch, and Barnabas was "carried away" with the "dissimulation," when Paul resisted Peter to the face, "because he stood condemned." (Gal. 2: 11-21.) But these were all good men and accomplished more than pen can write. Paul never called Mark a coward or denounced him as a hypocrite and traitor. Mark afterwards became reconciled to Paul, was imprisoned with him, and was highly appreciated and commended by him. Paul applied no vile epithets to Barnabas, or Barnabas to Paul. Afterwards Barnabas was highly commended by Paul. Peter never went about criticizing Paul, but referred to him in sincere affection as "our beloved brother Paul," and commended most earnestly his epistles. This is true, because both Peter and Paul wrote by the Holy Spirit the same thing. Paul told Peter to his face in the love of truth what he had to say to Peter; but he never falsely accused Peter or bemeaned him to his back.

So to-day, under such stress as Peter and Barnabas and Mark had to endure, faithful and good men may dissemble, or become inconsistent, or turn back from a certain work, and yet do not become reprobates and castaways. They should be treated as Paul treated Peter and Barnabas and Mark; and they, too, should right their mistakes or wrongs by frankly confessing them and working the harder to build up the truth. This is charitable and right. "Let love of the brethren continue."

All effort to justify mistakes, inconsistencies, error, or wrong grieves the church, hinders the progress of the truth, helps to destroy unity and peace, shows a partisan spirit, encourages factions, and impedes one's own growth in grace.

Initiative is doing what needs to be done without being told.—Exchange.

A Center Shot. BY F. W. SMITH.

The following from the pen of our aged brother, J. B. Briney, appearing in the Christian Standard of January 22, hits the mark right in the center:

In the appeal that the English bishops make to "all Christian people" in behalf of Christian unity, they submit the following as a part, and an important part, of a sufficient basis for such unity:

"We believe that the visible unity of the church will be found to involve the whole-hearted acceptance of: The Holy Scriptures, as the record of God's revelation of himself to man, and as being the rule and ultimate standard of faith; and the creed commonly called 'Nicene,' as the sufficient statement of Christian faith, and either it or the Apostles' Creed as the baptismal confession of faith."

If the bishops had stopped with "standard of faith," their proposition would have merited universal applause and acceptance, for there is no ground for reasonable objection to the Holy Scriptures as the "rule and ultimate standard of faith." But they proceed to put upon this rule and standard a rider in the form of a human creed to set forth the meaning of the divine rule and standard, and present the Nicene Creed as a "sufficient statement of the Christian faith." That the bishops failed to perceive that this is a reflection either upon the wisdom or goodness of God is almost marvelous. Did not God have the wisdom to enable him to construct a "rule and ultimate standard of faith" that would be a "sufficient statement of the Christian faith?" If not, did he have sufficient wisdom to devise and perfect a scheme of redemption that would be adequate to the task that its Deviser had in view? If he had wisdom enough to make such a rule and standard, and purposely failed to do so, what about his benevolence?

If God had both wisdom and benevolence in the matter, and actually did give a sufficient rule and standard of faith, then where is the necessity for the Nicene Creed, or any other human creed, to make a "sufficient statement of the Christian faith?" Who is bold enough to say that the Holy Scriptures do not make a "sufficient statement of the Christian faith?" The bishops themselves would scarcely make such a declaration in unequivocal terms, though what they do say clearly implies it. Human creeds have been the prolific source of division and strife among the followers of Christ ever since the Nicene Council started the business of making authoritative creeds, and enslaving the consciences of men to them, and they will continue to worry, harass, and divide the people of God till they are all, by common consent, discarded as rules of faith and practice. We are assured in the word of God that "every practice. We are assured in the word of God that "every scripture inspired of God is also profitable for teaching, for reproof, for correction, for instruction which is in righteousness; that the man of God may be complete, fur-nished completely unto every good work." Do men think that they can improve upon that which God has set forth as a sufficient rule and standard of Christian living, declaring that it can make the man of God complete, and furnish him completely unto every good work? Where were the bishops' eyes, that they did not see this? If a creed contains just what is in the Bible-nothing more and nothing less-it is entirely superfluous; and if it contains either more or less, it is inadequate, and should not be wanted; so that in any event there is no legitimate place for it.

And whence the necessity for the Nicene Creed, or the Apostles' Creed, "as the baptismal confession of faith? The apostles never saw either of these creeds, and yet they baptized people upon a confession of their faith, and thus inducted them into the kingdom of God; and if they could get along without these appendages, we can do so likewise, and successfully carry on the work of the Lord as they did, and live in peace and harmony. The Bible contains a creed that is divine and needs no revision, and it met and satisfied all the demands of the church for years before uninspired men began to try to improve upon the embodiment of divine wisdom as presented in the Sacred Volume. In the apostolic age people confessed their faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, and were baptized in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit; and if that was sufficient then, it is sufficient now, and no other creedal expression is necessary. The idea of effecting a scriptural and lasting unity among Christians upon a foundation that embraces human elements may as well be dismissed forever; for it can never be done, as the past history of human creeds demonstrates.

From the standpoint of organization the bishops offer the "episcopate" as the proper solution of the problem of unity. Speaking of this institution, they say:

"Nay, more; we eagerly look forward to the day when through its acceptance in a united church we may all share in that grace which is pledged to the members of the whole body in the apostolic rite of the laying on of hands, and in the joy and fellowship of a Eucharist in which as one family we may together, without any doubtfulness of mind, offer to the one Lord our worship and service."

The goal here indicated is most praiseworthy, but the method suggested of attaining it is insufficient and delusive. The "episcopate," in the bishops' sense of the term, is as unscriptural as the Romish hierarchy from which it sprang, and can never be accepted by Protestants as a basis of unity. An "episcopate" that places a number of churches under the control of one bishop is not so much as hinted at in the New Testament, and the free churches of Christ will never accept such an autocracy as a basis of unity. And even if such a union could be effected, it would begin to disintegrate in a little while, because it is out of harmony with the whole spirit and genius of the gospel of the Son of God. Scriptural union can only come by discarding human inventions and building upon the solid foundation of the faith and ordinances of Christianity as they are set forth in the word of God.

The "English bishops" and all other kinds of "bishops" not mentioned in the New Testament are on the wrong platform to talk unity among the professed people of God. Let them get on the ground submitted to the Christian world something more than one hundred years ago as the only scriptural basis for Christian union-viz., the Bible, and the Bible alone, speaking where the Bible speaks and being silent where the Bible is silent-if they wish to be heard. Their proposition amounts to nothing more than a plea for the whole religious world to become Episcopalians. The Bible knows absolutely nothing of any such religious body with its ecclesiastical machinery, and attaching to it a scriptural name-" Christ's Church "-does not alter the situation. It is a human sect among such sects, and neither does its age entitle it to recognition as a shelter for housing all the people of God. The only Head of the church the Lord Jesus Christ organized is the Lord himself (Eph. 5: 23), and any other proposed head is but a counterfeit, and is to be rejected by all who wish to be governed by the word of God. Brother Briney hit the nail on the head regarding this and all like institutions of men, and I am sorry our brother did not clinch and brad that nail with reference to some other human inventions which separate the children of God.

The Penalty.

BY J. D. GUNN.

A letter came to me one day,
A letter from a friend so dear;
I carelessly laid that letter away,
Unanswered, forgotten for a year.

One wirter night in firelight glow My mind reverted to the past; I thought of the letter of long ago And decided to answer at last.

I wrote a loving letter long, In that letter I bared my heart. It was filled with news, gay nonsense, and song, And for neglect confessing my part.

But that letter came back one day, Unopened, sealed—alas!—unread, This is the penalty I had to pay: "Postmaster cannot deliver—dead."

Christian testimony is far too frequently limited to the ordained ministry or to a few Christian workers as distinct from the large body of Christian people. It ought to be true of every genuine follower of Christ that he is able to admonish, able to express spiritual experiences, able to bear witness to his Master's grace, able to lead a soul to Christ, able to help fellow Christians in spiritual difficulty, able to work for the Master either at home or abroad.—W. H. Griffith Thomas.

BY J. C. McQUIDDY.

Ferris Hickey, of Rockwood, Tenn., sends the following: "Please answer through the Gospel Advocate if it would be right to receive money from the Christian Church members for the purpose of buying land and building a house of worship. Would it be wrong to accept anybody's money, when they contributed it knowing for what purpose it was to be used?" Solomon accepted funds from King Hiram. If any one gives cheerfully and willingly, knowing that the funds are to be used for the erection of a church house, I can see no reason why they should be denied the privilege of giving. Some people outside of the church frequently give more cheerfully than do some who are in the church. Christians should not use the liberality of the world in a way to uphold them in their stinginess and penuriousness. Christians should do their whole duty and, in as far as possible, encourage others to live as God would have them

T. Smith, of Tupelo, Miss., sends the following: "Trying to follow Christ as nearly as I know how, I am writing you this for a little information. What I want to know is this: Can Christians, without violating the law of God, join secret orders, such as Odd Fellows, Masons, etc., and have a 'Thus saith the Lord' for it?" I find no teaching forbidding a Christian from becoming a member of a secret order any more than it forbids his becoming a member of an open order. Certainly a man cannot, in the name or by the authority of Christ, become a member of such human organization. Christ has never given any authority for such action. When Christians become members of such organizations, they do it as a matter of preference or as a matter of worldly expediency, and not in order to be consistent, devout Christians. I am sure that one can live the Christian life without going into any such institution, and I have always taught that membership in such bodies does not encourage and promote the highest type of Christian life.

P. E. Melton, of McMinnville, Tenn., inquires to know if one who is not a member of the church should be permitted to teach in the Bible school which assembles before the regular church worship. He says: "Now, if the man or the woman who is qualified with a good education to give Bible history and scriptural answers on questions, who is not identified with the church, is ready to teach the Bible, should he be permitted to do so, he being better qualified than any other for such work? Again, if one claims to be a Christian, yet is a member of the Methodist, Baptist, or any church other than the church of Christ, should we bar him from being superintendent, secretary, or teacher in the Bible school?" In the first place, the "Sunday school," or Bible school, is not separate and distinct from the worship and service of Christ. Teaching the Bible is worship the same as is singing or prayer. Every Christian is under obligation to teach the word of God to the full extent of his ability. We learn of the early church: "And they continued steadfastly in the apostles' teaching and fellowship, in the breaking of bread and the prayers." (Acts 2: 42.) Unless we are ashamed of teaching, I do not see why it should be crowded out of the worship. Teaching is the foundation of knowledge, and knowledge is one of the Christian virtues; then it should be the delight of every child of God to teach others the truth.

Any man who is qualified to teach the truth should be encouraged to do so. If one who is not a member of the church or who is a member of some denominational church is better qualified than any one who wears simply the name "Christian" to teach the truth, he should not be barred from teaching it. The apostle Paul rejoiced just so the truth was taught. "Some indeed preach Christ even of envy and strife; and some also of good will: the one do it of love, knowing that I am set for the defense of the gospel; but the other proclaim Christ of faction, not sincerely, thinking to raise up affliction for me in my bonds. What then? only that in every way, whether in pretense or in truth, Christ is proclaimed; and therein I rejoice, yea, and will rejoice." (Phil. 1: 15-18.) It is a serious reflection on the intelligence of Christians that they will permit others to be better qualified to teach the word of God than they. All Christians should be noble like the Bereans and search the Scriptures daily. The elders in the church should take the oversight in the teaching and in all the worship.

R. A. Simpson, of Isola, Miss., says: "(1) I would like to have an explanation of Job 1: 6. (2) Who were these 'sons of God?' Also explain Prov. 26: 4, 5." The passage in Proverbs reads: "Answer not a fool according to his folly, lest thou also be like unto him. Answer a fool according to his folly, lest he be wise in his own conceit." It should be noted that the reason given for not answering a fool according to his folly is "lest thou also be like unto him:" the reason for answering a fool according to his folly is "lest he be wise in his own conceit." The child of God should not engage in any buffoonery, scurrility, or sophistry in defending the Christian religion; he should not stoop to any of the vicious methods of the fool. On the other hand, he should show the fool the error of his way, exposing his sophistry in order that the fool may not be wise in his own conceit. (2) Probably the phrase, "sons of God," means his angels. No one can be certain, however, in regard to this. "And Micaiah said, Therefore hear thou the word of Jehovah: I saw Jehovah sitting on his throne, and all the host of heaven standing by him on his right hand and on his left." (1 Kings 22: 19.)

Ed Fuller, of Northup, Ohio, wishes to know if it is right to worship with Methodists when there is no church of Christ in the community. It is wrong to encourage sectarianism in any way, but it is not always easy to tell who is a sectarian. It takes a sectarian to ferret out a sectarian, just as it takes a rogue to catch a rogue. Unfortunately, all the sectarians are not in sectarian churches, and I hope that some in sectarian churches are not sectarians. Sometimes people who wish to obey God are born and reared in sectarian influences. A man who loves party more than he loves God is a sectarian; a man who divides the church for a theory or teaching not required by Jehovah is a sectarian. There are some in nonsectarian churches who are sectarians and who violate the laws of God in order to oppose sectarianism. In their opposition to sectarianism they are sectarian. It is better to worship God than not to worship him at all. brother should teach a pure Christianity free from sectarianism; he should leave nothing undone to teach the religion of Christ in its purity in the community and thereby lead others into the light of truth. If the Methodists will permit him to teach the word of God in its purity and use his influence for the establishment of the religion of Jesus Christ in its simplicity, he should certainly not hesitate to do so. The aim and ambition of every child of God should be to be true to Christ rather than to any party.

Mrs. E. I Wallace, writing from Dover, Tenn., Route 2, says: "I sincerely hope that each new subscriber for 1921 will appreciate each copy of the Gospel Advocate as much as I have for the past year. My father, R. F. Wilkinson, made me a present of last year's subscription, and I, in return, want to pass the good deed along. I think I can send a number of new subscribers soon."

From W. H. Carter, Lafayette, Tenn., January 25: "I began the 1921 battle here at home on the third Lord's day. Subject: 'Leagues with Nations—Not Political, but Spiritval.' Moderate crowd, but good attention. Last Lord's day I was at Williams Schoolhouse. Fairly good crowd and splendid attention. Some of the members here seem dead, while some are asleep; others are zealous and at their post with the armor on. We hope to accomplish good with them this year. There are many destitute places around us here that I must enter if I can. Some are not encouraging and helping as they should, but we are hoping for the better."

We are pleased to publish the following note from J. Pettey Ezell, of Albany, Ala.: "Find inclosed my check, for which you will please renew J. M. Joiner's subscription for another year. Brother Joiner is one of Alabama's pioneer preachers, having been preaching the gospel for more than fifty years. He is an admirer of the Gospel Advocate, and has read it since its first issue. He was seventy-eight years old on January 9. For more than two years he has been afflicted with paralysis, so that he cannot talk, except with great difficulty; but he finds much comfort from the pages of the Advocate. He has done much good in the State, and is loved by a host of people."

We have received from Leslie G. Thomas, of Flint, Mich., the following anuouncement of a discussion between the church of Christ and the Church of the Latter-Day Saints: Beginning on March 7 and continuing twelve nights, a debate will be conducted in this city between the church of Christ and the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints. Each disputant will affirm for six nights that his church is identical with the New Testament church. J. F. Curtis, of Independence, Mo., will represent the Reorganized Church of the Latter-Day Saints. an apostle, one of the Quorum of the Twelve, and was chosen by the highest officials for this debate. G. C. Brewer, of Austin, Texas, will represent the church of Christ. Brethren desiring to attend this debate should address me at 615 West Fifth Street, Flint, Mich., and provisions will be made for their entertainment while they are in the

W. S. Lorg writes from Washington, D. C., January 23: "We are glad to announce to the brotherhood at large that the Washington church is doing well. Several new members have come to us since the beginning of the year. We have very good attendance each Sunday and at prayer meeting each Thursday night. E. G. Denny, of Farmersburg, Ind, who is visiting his son here, preached two good discourses for us last Lord's day. Brethren, tell your relatives and friends where to find the house of worship when they come this way. The house is at the corner of Fourteenth and Meridian Place, N. W. Fourteenth and Decatur and Colorado and Tacoma Park cars stop in front of the door. We ask your prayers that we may have the means to pay out of debt and be able to plant missions in other parts of the city. For any information desired, write church of Christ or W. S. Long, P. O. Box 1650, Washington, D. C."

From G. W. McKee, 105 West Sixty-fourth Street, New York, January 22: "The church here is doing fairly well, considering our situation. We have services only once each week. Bible study at two o'clock and preaching at three o'clock on Lord's-day afternoons. We have not had any additions by confession, but there is a development that is noticeable I believe there are as good, consecrated Christians in this congregation as in any I have ever met with: and as soon as we get a good evangelist, I think the church will begin to flourish. We are all of one accord, love each other and pull together; and we are determined that no poisonous, factional doctrine shall be preached among us. We have received additional contributions from other churches and individuals, up to January 1, amounting to one hundred and thirty dollars. We had on hand, January 1, one hundred and seventy-two dollars and twenty cents.

When sending money or checks, please do not put the word 'treasurer' after my name on envelope, as it is a temptation to those who have access to my mail."

From R. H. Johnson, Morrillton, Ark., Box 314, January 26: "I have been on the sick list for over ten weeks, but am some better now. My trouble has been somewhat complicated. I first contracted a severe cold, which developed a bronchial trouble. Then my lungs and heart became involved. I have not been able to do much preaching during this time, but managed to preach, or make a talk, every Lord's day in 1920, although at times I could hardly stand up long enough to preach. In all, I assisted the brethren in seven protracted meetings. Quite a number were added to the church during these meetings. It was a very busy year for me. I hope to be able to do more for the cause of the Lord this year. I have some time for meetings in July and September not yet taken. Brethren desiring my services in meetings should write me at once. I hope to be well by spring. I will preach for the church at Formosa, Ark., next Lord's day, and may visit the brethren at Center Ridge while in that part of the county. Success to the Gospel Advocate, its editors, and its readers!

J. A. Hardison writes from Greenville, S. C., January 24: "Thomas H. Burton's wife, of Union, S. C., is in a hospital at this place. Brother Burton brought her here last Thursday night. He himself was also sick in bed for two days, but has returned to his family at Union. Sister Burton has ear trouble. It was first thought her mastoids would have to be removed, but now it seems that it will not be necessary for the operation. We hope for Sister Burton's early recovery. Brethren, pray for Brother Burton and family in their misfortunes, and remember them as worthy servants of the Master in this mission field. Work was begun on the house of worship at Union on December 20. It will be only a short time until the house is finished, ready to be used to advance the cause more effectively in this There is still lacking about two thousand dollars to complete payment on this building. Churches and individual members can find no more worthy place to give than here in this destitute State. This is the first loyal house in South Carolina. Brother Burton and his family have in South Carolina, Brother Burton and his family done a great work here during the past two years. member the faithful few at Union in your prayers and in your offerings; also send a letter of Christian sympathy, together with a cheerful donation, to Brother Burton. generosity will be many times repaid in the heavenly home." Brother Burton is doing a good work in Union, S. C., and should be fellowshiped by the brethren. hope they will remember him during the Illness of his wife by sending him donations.

Thomas H. Burton, of Union, S. C., asks some pointed questions and gives some interesting comment. 'Should we give up? Or should we quit asking our friends to go to church with us, or at what period should we stop trying to teach those we associate with? These are questions which often confront many people. Here I think is a good example, and one that, if followed, will never bring a remorse of conscience. There is a lady who lives in our town who more than four years ago began to read and study the Bible for herself, praying that she might understand it. After a short while she decided that she was considerably wrong; and looking around, she found no haven of rest for her soul, for all were teaching confusion and delusion, and she decided all were out of harmony with the Bible. Her next course was to talk to some of her associates and close friends and show them how they were deluded. They could not give her any information. Next she went to her preacher, thinking here she would find comfort for her soul; but she refused his method of consoling. Turning away in disgust, but not disccuraged, she looked to One who knoweth all hearts, and asked him to send some one this way who would preach the gospel as it is. In June, 1919, she came to the tent where we were conducting services nightly, and as she paid such strict attention it attracted my attention, and after the services were over she told me she would be back. It took only a few sermons to show her what she wanted to know, and she presented herself for baptism. For almost two years she has been one of the best workers I have ever seen in the church. Now back to the subject. Last Sunday (January 23) this sister saw some of her efforts which began more than four years ago bring fruit, when a very fine lady came forward and made the confession at the eleven-o'clock service, and was baptized at four. Paul says: 'And let us not be weary in well-doing; for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not." At the same hour another was baptized, who had made the confession a week before."

WESTERN DEPARTMENT

By C. E. WOOLDRIDGE. 2018 Cullen Street, Dallas, Texas.

"Preach the Word."

Nothing can take the place of God's word in this world. In the scheme of human redemption, it alone points the way of salvation. In the education, training, and growth of Christians, it alone will meet the daily needs of the soul and accomplish the ends necessary and desired. In the life of a congregation, no substitute for God's word can be found. Do we regard God's word as food for the growing and hungry (Matt. 4: 4; 1 Pet. 2: 1, 2), as a lamp and light on our path (Ps. 119: 105-130; 1 John 1: 7), as our sword and defense in temptation (Ps. 119: 11; 1 John 2: 1), and as our assurance of eternal life (1 John 5: 13)? If the world is lost-and it is-we must "preach the word." (See 1 Cor. 1: 18-21.) If the sinner is unsaved-and he is -let us preach to him the word, for it alone will save. (Rom. 1: 16; 2 Tim. 3: 15; James 1: 21.) If the church needs building up, the word of God must be taught. (Acts 20: 32.) If preachers, elders, and all Christians would study God's word more, we would be saved from many mistakes and weaknesses and there would be little opportunity for those things that weaken and destroy; moreover, we would have God's constant approval. (2 Tim. 2: 15.)

God's word is truth. (John 17: 17.) The truth makes free. (John 8: 31, 32.) Jesus is the truth. (John 14: 6.) The gospel is the word of truth. (Eph. 1: 13.) When we know, preach, and practice the truth, we will give the "gospel of salvation" to the world, be free ourselves, and have fellowship with Him who is "the way, the truth, and the life."

We need more preachers—strong, capable, and earnest proclaimers of the gospel. We need teachers at home and in our schools and of Bible classes, both men and women. We need many more men better fitted to do the work of elders, or bishops, in our congregations. To-day we see in most congregations some lines of work neglected or very poorly done. A faithful, earnest, humble, unselfish study of God's word, and earnest, fearless preaching and teaching of the same, will promptly supply our needs. The apostles wrought wonders preaching the word. Luther shook the very foundations of Rome by restoring the Bible to the people. A few men in the last century took this matter up with marvelous results.

God's word alone will produce Christians. God's word alone will produce congregations. God's word alone will produce elders and deacons. God's word alone will produce teachers and preachers. God's word alone will produce interest and enthusiasm. God's word alone will produce efforts and results. God's word alone will save and keep us safe.

Whatever else we may wish to say to the people, let us make sure we make them to hear and understand many texts from God's word in every talk, lesson, or sermon.

"The prophet that hath a dream, let him tell a dream; and he that hath my word, let him speak my word faithfully." (Jer. 23: 29.) "Woe is unto me, if I preach not the gospel." (1 Cor. 9: 16.)

The Work at Farmersville, Texas.

The Farmersville church is one of the older congregations of the county and has had a good many ups and downs. Last September Brother S. H. Hall, then of Atlanta, Ga., but now of Los Angeles, Cal., spent ten days there in one of the greatest meetings of the season in this part of the State. About sixty persons were added to the congregation, the old membership aroused, and much outside interest in the church aroused. Brother Hall is to return this year for another meeting—in August. We mean to be ready for a united and earnest effort at that time.

Meanwhile I am visiting the congregation twice each month. I go to Farmersville on Friday. We have a lesson in "Sound Doctrine" (Nichol) on Friday night. I spend much time on Friday afternoons visiting and doing personal work. On Saturday night we have a lesson on the "Model Church," using G. C. Brewer's work as a help. From forty to seventy-five persons attend these two services. On Lord's days, after the Bible classes have finished their lessons, I preach (at 11 A.M.), also at night. Of course the congregation meets every Lord's day for the Lord's Supper, teaching, etc. We mean to soon rebuild, as the present meetinghouse is old and inadequate.

I have given in the foregoing pretty fully the program of our regular work, partly to suggest that congregations who have a preacher visiting them regularly once or twice a month should give the preacher a chance to do something more than preach one or two sermons. If he is to do much good, he must get acquainted; and by means of informal services with questions and answers and free discussion he may be able to determine the needs of the congregation much better than by arriving barely in time to preach on Lord's-day morning and leaving on the first home-bound train after his last sermon. Sermons have their place in the work, and it is an important one; but to be and do his best, a preacher must be more than a sermonizer and do more than simply deliver sermons. We have eight services, with the preacher to help, each month. The congregations ordinarily have two, or, at most, four. The helper spends six days each week in our midst as over one to three days. The work is prospering, and we are happy in the hope of accomplishing more and more.

We will have a good report on work in Dallas and Dallas County soon.

Dr. Dio Lewis, of Harvard, writes: "At Harvard College during fifty years, though five out of every six students were addicted to the use of tobacco, not one of them ever graduated at the head of his class."

C. E. Wooldridge will spend several days with the Little Elm congregation, in Denton County, including the fifth Lord's day in January. In his meeting there last September twelve were baptized and two were reclaimed. He will be there in August for the annual meeting.

After living in Fort Worth for twenty years, Brother T. W. Phillips is moving to San Antonio to labor with and under the direction of one of the congregations there. The cause in San Antonio has been prospering lately, and we hope to hear from Brother Phillips and his work.

"If any man willeth to do his will, he shall know of the teaching." (John 7: 17.) Question: Do we "will"—are we determined to do His will? If not, should we wonder if we remain in confusion and darkness as to his teaching? We must determine and do as well as we know, if we would make progress in learning.

"The Missionary Ford."

BY M. C. CAYCE.

I here give the contents of a letter written to me by Brother F. L. Williams, of Nashville, Tenn., and not intended for publication; nevertheless, I give it to the brethren, believing that others will be stirred by such noble example to greater zeal in responding to the Macedonian cry, "Come over and help us." I made no request or call, but simply referred to the help a car would be in our work here. Our gratitude was great, and our hearts were touched deeply when I read this letter, which speaks for itself, to our struggling little band:

Dear Brother Cayce: Here's your Ford. When Mrs. Williams read your letter stating your needs in Jackson and the increased good that could be done if you had the Ford in which to get about, she suggested that the best way to do this was to get the car and send it to you the next day. I spoke to several of the members about it, and we decided to have the Hippodrome Motor Company to ship you a Ford touring car with electric starter; and here is the bill of lading for the missionary Ford, shipped from here on January 17. Get some one to connect the battery, fill tank and radiatake out fire and accident and theft insurance, blow up the tires, then get in and haul the preacher and company to meeting. Save room for a lot of "Thus saith the Lord" tracts and literature. I hope you get it be-fore Sunday. This car is to be used in the work in Mississippi, and we hope it will be the means of speeding up the work down there.

With best wishes for your good health and the success of the cause through your efforts, yours for speeding up the work,

F. L. WILLIAMS, Treasurer,
Eleventh Street church of Christ,
Fifth Street church of Christ, Nashville, Tenn.

This could not but greatly increase our courage and renew our determination to put forth more effort. I am sure my already deep feeling of personal responsibility is increased, and I shall press the work with all my feeble strength. Missionary work has many discouragements that only those on the ground can appreciate; and when the brethren and sisters at home respond so promptly, cheerfully, and voluntarily, it imparts new courage. More such responsiveness would do much toward extending the kingdom of our Master, enabling more of us to "go" and preach the gospel: and not only could we go, but we could remain in the field until congregations are established and developed and strong enough to stand alone. Then all who can stand alone ought to be extending a helping hand to others, until the entire world has the pure gospel preached unto them. Every Christian ought to be made to know that to be saved, we must help save; that we are God's fellow workers, God's building. Christ said to his disciples: "Ye are the light of the world;" "Ye are the salt of the earth." If we exert no saving influence, we become as salt that has lost its savor -good for nothing. Salvation is too sweet to be selfish with it. Let us all pass it on to others while we have the opportunity.

Two excellent services were enjoyed here vesterday (January 23). Our prayer meeting last week was the most largely attended that we have had at any time.

I repeat the request that any one having friends or acquaintances in or near Jackson who might become interested give me their names and addresses, that I may go to see them.

Ousts Rheumatism.

Ousts Rheumatism.

Here it is. Those awful pains of rheumatism so common during the cold, rainy weather are completely forgotten, and the rheumatism is expelled from your system, by the very simple treatment of taking Ren, by the very simple treatment of taking Ren, by the very simple treatment of taking Ren, by the blood, and Renwar tatacks the very cause of this malady and expels the uric acid from the system. Renwar is entirely dependable. It does not in any way lajure the stomach or affect the heart. It is prescribed by the best physicians, and your money is refunded if Renwar fails to relieve you of rheumatism. Give Renwar a trial, and you will never regret it. Mr. Benagh, of the Nashville Railway and Light Company, says: "Within two or three days after using Renwar my rheumatism disappeared." Price, 50 cents. Among the Churches.

BY J. D. TANT.

The first Lord's day in January I spent with the church of Christ at Pea Ridge, Ark. We have a good church house there; but last year the "digressives" locked the doors against the conservative brethren and claimed their house. The civil courts decided the "digressives" were transgressors, and they had to give up the house. We have some fine members there, and I hope to hold them a meeting soon and put them on foot again. Pea Ridge is in a very fine farming country, with a good high school. I should be glad to interest four or five Christian families who are looking for a new home to settle and help build up the cause there.

From Pea Ridge I went to Palestine, Ark., for a week's meeting. I found some good women meeting for Bible study and worship, with not a man in the church to help or work with them. Brother Bennett lives at Palestine. At one time he had been their leader, and was well posted in the Bible; but he decided it was unscriptural for a woman to teach the Bible, and because the women wanted their children taught the Bible he had quit, and he and his wife were holding worship at their home.

From Palestine I went to Fort Worth, Texas, and on Sunday morning was with the Central Church, where Harvey Moore preached, and where Brother Elam recently held a fine meeting. We have many grand and good members at Central, but they have the "big-preacher" fever. I seriously doubt if we have a gospel preacher in Texas that could fill their demand. I preached one night at Southside, where Brother Tice Elkins is working. I learned that he has quite an interest and that most of the church are working with him. Fikins, McClung, and West are all able gospel ministers, giving their whole time to the work in Fort Worth. Phillips, Black, and Busby are among the able evangelists who live in Fort Worth, but they are out preaching all the time. In 1896 I held the first gospel meeting in Fort Worth for a few discouraged members who had quit the digressive ranks. They were meeting in a small frame building on the south side of Fort Worth, belonging to the "digressives." There was not a loyal preacher in Fort Worth then, and the few members I preached for were fearful all the time that I would show the lines of difference so plainly that it would offend their digressive brethren; but I held the meeting, and located John E. Dunn and wife there to help them. Now we have nine congregations, seven or more church

Action or Reaction

A private soldier, mustered out at the close of the Civil War, became in turn a farm hand, a tenant, a farmer of his own land, a recognized authority on farm management and farm markets, and finally Governor of a great state in the Central West.

He followed always one fixed principle. He held that the time to expand activities in any direction was when others were beginning to reduce or abandon their interest in that line. He began when others quit.

As long as he lived he put his theory to the test on his own farms and his remarkable success proved its correctness.

Today many farmers are uneasy and are said to be considering giving up the use of commercial fertilizers.

For five years conditions beyond their control have brought about high fertilizer prices and made it necessary to accept fertilizers radically different in composition from those formerly in use.

Is the solution of the trouble to be found in giving up the use of things that have proved profitable in the past or in a careful consideration of the ques-tion of the purchase of fertilizers that will be as good as, or better than those formerly used?

There has been a period of Potash Starvation. Now all fertilizer materials are obtainable. Fertilizers high in Potash, 5 to 10 per cent, can be made and if you will insist on buying them you will find that houses, fifteen or twenty preachers, and at least two thousand members. They are doing a fine work in Fort Worth, and also developing some young men for preachers.

From Fort Worth I went to Cleburne, my old home, and preached one time in their large, beautiful, twenty-thousand-dollar church house. I held my first meeting in Cleburne in 1900. At that time we had about fifty members meeting in a small house, twenty-four by thirty-six feet, on a back alley. I begged them to come up in town and build a decent house, which they did, and now they have more than six hundred members. The church there is supporting Brother Buchanan to evangelize the county. Brother G. Dallas Smith, one of our ablest Bible men, recently died there; and I heard that the church at Cleburne is still paying his salary to Brother Smith's wife and children. This is altogether scriptural, but so far from the practice of the brethren that I cannot help commenting on it.

I am now at Rogers, Ark., preaching at home to-day. Brother Murrell is still at home with his sick wife; and while the church at Rogers is doing all they can to help him, our help is not sufficient for his necessities, and we have greatly appreciated contributions sent him from congregations where he is known.

Calls are now before me for meetings in Arkansas, North Carolina, Tennessee, Alabama, Texas, and Idaho.

Never in our history have our opportunities been so great. If we could kill out the idea that one cannot preach the gospel without a Biblecollege education and could get one thousand or more churches to each select one of their young men and send him out in the byways and hedges to preach the gospel, thousands of men and women that we are not now reaching would be converted to Christ each year. It is said the Mormons are sending out from sixteen hundred to two thousand young men each year to preach their doctrine, but we are not doing so much.

I compliment J. C. McQuiddy on his strong stand in condemning some of our ablest men who are killing their influence by dwelling on untaught and unprofitable questions.

Need of Education.

BY ANNIE C. TUGGLE. In these perilous times when this old world is being shaken from center to circumference and "men love darkness rather than light, because their deeds are evil," and Satan seemingly has transformed himself into an angel of light, we are apt to shut our eyes against the truth and listen to his song till we lose all sight of the Almighty God and the advancement of the kingdom of his dear Son. It pains my heart from day to day as I think of the present condition that is existing throughout the brotherhood on account of untrained leadership; and if I had ten thousand voices, I would lift up every one in behalf of a Christian institution; if I had ten thousand times ten thousand lives to live, I would spend each one for the salvation and education of my people. Never before in the history of mankind was education more needed than now, because nine-tenths of the divisions and strife in the church to-day is caused by unlearned leaders. Ignorance is a crime, and he that is bound in her bottomless pit is a slave. It is a disadvantage to any one. Even in the apostles' time this was true. Go with me, if you please, to God's own holy word, and search the record of the apostle Paul, who drank from the fountain of knowledge, and trace his life after he obeyed from the heart the principles that freed him from sin, and see if he ever caused any division or sowed discord among his brethren. No-a thousand times, no! Why? He was trained both spiritually and intellectually; hence he did more for the advancing of Christ's kingdom than any of the other apostles. But Peter was unlearned, and we find him denying Christ, cursing, swearing, and wanting to build three churches after Christ had chosen him apostle; and even after he had been endued with power from on high we find him condemned at Antioch when he ate with the Gentiles in the absence of the Jews; and when they came, he drew back and separated himself from them, fearing them that were of the circumcision. (Gal. 2: 11, 12.) But thanks be to God, Paul had education enough plus the Spirit of Christ to withstand him right to his face, and nipped it in the bud without disturbing the other congregations. But the unlearned preacher of to-day would have gone to Corinth, Rome, and the seven churches in Asia, and preached that little difference until the whole brotherhood would have been divided. Paul, who was well trained, simply preached the word right to Peter himself, and did not go around from place to place causing division, and having one part of the congregation to meet with him in the morning to commune, and the other part to meet with Peter in the afternoon, as some of our preachers do to-day.

Salvation.

What does our Lord mean by the salvation of a man? How much does he mean? What is the ultimate goal? How large is the contract? He means that he undertakes to save the individual not only from what he is, but from all that he would inevitably become; and to save him to his own moral and spiritual likeness so completely that through all God's forever he will be an expression of the life of God in the universe as Jesus was upon the earth. This is a contract worthy of God; an inspiration of which no mortal would ever have dreamed; an aspiration of God on behalf of man, revealed to man, worked into the very fiber of his being, till he becomes a partaker of the very desire of God. That we should become like Christ, I cannot imagine anything in the gift of God that can surpass it. I would rather have the character of Jesus Christ than have his throne. Salvation, then, to the individual is not going to heaven, though it includes that; it is not having your life prolonged to the utmost ages, though it includes that, too; it is the transformation of your character, through your cooperation, by the redeeming, regenerating power of the cross of Christ, and such transformation that the soul will stand at last perfect in his likeness, to be a joy to the Father's heart and a blessing to the universe forever .- J. A. Francis.

After Thorough Trial a Detroit, Mich., Man Endorses Pe-ru-na

The following letter written from Detroit, Michigan is no snap and to me is worth its weight in judgment expressed on the merits | gold. of Pe-ru-na, the well-known catarrh remedy, but rather a mature, sober opinion formed after a full year's trial.

This is the way Mr. Michael Fako of 906 East Palmer Avenue, in the Michigan Metro-polis, writes: "After polis, writes: "After using PE-RU-NA for about one year will say I have found it a very good medicine for catarrh. It has helped me a great deal and I am very well satisfied. I have gained in weight, eat and sleep well, my bowels are regular and better color in my face.

"PE-RU-NA has done wonders

I shall continue to use PE-RU-NA as long as I live and recommend to my friends who are troubled with catarrh."

Nothing can be more convincing than an endorsement of this na-ture from an actual user. There are many people in every com-munity whose experience, in using Pe-ru-na, has been identical with Mr. Fako's. It is the standby for coughs, standby for coughs, colds, catarrh, stomach

Purpose.

BY L. E. PRYOR.

In the first issue of the Gospel Advocate for this year I had a few things to say on purpose. I would like to say a little more on this subject, because I believe herein lies one of the reasons for the church and the individual members not accomplishing any more for the Lord than they do. If farmers, merchants, teachers, and men of other callings of life acted as most Christians do, without a purpose, their businesses would soon fail. But Jesus said: "The sons of this world are for their own generation wiser than the sons of the light." (Luke 16: 8.) For one to succeed in any profession as he should, he must have a purpose, which is nothing more than a fixed aim or a definite plan. Some one has said:

"Half the wrecks upon life's ocean. If some star had been their guide, Might now be riding safely; But they drifted with the tide."

Does the Bible sanction purposing? Let us notice a few passages. Paul says: "According to the eternal purpose which he [God] purposed in Christ Jesus our Lord." (Eph. 3: 11.) Daniel purposed. (See Dan. 1: 8.) Barnabas exhorted the brethren at Antioch, "that with purpose of heart they would cleave unto the Lord." (Acts 11: 23.) Paul said that Timothy had followed his "teaching, conduct, purpose." (2 Tim. 3: 10.) He tells the Corinthians to "do as each man hath purposed in his heart." (2 Cor. 9: 7.)

Let us note some of the plans that we should make. Each congregation should purpose, at the very least, to hold one mission meeting this year. Suppose each one should do this. I do not know how many there are, but we will say there are five thousand: that would mean five thousand mission meetings in 1921-that many places to hear the gospel where it has never been preached. Let us say that there would be an average of two turned to the Lord in each meeting; that would be ten thousand souls added to the church through mission work. Again, let each individual member of the church purpose to lead at least one to Christ through his personal efforts, guided by the Lord. If we would do this, it would mean several hundred thousand added in this way. Are these things possible? I think so. Are they not in our grasp? I believe they are. The only thing that we will have to do to accomplish these things is to work and pray as God has directed. Will we do this, or will we let these souls perish, and have their blood on our hands at the judgment?

I am sure that we can all purpose, to a great advantage, to read the Bible more. It is astonishing to see how little many know about the Book that they claim to be their guide. We can all plan to be present at every service of the church, to pray more, to give more, and in all things to be more like Christ, taking him in all things as our pattern and guide.

California News.

BY L. D. PERKINS.

On Christmas morning my daughter, Ruth, and I arose at four o'clock, and started in our Overland car for Southern California. We had a run of two hundred and fifty miles. Long before the sun was up we had passed Tulare, and left a bundle on the porch of Brother Joe Comer. We sounded the alarm that Santa Claus was there. but they were sleeping. We reached Bakersfield just about daybreak, and soon we started up the mountain that separates the San Joaquin Valley from Southern California. A new State highway has been made across the mountain. After reaching the top of the grade, at a place called "Lebeck," we had a run of about twenty miles along a ridge and cuts on the sides of the mountains.

We reached Pasadena long before night, and just at dark we drove up to the home of Brother G. W. Riggs, and there we stayed for the night. Sunday morning we went to the church at Sichel and Altura Streets. The large building was filled to overflowing. Brother Hall engaged actively in the work; and Brother Riggs, who had returned from the East. preached an excellent sermon at the morning hour of worship. This is one of the best congregations I know of. They are faithfully supporting Brother Hall in the work, and supporting Brother Riggs also. Brother Riggs did not believe he should receive a support from them, since Brother Hall is there; so he announced to the congregation that he desired to relieve them of the burden or pleasure of supporting him, but they would not hear to it. Brother Riggs established that congregation. The first service only two or three met, I think, and he has labored all these years to instruct and build up. To the congregation at Los Angeles, for their true Christian spirit toward Brother Riggs, I say, "All hail!" It is the kind of Christianity that will prevail with God and that will be felt in the community where he lives. They intend to start other missions.

We went from Los Angeles to Riverside, where we had the pleasure of meeting with the congregation and hearing Brother Borden preach at the evening hour of worship, and then of spending two happy days in Riverside, mingling with our old-time friends.

We returned to Los Angeles on Wednesday, and I spoke for the congregation, to an appreciative audience, at night. We spent two days in Los Angeles, attending to business and seeing the brethren and friends. then purchased a new Buick car, and Sister Riggs came home with us to spend a time in the Valley among friends.

The report of the work in Southern California is gratifying. Riverside, Ontario, Pasadena, Pomona, Colton, Santa Ana, San Diego, and other points are all gaining ground; and with this efficient band of preachers and workers, we cannot but succeed. Watch for new congregations around Los Angeles.

A Good Church in New Jersey.

BY W. S. LONG.

It was my good pleasure lately to accompany Brother J. W. Shepherd, of Detroit, Mich., and Brother E. E. Joynes, of Philadelphia, to a little congregation called Tabernacle, N. J. It was one of the most pleasant visits of my life. We were there only one night. The members were so glad to have preaching brethren come that they requested that two sermons be preached instead of one. After Brother Shepherd and I had both spoken for some time and Brother Joynes for a short time, they still lingered and talked of the love and mercy of God. Brother Joynes deserves much credit for his noble work in planting and watering this congregation. It is the only church of the primitive order in the State. Like Paul, Brother Joynes labors daily for support of his family, and preaches at night and on Lord's days. This church esteems Brother and Sister Joynes for their Christian character, as well as their work.

It gives me pleasure to commend Brother Joynes to the brotherhood. His life has not always been just what it should have been; but this was true of Paul and Peter, and in a measure it is true of all of us. Not one of us has been perfect. But since he turned from his sins to serve the true and living God, has been striving to do his duty both to God and man.

Some turn their telescope of criticism on a man's life and look only at his past record before he became a Christian. This is not just. If God dealt with us that way, we would all be doomed to hell forever. We are not as charitable with men as God is with us. (Read Matt. 18: 21-35; Ps. 103: 10.) "He that is without sin among you, let him first cast a stone." (John 8: 7.) When men do wrong, and repent, we should forgive them and encourage them. This is what Jesus did.

Tabernacle is the home of Brother John Cutts, and also of Prof. C. S.

Work This Year. BY W. H. CARTER.

I cannot measure the road I have been traveling in miles—can only measure it in years. I began while young, vigorous, strong, and able to endure hardness; and, I have thought, I had my share. Through rain and sunshine, heat and cold, snow and sleet and ice, I went to schoolhouses, private houses, groves, and wherever the people would come to hear the "faithful word." I met the ablest in my section in debate, and fought the "good fight of faith" to the best of my ability. I wore out several horses and buggies, and to-day have no means of travel of my own. It rejoices me now, as I walk the shady side of life, to look over the field and see churches dotted here and there over the field that was a barren waste when I first began. But I cannot claim it all as the result of my own labor; for God gave other faithful men to cooperate with me-men true, tried, and faithful.

But now, having passed my seventieth milestone in life's journey, I am not able to go and hold meetings as I once could and did. has permitted me to enter upon another year, but what can I do? I must do something as health and strength will permit. I must not, I cannot, stand here idle. What can you do? What will you do? Will you invite me to visit you and preach a few sermons-"take me there and bring me back?" I do not wish to try to hold meetings in summer heat. I hope to do some one some good. I must work, I will work, as our Father opens up the way. Will you let him use you to show me the way? I am still living at Lafayette, Tenn. Shall I hear from you right soon?

Edifying as the Need May Be

The Song Religion.

Christianity is the only religion that sings itself. Atheism has no songs. Agnosticism is not tuneful. I never heard of a Brahamanic hymnal or a Confucian melody. The meters of heathendom, so far as paganism is vocal at all, are not to be compared with fullness, freeness, and depth of Christian song. Song worship, like prayer, is a thing that the Christian religion inherited from the Jews. When Israel had been delivered from Egyptian bondage and had crossed in safety through the waters of the Red Sea, they sang a mighty song of deliverance. David was called the "sweet singer of Israel." His psalms have been the consolation of millions. They were the solace of the martyrs in the flames and in the dens of wild beasts. Paul and Silas sang and prayed at midnight in the Philippian jail and salvation came to that place of song.

"I Will Sing of My Redeemer."

It is a significant and awe-inspiring fact that long before Jesus came to the earth his praises were being sung. It is said that in certain old monasteries the monks were divided into companies which relieved one another in turn so that the service never ceased. Just so pæans of praise to Christ have never ceased from one generation to another. Abraham rejoiced to see his day, and was made glad by the sight. (John 8: 56.) Jacob, bowing in submission to the king of terrors, sang of the coming of Shiloh and his conquests. (Gen. 49: 10.) Moses sang of his glory as he shone forth from the mount and came with ten thousand of his saints. (Deut. 33: 2.) David sang of the King's character and work, his humiliation and triumph, his kingdom and his glory, and died, saying: "And he shall be as the light of the morning, when the sun riseth, even a morning without clouds; as the tender grass springing out of the earth by clear shining after rain." (2 Sam. 23: 4.) The prophets rejoiced in the promise of his coming; while angels, sages, and shepherds sang and worshiped at his birth. "Sing odes to nature," murmurs the agnostic. "Do homage to reason," demands the rationalist. "Praise the virtues of wine and pleasure," cries the sensualist. "Crown Mars the god of war," shouts the conqueror. "Sing of me," arrogantly suggests the self-worshiper. But singing birds and murmuring brooks and rustling leaves and thundering oceans and true-hearted men and women are vocal with praise to heaven's King; and if man refuses to join the chorus, the stones will cry out: "All thy works shall praise thee, O Lord; and thy saints shall bless thee. They shall speak of the glory of thy kingdom, and talk of thy power; to make known to the sons of men his mighty acts, and the glorious majesty of his kingdom."

The Use of Sacred Song.

Since Moses and the children of Israel sang of their deliverance from the hand of Pharaoh, saying, "I will sing unto the Lord, for he hath triumphed gloriously; the horse and rider hath he thrown into the sea," there has never been any great religious movement without the use of sacred song. When the kingdom of Christ was set up on the day of Pentecost, its three thousand members were found "praising God, and having favor with all the people." Martin Luther set all Germany ablaze with religious enthusiasm as he sang his magnificent hymn, "Ein Feste Burg," in which Melancthon and multitudes of Christian soldiers joined. In later years the world was thrilled by the sermons of John Wesley and the songs of his brother, Charles, whose hymns are more used throughout Christendom than any others. It is generally believed that much of Mr. Moody's success as an evangelist was due to the work of his song leader, Ira D. Sankey. While they were evangelizing in England, Whittle and Bliss were doing a remarkable work in the United States. Mr. Bliss became one of the greatest song evangelists of that age. A few years ago Torrey and Alexander toured Great Britain, Australia, and America. It is safe to say that Mr. Alexander's singing was equally attractive as Mr. Torrey's preaching. Dr. Pentecost said: "I am profoundly sure that among the divinely ordained instrumentalities for the conversion and sanctification of the soul, God has not given a greater, besides the preaching of the gospel, than the singing of psalms and hymns and spiritual songs. I have known a hymn to do God's work in a soul when every other instrumentality had failed."

As the Oracles of God Direct.

When a preacher is sent for to preach a gospel sermon, the members expect him to do his full duty. They look for a heartfelt message true to God's word and saving in its effect upon the hearers. When a preacher delivers a half-hearted message in a slipshod and unfinished style, he is apt to be criticized. Even before he begins to speak there are some who sense his great responsibility. Hence the oft-repeated prayer in his behalf: "May he speak as the oracles of God speak."

The placing of such a weighty responsibility upon the preacher is right and good. But how about those who are to reach the heart of the sinner with the gospel of song? Would it not be just as appropriate for some one to pray that they may sing "with the spirit and the understanding," as the oracles of God teach? And what do you suppose the preacher thinks-or, better still, what do you suppose the Savior thinks-when they make only a halfhearted effort, or, perhaps, fall down completely, because their minds are not intent upon this sacred duty? Since it has been shown that the influence of song is a powerful factor in the conversion of souls, are not Christians neglecting the great commission when they pay little heed to the apostolic injunction: "Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly; in all wisdom teaching and admonishing one another with psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing with grace in your hearts unto God?"

A Natural Expression of Joy.

If you find it hard to sing, it is an indication that you are not getting the joy out of the Christian life that belongs to you; for singing is an easy, natural expression of overwhelming happiness. The writer of the One Hundred and Twenty-sixth Psalm, in describing the emotion and conduct of those who had been brought back from exile in Babylonia, wrote:

"Then was our mouth filled with laughter, And our tongue with singing: Then said they among the nations, Jehovah hath done great things for them."

From this passage we learn that it was just as natural for the returned ones to sing as it was to laugh. Jesus, on one occasion, cleansed a man of his leprosy, and, as a matter of expediency, he strictly charged him to tell no man; but we read that the man went out and began to publish it abroad. He was so supremely happy over his cleansing that he could not keep his mouth closed. If Christians really feel that they have been translated from the power of darkness into the kingdom of God's dear Son, it will not be difficult for them to sing of their joy. It would be much more difficult to keep them from singing.

The Prevalence of Sphinxes.

Strangely enough, the chief characteristic of our modern life is its lack of joy. When Dan Crawford reached England after an absence of twenty-five years in the heart of Africa, a member of the Cabiuet said to him: "I would like your eyes. I would like to experience the surprise that you must have in seeing the difference between twenty-five years ago and now. What is the biggest thing you have seen in the way of a change?" The missionary's answer must have surprised the Cabinet member, for he said: "One of the greatest differences between now and twenty-five years ago that I notice is this: that modern materialism has robbed the modern young man of his smile. When I came into town the other morning in 'the tube,' there were thirteen young English sphinxes before me with a strained, almost 'struggle-for-life' look on their faces."

It is much like this in our country. You see it in the literature of the day; in the pictures, the music, the poems, the novels, that express the temper of the times. You see it in the faces of men and women on the streets. They are anxlous, eager. They are all hunting for something. What is it? Money, livelihood, luxury, influence, power? Whatever it is, they do not appear to be happy. The world is full of cynics and pessimists who are sadly murmuring the question of the scoffer: "Who will show us any good?"

The life of the world is joyless because it thrusts God from its thought. But the Christian's life ought to be different. "Rejoice in the Lord," says Paul. He repeats the word "rejoice," as if this were the emphatic word. We need to ponder the force and meaning of this reiterated command, and we need to express our rejoicing by our songs.

Sing it on Any Page.

A little girl, who loved to join with the family in singing gospel songs, kept urging her father to sing her favorite, "The Lily of the Valley." Upon being told to wait till he could find the page, she exclaimed: "Don't trouble, papa; I can sing it on any page!" It made no difference to the child whether the page displayed a song of sorrow or of joy, she was ready to sing of her Savior. What a blessing if God's grown-up children could follow that example! When the pages of life's book are full of disappointment and perplexity, no less than when they are filled with music, they should sing their song of gladness "on any page:"

"In sorrow, He's my comfort; in trouble, He's my stay;
He tells me every care on him to roll;
He's the Lily of the Valley, the Bright and Morning Star,
He's the fairest of ten thousand to my soul."

Get Right With God.

BY ADELJA S. MARTIN.

Relentless fate as through some dire control
Around thy life a tangled web may weave;
But fear no evil, O thou trusting soul,
Whose strength and refuge is just to believe
In Him who said: "Thy faith hath made thee whole."
Whate'er thy burden or the anxious care,
Get right with God, and all the world is fair.

Though sorrow's cloud may rise and o'er us sweep,
Like angry waves upon a storm-swept sea,
The weary cross o'er which we often weep
May be a blessing all unseen by thee.
Although the wound is sore, the scar is deep,
Whate'er the cross or whatsoe'er betide,
Get right with God, and peace shall sure abide.

It is not ours to speak of others' wrongs;
Life is too short to grieve about our own.
Our Father knows just how it all belongs—
How sweet the thought to lay all burdens down,
Attune our heart to catch the heavenly songs!

If one would look for joy truly divine, Get right with God, and it is surely thine.

"The earth is the Lord's, and the fullness thereof;" and when that fullness has developed into the perfect harvest, we shall know that all along he has been the Maker of heaven and earth. The evidences of God's presence in the world are the spread of Christian ideas, the self-determination of men to be done with many of the petty follies of the past, the growing sense of brotherhood, and the spread of a vitalized spirit of justice and righteousness. The night of sin is far spent; the day of holiness and happiness is soon to break. The problems which God faced in the early days of man's history have been solved, and the plans for the future are becoming more patent to men. God made us for himself, and we shall be at peace when we find eternal peace in him.—C. E. Coles.

The Wrongdoer.

BY H. LEO BOLES,

In this world of confusion, blunders, and mistakes, cursed by ignorance, prejudice, and jealousy, we often meet with the wrongdoer. Of course, we never think of putting ourselves in this class; it is always the other fellow. God has abundantly taught us how to deal with the wrongdoer—just the attitude that we should sustain toward him, and the efforts that we should put forth to save him. The Christian's mission is to bless and do good, not to curse and retailate

The wrongdoer may sin consciously or unconsciously: his sin may be an intentional sin or an unintentional sin. If the wrongdoer be a member of the church, he should be dealt with as such. He should be brought to a realization of his condition; he should be shown clearly his sin and how to correct it. Every Christian should be anxious to know what wrongs he may have done, and as equally anxious to make correction of them; he should hate wrongdoing and fear the fatal consequences of it. After his wrong has been pointed out, he should repent and pray for forgiveness. Paul expressed the Christian spirit before Festus when he said: "If then I am a wrongdoer, and have committed anything worthy of death, I refuse not to die." (Acts 25: 11.) He expresses here a willingness to see his wrong and to suffer in making reparation for it. The condition of heart or attitude toward sin helps the sinner to see more readily his wrong; a loathesomeness of sin helps one to turn speedily from it. True repentance on the part of the wrongdoer puts one in the right attitude toward God and his fellow men. There should be no hiding of sin or covering up; no excusing or veneering the wrong deed should be done: a frank, prompt, full confession of the wrong is demanded by Jehovah, and speedily follows true repentance.

What attitude must the innocent party sustain to the wrongdoer? If we can learn the attitude that God sustains to the wrongdoer, we shall have found an example and instruction for the innocent party. At no time, under no circumstances, must one encourage wrongdoing. Just at this point friends of the wrongdoer have seriously blundered. Would-be friends are prone to excuse, exonerate, and even acquit the wrongdoer without penitence on his part. No true friend will so act as to confirm the wrongdoer in his sin: the one who does so is not a genuine friend. The one who justifies or palliates the wrongdoer in his sin becomes a party to the sin; he often becomes more criminal than the sinner that he defends. The sinner may have done the wrong in the heat of passion or under impulse; but his defender proceeds calmly and deliberately in his defense of the sin, hence is a greater sinner, and wrongs the one whom he is attempting to defend. He is more than a particeps criminis. He violates the spirit and letter of the scripture: "Brethren, even if a man be overtaken in any trespass, ye who are spiritual, restore such a one in a spirit of gentleness; looking to thyself, lest thou also be tempted." (Gal. 6: 1.) Again, Paul says: "And if any man obeyeth not our word by this epistle, note that man, that ye have no company with him, to the end that he may be ashamed. And yet count him not as an enemy, but admonish him as a brother." (2 Thess. 3: 14, 15.) These scriptures show that the wrongdoer is to be restored and admonished by his brother. Instead of encouraging him in the wrong and publicly or privately defending his wrong, the right way is to "make straight paths for your feet, that that which is lame be not turned out of the way, but rather be healed." (Heb. 12: 13.) Again, we have further instruction in regard to the attitude toward the wrongdoer: "My brethren, if any among you err from the truth, and one convert him; let him know, that he who converteth a sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death, and shall cover a multitude of sins." (James 5: 19, 20.)

Another blunder is frequently made in our attitude toward the wrongdoer; the innocent party assumes the attitude of an enemy. This attitude often is as great a mistake as the one assumed by the friend. While the friend forgives and palliates the wrong, the one who assumes the attitude of an enemy so often takes vengeance, retaliates, and would exact heavy penalities by demanding revenge. If we have the spirit of Christ, we love our brother and will help him out of his wrong. Sometimes we find brethren who will not speak to each other; each claims that the other is the wrongdoer; each has become an enemy to the other. How foreign to the spirit of Christ! The attitude of an enemy usually excites greater enmity and encourages the wrongdoer to persist in his wrong. Such an attitude, or any attitude that encourages the wrongdoer in his sin, is wrong, whether it be that of a friend or an enemy.

It is hard for us to learn to hate sin and yet love the sinner; to abhor evil and redeem the evildoer; loathe wrongdoing and save the wrongdoer; abominate the tresspass and restore the transgressor. The touchstone of a Christian character is the attitude that one sustains toward the wrongdoer. By becoming an enemy to the wrongdoer, we put ourselves out of reach of helping and saving him, sever the cord of brotherly love, and close the eyes to the opportunity of doing good. We also deny ourselves of being spiritual or confess that we are in rebellion to God's will. Remember, Paul said: "Ye who are spiritual, restore such a one in a spirit of gentleness." All wrongdoers should confess the wrong; but the enemy puts himself in such an attitude that it is exceedingly difficult, if not impossible, to confess his wrong. Such a condition helps to confirm and continue the wrongdoer in his sin; so the enemy, like the friend, becomes a particeps criminis. It is true that our friends do not always act wisely by us when we are in the wrong, and it is also true that our enemies act exceedingly sinful in respect to our wrongdoing.

Some Practical Questions.

BY JOHN T. HINDS.

What we may teach in religious matters may be exactly correct, but that fact will be of little value unless the theory is faithfully carried out. Our efforts may be perfectly honest, but we may be so impractical as to render them ineffective. If the desired results do not follow, there must be a reason. Our theory may be false, our practice may not correspond with what we preach, or we may be so impractical as to lose our work.

A very forceful way to teach is by questions and answers. For the purpose of impressing certain important duties, I propound the following questions and offer the following comments:

1. Why will Christians be more faithful and attentive to temporal duties and obligations than to spiritual ones? Do we not all agree that the spirit is of more value than the body, and that it will exist long after this physical body has ceased to be? If we be reasonable, we must allow that eternity is of more importance than time; that the church is the greatest institution this world has ever known. When all things temporal are done, the spiritual will continue; when temporal blessings no longer serve their purpose, we must still have the spiritual. Why, I ask again, do we manifest so much interest in getting that which is temporary, and so little in obtaining the eternal? We should be more desirous of the spiritual and eternal; but if we were just as much interested in them as temporal things, the church would be a wonderful success. Making the question personal, I ask: How does the case stand with you? Have you lost your "first love?" Have the "cares of this world and the deceitfulness of riches" choked out the word? Have you forgotten that you were "once purged from your old sins?"

2. Why do elders fail to develop the talents in the congregations? Since elders are given the "oversight," they are the spiritual superintendents of the congregations. The Book calls them "overseers." When was it ever heard that overseers must personally do all the work? such a course harmonize with their position or be the best for those subject to them? It is hardly possible that there is no undeveloped talent in the church. Who will later become elders and preachers, if none of this talent is developed? Is there any clear reason for elders to always do the teaching in the assembly because one of the qualifications is to be "apt to teach?" Why not distribute among the male members the public reading, prayers, teaching, and other duties, in such a way that all the talents will be developed to the highest possible degree? No use for an elder to say "they will not take part." That is just where his skill and tact as an elder comes-to get people to do what they may think they cannot do. As long as the preacher and elders, because of their ability and experience, do all the teaching and exhorting when all the church be come together, just so long we never can develop workers as we should. The big thing in the efficiency of elders is to get others to work, rather than do the work themselves. Employing a preacher to do all this work will not meet the demands of the case, either. Paul said: "For ye all can prophesy one by one, that all may learn, and all may be exhorted." (1 Cor. 14: 31.) Why do not all elders try to carry out this practical, common-sense, apostolic method of making efficient workers?

3. Why do congregations do so little missionary work? Perhaps it might be as well to ask also, Why do some congregations do no mission work at all? Is not the gospel for all men? Are we not all responsible to the extent of our ability to do what we can? Did not Jesus say, "Go ye into all the world?" Can you by any stretch of the imagination conclude that means only that preachers must go? We may not go personally, but we can have our share in the "go," just the same. No congregation should be contented to do just when there is need in its own immediate surroundings. A soul saved elsewhere is just as important as if saved at home. If no one goes or sends to the regions beyond, how can the kingdom of the Lord spread? Why do not congregations set aside a definite per cent of their offerings for mission work? An occasional gift to some special place will never accomplish what systematic, regular giving will. Then, it is best to have a definite object in view, and work to that end. If you devote a certain per cent of your offerings for general missionary work, there will be ample opportunities for using the funds. Why not give some per cent? Why not begin at once?

4. If your congregation is supporting a preacher, why not send him at your own expense to one or two mission meetings? You would probably be better off by being forced to conduct your own services for a while, and the church would profit from the meetings? Did you ever try this form of mission work? What excuse can you give for not doing it? I have in mind congregations that support preachers for full time who could do a lot of this work if they would. And generally there is some mission point almost in sight of the meetinghouse. If you are able to build a good house, or maybe a fine house, and sustain a man, do you think the Lord will hold you guiltless, if you let some town at your door go without work for years? There can be no apology or excuse for such congregations not having their own preacher to work such convenient places. We raise thousands of dollars to send missionaries to the hard, difficult foreign fields, and then refuse or neglect to send "our" preacher to convenient fields at our very door. Surely there is something sadly ludicrous about the difference between our preaching and practice on the missionary problem. Again, the cities of the East and North are untouched fields in the main. What are we doing for them? A handful here and there in such cities as St. Louis, Rochester, New York City, and unnumbered places, with no one to say a word for primitive Christianity, and yet we seem to "care for none of these things." Why not send "your" preacher or some one else's preacher to these fields?

5. Why not be regular and systematic in what we do? Not only be regular in our personal attendance at church, but regular in giving, regular in sending. As already suggested, why not give a certain per cent of the offerings, or the offerings on certain Lord's days, for special work—general missions? Why not decide early in the year what work we will support, and then remit to that work regularly so the workers will know what to depend on? And why not make "our" preacher do some missionary work at our charges?

In short, why not make our church work a practical success? If the foregoing questions stir anybody to more diligence and work, I shall be glad.

Settling Doctrinal Questions by Popular Vote.

BY R. L. WHITESIDE.

Things new to me keep coming up. When I was twenty years of age, I heard a Cumberland Presbyterian preacher in debate refer to the fifteenth chapter of Acts to prove the scripturalness of the General Assembly of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. Some years ago I attended the Mason-White debate in Dallas, Texas, and heard Brother Mason use this same scripture to prove their right to hold conventions. Just recently I heard this same scripture put to a new use—namely, to prove the right of a church to settle a question of doctrine by popular vote. This seems to be a convenient chapter. Will the reader please stop here and carefully read that chapter?

The last preacher referred to was accused of preaching unsound doctrine in that he had preached that the blood of martyrs is the seed of the kingdom, and had challenged any one to show where the Bible says that the word of God is the seed of the kingdom. In a meeting called to consider the matter, the preacher took the position that the whole church should by popular vote settle the matter of his soundness. A visiting preacher argued against such procedure and raised this question: "If a preacher should preach that sprinkling is baptism, would you leave it to a popular vote to determine his soundness? Where would such a course end?" In reply, the accused preacher brought up the proceedings of the meeting outlined in the fifteenth chapter of Acts, and argued that the whole church at Jerusalem settled the question of circumcision that was then agitating the churches, which were composed of both Jews and Gentiles. It was later pointed out to him that the decision was inspired, for the document sent out says: "For it seemed good to the Holy Spirit, and to us," etc. (Verse 28.) To this the preacher replied: "It seemed good to the Holy Spirit just as it seems good to the Holy Spirit now when we come to conclusions in harmony with the Scriptures." To hear a Christian preacher argue that a church may by popular vote settle a matter of doctrine is astonishing enough, but to hear him try to prove his point by the proceedings of that meeting is amazing beyoud measure. If there is another gospel preacher who would take such position, I would like to hear from him.

What are the facts concerning this meeting? What gave rise to it? How was the matter under consideration settled? In all churches composed of Jews and Gentiles the question of circumcision was for a while a disturbing question. A certain class of Jews from Jerusalem was very determined to bind the law of Moses on all Gentile converts. "And certain men came down from Judea and taught the brethren, saying, Except ye be circumcised after the custom of Moses, ye cannot be saved." (Acts 15: 1.) This was at Antioch in Syria. "The fact that these men came from Judea, where the gospel was first preached, and where the original apostles had been the teachers, gave their utterances much authority with the Antioch brethren; so it is not necessary to suppose that they claimed express authority from the apostles for their teaching, though it is possible they did. . . . The phraseology employed shows what is brought out expressly farther on (5), that they insisted on circumcision 'after the custom of Moses,' because they held that all the baptized, whether Jews or Gentiles, must keep the law of Moses in order to final salvation. . . . Paul, who had long ago received by direct revelation from Christ a correct knowledge of the gospel which he preached (Gal, 1: 11, 12), knew perfectly that this teaching was erroneous, and Barnabas had learned the same from him, if not from some other source; so the two united with all their might in opposing the Judean teachers. . . . Paul and Barnabas did not succeed in silencing their opponents, but they so conducted the discussion as to bring about a fortunate decision of a provisional character." (McGarvey.)

"And when Paul and Barnabas had no small dissension and questioning with them, the brethren appointed that Paul and Barnabas, and certain other of them, should go up to Jerusalem unto the apostles and elders about this question." (Verse 2.) These Judaizers did not recognize the authority of Paul as an apostle; if so, his word would have settled the matter. And had it been proper for a church, by popular vote, to settle matters of doctrine disturbing it, why did not the church at Antioch take a vote to see which set of teachers was teaching sound doctrine? Why send men to Jerusalem at all? The question was not disturbing the Jerusalem church, but only those churches composed of Jews and Gentiles, or of Gentiles only. If the church at Jerusalem had the right to determine by popular vote what other churches should believe and practice, would not another church have the right to reverse by popular vote the decision of the Jerusalem church, and thus bind circumcision on all? Is not such an idea absurd in the extreme? Is it not absurd that a Christian preacher should argue that the Jerusalem church, by agreement and without the aid of direct inspiration, should settle a great question for all churches for all time?

When Paul and his company reached Jerusalem, "they were received of the church and the apostles and the elders, and they rehearsed all things that God had done with them." (Verse 4.) It seems that they did not mention the question of circumcision, leaving that for the Judaizers to bring up. "But there arose up certain of the sect of the Pharisees who believed, saying, It is needful to circumcise them, and to charge them to keep the law of Moses." (Verse 5.) After the Pharisees had stated their position, the assembly, so it seems, adjourned. Perhaps so much time had been consumed that they had no time at this meeting to go further into the matter. Another meeting was held. "And the apostles and the elders were gathered together to consider of this matter." (Verse 6.) At both meetings the church was present. (See verses 4, 22.) "There was, however, between these two public meetings a private meeting of Paul and Barnabas with the three apostles who were then in the city." (See Gal. 2: 1-10.) Paul sought this interview with the old apostles that he might know, before proceeding further, how they stood on the question; for he knew that if he found them on the side of the Pharisees, their influence would outweigh his, and his life work would be destroyed by his converts among the Gentiles being brought under the bondage of the law, and his work would be in vain. But the older apostles approved Paul's course, and indicated their approval by giving to Paul and Barnabas the right hand of fellowship. Concerning this, McGarvey remarks: "With this information as to the perfect understanding and agreement between the inspired apostles before us, we can plainly see that the second public meeting of the whole church was called, not for the purpose of bringing about an agreement between the apostles, but for the purpose of enabling the apostles to bring the whole church into agreement with themselves. In this light we must study the proceedings, or we shall totally misconstrue them."

In this second meeting the Judaizers were allowed to fully argue their case before any reply was made. "Then. when they had completely emptied themselves, the apostles, one by one, and in a succession apparently prearranged, gave utterance to facts and judgments which compelled assent." The speeches of these inspired men overcame all opposition, so that the whole church concurred in selecting men to send to Antioch with Paul and Barnabas. A document was prepared, which these men carried with them and which is referred to in Acts 16: 4 as the "decrees which had been ordained of the apostles and elders that were at Jerusalem." It is absurd in the extreme to think Luke would have referred to this document as "decrees" had it embodied only the conclusions of a body of uninspired men; neither, in that case, could he have said that these "decrees" had been ordained by the apostles and elders. Besides, if these "decrees" were only the uninspired conclusions of the church at Jerusalem, what right did they have to impose them on other churches, and why should other churches be under obligations to regard them? McGarvey says of this document: "It makes a formal claim of inspiration by the words, 'it seemed good to the Holy Spirit, and to us.' No uninspired men could dare to use such language; and this circumstance differentiates it from all the decrees and deliverances from that day to this.

Furthermore, it decided, on the authority of inspired men who directed its decisions, a question of doctrine affecting the salvation of souls; and this no set of men except the apostles have ever had the right to do. In no sense, then, can its action be pleaded as a precedent for the existence of any ecclesiastical court whatever outside of the individual congregation, or for the purpose of settling by authority any question of doctrine."

"It seemed good to the Holy Spirit, and to us, to lay upon you no greater burden than these necessary things." What right did the Jerusalem church as a body of uninspired men have to lay any burdens upon any other church? They did not do it. The document sent out was inspired by the Holy Spirit; as such, it was binding on all churches in all countries and for all time.

The declaration that God is the Father of all men and that all men are brethren means that selfish, insular, impossible nationalism which would make one nation prosperous at the expense of other people, or go its way without thought of world conditions and world well-being, must pass. The cross goes before the flag. Loyalty to Jesus, to the kingdom, is the obligation.—Selected.

Those who are perplexing themselves about questions of duty may learn a salutary lesson from considering that their times are in God's hand. It is the ordinary plan of divine providence to make the path of duty plain little by little. We cannot determine to-day what we ought to do next year or even next week. Much anxiety would be avoided if men would simply follow the light they have.—Henry A. Boardman.

LOS ANGELES NOTES

By S. H. HALL, 2669 North Sichel Street,

House of worship, corner Altura and North Sichel Streets. Take North Broadway car to Sichel, then one block to left.

Ontario, Cal.

At this writing (January 25) I am in the second week of the revival at Ontario. The first week was greatly hindered by rain, but the second week bids fair for the best of weather conditions, large crowds, and the very best attention. Samuel E. Witty lives here, and he and his faithful wife are doing a great work, of which I shall write more later. I am delighted with the faithful band of workers with whom he labors. There are about fifty-five members here, and their zeal is easy to be seen by the way they work. Rain bothered them but little last week; our only loss was the attendance of those who are not members. The Californians, as a rule, pay more attention to a little rain or bad weather than the people do back East. Weather conditions, however, have but little effect on those who are whole-heartedly in the work, if they are well physically. No congregation has got just where it should be until they get to that degree of interest that only those weather conditions that keep them from their work through the week keeps them from God's house on Lord's day or at the services during a revival. A full report will be given of the work after the meeting closes.

Last Lord's-day morning (January 23) Brother Witty spoke here, and three members who had moved here from other parts east their lot with the local forces. I was with the North Sichel and Altura congregation. Brother R. L. Smith and wife, with their daughter, Nell, presented their letters from the elders of the church at Mangum, Okla. We were delighted to have them. Also, Sister Irene Clark, who had thus far attended services at the Christian Church, cast her lot with us. On the Lord's day before (January 16) Brother Walter Murray and wife presented their letters from the Tenth and Francis Streets church of Christ, Oklahoma City, Okla. I publish these facts that the elders of the two congregations named above may know that we think well of their work from the zeal and earnestness their members who have been commended to us are putting in the work at this place.

o o o A Suggestion.

I call attention to the following item that appeared in the Gospel Advocate of January 20: "W. T. Blalock, of Lead Hill, Ark., enjoys reading the Gospel Advocate very much. He thinks it is the best paper that he has read, and enjoys reading it more than anything but the Bible. However, he is limited in finances, receiving only a small pension, as he is an ex-Confederate soldier. Since the paper has been advanced to two dollars and fifty cents, he is not able to take it longer. Will not some brother send us the price of one subscription for the purpose of continuing the paper to Brother Blalock? If so, specify that the amount is for that purpose."

I have never met this ex-Confederate soldier and, best of all, this soldier now of a better cause than either the North or the South espoused in that bloody struggle; but I love him because he is my brother—and most tenderly, because he is old. I am inclosing with this article a check to cover his subscription for one year, and I do it with Matt. 25: 34-40 in mind. I am wondering when we both get to heaven if we will remember this little incident and come to know each other personally; and, of course, I most firmly believe we will.

But another thought has come to me, and with the telling of it I make a suggestion. I have wondered just how many would rush letters to the Advocate office containing checks to cover this brother's subscription. Of course, I am not in the least uneasy that the office will be flooded with mail; but it does seem that it should be. It seems that every heart should be touched with the thought of an old soldier's desiring anything that is good, and which he cannot have because he has not the money with which to buy the thing desired. Let me here suggest that a fund be started now, in dead earnest, to meet all such. Will not the managers of the Advocate publish the results of this mild appeal of theirs for this aged brother? I am sure they will gladly do so, putting all into a sinking fund, and whenever such letters come to their office let it be known that another soul has been made happy by having the Advocate continue its visits because of the goodness of unselfish souls that furnish the money to attend to such cases. From this fund also the Advocate should be placed weekly in every library and public reading room in the United States. Let us hear from the brethren on this suggestion.

o o o Stand Still.

When Moses said to the excited and complaining number he was leading from Egyptian bondage, "Stand still, and see the salvation of Jehovah," he uttered orders psychologically correct; for, according to the law of the mind, mentally, they could not see and take orders without first standing still. This "standing still" had no reference to bodily movements or conditions, but rather to their standing still mentally. Their minds were disturbed; they were running into dangerous ways, so far as their thoughts, faith, trust, and hope were concerned. Read Gen. 14: 10-14 carefully, "Stand still" here means exactly what "ye shall hold your peace" means in verse 14. They were doubting, murmuring, and complaining, saying: "It were better to serve the Egyptians than to die in the wilderness." All of this had to stop. They must stand still, or hold their peace, and the way out of the trouble would be shown them and they could see it.

How sorely many of us need the orders: "Stand still, and ye shall see the salvation of Jehovah!" When church troubles arise, or neighborhood troubles, how timely the orders to all concerned, "Stand still," "Hold your peace," which, translated literally into our own way of saying things, would be: "Keep cool: don't lose your head; think a little, pray more, and God will show you the way out." It is certain his will and way can be as clearly seen, by faith, to-day, in every emergency, as the natural eyes of the children of Israel saw the rod when it was raised, and the dividing of the waters of the Jordan and the way open up, if we will but read his word, which "is a lamp unto my feet, and light unto my path," with a real hunger to find the way. What would have been thought of the children of Israel, after the way was pointed out, if they had even then turned their backs upon it and ran into the ranks of their enemies? Just such obstinate and unreasonable beings we make of ourselves when we turn from the plain-asday directions in Jehovah's word as to how to right all wrongs and settle all troubles and go in another direction. We as certainly join the ranks of the devil as had Israel if they had turned from the way pointed out to them and gone in another direction. Are any of us doing such tody? This is a question that each of us should ask oursilves, with the determination that the true answer we must have.

Along with the thoughts suggested, I would commend again what was said on this page last week about finding ourselves. Let us all stand still long enough to see ourselves as God sees us. I am wondering right now how many of us would be perfectly willing next Lord's day for God to pick each one of us up and turn our hearts inside out before cur home churches and let all our brethren see our every thought, motive, and desire toward each other as well as others. How many of us would be willing for this to be done? Have you had evil thoughts? Are you carrying around evil purposes and imaginations toward some brother? Are you perfectly certain that you love kindness and are doing unto others as you would have them do to you? Settle these questions in your own mind now; for though you may deceive your fellow man, it is a certainty you can never deceive God in the judgment. "For we must all be made manifest before the judgment seat of Christ; that each one may receive the things done in the body, according to what he hath done, whether it be good or bad." (2 Cor. 5: 10.) How many of us, I ask again, would be willing for the real self to be fully known by the brethren with whom we associate? Could we stand it? Well, if we would shudder at the idea of man's knowing us, have we thought seriously of how we will feel when we face God? And should we not keep in mind the fact that he knows us? Keep still, my brother, my sister; let your mind wander not to other things; let us settle this one question now and see our standing before God. May God help us to live ever with the consciousness that we are in the presence of Jehovah; that he sees; and to live each day exactly as we know we would desire to live if we knew it was the last day for us on earth. This makes us ready and keeps us ready for his coming or our going to him.

Georgia and the Far Southern Field By B. C. GOODPASTURE

We Must Work.

God never intended men to live without work. If there ever was a place in which man could live in comparative leisure or idle ease, it was Eden. In this garden, planted by the Lord, grew "every tree that is pleasant to the sight, and good for food; the tree of life also in the midst of the garden, and the tree of the knowledge of good and evil. And a river went out of Eden to water the garden." (Gen. 2: 9, 10.) It cannot be doubted that this was an ideal abode for man. It was planned according to God's own wisdom and will. He gave Adam a home and a companion. These were indispensable to his well-being and happiness. But they were not all the essentials; he needed something to do-employment. For this very thing God made provisions when he put Adam "into the garden of Eden to dress it and to keep it." (Gen. 2: 15.) After the fall and expulsion from Eden, Jehovah said: "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground." (Gen. 3: 19.) Since Eden, the obligation to work and the necessity for work have been greater. At the naming of Noah, his father, Lamech, said: "This same shall comfort us in our work and in the toil of our hands, which cometh because of the ground which Jehovah hath cursed." (Gen. 5: 29.) The children of Israel fought their way to Canaan, and fought for their inheritances in Canaan. One of the details in John's thrilling description of the Eternal City is: "His servants shall serve him." (Rev. 22: 3.) There will be no "army of the unemployed" in the New Jerusalem. It would be an uncomfortable and disagreeable place for the slothful, the idle, and the lazy, if they could get there. The apostle Paul gave utterance to a principle that has rung from one paradise to the other when he wrote: "If any will not work, neither let him eat," (2 Thess. 3: 10.)

But I have been speaking of work in general. There is a work in particular that demands our consideration—a work that involves our salvation in heaven. To some of the most faithful Christians of the most blameless congregation of apostolic times Paul wrote: "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling." (Phil. 2: 12.) If the faithful and active disciples of Christ needed this exhortation, what of the inactive and indifferent? These Philippian brethren had been baptized all right—they were "saints in Christ Jesus" (Phil. 1: 1); but still they must work for the Lord, if they would be saved in the end. And for the same purpose the great apostle wrote to Timothy: "Take heed to thyself, and to thy teaching. Continue in these things; for in doing this thou shalt save both thyself and them that hear thee." (1 Tim. 4: 16.) Timothy is impressed with the fact that not only his own salvation, but also that of others, is conditioned upon his "doing" something in the vineyard of the Lord. Jesus authorized us to pray for only one kind of people in the harvest. He said: "The harvest indeed is plenteous, but the laborers are few. Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he send forth laborers into his harvest." (Matt. 9: 37, 38.) He wants "laborers"-workers, not shirkers. "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city." (Rev. 22: 14.) "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord from henceforth: yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; for their works follow with them." (Rev. 14: 13.) be impossible for those who have not worked to "rest from their labors." My dear reader, can the man who preaches your funeral apply the foregoing scripture to your case with propriety? "Let us labor therefore to enter into that rest." (Heb. 4: 11.)

Finally, let it be remembered that the mere act of working is not enough; it must be the work of the King in his kingdom. In the parable (Matt. 20: 1-16) the "householder" rewarded the "laborers" for what they had done in his own vineyard.

The Last Call From McGregor, Ga.

To-day (January 31) a letter came from Sister Vina Hooper Mitchell, of McGregor, which contained the following request: "We wish to ask you to make one more call through the Gospel Avocate for help. We are very eager to lift this debt." If I remember correctly, the debt is about two hundred dollars. The amount would be small for a strong church; it is not so with the little band at McGregor. Brethren, give this matter your immediate attention. It is a "Macedonian call." Send all contributions to Mrs. Vina Hooper Mitchell, McGregor, Ga.

Brother R. P. Cuff reports two good services in Macon yesterday (January 30). There was one confession.

There was one baptism at East Point last night at the conclusion of the union service conducted by the three congregations of the city. This meeting was another feast of good things.

Brother Silas E. Templeton, who has been doing field work under the supervision of the West End congregation of this city, left for Altus, Okla., last Friday afternoon. He will labor with the church there. Also, Brother R. H. Rogers, who has been with the South Pryor Street Church for several months, left this evening for Terrell, Texas. He will preach for the church there. We regret to give up these worthy brethren. Their many friends in Georgia will long remember them and "esteem them exceeding highly in leve for their work's sake." The churches in Terrell and Altus are to be congratulated upon securing the services of Brother Rogers and Brother Templeton, respectively.

It is not enough to leave off from doing wrong and begin to do right; there must be a sense of guilt, joined with sorrow for having done wrong in the past, and for being still tainted with inward evil. And in order that the repentance may be good, the motive for sorrow must be found not solely in the sinner's hopes or fears for himself, nor even in the thought of the injury he has inflicted upon his fellow men; but in the knowledge that he has grieved and offended God.—A. J. Mason.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE.

M AT HOME AND ABROAD

Albert Cook and Viola King were united in marriage on January 23, in Macon, Ga., R. P. Cuff officiating.

Under date of February 3, R. H. Rogers writes as follows: "We arrived here safely Wednesday morning. Address me at 804 North Francis Street, Terrell, Texas. I think we have a good work here, and am much pleased."

W. L. Karnes, of Portland, Tenn., was in our office last week. He was inquiring for the faithful at Tampa, Fla. We cited him to George B. Hoover, our brother who has done so much in building up the cause in that city.

James E. Scobey will preach at Fairview, on the Hillsboro pike, on the second Lord's day in February. He preached at the Belmont Avenue church of Christ on the last Lord's day in January to a large and attentive audience.

From Leslie G. Thomas, Flint, Mich., February 2: "I was with the church at Speaker last Lord's day. We had two good services. Some fine people are to be found there, and we are expecting to hear that they are doing much in the Lord's vineyard."

E. P. Watson, who is now preaching for the church in Dickson, Tenn., called to see us last week. He reports the church in a flourishing condition. This church is doing much missionary work, and appears to be very much alive and in earnest in the work of advancing the kingdom of Christ, Changes of address: Silas E. Templeton, from Atlanta, Ga., to Altus, Okla.; Lee Warren, from Waterman to Wills Point, Texas; G. C. Parham, from Oklahoma City, Okla., to Marshfield, Mo.; A. S. Reynolds, from Madill, Okla., to Box 1014, Electra, Texas. John T. Smithson's address is 2060 Preston Street, Louisville, Ky.

From W. Curtis Porter, Monette, Ark., January 31: "I have propositions signed with W. E. Sherrill (Missionary Baptist) for a six-days' debate. I think Sherrill is considered the best debater the Missionary Baptists have in this State. We wish to find a suitable place for this debate; so if any congregation wants it, please write me."

We have received a copy of the Kentucky Evangelist, issued from Horse Cave, Ky., edited and published by Emmett G. Creacy. This is a very neat, four-page sheet, published monthly in the interest of primitive Christianity in Southern Kentucky. We shall rejoice in all the good that the paper does, and bespeak for it a favorable reception.

The many friends of Dan Beasley, of Dickson, Tenn., will be glad to know that he is very much improved. He was carried from the Protestant Hospital, in this city, where he had been for more than seven weeks, to his home last Monday It will take a long time, however, for him to regain his strength, as he has had a very serious injury.

From Charles F. Hardin, Springfield, Mo., February 1: "Part of the time in December and January I was not able to fill my appointments on account of the influenza, but am up and able to preach now. The congregations I am preaching for confess their shortcomings and plan better work in the future. On February 7 we shall begin a music drill, to continue a month, for the churches here."

From O. M Reynolds, Madill, Okla., January 31: "Morning and evening services were well attended, with three added by relation, on Lord's day; and at 3 P.M. two cars of brethren assisted me in a fine service at McMillan, a mission point. The people seemed to be famishing for lack of the 'bread of life.' The church here is to lend a helping hand to a number of weak points this year."

We have received a communication from R. Johnson, clerk of the church in New York, which meets at 239 West Sixty-ninth Street, stating that Morgan Carter has been engaged by the church at that place, beginning next June. We are glad to see that Brother Carter is undertaking this work; for he is a very earnest, zealous worker, and is calculated to build up the cause in destitute fields.

N. R. Hewgley, of the Bull Run congregation, in Cheatham County, Tenn., was in to renew his subscription to the Gospel Advocate last week. He has been a subscriber for forty-five years, and says he wishes to try it for another year. He and his afflicted companion get much comfort and consolation from reading its pages in their home life. We pray that they may both be spared to read it many years yet.

From J. S. Daugherty, Kirbyville, Texas, January 31: "I preached twice yesterday to a few faithful disciples in Wiergate, Newton County. This was the first gospel preaching ever delivered in this large sawmill town, and the first time the Lord's table was ever set there. I am to be with them again the second Sunday in February, at which time we hope to set in order a congregation, organize a Bible school, and begin a campaign to take the town for Christ."

W. F. Lemmons writes from Beaumont, Texas, January 31; "We have just closed a right interesting meeting at South Park church of Christ, with one addition—a leading physician—and good interest otherwise. The congregation is going to work to build a baptistery, as we have had to borrow the use of the baptistery from the First Christian Church in the past, which makes it inconvenient for us. The church seems to have a mind to work, and we expect greater things in the future. I go back to Somerville to-day, as I preach there half time, and am making that place head-quarters for the present."

From C. H. Smithson, 891 Dudley Avenue, Texarkana, Ark.: "The work at the Dudley Avenue church of Christ is increasing with every service and we are all rejoicing. On next Lord's day I shall begin a meeting here at home, and hope for a good one. All preachers and church workers are invited by the Dudley Avenue Church to be present on April 4, at 7:30 P.M., and enjoy a feast of good things. F. L. Young has consented to be chief moderator and will largely fix up the program. Let all remember the date and come Take a College Hill car, and get off at Dudley Avenue. Please let me know if you aim to come, so I can meet you at the station."

Our sister, Mrs. N. L. Lewers, of Barr, Miss., in a business letter, says: "Wish I could send you some new subscribers; but money seems to be scarce, and people don't like to sacrifice. There is so little interest manifested in church work here, and such a feeling of indiffernece, it makes one tremble for fear at the thought of judgment. We have had more good, able preachers at Thyatira than many large cities have had, and still not zealous as we should be. We have no preacher for this year. We have tried several times to secure one for the year, but the congregations of the county have not got together. So many, many blessings we receive daily from our Heavenly Father which are not even thought of. To sum it up, our minds are where our treasures are—on earthly things. Pray for an awakening in our congregation before it is eternally too late."

On the last day in January, F. B. Srygley, without provocation, was assaulted near the haymarket in this city as he was walking home sometime between one and four o'clock in the afternoon. His assailant struck him from behind, leaving him no opportunity to defend himself. It was thought at first that he would lose one of his eyes. We are hopeful, however, that this will not be the case, as he is very greatly improved otherwise and the eye seems to be clearing up satisfactorily. He was in the office last Friday, and preached for the Chapel Avenue congregation on last Lord's day. He thinks that he will be able to continue his work as usual. Brother Srygley has received many letters of inquiry, all manifesting sympathy, for which he is truly grateful. He wishes the Gospel Advocate to say to the many who have written him that their consideration and sympathy are duly appreciated; but he cannot, being unable to use his good eye, write them letters showing his appreciation for their interest. Brother Srvgley has manifested the spirit of Christ in this whole affair. and has said nothing bitter against his antagonist.

J. C. McQuiddy, chairman of the board of directors of the Tennessee Orphan Home, at the last regular meeting of the directors appointed five sisters to advise the board of directors as to the special inside workings of the Home and as to its needs and requirements. He felt, and the board thoroughly agreed, that women know much better how to manage the inside of the Home than men, and that they are better fitted to advise just what should be done. last meeting information was given the board that the Home was without a seamstress. The sisters acting in this advisory capacity suggested that, instead of employing a seamstress for the Home, they get the sewing done by the women of the various churches, and they are now engaged ir. doing this work. They have asked some of the churches, with the approval of the board, to contribute five dollars per month for the purchase of materials to be used in making garments for the children. The churches have always been liberal in the support of this Home, and we cannot now believe that they are not just as ready as here-tofore to continue their support. "The Lord loveth a We must not neglect the needy at home. cheerful giver."

- J. B. Whitefield and wife, of Watertown, Tenn., were among our visitors last week. They report the church at Watertown as moving on about as usual.
- H. Leo Boles filled both appointments for preaching at Foster Street church of Christ, this city, last Lord's day. He had fine audiences, and they were well pleased with his efforts.
- J. F. Smith, in a business letter from McComb, Okla., says: "I am evangelizing in this part, and starting some new churches and working over some old ones. I'll be at Tecumseh, Okla., next."

John T. Hall, of Jackson, Tenn., called to see us on Monday. He reports the work doing well at Jackson. He will take subscriptions for the Gospel Advocate in that city and the surrounding country.

From Edward Clutter, Blythedale, Mo., February 5: "The meeting here is two weeks old; fifty-six confessions. Mrs. Clutter has charge of the singing. The meeting will continue another week. We have some open dates."

V. E. Gregory preached two very fine sermons at Charlette Avenue church of Christ, this city, on last Lord's day and night. The Bible study had a record attendance of one hundred and ninety-two pupils that day. The work there has grown wonderfully in the last six months.

A brother at Maury City, Tenn., who is an elder, desires to locate in Nashville, that he and his family may have the benefit of our churches, schools, etc. He asks brethren to assist him in finding work, that he may make an honest living for himself and family. Write or tell this office if you can help him.

A. S. Derryberry preached at Eighth Avenue, North, this city, last Lord's day. One made the confession at the morning service. Lytton Alley preached at night, and baptized this one. This church seems to be taking on new life, having the largest number in attendance at the Bible-study service that has been present during the past year.

From M. S. Mason, Springfield, Mo., February 1: "Since last report I have filled my regular appointments in three congregations in the city and performed one marriage ceremony. The work is improving in every way. Charles F. Hardin will teach a singing school for us during this month. I have the first three weeks in June that I would like to place somewhere."

From J. C. Schmidt, 319 Monroe Avenue, Evansville, Ind.: "I would like to know the nearest congregation, or the nearest one of our preachers, to this place, for we may have to stay here; and if we do, I would like to get some one to come in here and help us build up a church or a place of worship as soon as we get able." Will some one that knows please answer Brother Schmidt?

W. Silas Moody preached at Twelfth Avenue, North, this city, on last Lord's day, morning and evening. There were three confessions at the morning service and one restoration at the evening service. The Bible study at ten o'clock was very satisfactory and much enthusiasm prevailed. There were three hundred and eight in attendance. S. M. Jones, of Canada, who held a very successful meeting for them last fall, has been engaged to hold another meeting.

From R. A. Craig, Louisville, Ky., February 2: "Our Bible-class work at Parksville continues with fine Interest. I will probably continue the work another week. Farmers of Kentucky are distressed over the decline in tobacco prices. Many farmers will lose their homes. I feel that a great interest should be put forth here in the raising of foodstuff. We need more cattle, hogs, sheep, corn, wheat, oats, etc., but above all these we need a greater zeal in church work."

A. A. Bunner, who a short time ago went to Fairmont, W. Va., to represent the Gospel Advocate and work for the Lord, has been compelled by poor health to abandon that field for the present and return to his home, 1800 West Fifty-fourth Street, Cleveland, Ohio. He does not abandon the work, however. He will press it in the great city of Cleveland just as far as his strength, augmented by being at home, will permit. Write him of persons you know in Cleveland that he may be able to reach with the word.

Harvey Scott writes from Floresville, Texas, February 3: "I have closed the first month in the year by preaching more times on Lord's days than in any other month since I have been preaching—fifteen times. I drive ten miles out into the country on three Sundays in each month, in the afternoon, and back to town at night. Brethren, why not use the Lord's day this way? Time is too short, eternity too long, heaven too great, and the souls of men too precious for us to waste our time in not teaching them. I am starting the second month with plans to do more than ever. Let us sow the good seed of the kingdom,"

From Charles Holder, Bridgeport, Ala., February 4: "I am able to sit up in bed some now, and my general condition is good. I am improving, and think I will be able to be up in a few days, the Lord willing. It will be several days yet before I am able to preach. Brethren, pray to the Lord for me that I may soon be able to be out preaching the word again, if it be his will. I am truly thankful for the fellowship of the disciples during my sickness. Every contribution came at a time of need and was sincerely appreciated. The Lord bless all who have in any way helped me!"

F. E. Exum, Houston, Texas, February 1, writes: "I preached to a splendid audience on Sunday at the Central congregation here. J. S. Dunn will return from a visit to Dallas to the work here this week. The Central Church is considering establishing a congregation in Livingston, Texas. I preached to large and attentive audiences at East Tempe, near Livingston, recently. At least ninety per cent of those in the audiences were not members of the church. The business district here is crowded every Sunday with theatergoers. It is a credit to Nashville that such is not the case there."

Silas E. Templeton writes from Buchanan, Ga., January 31: "We are now on our way to Altus, Okla. I shall do everything I possibly can to further the interests of the Gospel Advocate in and around Altus. We are very much interested in our new field of labor, and pray that the Heavenly Father's richest blessing in Christ may attend the faithful disciples to whom we go, also those we are leaving here in Georgia. We should have been in Altus the first of the month, but were hindered by the continued illness of Mrs. Templeton; but she is much stronger now, and able to travel. May our Father's grace and mercy bless your every effort in the work of publishing the Advocate and all work of faith and labor of love."

From Will W. Slater, Fort Smith, Ark., February 1: "I was with the brethren at Atkins on the fourth Sunday in January. We had fine services indeed. There is good interest in the work there, and some fine members who are willing to work. They will have a singing school son to improve their singing. I was with the church at Hatfield on the fifth Sunday. This was my first trip; but we had splendid services, with one confession and baptism. As a whole, the church there is a very enthusiastic body, alive to the work of the Lord. The first, second, and third Sundays is given to the work with my home congregation. Our interest is gradually growing. There were one hundred and forty-five in the Bible study Sunday; and my brother, twenty-one years of age, preached his first sermon at the evening service."

Fred Blanchard, Friendship, Tenn., writes: "I am situated so that I have about four months—May, June, part of September, October, and part of November—that I can devote to singing for meetings. Congregations desiring my services should write me at Friendship, Tenn., not later than April I. A. G. Freed, N. B. Hardeman, W. S. Long, John T. Smith, or Joe Ratcliffe can say whether or not I am qualified for this work. One of my New Year's resolutions is to read every word of every article of every copy of this year's Gospel Advocate; and I find it a resolution easy to keep. Besides teaching school, I am now preaching monthly for Friendship and Bethel, in Crockett County, and for Bethany and Dorris Chapel, in Gibson County. J. W. Ballard, N. B. Hardeman, Joe Ratcliffe, and W. Claude Hall will hold meetings for these congregations this year in the order named."

F. J. Rogers writes from South Pittsburg, Tenn., January 31: "I am sending you a report of the church here. We are having large crowds and fine interest. Yesterday was a great day with us here. The church is clear of debt. The preacher is well paid, and paid in full to date. We are planning to do some mission work in the Valley (Sequatchie). We are having a Bible class each Wednesday night, and all are enjoying same. I want the West Tennessee brethren to see how the East Tennessee church is moving along and what we are doing. Everybody seems to have 'a mind to work.' This cannot be said of all the churches of to-day. Brethren, let us make the sacrifice, that all may hear the word of the Lord, and our hands will be free from the blood of all men. Pray for us, that the gospel of Christ may run and not be hindered. We are glad to learn that Charles Holder, of Bridgeport, Ala., is much improved. Let us pray for him and his."

The Truth Between Extremes. BY J. C. M'O.

Some writers are so extreme and bitter in religious discussions that their readers become prejudiced against all investigation and discussion. This is very unfortunate. Discussion is very helpful in eliciting truth, and no one should oppose the right kind of investigation. When one is conducting a discussion, he should never write anything when he is in the wrong spirit and is liable to say harsh, bitter things that are calculated to do harm, and not good. If one cannot conduct a discussion in the spirit of Christ, he should not discuss at all. The man who will cut a sentence in two, leaving out a qualifying phrase so as to destroy the meaning of the writer, should never write at all; neither should the man write who will leave out a part of a paragraph that is needed to complete the meaning of the one whom he is criticizing. No man should discuss a subject unless his ultimate aim and purpose is to main tain the truth and to honor and glorify Christ. But there are some who are so bitter in their denunciation of an opponent that they have rendered all religious discussion very unpopular. They have gone to such an extreme that they have influenced others to go to the opposite extreme and to object to all religious discussion. The debater who is not willing to do unto his opponent as he would be done by, and who is not willing to regard his opponent as honest and as sincere as is he, is liable to bring all discussion into disrepute. But because some men wrest the truth to their own destruction is no reason why we should burn the Bible as an unworthy book; because some churches apostatize and fall away is no reason why we should reject the church of Christ. Those who love the truth and who contend for the faith once for all delivered to the saints should not grow angry and fight back in the same spirit because some who know no better misstate their true position. They should find comfort in the following scripture: "Blessed are they that have been persecuted for righteousness' sake: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven. Blessed are ye when men shall reproach you, and persecute you, and say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake. Rejoice, and be exceeding glad: for great is your reward in heaven: for so persecuted they the prophets that were before you." (Matt. 5; 10-12.) The time will never come so long as we are in the flesh that we will not make mistakes. "He that is slow to anger is better than the mighty; and he that ruleth his spirit, than he that taketh a city." (Prov. 16: 32.) Man is his own worst enemy. The right kind of discussion should train and develop him and give him more strength to subdue his angry passions and to present the whole truth for the glory of God.

The man who loves party or partyism more than he loves the truth is unfit to discuss religious subjects. It is wicked to exalt partyism above the truth of God. He is the worst sort of partisan who discusses a subject simply in order to gain a victory over his opponent. He is an enemy to the truth who will waste valuable time in discussing subjects that are not vital to the salvation of man. The Holy Spirit forbids the discussion of such subjects. The discussion of theories and speculations is not calculated to edify any one, and should be avoided. Paul left Timothy at Ephesus when he was going into Macedonia, that he might "charge certain men not to teach a different doctrine, neither to give heed to fables and endless genealogies, which minister questionings, rather than a dispensation of God which is in faith," and said: "But the end of the charge is love out of a pure heart and a good conscience and faith unfeigned: from which things some having swerved have turned aside unto vain talking; desiring to be teachers of the law, though they understand neither what they say, nor whereof they confidently affirm." (1 Tim. 1: 4-7.) In all teaching, as well as in discussion, men should teach in the language of the Bible whenever it is possible. It would be better to avoid that teaching that cannot be couched in biblical phraseology. Again we find Paul admonishing Timothy: "If any man teacheth a different doctrine, and consenteth not to sound words, even the words of our Lord Jesus Christ, and to the doctrine which is according to godliness; he is puffed up, knowing nothing, but doting about questionings and disputes of words, whereof cometh envy, strife, railings, evil surmisings, wranglings of men corrupted in mind and bereft of the truth, supposing that godliness is a way of gain." (1 Tim. 6: 3-5.) Discussing about "disputes of words, whereof cometh envy, strife, railings, evil surmisings," will not edify or strengthen the hearers. The Holy Spirit admonishes us, instead of doing this, to "hold the pattern of sound words which thou hast heard from me, in faith and love which is in Christ Jesus." (2 Tim. 1: 13.) If men did not vaunt themselves and did not think of themselves more highly than they should, they would not turn away from the plain and simple teaching of the word of God to speculations and untaught questions. There is enough plain, simple teaching in the word of God to occupy the brightest minds until Gabriel blows his trumpet. There never has lived, and there never will live, any man who is able to fully grasp and comprehend all that is contained in the plainest truths of the Bible. If the last man who lives upon the earth had the combined wisdom of all men from Adam, the first man, to himself, that man would not be able to comprehend all that is clearly revealed in the Bible. Why, then, the necessity for turning away from that which is plain and simple to that which is above us and beyond us and which God never intended that we should fully comprehend? Only those who are wise in their own conceit and think more highly of themselves than they should will be guilty of such conduct. The Bible not only admonishes us to hold to sound words, but to hold the pattern of sound words. Again, Paul admonishes his son, Timothy: "Of these things put them in remembrance, charging them in the sight of the Lord, that they strive not about words, to no profit, to the subverting of them that hear. Give diligence to present thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, handling aright the word of truth. But shun profane babblings: for they will proceed further in ungodliness, and their word will eat as doth a gangrene: of whom is Hymenæus and Philetus; men who concerning the truth have erred, saying that the resurrection is past already, and overthrow the faith of some." (2 Tim. 2: 14-18.) Again, writing in the same strain, Paul charges Timothy: "But foolish and ignorant questionings refuse, knowing that they gender strifes. And the Lord's servant must not strive, but be gentle toward all, apt to teach, forbearing, in meekness correcting them that oppose themselves; if peradventure God may give them repentance unto the knowledge of the truth, and they may recover themselves out of the snare of the devil. having been taken captive by him unto his will." (Verses 23-26.) Above all, those who teach others and who write for our religious papers should be "an ensample of good works; in thy doctrine showing uncorruptness, gravity, sound speech, that cannot be condemned; that he that is of the contrary part may be ashamed, having no evil thing to say of us." (Tit. 2: 8.) While every child of God is under obligation to preach the truth, to present the truth boldly and fearlessly, yet he is also under obligation to manifest a spirit of gentleness and firmness in his advocacy of the truth. In the hands of such an advocate, the truth is not likely to suffer. Again, Paul admonishes Titus: "But shun foolish questionings, and genealogies, and strifes, and fightings about the law; for they are unprofitable and vain. A factious man after a first and second admonition refuse; knowing that such a one is perverted, and sinneth, being self-condemned." (Tit. 3: 9, 10.) While we are not disposed to discontinue the discussion of fundamental matters in the columns of the Gospel Advocate, we should like to urge upon our readers the necessity of teaching the truth in the spirit and in the love of the truth. How often is the truth damaged and injured by an ill-tempered, misguided advocate of it!

Much harm is done by speculating over untaught questions. There is as much wisdom, as much philanthropy, as much kindness and mercy in concealing some things as in revealing others. "Secret things belong unto Jehovah our God; but the things that are revealed belong to us and to our children." Every attempt, therefore, to derive knowledge from unrevealed questions is prima facie evidence of the speculator's unbelief in divine revelation. "Blindness to the future is therefore kindly given" that we may not suffer a plurality of evils in fearing one, nor by long anticipation of prospective pleasures enervate their power to create pleasure and to give delight. Hence, it is no less a folly than a sin to lift the latch and force the door that God has in mercy and kindness shut, inasmuch as secret things belong to the Lord, while these revealed belong to us and our children. Speculators have not developed one new truth nor established one new fact by their written documents or otherwise. "Their mountains have long been in travail, and yet not even a mouse is born." Such speculations, in common with all delusions, render but one service—they reveal a class of professors who have a hereditary faith in the gospel, and nothing more; also those who are not established in the Christian evidences and those who follow the guidance of what they call "reason," and who are fond of novelties and dissatisfied with the details of true, Christian piety. Being dissatisfied with the plain and simple truths of the Bible, they assert that their newly discovered truth "is bursting the shackles of a superstitious tradition favoring religious dogmatists." J. B. Ferguson, in departing from the truth and turning to spiritual mediums, made this claim.

More About Unity and Peace.

BY E. A. E.

It is not every one who seems to be impressed with God's command to give "diligence to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace" or to realize the sin in breaking it.

The church—not the various conflicting and contradictory religious sects in the world, but "the church of God"—is the body of Christ, and "there should be no schisms in the body."

For as the body [the human body] is one, and hath many members, and all the members of the body being many, are one body; so also is Christ. . . . But now they are many members, but one body. . . Now ye are the body of Christ, and severally members thereof. (See 1 Cor. 12: 12-30.)

These and dozens of other passages show what the Holy Spirit means by unity and peace. It is schismatic and productive of factions to give to these words, or to the command to "give diligence to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace," a meaning different from that which God gives.

Suppose all study these expressions and this subject of Christ's disciples all being one, as he and God are one, anew and more thoroughly than ever before, not influenced by former conceptions. Let none take it for granted that they understand all about it, and that others break the peace, are factionists, and cause divisions contrary to the teaching of Christ.

We know that the Lord states expressly that which must be done in order to prevent divisions and to preserve harmony, peace, and love. To ignore these commands of God is to ignore him.

Attention is called to two of these commands:

1. No member of the body-the church-however learned and wise, important and useful, can ignore and set aside the poorest, most ignorant, and most insignificant member. The less honorable and uncomely members should have the more abundant honor and care, and for the very reason that there be no schisms in "the body." "If one member suffereth, all the members suffer with it; or if one is honored, all the members rejoice with it." All who fail to do this, to that extent produce "schisms in the body," and to that extent destroy the unity and peace which God teaches. To hold "the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Lord of glory, with respect of persons" (James 2: 1), is to make "schisms" and to produce divisions in the body of Christ. Preferences, partiality, and prejudice lead to parties and factions. To mistreat one of Christ's disciples-the poorest, weakest, most ignorant-is to mistreat Christ and to break fellowship or union with him and God, which means to be lost.

Inasmuch as ye did it not unto one of these least, ye did it not unto me. And these shall go away into eternal punishment: but the righteous into eternal life. (Matt. 25: 45, 46)

It is just as sinful in preachers as in others, and causes even more strife and divisions and produces more factions, to disagree and to contend in a disagreeable spirit and manner with one another and to teach one another unrighteously, or not according to the Golden Rule. Have not more strife, contentions, factions, divisions, bitter feelings, and denominations in the religious world sprung from preachers than from any other class of men? The majority of people study the Bible very little anyway, have less of its spirit, and follow rather their favorite preacher, because they think he is right.

2. The command to all to "speak the same thing" is the other. Paul beseeches all "through the name of our Lord Jesus Christ" to do this; beseeches all to allow no divisions or schisms to arise, even over preachers; and beseeches all to be "perfected together in the same mind and in the same judgment." (1 Cor. 1: 10.) A congregation whose teachers and other members do not "speak the same thing" cannot be in "the same mind and in the same judgment." Speaking "the same thing" is fundamental and imperative to unity and peace. Some years ago this command of God was kept before the church, and faithful and godly teachers feared to disobey it. We were all taught "to call Bible things by Bible names," etc. This speaking "the same thing" is emphasized by the Bible. All teachers and preachers who love the Bible do the same, Since Paul charged Timothy and Titus to do this, all others should heed the charge.

I charge thee in the sight of God, and of Christ Jesus, who shall judge the living and the dead, and by his appearing and his kingdom: preach the word; be urgent in season, out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort, with all long-suffering and teaching. (2 Tim. 4: 1, 2.)

suffering and teaching. (2 Tim. 4: 1, 2.)

Hold the pattern of sound words which thou hast heard from me, in faith and love which is in Christ. (2 Tim.

1: 13.)

These words Timothy learned from Paul, and Paul spoke the words of God. All now must use the same "sound words" and must learn them from the same source. They are recorded by inspiration. To refuse to do this is to reject the counsel of God and to produce division.

If any man teacheth a different doctrine, and consenteth not to sound words, even the words of our Lord Jesus Christ, and to the doctrine which is according to godliness; he is puffed up, knowing nothing, but doting [is sick] about questionings and disputes of words, whereof cometh envy, strife, railings, evil surmisings, wranglings of men corrupted in mind and bereft of the truth, supposing that godliness is a way of gain. (1 Tim. 6: 3-5.)

The "sound words" enjoined by this passage are "the words of our Lord Jesus Christ." All that Jesus has said is on record. He sent out his apostles, guided by the Holy Spirit "into all the truth," to teach the observance of "all things whatsoever" he had commanded them. They did this. Whoever teaches differently, or falls short, or goes beyond, what Christ teaches, has not God. (2 John 9.) Jesus has taught in his own "sound words" all things he would have all men believe and do. If we cannot learn from him in his own language the entire will of God on any given subject and on all subjects, we can never know it, because Jesus alone has "the words of eternal life." Whoever presumes to improve upon the words of Jesus "is puffed up," Paul declares, and is "sick" "about questionings and disputes of words," which produce "envy, strife, railings, evil surmisings, wranglings." Have we not all seen men "sick" over "questionings and disputes of words" concerning many untaught questions? Men who do this and use such words are "corrupted in mind and bereft of the truth "-so says Paul.

Again, "if any man speaketh," he is to speak "as the oracles of God"—that is, he is to speak the words of God. (1 Pet. 4: 11.) The Hebrew Christians were charged to remember the "men that spake" unto them "the word of God." (Heb. 13: 7.) Titus was charged to speak "the things which befit the sound doctrine" and to use "sound speech, that cannot be condemned." (Tit. 2: 1, 8.) These scriptures and others teach most clearly just how all can "speak the same thing."

The plain truth is, all must study and strive to do this or disobey God and produce division. As sinful as factions and strife and divisions are, just that sinful it is to refuse to "speak the same thing."

Let all know that nothing can be read into what God teaches, and nothing can be read out of it.

SOME APPLICATIONS.

In this paper, January 13, Brother Scobey gave a very timely article on "Ambassadors." After showing who the ambassadors of Christ are, what they do, and that there can be none to-day, he says: "A young preacher was recently heard to say he was an ambassador of Christ." Will this young brother continue to call himself an ambassador of Christ, or will he learn from Brother Scobey the use of "sound words?" I think he will learn; at least, I trust so. But perhaps he heard this from others and never questioned it. I heard sometime ago a preacher of one of the denominations of our land declare in public that he was 'an apostle of Jesus Christ, called of God," Some congregations sing now the song, "The King's Business," in which is the expression, "ambassador to be of realms beyond the sea." No one seems to call this in question, which shows how error creeps in. Error must not be sung. I called a young preacher's attention to Brother Scobey's article, and he replied that we sing that in this song, but that he would not sing it any more, because he desires to teach the truth. He called my attention to this song.

There is too much yielding to that weakness of human nature which would exalt preachers above other good people and make them rulers in a congregation and feel that they are in an important situation between God and the people. Out of this grew popes and prelates. It makes no difference by what name a pope is called.

In the same paper was a good article in the main by a brother, in which he says there is need of more preachers around his city, "as there are several congregations without preachers." Paul remained in Corinth at first for eighteen months, but built up the church from nothing. He was at Ephesus as much as three years at one time: but from there he preached the gospel throughout the surrounding country. (Acts 19: 10.) He left Timothy in Ephesus later, after the elders had been appointed, for the reasons stated in 1 Tim. He left Titus in Crete among the churches there for the reason he gives in Titus. But with all the reproof and correction of various evils Paul gives different congregations, he never reproved any for being "without preachers." He gives full instruction to elders, so there is no mistaking their duties or work; but he says not one word about "every church" having a preacher. Some who work through societies and use instrumental music in worship wrote much twenty-five or thirty years ago about "preacherless churches and churchless preachers," and the racy writer, F. D. Srygley, showed in great clearness the difference between such churches and preachers and the New Testament kind, or between this order of things and the New Testament order. Since preachers are determined to know nothing, "save Jesus Christ, and him crucified," they must not allow churches to misuse them; they must not, on the other hand, misuse or abuse the churches.

Every generation must study for itself the New Testament church—its construction, its work and worship, and the mission of all teachers and preachers—the New Testament order in all things. To depart from the New Testament in anything is to depart from it; and one departure leads to another and another. To depart, for instance, from "the pattern of sound words" of the New Testament is as much a departure or digression as to do so in worship. Words are the signs of ideas, and all forms of words which are not "the pattern of sound words," "even the words of our Lord Jesus Christ," represent thoughts or conceptions which are not from the New Testament.

Another writer in the same issue of the paper, in an excellent article in almost every way, says:

We have not been benefited much by the many articles appearing in the Gospel Advocate urging that a preacher should farm or do something else in the way of legitimate work, rather than devote his full time to the ministry.

Attention is called to the following question:

1. Does the New Testament use the word "ministry" in the exclusive sense in which this article and the denominational world use it? This word has a beautiful, comprehensive, and wonderful meaning as used by Jesus, who came, not to be ministered to, but to "minister." Does the New Testament separate any service of God and man from all others and call it, as distinguished from the rest, "the ministry?" Then where did this idea originate?

2. Is not the writer mistaken in saying that "many articles" have appeared "urging that a preacher farm or do something else in the way of legitimate work," rather than devote his whole time to preaching the gospel and teaching the truth? If any one article, perhaps, has taught that thing, it has failed to teach the whole truth. Is it not possible that the "many articles" referred to have not been correctly read and understood?

Be all this as it may, to avoid any further trouble, allow me to "urge" all to study the entire subject anew, regardless of preconceived ideas. The Lord has left all this in the New Testament just as he, in goodness and wisdom, saw is best. The persons who love the truth desire, in every investigation, nothing to prevail but the will of God; they want nothing else. The reasons for all this in the New Testament are God's reasons, not man's.

A New Book.

We are publishing this week the "Preface" to the new book, "Queries and Answers," by David Lipscomb and E. G. Sewell. As these faithful servants of God had been associated together in life for so many years, we felt that it was eminently proper that they should be associated together in a book which may be read long after both have passed to their reward. David Lipscomb sometime ago, after a life of unremitting service and after the accomplishment of much good in the name of Christ, was called to his eternal reward. E. G. Sewell still lingers on this side, but is no longer able to wield his pen, which has benefited so many in the years that have gone. He is quietly and peacefully awaiting his Master's summons to pass to that house of many mansions where hearts never ache, where eyes are never dimmed by tears, and where sin can never enter. Brother Kurfees has done the public a great service by his painstaking efforts in the preparation of this book, covering as it does their life work for over forty years and giving the answers of both on live questions under conditions which are constantly repeating themselves. The answers are as appropriate to-day as when they were first published. Brother Kurfees, in his "Preface," says:

The editor of this work submits a word of explanation touching its general plan and purpose. It consists of queries propounded by numerous persons at different times on a multiplicity and variety of subjects, with answers by Elder David Lipscomb and Elder E. G. Sewell, and covering a period of forty years of their joint editorial labors on the Gospel Advocate. If there be merit in a great variety of themes, this work has it in large measure, there being more than six hundred subjects and phases of subjects treated in its pages, making the work a veritable storehouse of information imparted by two men not only well informed in the Bible, but thoroughly conscientious in their uniform effort to teach it unmixed with the devices of human wisdom.

The collation, selection, and arrangement of the material was a Herculean task, involving much painstaking and tedious labor. It was the original plan of the editor to classify and arrange the material in the form of chapters, with suitable headings, but the great number and variety of themes discussed made this plan less desirable; and hence it was decided to place over each query a suitable heading irdicating the subject of the query and answer, and then to arrange the subject-matter of the whole book in the form of an encyclopedia, the subjects treated being arranged in alphabetical order. Without a topical index, this will enable the reader to find without difficulty any subject treated in the book.

To save space, both the names signed to queries and sometimes accompanying remarks by the querists, which are not essential to the query, are eliminated. But the signatures of D. L. and E. G. S., wherever found appended to the answers, are allowed to remain, so that, in all such cases, the reader can know which of the two editors is the author of the answer in a given case. Sometimes the name of neither was appended to the answer; and in such cases, while the reader can know that the answer is by either Lipscomb or Sewell, he probably will not know which, although persons familiar with the different styles of the two men will readily recognize which author they are reading.

At some points the careful reader will observe slight repetition, but it is not of a nature to mar the work. On the contrary, the material being selected from that produced by the joint labors of the two men, it was found, in some instances, that both of them at different times had answered the same question; and, to give the reader the benefit of the wisdom of both, the answer of each is allowed to appear, the one usually following immediately after the other. The variety of treatment thus gained is ample compensation for slight repetition. The reader, in such cases, not only has the advantage of hearing both men on the same subject, but the one often supplements the other. In some instances the same editor is allowed to appear twice on the same subject, because the same query was propounded at different times, and the answer at one time supplements that at another.

The very excellent work entitled "Queries and Answers" and edited by Brother J. W. Shepherd consists of selections from David Lipscomb alone. The editor of that volume not only maintained in its preparation his reputation for thorough and accurate work, but the material he collected is of a high order, making, in the judgment of the present editor, one of the most valuable books published in recent years. But it did not exhaust the material left by Brother Lipscomb; and the additional material from him given in this volume, together with that from Brother Sewell, not only makes another valuable book, but the present editor entertains the hope that the two works may be used as companion volumes, and that they may find a welcome place in many libraries.

In a few instances, in order to make the discussion complete at a given point, the same item, or substantially the same, will be found in both volumes; but here, again, the repetition is of a nature not to harm, but to help in the effort to elicit truth, which, in all their labors as teachers of the Bible, was the uniform object of these two eminent servants of God. Side by side they lived, and loved, and labored together. Truly a noble team they were, and right well did they pull together.

Thus, in the present volume, the reader has the rare privilege of journeying with these two godly men and sitting as a student at their feet for forty years of the most active period of their lives. They were noble yokefellows in a noble cause, and I doubt if two men ever worked together more successfully or more harmoniously for so long a time. Their joint labors are a monument of fidelity to God and to his church.

We are sure that many thousand readers will be glad to have this large volume, consisting of seven hundred and sixty-eight pages, printed in large type, and hand-somely and substantially bound in cloth. The price of the book is $3.50 per copy. All orders should be addressed to the McQuiddy Printing Company, Nashville, Tenn.

SELECTIONS BY THE EDITOR

A believer must have on the sea of life, Patience for his tackling, Hope for his anchor, Faith for his helm, the Bible for his chart, Christ for his captain, the breath of the Spirit to fill his canvas.—J. Trapp.

The generality of men and women are scarcely more capable of apprehending and consciously serving the human future than a van full of well-fed rabbits would be of grasping the fact that their van was running smoothly and steadily down an inclined plane into the sea.—Selected.

Christ showed his greatness by his humility. But few of those who knew him thought of his greatness. He did not separate himself from men. He came with the message of heaven, but he told it in the language of earth. Not one word did he say of the flowers of Paradise. He talked of the "lilies of the field" that all his hearers had seen. If a multitude was ever present at such an exhibition of his power, it was a multitude of peasants. Born a peasant and reared a carpenter, he remained to the last in his lowly station; and he showed us that a man may be poor, unlettered, unhonored, and yet be a king and a son of God—Selected.

TENNESSEE ORPHAN HOME

The above picture shows sixty of the children in the Tennessee Orphan Home. Four failed to get into the picture; and, in addition to the sixty-four in the Home at the time, we have two girls in the State Deaf and Dumb School at Knoxville, and one in the State Blind School at Nashville.

The girls attending the State schools spend their vacations at the Tennessee Orphan Home. The Home supplies those attending the State schools with clothing, which is made by the ladies here.

We are always on the outlook for a suitable family home in which we are glad to place a child, for we believe a good, Christian family home is better than any orphan home for bringing up children; for God, in his wisdom, instituted the family home.

We are assisted in finding family homes by correspondence and the help of friends and churches. We make investigation and keep an oversight of the home where we have placed a child.

We wish the Home was financially able to bear the expense of employing some suitable person to visit occasionally all the homes in which we have placed children and those we are considering.

We have in the Home three little boys, whose mother met a tragic death. Their father, a laboring man, was maintaining them in the Home. He had written he would come to see his children Christmas, and they were looking forward to his coming. A few days before Christmas we received the news that the father had dropped dead. All the children were given boxes for Christmas, and these little boys were heard to remark that they wished their father could know what had been given them.

The State authorities required us to install fire escapes, which has been done. We did not feel that we were in much danger, as our building is practically fireproof, with two stairways. However, we now feel we are well protected.

An Encouraging Report.

We are glad to be able to announce to our subscribers that we are receiving many new subscribers to the Gospel Advocate and that January was one of the best months we have had for a long time. We have received more new subscribers and more renewals than during any one month in the past two years. We are still very much in earnest about increasing the circulation of the paper. Blank paper is still costing us so much, and as we had on hand a large stock at high prices, it is absolutely necessary to increase our circulation so as to bring down the cost of production. Unless we can do this, we must suffer a heavy loss, which I am sure our readers would not have us do.

We are receiving many encouraging words as to the merits of the paper. We are doing our very best to publish the truth free from error. We should like to have a representative at every post office, and would be glad to send to that representative our list of subscribers at that place so that he might get renewals and also send us new subscriptions. Will you not volunteer to do the work in your own community and at your own post office? While we do not feel able to cut the price of the paper, in order to pay for the work that is done, we are offering to give twenty per cent on every yearly subscription you may send us. If you prefer, if you will send us two new subscriptions, accompanied by five dollars, we will give you a copy of the Teachers' New Testament with notes. Go to work to-day and send us a large list.

An unholy person, one whose character had been molded on the principle of selfishness, could never enter heaven; because, even if he were admitted into that abode of bliss, it would not exist for him; he would see nothing, hear nothing, feel nothing, outside of himself. He might be bathed in the unearthly glory of the Beatific Vision, the air around him might vibrate with celestial harmonies, but he would find himself in a dark and dreary void, seeing nothing, hearing nothing, because he had allowed those spiritual senses, which we have here in germ, to perish for lack of use; just as a man shut up for years in a dark dungeon will in time lose the use of his eyes.—Selected.

CURRENT THOUGHT

Pastoral Helpers.

We are prone to shoulder church visiting entirely upon an overburdened minister whose supreme task is preaching Effective work can be accomplished by a loyal band of pastoral helpers in every church rendering such assistance as may be paramount to the spiritual welfare of the homes of the community. There are mothers who attended church quite frequently during the lifetime of their They need the fellowship and moral stamina of husbands the church now in larger measure than during the lifetime of their husbands. They have the responsibility of educating and training the children, and become so absorbed in secular duties that they neglect spiritual matters. O church of God, assume some of their responsibilities, converting some of their busy hours into hours of rest and worship!

The men of our churches should organize into visiting squads, rendering much help and assistance to those in dis-The moral atmosphere in the community causes the spiritual mercury to rise and fall. Let your conversation and visits be as spiritual food from the Alps of God. are folks at home who, like Elijah, are in hermit cells amid the solitudes of the mountain. Be the mouthpiece of God, and cry: "Onward to Horeb, the mount of God!" A word of advice here and there, a manifestation of interest, will frequently win a soul to the church. The souls of men are worth more than the oil fields, gold mines, and manufacturing interests of the world. Let there be no gloomy look nor sad expression; no exhibit of depression; no words of doom; the bearers of a message of joy must be sharers How can so many be at ease in Zion, be satisof its joy. fled in doing nothing for the development of the soul life of friends and neighbors, when the stream of humanity, rushing into eternity unprepared, broadens and deepens?

Ministers want the cooperation, God desires it, and the community needs the cooperation of every member of the We need the united strength to make for greater efficiency in training for service in soul winning. Standard Oil Company knews each month how many horses in service, number of barrels of oil sold, the capacity of each well, the general outlook in each field, names and oach well, the general outlook in each field, names and pieces of barness and wagons and machinery mended. This is a challenge to the church. Let us keep our records up to date, keep in touch with the folks, and God will touch their hearts through his people. Know why Jones was absent during the past month, and why Smith has not attended the communion for six weeks.

There is much food for thought in Chadwick's state-ent: "The principle of mutual support and cooperation is the basis alike of the family, the nation and the church." This is timely, and deserves much consideration at the hands of the Christian public. The church was organized to build up the individual, to strengthen the family and Christianize the nations. The organized church is a permanent vehicle that will convey us into the very presence of God's love and friendship. We should feel intensely the intrusted interest of God's kingdom.-B. W. Tate, in Christian Standard.

The above suggestions are good. The Bible nowhere teaches that a minister or evangelist should do all the visiting. Individual members need the spiritual development that comes from doing the work. Every joint, every fiber, and every band in the body of Christ should be actively engaged in the work for which it is best fitted. The churches of Christ may greatly help themselves by developing each individual member for the work for which it is fitted. Not only should all of the men of the congregation form into visiting squads, but the women should do likewise. Whenever a stranger moves into the community, whenever the sick need visiting, whenever the hungry need to be fed, there should be numbers of members of the congregation to cheerfully do this work.

The Proper Lord's Day.

A good many elements enter into the "Sunday question" which is now being agitated in a nation-wide campaign. The champions of a "liberal Sunday"—which means a Sunday given up to sport and money making—either fail to understand the motives of the reformers who are trying to get a proper Lord's day or they willfully misrepresent them.

This move for a better Sunday is not intended to force anybody to go to church nor to take away the true recreation feature. It is simply intended to deliver the people who have to work from the burden and slavery of seven days' toil and to prevent conscienceless money grabbers from degrading the people in their leisure hours by silly and corrupt sports and shows for the purpose of gain.

The Lord's day is a mercy to all real workers. To show what it means as a day of mercy, we print the following letter which was received by the Lord's-Day Alliance:

"I wish to inform you I am one of Many Night Watchman who has to work 12 hours for 365 days in the year Never a night off, if we ask for any time of we would lose our place as they hire us for 7 days a week. When I am through my work I go to bed get up an go to work again dont you think this is a hard life if you could compel these people to give a day once a week or one day in two weeks It would be a great blessing for all of us.

"Your Respect
[Signed] "From a Poor tired watchman.

There are many thousands of workers, perhaps many illions, for whom this letter is a voice. These millions millions, for whom this letter is a voice. are as powerless to cope with the situation by themselves as though they were slaves. They are slaves in fact, and those who are striving to stop all unnecessary work and to end all money-making sports are the abolitionists of one form of modern slavery. Jesus Christ said: "The Sabbath was made for man, and not-man for the Sabbath." For the sake of mercy and for humanity's sake, let us have a Lord's day according to the doctrine of Jesus Christ. -Christian-Evangelist,

While some are contending for a "liberal Sunday," it should not be overlooked that there are two sides to this question. While we are not to keep the Sabbath, and while the Sabbath was never given to the Gentile nation to observe, yet, if we keep the first day of the week, we will be busy in the worship of Christ. Man's nature and constitution demand rest from the toll and busy scenes of life. It is not the contention of those who teach that "the Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath," that goodness can be legislated into any one. It is not their purpose to legislate goodness into people, but their object is to bring such influence to bear upon them as will lead them into a purer, nobler, and better life. The man who is seeking to live a consistent, Christian life, and who is really devoted to the work of serving the Lord, finds no pleasure in Sunday baseball and Sunday amusements calculated to break down the worship on the first day of the week, but his greatest delight is in devoting his time to the worship as directed by the New Testament.

Let Them Come Down.

An exchange has this to say about a matter that is of too much vital interest to be joked about, as many are doing: "An attack is being made on high-heeled shoes. And to the delight of people who know the III effects, this daring has manifested itself in the very region where the largest quantities of our shoes are made. The Massachusetts Osteopathic Society has made the discovery that high heels are detrimental to the health of womanhood. surely have had some experience in dealing with the endon of Achilles and the small tarsal boncs of the foot. The leaders of that society are saying this is a fad that must come down. The senselessness of it leads the remainder of the thoughtful men to answer; "So say we, all of us."—Christian Advocate.

The Christian Advocate is entirely right in taking the position that high-heeled shoes are too serious to be joked about. It is time sensible women were discarding highheeled shoes. In fact, their good sense should have led them never to have adopted them. Any one should know without consulting an osteopathic society that high-heeled shoes are detrimental to the health of womanhood. Now let all speak out fearlessly against this evil and seek to bring about the much-needed reformation.

The best work of the world is done-not by those who organize on a large scale, but by those who work faithfully on individual lines, in corners and byways .- A. C. Benson.

III MISCELLANY III

"You never find the fritter tree and the molasses pond on the same side of the hill." (Western proverb.)

Nettie Brundige, Palmersville, Tenn., says: "The motto of the church of Christ is sweet to me—faith, repentance, and baptism; it has God in the beginning; not repentance, faith, and baptism—God in the middle, to the sinner."

William P. Walker sends for publication a part of the program for the preachers' meeting to be held at Dinuba, Cal., beginning on Monday evening, May 2, and continuing through the following Friday evening. He says that all the attending preachers will take part. The program as arranged thus far is as follows: "The Importance of Bible Study," S. H. Hall; "The Great Commission," T. B. Larimore; "The Church of Christ—What Is It?" S. H. Hall; "Church Officers." D. W. Nay; "The Work of an Evangelist," L. D. Perkins; "The Church as a Missionary Society," E. M. Borden; "Church Music," E. M. Borden; "Brotherly Love," T. B. Larimore; "Unity," W. Halliday Trice; "Church Discipline," G. W. Riggs; "Church Finances," G. W. Riggs; "A Model Church," W. Halliday Trice; "Church History," E. C. Love; "Coöperation," L. D. Perkins; "Plans for the Future," William P. Walker.

The following note comes from I. A. Douthitt, Sedalia, Ky., February I: "By special request I am giving a report of my work in the interest of Christian education. I was employed by the board of trustees of the Freed-Hardeman College on October 15, 1919, as field man for the school. Since that time I have traveled and worked in the interest of Christian education, in Alabama, Mississippi, Arkansas, Missouri, Kentucky, and Tennessee. I have visited quite a number of our congregations and have had a chance to get acquainted with the brethren; and, as a result of my little experience, I am all the more for the schools where the Bible is taught daily. I believe they are the greatest factors for Christianity. The total amount I have collected for the school up to January 31, 1921, is $33,836.11." Accompanying the note was a list of names of places visited and of amounts given at each place; but we cannot publish such lists, as they take up too much space that can be used for better purposes.

Alfred Ellmore, in a private letter, says: "Down here in Texas the church is absolutely burdened with 'wood, hay, stubble'—societies, feasts, etc.; and now, behold, we have the big 'preachers' meetings,' as though preachers need preaching. The best way to scatter the gospel would be to scatter the preachers, but that is a difficult thing to do." The "preachers' meetings" of the last three or four years are not confined to Texas, nor to the Southwest. They are not held in the highest esteem by all the Gospel Advocate force. This editor remembers the time, forty or more years ago, when they became quite popular in Tennessee and Kentucky, and became the immediate forerunners of and largely the vehicles for, the organizing of the State society in Tennessee and the "South Kentucky Sundayschool and Missionary Association" in Western Kentucky. Be careful, brethren, that what you do in these matters result not in the putting into operation forces that you cannot later control and direct to the honor and glory of God.

Frank Baker writes from Belmont, Miss., February 3: "I am just home from Berry, Ala., where I attended the preachers' meeting, January 28-31. In many ways it was a success, though many of the preachers who were listed on the program, for some reason, failed to come and give their help to a much-needed cause. The Lord has a good congregation at Berry, made up of some of the best people of earth, who are struggling to help in a good cause. Quite a number of girls and boys were turned away from one of the schools there for lack of a place to board. There is an excellent school building, with no better surroundings for a school. We need two dormitories, that the girls and boys may be properly looked after. One brother has already put at least fifteen thousand dollars into the work, and says that he will still put in one-fifth as much as all the rest of the brotherhood and everybody else combined. If you wish to get in touch with the work, write J. C. Shepherd, Berry, Ala. I expect to enter the evangelistic field in May. I am giving up a position that pays far more in dollars than I can hope to get out of preaching the gospel; but I fear too many are staying out of the work of the Lord for a consideration of dollars and cents. I have some time for May and June not yet arranged for, and would be glad to hear the Macedonian call. I have promised quite a number of meetings in Kentucky for the summer and fall."

From H. D. Jeffcoat, Ackerman, Miss., January 31: "As the first month of this new year has gone, with its joys and I feel that the readers of the Gospel Advocate would like to hear more about the work in Mississippi. We are glad indeed of the work that is being done, but we are sorry that we cannot do more. If we would only work like our dear brother, S. H. Hall, we could do more. our God give us more such men, and take care of them On the last night of last year I preached while they work. at the home of Brother and Sister Lee Vaughn, near Reform, to an interested crowd. On the first Lord's day in this year I preached here at home. We have fifteen members here, and they all love the truth and those that tell it. M. C. Lord's day I was at Reform, and we had a good day. have about ten members there; they are glad to spend and be spent for the cause of Christ. On the fourth Lord's day I was at Kitchner. We have only five members there, but they are far above an average. They seem to love what truth they have learned, and want to learn more. to see a good congregation there in the near future. Baptist lady asked me to stop off at Stella and preach on Monday night, and I did, to a very good crowd. This was the first time a Christian preacher was ever there. of the people asked me to come back, and I will do so if the Lord wills. On the fifth Lord's day, morning and night, I preached in a new Baptist church house in Sturgis, and was told that I was the first of our brethren at that W. M. Ledbetter, the agent there for the Illinois Central Railroad, is a hard worker in the church. he has been there almost alone for some time, he has been at work preparing the way for great good to be done in a meeting. We need more just such men. The people there meeting. We need more just such men. The people there asked me to come back and preach, and so I will if God permits. I have more such work than I can do. be glad if I could give this work all of my time, but I can-I must work on the farm for a living for myself and

U. G. Wilkinson writes from Hot Springs, Ark., January 'I am still in Hot Springs taking treatment, and hope that I am improving, and I believe that in general I am; but I am far from able to 'take a hand' yet, and I fear but I am far from able to 'take a hand' yet, and I fear that it will not be soon that I can do so. I shall return to Sulphur, Okla., in a few days, for further treatment, and I am asking the prayers and other help of the brethren until I am better. I will preach what I can, but that is merely an incidental. I have been laboring while here to get the brethren in the city of Hot Springs lined up for work, and am gratified very much by my success. We succeeded in securing the use of the Knights of Pythias Hall, located at 7091/2 Central Avenue, for meetings. A few met last Lord's day, and we advertised meeting again for Wednesday night. A nice audience assembled, and I preached for them. service, which was, perhaps, the first of the kind ever held in the city, was certainly enjoyed by all. Some were present from the Christian Church. A few brethren had been meeting at private houses for some time, but this was the first public meeting. We met again last night and to-day. I preached for them again at these services. The services to-day were well attended, several being present from the Christian Church. O what joy the brethren have, that they can at last meet in their 'own hired house,' which they can at last meet in their 'own hired house,' which they are getting at a reasonable rate. It is centrally located and beautifully equipped for these services in every way. I will preach for them again to-night, and would like to continue the meeting, but do not feel able physically to do so. They are few and weak, but determined, and will likely be heard from later. Thus you see, brethren, how that God can make use of the humblest means and simplest circumstances to bless his children and accomplish his I rejoice that he can thus use me, sick as I am, to accomplish this work. I will be here another Lord's day. and shall labor to encourage and increase the interest in the work, and preach for them again next Sunday by the help of Him who strengthens me. Let all brethren in Hot Springs remember the time and place. The brethren will meet every Sunday morning at ten o'clock for Bible study, at eleven o'clock for communion and (when a preacher can be with them) preaching. Any preaching brother passing this way is invited to stop and preach for them. H. I. Malady, a young soldier who is beginning to preach, will be with them regularly and preach some for them and otherwise assist them in the work. Any preacher or other brother who may be in Hot Springs should address Mrs. W. E. McCabe, 8 Canyon Avenue, where they will meet with a hearty welcome. Her telephone number is 2647.

CHRONIC CATARRH

Arkansas.

Morrillton, February 1.- I am back home from two fine gospel meetingsone in Mayflower, one in Providence. During these two meetings Brother J. C. Mosley and I baptized six persons; two came from the Methodist Church and three from the Baptist Church. Our meetings at both places were fine. The seats were crowded with children, who came to the front and read verses by heart, and kept their Testaments in their hands, and turned to references and read, they were so interested. We baptized Methodists and Baptists. There were three confessions and two baptisms in Mayflower, and many others talked about being baptized. The whole town must have been represented at the baptizing. We visited all the homes and demanded Bible proof why they are Baptists, Methodists, etc. Then are Baptists, Methodists, etc. the fun came. There was not a man in town who could give Bible proof why he was a Methodist or Baptist. Those people did wonder. Some said they never had been caught that way before. We used 1 Thess. 5; 21: "Prove all things." It gets the answer. I am putting in all my time preaching the gospel from place to place, getting peace in homes. The Arkansas Christian College work will begin again the first of March. Brother J. C. Mosley, of Whitwell, Tenn., is a loyal preacher. Brethren, if you need my services, write me here.—William W. Still.

Ohio.

Cleveland, February 3.-A letter received to-day from Brother Charles E. Fogle, of Marietta, Ohio, informs me that he is now in a very interesting meeting with the church of Christ at Naish Springs, W. Va., with twelve additions to date, mostly by primary obedience, and many more expected to follow. The meeting is only a week old, and the house most of the time not sufficiently large to find room to seat or hold the congregations. I certainly do rejoice at this good report. Naish Springs is bidding fair to become one of the strongest country congregations of disciples of Christ in the State of West Virginia. I hope and pray to hear of scores more becoming obedient to the gospel before Brother Fogle's meeting shall have come to a close there. Those faithful brethren need and deserve help to put them out of debt on their meetinghouse. I know of no greater mission field anywhere than the one in which the church at Naish Springs is located. Brethren, send a donation to Brother Noah Brothers, Willow, W. Va., Route 1, Box 31, to help the cause there.— A. A. Bunner.

Oklahoma.

Maud, January 31 .- I came to Maud the first of the year, and found some good people who love the Lord and his cause. J. F. Smith, who is evangelizing the county, has been with us through the past week, preaching day and night and from house to house. He has given us some good, rich food on which to feast and grow. The meeting continues indefinitely, and we are expecting great things for the Lord. Through the week we got on foot a young people's meeting, and rendered our first program yesterday, I have attended a which was great. great many young people's meetings, but I have never seen a more thorough preparation and more earnestness manifested at the beginning of a meeting than there was on the part of these young people. May God bless these people, and may he help us all to continue to grow and develop ourselves for greater usefulness in the Master's service.-D, C. Williams.

Tennessee.

Murfreesboro, February 8.-I delivered two sermons to a large, attentive audience at Hoover's Chapel, near Tullahoma, on Sunday. I will preach monthly for them.—J. V. A. Traylor.

Algood, February 6.-Last Lord's day I was at Sparta. I had an enjoyable trip, with two good services.
To-day I preached twice to good audiences here. At our mission point, Netherland, I preached at 2 P.M. to a good audience. On the second and fourth Lord's days I preach at Livingston; on the third, at Smyrna .-E. Gaston Collins.

Try This For Sore Throat

On retiring fill your nostrils with Eucapine Salve, Sniff the salve back into the air passages of the head and throat until it reaches the tonsils and uvula and you taste the salve. This is best done lying down, pullow under lack, head thrown back that the melting salve may reach the head cavities. Also turn the head down and forward and to right and left; to flow the salve over the inflamed surfaces in the cavities of the head. In the morning the pain and soreness will be gone. To make sure place Eucapine Salve on the back of the tongue with your finger. Same treatment for colds, nosy sores, catarrhal headaches, catarrh of the head, nose and throat. Wheat and Chaff.

BY A. ELLMORE.

An infidel book is to my mind what the window shade is to the room-its chief utility is to keep the light out.

Drunkards are unreliable. When sober, they will not always tell the whole truth as to their drinking. When drunk, they may tell more than the truth.

We used to sing, "I am waiting, only waiting," and I fear that this expresses the state of many. They are only waiting. But while waiting, might we not be working? So does the farmer. If "only waiting," the weeds would ruin his crop.

To tens of thousands religion means only a system of morals, whose highest aim is to be good. But Christianity means a life of toil and sacrifice, of prayer and tears. The Book of God knows nothing of the prayerless, doless Christian.

If an agent transcends the authority of his employer, he becomes personally responsible. Would not all preachers better make a note of this? By whose authority are we doing religious acts?

As we become more humble we become more useful. The rule is, as men become wealthy they become vain; and proud people are a dead weight to the church. "God resisteth the proud, but giveth grace unto the humble."

To be a good man in the highest sense prepares a man for citizenship in this world; to be a thorough, practical Christian fully prepares him for the next world; and these two systems will blend. They are in no sense antagonistic; they work perfectly in all the transactions in this life-morality and Christianity.

"No, I can't accept the doctrine of the New Testament. I want to build on something solid." Then suppose you try this: The ice in the river is two feet thick and will bear the weight of many tons. Go, now, and put up a fifty-thousand-dollar mansion on the ice; it is solid. This would be foolish; but much more so the man who builds his house for eternity upon the doctrine of Eddyism. The building of Christian Science fell before the old "fabled wife" got her building up. She proclaimed there was really no such thing as sickness and death; but after her great struggle against death, she "went and died!"

A number of men were discussing in a kind way the merits of their creeds, each one claiming that his creed was nearest right; but after all this searching of creeds, the real difficulty was untouched. Before any one could claim that his creed was nearest right, hé must investigate his own creed and the creeds of all the rest; and after investigating all the creeds, if one should find the creed which was precisely right, why not accept it and settle the matter? It would appear almost silly, after having found the right, to stop short of it and accept another. Here are a dozen men who are guessing at the length of a pole. No two of them agree. And has each one the right to his opinion in the matter? Yes, in the absence of any correct measure, he has. But is there any way to settle their differences? Yes, and but one way, which is to apply the rule to the pole. They might guess for a week and be no nearer a unit than at the first. Before the measurement, all had the right to their opinions; after applying the rule, no man had any right to his opinion. There is one standard of right for us all-the Bible.

RECIPE FOR GRAY HAIR.

To 1/2 pint of water add 1 ounce of bay rum, a small box of Barbo Compound, and 14 ounce of glycerine. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it at home at very little cost. West Florida Mission.

BY A. T. HAMITER. Brethren, while our hearts are yearning for the salvation of heathen lands, which is right, and I believe all should possess that desire, we ask that you also remember the toiling servants in the home fields. I am offering a few facts suggestive of the great need of mission work in Florida. I was called into the evangelistic work of West Florida on March 1, 1920. I am the only active minister of the loyal brethren in an area extending from Pensacola, on the western border of the State, to Lake City, some three hundred miles east, and from the Gulf to Valdosta, Ga., north, and west to the Mississippi line via Andalusia and Montgomery, Ala. There are probably five hundred thousand inhabitants in this region, and, cutside of the cities named above, there are not more than two hundred and fifty professed disciples of Christ, Most of these are scattered here and there, and are doing nothing for their own spiritual good or for the good of the cause. The ten months we have been in this work has proven that much good can be accomplished if we were able to distribute appropriate literature and could be sustained in the work without being embarrassed for lack of proper support. Several churches and individual members from abroad helped in the work last year, for which we are very thankful, and without which we could not have centinued our services to the present. I received last year $586.84. Deducting $100 for railroad fare and incidental expenses left $486.84, on which I tried to support my wife and four dependent children-an average of $48.68 per month. If any other man will take this work for that amount, I am willing to give him my place. All I want is a living. The few churches and individuals who are behind this work are not able to support it, and have been too timid to ask for help. They want me to continue in the work, and are hopeful of much and lasting good being accomplished. But they need assistance; so I am asking churches or individual members who feel able and are willing to contribute to a cause that is worthy and in need to send their donations to L. L. Applegate, Cottondale, Fla.; A. J. Dixon or B. W. Tew, Esto, Fla.; or to me direct, Mulat, Fla.

HOW WOMEN AVOID SURGICAL OPERATIONS

Some Are Extremely Necessary, Others May Not Be

Every Woman Should Give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a Trial First

Chicago, Ill .- "I was in bedwith a female trouble and inflammation and had four doctors but none of them did me any good. They all said I would have to have an operation. A druggist's wife told me to take Lydia E. Pink-ham's Vegetable Compound and I took 22 bottles, never missing a dose and at the end of that time I was perfectly well. I have never had occasion to take it again as I have been so well. I have a six room flat and do all my work. My two sisters are taking the Compound upon my recommendation and you may publish my letter. It is the gospel truth and I will write to any one who wants a personal letter."—Mrs. E. H. HAYDOCK, 6824 St. Law-rence Ave., Chicago, Ill.

A Vermont woman adds her testimony to the long line of those fortunate women who have been restored to health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, after it had been decided an operation was necessary:

Burlington, Vt.—"I suffered with female trouble, and had a number of doctors who said that I would never be any better until I had an operation. doctors who said that I would never be any better until I had an operation.

I was so bad I could hardly walk across the floor and could not do a thing.

My sister-in-law induced me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and it certainly has helped me wonderfully. I keep house and do my work and have a small child. I have recommended Vegetable Compound to a number of my friends and you may publish my testimonial."—Mrs. H. R. SHARON.

Apple Tree Point Farm, Burlington, Vt.

In hospitals are many women who are there for surgical operations, and there is nothing a woman dreads more than the thought of an operation, and the long weary months of recovery and restoration to strength if it is successful.

It is very true that female troubles may through neglect reach a stage where an operation is the only resource, but most of the commoner ailments of women are not the surgical ones; they are not caused by serious displacements, tumors or growths, although the symptoms may appear the same. When disturbing ailments first appear take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to relieve the present distress and prevent more serious troubles. In fact, many letters have been received from women who have been restored to health by Lydia E. Hammons.

Sister Rosa B. Smith, of Carrollton, Miss., was born on February 26, 1878, and died on January 21, 1921, at Lucy Brinkley Hospital, Memphis, Tenn Brinkley Hospital, Memphis, Tenn. She was married to Edgar A. Hammons on December 27, 1899. Sister Hammons obeyed the gospel at the tender age of twelve years and lived a faithful Christian until death. She will be missed in the community and in the church, as she was always present. Sister Hammons was one of the most beautiful Christian characters that I have ever seen. She was brought home and laid to rest at Old Union Church. Brother W. M. Gammill spoke words of comfort to the bereaved. She leaves a husband, two children, a father, one sister, one brother, and a host of friends, to mourn her death. ZULINE CAMPBELL.

Bastin.

On December 12, 1920, the death angel took from Mr. and Mrs. Merid Bastin their sweet, darling little girl, Willie May, who was radiant light to that happy home. But how dark is the cloud that hangs over that home now-over the hearts of dear father, mother, brothers, and sister! Parents, your sweet baby girl is gone from you; but she is resting in our dear Savior's arms, waiting for you to meet her in that dear home where there will be no more sad good-byes. In your sorrow and loneliness, look to Him who gave his Son for us, who has power to heal your broken hearts and give you strength to bear your loss. Willie May was loved by all that knew her, and especially by her schoolmates. Her death was a great shock, as she was sick such a short time. We pray God to help us to so live that we may meet her in the heavenly A FRIEND: home.

Gregory.

T. F. Gregory was born on February 22, 1846. His wife, M. T. Gregory, was born on December 25, 1846. At the age of eighteen Brother Gregory became a member of the Methodist Church, and Sister Gregory at the age of twelve became a member of the Baptist Church. In 1889, under the preaching of the writer, they both obeyed the gospel of Christ, and lived true and faithful lives until death. She was the first to go, then in December he followed Nine children were born to them. on. Three died in infancy and one when about grown. One son, three daughters, twelve grandchildren and one great-grandchild survive the death of dear father and mother. The roads were never too muddy or the snow too deep to keep them from the worship of God on the first day of the week. Brother and Sister Gregory

Cured His RUPTU

I was badly ruptured while lifting a trunk several years ago. Doctors said my only hope of cure was an operation. Trusses did me no good. Finally I got hold of something that quickly and completely cured me. Years have passed and the rupture has never returned, although I am doing hard work as a carpenter. There was no operation, no lost time, no trouble. I have nothing to sell; but will give full information about how you may find a complete cure without operation, if you write to me, Eugene M. A LEOPARD CANNOT CHANGE ITS SPOTS

Mr. Dodson, the "Liver Tone" Man, Tells the Treachery of Calomel.

Calomel loses you a day! You know what calomel is. It's mercury; quick-silver. Calomel is dangerous. It crashes into sour bile like dynamite, cramping and sickening you. Calomel attacks the bones and should never be put into your system.

When you feel bilious, sluggish, con-stipated and all knocked out and believe you need a dose of dangerous calomel just remember that your druggist sells for a few cents a large bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone, which is entirely vegetable and pleasant to take and is a perfect substitute for calomel. It is guaranteed to start your liver without stirring you up inside, and can not salivate.

Don't take calomel! It can not be trusted any more than a leopard or a wild-cat. Take Dodson's Liver Tone which straightens you right up and makes you feel fine. Give it to the children because it is perfectly harmless and doesn't gripe.

Reagor.

On Saturday, October 30, 1920, death claimed our dear friend and sister in Christ, Mrs. Sidney Pearson Reagor, familiarly known in her old home as "Aunt Tid." She was at the home of her granddaughter, Mrs. James Baxter, of Cookeville, Tenn. She had been in failing health for several weeks, but was confined to her bed scarcely a week. She was fully conscious until the last, and gently entered that peaceful slumber, that land of rest which Christ promised his own. Her remains were taken to Bedford County for interment in the Flat Creek Cemetery, as she had lived all her life in that neighborhood. Sister Reagor was born on July 31, 1839, and obeyed the gospel early in life. She married John Reagor on December 22, 1857. To this union were born six children, three of whom, with their father, preceded her to the grave. She was kind and true, having all the innate refinement of our old-time Southern gentlewomen; and although her cherished form is hidden from our view and her dear voice is forever stilled, she yet lives in our memory and her life is an inspiration to us. Besides her husband and little daughter, Marjorie, she leaves a father, mother, seven brothers, and two sisters. family has lost a kind, loving, and devoted wife and mother. Not only was she kind and affectionate to her own family, but to every one. She always had a pleasant word for all whom she met, hence she was loved by all who knew her. She obeyed the gospel, under the preaching of Brother E. S. Fitzgerald, at the age of fourteen, and we are glad indeed that we have the comforting words: "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors: and their works do follow them." the presence of a large audience, Brother Early Arcenaux, of Wichita Falls, Texas, spoke words of comfort, after which the remains were laid to rest in the Charlie cemetery.

Mississippi Notes.

BY M. C. CAYCE.

The W. O. W. people have notified us that we cannot use their hall any longer, because they have rented it to some railroad men for their lodges to meet in on Sunday. So I am busy trying to locate and secure another desirable place in which to meet. We are very loath to change our meeting place; for we have been using the W. O. W. hall since last June, and it is a nice, comfortable, conveniently located place. We will get the next best place obtainable. Two more of our members are moving to-day, returning to Kentucky from where they came three years ago. Three had already left since Christmas, one of the men getting out of work. Such facts as stated above are discouraging, but none of these things shall move us. I shall just continue to try all the harder, pray more, and trust on. Others are being taught, and we will not look back, but press on. With the Ford, I can and will now reach more people than was possible without it. I will be glad when the proper time comes for us to have a building here of our own in which to worship. Yesterday I preached twice in Vicksburg. I think now they are desirous for the time to come when I can hold a tent meeting with them. Such places need exhortation and encouragement, and it helps them. I am anxious to see them grow. In my absence a good service here was conducted by Brother Key and Brother Ray Vaughn.

Please repeat the request that persons send me names and addresses of any they know living in or near Jackson, who might become interested, that I may visit them.

Admonition.

BY S. E. ROWDEN.

Solomon, the wise man, said: "Rebuke a wise man, and he will love you." According to the rule governing logic, every positive has a corresponding negative; therefore the negative: "Rebuke an unwise man, and he will hate you." Hoping and believing there is none of the latter class as contributors to this paper, it is apparent to whom the admonition is applicable and intended. It is a deplorable fact, in many instances, that brethren form a dislike one for the other in discussions and arguments over questions neither vital nor fundamental, and that strife is engendered and the Master's work seriously retarded, and possibly souls lost. Honest investigation and controversy are permissible; but it should be done in such a spirit of love as "to provoke unto love and good works," eliminating "a strife about words to no profit."

In answering advertisements, please mention the Gospel Advocate.

Some years ago the writer, then a young man, was a subscriber to a religious paper under control and management of some of the most considerate, tolerant, and godly men that ever edited or contributed to any religious work, their lives characterized by the admonition in Rom. 12. Their contention was ever for the right, conducted in language so pure and free from verbiage, prolixity, and censure, so infallible and convincing, that the opposer admitted its correctness whether accepting the admonition or not. In the process of time the management of the paper changed and younger heads took charge; and the spirit of conservatism became lax, and an atmosphere of jargon, "striving about words to no profit," and hobbyism permeated nearly every issue. Young preachers with numerous hobbies, and possessed of an abundant supply of ego, who considered their "little finger thicker than the loins" of the more experienced and elderly teachers, were permitted free access to the columns of the paper, and they went about with their hobbies, "seeking whom they might devour," venting their spleen one for the other, when an opponent was found. Then a discussion of acrimonious slang and unkind denunciation was carried on throughout the controversy, and the effort of each was repellant instead of instructive or edifying. Unkind, unbrotherly, epithetical appellations, such as "lie," "dishonest," "falsifier," "perverter," etc., in a long list of repetitions, prevailed, until the theme, however true the foundation of either centestant, became obscured to such an extent that honest investigation was estopped and a desire for "the sincere milk of the word" was

Nothing is gained by such controversy, except that each party to the discussion is more rigidly cemented to his hobby-if, indeed, such can be termed "gain." Such discussions are harmful, and drive honest investigation away from the truth. Men like Brethren D. Lipscomb, W. L. Butler, J. M. Barnes, and others of kindred spirit, who were ever ready with kind, convincing language, drew the opposer to the truth, and accomplished more good in one article they wrote than thousands of other articles written by those using repellant caricatures and epithets. Truly it can be said of such good men, "Their works do follow them." Certainly there can be no good in calumny. Vituperative language is neither proof nor argument. Truth must not be compromised with error, nor should diplomacy cover facts. There is a way to contend for the truth that carries conviction to the objector. Several years since the writer, then residing in a rural district, secured the services of good Brother Sutton to hold a meeting there; and at that place there were many opposers of the truth through denominational blindness, among them being one man, a leader, more contentious and aggressive than all the others. He attended every meeting Brother Sutton held, "hoping to catch him in his words." But when Brother Sutton preached one of his masterly discourses on the subject of "Love," giving its full definition, embracing every one, showing how God emphasized his love in the gift of his Son, his deductions were so logical and plain, the proof so undeniably true, and the spirit of love so characteristically portrayed in the discourse that, when he had finished, the denominational leader rushed to the pulpit and, grasping Brother Sutton by the hand, with tears on his cheeks, exclaimed: "Brother, that is the best and most complete discourse I ever heard. Thank God for such teachers as you!" Brethren, let us all start the new year determined, when we are reviled, to "revile not" in retaliation, and our work for the Master will be more effective; and thus we will demonstrate to the world that we are "a peculiar people, zealous of good works."

Paying the Price.

There must be some suffering at the narrow door by which the imperiled and straitened soul passes through into liberty and rest. It is just as true of most of our richest gains, our neblest advancements in all spiritual clear-sightedness and strength, that they are reached through pain and privation. It very rarely happens that we receive what we particularly need, without being obliged to give up what we particularly prize. If the sacrifice is not laid upon us voluntarily by ourselves, it has to be laid on by a Hand more merciful than our own, and more concerned in our salvation. Trouble is the price of power. From one side of the globe to another, from the beginning to the end, the glory of the earth, the openings of its everlasting hope, are its valleys of trouble. The way to Christ's final majesty lies through the humiliations of pain. From Gethsemane to Calvary was the one true valley of Achor.-Selected.

Warm Your Blood.

A poet has said that "the owl for all his feathers was a-cold." Some people for all their wraps are "a-cold" whenever they are out of doors even in normal winter weather.

It is plain that they need the warmth there is in pure, rich, red blood, which reaches through artery and vein, from head to foot, all over the body. They could be told by many people, from experience, that to have this good blood they should take Hood's Sarsaparilla. This great medicine has really made it possible for many men and women, boys and girls, to enjoy cold weather and resist the attacks of disease. It gives the right kind of warmth, stimulates and strengthens at the same time, and its benefits are as lasting as those of any tonic possibly can be.

If there is biliousness or constipation, which often occurs as a result of the torpifying effect of cold, Hood's Pills may be taken. They are perfectly compatible with Hood's Sarsaparilla, and are gentle and thorough.

Thoughts.

The busy man may be tempted by one devil, but the loafer is tempted by a dozen.

To "pray in faith" is not to pray expecting that God will give us whatever we may wish or ask, but that he will give us whatever he has promised us. The duty of praying in faith rests on the plain principle that "if we ask anything according to his will, he heareth us."-John Brown.

How many an evening's pleasure has been utterly spoiled and ruined by the admission. 'I can't sing," or "No. I am sorry, but I can't play."

And now—at last—this pleasure and satisfaction that vou have so offen wished for can easily be added to pay a dollar or more per lesson to a private teacher. Neither the question of time nor expense is any longer a bar—every one of the obstacles that have been confining your enjoyment to mere listening have now been removed.

The True Test.

We cannot possibly test our own holiness; others alone can do .that. We cannot possibly gauge our own humility; we cannot possibly register our own growth in grace. This all means looking within, which is a fatal mistake for any believer. But when I ask, "What is God to me now?" I am at once occupied with Him rather than with myself, and in that occupation we find our perfect satisfaction. In his light "we see light"-light on ourselves and our life; and joy in God, because it is the index of our appreciation of God, will be the surest test of our spiritual life and power .-W. H. Edifying as the Need May Be BY A. B. LIPSCOMB

Worse Than the "Pilsener" Shell.

The description that James gives of an unruly tongue is one of the most vivid in the New Testament. He sets before us an element of destruction. We are asked to consider a little something that kindleth a great fire, "defileth the whole body," and "setteth on fire the wheel of nature." It is a little something that translates itself into a "world of iniquity."

During the recent great war this statement appeared: "The war correspondents write that the 'Pilsener' shell kills every one within a distance of one hundred and fifty yards and many who are further off. The exploding gas breaks the partitions and roofs of bombproof shelters, while scores who escape metal fragments are killed, lacerated, or blinded by the pressure. Men a short distance away are torn to bits by the gas entering the body cavities and tearing the flesh asunder. If men are very close, not a fragment of their bodies is left. The clothes disappear and only small metal articles are found. Men who disappear in such explosions are reported as 'missing,' because there is no proof of their death."

That is terrific destruction for a single shell to accomplish: but do you know that there is an instrument, much smaller and more common, in your head and mine, that can eclipse its destructiveness? It is the instrument that James describes. His picture is not overdrawn. Those who have witnessed the infernal miasma of gossip throughout a community know that a "Pilsener" shell is a fire-cracker compared to the eternal blight of the unregenerate human tongue. Truly the Greek declares:

"The boneless tongue, so small and weak, Can crush and kill,"

And truly the Turk asserts: "The tongue destroys a greater horde than does the sword."

Keep the Tongue.

A favorite saying of those who recognize the deadly effect of harmful speaking is: "Keep the tongue." There are four ways in which we should apply this injunction.

Keep the Tongue From Unkindness.

Words are sometimes wounds—not very deep wounds always, and yet they irritate. Speech is unkind sometimes when there is no unkindness in the heart of the speaker; but even though unintentionally, a careless, flippant talker may cause pain in the hearts of others. Paul's advice is the safeguard: "Let your speech be always with grace, seasoned with salt, that ye may know how ye ought to answer each one." (Col. 4: 16.) Salt has a saving quality. Any one who strives to inject that quality into his speech will never be unkind.

Keep the Tongue From Falsehood.

"There are six things," declares Solomon, "which Jehovah hateth; yea, seven which are an abomination unto him: haughty eyes, a lying tongue, and hands that shed innocent blood; a heart that deviseth wicked purposes, feet that are swift in running to mischief, a false witness that uttereth lies, and he that soweth discord among brethren." (Prov. 6: 16-19.) It is interesting to note that three out of this list of seven abominable things are evils of the tongue. It is so easy to give a false coloring, to so make a statement that it may convey a meaning different from the truth, while yet there is an appearance of truth, that we need to be on our guard. There are many who would shrink from telling a straight-out lie who yet suffer themselves to give such inaccurate or greatly one-sided statements that they really come under the condemnation of those whose "lying lips are an abomination to the Lord." We do not keep the tongue from falsehood if, like Ananias and Sapphira, we tell only part of the truth, and that part which is for our benefit. Truthfulness lies at the foundation of all good character. We should understand that a great liar always begins with small lies, and finds in them the stepping-stones for higher degrees in the "Ananias Club," A little boy told a lie to sell a paper. The matter came up in Sunday school. "Would you tell a lie for three cents?" the teacher asked of Dick. "No, ma'am," came the positive answer. "For ten cents?" "No, ma'am." "For a dollar?" "No, ma'am." "For a thousand dollars?" Dick hesitated. A thousand dollars looked bigit would buy a lot of things; and there were a lot of things Dick had been wishing for. But while he was thinking, he cried out: "No, ma'am; because when the thousand dollars is gone, and the things you have got with them are gone, too, the lie is there just the same." God give us the spirit of that boy! Let us understand that a lie sticks.

Unless repented of, it will stick till the judgment, that great and terrible day when all liars "shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone." (Rev. 21: 8.)

"To thine own self be true,
And it must follow, as the night the day,
Thou canst not then be false to any man."

Keep the Tongue From Slander.

The good reputation of others should be dear to us. I have been amazed at the speeches made by some of the candidates in elections held in Nashville. It was heartsickening and disgusting to note their efforts to throw slime upon the character of their opponents and to tarnish the reputation of their families. Any candidate who uses billingsgate as his weapon does not deserve to win. But I am still more amazed to note sometimes the free and easy way in which certain church members abuse their absent brethren. True enough, sin should not be suffered to go unrebuked, but it should be in accordance with the Master's instruction: "Go and tell him of his fault betwixt him and thee alone." It should be borne in mind that what is too often considered as merely harmless gossip runs dangerously near, if it does not pass, the confines of slander. A Christian's reputation is too sacred to be made a plaything of. It will not excuse us to say that we talked about a brother or a sister, but we "had no malice." Paul Gilbert said: "I stood one day at the grave of a young girl. She had been bravely battling against a thousand odds, but the tongue of gossip killed her." Not one of the long tongues would say that it had wagged maliciously; but, all the same, the victim was lying in the grave.

Keep the Tongue From Judgment.

Many assume an attitude of superiority over others. They arrogate to themselves work which rightly belongs to God. They love to sit in judgment, heeding not the command: "Judge not, that ye be not judged." Faultfinding is their forte. They never seem to be happy unless making others miserable. They close their eyes to the good, but never fail to see the defects in others. It is the carrion upon which they feed. Two reasons might be stated why we should keep our tongues from judgment. First, such a censorious spirit is detrimental to the interests of Christ's kingdom. James says: "The wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God." I have known some preachers who seemed to take great delight in "ripping people up the back," but I have never known of a hypercritical preacher who had great success in saving souls. In the second place, such a spirit is injurious to one's own self. Those who sit in judgment hurl their anathemas, forgetting that they rebound upon themselves. "With what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged: and with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured unto you." (Matt. 7: 2.) It is always wise to heed the old proverb: "Judge not thy neighbor till thou hast put thyself in his place."

The story is told of a man who was complaining of his neighbors. "I never saw such a wretched set of people," he said, "as are in this village. They are mean, greedy, selfish, and careless of the needs of others. Worst of all, they are forever speaking evil of one another." "Is it really so?" said an angel who happened to be walking with him. "It is, indeed," said the man. "Why, only look at this fellow coming toward us! I know his face, though I cannot just remember his name. See his little, sharklike, cruel eyes and the lines of covetousness about his mouth!" "It is very clever of you to see all this," said the angel; "but there is one thing which you did not perceive." "What is that?" asked the man. "That is a looking-glass we are approaching," said the angel.

A Useful Roman Proverb.

The Romans had a wise proverb: "Pronounce on no man's life till it is over." It is a proverb that works both ways. Sometimes it appears that a man is headed straight toward hell, but before he dies, through the grace of God and the persistent effort of Christian men and women, he is redeemed. Like Demas, there are those who forsake the Lord's work for a season, but after a while they come up smiling and turn out profitable to the ministry. On the other hand, many a tree as it stands in the forest looks fine, solid, and valuable, which, when cut down and sawed up for use, reveals rottenness, cross grain, and knots. Just so there are men and women who move in the circles of society, who, to judge by appearance, are almost all that you could wish them to be; but when death shall have mowed them down and the judgment shall have examined them, what will be the heart infidelity, the secret sins, the unchristian principles which shall be disclosed, rendering them totally unfit for the Master's use in the building of his heavenly temple! "There is nothing covered," Jesus says, "that shall not be revealed: and hid, that shall not be known." (Matt. 10: 26.) "And I say unto you, that every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment." (Matt. 12: 36.)

God Writes and We Write.

In the Southland the colored people have a song which runs like this:

"He sees all we do; He hears all we say; My God's a-writing all the time."

This old plantation hymn expresses a solemn truth that no man should forget. Our God has been writing through the ages. In the British museum there is a piece of stone about half the size of my Bible, which is probably five thousand years old, and in the middle of the stone there is the imprint of a bird's foot. Five thousand years ago, when the stone was soft, the bird put its foot upon it, and the mark has been there ever since. Our God is writing all the time; and so are you, and so am I, so long as we live in the world. As we talk, we write; as we work, we write; as we play, we write; as we live and move and have our being, our eternal destinies are wrought.

But Jesus gives us a still more startling truth. He says: "God sent not the Son into the world to judge the world; but that the world should be saved through him. He that believeth on him is not judged: he that believeth not hath been judged already, because he hath not believed on the name of the only begotten Son of God." O the solemn import of these two words-"judged already!" For those who have not obeyed the Savior it means that judgment has already been pronounced against them in the high court of heaven. But praise God, sinner, you can change the judgment if you act in time. On the banks of Niagara, where the rapids begin to swell and swirl preparatory to their final plunge, is a signboard which reads: "Past Redemption Point." Even while one feels the firm ground beneath, a shiver of horror passes through his veins as he looks off upon the turbulent waters and realizes the full significance of that sign. It means that none can retrace their steps if past that point. For the love of your soul, do not pass the redemption point on the way to heaven, else your feet will go down to hell. But while mercy lingers and the invitation is before you, lay hold upon eternal life.

> "Do you see the beacon gleaming, Far against the midnight skies? Clear and calm its light is beaming, Showing where the haven lies."

To have what we like is for the most part an impossible dream of human life: to like what we have is a possibility, and not only a duty, but a high privilege.—Selected.

The Bishop Must Be the Husband of One Wife. BY H. LEO BOLES.

The readers of the Gospel Advocate will recall that Brother McQuiddy, in answering a query last October, stated that the Scriptures do not teach that an elder must be a married man. In the issue of December 9 I replied to his answer under the question, "Can an Unmarried Man Be a Scriptural Elder?" and Brother McQuiddy replied to my article under the caption, "Must an Elder Be a Married Man?" I take this opportunity, in replying to his article, to say I think that Brother McQuiddy and I can discuss this question as brethren should, in the spirit of Christ and with a humble desire to know the will of God on this question.

I gave the scriptural quotations and showed the connection that they had, showing that the context emphasizes the fact that Paul instructed Timothy and Titus to select men as elders, or bishops, who were married men and the fathers of children who were old enough to be Christians. I then gave quotations from a number of scholars showing that the Scriptures teach that bishops were to be selected from among the married men of the congregation. Brother McQuiddy does not think that even the scholars that I quoted teach that an elder must be a married man. I simply refer the reader to the quotations given, or, better, to the authors themselves.

Adam Clarke says: "He should be a married man, but he should be no polygamist." Brother McQuiddy says: "Not a single author quoted by Brother Boles sustains his position. Adam Clarke comes more nearly doing so than any other; but he only says that an elder should be a married man, which is far from saying that he must be a married man. One carries only the idea of a moral obligation, while the other carries the idea of compulsion." Brother McQuiddy should examine the dictionary a little closer, and he will find that the word "should" is often used to denote "obligation in various degrees, usually milder than 'ought.'" When Clarke says an elder "should be a married man," if, as Brother McQuiddy says, "this is far from saying that he must be a married man," then when Clarke says "he should be no polygamist," this also is "far from saying that he must be no polygamist." If Clarke does not mean that the elder must be a married man, neither does he mean that he must not be a polygamist; and if he means, when he says "he should be a married man," that he may not be a married man, then he also means, when he says "he should be no polygamist," that he must not necessarily be a monogamist.

The whole issue lies in the expression, "the husband of one wife." What does Paul mean by this expression? Does he simply mean to teach against polygamy? If this is all that Paul teaches by the expression, "the husband of one wife," why did the Holy Spirit not "express himself in the most direct way" and say he must be no polygamist? This expression means more than forbidding polygamy. The expression, "the husband of one wife," is used three times in the New Testament Scriptures. It is found in 1 Tim. 3: 2, then again in verse 12 of the same chapter, and again in Tit. 1: 6. A similar expression is found in regard to widows. "The wife of one man" is found in 1 Tim. 5: 9. The context shows that all these uses are connected with the family. Will Brother Mc-Quiddy please tell why Paul mentions the fact that an elder must be "one that ruleth well his own house," if the elder is not to be a married man? Why does Paul say that he !

should have his children in subjection, if the elder is not to be a married man? Why does Paul give the ruling of his own house as a qualification for taking care of the church of God, if he is not to be a married man? Why did not Paul say that the bishop must not be a polygamist; and if he happens to be a married man and happens to have children, then he should rule well his house and have his children under control? Paul does say that he must be a husband; then he qualifies the expression, "must be the husband," with the phrase, "of one wife." The qualifying phrase, "of one wife," does not nullify the sentence that he must be a husband, but only describes or limits the kind of husband that he must be. I call attention to the fact that Thayer says that the Greek word "andra," which comes from the word "aneer," which means as used in 1 Tim. 3: 2, 12; Tit. 1: 6, means "husband." Hence, Paul does not say that a bishop must be a "man" with a certain qualification, but he says that he must be a "husband" with certain qualifications.

In my previous article I quoted five scholars as supporting the above teaching. I gave these merely to show that I was in good company when I taught that the bishop, when selected by Timothy and Titus, must have been a married man. I submit other scholars as supporting this position. "The Popular and Critical Bible Encyclopedia and Scriptural Dictionary," edited by Samuel Fallows. Volume I., page 288, says: "The name 'elder' proves that originally age, experience, and character were their most necessary qualification. They were to be married men with families (1 Tim. 3: 4), and with converted children (Tit. 1: 6)." "The Twentieth Century New Testament." translated from Westcott and Hort's Greek texts "by about twenty scholars representing the various sections of the Christian church," translates 1 Tim. 3: 2 "the husband of one wife," "a faithful husband;" and Tit. 1: 6: "They are to be men of irreproachable character, who are faithful husbands, whose children are Christians and have never been charged with dissolute conduct or have been unruly." "The People's New Testament," with explanatory notes by B. W. Johnson, Volume II., page 264, commenting on 1 Tim. 3: 2, says: "'The husband of one wife '-a married man and having only one wife." Commenting on verses 4 and 5, he says: "'One that ruleth well his own house 'this implies that he must be a man of family; 'having his children '-he must be a father with obedient children." Bloomfield, in his Greek New Testament with English notes, says of the expression, "husband of one wife," and "the wife of one man," in 1 Tim, 5: 9: "The expression plainly signifies the having had but one husand." William Burkitt, author of "Expository Notes on New Testament." commenting on Tit. 1: 6, says: "Titus must not only look at the person he is to ordain, but to the family and household of the person ordained, that they be well governed: because the honor of religion and the reputation of the church suffer exceedingly when any of the bishop's family, his children especially, are riotous and unruly; besides, the world will pronounce them unfit to govern the church of God that cannot command their own families." John A. Bengel's "Gnomon of the New Testament," translated by C. T. Lewis and M. R. Vincent, says: "'The husband of one wife' is therefore a simple paraphrase of 'husband,' (1 Tim. 3: 2.)" Bretschneider translates (1 Tim. 3: 2, 12: Tit. 1: 6): "He shall be the husband of a wife-that is, a married man." Samuel Davidson, author of "Introduction to the New Testament," Volume II., translates 1 Tim. 3; 2: "A bishop should be blameless, only once married, vigilant, sober," etc. He translates verse 12: "The deacons should be once married and good rulers of their families." "The Emphasized New Testament," by Joseph B. Rotherham, translates 1 Tim. 3: 2: "It is needful then for the overseer to be irreproachable, a husband of one wife." "The New Century Bible," commenting on 1 Tim.

3: 2 and 5: 9, says; "This phrase should be taken quite simply a man of one woman, or a woman of one man."

The ten authorities quoted above represent the scholar-ship of about forty men of great piety and learning; and they all teach that "the husband of one wife" means that the elder must be a married man with children old enough to be Christians. In contrast with the above scholarship, I quote Brother McQuiddy's last sentence: "Brethren who believe in 'speaking as it were the oracles of God' should not pervert 'must be the husband of one wife' into the language that 'an elder must be a married man,' for the two are as far apart as truth and error." I do not think that Brother McQuiddy's ipse dixit outweighs the above catalogue of scholars.

Georgia and the Far Southern Field By B. C. GOODPASTURE

Paul Before Felix.

In giving the limited commission to the twelve, Jesus said: "But beware of men: for they will deliver you up to councils, and in their synagogues they will scourge you; yea and before governors and kings shall ye be brought for my sake, for a testimony to them and to the Gentiles." (Matt. 10: 17, 18.) When the Lord was speaking to Ananias with special reference to the future experiences of Paul, he said: "Go thy way: for he is a chosen vessel unto me, to bear my name before the Gentiles and kings, and the children of Israel." (Acts 9: 15.) Paul's arraignment before Felix was only one, but a distinctly impressive one, of the fulfillments of these prophetic declarations. It is impossible to get the force of the great apostle's trial, and especially of his reasoning before Felix, without knowing something concerning the character of Felix.

It may be conservatively observed in the outset that the most commendable and creditable thing that can be said of Felix is that he "trembled" under the preaching of Paul. Farrar has summed up his character thus: "As he glanced back over the stained and guilty past, he was afraid. He had been a slave in the vilest of all positions, at the vilest of all epochs, in the vilest of all cities. He had crept with his brother Pallas into the position of a courtier at the most morally degraded of all courts. He had been an officer of those auxiliaries who were the worst of all troops. What secrets of lust and blood lay hidden in his earlier life we do not know; but ample and indisputable testimony, Jewish and pagan, sacred and secular, reveals to us what he had been-how greedy, how savage, how treacherous, how unjust, how steeped in the blood of private murder and public massacre-during the eight years which he had now spent in the government, first of Samaria, then of Palestine. There were footsteps behind him; he began to feel as though 'the earth were made of glass!'" ("Life of Paul.") To the foregoing may be added the facts that he was living in adultery with Drusilla, the daughter of the Herod who murdered James, and wife of Aziz, king of Emesa, whom he induced to abandon her husband, promising her wealth, position, and happiness; and, that he left Paul in bonds when he knew that he should have gone free, as a matter of policy, hoping to "gain favor with the Jews" and a bribe from Paul. The latter fact, says Kitto, "finishes the character of Felix, in exact keeping with other parts of his character."

Paul was permitted to reason before Felix "concerning the faith in Christ Jesus." In a sense this was a peculiar and rare privilege. It is said that, though Mr. Spurgeon was for a long time the greatest preacher in England, yet Queen Victoria never one time heard him preach. As a rule, those who are deeply interested in the affairs of this world and its kingdoms care very little about hearing "the falth;" but Paul had the opportunity to preach to a Roman procurator, or governor. What did he say? What would a modern preacher have said under the same circumstances? Paul could have delivered a message that would have touched Felix's life by way of condemnation only indirectly, or not at all; but did he do that? Instead of preaching what Felix wanted, he preached what he needed. Paul preached to save, not to please for the sake of pleasing. This great preacher of the cross "reasoned of righteousness, and self-control, and the judgment to come." What a theme! What a contrast between what Paul preached and everything that characterized the life of Felix! What a manifestation of sincerity and courage on the part of Paul! Here as well as elsewhere he "shrank not from declaring . . . the whole counsel of God," Felix understood what he said, and knew that his life fell far below the standard of living set forth by Paul.

The gospel was preached to a man who certainly needed it; but men often fail to profit by timely instruction. Paul did his duty, regardless of the actions of Felix. It is reported that the governor "trembled," or was "terrified" (Acts 24: 25), at the message, and promised to call Paul unto him at a "convenient season"—a season when he could hear and obey the gospel as easily as not. Such a season could not come to a man who was living as was Felix. So far as we know, Felix never again "trembled" under the power of the word and the "judgment to come:" but we cannot but think that when the judgment does come he will "tremble" again. It will be too late then; he cannot excuse himself on the ground that there is time enough yet—a "convenient season." A nonconversion: but what a lesson to sinner, saint, and preacher!

Study the Bible.

The effect that the Bible has had upon the world is beyond estimate, "Educate men without religion, and you make them but clever devils," said the Duke of Wellington. And Colton said: "Philosophy is a bully that talks very loud when danger is at a distance; but the moment she is hard pressed by the enemy, she is not to be found at her post, but leaves the brunt of the battle to be done by her humbler but steadier comrade, Religion, whom on most other occasions she affects to despise." That is the great value of the study of the Bible. In it is found the crutch of life upon which to lean when all other props are gone, the key that opens the door to the chamber of solace when all other doors are closed. Study the Bible.

A myriad of life's lessons can be learned from its pages. It is the chart and compass by which to sail the seas of existence: the cloud by day, the pillar of fire by night, by which to guide our feet along the stone-strewn journey of life's tortuous highway. It is the treasury of the world's knowledge, the custodian of the heritage of the ages, the preserver of spiritual balm that heals the troubles of the soul. It is yesterday, to-day, and to-morrow; the reflection of the past, the mirror of the present, the prophecy of the future. It is the scroll of time, the promise of eternity. Southern California.

It is a bit hard for me to find time to say much about the natural scenery in this country. The fact is, I am not a good observer. I have traveled for miles through some of the most beautiful country and paid but little attention to it, due to my having my mind fixed on some subject or work I was trying to get done. Mrs. Hall is the opposite; she almost worships flowers, trees, and mountains. But I have taken time to look a little, and I can say that one's eyes almost tire looking at the beauties of nature in this country. This has been especially so with me during the Ontario meeting. In a valley that once was almost a desert, but has been made to "blossom as the rose" by irrigation, we have acres and acres of orange, lemon, and grape fruit trees groaning under the burden of the golden fruit hanging from their branches; roses are in bloom, the grass is green, the birds are singing and flitting from tree to tree; and then, almost, it seems, In a hand's reach of us. there on the mountain is the snow. It is just wonderful; and, in spite of the fact that one saw it the day before and days before, when he arises in the morning he wants to see it again.

But while all of this beauty is a thing for which we should be thankful, we must remember that it all shall soon end. The thing, therefore, of most interest to us is the way the cause of Christ is made to be seen in Southern California. It is more beautiful than anything in nature. It is more wonderful. It establishes something in our souls that will live after all the flowers shall have forever faded and the mountains and valleys are no more. If the church of the living God was just seen and observed as the beauties of nature are seen and admired in this part of California, how much it would mean to the people of this State and the whole world! May God help us to make it the one aim of our lives to get men to look at the God of nature and the wonderful provisions he has made for their eternal peace after they leave this country.

The Ontario Meeting.

It was thought that this revival would close last night (February 2), but it seemed that the interest demanded a continuation of the work till next Lord's-day evening, at least; hence, I am at home to-day to meet my Bible class, but will return to Ontario to-night.

Seven souls have already confessed their faith in Christ and been baptized, and we have another to baptize to-morrow (Friday), and eight have cast their lot with the Ontario brethren by statement. I have never, in all my work, been in a more enjoyable meeting. This is due, to a large degree, to S. E. Witty and his wife and the fine lot of people with whom he works at Ontario. There were about fifty-five members, I think, when the revival began, but they are looking forward to having their number go to one hundred in the very near future. Brother Witty is one of the best men with whom I have ever labored. That his whole soul is in the work is easy to be seen. He has been at Ontario about seven years, and has built this congregation almost from the ground up. He has labored at Pomona and other places since coming to this State; but he finally bought a home at Ontario, and desires to let the remaining years of his life be spent in this State. If Witty has one thing about him, socially, that any one could object to, I have been unable to find it. He is loved and esteemed by all of the townspeople. He is a fine mixer, and makes a good impression on all. His loyalty to God's truth is beyond question, but he is gentle and considerate when he comes to dealing with those who have been led from the Book by the doctrines of men. He believes in doing things, hence has developed one of the best-working congregations that I have seen. They are not rich in this world's goods, but their collections last year were about thirty-four hundred dollars. They have paid twenty-five hundred dollars for one of the best lots in town, and have plans drawn for a house that would cost, if turned over to regular contractors to build, close to twenty thousand dollars; but they will be able to get it built for much less. due to the fact that many of them are carpenters, and much of the work, if not all of it, will be done by the members. Witty himself is a good carpenter and will help do the building. It stirs my soul to meet such men and such a congregation-those who believe the church of God is the best institution in the world, hence should have the best there is in us; who believe that our church houses should come from back streets and be put in the heart of our towns and cities, and that they should have a building in keeping with the great cause of our Lord and Savior. Brother Witty has labored with his own hands to help sup port himself the most of the time he has been in this State, and he has done it joyfully. It is one thing to build churches at a sacrifice; it is another thing to enjoy churches by playing the rôle of a modern pastor after they have been built at the sacrifice of some one else. It would do every preacher in the brotherhood good if they would get out and build a few churches from the ground up; it would give some a good case of religion if they stuck to it till they had a finished product. We will give a final report of the meeting later, but I wanted to say this now to encourage these good people. The Gospel Advocate will be a regular visitor in many of their homes from new on.

o o o An All-Day Meeting.

On the fifth Lord's day in January, and the second Lord's day of the Ontario meeting, we had three services at the house of worship, and also dinner together at the clubhouse, about four blocks from the regular place of meeting. The good sisters certainly made it a glorious success. We had enough for dinner and for a lunch before the evening service. I have never seen more agreeable arrangements than I found at the clubhouse-all the tables, chairs, and dishes that we needed: a large electric percolater that furnished hot coffee for all who desired it; large, comfortable rockers for the older men and women; and, best of all, a large, open fireplace that made the room perfectly comfortable. 'The Ontario brethren admitted it was the best day in the history of the church. The following visiting preachers were with us to make the day all the more a success: D. W. Nay, of Pasadena; Homer E. Bartlett, of Riverside; Orlie Badders, of Pomona: W. V. Anderson, of Stanford, Ky., who is spending a few months at Pomona, Then, at the afternoon service, we had E. M. Borden, of Riverside, and a number of others, who added greatly to the success of the occasion.

It rained much during the day, but we hardly knew it was what would be called "a bad day" at Ontario. Our house was packed full at two of the services and comfortably filled at the other. Besides these three services and the social feature at the clubhouse, we had a baptismal service, at which Brother Witty buried five souls with their Lord in baptism. When we separated after the evening service, we felt that we were ending "a perfect day."

Within every healing shadow is God himself; and so, though it seem to be a shadow of the sorest sorrow and pain, yet it will lift me upward and lead me into the light. Indeed, it cannot be a hurting shadow if God is in it. I care not how painful, perplexing, and dark—the very darkness will be light about me. If he is with me, I will fear no evil. All the shadows of God are divine!—Selected.

Does the Conclusion Follow?

BY JOHN T. LEWIS.

In the Gospel Advocate of December 9, 1920, Brother Kurfees, in answering some questions which I had asked Brother McQuiddy, says: "If any reader of the Gospel Advocate will cite a single passage in the New Testament with any name or designation of God's church which did not include all Christians in the territory to which it was applied, I will promptly publish and magnify it in capital letters in these columns. Will some one cite the passage? Never mind, at present, about any other differences. As this point is vital and is called in question, we will now settle it before giving attention to any other, and I now respectfully call on any reader for such a passage."

In the Advocate of January 6, 1921, Brother Kurfees quotes three lines from my letter to him, as follows: "I have never yet read where any one ever said that the church of Christ did not include all Christians. Did you? If so, where and by whom was it said or written?"

To these questions Brother Kurfees says: "I reply promptly that it has been said or written many times by different brethren at different times and in different places. For example, the Apostolic Review, as I understand, still has on sale a tract on the differences between the church of Christ and the Christian Church; but some of God's people are in what is meant by the latter."

From the above, does the conclusion follow—therefore the Apostolic Review says "all Christians are not in the church of Christ?" If so, I have not yet learned how to draw conclusions.

In fact, I believe Brother Kurfees would be doing more for the cause of Christ if he would write some on the differences between "the church of Christ" and "the Christian Church," if he thinks there is a difference; and I do not mean by this that he would have to say that all Christians are not in the church of Christ.

"For example," I have a tract before me with the name Z. T. Sweeney signed to it. After claiming that Brother Kurfees had cut him out of the Advocate because he would not allow him to change the proposition that they had started out to discuss, he makes the following classic comments: "Any one with a quarter of a thimbleful of brains can see that the two propositions are not synenymous." Again, after intimating that Brother Kurfees did not know the difference between a verb in the imperative mode and a present active participle, he adds: "Now any one competent to teach a grammar school knows that I am right." Then he says: "His logic will fill the worship of Christians as full of ordinances as a well-kept hive is full of bees."

When I read these minor differences between these two brethren, I did not think that the conclusion followed—therefore Z. T. Sweeney says that M. C. Kurfees is not a member of the church of Christ;" for I know they are "esteemed contemporaries," "friends" and "brethren."

Brother Kurfees says: "Again, in the Gospel Advocate of October 14, 1920, Brother J. B. Nelson, reporting a successful meeting in Greenville, Texas, said: "The Greenville church has had a hard pull, as one of the strongest Christian churches is there. We let them know that the church of Christ is in town."

Now, Brother Kurfees, by his method of "circumlocution," may make Brother Nelson say, in the above announcement, that all Christians are not in the church of Christ. But we ordinary fellows who are still walking around on the ground do not know how to manipulate this "circumlocution;" and if Brother Kurfees would leave it off and draw logical conclusions, we could understand him better.

Of course "the Christian Church" folks are like other folks; they act differently in different places. "For example," in Louisville, Ky., they will conduct the song service and lead in prayer for Brother Kurfees in his protracted meetings; but in other places they act as that "Christian preacher" of whom Brother Smith speaks in this week's Advocate, the one that "demanded of Brother Elam by whose authority he came into his territory to preach." This is the kind that J. B. Nelson and the church at Greenville, Texas, know.

In the Advocate of January 6, 1921, Brother Kurfees says: "Again, in current and now popular parlance, brethren frequently speak of 'the church of Christ in St. Louis,' 'the church of Christ in Washington City,' 'the church of Christ in New York City,' etc., but those they include are only a part of the church of Christ in those cities." Since Brother Kurfees is an editor of the Gospel Advocate and frequently speaks for it, it seems to me that he would have this language of Ashdod stopped and have "Bible things called by Bible names;" then we could depend on what we read in the Advocate.

What does the following announcement mean? "You are cordially invited to attend the protracted meeting conducted by the Campbell Street church of Christ, on Campbell Street, between Main and Market, beginning Sunday, March 29, 1908, with preaching by Evangelist C. M. Pullias. Services every night except Saturday. Hours: 7:45 P.M. and Sunday 11 A.M." Does this mean that all the Christians among "Baptists, Catholics, the Christian Church, Congregationalists, Dunkards, Episcopalians, Lutherans, Methodists, and Presbyterians" in that territory" were having a "protracted meeting" on "Campbell Street, between Main and Market," or was Brother Kurfees back in 1908 using the "now popular and current parlance?"

Finally, Brother Kurfees quotes from an article of mine published in the Gospel Advocate, January, 1918, and says: "He here acknowledged in so many words: 'We use the term church of Christ in an unscriptural sense to designate the two local churches.'" Yes, I "here acknowledged in so many words" that "we use the term 'church of Christ' in an unscriptural sense to designate the two local churches," just as Paul acknowledged that he was a fool and the Corinthians were wise.

In the Advocate of November 11, 1920, Brother Kurfees says: "It is altogether unnecessary to reply to Brother Taylor's other misrepresentations of me as to whom I would or would not baptize, or to make any further reply at all to his irrelevant article." In the Advocate of January 6, 1921, Brother Kurfees says: "I wonder if, in any of his meetings, Brother Lewis ever had immersed Methodists or immersed persons from any other denomination to come forward. If so, I wonder if he reimmersed them. If not, where were they before they came forward?" Yes, I have "reimmersed" several. Some of them had been immersed by "our" preachers; but it was always those who wanted to be "reimmersed." That is my practice. But what has that got to do with our speaking and writing about the church of Christ?

When I use the term "church of Christ" in preaching or making announcements. I speak of the church which Jesus Christ said he would build, or a body of baptized believers who meet together on the "first day of the week to break bread." and I do not worry myself or bother others about "the Christians among Baptists, Catholics, the Christian Church, Congregationalists, Dunkards, Episcopalians, Lutherans, Methodists, and Presbyterians." They may be what they want to be and do what they want to do-that is their business, not mine. But because they want to be something besides what God called his people, and do things that God did not say do, and leave off things which God said do-and they can read these things in the Bible just as I read them-I am not going to quit using these terms, but am going to speak of the church as Brother Kurfees spoke of it back in 1908,

Submitted in the interest of the truth.

Return.

Let us return to the Lord, to the God of our fathers!
Long unto us in vain his prophets have spoken.

Now let us turn from our idols of gold and of silver;
By our own hands they were made, by our hands may be broken.

Let us return to the Lord! What avail us our idols?

Baal and Asshur and Ashtaroth, let us forsake them;
Long we have served them in vain, for they never would hear us—

Deaf as the stone, from which, of old, we did make them,

Let us return to the Lord! He is merciful ever;
He will forgive us, as we forgive one another;
Will take us home to the love which we knew in the old time.

Let us return, as a child to his father and mother.

Let us return to the Lord! For our fathers have told us How, as a pillar of cloud and of fire, he led them Out of Egypt and into the Land of Promise;

How with his manna, the bread from heaven, he fed them,

Let us return to the Lord, to the God of our fathers!
Often of old, when weary and faint, he has healed us.
Weary are we of Baal and Asshur and Ashtaroth;
Let us return to the Lord, for he only can shield us.
—Anna Wilson, in Exchange.

Safety at Last.

Kerop and Hagop looked about in amazement.

"What is it?" whimpered Hagop, who was the littlest boy you ever saw. Big Brother Kerop stared solemnly up at the tall man whose hand clasped his, and his great brown eyes went slowly from one boy to another in the row of lads before him.

"Never fear, Hagop, we are safe here," Kerop said reassuringly; and the tall man looked at them kindly.

"This is the Near East Relief orphanage, my child," he explained. "All these other boys have come here just as you have, to find a refuge from the Turks and Tartars."

Hagop did not understand it all, but the pleasant voice made him feel that everything was all right now. He knew that "Turk" was the symbol for all things terrible, and that in some frightful way it was the name that had meant death for his father and mother. He remembered Kerop taking him by the hand and whispering, "Run, Hagop, run!" and then there were endless miles of stony paths and rough roads that hurt his tiny bare feet. Sometimes he had fallen down, cutting his face and bruising his hands, but each time Kerop had patted him on the shoulder and said: "Brave little brother, you must not fall."

Then there had come along the road a group of grown people who had picked up the two little waifs and taken them to the orphanage at Van.

"These are Hagon and Kerop, who are going to stay with us for a little while," the tall man said to the other boys, and the children bowed gravely.

"You're all right now, Hagop," whispered Kerop; and the little boy blinked and smiled—the first smile in many, many days.—Southern Churchman.

Death, as God intended it, is the rising of the soul, not through the regions of space, but in its mode of existence. It is the passage from the lower form of life to a higher; and the lost are they who have destroyed the powers which, duly exercised in the lower life, would in time have fitted them for the higher.—Malcolm MacColl.

Laughter That Hurts.

"Hush! Don't do that!" Aunt Helen spoke quickly; indeed, almost sharply. Beatrice stopped laughing and turned to her in silent amazement. Aunt Helen beckoned her to share the porch swing.

"I almost lost my best girl friend by laughing just as you did then," she began.

"But I was laughing at my kitten playing there by the fence," began Beatrice.

"Yes. But Grace doesn't know that. As she closed your gate and turned, she tripped and almost fell. Just then you laughed—and she thinks you laughed at her."

"O, I'm sorry. I'll explain to her," Beatrice declared, sincerely. "But your friend, Aunt Helen—you didn't lose her—"

"No. We were on a picnic, and I laughed at some joking remark, at the very moment when Hester missed her footing and sat down in the mud instead of a rowboat she was about to board. I did not know I had offended her for weeks-until I coaxed the secret from her. Then we laughed and cried together and made up. But we both had some pretty sorry hours between my careless laugh and our making up. I think we have both been more careful all the years since not to hurt any one by our laughter. Laughing is one of the best things in the world, in its right and proper place; but it can hurt like a sword thrust. too. Nobody enjoys being laughed at; nobody enjoys a laugh behind their back. It is too apt to sound as if it were meant for them. So I stopped your laughing at your kitten, because, from the not overly pleased look Grace sent back as she hurried off, I know she thought you laughed at her. Make it right with her as soon as you can, Beatrice; for you can make friends by laughing with them, but lose them all by laughing at them or letting them think that you did. Just so you can cheer folks by your laugh at the right time or hurt them cruelly by careless or intentional mirth at the wrong time." And Aunt Helen ended by patting the slim hand that stole softly into her own, while Beatrice answered: "I'm going to stop and see Grace when I go for the evening mail. I don't want her to take any hurt from me to bed with her to-night."-Cora S. Day, in American Messenger.

Learn to Listen.

Cultivate the habit of listening as you would the lungs, muscles, or memory. See to it that you listen with every sense alert to all that is going on in this vast panorama about us. Cultivate, too, the habit of listening when you are alone. If it is in the aisles of a vast forest, listen to the myriad voices all around you, the song of the streams, the murmur of the pines, swish of leaves and epic of oak and elm. If it is alone in your room, take a few moments for quiet meditation, and listen to the "still small voice," God's messenger, speaking to you of the inner thoughts and life which only he and you can understand. It is only by thus "lowly listening" that we can hear the right word for our guidance.

There is always time to listen; for by listening I mean an attitude of mind and heart, rather than a particular time or place in which to exercise the art. The time and place for its cultivation is here, there, now and always, wherever we are, whatever we may be doing. It is surprising how much more the listeners of the world accomplish than they who are blind, deaf, and unresponsive to the great possibilities in this life that is ours.—Elsye Tash Sater, in Christian Herald.

MISCELLANY

James E. Scobey preached at Fairview last Sunday to an appreciative audience. He will preach next Sunday at Lawrence Avenue, this city.

From W. S. Long, Washington, D. C., February 10: "The services of the church of Christ in Washington were well attended on Lord's day, February 6. We had the best atterdance in some time. Our new pews have come and are being installed. The cost of comfortable seats is considerable, and, with the notes that come due periodically, we need help. Brethren, you may rejoice to know that you can yet have fellowship in this work. I mean those who have not done so yet. There were a number of churches that gave a pledge last summer to assist us before the end of the year, but, on account of hard times or some other cause, they have failed us at the most needed time. If possible, I hope that they may come with a 'double portion' soon."

J. Will Henley writes under date of February 6: "I saw my baby treated to-day. Dr. Stone thinks at least two more months will be required to cure him. The baby's general health has been the very best, and that has been greatly in his favor. We are starting into the fifth month, and the way has been long and lonely. A few brethren and friends have contributed eighty-four dollars and fifty cents to help bear our burden. The anxiety and the expense occasioned by this terribly trying affair have completely broken us up; but we are glad we have hopes of saving our boy. Just how we are to continue another two months remains to be seen. God help us! Our home in Coleman, Okla., is for sale. We have fifteen hundred dollars against it, which we see no way of meeting when it falls due next May. I also have some choice books which I am offering for sale to help us along in this matter—commentaries, histories, debates, lexicons, notes, and sermon books of the very best. Brethren, pray for us."

Ethel Green, Kennett, Mo., writes to tell of an occurrence in the church at that place which shows the importance of having good literature in the home. She says: brother here married a woman who was a member of the General Baptist Church. The woman had a son ten or twelve years of age. This brother placed good literature in his home. The son read the literature to his mother and thereby made a Christian of her and converted his own mind to the truth; and now this same son is planning to be a gospel preacher, and is a promising young man. The father furnished the literature; the boy did the reading, or the preaching: and the mother believed and obeyed, as did the son also. I believe the same would be the result in every home in America if good literature were placed there and read. The trouble with a great number of people is that they do not read what they have in their homes. I do not think there is a paper in the whole land that would serve this purpose better than the Gospel

Attention is called to the following note from J. E. Wainwright, 702 Mary Street, Texarkana, Ark.: "Plans have been perfected for a vigorous campaign in the heart of Texarkana, beginning on the second Lord's day in June, and to be continued over three weeks, if possible. The central congregation has secured the services of A. J. Veteto to direct the song service. Every member is exceptionally anxious for a successful meeting, which will determine the future of a much-needed congregation in one of the best locations in the country. We are not asking any one for one cent of money, even though under prevailing conditions I am sure an appeal for such would be but we have firmly determined to strive lawfully to build a spiritual house that will bring glory to the Lord, through which we hope to erect a nice, comfortable buildfoolishly expensive, suitable for worship. But we do need a tent to carry out these plans, and will be very glad to hear from some neighboring congregation who will be so kind as to extend the use of one in their possession."

G. W. Farmer, Cleveland. Tenn., writes of the purpose to establish a congregation at Niota with a house in which to worship. He says: "Niota is a town of seven hundred or more people in McMinn County. Tenn. This is one of the points at which we have been working with one aim in view—that is, to plant the church of Christ there. A lot, splendidly located, has been bought and paid for (with the restrictive clause in the deed), upon which to build a church house. There is not a place in this town that we can get in which to hold services. Although we have had four meetings held in the town, they have all been tent meetings. We are now gathering funds to put up a church house on this lot. There are only ten or eleven members within easy access of this place, and the majority of these are not able to do much. Sister Flora Forest, whose home is here, has been an untiring worker in getting a congregation established here. We are now appealing to every sister who may see this or bear of it to send us a one-dollar contribution. This is a small thing; yet if each sister will do this, we will be able to build this house. May the Lord lead and help all to see the importance of this work. Send contributions to Mrs. Flora Forest, Niota, Tenn., or to G. W. Farmer, Cleveland, Tenn."

From C. A. Taylor, Louisville, Ky., January 31: "On April 23, 1920, as treasurer. I made a report, which was published in the Gospel Advocate, covering to that date all contributions to the King's Hall congregation building fund, received largely from appeals published in the Advocate. I now wish to make a final report. Since first report we have received additional contributions amounting to $289.90. In round figures, this, with what has already been reported, makes total receipts outside of our own congregation of $1,275; and we have raised among our own members $2,600, and borrowed $1,500, a total of $5,375. With this we purchased a lot for $2,000, on which we erected a frame building at a cost of $3,175; and paid for carpet. etc., $200. Please remember, all figures are in round numbers. This completes our building program, except that we have no permanent seats; but P. C. Kennett, of the Campbell Street congregation, has very generously authorized us to get comfortable pews and draw on him for $500, which will about buy them. Our building is not a fine one, but permanent and very comfortable, and we are extremely happy in it. We have two classrooms, a baptistery, electric lights, and seating capacity in main auditorium of about one hundred; this can be increased by extra chairs and use of class rooms to about one hundred and fifty. The churches and many individual Christians have been extremely generous with us, and we deeply appreciate their interest, their confidence in us, and their generosity toward us, and pledge ourselves to see that the church building they have belped us erect will be devoted constantly and only to the cause of uncorrupted Christianity, free from the unholy speculations of men and unwith divisive theories of false teachers. Now we wish to give expression to that gratitude which fills our hearts as we once more move forward in complete unity, full of hope and with hearts filled with joy, determined to plant the banner of our King on higher ground.

J. O. Barnes, New Smyrna, Fla., tells of the good results of a mission meeting he recently held. He says: "On January 25 I began a mission meeting at the beautiful little town of Eau Gallie, Fla., on the east coast, and continued it about ten days, and I am glad to say that God used me as his humble means to plant the cause of New Testament Christianity at that place where an unmixed gospel sermon had never before been preached. As a visible result of the effort, a New Testament church composed of four earnest workers was set in order and began keeping house for the Lord on the first Lord's day in February, in the home of Brother Cox, where the church will meet for worship until more convenient quarters can be obtained. Brother Cox and wife were formerly from Nashville, Tenn., and V. E. Tankersley's home was near Columbia, Tenn. All of them are willing workers in the Master's vineyard, and they will continue the work at Eau Gallie. Brethren who pass this way and desire to work with that little body should address C. O. Cox. Eau Gallie, Fla. I should be glad to have some preaching brethren visit them and strengthen the work. I hope to be with them again before I leave the East Coast for our home in Lake City, which will be about the first of March. This meeting was made possible through the earnest efforts of W. T. McCullough, of Mims. The Adventists opened the doors of their homes and their church house to us, that being the only available place. We went to the work without the 1 romise of any financial support or a member of the church of Christ at that place; but God opened the hearts of some brethren, and I received a reasonable support. Above all, I was encouraged on Lord's day, at the eleven-o'clock service, when Brother McCullough, of the Mims congregation, forty-three miles distant, drove up with an auto truck filled with the members of that church (and some others), and by their splendid assistance in songs and prayers made the meeting a spiritual success. They also remained for the afternoon service. All the glory is given to God and Jesus the Christ, who answered every prayer for this work."

AT HOME AND ABROAD

Lytton Alley preached at Highland Avenue Church, this city, on Sunday, morning and night, to large audiences.

We have a few copies of "List of Preachers of Churches of Christ for 1921" for sale at twenty-five cents net. Call and get one.

J. F. Smith writes from McComb, Okla., February 5: "I am evangelizing in this part, starting some new churches and working over some old ones."

John M. Rice, Merkel, Texas, says: "The good brethren at Duncan, Arizona, are still trying to get means enough to build their meetinghouse. Will the brethren at large please assist then: some? This is a worthy call; they are true to the New Testament church."

Oury Harris informs us that the church at Dickson, Tenn., gave one Lord's-day's contribution, which amounted to four hundred dollars, to the starving children of Central Europe. This church has grown wonderfully in the last few years in zeal and liberality. Other churches would do well to follow its example.

J. W. Brents, writing from Athens, Ala., February 10. says: "When I receive my paper, the page I turn to first is the field reports. Too much reporting, perhaps, is not wise. We had splendid services last Lord's day. Two excellent young ladies from the First Christian Church took their stand with us. I enjoyed and sanctioned what was said in 'Wheat and Chaff' about 'preachers' meetings.' Preachers would do well to stay scattered."

Brethren who send us articles for publication should be patient. The better the article, the more likely to be delayed; because a good article will keep and not get stale. We are crowded with good articles, some of which may not get in for two or three months. We get the good ones in as soon as expedient. This is said because some have written in regard to manuscript in two or three weeks. We cannot well write receipts for all of them, either.

From Charles Holder, Bridgeport, Ala., February 11: "I am improving slowly; am now able to be up each day. I am very weak, and it looks now that it will be perhaps two weeks before I will be well enough to get out. Let all pray for me. I was sorry to hear of the attack on Brother Srygley, but trust he will soon be all right again. He is a fine man." We rejoice to hear of the improvement of Brother Holder's condition and wish for him a speedy recovery.

Dr. Cayce and consulting oculists decided it was best, and the only chance to save F. B. Srygley's eye, to operate. He underwent the operation last Friday and is doing very nicely. Nothing can be known definitely before ten days or two weeks. The operation was a very serious one, but it was thought the only possible chance to save his sight. Brother Srygley wishes to thank his friends for the many assurances of sympathy received and to say to them that he is unable to answer their letters in person.

From Will W. Slater, Fort Smith, Ark., February 7: "We had two fine services at Park Hill Church yesterday. Our attendance at the Bible study is beginning to more than fill the house. We had larger attendance yesterday than we have ever had. We will begin building an additional room this week to accommodate our increasing attendance. We have six classes with efficient teachers. We are baptizing our students at almost every service now. I preached to an appreciative audience out east of Van Buren yesterday afternoon."

From C. H. Smithson, 891 Dudley Avenue, Texarkana, Ark., February 7: "The work is just fine at Dudley Avenue. Our prayer meeting last week was the best yet. We had two fine services yesterday, and will continue all this week. This is one of the best congregations in this part. Their faith and zeal are the best. We have a nice building, nicely located, and we hope for much good. It is also the place for the preachers' meeting, and the time is April 4-8. Our aim is to make this the best one ever held. All are invited to be present and enjoy a feast for the soul."

R. A. Craig writes from Louisville, Ky., February 7: "We have closed our Bible drill at Parksville for the time being. We will probably begin again soon. It was a real treat to see the interest manifested. Old and young alike took a great part in studying and answering the questions.

We feel that lasting good was accomplished. I am sure we should give a greater interest to teaching the Bible. If we put the truth into the young minds, it will surely bring fruit in later years. The truth taught by Campbell, Stone, Lard, McGarvey, and other pioneer gospel preachers is felt to-day, because they were wrapped up in the great duty of teaching. We can do as much. Let us get busy and teach."

From U. G. Wilkinson, Hot Springs, Ark., February 7: "I am still at Hot Springs, but will leave here this week for Oklahoma. My temporary post-office address will be Sulphur, Okla.; permanent address, Comanche, Okla. I expect to remain at Sulphur for some time under treatment. I think I have received benefit from the treatment here and that by patience I can yet recover. I preached here again yesterday and last night. The brethren here will continue the work, meeting each Lord's day at the K. of P. Hall, 709½ Central Avenue. Any brother visiting here should look them up. Any visiting preacher will be welcomed. Full information can be obtained from Sister W. F. McCabe, 8 Canyon Street."

From Charles L. Talley, Cookeville, Tenn., February 8: "Our work here seems to be taking on a forward move. Our Lord's-day service is more largely attended than ever. I suppose our audience last Lord's day numbered five hundred or more. The Sunday-evening service and attendance are fine, increasing in interest weekly. Last Lord's day a freewill offering was taken for the suffering ones of Europe and China, and, without any special stress upon this, it amounted to more than one hundred and thirty dollars. Here I might note that the offerings for the past three Lord's days were over five hundred dollars. All things considered, I think this puts this congregation in the front rank. Our program consists of five services each week."

C. E. Coleman has located at Springfield, Tenn., in a business way, but hopes also to be of service to the cause of the Master in that section. He writes: "We think we are right well situated now. The brethren meet every Lord's day here, and have preaching each fourth Lord's day by Andy T. Ritchie. We expect to have some midweek Bible studies soon. A little cloud of brothers and sisters (nineteen in all) appeared very suddenly at our door one evening recently, and it immediately began to 'pour.' The shower consisted mostly of things for the table and pantry. Did it mean anything? Yes, in more ways than one. We appreciate very much the way we have been received and treated by the church here, and trust that great good may come from our efforts together."

From R. E. L. Taylor, Lecanto, Fla., February 8: "We ad two good services last Lord's day. We have succeeded had two good services last Lord's day. We have succeeded in filling the house at each service. People from a distance are coming to hear. The interest among the breth-ren is continuing to grow. I have had letters from several preaching brethren wanting to locate with the congrega-I called a meeting of the elders and members, tion here. and they have decided not to call a preacher until in the early fall, as I am to stay with them until April. want to pay their new preacher's home out of debt. will consider each application, however, and employ a preacher to take up the work in the early fall. My wife is better, and we think now she will get well, if she does not take a backset. I am still asking the brethren to pray for her speedy recovery. I have not gone away to preach. as she has been so bad off; but I think now I will soon be able to fill other appointments than here. We have moved into the new house that the brethren have built. They are very kind to us, which we greatly appreciate.'

Alonzo Williams, of Wingo, Ky., recently paid a visit to David Lipscomb College, and writes of his impressions as follows: "I have just returned from a two-days' visit in the David Lipscomb Bible College. I was very favorably impressed with the work being done by that splendid body of boys and girls under the supervision of kind, humble. Christian teachers. I have never seen greater respect and harmony among a body of students. Every move made seems to point toward the salvation of souls. Christians should be more thankful for such schools, where the Bible is enthroned and every one subject thereto, and we should express our appreciation by contributing whatever we may have—either our dollars to help educate or our children to be educated in true wisdom. The school is located far enough away from the evils that are found in all cities the size of Nashville for parents to feel perfectly safe in sending their boys and girls there. I pray for the success of the institution, and hope to be one of their number at the opening term next fall."

When changing your post-office address, tell us your old as well as your new address; otherwise two papers might be charged to you. This paper is malied regularly to all subscribers until definite orders in writing are received and all arrearages paid in full. If you wish us to stop your paper, write us to that effect; but do not ask it unless you have paid all arrears, if there are any. Do not ask your postmaster to attend to it for you, but do it yourself.

The date on your tab shows the time to which your subscription is paid. When money is received, the date will be changed, which will answer for a receipt. Two weeks' time must ordinarily occur from the time your remittance is sent before the tab on your paper is changed; if not changed by that time, notify us at once.

Subscribers, after paying for their papers, will favor us by noting whether the date on the address label is changed, and, if it is not changed within a month, by writing to us. We are careful, but mistakes may occur or letters may be lost. Our rule is to change the date on the day payment is received; but the mechanical work of correcting and printing the list takes time, and payments even from near-by places may not appear the first week. Credits for payments from a distance may be even more delayed. Mistakes are easily rectified if prompt notice is given.

Yes, Certainly, "The Conclusion Follows." BY M. C. K.

On page 158 of this issue of the Gospel Advocate the reader will find another article from Brother John T. Lewis. For reasons that seem valid and will appear later, I think it proper to publish it, and believe our readers will indorse this course. I call attention to the following points:

1. When the Apostolic Review writes a tract on the differences between "the church of Christ" and "the Christian Church," Brother Lewis asks: "Does the conclusion follow that the Apostolic Review says 'all Christians are not in the church of Christ?'" Yes, of course it does, if there are any Christians in "the Christian church." If he cannot see that the Review does not include in what it calls "the church of Christ" those whom it calls "the Christian Church," then no doubt our readers will agree with him that he has "not yet learned how to draw conelusions."

2. "Brother Kurfees" has already written "some on the differences between 'the church of Christ' and 'the Christian Church'" and between it and all other denominations, for "he thinks there is a difference;" but he is always careful to show that he does not mean by "the church of Christ" merely a few Christians who oppose organs and societies and some other things, but, strictly following the New Testament, he includes in it all the Christians in "the Christian Church" and in all other denominations.

3. No, when Brother Nelson said "one of the strongest Christian churches is" in Greenville, Texas, and that he "let them know that the church of Christ is in town," of course he did not include in the latter what he meant by the former. When Brother Nelson or anybody else holds up two churches in opposition to each other, designating and differentiating them by different names, of course neither name, in that case, so far as the meaning of such phraseology is concerned, includes the people who are meant by the other.

4. Speaking of the "Christian Church folks" who "will conduct the song service and lead in prayer for Brother Kurfees in his protracted meetings," I regret that Brother Lewis has "not yet learned how to draw the conclusion" that, in our dealings with Christians who are in error, while we should never join with them in doing wrong, it is certainly not improper to have them join with us in doing right. If not, I fail to see how we can ever consistently plead for Christian union. For example, we should not join with them in playing instrumental music in the worship of God, but surely we should let them join with us in singing his praises. But the refusal to do so is in perfect harmony with the general tendency of the little sect of modern times which, to the exclusion of others who are Christians, calls itself "the church of Christ." The divine basis of Christian union is what is taught in the New Testament; and while we must not follow Christians who are in error in the practice of anything that is not in that basis, we should surely encourage them to follow us in the practice of anything that is in it.

5. On the sectarian phraseology used in speaking of only a part of the Christians in a city as "the church of Christ in" that city, he says, since I am "an editor of the Gospel Advocate," it seems that I "would have this language of Ashdod stopped and have 'Bible things called by Bible names." That is exactly what all the editors of the Gospel Advocate are trying to do, but Brother Lewis and others hinder the work when they persist in using such phraseology. To us it seems more brotherly and better every way to publish articles sometimes even with "this language of Ashdod" in them than to autocratically shut them out because we do not agree with them. Let us be patient, but continue to urge the importance of speaking of Bible things as the Bible speaks of them.

6. Quoting the card of invitation which the Campbell Street Church circulated when Brother C. M. Pullias was with us in a meeting in 1908, he asks: "Does this mean that all the Christians among 'Baptists, Catholics, the Christian Church, Congregationalists, Dunkards, Episcopalians, Lutherans, Methodists, and Presbyterians' 'in that territory' were having a 'protracted meeting' on 'Campbell Street, between Main and Market,' or was Brother Kurfees back in 1908 using the 'now popular and current parlance?" Neither one. My critic is attempting to make it appear here that the announcement on this card in 1908 is inconsistent with my present position, but the facts will show that he is mistaken. Speaking on that card of the Campbell Street Church as "the church of Christ" at that place is not only strictly and fully in harmony with New Testament phraseology, but it is the identical position for which I contended in the recent series of articles and for which I now contend. No matter if there were a million Christians in a given city, and one hundred or any other number of them met for worship or for anything else at a certain place, that number would be "the church of Christ" at that place; and if they or any other number were contemplated or spoken of as living at different homes, they would be "the church of Christ" in those homes; for in neither case would there be any Christians in the place or places specified that would not be included in the expression. Yea, even if it be narrowed down to a single household, all the Christians in it constitute "the church" in that house; and this is the identical phraseology used in the New Testament. "Aquila and Prisca salute you much in the Lord, with the church brethren that are in Laodicea, and Nymphas, and the church that is in their house," (Col. 4: 15.) Thus the Christians in a given house are "the church of Christ" in that house; but the reader will please note that the designation in every case, as is so in every case in the New Testament, includes all the Christians in the particular place specified. I had not before thought it necessary to explain that, in the expression, "the Campbell Street Church," the term "Campbell Street" does not mean sim ply the square feet of ground which the city thus names, but it means the Christian people who meet there, and the expression includes all of them. They are, therefore, "the church of Christ" at that place. There might be a hundred or any other number of different places in Louisville at which different numbers of Christians meet for worship, but any number of them meeting at any one of the places would be "the church of Christ" at that place. In such phraseology, the number of Christians included are contemplated, not in their relation to the city, as such, but in their relation to a particular place in the city. Hence, they are "the church of Christ" at the latter, because all the Christians thus related are included; but they are not "the church of Christ in Louisville," because there are other Christians with the same relation to Louisville that are not included. It is entirely scriptural, as conceded in answering his query, January 10, 1918, for Brother Lewis to speak of "the church of Christ at West End" and "the church of Christ at Woodlawn," in Birmingham, Ala., because each of them is a church of Christ in that city, and is the church of Christ at the place specified; but it would be wrong to speak of either or both of them as "the church of Christ in Birmingham," provided there are any other Christians in Birmingham besides those meeting at the two places. The thing objected to at this point was not the fact of calling a church at a given place "the church of Christ at that place," for that is what it is; but the objection was against calling it that to the exclusion of all other scriptural designations of the church. The designation "the church of God" and some others are quite common in the New Testament.

7. On receiving immersed persons from the denominations, he significantly evaded my question and answered one which I did not ask. He says he has "reimmersed several," but that "it was always those who wanted to be 'reimmersed.'" Exactly so; and this clearly implies that he accepted without reimmersion "those who" did not "want to be 'reimmersed,'" and it was specifically concerning these that I asked the question: "Where were they before they came forward?" But he failed to answer the question, not because he did not see it, for he quotes and even emphasizes it precisely as I have done; but he could not answer it without conceding that those whom he accepts without reimmersion were Christians in the denominations, and, hence, that a part of the church of Christ is in the denominations; and, therefore, when he calls two congregations in Birmingham "the church of Christ" in that city, he does not include all Christians in his use of the term. His own practice completely upsets his theory.

8. Confining ourselves to the issue now before us, our readers are in no wise concerned about whether he "worries" himself "or bothers others about 'the Christians among'" the denominations when he "uses the term 'church of Christ;'" but they are very much concerned with the fact, conceded by Brother Lewis when he accepts without reimmersion persons from the denominations, that such persons were Christians in the denominations. Moreover, when he speaks of "the church of Christ in Birmingham," he ought to "worry" himself enough to include in the expression at least all those persons in Birmingham whom he would receive without reimmersion. Assuredly he will have to do this in order "to speak of the church as Brother Kurfees spoke of it back in 1908."

9. Finally, Brother Lewis may hold a different view about it, but I think Christian men may sometimes differ and yet regard each other as "'esteemed contemporaries,' 'friends' and 'brethren,'" without offense to either God or right-thinking men. It is one thing to mix with erring Christians in doing wrong, but quite a different thing to mix with them in trying to get them to do right. However, his reference to the discussion begun and abruptly closed between Brother Z. T. Sweeney and myself is Irrelevant and otherwise out of place here, and I think it proper to pass it without further comment. Moreover, the insinuation in the statement about "ordinary fellows who are still walking around on the ground" and who, unlike myself, "do not know how to manipulate this 'circumlocution," would have caused the return of this article without publication but for the fact that, owing to the nature of it, this course might have appeared as an effort to shield myself from criticism. This I have no wish to do, and I am sure the other editors and the managers of the Gospel Advocate would say the same thing for themselves; and this consideration, together with the fact that it gives an opportunity to clarify and emphasize the truth on the points involved, is the reason for publishing it. Beyond all reasonable doubt, when we come to use Bible terms at all times in the exact sense in which the Bible uses them, it will be a long stride toward the complete restoration of the primitive religious and ecclesiastical order.

Must a Bishop Be a Married Man?

BY J. C. M'Q.

On page 155 of this issue is an article by Brother H. Leo Boles, "The Bishop Must Be the Husband of One Wife," for which we ask a careful perusal before reading this.

While I freely accept the statement of Paul that an elder must be "the husband of one wife," I do not accept the view of Brother Boles and a minority of the commentators that "the husband of one wife" is equivalent to saying "he must be a married man." I have no disposition to argue with Brother Boles over what Adam Clarke says, for every one who has examined the dictionary knows that "must" is a stronger word than "should." The husband of one wife "-that is, not the husband of two, three, or six wives -means one opposed to many, as Thayer, the standard New Testament lexicographer, informs us. Monogamy is opposed to polygamy, whether simultaneous or successive polygamy. I mean by "successive polygamy," putting away one wife without a scriptural cause and marrying another. In that time of easy divorce husbands put away their wives, and wives put away their husbands, for the most frivolous excuses. Many of the Roman women counted their ages, not by the Roman consuls, but by the number of husbands they had had. Remembering that women divorced their husbands on such frivolous excuses, we see why Paul says that the widow "having been the wife of one man" might be enrolled among the number to be supported by the church, but the wife who had put away a number of husbands should not be enrolled.

Elders were old men, and usually had families. Having families, they should be controlled families, and the children should not be unruly, but faithful and obedient. In commenting on "one that ruleth well his own house, having his children in subjection in all gravity," R. Milligan, in the Millennial Harbinger of 1855, page 690, says: "It is important here to distinguish between that which is in itself a qualification and that which is a mere proof of its existence. If the view taken of the second qualification is correct, it does not follow that, to become a bishop, a man must have a family. This test, as we have said, would have excluded even Paul from the eldership of a congregation, in which, for three years, he had discharged with fidelity all the duties of an overseer. But it does follow, that, having a family, it should be well governed; having children, they should be brought up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. The bishops were chosen from among the old men. They, of course, generally had families. And their qualifications for the instructions, care, and government of a congregation would be most apparent from the manner in which they had educated their own families. It was a maxim with Confucius, the Chinese philosopher, that 'he who knows not how to govern and reform his own family cannot rightly govern and reform a people.' And a greater than Confucius has said: 'For if a man know not how to rule his own house, how shall be take care of the church of God?'" Campbell commends this, and also what Milligan says on "the husband of one wife," in the following note on page 623 of the Millennia! Harbinger: "We commend to the special consideration of our readers the following essay, in three chapters, upon 'The Permanent Orders of the Christian Ministry.' It is from the pen of Professor Milligan, now of Bethany Coilege, formerly of Washington College, Pennsylvania, and more recently of Bloomington University, Indiana. Many of our readers, both new and old, will, no doubt, be profited by a considerate perusal of it."

The Holy Spirit has said in a forceful and direct way that an elder must not be a polygamist; for saying an elder "must be the husband of one wife" is equivalent to saying he "must not be guilty of polygamy," or the husband of more than one wife. Saying he "must be the husband of one wife" is far from saying he "must be a married man," for he may be the husband of more than one wife and yet be a married man. Churches, in selecting a preacher, sometimes say that he "must be a married man," but never that he "must be the husband of one wife." The Holy Spirit certainly could have stated directly that a bishop must be married to one woman, if monogamy is a qualification of a bishop and cellbacy a disqualification, no matter how well he is otherwise qualified for the work of an elder. Paul, for good reasons, did not say a bishop "must be a husband;" for Solomon, with his seven hundred wives and three hundred concubines, was a husband. But when "must be a husband" is qualified by "of one wife," it means that he must not be a polygamous husband. Paul did not say a bishop must be a man with a wife, for the good reason that this is not so; but if a man is married, which is usually the case, he must be the husband of one wife, and not of more than one.

The majority of commentators quoted by my critic do not sustain the position that an elder must be a married man. Brother Boles quotes Bloomfield, who says of the expression, "husband of one wife," or "wife of one man" (1 Tim. 5: 9): "The expression plainly signifies the having had but one husband." This condemns divorce for unscriptural causes, but not celibacy. The following commentators quoted by Brother Boles do not sustain him in his position that an elder must be a married man: "The Twentieth Century New Testament;" William Burkitt, author of "Expository Notes on the New Testament;" Samuel Davidson, author of "Introduction to the New Testament;" Joseph B. Rotherham, author of "Emphasized New Testament." Thus it will be seen by the discriminating reader that over half of the forty scholars are against him, and we have already seen in a former article that four of the five he quoted did not support his view. While I might give many, I give only two quotations from the commentaries; for I rest the case upon the teaching of the Bible, and not upon the teaching of the commentaries. "The Critical Commentary and Paraphrase on the Old and New Testaments and the Apocrypha," by Patrick, Lowth, Arnald, Whitby, and Lowman, comments as follows on "the husband of one wife:" "That is, not guilty of polygamy or of divorcing one woman and marrying another, as many of the Jews and Greeks often were." In a note on the same verse Patrick quotes Theodoret, who says: "For the Jews were wont to be married to two or] three wives together." "An Exposition of the Bible," edited by twenty-seven eminent scholars, among whom were Marcus Dods, Dean F. W. Farrar, and others, takes the position that a man who lost his wife and married the second time should not be appointed an elder. These men make a lengthy effort to prove that second marriages are an evidence of weakness, but reason and experience both testify that second marriages are no more proof of lack of self-control than first marriages. Paul is not condemning here second marriages, which he elsewhere allows. (1 Cor. 7: 8, 9, 39.) But evidently seeing that if second marriage is an evidence of weakness, celibacy must be an evidence of strength, they seek to excuse their inconsistency in the following: "And here we may note St. Paul's wisdom in giving no preference to those who did not marry at all over those who had married only once. . . . It is quite obvious that although he in no way encourages celibacy among the clergy, yet he assumes that among them, as among the laity, marriage will be the rule and abstaining the exception; so much so that he does not think of giving any special directions for the guidance of a celibate bishop or a celibate deacon."

God made one woman for one man, and ordained marriage for the elevation of society and the happiness of the race. (Gen. 2: 24.) Christ says: "For this cause shall a man leave his father and mother, and shall cleave to his wife; and the two shall become one flesh." But I have never understood that this compels a man to be a celibate or to be a married man. But if the position that an elder must be a married man is true, then it follows as the night the day that a man must be married to do good works; for, according to my critics, celibacy bars him from the work of an elder. While the word of God condemns the evils of polygamy and adultery growing out of easy divorces, it rather commends than condemns celibacy. "But I would have you to be free from cares. He that is unmarried is careful for the things of the Lord, how he may please the Lord: but he that is married is careful for the things of the world, how he may please his wife, and is divided. So also the woman that is unmarried and the virgin is careful for the things of the Lord, that she may be holy both in body and in spirit: but she that is married is careful for the things of the world, how she may please her husband." (1 Cor. 7: 32-34.) This is a general statement, and does not apply to any particular time. Paul does not teach that the man who is a dissatisfied celibate is more efficient than the man who is married; but he teaches that the satisfied, consecrated celibate devotes his time to pleasing the Lord, while the married man devotes his time to the things of the world that he may please his wife. But it is said that this applies only to the Corinthian church, because Paul spoke of "the present distress." Paul says: "I think therefore that this is good by reason of the distress that is upon us, namely, that it is good for a man to be as he is." (1 Cor. 7: 26.) This clearly states that it is good for a man "to be as he is"if married, to remain married; if single, to remain single. Beginning with verse 29, he deals with a different phase of the subject, which continues through the remainder of the chapter. It is as true now as when Paul wrote that the time is short when "those that have wives may be as though they had none; and these that weep, as though they went not; and those that rejoice, as though they rejoiced not; and those that buy, as though they possessed not." It is as true now as when written; "He that is unmarried is careful for the things of the Lord, how he may please the Lord; but he that is married is careful for the things of the world, how he may please his wife." "The distress" does not change the truth taught by Paul, which coincides with the experience and consciousness of all Christians. But it is held that if the unmarried cares for the things of the Lord, that Paul contradicts this when he says: "I desire therefore that the younger widows marry."

(1 Tim, 5: 14.) But those that hold this view should tell us that these younger widows "waxed wanton against Christ." This is in perfect accord with his teaching at Corinth: "But if they have not continency, let them marry: for it is better to marry than to burn." (1 Cor. 7: 9.) Paul taught at Corinth and taught Timothy that all who are not satisfied to remain single should marry. We should not mutilate the Bible by applying truth applicable to all times and peoples to any particular time;

A man must be fitted and must in a measure do the work of an elder before he can rightly be recognized as such by the congregation. The work of an elder is a good work, and a man who has not grown and developed into it cannot make an elder, no matter how many times he may be appointed by the congregation. Paul had the care of all the churches and was inspired and did the work of an elder in Ephesus for three years. On this point Milligan says in the Millennial Harbinger of 1855, page 688: "At least two of the most eminent members of the Christian church were unmarried men. Hence it is not probable that Paul would condemn in others what he considered right and expedient in his own case. It is unreasonable to suppose that the chief of all the apostles would lay down, as a necessary qualification for the inferior offices, what is proved, by his own example, to be unnecessary for the superior, and which would have rendered both him and Barnabas ineligible to the eldership or deaconship in any Christian congregation." Polygamy had been practiced by the Jews, and divorces were easily secured by the Romans; so it is very probable that when the gospel was first preached to Jews and Greeks, some who had divorced their wives without scriptural cause, and were, therefore, living in adultery, obeyed the gospel. While God has never approved either polygamy or adultery and while it has been wrong from the beginning, yet he allowed Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and the patriarchs, to practice polygamy. "They say unto him, Why then did Moses command to give a bill of divorcement, and to put her away? He saith unto them, Moses for your hardness of heart suffered you to put away your wives: but from the beginning it hath not been so." (Matt. 19: 7, 8.) The church did not at one bound grow out of Judaism into the full light of Christianity. While slavery has been wrong from the beginning, yet we have instructions in the Bible as to the manner in which we should treat servants. So it is very probable that some did divorce their wives without scriptural cause. These were forbidden to exercise the functions of an elder. God did not force them to break up relations already contracted, for the prophet Malachi teaches that God hates the putting away of their wives: "And did he not make one, although he had the residue of the Spirit? And wherefore one? He sought a godly seed. Therefore take heed to your spirit, and let none deal treacherously against the wife of his youth. For I hate putting away, saith Jehovah, the God of Israel, and him that covereth his garment with violence, saith Jehovah of hosts: therefore take heed to your spirit, that ye deal not treacherously." (Mal. 2; 15, 16.) The Bible does, however, condemn polygamy and adultery, and there is no warrant in it for a man now to be guilty of such sin. As the church has grown out of Judaism, so there is no excuse now for polygamists or adulterers being in the church. Christians who have been taught the word of God have understood all along that easy divorces and divorces for any other than the scriptural cause are plainly condemned by the word of God.

If a man is thoroughly a Christian, the nerve that runs from his brain to his purse will be just as much Christianized as the one that runs from his brain to his tongue.—Selected.

"Is Baptism Necessary to Salvation?"

BY F. W. SMITH.

The foregoing subject is the basis of some preachment by a contributor to the Baptist and Reflector of July 22. 1920. The document was sent to me for review, but other matters have delayed it until now. So here it is:

The doctrine which asserts that it is, is variously called:

- (a) Baptismal salvation.
- (b) Baptismal remission.
- (c) Baptismal regeneration.

All mean one and the same thing—namely, that water in some way, or baptism water, has to do with the salvation of a soul.

I want to assert plainly and flatly that the doctrine is false, and I propose to prove it so.

I would not say that those who hold this doctrine are bad people. Many of them are among the best people, but they are mistaken.

This doctrine (in proportion as it is emphasized) is the death knell of spirituality. Why so?

The Holy Spirit will not grant his gracious presence and power upon error, especially error that is so dangerous as that.

It tends to reduce religion to mere form or ceremony, or to a series of mere human acts, until you get to where religion is a mere human thing; until you think you can make a convert like you can make a mechanical object. like a bookcase or a chair.

Because it is this, it becomes one of the worst forms of legalism or an attempt at salvation by works. The process which they use has been given by another in about these words.

"You believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God—that changes your heart; you repent—that changes your conduct; and you are immersed—that changes your state"—from dry to wet.

They argue that if there are three steps to salvation, you are not saved until you have taken them all.

Alexander Campbell taught that all unimmersed persons are out of Christ and lost. How false this is! The Bible nowhere says that baptism is a part of salvation, while it does say that we are saved through Jesus Christ.

Campbell further says that a change of views means a change of heart. According to that, as one has said, a man's heart would be changed every time he changed his views.

This doctrine rests upon a very few and scant passages of Scripture, and passages which they misunderstand and misinterpret. I will never trust my eternal salvation to a few verses of Scripture which seem to run opposite to the clear, plain teachings of the vast majority of passages of the Bible, on the question of salvation. A good rule to follow, if you want to know really what the Bible means, has been given thus. Never allow a doubtful or obscure passage to contradict the meaning of another plain and clear passage. But let us examine these passages on which their doctrine rests. I will mention their principal ones.

their doctrine rests. I will mention their principal ones.

First. Jesus said to Nicodemus in John 3: 5: "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit." There is nothing about baptism there. What kind of water did Jesus mean when he said: "If any man thirst, let him come unto me, and drink." Again, "saved by the washing of the water of the word." But Christ is called "the word." (John 1: 1.) In John 7: 39 the Spirit is referred to as water. Thus the passage would mean, according to this, except ye be born of the Holy Spirit and Christ, ye cannot enter the kingdom of heaven, and that both of these divine persons are necessary in accomplishing or effecting the work of salvation for the sinner. The "water" here may be typical, os it elsewhere is typical of the work of saving grace.

Second. Again, Acts 2: 38 is another favorite stock passage with them. "Peter said unto them, Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins," etc. But Dr. Ditzler translates the passage: "Repent—and be baptized—trusting in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins." Now that is exactly what I believe. If a man comes to me and tells me, "I have repented and am trusting in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of my sins," I say to him: "My brother, you are a candidate for baptism; the faith or trust that you have proves that you have met the condition of salvation."

Third. What are our mistaken friends going to do with the following clear and plain Scriptures, which set forth the conditions of salvation?

(a) Jesus said: "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life.

(b) Acts 10: 43: "Whosoever believeth in him shall receive remission of sins."

(c) Acts 15: 19: "God put no difference, ing their hearts by faith." Does not say by baptism.

(d) Paul said to the Philippian jailer: "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved."

(e) Said Jesus: "Verily I say unto you, He that believeth on me hath everlasting life."

(f) "The blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin."

So it is not water at all, but blood, that saves, the blood of our Lord Jesus Christ.

This mixture of misrepresentation and woeful perversion of God's word is noticed, not so much because of any merit it possesses, but because it appears in a religious journal and seemingly has the indorsement of the editor. Just what the author means by the word "necessary" in his question, I do not know; but if he means by it that any one among Protestants believes that God could not save one without baptism, I deny the charge. It is not a question as to what God can or cannot do, but one of what God has promised in his word to do. If, therefore, he had framed his question thus, "Is there any promise of salvation under the new covenant without baptism?" I would quickly answer, No. But he starts out with a palpable misrepresentation of those who teach that baptism is one of the conditions of salvation by calling it "baptismal salvation," "baptismal remission," and "baptismal regeneration." His effort by the use of such manufactured terms is to show that those whom he vulgarly calls "Campbellites" teach that there is efficacy in water to cleanse one from sin. If he does not know better, he should keep himself out of print until he acquaints himself with the faith of those he attempts to represent. If the editor who published his communication does not know better, he, too, should seek information; but if he knows better, then he is inexcusable for permitting such a gross misrepresentation to appear in his paper without correction. If he had said that obedience "in some way . . . has to do with the salvation of a soul," he would have stated the naked truth, although that obedience involves obedience to God in baptism. The Holy Spirit says: "He became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him." (Heb. 5: 9.) Did Christ command baptism? If so, is one "obeying" Christ who neglects or refuses to be baptized? It was Jesus Christ, and not Alexander Campbell, who said, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved" (Mark 16: 16), thus placing the promise of salvation after, and not before, obedience in baptism. Will the author of the document under review dare to tamper with the word of God and make it read, "He that believeth and is saved should, if he so desires, be baptized?"

He does not seem to be satisfied with his work so far, but proceeds to tell what somebody else teaches, thus: "You believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God-that changes your heart." Now who believes or teaches that? Why, "the devils believe and tremble." (James 2: 17.) They had, if you please, the "faith alone" doctrine of the man who wrote this wonderful document. Again: "Nevertheless among the chief rulers also many believed on him; but because of the Pharisees they did not confess him, lest they should be put out of the synagogue: for they loved the praise of men more than the praise of God." (John 12: 42, 43.) These are some more of our friend's "faith alone" men. No one with any proper conception of Bible teaching would say that such people had a "change of heart," for the simple reason that the element of repentance toward God was lacking. Again, the author says somebody teaches that repentance "changes the conduct." I do not know of any such teaching, but I do know that genuine repentance, which is preceded by a "godly sorrow" (2 Cor. 7: 10), leads to a change of conduct or reformation of life. He also says that some teach that when one is "immersed," "that changes your state," and then adds, "from dry to wet." In this addition he makes an effort to appear funny (?), but it is at the expense of the solemn and sacred word of the living God, and is nothing short of blasphemy. Let us see whether this man who makes fun of an ordinance of the Lord Jesus Christ believes that immersion changes one's state or not. Now, he is a Baptist, and yet would never have been recognized as a Baptist and a member of the Baptist Church without being immersed. Some change of state, it seems to me! He was changed out of something into the Baptist Church, and immersion in water is the thing that did it. Again, before he was immersed, he could not eat at the Baptist table. Now, if he was not in one place or state and that table in another, then why did he not eat before he was immersed? Of course the immersion of the proper subject, one prepared by faith and repentance, changes the state of the individual. Such as are prepared in heart are immersed into the names of the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, and this puts them into a state in which they were not before. This will do for the present, but I am not done with this document.

E. N. Glenn and His Mexican Mission.

Replying to numerous inquiries that we are receiving relative to E. N. Glenn and the Mexican mission that he is soliciting aid for, we beg to state that E. N. Glenn quit meeting with the church here several months ago on the ground, he claims, that we use individual communion cups. As to Martinez, the Mexican preacher on whose behalf Glenn is asking the support of the brotherhood, he is not now, nor has he ever been, connected with the loyal church of Christ in El Paso.

Behind the Clouds.

BY ELARA CON EPPERSON.

I looked out over the Blue Ridge Mountains at the vast expanse of sky, and in all that wondrous heavens there shone no single star; no moon sent silvery beams to earth; only dull, gray clouds covered the blue of the sky, unlit by the radiance of even one single evening star. And yet I knew that behind that vast canopy of leaden clouds there were stars innumerable, shining somewhere; a moon sending to earth its silver shafts of gleaming light, and a sun still in God's heaven to light the way of earth with its glorious radiance, and these wonderful lights of the stars and the moon and the sun will shine again when the clouds that intervene roll by.

And then I thought of those dear bodies confined in narrow beds beneath the sod, and I knew that also their radiant souls are shining somewhere in the glory of Christ's presence and God's eternal love, and they, too, shall shine with love upon us some sweet day, when sun and stars and moon forget to shine, when earth and sea give up their dead, and the clouds of life roll by forever, in the everlasting sunshine of Paradise.

Worship and culture of necessity go hand in hand. There can be no such thing as true culture apart from the religion of our dear Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ. fundamental principles of true culture are enshrined forever in the Sermon on the Mount, the ten beatitudes of the Lord Jesus. Society, apart from the Fountainhead of Grace, can display to the world nothing better than a refinement which is, at best, a veneer.-Henry L. Drew.

BY J. C. McQUIDDY.

T. F. Davison sends the following queries and quotes Matt. 1: 16, which reads: "And Jacob begat Joseph the husband of Mary, of whom was born Jesus, who is called Chirst." (1) Is the Joseph referred to here the same as the one who died in Egypt? (2) What is the meaning of John 10: 9? (3) What is the meaning of Mark 16: 17,18?"

1. This is not the same Joseph who was the son of Jacob, the son of Isaac. If the querist had noticed, he would have seen that this Jacob was the son of Mattan, and not Isaac. This seeming discrepancy grows out of the repetition of names.

2. John 10: 9 reads: "I am the door; by me if any manenter in, he shall be saved, and shall go in and go out, and shall find pasture." Christ is the door, the shepherd, and the pasture. The pasture is the bread of life and the water of life. The going in and out simply refers to going in and out of the sheepfold. I have heard some take the position that it meant going into Christ and out of the Jewish dispensation, but it seems to me that this is pressing the figure further than is best.

3. Mark 16: 17, 18 is as follows: "And these signs shall accompany them that believe; in my name shall they cast out demons; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents, and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall in no wise hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover." Some who believed were able to perform miracles. Paul was bitten by a deadly serpent, and yet experienced no evil results. Peter raised Dorcas from the dead. The apostles, fathers and founders of the church of God on earth, performed miracles and did the things here enumerated that follow as the heritage of the church of God through the ages. These miracles follow the church as the good deeds of a father follow the children to give them honor or shame. The passage does not mean that all who believed would be able to perform miracles. This is all that is meant by "signs" following them.

John H. Daily, of Waverly, Tenn., asks the following questions: "(1) Does the word 'Selah' used by David mean God? (2) Did Christ partake of the wine on the night he was betrayed? (3) Did he give thanks for the bread and then give thanks for the wine, or did he give thanks for both at the same time? (4) What is meant in verse 25 by the word 'supped?'"

 The word "Selah" does not mean God. While it is not definitely known what it means, the general consensus of opinion is that it means a musical pause.

2. Matt. 26: 29 says: "But I say unto you, I shall not drink henceforth of this fruit of the vine, until that day when I drink it new with you in my Father's kingdom." From this passage it seems that Christ did partake of the wine on the night of his betrayal.

3. The Scriptures state clearly that Christ gave thanks for the bread, and also that he gave thanks for the fruit of the vine. Matthew says that Jesus took bread, and blessed, and brake it, and gave to his disciples, and that he took a cup, and gave thanks, and gave to them; so it seems that he blessed the bread and wine separately. (See Matt. 26: 26, 27.)

4. If our querist had read verse 25 in the Revised Version, he would have seen that it says "after supper," which shows clearly the meaning of "supped" as it appears in the Authorized Version.

C. A. Lancaster, of Ruppertown, Tenn., says that "a brother contends that Christ was led up from the Jordan to the wilderness by the wicked spirit, the devil." I think the brother is mistaken in this contention. It appears to have been the deliberate purpose on the part of God for Christ to be tried in order to show to the world that man is capable of salvation, as is evidenced from the statement that he was driven by the Spirit into the wilderness and also from the statement as given by Matthew. God permitted Abraham to be tried for a good purpose; he permitted Christ to be tried for the same reason. God tries a man in order to develop him and lead him into a nobler, purer, and better life. Christ was made perfect through suffering. The devil tempts a man for evil; his purpose is to seduce and lead him to ruin. Brother Lancaster also asks if Christ was fillled with the Holy Spirit before his baptism, and if the devil had power over all the kingdoms of the world. While we find Christ filled with wisdom far surpassing that of ordinary men when he discussed with the doctors of the law in Jerusalem, yet we have no evidence that he was filled with the Holy Spirit until after his baptism. It was after his baptism, and not before, that he was acknowledged to be the Son of God. At his baptism the Father, the Son, and the Spirit were all present. It would have been no temptation to Christ, if the devil had not controlled all the kingdoms of the earth and the glory of them. While he did not have them by right, he had them by usurpation.

Mrs. M. C. Litton, of Lone Wolf, Okla., inquires as follows: "One of our sisters in Christ wishes to have your advice concerning Matt. 17: 14-21, mostly on verse 21. She wishes to know why they had to fast and pray for this sin any more than any other sin." The verse referred to by Sister Litton reads as follows in the Common Version: "Howbeit this kind goeth not out but by prayer and fast-The case referred to occurs in Matt. 17: 14-20. Verse 21 is not found in the American Standard Edition. We quote Matt. 17: 14-20 as it occurs in the Revised Version: "And when they were come to the multitude, there came to him a man, kneeling to him, and saying, Lord, have mercy on my son: for he is epileptic, and suffereth grievously; for ofttimes he falleth into the fire, and ofttimes into the water. And I brought him to thy disciples, and they could not cure him. And Jesus answered and said, O faithless and perverse generation, how long shall I be with you? how long shall I bear with you? bring him hither to me. And Jesus rebuked him; and the demon went out of him: and the boy was cured from that hour. Then came the disciples to Jesus apart, and said, Why could not we cast it out? And he saith unto them, Because of your little faith: for verily I say unto you, If ye have faith as a grain of mustard seed, ye shall say unto this mountain, Remove hence to yonder place; and it shall remove; and nothing shall be impossible unto you." In Mark 9: 29 we have this language: "And he said unto them, This kind can come out by nothing, save by prayer." The marginal note says: "Many ancient authorities add 'and fasting.'" In order to perform such miracles and have power over demons and evil spirits, it was necessary for the disciples to have the strength that came from fasting and prayer. This son was a lunatic, was dumb, and evidently possessed a demoniac spirit. Faith, exercised in fasting and prayer, are the conditions of power. Only by devout waiting before the Lord for strength, waiting in fasting and in prayer, could the disciples hope to have sufficient strength for the casting out of such spirits. Often Christians have a spirit of envy, a spirit of covetousness, a spirit of revenge, that must be cast out by prayer before they are prepared to be helpful to others. Read the eleventh chapter of Hebrews, which shows the victories of faith.

We have received the following letters of acknowledgment:

New York, January 28, 1921.—Mr. A. B. Lipscomb, Nashville, Tenn.—Dear Mr. Lipscomb: We are again in receipt of your most generous contribution of five hundred dollars toward the relief of the sufferers in Poland. We beg to express to you, as well as to all the readers of the Gospel Advocate who have participated in this offering, our most heartfelt thanks, and we beg of you all to believe in our sincere appreciation of your wonderful generosity. Due to the present rate of exchange, your donation represents a small fortune when translated into Polish marks. It will go a long way toward alleviating the misery of the country and saving the lives of many unfortunate children.

With repeated thanks and very best regards, I beg to remain, Gratefully yours, W. O. Gorski, Honorary Executive Secretary.

New York, January 31, 1921.—A. B. Lipscomb, Nashville, Tenn.—My Dear Mr. Lipscomb: May I supplement the inclosed official acknowledgment of your check for four hundred and nine dollars and twenty-two cents with a personal word of appreciation for the cordial support of the Gospel Advocate? The accounts of our work which have been presented to your readers in the columns of that paper must, in large measure, have prompted this generous contribution. I inclose two news items which will be of interest to you and possibly to your subscribers. We are very proud of the record made by our overseas workers.

Sincerely yours, Charles V. Vickrey.

The gospel is a picture of God's free grace to sinners. Were we in a room hung with the finest paintings and adorned with the most exquisite statues, we could not see one of them if all light were excluded. Now the blessed Spirit's illumination is the same to the mind that outward light is to the bodily eyes. A compass is of no use to the mariner unless he have light to see it by—Toplady.

Millet, the great painter, taught that it was the business of art "to make use of the trivial to express the sublime." It is certainly the duty and privilege of the saint so to handle the trivial as to express the sublime doctrines and principles of his holy faith.—W. L. Watkinson.

A Sinking Fund for the Gospel Advocate.

Brother Hall, in the last issue of the Gospel Advocate. published a request for brethren to send in contributions to the Advocate to be kept separate and to be used as a sinking fund for the purpose of sending the paper to people who want to read it and yet are not able to pay for it. The suggestion is a good one and should meet with a hearty response. We have many subscribers who write us that they appreciate the paper and are greatly benefited by reading it, but, of necessity, they must discontinue for the reason that they are short of funds. In such cases we often continue the paper at our own expense, putting the person on a complimentary list. Of course we cannot afford to send it to every one who is in this condition and who would like to read the paper. We frequently have subscribers who write us that they have been reading the paper forty or fifty years, but, on account of lack of funds, they will be compelled to discontinue it. We always regret to lose such subscribers, because we find that they really prize the paper very much and hate to part with it. The best friends of the Advocate are those who have been reading it the

I have a letter now which has been received since Brother Hall made his suggestion. I will omit name and place. The brother says: "I thought I would write you in regard to my subscription to the Gospel Advocate. I am behind about two years, and I am not able to pay any on the account. My wife has been sick for nearly two years, and my own health is bad, so I am not able to work but very little. We have six small children, not large enough to earn their living. We must take care of these, which demands all that we can possibly make. I preach when I can under these conditions, but I did not get to hold but one short meeting last year. I write to ask you, as brethren in Christ, to help us some if you can." This is only one case out of very many, many of which are much more pathetic than this one. If any one desires to send us a contribution to relieve this brother's condition and also to join Brother Hall in the sinking fund, we should be very glad to have him do so. We could use to advantage several thousand dollars in sending the paper to people who want it and are doing their best, and yet are not able to pay for it. Who will be the first to send us a liberal contribution for this sinking fund? We should like to mark this brother's paper paid, along with many others who are in his condition. We shall patiently wait, anticipating a prompt and generous action on the part of our readers.

We are glad to call attention to the fact that we are still giving twenty per cent discount on all new subscribers that our readers may send us. Renew your own subscription and send us a number of new subscribers. By sending us five new subscribers you will be paying up your own subscription for one year. We are still giving the Teachers' New Testament to those who send us two new subscribers, accompanied by two dollars and fifty cents each. January last was a most excellent month for the Advocate, and the prospect seems more encouraging for the growth of the paper than it has for a long time. It does seem that we might be able to get a good worker at every church and one at every post office where the Advocate circulates, Will you not help, and help at once?

No matter how limited the world in which we live may seem to be, if the spirit of loving service has full possession of our hearts, it will find some medium of expression.—Selected.

Achievement is not bounded by life. It is this truth that solves the mystery of the death of those who go in the prime of their usefulness, and with their work apparently all unfinished. God's plans have no horizon. "On earth, the broken arcs; in heaven, the perfect round."—Selected.

WESTERN DEPARTMENT

By C. E. WOOLDRIDGE. 2018 Cullen Street, Dallas, Texas.

About Elders.

For some time I have been giving considerable study to the qualifications and duties of elders, or bishops, and the corresponding duties of other members of the congregation. I am persuaded that we have been too lax in the presentation of the teaching of God's word on these matters, with the result that the standard has been lowered to conform to our ideals, rather than raised to reach God's. Have we so taught that in each congregation there are men who really "desire the office of a bishop," realizing that it is "a good work" for which earnest, careful, and laborious preparation should be made? We frequently hear it said that no man possesses these qualifications today. If not, why not? If men in Paul's day could attain to such, why can they not now? Which one of these qualifications is it that is impractical or unattainable? Is not such an idea dangerously apologetic? Why do we not present these matters clearly and upon the high authority of inspiration, with exhortations and entreaties such as will stir men's souls to growth and action? It is the shame of the church to-day that we condone the carelessness, indifference, and selfishness which leaves us without competent leadership.

I was recently startled when a brother advanced the idea that the work of the elders is being done almost exclusively by preachers employed for the purpose. These preachers are expected to plan and lead in almost every matter of church work and to personally execute most of it. The congregations, with their bishops and deacons, are willing to pay. Are our elders to be no more than business managers? Brethren, I plead with you, as overseers, study the scriptures cited at the close of this article; and, if you love the truth and the cause, stretch yourselves upward and forward to the measure of qualifications and duties in them taught. Preacher brother, teach these things, not in a dogmatic or caustic way, but in a loving way, both to the old and young, that men may see the beauty and strength of God's way and desire to do this wonderful work.

"And we beseech you brethren, to know facknowledge, reverence] them which labor among you, and are over you in the Lord, and admonish you; and to esteem them very highly in love for their work's [office] sake. And be at peace among yourselves. Now we exhort you, brethren, to warn them that are unruly, comfort the feeble-minded. support the weak, be patient toward all men. See that none render evil for evil unto any man; but eyer follow that which is good, both among yourselves, and to all men." (1 Thess. 5: 12-15.)

A Church of the Right Kind.

I here give an article by David King, of England. Brother King was to the British brethren for years about what Brother David Lipscomb was to brethren in America -an able and wise teacher and counselor. Hear him:

Some one-we know not who, and it matters not-has directed the types to admonish us concerning the church. In order to meet the necessities of the age, a church must be thoroughly evangelical. Its mission is not to make men philosophers, although it teaches the best philosophy; nor to make scientific explorations, although it is the best friend to science; nor to organize governments and write constitutions, although its inculcations lead to But to balk proffigacy, to the wisest political economy. dethrone superstition, to emancipate from spiritual bondage, to break in twain the prison bolts, to soothe human pain, to turn the human race on to the high pathway to heaven-this is the church's mission; and failing in this, it fails in all. It may be a brazen candlestick, but not a golden candlestick. But mere outward proprieties will not make a useful church. There are scores of churches where there is no discord in music and no breach of taste in the preaching, and where the congregation, like the Amalekites that Gideon saw, sleep in the valley like grasshoppers for multitude. Splendidly executed anthem and selo roll over the cultured taste of gayly appareled auditory, and the preaching may be like the pathos of Summer-field or the thunderclap of a George Whitfield. Upholstery may bedeck to utter gorgeousness and chandeliers flash upon a fashionable congregation, in which you see not one poor man's threadbare coat, and yet that church may be a ghastly sepulcher, full of dead men's bones-an ecclesiastical ice house. I arraign and implead formality and coldness, and death, as the worst of heterodoxy.

Again, religious enterprise must be a characteristic of every church that would do its duty in our day. Invention and discovery have quickened the world's pace. The age, no more afoot, is on wheels and wings. Quiet villages have been roused by the hum of machinery, the clang of foundries, and the shriek of steam whistles. rise, after a short night's sleep, and find that the world has advanced mighty leagues, the pulse of the world beats stronger, the arm of industrious achievement strikes harder, the eye of human ingenuity sees further, the heart of Christian philanthropy throbs warmer. The earth shakes under the quick tread of scientific, moral, and religious enterprise. In such a time, a torpid, lethargic, timid church is both a farce and a folly. If it march not when God commands it to strike; if, when the mountains round about are full of horses and chariots of fire. It shrinks back from the conflict, God will mark it for ruin. One enterprising church! How many tracts it might scatter! How many hungry mouths it might fill! How many poor churches it might help! How many lights it might kindle! How many songs it might inspire! How many criminals How many souls it might save!

it might reclaim! How many souls it might save! O, my brethren, the field is white to the harvest! with sickles, come on and lay to the work. In this age of the world, with so many advantages and so many incentives to work, a dead church ought to be indicted as a nuisance. There is a great work to do! In God's name, do it. "Why stand ye here all the day idle?

* * * Notes.

I spent four days, including the fifth Lord's day in January, with the church at Little Elm, Denton County. We had splendid audiences and interest. Our meeting there will cover the second and third Lord's days in August.

The congregation recently started at Frisco is doing nicely, and prospects are good for a successful work there.

The Rock and the Sand.

On what are you building, my brother, Your hopes of an eternal home? Is it loose, shifting sand, or the firm, solid rock, You are trusting for ages to come? Hearing and doing, we build on the rock; Hearing alone, we build on the sand. Both will be tried by the storm and the flood; Only the Rock the trial will stand.

How easy it is to tear a piece of paper along the line in which it has been originally folded! How easy it is for a second temptation to overcome when the first has been yielded to! A sin that has once gained the victory over our moral nature has put a fold, as it were, in that nature, and destroyed its straightness and smoothness, so that when the same temptation comes a second time it seeks the weak point which it had formerly made, and along that line of least resistance we are turned from our righteeus principles and strong resolutions.- Hugh Macmillan.

YOUR RHEUMATISM

Remove Its Cause by Puritying Your Blood.

One of the most important duties of your system is to burn up certain substances no longer of use in your body. One is uric acid, now generally held to be the cause of rheumatism. It inflames the joints, stiffens the muscles, causes pains, aches, and lameness.

The system is helped to dispose of this troublesome substance, and rheumatism is permanently relieved, by Hood's Sarsaparilla, the one true blood purifier. It is aided in many cases by Hood's Pills, which in small doses are a gentle laxative, in larger doses an active cathartic. "More on the Santa Cruz Matter."

BY C. A. MARSHALL.

In the Apostolic Review of January 4, 1921, we notice a letter from J. R. Tannyhill, of Santa Cruz, which contains a "few points of history concerning the church here." These we would like to review, with the sole object of getting the exact truth before the readers of the papers.

Sometime back we wrote an account of our experience here; and while no one has come to us in accordance with the rule given in Matt. 18: 15-17, yet some accusations have been scattered broadcast which have reached us. Among these charges was one of telling an untruth about the organization. Notice our statement, please, then that of Brother Tannyhill.

Tract No. 14: "For some years there has been the nucleus of a church in Santa Crutz, varying in size. . . But for eighteen years, at least, an attempt to keep house for the Lord was persisted in. At last more people moved in, and the church at Long Beach, Cal., sent J. J. Hogan to help build up the church. He preached a while, then reorganized the congregation under his own leadership as an evangelist, making a new list of charter members out of the old list."

Apostolic Review, January 4, 1921: "A few points of history concerning the church here may not be out of order. There have been a few disciples keeping house for the Lord in Santa Cruz for many years. At one time the church was organized, having elders and deacons; but for several years it has been without any official, two of the elders having been removed by death; the other is among us yet, and has been faithful to the church in all the attempts made upon it. Since that organization has been removed [emphasis ours] the congregation has been, in the main, under the leadership of men interested in its welfare, though perhaps battling against some unwholesome conditions."

Also this: "We have complete record of all members who have come among us since February, 1918 (as present record was made at that time), showing date received into the church and dismissal."

Now I wish to quote Brother Hogan: "The charter members of this congregation [Santa Cruz] met and decided to adopt the 'right hands of fellowship 'as a rule by which to take members into the local congregation. We established a precedent."

Now I want to ask some questions to be considered by all. (1) Where were we untruthful? (2) What became of the deacons? (3) Why is the elder, who is "among us yet, and who has been faithful to the church," not an elder now? Who deposed him, and when? (4) Has the church had no organization since "that organization has been removed?" If not, from whence did the "charter members" come who adopted "the 'right hands of fellowship' to take members into the local congregation?" In order to have charter members, there must be a charter, and a charter shows an organization. Also we see that they have been keeping a new record since the early part of the year 1918, as "the present record was made at that time."

In Tract No. 14 we said that Brother Hogan reorganized under his own leadership. We did not say there were elders and deacons, nor does the fact that there are no officials in the congregation prove that they did not organize. In the Scriptures we read of churches not yet set in order. It is a well-known fact that Brother Hogan is the leader of the church in Santa Cruz, recognized as such by all the members. It must have been organized, in part at least, or the "charter members" could not have agreed to "adopt the 'right hands of fellowship' as a rule by which to" act. If that rule was authorized in any way by our great Lawgiver, why was it necessary for any church to "establish a precedent" by adopting it? This they teach with emphasis, even while admitting that they have no command for it; but they need "some visible sign by which to receive members." God's plan was weak, it seems. Let us see how the people were taken into the church at Corinth. Acts 18: 8: "And many of the Corinthians hearing believed, and were baptized." What else was done?

Deut. 18: 20 says: "But the prophet, which shall presume to speak a word in my name, which I have not commanded him to speak, or that shall speak in the name of other gods, even that prophet shall die." This is the reason we cannot take the "right hands of fellowship." It is not commanded; hence those who teach it "presume to speak a word in my name, which I have not commanded:" and the penalty for presumption is death.

Another quotation: "So long as we violate no other plain passage of scripture."

When a man is compelled to say that he has done wrong (when he knows in his own heart that he has not done wrong) or else be withdrawn from, is not that violating a plain passage of scripture? (See Rom, 14: 4, 5.) When a man has honored the Lord by obedience to the plan of salvation, and in his life, teaching, and influence has been loyal to the Lord's rule of faith and practice, but cannot conscientiously engage in something that is not commanded, can you refuse to consider him a brother and not violate a plain passage of scripture? Are you not judging your brother? "But why dost thou judge thy brother? or why dost thou set at naught thy brother? for we shall all stand before the judgment seat of Christ." (Rom. 14: 10.) "Let us not therefore judge one another any more: but judge this rather, that no man put a stumblingblock or an occasion to fall in his brother's way." (Rom. 14: 13.)

When people cannot agree with others on these untaught questions, why should either party treat the other with anger, malice, and hatred, as is so often done? It is all wrong-all in direct and absolute violation of God's

CHURCH NEWS

Arkansas.

Waldo, January 24 .- I have located at this place for this year. I will continue to preach at Millville and Camden. The work is moving along nicely at these places. The new converts at Maul's Schoolhouse are going to build a new meetinghouse and keep house for the Lord. I preached at Magnolia on Sunday and Sunday night. One lady made the good confession and was baptized on Monday. I will preach once a month each at Magnolia and Waldo. Our crowds at Waldo are fine. The brethren here have a mind to work .- R. L. Colley.

Oklahoma.

Oklahoma City, February 7.—It was my good fortune to visit with the church at Denison, Texas, with which Brother Milholland labored for a num-ber of years and by which he is held in high esteem, on the last Sunday in January. In the afternoon Brother Cameron took me in his car, together with his family, to Sherman, we had a very pleasant visit with the family of Brother L. S. White. Brother White took us through their beautiful new church building. It is a magnificent structure; the most convenient church building I ever saw. Denison also has a nice, convenient, new church home. Sunday evening we had a full house at Denison. I stayed over Monday and Tuesday nights and talked to good gatherings. Wednesday afternoon, having received a card from Brother O. M. Reynolds, the local preacher, to visit the brethren at Madill, I took a train to that point. We had nearly a full house for the lesson I had prepared on "Thought." The church at Madill is in a healthy condi-tion, judging from all I learned while Thursday morning I came Brother George Smith, who is there. home. one of our boys, filled the pulpit while I was gone. There were two additions under his preaching. He is a fine boy, and we are proud of him. There were three additions yesterday.-J. A. Hudson

A REMARKABLE HOME TREATMENT GIVEN BY ONE WHO HAD IT

In the year of 1893 I was attacked by Muscular and Sub-acute Rheumatism. I suffered as only those who are thus afflicted know for over three years. I tried remedy after remedy, but such relief as I obtained was only temporary. Finally I found a treatment that cured me completely, and such a pitiful condition has never returned. I have given it to a number who were terribly afflicted, even bedridden, some of them seventy to eighty years old, and the results were the same as in my own case.

I want every sufferer from any form of muscular and sub-acute (swelling at the joints) rheumatism to try the great value of my improved. Home Treatment " for its remarkable healing power. Don't send a cent. Simply mail your name and address, and I will send it free to try. After you have used it and it has proven itself to be that long-looked-for means of getting rid of such forms of rheumatism, you may send the price of it. Plan for more profit

THE most important job the farmer has today is to grow his crops at the lowest cost per bushel or per pound.

The only way to do this is to secure more bushels of corn, more pounds of cotton, etc., per acre and per man.

Good seed and proper tillage are necessary, but in order to secure the best yields, the best quality, and hence the most profit, the right kind of available plant food must be supplied.

Swift's Red Steer Fertilizers furnish available plant food from sources that feed the crop from seeding to maturity.

Don't figure on the increased yield alone for your profit. The better quality crops, due to the use of fertilizer, often pays the entire fertilizer bill. The better "catch" and bigger yield of clover is often worth much more than the cost of the fertilizer applied to the nurse crop.

Liberal applications insure biggest crops of best quality.

The Red Steer on the bag is a guarantee of highest quality.

Experiment stations urge the use of high analysis fertilizers, because such fertilizers furnish plant food to the farmer at the lowest cost per pound.

Your cost of producing a crop and our cost of manufacturing a fertilizer are comparable. You have a certain fixed expense regardless of the size of the crop and we have a certain fixed expense regardless of the analysis of the fertilizer.

When we increase the amount of plant food in a ton of fertilizer the extra plant food is free of expense for bags, freight and labor and you get the advantage of our saving.

Buy Swift's Red Steer Fertilizers containing 14% or more of plant food and thus secure high grade plant food at the lowest cost.

HOW DOCTORS TREAT COLDS

First Step in Treatment Is a Brisk Purgative With Calotabs, the Purified and Refined Calomel Tablets that are Nausealess, Safe and Sure.

Doctors have found by experience that no medicine for colds and influ-enza can be depended upon for full effectiveness until the liver is made thoroughly active. That is why the first step in the treatment is the new, nausea-less colomel tablets called Calotabs, which are free from the sickening and weakening effects of the old style calomel. Doctors also point out the fact that an active liver may go a long way towards preventing influenza and is one of the most important factors in enabling the patient to successfully with-stand an attack and ward off pneumonia.

One Calotab on the tongue at bed time with a swallow of water—that's all. No salts, no nausea nor the slightall. No saits, no nausea nor the slight-est interference with your eating, pleas-ure or work. Next morning your cold has vanished, your liver is active, your system is purified, and you are feeling fine, with a hearty appetite for break-fast. Druggists sell Caletabs only in original scaled packages, price thirty-five cents. Your money will be cheerfully refunded if you do not find them delightful.—(Adv.)

Take calomel today and tomorrow you will feel weak and sick and nauseated. Don't lose a day. Take a spoonful of harmless, vegetable Dodson's Liver Tone tonight and wake up feeling splendid. It is perfectly harmless, so give it to your children any time. It can't salivate.

West Tennessee Notes.

BY JOHN R. WILLIAMS.

In Hornbeak resides a man who was educated at Mars' Hill, Ala., and Lexington, Ky .-- W. W. Litton by name. This man preached the gospel for four or five years, when he quit preaching and took up the practice of medicine, He was liked and patronized by all as a physician, and made quite a sum of money by his practice. He was courteous, kind, and sympathetic, respected and highly esteemed by all who knew him. Some years ago he began, in a sly manner, to preach infidelity. As time went on he became more bold, until now he is an open, outspoken blasphemer of the Bible. On several occasions 1 approached him privately and begged him to cease teaching such doctrine, especially before the rising generation, Instead of quitting he grew worse, Then I went to him and told him that I intended to expose his teaching publicly, and asked him to give me his reason, if he had any, for being an infidel. Here is what he said to me: "(1) The Bible is a myth; (2) there is no God; (3) there is no devil; (4) there is no heaven; (5) there is no hell; (6) Christ was not divine, only a good man; (7) there never was a miracle-only the imagination of a distempered mind." Heading an article with these statements, I wrote out the following, and presented it to the Baptist congregation and to the Methodist congregation:

"To the people of Hornbeak and vicinity: Our children and their children, our friends and their friends, are constantly hearing this baneful doctrine, the seed of which is taking root in some of their minds. Is it your child? Is it my child? Would you permit some one to carry into your home poisonous serpents and scatter them among your sweet, innocent children to destroy them, and offer no protest? Think of it! The fight is on! The battle will begin on the fourth Lord's day in February. 1921, at 11 A.M., in Hornbeak, by the Christian congregations, or a number from each, who truly and faithfully believe in God, Christ, the Holy Spirit, the Bible, heaven, hell, the future existence of the human family-blessed or cursed in eternity for what they believe or do not believe, for what they do or do not do-for God and the right or the devil and the wrong. The Doctor is granted. If he desires it, an equal division of time to represent his side of the question. His teaching will be examined item by item, as well as his manner of life growing out of his teaching.

"[Signed] John R. Williams, Evangelist church of Christ; J. V. Moultrie, O. N. Downing, Elders; C. W.

Petty, E. B. Pitts, W. A. Edwards. Deacons'

The Methodist preacher read it to his congregation and returned it with the following: "Hornbeak, Tenn., February 6, 1921.-The within proposition was read and duly submitted to the members present of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and after discussing it pro and con it was decided, by vote, not to participate in the matter as a church, on the ground that our church stands squarely against all such false teaching, and, furthermore, that there is little hope that those who indorse this erroneous doctrine would attend church service, with only one side represented, to hear their position uprooted. [Signed] W. T. Stubblefield, Pastor."

The Baptists have no regular preacher now at the place, but here is what they wrote on the back of the circular letter: "Deferred until Sunday, February 13, 1921, by order of the church, E. M. Tate, Moderator."

In this article I shall offer no comment on the above, but look out later. If you wish to keep posted on this fight, you had better subscribe for the Gospel Advocate, as I shall from time to time send to the Advocate such items as I think should be published. Send in your two dollars and fifty cents at once, and keep up with the Hornbeak fight on infidelity without and within.

What Shall We Do?

BY THOMAS H. BURTON.

The above is a great question which confronts us at this time. Our money is about exhausted, the brethren have about quit contributing, money is high and hard to get, and we have not finished our first house in the State of South Carolina Four thousand dollars has been well spent, and we believe that we have received the full value of practically every dollar spent; but we lack about twenty-five hundred dollars of having sufficient to finish the building. What shall we do? Is it possible that we must stop the work at this time and let our enemies make capital of it and think we are not able to finish; or shall we go to some sectarian and pay an enormous interest for an indefinite period, or will the brotherhood respond liberally and immediately and let us finish in a way that will be well pleasing to God and an honor to the cause which we should love better than all things in this life? To fall at this period is to retard the work in this State for years to come. Just think of the enemies to the cause having this to fight with, even in after years, it matters not in what part of the State we may work! Just think of an unfinished, ghostly appearing house, standing alone in a big State as a monument to the cause of Christ, or, better to say, a brotherhood of almost two million souls who are not able (?) to finish it! (Perhaps it would be better to say "not willing"). Brethren, let us take a look into the future beyond "the great divide." and see how we will look as we stand before the great King with our many (?) treasures standing up before us as a monument to a well-spent life and fortune (?) to meet us as a token of what we have done (?) for the cause Christ loved and died for. Brethren, please send us a liberal contribution and let us finish the house, which will be an honor to the brotherhood and a place which will do more to firmly establish the cause in this State than any other thing can at this time. Many individuals and congregations have contributed very liberally for which we are very thankful. Some congregations and persons have contributed from $250 to $437.50. congregations and individuals have contributed one hundred dollars. certainly appreciate every contribution, whether great or small, and we pray that God may richly repay every donor. The Williams Printing Company, of Nashville, Tenn., has been very kind and liberal with us in supplying all the paper and cards and in doing all the printing for our appeals free of charge. The postal cards and letters sent out in the way of appeals brought in, all told, about five hundred dollars. It is by no means pleasant to me to go before the public asking for help in this work or any other. Neither is it pleasant to be so handicapped in a work like this because the brotherhood fails to cooperate with us in establishing the cause in this destitute State. What shall we do? Edifying as the Need May Be Putting in Remembrance.

It occurs to me that the chief duty of the preacher is not so much to impart to his hearers some new truth as it is to bring to their remembrance some old truths with which they are already acquainted. That is the way the apostle Peter reasons about the matter in 2 Pet. 1: 11-13. When we come to examine the matter, we find that this is not the only place where Peter has brought out this thought. We find it again in 2 Pet. 3: 1, 2. The apostle also produces the same thought in Rom. 15: 14, 15. Please note that Paul did not consider these Christians to be in need of instruction along new lines. They were full of goodness and knowledge and able to admonish. But they did need to be reminded, and it was Paul's business to remind them. Such teaching is the business of every faithful gospel preacher to-day. As Paul wrote in 1 Tim. 4: 6: "If thou put the brethren in mind of these things, thou shalt be a good minister of Christ Jesus, nourished in the words of the faith, and of the good doctrine which thou has followed until now."

In the Old Testament the prophets are sometimes spoken of as the Lord's "remembrancers." I think "The Lord's Remembrancers" would be no inappropriate title for all who speak in the name of Jesus. Certainly no one can be accounted a good minister who does not bring God and Christ and the truth to the remembrance of the people.

If ever you visit the national Congress, you will notice a man of very dignified mien who sits at the Speaker's elbow. He never says anything out loud to the members, but he often speaks in a whisper to the Speaker. That man is indispensable; he is the mentor, the parliamentarian, the man who is thoroughly conversant with all the rules governing the House or the Senate. It is his business, not to instruct the Speaker, but to remind him of the law of the land. The preacher has a more important office. He speaks not merely to one man, but he is authorized to speak to all men and to remind them of God's eternal laws.

Things to Remember.

What are some of the things which Peter brought to the people's remembrance? An overflowing answer to this question is found in the context.

1. He reminds them that they have a precious faith. (See the opening words of 2 Pet. 1: 1.) It is hard for us to bring cut the sweet, unadulterated quintessence of meaning couched in that word "precious." My father used to give a very homely illustration by supposing that we ask a true mother how much she loves her babe. She looks at you for a moment with wondering eyes, and then replies with a quavering voice: "I can't tell you exactly how much, but I know he is precious to me." Yes, that is the adjective that fittingly describes our chief endearment. No other can quite take its place. There's a world of love in those words when spoken in dead earnest. This, then, is the adjective that Peter uses to describe the Christian's faith. Knowing human nature, he knew that they were likely to forget that it was a precious faith.

A man in South Carolina carried his money from Columbus to Charleston. He threw his carpet bag about recklessly, as if it contained nothing of value. The apparently careless way in which this man treated his carpet bag is an illustration of how we often treat our faith.

If we were pinned down to the question, "How much will you take for your faith, or what will you give in exchange for it?" we would say quickly enough: "Nothing. It's not for sale. I don't wish to trade it off." Yet, while we profess to keep it, we cast it around and trample it underfoot and act as if it were of no value, and sometimes we act as if we were afraid somebody might get suspicious of it and think we had it.

It means much to say that we are keeping our faith—a great deal more than giving an answer when somebody asks you which church you belong to. It would be hard to define all that is meant, but perhaps we could not get a better or a nobler idea than by calling to mind the fact that Paul said when the journey of this life was ended, "I have kept the faith," and then remembering that the same faith which Paul kept by a life of self-denial and indefatigable service is ours—and it is precious.

2. He reminds them of the dignity of their calling. In verse 3 he speaks of "him who hath called us by his own glory and virtue," and in verse 4 he explains that through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus we are become "partakers of the divine nature."

In the creation, the Psalmist tells us, we were made a little lower than the angels; but there is an intimation in Peter's language that in redemption we are made higher than the angels. The angels will remain only angels in all eternity; but the Christian is made partaker of the divine nature, and is to go on partaking more and more of this nature and becoming more and more like Christ.

When we forget this, we make ourselves ridiculous in the eyes of the world and bring reproach upon the name of our Master. Let us ask ourselves the heart-searching question, "What is there in our lives to suggest that we are partakers of the divine nature?" Really, when we think of some of the didos cut by professed Christians, we are immediately reminded of Jesus' words to the Pharisees: "Ye are of your father the devil, and the lust of your father ye will do." We may cling to the thought that we are "partakers," but leave the impression that, like Esau, we are ready to sell.

3. He reminds them of the rich and full provisions of grace that have been made for them. In the third verse "his divine power" is mentioned, and in the fourth verse he uses the expression, "whereby he hath granted unto us his precious and exceeding great promises." Note "precious" again. But the promises are not all. With them go "all things"—the Bible, the throne, the Lord's day, the Holy Spirit to guide and help. Nothing of which we can conceive but what God has given us for conducting ourselves in a godly manner here and entering at last into the fullness of eternal life.

4. He reminds them of the kind of character they should labor to build up. Christ is the foundation, and faith is the first scriptural stone; but we must not stop there. (See verses 5-7.)

Why Remember?

Consider the reason why the apostle was resolved to put them in remembrance of these things.

Negatively, that they might not fall from their steadfastness. He did not raise the philosophical question: "Is it possible for one to fall from grace?" But note his warning just before he closes this letter in the last verse but one. (2 Pet. 3: 17.) And in this context, after he has made his exhortation about character building, he adds verse 10.

Positively, that an abundant entrance might be theirs. (See verse 11.)

Therefore, we conclude that he brought these things to their remembrance, not simply that they might think of them and admire them, but by thinking of them they might be stirred up to do them. It is the only way the truth can benefit us, It is possible, but hardly probable, that some one who hears a sermon to-day is in danger of perishing through lack of knowledge. Where the greater danger lies is in forgetting, or, if not forgetting, in falling to put in practice what we know. "If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them." There is an old gospel hymn which opens with a supplication:

Tell me the same old story
When you have cause to fear
That this world's empty glory
Is costing me too dear.

It is because I feel that this world's empty glory is costing us too dear that I have impressed this old, but important, lesson. And in closing I remind one and all that the precious promise of "Though your sins be as scarlet" is based upon the condition that we "remember his commandments to do them." (Ps. 103: 18.)

What we want is permanence. It is one beauty of the Christian revelation that it uses all the symbols of a home to give our hearts rest in the thought of departure; that is what we want, that has been dearest, after all, to judge and soldier, merchant and statesman, monarch and peasant—and home! Yes, no image of court or temple is so inspiring as this, my Father's house!—W. M. Statham.

There are lots of Christians who are hampered in their work because they are tossed about between the bother of living and the fear of dying,—Selected.

Loyalty to Christ.

BY E. M. BORDEN.

Possibly the above expression is often used without realizing its true meaning. When we speak of loyalty, one is ready to ask, "Loyalty to what?" I must confess that I would inquire concerning the matter. It is often used when direct reference is made to some man's view of some theory or doctrine. Baptist ministers would not consider a man loyal who did not indorse the Baptist creed. The same can be said of all creeds.

I was once accused of not being loval. It is useless to tell you I did not like to be told that. I think I am very loyal. But here it comes again: "Loyal to what?" O. yes! I am glad you called my attention to it. I am loyal to Christ. I believe in him. He is the foundation of the church to which I belong. He is the creed I was asked to accept. His church is the one body. Whatever I do, in word or deed, let me do all "in the name of the Lord." But I was accused of not being loyal because I did not accept all the views advocated in one religious journal. Has it come to the point where I must accept some religious paper as a creed, and brand all who do not accept it as not being loyal? How can we condemn creed makers, if we have creeds of our own? When I say that Christ is my creed, some are willing to say that I am "Christianish" and "weakish." The eunuch said he believed in Christ. Was that sufficient? Have I the right to demand

During the time that is often called the "Restoration movement" the Baptist congregations, many of them, would demand that every candidate for baptism and church membership confess that he had read the confession of faith and that he believed it contained the truth. Their aim was not to get any into their assemblies who were in any way contaminated with what they pleased to call "Campbellism." There are men to-day who have almost, if not altogether, got to the place where they would not like to accept a brother into the fellowship of the congregation unless he will confess that he believes a certain religious paper to contain the doctrine of Christ. Here is one case that has come under my observation. A brother's name was placed on the church record without any form of "putting in membership" or without his request, and he was excluded on a charge of "walking disorderly." when the truth was he was a faithful worshiper in a congregation near by. But the congregation where he was worshiping regularly did not make a certain religious paper a creed. If his name had been dropped from that congregation's record because he was worshiping elsewhere, it would have been no wrong. But why charge a man with walking disorderly when such is not the case? There are other things I could say along this line, but this is enough for the present.

There is one thing that no Bible man will call in question. To be loyal, a man must be a member of the body of Christ, or a member of Christ's family. The body of Christ is his church. Paul tells us that we are many members, but that we are in one body. The church is also called the body of Christ, or the kingdom of Christ, and Paul tells us that we are translated into the kingdom. Jesus is the head of the church, or the King of the kingdom. I can understand how a member of the family or church of Christ can claim to be loyal to Christ, but I cannot see how a man who is not a member of the church of Christ can claim to be loyal to him. The fact is, he is not loyal. Let the man who is not a member of the church of Christ begin to advocate that a man should be a member of the church of Christ, and see him take his flight when he is asked why he is not a member himself.

A man who pretends to believe in Christ, but does not obey, has no right to claim to be loyal to him. Naturally the question will come: "If you believe it, why not obey it?" The fact is, it is a very weak faith that does not result in obedience. In the eighth chapter of John we read of certain persons who believed in Christ, and yet would not chey him. They became offended when they were told that they should know the truth and that the truth should make them free. Were they loyal to Christ? Certainly not. In John 12: 42 we read of certain of the chief rulers who believed in Christ; yet they would not confess him, lest they should be put out of the synagogue, for they loved the praise of men more than the praise of God. Were they loyal? When is a man really and truly classed on the Lord's side? Not those who believe and go no further, but those who believe and obey. A man who claims to believe and does not obey is a stumblingblock in the way of the man who is inclined to obey. Wherever or whoever he may be, he is against Christ if he does not obey him. His influence is against Christ. How can a man argue for the church of Christ and remain outside of its protecting fold, and be consistent? There is only one way he can be considered loyal, and that is theoretically. But what good is that to the church or to Christ? Some are even interested to the extent that they will give liberally to the support of the gospel and are interested in seeing others converted, but they are not members themselves. "Shall I praise them in this? I praise them not." We should practice what we preach.

While a man must be in the church of Christ in order to be loyal to Christ, it is also true that he can be in the church of Christ and not be loyal to Christ. If a brother should sow discord among brethren and rend the body of Christ, how can he be considered loyal to Christ? Paul tells that in the latter days some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils. If a man is loyal to Christ, will he cause division over theories when it can be avoided? In Acts 20: 30 we read of grievous wolves who will enter in and not spare the flock. "Also of your own selves shall men arise, speaking perverse things, to draw away disciples after them." Our strongest enemies are those who are among us.

Again, we cannot be loyal to Christ unless we make him first in our lives. He is the head of the church; he is the King of the kingdom; he is the foundation of the church: he is the creed of the church of Christ; and in him is "all the fullness of the godhead bodily." If we let the ordinary affairs of life stand between us and our duty to God, we are not loyal to him. Automobile rides are very common these days, and there is no harm unless we let them take the place of our duty that we owe to God. If I let the influence of flesh-and-blood relation keep me from doing my duty as a Christian, can I claim to be loyal?

It is a sin for a man not to provide for his own house: but shall a man give that as an excuse for not doing his Christian duty? We do not need to neglect Christ in order to be faithful to our families. Even permissible things should not be indulged in to the neglecting of the body of Christ. While some things are permissible when not indulged in to the neglecting of the body of Christ, there are other things that are positively forbidden. Hear Paul: "Why, as though living in the world, are ye subject to ordinances, (touch not; taste not; handle not; which all are to perish with the using;) after the doctrines and commandments of men?" Are we subject to the ordinances of man? It is well that we think seriously along this line. I may not understand it. But if it is to touch, "touch not;" if it is to taste, "taste not." It is very positive. Are we allowing ourselves to be subject to the ordinances of man when we can avoid it? I may not know what this means; but on the plan of "safety first," I have chosen to be a member of the church of Christ, and not a member of any other institution. If other people wish to be members of human institutions, it is their own affair, and it is with them and their God. I prefer not to risk it. The expression of Paul, "For in him dwelleth all the fullness of the Godhead bodily," sounds good to me. If in the church I have all the fullness of the Godhead bodily, why should I go elsewhere? ('an a real Christian better himself by joining some institution founded by man? All good comes from God. All the good that we need, we can find in the church of Christ. Faul says: "We are complete in him, which is the head of all principality and power."

There are many human institutions to-day that are founded for the benefit of the moral uplift of humanity. I do not condemn the good that is done in the "Endeavor Society" and other human institutions, but I contend that these good things can be done in the church without the aid of an additional institution. The church is the Lord's fraternal institution, and we need no other. To show the advocates of other institutions that I want to be fair about the matter, I will say, if there is one good thing in any of these human institutions that I cannot have in the church, I want it. But I want to say that every good thing that I need is in the church of Christ. There is not one good thing that I should go that I cannot do as a Christian.

Why Felix Trembled. BY F. E. EXUM.

Felix was governor of Judea, a man of power; and yet, under the spell of Paul's preaching, he had a feeling of fear. Paul reasoned of righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come, and Felix "trembled." Of the three phases of Paul's reasoning, the latter was undoubtedly the cause of Felix's trembling. Paul was tried and condemned in a court of injustice; but the judgment of which Paul spoke is a court of justice, and the powerful in this world, as well as the weak, may well tremble, if they are not trying to live in harmony with the word of God. Paul, in his Epistle to the Hebrews, said: " It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God." Perhaps the apostle had said these very words to Felix. At any rate, Felix, through obedience to the gospel, could have placed himself in the hands of God, where he need not fear the judgment to come; but he said: "Go thy way for this time; and when I have a convenient season, I will call for thee." If that "convenient season" ever came, we have no record of it. Felix took the wrong road. For two years after that time he, willing to show the Jews a pleasure, left Paul bound.

The same parting of the ways that came to Felix comes to every responsible person; and before the same great court of justice before which Felix must stand, we all must stand. It is a show of wisdom to have fear and trembling in contemplating the day of judgment, but it is a far greater show of wisdom to work righteousness and use temperance in order to escape condemnation in the judgment to come. Paul said: "God hath appointed a day in which he will judge the world." John, in his Revelation, said: "And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God; and the books were opened; and another book was opened, which is the book of life: and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works. And the sea gave up the dead which were in it; and death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them: and they were judged every man according to their works." There is no escape from this judgment, but there is an escape from condemnation. When that day shall come, if Jesus says to you, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant," all fear and anxiety will be passed. If we will place ourselves in the hands of God now while we have time and opportunity by obeying his will, we cannot fall into his hands for condemnation.

Georgia and the Far Southern Field By B. C. GOODPASTURE

Paul's Speech in Athens in the Light of History and Archaeology.

The apostle Paul was a marvelous man. sourceful and versatile. His was the greatest constructive mind of the apostolic church. The manner in which he dealt with the enemies of Christianity was admirable. It is significant that he always struck the enemy at the point where he was strongest. In Corinth, the center of vice commercialized in the name of religion, he planted a church; in Ephesus, the stronghold of magical superstition, he founded a congregation, one of the "seven candlesticks" of the Revelation (Rev. 1: 20); and in Athens, the citadel of heathen learning and philosophy, he delivered the masterful address under consideration. Luke, the writer of Acts, was as remarkable in his sphere as was Paul in his. The light thrown on the Mars' Hill speech of the great apostle enables us better to appreciate the difficulties under which Paul spoke and the exactness with which Luke wrote.

The Idolatry of Athens.

The Athenians had a far-known reputation as idol worshipers. Their idolatry attracted the attention of travelers, philosophers, and poets. Lucian said: "At Athens, on every side, there are altars, victims, temples, and festivals." Livy, the Roman historian, testifies: "Athens was full of the images of gods and men, adorned with every variety of material, and with all the skill of art." Josephus wrote: "All men say that the Athenians are the most religious of all the Grecians." Sophocles, the tragic poet of Greece, declared: "The city of Athens goes beyond all in worshiping and reverencing the gods." Pausanias, the traveler and Bædeker of Greece," who visited Athens about fifty years after Paul was there, said: "At Athens it is easier to find a god than a man." From such descriptions of Athenian idolatry we can understand how Paul's "spirit was provoked within him as he beheld the city full of idols." (Acts 17: 16.)

Hearing and Telling the News.

In Acts 17: 21 we read: "Now all the Athenians and the strangers sojouring there spent their time in nothing else, but either to tell or to hear some new thing." Demosthenes, the greatest orator of Greece, and perhaps of the world, asks: "Is it your sole ambition to wander through the public places, each inquiring of the other, 'What new advices?'" Theophrastus, the philosopher, said: "The Athenian lover of the marvelous greets his acquaintance with, 'Whence came you? What say you? Have you any fresh news?'" Plutarch, the well-known Greek biographer, wrote: "These busybodies intrude themselves into the high courts of justice, the tribunals, the market places, and public assemblies. 'What news?' saith one of them; 'How now?'" Thus it will be observed that the sacred writer's estimate of the Athenians agrees perfectly with that of their own countrymen.

The Altar to the Unknown God.

Paul said: "I found also an altar with this inscription, To an unknown God." (Acts 17: 23.) Lucian said: "I swear by the unknown God at Athens. . . . We have found out the unknown God at Athens, and worshiped him with our hands stretched up to heaven." Philostratus remarked: "And this at Athens, where there are even altars to the unknown God." Once more Pausanias wrote: "At Athens there are altars of gods which are called the un-Barton, in his book, "Archæology and the known ones." Bible," says: "In Acts 17: 23 it is stated that Paul saw in Athens 'an altar with this inscription, To an Unknown Ged.' In the year 1909 an altar was discovered in the sacred precinct and temple of Demeter at Pergamos in Asia Minor, the home of one of the seven churches of the book of Revelation (Rev. 2: 12), which bore a mutilated inscription. This inscription, in the judgment of several impartial epigraphists, should be restored as follows: 'To unknown gods, Capito, terch bearer.' This is not only a confirmation of the statement of Acts 17: 23, but of Pausanias and Philostratus that altars to unknown gods existed."

The Poets.

Paul quoted the poets: "Certain even of your own poets have said, For we are also his offspring." (Acts 17: 28.) On this point, Cobern, in his great work, "The New Archæological Discoveries," comments: "The apostle further compliments his audience by quoting a hymn of Cleanthes, the Stoic philosopher, who had once been a teacher in Athens. The passage from which he quotes is the most beautiful in the entire hymn:

O God, most glorious, called by many a name.
Nature's great King, through endless years the same;
Omnipotence, who by thy just decree
Controllest all, hale Zeus, for unto thee
Behooves thy creatures in all lands to call.
We are thy children, we alone, of all,
On earth's broad ways that wander to and fro,
Bearing thy image wheresoever we go;
Wherefore with songs of praise I will thy power forth show.

The following passage from Aratus contains the quotation:

Let us begin from Jove. Let every mortal raise His grateful voice to tune Jove's endless praise. Jove fills the heaven, the earth, the sea, the air; We feel his spirit moving here and everywhere. And we his offspring are.

Finally, I deem comment on these quotations unnecessary; and for lack of space I have purposely omitted the particular work of the authorities quoted. If any one has the desire and the time to look up the references, I shall be glad to furnish them.

A Call to Arms.

BY E. C. FUQUA.

In reprinting in the Gospel Advocate of January 27 Brother David Lipscomb's article of December 27, 1894. entitled "Unity in Christ," Brother Elam did a splendid thing. Such teaching as that is what made the Advocate the mighty power it has been in the last fifty years. There is too little of that kind of teaching being done in this generation. The greatest living issue of our day is the Issue between pure Christianity and sectarianism. This is no less an issue of vast moment now than it was when the trenchant pen of F. D. Srygley, working with that of David Lipscomb, E. G. Sewell, and other mighty men of God, shook sectarianism "from center to circumference" in the years gone by. Why is it that there is so little of this being done now? No one can justly accuse the Advocate in those days of unduly pressing this matter, to the neglect of other matters of great importance. I distinctly remember that it was during those days when "leading brethren" were on the "war path" against sectarianism that the "digressive" movement received that attention which saved the church from wreck upon that rock of evil. In fact, I well remember that it was during that period that all the needs of pure Christianity were attended to with equal force and healthy results. Nothing lagged. Nothing received undue attention. And the church grew marvelously and "the number of the disciples multiplied greatly" throughout the country.

Somehow, there is not that keen interest now. While the Advocate is still firm and loyal and mighty in defense of the truth in all matters, it is wanting in "pep" and that enthusiasm that so marked it in the years gone by. This, to my mind, is true of all other papers being published by the brethren. Therefore it is not the Advocate's fault, manifestly, that this want is so keenly discernible. It is general throughout religious journalism among the brethren. What is the matter? In my feeble judgment, that question should be answered thus:

In leading Israel to and settling them in the land of Canaan, God never allowed them to lose sight of the fact that they were being led among strange nations "greater and mightier" than themselves. He kept this before them constantly, and taught them that their one and only enemy, from whom they must, under his leadership, take their own land "little by little," consisted of those strange and hostile religions maintained by the nations in Canaan. They were warned that any affiliation with them would be their ruin; that they were not to give their sons to marry the daughters of the Canaanites, nor take the Canaanitish sons to be husbands of their daughters; that they were to form no alliances with them, but were to recognize them purely as the enemies of God devoted to destruction as rapidly as Israel should develop strength to take their place in the land as God should drive them out. They were distinctly warned against their gods and all their religious customs as a treacherous power that would wean them away from God and his religion. Moses first gave this information, and it was repeated by Joshua; and the history of Israel upon its entrance into its promised land shows that, for a time at least, the Israelites lived up to God's teaching to the very letter. Prosperity followed them thus far. Finally they began to weaken in their opposition to their erstwhile enemies, looked upon them as being harmless neighbors and innocent sinners for whom they felt a strong sympathy, and in a short time they were intermarrying with and being absorbed into those nations. That was their ruin.

Now, this was certainly a strong type of the conflicts of the church of God with the denominations around it to-day. The church was never stronger than when diligently fighting the religious corruptions surrounding it. and it was never weaker than when shunning this divine duty. This does not mean that the one paramount duty of the church to-day is merely to "skin the sects," as I have often heard it stated. In fact, that is no part of the church's duty. But strong, persistent, dignified, scholarly, and Christian opposition to denominationalism is the undoubted battle ground upon which we are to wrest new territory, so to speak, thus spreading the domain of the Prince of Peace in proportion as his religious enemies are forced to give ground to his true servants. The religious denominations of this day are no more the true Israel of God than the Canaanitish nations were ancient Israel, and they have no more divine right to offer their sacrifices upon human altars than the Canaanitish nations had to offer sacrifices to their strange gods. The denominations are here as the Canaanitish nations were in Israel's territory-for a purpose purely subservient to the interests of God's true people, but to give way as rapidly as God's people shall become able to possess the land. Of that I have not a doubt.

Our chief fault, to my mind, is that we are not trying to "take ground" as diligently as we should; hence, God is not driving them out from before us as he otherwise would. We are not pressing aggressive into their territory. We rather act as though we felt that we should keep off their territory altogether, sometimes even apologizing to them when taking the truth into a strongly sectarian community. But if we preach the truth, and if we love their souls, we will press the preaching before them all the more diligently, but in kindness and earnestness and wisdom taught by Christ. The stinging truth appears to be that we have shifted enemies until our friends are the denominations and our enemies are our own brethren! Here is where we are waging war and worse than wasting our strength. Not that criticisms of one another are v rong, for they are not when properly directed; but when brethren recognize one common enemy and all zealously apply their "steel" to that objective, they have little time or inclination to find fault with one another. Their own troubles and disagreements will appear and be fewer when they are pressing the war against the real and formidable enemy of Christianity. Can this not be due to the fact that God chastises his people with internal disorders when they leave off the duty of pushing their religious enemies from before him? I greatly fear that we are laying the foundation for a multitude of sects among ourselves by discontinuing our aggressive warfare against sectarianism. That, at least, resulted to Israel when they ceased to oppose the "nations around them." Our own disagreements are a plague sent upon us for our sympathy for and palliation of denominationalism, I fear. Our lack of dislike of sectarianism is filling our own ranks with the latter until we shall be made so sick of it that we will be only too glad to oppose it later on, I hope. The idolatry that Israel were made to eat and drink of in Babylon so disgusted them with it that, when released, they never again became idolaters. Let us hope that the schismatic disturbances among us to-day will so disgust us with all sectarianism that in all the years to come we will be only too glad to fight it wherever seen. This I believe to be God's purpose in allowing us to be harassed by petty sects as we are at this day. Still, let us pray that the plague be stayed, and in conformity with our prayer let us take up the sword against every form of sectarianism, both within and without the body of Christ, if peradventure God will stay the plague and reunite our forces for battle royal. Then we will rapidly rout the enemy and take his land. Permit me to quote Brother Lipscomb from Brother Elam's article again: "The great difficulty is to undo what centuries of ecclesiasticism and sectarianism have done. The first essential thing to be done is the disintegration of all denominations. the destruction of all ecclesiasticisms, the rejection of all creeds but the Bible, that people, each for himself in the sight of God, may look to and be led by God alone. disintegration and destruction of sects must precede the union in Christ of Christians."

Here is sounded the keynote of our paramount duty to God to-day. This work discharged with diligence will fit us for every line of Christian living. It will purify us of all tendency toward sectism among ourselves, will ennoble us and strengthen our arm and quicken our wisdom and faith. Fighting is what made Israel strong in God, and it will make us strong. Witness the struggles and consequent growth of the Jerusalem church. Let us imitate them. Brethren, "to arms!"

Surely now, if ever at any time in the whole history of this beautiful and terrible world, its living God and Savior is visibly revealed in the midst of us. Deeply to be pitied are those who cannot see him, and those who would deny his presence where he does not, because he cannot, confine himself within the narrow limits of their intellectual schemes.—C. H. Matthews.

A heathen could say, when a bird, scared by a hawk, flew into his bosom for refuge: "I will not kill thee, nor betray thee to thine enemy, seeing thou fliest to me for sanctuary." Much less will God either slay or give up the soul that takes sanctuary in his name.—W. Gurnall.

A Call to the Christian Patriots of America.

[Editor's Note: We commend this article to the consideration of all our readers because we believe that every one will be profited and benefited by its careful and thoughtful perusal. That the world is full of unrest and dissatisfaction cannot be doubted. A man in the conscientious discharge of his duties meets with much opposition and criticism. It appears that many are in such a frame of mind that they prefer to find fault rather than follow in the steps of the Christ. There is only one way out of all this turmoil and strife, and that is the way shown us by the Lord Jesus Christ. In honor each must esteem others better than himself, and in humility must serve others and cling to the cross of the Lord Christ. Christ followed and Christ in our lives is the only hope of this or any other nation.]

In our day and land great progress has been made along many lines and manifold blessings are found on every hand. At the same time, daily conduct of humanity affords ample proof that there is much room for improvement in many directions.

Materialism, mammonism, anarchism, Bolshevism, hydra-headed vice and skepticism, ignorance and superstition, money madness, greed and graft, gambling and Sunday desceration, divorces and the social evil, insatiate desire for pleasure, inordinate luxury, extravagance, prodigality and thriftlessness, avoidable accidents and homicides, thefts and burglaries, murders and suicides, lust and avarice, unemployment and destitution, poverty and suffering, crime and lawlessness, unrest and unrighteousness are abroad in the world. The hearts and wills of myriads are swayed by untruth and unbelief, sin and selfishness.

The gospel, and the gospel only, can correct many evils that may need to be corrected for individual, family, community, and national welfare. The churches are reaching many, but there are millions who do not regularly attend church or Sunday school, and other millions are scarcely touched at all.

Secular education has received undue emphasis. Colleges and universities do not primarily make Christian men and women. The public schools, so far as teaching Christian morality is concerned, are a failure. We cannot depend upon them, as they are now conducted, to inculcate either individual or national righteousness.

These conditions and the absence of Bible reading and Christian teaching in such a large number of the nation's homes are giving us a class of citizens who apparently have little consciousness of God and divine authority and are woefully indifferent to salvation, the salvation that means the redemption of the whole person, body, soul, and mind, so that every part of a human being is in harmony with the will of God. Moreover, it has been the weakness of many churches that they have failed to create in the minds of their members a clear conception of the plan of salvation, the vital importance of saving faith, turning from sin of every kind, and hungering and thirsting after righteousness; and the result is that many are only nominal Christians, merely unsaved church members. vival, a reformation, is needed, not only for the salvation of sinners, but for the benefit of organized Christianity and for effectually counteracting and putting to silence the undermining atheistic forces at work throughout the world to destroy the very foundations of our Christian civiliza-

Our country needs emphasis on the "first and great commandment" and the "Golden Rule;" altruistic enthusiasm for humanity; employment for all; well-paid, capable, exemplary teachers in all of our schools, colleges, and universities; abundant supplies of good-citizenship literature; and intensive carrying on of an extensive program of Americanization until every man, woman, and child in our borders may appreciate the significance, the duties, and the blessings of American citizenship. We also need more Bible schools, production and distribution of tons of tracts and other gospel literature, diligent Bible reading, fervent and unceasing prayer and thanksgiving, personal evangelism, and true evangelical teaching—a continuous campaign of gospel education that will reach not only those who attend church and Sunday school, but will "preach the gospel to every creature," presenting Jesus Christ as the Savior of sinners and "the only name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved."

America to-day is facing some of the gravest industrial, political, social, and moral problems of her history. The situation should be faced both conscientiously and heroically by the leaders of Christian thought and activity and by Christian men and women everywhere. The hour is here when all Christian patriots should render the largest possible service in the promotion of good citizenship, in reaching the children and youth of our land, in the conversion of sinners, and in the saving and uplifting of the community and nation. And all are invited to coöperate with this movement for good citizenship, Christian morality, permanent peace, prosperity, and the common weal or general welfare.

Every good citizen should be a gospel messenger, and volunteers are wanted at once in every section of North and South America to enlist for service to distribute tracts and other Christian literature in a continuous campaign for truth and righteousness. Christian civilization, and world evangelization.

There are very many ways for service and cooperation, and by unity of purpose and concert of action all have now an unusual opportunity for rendering efficient aid and encouragement. No one should have fears that the service will be unpleasant or burdensome in any way; on the contrary, it will conduce to true greatness, bringing "peace to the conscience and joy to the heart." "He that would be the greatest of all must be the servant of all."

And remember: The world is sick, but there is a remedy, and only one remedy. Humanity is in trouble, but there is a way out, and that way is the only way. Will you not do service and, by serving, help humanity out of trouble?

Ogawa San and Another Girl.

BY NELLIE STRAITON.

I want to tell you in Sister Lillie Cypert's own words a few interesting things about two of the Japanese girls she has helped during the past year. The following paragraphs are taken from her letters to me:

October 9, 1919: "I have an orphan girl with me now. I found her living with an old grandmother who is no more fit to guide and direct a child than another child would be. She is sixteen, just the age to need some one to help and comfort her-in other words, a mother's care and counsel. She is a girl with plenty of money; but as she did not know how to use it, she was making free use of it in going to picture shows and the like until she was almost to the danger point. Her friends had almost given her up as no good, and her teachers had turned her out of school. So, after having considered the matter carefully and prayerfully and having investigated and found her to be worthy of help, I decided to lend a helping hand. Since she has been with me she has been a very good girl, is diligently studying the Bible, and wants to be a Christian. We think she can enter the school again soon."

January 6, 1920: "She is a gem, and helps with all the work about the house when she is not at school. She has become a Christian since she has been with me, and assists in the Sunday-school work some when the teachers are absent, which is very good for her, because she is at the same time learning to be useful."

February 18, 1920: "She will graduate from High School soon, and her people want her to get married, very much against her will. She is only sixteen, and she wants to continue her education. Too, she wants to work for the Lord. Her people oppose Christianity very much, and will perhaps disinherit her when they know she has become a Christian, even though her father left a fortune to the three children when he died. We are awaiting their answer after hearing she is a Christian."

June 16, 1920: "Ogawa San seems to be growing in grace and the knowledge of the truth and zeal for Him and holier living. Pray for me, that I may have patience and wisdom to help her, and that she may be faithful through his grace, and make what she now hopes to make—a worker for Him."

September 2, 1920: "Well, it seems that almost every time I write I have something new on my program to tell you. This time it is about my little girl. I have taken a little girl to raise. She is a seven-year-old daughter of a poor widow who is a member of the church and works very hard; but as servants' wages are very low (ten dollars per month) and the cost of living very high, she is unable to support herself and the two children. Now that the older one is of school age, her expenses will be greater if she sends her to school. Too, it is hard for any one to get work if she has children. The child is strong and healthy and very bright, and is in the second grade at school; and the grades from last year show that she did very well in school. Ogawa San is quite a little mother to her. She has no little sisters, therefore she is very happy to have her. Ogawa San is very skillful at sewing, and at present is very busy making clothes for her. Her school has already begun, and she has very few clothes, and they are very shabby. Ogawa San has many old clothes that she can make over for her, so her clothing will be very little expense. We already have her fixed up to look real sweet. This sounds, perhaps, like a big undertaking, and perhaps it is; but I have prayed over it, and compared events that are and things that seem to be coming, and I am satisfied that the Lord has guided me in it. Her mother has given her to me to do just as I please with her; so I hope that she will some day be a useful woman in the Lord's hands."

The help of brethren and sisters over here is making this good work possible. Are there still others who wish to help? Address Miss Nellie Straiton, 1030 South Lake Street, Fort Worth, Texas

Making the Movies Safe for the Child.

If the education which the child of to-day gets in the motion-picture theater is made up too largely of "the life of the underworld, vamping, burglary, illicit love, and custard-pie throwing," the mother's only redress up to the present, observes the editor of The Woman Citizen, is to keep her child from the photo theater "with whatever it has to offer of occasional profit in the way of travel, science, and charm." A number of New York mothers, according to The Tribune, have organized to secure a movie censorship for children, and other organizations are being formed to encourage the production of better films. It seems to The Tribune that although children are such enthusiastic supporters of the movies, little is being done to produce pictures suitable for them. At the better theaters, indeed, "the type of picture is on a higher plane than the common hectic and lurid reels, but aside from the news reels or a few films there is seldom told a screen story that has any distinct appeal to children. The story is of grown-ups and their doings." The Tribune suggests the development of a specialized "movie" industry, which would film for children's eyes "the fairy stories, Mother Goose, the fascinating experiences of the youth of all nations, folklore, understandable historical facts." In a Sunday-magazine article The Tribune quotes the head of a "better-movies" organization to the effect that "there are some motion-picture people who have kept faith with the public and this responsibility." And in The Woman Citizen Dorothy B. Nutting contends that while there is a "movie menace" for mothers to guard against, it is really to a large extent a matter of intelligent selection. There was a time when "a movie was just a movie." But nowadays "it is possible to choose one's motion pictures as one chooses a cigar or candy, by the brand; for there really are several large companies who have built up well-deserved names for having clean, well-directed, and intelligent pictures." The writer does not here refer to the concerns specializing in religious or educational films, which are supplying a growing demand from churches, schools. and community organizations, but to the regular producers for the motion-picture theaters. While these companies must "entertain," some of them are featuring pictures from famous novels which "will not only entertain and stimulate the child's mind," but will actually induce reading, "if not of the same stories, at least of other stories by the same author." Films based on our national history have in some cases "brought a new meaning to the history lessons that had been so much of a bugbear." "In many cases the movie companies arrange with the book publishers to have window displays of the books at the same time that the picture is shown." We are told that the travel pictures are also valuable for children. Some of these travel pictures are said to be so good that "children when taken abroad to see the selfsame sights recognize scenes they have run across 'at the movies.'" Indeed,

"There are several progressive schools using these pictures to illustrate geography lessons. What could be more at variance with the old-fashioned way of teaching a parrollike knowledge of 'countries and capitals'—the method most of us followed in the days before motion-pictures were a known quality!"

And, of course, there are the moving pictures which give scientific facts "by a series of simple moving drawings," which "put a sugar-coating" on the educational pills, as it were. These are often included in the current event or magazine section of movie programs. Since the "feature" picture comprises the greater part of the ordinary program, it is, however, "most important, to be sure, that this picture at least will be wholesome and fit for childish eyes." But the point is made that the pictures produced primarily for grown-ups are likely to be the ones to make a hit with children, "for by expensive experiments the motion-picture people have learned that the children do not care for fairy tales and stories in which other youngsters play the characters." At least, we read:

"They do not care for them as a steady diet. Most of the children of to-day like love stories. They love to see the handsome hero rescuing his lady love, and their spontaneous applauding at the deeds of valor he performs proves that they are 'with him' to the last urchin. After all, children reflect the ideas of the grown-ups, and the grown-ups are only enlarged children. Why shouldn't the same pictures appeal to both?"

By keeping the necessity for discrimination in mind, the mother may be able to ward off the "movie menace" and utilize the commercial motion pictures in her child's education. The writer concludes with these words of advice to mothers:

"Supervise your children's cinema entertainment as you would their reading or their associates. Impressions received through the eye of the camera may 'register' deeper on the childish mind than those even of the printed page. It is the duty of every mother or guardian of children to watch these first impressions. The first years of the child's life are the years which count,"—Literary Digest.

The Sorrow of a Mother's Heart.

One of the most unnatural things that can be imagined is the lack of real interest on the part of a mother in her own offspring. Such are exceptions when it comes to the mothers in the church of our Lord. I think I find, occasionally, a mother whose interest in her children I doubtthat is, the mothers whom I meet as I work among members of the church. Mothers who are not members of the church, of course, cannot have that interest that counts in their children, for the simple reason they are not truly interested in themselves. It is sad for those who are not Christians to allow themselves to become fathers and mothers, but millions of just such we have in this old world. This is one thing the fathers and mothers, in all our congregations, should look squarely in the face, and awake to a full realization that if the millions of children that are annually coming into the world as a result of such marriages ever learn of their only hope of eternal salvation, we must teach it to them. When I begin to let my mind rest on the sore need of work, work, and more and more work, then look at the little some are doing, and the churches, as a rule, are doing, I wonder if we do not appear as being "dead asleep" in the eyes of Him who so loved souls as to die that they might live. But I must get away from this thought quickly if I am to write as I hoped when I took my seat at the desk.

I am now thinking of mothers in our congregation who are loyal and true and have done their best for their sons and daughters, but who, in spite of all this, have to die of a broken heart because of the worldliness and indifference of their children. I am giving a letter written on November 29, 1920, and received in December. It clearly reveals that deep and abiding love of a true mother for her own. Omitting names and place, I give our readers the letter:

Dear Brother Hall: You will, of course, be surprised to receive a communication from me, but I am writing to urge you to pray for my wandering boy. He obeyed the gospel when young, and after remaining in the church for a few years he began to reach out after the pleasures of this world, and the consequence is he has grown neglectful, cold, and indifferent to the church and also his spiritual welfare. And this sad and deplorable condition of his is the great sorrow of my heart. And I beg you, Brother Hall, to pray daily for his repentance and return to the fold of lambs. I earnestly desire to live to see this event.

I am now in a declining state of health, and am nearing the journey's end. If pleasing to our Father, I should be glad to be permitted to live until spring. My strength is failing fast, and I know that "I shall soon reach my happy, happy home, and rest under the shade of the trees."

Brother Hall, there is a couple living in Los Angeles by the name of Miles. I have known them for more than thirty years; met them soon after they came over from England. And they are now members of the church, but I am under the impression that they are digressive. However, I wish very much that you would kindly look after them and teach them the way more perfectly. I believe their address is 500 Bonnie Beach Place.

I am praying the Lord to bless you in laboring for the advancement of the cause of Christ in that great Western city. Remember me with love to dear Sister Hall.

Yours in the one faith, X On the above I will make the following comments:

First, This mother died at the home of her daughter in one of our Eastern cities on December 21, 1920, just twenty-one days after the letter was mailed to me. I would love so much to know if during those few remaining days this son changed his way and allowed his mother to die with a joyful heart over his return to the fold. I have intentionally left his name out of the letter and substituted "he" and "his" where she used the name of the boy she loved so well. I am hoping that he will see this letter and preserve it in memory of his mother, and, if he has not returned to the fold, that he will let me beg him to do so now; for his mother still loves and remembers him.

Second. This mother was one of the sweetest mothers I have ever seen, and I have a feeling for her almost as tender as that I have for my own sweet mother now in Middle Tennessee. God has blessed me with a mother whose sweetness and gentleness and godliness could hardly be excelled, and I had rather die a thousand times than to make her heart ache once because of any wrongdoing on my part. But the author of the above letter was another one of these good mothers. She and her daughter and son-in-law lived with us in Atlanta for a number of months. They did much to help us and encourage us. And I want the daughter, in whose home this sweet mother fell asleep in Jesus, to know that her mother had much to do in making the Atlanta work a glorious success. Her prayers ever went up for that work.

Third. And how glad I am to have this letter closed with a prayer for the little I am trying to do in this great Western city." She not only prayed for the work, but endeavored to put me in touch with souls here to help. What would become of the world were it not for such mothers? I trust that many sons and daughters will read this whose mothers still live, and that it will cause them to give more thought to how they can make their mothers' last days on this old earth their happiest, sweetest. and best days. Perhaps it would be well to state that the letter had the following postscript to it: "Inclosed please find a very small offering, which I hope you will accept from a widowed sister." Of course I accepted the offering, and would have been afraid not to do so. "Not that I seek for the gift; but I seek for the fruit that increaseth to your [her] account." (Phil. 4: 17.) Paul further says that such is "an odor of a sweet smell, a sacrifice acceptable, well-pleasing to God." God saw the gift, and it is recorded in heaven to her credit; and that blessings have already come to this work because of this mother's prayers and offering is a certainty.

Bits of News.

The Ontario meeting closed on the night of February 6, with twenty-seven additions, all told. Witty is one of the happiest men with whom I have ever labored, and no one could have enjoyed the meeting more than he did. I am under promise to go back on February 20 for another address on the Sabbath and Lord's-day question for the benefit of an Adventist minister who lives there and has a congregation, I am told, of something like seventy-five members. I thought I had said enough in the one address during the revival, but he asked for more, and it is because of this request that this special service has been announced.

Brother Riggs is at Fillmore this week, and in a letter written on Monday (February 7) he reports two confessions and baptisms.

Last Lord's day was a good day for us at North Sichel and Altura, with the house full and one confession and one by statement at the forenoon service. I hurried back to Ontario right after the forenoon service. Brother Edgar Miller preached at night, and Brother Floyd Lee did the baptizing.

The brief record of the three short years of Jesus' ministry has done more to soften and regenerate mankind than all the disquisitions of philosophers, and then all the exhortations of moralists.—Selected.

MISCELLANY D

A. S. Croom writes from Harper, Kan., February 15: "As a former student of the Freed-Hardeman College, I heartily commend the effort now being made to raise funds for the equipment of the laboratories and buildings by donations from the old students. This equipment is absolutely necessary if the school is to be able to offer the same advantages along educational lines as the State schools. We must make our schools equal in these respects to, if not better than, other schools, in order to bring the young men and young women of the land into the safer Christian environment of such schools as Freed-Hardeman College. No one, old student or otherwise, will make any mistake by sending a liberal donation to Brother Freed for this work."

Sister Susie Hobbs feels the great need of gospel preaching in the town where she lives, Lineville, Ala., and writes to present the situation to our readers. She says: "We have no church or leader here, so I am trying to locate a man who is competent to preach and to meet all opposi-One brother has offered to come and take up the work, and two other brethren have offered to hold a meeting; but we do not know these men, and we are not able to support them in the work. There is not a male member here. Lineville is about six miles west of Ashland, the county seat of Clay County, and has the same population-We have no church at Ashland. So it fifteen hundred. can be seen that there is a great field here. We have five congregations in this county with no preachers." brief statement from our sister speaks for itself. This Those who are interested and who may want further information should address Miss Susie Hobbs, Box 63, Lineville, Ala.

S. R. Drake writes from Columbus Junction, Iowa, February 12: "A few weeks ago I subscribed for the Gospel Advocate, and have been well pleased with the helpful articles appearing therein from week to week. I had not been taking a religious journal for several weeks back, not even a secular daily, only as I bought one occasionally at the news stand, as I have been out of employment for some time, and no income sufficient to enable me to provide the necessary reading mater that I have enjoyed heretofore. would be glad to do some preaching that might be helpful to those who are in need of my services. I have no hobbies to ride. I have tried to follow the motto, 'What saith the Scriptures?' in all that God requires for man's salvation and Christian living? The urgent need of gospel preaching these days makes it imperative upon the church to provide means to send the gospel to the ends of the earthin every city, town, village, and hamlet—until the gospel shall have been preached as 'a witness to all the nations.' In all our leading Christian journals I have found teaching that seemed to me out of harmony with the teaching of Christ and the apostles, but I attribute this largely to a lack of thorough investigation of the New Testament with 'The truth between extremes' should an unbiased mind. characterize all our teaching."

From F. P. Fonner, Buffalo, W. Va., February 8: "I have received $41.25 to help me to do mission work, for which I am very thankful indeed. I have also received $59.25 to help out on our house of worship. We are thus enabled to reduce our lumber bills to $264 and a little interest. We are profoundly grateful for this help. We still need some help besides this to help make the house comfortable. we cannot hold a protracted meeting without some cutside help; and we need it now. Our house cost us more than we expected, and we have done all we can do here. If the brethren knew our real circumstances, they would help us wipe out this deficit at once. For something over two years I have been collecting money for this house, and on account of my physical condition I must finish it soon. Who will help? Some might be disposed to inquire about my physical condition. Of this I dislike to say anything, But at times I suffer inas I do not wish to complain. tensely from an internal trouble that is incurable, unless it is promptly treated, and I do not have money to pay for treatment. As all of our contributions are going into our meetinghouse for the present, I must look elsewhere for some extra help. In making up your offering, please set apart at least half of it for our house of worship. I can use checks or money orders. The work is beginning to tell on the outsiders here. In fact, it is doing real well; but many times I go to the work when I am not able to go."

J. B. Nelson writes from Dallas, Texas, February 16: "In the Gospel Advocate of January 27 there is a report from Curtis Taylor, of Mineral Wells, Texas, where he speaks of 'the faithful few' at the I. O. O. F. Hall. He further speaks of their plans to build a house, and that Brethren Wallace and Thomas preach each Lord's day. There is a little faction that meets in the hall, that was led there by one J. M. Wallace, who stands withdrawn from in Mineral Wells: and this is not the only time he has been withdrawn from. Thomas has been affiliated with the 'digressives,' and I have never heard of his making any acknowledgments. If Taylor has ever obeyed the gospel, I have never heard of it, nor has the church of Christ in Mineral Wells. The church of Christ in Mineral Wells meets on North Oak Street, in a beautiful brick church house that they bought last year at a cost of ten thousand dollars, and have never asked for one cent on the outside. I preach for them two Sundays in each month, and have been for three years. Walter Cook preaches often. have a membership of upward of one hundred and twentyfive, and one of the best-working churches in Texas. Brethren Chism, J. S. Dunn, G. A. Dunn, and Horace Busby have held meetings for the church in the past few years, and Brother Busby is to hold their meeting this year. I make this correction because the report of Taylor is misleading and leaves the impression that there are only a few faithful ones, and that they have no house."

From M. C. Cayce, Jackson, Miss., February 10: "Last Thursday afternoon I went to Charleston, where I preached on Thursday, Friday, and Saturday nights, and twice on Sunday—morning and night. On Sunday afternoon I preached to the negroes. I baptized one man Saturday night. The church in Charleston is now at peace, working together in love, and enjoying the largest attendance and deepest interest in its history. Seventy-nine were present in Sunday school. Since our meeting there last fall they have taken on new life. Besides the regular Lord's-day services (morning and night), the Sunday school, and the Wednesday-night prayer meeting, on Friday night they hold a cottage prayer meeting, and one afternoon each week the ladies meet for Bible study. Alexander Campbell, colored, held a meeting for the negroes there last fall, preaching in their schoolhouse, and baptized one woman. then her husband, who was a Baptist preacher, after asking some questions, requested to be baptized. Brother Terrell baptized him, and now he and his wife worship to-gether each Lord's day as 'it is written.' It was at his request that I preached to his race on Sunday afternoon. He secured the St. Paul Methodist Episcopal Church for the preaching. Alexander Campbell ought to hold a tent meeting for them this year, for these two are the only colored members there. I came back to Jackson on Monday morning. In two letters I have received this week the writer said they had trouble in getting my local address. one saying that his letter had been returned twice. Please ask again for those having acquaintances here to furnish me names and addresses. My address now is 720 South Gallatin Street, Jackson. Miss.

W. A. Burford, Oakland, Miss., under date of February 13, writes concerning the work at that place: "In the Gospel Advocate of November 18 there appeared an appeal from the brethren of the church of Christ at Oakland for Some three hundred and help to build a house of worship. fifty appeal letters were sent out to different congregations and individuals, and through these letters and the appeal in the Advocate we have received contributions amounting to five hundred and sixty-three dollars and ninety cents. We sincerely thank all the contributors, both individuals and churches, for their generosity, and shall ever pray for their welfare. We began work on our building about November 15, and have completed it, all but ceiling, seating. and painting. We met in it for the first time on the third Lord's day in January. We have a few old tent chairs which we use for seats. We need about five hundred dol-lars to complete the house. Everything has been paid for We are very anxious to finish the work, to date. we hate so bad to borrow the money, so we appeal to those who can to help us raise sufficient funds to complete the There are only six brethren who are meeting with work. the congregation, and they have paid all they can at present. Two of them are doing the carpentry work. Send donations to W. A. Burford, treasurer, Oakland, Miss." The deed to the lot on which this house is built has been sent to us for examination, and we consider it as strong in the "restrictive clause" as it could be made. Brethren need have no fear of helping in this case on account of the deed not being properly drawn.

The Little Sparrows' Bedtime.

Come, children, you must go to bed, The sun is sinking low: Let's choose a pleasant, swaying bough To rock you to and fro. That's right; now tuck your heads away Beneath your tired wings. Whatever makes you flutter so, You restless little things? Now, Johnny Jerktail, do be still! Stop teasing sister Sue! Dear me, 'twould make my feathers turn, Were all my sons like you! Why, Sallie Twitter! I'm ashamed! You're crowding off your brothers! The baby's fallen off his perch-And there go all the others! Now start again and settle down-Just hear the breezes crooning. And listen to the katydids, Their sleeping fiddles tuning. So-they are still, each little head Is full of dreams, I know. Come, Father Sparrow, look at them, All sleeping in a row: There never was so fine a brood, So handsome, good, and clever. My dear, you should be proud of them, As proud as I am-ever. -E. M. Jewett, in Our Dumb Animals.

"Phoebe."

Little Phœbe Grey had come to spend a week on Uncle Daniel's farm. She had always lived in the city, and to her the farm seemed wonderful.

One morning her Aunt Alice gave her two big cookies, and told her to play outdoors until dinner time. As the little girl walked down through the orchard, she heard a clear voice call: "Phœbe!"

She stood quite still and listened. "I guess some little girl wants to play with me," she thought. So she answered: "Where are you?"

"Phœbe! Phœbe!" called the sweet voice.

"I guess she's playing hide and seek with me. I must try to find her." For a while the little girl looked about happily; but when she found no one, she grew tired, and called: "Come here, and I will give you a cooky!"

No little girl came, but the sweet voice still called: "Phœbe! Phœbe!"

Aunt Alice was writing a letter when Phœbe hurried into her room and said: "O, Aunt Alice, there's a little girl out in the orchard calling me! I can't find her. She just calls and calls, but she won't come to me. I told her I would give her a cooky if she'd stop hiding and come and play with me. Please come out and help me find her."

"There is no little girl who lives near enough to come here all alone. What made you think there is a little girl if you could not see her?"

"Because she called me. She says: 'Phœbe! 'Phœbe!'"

Aunt Alice laughed, and said: "I think that I know your little friend. I will help you find her. You will have to be quite still and look carefully, for it is not a girl, but a bird. She calls 'Phœbe' so much of the time that I think she has a nest near, for I hear her every day."

"A bird! Why, Aunt Alice, I didn't know birds could talk! She called my name just as plain as could be! It did not sound like a bird, at all."

When they reached the orchard, no little bird could they see. They walked cautiously about and peeped under the leaves and shrubs.

"We shall have to wait until another day," Aunt Alice

They started back toward the house. As they came near the barn a bird flew out from the shed, perched in a tree near by, and sang: "Phœbe! Phœbe!"

The little girl laughed. "O, Aunt Alice, we did find her, after all! What do you suppose she wanted in the shed?"

"We will look and see if she has a nest there, but she may have been after flies. This phæbe would rather have flies than cookies. There is the nest, and she is back in it," Aunt Alice said, pointing to a rafter.

They saw the head of the mother bird looking down over the edge of the nest. She did not appear to be frightened.

"Why, how did you find it?" asked the little girl.

"I thought it might be there. The phœbe bird often builds her nest year after year in the same place. See, on the next rafter are two old nests."

When Phebe went back to the city, her father said: "Well, little girl, what was the best thing on the farm?"

Phœbe laughed, and said: "I liked best the little bird that knew my name."—Harriet G. Brown, in Exchange.

The Bridges.

There is a story of a couple who started off to ride to a friend's house. The morning was pleasant, and they were enjoying themselves, until they happened to remember a certain bridge which was very old, and probably unsafe.

"I shall never dare to go over that bridge," exclaimed the wife; "and we can't get across the river in any other way!"

"O," said the man, "I forgot that bridge. It is a bad place. Suppose it should break through and we should fail into the water and be drowned!"

"Or," continued the wife, capping his complaint, "suppose you should step on a rotten plank and break your leg, what would become of me and the baby?"

"I don't know," continued her husband, "what would become of any of us, for I couldn't work, and we should all starve to death!"

So the lugubrious talk ran on until they reached the spot where the old bridge had stood, and—lo!—they discovered that since they had last been there it had been replaced by a new one!—Selected.

A Good Motto.

Let's leave out all the "ifs" of life
And set up "when" and "will,"
Then boost our work with brand-new vim,
And gain a great big thrill;
Let's jolly up the folks about
And kill the worries and gloom;
Let's hear the bluebird sing a bit,
And give the sunshine room.

The Sierra Nevada Mountains condense the cloudy moisture upon their slopes, and leave the plains beyond them arid deserts. So some great ambition or passion absorbs into itself all the forces of the soul, and leaves us without any energy or inclination for other and equally important things. This will account for the moral sterility of many of us. Says Cicero to a young man: "Hold off from sensuality, or soon you will be unable to think of anything else." Vicious thinking seems to rot the tissues of the brain itself. The passion for money-making drives out from the soul the more gracious impulse of helpfulness toward others and even the desire for self-culture. Under the spell of greed a man possessed of really brilliant talents becomes content to be a mere "grind" in the store or the factory.—J. M. Ludlow.

BY J. C. McQUIDDY.

W. Vantrease, of Norene, Tenn., wishes to know if it is right to invite a Russellite who is fixed in his errors to become a member of a congregation and to call on him to dismiss the congregation. Unless one wishes to become partaker of his errors, it certainly is not right to put him forward as a teacher. A Russellite is sure to teach that the kingdom of Christ is not here, and also to teach that men will have a second chance to obey for a thousand years after death. 2 John 10: 11 is clear upon this point: "If any one cometh unto you, and bringeth not this teaching, receive him not into your house, and give him no greeting: for he that giveth him greeting partaketh in his evil works."

J. J. Hester, of Dover, Tenn., is somewhat concerned over Matt. 27: 3-5 and Acts 1: 18. He says: "If Judas had already hanged himself, how could he have bought the field referred to in Acts 1: 18?" In order to get the passages clearly before our readers, we quote them in full. Matt. 27: 3-5 reads: "Then Judas, who betrayed him, when he saw that he was condemned, repented himself, and brought back the thirty pieces of silver to the chief priests and elders, saying, I have sinned in that I betrayed innocent blood. But they said, What is that to us? see thou to it. And he cast down the pieces of silver into the sanctuary, and departed; and he went away and hanged himself." Acts 1: 18 declares: "Now this man obtained a field with the reward of his iniquity; and falling headlong, he burst asunder in the midst, and all his bowels gushed out." Evidently the rope broke with which he hanged himself, and, falling down, he broke asunder in the midst and his bowels gushed out. The thought is that the field was purchased with the money for which Judas sold Christ. He did not buy the field personally, but the chief priests used the money which he had returned to them for the purchase of this field. The Greek word rendered "purchased" is the form that means "caused to be purchased." Our brother will see, with this understanding, that there is no conflict in the two passages.

A sister asks for a private reply to a number of questions. As she asks that the reply be private, I withhold the name and address. A number of people ask me to answer certain questions privately, which I would be glad to do, but I am too busy to carry on a private query department. I shall answer these queries in the Gospel Advocate in the hope that the sister will see them.

(1) She inquires to know the meaning of Gal. 6: 1, which says: "Brethren, even if a man be overtaken in any trespass, ye who are spiritual, restore such a one in a spirit of gentleness; looking to thyself, lest thou also be tempted." The point on which she wishes information is: "How is a brother restored when he is overtaken in a fault?" When Simon, the sorcerer, had committed a sin after obedience to the gospel, Peter, guided by the Holy Spirit, said to him: "Repent therefore of this thy wickedness, and pray the Lord, if perhaps the thought of thy heart shall be forgiven thee. For I see that thou art in the gall of bitterness and in the bond of iniquity." (Acts 8: 22, 23.) So we see the law of pardon to the erring child of God is repentance and prayer. Whenever a man has done wrong, he should not only be sorry for it, but he should have a change of will which results in turning away from the wrong.

2. The querist says: "If a brother has committed a sin and all the brethren and outsiders know it, can an elder go to the brother and get after him about it and the sinner make confession to the elder that he is guilty and is going to quit, and then the elder make confession to the church for him?" Men who have sinned often get an evangelist or preacher to make the confession for them. Some men are not in the habit of public speaking and are not able to get up and make their confession in a very acceptable manner. If the man who has done wrong is thoroughly penitent for that wrong and authorizes an elder or a preacher to publicly make the confession for him, I cannot see why this is not acceptable in the eyes of the Lord. While James 5: 16 says, "Confess your faults one to another," it does not say that a man is not confessing his faults to the brethren simply because he gets some one to make his statement of confession for him. Christ made and baptized more disciples than did John, and yet he himself did not baptize. He did this through his disciples. (See John 4: 1, 2.)

3. The querist asks: "How do you 'confess your faults one to another?' Does it mean that when you have committed a sin, be it great or small, you may get one of the brethren off to himself and tell him about it, and he go and tell the rest, or should the man tell it to the public himself? If a brother commits a sin and, after he has confessed it to the elder, flatly refuses to confess it before the public, is he acting from a scriptural standpoint? If so, please give me chapter and verse. The brother claims that he was withdrawn from unfairly and for an unjust cause. Has not the church the right to call a meeting of the brethren and have it made satisfactory to all concerned? Again, if two brethren in a body take the same stand in a measure, is it right to withdraw from one and leave the other a member in good standing?" The querist asks other questions touching on the same point; but when these are answered, the others will take care of themselves. When any one has done wrong and that wrong has become public, the truly pentitent man does not care so much that his sin has been found out, but he loathes his sin and is determined to undo the effects of it in as far as possible. The man of such a penitent spirit will cheerfully make his confession, if possible, as public as his sin. It takes this to kill the evil effects of sin, and nothing short of this shows any penitence on the part of the sinner. Whenever a man refuses to confess his sin publicly to the congregation, he is lacking in penitence. He may be sorry that his sin has been found out, but it is the sorrow of the world. Private confessionals for public sins are not authorized by the word of God. Men who are not penitent for their sins usually claim that they were withdrawn from unfairly and unjustly. When they come to see their sin in all its heinousness and ugliness in the sight of God, they will be ready to confess it and make amends for it in as far as possible. The members of the church should not call a meeting in antagonism to the elders, but the withdrawal from a brother should be done with the approval of the whole congregation. When elders act in harmony with the word of God, they should be supported and upheld by the church. If two brethren are guilty of the same wrong, being equally responsible, they should be treated in the same manner. If one is withdrawn from for an offense, then the other should be withdrawn from also. But, without knowing the facts and without understanding the surrounding conditions, it is very hard to answer these questions in an entirely satisfactory manner. I can answer them only from the facts as presented to me. If the facts are not presented correctly, then I may be misled in my answer. I am trying to give the general teaching of the word of God to the best of my ability.

AT HOME AND ABROAD

From J. H. Hines, Montgomery, Ala., February 14: "Yesterday was another big day with the Highland Park Church. One hundred at the Bible school; house full at the morning worship. One young man made the good confession."

John Hayes writes from Bradentown, Fla., February 14: "The mission meeting at Miakka continued over three Lord's days. Four persons were baptized. The little band will keep house for the Lord. My next meeting will be under a tent at Manatee."

From Leslie G. Thomas. Flint, Mich., February 14: "Our work here still moves on. Yesterday a man from the 'digressives' met with us, and said he meant to continue to do so. Last night he was back, with an elder and his wife from the Central Christian Church."

From Ben West, North Fort Worth, Texas, February 14: "Sunday was a great day at the Northside, with six additions and baptismal service at night. Brethren Elkins, Morgan, and Tackett have preached for us recently. Preparations are being made for the revival in May."

From D. S. Ligon, Denton, Texas, February 9: "Last Saturday merning I boarded the train to go to Ravia, Okla., where I preached over Sunday night. Six were baptized Sunday afternoon. This was a fine meeting. Sunday morning and at night we could not seat the people."

If any reader knows of any one, Christian or otherwise, living in or around Baltimore, Md., that would be interested in New Testament Christianity, kindly send name and address to T. H. Walker, 2011 North Charles Street, Baltimore, Md., or to A. B. Comer, Wyoming Apartments, Washington, D. C.

From W. L. Oliphant, Muskogee, Okla., February 15: "Last Lord's day found me with the Tulsa church. We had two grand services. More people were in attendance than ever before. Six were added to the congregation. The church has taken on new life and is doing more than ever before. The home church is doing well. Brethren Bain and Irvine preached excellent sermons in my absence."

J. C. Mosley writes from Jones Hill, Ark., February 11: "I am in a good meeting here. This is out from Little Rock about thirty-five miles. Three have been baptized here this week, making nine baptized that will meet at Mayflower for worship. The children here are anxious to be taught. I gave them a drill every night before my sermon. I have received a letter asking me to come to Dongola, Ill. I may go. I expect to baptize some more here before I go."

From M. C. Cayce, Jackson, Miss., February 17: "Last Sunday we enjoyed a nice service here, with nearly all of our members present. To-night we are to have a cottage prayer meeting. My address is now changed from Fortification Street to 720 South Gallatin Street." A later note from Brother Cayce, written February 18, says: "Notwithstanding yesterday was cold and rainy, twelve adults attended, and I think all enjoyed our cottage prayer-meeting last night. Six of the twelve were men."

From Samuel E. Witty, Ontario, Cal., February 7: "The Ontario revival closed last night with a capacity audience. The attendance and interest were good throughout. There were twenty-seven additions to the congregation—eight baptisms. The work of S. H. Hall was highly satisfactory. Brother Hall preached to a great audience in Los Angeles yesterday. There were two additions—one baptism. Los Angeles and Ontario both outgrowing present houses of worship. California needs more men like S. H. Hall."

S. E. Templeton writes from Altus, Okla., February 10: "On last Friday I and my family arrived in this city. We expect to make our home here for some time. I shall preach here and in near-by sections some. We have a splendid congregation here. Last Lord's day we had two fine services. The morning service was attended by two hundred and fifty people, at least. I am very favorably impressed with the congregation here, and pray that our work together may be the means of winning many souls to Christ."

From T. H. Bass, Stephenville, Texas, February 11: "I have just closed a good meeting at Dublin, Texas, with three additions—two by baptism and one restored. I am visiting the congregations of Earth County that are supporting our county work, getting acquainted with the brethren. They appreciate my efforts and are behind me in the work. The work is increasing in interest all the time. I shall spend the month of August holding meetings out of the county, and should like to hear from any place needing a meeting for that time."

From T. H. Etheridge, Marshall, Texas, February 7: "The work here moves on despite the small pox scare, though that has hindered. Some have been worked over who were 'lying out,' some came from the 'progressives,' and one will be baptized Wednesday night. Only one has moved away, but some are not faithful. The roll has increased from forty-three to seventy-two. The Bible school is well attended, and so is the prayer meeting. We nearly always have visitors. The leadership is intelligent and the spirit of cooperation splendid. Yes, they are liberal. Under God, we expect to succeed."

From J. E. Wainwright, Texarkana, Ark., February 14: "All former records smashed by yesterday's attendance, being unable to seat the crowd comfortably. We have secured the Maccabee Hall, 318½ East Broad, which is better in every respect, for future services. Two identified yesterday. Seven additions during January. People attending who have never heard the gospel before. Our mission work has about grown out of our reach. We rejoice. Do not forget the tabernacle meeting, to begin on the second Lord's day in June, with A. J. Veteto directing the song service. A hearty welcome to all visiting members."

Mrs. Susie Holley, Felix, Ala., writes: "I read the editorial in the Gospel Advocate of January 27, and am glad to know that some one else knows that we need preaching in Alabama. This is certainly a destitute place. People have lived and died and never heard the gospel in its simple form. My own husband has never heard but one sermon. I have two boys that are old enough to join the church. I would be glad if some church would help me to have preaching here. There is not another member within twelve miles. There are a few in Selma, but they have no house to meet in. The nearest church is nine miles south of Selma, I can give a preacher a good bed; but as to the cooking, he will have to be the judge in that case."

E. S. Jelley, writing from Jwalapur, U. P., District Saharanpur, British India, December 30, says: "There were fourteen baptisms this month, so far as I have received word. I am teaching my boys to sell Scripture portions. The people of this place invite me to visit them and teach them the word. Some ask us to teach their children, and some, including two monks, have spoken about becoming Christians." In a private letter to a friend, sent from Tilonia Rajputana, British India, January 11, Brother Jelley says: "I am here at the sanitarium, having brought Mrs. Jelley. The doctor says it is tuberculosis, but evidently quite curable. Let us pray that it may be. There were nineteen baptisms in December in stead of fourteen, as previously reported. Please give my love to all the brethren."

From George W. Farmer, Cleveland, Tenn., February 16: "On the morning of February 12, at the home of the bride's sister, Sister W. R. Clark, and in the presence of quite a number of friends and relatives, the writer united in mariage Vernon Rozar and Sister Josie Shultz. Brother Rozar is the son of our preaching brother, Allen Rozar, of near Boonville, Lincoln County. He is a young man of quiet and placid demeanor, perfectly reliable in every way, is devoted and true to the New Testament order of things, and is developing into a preacher of no mean ability. Sister Josie is a young lady of fine qualities, of industrious habits, admirably domesticated, and of genuine Christian character. We bespeak for them a life of much usefulness and happiness in the world." The Gospel Advocate offers congratulations.

From S. W. Bell, Sedalia, Mo., February 9: "It was my happy privilege to visit the church that worships in the hall at Cherokee and Texas Streets, St. Louis, last Sunday. I left home Saturday afternoon, and was entertained in the hospitable home of Brother and Sister W. W. Moody, 3667 Botanical Avenue, returning home Sunday night. The good people asked me to visit them at least once a month for a while, which I have agreed to do. If some of the good Christians in other parts of the country could realize how very badly these people need their church lot paid for and a house on it, I think they would send to this fund oftener and more liberally. They seem to appreciate all that has been done, but they need twenty-five hundred dollars more to clear up the lots. Send to Brother Moody before you forget it."

Claud F, Witty's new address is 2140 West Warren Avenue, Detroit, Mich.

Thomas H. Burton, of Union, S. C., has been a visitor in the city for some days, and has stopped at our office several times. He expects to be out from his home for sixty days.

- F. P. Fonner, Buffalo, W. Va., says of the Gospel Advocate: "I have been reading the Advocate eighteen years, and I do not want to miss a single copy. It is a great missionary paper."
- J. L. Hines, of Monticello, Ky., was smiling in the Gospel Advocate office last week. He always looks cheerful, and now reports work going well in his portion of the vineyard. He advocates the Advocate in the home.
- E. E. Shoulders, of Denver, Col., is in the city. He thinks of remaining here for two weeks yet. His work has been for several years in Texas and Colorado. He will make definite announcement of future plans later. While in the city he is a frequent and welcome caller at this office.

Charles L. Talley, the efficient preacher, of Cookeville, Tenn., come in to give a name of one of his neighbors for continuance on our subscription list. Brother Talley is a good friend of the Gospel Advocate, and puts it into every home he can get it in. He reports church work doing well in Cookeville.

Changes of address: E. S. Siddall, from Cleveland to Ravenna, Ohio; M. C. Cayce, from 352 Fortification Street to 720 South Gallatin Street, Jackson, Miss.; T. E. Tatum, from St. Petersburg, Fla., to Jackson, Tenn., Route 1; C. E. Wooldridge, from General Delivery to 2018 Cullen Street, Dallas, Texas.

- J. W. Wescoat, in changing the address of his paper from a rural route to 406 Fillmore Street, Amarillo, Texas, says: "I am here confined on my back, and have been for about a year. Three doctors have given me up; say there is no hope for me. I am eighty-six years old. Pray for me. I have hope for a heavenly home when I am called."
- A. L. Dixon, of Dellrose, Tenn., is a song leader, and is making his arrangements for schools and leading the song service in protracted meetings. Those who desire his services should write him as above. His son is also a song leader, and would be glad to make arrangements to lead the song service in meetings or to teach singing schools.
- W. J. Lockhart, of Vance, Texas, informs us of the death of his father, R. H. Lockhart, who died on November 11, 1920. He says: "My father clung to the Gospel Advocate to the last. After he had grown so feeble that he could devote but a few moments daily to reading, he shared his Bible with the Advocate. Allow me to thank you for the consolation that your work was to him in his last days."

Dan E. Beasley, of Dickson, Tenn., who recently went home from a seven-weeks' stay in one of our hospitals on account of a very severe accident that happened to him, is still improving, we are glad to announce. At his doctor's suggestion he goes immediately to Biloxi, Miss., for a fewweeks' sojourn, thinking the climate and the surroundings will be helpful to his complete recovery. We hope he will soon attain to that much-desired condition.

From B. W. Davis, Ashland City, Tenn., February 17: 'I preached at Sycamore Saturday night, February 12, and twice on Sunday. One confession, baptizing Sunday afternoon. I am engaging time for protracted meetings, and would like to hear from some places where I could labor during April, May, and June. I am ready and very anxious to fill this time. If you can use me during these months, write me at once. I still have some time for late fall meetings."

From Tice Elkins, Fort Worth, Texas, February 14: "Our crowd at Southside church yesterday was the greatest ever. There were four additions, and four the Sunday before. The committee on improvements met and decided to build a large balcony in the house, to take care of the overflow crowds which have become the custom lately. Brother Morgan is here, and renders valuable help to me on the paper, Grace and Truth. He preaches somewhere each Lord's day, and is well liked. The gospel work in Fort Worth is growing better every day."

J. W. Grant preached at Reid and Ridley Avenues, this city, on Lord's-day morning and night, two of a series of four sermons on "Our Future State." He finished the series on Monday and Tuesday nights. Large and appreciative audiences attended these services, and much satisfaction was expressed to him by many of the hearers at the scriptural way in which he handled each of the four sub-themes, which were: (1) "Heaven;" (2) "Condition of the Dead;" (3) "The Book and the Books of the Judgment;" and (4) "Our Eternal Home."

We have just received notice of Annual Week of Bible Lectures at Abilene, Texas. A number of preachers have been selected to deliver addresses on especially chosen subjects. F. W. Smith, of this city, expects to deliver a lecture on "The Holy Spirit in Creation," Wednesday evening, February 23; "The Holy Spirit in Redemption," Thursday evening, February 24; "The Holy Spirit in Conversion," Friday evening, February 25; "The Holy Spirit in Witnessing to Sonship," Saturday evening, February 26; "How the Holy Spirit Leads the Children of God," Sunday evening, February 27. Other speakers, such as G. H. P. Showalter, John T. Smith, A. LeRoy Elkins, Early Arceneaux, and others, are expected to make addresses.

R. A. Craig writes from Louisville, Ky., February 18: "Last Sunday I was at Van Buren for the morning service and at Shelbyville for the afternoon service. We are making an effort to establish the loyal cause in Shelbyville, and I think we will succeed. I have been kept so busy of late, there are so many calls and so few to fill them. Preaching for two congregations on the same day is pretty hard for any preacher, especially so when he has to drive from fifteen to twenty miles to make the appointments. I am sure the Lord will bless our efforts if we are striving in his name. I would like to ask my Christian brethren everywhere to pray for my brother, who is dangerously ill at one of the hospitals here. We are doing all we can for him. He begs so earnestly to get well, I feel that God will hear us in this hour of great need."

Andrew Perry writes from Bardwell, Ky., February 16: "I spent from Thursday till Sunday night with our congregation at Christian Chapel, near Dongola, Ill. I became acquainted with this congregation thirty-four years ago, and worked with them one week out of each month for one and one-half years, with a good number of additions. intervals I have visited them ever since. Death is making many changes with them. But the congregation, although it has had many trials, has held its own and remained loyal all these years. It has also been the means of building up a good congregation in Dongola. I spent Monday in visiting among the members in Dongola. They are planning a meeting the last of March and first of April by J. C. Mosley, of Tennessee. I came to Bardwell yesterday. Joe Ratcliffe has a very sick wife, and he himself has been sick part of the winter. I will go to Wingo this afternoon.'

Just before going to press it comes to us in a perfectly trustworthy way that N. B. Chenault, of Wichita Falls. Texas, a warm personal friend of E. A. Elam and a kinsman of his wife, has donated fifty thousand dollars to the David Lipscomb College upon certain conditions that the trustees of the college will be sure to accept. In his letter of presentation of the gift to the board Mr. Chenault says. "This donation is made through my profound respect for the Bible as the will of God and my desire to aid in this way in teaching it to the young; and is for the purpose of endowing a chair of the Bible in the said David Lipscomb College, to be known as the E. A. Elam chair, the proceeds of which donation are to be used in the support of teachers of the Bible and studies connected with the study of the Bible in this college." The trustees of the college highly appreciate this gift, as not alone to the college, but through it to the churches of Christ at large and to the advancement of the truth.

"Queries and Answers," by David Lipscomb and E. G. Sewell, edited by M. C. Kurfees, is just off the press. have been compelled to make this book at a heavy expense on account of hig wages and the exceedingly high cost of paper. We at first thought we would sell the book for three dollars and fifty cents per copy, postpaid, but have decided, regardless of extra cost, to make the price three dollars. The book is neatly and handsomely bound, contains seven hundred and sixty-eight pages, and will be an ornament to any library. The contents of the book cover a period of forty years during the most active period in the lives of these two consecrated and godly men. They worked together in life, so our thought has been to yoke them together in death. This book will live on after they are gone, to give information to thousands of readers. truth is just the same now as it was during their lives, so their inquiries will be found just as valuable and just as beneficial as when they were first given. We have inserted a photograph of both Brethren Lipscomb and Sewell in the front of the book. Every preacher, every elder, and every other person interested in religious work should by all means have a copy of this book Send all orders to the McQuiddy Printing Company, Nashville, Tenn.

BY J. C. M'Q.

On page 183 of this issue will be found an article on the subject, "Making the Movies Safe for the Child." This article is copied from the Literary Digest, and is deserving careful consideration. When secular papers take the position that is taken in this article, it certainly behooves a Christian to give careful consideration to the subject. If the picture shows are evil, and if the motion-picture theater is made up largely of "the life of the underworld, vamping, burglary, illicit love, and custard-pie throwing," no Christian who is devoted to building up the cause of Jesus Christ can consistently encourage, support, or countenance such shows in any way. If such shows are bad for the children, they are also bad for the grown-ups, for the children only reflect the character of the grown-ups. What is good for the grown-ups is good for the children, and what is good for the children should be good for the grown-ups.

That children must have some manner of amusement cannot be doubted; but the parents should see that their amusements are of the right nature and are not calculated to corrupt their morals. The position that all amusement is sinful is not tenable. No one should take such a position. Picture shows are not wrong per se; so their merits or demerits must be determined by the fruit they bear. If their influence is evil and degrading and caculated to make people more worldly instead of more spiritual, then they should not be encouraged. It is a fact that those who are seeking to honor and please God and who are seeking first the kingdom of God and his righteousness do not, as a rule, take interest in picture shows. Picture shows do not appeal to them, and they have no desire whatever to frequent them. On the other hand, those Christians who are following God from afar and who are not seeking to lead the highest type of Christian life usually find time to be regular attendants at motion-picture theaters. Paul exhorts Christians to abstain from every form of evil. (1 Thess. 5: 22.) Again, he urges them to let their forbearance be known unto all men. (Phil. 4: 5.) If the conduct of Christians is liable to mislead others, then they should forbear any momentary pleasure that might come to them by indulging in such conduct, in order to help and uplift others. Offenses and occasions of stumbling must come, but woe to that man by whom they come! The Savior says: "Woe unto the world because of occasions of stumbling! for it must needs be that the occasions come; but woe to that man through whom the occasion cometh!" (Matt. 18: 7.) It may be freely granted that some Christians might not be damaged by attendance at a picture show, while others would be. While some Christians may be able to attend motion-picture theaters without being morally injured, yet others cannot. This liberty should not be abused by any Christian. While a man that was informed could eat meat offered to an idol without committing sin, yet another could not, and the liberty of the informed man, if exercised, would become a stumblingblock to a weak brother. In such cases Paul says: "For if a man see thee who hast knowledge sitting at meat in an idol's temple, will not his conscience, if he is weak, be emboldened to eat things sacrificed to idols? For through thy knowledge he that is weak perisheth, the brother for whose sake Christ died. And thus, sinning against the brethren, and wounding their conscience when it is weak, ye sin against Christ. Wherefore, if meat causeth my brother to stumble, I will eat no flesh for evermore, that I cause not my brother to stumble." (1 Cor. 8: 10-13.)

Just a few days ago a brother told me of a sister who had been attending church regularly. For some reason she dropped out, and this brother and his wife were insisting on her attending church with them. She declined to do so, stating that she had seen the preacher in a picture show and did not, therefore, care to attend church where he preached. This shows that this young lady does not regard attendance at motion-picture theaters as consistent with the highest type of Christian life. Evidently she did not think a Paul or a Peter would have attended a picture show. This shows that even supporters of theaters do not consider constant theatergoing as consistent with a devout Christian life. Paul admonishes us as follows: "I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, to present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable to God, which is your spiritual service. And be not fashioned according to this world: but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is the good and acceptable and perfect will of God." (Rom. 12: 1, 2,)

Again, attending picture shows is calculated to deaden the conscience and make one less sensible to the evil influences of sin. When one begins to attend picture shows that are evil in their tendencies, at first he is shocked, but afterwards he looks upon them with great allowance. Pope has well said:

> Vice is a monster of such frightful mien, As to be hated needs but to be seen; Yet seen too often, familiar with her face, We first endure, then pity, then embrace.

While it is not my purpose to condemn any innocent amusement and to condemn going to any picture show that is elevating and uplifting, yet I am sure that people should know the character of any motion-picture theater before attending at all, and even then it is not well to contract the habit of regular attendance at such picture shows. All pictures should be carefully censored, and those that are filled with Illicit love and that are rather calculated to inculcate and suggest crime should be discountenanced, discouraged, and not patronized. I am sure that if one keeps busy in the Christian life, and if it is his constant aim to live for Christ and to work for Christ with all his might, he will have little or no desire to find amusement in such places. He can find ample amusement in other things that meet with the approval of God and all right-thinking people.

Teaching the Word of God Diligently to Children.

BY E. A. E.

In Deut. 6: 1-9, as in other scriptures, Moses teaches the children of Israel how to live in the land just over the Jordan which they were about to enter in order to prosper, to prolong their days, and to be happy—namely, to fear Jehovah, to love him with all the heart and soul and strength, to remember his word, and to keep all his statutes and commandments. Also, he tells them how to remember the word of God, or to keep it upon their heart—namely, to bind it as a sign upon their hand and frontlets between their eyes, to write it upon the doorposts of their houses and upon their gates, and to talk together about it. Another most important thing is: "Thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children."

"Teach" and "diligent" are words of great meaning. We know what is meant by doing anything diligently. Just so parents are to teach the word of God to their children. "To teach" really means to cause to know; hence, parents must give all diligence to cause their children to know the word of God.

For one or more of several reasons parents may be unable to teach the word of God to their children. (1) Some parents cannot teach astronomy or history to their children for the reason they do not know astronomy or history, and for this reason they cannot teach the Bible; (2) some children, like some grown people, will not be taught, or will not learn the word of God; (3) some few are incapable of learning it and are in a safe condition, anyway; (4) parents cannot teach that which they know, but do not desire to teach, just as children will not learn that which they will not set their hearts to know. To interest children in the Bible and to beget in them a desire to know the truth is one of the first and most important things. "Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh," and this is the most effectual way to cause children to appreciate and to learn the Bible. When parents are so saturated, as it were, with the word of God, so overflowing with it, that they talk of it when they sit together with their children in the home, when they walk together, and remember it as the last thing upon retiring to bed and the first thing upon awaking in the morning, then their children will be impressed with its importance and realize that to obey God is indeed the foremost thing and the one purpose of life.

And these words, which I command thee this day, shall be upon thy heart; and thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thy house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up.

The matters of which parents talk most to one another and to their children are considered by the children of greatest importance; and when the word of God is not spoken of at all, it is natural for children to consider it of no importance. This command to teach the word of God to their children was repeated frequently to the Israelites. (See Ex. 13: 8; Deut. 11: 19.)

Parents are commanded in the New Testament now to do more than to teach, in the ordinary meaning of "teach," the Bible to their children; they are commanded to "nurture" their children—to cause them to grow and to develop—"in the chastening and admonition of the Lord" (Eph. 6: 4)—that is, to receive and follow the Lord's admonitions, to yield to the Lord's corrections, and to bear under such cultivation the peaceable fruit of righteousness.

This is a sadly neglected duty, which neglect brings irreparable and immeasurable loss to children. Disobedience to parents is placed by the Bible in a long list of evils as one cause of "grievous times."

In both the Old Testament and the New Testament God pronounces great blessings upon all who fear him, think upon his name, and speak often to one another in regard to him. Such he calls his "jewels"—his own possession—whom he will spare as a father spares his own son who serves him, and whose names are written in his book of remembrance. (Mal. 3: 16-18.)

CHRISTIAN HOMES.

Christian homes are one result from teaching the word of God diligently to children.

Such homes are the crying need of the present. Very many parents and more children seem to have turned themselves loose to idleness, pleasure seeking, and worldliness.

Nothing can take the place of home training and home influence. But with the tendency of the age not to build homes, and even to break up existing ones, this great and godly influence is gradually being lost.

Living in boarding houses and flats and the disposition of some married people not to rear families make against Christian homes.

God's rule is that the younger women "marry, bear children, rule the household, give no occasion to the adversary for reviling: for already some are turned aside after Satan." (1 Tim. 5: 14, 15.) But God makes provisions for honorable exceptions to his general rule on the question of marrying.

Paul exhorts old women to "train the young women to love their husbands, to love their children, to be soberminded, chaste, workers at home, kind, being in subjection to their own husbands, that the word of God be not blasphemed." (Tit. 2: 4, 5.) To pervert this order is to blaspheme the word of God. God first created man, then for man he created woman as a help suited to man. He made man the head of woman, as he made Christ head over all things to the church. (Eph. 5: 22-33.) To pervert this order is to dishonor God. God ordained the family, and to destroy the family and its influence is to destroy God's ordinance and man's happiness.

The obligations of man, of husband and father, are just as great and as binding as the obligations of woman, of the wife and mother. These obligations cannot be broken without sin and its sad and shameful and woeful consequences. But in many places, and even with many professed religious people, these obligations are treated indeed as "a scrap of paper" and are trampled underfoot in utter disrespect for the word of God.

Home building is one of the greatest works people can engage in. Christian homes are the foundation of civilization, the flower gardens of purity, the very nurseries of the church, and the vestibules of heaven. Sad it is that at this present time the general influence of business and of not a few schools is not conducive to home building.

God in his great goodness and wisdom knows what is best for men and women, parents and children—the whole human race; and he has given the Bible as an infallible guide in all these duties and obligations. Let all—the homes, the schools, the church—work and teach and pray for a return to the Bible in all things.

We hardly know what freedom is until through the spiritual experience of faith in Jesus we find release, and are able to look upward to Him who giveth freely, and upbraideth not.—Selected.

"Is Baptism Necessary to Salvation?"

BY F. W. SMITH.

Continuing a review of the article on the above subject which appeared in the Baptist and Reflector, I note that the author, after building a "man of straw," proposes to demolish the helpless thing. He says: "I want to assert plainly and flatly that the doctrine is false, and I propose to prove it so." Well, now, if he needs any help in horizontalizing the perpendicularity of that "man of straw," I will gladly assist him: for I, too, "assert plainly and flatly that the doctrine is false." But when he undertakes to tell what Alexander Campbell taught, that is "a gray horse of another color," and I shall have somewhat to say about that. He says:

Alexander Campbell taught that all unimmersed persons are out of Christ and lost. How false this is! The Bible nowhere says that baptism is a part of salvation, while it does say that we are saved through Jesus Christ.

Campbell further says that a change of views means a change of heart. According to that, as one has said, a man's heart would be changed every time he changed his views.

Mr. Campbell never posed as judge of the destiny of man, as this scribe here represents him as doing. He did teach that all unimmersed gospel subjects are out of Christ, and gave the following divine authority for the doctrine: "For ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus. For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ." (Gal. 3: 26, 27.) Again: "Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death?" (Rom. 6: 3.) Here is a self-evident proposition: If one is baptized into Christ, as these scriptures most plainly assert, then he was not in Christ before being baptized. It is evident that the man who wrote the document under review does not believe these scriptures, and it is no fault of those he misrepresents. It was not the province of Alexander Campbell to say who should or should not be saved, but he did teach that the promise was to those, and those only, who were baptized into Christ, and no one has ever disproved his contention on the subject. Of course a man's heart is changed when his views are changed, but that does not necessarily mean that the heart has undergone that moral change called in scripture "conversion." By metonymy of speech a part of a thing is put for the whole; and the mind, or judgment, which is a faculty of the heart, is that to which Mr. Campbell referred. Alexander Campbell taught, just as the Bible does, that conversion is a moral process beginning in faith and consummated in the act of baptism, which completed the turning to Christ. This man says that "they "-meaning Alexander Campbell and those associated with him in the "Restoration" of New Testament teaching-misunderstood and misinterpreted the Well, I have never pinned my faith to the teaching of any uninspired man; but if I had to make choice between Campbell and the man who wrote the document under review, I most certainly prefer Campbell.

His "examination," as he calls it, of "the passages in which their doctrine rests" would be amusing if it were not so pitiful. His exegesis of John 3: 5 is ridiculous in the extreme, and runs counter to all of the leading lights in the Baptist Church. After pumping all of the water out of the passage, he sums up his remarkable discovery thus: "Thus the passage would mean, according to this [do not forget that it is his "this"], except ye be born of the Holy Spirit and Christ, ye cannot enter the kingdom of heaven," etc. "The 'water' here may be typical," he continues, evidently forgetting that he had eliminated water from the passage. It is simply lamentable to think how men will pervert and deny plain statements of holy writ in order to repudiate baptism as one of the conditions of salvation. J. R. Graves, the ablest man the Baptists ever had in the South, had this to say:

If Brother Vaughn convinced us that "born of water" refers to anything but the baptism of one previously born of the Spirit, we never knew it, and we would have owned it to him and our readers. It means nothing else, and no Baptist that we ever heard or read of [the author of the article I am reviewing, be it remembered, had not then been born], ever believed otherwise until A. Campbell frightened them away from an interpretation that is sustained by the consensus of all scholars of all denominations of all ages. (Tennessee Baptist, October, 1886.)

Graves was certainly equal in point of scholarship to the Baptist and Reflector scribe.

This man cannot or will not quote correctly the scriptures he tries to use. Note this: "Whosoever believeth in him shall receive remission of sins." (Acts 10: 43.) Here is the way the passage reads: "To him give all the prophets witness, that through his name whosoever believeth in him shall receive remission of sins." He left out "through his name," which makes a material change in the passage. for we are baptized into his name as an expression of our faith. Of course the heart is purified by faith, but when? Peter says the heart is purified by obedience. (1 Pet. 1: 22.) Yes, the blood of Jesus cleanseth from sin, but when? When we are baptized into his death—that is, the benefits of his death. (Rom, 6: 3, 4.) But we are reminded that Jesus said, "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life;" and we are also told that "he that obeyeth not the Son shall not see life." (John 3: 36, Revised Version.)

Elders and Bachelors.

BY H. C. WYLIE,

The eldership has its God-given place in the church of Christ. Every one who is familiar with the Bible knows this is true. No community of disciples can develop in Christian growth and usefulness without the fatherly care of the eldership. I do not claim to know all about the responsibility and work of the eldership, nor of an evangelist; yet when called upon to officiate in either capacity, I gladly respond, and the brethren, so far as I know, are satisfied with my work; and yet I am a bachelor. Is this right? I think so. If I did not, I would refuse to act in such capacity. Moreover, I claim to be in company, in all such work, with the apostle Paul. He was a bachelor. (1 Cor. 9: 5.) That is some consolation. And so far as authority in the church was concerned, he claimed to be equal to the very chiefest apostles. (2 Cor. 11: 5.) Peter and John were both elders. (2 Pet. 1: 5; 2 John 1: 1.) Then, Paul was an elder also. We do not know that these apostles were ever formally appointed to the eldership. The apostles were placed first in authority in the church, (1 Cor. 12: 28.) They had the power to bind and loose. (Matt. 16: 19.) Then the right to serve in any place in the church was inherent in the apostolic office. Again, as further proof that Paul was an elder in the church, I quote the following: "Neglect not the gift that is in thee, which was given thee by prophecy, with the laying on of the hands of the presbytery." (1 Tim. 4: 14.) In connection with this, please read 2 Tim. 1: 6: "Wherefore I put thee in remembrance that thou stir up the gift of God. which is in thee by the putting on of my hands." Then, since Paul, being a bachelor, could serve as an elder in the church, why can a bachelor not scripturally serve now?

"Resist beginnings." You cannot curb the power of the river; choke its source. You cannot arrest the fury of the conflagration; put out the spark. It is almost impossible to check hatreds that have been allowed free course; never let them begin. An animosity will sometimes spring up before one knows it; make its life a brief one. Animosity grows into ill will and malignity and rancor, and these are far more hurtful to ourselves than to those against whom they are directed. Subdue them by the spirit of Christ, without which we are none of his.—Selected.

Debate at Elk City, Oklahoma,

BY H. D. MANSUR,

This debate grew out of a bundle of Adventist literature mailed to the church of Christ at this place. The printed matter was turned over to our minister, Brother J. A. Cullum. After some deliberation and consultation with the brethren, it was agreed that he should challenge the Seventh-Day Adventists to affirm two propositions in debate, which he would deny. The propositions were: (1) 'Resolved, that the law (the Ten Commandments), as found in Ex. 20: 1-17, is perfect in character, universal in application, and unchangeable in nature, as applied to man." "Resolved, that the Scriptures teach that the seventh day of the creative week was and is the Lord's day, or Sabbath, and was bound upon all men in all ages, present and future." These propositions were accepted by the Adventists and the debate was l eld.

The debate continued four nights, with two thirty-minute speeches by each of the speakers at each session. Large crowds were in attendance throughout. This discussion was carried on in a gentlemanly manner and with the very best of feeling on both sides, there being no personalities or mud-slinging engaged in. At times Elder Hickman read passage after passage of scripture with no bearing whatever on the subject under consideration in an effort to substantiate his theory and take up his time. Brother Cullum had to pin him down close in order to make him come to the Sabbath question at all; and when he put forth the strongest he had, Brother Cullum would unravel his arguments so completely that every one could see their fallacy.

Elder Hickman is the recognized leader among his people in this State, doubtless the most able debater they have in the State, and his followers have been quite active in this locality for some time.

The church here feels very proud of the showing made by Brother Cullum in deportment and in the way he handled his arguments. There were people in attendance that never had been in our meetinghouse before. We feel sure that the cause of Christ will be benefited and that many who heard the discussion will return to hear the truth preached as it is in Christ Jesus.

Be patient with every one, but above all with yourself-I mean, do not be disturbed because of your imperfections, and always rise up bravely from a fall.-Francis de Sales.

Thoughts.

No matter what a man says in the church, you know what kind of religion he has when you know what kind of company he keeps.

The supreme inquiry for each of us when summoned to a new work is not whether we possess courage or qualifications for it, but whether we have been called to it by God; and when that is so, there is no further cause of anxiety.-F. B. Meyer.

Echoes From East Tennessee.

BY GEORGE W. FARMER.

The program of work for the Cleveland church is as follows: Lord's day, 10 A.M., Bible school; 11 A.M., preaching and communion services; 7:15 P.M., preaching; Tuesday, 2 P.M., the sisters meet to sew and make clothing for the poor; Wednesday, 7:15 P.M., prayer meeting; Thursday, 2 P.M., the ladies meet for Bible study and to lay plans to care for the sick, poor, and needy. Every Lord's day at 2:30 P.M. I have an appointment at some accessible point from Cleveland, as follows: First Lord's day, at Calhoun, fifteen miles north; second Lord's day, at Union Grove, six miles east; third Lord's day, at Blackfox, six miles south; fourth Lord's day, at Benton, fifteen miles northeast. To these appointments quite a number of the Cleveland church accompany me with their cars, and carry others, all of whom assist us in singing and other-

The Cleveland church is getting to be a "live wire." The interest is better than it has ever been before and is growing along all lines, and the attendance taxes the capacity of our house. On the first and third Lord's days in each month special contributions are made to a charity fund, by which we are able to care for the ncor.

Prof. E. C. Coffman, from Knoxville: was with the church here last Lord's day and preached an interesting discourse. The folks were highly pleased with his talk. We hope to be able to use him quite a good deal in this East Tennessee work.

I was with the church at Union Chapel, in the suburbs of Rockwood. on Saturday, February 5, at 7:15 P.M., and on Lord's day at 11 A.M. and 7 P.M.; also at Pond Grove at 2:30 P.M. There were good and interesting audiences at all of these services. We have some good, faithful brethren and sisters there. A lot, well located, has been purchased in Rockwood, and in the near future a neat and commodious church house will be erected for the benefit of all who mean to worship and work after the New Testament order. In Rockwood there is a large digressive congregation, made up of some of the wealthiest and most prominent people in the town. Many there are not satisfied with conditions. The Lord willing, we are going to give them an opportunity to do better.

I am working hard and making a great sacrifice for the cause in East Tennessee, but I am really enjoying it.

Indiana.

Clinton, February 7.—I have been here at Fairview Church since Friday. On Friday and Saturday nights our audiences were very small on account of rain and bad roads. Yesterday, however, we had a fine meeting for worship, and also for preaching last night. This congregation is making good growth in Bible knowledge and working ability. While they have no elders, on account of lack of qualified men, they are having grand meetings for worship and are doing good work. I shall go to Christian Chapel, near Dongola, Ill., the last of this week, and shall visit West Kentucky next week.—Andrew Perry.

Oklahoma.

Muskogee, February 7.-Work with the East Okmulgee Avenue Church is moving on nicely. Brother Foster's ten-days' meeting closed last week. Brother Foster's One was added to the congregation. Yesterday three new deacons were chosen to assist the three who have been serving the church. Some of the ladies of the church, assisted by a few of the men, are doing some charity work among the poor. Sister Harrison and I recently visited the little hut of a poverty-stricken family in the outskirts of the city for the purpose of giving to them, in Jesus' name, some much-needed raiment, and, upon inquiry, we found the mother to be a member of the one body. Let us do good as we have opportunity.-W. L. Oliphant.

Elk City, February 7.—Yesterday was another good day for the church in Elk City. The members of our Bible-study classes reported a total of two hundred and thirty chapters read during the past week; and this isn't promiscuous reading, but careful study. Since our debate with the Adventists several outsiders, some Methodists and Baptists, are regular in their attendance. I have also been requested to come over and talk with an Adventist lady relative to receiving her into the fellowship of the church. We are to have a special meeting on the last three days of March and the first day of April, to which we cordially invite all gospel preachers. We especially invite all Oklahoma preachers. Those who are on either the college or paper committee are requested to be here, as we expect to hold a spe-cial educational rally while assembled. We include in our invitation gospel singers, elders, editors, and Christian college presidents or teachers. is to be no close-communion affair. The things we hope to do at this meeting will not be for the benefit of one portion of the brotherhood to the exclusion of any of the rest, but will be for the Masters cause in general.-J. A. Cullum.

Tennessee.

Henderson, February 10.—On last Lord's day I was with the brethren at Bethany, near Paris, and we had a very enjoyable service. In the afternoon I preached again at Zion's Hill, where another group of brethren assembled to keep in memory our Savior's death. These are all good people; yet, as it seems to be everywhere, there are those who are more zealous and interested than others. These are carrying the work forward in hope of the crown. Brethren, I have no meetings engaged for the month of June. If you enjoy hearing the gospel and want the word proclaimed in your town or countryside, write me.—Leland H. Knight.

No Worms in a Healthy Child

All children troubled with Worms have an unhealthy color, which indicates poor blood, and as a tule, there is more or less stomach disturbance. GROVE'S TASTELESS CHILL TONIC given regularly for two or three weeks will enrich the blood, improve the disestion, and act as a general Strengthening Tonic to the whole system. Nature will then throw off or dispel the worms, and the Child will be in perfect health. Pleasant to take. 60c per bottle.

HOW WOMEN OF MIDDLE AGE

May Escape the Dreaded Sufferings of that Period by Taking Mrs. Block's Advice

Hopkins, Minn.—"During Change of Life I had hot flashes and suffered for two years. I saw Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Com-Vegetable Compound advertised in the paper and got good results from taking it. I recommend your medicine to my friends and you may publish this fact as a testimonial."—Mrs.ROB-ERT BLOCK, Box 542, Honkins Minn. Hopkins, Minn.

It has been said that not one woman in a thousand passes this perfectly natural change without experiencing a train of very annoying and sometimes painful symptoms. Those dreadful hot flashes, sinking spells, spots before the eyes, dizzy spells, nervousness, are only a few of the symptoms. Every woman at this age should profit by Mrs. Block's experience and try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

If you have the slightest doubt that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will help you, write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass., about your health. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman, and held in strict confidence.

SOUTH IS TURNING AGAINST CALOMFI

Mr. Dodson, the "Liver Tone" Man, Responsible for Change for the Better.

Every druggist in town has noticed a great falling off in the sale of calomel. They all give the same reason. Dodson's Liver Tone is taking its place.

"Calomel is dangerous and people know it." Dodson's Liver Tone is personally guaranteed by every druggist who sells it. A large bottle doesn't cost very much but if it fails to give easy relief in every case of liver sluggishness and constipa-tion, just ask for your money back.

Dodson's Liver Tone is a pleasant-tasting, purely vegetable remedy, harm-iess to both children and adults. Take a spoonful at night and wake up feeling fine; no biliousness, sick headache, acid stomach or constipated bowels. It doesn't gripe or cause inconvenience all the next day like violent calonal. Take the next day like violent calomel. Take a dose of calomel today and tomorrow you will feel weak, sick and nauseated. Don't lose a day.

Facts and Musings.

BY JOHN T. HALL. The congregation in Jackson, Tenn., is known far and near as the Highland church of Christ. Prof. A. G. Freed, of Henderson, Tenn., preaches for the church once a month; Brother Howell, formerly of Obion, twice per month. The membership is about two hundred. The brethren selected years ago Brethren A. M. Tucker, W. H. Sanders, and T. E. Tatum, elders; Brethren J. W. Hall and - Stovall, deacons; and Brother Dees, secretary. One thing can be said very favorably of them: they are prompt in keeping church expenses paid up, and occasionally make donations to weak congregations elsewhere. The question comes up with some of us, why continue month in and year in to pay preachers high salaries to preach to a well-enlightened congregation, when it is a fact that all around us and in every direction there are many, many thousands who never heard the gospel in its true light as we loudly claim it should be preached? Preachers and members, of the various congregations, one and all, should come down to one common level. We should all be willing to make the necessary sacrifice of our time and means to further on the work taught us in the great Book. We do not practice what we preach. We pray for the conversion of the world. Our lives, our actions, are not in keeping with our prayers. We strive and aim for a good time regardless of the wants and needs of the other fellow. Some are indifferent, selfish, and hypocritical, and do not seem to fully realize it. To say that we are doing our best in the great work before us might be criticized. The people who are distressed either in mind or body are the ones to be helped. It cannot be said truthfully that peace and harmony prevail in all congregations. Troubles come up, but woe be unto the one who causes these schisms! No educational institution or political party can grow and be prosperous without universal harmony. The humble duty and work of the ministers of the gospel, elders, deacons, and of every member of the body of Christ, are plainly taught us in the great Book. Why spend your money helping to build churches and for the preaching of the gospel, and at the same time harbor in your heart a spirit of indifference, of lording it over God's heritage, wanting to be "boss?" There is a difference in knowledge and wisdom. The Lord Jesus Christ plainly and forcibly commands us to study and know our duty toward God and man. Solomon teaches us to be wise. It is a great lesson which should be impressed upon the mind of every one. When you do right, you feel right; when you do wrong, you feel wrong. Our beloved brother, A. G. Freed, often says in his sermons: "Do just what the Bible says, no more and no less, and you know that you are right and cannot be mistaken." If you are not humble and sincere in your Christian work, you are not happy. The eunuch obeyed, and went on his way rejoicing. Sometimes we are persecuted for contending for the truth and for cur efforts in trying to live up to the high standard of duty. Better to leave off the ways of the world and desire to be popular with the Lord Jesus Christ. In order to have good. influential, growing congregations, we must go on the Bible plan. We should endeavor to be "one in Christ Jesus," to be kindly affectioned one toward another, and to go hand in hand and heart to heart in the great work before us. Building houses of worship and spreading the gospel are parts of the great work of the church. We are to help feed the hungry, to clothe the naked, and to bury the dead. There is something for every one to do, regardless of how little of this world's goods you may have. The poet has said:

"If you have not gold and silver ever ready to command,

If you cannot to the needy reach an ever open hand.

You can visit the afflicted, o'er the erring you can weep.'

Brethren, I call you to remembrance of the above duties. We are free We can obey and be saved, agents. or, like the five virgins, we can be negligent and have the door shut against us and be lost. The play of life will soon be over. When you are helping others to live and lead a better life, you are bringing joy and happiness to yourself, and your influence will be felt and realized for good. We often know what we ought to do, but do not act wisely.

RECIPE FOR GRAY HAIR.

To 1/2 pint of water add 1 ounce of bay rum, a small box of Barbo Compound, and % ounce of glycerine. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it at home at very little cost. Apply to the hair twice a week until the desired shade is obtained. It will gradually darken streaked, faded, or gray hair and make it soft and glossy. It will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy. and does not rub off.

Wheat and Chaff.

BY A. ELLMORE.

There are two things which give us the value of time-the Bible and the deathbed

What would our lives have been, had it not been for the early training and pious lives of our parents?

Some old people regret the loss of memory, and yet we remember many things which it would have been better if we had forgotten.

Harthly treasures have to be worked for, and after being obtained they give us trouble. Heavenly treasures are given to us, and afford us lasting peace.

If aroused at midnight by the startling cry, "Sir, your house is on fire!" would we turn over and say, "I will attend to that to-morrow?"

No man had the privilege of choosing either his birthplace or his blood, but he has the privilege of choosing his path in life and of doing his full duty according to talents and opportunities, and thus honoring his ancestry and blessing his posterity.

What! Nobody right but you? Do you not think a person has the right to hold an opinion? Yes, that is precisely the thing to do with an opinion. It is not for holding opinions that men are to blame, but for expressing them. Preach your faith, but suppress your opinions. People care but little about our guesses.

Riches are uncertain. Sometimes they fly away from their possessor, and often men go away and leave their riches. I know of but one way for Christians to enjoy their wealth forever-namely, to use it bountifully in the sowing of the seeds of eternal life here, and then go over and reap the eternal harvest on the other side.

Evidently preachers should speak the truth in love; but we should be very sure that what we speak is the truth. We might have a message for a man which would break to him unpleasant news, but it is the duty of the messenger to deliver the message. This being done, he is relieved of the responsibility.

Many Christians would not so much dread to go into paradise, were it not that they must go through the gateway of death; and I am sure there are thousands of pious people who would go into the church, were it not that they must go through the grave of immersion. But the Lord having arranged these matters, they are important. His way is not only the right way, but it is the only way.

There are three things necessary in starting a home mission-a field, a preacher, and a support. And have we considered the field? The field is the world; and is not this sufficiently large? We might take one county,

Now, having reached your sixtieth milestone, your hair is gray, your form is bent, and your knees are weak; go home and let the church ordain you a bishop, where on Lord's day you can feed the flock, and through the week preach in halls, storerooms, and dwellings. Thanking Brother George.

BY J. A. PERDUE.

I wish to thank Brother George for noticing my little squib in the Gospel Advocate of December 9. 1 did not think there was much in it; but since he has dignified it with a notice, he has my thanks. I was writing to commend a first-page article in an issue of a previous date. It was in such a good spirit, so true and well written, that I was constrained to commend it. Incidentally I made bold to intimate to Brother McQuiddy that I was not taking much stock in his controversy with Brother Sommer, and, pursuing that thought, said. "A Christian is in the church, and whatever he does, good or bad, is in the church," or words to that effect; but Brother George says there is a difference, and then proceeds to reveal to us two or three different churches-the "church" in the meetinghouse, the "church" in the home, and the "church" in the school. Now, as I get it from him, a woman may belong to either of these, except the church in the meetinghouse; or, if she belongs to the latter, she is no more than a figurehead-she cannot sing, she cannot pray, she cannot preach, cannot even ask a question. Now, she may do some of these things in the church in the home or school; but all are prohibited, according to Brother George, in the church in the meetinghouse. Well, she is certainly in the "middle of a fix;" for she must at least answer one question to get into the church in either of these places, and it does seem that she might be allowed, at least, to ask low she is to live a Christian since gaining a place among the sanctified. The apostle Peter speaks of the church as composed of "living stones, . . . built up a spiritual house, to be a holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God through Jesus Paul exhorts the Ephesian Christ. Christians, "Speaking one to another in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing and making melody with your heart to the Lord" (Eph. 5: 19); and the Hebrew Christians are admonished to "exhort one another" But if reference here is to the church in the meetinghouse, of course women are excluded, for they must keep silent, must keep their mouths shut.

Now we shall not have any—what do you call it?—controversy, Brother George. I am opposed to debates, if I am to be one of the parties to it. I am a very timid man, of limited knowledge; but, according to my knowledge, the church includes all Christians in any given place. If

They are not even allowed to ask a question, according to Brother George. But I am willing. Perhaps they talk too much, anyway. .

there is only one Christian in a certain place, whether in the home or meetinghouse, he is the church in that place; and whatever he does by the authority of Christ, he does it in the church. The church in the home includes all the Christians in the home; this is true also of the school. The church in the meetinghouse is composed only of those Christians come together in his name. The church does not include those not Christians, no matter in what place they come together; but Christians are in the church, whether they come together in the meetinghouse, the home, or the school. Whatever a Christian does as a Christian, he does it in the church; and you will have to show me that what Christians may do in the home, if it is right and scriptural, may not be done with equal propriety when they "come together into one place." I am afraid we sometimes make distinctions where there are no differences. All Christians, regardless of sex, are cleansed by the same blood, and are animated by the hope born of a common faith-the hope of eternal life. "For in one Spirit were we all baptized into one body, whether Jews or Greeks, whether bond or free; and were all made to drink of one Spirit." (1 Cor. 12: 13.) "For ye all are sons of God, through faith, in Christ Jesus. For as many of you as were baptized into Christ did put on Christ. There can be neither Jew nor Greek, there can be neither bond nor free, there can be no male or female; for ye all are one man in Christ Jesus. And if ye are Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, heirs according to the promise." (Gal. 3: 26-29.) Being Christ's, we should honor him with our lips and the service of our lives. In the home or in the meetinghouse, it is right to "exhort one another;" in the home or meetinghouse, we should, on the first day of every week, "do this in remembrance of me." In either place it is right to "draw nigh with a true heart in full assurance of faith;" to speak one to another" in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs;" to "go" and to give, to live and to love, for Christ's dear sake; and I shall regret it if any of these privileges are ever denied to the children of God.

Working and Praying for Unity.

I have been with my family, in Nashville, Tenn., since Christmas; and while here I found that the Jackson Street congregation needed my services in the way of encouragement because of not knowing how to stand firm on God's word. I am glad to say that the services have greatly grown and that every one seems to be edified and to be putting on new life. This congregation misses the instruction that our beloved brother, S. W. Womack, used to give us in his lifetime. That humble and meek spirit that he possessed is what made him so great among men. Since being here, doing all in my power to strengthen this church, two have been restored and one baptized (Lord's-day night, January 30). The future looks bright. In three blocks of this congregation is another congregation that went out from this congregation about three years ago, and it is a monument of division; but I am working and praying that these two places so close to each other may soon come to a close union, and true and pure fellowship be restored. I cannot believe that God approves of such conditions. I shall never forget the great instructions given us when this division first occurred, by Brethren F. W. Smith, F. B. Srygley, A. B. Lipscomb. S. P. Pittman, and Joe McPherson. If all of us had taken the scriptural advice given by these good men, instead of a monument of division and a hindrance to the cause of Christ, there would have been unity and perfect fellowship. I yet believe and hope that we will see in the future the fruit of these brethren's labors with us. May God bless these brethren and all others who stand firm against divi-M. KEEBLE. sion.

The Gospel Needed in Alabama.

While thinking of the great need of evangelistic work in Alabama, it is indeed a sad picture to see so many people here in Corona, where a pure gospel sermon has never been preached. So many, both white and colored, have never heard the pure gospel. Some years ago G. A. Dunn preached the apostolic doctrine in Patton, under a tent, the weather being pleasant. Many colored people attended, finding seats on stumps or any convenient place; and his great sermons reached some of my people and caused them to read until they read themselves out of the Baptist organization into the church of Christ which is located at Patton Junction. It has thirty-one faithful disciples who meet each Lord's day. My heart would rejoice if some white evangelist would come to these people and preach to them Jesus in the New Testament way. Such preaching is badly needed in Alabama.

My father has been a subscriber to the Gospel Advocate for twenty-five years, also two of my brothers; so I read each week the contents of the paper, then pass it on to some one else. My father is too old to read now, but my sister and I read it to him, and pay his subscription. No Christian family should be without the Gospel ELLA MCDAVID. Advocate

BY ANDREW PERRY.

In a recent number of a certain paper-not a "new digressive," but a war digressive paper-I see that paper credits the State of Illinois with only seven loyal preachers. The "Preachers' List" published at the offices of the Christian Leader and the Firm Foundation gives the names of twenty-one white preachers and one colored preacher. It seems that this paper intends to draw the lines around their war digression. Well, so let it be, if this is their desire. The church of Christ still lives, and all authority in heaven and on earth still rests in the hand of our King, and the Bible still teaches: "Whatsoever ye do, in word or in deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesu."

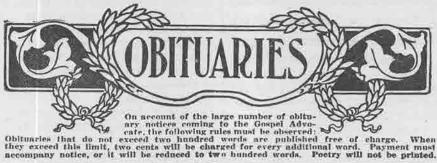

I have enjoyed the many noble articles which have appeared in the Gospel Advocate Let us "speak the truth in love" and "earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints."

There is a way of doing kindness which looks as if no kindness had been done; a gentle and delicate way which adds preciousness to the gift. I have known some men to do a kindness as if they were receiving it rather than giving it, so that the poor were not made to feel their poverty. This was Jesus Christ's method, and it will be ours as we approach his likeness. -Joseph Parker.

Tatum.

George W. Tatum, son of Wilkins and Eliza Tatum, was born on November 12, 1844, and died on January 18, 1921. He was married to Miss Bettie Masten over fifty years ago. He joined the Christian Church about the time he married, and he and his aged com-panion, who is left behind, traveled hand in hand all these years. He was the youngest boy of ten children, all of whom preceded him. His play-mate brother, James H. Tatum, who was just a few years older, passed away on December 27, 1920.

John A. Jones was born on June 17, 1852, and died at his home in Nash-Tenn., on January 17, 1921 Brother Jones was born and reared at Little Lot, Hickman County, Tenn. He obeyed the gospel early in life and remained in the church to the day of his death. He moved to Nashville fourteen years ago, and worshiped with the Reid Avenue Church until his death. He leaves a wife and four children, also one sister, to moven the departure of the loved one; but with a hope, if they will be true to God, that they can shake hands with him again in a brighter home than this.

Anderson.

Margaret Anderson was born on Ausust 29, 1834, and departed this life on December 14, 1920. Sister Anderson was married to William Anderson on July 13, 1852. She was the mother of twelve children—six boys and six girls. Eight children survive her. Sister Anderson was truly a great and good woman. She proved herself a true and faithful wife, a kind and af-fectionate mother, and a devout servant of the Lord. She was spared many years, and busied herself in a useful manner to help humanity. her labors of love in the vineyard she was much encouraged by the great and exceeding precious promises. May her sons and daughters prove their loyalty in the service of their Master, and may they leave this world with a glorious hope of eternal blessedness in the next world. May her people rejoice in the precious promises of the coming of the Lord, that he will take his people name "ever with him in glory.

O'Donniley.

On December 29, 1920, at Sledge, Miss., at the home of her niece, Mrs. W. H. Scott, Miss Lizzie O'Donniley passed away in her seventieth year, leaving two sisters and other near relations of her family. Her body was taken to Memphis. Tenn., where Brother C. A. Norred conducted the funeral services, after which it was buried in Forest Hill Cemetery. Sister O'Donniley had many friends in Humphreys County, Tenn., where she was reared; at Harbert Avenue Church, in Memphis, where I first met her; and at other places where she had lived. She was the kind of person to make friends. She was bright and cheerful; notably kind and considerate, rendering service to others to the close of her life. She learned and obeyed the truth about thirty years before her death, and was, I believe, loyal to the Master, faithful unto The saints who knew her have hope that they will meet her again in the heavenly home. Caffey.

Sister Marie Elizabeth Caffey was bern on May 20, 1874, and died on Tuesday, January 18, 1921, at her borne. in Murfreesboro, Tenn. She was a member of the church of Christ for thirty years and faithfully endeavored to live the Christian life. It is a grand thing to remember God in youth, to live for Christ, and to walk with God as did Sister Caffey. Funeral services were conducted by J. V. Armstrong Traylor, whose home is at Smyrna, Tenn., but who has recently located in Murfreesboro in order to better prepare himself for the ministry. Perhaps he could not have chosen a better scripture than did he on that occasion, and I here mention it to remind us more fully how sweet and grand it is to live for Jesus and to walk with God: "And I heard a voice from heaven, saying, Write, Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; for their works follow with them." (Rev. 14: 13.)

Joyner.

On July 20, 1920, my sister, Mrs. Ellen (Roark) Joyner, passed out of this life, at her home in Clarksburg, Tenn. She was born in White County, Ark., on May 30, 1868. She was brought to Clarksburg when seven months old and lived for the rest of her life in and near that place. Left an orphan at an early age, she was reared by an uncle, to whom she was always greatly devoted. On February 26, 1890, she was married to J. Alonzo Joyner, who proved to be a dutiful husband till her death. To this union were born seven children, of which only two are living-Arline and Leon. She had a complication of diseases and had been a great sufferer for many years. She was truthful, honest, and industrious. She obeyed the gospel at fourteen years of age, under the preaching of Brother W. A. Crum, being baptized by Brother J. W. Johnson, at Roan's Creek. Even though frail for many years, it was her delight to prepare nice dinners to help to feed the crowds who attended protracted meetings at Poplar Springs, She attended services always her health would allow. The Gospel Advocate was always in her bome in both her warried and single life. We would beg of her children to strive to imitate her life in truthfulness, honesty, and industry. We love and com-mend her husband for his devotion to her and his unceasing efforts in her behalf. Let us all try to be faithful servants of our Maker, that we may enter into eternal rest.

Editying as the Need May Be

Song of the Three Children.

Among the apocryphal additions to sacred literature there is a book called the "Song of the Three Children." This volume is a colorful narrative of the deeds of Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah, the Hebrew youths who were thrown into the flery furnace at the royal mandate of the Assyrian king, Nebuchadnezzar. The existence of such a book shows how powerfully this story struck the imagination of the Jews. We do not have to rely upon any apocryphal writing to learn the great lesson that shines forth from the action of these three brave men. The record in the book of Daniel is all-sufficient. It is of priceless value as illustrating the nobility of undaunted faithfulness, as setting forth the truth that they who love God and trust in him must love and trust in him even until the end, in spite, not only of the most overwhelming peril, but even when they are brought face to face with apparently hopeless defeat. 0 0 0

A Royal Decree Set to Music.

In his vanity Nebuchadnezzar, the king, set up a prodigious image of gold. Then a herald went forth among the people and cried aloud: "To you it is commanded, O peoples, nations, and languages, that at what time ye hear the sound of the cornet, flute, harp, sackbut, psaltery, dulcimer, and all kinds of music, ye fall down and worship the golden image that Nebuchadnezzar the king hath set up; and whose falleth not down and worshipeth shall the same hour be cast into the midst of a burning fiery furnace." The big concert that the king provided made it very easy and pleasant for the weak and vacillating to fall in line; but, on the other hand, such an arrangement made it a real test of the courage for God's faithful servants. When the flags are waving and the band is playing it is much easier to step in and do a thing than to bang back and not to do it. Especially is this true when everybody except yourself and a few others is stepping in and receiving the plaudits of the admiring populace. Picture the scene! The multitudes were gathered on the plain around the golden image, glittering and radiant in the sun. Besides the officers in their richly colored attire, there was a motley gathering of tribes from every direction. Dr. Hunter says: "All diversities of speech and dress and manners were there; all varieties of complexion, from the pale bronze of the Persian to the black of the Ethiopian. National enemies stood side by side. Dwellers on plain and mountain, in walled towns and in tents of the desert, were in the throng." To make it all the more an animated scene, a great orchestra began to play the national airs. Surely, with such a pageant before them, the people would be ready enough to kotow to the king's decree even though no threat were hanging over their heads. And the great multitude kotowed. 0 0 0

Three Young Men "Up Against It."

Look again! Three men are seen standing up alone. conspicuous all over the plain, like a city set upon a hill, like a candle set upon a table, by their unbowed heads and their splendid robes of office. They were the same three young men who joined with Daniel in refusing to defile themselves with the king's meat. They must have been at this time from thirty to thirty-five years of age, in the prime of young manhood and usefulness, certainly not too young or too old to enlist. They were rulers in the provinces of Babylon, and, therefore, prominent men. It was the more difficult to disobey the royal edict because they were friends of the king, and had proved honest and true in his service. For in many ways the king had been a friend to them. He had treated them well. While he might have killed them years before, he ennobled them, enriched them, and placed them in positions of power. Some of us know that to go against the desires of a kind parent or a generous-hearted employer is far harder than to refuse obedience to one who has been harsh. When the king's attention was called to this overt act of disobedience, he became exceedingly angry. Dean Farrar with his elegant phraseology remarks that Nebuchadnezzar, like other despots, suffered in this instance from the "vertigo of autocracy." But perhaps you can understand it better if 1 say that he "threw a fit" and what he said to these three young men was "a plenty."

The Answer Sublime.

The reply of the three young men is truly magnificent in its unflinching courage. They said: "O Nebuchadnezzar, we have no need to answer thee in this matter." As we would say: "Why mince matters? Why parley or delay? You know us, for you have tried us once before. You know the God we serve and to what extent we serve him. Why waste your time in a futile effort to induce us to go back on him?" "If it be so," they said, "our God whom we serve is able to deliver us from the burning fiery furnace; and he will deliver us out of thy hand, O king." By the phrase, "if our God be able," no doubt as to God's power is expressed. The word "able" merely means "able in accordance with his own plans" of what is best for us. The three young men knew well that God can deliver and that he has repeatedly delivered his saints. But they continued: "But if not, be it known unto thee, O king, that we will not serve thy gods, nor worship the golden image which thou hast set up."

The Triumph of "If-Not" Faith.

These men were aware that in many cases it has not been God's purpose to deliver his saints out of the peril of death; and in such cases it has been far better for them that they should be carried to heaven "on the fiery charlot of martyrdom," Viewed in this light, these three words, "and if not," are among the sublimest words uttered in all Scripture. They represent the truth that the man who trusts in God will continue to say with Job: "Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him." They are the triumph of faith over all adverse circumstances. For wherever there is left in man any true manhood, he has never shrunk from accepting death rather than the disgrace of compliance with what he despises and abhors. Says a patriotic writer: "This it is which sends our soldiers on the forlorn hope, and makes them march with a smile upon the batteries which vomit their cross-fires upon them." This is a fine sentiment. But in this lesson the picture of truth and righteousness is not a picture of thousands marching together. It is the picture of three men standing alone. Therefore, the lesson better describes those soldiers of the Lord Jesus Christ who wield the sword of the Spirit in the face of any hazard and who take their stand, not for, but against, carnal warfare when all the world is clamoring for it. Schiller said: "A brave man hazards his life, but not his conscience." The philosopher Kant laid down the law of moral oughtness in what he called "the categorical imperative." It reads, "what we ought to do, we ought to do." This is a good rule. But the Christian goes a step further and says: "What I ought not to do, I cannot and will not do." It is a rule that elevates to a straight and narrow way. Comparatively few have risen to such a level and walked in that path. In the Bible we find some who did-Noah, Joseph, Elijah, Daniel, the three Hebrews, Peter, and John. In the history of the Reformation we might mention especially Savonarola, Luther, and Huss. These were men who not only dared to do right, but refused to do wrong when the whole world seemed to be against them.

Giving Up Faith on a Pretext.

Men have been giving up what they have been calling their faith in God on a very small pretext. We hear a man say: "This brother in whom I had implicit confidence and whom I considered a Christian above every man has turned out to be a hypocrite. His conduct shakes my faith." perhaps the whole congregation has disappointed another man. No one in it seems imbued with the spirit of Christ. He comes to that point where he is ready to say: "All men are liars, except you and me, and I have my suspicions of you." Disgusted with the prospect, he refuses to obey the gospel; or if he is in the church, he is ready to quit. Still another leaves the church and takes up with Christian Science or New Thought because such teachings seem to be a better prop for his faith than being just a simple Christian. I agree with Merton S. Rice, who says emphatically: "I am suspicious of such selfishness calling itself faith. Who ever made my little pain-threatened body the clearing house of God's justification?" The story of the three Hebrew children who went through the flery furnace teaches us that faith in God will come to places where there will be absolutely no reason for it but just faith in God. We must reach that point where we can believe him and trust him, not because he has made us rich, not because he has healed our aches and pains, but because he is God.

The Fourth Man.

Dr. McLaren says: "No trials faced in obedience to God will be borne alone." How beautifully is this fact confirmed by this Old Testament lesson! Nebuchadnezzar, the king, was astonished, and said unto his counselors: "Did not we cast three men bound into the midst of the fire? They answered and said unto the king: "True, O king." But he said: "Lo, I see four men loose, walking in the midst of the fire, and they have no hurt; and the aspect of the fourth is like a son of the gods." The translation of the Authorized Version that made the king recognize the fourth man as the Son of God is now held to be untenable. Nebuchadnezzar knew nothing about Christ, and it is more probable that he thought the stranger in the burning flery furnace was one of his heathen gods. But to us it is perfectly clear that the fourth man was an angelic being sent there to comfort God's faithful children. So far as our troubles are concerned, the fourth man may always stand for our Savior, ready to help, to bless, and to deliver.

How We Need Him Now.

This world needs to recognize the "fourth man" in this trying hour. For Christians it is no time to fear, but it is time to lean upon the "fourth man" and to hear again the promise: "When thou walkest through the fire, thou shalt not be burned; neither shall the flame kindle upon thee." If Jesus Christ goes with us, there is no place where we cannot afford to go. If Jesus Christ stays with us, there is no place where we cannot afford to stay.

"Down in the valley or upon the mountain steep, Close beside my Savior would my soul ever keep; He will lead me safely in the path that he has trod, Up to where they gather on the hills of God."

Just waiting for the angels
To bear him home to God,
This man of ninety summers,
Who lowly paths has trod;
For in his early manhood
He gave his heart to Christ,
And to uplift His banner
Earth's pleasures sacrificed.

And surely there awaits him
"A crown of righteousness,"
Just over where the angels
Shall bear him home to rest.
But long he'll be remembered,
And long his pen will live,
Who would that every sinner
To Christ his heart would give.

Yes, long he'll be remembered,
And long will live his pen,
Who would that saint and sinner
Forsake commands of men,
"Which perish with the using,"
Because they are as frail
As blades of summer grasses
'Neath showers of heavy hail.

And when the snowy angels
Shall gather round his bed,
And Death's cold, ley finger
Is laid upon his head,
We think across that river
Unseen to earthly eyes
An angel band will gather
And bear him to the skies.

Stand, Walk, Run.

BY F. C. SOWELL.

STAND.

"Watch ye, stand fast in the faith, quit you like men, he strong." (1 Cor. 16: 13.) There is no neutral ground in Christianity. We must take a position either for right or wrong. We must gather for him or scatter abroad.

"For freedom did Christ set us free: stand fast therefore, and be not entangled again in a yoke of bondage."
(Gal. 5: 1.) He who has strong faith or much faith can be located. You will be able to see what he teaches and what he does. He is not afraid nor ashamed to let you know where he stands.

The first Christians in the early history of the church "continued steadfastly in the apostles' teaching and fellowship, in the breaking of bread and the prayers." They were so firmly fixed in this work that they gave up their homes and went everywhere preaching the word, and dwelt in caves and holes of the earth. They preferred sacrificing their homes, goods, and even their lives, rather than give up their love and confidence in the Lord Jesus.

Paul said in his strong exhortation to the church at Corinth: "Wherefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord." (1 Cor. 15: 58.) If we prove our fidelity in the Lord, we have the promise of life. "For now we live, if ye stand fast in the Lord." (1 Thess. 3: 8.) Let us then be rooted and grounded in the Lord, and the great storms of opposition will not overturn our faith.

Many things are coming before us in these latter days to test our faith and prove our fidelity. But the sacrifice of the blood of Jesus was too much for us to give up the faith.

WALK.

"For we walk by faith, not by sight." (2 Cor. 5: 7.) Christians are moving onward to the heavenly home. We cannot remain here; time is steadily carrying us on.

Let us be careful in our walking. There are dangerous pits in which we may fall, should we get out of the way. Paul said: "Finally then, brethren, we beseech and exhort you in the Lord Jesus, that, as ye received of us how ye ought to walk and to please God, even as ye do walk, that ye abound more and more." (1 Thess. 4: 1.) When we walk to please God, there is no danger. "And Enoch walked with God: and he was not; for God took him." (Gen. 5: 24.)

To walk with God is to keep near him; and if we do this, he will be near us, and will lead us in the paths of righteousness. "Draw nigh to God, and he will draw nigh to you." (James 4: 8.)

There are two ways to walk—the right way and the wrong way—after the Spirit or after the flesh. One is the narrow way: the other, the broad way. One leads to life: the other, to death.

God has a certain rule by which men must walk. "And as many as shall walk by this rule, peace be upon them, and mercy, and upon the Israel of God." (Gal. 6: 16.) Paul says: "Look therefore carefully how ye walk, not as unwise, but as wise; redeeming the time, because the days are evil." (Eph. 5: 15, 16.)

RUN.

All Christians must run, or the goal cannot be reached. Paul, speaking of the Olympian games in Greece, said: "Know ye not that they that run in a race run all, but one receiveth the prize? Even so run; that ye may attain." (1 Cor. 9: 24.) In those games only one received the prize in each game; in the Christian race all who run according to the divine law will receive the prize. Paul said: "I have fought the good fight, I have finished the course, I have kept the faith: henceforth there is laid up for me the crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give to me at that day; and not to me only, but also to all them that have loved his appearing." (2 Tim. 4: 7, 8.) The promise of the crown of righteousness is to every child of God who runs the race to the end of life as God has directed.

To be successful in the Christian race, we must lay aside the weights or the sins that would impede the progress of the race. We cannot run the Christian race with such sins as lying, backbiting, strifes, jealousy, hatred, evil speaking, and such like; for they cause men to stumble and fall. Then we should "lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and . . . run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus the author and perfecter of our faith, who for the joy that was set before him endured the cross, despising shame, and hath sat down at the right hand of the throne of God." (Heb. 12: 1, 2.)

In the conclusion I would say: Stand fast, walk circumspectly, run faithfully; and in the end, joy, peace, and unending bliss will be yours.

The Archenemy.

BY H. C. FLEMING.

An enemy is a foe who desires our destruction. The archenemy is the chief foe, who always desires to injure or render us "hors de combat;" not only this, but he wishes to entirely destroy us. Inasmuch as he is the enemy of all mankind, he is constantly seeking to find some way by which he may deceive and entice men to evil deeds, thereby bringing them into captivity to him, not only as it were prisoners of war, but into an everlasting abyss from which there is no possible chance to escape. Knowing the weakness of man, especially that of each individual, he is forever on the alert to place before man deceptions and enticements to draw him away from the paths of virtue and righteousness.

Some of the strongest of these are the works of the flesh. (Gal. 5: 19-21.) When these become master of a man, they lead him on to the bottomless pit, from which, after he has once entered, there is no escape.

The first four of these mentioned by Paul are adultery, fornication, uncleanness, and lasciviousness. These all have a similar meaning, and the great enemy watches for men who he knows have a desire to commit them, presenting all the inducements he can to do so; and the oftener these vices are indulged in, the harder it is for the one enticed to resist them. Thus he is led captive by Satan at his will.

The next mentioned are idolatry, witcheraft, hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies. Each of these the great enemy uses as he knows the weakness of men to be influenced by them.

How often in past history have men been led to worship idols! In our own day we find the deception of witchcraft under the name of spiritualism.

Hatreds, variances, emulations of evil, wrath, strife, seditions, and heresies are constantly before our eyes, thereby showing that the archenemy is still active. Envyings, murders, drunkenness, revelings, and such like are still going on, indicating the same work of the chief enemy; therefore the warning that Paul gave the Galatians is still applicable to us—viz., that they that do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God.

"But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance: against such there is no law." (Gal. 5: 22, 23.) By producing these in our everyday lives we may overcome all the works of the flesh, and thereby foil the great enemy.

As an encouragement in our Christian warfare, let us look to the final destruction of the great enemy. See Rev. 20: 9, 10; 2 Thess. 2: 7, 8; 1 Cor. 15: 26. Here we find the destruction of the great enemy, and that the last enemy to be destroyed is death.

But what is our hope? "And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away." (Rev. 21: 4.)

If we enter that glorious land,
What beautiful things we shall see!
No more an enemy to annoy and decoy,
Forever and ever from sin to be free.

Tennessee Orphan Home.

BY JOHN W. FRY.

We have in the Tennessee Orphan Home sixty-eight children, two in the State Deaf and Dumb School at Knoxville, and one in the School for the Blind at Nashville, making seventy-one in all. Forty-nine of our children attend the City Public Schools, and make progress equal to the children of the town who have parents. The children too young to attend school are taught by the ladies in the Home.

We keep on the lookout for good family homes in which to place our children. We prefer placing them with brethren, but do not turn down other good homes. We placed one little girl with a family who were members of another church; now the husband and wife are both members of the church of Christ.

We make as full investigation as we can of the homes before placing a child. The parties are required to give reference, and then we investigate through the church in that community and through the good offices of Bradstreet. We endeavor to enlist the interest of the church in the community where we place a child, so the good members of the church will manifest an interest in it, which naturally makes those with whom it lives appreciate it more.

Whenever we learn that a child and family with whom it is placed are not congenial, we have the child brought back to the Home; for where there is no congeniality, it is best for the child that it be brought back to the Home. The husband and wife are required to sign an agreement to send the child to school not less time than required by the laws of the State. They shall attend church and Sunday school as regularly as possible, shall be provided with suitable and comfortable clothing, shall be given the necessary surgical and medical attention in case of sickness, and shall be given the same social advantages that a child of their own would receive. They are not to transfer the child to any other person, or remove it from the State without the consent of the Orphan Home, and shall give information regarding the child when called upon. When full sympathy and love is lacking, and there is no prospect of becoming congenial, such child should be brought back to the Home.

There seems to be more demand than usual for placing children in the Home. We insist on churches keeping the children with their mother and helping her to maintain them and keep them together. In some instances we help the father out by taking his children when their mother dies; but we require him to pay the full cost of maintaining his children. A father is in a helpless condition when left with children and no one to stay with them; but at the same time he must make good the maintenance of his children in the Home:

Our contributions have somewhat fallen off so far this year; yet we have many regular and substantial contributors among the churches and friends of the institution, for which all connected with the Home feel grateful. The Home stands ready to receive orphan and dependent children; and we have children ready to go to good family homes, but we do not act hurriedly in placing them.

We keep a complete record of every child and all its connections, for we feel that a child would be at a great disadvantage not to know the family history as much as is usually kept by families. We received a letter not long ago from a little girl who had been placed in a home by the former management. We could find no record of her; so we used our newspapers, and have been able to send her full information regarding her family.

We receive numbers of letters wanting to know something of the Home, and we stand ready at all times to give information; for the Home belongs to orphan children, and everybody is more or less interested in the care of orphans. We make it a rule to reply to all letters. We feel that those not in correspondence with the Home should be advised from time to time of the progress of the Home.

We have received the following letters of acknowledgment:

New York, January 28, 1921.—Mr. A. B. Lipscomb, Nashville, Tenn.—Dear Mr. Lipscomb: We are again in receipt of your most generous contribution of five hundred dollars toward the relief of the sufferers in Poland. We beg to express to you, as well as to all the readers of the Gospel Advocate who have participated in this offering, our most heartfelt thanks, and we beg of you all to believe in our sincere appreciation of your wonderful generosity. Due to the present rate of exchange, your donation represents a small fortune when translated into Polish marks. It will go a long way toward alleviating the misery of the country and saving the lives of many unfortunate children.

With repeated thanks and very best regards, I beg to remain, Gratefully yours, W. O. Gorski.

Honorary Executive Secretary.

New York, January 21, 1921.—A. B. Lipscomb, Nashville, Tenn.—My Dear Mr, Lipscomb; May I supplement the inclosed official acknowledgment of your check for four hundred and nine dollars and twenty-two cents with a personal word of appreciation for the cordial support of the Gospel Advocate? The accounts of our work which have been presented to your readers in the columns of that paper must, in large measure, have prompted this generous contribution. I inclose two news items which will be of interest to you and possibly to your subscribers. We are very proud of the record made by our overseas workers.

Sincerely yours, Charles V. Vickrey.

It is the command of Jesus that all men who believe in his principles and wish to see them established in the hearts and homes of men, must come out from the crowd, be baptized into his name, and march and fight together against the hierarchy of the night.—Selected.

Two Ways of Learning What to Do.

It is clearly affirmed that the Holy Scriptures were written for our learning; hence, we should ever be interested in the study of the same. "Seek ye out of the book of Jehovah, and read." is the command in Isa. 34: 16. "Give heed to reading" is Paul's statement to Timothy (1 Tim. 4: 13); and then the oft-quoted statement: "Give diligence to present thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, handling aright the word of truth" (2 Tim, 2: 15). Then what David says about the man who is "blessed" or "happy" should not be forgotten: "Blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the wicked, nor standeth in the way of sinners, nor sitteth in the seat of scoffers: but his delight is in the law of Jehovah; and on his law doth he meditate day and night." (Ps. 1: 1, 2.) But we should remember that when we learn what the devil wants us to do, we have also learned what God wants us to do; for God's will is ever the very opposite of what the devil wants done.

Doubtless some of our readers remember that one of the things that made Alvin York's name almost immortal to Tennesseeans was his quickness to find his way back to the American lines by going in just the opposite direction to what a German officer advised him. In the mêleê York lost his bearings, and all of his men had been killed or wounded; so, when he had got the German prisoners rounded up and was ready to start back to his own camp, he had forgotten the way. But so soon as he noticed the eagerness and quickness with which one of his prisoners—a German officer—would help him out of the difficulty, he got the right direction by turning and going just the opposite of what the German advised.

There should be a genuine pleasure in our doing what the devil does not want us to do; and we can rest in the thought that when we know of a certainty that what we are doing is contrary to the will and wishes of Satan we are in Jehovah's way. It is well to have a consciousness that we are pleasing God, and to rejoice because of this consciousness: but it is better to have a consciousness that we are pleasing God and are displeasing the devil at the same time. Establish the character of delighting just as much in displeasing Satan as you delight in pleasing God. The consciousness that you are doing both in the one act will greatly increase your joy.

A Man "Sat Down and Wept."

In Neh 1: 4 it is said: "And it came to pass, when I heard these words, that I sat down and wept, and mourned certain days; and I fasted and prayed before the God of heaven." All of this was done, too, because of Nehemiah's interest in Jerusalem, the city of his God; the place where God's name had once been recorded, where the temple had once stood, but where all now were lying in waste and ruin.

I would that every child of God to-day would go back and read the books of Nehemiah and Ezra carefully, and see the intense desire those people had for a restoration of the only God-ordained work and worship that then existed; and after studying them carefully, then look around to-day for men who are weeping over present conditions. Do we not have among us men who make great pretensions to loyalty, humility, and big-heartedness, the never weep when the cause of our Lord writhes in the dust, but are the very men who put it there and keep it there because of their egotism, self-righteousness, and rule-or-ruin disposition of heart? You can hardly go very far in any direction these days and not run across just such. There is and has been entirely too much leniency toward church wreckers and men who certainly are governed by their own carnal nature, selfish desires and ambition, and who try to keep this fact covered by their high-sounding claims to loyalty and humility in Christ. "Wolves in sheep's clothing," Christ said, would come among us. It would be a blessing if a few of them were skinned, that the wolf might the more easily be seen.

Conscientious Convictions.

BY JAMES E. SCOBEY.

I desire to say some things about honest convictions. If any one does not follow out his honest convictions or religious beliefs, he is a self-convicted hypocrite; and if known to be so, he deserves and should receive the supreme contempt of honest men. And if he, for any consideration, should knowingly teach error, proclaiming it to be truth, he would be an arrant deceiver, falsifier, and liar, unworthy of the respect of his fellow man.

As I see things, there is quite a mistaken notion in the minds of many with reference to the office of conscience. It is a fact that every normal human being has a power in him called "conscience." Many think conscience is a guide to correct thought and right action: that if one follows the dictates of his conscience, he will not do wrong; and whatever he may believe or do, it will be right to him; and if of religious duty or obligation, it will be approved of God. I know the poet says:

What conscience dictates to be done.

Or warns me not to do—
This teach me more than hell to shun,
More than heaven pursue.

Now I wish to say that conscience never dictates anything in the sense of leading, but, on the contrary, always follows the thought, pushing one forward to do that which he perceives to be right, and pulling him back if he perceives the act to be wrong. Conscience is one of the sensibilities, or feeling powers. It is not a knowing power, any more than is love, hope, fear, or sorrow. Its function is to impel one to do what he perceives to be right and to restrain him from doing that which he sees to be wrong. If one should honestly believe a wrong was right, his conscience would urge him to do the wrong. Whoever he be that yields to his conscience at all times cannot fail to be an honest man; hence we say of him that he is a conscientious man.

There are men of strong conscience, and many in whom it is weak. If one constantly yields to the impulses of his conscience, it becomes a strong factor in determining his course of action, and he will not likely do wrong from weakness. Conscience may be strong or it may be weak, and in some cases it may become seared as with a hot iron, and then it loses its power; and one who has thus destroyed its power is a conscienceless man. When a man does evil knowingly, he may be said to have an evil conscience.

As conscience is always connected with a man's beliefs and actions, it is represented to be pure, evil, good, etc., as the beliefs and actions are right or wrong. One may have a good conscience and at the same time have evil or wrong convictions, wrong beliefs, and do wrong things. If one allows conscience to influence him in his actions, he will not do wrong, if he knows what is right. The apostle Paul acknowledged himself the chiefest of sinners because he persecuted Christians; and yet, in making his defense when arrested in Jerusalem, he said: "Men and brethren, I have lived in all good conscience before God until this day."

(Acts 23: 1.) He had been an honest man, believing what he did to be right and honoring to his God. But his conviction of right did not make it right.

No man's honest convictions are a standard by which to determine right and wrong, truth and error; for these exist without man's convictions. In all spiritual matters truth is absolute and unchangeable, so far as man is concerned. He can neither modify, change, nor substitute anything for the truth; and he who seeks to do so dishonors God and his Christ, and is guilty of presumptuous sin, though he may believe he is stating the truth and doing what is right.

But I have said we should not blame men for believing and teaching and doing what they conscientiously believe to be right, for that is what every honest man does and should do. If blame or condemnation rests on any man, it arises, not from his belief and his acts, but from what he believes and does. It may be all right with him, but all wrong with God.

But if we are to be blamed and condemned when we fail to speak the truth and to do the right thing, when we honestly think we have done so, then we are greatly to be blamed for our ignorance. There is no excuse to be offered for our want of knowing the truth upon all subjects that pertain to life and godliness. The greatest responsibility resting on men to-day, who have the means and opportunity to learn the truth, is that they will not seek it and find it where only it can be found.

In viewing the religious conditions by which we are surrounded, I think I might say, in the words of Jesus: "For this people's heart is waxed gross, and their ears are dull of hearing, and their eyes they have closed; lest at any time they should see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and should understand with their heart, and should be converted, and I should heal them." (Matt. 13: 15.)

But some one may wish to know where truth can be found, and what is truth. Jesus said to those Jews who had believed on him: "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." (John 8: 31, 32.) There is but one source from which truth can be derived. If man knows the truth, he will have learned it of God; and man need not think it can be furnished him from any other source. If, therefore, we learn of Jesus, who spoke the words of God, and of his apostles and prophets, who spoke the words of the Spirit of God, we will know the truth, because we have learned of God; and if we embrace it, being led by it, we shall come into covenant relation with God and shall by faith know we have been translated out of the kingdom of darkness into the kingdom of his dear Son; that we have become the adopted sons of God, heirs of God and joint heirs of the Lord Jesus Christ to all the glories of the world to come.

In obedience to the gospel man can attain his highest and supremest good. I do not mean to say that if he believes that Jesus is the Son of God, repents, confesses Christ, and is buried by baptism and rises to walk a new life, "being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth forever" (1 Pet. 1: 23), and afterwards walks with the world and seeks the gratification of the lusts of the flesh, the lusts of the eye, and the pride of life, neglecting the assembly of the saints and the worship of God on the Lord's day, and persists in this course, that he will enjoy life eternal. To obey the gospel is to put on the whole armor of the soldier of the cross and fight to the end of life. To obey the gospel means that we shall believe every statement made in the New Testament, obey every command, and trust every promise. Then shall we "be kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation ready to be revealed in the last time." (1 Pet. 1: 5.)

Under the foregoing caption an article appeared on the editorial page of the Christian Standard of February 19. This article is worthy of a careful reading. It is a timely characterization of a certain type of church members. The article follows:

All our readers will recall him. He was one of the active members of the church, and frequently at the front in congregational affairs. Suddenly he quit. And he let the brethren know why he quit. It would be contrary to his convictions to leave off his church activities without going about and giving the reason.

The preacher had offended him. It matters little whether this offense was imaginary, or unintentional, or real—his dignity had been outraged, and to preserve his dignity he must needs quit.

He failed to understand that a minister's great passion is to build up the church; to add members, not subtract them; and that but few preachers intentionally do things calculated to drive his workers away from the church.

Of course, the big church member, aware of the preacher's human limitations, easily passes over many things said and done imperfectly, realizing that the form is imperfect, not the spirit.

The wise and good member confers with his preacher, and by kindly advice often prevents mistakes, and multiplies his usefulness.

And, too, he has the enviable habit of setting a thousand beauties in the preacher's words and actions over against the one defect, and watching the scales topple the lonely and light unloveliness out of sight and out of mind.

When he hears another criticize unkindly the preacher, he gets busy and buries the criticism under an avalanche of things of good report.

He works in the church with his brethren, not to bring honor upon himself, not to be foremost, not to have the glory of preëminence, but to make the church more and more an institution of love and service to the community.

He has no eye or ear or heart for the unlovely. He is not looking for offenses. Should he see them, he has a charming habit of appearing not to see them. He knows that the man, the churchman, who is always looking out for slights will be always finding them.

On the other hand, the poor fellow who drops out of the church because all was not just to his liking—we pity him.

He confesses to all the world his own colossal selfishness. He reveals the depraved motives which governed his membership in the church,

He strips off his Sunday guise and exposes his profound ignorance of the character of his religion.

When he returns, later, to resume membership in the congregation whose minister he betrayed, and whose membership he insulted, he should be received only upon confession of his sins and hearty assurance of repentance.

To what the writer of the foregoing has said, it may be added that the situation described often obtains with reference to an elder, deacon, or some other brother-that is, the "pathetic figure" may stay away from church on account of the words or actions of some one other than the preacher. Such a condition of affairs is wrong, Regardless of whether the "pathetic figure" has been treated wrongfully or not, he sins by ceasing his church activities: and he further sins, if he has been wronged, in that he does not heed the command: "Go, show him [thy brother] his fault between thee and him alone: if he hear thee, thou hast gained thy brother. But if he hear thee not, take with thee one or two more, that at the mouth of two witnesses or three every word may be established. And if he refuse to hear them, tell it unto the church: and if he refuse to hear the church also, let him be unto thee as the Gentile and the publican." (Matt. 18: 15-17.) It is easier to preach than to practice this doctrine; but it is the right course, and any other is unscriptural and antiscriptural. A rigid self-examination would also contribute to the spiritual health of the "pathetic figure." (2 Cor. 13: 5: Matt. 7: 3-5.)

BY J. C. McQUIDDY.

A person who wishes the name withheld inquires to know how the loaf should be made, as there appears to be some difference of opinion in the congregation concerning it. The bread used in the passover feast was unleavened bread. If we wish to follow the scriptural example, we will use the unleavened bread for the Lord's Supper. The loaf should be made up with water and salt, using either a little cream or butter. It should be beaten in order to make it hard. A good sister who prepares the loaf for a certain congregation says that in preparing it she strikes it, which always reminds her of the fact that the Savior was smitten for us.

C. H. Wheaton, of Midway, Texas, sends the following questions to the Query Department: "(1) Is it scriptural to withdraw from a brother or sister who is a member of some order? (2) Does it defile a brother or sister who is not a member of an order to eat with a brother or sister who is a member of an order? (3) Is the church justified in refusing to pass the emblems composing the Lord's Supper to a brother or sister who is a member of some order and feels that he or she is worthy of partaking of the same? (4) In partaking of the Lord's Supper with such a brother or sisten, do you become responsible for the sins of the order of which they are members? (5) Is the term 'separate' in 2 Cor. 6: 17 used in the same sense as that in Heb. 7: 26? If so, explain 2 Cor. 6: 17."

1. No. No Christian is absolutely free from mistakes. Only those in the cemetery never make mistakes.

2. No. 3, No. 4. No.

5. No. Heb. 7: 26 refers to Christ. 2 Cor. 6: 17 means that there is nothing in common between idol worshipers and those who worship the true and living God. Christians should be separate and distinct from disbelievers who scoff at the religion of Christ.

A. W. Walker, of Worthington, W. Va., inquires to know the full meaning of James 2: 1, which reads: "My brethren, hold not the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Lord of glory, with respect of persons." He wishes to know if a man can be a respecter of persons and a Christian at the same time. He quotes Acts 10: 34, which states that God is no respecter of persons. (2) He inquires to know the meaning of James 2: 10, which reads: "For whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet stumble in one point, he is become guilty of all." (3) He also asks: "Can a man offend without speaking? 'For in many things we all stumble. If any stumbleth not in word, the same is a perfect man, able to bridle the whole body also.' (James 3: 2.)"

1. If we are followers of Christ, since God is no respecter of persons, so neither should Christians be. God respects character, not dress, wealth, nor worldly rank. James 2: 9 says: "But if ye have respect of persons, ye commit sin, being convicted by the law as transgressors." No man can be a consistent Christian who has respect for wealth, dress, or worldly rank, and not respect for the character of the individual. Christ's teaching and practice condemn in the most positive way any such conduct.

2. If the law is broken by respect of persons, the whole law is broken. He who willfully breaks one command is a lawbreaker, and is guilty before the law. If a mule is fenced in and jumps over one panel of the fence, he is no longer confined or controlled by the fence.

3. Certainly a man can offend without offending in word. A man can maliciously slip up behind another and knock him down without saying a word. The point is that a man who controls his tongue and does not stumble in word, as the tongue is such an unruly member, is able to bridle the whole body also.

J. V. Moultrie, of Hornbeak, Tenn., asks to know if it is wrong and contrary to Bible teaching for Christians to labor for profit on the Lord's day at any kind of worldly business. He also asks: "Should not the Lord's day be kept as sacred as the old Jewish Sabbath was by the Jews?"

The old Jewish Sabbath was given to the Jews to observe, and was never given to the Gentiles. The Jews were not allowed to do any work whatever on the Sabbath; and when one picked up sticks on that day, he was put to death for his transgression. The Sabbath was given to the Jews to keep on account of their deliverance from Egyptian bondage. "Observe the Sabbath day, to keep it holy, as Jehovah thy God commanded thee. Six days shalt thou labor, and do all thy work; but the seventh day is a Sabbath unto Jehovah thy God: in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, nor thy manservant, nor thy maidservant, nor thine ox, nor thine ass, nor any of thy cattle, nor thy stranger that is within thy gates; that thy manservant and thy maidservant may rest as well as thou. And thou shalt remember that thou wast a servant in the land of Egypt, and Jehovah thy God brought thee out thence by a mighty hand and by an outstretched arm; therefore Jehovah thy God commanded thee to keep the Sabbath day." (Deut. 5: 12-15.) The Lord's day was given to commemorate the resurrection of Christ from the dead, and not because the Jews were brought out of Egyptian bondage. We find this day being observed after the establishment of the church on the day of Pentecost. The disciples met on the first day of the week and broke bread. "And upon the first day of the week, when we were gathered together to break bread, Paul discoursed with them, intending to depart on the morrow; and prolonged his speech until midnight." (Acts 20: 7.) We are commanded to lay by in store upon the first day of the week as God has prospered us. "Now concerning the collection for the saints, as I gave order to the churches of Galatia, so also do ye. Upon the first day of the week let each one of you lay by him in store, as he may prosper. that no collections be made when I come." (1 Cor. 16: 1, 2.) There is no command in the Bible forbidding Christians to work on the first day of the week. However, as it should be devoted to worship, when one does his duty as required in the New Testament, he will not have time to work. Again, we are required to submit to "the powers that be." The civil authorities have a law against working on the first day of the week. As loyal, faithful Christians and as submissive citizens, we must respect this law of the civil authorities. To violate it is to violate the law of God. "Let every soul be in subjection to the higher powers; for there is no power but of God; and the powers that be are ordained of God. Therefore he that resisteth the power, withstandeth the ordinance of God: and they that withstand shall receive to themselves judgment. For rulers are not a terror to the good work, but to the evil. And wouldest thou have no fear of the power? do that which is good, and thou shalt have praise from the same: for he is a minister of God to thee for good. But if thou do that which is evil, be afraid; for he beareth not the sword in vain: for he is a minister of God, an avenger for wrath to him that doeth evil." (Rom. 13: 1-4.)

- J. A. Craig, Madera, Cal., writes: "I am devoting my time to evangelistic work under direction and support of the Madera congregation."
- G. W. Jarrett says: "I would like to arrange for work so as to never be idle. My time is not all taken in the summer for Tennessee. Write me, brethren, at New Smyrna, Fla."

From Leslie G. Thomas, Flint, Mich., February 20: "Today I was with the church near Standish. We had two good meetings. So far as I know, this is the youngest congregation in the State."

From J. O. Barnes, Maytown, Fla., February 21: "I have just finished a meeting at this place, and will set a congregation in order to begin work next Lord's day as a New Testament church of Christ,"

If any reader knows of any one, Christian or otherwise, living in or around Baltimore, Md., that would be interested in New Testament Christianity, kindly send name and address to T. H. Walker, 2011 North Charles Street, Baltimore, Md., or to A. B. Comer, Wyoming Apartments, Washington, D. C.

The following telegram was received from Willis H. Allen, Jacksonville, Fla., on the morning of February 24: "My wife died at four forty this morning." We extend our tenderest sympathy to Brother Allen and to all the loved ones who are sorrowing at this "going over." She is "not lost, but gone before."

From Charles F. Hardin, Springfield, Mo., February 21: "All my regular appointments so far have been filled this month. Because the preacher cannot come to hold a meeting for which I was to sing, I have all of September open for preaching or song leading. I also have some time in August. I hope to be kept busy where I am needed in the work."

- W. M. Oakley writes from Cumberland City, Tenn., February 22: "I was at Gassaway last Lord's day, when we had three interesting services. I am at Needmore (Cumberland City, Route 3) this week in a meeting, which is being well attended both day and night. The meeting will continue as long as interest demands. J. D. Derryberry is in charge of the song service."
- W. T. Kidwill, Dallas, Texas, writes: "I am to visit Tennessee next fall to hold some meetings where I have held their meetings each fall for the last four years. I wish to arrange for other meetings to include the last half of September, the first half of October, and any time in November. I will be glad to hear from brethren where I may be wanted for meetings. My address is 613 North Ewing Avenue, Dallas, Texas."
- S. W. Bell writes from Sedalia, Mo., February 22: "While the work here is not what we should like for it to be and is very far from what it should be, yet we have some reasons to think that the general conditions are improving. Last Sunday we had larger crowds at both services. Sister John Love, formerly of Paris, Texas, has moved here, and seems to be so zealous and good that it makes us feel like pressing on unto the prize of the high calling in Christ Jesus."

From W. W. Still, Formosa. Ark., February 21: "I am here in another meeting. When I reached this little town, I began visiting the homes and inviting people out to church. I also visited the public school and made a short talk along the line of education. I will be here in this meeting a week or two. The service yesterday was good, considering the snow. The song service was fine. Brethren wanting a preacher for their summer meetings may write me at Morrillton, Ark."

R. E. L. Taylor writes from Lecanto, Fla., February 23: "We had two more good services on Lord's day. I preached several nights last week, and fifteen persons were baptized into the one body and two confessed their wrongs. My wife is improving, and I now think she will soon be so that I can fill other appointments. Those composing the little band here are very faithful, willing to do anything that is right to help the cause. We look for others to obey the gospel before we leave for Tennessee. We will be here urtil the first of April."

From Glenn W. Green, McLoud, Okla.: "Philip P. Alexander closed a very interesting meeting with the New Hope church of Christ last Sunday. He came to us well recommended, and while in our midst he showed himself to be a very able minister. Brother Alexander has been in the ministry for the past six years. He is now out in the evangelistic field, and has some time left for meetings this year. Brethren desiring to locate a wide-awake man, or one to hold their meetings, would make no mistake in securing him for this work."

J. E. Wainwright writes from Texarkana, Ark., February 21: "Our initial service at our new location, Maccabees Hall, 318½ East Broad Street, was well attended. Two placed their membership with us. They are a young, enthusiastic couple, very befitting for our live congregation. We are confident of a healthy growth in our new location, which is more inviting and better equipped. We are working toward the success of our meeting to begin on the second Lord's day in June. Arrangements are being made to take care of visiting members."

The following note to M. C. Cayce, of Jackson, Miss., written by J. Lee Black, of Belzoni, Miss., on February 14, is worth considering, and so we give it place: "Your letter of February 9 received. Many thanks for the information concerning the church here. I met with the church here last Sunday at the city hall. They had a nice service, but small attendance. Five members of the church (including myself) and eight children composed the assembly. I would like very much for you to pay this town a visit and help in the work here."

"The Immortality of the Soul"—A Debate between G. C. Brewer and Dr. Stewart J. Spence. We have a few copies of this work in stock that we will sell at twenty-five cents the copy, net. It is an 8vo pamphlet of seventy-seven pages, from the press of F. L. Rowe, Cincinnati, Ohio, and contains a good lithograph picture of each of the disputants. The mechanical work is excellent and the paper very fine. Brother Brewer fully sustained his position in affirming the immortality of the soul. Order from the McQuiddy Printing Company, Nashville, Tenn.

Mrs. Leota Miller writes from Mayflower, Ark., February 22: "I was a member of the Baptist Church for six years, but on January 19, 1921, I was baptized into Christ by J. C. Mosley. I had never broken bread while I was a member of the Baptist Church, but am now breaking it every Lord's day. I was reared in a Baptist home. I thank God for sending Brother Mosley here, that through him I might learn the right way before it was too late. My earnest desire is that I may grow in grace and knowledge and by my example help to lead others into the light. Brother Mosley has done a great work here."

Our editor in chief, J. C. McQuiddy, had a spell of "flu," beginning two weeks ago, by which he was confined to his home, and part of the time to his bed, for ten days. His physician recommended that as soon as he was able he go to some point on the Gulf Coast for a rest of several weeks. He left on Wednesday night of last week, after having been in the office less than a day, and not at all able to look after the accumulated matters demanding his attention. We have promised him complete rest from the work here; so his answers to queries, "Current Thought" page, and other varied services in the Advocate will be missing for some weeks. He is not seriously sick, yet his condition is so serious as to imperatively demand the rest prescribed. We hope his friends who have written queries, asked favors of him, etc., will be patient if what they want is not forthcoming for some time.

R. C. Hammons writes from Covington, Ky., February : "Yesterday afternoon I spoke to some new converts at a mission point near Cincinnati, Ohio. A new church of Christ has been started in the home of a widow with a daughter whose life is slowly wasting away with a dreadful disease. After one of the sisters of the Cincinnati mission had read the scriptures to this brave girl one afternoon, she said: 'Aunt Nannie, what must I do to be saved?' She was told what to do, and she wanted to go to the water immediately. The mother and sister-in-law, seeing the sick girl's faith, decided to be baptized, too. They were immediately. sick girl's faith, decided to be baptized, too. taken seven miles to the water, the sick girl leaving her bed, where they were immersed by F. L. Rowe. On account of sickness in the home and lack of employment, these people are in very destitute circumstances. the Cincinnati mission learned of their need, a liberal response was made in the form of a special collection which was sent to them. There is much distress among the poor and unemployed in and near the city; the evil one is still at work also, and the need of the true gospel of Christ is very great."

There were three confessions of Christ at the Foster Street Church on Lord's day at their regular services.

Changes of address: Mrs. N. A. Smith, from Dresden to Gleason, Tenn., Route 7; K. C. Moser, from Longview to Pritchett, Texas.

J. B. Beck, of Savannah, Ga., preached on Lord's day at the Fanning Orphan School, and baptized three. He preached at Russell Street Church, this city, at night.

Freed Sisco, of Lyles, Tenn., Route 2, wishes to lead singing in meetings and to teach singing schools this year. He preaches some, too. He gives good references. If you need him, write him at the above address.

Detroit, Mich., subscribers who have not sent us their new street rumbers, please do so at once. The postal authorities are urging us to change the address of our papers to the new numbers. How can we do so unless you let us know your new number?

From S. Houston Proffitt, Nashville, Tenn., February 27: "I preached for the church of Christ at Twenty-second Avenue, North, Saturday night and Sunday. This is a small congregation, but they have some splendid members. Interest in the Bible study seems to be increasing. The church has arranged with N. W. Proffitt, of Paris, Texas, to hold a series of meetings, beginning on Sunday, June 5, at which the church hopes to accomplish much."

L. D. Stark, Texarkana, Ark., says: "After having read the front page of your paper, I am writing you to express my appreciation of the Gospel Advocate. I have read much literature, and at the present am reading about a half dozen leading magazines, but I must say I consider the Advocate the most wholesome reading I have ever enjoyed. We can never tell what good has been accomplished by this splendid preaching until it shall be revealed in the last day."

F. B. Srygley preached at both services at Lawrence Avenue last Lord's day, the first since the operation on his eye. His doctors took the crystalline lens out of his eye, and think there is hope that he will be able to see fairly well with the aid of a special artificial lens. He says he has not lost his appetite, and that he appreciates the many letters he has received. He will not be able to answer all soon, and takes this method of thanking those who have written to him.

From J. A. Hudson, Oklahoma City, Okla., February 21: "There was one addition at our services yesterday. I attended the preachers' meeting at Sulphur four days last week, and learned to appreciate my brethren more. I found that they have a mind to work. The Herald of Truth will have its headquarters at Oklahoma City hereafter. Cordell Christian College will be reopened next September. It will be under a new faculty and a new board of directors."

From John D. Evans, Denver, Col., February 18; "Married, at my home in Denver, February 14, 1921, at 6 P.M., Carl E. Mortensen and Sister Irma Fuqua, of Fort Collins, Col. Many of the Gospel Advocate readers will remember Irma as the daughter of Brother and Sister E. C. Fuqua. She is indeed a lovable young Christian woman, and her husband is a splendid young Christian gentleman. Our very best wishes for a happy and useful life." The Gospel Advocate extends congratulations

Foy E. Wallace, Jr., writes from Vernon, Texas: "Our meeting at Tipton, Okla., resulted in twenty-eight baptisms and a number of restorations. The brethren have a beautiful, new, brick church building, with a seating capacity of six hundred or more. Although snow was on the ground at the beginning and end of the meeting, our week-day audiences approached the two-hundred mark, and the night audiences overflowed the house. I am convinced that successful meetings can be held in winter months, with the right effort. Tillit S. Teddlie is associated with me as song leader in all my work for the year. We hope to do good for the Master."

From A. A. Bunner, Jerry City, Ohio, February 24: "I began a meeting here last Lord's day, with prospects good for a fine meeting. They tell me that we are having the largest and most interested congregations that they have had in a long time. The elders and other brethren seem to be honest and fair-minded men; so I have great hopes for the future of this place. Brethren, pray for me, not only that my strength may hold out, but that it may increase, and that I may have a grand and profitable meeting here. The minister of the United Brethren Church and his people are turning out in full force to hear the word, and also many of the Methodists, but the Christian Church folks are making themselves conspicuous by their absence."

W. S. Long writes from New York City, February 20: "I am giving half of February in preaching and personal work with the little congregation in this city. Notwithstanding a snowstorm that raged all day, our Lord's-day service was very well attended. The church meets on the first floor of a hall at 239 West Sixty-ninth Street, near Broadway. Those who are interested in the New Testament church in this city of six million people may write to S. M. McKee, 105 West Sixty-fourth Street, New York City. I shall return to my home in Washington, D. C., and all who may in any way be interested in the work there may address me at 1319 Harvard Street, N. W. Brethren, if you can help us in our struggle to pay for the house of worship, it will be deeply appreciated."

Samuel E. Witty writes from Ontario, Cal., February 22: "What was doubtless the largest audience ever assembled by the church of Christ in California, if not on the Pacific Coast, heard S. H. Hall in the California Theater, at Ontario, February 20, at three o'clock in the afternoon, on the subject, 'The Sabbath or Lord's Day-Which?' Except a few seats, the large auditorium, seating about six hundred, was filled with earnest listeners. During the address C. H. Edwards, paster of the Adventist Church, sent a note by one of the ushers, requesting me to announce that he would reply to the address next Sunday afternoon, which I gladly did. After the announcement Brother Hall suggested continuing the discussion several Sundays; but Mr. Edwards declined, telling me afterwards that his health would not Brother Hall will be present next Sunday afternoon; and we will have another service the following Sunday, the Lord willing. Brother Hall has a pleasing personality, a kindly disposition, and delivers his message with power and fearlessness. His work in California is appreciated, productive of much good, and demonstrates that a church strictly after the New Testament pattern will be successful. We need more such workers.

C. E. Jones, Mount Rainier, Md., sends this: "The wheat-and-tares parable has several solutions. only, and reasons therefor, should not cause one to be classed as a heretic. I think Brother Sewell's point of once wheat, always wheat, and once tares, always tares, is well taken; for there is no known process to the agriculturist to make one the other. That is predestination, and there is no backsliding that can make the wheat become darnel, and vice versa. It is evident that the wheat and the tares grow in and of the same soil: if not, the uproofing of the darnel would not injure the wheat. I am of the opinion that the good seed is sown in the heart, and the tares are in the heart also. In Matt. 3: 12, John, speaking of Christ, says: 'Whose fan is in his hand, and he will thoroughly purge his floor, and gather his wheat into the garner; but he will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire.' (See, also, Luke 3: 17.) Any one acquainted with wheat growing knows that wheat cannot be grown without the chaff. It is as natural as the stalk or the soil. idea is this: Sometime since I saw published in the Gospel Advocate, credited to the Literary Digest, an article in which the Arctic explorer, Stefanson, said the Eskimos took kindly to the teaching of the Bible; but he admonished to teach the Bible, and let the truth work out the Do not begin on their errors, but inculcate the error. truth, and error will die, for they cannot live in the same place. And, by the way, that is good anywhere preaching is done. Do not talk of the errors or sins that are Teach the truth, and error will find no place in evident. the mind or heart filled with the truth. If none but the sinless at death will enter the kingdom, then I know of no man who will enter. I know of no man who will lay claim to sinlessness. He that saith he hath no sin is a liar and the truth is not in him. Was not something like this in Paul's mind when he exclaimed: 'But I see another law in my members, warring against the law of my mind, and bringing me into captivity to the law of sin which is in my members. O wretched man that I am' who shall deliver me from the body of this death?' My opinion is that when we lie down in death, there will be much within us that is not pure; but the refining fire will destroy these impurities, and he will gather the wheat into his garner, and the frailties of mortality will be no more. It so happened that on the Sunday this lesson was up I taught the men's Bible class, and stated that I would say something not orthodox, but gave it as my opinion only. It was a new way of presenting the matter, and some liked my exposition, while to others it was too new for them to give a positive answer (and so far as that is concerned, I guess they have not thought of it since). And I am giving it here as my opinion only, it appearing the most logical solution of the matter to my mind."

James Knox Polk South.

BY M. C. K.

The passing of this distinguished man of God is an event of no ordinary significance in the church and general region around Frankfort, Ky. He was born in Breathitt County, Ky., February 1, 1845, and died at his country home five miles east of Frankfort, Ky., January 29, 1921, thus lacking only three days of completing seventy-six years of age. He became a Christian early in life, and at the time of his death he had been a preacher of the gospel for fifty years.

In civic life, as well as in the capacity of a Christian, Brother South was a man of sterling worth and of lofty purpose. He scorned and had no time for mere pretenders, was the quintessence of honor and uprightness in all his dealings with men, and never stooped to ignoble things. Soon after the outbreak of the Civil War, though only seventeen years of age, he was made first lieutenant in the Fifth Kentucky Regiment, thus becoming a member of the famous Orphan Brigade, and served with distinction at the battle of Chickamauga and in many of the other chief engagements of the Civil War; but at the end of that unfortunate period of fratricidal strife, with his eyes opened to higher and better things, he laid down the sword of carnal warfare for "the sword of the Spirit" and dedicated his life and talents to the business of a "soldier of Christ Jesus." He saw and thoroughly appreciated the mistaken policy of the nations of the earth in resorting to carnal warfare to settle their differences, and he was as brave in contending for the principles of the "Prince of Peace" and as a soldier under his banner as he had been on the field of bloody carnage.

He was educated in the College of the Bible of Kentucky University (now Transylvania University), and was graduated from that institution in 1871. In 1876 he was married to Miss Eudora Lindsay, of Gallatin County, Ky., a lady of rare culture and refinement and a distinguished graduate of Hocker College (now Hamilton), Lexington, Ky. She had supplemented her collegiate course by studying abroad in Dresden, Saxony, and other centers of learning on the European continent. With brilliant intellectual powers and rare achievements as a student in the world of letters, she combined the graces of Christianity and all the noble qualities which make up the highest type of Christian womanhood, and to this faithful man of God she was a true helpmeet indeed. They founded Excelsior Institute. five miles east of Frankfort, Ky., a school of languages and Hterature for boys and girls, of which she was principal, and it was operated with marked success for over thirty Brother South's whole life as a preacher was spent mainly in Kentucky. Antioch, Butler, Ebenezer, Falmouth, Forks of Elkhorn, Glencoe, Grassy Springs, High Bridge, Lexington, "The Old Stone Church" near Millville, Salem, and Swallowfield are some of the places where his work stands as a monument to his memory. His bodily strength and vigor remained unimpaired until within the past year, when a slight stroke of paralysis marked the beginning of his decline. A large concourse of sympathizing friends and acquaintances from far and near attended the funeral services at the family residence on Sunday afternoon, January 30, 1921. Brother Roger T. Nooe, of Frankfort, Ky., led in prayer, and the writer, in memory of his devoted friend and true yokefellow in the ministry, choosing the theme, "Human Greatness," spoke the following words on the occasion:

Text: "Know ye not that there is a prince and a great man fallen this day in Israel?" (2 Sam. 3: 38.) an fallen this day in Israel?" (2 Sam, 3; 38.)
This language was spoken by David in memory of the illustrious Abner, whom Joab had ruthlessly slain. He calls him "a prince and a great man," and the language fitly describes him as one of the military heroes of the time. It introduces the question of human greatness, and it is of this quality or achievement in men that I propose to speak to-day.

When I was a student in college at Lexington, I was called to preach for the Grassy Springs Church, and it was at that memorable spot, when I came down to fill my appointment, that I first met Brother South. Though he was considerably my senior, we soon became intimate and confiding friends, and I have loved him with increasing devotion from that day to this. A few weeks ago, on hearing that he had become seriously ill, I seized the first opportunity and came at once to see him. There was hope then that he would get up again, but a change for the worse took place recently, and the news reached me over the telephone yesterday morning that he had passed away. I at once thought of the language of David spoken in memory of Abner: "Know ye not that there is a prince and a great man fallen this day in Israel?

But why should we apply this language to Brother South? Is it justly so applied? Was he a great man? This leads me to say that human greatness is a variable quality according as it is measured by different standards. men are called great because of their splendid achievements in leading vast armies to victory in war; others, because of their intellectual brilliancy and high achievements in the world of letters; others, because of their achievements as statesmen in the halls of legislation; and still others are called great because of their arduous labors and glorious achievements in the world of science; but the greatest and wisest being ever veiled in human flesh, the greatest and wisest being even when of Galilee, who brought to earth heaven's measure of greatness, said: "Whosoever would be first among you, shall be servant of all." (Mark 10: 44.) And herein lies the greatness of Brother South, When measured by heaven's standard, it was of the highest order. He was great as God's servant, and great as a servant of men. Permit me to analyze, in a brief sketch, his high character as a preacher of the gospel, in which capacity he possessed some of the noblest and most exalted traits. We may mention the following:

1. His profound and abiding faith in the Bible as the word of God. His soul was never haunted by the demon of doubt. His faith was simple and sublime, and throughout his whole life it was steady and unwavering. As the river widens and deepens in its flow, so the stream of his faith in God and the divine word broadened and deepened with the passing years. In this particular respect he was a model to be associated with young men in the ministry, and I am happy to believe that on the minds of many of these he has left the indelible impress of his own abiding faith.

2. His love of the truth. With him it was not a question whether a thing were popular, but whether it were true. If convinced that it was the truth, that settled the matter with him and he accepted it promptly and without hesitation. The language of John Locke, the eminent English philosopher, applied in his case: "Truth, whether in or out of fashion, is the measure of knowledge and the business of the understanding. Whatsoever is besides that, however authorized by consent or recommended by rarity, is nothing but ignorance or something worse." As his Master lived and died for the love of the truth, so Brother South lived and died in the love of the truth.

3. His zeal in preaching and spreading the truth. In eloquence in pleading for the truth, he was neither a Cicero nor an Apollos, but he was fired and dominated by the zeal of Paul in spreading it abroad. Numerous places in towns and villages and rural districts will mourn his departure, and his work among them is a monument to his zeal. The rich and the well to do honored him, but no one was ever too poor to enjoy his fellowship. He was not ill at ease among the wealthy, but he could sit in the hovel of poverty and be at home with the humblest of men.

4. His exemplary life in living the truth. He believed and consistently practiced the lofty sentiment expressed by Horace Bushnell: "There is no fit search after truth which does not, first of all, begin to live the truth which it knows." In his home, in the pulpit, in the social circle, in his business dealings with men, and in all the walks of life, he lived the gospel which he preached. In fact, if any difference, the sermon preached by his life was more eloquent than that preached by his tongue. If consistency is a jewel, then that between his theory and his practice will be a resplendent gem in his crown.

5. His life in his home. In the home is where the character of the real man appears. Brother South's home life was a life of happiness. Probably but few men, if any. were ever more fortunate than he in his marriage. In April, 1918, his noble wife, who, to speak in strong terms, had been more than all the world to him, preceded him to the world beyond. If he was a prince among men, surely she was a queen among women. From the day he led her to the hymencal altar to the day of her death, he was always proud of her. And this is the feeling of all good husbands He was no more gallant in the effort toward good wives. to win her heart and hand than he was in the effort to make her happy as his wife. In fact, her noble intellect, her rare culture, and her tender heart, with all that goes to make up noble womanhood, inspired noble impulses within him, and the two trod the marital pathway in harmony and mutual love. Eight children, five daughters and three sons, were born to bless this happy home, and they all survive their mother and father. Following in the footsteps of parental training, they are now engaged on dif-ferent lines in filling the mission of life. The memory of their noble mother and father will be a benediction on their I am glad to speak these words in memory of their noble father and of my own dear and devoted friend, Brother South. Dropping a tear of brotherly love and sweet friendship on his bier, I quote the appropriate words of James Montgomery:

Servant of God, well done!
Rest from thy loved employ;
The battle fought, the victory won,
Enter thy Master's joy.

His spirit, with a bound,
Left its encumbering clay;
His tent, at sunrise, on the ground
A darkened ruin lay.

The pains of death are past,
Labor and sorrow cease,
And, life's long warfare closed at last,
His soul is found in peace.

A Defense of Baptist Doctrine.

BY F. W. SMITH.

The following from L. R. Burress is an effort to defend the teaching and practice of the Baptist Church:

"A KINDLY CRITICISM."

Under this heading Elder F. W. Smith, in the Gospel Advocate of December 23 and January 6, replied to a statement made by me in the December 23 number, designing to show Baptist "form of sound words." Baptists are vehement for proper words, but more particularly zealous for what is in the words: the prevalence of principles, rather than the confusion of tongues.

Baptists believe and teach that a New Testament church is composed of baptized (immersed) believers, taking the gespel as sufficient for faith and practice. Such is free and independent, not subject to the jurisdiction of any other body. The churches founded by the apostles consulted them, but the apostles claimed no authority over the churches above teaching as the Spirit inspired them. (Acts 15: 1-27; 2 Cor. 1: 24.)

The highest authority given by the Lord to men is recorded in Matt. 18: 15-24, to loose and bind on earth, and so done in heaven. Such a church not only may exclude a member, but restore the excluded and receive new members. (1 Cor. 5: 5: 2 Cor. 2: 5-8; Acts 2: 41.) Christ presides though only two or three are gathered in his name in one body.

If the churches of a province, as Galatia or Judea and Galilee, make a larger body than a local church, why not write "the church of Galatia" instead of "the churches of Galatia?" Because, as Brother Smith says, "each church or congregation was left free and independent of all others, bound together by no organic law. The only tie that was intended to bind them one to another was the law of Christian love." Baptists say "Amen." I make no claim to schoolcraft, but say the word "ekkleesia," translated "church," demands an assembly, as used in (1 Cor. 5: 4) "when ye are gathered together," (1 Cor. 11: 18) "when ye come together in the church."

Contrary to this, appears a broader use of the word "church," as in (1 Cor. 15: 9) "I persecuted the church of God." When Paul was a persecutor, there was but one church, which was at Jerusalem. No record of any other at that time. Eph. 1: 22, 23: "And hath put all things under his feet, and gave him to be the head over all things to the church, which is his body, the fullness of him that filleth all in all." This, like the "general assembly and church of the first-born" (Heb. 12: 23), will be the assembled church of the saved, the kept, the gathered, and the glorified.

New Testament churches have a genetic relationship. They are on the same foundation, have the same commission, and, as Brother Smith says, "they are bound together by no organic law."

He also says that Baptists have legislated on experiences to be told before baptism. The answer is, the Bible is their "Code of Laws" for faith and fact.

"Code of Laws" for faith and fact.

Christian experience begins in godly sorrow for sin which worketh repentance toward God and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ. Eph. 4: 32: "Even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you." "He that is forgiven much loveth much." That one may know that his experience is true, "the Spirit himself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God [born again]." "No man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost." Saving faith in Christ as the divine Son of God is testified by the Spirit in every believer.

Ananias was afraid of Saul: but when told by the Lord of Saul's experience, he went to the former persecutor and addressed him, saying: "Brother Saul." Before his baptism there fell from his eyes as if it had been scales, and he received sight forthwith. Saul, afterwards Paul, could say: "Not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us, by the working of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost; which he shed on us abundantly through Jesus Christ our Savior." (Tit. 3: 5, 6.) Yet all admit baptism "a work of righteousness."

Baptists do not baptize into churches, but "in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." In the figure of baptism "which doth also now save us, (not the putting away of the filth of the flesh [sins], but the answer of a good conscience before God)." Having the heart sprinkled from an evil conscience, now prepared to give the answer in baptism, by having the body washed in pure water. (1 Pet. 3: 21; Heb. 10: 22.)

The spiritual qualifications and outward manifestation prepare one to be added to a New Testament church, making "manifest to Israel." (John 1: 31.)

The "larger body" than a local church was an after-thought which led to centralizing as many churches as would consent. This larger body soon needed an overhead ruler. A bishop (pastor) was made "archbishop," not for service, but for official power, and seeking more extended power, bringing the kings of earth in subjection to the man styled "vicegerent of God," the pope; reaching higher and canonizing saints in heaven and dragging down to hell Wiclif, who had been resting in heaven for years, now cast into the pit of Romish anathemas. The taproot of this presumption is, "without baptism you cannot be saved;" even the infant must go by way of the font, or be turned away from heaven. Salvation is by faith, that it might be by grace. "And if by grace, then is it no more of works; otherwise grace is no more grace. But if it be of works, then is it no more grace; otherwise work is no more work." (Rom, 11: 6.) Salv are earned. (1 Cor. 3: 9-15.) Salvation is a free gift; rewards

A true Baptist is saved, believing what God has revealed and obeying what God hath commanded. He does not besalvation is of grace and works combined, "speaking half in the speech of Ashdod, and could not speak in the Jews' language." (Neh. 13: 24.)

They believe that God's providence which has wrought graciously in bringing their brethren through such a labyrinth as the past will not withdraw his protection and guidance in any crisis that may befall.

The great Shepherd said: "Other sheep I have, which are not of this fold: them also I must bring, and they shall hear my voice; and there shall be one fold, and one shepherd." This shall be the "larger body."

I wish to commend the kind spirit of Brother Burress in his reply to my strictures. Very few of the Baptists who enter the field of controversy manifest the good spirit we find in our brother's replies. He says: "Baptists are vehement for proper words, but more particularly zealous for what is in the words." This is a fine sentiment, and would be very commendable upon the part of Brother Burress if he could find the word "Baptists," as he uses the term, in the word of God. In fact, he cannot find the plural of "Baptist" in the Bible at all. Only one man was called by that name, and it was John the Baptist, and not John a Baptist, because "Baptist" was his official namederived from the work of a baptizer. Our brother makes an improper use of the word in that he applies it to people who do not baptize. Again, the term "Baptist," as it stands in the word of God, does not contain the meaning attached to it by the religious body known as Baptists. The principles of New Testament doctrine are enunciated in the words of the New Testament; and when men employ words (such as "Baptists") which are not used by New Testament writers, they are enunciating doctrines not authorized by that book; and this is exactly what Brother Burress is doing.

The "authority" mentioned in Matt. 18: 18 was conferred upon none save the apostles, who were the only legislators in the kingdom of Christ. The church has no authority to bind or loose anything within the realm of Christianity. Such a doctrine is Roman Catholicism pure and simple, and it is surprising to see a Protestant advocating it. For the church to exclude a member is not binding anything, but executing a law bound upon the church by the inspired apostles,

Our friend asks: "If the churches of a province, as Galatia or Judea and Galilee, make a larger body than a local church, why not write 'the church of Galatia' instead of 'the churches at Galatia?'" Well, when the disciples are referred to within a given district or territory. it is eminently proper and scriptural to speak of them as the church (singular) in that territory. Hence we read: "So the church throughout all Judea and Galilee and Samaria had peace," etc. (Acts 9: 31, A. R. V.) Here the term "church" is applied to something more than a local congregation, which fact completely refutes our friend's contention. He contends that the word "translated 'church' demands an assembly, as used in (1 Cor. 5: 4) when ye are gathered together," (1 Cor. 11: 18) when ye come together in the church." In this, I am sure, he is mistaken. The word "church" may be and is applied to the disciples when assembled for worship, and it is also applied to them when not assembled. Were not those who came together in one place in the church before they assembled? Again, when the assembly adjourned, were they not still in the church? If not, where were they? He contends that Eph. 1: 22, 23 and Heb. 12: 23 do not refer to the church on earth, but to something that will be assembled-"the gathered and the glorified." Surely our friend misread Heb. 12: 23, for that passage speaks of a general assembly and church of the first-born to which those to whom the epistle was written had already come. "But ye are come," and not will come, is the language of the Bible on the subject.

Brother Burress does not disprove the charge that Baptists have legislated in matters religious, but replies: "'The Bible is their 'Code of Laws' for faith and fact." Well, why did he not cite us to the divine evidence for faith and point out the example for fact? Instead of this, he talks about godly sorrow and repentance. No one has denied that a fit subject for baptism must exercise repentance; but that is the width of the heavens from the experience the Baptists require of one before baptism-viz.: "I believe that God, for Christ's sake, has pardoned my sins."

To quote Eph. 4: 32 does not help his case, for that is not a case of a church receiving members into its fellowship, but an incentive to Christians to forgive each other.

Yes, the Spirit bears witness with, but not to, our spirits. It is joint testimony, but not a thing for the church to sit in judgment on. The Spirit testifles what one must believe and do in order to become a child of God, and the human spirit testifies to having fulfilled the requirements. Thus the spirit bears witness with our spirit that we are children of God.

He thinks that because Ananias addressed Saul as "Brother Saul," that Saul was saved—a child of God before baptism. If that be true, then those who murdered the Son of God were saved-the children of God before repentance: for Peter addressed them as "brethren." (Acts 2: 29.) The Jews all, regardless of spiritual conditions, addressed each other as "brethren."

More hereafter.

A Worthy Cause Needing Help.

BY E. A. E.

The following letter concerning the need of the Lord's work in Savannah, Ga., is self-explanatory:

Valdosta, Ga., February 9, 1921.—Dear Brother: No doubt you have seen in the papers mention of our effort to help the church at Savannah, Ga., buy a church house. We have not succeeded in raising all the money necessary: so I am writing, asking thirty churches to send us a contribution of twenty-five dollars by March 1, and the same each month for the three following months. Of course, if you can do more, we will appreciate it; if you are not able to do so much, what you can send will be gratefully accepted. If you are familiar with the history of New Testament Christianity in this country, you will know that this is truly missionary work. We have only a few congregations in Georgia, and only a few of them are able to do anything toward this work. If we fall to raise this money. the work in Savannah will fail. May the Lord lay this work on your heart that you may help us. Kindly drop us a line, letting us know what your congregation is willing to do for the Lord's cause in this much-neglected part of the world. Make all checks payable to J. N. Copeland. treasurer, care of M. S. & D. A. Byck Company, Savanna, Ga. Yours for the Master, G. E. CLAUS,

In every center like Savannah special efforts should be made to establish the cause of Christ. New York City: Rochester, N. Y.; Washington City; Union, S. C., where Brethren Burton and Nix are at work, and other places are all worthy and needy fields, and, with proper attention and sufficient generosity, can be so cultivated as to yield thirty, sixty, or a hundredfold, or, to use another of the Savior's figures, can be made cities on a hill whose light cannot be hid. We should not only be glad to see such appeals, but gladder to respond to them. We cannot give amiss to give to one or all of these; and there are enough good congregations in the land to build all these and many other churches.

SOME QUESTIONS ANSWERED.

Kennett, Mo., January 31, 1921.—Dear Brother Elam: Please answer through the Gospel Advocate the following questions: (1) Give scriptural proof that the day we call "Sunday" is the first day of the week. (2) Give historical proof that Saturday is the Sabbath or the seventh day the Jews were commanded to keep holy.

Yours in Christ, Mrs. CARL GREEN.

The Bible does not give the names of the days of the week, as it does not give the names of the months of our year. But who can doubt that January is the first month and December the last month of the year? Some school history or unabridged dictionary will explain how the months of the year and the days of the week received their names.

There is no scriptural proof that George Washington was the first President of the United States, but it is a fact. So there is no scriptural proof that the seventh day of the week is called "Saturday" and that the first day of the week is called "Sunday," or of the names of the intervening days; but these are facts, which may be learned as stated above.

God rested from all his work on the seventh day, and blessed and hallowed it. (Gen. 2: 1-3.) This was not the first day. God made the seventh day the Sabbath day. (Ex. 20: 10.) The day after the Sabbath day was "the first day of the week." (Matt. 28: 1.) Jesus rested in the grave on the Sabbath day (which was the seventh day) and rose from the dead on the first day. Men have named the first day "Sunday," and the seventh day they have named "Saturday." God told the Jews what to do and what not to do on the seventh day, and he has told Christians what to do on the first day.

BLUE LAWS.

In some quarters there is much discussion of the "blue laws," or laws whose purpose is to regulate the conduct of people on Sunday. God has shown in his wisdom and by the old Jewish Sabbath that one day of rest in seven is good for man and beast, and civil governments have shown their wisdom in making Sunday a civil day of general rest, and also in not making Sunday such a day as the Jewish Sabbath, on which day no fire was to be kindled, no cooking was to be done, only a short journey of six furlongs could be made, and for gathering sticks on which day a man was stoned to death by the command of God. We say this with all reverence for God and respect for civil authorities, because God through Christ has abrogated the Sabbath and has given "the first day of the week," called also "the Lord's day;" and has given full directions in the New Testament to his children how to spend that day. The New Testament teaches that God's children should meet together on the first day of the week to honor and to remember Jesus; to proclaim his death by observing the Lord's Supper (Acts 7: 20: 1 Cor. 11: 17-34; Heb. 10: 25); to sing together (Eph. 5: 19; Col. 3: 16); to pray together; to exhort and teach one another and to teach others (1 Cor. 14); to contribute (1 Cor. 16: 1, 2). By the time this has been properly and reverently done, there will be little time left for work or frolic. Besides, Christians are also commanded to submit to all civil laws when not in conflict with the law of God, and they will do nothing on Sunday in disobedience to the laws of the civil government. And on Sunday, as well as on Monday, Christians will not engage in any amusements or any employment which are violations of God's law and contrary to the spirit of Christ. It is both the duty and pleasure of Christians to live exemplary, quiet, peaceable lives "in all godliness and gravity," and they will do nothing on Sunday which will impair their influence or interfere with their growth as the children of God. Paul declares that laws are made for evildoers—to restrain and punish them and to protect the innocent and helpless and righteous. (1 Tim. 1: 9-11.) God's children—Christians—will do right, anyway—that is, for right's sake, for Christ's sake.

It is a strange thing, though, that some lawmakers and not a few religious people will make such a great ado over doing things which God does not condemn, but will not spend seven cents street-car fare or cross the street in order to do that which God does command. It is all right to enact laws to restrain evildoers, on the one hand, and to protect the righteous and the worshipers of God, on the other hand; but lawmakers and especially religious people would have a greater influence by far in making what are called "Sunday laws," if they would first observe "the Lord's day" as God himself directs.

James E. Laird, Piggott, Ark., writes as follows: "I recently received a call from the faithful few at Hayti, Mo. saying, 'Come over and help us.' I answered the call, and preached for them on the fifth Lord's day in January and a part of the following week. The church there has suffered at the hands of the 'digressives,' who recently held a meeting there and caused division in the church. church at present is composed of about twelve members. only two of which are male members-one man and a thirteen-year-old boy. When the man is absent, the sisters and the boy conduct the services. They own the house in which they worship, and have the restrictive clause in the They want a month's meeting held in June, have asked me to assist them in arranging the meeting and securing help to support it. We want to stretch a tent on the ground, secure the services of a good singer, and preach the gospel there a month. But to do this we will need help. So I am making this appeal to the brethren in general to send us one Lord's-day's contribution to help support the meeting. Send all contributions to C. L. Purdom, 824 Vine Street, Paragould, Ark. Brother Purdom. who is an elder in the church at Paragould, will act as treasurer for the funds for the work at Hayti."

In a note addressed to Brother McQuiddy, E. G. Cullum. of Nashville, Tenn., says: "I want to congratulate you on the article in the Gospel Advocate of February 24 on picture I attended these shows occasionally a few But when one reflects that the business is of such nature that even a city government thinks it wise to have a board of censors to pass on the picture, it seems to me that this shows they are of a very questionable nature, and the safe side is to let them alone. I know of preachers who have been severely criticized for attending the shows. and no doubt their influence is weakened thereby. by the leaders in the church, elders and preachers, attending these worldly shows, others are encouraged to go, some of whom are not strong, perhaps, either morally or reli-giously, and are started in the wrong direction. A good church member who has been attending the shows said to me a short time ago that his observation was that about ninety per cent of the shows had either scenes or words in them that were suggestive of evil and calculated to do evil. Admitting that some of the pictures are of value from an educational standpoint or that they are uplifting from a moral standpoint, does not the fact that the majority of them have suggestive scenes in them which are neither of educational value nor uplifting make them dangerous? Error is always more attractive when truth is mixed with While there is so much suffering throughout the world. could not Christians spend their money to a much better purpose than by giving it for worldly amusements? I think we need more of such articles in our papers, and we need more preaching against worldly practices; but, first, a Christian teacher (our teachers) must 'avoid the very appearance of evil' and be 'happy' in that he 'condemneth not himself in the thing which he alloweth,"

Little Brother of All.

The Christ Child unto the stable came,
"Twixt the midnight and the morn;
His mother laid him softly down,
By the beasts of hoof and horn.
The friendly kine a-near him stood,
In the frost of the early day,
And, little Brother of all the poor,
He slept in the fragrant hay.

The Christ Child slept in the stable dim.

And over him flamed the star.

That was golden bright with the light of heaven.

Where God and the angels are.

Then, journeying far, came king and priest.

With a wealth of spices sweet.

And, little Brother of all the rich.

They knelt to kiss his feet.

"I'll Try Again."

With the last word of her angry outburst Beatrice caught her breath sharply. What had she done? It was nearly a month since she had promised her mother that she would try to control the violent outbreaks of temper which she herself realized were going to be a handleap to her if they were not mastered during her girlhood, and this was the fourth such scene.

Her brother Donald, who, without intending it, had angered her, hurriedly left the room as he saw the tears well into Beatrice's brown eyes.

"O, mother," she said brokenly, "I've done it again! When Don began teasing me about my Latin, I was sure I was going to hold both my temper and my tongue; but before I knew it I was saying everything ugly and hateful that I could think of. I don't believe it's any use for me to try!"

"How long is it since you gave me your promise, dear?" her mother asked.

"Almost a month," was the answer.

"Almost a month!" Mrs. Clapp repeated cheerily.

"Dear me! What a long time you've taken, dear, for such a simple little task as conquering your hot temper!" Then with a change of tone she asked: "Beatrice, dear, do you remember the beautiful, smooth, round pebbles that you were so fond of collecting at the seashore last summer?"

There was a nod of the head that snuggled so comfortably on mother's shoulder, a murmur of assent.

"In the beginning those pebbles were not smooth and round as you found them last summer," Mrs. Clapp went on gently. "They had rough sides, with sharp edges and jagged corners. They have been made smooth by the washing of the water over their surfaces, and they have been ground against each other until the rough surfaces and the sharp edges and corners have been worn smooth. But, dear, the ocean didn't accomplish this in a month, or a year, or even ten years. I've read somewhere that it took as much as a hundred years!"

At this surprising information Beatrice straightened up, a little smile curving her lips. "You don't think it will take me a hundred years to master my temper, do you, mother?" she asked demurely.

"Hardly, dear. But if it takes a hard-working ocean a hundred years to grind off the corners and smooth the surface of the pebbles that we pick up on its shores, isn't it just possible that it will take a certain girl, whom we both know, more than one month to get the better of her hasty temper?"

Beatrice looked thoughtful. "It makes it easier to think of it that way," she said at last. "I will try, mother, just as hard as I can; and when I get discouraged I'll think of the ocean working a hundred years on the pebbles, and I'll try again just as hard as I can."—Selected.

Popularity.

This is one of those words which may denote a valuable or a worthless thing.

Of course, anybody and everybody is pleased to have "greetings in the market places" and, even more, "chief seats in the synagogues."

But, after all, the real value of such honors depends upon the reasons for bestowing them.

To be applauded because you chime in with the voice of the crowd is not an applause witnessing to real merit. In fact, it may testify only to base subservience and cowardice. "The populace hisses at me, but I approve myself," was a fine old Roman declaration.

There are not a few people who go about smiling and shaking hands, but who have not the slightest interest in those whom they accost with such courtesies; and if these latter accept the greeting as a tribute to themselves, they do so simply out of their own egotism.

Yet, such is the average egotism, most of us do feel a satisfaction in these tributes. We know, if we would only think, that they mean nothing, except the desire to stand well with us; but we prefer to accept them as a proof of our own value and others' appreciation thereof.

And so we cause both them and ourselves serious harm. We encourage them in paying false flattery, and we encourage ourselves in false self-approval.

The simple truth is that nobody should seek to be popular. If he, going on in honest endeavor to do right and to help his fellows, can thus gain their encomiums, he may well rejoice.

But to shape his opinions and to order his conduct with the purpose of becoming "popular" is to ruin himself and to become noxious to his fellow men.

George Herbert finely says: "Scorn no man's love." That is quite right. But love is one thing, and popularity is quite another. To do what wins love must always be Christian; to do what only wins applause may often be devilish.—The Palm Branch.

Getting Along With Folks.

How to get along with other people and how to help them get along with us is pretty largely a matter of how to use one's tongue. Tongue control produces not only selfcontrol, but other-folks control.

Here is how one man who is making a success of his life attacks the problem. He has laid down for himself the following rules, observance of which will be a mighty assistance to any of us:

"I will not be provoking, if I know it.

"I will not be provoked, if I can help it; or, if I am, I will not speak till I have thought it over, putting myself in the other fellow's place.

"I will not be petty. I will pass over small offenses and small annoyances without fuss or comment.

"I will not insist on my way because it is my way. If the other fellow's is about as good, I'll take it.

"I will say what I think and then drop the subject, especially if it seems a case of getting hot. Argument doesn't convince after that.

"I will let the other fellow have the last word, the larger half of the credit, and all of it, if he wants it."—Selected.

WHY HAVE CATARRH?

So Disagreeable to Yourself and All About You.

Catarrh is generally conceded to be a constitutional disease. Therefore it requires a constitutional remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla which reaches every part of the system by thoroughly purifying and enriching the blood. CHURCH NEWS

Kentucky.

Wingo, February 22.-I have been here at Wingo a few days. I preached at the Wednesday-night meeting for Bible reading and prayer. On Friday I went out to Mount Pleasant congregation, some six miles out in the country. A farmers' meeting had the first night in the evening services, and a class for Bible study was then organized, in which work I rendered some assistance and made a short talk. We also had an appointment circulated for Pilot Oak for Saturday night, and arranged for meetings at Mount Pleasant for Sunday, morning and night. However, because of a heavy snowfall and cold winds, we had no services on Saturday night, and only a few were out on Lord's day; but we had good meetings. On Monday morning a sad event took place. Brother B. B. Wray went to begin school for the week at Pilot Oak, and in making a fire the can of gasoline which he was using exploded and he was severely burned, as a result of which he died this morning. He was a noble church worker, a fine teacher, and his death casts a cloud of sorrow over both the Pilot Oak and Mount Pleasant communities.-Andrew Perry.

Missouri.

Joplin, February 21.- I finished my work in Arkansas with a two-nights' discussion with the Holiness people. It was a victory for the truth, and the Holiness people acknowledged that fact by leaving the house and refusing to remain for my last speech. The house would not hold the crowds, and everybody seemed to enjoy it to the fullest extent. I am to go back to that locality for two meetings some-time this fall. I preached for the brethren at Bee Branch, Ark., last Lord's day, and enjoyed the association of these brethren after not being with them for five years. They have made a steady growth in that time, and I hope they will continue faithful and be able to accomplish much good for the cause there. I will go from here to Mountview, Miller County, to hold a meeting. Correspondents should address me at Iberia, Mo.-I. D. Ames.

Oklahoma.

Elk City, February 21.- I returned home on Saturday from the preachers' meeting at Sulphur. It was a good one. There were thirty-three preachers present one day, with several throughout. My work with the congregation here is very pleasant, and, believe, profitable also, I am very busy in the Master's work, and most of the members here are cooperating We assemble each heartily in it. Lord's day morning at 10 A.M. for Bible study: preaching at 11 A.M. (followed by communion) and at 7 P. The Ladies' Bible Class meets at the church house each Tuesday afternoon; Thursday night we hold our regular midweek Bible study; and Saturday afternoon I bave the children of the congregation, together with others who may be persuaded to come, to meet at the meetinghouse, where we sing and study Bible characters for one hour. In addition to this, I go out somewhere every Sunday afternoon, when the weather will permit, and assist near-by congregations who have no regular minister. Let us work "while it is day: the night cometh, when no man can work."—J. A. Cullum.

Holdenville, February 22.—On Friday night, January 28, I left home for South Texas. I began at Sinton on Sunday morning and continued over the following Sunday night. Rain and bad weather hindered some, but part of the time we had large crowds. One was restored to the fellowship, and I hope that good was done in other ways. On Monday, February 7, I went to Bishop, where I preached to a large crowd on Monday night. While in South Texas I found that Brother F. J. Berry is doing a splendid work in Corpus Christi, the congregation growing steadily under his ministry. He was with me several days at Sinton, and assisted in the song and prayer service. Brother C. W. Sewell, of Corpus Christi, is also doing a good work, both at Sinton and at Bishop. He is loved by all the saints at all the places where he is laboring. He was with me at Sinton on the last Sunday of the meeting. I know of no other field where the principle expressed by our Savior in Matt. 9: 37 is more applicable than in South Texas. Truly, "the harvest is plenteous, but the laborers are few." A rich country, bountiful crops, good climate, and the Lord's people have a mind to work and will support the laborer. Who will answer the Macedonian cry from South and Southwest Texas and go? Other preachers are needed in the field. There is Brother Texas Stevens, at Yoakum, who needs some help in his part of the State. The work at Holdenville is doing very We have some fine brethren at this place. I go to Butler next Sunday. On with the work!—W. D.

Texas.

Houston, February 21.—The work with the First Church, of this city, is progressing nicely, and the interest is steadily growing, with additions almost every Lord's day. I am delighted with the work here, and we hope to accomplish more this year than last. Last week we had three midweek, services. These services were made up of short addresses by twelve of the members of the churches here, led by thirty-minute addresses by Brethren J. S. Dunn, Oscar Smith, and the writer. These meetings were profitable and enjoyable. We are to give a like program with the Heights Church next month. All the congregations are working together in peace and harmony, and we are soon to begin evangelistic meetings, to continue through the spring months .-J. H. Lawson.

The Rogers-Long Debate.

BY L. L. M'GILL.

The Rogers-Long debate at Weyburn, Saskatchewan, Canada, closed on Monday, February 14. From a standpoint of dissemination of truth it was a grand success. One man voiced the sentiment of the audience when he said: "I have learned more about the Bible at this discussion than I ever knew before"

There were some very noticeable differences in the methods of the two disputants, Mr. Long entered the debate with a complete set of printed texts and arguments. Brother Rogers depended entirely upon memory. Long would dodge the issue and divert the minds of the audience by misrepresentation and misapplied definitions of words. Brother Rogers would correct and expose his tactics, quoting for evidence scripture upon scripture.

The controversy was comparatively free from personalities, although Mr. Long on several occasions cast personal reflections upon his opponent which would have been better unsaid. It is a commendable fact that Mr. Rogers confined his remarks to the subject in hand.

The Bible was the only standard of evidence, and the audience was the jury. The verdict of those not connected with either church seems to have been: "Rogers has the truth and can ably defend it."

Long's brethren claim him to be one of their ablest defenders, he having participated in seventeen debates.

Brother Rogers has asked Mr. Long to meet him again during the coming summer, but thus far the latter has declined

Brother Rogers affirmed this proposition: "Resolved, that the church of Christ, of which I, H. A. Rogers, am a n ember, is in harmony with the Bible in origin, organization, doctrine, and faith." Mr. Long affirmed this: "The baptism of the Holy Ghost bestowed on the church at Pentecost, according to promise, as an abiding comforter, was unlimited in its application as to time or place."

We are at present (February 17) holding meetings, and there has been one baptism to date. The good that has been done in this discussion will not all be evident in immediate results.

OBITUARIES

King.

Brother Henry King, of Lecanto, Fla., died on February 14, 1921, aged seventy-five years. He leaves a wife and five children to mourn his departure. He obeyed the gospel about forty-five years ago, and proved faithful to his duty as a Christian. At a time when it looked like the cause would go down here, he, with two or three other faithful brethren and his wife, held up the light, until now there is a very strong little band of faithful Christians here worshiping as the New Testament teaches, His companion is very ill, and it looks as though she will soon follow. Many friends attended his funeral. Every one that knew him loved him. Funeral services were conducted by the writer in the little Lecanto meetinghouse, and his body was laid away to rest in the Lecanto cemetery. R. E. L. Taylor.

Stivers.

Thomas D. Stivers, son of Benjamin F, and Sarah E. Stivers, was born, at Frankfort, Ky., on February 20, 1859, and died on January 24, 1921. He became obedient to the gospel early in life and remained faithful until death. He leaves one son, Thomas E. Stivers, of Louisville, Ky., who, with his wife, is a member of the F Street church of Christ. Brother Stivers was preceded to the grave by his mother and by his wife three and one-half years. was buried in St. Stephen's Cemetery. He was brought to the City Hospital in Louisville for treatment on January 23 and died on the following Monday. Brother Stivers was well in-formed in the Scriptures and stood ready to defend the Master's cause. He was very active in building and talking up good interest in public schools. I pray that we may meet him in the sweet by and by. May God comfort the bereaved.

JARRATT L. SMITH.

Caldwell.

Angie V. Caldwell (née Dunnigan) was born in Obion County, Tenn., on November 14, 1851. She was married to L. O. Caldwell on April 2, 1872, it being Brother Caldwell's twenty-first birthday. Three children were born in this family. The first-born is still living; two died in infancy. Early in life Sister Caldwell became a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. In 1877 she, with her husband, was "born again," this time into the family of Cald in which her has been as the cald in which her cald in ily of God, in which she remained a devoted, faithful member until February 13, 1921, when, at the home of her daughter, Sister Doyle, in East Prairie, Mo., her spirit left its earthly home and went back to God who gave it. She was sixty-nine years, two months, and twenty-nine days old when she left her home and dear ones and entered into a higher and more perfect life, to die no more, neral was conducted by the writer, at Fremont Cemetery, on February 15, in the presence of a large and sympathetic audience, and her cold body was laid beside her children to await the resurrection morn, when all shall rise from the dead to be judged according to the way they have lived.

JOHN R. WILLIAMS.

Hare.

The subject of this sketch, Mrs. A. M. Hare, was born on November 29, 1835, and departed this life on November 6, 1920. Her death came after months of illness, at the home of her son, D. D. Hare, in Cannon County, Tenn., near the line of Rutherford County. While in her "teens" she became a Christian, and she main-tained her religious convictions and standing till the end came. It is this fact that gives to her friends and neighbors and family the hope of her salvation and of her entrance into the "everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ." Whether our days on earth be many or few, we should live ever in the present, but for the future. He who lives only in the present, without any reference to the hereafter, makes a fatal mistake: and he who thinks only of the future, disregarding the present and not profiting by past experience, is all but fanatical. Had Sister Hare lived only for her family, she might have lived serenely and died complacently, but might have waked up in an eternity of discontent. But her life was for God as well as for her home. Since 1864. Sister Hare had been a widow; Besides the son referred to, she had a daughter. Mrs. North, of Salem, Tenn., and a son, who preceded her to the grave some sixteen years. All the children became Christians. May "the God of all comfort" comfort the men and women, the boys and the girls, whose mothers have gone on before, leaving a rich heritage in the form of a good name and Christian teachings. Services were held at the grave, near the place of her death, and thus Sister Hare's bodily remains were hidden from view till the great resurrection. S. P. PITTMAN.

a niche of eternal melody in the hearts of their country."

So states the author of this little book, which we present as the best product of the pen of DeLong Rice. Into one hour of reading he has gathered the strange and romantic story of the two most wonderful political campaigns of Tennessee—the thrilling tale of the happy comradeship and the lifelong rivalry of the two-famous brothers—a disclosure of the remarkable and heretofore unpublished incidents that attended the political division of the Taylor family—the wonder of "The War of the Roses" that attracted the attention of the world—and the truth about "OLD LIMBER," the peerless and now immortal fox hound that played the leading role of sentiment in the political campaign of last fall, from the Mississippi River to the Unaka Mountains.

With a "Cast of Characters extending from a President of the United States to a fox hound," the story touches a wide range of human sentiment; and through it all is the aroma of crackling camp fires and the music of the chase.

Thanksgiving.

BY J. V. A. TRAYLOR.

One of the greatest desires of our lives should be to praise and honor There are many people who think that Thanksgiving Day comes only once a year, but every day should be a day of thanksgiving to us. Has our thanksgiving been in proportion to our asking and craving? I think that many times it has not. How many of us think of giving God a little praise apart from the public services of the church? Hear Paul: "In nothing be anxious; but in everything by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your requests be made known unto God." (Phil. 4: 6.)

We are so in the habit of taking God's gifts as a matter of course that we fail in our duty of rendering him thanks which are his due, God has showered blessings upon us, even more than we have asked for, and we have not been thankful for them. However, it is a thing we can remedy. It only wants a little thought, a little consideration. If we would think, if we would consider, it might all be remedied, and our hearts take their part in the worship of thanksgiving, which is God's due. "And the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, shall guard your hearts and your thoughts in Christ Jesus." (Phil. 4: 7.) All the things for which we should be thankful are numberless, because all good comes from God, and we can hardly count the blessings he has so richly bestowed upon us.

"Whether therefore ye eat, or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God." (1 Cor. 10: 31.) This is one great lesson that no Christian should lose sight of-that whether he eats or drinks or whatever else he may do, he must do it so as to bring glory to God.

Christians should remember that "every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, coming down from the Father of lights, with whom can be no variation, neither shadow that is cast by turning." (James 1: Whatever is good is from God, though whatever is evil is from the evil one. As from the sun, which is the fountain of light, so from God. who is the infinite fountain and source of all good things.

After having learned that all good comes from God, still we fail to give him praise for the blessings that we receive from his bountiful hand.

Whatever is good, or pure, or light, must necessarily come from him; for we realize that he is the only source of goodness. How good and merciful God is! He occupies no one place in the universe, but fills the heavens and the earth with his glory. He is no respecter of persons, and hates nothing that he has made; but he sends rain on the just and on the unjust. He is the Creator and preserver of all things, and is eternally the same, bestowing on all of his creatures good and perfect gifts.

Many may hide themselves from his light by the works of darkness, still God's beloved Son is calling and pleading: "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." (Matt. 11: 28.) God wills that no man die in sin, but rather that he may come unto him and live; and no man walks in darkness but he who will not come unto God that he may have life.

After having learned that God is the source of all that is good, why not give him the praise more than we do? Why not love him more? Why not tell the wonderful story of Jesus, and him crucified, more than we do? It does not matter where we are or how much we are persecuted, we should never fail to praise him. Paul and Silas were cast into prison and treated cruelly, but they did not fail to praise God. Ingratitude is one of the most grievous sins in the world. It is one of the worst crimes in the catalogue of wrongdoing. Again, the sin of ingratitude is the broad highway to envy, hatred, malice, and many other wrong things.

Among the ten lepers that Christ cleansed, there was only one who was grateful; the nine went away ungrateful. It seemed that the nine thought that God was not worthy of praise. When God delivered David out of the hands of his enemies and out of the hand of Saul, he praised God. Hear him: "I will call upon Jehovah who is worthy to be praised: so shall I be saved from mine enemies." (2 Sam. 22: 4.)

The disease that these ten men suffered with was the very worst. Not only was the disease such an extreme one, but the cure was absolutely complete. At a word they were made whole; and we can readily see when Jesus cures, he cures indeed. To look upon his face is to live. If one surrenders himself to the Savior in all the difficulties of life, his work in the soul is always complete. "He doeth all things well."

You well remember that among the ten lepers that were cleansed, only one gave God the praise; and he was a Samaritan. He himself returned and gave thanks to God in person; no one did it for him. If you are to thank God, do it personally. Just say to yourself: "God has been so good to me, and I must thank him, and it must come from the heart."

You have observed what this Samaritan did. He turned back and threw himself down at Jesus' feet, worshiping him. It seems he could not go a step further before he had thanked God. And it came from his heart. In other words, it was the expression of his soul.

Thanksgiving to God is the need of a soul that knows God has blessed him. The Samaritan turned around, fell at Jesus' feet, and thanked God. Let us always be ready and willing to give the glory, honor, and praise to God for all the blessings that he has so richly bestowed upon us.

women's aches, Sick and Nervous Headaches, Back aches—relieved quickly by the Reliable Remedy

IT'S LIQUID-QUICK EFFECT. Crusaders.

Our time demands crusaders. It demands crusaders of a vastly nobler type than those who in the olden days went forth to wrest the Savior's tomb from the hands of the infidel. The old crusader went forth to defend the tomb of the Lord. The modern crusader goes forth to champion the wronged for whom the Savior died. And is not all this just part of the gracious program of our Lord? He came to give liberty to the captives and the opening of the prison to them that are bound. How will he accomplish his righteous He will accomplish it purpose? through men and women who have been deeply saved by his grace. Apart from Jesus Christ I see no hope of a reordered and beautified world. But in Christ our possibilities are as big as our tasks. Divine fellowship is the assured spring of moral power. Faith in Christ Jesus issues in a noble fidelity. Love in Christ Jesus expresses itself in sacrificial chivalry. Hope in Christ Jesus declares itself in unbreakable endurance. In Christ Jesus, and in him alone, righteousness can be enthroned in the world; the crooked can be made straight, and the rough places plain.-J. H. Jowett.

A REMARKABLE HOME TREAT-MENT GIVEN BY ONE WHO HAD IT

In the year of 1893 I was attacked by Muscular and Sub-Acute Rhoumatism. I suffered as only those who are thus afflicted know for over three years. I tried remedy after remedy, but such relief as I obtained was only temporary. Finally I found a treatment that cured me completely, and such a pittful condition has never returned. I have given it to a number who were terribly afflicted, even bedridden, some of them seventy to eighty years old, and the results were the same as in my own case.

I want every sufferer from any form of muscular and sub-acute (swelling at the joints) rheumatism to try the great value of my improved "Home Treatment" for its remarkable healing power. Don't send a cent. Simply mail your name and address, and I will send it free to try. After you have used it and it has proven itself to be that long-looked-for means of getting rid of such forms of rheumatism, you may send the price of it, One Dollar; but, understand, I do not want your money unless you are perfectly satisfied to send it. Isn't that fair? Why suffer any longer, when relief is thus offered you free? Don't delay. Write to-day.

The Belle Haven Orphan Home.

BY MRS. JENNIE CLABKE.

There are fifty-three children in the Belle Haven Orphan Home, of Luling, Texas, at present, and all are enjoying good health. We have a term of school lasting nine months. Two of our girls will graduate this session. After school hours the children work in the garden, and the past few days they have planted five thousand onion sets and five thousand cabbage plants. We have regular hours for play and work. Their playground is said to be one of the most beautiful in the State, and we sometimes think when we see them all so happy in their play that we have a little foretaste of heaven here on earth.

The contributions received for the quarter beginning on November 1, 1920, and ending on February 1, 1921, amounted to $4,145.30. The balance on hand reported by statement rendered from the Lipscomb Bank and Trust Company, January 31, for general expenses of the Home, amounted to $6,181.09. The special fund reserved by a time deposit bearing interest amounted to $15,000. The latter sum is sacred to me, as I have been saving small amounts for several years for the purpose of erecting a permanent fireproof building, which is so much needed; and to-day I still have an undaunted faith in the cooperation of the brotherhood to this end. We should erect a building in keeping with this glorious work and the great responsibility resting upon us as guardians of the welfare, comfort, and happiness of God's dependent little ones.

It will take at least one hundred thousand dollars to build and equip a permanent brick building as planned. We have fifteen thousand of the amount, leaving eighty-five thousand yet to be secured. This may appear to some who read without due consideration too much to be realized; but to those who are doubtful I would say, let us reason from a systematic basis. If four hundred brethren and sisters or congregations would pledge approximately two hundred and twelve dollars for 1921, the building could soon be a possibility. Small congregations, individuals, and children are urged to give small amounts according to their ability. I sincerely trust that this appeal may make a strong and lasting impression on all who may read it. I name the first Lord's day in April as a time for congregations and friends to give this important matter earnest and prayerful consideration. I also suggest Monday, April 4, as a shower day for Belle Haven. Send us a message by card or letter, expressing the amount you have to be able to contribute. I hope to receive hundreds of letters. and telegrams on that day, assuring me to start a building at an early date, one that will stand after we are all called from our earthly labors as a monument to the zeal and philanthropy of the church of Christ for the vear 1921.

Colorado Not Lagging.

BY E. C. FUQUA.

I have not reported from this part of the field for some time, but that is not to be taken as indicating that nothing has been done here during the time. Our work is highly prosperous. There have been three baptisms in the Fort Collins congregation recently-a college student (a young man) and a man and his wife. Others are interested, and the interest is growing with every week. Aside from my oral preaching I am circulating the truth by means of the free tract on a large scale. I have put out around fifty thousand tracts this winter, and have a still larger quantity to put out in the near future. I aim at ten thousand a month, and the demand will considerably overstep this quantity This phase of the work is bringing results, too. Yesterday afternoon a Baptist lady dropped in to talk with me regarding the church. After some two hours she left, regretting that "we could not see alike." I assured her we could if she believed the Bible. When she left, I handed her three tracts of mine touching the subjects we had discussed, asking her to read them seriously. She took them with her. This morning just after early breakfast she appeared, her face all aglow, to tell me that I had won her on the whole subject, especially regarding baptism. She is unusually well posted in New Testament teaching, but had become entangled with sectarianism and could not see through the veil. I thank God that we reached her at last, and I am convinced that hundreds are likewise being taught and persuaded through this means.

It gives me great pleasure to say to the brotherhood that the brethren have fully paid for our free-tract printing plant. Not a dollar is owing for anything connected with it, and we are now bending every effort to make it preach the gospel to every home in Colorado, besides homes in twenty-three States beyond us. I am supplying tracts to brethren in twentythree States, in quantities of from two hundred to one thousand copies of each issue, and I cannot meet half the demand, though I am running all day and far into the night regularly. I am also keeping up my usual oral preaching, and by this double method I am gratified to know that we are getting the pure word of God into thousands of hearts, and a "yield" from this "seed" is sure to come after a while, This exceedingly strenuous labor is the cause of my not reporting oftener. I am really too busy to write letters, though I manage to do what is necessary. I am sincerely thankful to the brethren for their aid in placing me where I can do this double work for the Master.

HOW DOCTORS TREAT COLDS

First Step in Treatment Is a Brisk Purgative With Calotabs, the Purified and Refined Calomel Tablets that are Nausealess, Safe and Sure.

Doctors have found by experience that no medicine for colds and influenza can be depended upon for full effeetiveness until the liver is made thoroughly active. That is why the first step in the treatment is the new, nausea-less colomel tablets called Calotabs, which are free from the sickening and weakening effects of the old style calcmel. Doctors also point out the fact that an active liver may go a long way towards preventing influenza and is one of the most important factors in enabling the patient to successfully with-stand an attack and ward off pneumonia.

One Calotab on the tongue at bed time with a swallow of water-that's all. No salts, no nausea nor the slightest interference with your eating, pleasure or work. Next morning your cold has vanished, your liver is active, your system is purified, and you are feeling fine, with a hearty appetite for breakfast. Druggists sell Caletabs only in original sealed packages, price thirty-five cents. Your money will be cheer-fully refunded if you do not find them delightful.—(Adv.)

Whom Should We Worship? BY S. WHITFIELD.

"I am the Lord thy God, which have brought thee out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondage. Thou shalt have no other gods before me. Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image, or any likeness of anything that is in heaven above, or that is in the earth beneath, or that is in the water under the earth. Thou shalt not bow down thyself to them. nor serve them: for I the Lord thy God am a jealous God." (Ex. 20: 2-5.)

All our worship and service must be offered to God. God wants all of it or none of it. Such is a reasonable service, for we owe it to him.

"Give unto the Lord, O ye mighty, give unto the Lord glory and strength. Give unto the Lord the glory due unto his name; worship the Lord in the beauty of holiness." (Ps. 29: 1, 2.)

All glory, honor, praise, and thanksgiving belong to God, and we should render unto him all that is due his great name.

"Exalt ye the Lord our God, and worship at his footstool; for he is holy." (Ps. 99: 5.)

All of these passages are plain, showing that we should worship the

"Jesus said unto him, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind." (Matt. 22: 37.)

We should worship the Lord with all our powers. Nothing should be reserved

"Again, the devil taketh him up into an exceeding high mountain, and showeth him all the kingdoms of the world, and the glory of them; and saith unto him, All these things will I give thee, if thou wilt fall down and worship me. Then saith Jesus unto him, Get thee hence, Satan: for it is written, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve. Then the devil leaveth him, and, behold, angels came and ministered unto him." (Matt. 4: 8-11.)

The devil had led man to serve him, and now he wanted Jesus to worship him; but Jesus did not yield. He had man in a lost condition, without Christ to save him; and now he wanted to bring Christ under his control. This was an important time; for if Jesus had yielded, all would have been lost, as Satan, no doubt, well knew. But Jesus was master of the occasion, for he said: "Get thee hence, Satan: for it is written, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve." He resisted the devil, and he fled from him. The devil wants all to follow him: he has the majority of people, but the few faithful ones will not serve him. Like Jesus, they wish to render all their service to Gcd.

"And as Peter was coming in, Cornelius met him, and fell down at his feet, and worshiped him. Peter took him up, saying, Stand up: I myself also am a man." (Acts 10: 25, 26.)

Peter would not accept the worship of Cornelius. If some modern preachers had been in Peter's place, they might have accepted it. Peter was not a minister of the modern type. Like Jesus, he realized that all worship was due God. Peter knew that it was wrong to worship men. It is even wrong to follow men where they do not follow Christ, "Be ye followers of me, even as I also am of Christ." (1 Cor. 11: 1.) It is not wrong to imitate men where they are following Christ, but serious trouble has come from following men when they are not doing the Lord's will. If people would stop following the pope, a lot of trouble would be avoided. Then, too, if people would stop following preachers, where they should not follcw them, we would not have so much division. It was giving glory to men that caused division in the church at Corinth, and division has been caused in this way ever since. It has been said that a man can teach whatever he wishes to, and mix a little Bible with it, and he will have followers. Somebody will sympathize with him. Every person should have convictions -think and study the word of God for himself. This is the only safe way. We need to prove all things, and then hold on to that which is good. We are not likely to be led astray by those that we have no confidence in, but those that we look up to and admire may lead us in the wrong way. All men, even the best of men. make mistakes; therefore it is best not to think too much of any man. We will make mistakes enough ourselves without partaking of other men's mistakes. "Be ye therefore fol lowers of God, as dear children." (Eph. 5: 1.)

"And I John saw these things, and heard them. And when I had heard and seen, I fell down to worship before the feet of the angel which showed me these things. Then saith he unto me, See thou do it not: for I am thy fellow servant, and of thy brethren the prophets, and of them which keep the sayings of this book: worship God." (Rev. 22: 8, 9.)

It is wrong even to worship angels.

Echoes From East Tennessee.

BY GEORGE W. FARMER.

The attendance and interest at all of the services here last Lord's day (February 20) were fine. Two of our young men made the confession at the forenoon service and were baptized at the close of the evening services. Also at the evening services one erring brother came back and confessed his faults to the church. At 2:30 P.M., accompanied by a number of the brethren and sisters, I went and preached to a good audience at Blackfox. The attendance and interest at the midweek prayer meeting are increasing at each succeeding meeting.

Brother Phillips preached to good audiences in both forenoon and afternoon at Ooltewah. The church there is planning to have a singing school taught soon. Every congregation should be taught to sing. The young and old should be awakened to the importance of this. A congregation trained to sing well is never liable to be bothered with instrumental music. Doing the things God tells us to do bars out the doing of wrong things. or doing right things in the wrong way.

"The harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers are few," in East Tennessee. If we could just succeed in waking up the scattered members (too many are asleep), we would be doing a great work. Many so-called "members of the church" do not want to do anything, and they want an excuse for not doing. It is either too hot or teo cold, too wet or too dry, too much sickness or too busy. In fact, things must be just right, and that seldom comes; so the cause lags and dies.

In this country, where sectarianism is rank, it is a fight to the finish or we perish. It takes courage, energy, determination, and vim, or whatever you choose to call it, with a firm stand upon God's word, to succeed.

Death is a sad thing. It makes me sad to see the trees, leaves, and flowers die; to see the animals, birds, and insects die; it is sadder to see a human being of any grade or caste die; but the "saddest of all sad things" is to see a Christian or a congregation of disciples die.

We have several causes of death. Sickness, disease, want of air, want of food and water, and other things, produce death.

Sometimes it becomes necessary to let things die, as the fruit tree that is dwarfed, or stunted, so that its bearing good fruit is hopeless; it is better to let it die or to take it out of the way, so that something better may take its place. (John 15; 2.)

Some one has suggested that some of our old congregations be allowed to die. Those that have fallen into the old rut of doing nothing, that do not

Your crop cost will be low

MAKE your land yield more bushels of wheat, oats or corn per acre. Make the output per man greater. That is the way to grow your crop at low cost.

The certain way to insure large yields of best quality, which means low production cost, is to supply the crop with plenty of available plant food.

Swift's Red Steer Fertilizer will do this.

It is made from carefully selected materials, both organic and chemical, and furnishes available plant food from seeding to maturity.

Swift's Red Steer Fertilizer is evenly mixed and thoroughly cured and supplies each plant with its proper proportion of plant food, thus insuring large yields.

Liberal applications insure biggest crops of best quality.

For more than fifty years Swift & Company has maintained a reputation of making each Swift product the best of its kind, and the demand keeps growing for Red Steer Fertilizers, necessitating our building three new factories last year.

You can get Swift's Red Steer Fertilizers from the local Swift dealer or our nearest Sales Division. Don't delay—order and haul now.

More per acre

Every acre must be made to yield its best to secure satisfactory profit,

It takes a certain number of bushels of wheat, oats or corn per acre to pay for the cost of production. All over this quantity is practically clear profit.

The average application of fertilizer per acre is larger each year because more and more farmers are learning that heavier applications pay them the biggest profit.

Your safest way to insure profit is to use a liberal application of Swift's Red Steer Fertilizers containing 14% or more of plant food.

Edifying as the Need May Be

"The Light of the World."

In the New Testament we find three distinct senses in which the term "light" is employed in reference to Jesus Christ and his salvation. In one sense the word is used just like the word "life" or the word "glory" to denote a great spiritual blessing. In John 3: 16 we find in one sentence a superlative estimate of the Father's love: "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have eternal life." Here the blessing of salvation is called "eternal life." But in John 17: 22, during the progress of the Savior's wonderful prayer, he is heard to say in reference to his disciples: "The glory which thou hast given me I have given unto them." Here the blessing of salvation is called "glory." The next time we sing the chorus of the "glory song"-"O that will be glory for me, glory for me!"-let us bear in mind the fact that this is not only a scriptural sentiment, but one of which Jesus himself was the author. But in the course of his conversation with Nicodemus the Master said: "This is the judgment, that the light is come into the world." (John 3: 19.) Here the blessing of salvation is called "light," and the verse explains the first sense in which the leading term in the heading of this article is used-namely, "a divine revelation of enlightenment to a world that is lying in darkness

We cannot appreciate this meaning of light without we pause to consider its natural and scriptural antithesis. After telling us that light is come into the world, Jesus adds that "men loved the darkness rather than the light: for their works were evil." "Darkness" is one of the abstract terms used in the New Testament to denote the disastrous effects of sin. The expression is intensified by the strongest epithets. So we read of "gross darkness." "thick darkness," "blackness of darkness," the "ways of darkness," the "works of darkness," and the "deeds of darkness." These expressions vividly describe the condition of the sinner's heart, and they point out the element in which he lives. (See Rom, 1; 21; Eph. 4; 18.) Hence, we read again, sinners "prefer darkness to light," "rebel against the light," and "there is no light in them." And their punishment is analogous to their life. They shall be cast "into outer darkness," where "the light of the wicked shall be put out, and the spark of his fire shall not shine." (Job 18: 5, 6, 18.)

O, if the people in the world could only be made to understand the truth that is so abundantly taught in the word of God that Christ's kingdom is a kingdom of light and that Satan's kingdom is a kingdom of darkness, how they would crowd the one and shun the other! But the trouble is, we depend too much upon our eyes in making the distinction between these two elements.

A young lady enters a ballroom for the first time in her life. The music of the orchestra, the rich perfume of the flowers, the mingling of voices in laughter and conversation, the spirit of revelry which pervades the atmosphereall of these things blind the eyes of her soul to such an extent that she sees in the artificial glare of the place the brightest light in the world. She is in no condition at that time to appreciate the fact that in the waste of time and thought, in the extravagance of dress, in the late hours maintained, in the exhaustion of strength, in the exposure of health, in the languor of the succeeding day occasioned by this function, there is a precursor of a darkness so great that it may annihilate her happiness. Nor does she appreciate the fact that so long as she indulges in this pastime she is actually living in a state of darkness. If that young lady will only pause long enough in the whirl of her social pleasures to consult the Word, she will soon discover the error of her course. She will find even in the book of Ecclesiastes a timely and solemn rebuke: "Remember also thy Creator in the days of thy youth, before the evil days come, and the years draw nigh, when thou shalt say, I have no pleasure in them." She cannot remember her God by throwing her heart and soul and body into the dance. She cannot remember him by filling her mind full of the blandishments and pleasures of the world. She can remember God by presenting herself a living sacrifice in the service of his Son. When that has been done, when she has obeyed the gospel, she will find explicit rules laid down for her guidance and direction in the Christian life. In 1 Pet. 5: 5 she may read: "Likewise, ye younger, be subject unto the older "-that is, to the older men and women in the church. And that the illustration may be complete, we turn to Tit. 2: 4, 5, and find that the older women are commanded to train their young sisters "to love their husbands, to love their children, to be sober-minded, chaste, workers at home, kind, being in subjection to their own husbands, that the word of God be not blasphemed." Now, some young women may argue that this passage hardly fits their case, because husbands are mentioned. But if they will study the passage closely they will find that outside of the marital duties enjoined there are some qualities of character to attain which they must be very watchful and prayerful. I quote four of them: "soherminded," "chaste," "workers at home," and "kind." The first one of these is significant. It means that one can so fill her thoughts with the frivolities of this life that her mind will be in a drunken condition. When any young woman with ordinary intelligence who has been following after the pleasures of the world studies these passages and applies their teaching to her own mistaken ideas, she will find a lamp unto her feet and a light along her pathway She will discover that what she thought was pleasure is sin; that what she thought was happiness is an ephemera! impulse, and what she thought was light so beautiful as to dazzle her eyes with its splendor was really the darkness of the world. Then she can understand the meaning of the passage: "Ye were once darkness, but are now light in the Lord: walk as children of light (for the fruit of the light is in all goodness and righteousness and truth), proving what is well pleasing unto the Lord."

Take the case of a young man who goes to the races for the first time. There is a music so wonderful in the hoofbeat of the horses, a charm so attractive in the bookmakers' odds, and a sensation so inspiring in the sport of kings that these things even caused a well-known rector in the city of Lexington to give the pastime his unqualified indorsement. Is it any wender, then, that the young man falls an easy victim to the gambler's passion? The fault lies chiefly in his eyes. It is a mirage that beckons him on to ruin; it is a rainbow that leads him into the mire. He is in no condition now to appreciate the fact that this growing passion is the most fertile nursery of covetousness. of envy, of rage, of malice, of dissimulation, of falsehood and foolish reliance upon the vagaries of fortune. Nor does he stop to consider that it frequently leads to fraud, to quarrels, to forgery, to meanness, to despair, to murder, and it always robs a man of his greatest treasure—time. But let the young man who is tempted in this manner pause long enough amidst the vicissitudes of the game to study the word of God, and note, if you please, the light that is thrown upon his career. He, too, may read from the wonderful book of Ecclesiastes the measure of his hopes: "Rejoice, O young man, in thy youth, and let thy heart cheer thee in the days of thy youth, and walk in the ways of thy heart, and in the sight of thine eyes; but know thou, that for all these things God will bring thee into judgment." There are thousands of young men walking in the way their hearts direct, thinking it is the way of happiness, when they are walking in the valley of despair. There are thousands of young men walking in the sight of their eyes, thinking it is the most pleasant course to pursue because It is the easiest, when they are hastening on to the judgment bar of God. The only young man who can afford to rejoice even in the face of every earthly ambition is the one who is walking in the way of God's commandments. When that young man obeys the gospel, he will find revealed in the New Testament explicit rules for his guidance and direction in the Christian life. And of these there is no better summary than that written to Titus:

The younger men likewise exhort to be sober-minded: in all things showing thyself an ensample of good works; in thy doctrine showing uncorruptness, gravity, sound speech, that cannot be condemned; that he that is of the contrary part may be ashamed, having no evil thing to say of us." (Tit, 2: 6-8.) This kind of teaching applied to a young man's life is apt to change the whole trend of his career and to lighten the way before him. Instead of the lust for gold, there is a seeking after the hidden treasures of the heart; instead of the lust for power, there is a clamoring after righteousness; instead of the lust for sin, there is a struggle for that knowledge which constitutes the light of life. "I have written unto you, young men," says the apostle John, "because ye are strong, and the word of God abideth in you, and ye have overcome the evil one." (1 John 2: 14.)

In the second sense the term "light" is applied to a luminary—an object that shines like a sun or a star. In this sense Jesus called his disciples "the light of the world." The logical inference is that all of his true followers today are living in the same capacity. Christian people are those in whom the truth and purity of the word of God shine forth and through whom a knowledge of this truth and purity is imparted to others. To get the practical good out of this teaching, we ought to stop right here and now and begin to ask ourselves some very pertinent questions. Is the light of Jesus' teachings shining through me? Is there one person who ever received a better knowledge of his condition and his duty because I crossed his pathway? Is there one whom I have persuaded to repent? Is there a soul who has ever been led to obey the gospel through my influence? If this is true of one, then he is in a measure living up to that standard of usefulness and power fixed by the Savior himself. But the light which true Christians shed in the world is a constant light. It does not flicker: it does not go out. Jesus himself gave us two good illustrations of its steadiness when he said: "A city set on a hill cannot be hid. Neither do men light a lamp, and put it under the bushel, but on the stand; and it shineth unto all that are in the house." There are some Christians who let their light shine only at intermittent periods. When the protracted meeting is in progress, you will find them shining in their best bib and tucker; you will find them in the meetinghouse working and praying with all their hearts and souls for the good of the meeting; but when the meeting is over, their light goes out, or is put under a bushel. There are others who shine like the noonday sun when there is preaching, and particularly when the man they call "their preacher" is present; but when their preacher leaves, their light becomes dim and lusterless, if it shines at all.

The Christian whose light becomes part of the life of the world is the one whose teaching and influence goes forth like the light of the sun at all times and in all directions; and, like the Chrysolapis, it shines the brightest in the dark. But however bright and powerful a Christian's influence in this world may become, he ought to remember that he is not "light" in himself, but only as he reflects the glory of the Master. And this suggests the final division of our lesson-namely, Christ himself, in an altogether preëminent sense, calls himself "the light of the world," He reveals God with unapproachable fullness and clearness, because he is "the effulgence of his glory." (Heb. 1: 3.) In declaring himself to be the light of the world, Jesus intimated that he is to the spiritual nature of man what the sun is to the physical. The man who follows Jesus-that is, the man who not only acquaints himself with historical facts of his life, or even the main drift of his teachings, but becomes obedient to his commandments-who believes on his name, repents of his sin, and is buried with him in baptism; the man whose soul is filled with his teaching even as the eye is filled with the rays of the sun—that man, the Savior says, shall not walk in darkness; that man shall not live in sin, nor in error, nor in ignorance, nor in superstition, but shall walk in the marvelous light of the gospel.

In the days of Moses the pillar of fire was an external guide for the children of Israel, and it pointed out the way to them step by step. They had only to watch the road before them; they were never uncertain of their course. When it moved, they moved; when it stopped, they stopped. At its sign the Red Sea divided its waters and the fasinesses of the wilderness became an open highway. But, after all, it was a mode of guidance suited to the infantile, undeveloped state of the people.

Jesus gives us the inward illumination. He has given us in his word the light of life. At first glance it may seem to be a less perfect guide than the other. It demands the exercise of faith and judgment; it calls for prayer and constancy; it develops a consciousness of personal responsibility; but at the same time it makes plain the conditions of salvation, promotes the cultivation of Christian character, reveals the secrets of highest happiness, and leads us unerringly to the land of promise.

The Ship of Life.

BY NELLIE ELNORA SINGLETON.

(Written for my mother, in memory of her little son.)

A mother sat by a cradle side
And sang of a ship that she would guide
Across life's stormy sea.
When the seas were rough or seas were fair,
She would guide it on with tender care,
And a willing pilot be.

And the little ship sailed on and on.
Till at last the little one had grown
To be a bright-faced boy;
And the stories he loved to hear her tell
Were of streets of gold where angels dwell,
In a land of endless joy.

Why the sadness written upon her face, The grief that the years cannot erase, When well indeed she knew The little ship had only passed on its way To the beautiful land of endless day Where all our dreams come true?

Do They Understand?

BY W. H. CARTER.

There is no doubt but that much of the misrepresenting that has been done and is now going on is caused by a failure to understand. What is more essential to fair treatment and just consideration than a good understanding? When Philip approached the Ethiopian officer (Acts 8), he asked: "Understandest thou what thou readest?" It is an unpleasant thing to be misrepresented, especially by one who you are sure should know better. But when misrepresented by those who you know do not know any better, then the more leniency is required. When I tell a person that I do not believe a certain thing, and he goes off and says I do, he misrepresents me. If I say I do believe a certain thing, and he insists that I do not, he misrepresents me. If I am honest and truthful, I stand justified, and he stands condemned before God, if not in his own conscience.

In the religious world much misrepresenting is going on, which shows that many are ignorant of what they could and ought to know, or that they are most woefully dishonest and purposely deceptive. I do not doubt that the great army of misrepresenters is composed of both classes. I have been accused of belonging to the "Campbellite Church" by people who should know better. I would tell them I did not, but they would go right on making the charge, which I regarded as willful and close akin to falsehood. I have had them charge me with preaching a water salvation, of believing in nothing but water, and that I did not believe in a change of heart. In this I believe many are honest; for, being ignorant of the teaching, not having heard for themselves, they know only the misrepresentations and false statements made by their preachers. On several occasions, after I had preached and the people had heard the word, I have had people come to me and say: "You don't preach like they say you do." In almost all communities there is at least one "smart Aleck," who never goes to hear you, but can tell more that you said, that you did not say, than a phonograph could rattle off in an hour. Such as this, and much more, has to be met and overcome or endured. Here is one place where we need to "let patience have her perfect work." (James 1: 4.) Not to compromise or shun the truth, but to "preach the word" in "faith and love."

But why should one misrepresent another? For this there are two reasons, either of which is bad enough. One misrepresents because he knows no better; the other misrepresents because he cannot refute the truth, but thinks he can refute his misrepresentation of the truth. Men who teach erroneous doctrines and have the people deceived into the belief that what they preach is truth put in much time in prejudicing those who hear them against the truth and against those who believe and teach the truth No one of at least ordinary intelligence would get up and denounce the church of God as a human institution, and its doctrines as originating from man; but when he calls it the "Campbellite Church," and says Alexander Campbell is its founder and the author of its doctrines, they feel sure that, by such misrepresentation and appeal to prejudice, they can hold their members in ignorance and prejudice, and keep them from hearing, believing, and obeying the truth. It is hard, sometimes, to keep from deciding that such men are dishonest.

The people have been taught that, on what they call "repentance and faith," the Holy Spirit comes, removes the load of guilt, or testifies to them that their sins are forgiven, and then they know from their feeling that their sins are pardoned and that this is the work of the Spirit. Recently 1 had a conversation with two, a man and a woman, neither of whom could read, and they both claimed such as their experience; and to read to them John 14: 15:17; Acts 5: 32; Gal. 4: 6; Mark 16: 15, 16; 2 Thess. 2: 11, was about like pouring water on a duck's back.

Now the whole country is full of error. The people need to be taught the truth. They need the plain, simple truth taught them in sound, but plain, speech that they can understand. Many will accept the truth when they understand it. Of course there are some who will not hear, who do not want to know anything only what they have been taught; but there are others who will attend preaching and give respectful attention. They are honest and sincere, Many of them can be led out of their error, but it will take time and constant teaching. A sermon now and then is time lost. Old congregations should look out places around them and see that the preaching is done. The elders who are elders indeed-God's kind-should go out and teach. They should put an evangelist out among them and support him. Get a young preacher who has no one to support but himself. The people will feed him and help to support him. It will not take so much as it would to support one having a family. If he is not making money the measure of his service and has the desire to lead people to Christ uppermost in his heart, he will go trusting the Lord, and the Lord will take care of him.

What should be our leading and only purpose in preaching? Should it not be to teach? Did not Jesus say: "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations?" If we fail to teach, and receive pay for it, we are being paid to disobey the Lord. We are not authorized by the God of heaven and earth to teach anything but his word. There is nothing else we can teach by the authority of the Christ. If we are called by the church to come and preach (teach) the gospel, and we go and elocute and expatiate on some historic event, do we not show ourselves to be a fraud, a timeserver, and a money lover? Such may suit congregations that have wandered so far away that they do not want to hear the word lest it reprove them; but the "common people" want the word, the pure gospel, "straight from the shoulder." Do not lose sight of the fact that the gospel is still "the power of God unto salvation to those who believe it;" and how can they believe, if we do not preach it to them? Now, while the people are preparing to settle down, is a splendid time to show them that the gospel is the only sure foundation on which to settle.

Christians As "Lights in the World." BY JAMES E. CHESSOR.

Jesus, in the Sermon on the Mount, called his disciples "the light of the world." "Ye [my disciples, all Christians] are the light of the world." (Matt. 5: 14.) He here employed a metaphor, or an expression in which one object is spoken of under the image of another. Paul, in writing to the Philippians, spoke of them as "lights in the world." "Do all things without murmurings and questionings; that ye may become blameless and harmless, children of God without blemish in the midst of a crooked and perverse generation, among whom ye are seen as lights in the world, holding forth the word of life; that I may have whereof to glory in the day of Christ, that I did not run in vain neither labor in vain." (Phil. 2: 14-16.) figure of imagery here is the simile, or an expression in which an object is represented to the imagination as being like some other object. Thus Christians are in some sense the light of the world, and they shine as luminaries in the world.

In the physical universe there are two kinds of lightsnamely, source lights and reflecters. It need hardly be observed that the sun is the great light of our system-the source of all light in the vast universe, save, of course, that of the fixed stars. These stars themselves are blazing suns, but are so distant from the earth that they are quite unimportant as source lights in comparison with our lord of day. The sun, indeed, is preëminently our source light, the center of our system. On the other hand, the moon, earth's satellite, is a reflecter, every ray emitted from its surface being reflected sunlight. It is in point to note here that the moon is by no means a perfect reflecter, owing to its uneven surface; and, as a consequence, its beams are diffused and weak. The Creator purposed that the deni zens of earth in the nighttime should be protected from intense light, the mellow beams of the moon and the tremulous light of stars being conducive to rest and sleep after the day's activities. These two lights, the source of light and the reflecter of light, are spoken of in Moses' account of the creation. It is said that "God made the two great lights [the sun and the moon]; the greater light to rule the day, and the lesser light to rule the night: he made the stars also." (Gen. 1: 16.) The divine Hand set them in the firmament of heaven to dispel the hosts of darkness and to light the paths of men. In the beginning the first utterance of the Most High God was, "Let there be light."

In the spiritual realm there is an evident parallel of the physical. There are the two corresponding lights—the source of spiritual light and reflecters of that light. Moreover, it is as easy to determine the source of light in the spiritual realm as it is to ascertain the source of light in the physical realm. What the sun is to the physical, Christ is to the spiritual. He is our Sun, our source light, the center of our system. He is, indeed, "the sun of righteousness" of prophecy that rose "with healing in its beams." (Mal. 4: 2, marginal note.) He is the daystar of our hearts. The star of Bethlehem was the herald of the breaking day. Never rose sun on a darker world, and never has luminary shone with such effulgence. When Jesus came into Zebulun and Napthali, "the people [of those regions] that sat in darkness saw a great light, and to them that sat in the region and shadow of death, to them did light spring up." (Matt. 4: 16.) He himself said: "I am the light of the world [its source of light]: he that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life." (John 8: 12.) There is not one beam of spiritual light in the earth that cannot be traced to Jesus, "the true light, even the light which lighteth every man, coming into the world."

It follows, then, that Christians are reflecters of spiritual light. They shine as lights in the world; but remove Christ from the system, and all is utter darkness. There are no self-luminaries in the church. Those who make a display of their wisdom or proclaim their virtues thereby dim the light vouchsafed to them. We are "light in the Lord," and "sons of the day," by virtue of Christ's dwelling in our hearts, and we would be groping in darkness even until now were it not for his advent into the world. We are reflecters—nothing more. Our light is borrowed and reflected. We possess no virtue, no wisdom, no light, we may call our own. Our highest aspiration, therefore, should be to become good reflecters of the divine light.

What are the essential qualities of a good reflecter? How may Christians best reflect the "heavenly sunlight?" It has been observed that the moon is not a perfect reflecter. The moon, then, lacks the essentials of a good reflecter, otherwise we should have in the nighttime the undiminished brilliance of the sun rather than soft, diffused light. To be a perfect reflecter, the moon's surface would have to be absolutely smooth and clean and with correct curvature. As it is, there is a falling off in the intensity of illumination and diffused light. The surface of the moon is broken-that is all. Now take, for example, a coal-oil lamp, such as we saw on the wall of the country church twenty years ago. It hangs in the pulpit to the right of the preacher. It has a highly polished reflecter with correct curvature. The light is focused on the minister's desk. Because the reflecter is smooth, clean, and of correct curvature, the greater portion of the light emitted by the blaze is reflected. It is a good reflecter. But let us blot the surface of this reflecter with ink or dint it with a hammer. The result is obvious-a glimmer about the minister, where before was a steady flood of light.

A question in point here is: Why is the church to-day, and why are Christians individually, such poor reflecters of the divine light? Because they lack the essentials of good reflecters. Otherwise the church—every congregation—would be seen as a city set on a hill, and every Christian shining as a luminary in the world. We lack the essentials of good reflecters—that is all. Our lives are not clean and spotless; our examples count for little in the moral universe. We stand in a flood of glorious light, but reflect very few of its beams. It is true, however, that there are some good reflecters, some golden candlesticks in the gloom. There are faithful men and women in the churches. How their good deeds shine in a naughty world!

Christ demands that his church, the Lamb's bride, be pure, spotless, holy, without blemish—that the church be a good reflecter. "Husbands, love your wives, even as Christ also loved the church, and gave himself up for it; that he might sanctify it, having cleansed it by the washing of water with the word, that he might present the church to himself a glorious church, not having spot or wrinkle or any such thing; but that it should be holy and without blemish." (Eph. 5: 25-27.) If God's church to-day were really spotless, holy and without blemish, who shall say that the world would not soon be flooded with the light of the gospel? Too many congregations are Laodicean in their tendency and practice—lukewarm. The light of too many churches has gone glimmering, leaving innumerable communities groping in darkness.

Moreover, it is required of Christians as individuals that they possess those excellencies demanded of the church as a whole. The world scoffs at a professed religious zeal that is not reënforced by purity of character. "Pure religion and undefiled before our God and Father is this, to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep oneself unspotted from the world." (James 1: 27.) Christians spot or stain their characters, and thereby diminish their capacity for reflecting the divine light, by their duplicity, their worldly habits, their corrupt speech. Many a disciple's influence has been rendered negligible by just one sinful deed. There must not be any spots—not one. A spot cannot reflect light.

Reflecters must have perfect curvature, otherwise the focus will be faulty. A burning glass that does not accurately focus rays is of little practical use. Just so the service of Christians in the Master's vineyard must be single. Jehovah has ever demanded that men shall make him uppermost in their thoughts, in their plans, in their lives. He placed himself first in the decalogue: "Thou shalt have no other gods before me." (Ex. 20: 3.) Jesus, in the Sermon on the Mount, said: "But seek ye first his kingdom, and his righteousness." This is an age of highly trained specialists. Men are doing one thing, and specializing in it. Paul was a specialist. "This one thing I do"namely, "press on toward the goal." Tentmaking with him was a side line; winning souls was his business. We need more "specialists" in the Lord's affairs nowadaysmore focusing of light, more concentration of energies.

Finally, we are to let our light shine, not to draw to ourselves the gaze of a flattering and fawning world, but for the benefit of others, to dispel impending darkness. We must shine upon the paths of benighted souls and cast sunbeams into their hearts. There are two ways by which we may let our light shine—namely, by good works and by holding forth the beacon light of the gospel; by the influence of a consecrated life and by the power of the taught word. "Even so let your light shine before men; that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father who is in heaven." (Matt. 5: 16.) The Philippians were admonished to hold forth the word of life. It was theirs—and it is ours—to bear the torchlight of the gospel to a sinful world. May we keep our lamps trimmed and burning.

White's Reply to Russell.

BY GEORGE H. M'CAIN, M.D.

Because of its conciseness and for the benefit of the readers, I copy below L. S. White's reply to Russell on the kingdom, which is as follows:

And I will show you the very day and the very hour of the day in which the kingdom of God was set up here on earth. In Luke 12: 32, Jesus said to his disciples: "Fear not, little flock; for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." It was to be given to the disciples of Jesus Christ: but when was it to be given? Was it to come in the millennium, or when? In Mark 9: 1, Jesus said unto them: "Verily I say unto you, That there be some of them that stand here, which shall not taste of death, till they have seen the kingdom of God come with There is one of three things true. Dower of God was either set up and came with power during the lifetime of those men that heard Jesus Christ make this statement, or some of them are living till the present time, or Jesus Christ was mistaken; or, as the fourth thing true, the kingdom of God is set up. One of these four things is bound to be true. But we follow the record on down to the crucifixion of Jesus Christ. We find him dead on the Mark 15: 43: "Joseph of Arimathæa, an honorable counselor, which also waited for the kingdom of God, came, and went in boldly unto Pilate, and craved the body of Jesus. Notice this word "also," that he in common with others was waiting for the kingdom of God. Jesus said. when the power comes, the kingdom will come. But when was the power to come? Acts 1: 8: "But ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you." ost is come upon you." When He says in verse 5: "For did the Holy Ghost come? John truly baptized with water; but ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost not many days hence." Then the Then the power was to come in a few days after that. Acts 2: 1-4: And when the day of Pentecost was fully come [fifty days after the resurrection of Jesus Christ, fifty-three days after his crucifixion], they were all with one accord in one place. And suddenly there came a sound from heaven as of a rushing mighty wind, and it filled all the house where they were sitting. And there appeared unto them cloven tongues, like as of fire, and it sat upon each of them. And speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance." At that time the multitudes came to the they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to ance." At that time the multitudes came together, and the Spirit of God guided Peter to preach the gospel; and Peter announced to them the claims of Jesus Christ; and they asked what they should do, and they were told to "repent, and be baptized . . . in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins." And we find in the last verse of that chapter that "the Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved." But is that the beginning? daily such as should be saved." But is that the beginning? Turn your attention to Acts 11: 15, when, comparing the baptism of the Holy Spirit upon the Gentiles at the house of Cornelius with that of the disciples on the day of Pentecost, Peter says: "And as I began to speak, the Holy Ghost fell on them [that is, on the Gentiles], as on us [the Jews] at the beginning." He points back to the day of Pentecost as the beginning. What hour in the day was it? Peter tells us that it was the "third hour of the day." The third heur of the day, according to the way we count time, is nine o'clock in the morning. Thus the kingdom of God had its beginning here on this earth as an actual institu-tion at nine o'clock in the morning on the first Pentecost after the ascension and glorification of the Lord Jesus Christ.

The idea of the kingdom being a future institution is a mistake.

In Col. 1: 13, but a few years after the day of Pentecost, Paul says: "Who hath delivered us from the power of darkness, and hath translated us into the kingdom of his dear Son." There we find the kingdom in actual existence and people being translated into it. In Heb. 12: 28, Paul says: "Wherefore we receiving a kindom which cannot be moved, let us have grace, whereby we may serve God acceptably with reverence and godly fear." In Rev. 1: 9, John says: "I John, who also am your brother, and companion in tribulation, and in the kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ."

An Incident.

In a volume of anecdotes and illustrations it is related that Mr. Owen visited Alexander Campbell at Bethany to make arrangements for their discussion on the evidences of Christianity. In one of their excursions about the farm they came to Mr. Campbell's family burying ground, when Mr. Owen stopped and, addressing himself to Mr. Campbell, said: "There is one advantage I have over the Christians; I am not afraid to die. Most Christians have fear in death; but if some few items of my business were settled, I should be perfectly willing to die at any moment." "Well," answered Mr. Campbell, "you say you have no fear of death; have you any hope in death?" After a solemn pause, "No," said Mr. Owen. "Then," rejoined Mr. Campbell, pointing to an ox standing near, "you are on a level with that brute. He has fed until he is satisfied, and stands in the shade, whisking off the flies, and has neither hope nor fear in death."-Selected.

Letters of Encouragement.

For the past few months a number of letters have come, commending what has been said on this page. I have thought of publishing some excerpts from a number of them, but do not now have the time to run through them and select some of the good things from each. And time forbids my answering each; hence I take this method of saying to the kind hearts who thus endeavored to encourage me: I thank you most sincerely, and appreciate the letters more than words can express. If I ever find the time, I will write each of you; but please do not expect me to do so, as it is hard to find idle time.

One of the things, however, that was found in each leiter, I will say a few things about. It is this expression: "I am [or, "we are"] praying for you." I have my serious doubts about our having returned fully to the Jerusalem church on the subject of prayer. I fear that even our preachers do not desire it and feel the need of it as we should. Let us give it a few minutes' thought.

First, note how exceedingly the apostles desired the prayers of the brethren. Paul says, in Eph. 6: 18, 19: "With all prayer and supplication praying at all seasons in the Spirit, and watching thereunto in all perseverance and supplication for all the saints, and on my behalf, that utterance may be given unto me in opening my mouth, to make known with boldness the mystery of the gospel." From this we learn that prayer is in order at "all seasons," and that Paul expected the brethren's praying for him to aid him in giving the message to the people. Hear him again: "Continue steadfastly in prayer, watching therein with thanksgiving; withal praying for us also, that God may open unto us a door for the word, to speak the mystery of Christ, for which I am also in bonds; that I may make it manifest, as I ought to speak." (Col. 4: 2-4.) If such a soldier as Paul felt his need of the prayers of the church, how much more ought we to feel this need?

But do we not have to say it to our shame—first, that preachers, as a rule, seem to be unconcerned whether they are helped with the prayers of the church, and, second, that the church, as a rule, does not seem to think the preachers need their prayers? In my honest judgment there is quite a bit of unbelief on this very subject on the part of those who boast of their faith in the blessed Book and criticize others for not believing what the Bible says on other subjects.

I will give our readers the following exhortation that is going to more than two hundred homes this week:

Last Lord's day, at North Sichel and Altura, I spoke to you on "The Seeking That Always Finds God," in which discussion the true way of worship was discussed. This will be my theme next Lord's day. The one thing that I shall ask of each of you who comes to find God and enjoy him with us is that you pray before you come: that you keep yourself in the spirit of prayer in each song we sing, in our gifts, in the Lord's Supper; and when I arise to play my feeble part in presenting the lesson, that each of you pray for me most earnestly, knowing that I need your prayers-more than Paul ever needed them. This same suggestion I want to make to those who are with Brother Riggs at Downey. Keep your hear prayer for him during the whole discourse. Keep your heart continually in And as Ontario is getting the Friendly Visitor now, through it I make the same suggestion to them in Brother Witty's behalf. Please do not forget this. Do this with your whole heart, soul, mind, and strength just once. Then see if you do not find a joy in the worship you never knew before, With David let us exclaim: "O taste and see that Jehovah is good: blessed is the man that taketh refuge in him." (Ps. 34: 8.) There is too much heartless and prayerless worship and service to-day. Remember, in all we do we should seek to find God in that very thing we are doing; and if it is something he has commanded us to do, he is there, of a certainty to be found. But there is but one kind of seeking that will ever enable us to find him: "And ye shall seek, and find me, when ye search for me with all your heart." (Jer. 29: 13.) Let us do like the apostles and early Christians did, and we will enjoy the religion of our Lord just as much as they did.

If every congregation would do as suggested just one Lord's day, a revival would come among us that is sorely needed. Now, brethren, let us see to it that it comes. May God help us to go back to apostolic precept and example on this and all other subjects. Don't you reckon that a lack of brotherly love is killing some of us? Will we not love and serve together, that the greatest religious institution that has ever existed may be seen in all her glory and power? We wonder why so many people run off after false religions. Don't you reckon that one cause is that we are so terribly lacking—those of us who claim to represent the true way—in love and the prayer life that characterized the apostles and early Christians that people do not have to work very hard to make a false religion look better than ours does?

The Sinking Fund.

With the matter for this page I am inclosing check to have Gospel Advocate sent for one year to D. Pennington, formerly of Texas, but who is spending his last days in this State. He will soon be eighty-three years old, has preached the gospel nearly all of his life, and has led many souls to Christ. Like most preachers, he has not laid up anything for old age; hence, while he would like to read the Advocate, he feels unable to pay for it. It is a pleasure to know that I can contribute a bit to his joy and peace.

Brother Witty, while I was at Ontario, handed me a check to have the paper sent to one of his best members who is a widow and has the care of a sick daughter in her home. He knows the Advocate's visits will mean much to this sick sister and to all the members of the family.

But the thing we want now is a sinking fund established at the Advocate office to take care of the many cases reported directly to the office. Then let us put the Advocate into every public library and reading room in this country. Who will help us start the fund? Send your checks to the Gospel Advocate office, and state that they are for this sinking fund.

Bits of News.

There were three additions at Fillmore recently while Brother Riggs was with them—two from the Baptists and one confession and baptism. Brother Riggs is doing a fine work, visiting the weak places and strengthening the brethren.

Last Lord's day (February 20) quite a number of us went to Ontario for a special address on the Sabbath and Lord's-day questions. Witty had secured the new theater building, and he and the manager of the building estimated the crowd to number about five hundred and fifty souls, about four hundred of these being Ontario people, and the others coming from near-by congregations. I judge there were fifty went from Los Angeles. Brother Riggs was there with a number of the Downey members, and Brother Borden with a number of his people from Riverside. While I was badly handicapped on account of the bad lights, having to leave out quite a lot of matter that I intended to rend and work up an address from matter that was in my mind, I was delighted with the splendid effect the morethan-an-hour's address made on the minds of the people. The Adventist preacher was there with a number of his people, and he is to speak in the same building next Lord'sday afternoon; and, the Lord willing, I will follow him the next Lord's day.

Side Lights on Paul's Treatment in Philippi.

There are many references and allusions to taws, costoms, and places in the Bible. These, when understood, illustrate and illuminate the events recorded and the doctrines set forth in the sacred oracles. But a knowledge of these matters must frequently be sought at sources other than the Bible. For example, in Deut. 11: 10, we read: "For the land, whither thou goest in to possess it, is not as the land of Egypt, from whence ye came out, where thou sowedst thy seed, and wateredst it with thy foot, as a garden of herbs." It may not be clear to the average reader just how the children of Israel watered the land of Egypt with their feet; but if we take into consideration the fact that a system of irrigation was used in Egypt while the Israelites were there, and that the water was let out of the little ditches or canals by the use of the feet, the reference is clear. The Israelites knew at once what Moses meant. The life of Paul furnishes many parallels to this.

A Roman Law Concerning Foreign Religions.

In Acts 16: 21 it is stated: "And set forth customs which it is not lawful for us to receive, or to observe, being Romans." This is a charge brought against Paul and Silas. Their preaching, if not a real violation of Roman law, could easily be construed as such. Howson, in his "Life and Epistics of St. Paul," says: "The letter of the Roman law, even under the republic, was opposed to the introduction of foreign religions; and though exceptions were allowed, as in the case of the Jews themselves, yet the spirit of the law entirely condemned such changes in worship as were likely to unsettle the minds of the citizens, or to produce any tumultuous uproar." Cicero, the wellknown lawyer and orator, who lived only a short time before Paul, said: "No person shall have any separate gods, or new ones; nor shall be privately worship any strange gcds, unless they be publicly allowed." Servius, while writing concerning Virgil, declared: "Care was taken among the Athenians and the Romans that no one should introduce new religions. It was on this account that the Jews were banished from the city." The reader will remember that Claudius "commanded all the Jews to depart from Rome." (Acts 18: 2.) Suetonius, the Roman historian, wrote; "Claudius banished from Rome all the Jews. who were continually making disturbances at the instigation of one Shrestus." It is thought that Christ is here meant, being the "Chrestus." Suetonius thought he was alive while the Christians were so active in Rome, it seems. These quotations not only confirm Luke's account of the charge, but they also show us a delicate situation which always confronted Paul when within the Roman empire.

A Custom Relative to Beating Prisoners.

In Acts 16: 22 we read concerning the arraignment of Paul and Silás before the magistrates, that the "magistrates rent their garments off them, and commanded to beat them with rods." The removal of the clothing was a preparation for a Roman beating. Livy, the Roman historian, says: "The lictors, being sent to inflict punishment, beat them with rods, being naked." Cicero declares: "He commanded the man to be seized, and stripped naked in the midst of the forum, and to be bound, and rods to be brought." Seneca, the philosopher, says: "Go, lictors: strip off their garments: let them be scourged." While the foregoing authors were not speaking with reference to Paul and Silas, they were speaking concerning a disgraceful procedure to which Paul and Silas were subjected. These quotations give us some idea of the extreme severity of the beating inflicted on Paul and Silas.

The Protection of Roman Citizenship.

When the sergeants told the magistrates that Paul and Silas were Romans, "they feared." (Acts 16: 38.) Their fear was well grounded, too. They had violated at least two Roman laws, the Porcian and the Valerian. Cicero remarks: "It is a transgression of the law to bind a Roman citizen; it is wickedness to scourge him." Again: "The Porcian law has removed the rod from the body of every Roman citizen." Quintilian says: "To bind a Roman citizen is a misdemeanor; to strike him is a crime; to kill him is next to parricide." Dionysius of Halicarnassus states: "The punishment appointed for those who abrogated or transgressed the Valerian law was death and the confiscation of his property." The Valerian law exempted a Roman from the rod. Paul's Roman citizenship saved him from a beating once. (Acts 22: 29.)

News Items.

There were two confessions and one restoration at West End Avenue last Sunday (February 27). This seems to be the beginning of an ingathering.

Good news is coming from Savannah. Recently one made the confession there.

A Good Lesson.

Cromwell and Charles I. of England first met when they were children at Hinchinbrook house, the home of a mutual friend of both the king and Oliver's father. The boys were told to play together while their elders talked over affairs of state and fashion. They got along well enough for a while, and then a dispute arose. The young king was not used to opposition to his princely will, and when Oliver stoutly clung to his rights the king struck him.

Oliver cared not a bit that the blow was aimed by a king's hand. He swung his somewhat grimy fist as hard as he could and caught Charles on the nose, with the to-be-expected result. Blood flowed in quantities, and the young prince set up a great howl. Servants came running, and all might have gone ill with the careless commoner had not Charles' father taken a hand and declared that the blow was to be forgiven, as it was given in defense of a right, and his son must learn to know that right was greater than kings.—Selected.

Waiting.

BY CLARA COX EPPERSON,

(In memory of Fred Walling.)

Far away from home and loved ones,
Facing death,
Struggling to hold on to life
With each breath;
But the enemy prevailed—
No skill for him avalled
When so cruelly assailed
By grim death.

But if his mother stood near by,
Still loving him,
Watching his last fluttering sigh
As eyes grew dim,
Then as his soul poised for flight,
Perhaps in radiant, illumined light
Her presence sweet greeted his sight,
Awaiting him.

AT HOME AND ABROAD

W

Carl G. Smith, of Anniston, Ala., Route 3, is ready to make dates for holding meetings in June, July, and August.

Changes of address: C. M. Stubblefield, from 1030 Harrison Street to 2300 Broadway, Paducah, Ky.; Frank Baker, from Belmont, Miss., to Berry, Ala.

J. V. A. Traylor, Murfreesboro, Tenn., writes: "I filled my regular appointment on the fourth Sunday in February at Corinth, in Wilson County. The church is moving along very well."

Brother Head, a prominent worker in the church at Springfield, Tenn., was in to see us last week. He was arranging to have his congregation do considerable mission work the coming summer. They "have a mind to work."

From Tice Elkins, Fort Worth, Texas, February 28: "All services at Southside church of Christ were well attended yesterday. At the night service a man and his wife took membership with us from the Christian Church. Enthusiasm prevails."

Brethren Oakley and Derryberry are back from their meeting at Needmore, in Montgomery County. They report a nice and interesting meeting, but no additions to the church. The latter was aroused to a better conception of duty in holding forth the word of life.

From Will W. Siater, Fort Smith, Ark., February 28: "Two fine sermons at Park Hill Church yesterday. One confession and baptism—one of our Sunday-school students. We used our new Bible-study room yesterday. The work is growing in interest and attendance. Pray for us."

If any reader knows of any one, Christian or otherwise, living in or around Baltimore, Md., that would be interested in New Testament Christianity, kindly send name and address to T. H. Walker, 2011 North Charles Street, Baltimore, Md., or to A. B. Comer, Wyoming Apartments, Washington, D. C.

R. E. L. Taylor writes from Lecanto, Fla., February 28: "My wife is still improving slowly. My daughter is planning to start back to our Tennessee home about March 3. As I think there is some more good to be accomplished here, I am planning to stay a few weeks longer in Florida. Wife will return home with my daughter."

John M. Rice says: "The church work at Munday, Texas, is moving along nicely. Interest is growing in all our work. Our class work at ten o'clock each Sunday is getting better all the time. We have no boulder in our way now. I preached at Quanah last Sunday, and had a splendid time with that splendid bunch of brethren."

S. C. Burnett writes: "A. R. Dolbeck, of Danforth, Maine, is a preacher of no mean ability, who recently took his stand with the church of Christ, coming from the Baptists. He is now preaching the full gospel, and is doing a good work. It is hoped that he will be fully recognized, given the proper encouragement, and assisted in every way. He is well recommended."

From M. C. Cuthbertson, Corsicana, Texas, February 28: "The work in Corsicana is good. Yesterday was a fine day, with the greatest number ever present at the Bible study. The house was filled at the eleven-o'clock service. Thomas H. Burton, of Union, S. C., was present at the evening service, and told us about the work in that State. That is a splendid opportunity to help a good cause."

From Mrs. R. L. Ludlam, Fort Smith, Ark., February 28: "We are to move into our new house this week. The work with the Dodson Avenue Church is growing in interest. A young father and mother were introduced as members of the one body. They came from one of the churches in Tennessee. The audience has grown to almost the capacity of the house of worship. The new work in the northern part of the city prospers."

"How Many Cups Shall We Use?" This is the title of a four-page tract by J. N. Armstrong, and first published in the Gospel Herald of January 27. It is a very thorough discussion of the "individual-cup" question, and we think its circulation will do good. It especially shows upon what fallacies those brethren depend who are making the individual cup a test of fellowship. It can be had of the Gospel Herald, Harper, Kan.

J. Will Henley writes from Wynona, Okla., February 27: $^\circ$ 1 am here in a meeting, turning 'digressives' to the Lord and establishing our blessed Lord's cause. There were only two brethren and one sister here when I came. I had a letter from wife to-day, in which she says the baby is still improving. Pray for us here. We are in the midst of great opposition, but God is with us, and we are literally turning this town to the Lord. Leo Henley is singing for us."

Whitt Sparks, Asheville, N. C., writes: "I live at 114 Westwood Place, in West Asheville, and would like to know if there are any loyal Christians at or near Asheville. If any reader of the Gospel Advocate has a friend here, or knows of one who contemplates spending the summer at Asheville, let him clip this out and send it to such a one, and let him also write me, giving the name and address, that I may hunt up all such, so that we may meet and worship the Lord as it is written."

W. G. White, our "tentmaker," says: "I have just obtained prices of tent material; and while it is still high, it has come down to such a price that I thought there might be some demand for tents. With present prices of material, I can furnish the most-used size, twenty-eight by forty-three feet, made of 8-ounce army duck, complete, for one hundred and twenty dollars; larger size, forty by sixty feet, of 10-ounce duck, for two hundred and ten dollars; sizes between these at intermediate prices. As I am now a farmer, all inquiries should be sent to me at once, Route 3, Shelby-ville, Tenn."

We have a nice letter from J. S. Barkley, of Murchison, Texas. He is a great lover of the Gospel Advocate, as are his family also. He mentions sad losses in children and grandchildren, but trusts the Lord, who cared for him and his loved ones when, less than a year ago, the house was blown from over their heads in a storm and they had to walk two miles to get a shelter. He is also suffering from cancer in the head, and one (external) ear has about been eaten away; but he is cheerful, trusts the Lord, and meets the difficulties of life heroically. He will continue to enjoy the Advocate, and asks an interest in the prayers of the saints.

From R. A. Craig. Louisville, Ky., March 1; "Last Sunday I was at Elkhorn and Shelbyville. The work at both of these places is very encouraging. We hope to do much good in this work. I will probably devote a big part of my time to Shelbyville. We are at present meeting in a rented hall, but have real good crowds. The Christian Church there is pretty strong numerically, and we have many members who will, I think, take their stand for the pure gospel. I am greatly encouraged each day by the many good things which are being said about J. K. P. South's work. Brother South has passed over to "rest under the shade of the tree," but his work lives on. I have been greatly encouraged by this godly man. No one could question his fidelity and loyalty to the primitive, pure way."

The following statement, bearing the names of J. 1. Dupre, S. A. Jones, and C. E. Combs, trustees of the church of Christ at Galveston, Texas, was sent us for publication: "The church of Christ in Galveston is composed of a few faithful, humble, sincere followers of Christ, who have taken it upon themselves to build up the cause of the Lord in the great and neglected city of Galveston. Realizing that we could accomplish more by securing a respectable place of worship, and finding that the Christian Church property, which is a neat, brick-veneered building, well located on a nice street, occupying a corner lot, was for sale, and that it could be purchased for thirty-five hundred dollars, we decided to make the effort at least. Our progress has been quite gratifying to date. The little band (none of whom owns a home), assisted by a few outside brethren, have paid fifteen hundred dollars on the debt. besides quite a bit of repairing that was badly needed. The remaining two thousand dollars is in two equal notes. due in March and September of this year. We are going to pay all of this that we are able to raise among ourselves, which will probably be about five hundred dollars. If the brethren who are anxious to see the cause firmly established in this city will come to our rescue with a liberal denation to this building fund, we believe we will clear the church of debt and be in a position to go forward in the accomplishment of much and lasting good. A. O. Colley, of Dallas; Horace W. Busby, of Fort Worth; and Austin Taylor, of Uvalde, as well as others, have assisted us in meetings, and they can testify as to the worthiness of the work here. Brethren, please remember us in this great work in a substantial way, so that we may soon have the property safe for the church. Send all donations to J. L. Dupre, 2920 Avenue K. Galveston, Texas.

Elder James E. Scobey will preach at Fairview Church, on the Hillsboro pike, next Sunday. Brethren and the public are cordially invited to be present and hear him.

Mrs. C. E. Freedle, Portland, Tenn., says: "May the Gospel Advocate do more to extend the kingdom of God this year than ever before. May God's richest blessings rest upon you all."

F. W. Smith reports a packed house and very fine services at Franklin, Tenn., last Lord's day, both morning and evening. These were Brother Smith's first services with them since his return from Texas.

From Claude Kele, Mount Pleasant, Texas: "The church work at Mount Pleasant is in fine working order. New life is manifested by the faithful. I will stay here another year. Visiting preachers are invited to stop and see us."

J. B. Beck, of Savannah, Ga., was in our office a few moments last week. He is soliciting funds to pay on the church building recently contracted for in Savannah. He thinks they have quite a bargain in the building if they can just get it paid for.

From J. H. Hines, Montgomery, Ala., February 28: "I believe the church at Highland Park is pleasing to God. All have a 'a mind to work,' and interest is great. Four were added yesterday by relationship. Our meeting is one month off. We are ready."

From W. W. Still, Formosa, Ark., March 1: "I am out here in the country in a meeting, preaching only at night. The farmers are so busy we cannot have day services. This meeting will come to a close next Lord's-day night. I will hold one more meeting, then will return home."

From James E. Laird, Brinkley, Ark., March 2: "I am in a neeting at this place, with small but interested audiences. We have a faithful band of disciples here, though small. At this place, as well as many others, we can see the fruits of the Nashville Bible School—viz., people loyal to Christ"

From J. E. Wainwright, Texarkana, Ark., March 3: "Five additions in February. House overflowed last Lord's day. The Maccabee Hall, 318½ East Broad, is proving a splendid location. We are now using most of the time each Lord's-day night in song practice, preparatory for the neeting in June."

W. M. Mann writes from Red Rock, Texas, February 28: "We are moving along nicely here, in peace and harmony I am sure I see much more interest now than when I came here in October. I began a meeting at Upton last Saturday night. We had a good crowd out last night. We are expecting several to take their stand for the Lord. I have time for a meeting in April."

V. E. Gregory preached to very fine audiences at Charlotte Avenue last Lord's day, morning and evening. His sermons were both very fine and edifying practical discourses. This congregation expects to begin building operations on a new church building right soon. Their Bible-study attendance that day was two hundred and seven, and they badly need more room.

A note recently received from Mrs. Florence McPherson, Dunmor, Ky., says: "As it has been some time since I have written to the Gospel Advocate, I desire to let it be known that the congregation at Walnut Hill is continuing in the worship, and the little band of disciples prove their sincerity by not seeking excuses from attending the Bible class and breaking bread each Lord's day."

U. G. Wilkinson, writing from Sulphur, Okla., February 22, says: "I have returned from Hot Springs, Ark., and am now at Sulphur, taking treatment, which it will be necessary to continue for some time yet, though I am still improving. Last week we had the preachers' meeting here, and it was a good one. The brethren here have engaged Will M. Thompson to labor with them, and they are taking on new life."

From L. F. Mason, Whitewright, Texas, Box 33: "I would like to locate and work for some church in Tennessee or Kentucky next fall. Any church wanting a preacher should write me at the above address. I have been working in Texas for twelve years, but was reared in Tennessee. I am to be in Tennessee this summer, and have some time not engaged for protracted meetings. Write me soon if you want me for a meeting next fall."

R. L. Colley writes from Waldo, Ark., March 5: "Last Lord's day was my day to preach here. We had two large audiences. I preached out at Bethel, about seven miles from here, in the afternoon. There are some fine brethren out there. We continued the services here all the week at night. There were no visible results, but a good interest was manifested throughout. The brethren here are planning to hold some mission meetings around here this year."

W. Wilford Heflin writes from Henderson, Tenn., March 1: "Last Lord's day I filled B. L. Douthitt's appointment at Fairview, near Milan. At the morning service a lady made the good confession, and was buried with her Lord in baptism in the afternoon. J. R. Stockard lives at that place, and has a splendid singing class. I can arrange to hold meetings or lead the song service during the months of May and June. Any one desiring my services may write me as above."

G. W. Jarrett writes from Perry, Fla., February 28: "I have just closed a ten-days' meeting near Fenholloway, seven miles from Perry. Fine interest and good order. The brethren gave me a liberal support. They have begun to build a meetinghouse. They have two acres of land deeded to them. They are few, but loyal. They need some help to finish. Contributions should be sent to Joseph L. Hodges, Route 3, Perry, Fla." Brother Jarrett's permanent address is New Smyrna, Fla.

On Monday morning Brother Freeman, of Gallatin, Tenn., reported a very fine interest in Brother Elam's meeting there, with one confession and baptism to date. The meeting had then been running eight days, with preaching on week days at 2:30 P.M. and at night. Brother Elam is reported as preaching the pure gospel with great effect [He knows nothing else to preach.—ED.] and a very large hearing, all delighted with the work. Perfect harmony and cooperation of all is the spirit that pervades the meeting. It will run through this week.

From W. F. Lemmons, Somerville, Texas, March 2: "1 preached at Beaumont on Saturday night, Sunday, and Sunday night, to very good crowds, and the interest was good. The brethren in North Beaumont are at work on their new church building, and we hope that with coperation much good may be accomplished in the city. Beaumont is eight or ten miles in length, and, with a congregation in both ends of the city, we ought to do a great work; and we can with the right kind of effort. I can hold two meetings in September. If any congregation is interested, write me at once. Our meeting here is to begin on March 14 Cled Wallace will do the preaching."

From M. S. Mason, Springfield, Mo., February 28: "Since writing I have filled regular appointments here, performed one marriage ceremony, and have done some personal work. The work is improving and new life is being put into the churches here. The song drill is a great success. Charles F. Hardin is proving himself a capable teacher of vocal music. He is also a fine preacher and is growing rapidly through tireless work and study. He should be kept busy in this work. My time is now taken from May 1 to December 1. I expect to do a great work this summer I receive encouraging reports from places where I have labored and other places as well, and rejoice in the prosperity of the cause." A later note from Brother Mason says: "Owing to the advanced season, I have decided to begin my protracted-meeting work on April 1. I have the entire month of April which I would be glad to place somewhere for one or two meetings."

B. W. Boyd gives a glowing report of the work at Pikeville, Tenn., as follows: "The church at Pikeville is jubilant over the progress being made. The Bible school is inspiring, and the good it is accomplishing cannot be overestimated. Practical methods are used. We have a teacher training class that is equipped with literary helps which aid in impressing the lessons on all ages. The teachers meet on Friday evening and listen to a lecture by Brother Wrye. He illustrates the lesson on a blackboard, and prepares a blackboard with the diagram or illustration for each teacher. We also have a kinder-garten, or object school, that is operated three days in the In this we are able to reach the youth in the several denominations in our town. On Friday afternoon the children under the seventh grade in the public school attend the kindergarten, and on Saturday the high-school students come. The lessons taught on Friday and Saturday at present consist in showing how sin and salvation developed, as revealed in Genesis. On Sunday the uniform developed, as revealed in Genesis. lesson is taught. Three sand tables are used, with which the teachers are enabled to present the lessons clearly and impressively to all. We have fourteen enthusiastic We also have a wide-awake song leader, Alfred Traylor, of Nashville, who also preaches some out of town. were fortunate in securing H. W. Wrye, formerly of Dallas, Texas, as minister. Brother Wrye is indeed a 'live wire.' He preaches to large and interested audiences three times each Lord's day. We hope to accomplish a great deal of good."

A Vital Faith in Christ.

BY J. C. M'Q.

The central truth of the Bible is that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God. That truth accepted with all the heart, then it follows as the night the day that the one who so believes will love God with all his heart, and with all his soul, and with all his mind. But judging disciples of Christ by the fruit they bear, it may well be said to them as Christ said to his disciples almost nineteen hundred years ago: "O ye of little faith!" Christ gave up the glories of heaven, was born in a manger, became a homeless wanderer, healed the sick, cast out demons, and raised the dead, in order that men may have a living, active faith in him. Christians must have a faith that lays hold of Christ and walks in his steps. If Christ made sacrifices, so must the Christian. If he led a life of humility, so must the Christian. If he labored unceasingly to elevate and purify the world, so must the Christian.

A godly life filled with self-denial and devotion to the truth will do far more in saving men from sin than all the wisdom and wealth of this world combined. Thousands of dollars are spent in costly architecture; the churches are begged far and near to give freely and cheerfully of their means to build houses where there are no congregations to fill them. This is out of harmony with the Spirit of Christ. A congregation of men and women who have a vital faith in the Christ will find little difficulty in securing a suitable house in which to worship; but hundreds of disciples who have only a dead faith will live in a city or town for a half a century, and yet never get together to worship God. Such a faith will never move mountains of difficulties out of the way and will never lead another to Christ, as did Andrew his brother, Simon Peter, when he had found the Christ. If Christians will imbibe the spirit of Christ, if they will first give themselves heartily to the Lord, the other things needful will be given to them. "But seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness: and all these things shall be added unto you." (Matt. 6: 33.)

Christians should realize that God is able to bring about the conversion of sinners without the aid of worldly pomp and power. The Bible nowhere tells us that we must have fine houses for the conversion of the world. Jesus gave us the benefit of a life of meekness and poverty. "The kingdom of God cometh not with observation." "Howbeit the Most High dwelleth not in temples made with hands; as saith the prophet, The heaven is my throne, and the earth the footstool of my feet: what manner of house will ye build me? saith the Lord: or what is the place of my rest? Did not my hand make all these things?" (Acts 7: 48-50.) When Paul stood on Mars' Hill and saw the ignorance and superstition of the Athenians and observed how they thought God dwelt in temples made by hands, he said to them: "The God that made the world and all things therein, he, being Lord of heaven and earth, dwelleth not in temples made with hands; neither is he served by men's hands, as though he needed anything, seeing he himself giveth to all life, and breath, and all things; and he made of one every nation of men to dwell on all the face of the earth, having determined their appointed seasons, and the bounds of their habitation; that they should seek God, if haply they might feel after him and find him, though he is not far from each one of us: for in him we live, and move, and have our being; as certain even of your own poets have said. For we are also his offspring. Being then the offspring of God, we ought not to think that the Godhead is like unto gold, or silver, or stone, graven by art and device of man." (Acts 17: 24-29.) As Paul fought superstition and ignorance, so should Christians fight now the civilization that is leading men away from God and to the devil. Vast sums of money are spent in men's devices, while the poor are neglected, the cold are not warmed, and the hungry are not fed. One of the evidences of the genuineness of Christ's religion is that "the poor have the gospel preached to them." There is far too much conformity to civilization and too little conformity to the religion of Christ, Preachers are sought by strong churches more because of their ability to please and entertain the worldlywise and fashionable than because they faithfully and forcefully preach the gospel. Ministers should cry out against sin wherever found. If civilization seeks to make sin appear respectful, so much greater the reason why the church should condemn the wrong. It is never the time to compromise with the world, the flesh, and the devil. Christians being Spirit-filled and loving the truth more than the. kingdoms of the world and all the glory of them, clad in the panoply of heaven, must combat the powers of darkness. Now is the time to fight, and to fight until God says, " Well done"

Much has been said in The Churchman and other papers about the Bishop of New York. It is boldly charged that men who should preach the gospel are afraid. "In the babel of merchants' associations, national civic federations, patriotic societies, not a whisper has been heard that sounded like St. Francis or Loyola. Those who should have uttered the beatitudes were dumb," declares The Churchman. The same journal continues:

The next Bishop of New York must build the cathedral, we are told. A cathedral is the last thing which this great It is filled with stone, and brick, and mortar. city needs Is there religion enough among us to be housed in a mighty nave? If we have the gospel, a tent will serve our needs. If we do not trust Christ, cathedrals are only a mockery; and we do not trust him. We put our trust where civilization is staking its confidence—in the power of money!

A bishop who will wed poverty would make a glowing leader. He would not get money for missions or great churches or parish houses and charity; but he might get something which money has not brought us—he would get the ear of millions of his brothers who want to be told how we can speed the kingdom of God, dry our tears, and fill our hearts with confidence and hope. Money is the one power that the kingdom of God can do without. No church has ever believed that, except the early church and the monastic movements in their years of light. Money cannot save the American people or bring in a better world, If New York would put her trust in Christ, we should not need to worry about budgets for missions. The whole world would take note of the wondrous thing and fall at the feet of Jesus.

The civilization that is struggling for its life to-day is more afraid of the gospel than of all the forces of evil put together. The people who love the world as it is are afraid that the church will apprehend Christ. New York needs a bishop who will go forward penniless to seek him. New York has not expressed a desire for such a bishop. New York would be panic-stricken should God send him to her.

Conformity to the world means death to the church. The young man who frequents the theater, the picture show, and the dance hall is not spiritual and soon abandons the worship. All such should be shown the degradation that awaits them. No one can at the same time serve both Christ and the devil. "Seek ye Jehovah while he may be found; cail ye upon him while he is near; let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts; and let him return unto Jehovah, and he will have mercy upon him; and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon." (Isa. 55: 6, 7.)

Brother Srygley's Most Logical, Most Eloquent, and Most Powerful Sermon.

BY E. A. E.

All of our readers have read or have heard in some other way of the entirely unprovoked brutal assault made upon our esteemed and beloved Brother Srygley by a drunken apple peddler.

When this man, following Brother Srygley, struck him a terrific blow from behind, on the side of the face, and in the eye, almost knocking the eye out, he did not resent it, but turned and tried to look the man in the face.

I have never been very much afraid of dogs. Most dogs are cowards, especially the ones which slip up behind and snap the calves of the legs and then drop back; and if the one pursued thus will turn and look them straight in the face, they will stop. Just so, some men will stand off and bark and snap from behind in the dark, but cannot meet one face to face. I have read in some book somewhere that it was "not the custom of the Romans to give up any man, before that the accused have the accusers face to face, and have had opportunity to make his defense concerning the matter laid against him." It should not be the custom of so-called Christians-brethren-to attack one another from behind, in the dark, on the sly, or in any other way, except in the open, in a courteous, dignified, gentlemanly, Christian way, "face to face." But, while I would not digress, I would make this application.

When Brother Srygley turned to look his antagonist in the face, the man stopped. Brother Srygley said he had an ordinary pocketknife in his pocket, and could have used it and could have cut the man open, but knew that was not the Christian way to do, and he desired in self-control to do no wrong. He said he thought were he to do that he could never any more preach the gospel of peace and good will; he could not look his audiences in the face and preach that Christians must not resist him that is evil, but must overcome evil with good; must not take an eye for an eye, for instance, but must turn the other cheek; must pray for enemies, do good for evil, and overcome evil in others with good in themselves; and must set their own children and the world a good example. He said he had always taught his boys not to fight, and now with this strong provocation he must not do so. He knew he could not carve this man to pieces and obey God, too. So he turned to walk on toward home as best he could in pain and almost blindness, when the man pursued and again from behind gave him another stunning blow, saying, "Now take that!" Brother Srygley again turned his face to the man, and again the man stopped, and, as Brother Srygley kept his face toward him this time, he walked back to the apple wagon. Then again Brother Srygley started toward his home, but was so pained and dazed that he had to stop and call for one of his sons to come to his assistance. From the papers all have learned of his having been so treated and of his being now partially able, at least, to resume his noble work with a power he could not have without this sad experience and great heroism.

Brother Srygley knows, as we should all know, that one should do right always for right's sake, and that he did nothing but his duty; but when one has done duty only under such provoking, trying, and brutal circumstances, and the Master is pleased to say, "Well done," we should all rejoice. I feel that it is due Brother Srygley to commend this brave and heroic action and to express sincere thanks to him for it and our gratitude to God for his recovery so as to be able to resume his work as teacher of the Bible in David Lipscomb College and preacher of the gospel "of the Prince of Peace."

When one says now it is impossible to turn the other cheek, let us remember that Brother Srygley has done this. And let us remember that physically Brother Srygley is no coward. He has both physical and moral courage. Every one should know that it requires greater courage not to fight than to fight. The bulldog is a great fighter, giving bite for bite; but the dog is only animal, and his is only physical courage.

He that is slow to anger is better than the mighty; and he that ruleth his own spirit, than he that taketh a city. (Frov. 16: 32.)

In this Brother Srygley has preached his most logical, most eloquent, most powerful, and most convincing and invincible sermon; for in this he has showed his faith by his works.

TWO KINDS OF WISDOM.

Here we may be more deeply and effectively impressed with God's contrast of the two kinds of wisdom in James 3: 13-18. God first names the truly wise man:

Who is wise and understanding among you? let him show by his good life his works in meekness of wisdom.

How few of us seem to know that true wisdom is manifested in meckness and a good life! How many seem to think it consists in mere knowledge, learning, creating dilemmas, forming syllogisms, hemming a brother up, slugging him with bolts of logic, and finally knocking his eyes out and crushing him!

There is a devilish wisdom. The devil is an orator, a logician, a polished and learned and cultured thing, transformed at times into an angel of light.

But if you have bitter jealousy and faction in your heart, glory not and lie not against the truth. This wisdom is not a wisdom that cometh down from above, but is earthly, sensual, devilish. For where jealousy and faction are, there is confusion and every vile deed.

There is another kind of wisdom, a wisdom filled with the gentleness, peace, love, and power of God. Which shall we take? We cannot have both. They will not mix.

But the wisdom that is from above is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without variance, without hypocrisy. And the fruit of righteeusness is sown in peace for them that make peace.

In trying to help settle another church trouble not long ago, when finally the proposition was made that one faction meet in the house in the morning and the other faction in the afternoon, I said: "O, for Christ's sake, do not:

each faction and every meeting every Lord's day will stand out before the world as monuments to strife and contention, faction and division, bitterness and Satan, The Lord's Supper is a monument of grace and love and salvation; but factions and meetings of factions and the houses of factions are monuments of the power and wickedness of Satan. For truth's sake, for the sake of unity and peace, for the Lord's sake, and for the sake of the salvation of all connected with strife and factions, all should meet together, sing and pray together, forbear with and suffer long with one another, and love and forgive one another." "Brethren, be not children in mind: yet in malice be ye babes, but in mind be men." (1 Cor. 14: 20.) grievous it is that preachers, who should be examples in this "good life" and "meekness" and "the wisdom that is from above," are leaders in strife, factions, bitterness, division, and that wisdom which is "earthly, sensual, devilish!"

THE ENDOWMENT OF THE CHAIR OF BIRLE STUDY IN DAVID LIPSCOMB COLLEGE,

While mention has been made of this generous gift in different papers and sincere gratitude has been expressed to Mr. N. B. Chenault, the donor, it is fittingly in order to publish the principal conditions upon which the endowment has been made. In his letter of conveyance of this fund, Mr. Chenault says:

However, this donation is made upon the condition that it shall be used always in harmony with the present deed and charter of said David Lipscomb College, in which the Bible is taught daily as a textbook to all pupils alike, and without theological opinions and doctrines, without any phase of infidelity and what is now called "higher criticism," and without any innovations upon the work of the church of the New Testament or the worship of God as set forth in the New Testament.

Another thing he says is that-

The proceeds of which donation are to be used in the support of teachers of the Bible and studies connected with the study of the Bible in this college.

And he further states that should the incumbent, whom he names through agreement of the board of directors, see that he can "in his own conscientious convictions" "serve God and men more effectually in some other way," or upon his death, then the directors of said college may use the proceeds of the endowment to fill the chair with some well-qualified man, or use it in supporting different teachers of the Bible in this college, according to their best judgment."

In case this college should be diverted from the purpose set forth in its deed and charter and this instrument of conveyance of this endowment, then it must go to that part of the school which holds to its original purpose, or to the nearest school which does carry out these provisions; and in case there is at the time no such school, it is to go to the churches of Christ in Nashville, to be used by the elders of these churches to promulgate the gospel.

These are the principal points mentioned and guarded in the instrument of conveyance. I think it is best to publish these, since thousands are deeply interested in the welfare of the school.

If hope should die within our breast,
Nor bear us upward on its wings,
What dismal gloom—unwelcome guest—
Would strike dismay on our heartstrings!
Hope bids us wait; it soothes our fears
When shadows darkly cross our way.
Beyond is bright, though blinding tears
Hide from our view the cheering way!

SELECTIONS BY THE EDITOR

We make much of our Lord's coming to the common people, the shepherds representing the working class, but the joy was for "all the people." Christmas means that no one has a right to be joyless and depressed. Just let this Baby grow up, and we shall see that he has a message for every one. If he was cradled in a manger among the poor, he made his grave with the rich.—Selected.

What breaks up all other ties has no such effect on the friendship of Jesus. Friends walk arm in arm till they come to the grave, and then one of them resumes his solitary path. Our Lord said of him who died, "He sleepeth," recognizing the friendship as still existing. The objects of Christ's affection, when taken out of the world, are brought into closer union with himself. So it was with Enoch: to-day he "walked with God" on earth; to-morrow he walked with him in heaven.—J. Eadie.

A compliment is most appreciated when it comes with the flavor of real sincerity evident upon it. What could be more gratifying in this respect than the appreciation implied in the eager exclamation of a little lad who, after studying the lesson on the "excellent" woman in Prov. 31, ran home to his mother, and breathlessly cried: "Mother, we have been studying about you in the Sunday school today." The mother who could evoke such a tribute from her own child is a mother indeed.—Selected.

Out in India in the mountains we heard in the twilight hour a call from the ridge below. Away through the stillness came the call, and from the ridge above came the response; and then we could hear in a moment more a faint call from a far ridge, away up and beyond, sounding almost like a distant echo. What did it mean? It meant that the man close above was passing the word from the man below to the man beyond. The man below could never have reached the other man except for the man who stood on the middle ridge and passed the message on. Gentle reader, there is a man down here who will never hear the Man up there, unless you become the one on the middle ridge.—The Presbyterian.

God's Surprise.

One of the surprises that God treats us to in the course of our life, which will no doubt be also the overwhelming surprise of our first review of this life from the vantage ground of a larger and better, consists in the disclosure of the way in which our anonymous Lover has been beset ting us behind and before, and laying His hand upon us. How many restraints that make for salvation have never been registered in the consciousness or printed off on the memory! How many times there are when qualification for duty is given concerning which we shall by and by hear the voice saying: "I girded thee, though thou hast not known me!"—J. Rendel Harris.

Those Who Succeed.

Who in life are the successful ones, those who really win? Undoubtedly they who live their lives most nearly after the pattern of the Carpenter of Nazareth. These are they whom Christ has blessed because of the sincerity and power of their love and obedience. They are of the company of those who are poor in spirit, of those who mourn, of those who are meek, of those who hunger and thirst for the things which He—not the world—bestows. They are of the merciful, the pure in heart, those who make peace, those who endure persecution for their defense of the right. They are of the company of the reviled, the persecuted, the slandered—those who bear all things, believe all things, hope all things, endure all things—for his sake.—Selected.

MISCELLANY

J. D. Tant, Rogers, Ark., writes: "I have just closed a fine meeting at Pea Ridge. Eleven were baptized and three took membership. Pea Ridge is where the church of Christ had to go to law with the 'digressives' last year to gain their church house. It is in one of the finest farming countries in the United States, with a good high school. The church of Christ is anxious to settle eight or ten more Christian families there this year."

W. W. Vick, Dallas, Texas, writes as follows: "I have been a reader of the Gospel Advocate for fifty-five years. My father was a subscriber when I was a boy, and he never read anything but a large-print New Testament: so he asked me to read the paper for him, to practice me in reading and because of the wholesomeness of the matter it contained. When he died I continued the paper, and, with all my meanderings, I have missed getting only a few copies. I have always been in accord with the editors of this paper, both past and present, and my prayer is that the paper may live on and on, and all the editors have my best wishes and brotherly love."

Andrew Perry writes from Farmington, Ky., March 2: "Through the kindness of I. A. Douthitt, of Sedalia, and A. L. Wilson, of this place, I came here night before last. Both of these men are noble preachers of the word. Brother Douthitt is traveling and preaching and soliciting for the Freed-Hardeman College at Henderson, Tenn.: Brother Wilson is conducting the high school at this place and doing all the preaching he can. It was decided yesterday morning that I should preach last night, and with that short notice we had a fine and attentive audience. I will go back to Mayfield to-day, and will probably visit Paducah and Brookport (III.) in the next few days."

L. H. Randolph sends this in for publication: "Quite frequently we read severe criticisms of articles which have been written for the general good of all the Gospel Advocate readers and which are in the main most excellent and elevating to Christian character. It is not my intention to censure all criticisms, nor to become a critic myself; however, it might be well for all to weigh most carefully, in the light of Scripture, the articles written by others before criticizing them. There can be no doubt that kindly criticism, if given in the light of God's eternal truth, will result in good to both the critic and the author of the article criticized. We may get an excellent lesson regarding criticism from the apostle Paul in his admonition to the elders of Ephesus at Miletus: "Take heed unto yourselves, and to the flock, in which the Holy Spirit hath made you bishops, to feed the church of the Lord which he purchased with his own blood.' (Acts 20: 28.) While this was not given to them on this subject, yet we do understand from the Scriptures that we should be very careful not to criticize others where we might not be able to do I have been a reader of the Advocate for as well as they. about twenty-five years and have received much valuable help through its columns from a great many different writers, although occasionally an article passes that would doubtless be as well left out."

Mrs. J. D. Carter, Lawton, Okla., sends this appeal "to the churches of Christ in Nashville, Tenn.," and we pass it on to others also: "I take this means of asking help in the cause for which our Savior died. I have lived in Lawton, a town of fifteen hundred people, since 1906. We have no church house here. We have met from house to house and in the courthouse for fifteen years, sometimes with only three present; and once, only my husband and his children. Now he has gone to his reward and we are left My children hardly know what it is like to have a here meetinghouse, except when they visit back home. But we feel encouraged. There are thirty or forty members here now, and they have bought a lot, centrally located, on which to build a house. Nearly every denomination is represented with a good house in Lawton, and we want help to build a house in which to have the truth preached. Brethren, you do not have to go to a foreign land to do missionary work. Right here in our free America people tell me that they have never heard of the church of Christ, and there is not such a church in forty or fifty miles of here. I am a niece of F. B. Srygley. S. A. Bell, Brother Blansett, Thomas Etheridge, and John I. Reagan have labored here as preachers, and they can speak as to our worthiness. Send donations to Mrs. J. D. Carter, 611 E Avenue, Lawton, Okla.'

The following letter comes from Mrs. E. A. Nash, Box 47, Stettler, Alberta, Canada: "I read in the Gospel Advocate the letter from a man who preaches in Canada (I do not recall his name, and have given the paper away). It interested me very much, and prompted me to inquire why no one ever comes here to preach. Of course, where there are practically no Christians, the work is missionary. But cannot missionaries be sent to Canada as well as to Japan and other far-away places? One or two members. who are not able to lead or to preach, go into a new country, and are deprived of all privileges of worship because there is no church. Of course they ought to learn to lead in the worship, but some cannot; and then when it is a woman, as myself-well, a woman just naturally cannot do the necessary things to organize a church, coming here would be promised a support; that would have to be furnished at the other end. Religion does not count in this new country; and I do wish some true Christian (not digressive) would locate in here for a time, at least. It might possibly be that no one here would respond to the gospel, but usually there are a few who are ready to respond. I was reared in a Christian family, but since my marriage have never lived where I could worship with the disciples. It is a great deprivation to me. My husband belongs to the Methodist Church. If some one would come here to preach, I would gladly do all I can to Should any one consider coming, I will gladly give all the information I can,'

J. D. Tant, Rogers, Ark., expects to go to North Carolina to hold some meetings. He writes: "I am now under "I am now under promise to spend May and perhaps a part of June preaching the gospel in North Carolina. My first meeting will be at Abilene, near Statesville, beginning on the Lord's day in May; and I will hold two other meetings after this one, if Miles A. Foster, of Mocksville, N. C., who is working that end of the line, can work them up. ing over my preachers' list, I find that Texas has five hundred and sixty-seven preachers; Tennessee, two hundred and eighty-seven; Arkansas, one hundred and ninety-five; and North Carolina, eight. I would be glad to meet as many of these preachers as possible while in North Carolina, and learn all I can of the work there, hoping that something may develop that will enable Texas, Tennessee, and Arkansas preachers to scatter out and help to build up the cause in North Carolina. In 1906 I held a number of meetings in California, and found not more than a dozen loyal preachers and two thousand members, and perhaps a half dozen church houses were about all they had. Now, it seems, California has preachers and churches all over the State. I am glad to note that Brother Winter and E C. Love, who were among our strong and active men there at that time, have remained on the firing line; and both are condemned by the devil for pulling the cause to the front like they have done. To God be all the praise! Let us work, watch, and pray, for the battle is not yet

M. C. Cayce, Jackson, Miss., writing under date of February 23, says: "One of our members that moved from Jackson during Christmas had formerly lived near a church called 'Union,' in Montgomery County. Receiving from them a very urgent request to come over, I went last church called The weather was the worst we have had this Sunday. winter, so the audiences were not very large. However, I preached twice, morning and afternoon, resulting in two restorations, and there seemed to be an awakening in interest. After services quite a number promised me that they would be more faithful and would meet regularly I was pained to learn that the church had from this on. not met for worship since last fall. It claims to be an old congregation, but is like other places-content to have a preacher preach one week once a year, baptize a few, and go away and leave them unimpressed with their future duties. They have a good meetinghouse, and claim a membership of from thirty to forty; but they are, with few exceptions, only nominal members. They promised me to begin meeting regularly as the Lord requires. I will go back again on the fourth Lord's day in March, and will try to hold a meeting for them in July, for they certainly There are some good people there, but they have need one. allowed themselves to become so neglectful that lukewarmness necessarily results. In my absence Joe Ridley conducted the services in Jackson, very much to the edification of the faithful few. Some more Nashville preachers would do well to awaken to the need of answering the Macedonian call. Please note that my address now is 720 South Gallatin Street."

J. S. Westbrooks, of Christiana, Tenn., asks the following questions concerning Matt. 17: 24-27: "(1) What was time tribute money for? (2) Was it right for a Jew to pay it? (3) Did the civil government have anything to do with the money? (4) What was the value in our money?"

I. The tribute money was for paying taxes.

2. If it had not been right for a Jew to pay it, Christ would not have done so. He paid it as a matter of expediency, in order that he might not give any offense. Sometimes things are expedient for which there is not the letter of the law.

3. The government demanded an annual tax of every male Jew above twenty years of age for the support of the temple. The shekel is variously estimated at from fifty to seventy cents. The collectors were not publicans, but Jewish authorities; so it must have been the Jews who were demanding this tax.

L. H. Wiseman, of Winchester, Tenn., (1) asks that we harmonize Acts 9: 7 with Acts 9: 22. (2) He wishes to know if the churches of Christ have a human creed. He says: "Is there a creed extant that was ever used by the church of Christ? Did Alexander Campbell, Barton W. Stone, or any of the great first preachers ever formulate a creed for the church of Christ, or did they repudiate the creed idea along with other unscriptural practices?"

1. Acts 9: 7 reads: "And the men that journeyed with him stood speechless, hearing the voice, but beholding no man." Acts 22: 9 says: "And they that were with me beheld indeed the light, but they heard not the voice of him that spake to me." The meaning of Acts 9: 7 is that the men who journeyed with Saul of Tarsus heard the sound of the voice, but did not understand the words that were spoken. The meaning of Acts 22: 9 is that they did not hear the voice in the sense of understanding it. Often 1 hear the sound of a voice, and yet 1 say to the person: "I do not understand." They evidently heard the sound of the voice, but did not understand it.

2. When any one says the disciples of Christ have a human creed, he should produce the human creed or take back his charge. The only creed that those who are striving to practice pure Christianity without addition or subtraction have is the New Testament. Neither Alexander Campbell, Barton W. Stone, nor any one of the pioneer preachers in the Restoration movement ever did formulate a human creed or favor its formulation. All have held and taught that such practice is unscriptural, unauthorized by the word of God, and should be discontinued.

Mrs. W. J. Hogan asks: "(1) What is the sin against the Holy Ghost? (2) What is the duty of a member of the church of Christ who lives where there is no congregation of disciples?"

1. I have answered so many times the question. "What is the sin against the Holy Spirit?" that I sometimes feel like it is unnecessary to answer it any more. No one has ever been fully satisfied with his answer to this question. Instead of answering it this time, I shall copy the answer given by David Lipscomb in "Queries and Answers," pages 386, 387: "There have long been differences on that subject. Many hold that those who charged Jesus with casting out devils by Beelzebub committed the sin against the Holy Spirit; the connection will bear that interpretation. Still, it will bear another construction. These persons sinned against Jesus in making this charge. He warns them: 'You may sin now against me, and find opportunities to repent; but the Holy Spirit will come, and if you reject him as you now do me, there will be no forgiveness, neither here nor hereafter.' The Holy Spirit was not the lawgiving and directing power at this time; it was not giving the law, so could not be sinned against. After he came as the lawgiver and ruler, then to reject his teaching would be to sin against him. Until Jesus came as the ruler and representative of Gcd, men could not sin against or blaspheme him. They knew nothing of him; so until the Holy Spirit came as the guide and ruler and gave laws. none could sin against the Holy Spirit. Then, until the Holy Spirit came, none could sin against him. This is contrary to the generally received idea, but it is the only interpretation that I can harmonize with the other scriptures. Those who maligned, persecuted, and murdered Jesus did find forgiveness when brought by the Holy Spirit to repentance. The facts seem to be about this: Jesus came and performed his mission; many rejected him. After he returned to his Father's throne, the Holy Spirit came to confirm the truth he taught and to add to his testimony; but when the Holy Spirit had performed his work, bornhis testimony, there would be no further testimony or witness, and he who rejected his testimony then would be left to his own fate without further efforts to save. In other words, the Spirit would complete the testimony and would exhaust the provisions that God had made for saving man. If man rejects these, there is nothing more to reach him. There would be no more sacrifice for sin or provisions for mercy. According to this, the rejection of the teaching of the Holy Spirit and the refusal to be led by these teachings is the sin against the Holy Spirit. It is true that, after stating it, he said: 'Because they said, He hath an unclean spirit.' (Mark 3: 30.) Many conclude that he meant charging him with having an unclean spirit was this sin against the Holy Spirit. I think this is not what is meant. They made this charge of acting by the power of the devil against him, and he warns them that they might do this now to him and find forgiveness; but if they so rejected and treated the Spirit when he came, there would be no forgiveness. The sin can be committed now, and it seems a persistent refusal to obey the laws of the Spirit constitutes this sin. Any disobedience persisted in will be a sin against the Spirit,"

2. I have always thought that a disciple in a community where there was no congregation of disciples should do all in his or her power to build up a church that teaches simply the gospel as it is in Christ. No Christian should object to having his children taught the word of God, but should be careful to know that the teacher is teaching the truth. Every parent is under obligation to teach the Bible in his home and to the full extent of his ability. The great concern of all should be to see that the truth is taught without sectarianism or partisan bias. If the querist has found from actual experience and observation that the teachers are not teaching the Bible, she certainly should not place her children under their tutorage.

J. H. Mackey, of Sebree, Ky., inquires to know the meaning of 1 Tim, 5; 9. The passage reads: "Let none be enrolled as a widow under threescore years old, having been the wife of one man." This refers to the number enrolled to be supported by the church.

The Tie That Binds.

A guest at my breakfast table one morning "asked the blessing." Raising bis head, he was silent for a moment, and it was easy to divine that his eyes saw more than the company meal set before him. Then he shared his retrospective vision with us.

"I never go through this little ceremony," he began, "that I am not reminded of an incident that touched me deeply. I was a guest in the house of comparative strangers, and as we came out to the dining room I noticed there was some confusion and slight embarrassment, but I was asked to return thanks, and the breakfast went on "The next morning the father said: 'We have made you one of the family now, and before we sit down I am going to tell you just how things are. You see, it's this way: we do not have much time for family worship, but it is a rule that there must be an unbroken circle at the breakfast table. Before we sit down each one of the family, commencing with four-year-old Johnny, repeats a verse of Scripture, after which we join hands and repeat the Lord's Prayer, then I say a few words of prayer.'

"After this explanation Johnny started off with: "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of God."

"I learned later that the four-year-old was allowed to say the same verse for a month; the little ones under eight— O, yes, they had them all ages, as there were ten—must have a new verse every week; over twelve, there must be a new verse every morning, and it must not be repeated within thirty days.

"A few months after that I was in a university town, and there I met the oldest son of the family. I said to him: 'A fine family you have back in the old home town.' 'Yes, sir.' And his eyes lighted with pleasure.

"After talking with him a few minutes I said: 'Would you mind telling me what you miss most now that you are away from home?'

"The boy hesitated a moment. It isn't easy for a boy of that age to unveil the deepest feelings of his heart. Then, though a deep flush showed beneath his tan and freckles, he looked straight into my eyes and replied: "It's the handclasp at the breakfast table. If I could feel my father's warm grasp and repeat with him the Lord's Prayer, it would start the day off right, and nothing would matter then!" Again he besitated, but finished manfully, with a slight huskiness in his voice: "The memory of those mornings at home stands between me and many a temptation; it keeps me going straight,"

A Scotch mother, whose son was leaving to be ordained, went with him to the gate, put her arms around him, and, bidding him good-by, she added: "There will be many there can tell you mair than I can, laddie; but this I do say to you: Remember, laddie, that whenever you lay your hand on the head of a bairn, ye put your fingers on the heart of the mither."—Selected.

o o o A Contrast.

I chanced to be calling with a young friend at the cottage of a newly wedded pair last spring. A sudden shower had come up, and we were waiting for it to stop before venturing out. It was late afternoon when we heard a footstep on the front porch.

The wife sprang to her feet in an excited manner. "Excuse me!" she exclaimed, hurrying from the room.

I smiled sympathetically, for I imagined her meeting her husband with a kiss.

But the wife's clear tones disabused my mind of any such idea as that. "John," she called, opening the front door, hastily. "Please don't come in with your muddy shoes on! Have you rubbers? No? Then, dear, do take your shoes off and leave them on the mat before you come into the hall. You know this hardwood floor shows every mark. Go up in your stocking feet and get your slippers, and then come down and see my guests."

There was a muttered protest, but we did not catch the words.

"But your wet shoes would hurt the floor," the wife insisted. "It is easy enough for you to slip them off outside."

She returned to us laughing, yet slightly annoyed by the incident

"It's so hard to train a man," she commented. "Now John is a darling, but he cannot understand why he must not walk over these new floors in his horrid wet boots. I suppose his mother never taught him to think of such things."

It was twilight now, and I had a swift vision of another twilight several years ago. A mother was standing in the open door of a cozy living room looking at her big son, who had just entered the carpeted hall. "Come in here, dear," she urged, "where it is warm."

"But, mother," the great lad protested, "It's pouring rain, and I'm wet as a drowned rat. Think of your carpet."

"I'd rather think of you, dear son," the little mother smiled. "Never mind the carpet. A few drops of water won't hurt it. When it dries it will be as good as ever. But I can't have my boy wet. Sit here by the fire and take off those drenched boots."

That was the kind of thing to which the lad was accustomed. I do not believe it made him selfish. I know it made him happy and fond of home. Another thing it didit left a memory of some scenes that made this evening's occurrence harsh by contrast.—Selected.

How a Little Eskimo Knows Her Age.

The Eskimo people have no books. They can neither read nor write. But they can tell you right away, by looking into a bag, how old is each little fat Eskimo playing about the hut in the snow and cold.

This is the way they know: When a baby comes to an Eskimo's house—or igloo—a fur bag is given to the little one. She is to keep this bag as long as she lives.

Every year, when the sun comes once more after the long, cold Greenland night, a bone is put into the little bag. So when you look into the bag and see seven bones, you know that the little owner is seven years old.—The Myrtle,

The story is told as true that Leonardo da Vinci, in painting his famous picture of the Last Supper, employed as his model for the face of Jesus a choir boy of exquisite voice and of beautiful features which told of goodness within. Twenty years elapsed, and the picture was incomplete, for the artist had no one whose face appeared wicked and cruel enough to satisfy him as the model for Judas. Then he saw in prison a drunken, profligate gambler, and engaged him to sit as a model on his release. When the painting was completed, it transpired that the man whose wicked countenance had served as the model for Judas was the once beautiful and innocent boy who had sat for the face of Jesus. What had made the difference? Drink, lust, and the gambler's greed.—Selected.

Two Good Women.

BY J. W. BRENTS.

Once in a while we chance to meet with one of those strange coincidences which we have no way of explaining.

Away out on the plains of Texasa marvelous country, where nature paints some of her most beautiful mirages and gorgeous sunsets-lives the first character of whom I wish to speak, Sister Lula Curb. Of her early life I know nothing. I only know she was a Christian. She was married quite young to W. A. Curb, who was at that time a Baptist. He tells me that for a long time he verily thought he should do many things contrary to those whom he ignorantly called "Campbellites." This little woman, through patient prayer and obedience to God, won her husband to the Lord; and when I say she won him to the Lord, I know of no man whose heart and life are more completely surrendered to God than of this good man. They had their membership with the congregation at Petersburg, Texas, for a number of years. They had met and worshiped God. But this little woman's heart went out to a neighboring community, near her home; so one day she proposed to her husband that they "start up the worship" in a schoolhouse, and invite their neighbors to come and study the Bible with them. This was done. By and by the schoolhouse became inadequate for a place of meeting. She said: "We must have a church house." To-day they have a nice meetinghouse and a nice little congregation, where once the "cause we love so well" was unknown, Will Curb paying as much as one thousand dollars on the building.

The other woman of whom I wish to write is my sister in the flesh, Mrs. C. R. Welch, of Delrose, Tenn. Their home and membership were formerly at Pulaski. Here they had church privileges and splendid schools where they could place their five children. On account of financial conditions it became necessary to move to Delrose. The school advantages were very good, but there was no congregation of Christians. My sister cried and regretted very much to take her children away from church. Mother advised her to go and start her a congregation. Never did daughter take advice of mother more implicitly. The first Sunday she invited two sisters to her home, and they worshiped God, she taking the lead herself. One night, while visiting them, I suppose I preached the first sermon in Delrose. For quite a while she was handicapped for a leader. Her solution to this was a good one: she taught her twelve-year-old son to pray upon her knees at home, and at church this boy became the leader. To make a long story brief, their first move was from her home to a small room over a drug store. This finally became too small, and she bent to the task of erecting a church home. Through tears, prayers, disappointments, and the assistance of the other members at Delrose and neighboring congregations, the house was built last year.

God only knows the faith, tears, prayers and heroism of these two pure, good women; I cannot tell.

Strange to say, Sister Curb is a tuberculosis patient in a sanitarium at Lubbock, Texas. This means that her days are numbered. My sister is in a sanitarium in Nashville, and to-day This was written two or three weeks ago.-Ep.] must submit to a very delicate operation as her only chance. May the Lord bless both of these dear souls. Love for the Lord's work has prompted me to speak of the work of these two noble ones. Now I want to ask the brethren in Texas to send Brother W. A. Curb, Petersburg, Texas, a nice contribution to finish paying for their house: and those who are disposed to do so, to help me pay off the indebtedness on the church at Delrose. They owe something over one thousand dollars. Write me at Athens, Ala.

The Great Need of Oneness.

BY MRS, FLORENCE M'PHERSON.

I often wonder why our most able brethren find so much time to combat one another in our religious journals on subjects on which they ought to be of the same mind. I heartily indorse and enjoy reading articles where they combat sin and all religious efforts that are not of faith, but it is quite perplexing to see so many in the same body that cannot agree. If Jesus is the Way of heaven, and has made the way so plain that there is no need for a fool to err therein, it certainly is confusion to the minds of the simple to see so much disagreement. We all should make an earnest effort to be of the same mind in Christ Jesus and to establish the cause in the hearts of many people. This is an object which must commend itself to every lover of Christ. It occurs to me that the best plan is for every one to begin and work outwardly where there is an opening. I do not mean just in protracted meetings; but I mean an individual, a family, and a congregation. "Ye are the light of the world," said the Savior to his disciples. Therefore, every true Christian is a light in and to the world. I would suggest, then, that every one be of the same mind to a world of darkness and sin, attracting and guiding the lost by the light, purity, and loveliness of Christ's teachings. I would suggest, too, that every disciple begin first in his own heart, the center of all that is good or bad in him, and get the heart right in the sight of God. The heart being right, the life must be regulated accordingly, and thus the whole man will be brought into relationship to the Lord and be prepared to work in his vineyard. But where shall he begin to work? Just where he is-in his family, with his friends and neighbors, and in the congregation of which he is a member. I am persuaded that every one who desires to work can find around him, lying out before his own door, a field of labor sufficient for the largest activity. Let every family be what the family was intended to be-a nursery for the Lord. In every family there should be an altar where God is worshiped in the beauty of holiness. Parents should faithfully endeavor to bring up their children "in the nurture and admonition of the Lord," instead of leading them into fashionable life. When Christian families thus live and labor, congregations will grow and flourish, the children will obey the Lord when they reach the years of accountability, and thus will communities be made better. Let every congregation begin in the weekly meeting for studying the Scriptures, breaking the loaf, engaging in prayer and praise, attending to the contribution, jointly participating in all the duties, privileges, and enjoyments of the Christian institution. Let us all teach and admonish, comfort and edify one another. "Warn them that are unruly, comfort the feeble-minded, support the weak, be patient toward all."

When we go from one room into another, we do not become different persons; when we pass into the other world, we shall take with us the character and the recollections which we had here -- Selected.

"ALF and BOB TAYLOR, with their

"ALF and BOB TAYLOR, with their cloquence, their fiddles, and their fox hounds, have wrought for themselves a niche of eternal melody in the hearts of their country."

So states the author of this little book, which we present as the best product of the pen of DeLong Rice. Into one hour of reading he has gathered the strange and romantic story of the two most wonderful political campaigns of Tennessee—the thrilling tale of the happy comradeship and the lifelong rivalry of the two famous brothers—a disclosure of the remarkable and heretofore unpublished incidents that attended the political division of the Taylor family—the wonder of "The War of the Roses" that attracted the attention of the world—and the truth about "OLD LIMBER," the peerless and now immortal fox hound that played the leading role of sentiment in the political campaign of last fall, from the Mississippl River to the Unaka Mountains.

With a "Cast of Characters extending from a President of the United States to a fox hound," the story touches a wide range of human sentiment; and through it all is the aroma of crackling camp fires and the unsic of the chase.

Denver (Col.) Notes.

BY JOHN D. EVANS.

The books of 1920 have been closed, the "audit" has been made, and the "profit and loss" account closed. As we review the footings we feel somewhat like the fellow who by mere accident discovered his church relationship. He stumbled into an Episcopalian meeting one day just as the rector was solemnly confessing: "Brethren, we have done many things that we ought not to have done, and left undone many things that we should have done." At the first opportunity the visitor went forward and, extending his hand to the preacher, said: "Thank the Lord, I have found my church at last. You described my case perfectly. That has been my creed for years, but it is the first time I knew I was an Episcopalian." There are many of this creed.

As I consult the calendar I find that almost thirteen years of my life have been spent in Colorado. It was in March of 1908 that we met for worship the first time in Denver. doors have been open ever since. Not many congregations have been generous enough, long-suffering and patient enough, to endure the service of one poor preacher continuously for that long a period. May the Lord reward them. Possibly the chief reason for their remarkable patience was the scarcity of big preachers in the field.

A little more than a year ago there was a defection of a small band of four or five brethren and their families. who were disciples of the Apostolic Review and fully imbued with its spirit and divisive policy. Two of the leaders in the factional movement were preachers of recent importation, and the other a brother-in-law of a preacher, all of whom were zealous defenders of "Sommerism" and its creeds. Their withdrawal was the result of a failure upon their part to control the congregation. One of these brethren has since passed on to his reward. I sincerely trust that he repented of an act for which there was no justification, logically or scripturally. While such a course was a marter of sincere regret to us all, it has resulted in an unprecedented growth of the church in Denver. In harmony we have been able to do some constructive work and reach many people that we were unable to reach before. We have grown both in numbers and zeal. At the beginning of last year, when we went into our new home, we owed for borrowed money eighteen hundred dollars. During the year we received from outside sources, in round numbers, five hundred dollars. Before the old year closed we had paid all our obligations, including refunds to some who "went out from us," our

$ Ends Stubborn Coughs in a Hurry

For real effectiveness, this old home-made remedy has no equal, Easily and cheaply prepared.

You'll never know how quickly a bad cough can be conquered, until you try this famous old home-made remedy. Anyone who has coughed all day and all night, will say that the immediate relief given is almost like magic. It takes but a moment to prepare, and really there is nothing better for coughs. Into a pint bottle, put 2½ ounces of Pinex; then add plain granulated sugar syrup to make a full pint. Or you can use clarified molasses, honey, or corn syrup, instead of sugar syrup. Either way, the full pint saves about two-thirds of the money usually spent for cough preparations, and gives you a more positive, effective remedy. It keeps perfectly, and tastes pleasant—children like it.

You can feel this take hold instantly, soothing and healing the membranes in all the air passages. It promptly loosens a dry, tight cough, and soon you will notice the phlegm thin out and then disappear altogether. A day's use will usually break up an ordinary throat or chest cold, and it is also splendid for bronchitis, croup, hoarseness, and bronchial asthma.

Pirex is a most valuable concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract, the most reliable remedy for throat and chest ailments.

To avoid disappointment, ask your draggist for "2½ ounces of Pinex" with directions and don't accept anything else. Guaranteed to give absolute satisfaction or money refunded. The Pinex Co. I't. Wayne, Ind.

incidental expenses, evangelistic services, building a baptistery, missionary support, etc. Considering the fact that most of us are not in the Rockefeller class, we think that is a fair showing. We hope, however, to improve on that showing this year. We are just getting ready to do bigger business for the Lord. We have but scratched the surface of a large and fertile field There remains much to be done. For the assistance given us by the brethren in Tennessee and other States we are indeed grateful. We are still counting on you. Your investments in Colorado have already shown rich dividends, and they shall continue to do so. With Brother Fugua at Fort Collins, Brother Bailey at Boulder, Brother Young at Colorado Springs, and the writer at Denver, we hope to cooperate with the brethren in the field in such a way as to accomplish the greatest good possible. It is a matter of sincere regret that so few of our able and eminently successful gospel preachers from the "land of gospel preachers" can be induced to even come West long enough to "spy out the land." Brethren, the "giants" have all been slain or captured. The "tomahawk and scalping knife" have been buried. "Lo, the poor Indian," is as peaceable as a lamb. The lions, coyotes, and bears have retired to the hidden jungles and mountain fastnesses. The scenery is unsurpassed, the air is invigorating, the water is ninety-nine per cent pure. In fact, as our greatest daily paper is wont to say, "it is a privilege to live in Colorado." This refers also to preachers, as well as other human beings. In reality there is but one serious drawback: it is necessary to work for a living here, just the same as in Tennessee. But, of course, preachers don't mind this. They know that while at least one devil keeps on the trail of the fellow who is always busy, there are twenty or more after the fellow who is idle. Everybody cannot go to Japan or China, but almost anybody can come to Colorado. Brethren, remember Abraham's wonderful career when he got up and left his kinsfolk and went into a new country. He became the ancestor of the Jewish race, the founder of the religion of Jehovah, and the "friend of God." Why, some folks out here think Brother Fugua and 1 are really "big preachers." We are the only ones they have. See? Why not get a little further from the shore? "Launch out into the deep," There are living evidences here that gospet preachers can live for even a decade and fare better than the prophet Elijah. "Trust in the Lord and do good, and verily thou shalt be fed." Those of us who live to-day owe a debt of gratitude to our forefathers. nationally and spiritually, for their heroic struggles as pioneers of civilization and Christianity. What heritage shall we bequeath to those who follow after us? What land have we possessed for our Lord? Each one of us must answer this question at the bar of his own conscience, and later at the judgment bar of God.

Companionship of Christ.

BY F. E. EXUM.

Companionship is one of the sweetest things in this life. When sorrow, trouble, and misfortune overtake us, if we have even one faithful and true companion to help us, the burden is much lighter and the way much easier. We dread the thought of being alone in the world, with no one to help There is coming a time when all of us must leave this world and all earthly companions behind, and then more than ever before will we feel the need of the heavenly companionship of Jesus Christ. If we are Christians, we shall not need to fear to cross the dark, silent river of death; for He has said: "I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee." This promise should be very precious to every child of God.

A story is told of a Welsh coal miner that was imprisoned behind a cave-in, far under the ground. It was not possible to rescue him, but by means of a pipe of some kind his friends on the surface could speak to him. They asked him if any one was with him. He said: "Yes, the Lord is with me." Then he began to sing:

"When other helpers fail and comforts flee,

Help of the helpless, O abide with me."

When the help of all our earthly companions fails us, then Jesus will take us by the band and lead us home. David said: "Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil; for thou art with me; thy rod and thy staff they comfort me."

Cured His RUPTURE

I was badly ruptured while lifting a trunk several years ago. Doctors said my only hope of cure was an operation. Trusses did me no good. Finally I got hold of something that quickly and completely cured me, Years have passed and the rupture has never returned, although I am doing hard work as a carpenter. There was no operation, no lost time, no trouble. I have nothing to sell; but will give full information about how you may find a complete cure without operation, if you write to me, Eugene M. James Andrew Cunningham was born on February 25, 1849, in Williamson County, Tenn. He was married to Miss Maio L. Clark on February 17, 1874, to which union were born twelve children—six boys and six girls. One died in Infancy; eleven lived to be grown, but five of these have passed on. Brother Cunningham obeyed the gospel thirty-five years ago under the preaching of Brother Willie Craig and began preaching the gospel the next year. He moved to Del Rio, Texas, fourteen years ago; a few months later he removed to Bowie, where he made his home until called up higher. Summers.

Thelma Summers, daughter of Brother and Sister Curtis Summers, was born on November 14, 1917, and departed this life on January 23, 1921. Besides father and mother, she leaves a little brother, Woodrow, together with many other relatives and friends, to mourn her loss. She was laid to rest in Milburn Cemetery. Funeral services were conducted by Brother J. L. Holland. She was a sweet child, loved and praised by all who knew her; a real source of pleasure and happiness to her parents, and the darling of their hearts and of their home. After an illness of about three weeks her soul departed and returned to God who gave it. She can no more come to her parents, but they can go to her. May God bless them in their sad bereavement, and may he help them to so live that they may meet their loved one in the happy home above.

MERTICE GARNETT.

Lifsey.

Miss Mattie Lifsey, of Westport, Tenn., was born on March 7, 1868, and died on December 19, 1920. At the age of thirteen years she was "born again" into the family of God. and remained a faithful member of the one body until death. Sister Lifsey leaves five brothers and four sisters to mourn her death. For five months she suffered much, but bore her sufferings with that degree of patience that is characteristic of true child of God. "Though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil: for thou art with me; thy rod and thy staff they comfort me." We believe that Sister Lifsey has fallen asleep in the arms of her Savior, there to sweetly sleep until the resurrection morn. Though we sorrow, we thank God that we sorrow not as others who have no hope, but that we have that hope both sure and steadfast, and that hope which entereth into that within the veil. Words of consolation were spoken by Brother W. L. Denton.

L. A. WILSON.

Gomer.

After days of intense suffering the close of life brought relief to Brother W. G. Gomer. Brother Gomer was twenty-eight years, three months, and one day old. He was married to Miss Avie C. Sellars on January 19, 1913. To this union were born two boys. He was a devout member of the church of Christ. He leaves his wife and two small children to battle with the world. To the bereaved ones I would say: Weep not as those who have no hope, but prepare to meet God and to spend eternity with Christ and loved ones gone on before in that home where separations are unknown. It seems so sad to us to have to give up one in young manhood, and with two little children left who will need his care so badly; but the Lord knows best, and what he does is always right. Then let us submit to his will, and, in the language of Job of old, say: "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away: blessed be the name of the Lord." We believe Brother Gomer Lord." We believe Brother Gomer has won the race and that he will receive his part in that rest that remains to the people of God.

MRS. W. D. CARTER.

Williamson.

Miss Maud Williamson, of Cedar Grove, Tenn. was born on July 6, 1869, and died on December 17, 1920. She professed faith in Christ early in life and became identified with the Methodist Episcopal Church; but in a few years she left the Methodist Church and became identified with the church of Christ, to which she remained faithful until death. Sister Williamson leaves, to mourn her death, an aged father, Wesley Williamson; one brother, John Williamson; one sister, Mrs. Mary Collins; and a number of other relatives and friends.

Not living close to the meetinghouse all the time, Sister Williamson has been known to walk seven miles to church. Yet, while she went about her Master's business, she was very attentive to her aged father. She was ever ready to administer to the sick and relieve their sufferings, if possible. To the family and friends this is a consoling thought: "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord, ... that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them." Funeral services were conducted by the writer in the presence of a large number of friends.

L. A. Wilson.

Morrow.

On Thursday, October 27, 1920, at the family home, in Giles County, Tenn., Mrs. Sallie Lovell Morrow, wife of W. H. Morrow, entered into rest. She leaves her husband; a son-Charles Morrow; and three daughters-Mrs. Allen Farris, of Texas, and Mrs. Herschel Farris and Mrs. John Yokeley, of Tennessee. The passing of such a character deserves more than a passing notice. She was hospitable and kind to all; she bore the sufferings of her last years with Christian fortitude; she was a dutiful wife and an affectionate mother; she loved the Lord and delighted to attend church. She will be missed in the home, the community, and the church. The broken-hearted relatives may find great comfort in the words of Jesus: I am the resurrection, and the life; he that believeth on me, though he die, yet shall he live." Again, in Revelation we find this comforting word: "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord from henceforth." Though she walks no more with us, her influence will be felt long after her body has mingled with the dust. We have good reason to believe that she shares the bliss of those who have obeyed from the heart the teaching of ONE WHO LOVED HER. the Lord

Thomas.

Sister Fordie Haynes Thomas, daughter of Christopher Haynes, died at her home near Polkville, Ky., on January 27, 1921, aged seventy-two years, ten months, and twenty-five days. On December 17, 1868, she was married to Jesse W. Thomas. To them were born six children—Pearl, Lee, Leslie, Eddie, Clarence, and Cannie. Three of these have gone home, leaving Lee, Leslie, and Clarence, besides John, Lewis, Jerry, and Joe, sons of "Uncle Jesse" by a former marriage. "Aunt Fordie," as she was lovingly called by her neighbors, was a devout Christian from her early childhood. Although she had been a constant sufferer for years, she never forgot her duties to God and to those about her. She endured her suffering patiently. Had she lived one day longer, she would have survived "Uncle Jesse" exactly one year. How blessed to think of them as just waiting over on that bright celestial shore for the loved ones they have left here! May the Lord bless the children and grandchildren in following the pure examples of these loved ones, and at last bring us all to him in the heavenly home. After the funeral at the old home the body was laid to rest in the family burrying ground in the presence of a host of friends and relatives.

M. L. MOORE.

Patience.

If we will only have patience with God's leading, he will always show us the way as fast as we are really ready to go on. The trouble with most of us is that we want to see the path through to the end before we take the first step. We want to know before we start how we are to come out. But this is not God's way for us. A man who is traveling in a dark night on a country road does not have the whole way lighted at once by the lantern he carries. It shows him only one step; but as he takes that the lantern is borne forward and another step is lighted, and then another and another, until in the end the whole way has been illumined, and he is safe at his destination. God's word as a guiding light is a lamp unto our feet, not a sun flooding a hemisphere. In the darkest night it will always show us the next step; then, when we have taken that, it will show us another, and thus on till it brings us out into the full, clear sunlight of the coming day. We need to learn well the lesson of patience, if we would have God guide us. Many of us cannot wait for him, but insist in running on faster than he leads, and then we wonder why there is no light on the path, and we complain and are discouraged because we stumble so often. If we stay back with the lantern, it will be all right with us in our journeying.— H. C. Trumbull.

Greatest Foes.

Every household should have its life guards. The need of them is especially great when diseases—the greatest foes of life—find allies in the very elements, as colds, influenza, catarrh, the grip, and pneumonia do in this stormy month.

The best way to guard against these diseases is to strengthen the system with Hood's Sarsaparilla, one of the greatest of all life guards. It removes the conditions in which these diseases make their most successful attack, gives vigor and tone to the vital organs and functions, and imparts a genial warmth to the blood.

Remember, the weaker the system, the greater the exposure to disease. Hood's Sarsaparilla makes the system strong.

If the liver is torpid or the bowels are sluggish, causing biliousness or constipation, Hood's Pills will be found of great service. They are especially made to be taken with Hood's Sarsaparilla.

The Master's Vineyard

California.

Rosa, February 21.-The eleven-o'clock service here yesterday was one of the best and most impressive that I have ever experienced, Being the third Sunday of the month, it was our day for short talks by the brethren. Speeches were made by Dr. Sinelair, Max Langpaap, E. L. Kindig, and Brother Wilburn. All were along the same line of thoughtmeditation upon God's word, forgiveness, love; and the entire service was a love feast. These points were made: Meditation upon the word draws our minds and hearts closer to God; we cannot receive forgiveness and finally dwell with God unless we torgive: the object of the Christian religion is to increase love one for the other and toward our fellow man; and the spirit of love and forgiveness can be acquired, but it is only by practice—a cultivation which comes only by a diligent and continuous effort. Every song of the service was of the devotional spirit. While the last song was being sung, without any invitation being extended, Brother Judd, who had for some time been meeting with the Christian Church, came to the front and said that he could no longer stand the unscriptural things that were being taught and practiced there and that he would like to meet and worship with us. At night Brother Max Langpaap, who is expecting soon to go to South Africa as a missionary, preached a good sermon on the importance of Bible study. We have Sunday school at ten o'clock, preaching or short speeches at eleven, communion at twelve, and preaching again at night. We have Bible study and prayer meeting on Wednesday evening. Before each evening service we spend a half hour in song practice. We believe in good singing, and lots of it. It adds life and interest and good results to the services, and it is one of the Lord's ways of adding these good things. We believe in having the meetinghouse warm and comfortable, clean and neat in appearance. These also add to the warmth of the services and are perfectly in harmony with the teaching of the Book to do heartily and 'as unto the Lord' what we do. We try to make the services of the church interesting and profitable to the young people, and we make a specialty of having the boys take a part in the public services.—Felix G. Owen.

Florida.

Lecanto, February 28.-We had two more splendid services last Lord's day. One lady made the good confession and was baptized. She had been a mem-ber of the Baptist Church for several years. Sixteen have been baptized since we have been here. One young lady who has been converted to the truth is being hindered in her obedience by her near relatives.-R. E. L.

Bradentown, February 28.—Yesterday was a splendid day with the Manatee County congregations. Brother Moore was at Cortez; Brother Vann, at Manatee; Brother Collins, at Oneco; Brother John Hayes, at Lakeland (Hillsboro County); and I was at Bradentown for both the morning and evening services. All of these places are in a prosperous condition and are trying to extend the work to every section of this country. The "di-gressives" have been very active in Bradentown and Manatee, but they seem to have lost out and have almost quit meeting. W. B. Young is their leader, and his greatest success seems to be in going where he is not known. posing as a loyal minister, and begging our brethren to help him pay for the church building in Manatee. Let brethren everywhere beware of wolves in sheep's clothing.-W. M. Brumit.

Maytown, February 25.- I am glad to report a church of Christ at this place, composed of seven of the best people here, the result of an elevendays' meeting which closed last night with a fine interest. This was a destitute place, not an unmixed gospel sermon having been preached here before I came. Maytown is twelve miles from Mims, where there is a church composed of a few faithful ones. I have worked there once a month since coming here last October. I notified them of this meeting after it was begun, and they came every night afterwards till the meeting closed, and to them belongs much credit for its success. Brother J. E. Lane, the old war horse," led the singing, and it was well done. This is the second new congregation that I have set in order at mission points since I came here, the first one being at Eau Gallie, where I go from here to-morrow to work with them over Lord's day. will close my work on the East Coast at present. I expect to leave on Tuesday for Lake City, my home. I shall be glad to know of some faithful preacher to call on the brethren here and strengthen the work. Address Brother N. J. Bailey, Maytown, Fla My work in this section has been hard and at a great financial sacrifice, but it has been pleasant as a whole The it has been pleasant as a whole opportunity to preach the gospel at Maytown came as the result of a physical disability caused by accident. My work since October 15 has been with the congregations at Turnbull Bay, Port Orange, and Mims, with Eau Gallie and Maytown (mission points) added. The following results are noted: At Turnbull Bay, one baptized and the church edified; at Port Orange. the church encouraged to go forward unto greater activity; at Mims, five restored, one from the Baptists, and the church awakened. My permanent address is Lake City, Fla.—J. O. Barnes.

Kentucky.

Farmington, February 28.—I visited Lynnville on Thursday of last week and had a pleasant time with a brothwith whom I became well quainted while in this part of the State in 1885. In the evening I met Brother Henry M. Canter, one of the earnest elders of the congregation, We arranged an appointment for services yesterday and last night.

Friday I went across to Cuba, where I met the high-school teacher, Brother J. B. Hardeman. He is a fine preacher, as well as a teacher. On yesterday we had fine services, both in the afternoon and at night, at Lynnville. am now at Farmington, where I intend to preach to-night .- Andrew Perry.

Oklahoma.

Altus, February 28.—Yesterday we had two very fine services here. Our crowds continue to increase. The outlook is fine for greater service for Christ. On the night of February 17 a crowd of disciples "pounded" us with good things to eat. May our Heavenly Father bless each giver, and may we all live to the glory of God .-S. E. Templeton.

Elk City, February 28.—Things are moving along nicely with the church here. Our crowds are all we can take care of. It seems as if nearly every member is making an individual effort to make our work a success. I believe the outlook for the cause here is brighter than ever before. It has been said that "a busy church makes a busy preacher," and I am sure from my own experience that that is true; but I am also inclined to think that a busy preacher might have something to do with making a busy church. that reason it is a good idea for both the preacher and the church to be busy, always abounding in the work of the Lord. We will have a "special meeting" at the church of Christ here the last three days of March, and we are expecting a great time. Come and enjoy it with us.-J. A. Cullum.

Texas.

Somerville, February 18.—On last Lord's day I preached at Beaumont, and a young brother confessed his We had an interesting time at each service. On Monday I went to Port Arthur, and preached at night to a good audience. On Tuesday I went to Houston to see my old-time friends, Brother J. H. Lawson and wife, Brother Lawson preaches for one of the churches there. I found they had an interesting three-nights' program an interesting three-nights' program on; but as my train left early, I could only stay for the first part of the services, which was very interesting. I met Brethren J. S. Dunn and Oscar Smith, whom I had not seen for several years. The churches in Houston are doing a good work, and there seems to be great interest all the time. May the Lord bless all the faithful and increase his kingdom,-W. F. Lemmons.

How the Blood Is Reached.

BY H. M. PHILLIPS.

In 1 John 1: 7 we learn that the blood of Jesus Christ cleanses from all sin. In Matt. 26: 28 it is stated that his blood was shed for many for the remission of sins. In Col. 1: 14 we learn that forgiveness of sins is through his blood. There are many other passages which clearly teach that the blood of Christ saves, and no one who believes the Bible denies that; but as to how it is reached, or how it saves, is a question not fully answered by all. Let us carefully see how.

The blood of animals could not take away sins (Heb. 10: 4); so it is for the blood of Christ to do such. Blood that is not shed avails not (Heb. 9: 22; Matt. 26: 28); and if it is shed and is not reached or applied, it still avails not. The blood of Christ was in him; it was shed in his death (John 19: 34); so if I get into Christ and his death, I reach the blood and the shed blood. Gal. 3: 27 says we are baptized into Christ, and Rom. 6: 4 says we are baptized into his death. Now all can see that when we are baptized in the scriptural way we have reached both the blood and the shed blood. We have remission of sins, or we are cleansed by the blood of Christ. If we walk in the light (1 John 1: 7), we do what the words of Christ command, and get into Christ's blood that was shed, and are saved by it. Now we can all see how it is reached.

President Wilson's Gift.

An interesting and significant dispatch from Washington to the New York Sun, dated February 19, is as follows: "President Wilson to-day sent to the historic church of Bruton Parish, Williamsburg, Va., a costly bound 'American Standard Bible' autographed with his signature. A letter from the President to E. Ruffin Jones, rector, accompanied the gift. The story which surrounds this gift is a most interesting one. There is in Bruton Parish Church a very handsome copy of the King James Version of the Bible. It was especially prepared in England for presentation to the church by King Edward VII. It was brought over by the Bishop of London in 1907, the three hundredth anniversary of the founding of Christianity by the English at Jamestown. Bruton Parish Church is in direct succession to the first church there. This Bible rests upon a lectern presented by President Roosevelt. It happens that there is another reading desk in frequent use in the church upon which the rector wished a suitable pulpit copy of the 'American Standard' Bible: for, as the rector says, 'this version may in time entirely supplant the King James, as you know it has been already authorized by our general convention. In this old church the morning lessons are now read regularly from the King James Version, the gift of King Edward VII., and those in the evening from the 'American Standard' Bible, the gift of President Wilson."

To be independent of man's dictation is simply to declare that we must live the special life which God has marked out for us and which he has indicated in the special powers which we discover in ourselves. We are fit for no other life. There can be nothing more modest than that. It is not pride when the beech tree refuses to copy the oak. He knows his limitations. The only chance of healthy life for him is to be as good a beech tree as he can.—Philips Brooks,

Q

Healing the Impotent Man.

When Simon Peter was preaching the gospel to Cornelius, he summed up the earthly life of the Savior, so far as practical duties are concerned, by saying that he "went about doing good." (Acts 10: 38.) This statement we may accept as an encomium of the highest praise; or, better still, we find in it the secret of the most uniformly useful and beautiful life the world has ever known. We should appreciate the strength of the words "went about." Jesus did not stand always in one place waiting for the people to come to him, but he sought out cases of need and distress and proposed to undertake their relief and cure.

The impotent man (see John 5: 1-16) did not come to Jesus. Jesus went to the impotent man. The great act of salvation is an act of approach on the part of God as well as man. Positively the most touching part of the story of the prodigal son (Luke 15: 11-32) is where the aged father, almost worn out with anxiety and disappointed, yet still hoping for the best, looks far down the road. His eyes were not so dim but what he could see that wandering boy coming home. Did the father stand still? Was his heart unmoved until the prodigal had asked forgiveness? Read the story and note its wonderful pathos. Verse 20 says: "While he was yet afar off, his father saw him, and was moved with compassion, and ran, and fell on his neck, and kissed him." It is both sweet and comforting to hear Jesus say: "For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have eternal life." (John 3: 16.) It means that God was coming to man in the person of his Son. It is assuring to hear him say: "Him that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out." It is none the less assuring to hear him explain his own mission in the world by saying: "I am come to seek and to save that which was lost." Salvation, then, is a reciprocal arrangement. We come to God through Christ, our Savior, and he comes to us in the same way. James (4: 8) puts this beautiful thought into an exhortation: "Draw nigh to God, and he will draw nigh to you."

Going After Them.

But I should like to press the point of our Savior's seeking that which is lost and "going about" doing good. His example in this respect is a virile argument against passive Christianity. It is a vehement protest against our sitting still and waiting for sinners to come to us to be saved, or for the sick and poor to ask our aid. It is assumed that when worldly people come to the house of worship we are willing to preach the gospel to them; but how many are willing to bring them to the house of worship that they may bear it? It is assumed that when worthy cases of people in distress are brought to us we are willing to do our duty by them; but how many are willing to look for worthy cases of distress that they may be relieved? Jesus uses the strongest figure possible to show us our full responsibility in the matter of saving sonis. In relating the parable (Luke 14: 16-24) of a certain man who gave a great supper and whose invitations were spurned, he has that lord say to his servants: "Go out and constrain them to come in." (Verse 23.) How are we to constrain people to come into the kingdom? Certainly not by force of arms, not by violence, not by deceit, not by flattery; but by persistent effort, by loving entreaty, and by presenting to them the beauty and holiness of a Christian example.

It is often hard to ask a man to be a Christian. It is embarrassing even for the best of us to talk about Christnot because we are ashamed of Christ, but because we fear that we ourselves are unworthy, or because we think the person to whom we are talking will think that we are We often take too much for granted in this regoody. spect. We assume that most men do not wish to hear of Christ, when we do not know the heart of any man. An English preacher, Mr. Pentecost, was one day speaking with a business man of his acquaintance about becoming a Christian. Before leaving he began to apologize for introducing the subject, whereupon the merchant stopped him and said very earnestly: "Don't ever apologize for speaking to a man on that subject. I have been waiting for twenty years for some one to speak to me about my soul,"

I do not recall a single case where I ever spoke to a man in an earnest, Christian way about his soul that he did not give me a respectful hearing and a courteous answer. You need not ever apologize for speaking to a man about his soul. On the other hand, you may have to confess in your humiliation and shame that you have neglected to do it.

After Healing-"Sin No More,"

But after the man was healed, Jesus said: "Sin no more, lest a worse thing befall thee." There is a connection between the moral and physical life. Jesus was not only an original teacher, speaking as never man spoke before, but he was an original physician, healing as man never healed before. He did not put this man on diet; nothing is said about sleep, exercise, ablution, or any other physical discipline. The exhortation is profoundly moral. "Sin no more"—just the same words that were spoken to the woman taken in adultery. (John 8: 11.) Where the spiritual is wrong, the physical cannot be right. The Y. M. C. A. has for its motto, "Mens sana in corpore sano" -a sound mind in a sound body. But Jesus goes deeper than that. He wants us to have a pure heart in a sound body. On the other hand, physical discipline has a religious side. There are a lot of soap dealers and laundry men who have chosen for their motto: "Cleanliness is next to godliness." Most of them have only a superficial knowledge of the Bible, and they think this is a biblical quotation. The lesson of cleanliness is clearly taught in the Bible. In the Old Testament it is made a religious duty. Moderation is a command of God. Early rising is encouraged. In a word, all our life is to be religious. Paul says: "Whether ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God." You will recall the fact that Daniel and his three friends did not suffer on account of their abstinence. They did not become lean and emaciated by keeping themselves on the diet prescribed under their religion, but fairer and fatter in the face than all the Israelites. This was not altogether miraculous. It was only the natural course of events. If there could be a poll of all the healthy people in the world to-day, I am satisfied that those who come nearest to the Bible standard of eating and drinking would be greatly in the majority.

It is possible, then, to leave our sinful past and to live righteous lives in the future. We may turn over a new leaf. We do not need to wait for New Year's Day-we may turn over a new leaf right now. "If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature." "Choose ye this day whom ye will serve." But suppose we cannot reach the sinless state in this life. Let that be granted. Still we are moving in the right direction. Paul had not apprehended, but he was moving on.

It is possible to forget the greatest deliverances and blessings of life and go back to sin. This man had been healed. A mighty hand had lifted him out of the pit of despair and set him in the sweet light of hope; his youth had been renewed like the eagle's; his heart had gotten back all its best desires. Yet it was possible that all might be forgotten. David cried and said: "Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits." If David's magnanimous soul was capable of forgetting God's benefits, so is yours and mine. The shipwrecked mariner can forget the agonies of the sea; a son can forget the pleading of his father, and a daughter can forget her mother's tears and sacrifice; and so one who has been a child of God can forget that he was purged from his old sins and go back to the weak and beggarly elements of the world. From what a height did Lucifer fall! From that same spiritual eminence you and I can fall. There is a way back to hell even from the threshold of heaven; but between hell and heaven a great gulf is fixed.

The Savior's remark is plainly an appeal to fear. Some men are inaccessible in any other way. Simon Peter said: "Knowing the terror of the Lord, we persuade men." To those who have rejected the gospel there is "a certain fearful expectation of judgment, and a fierceness of fire which shall devour the adversaries." Jesus says: "Sin no more, lest a worse thing befall thee." This eminent Physician made it perfectly plain that Moses was speaking with authority when he said: "Jehovah is slow to anger, and abundant in loving-kindness, forgiving iniquity and transgression; and that will by no means clear the guilty, visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children, upon the third and upon the fourth generation." (Num. 14: 18.)

How many and how awful must be the punishments which God can inflict! Looking at the case before us, one might think that the wrath of heaven had been exhausted. The man was in a miserable condition. It was a case of (1) long-continued suffering-for thirty-eight years he had sought relief; (2) utter friendlessness-"I have no man, when the water is troubled, to put me into the pool;" (3) continuous disappointment-"another steppeth down before me." Yet, in the face of all these facts, Jesus speaks of the possibility of worse things. Who can number the arrows of the Almighty? Who can take the temperature of his indignation? Who hath sounded the pit of his darkness? God can go beyond our imagination in the infliction of penalty. After he has touched our skin with a loathsome disease and made our bones to tremble; after he has sent a chill to our marrow and made our pulses stagger in their beat; after he has struck us blind so that we cannot see the sun, and stopped our ears so that the storm cannot be heard-is there any more that he can do? No man can number his weapons or tell where the confines of punishment are set. "It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God," Isalah says: "Seek ye Jehovah, while he may be found; call ye upon him while he is near."

Book Reviews.

BY F. W. SMITH.

"Queries and Answers," by David Lipscomb and E. G. Sewell, is a compilation of the work of these great men covering a period of something like forty years. This material was carefully gleaned from the writings of Brethren Lipscomb and Sewell by that careful and painstaking writer, M. C. Kurfees, and is now offered to the public by the McQuiddy Printing Company, Nashville, Tenn. The mechanical work of this book is unsurpassed; the print is large, clear, and on splendid paper, bound most excellently in cloth. In fact, it is one of the neatest books that has come to the writer's table from any source. As to the contents of the book, the names of David Lipscomb and E. G. Sewell should be a sufficient guarantee as to its value. I feel confident in saying that no book of its size ever contained more valuable information for the student of God's word, and that it should occupy a place in every home in this broad land. No one who needs and desires the aid of lifelong students of the word of God can afford to be without this book and also the book entitled "Queries and Answers," by David Lipscomb, which was compiled by J. W. Shepherd. The price of this late volume of seven hundred and sixty-seven pages is three dollars. Send for a copy today, read it, digest and assimilate it, and you will be the richer thereby.

Christians-Where Found?

BY C. E. HOLT.

In recent numbers of the Gospel Advocate, Brother Kurfees has had some very able editorials on a subject of much interest, and about which there is a manifest lack of unity of opinion among men who are supposed to be ecclesiastically united. "Where are God's children?" Or, "where are the saved?" Or, do the organizations called by those who constitute them, "churches of Christ," contain all the Christians in the world to-day? If this last question is answered in the affirmative, and if this affirmation is true, then there are about one hundred and fifty thousand Christians in the world at the present time; that is, if we count only those who reject instrumental music in connection with vocal music and who favor what is usually termed "organized missionary work."

While it is true that there are approximately one and a half million people included in what is sometimes styled the "restoration movement" inaugurated by the Campbells, Walter Scott, Barton W. Stone, Jacob Creath, Raccoon John Smith, and others, yet the great majority of these are not to be counted as a part of the "church of Christ," when measured by a standard of orthodoxy adopted and recognized by those found among the one hundred and fifty thousand. Among this latter number we do not find perfect agreement on all questions of faith and practice. Among them we find what is sometimes termed "rebaptizers," or those who insist that no one is scripturally baptized who did not fully understand when he or she was baptized that baptism was "for the remission of sins" in a procurative sense, or in a sense of cause and effect—that baptism stands related to remission of sins psychologically. This means that, in addition to faith in Christ, one must understand that remission of sins is effected or produced in the act of baptism; or, to put it in a more concise form, that faith in Christ includes faith in this "design" of baptism. I am not prepared to say what per cent of the "churches of Christ," recognized as such, are found in this "school" of loyal Christians; but I give my opinion, based upon an extensive acquaintance with the congregations, preachers, and periodicals representing them, that they constitute the larger part of the "loyalists."

I would place Brethren Lewis and George and some others who have taken issue with Brother Kurfees in the articles referred to in the beginning of this article among those who make faith in the design of baptism an indispensable prerequisite to church membership, and, therefore, absolutely essential to salvation. According to this theory, there are no Christians, or saved people, in any of the Protestant denominations. Logically, then, it follows that, so far as we know, there was not a Christian on earth when Alexander Campbell was born; and that Campbell himself was not a Christian, not understanding at the time of his baptism, administered by Matthias Luce, a Baptist preacher, that baptism was "for the remission of sins."

Brother John T. Lewis has made the impression upon my mind that he does not believe that any Christians can be found among the Bapusus, Methodists, Presbyterians, or "digressives." If he does not so believe and teach, then why take issue with Brother Kurfees? Brother Kurfees says—and correctly, too, as I contend—that all who have truly believed in Christ, having obeyed him as the inspired Scriptures direct, are Christians, members of the church of Christ, or of Christ's spiritual body on earth, their involvement in denominationalism to the contrary notwithstanding.

If salvation and membership in the church of God depend upon an entire freedom from error, doctrinally and otherwise, then I have serious doubts about there being a single Christian on the earth to-day, or at any other period. The apostles themselves were not entirely free from error on some points at all times during their ministry. Their errors were gradually discovered and corrected. And so it should be now. The first Christians were not required to "rub out and begin anew" every time they learned a new truth or were made to see an old truth in a new light.

But some one may ask this question: "If the Baptists are in the kingdom-saved people why not let them remain there? Why ask them to come to us?" The answer to this question is not hard at all. First, I remark that there is no such thing on earth as the Baptist Church. There are, indeed, many Baptist churches; but all these, when taken together, from a Baptist viewpoint, do not constitute one Baptist church. In the same way the New Testament speaks of "churches of Christ" (Rom. 16: 16), but nowhere does it say one word about "the church of Christ." There is no such an institution known in the New Testament as the church of Christ as an ecclesiasticism, or as one great corporate body. For such a body to exist, there must be a centralized head, visible and authoritative, to which every local church is subordinate and of which it is an integral part. As the sum of any number of units is equal to all the units which make said sum, so it would be with the churches of Christ in their relation to the great corporate body, "the church of Christ," If, indeed, there be such a thing,

The name "Baptist," an official title, is wrongly used when applied to a congregation of baptized believers. A wrong use of the word would not, in any sense, invalidate the faith and obedience of persons who constitute an organization wearing the name thus misapplied. Unless they were all baptizers, the name is evidently misused.

But I am told that it is the "teaching" of such churches, and not the name by which they are called, that makes their salvation an impossibility. This opens up another matter to which attention shall be given in another article. It is true that Baptists teach some error, but they also teach much truth. The same may be truthfully stated in regard to all denominations that lay claim to the name "Christian," or that which constitutes Christendom. If there are no Christians among the denominations, then we should not receive anything they have done, religiously. Our Bible, every version of it, was made by men who belong to denominations. The great commentaries and lexicons were made by them. The scholarship of denominationalists has been of inestimable value to us in our work of restoring the apostolic faith and forms and practices in this age of the world. Many of them have made invaluable contributions to the enlightenment and salvation of the world. Paul says: "Render honor to whom honor is due." The pioneers, the most of them, did this in a very appreciative and commendable way; but many of our modern "lights" have discovered that they have a "copyright" on the plan of salvation, free from error or from any of the imperfections of humanity, and every one else is to be anathematized. "Pronounce our 'shibboleth' or die" is the order now.

But "why ask the Baptists to come to us?" So far as I am connected with the matter, I do not ask the Baptists or people of any other denomination to come to "us." It is not always clear as to just who are included in the term "us." The people we often call "us" have a great habit of "turning each other out of the synagogue." Many of "us" will not recognize nor fellowship the rest of "us." No, I do not ask the Baptists nor others to come to "us." I try to preach the gospel to sinners, and the nature and importance of Christians maintaining the "unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace," by which all the saved are bound together in a new and blood-sealed covenant, and also showing the evils which have arisen and which continue to grow out of divisions, so that I enable those who put a greater value on Christianity, pure and unmixed with the doctrines and commandments of men, than upon the opinions and ideas of creed makers and sectarian propagandists, to find themselves. Such people are easily convinced that sectarianism among God's people is wrong and hurtful to the cause of Christ in many ways. They are anxious to become identified with those who, discarding all humanly devised formulas and differentiating titles in religion, stand solely "upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone "—the center and circumference of every divine truth.

I close this article with a concrete example. More than forty years ago there lived in Landerdale County, Ala., a remarkable man. His name was "Murrell Askew." He was a Baptist preacher of extraordinary ability. He was for many years pastor of a large and influential church called "Macedonia," about sixteen miles from Florence. He saw, as very few men have more clearly seen, the evils of divisions among God's people. He preached the gospel as he found it written in the New Testament. This produced dissatisfaction among some of his preaching brethren. Finally he made the following proposition to the church for which he had preached for many years; "Brethren." said he, "we are wrong in wearing a sectarian name, and we have some things that we call 'Baptist usage' which do us no good, but, so far as they serve as barriers between ourselves and other Christians, are evidently hurttul Let us, then, shuck and silk ourselves of everything that we do not find in the New Testament, and let us just be Christians only." His proposition was accepted, and the church has since been known as a "church of Christ."

Brother T. O. Bevis, of Cloverdale, Ala., is a living witness of that occurrence. He was one of the brethren who "shucked" and "sliked" themselves of all humanisms as tests of fellowship or conditions of church membership. He is an elder in said congregation, and is pure gold. May the Lord spare him a while longer.

A Note From Brother Lucas North.

"Repent ye, and be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ unto the remission of your sins." (Acts 2: 38.) "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ." (Gal. 3: 27.) "If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature." (2 Cor. 5: 17.)

I have been considerably interested lately in the discussion between Brother Kurfees and Brother Taylor. I do not propose to make an argument, nor even take a position on the question, but simply to tell what a Baptist preacher said in a talk at his baptizing. The preacher's name was "Fitzgerald," and he was considered a good deal of a revivalist; and at the close of a meeting he held at a place called "Park Grove," several years ago, I heard that he was to baptize forty-eight persons, and I went to the baptizing. Before beginning to baptize he made a talk and among other things he said: "I want it plainly understood that we are not baptizing these persons to make them Christians; for we are not. We are baptizing them because they are already Christians." Now, are we to believe that these persons were baptized into Christ, "in whom we have redemption through his blood, even the forgiveness of sins," in spite of their belief to the contrary? And is not the above-described use of baptism precisely the same as taught and practiced by most denominations?

Danger Ahead.

BY J. D. TANT.

My Dear Brethren: Considering that I belong to the old guard and have been on the firing line for thirty-five years, I hope you will not think it unkind in me if I point to the danger and give a word of warning. I have noted the departure of so many of my brethren and have fought the digressive move along all lines, till I feel able to see the coming danger in the church of Christ.

At one time the church of Christ in Texas was united along all lines. We then began to have preachers' meetings, to which many preachers went and had a fine time. Later we turned it into a State meeting, and once a year all the preachers would come together for a big time. At each meeting there was a restless disposition among the younger set. "We are not doing anything. We must have some plan, so we can do great things like the sects around us."

This restlessness continued until 1886, when the preachers' State meeting was held at Austin. I attended that meeting. C. McPherson, A. J. Bush, Dick Kendrick, and others prepared beforehand to divide the church and organize their society, so they could do something. By carrying from forty to fifty girls to the preachers' meeting to vote every time C. McPherson raised his finger, they voted the society in.

When I saw aged brethren, including Dr. C. Kendrick, A. J. Clark, W. H. D. Carrington, and C. M. Wilmeth, weeping like children over the fall of the church, and when I heard one woman shout, "Thank God, we have a society at last!" and another one yell, "All is peace on the Potomac to-night!" and amid clapping of hands they began to sing "All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name," I then felt like the devil was never happier and hell was never brighter than at that time, as the devil had won such a victory.

All this trouble grew out of the innocent preachers' meetings.

Later, when I moved to West Tennessee, we had a preachers' meeting to devise a plan of mission work. One preacher said: "We now have one hundred and four churches in West Tennessee and twenty-two preachers. Shall we occupy the territory and keep other preachers out, or invite them to come in?" Another preacher stated: "Joe Warlick, of Texas, held a meeting for my church, and they engaged him for next year. I knew all the time I could hold a better meeting than Joe; but all were crazy about him, so I could say nothing." I was then forced to tell them Jesus said go to all the world, and I thought a gospel minister should go and preach the gospel where he was called. Neither did I think it wise for preachers to select their district and try to keep others out.

At that time the beloved David Lipscomb criticized the preachers' meeting of West Tennessee, and with his godly advice and wonderful influence I think he killed it out in that State.

It is now getting common for the preachers of the West to have preachers' meetings. Recently I attended one at Fort Smith, Ark., with thirty preachers present from eleven States. The trip cost each at least twenty dollars, and the church at Fort Smith two hundred dollars. We lost thirty weeks going and coming, at twenty-five dollars a week. So we can safely count on fifteen hundred dollars spent on the preachers' meeting. This amount would support some man a year in mission work, in which he could possibly baptize two hundred men and women and build up a half dozen congregations.

But we had a good time at the preachers' meeting. Each one had an opportunity to show off how much he knew. We did nothing unscriptural; but was the meeting scriptural? The only tendency I saw to leave the little was that many were restless and argued for some plan or system to do mission work.

This brings me to the point I want to make. I notice in the Gospel Advocate of February 3, Brother Walker, of California, states the church at Dinuba will have a preachers' meeting; and among the things they will do, one is, they will devise some plan of cooperation by which evangelistic work can be done throughout the State. As the Lord has left no plan, of course these preachers can devise

When I call to memory that for thirty-five years John R. Williams, of West Tennessee, has been working under the cooperation of the churches of West Tennessee and has baptized thousands, and established churches, and John R., Lipscomb, J. A. Harding, I, and hundreds of other preachers have been talking about the Lord's plan for a long time, it now seems strange to me that preachers have to come together to devise a plan of mission work. Brethren, the society organization, with all other human inventions, is just one step ahead. Be careful of the plan you devise.

A short time ago I had occasion to examine some of the differences in Texas between the loyal brethren and the "digressives." We now have seven kinds of loyal (?), brethren in Texas. I found nine points of difference that the loyal brethren fought and condemned at the time the division came that they now accept and teach. In fact, instrumental music is about the only difference now between loyal brethren and "digressives" in Texas.

Brethren, do not forget, we are drifting.

[I commend the above to the thoughtful consideration of our readers. Preachers especially should be careful not to introduce methods that will lead to the organization of societies.—J. C. McQ.]

Power of God's Word.

BY JAMES E. SCOBEY.

God's word, if followed, will lead man away from the follies, fads, fancies, foolish fashions, and sinful indulgences which are so prevalent at the present time, and will safely guide him to the gate of paradise. While heaven were unattainable by us without God's word, yet it has been one of the strongest factors in the civilization, enlightenment, and moralization of the nations of the world. If we leave out of view the fact that it is God's means of saving man from the condemnation of past sins and the consequences of sin in the future and concentrate our view only on the fifth, sixth, and seventh chapters of Matthew, which comprise the Sermon on the Mount, we have the principles which teach the duty and obligation of man toward himself, his fellow man, and his God, as no other lawgiver or moral philosopher in the past had been able to approach, and as no one in the present has been able to surpass. While Moses was a great lawgiver, whose laws form the base of the jurisprudence of our own and other countries, Jesus Christ may be regarded as the great Chancellor, because of the justice and equity of his judgments.

The practical application of the direction of God's word and a conformity of personal conduct to the divine will on the part of Christians has had, and will continue to have, a wonderful and salutary effect on the manners of the world. But Christianity is impossible where the gospel has not been preached and the Bible is not known.

Paul, in writing to Timothy, the evangelist, knew of nothing more important than to charge him to "preach the word;" to study to show himself "a workman approved unto God, rightly dividing the word of truth." From my observation and experience, I think perhaps there are a great number of preachers who are studying to show themselves approved unto their hearers without the use of the word of truth. They preach what they feel will please and be popular with the world. I have heard quite a number of these popular world-trotting eyangelists preach; I have never heard one preach the word with respect to becoming a Christian. They never tell sinners what Peter on Pentecost teld them to do to be saved. True, they said a great many good things, exhorting sinners to quit their meanness and be good; but they have universally failed to make known, at any time or at any place, the great plan of salvation harmonizing with the great commission given the apostles by Jesus on Mount Olivet just before his ascension to heaven, where the is enthroned Lord of lords and King of kings, wielding the scepter over his spiritual kingdom.

The Bible, God's revelation to man, has stood the test of the ages past, both as to its genuineness and authenticity, notwithstanding the attacks of its outspoken foes—atheists and infidels, such as Voltaire, Tem Payne, Bob Ingersoll, and others—as well as those hypocritics who engage in destructive criticism, concluding that much of the old Bible cannot reasonably be received and believed.

Yet the great majority of those who are acquainted with the Bible believe that God "at sundry times and in divers manners spake in times past unto the fathers by the prophets," and "hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son." He is our Prophet, our Priest, and our King. His teachings we should receive, his sacrificial office in our favor we should desire, and his laws we should obey. Then God's will would be done by us, his name be glorified, and we be blessed.

The Bible is the only book in all the world that gives an intelligible account of the creation or any proper conception of God himself. It tells from whence came man and whither he will go; it makes known to man his duties while living and his destiny when he dies.

Let all the preachers preach the word, that men may know the truth and chey the gospel, that their "sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord."

The Approach of Death.

BY H. C. FLEMING.

In old age many days are lonely, many days are sad; but the promise of our Lord Jesus should surely make us glad.

When we arise early in the morning anxious for the daylight to appear, as the darkness of the night begins to pass away, we rejoice that the light has come. So it is at death with the Christian. This world is one of darkness, and while here we can only dimly see the approach of that light which will exist forever.

Death is the penalty for sin, and we all dread it because all we have ever known has been in this life; therefore we dread to pass from the known to the unknown. But if we have confidence in God and his promises, we should think of it in a different light.

We may have this confidence and yet not be satisfied with the manner in which we have passed our lives, because of the sins we have committed; and this itself is the very reason why God has taken so much pains to give us hope for forgiveness that we may enjoy a happy life after death.

As death approaches, our confidence in him should grow stronger and stronger. We should be able to grasp the thought of forgiveness through Jesus Christ our Savior by complying with his commands, remembering that in our selves—that is, the flesh—dwelleth no good thing; that we are perfectly helpless by our own power. We have nothing but the promises on which to rely for help, strength, comfort, and consolation.

"My little children, these things write I unto you, that ye sin not. And if any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous: and he is the propitiation for our sins: and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world." (1 John 2: 1, 2.)

This Advocate was "in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin." (Heb. 4: 15.) He knows the weakness of man and the power of temptation; therefore, he is able to present our cases to the Father in supplications for mercy. Let us trust him, and the approach of death will have no terrors for us, but we can face the grim reaper with boldness and "find grace to help in time of need."

No more will be our sorrow's sighs Of earthly woe and sin; Instead will be the pleasures In the mansions built by Him.

We shall soon be able to verify
The promise given which he spake,
By the mercies of our Lord on high
Of sins forgiven for his sake.

O the glory and the sweetness Of the holy land above, Where Jesus in completeness Reigns in the beauty of his love!

Gethsemane.

BY R. P. CUFF.

"Gethsemane" means "oil press." This name was applied to a garden on the mount of Olives. "And they come unto a place which was named Gethsemane." (Mark 14: 32.) According to the marginal reading it would be: "And they come unto an inclosed piece of ground which was named Gethsemane." The idea of "an inclosed piece of ground" is also found in Matt. 26: 36. Though not mentioned by name, the "garden" in John 18: 1 is surely Gethsemane. Luke 22: 39, 40 presents the basis for saying that the garden of Gethsemane was on the mount of Olives. Olivet doubtless took its name from the olive trees that lined its slopes. Mount Olivet and the "mount of Olives" were the same. This mount was "before Jerusalem on the east." (Zech. 14: 4.)

A number of important events occurred on the night of our Master's betrayal. First, his eating of the last supper —that is, passover supper. He had gone to Jerusalem to observe the passover. One has said that he sat that night at a "table of happy fellowship." True, he there predicted that Judas would betray him. Despite that unpleasant feature, however, the supper scene must have been "happy" as contrasted with the distress, the agony, the sore trouble, and the exceeding sorrow of the hour in Gethsemane. (Matt. 26: 38; Mark 14: 33.)

After Jesus left the communion at the table in that upper chamber where he and the disciples had met to eat the supper, he crossed the brook Kidron. (John 18: 1.) The reader will recall that David once, in sorrows and sore straits, had crossed this same brook. (2 Sam. 15: 23.) Absalom had formed a conspiracy against the throne of David, and it had become necessary for the king to flee from Jerusalem.

When Jesus has crossed the Kidron and come to Gethsemane, then the garden of olives becomes at once interesting-an integral part of the tragic drama enacted on the closing stage of the Savior's life. In the time of trouble he had recourse to prayer. He went where he "ofttimes resorted." "Judas knew the place." (John 18: 2.) Not afraid to face his betrayer, Jesus went to a place that Judas knew. After establishing Peter, James, and John to watch, he receded into the gloom and the deep solitude of the garden where he might pray while his soul was agonizing. He assumed a lowly posture. (Mark 14: 35.) He spoke the same prayer a second time. (Verses 36, 39,) What agony was there in the heart of the Son of God! His soul was "exceeding sorrowful even unto death." "His sweat became as it were great drops of blood falling down upon the ground." (Luke 22: 44.) As Weymouth translates this passage: "His sweat became like clots of blood dropping on the ground." He prayed earnestly. Jehovah recognized the prayer as prompted by fear of God. (Heb. 5: 7.) An angel came from heaven to strengthen Jesus.

Victory was the consummation of the struggle. A fight had been going on within Jesus over "if it be possible." The cannon that roared defeat to "if it be possible" was "howbeit not what I will, but what thou wilt." He resigned himself to God's plan. This resignation was built upon firm resolve. Our Savior's determination to fulfill his mission, to please God all the way, was iron. "He steadfastly set his face to go to Jerusalem." (Luke 9: 51.)

E. de Pressensé said: "'My will, not thine, be done' turned paradise into a desert. 'Thy will, not mine, be done' turned the desert into paradise and made Gethsemane the gate of heaven."

Ruskin moralized on the ancient uses of olive oil, saying that the use of the oil had a triple significance—"for sacred anointing, for strength in the gymnasium, and for light." He concluded: "Above and beyond all, think how strange it is that the chief Agonia of humanity, and the chief giving of strength from heaven for its fulfillment, should have been under its [the olive tree's] night shadow in Palestine." In the Savior's earnest prayer, manly courage, firm resolve, and majestic manner in the presence of his enemies that momentarily stuns them is an endowment of stronger and grander conceptions of sacredness, strength, and light.

We need to-day something of the same spirit of adventure which the Pilgrim Fathers had. If they had put on the Mayflower the motto, "Safety First," they would never have reached this country.—William Lawrence.

Heavenly love centers no lower than heaven itself. If love is a beam, it is only as it stands in reference to the sun; if it loves the creature, it is only as it is a step to advance nearer to God. Lord, I would not care for heaven were it not for thee; neither would I love myself were I not in thee.—Selected.

The Child at the Door.

A child is crying beyond our door In the cold and the wind and the wild downpour. (How can we sit at ease within?) A child is calling beyond our gate, Starving and stark and desolate. (How can we bid the feast begin?)

The doors of the world are heavy and tall, But the cry of the child can pierce them all (A cry of a child in anguish sore). And though it sounds from a land apart, "Tis at our threshold and at our heart (A child is crying beyond our door).

How may we sit content and warm
When a child is lost in the night and storm
(The night of famine, the storm of war)?
How may we break our bread in ease,
Hearing the voice of the least of these?
(A child is crying beyond our door).

Wasted Time.

There had been an accident to the train, and it was held up in a small town from one in the afternoon until nearly five waiting for an engine to come to its relief from the nearest large city. About two dozen passengers descended from the disabled train to the dirty little waiting room, and it was interesting to see what plans were made immediately for the afternoon by the various types represented.

The traveling salesmen took out their books and began work as if glad for an hour; two dissipated-looking youths inquired if there was a pool room in the place; three elderly men settled down tranquilly to smoke and read newspapers; while the others quickly made plans for the afternoon.

"I'm going to visit the school," said one young lady. "I teach at home, and I've always wanted to see the methods of a village school."

"How very tiresome!" said her companion. "I get school enough at home. I have an interesting novel or two in my satchel. Let's settle right down here and read."

"Do you know of any one who belongs to a missionary society in this town?" asked an old lady timidly of the station agent. "This is Wednesday afternoon and our meeting day at home; so I thought maybe you'd know of a meeting here."

The agent did know, and directed the old lady to the house not far away where such a meeting would soon be in progress. "Go right down and introduce yourself," he said warmly. "The lady who is going to have the meeting is my aunt, and she'll be glad to have you."

"Are there any interesting places near here?" asked an eager young high-school student—"anything that would work up into a theme for a history lesson?"

"This village is built on the site of an old pioneer fort," said the station agent. "I can give you the addresses of several elderly men in the place who have time to tell you some of the stirring events of this place in days gone by."

The lady canvasser was already out occupying her time profitably selling her wares, the minister in the group had gone to call on a brother minister of the same denomination, and there remained only the salesmen, the novel readers, and the smokers. Silence reigned for an hour, and then the smokers began to grumble. The salesmen put away their books and walked about the village as if glad for exercise without carrying heavy satchels, and presently the old gentlemen followed their example, leaving only three young ladies yawning over books with lurid covers.

"If this isn't insufferable!" said one girl at last as she laid down her book. "Wasting all this time in this beastly little hole! This is my afternoon at Madame Harriman's to have my nails done; and if you miss an appointment with her, you have to pay just the same as if you were there. It is simply maddening to wait, isn't it?"

"It certainly is," said another with conviction. "I might be shopping or resting at home, but here I sit in this unspeakable hovel doing nothing. Of course there could be nothing for a person of refinement and culture to do in such miserable surroundings."

"The idea of Mary visiting that school," laughed the third. "I'm forced to teach school for my bread and butter; but, thank goodness, when I close the door after me, I don't have to think of school out of hours. I'm in the business strictly for the money it affords and because I can't earn my living easier in any other way; but it doesn't follow that I enjoy the task so much that I want to visit other schools. How perfectly terrible it would be to have to live or exist in such a squalid place!"

So the afternoon went by, and presently the passengers were all gathered in the station waiting for the welcome announcement that they could continue their journey. "A wasted afternoon!" was the verdict of six or seven as their bored expression and listless looks turned toward the setting sun.

"A most delightful afternoon!" the old lady confided to her next neighbor. "I found some of the nicest ladies I ever met, and they had such an inspiring meeting. I gathered up a few Items for our own society at home in the course of the meeting."

"You girls missed it by not going to that school," said the young teacher coming in with rosy cheeks and interested looks to gather up her belongings. "That first-grade teacher over there is simply wonderful. I'm going to tell Superintendent Duvall about her the minute I get home. And those adorable youngsters! In some things they are far ahead of our pupils."

The pool-room youngsters loudly discussed the "green" village youths they had found in the pool room and enlightened the unwilling listeners as to the details of the "rotten" game the "hicks pulled off." The old gentlemen looked as if discontented with the whole world even though they had loafed and smoked to their hearts' content, but the minister and the man who had been out looking up new customers for his firm paid scant attention to the loud talkers. They were thinking of the profitable time spent and the probable results of their visit to the village, just as the busy ladies were pleasurably recalling their experiences of the afternoon.

"It isn't so much the working time that tells on folks," said the lame station master thoughtfully, "as the loafing time. When I lost my leg and the company put me here, I thought I would waste my time henceforth and forever because shelved in a little town; but life has been sweet and profitable for me here, and I've kept busy. Now, take you folks this afternoon. I guess the only ones that wasted the time are the ones who waste mostly at home."

"I think you are right," said the salesman thoughtfully. "The only wasted time is the misspent time, or so it seems to me."—Hilda Richmond, in Christian Advocate.

This world is in God's keeping. Despite the travail of soul in many parts of it, the clash of races and the struggle of class with class; despite the machinations of selfish men, a new earth is slowly being fashioned, wherein every child shall have its rightful measure of laughter, every man and woman a chance to do, and the proper reward for doing, a faithful day's work, every race and nation due consideration from its sister nations, rendering in return its full contribution to the happiness and welfare of all.

AT HOME AND ABROAD

- F. B. Srygley reports two fine services, and specially two fine sermons (he preached them) at Lawrence Avenue Church, this city, last Lord's day.
- J. V. A. Traylor, Murfreesboro, Tenn., filled his regular appointment at Hoover's Chapel, near Tullahoma, Tenn., on Sunday, March 6, with splendid crowds at both services."
- W. F. Cox, Beamsville, Ontario, Canada, writes: "The work is moving along nicely in Collingwood. Last Lord's day (March 6) I preached for the brethren at Tinturn. On the last Lord's day in this month I expect to speak for the brethren at Selkirk."

From W. D. Bills, San Antonio, Texas, March 8: "We had two excellent services at Grove Avenue, this city, last Lord's day. It was our pleasure to have J. C. McQuiddy with us at the morning service. He gave us a splendid sermon. One man made the good confession at the evening service. Our work is progressing very nicely."

Ben West writes from Fort Worth, Texas, March 7: "We had three fine services yesterday. House packed; one added; two hundred in nine Bible classes. We 'lifted' eleven hundred dollars out of our pockets to enlarge our church building and add six Sunday-school rooms. Work will start this week. Work at the North Side is very interesting."

We have on our desk a program of a special meeting with the church of Christ at Elk City, Okla., to be held from March 29 to April 1, with sessions each morning at ten o'clock, each afternoon from two to four, and services each evening at a quarter past seven. They say: "Be sure you come." Signed: A. Mansur and W. M. Albert, elders; J. A. Cullum, minister.

From W. T. Taylor, Pottsboro, Texas, March 7: "I closed a week's meeting at the Willow Spring Schoolhouse last night. We had large crowds and the best of attention throughout the meeting. We have no worshiping assembly there. I shall visit them occasionally and try to get a church established again. I am preaching all my time now, and want to be busy."

- T. H. Matheson writes from Guymon, Okla.; "I expect to make a trip back to my old home this summer, and would like two other meetings to hold in West Tennessee during August and September. I am to begin a meeting at Yorkville on the first Lord's day in August. The work here is great, and I hope to be able to make some very interesting reports before the year is gone."
- V. E. Tankersley writes from Eau Gallie, Fla., Box 876, under date of March 11: "I would be glad to get in touch with brethren who are thinking of locating in Florida. We need a good preacher in our county, as we now have four small congregations here. If we could get some one who would be willing to locate here and help us in the Lord's work in this section, it would be a great help."

John M. Rice, now preaching at Munday, Texas, asks. "Is C. W. Holley sound?" and says: "C. W. Holley came to us from the 'digressives' because he cannot say 'amen' to anything except the doctrine of the Lord. Some have thought him to be about half digressive yet. I wish to state that I know this to be a great mistake. Brethren, call Brother Holley and use him; he will do you good."

- J. C. Mosley writes from Mayflower, Ark., March 9: "When I came here the people were not having any Sunday school. Now the Baptists have started them a little school. I have baptized twenty-four. They all met with me last Lord's day and broke bread. There were thirty-two who broke bread, and one member had gone to Little Rock. I am glad to see the homes now giving thanks to God and praying. One boy twelve years old, whom I baptized, gives thanks at the table. I will go from here to Dongola, III."
- H. N. Mann, of Riverside, Tenn., was in our sanctum for a nice visit last week. He reports the work at Riverside and also at a number of meeting places near there as doing well. Brethren at these places keep up the meetings for Lord's-day worship, and he and others meet with them and preach to both saint and sinner as the opportunity is presented. This is a fine way for conquering the world for Christ, and we are glad to know of this section as one in which the natural method is being carried out. Brother Mann is a large merchant and a small farmer, as well as a gospel preacher. He is rather larger than the average size in physical make-up.

Porter Norris, of Lucy (near Memphis), Tenn., was in to see us last week. He reports four congregations near him, built up by his efforts in the last nine years that he has lived in that section. Three have their own houses, and the fourth has the lumber on the ground to build one. He will begin a meeting at Lock (one of the above congregations) next Lord's day. Brother Norris formerly lived at Watkins, this county; and he says that this scribe "pushed" him into the ministry twenty years ago by publishing an appointment for him and insisting on his filling it, which he did.

J. W. Grant preached to a representative audience at Charlotte and Forty-sixth Avenues on Lord's-day morning. One baptized Methodist gave up the human part of his practice and standing (religious) and took his stand with that congregation on the Bible alone. The Bible study attendance was two hundred and fifteen—only six short of the highest record ever. The congregation had a business session at night and perfected arrangements by which the building committee will go forward immediately in preparation for the erection of a new meetinghouse, plans of which were approved.

William P. Walker, Dinuba, Cal., says: "Yesterday (February 27) finished my fourth month's labor with the Dinuba congregation. This congregation numbers about forty. This includes the boys and girls, also some 'dead stock.' While Brother Sewell was with the congregation he had about twenty-three additions. When he left, the most of his additions left. Some went to the Christian Church and some to the 'Church of God.' I am afraid that some people join preachers instead of Christ. We have some faithful workers in the Dinuba church. Since Christmas we have spent about nine hundred dollars on our house of worship. No appeals were made to other churches. The money was raised at home. They have also supported me well and cared for some poor members. It may be well for me to say that I have not preached a sermon on 'money' since I have been here. We have some truly converted people in the Dinuba church. These people are the kind that give. If we had our 'dead stock' converted, only God knows what the Dinuba church could do. The elders expect to have a 'house cleaning' sometime in the near future. They expect to convert these folks or lower the back bars of the congregation and let them out. Last night one came from the Baptists. She will be baptized next Lord's day."

W. D. Bills, who preached for about six years for the Denver Heights church of Christ in San Antonio, Texas, is now working to build up the cause of Christ on Grove Avenue in that flourishing city. The work is progressing nicely and growing in interest under his efforts, and promises soon to develop into a strong congregation. On Sunday night, March 6, there was one confession at this place. Brother Bills appears to be very much interested in the work and determined to remove all obstacles out of the way of the progress and development of the church. Brother McQuiddy had the pleasure of being hospitably entertained for a while by Brother Bills and his wife during his recent visit to San Antonio. Such kind consideration cheers and brightens one who of necessity must be away from his work at home. Hospitality is a virtue that should be cultivated more and more by Christians. Brother McQuiddy also had the pleasure of meeting his personal friend and warm supporter in every good work, T. Phillips, while in San Antonio. Brother Phillips held a good meeting for the Denver Heights church of Christ. Brother Phillips held a beginning on the first Sunday in February and closing on the fourth Sunday night. The meeting was well attended throughout, and the church was greatly strengthened and unified. There were twenty-seven additions to the congregation from all sources. On the first Lord's day in March two more made the confession and two took membership. The church is very much pleased with the great good Brother Phillips has accomplished during his brief period of work in San Antonio. M. O. Dailey labors with the South Flores Street church of Christ in San Antonio. The church there is moving on about as usual, parently holds its preacher in high esteem. With that spirit of cooperation prevailing among these congregations that should always exist between the churches of Christ, there is no reason why they should not establish churches in other localities in the great and growing city of San Antonio. As the weather is warm there the most of the time, a tent could be used very advantageously in planting churches in the destitute fields of the city. We shall ex-We shall expect great things from the brethren in San Antonio.

The church at Shelbyville, Tenn., has just closed a fifteen-days' meeting, with twelve baptisms.

- S. M. Spears has changed his address from Hohenwald, Tenn., to David Lipscomb College, Nashville, Tenn.
- F. W. Smith reports fine audiences and interest at both services of the church at Franklin, Tenn., last Lord's day.
- From J. S. Newman, Clifton, Texas, March 8: "The cause here is doing nicely. Good crowds and fine interest."
- From E. P. Watson, Dickson, Tenn., March 5: "Our work here moves on nicely. This is a splendid congregation and in good working order. We hope to do more and better work"

From Mrs. Tom Hemphill, Mineral Wells, Texas: "The church of Christ that meets at the Odd Fellows' Hall every Lord's day is increasing. We have very good crowds, and all are at peace with each other."

From Will W. Slater Fort Smith, Ark., March 7: "We had two good services yesterday at Park Hill Church. We are at peace, and all have a mind to work. I preached out east of Van Buren in the afternoon."

A. A. Bunner, 1800 West Fifty-fourth Street, Cleveland, Ohio, requests any one knowing of any loyal disciples of Christ in or near Ravenna, Ohio, to please notify him, giving him their names and addresses."

Our brother, George H. Porch, known familiarly by his friends as "Uncle George," is now located with the clothing, hats, and gents' furnishing goods house of the L. A. Bauman Company, 417 Church Street. He invites his friends and all to call to see him in his new location.

If any reader knows of any one, Christian or otherwise, living in or around Baltimore, Md., that would be interested in New Testament Christianity, kindly send name and address to T. H. Walker, 2011 North Charles Street, Baltimore, Md., or to A. B. Comer, Wyoming Apartments, Washington, D. C.

Horace W. Busby, of Fort Worth, Texas, has recently closed a fine meeting at Sonora, Texas. Austin Taylor, of Uvalde, conducted the song service. The meeting resulted in some sixteen or seventeen additions from all sources. The church was greatly strengthened and encouraged to press forward in the great work of saving souls.

T. H. Ethridge, of Marshall, Texas, under date of March 12, writes as follows: "Our work at Marshall grows slowly, but, we trust, surely. We have had a little meeting this week, conducted by home forces. Two have taken membership. We shall likely close to-morrow night. I have time for two meetings in the summer not yet arranged for. I should like to do so."

- E. W. Moon writes: "We sincerely regret to learn of Brother McQuiddy's depreciation in health, and shall be glad to learn of his rapid recovery. He is a busy man, industrious to a fault, 'not slothful in business,' a stalwart Christian. He will be missed when he is gone." We are glad to announce that Brother McQuiddy reports that he is doing fine and improving in health.
- S. M. Spears reports interesting services at Estill Springs, Tenn., as follows: "On the fourth Lord's day in February I preached at Estill Springs. Brother Grammar, of Lois, was there, and with him two of his brothers and a Brother Wagner. They did the singing for us, which was highly appreciated by all who heard them. It drew a large crowd, and we all had an enjoyable day."

From Joe L. Netherland, Miami, Fla.: "Last Sunday (March 6) was a splendid day for the church here. There were one hundred and forty-two present for Bible study. The house was well filled at all the services. I am expecting to begin my protracted-meeting work in Tennessee about July 1. Any congregation desiring to correspond with me will address me at Box 253, Miami, Fla."

Foy E. Wallace, Sr., recently closed an interesting meeting at Corpus Christi, Texas, with eight baptisms, several restored, and some to take membership. This church has just completed a new house, which was necessary by reason of the storm which recently destroyed the old meeting-house. This is the home of C. W. Sewell, who has labored long and faithfully in this town and surounding community.

From W. S. Long, Washington, D. C., March 6: "Another interesting Lord's day has just closed. The hearing was excellent. One young soldier from Texas placed his membership with us. Each member seems devoted to the church work, and the good spirit reigns. A telegram from Jesse P. Sewell, of Abilene, Texas, informs us that he will be here about April 1. We shall welcome him to the capital city and be encouraged by his spiritual and soul-stiring sermons."

From E. S. Parrish, Montgomery, Ala., March 13: "We had another good service to-day at the Highland Park church of Christ. There were one hundred and twenty-three in the Bible classes. One person made the confession, one was restored, and two placed membership. All are greatly encouraged and have a mind to work,"

Will J. Cullum had a fine audience at the Lockeland Community Hall, Sixteenth Street, near Holley, Sunday afternoon. He also reports good services at Reid Avenue, both morning and evening. Brother Cullum will preach next Lord's day, merning and night, at Twelfth Avenue, North; and in the afternoon he will preach at Bull Run Church, in Cheatham Courty.

Just before going to press we received a news letter from John E. Dunn, Waxahachie, Texas, from which we give the following: "Thomas H. Burton, of Union, S. C., will be with us on Wednesday night and tell us about his work in the Palmetto State. Horace W. Busby is to begin a protracted meeting with us on March 18. Brother Busby is very popular here, and we are expecting a glorious meeting." The remainder of Brother Dunn's letter will be given next week.

W. L. Oliphant writing from Muskogee, Okla., March 9, says: "I was at home again last Lord's day. One sister placed membership with the congregation at the evening service. The church is getting along splendidly. We are beginning to make preparation for our spring meeting, which is to begin in May. J. Will Henley is to hold our meeting. With the congregation in good working order and a preacher with the ability Brother Henley possesses, we are expecting a great meeting. I spent four days last week preaching to attentive crowds at Locust Grove, and assisted the brethren there in setting the congregation in order. I shall be in mission work for some time now, supported by the Muskogee and Tulsa churches. I would that all congregations could be aroused to a realization of their duty along this line."

R. E. L. Taylor writes from Decherd, Tenn., March 12: "We had three good services in Florida last Lord's day. I preached, morning and afternoon, at Homasassa, in the Methodist Church, to large crowds. The brethren all went from Lecanto with me and took an active part. I preached at Lecanto at night to the largest audience that I had while there. Two young men made made the good confession, and two more made the confession at the water, and all were baptized. At the water I closed out my work with the congregation at Lecanto, with twenty-five (in all) baptized. I have never labored with a more zealous congregation since I have been preaching. We arrived at home last Thursday. My wife stood the trip home fine. She is very much improved. The Florida brethren and sisters were very kind to us while there. They supported me well for my work."

John T. Hall, Jackson, Tenn., says: "It is sometimes heart-rending to ministers of the gospel and others who so much desire to see a greater effort, more zeal, more real sincerity in the work of Him who said, 'Follow me,' when they note the indifference and inconsistency of many who profess to be Christians. We read the great Book, listen to the very finest sermons, and also get, through the press, helps, admonitions, etc. Consoling to instructors is the thought that while all will not listen, accept, and act some will. There are people who make no pretensions to Christianity who in their dealings with men are more truthful and more inclined to bless and help suffering humanity than some church members. No one need expect to wield a good influence over the unconverted sinner and the weak and indifferent church member, if he does not live up to the high standard of Christlanity himself. Every one ought to be solemnly impressed with the inference of the admonition of the beloved apostle Paul: 'Practice what If the people around you are not converted ou are in part to blame. 'Ye are the light of you preach.' and saved, you are in part to blame. 'Ye are the light the world,' 'the salt of the earth.' There is a power words. There is something for you to say as well as do. We have some as faithful mem-Admonish one another.' where. Bemis is a fine little city of about two thousand inhabitants, three miles south of this city. L. S. Lancaster preaches for the congregation there twice a month. There is a great opening there for a large increase of disciples."

"Blessed Are the Poor in Spirit."

BY J. C. M'O.

The first beatitude Jesus spoke in his inimitable Sermon on the Mount is: "Blessed are the poor in spirit: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven." Without any depreciation of the other beatitudes, we may well emphasize the fact that we cannot well observe any of them until we have practiced in a measure the first one. A man with a proud, haughty, and conceited spirit like that of Haman cannot exhibit a single beatitude in his life. Without poverty of spirit there can be no real meekness, innocence, and virtue. Only the poor in spirit can truly mourn for the sins they have committed, hunger and thirst after righteousness until they stand on the mountain top of a purified and perfected life. The Savior not only teaches us, "Blessed are the poor in spirit," but his whole life and example is one of perfect poverty of spirit and humility.

'The Spirit tells us, through Paul: "For ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that, though he was rich, yet for your sakes he became poor, that ye through his poverty might become rich." (2 Cor. 8: 9.) He gave up the raptures, riches, and glories of heaven for the poverty, persecution, and tribulations of earth. He cheerfully gave up heaven in order to become a homeless wanderer in the earth. Listen to him: "The foxes have holes, and the birds of the heaven have nests; but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head," (Matt. 8: 20.) If I were writing to a poor, persecuted disciple, or to a discouraged, murmuring, and broken-spirited preacher who is complaining of his hard lot in this world, I would say: Cheer up and listen to this same Jesus as he tenderly says: "A disciple is not above his teacher, nor a servant above his lord." (Matt. 10: 24.)

This same poverty of spirit led Jesus to agonize in the garden of Gethsemane until in his agony his sweat became as great drops of blood. What a sight to behold-the only One absolutely poor in spirit, guileless and sinless, bowed beneath the weight of the sins of the whole world! Just here I recall the words of Paul to the Philippians: "Doing nothing through faction or through vainglory, but in lowliness of mind each counting other better than himself; not looking each of you to his own things, but each of you also to the things of others. Have this mind in you, which was also in Christ Jesus: who, existing in the form of God. counted not the being on an equality with God a thing to be grasped, but emptied himself, taking the form of a servant, being made in the likeness of men; and being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, becoming obedient even unto death, yea, the death of the cross. Wherefore also God highly exalted him, and gave unto him the name which is above every name." (Phil. 2: 3-9.) In this example we have the whole story. Humility must precede exaliation. In order to go up, we must first go down. We must put down pride, passion, and lust; and with these beneath our feet, we must rise to where the snows of purity forever gleam in the glow of heaven. Without poverty of spirit there is no exaltation. "And whosoever shall exalt himself shall be humbled; and whosoever shall humble himself shall be exalted." (Matt. 23: 12.) Humility is the most admired virtue, and yet the least practiced. How hard it is for us not to think more highly of ourselves than we should! Our sermons are matchless; there are none better! A preacher used to pray for himself that the speaker might hide behind the cross of Christ; but the preacher was so conceited, was so proud of his own attainments, that the hearer could not get even a faint glimpse of the cross of Christ. How different from Paul, who came not with excellency of speech or of wisdom, but determined not to know anything, "save Jesus Christ, and him crucified."

If we would glorify God, we must lose sight of our own glory, selfish Interests, and attainments. A young Southern girl said to a woman of eighty, who still attracted all in spite of her snowy hair: "Tell me the secret of your charm, and teach me to fascinate people as you do." "My child," was the motherly response, "remember just this: in the alphabet of charm there is no such letter as 'I;' it is all you," There it is again, "I"-this conceited "I"blocks the road to real usefulness and happiness. charms, our attainments, and our graces are all as light as vanity if we are destitute of humility. When we lose our humility, our usefulness is gone and we are deprived of God's favor.

Saul was truly great when he was little in his own sight. God could use him while he was poor in spirit, and for this reason permitted him to be king over his people. But when he lest his poverty of spirit, became great in his own estimation, and presumed to set up his judgment against the wisdom of God, Jehovah could no longer use him. Men love authority and seek it; yet it seems strange that they do, when it proves the destruction of so many. Success, position, money-each brings with it a responsibility which, If not properly met, will drag a man down to hell. The prosperous need the prayers of the righteous more than the peor. Honor, power, and success proved the undoing of Saul. They led him to exalt himself and not God. With self-exaltation always comes destruction. The following legend well illustrates this: "An inflated frog, the usual type of the beaster, wanted to accompany a brood of wild geese on their migration from the cold North to the Southern sunny climes. As he heard the geese planning their trip in his Northern pool, the frog proposed to them to accompany them. But they said: 'How can you ever fly? We are provided with wings, and you can only croak and swim." O, but,' said he, 'I have brains; and if you will carry out my directions, you will be surprised at the ingenuity of my plan.' The geese consented, and immediately the frog directed them to a strong reed in the swamp, which they pulled up and brought to him. 'Now.' he said, 'you just take hold of the reed in your mouths, one at each end, and I will hold on with my mouth in the middle, and you will carry me without any difficulty.' And so they started. But, as they flew over the village, the people were attracted by the strange sight of the aërial caravan and began to express wonder and admiration at the strange contrivance, and asked: 'Who could have thought of such a bright idea?' This was too much for the frog. He was in danger of losing the credit of this splendid scheme, and so, without stopping to think, he shouted: 'I did it!' But, of course, the moment he opened his mouth he lost his hold, and down he dropped among the villagers."

God justified the publican and not the proud, influential, and self-righteous Pharisee. It is only the poor in spirit, those who, like the publican, pray, "God, be thou merciful to me, a sinner," that God can and will save. God does not despise, but saves, the man of a contrite heart. Isaiah says: "For thus saith the high and lofty One that inhabiteth eternity, whose name is Holy: I dwell in the high and holy place, with him also that is of a contrite and humble spirit, to revive the spirit of the humble, and to revive the heart of the contrite." (Isa. 57: 15.) The poor in spirit enjoy the kingdom of heaven because they are prepared for that prepared place, and in a measure and sense are enjoying heaven now. They enjoy a satisfaction, peace, and joy that are wholly foreign to the self-inflated life. In the sore trials and conflicts of life they rest secure in His promises and triumphantly press forward. God delights to honor and bless the man of humility. Only such will he save. "Blessed are the poor in spirit: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven."

Still More on Christians Among the Denominations. BY M. C. K.

On pages 251-252 of this issue of the Gospel Advocate we publish two thoughtful articles from Brethren C. E. Holt and Lucas North. I am glad that the series of articles on "Bible Things by Bible Names" seems to be leading to an extended investigation, and it is hoped and believed that much good will result. Both of these articles suggest matters of the most vital importance involving the most serious consequences on the pending issue whether there are Christians in the denominations, and we ask for them a careful and prayerful reading. In all our investigations of Biblical questions, our aim should be to accept facts, no matter what they may be nor whom they may or may not favor, and to reach none but wise and safe conclusions. Hoping the present articles and the comments on them may contribute to this end, I invite special attention to the following points:

1. Let the reader seriously ponder both facts and figures in Brother Holt's communication. From the premises which he submits, not only does the conclusion follow that there are only "about one hundred and fifty thousand Christians in the world at the present time," but it also "follows that, so far as we know, there was not a Christian on earth when Alexander Campbell was born; and that Campbell himself was not a Christian." Brother Holt does not accept this conclusion, but he clearly shows that it logically follows from the misleading and untenable position which some have assumed in this controversy.

2. Let the reader note also the following observation: "If salvation and membership in the church of Christ depend upon an entire freedom from error, doctrinally and otherwise, then I have serious doubts about there being a single Christian on earth to-day, or at any other period." I hesitate not to say that no living man can overthrow or successfully attack this conclusion and hold to all the facts in the case. There is simply no escape from it, and those whom he criticizes may as well make up their minds to either accept it or to recede from the position they have taken.

3. Brother Holt makes a wise and always important distinction, frequently overlooked, between a local "church of Christ," which may be an organization, and "the church of Christ" in general, which is not only not "an ecclesiasticism," but is not an organization in any sense at all. It is never even hinted at in the Scriptures "as one great corporate body."

4. Yes, all the translations of the Bible into our English tongue that have ever come into general use were made by members of the denominations. Even the King James Version of 1611 and the Revised Version of 1881—the only Bible which the English-speaking world has used for the past three hundred years, and the one it is using nowwere made altogether by members of denominations; but with thoughtful people it does not follow that we should reject these translations because those who made them taught and did some things that were wrong. And it does not follow that in a commentary on the Bible made by a member of a denomination-and the greatest and most learned of them ever written were so made-we must reject the truths they contain because they also contain some error. I never look long at the contents of my own library without feeling that I owe a debt of profound gratitude to the great and learned men of different denominations, particularly those of the Episcopal and Lutheran bodies, for the truths they have taught; while, at the same time, I try to avoid, and to get others to avoid, any errors they have taught.

5. If Brother Holt's statement appears too strong and too sweeping when he says that, according to their reasoning, "our modern 'lights' have discovered that they have a 'copyright' on the plan of salvation, free from error or from any of the imperfections of humanity, and every one else is to be anathematized," then be it remembered that his statement presents nothing but the logical and inevitable consequences which follow from the position which he criticizes. I am fully aware that it would not be proper to charge the consequences of their position upon them unless they avow them; but Brother Holt has correctly stated what the consequences of the position are.

6. In answering the question, "Why ask the Baptists to come to us?" he makes another important distinction which deserves special emphasis. Among the devotees of all denominations there is too much talk about "coming to us," and not enough about all coming to the New Testament platform. If the course pursued by Murrell Askew, as reported by Brother Holt, is not the correct course for us all to pursue, then I have read the word of God to no proper purpose. When he proposed that all should divest themselves "of everything that" they could "not find in the New Testament and" that they "just be Christians only," if he was not pursuing the identical course which God distinctly and positively requires all of us to pursue, then the Bible is simply the wrong book to have as our guide.

7. When "Brother Flitzgerald," before baptizing fortyeight persons, announced to the public, according to Brother North, that he was "baptizing them because they were already Christians," he showed that he was mistaken about the place of baptism in the economy of Ged. I distinctly remember, too, when the denominational preacher did for me and a large number of others on the same occasion what he called baptizing us, that he said many more things than "Brother Fitzgerald" is reported to have said, which I afterwards learned were egregiously wrong and of course contrary to the New Testament; but I also distinctly remember that, in spite of all these erroneous things said by the preacher, and no matter what may have been true of the others, I myself submitted, in the fear of God, to what I thought was baptism, and I did it for no other purpose but to obey God that he might accept and save my soul. As to the precise motives in all their details which actuated those forty-eight persons baptized by a man in error himself on some things, or why, from their own point of view, they were baptized, I do not know, and neither does Brother North nor anybody else on earth know, except the fortyeight persons themselves; and when brethren undertake to criticize and judge men on matters that are exclusively between themselves and their God, and of which others than themselves can know absolutely nothing, I respectfully refer such critics and judges to the Pauline question and comment: "Who art thou that judgest the servant of another? to his own lord he standeth or falleth." (Rom, 14: 4.) When, in any act whatever, men do what the New Testament requires, they do right, no matter in how many other things they may be wrong, and we should encourage them and all others in any such act, and thus encourage them to follow simply the New Testament in all things.

Work.

BY E. A. E.

In all study of the Bible the one thing is to learn the will of God that we may obey it.

That God has spoken on any subject, giving his will, makes the study most interesting, most important, and obedience to God's will in regard to it most imperative. It is sin against ourselves, against our fellow men, and against God to neglect to study and to fail to do and to teach the whole will of God on "every good work." Such expressions as the following are most comprehensive:

Every scripture inspired of God is also profitable for teaching, for reproof, for correction, for instruction which is in righteousness: that the man of God may be complete, furnished completely unto every good work. (2 Tim. 3: 16, 17.)

Seeing that his divine power hath granted unto us all things that pertain unto life and godliness, through the knowledge of him that called us by his own glory and virtue. (2 Pet. 1: 3.)

Beloved, while I was giving all diligence to write unto you of our common salvation, I was constrained to write unto you exhorting you to contend earnestly for the faith which was once for all delivered unto the saints. (Jude 3.)

I shrank not from declaring unto you anything that was profitable, and teaching you publicly, and from house to house, testifying both to Jews and to Greeks repentance toward God, and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ. . . . Wherefore I testify unto you this day, that I am pure from the blood of all men. For I shrank not from declaring unto you the whole counsel of God. . . Wherefore watch ye, remembering that by the space of three years I ceased not to admonish every one night and day with tears. . . . In all things I gave you an example, that so laboring ye ought to help the weak, and to remember the words of the Lord Jesus, that he himself said, It is more blessed to give than to receive. (Acts 20: 18-35.)

Let us study these passages and all such other passages as: "Preach the word;" "Preach the gospel;" "I determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ, and him crucified;" "For we preach not ourselves, but Christ Jesus as Lord, and ourselves as your servants for Jesus' sake;" and let us studiously avoid all "old wives' fables," "endless genealogies," "profane babblings," "oppositions to knowledge falsely so called;" all untaught questions; etc. Then let us go over all this again and see II honest toll and useful occupations are embraced in "the faith," in "all things that pertain unto life and godliness," in "the whole counsel of God," in the Scriptures which furnish the man of God completely unto every good work, or in the many vain and unprofitable questions which should be avoided. Then we will see most clearly our duty—we must teach and practice all of the one and conscientiously avoid all of the other.

Much of this article will appear in the Advanced Quarterly, beginning with April. If it is scriptural and worthy, let us study it and teach it; if not, let us reject it and teach against it.

The word "work" embraces much. It means exertion for the accomplishment of a purpose. This may be physical, mental, moral, spiritual, or two or more or all combined. There are good works and bad works. There are "honest occupations" and dishonorable ones. God works, the devil works. The meaning of WORK in this article is employment, occupation, mental and physical effort to make an honest living and to have something to give to the variously needy, together with the service of God and the spiritual strength and blessings embraced in it.

There is great and demanding need of study of Bible teaching on work at the present evil time because of the widespread idleness of the world, the prevailing love of pleasure, the unrighteous desire to receive as much pay as possible for as little work as possible, or as much work as possible for as little pay as possible, and the unreliability of many workmen. Honest and thorough work and honest pay, a full day's work and a full day's pay, will bring prosperity, contentment, peace, and happiness. The Golden Rule is the panacea for all differences between men, and love is the golden chain which binds all together and to God.

The perversion of God's teaching in regard to work, just as his way in almost all other things has been perverted, has helped to increase theft, robbery, wickedness, and to swell the wave of crime which is spreading its foul waters as a flood over the land.

THE BIBLE TEACHES WORK AS A PART OF CHRISTIANITY.

Work is a blessing, not a curse. Before man sinned, God "put him in the garden of Eden to dress it and to keep it" (Gen. 2: 15)—gave him useful and beautiful employment. Because of his sin the ground was cursed with thorns and thistles, so that in the sweat of his face and in sorrow he has been compelled to eat bread until his return to dust. (Gen. 3: 16-19.) This has been God's law ever since. Toil and sweat now are the only things which will produce honest bread. As we proceed we shall see more and more of the teaching of the Bible on work. It teaches the kind of work it is right to do and the kind it is wrong to do; the true motives for all right kinds of work, the purposes to be accomplished by it, the spirit in which it must be done, and the many blessings of it.

BIBLE MOTIVES FOR WORK.

1. To make an honest living. To "take thought for things honorable in the sight of all men" (Rom. 12: 17) is God's command. Another command is, "that they who believe in God may be careful to profess honest occupations," and: "Let our people learn to profess honest occupations for necessary wants, that they be not unfruitful." (Tit. 3: 8, 14-margin.) The Bible condemns all kinds of fraud, dishonesty, cheating, gambling, stealing, getting something for nothing, oppression of the poor, etc. Read James 5: 1-6 on keeping back the wages of laborers and their cry unto God. On the contrary, all are commanded to follow some useful calling-"that which is good," or which will benefit others. In contrast with stealing, "that which is good " in Eph. 4: 28 means that calling or work which will bring good to others as well as make a living for those who follow it. No one has any sort of right to make money out of that which brings only evil to others. There are hundreds of callings which bring an honest and good living to all who follow them and good only to others. There are other callings which, while increasing the possessions of those who follow them, bring evil, and only evil, to all others. Gambling in all its phases is not good for this reason. The loser receives nothing for the money the winner gains. This is contrary to God's law. Making and selling intoxicating liquors as beverages are not good. Those who make money out of such callings do so at the loss of money, health, homes, happiness, and the souls of all who buy and drink. It is not only unchristian, but also unpatriotic, to manufacture and to sell intoxicating liquors as beverages. How can a man whose business works only evil, and that continually, to all others, love his country, his neighbor as himself, or seek the good of any one? This is neither Christian nor patriotic.

2. To supply oneself and family with all necessary wants and to have need of nothing (1 Thess. 4: 11, 12); to rear one's children in economy, industry, self-reliance, independence, self-respect, usefulness, and to properly educate them with a deep sense of responsibility to man and to God. Without this they will be only dead beats, deadheads. hangers-on, sycophants, and everything else worthless. Every man's family has "necessary wants," and these wants of food, raiment, shelter, education-that is, proper training of body, mind, and heart-cleanliness and godliness must be supplied by honest and useful work of some kind. The following are a few of the many passages on the blessings of honest work: "The hand of the diligent maketh rich." (Prov. 10: 4.) "He that tilleth his land shall have plenty of bread." (Prov. 12: 11.) "The thoughts of the diligent tend only to plenteousness." (Prov. 21: 5.) Study Prov. 31: 10-31. On the contrary, note the poverty and trouble to which the indolent, lovers of pleasure, and sluggards come. (2 Thess. 3: 6-13; Prov. 6: 6-11; 10: 4, 5, 26; 12; 24; 13; 4; 19; 24; 20; 4; 21; 25; 24; 30-34; 26; 13-16.)

3. To be useful and profitable in any country (Tit, 3: 14—margin) and to set good examples—to "walk becomingly toward them that are without "—without the church. (1 Thess, 4: 12.) An idle, lazy man is an unprofitable one, a burden upon others, and a reproach upon the cause of Christ.

4. To have something to give to the needy. (Eph. 4: 28.) To the elders at Ephesus, Paul says: "In all things I gave you an example, that so laboring [as he had done] ye ought to help the weak," (Acts 20: 35.) "To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction" (James 1: 27) is to give them such things as they need; and the way to obtain these things is to work for them in some honest occupations, and not by suppers or some other fleshly entertainment. While certain widows are to be cared for by the church, there are others and other helpless ones who are to be cared for by their children and grandchildren, This is showing piety at home and requiting parents. (1 Tim. 5: 1-4, 16.) It requires work to do this. "For ye have the poor always with you, and whensoever ye will ye can do them good." (Mark 14: 7.) Read Matt. 25: 31-46. That which is given to the poor and for the support of the gospel must be made by work. This is God's way of "raising money for the church." But how many really work in order to have something to give as God directs?

5. Whenever children and others work for these reasons, because God so teaches, they are as much in the service of God as when engaged in his worship in Spirit and truth in the congregation. Children who remain at home and work to support and to repay their parents in their old age are serving God as they can in no other place or way, for nothing can take the place of this. The very blessings of God will rest upon them. The wife and mother who is satisfied in obedience to God to remain a mother at home is blessed of God and is a blessing to her family and the world; but the women who turn from home and these duties and loving service to something which God has not commanded or has forbidden blaspheme the word of God. (Tit. 2: 1-5.) The Bible is still right and our guide in all things, and all who differ from it are wrong.

WRONG MOTIVES FOR WORK.

Simply to make money or to accumulate wealth is not the Bible motive for work. In that case the worker serves mammon, not God, and becomes an idolater. Jesus declares: "Ye cannot serve God and mammon." He forbids laying up treasures upon the earth, and gives his reasons for doing so. He says life is " more than the food, and the body than the raiment." (See Matt, 6: 19-25.) Again: "Take heed, and keep yourselves from all covetousness; for a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth." (Luke 12: 15.) Covetousness is idolatry. (Col. 2: 5.) The "cares and riches and pleasures of this life" (Luke 8: 14), with "the lusts of other things" (Mark 4: 19), are the thorns which choke the word of God out of the heart. Man was not created in the image of God, and, later, was not redeemed by the blood of Christ, in order to eat, to drink, to wear clothes, to sleep, or to make money to be consumed upon his own lusts and pleasures. (James 4: 1-10.) Eating, sleeping, wearing clothes, making money, etc., are God-ordained means to an end, but are not the end. To have an honest occupation, to be industrious, to practice economy, to be just and generous, to work with the motives and for the purposes which God gives, to exercise godliness with contentment, to be free from anxiety and greed, and to be "rich in faith," "rich in good works," and "rich toward God," is to live in peace, to be a blessing to others, to be happy, to fellow Christ and honor God, and to be saved.

Rich men, by the proper use of their wealth, can become Christians, live the Christian life, and accomplish great good. (1 Tim. 6: 17-19.)

A Defense of Baptist Doctrine.

BY F. W. SMITH.

I wish to conclude my reply to L. R. Burress' effort to defend some of the teaching and practice of the Baptist Church. In our friend's effort to escape the fact that baptism is one of the conditions of salvation, he quotes a passage that most clearly and emphatically establishes the doctrine-viz.: "Not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us, by the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost; which he shed on us abundantly through Jesus Christ our Savior," (Tit. 3: 5, 6.) The "washing" of regeneration here mentioned refers to baptism, as all scholars and commentators of note agree, and is placed over against the works of "righteousness" by which no one is saved. The apostle says while we are not saved by works of righteousness-that is, the kind of works here mentioned-we are saved by baptism, which shows that baptism does not belong to that class of works by which we cannot be saved. The learned Macknight, an eminent Presyterian, says of this passage this: "Through the bath of regenerationthrough baptism; called 'the bath of regeneration,' not because any change in the nature of the baptized person is produced by baptism, but because it is an emblem of the purification of his soul from sin." Hovey, one of the ablest men the Baptist Church ever produced, says: "Paul had in mind baptism as representing and confessing the divine change called 'regeneration.' Hence he teaches that men are saved by an outworking obedient life given and preserved by the Holy Spirit." ("Commentary on John." Appendix, page 422.) I simply refer to these great denominational preachers and commentators to show that they understood "washing of regeneration" to mean baptism; and as to what place it occupies in the gospel plan of salvation, I quote the divine record-viz .: "We are saved by the washing of regeneration."

Brother Burress informs us that "Baptists do not baptize into churches, but in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit." Unless he will claim that one is a member of a Baptist church before baptism, I cannot see the correctness of his statement. Hence, I ask him the direct question: Is any recognized as a member of a Baptist church before baptism? If not, when does one become a member? I baptize people "into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit," and at the same time and by the same act baptize them into the church or body of Christ. That is the way the apostle Paul got in, and the way the Corinthians got in. "For by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body." (I Cor. 12: 13.)

Of course salvation is by "grace," as our brother asserts, but that does not exclude acts of obedience upon the part of man. In fact, according to our friend's conception of grace, faith must be excluded, for it is a work. "This is the work of God, that ye believe on him whom he hath sent." (John 6: 29.) Our friend's trouble lies in the fact that he classes obedience in baptism with the works of human righteousness-that is, meritorious work. Paul speaks of "the obedience of faith." (Rom. 1: 5,) "Obedience of faith" is simply the obedience resulting from faith, which is the fruit of faith, and baptism is nothing more than a part of the obedience of faith. There is a "law of faith" (Rom. 3: 27), and this law of faith includes baptism in contradistinction to works of law or human righteousness. It is true, as our friend asserts, salvation is not of works-human works of righteousness-and grace combined. There is no merit in faith, and yet faith is an act of the creature. There is no merit in repentance, and yet repentance is an act of man. Will our friend contend that man is saved without faith and repentance? If not, is not the grace by which we are saved combined with obedience on the part of man? Men run into all sorts of difficulties in rejecting baptism as one of the conditions of salvation. Does Brother Burress believe in unconditional salvation? If not, who complies with the conditions? Does man? If so, does he frustrate the grace of God in so doing? If salvatien may be and is predicated on one condition without militating against the grace of God, why can it not be predicated of more than one without militating against God's grace?

Praise.

BY B. F. M. SOURS.

All praise to our loving Savior.
Who would cleanse all hearts from sin.
If they would that his love deliver
From pollutions of life within.

All praise to his hand so loving
That would soothe all pangs of wee.
If the suffering would but trust him
When the sorrows overflow.

All loving, he died to save us.

And from death would the soul redeem,
And cleanse in Life's flowing fountain,
And save with the cleansing stream.

Then, there, when our lives are ended,
And the victories are his own,
He will give us the joys immortal,
In the light of his holy throne.

Praise! Praise! Every morning praises, With dewdrops created new. The power of the Hand that made them, 'Neath the fathomless skies of blue, Praise! Yes, and in yorder rapture, in the home of peace and bliss. We will sing in glad praise eternal More rapturous joy than this.

Praise—yes! and the psalm unceasing Forever will onward flow To the Lamb who wrought our pardon Because he loved us so.

A Good Confession.

BY H. LEO BOLES.

In the Christian Standard of November 27, 1920, there is an editorial on "A Constructive Program for 1921." It will be recalled that the Christian Standard is published at Cincinnati by our "digressive brethren," who believe in what is known as the "innovation movement." This editorial, as the subject indicates, proposes a program for the current year. The preparation and line of procedure for this new program are indicated by a confession of a departure from the New Testament order and a pleading to return to that order to insure success for the year 1921. The confession in the Standard's own language is interesting, definite, frank, and full, and it is to be hoped that it is sincere. Listen to the confession: "It is useless to deny that we, as a people, have, in a measure—and a considerable measure, at that-departed from the scriptural method of extending the kingdom of God. We are now depending too much upon societies and movements and drives, and not enough upon the Lord's own way. The tree does not grow and bear fruit as a result of external applications. Life comes up through its roots, expands its trunk and branches, and produces fruit in a natural way and at the proper time.'

I have quoted the entire paragraph that the reader may see the connection in which the confession is made. I trust that this confession grows out of a penitent heart and a clear understanding of the New Testament order of doing missionary work. It is encouraging to those who have been pleading for the New Testament order; it strengthens our faith in God's plan and shows to the world that God has a plan. Frequently it has been urged by those who have indersed the missionary society that there was no revealed way in the New Testament for doing missionary work; but this confession by the Standard acknowledges that the Lord has a way for doing this work. The Standard says: "We are now depending too much upon societies and movements and drives, and not enough upon the Lord's own way." This clearly and emphatically says that the Lord has a way of doing this work, and it also states that our digressive brethren have been and are now "depending too much upon societies and movements and drives," Exactly so. I should say that man is depending too much upon them when he depends upon them at all. "There is a way which seemeth right unto a man; but the end thereof are the ways of death." (Prov. 14: 12.) "For my thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith Jehovah. For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts." (Isa. 55: 8, 9.)

I have always believed and taught that the simple method employed by Christ and the apostles was sufficient and successful in promulgating the gospel as God's power to save. I have never been able to see why the people of God should organize a society to preach the gospel and not organize societies to help the poor, to develop the Christian life, to keep the Christian unspotted from the world, to encourage the assembling on the first day of the week, and to discipline ungodly church members. In fine, why not organize societies to do anything and everything that God calls upon people to do? Why just organize a society to do one thing that God calls upon us to do, and not organize to do all the others? If the local congregation, in its full activities, is sufficient to carry on the Lord's work in helping the poor, developing the Christian life, aiding the Christian graces, meeting on the first day of the week, eating the Lord's Supper, and contributing as the Lord has prospered us, why is it not sufficient in preaching the gospel?

But there is no use to argue the question any further, as the above good confession admits that "the missionary society" is a confessed departure from "the Lord's way."

WESTERN DEPARTMENT

By C. E. WOOLDRIDGE. 2018 Culten Streef, Dallas, Texas.

Texas.

Irving, Texas, February 4.—Brother Wooldridge: You have asked me to contribute to your department in the Gospel Advocate for publication. I very cheerfully accept this invitation, especially because there are some things I want to say to my brethren in the Lord—not because I want to appear in the lime light, for there is nothing to that, but because I believe there is a need for these things to be said.

It is my candid opinion that the present time offers the finest opportunity for world-wide evangelism that has been offered the disciples of Christ since the days of the apostles. Are we big enough men to measure up to the opportunities and responsibilities of the hour? While the world is in travail, passing through the period of reconstruction. should not we so reconstruct ourselves as to seize the opportunity and give the gospel to all the people? I think we should. I believe some of the people of all the nations and races will receive the gospel if it is offered to them. It is just as easy to get people to accept Christ now as it was in Paul's time. Paul never thought some races and nations were closed unto the gospel. Paul never refused to go to any people. Paul went from city to city, from race to race, from language to language, and from nation to nation. He never completely failed in a single instance. He made some converts everywhere he went. Human nature is pretty much the same the world over in all ages. I do not believe the saying, "Some people will not receive the gospel." Instead of the fault all being theirs, I rather believe the fault is ours in not taking the gospel to them, I have never known an instance in my life where, if an earnest, persistent, and wise effort was made to give a people the gospel, all rejected. Some have accepted it, and some will accept it. In less than fifty years' time, and before Paul died, the gospel was preached in every nation under heaven, and their sound went unto the ends of the earth.

All too long we have neglected the big cities. A Macedonian cry is going up from New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Cincinnati, Chicago, St. Louis, and an indefinite number more. Shall we listen to these wails of despair and turn a deaf ear? How can we do this and expect God to say: "Well done, thou faithful servant?" We preachers should arouse ourselves, and then arouse the churches and brethren to back us. We should enter these cities and plant the banner of Prince Immanuel. John E. Dunn.

Floresville, Texas, March 1.—The second month of 1921 has come to a close. I preached three times each Lord's day and conducted two classes in the study of the Bible each week. I go to Kenedy the second Lord's day; and while there this time, we, as usual, drove out ten miles to Monteola. There is no congregation there, but one about seven miles from there, at Paunce. These brethren came over in their cars, and we had a good time. Brethren Ward and Weatherall, both preachers, are living at Monteola now. Last Lord's day we had our regular children's meeting in the afternoon. You might be surprised at what these children are able to do. I am having them tell me each Lord's day what I read for a lesson the Lord's day before. They can give all the divisions of the Bible, tell how many books in each, and name the men that penned the New Testament, Brother T. W. Philips, of Denver Heights, San Antonio, said he had the best children in Texas. Brother Phillips, you have not met with mine at Floresville. Let us be working while it is day, before the night closes our HARVEY SCOTT. lives on this earth.

Arkansas.

Fort Smith, Ark, February 12.—Brother Wooldridge: Can I come in as a "Westerner?" I came here from Hopkinsville, Ky., and am with the South Seventeenth and Dodson Avenue Church. The church has recently purchased property on North Seventh and Third Streets and is offering the message to a section of the factory district of some twenty-five hundred who go nowhere else to services. We would like to know if any of our preachers are passing this way, that we may entertain them and have them preach a few nights or a Lord's day.

Oklahoma.

Heldenville, Okia. February 18.—Brother Wooldridge: After your "Western Department" was dropped from the Gospel Advocate last summer, I heard nothing more of you until you recently appeared in the paper again. I could not imagine where you had gone or what had become of you; but I am exceedingly glad to see you back again with your "Western Department." I see no reason why you should not be able to enlist the brethren in the West.

If I remember correctly, I wrote you last summer that I was going to Corley, Ark., for a meeting in September. This was in many respects the most enjoyable meeting of my life. It was thirty-three years ago last summer that, by the help of the Lord, I established his cause at that place; and I left them twenty-one years ago, after preaching for them twelve years. Brother Baxter Durham and Brother Richard Melton and his wife are the only Christians now left there who were there twenty-one years ago. Several had left the country, but a goodly number of them had "crossed over the river," leaving their children and grandchildren, many of whom I remembered. All in all it was a splendid meeting. While I was at Corley I went down in the "Little Cove" and stood under the bluff where you and Tom Conner learned to make speeches. Tom would make you a law speech, and you would preach to him the gospel.

In November I returned to Arkansas for a meeting at Booneville. This was also a good meeting. There are members of the church in Booneville that I baptized thirty years ago.

I have been preaching most of the time during this winter. I am keeping up three regular appointments, but have reserved one Sunday to be used where I think best.

On the fifth Sunday in January I was at Hickory. It was my first trip to that place. I preached three times for them, and they all seemed to like to hear the old gospel

I filled my regular appointment at Yeager on the first Sunday in February, preaching both morning and night and on Saturday night before. Four placed their membership with the congregation. This congregation has some good people in it, but they are in great need of some developed leaders. Brother S. C. Garner, of Bakersfield, Mo, will hold their summer meeting, beginning the last of July.

I spent the second Sunday with the saints at Shawnee. This is the home of Brother B. U. Baldwin. He is a very active and busy preacher. The church at Shawnee seems to appreciate his work. If I remember correctly, they told me there were about one hundred additions to the congregation last year under his preaching.

The congregations in Pottawatomie County have employed Brother J. T. Smith to work as evangelist in the county. A good selection and a good work.

MISCELLANY

Ų,

George W. Farmer writes this note of commendation: "'Adventism and the Bible,' written by J. Henry Monk, and published and sold by the McQuiddy Printing Company, Nashville, Tenn., is, in my judgment, one of the completest works of its kind published to-day. In this work the writer proves himself fully equal to the task he undertakes, and shows up the ridiculousness and absurdity of the peculiar tenets of Seventh-Day Adventism in a wonderful degree. Brother, if you should have to meet this erroneous doctrine (and you are liable to have to meet it or back down sometime, for they are going up and down the country preaching to the people and scattering their books, tracts, and other literature), you need this book. It merits a place in your library, and a careful and thoughtful reading by all who love the truth and want to see error exposed."

Morgan H. Carter, who is working with the church at Lebanon, Tenn, writes: "Our Father is blessing his work in Lebanon. The audiences at the morning services on Lord's days are excellent. The church has seven regular services each week. A gentleman and two ladies have been converted quite recently, and we are looking and praying for others. The Bible classes and the speak Saturday Bible school are the best I have ever an invest working with Bible school are the best I have ever enjoyed working with. We will begin our new building about April 1, the Lord willing. Something over fifteen thousand dollars has already been subscribed. The church is also doing work elsewhere Regular offerings are going to the Tennessee Orphan Home and to the work in South Carolina and New York City, and a number of special offerings have been I have greatly enjoyed my work in Lebanon. Christ has many splendid disciples here. With deep regret we have lost several excellent members in the last few months, who, we trust, are safe in Jesus. Father comfort their loved ones and bless all his people as sees good. In June I shall leave Lebanon for another field; but I shall go with a tender place in the deep of my heart for my many friends in a church which I dearly love. May God bless these dear people and make them a blessing as seemeth good to him."

J. M. Hottel, writing from Minneapolis, Minn., March 9, gives the following account of the funds of the Minneapolis mission work as shown by the report of W. S. Taylor, the treasurer: "Balance on band July 1, 1920, $1,631.22; Minneapolis contributions, $245.98; ontside contributions, $245.98; ontside contributions, $821.33; interest on deposits, $24. Total, $2,722.43. Disbursements: Preaching, $635; tent, chairs, etc., $510.90; half rent, $107; advertising, etc., $253.81. Total, $1,506.71. Balance on hand, March 8, 1921, $1,215.72." He then says: No one but those on the field know how badly we need a house of our own, and this must be had before the work will progress as it should. We are doing the best that we know at the present for the furtherance of the work, and we ask all the former donors, as well as those who have not helped heretofore in this work, to keep up the contributions, that the work may not be handicapped. The tent will be put into use so soon as it seems advisable. Send all contributions to W. S. Taylor, 116 Second Street, North, Minneapolis, Minn. We thank all very heartily for their part and fellowship. One has been added to our number from the denominational life, to be a simple Christian, since I came here (January 30). We thank God that the gospel is still 'the power of God unto salvation' and that it is still finding its way into the hearts of some. Brethten, we have a hard field of labor, but I feel encouraged. I am new in this field, but I feel that I speak for all 'teighteen' when I say that it is our prayer and purpose to succeed. Pray for us."

J W Brents, Athens, Ala., presents the situation with respect to the church at that place and offers opportunity for cooperation on the part of others. He says: "Many of the readers of the Gospel Advecate are, perhaps, familiar with the work in Athens. For twenty years there has been a large and flourishing progressive church here. This church has absorbed most of the members who were true to their convictions in the country churches. There being no true church here, they fell in with error, and most of them are still in. Such men as J. Pettey Ezell and L. B. Jones saw and lamented the condition of things and began and pressed the work of starting a loyal congregation. I began work with the little congregation about December 1 of last year, Brother Jones being unable to move here and give the attention to the work which was very necessary; but he is still held in high esteem. On account of the cotton panie and indebtedness on the church building, the work has been hardly self-sustaining, but friends of the work here have rallied nobly to our assistance. The church at Shochoh, Ky., and the Albany church are assisting us, which is deeply appreciated. Brother Ezell will assist us in a meeting sometime during the spring, this being made possible by the church at Albany. If this splendid church is willing to send and support Brother Ezell for a meeting, will not some other good congregation agree to support a good singer? If you cannot send us the man, send me the support, and the man will be forthcoming. Brethren, if you just knew, I am sure my request would be granted."

H. D. Jeffcoat, Ackerman, Miss., keeps busy in the Master's service, and he feels the need of other workers in the Mississippi field. Hear him: "We have finished the second month of the year and are now in the third. I feel that we should all work harder than ever before. There is so much to do, and so few to do it. If we could work every day, preaching, we could not do the work that is ready and waiting to be done here in Mississippi. Almost everywhere I go I have new calls for work. I preached at Burnside on the last night in February, and had three calls for meet-ings. Burnside is a railroad town, about twenty years old, without a church of any kind. Some fine people have just moved in, and they want preaching. I could not keep the railroad agent from taking up a collection to help pay my Of course it was needed and appreciated in a way, but I do hate for men of the world to have to pay my way while I preach my Master's gospel. I was with the Shady Grove Church (my old home) on the second Lord's day in February. We had a fine day. They are planning to put two old, unfinished buildings together and make of them a meetinghouse. This is right; it is needed. ited my mother, in Montgomery County, and preached two sermons at the home of a good sister. She is the only one in that neighborhood, but she is doing what she can. I promised to go back there in September for a meeting. We need an old preacher to take the work in the western part of this county, one that knows how and that will teach the church. If J. M. Dennis would like this kind of work, I would be glad to hear from him.

Curtis Taylor writes from Mineral Wells, Texas, March "In the Gospel Advocate of February 24 there is a report from J. B. Nelson, of Dallas. Texas, in which he says that my report of January 27 is misleading; also, that if I had ever obeyed the gospel, he had never heard of it, nor had the church of Christ in Mineral Wells. My report was not misleading, because the preaching brethren referred to in the report of Nelson, no doubt, have reported their work from time to time in our loyal papers; and if anybody has ever objected to it, I have never heard of it. He further speaks of 'a little faction' that was led to the I. O. O. F. hall 'by one J. M. Wallace.' I was not there when the division came about, but I fail to find in the town of Mineral Wells any who were led to the I. O. O. F. Hall by J. M. My information is that designing men came in Wallace and wanted to practice things that were not taught in the word of Gcd. A goodly number quit and went to the W. O. W. Hall, where they could worship God in peace and according to his will. I am told that those who pulled out objected to doing the things that were done without a 'Thus saith the Lord;' that others still continued to do things that were not written; and so they quit, and are now a good band of true Christians, at peace, and all working together to build up the cause. They meet every Lord's day for prayer, study, singing, breaking of bread, and the contribution; and that is what God has commanded. I found them doing this, and cast my lot with them. Now as to Brother Thomas, who has presched some them. Now, as to Brother Thomas, who has preached some for them, I am told that he worked for the 'digressives' two years as district evangelist; but he came to the church more than five years ago and confessed that he did wrong and was sorry for it. That was all he could do. So we should forgive him and treat him as a brother. (Gal. 6: 1.) My information is that Brother Wallace was never with drawn from in Mineral Wells, but quit and went with the others to the W. O. W. Hall, where they could worship God in peace. I have found Brother Wallace to be a true Christian and a God-fearing man. Brother Wallace and family are loved and respected by the best people in the town of Mineral Wells."

[We are sorry for a state of affairs such as the above and Brother Nelson's report indicate as existing in Mineral Wells. We hope these brethren will soon settle their differences on a scriptural basis and come together in work. We give this because, as one side has had a hearing, the other has a right to one. This will end it in the Advocate.—Entropy!

Abner T. Scott was born on August 24, 1849, and died on January 8, 1921. He was born into the family of God when about twenty-five years old, and he remained a loyal member until death. He was married to Elizabeth J. Roark on January 19, 1869. To this union four children were born. One child preceded him to the grave. He leaves a widow and three children to mourn their loss. Brother Scott was a devoted husband and a loving and sacrificing father. He will be greatly missed at home, in the church, and among his neighbors. He was kind to all and loved the truth. We thank God for the hope of that life beyond the grave, where there will be no sad good-byes, no sorrows, no tears, but all will be joy, peace, and happiness. May God's richest blessings be with the aged companion, children, relatives, and friends. Funeral services were conducted by the writer.

L. A. WILSON,

Billingsley.

Lucy Acker was born in Lowndes County, Ala., in July, 1835; was married to J. E. M. Billingsley in the fall of 1860; and peacefully passed to the great beyond on January 10, 1921, full of years and good deeds. She and her husband moved from Alabama to Missisippi in the fall of 1865, thence to Arkansas in 1884, where she lived till her death. She was the mother of five children, three of which died in infancy. A son and a daughter, G. A. Billingsley and Mrs. Daisy Tucker, with a host of relatives and friends, are left to mourn her departure. After her husband's death in 1905 she made her home with her son, but divided her time between her son and daugh-She became a Christian in her girlhood days, and I never knew one to live nearer to duty to God and man than she did. Being a preacher's wife, she was left alone much of the time, but she never murmured or com-plained. She cared for her home and her children, visited the sick, and cheered the faint. To her dear chil-dren I would say: Weep net for her: she was ready to go. No more sorrow or pains for her. Let us so live that we can meet her again in the heavenly home. Mrs. M. M. BILLINGSLEY.

Eby.

John C. Eby died on December 31, 1920, about midnight, at his residence in Shreveport, La. He was born in Montgomery County, Ohio, on June 30, 1845. He moved to Middle Tennessee in 1884. Since 1900, until coming to Shreveport. ing to Shreveport on November 8, 1920, he had lived at Kingston Springs, Tenn. In 1903 he and his wife obeyed the gospel, being baptized by E. B Cayce, of Franklin, Tenn., and they steadily grew in grace and in the knowledge of the truth. He took a leading part in building up the church where he lived, and much of the usefulness of the church at Kings-ton Springs has been due to his untiring efforts. It was a favorite ex-pression of his: "Let's do all we can pression of his: "Let's do all we can to build up, and nothing to tear down." On January 23, 1873, in Ha-gerstown, Ind., he was married to Mattie A. Silver, who proved a faith-ful and true wife and a good mother. Fourteen children were born to them. Fourteen children were born to them. Eight of them are dead. He leaves, to mourn their loss, his wife, three sons and three daughters, and a host of friends and relatives. The children are: Mrs. J. U. Kiracofe, of Gratis, Ohio; Mrs. M. L. Kiracofe, of Camden, Ohio; Mrs. A. C. Dunn and C. W. Eby, of Kingston Springs, Tenn.; E. S. Eliy, of Monroe, La.; and C. A. Eby, of Shreveport, La. M. C. McCann.

Little J. P. McCann, son of H. T. and Hester Mae McCann, was born on August 9, 1916, at Longview, Texas, and died on January 27, 1921, at Hillsboro, Texas. Since he was two years of age his home had been with his grandparents, Brother and Sister J. W. Chism, of Hillsboro, Texas, who were devoted to him and who watched over him with such tender care during life's joyful, playful hours, as well as in the long, patient weeks during his illness He was a beautiful and lovely child and his taking away has left an ach ing void that this world cannot fill both in the hearts of those in the home where he was loved so dearly and of the many friends he had made during his short stay on earth. But while our hearts are filled with sor row, we weep not as those who have no hope; for we know that when a sweet little child is taken, it shall enter that home that knows no tears and death and sorrow, to be with the for evermore. We sadly miss him, and it is so lonesome here with him, and it is so lonesome here without him; but we hope to go and mee him in "the sweet by and by." Broth er T. W. Abilene Bible Lecture Week. BY BATSELL BAXTER.

The Bible Lecture Week held at Abllene Christian College, Abilene, Texas, for the week beginning February 20, was one of the best in the history of the institution. There were three lectures each day by representative preaching brethren from over Texas and Oklahoma. These were instructive and stimulating. One of the largest gatherings of brethren in the history of the "lecture weeks" was here to enjoy and appreciate the good things offered. One of the great treats of the week was the series of five lectures by Brother F. W. Smith, of Nashville, Tenn., on "The Holy Spirit."

In addition to enjoying the lectures and the association of great leaders in the work of the Lord, the patrons and friends of the school were enabled to see something of the equipment, spirit, and practical working of the school.

The program was carried out as published, with the exception of two substitutions for brethren who could not be present.

In addition to the great number of other visitors, the following preachers were present: David L. Cooper, Harper, Kan.; Early Arceneaux, Wichita Falls, Texas: J. M. Rice and W. G. Cypert, Merkel, Texas; Liff Sanders, Lockney, Texas; J. C. White, Coleman, Texas; Alfred Conway, Sabinal, Texas; O. E. Phillips, Eastland, Texas; W. R. Forest, Stamford, Texas; A. Le-Roy Elkins, Ada, Okla,; J. W. McKinney, Ranger, Texas: J. Paul Kimbrell, Antiers, Okla.; W. P. Skaggs, Itasca, Texas; A. R. Holton, Thorp Springs, Texas; T. M. Carney, San Angelo, Texas; C. W. An Old People's Home.

BY ISAAC E. TACKETT.

There has been a sentiment among the brethren in Texas for a number of years for the establishment of a Christian Home for old people. Articles have been appearing in the papers for two or three years urging that the effort be made. A mass meeting was held in Fort Worth recently. At this meeting plans were perfected and the movement started. It was decided to have a board of trustees to have control of the financial part of the Institution. I was drafted to take charge of a campaign for funds to establish the institution and to serve as trustee of funds and manage the development of the work. After a permanent location for the Home is secured, a permanent superintendent will be selected.

The Home is to be located on a farm of at least one hundred acres of land accessible to good transportation facilities. Fruit and truck growing, poultry raising, and dairying, as well as some farming, will be maintained as a partial support for the work. We are just now in the campaign for funds with which to establish the institution. We have not gone far enough yet to know just how the brethren will respond to the movement. The work, when properly understood, has met with nothing but commendation.

The plan includes the expenditure of at least one hundred thousand dollars in lands, buildings, and equipments. But we do not expect to accomplish all this in one year. As soon as we secure fifteen or twenty thousand dollars we will select a location and begin actual work. If we accomplish our goal in six or eight years, we will be satisfied.

This will not be a place for a bunch of indigents or merely a home for old preachers, but a real, Christian home for old people without proper support, who need such care. There will be one large administration building and an indefinite number of small cottages. Single individuals will occupy rooms in the large building, and old couples or pairs of individuals will occupy the cottages with home environments. The location will probably be made somewhere within a radius of fifty miles of Fort Worth. But the Home will be designed to serve the entire brotherhood to the extent that the entire brotherhood wishes to support it.

CHURCH NEWS

Alabama.

Montgomery, March 6. Just a word about the work at Highland Park church of Christ here. Early in the spring of 1911 a few brethren (mostly women) met at Brother and Sister Cochran's home for a while. An old storehouse that was situated on the corner of Forest and Highland Avenues was purchased and converted into a chapel. Brother C. L. Talley labored with the congregation for five years. During this time the chapel was enlarged. Brother John T. Smithson worked two years with us. Last year (1920), up to October 1, Brethren Guy Renfro and Joel Davis did most of the preaching. On October 1 Brother J. H. Hines began work with us. and the work is progressing rapidly. We have a full house every Sunday; fine Bible-school work every Sunday morning; four Bible classes during the week, taught by Brother Hines; and members are being added to the cause as time passes. We are greatly en-couraged over the work. Brother H. Leo Boles is to begin a meeting here on the first Sunday in April.—E. S. Parrish.

Oklahoma.

Rush Springs, March 5 .- As I have been silent so long through the Gospel Advocate, I guess many of the brethren in Arkansas and Mississippi think I am on the other side of eternity; but I am still here, with stronger faith and courage and more determination than ever to press the gospel fight for Christ what few remaining days I am in this world. I have been at Rush Springs for the last two years; and we have a good, but small, congrega-tion here. Last week I preached a few sermons at Maysville, and have been at Paul's Valley since Monday night. We have a few wide-awake Christians here. I believe the brethren in Oklahoma have taken on new life and realize their spiritual needs to the extent that we will be able to accomplish a great work for God this year. We will soon have a paper in operation, and are planning to open our Bible school at Cordell in September. We pray for a great revival in religious activities this year.-J. M. Ussery.

Holdenville, March 7.—The work here is moving along nicely. We had two good services yesterday. One sister who has recently moved in placed her membership with the congrega-tion. The house would hardly seat the people last night. The indications are that we will soon have to build more seating capacity. We are working and praying to that end. Several of us went to Spaulding in the afternoon, where I preached to a splendid audience. Brother Hall also made an encouraging talk. The Spaulding folks are doing fine. They are now using their new church building. Brethren, if you have friends or relatives living in or near Holdenville who are members of the one body, please let us know about them, so we can find them and let them know can find them and let them know where the place of worship is. Let us press on to higher and nobler-things.—W. D. Black,

Fort Worth, March 4.—The cause of primitive Christianity in this city is perhaps on a better footing than at any time heretofore, and with a promising outlook for the future. has been a steadily increasing interest and growth during the past twelve or fifteen years in Fort Worth. In the beginning we had only two small congregations which met weekly-one on the South Side, in a small frame building, the other in the basement of the courthouse. Now there are eight, and four of them have substantial, commodious meetinghouses. All these commonious needinghouses. An elucibria are steadily gaining in strength and zeal. There is, too, a noticeable growth of Christian love between all the brethren; and if there has been heretofore any spirit of rihas been heretofore any spirit of rivalry, it has disappeared or is rapidly disappearing. The Central Church, with Brother M. H. Moore doing the preaching, is well located. It is only two blocks from the Westbrook, the principal hotel in the city. Brother Moore has been absent for more than a week, and will not return for several days yet, being in attendance on an educational association now in session at Atlantic City. Brother Moore is superintendent of our city schools. In his absence last Lord's day, Brother Eugene V. Wood, of Dallas, Texas, preached for us morning and evening. Both were excellent sermons. were added at the morning servicetwo by confession and one restored. This was Brother Wood's first visit, but it is hoped that we will have him again. Next Lord's day Brother Whiteside will preach for us, and we look forward to a good day's work. Brother F. W. Smith, of Nashville, Tenn., en route home from Abilene, where he delivered a series of lectures in the Abilene Christian College, stopped over for one night, and delivered one of his strong and characteristic sermons, the subject of which might be properly termed "The Church on Stilts." It was a forceful lesson and was greatly enjoyed. Brother E. A. Elam, who held a meeting for us last October and greatly endeared himself to all who heard him, will come back to hold another in May, the Lord will-ing, and will also hold a meeting with the Southside congregation. The two will cover a month or more. The entire brotherhood hereabout look forward to these meetings in fond anticipation. Notwithstanding the unsettled and unsatisfactory conditions now prevalent the country over, we have much to be thankful for. Let us all continue our efforts to do the Master's will, and trust him fully for results. His promises never fall,—T. B. Echols.

Profits in Cotton?

The answer is found in less cost perbale, which means growing twice as much cotton per acre. This cuts out nearly one-half the man and team labor.

The right kind and amount of fertilizer has often more than doubled the yield. The Potash in the fertilizer counts.

It balances the food of the crop so that the well-fed plants resist the attacks of blight and other diseases, produce more bolls per plant, and hence more pounds per acre. Such plants do not shed their fruit badly. In this way

"ALF and BOB TAXLOR, with their cloquence, their fiddles, and their fox hounds, have wrought for themselves a niche of eternal melody in the hearts of their country."

So states the author of this little book, which we present as the best product of the pen of DeLong Rice, Into one hour of reading he has gathered the strange and romantic story of the two most wonderful political campaigns of Tennessee—the thrilling tale of the happy comradeship and the lifelong rivalry of the two famous brothers—a disclosure of the remarkable and heretofore unpublished incidents that attended the political division of the Taylor family—the wonder of "The War of the Roses" that attracted the attention of the world—and the truth about "OLD LIMBER," the peerless and now immortal for hound that played the leading role of sentiment in the political campaign of last fall, from the Missiasippi River to the Unaka-Mountains.

With a "Cast of Characters extending from a President of the United States to a fer hound," the story touches a wide range of kuman sentiment; and through it all is the aroma of crackling camp fires and the music of the chase.

Denver (Col.) Notes.

BY JOHN D. EVANS.

We are planning a pretty active year in the Colorado field, not only in evangelistic work, but in building new homes for congregations already started. Two near-by congregations, Boulder and Colorado Springs, have been meeting for some time in rented halls. This is not only expensive, but it lacks that permanency which is very essential to healthy growth. have each a zealous little band; and while not "rich in houses and lands," they are willing to do what they can. In order to get the quickest action possible, at a recent conference with these brethren a brother from Denver proposed that he would advance five hundred dollars to each place, provided they would raise seven hundred and fifty more at once, which would be fifty per cent of estimated cost of building. This would enable them to get a loan on easy terms to cover balance, so that they could proceed at once to The brethren at Colorado Springs have accepted the proposition and have already begun building. Boulder is not quite ready to begin operations. But we hope to have homes ready for use for both before summer is here. It is the aim of Brother Fuqua, Brother Bailey, and myself, and the brethren in Colorado, to do all we can to give permanency to the work by helping to secure homes as the congregations develop, at least one or two each year. In doing this we shall need the hearty cooperation of the churches that are stronger. In the present case I have asked a few brethren already to share in the Initial payments of one thousand dollars, as the brother making the advance payments is hardly able to contribute the entire amount. From present indications that amount will be taken care of. There will remain a debt of twelve hundred and fifty dollars on each building, to be paid within one year, if possible.

We are not disposed to institute a "begging" campaign over a long period of years, but merely suggest to the brethren individually and the congregations who are interested in extending the borders of Christ's kingdom that this will be a splendid opportunity to make an investment of the Lord's money with the assurance of liberal returns. Congregations or individuals who wish to make contributions in monthly installments may do so with the assurance that their contributions will be applied as they wish. The churches of Marshall County, Tenn., through Brother J. G. Stinson, of Lewisburg, have already entered the list as monthly contributors; the congregation in Denver also, Receipts will be made personally from time to time, and general reports will be made occasionally through our religious journals.

Concentration on this field upon the part of just a few will mean much

I take this method of expressing my appreciation to the brethren in my homeland for their liberal responses to my appeals for the Lord's work during my entire stay in Colorado. May the One whom we serve cause "much fruit to abound to your account."

The Vatican at Rome Recommends Nuxated Iron

If you lack BODILY or MENTAL VIGOR; If you are WEAK; NERVOUS or IRRITABLE, TRY NUXATED IRON TODAY.

Nuxated Iron CONTAINS ORGANIC IRON LIKE THE IRON IN YOUR BLOOD and LIKE THE IRON IN SPINACH, LENTILS AND APPLES. NUXATED IRON also contains a remarkable product, brought to the attention of the French Academy of Medicine by the celebrated Dr. Robin, which represents the principal chemical constituent of active living nerve force FOR FEEDING THE NERVES, so that NUXATED IRON might be said to be both a BLOOD and a NERVE FOOD. THERE ARE 30,000,000,000,000 RED BLOOD CORPUSCLES in your blood and each one must have iron. Today about one person out of every three is said to suffer more or less from the great devitalizing weakness brought on by malnutrition or lack of sufficient nourishment; which is caused NOT BY LACK OF POOD but often by LACK OF SUFFICIENT ORGANIC IRON in the blood to enable us to GET THE STRENGTH OUT of our food. IRON IS THE MASTER PRINCIPLE OF THE BLOOD AND BLOOD IS LIFE, Our forefathers ate the husks of grains and the skins and peels of vegetables and fruits, rich in strength-giving organic iron, but modern methods of cookery throw all these things ways hence the starring in transaction. ern methods of cookery throw all these things away — hence the alarming increase, in recent years, in Anaemia—iron starvation of the blood with all its attendant ills.

When, as a result of iron starvation, you get up feeling tired in the morning, when you find yourself nervous, irritable and easily upset; when you can no longer do your day's work without being all fagged out at night; when your direction all goes wrong or you have your digestion all goes wrong, or you have pains across the back, shortness of breath, heart palpitation or your face looks pale and drawn, donot waituntil you go all to pieces and edictus. heart palpitation or your face looks pale and drawn, do not wait until you go all to pieces and collapse in a state of nervous prostration, or until in your weakened condition you contract some serious disease, but consult your family physician and have him take a specimen of your blood and make a "blood-count" of your red blood corpuscles or test the iron-power of your blood yourself by adding plenty of spinach, carrots, or other iron-containing fruits and vegetables to your daily food and take organic iron-Nuxated from with them for a while and see how much your condition improves. Thousands of people have surprisingly increased their strength, energy and endurance in two weeks time by this simple experiment. But be sure the iron you take is organic Nuxated Iron and not metallic iron which people usually take and which is made merely by the action of strong acids on small pieces of iron—an entirely different iron from Nuxated Iron. The fact that you may have taken metallic iron without receiving any benefit does not prove that Nuxated Iron will not help you. Nuxated Iron represents organic iron in such a highly concentrated form that one

Some men move through life as a band of music moves down the street, flinging out pleasure on every side through the air, to every one far and near who can listen. Some men fill the air with their presence and sweetness, as orchards in October days fill the air with perfume of ripe fruit. Some women cling to their own houses like the honeysuckle over the door, yet, like it, sweeten all the region with the subtle fragrance of their goodness.

They are trees of righteousness which are ever dropping precious fruits around them. There are lives which shine like starbeams or charm the heart like songs sung upon a holy day.

How great a bounty and a blessing it is to hold the royal gifts of the soul so that they shall be music to some and fragrance to others, and life to all. It would be no unworthy thing to live for-to make the power which we have within us the breath of other men's joy; to scatter sunshine where only clouds and shadows reign; to fill the atmosphere where earth's weary toilers must stand with a brightness which they cannot create for themselves, and which they long to enjoy and appreciate.—Selected.

Strength comes from well-digested and thoroughly assimilated food. Hood's Sursaparilla tones the digestive organs, and thus builds up the strength. If you are getting "run down," begin taking Hood's at once. It gives nerve, mental and digestive strength.

BY J. B. NELSON.

I here give a clipping and comment by "State Press" of the Dallas News of February 21:

"It is to the credit of the twenty young women employed in the Texas State Health Department that they readily responded to the request of State Health Officer Manton M. Carrick that during office hours their faces should be without rouge. It is to be inferred that these young women have not used 'lip sticks,' else Dr. Carrick's request would have been broader." (Dallas Journal.)

"Lip sticks" are rouge; therefore they had to go. They ought to go. A soiled mouth is a sin. When State Press sees a young woman who looks as if she had bitten into a pokeberry he thinks of what the prophet Isaiah said when overwhelmed with the conviction of his calling. "Woe is me! for I am undone, because I am a man of unclean lips!" exclaimed the seer. Whenever a girl paints her mouth, she looks untidy, no matter how carefully the work is done. State Press wouldn't kiss such a carmine contrivance even if he were starving for a smack. Others of his gender, of course, are not so particular. Some young men have even gone so far as to complain, after a rather promiscuous party, that they could close their eyes and see red. A slight tinge of rouge on pallid cheeks is not highly censurable. But was ever there a lady who rouged at all who rouged not too much? In some portions of Equatorial Africa the native chiefs magnify their natural beauty by rubbing red clay into their hair. The more dirt they rub in, the handsomer they imagine themselves to be; hence some of them with long hair have earthy coiffures that look like vermillion beehives laced with horsetails. They simply overdo their decorations, and that is what a woman does when she puts enough rouge on her face to alarm a fireman. Every woman ought to make the most of her looks. If she is not beautiful of feature, she can at least be neat and wholesome in appearance. It is her duty to be so. But too much complexion detracts from neatness. It looks messy. It also detracts from wholesomeness, for it looks arti-ficial and foolish. Dr. Carrick may have started a needed reform. The fact that he is a bachelor may account A married man probably wouldn't have had the courage.

I have never been able to understand why a girl in the very bloom of girlhood would want to spoil nature's gift by the use of artificial preparations. Nature's gift is the greatest and sweetest gift to the world.

I truly believe if many of the girls and women could hear the passing remarks that are made by men as they look upon the disfigured, besmirched, and injured complexions that pass before them, they would go home and wash their faces and never appear in public again with such hideous complexion. Take the woman of sixty of the rural district, who has never known paint (only a little face powder, which does not injure nor disfigure, but protects the skin), and the woman of sixty in the city, who has daily painted and rouged, and contrast the two, and what will you see? You will note in the rural woman that soft, bright, lifelike complexion, while in the other you will see a swarthy, sallow, shriveled complexion, and its owner looking several years older.

A little flesh-colored powder is harmless, but paint and rouge cannot be worth the time and price. As I stand in the pulpit, I love to see the modest, nature-loving woman. On the other hand, when I have to try to preach to a lot of painted faces, it makes me feel like I want to stop and say, "Let us pray."

Woman, don't try to attract the human family with that which is not yours, but let your real self be seen in a modest way. Modest dress, modest faces, modest actions, and modest living is what will please God and the true man.

Edifying as the Need May Be

Our Conception of God.

Much depends upon our conception of God. This is the most influential idea that enters the human mind. The wealth or the poverty of our character depends upon that conception. Moreover, the prosperity of the nation depends upon it. "Where there is no vision," Solomon says, "the people cast off restraint." Some would tell us that it is a vision of humanity that is most needful; others place particular emphasis upon a vision of the future. But are not humanity's past, present, and future all included in a just conception of God? It is such a vision that must save the people. A philanthropist might know a great deal about humanity's needs; a scientist might know a great deal about the universe; a seer might unravel some important events in the future; but philanthropist, scientist, and seer will all be lost, if their conception of God is lacking to the extent that they do not obey him. A woman asked the famous English preacher Jowett: "What do you think of God?" "It matters little," he replied; "but what God thinks of me is very important." I do not think he should have belittled the woman's question; for upon man's conception of God depends his attitude toward God. That attitude reveals more clearly than anything else what God thinks of him. When the priest, Eli, violated his office and honored his sons above the Lord, there came this solemn message of rebuke; "Therefore Jehovah, the God of Israel, saith, I said indeed that thy house, and the house of thy father, should walk before me forever; but now Jehovah saith, Be it far from me; for them that honor me I will honor, and they that despise me shall be lightly esteemed."
(1 Sam. 2: 30.) The psalmist tells us that "the face of Jehovah is against them that do evil, to cut off the remembrance of them from the earth;" and then, reversing man's attitude, he tells us that "Jehovah is nigh unto them that are of a broken heart, and saveth such as are of a contrite spirit." (Ps. 24: 16, 18.)

A Fatally Limited View.

During all of Isaiah's ministry he is confronted with his people's mean and impoverished conception of the Almighty, and it is to this impoverishment that the prophet attributes the nation's degradation. They had a conception of their God that was fatally limited. To them God was in one place, but not in another. They thought of him as being back there in the promised land, and especially in the city of Jerusalem; but they did not consider his presence and power in the land of captivity and trouble. Christians at the present time should beware lest they fall into the same error, being led by the mockery of those that know not God. During the terrible conflict across the seas, some said, with a sneer, "Where is your God?" and, "What has become of your prayers?" Rest assured that "the eyes of Jehovah are toward the righteous, and his ears are open unto their cry," in times of war as well as in times of peace. "None of them that trust in him shall be desolate" at any time. The question that should concern us at any crisis in the world's history is not, "How is God working out his plans?" but, "How are we trusting him in the face of it all?" It is the habit of some people when they come into an exceptionally shabby town or visit a spot singularly apart from civilization to speak of a "God-forsaken place." Again I say, beware! Beware lest you not only libel the place, but its Maker as well. There is no place so utterly forsaken that God cannot make his presence felt if he wills to do so. God never forsakes any place entirely if one child of his is there. The Lord was with his servant Joseph, not only in the palace, but in the prison, too. Paul and Silas did not find the dungeon a God-forsaken place. While they could not sleep, they found it a very suitable place to seek the Lord. How aptly does Alexander Maclaren remark: "The true anæsthetic is trust in God!" Arnot, the French writer, says: "It is when you look from the bottom of a well that you descry the stars in daylight; on the surface, with the glare all round, although they are there, you cannot discern them. It is thus that faith's eye cannot pierce the heavens so well from the bright surface of prosperity as from the low, low place of some great sorrow."

A Remarkable Paradox Concerning God.

The children of Israel in their exile deprayed their ideal in that they conceived of God as rejoicing in gifts that had been brought and offered with dirty hands. This conception became to them a great stumblingblock, and Isaiah was instructed to take it away. And here is the prophet's message on this point: "For thus saith the high and lofty One that inhabiteth eternity, whose name is Holy: I dwell in the high and holy place, with him also that is of a contrite and humble spirit, to revive the spirit of the humble, and to revive the heart of the contrite." (Isa. 57: 15.) In this passage the prophet would impress the thought of God's holiness, yet he manifestly avoids the other extreme of leaving the impression that God is so high above us as to be unapproachable. Here we have a remarkable paradox. Of the same being it is said, "I dwell in the high and holy place," and am "with him also that is of a contrite and humble spirit." Thus we are encouraged to dwell upon God's highness and his lowness and to consider the two attributes together.

It is impossible to speak worthily or completely of the lofty character of God. We are reminded of the artist who prepared to paint a gorgeous sunset. He arranged his easel, mixed his colors, prepared his palette, and then looked. Among the hills he noted rich shadows, resplendent colors, purple flames and golden lusters. Absorbed by the vision, the painter waited until a friend made bold to ask: "When are you going to begin?" "By and by," he said. So he waited, spellbound by the splendor of the vision, until the sun was set and the dark shadows fell upon the mountain. Just so, we know not where to begin when we would tell of God's highness. We can think about it, but we cannot describe it. We can believe for a fact that "Jehovah is God over all, Amen:" that he stands above nature, above law, above necessity, and all such names by which we measure the power and influence of the worlds around us; or we can always safely fall back on Isaiah's definition and say that God is the "high and lofty One that inhabiteth eternity" and "measures time." And here we might discuss the question as to which illustration conveys the greater exaltation, that of limitless space or that of measureless time; but there would not be much profit in such a discussion.

His "Lowness" Easy to Find.

When we come to consider the lowness or humbleness of God's character, we find it to be an easier task. Here we may make considerable headway, because this precious truth has been set forth in the Bible by precept, example, and illustration over and over again. We find it in the story of the creation in the first chapter of Genesis, and we follow it on through until we reach the blessed "whosoever will" of the closing chapter of Revelation. As a matter of course, the Creator took care in making man; for man was to be the capital prize of the whole collection. But what surprises us is to note the care that he used in perfecting and harmonizing the details of every created thing, even the lowest insect, like David's fiea. God's respect for lowness is brought out in the formation of a snowflake or in the texture of a night moth's wing.

We find this attribute illustrated by the anxiety of our God to lift men up and by thinking of the depths of shame and poverty and sin from which he has lifted them. The story of Lazarus brings this out. His fellow men despised him, pitied him, passed him by; none of them took him into their homes; the best the beggar might hope for was the doling out of an occasional charity. But God stooped low; he lifted the beggar up, clothed him in heavenly raiment, and let him rest in Abraham's bosom. The lesson of God's condescension shines forth in his patience toward obstinate and unfaithful man. Who can read the story of rebellious Israel and not appreciate the note of tenderness in Isaiah's words: "For all this his anger is not turned away, but his hand is stretched out still?"

And How Do You Think of Him?

Dear reader, what is your conception of God? When you think of him, does it seem as if you contemplate the rugged beauty of some awful peak or that you are looking down into the depths of a terrible abyss? Do you think of a cloud far away in the distance, or does God loom up before you like a Gibraltar of strength that both protects and hides? Is there in your heart just a faint childhood memory of one you used to know, or is there the consciousness of one "nearer, my God, to thee?" Do you think of him as a stern, unyielding Judge sitting upon the throne in awful grandeur, or does there shine from heaven the light of a kind and beneficent presence? Answer these questions, and you give us a true index to your character. If you have never obeyed the gospel, don't try, for the present at least, to grasp at the immensity of meaning represented by God's highness; but think hard and consider now how he condescended to say: "To this man will I look, even to him that is poor and of a contrite spirit, and that trembleth at my word." And I remind you of a saying that is faithful and true: "God's love is not rounded out until I respond to it."

What Is the Greatest Evil in the World?

That depends largely upon the viewpoint of the speaker or the writer. One man who claimed to know, and to have experience in every class of society, told me that the automobile was the source of the greatest evil. He told his experience, and made his position very plain from his angle.

Others who claim to know say that the modern dance is the greatest source of evil. Much is said along this line, both in the secular press and the religious press.

A prominent lawyer, whom I have known for many years, and a man who does not claim to be even a good moral man, told me that the greatest breeder of crime in the world to-day is the "movies." He lays most of the crime wave of the day to the suggestions in the movies. In my judgment, he is about right. Two young men in Oklahoma undertook to rob a train a few years ago, and killed the mail clerk. They said they obtained their ideas from the picture show. I have read of numerous similar cases in the daily press.

That all these are great breeders of crime, there is not the slightest doubt with people who think. Other classes of worldly amusements may be thrown in as side lights along the same road—the broad and beaten road that leads to destruction.

I can see some good in the automobile. It is a very useful invention, and has almost become an absolute necessity. The ox wagon may be used for the same evil purpose an automobile is used for, but lessens the possibility of crime. But so far as the picture show and the dance are concerned, I can see no inkling of good in them. From my standpoint, they are wholly sources of evil, and no good comes from them. The show deadens the spiritual status of the Christian. It lessens the desire for good. It vacates church houses and creates unhappy homes. It appeals to the lusts of the flesh and the lusts of the eye and stimulates the pride of life. Shun the appearance of evil.—W. F. Lemmons, in Christian Leader,

A story was told of Sir Robert Peel, who, when dining in a West End mansion one evening, heard a slanderous story told. He rose and took leave of his host. "You are not going?" said the latter in consternation.

"Yes," replied Sir Robert; "I am still a Christian."—British Weekly.

"What Is Home Without a Bible?"

BY J. V. ARMSTRONG TRAYLOR.

The word "Bible" comes from the Greek word "biblos," which means "book;" or from the Greek word "biblia," which means "books," or "little books." The word "Bible" was applied to the sacred writings by way of preeminence; it is the "Book of books." The name "Bible" was given to these writings about the fourth century A.D.

The Bible contains 3,536,489 letters, 773,693 words, 31,173 verses, 1,189 chapters, and 66 books. It was divided into chapters in A.D. 1250, by Cardinal Hugo, and was divided into verses in 1551 to 1560 A.D. The Bible is God's word to man telling him how he may inherit eternal life, the home of the soul, the city of God. However, the wisdom of the world says that the Bible is too narrow, that God's way is very foolish. Hear Paul: "For seeing that in the wisdom of God the world through its wisdom knew not God, it was God's good pleasure through the foolishness of the preaching to save them that believe." (1 Cor. 1: 21.)

We can easily see that a book that contains more than the Bible is too large, and a book that contains less than the Bible is too small. Hence, he who tries to add to or take from the word of God is certainly making a sad mistake.

John says: "I testify unto every man that heareth the words of the prophecy of this book, If any man shall add unto them, God shall add unto him the plagues which are written in this book; and if any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part from the tree of life, and out of the holy city, which are written in this book." (Rev. 22: 18, 19.) There is but one road leading to the city of God, and the Bible is the only book that tells us how to travel it; therefore, who is it that would live in a home without a Bible to direct him in the strait and narrow way?

"What is home without a Bible?

'Tis a home where day is night—
Starless night; for o'er life's pathway
Heaven can shed no kindly light."

I shall now give some beautiful and unique statements from men of much experience in life, but who did not regard religion as men should; and yet, before passing through the dark valley of the shadow of death, they realized more fully how dangerous and sad it is for a home to try to be a true home without a Bible in it.

When Andrew Jackson lay on his deathbed, he pointed to the family Bible which lay on the table beside him, and said to his physician: "That book, sir, is the rock on which our republic rests."

John Quincy Adams said: "The first and almost the only book deserving of universal attention is the Bible; and so great is my veneration for the Bible that the earlier my children begin to read it, the more confident will be my hope that they will prove useful citizens to their country."

The best citizen of to-day is the one who fears God and keeps his commandments. It was Solomon who said that a man is not whole without keeping God's commandments. Who is it, then, that thinks he can fill his mission and be a good citizen of his country without being a whole man himself? No half man can meet all the responsibilities of life that come his way. Therefore the question, "Is a home complete without a Bible?"

"What is home without a Bible?
"Tis a home where daily bread
For the body is provided,
But the soul is never fed."

Abraham Lincoln said: "All the good from the Savior of the world is communicated through the Bible; but without it we could not know right from wrong. All the things desirable to man are contained in it."

To read the word of God is no ordinary duty, but the mother of all duty, enlightening the eyes, and converting the soul, and creating that very conscience to which we should be subject. We take our meat, not by duty, but because the body must go down without it; therefore, we persevere because we love to exist. So also the word of God is the bread of life, the good of all spiritual action. Without feeding upon it, the soul will go down. We hear David saying: "The law of Jehovah is perfect, restoring the soul: the testimony of Jehovah is sure, making wise the simple." (Ps. 19: 7.)

It was John Ruskin who said: "All that I have been taught of art, whatever I have done in life, has been due to the fact that, when I was a child, my mother daily read with me a part of the Bible, and made me learn part by heart daily."

Who would desire to live in a home without a Bible to guide and instruct him?

"What is home without a Bible?

'Tis a family out at sea,

Compass lost and rudder broken,

Drifting, drifting thoughtlessly."

We learn of Daniel Webster, when he lay on his deathbed, that his physician quoted to him a verse of the Twenty-third Psalm: "Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil; for thou art with me; thy rod and thy staff, they comfort me." Then the dying statesman faltered out: "Yes, that is what I want: 'Thy rod'—thy rod; 'thy staff'—thy staff." They were the last words he spoke. Mr. Webster, before his departure, realized the unique importance of being governed by the Bible.

The Bible was written for all. It contains the mind of God, the state of man, the way of salvation, the doom of sinners, and the happiness of believers. Its doctrine is holy, its precepts are binding, its histories are true, and its decisions are immutable. It also contains light to direct you, food to support you, and comfort to cheer you. It is the traveler's map, the pilgrim's staff, the pilot's compass, the soldier's sword, and the Christian's charter. Christ is its grand object, and the glory of God its end. It should fill the memory, rule the heart, and guide the feet. "O Jehovah, I know that the way of man is not in himself: it is not in man that walketh to direct his steps." (Jer. 10: 23.)

"What is home without a Bible?
List! and ponder while I speak:
"Tis a home with Bibles in it,
But not opened once a week."

The Bible is given you in life, will be opened in the judgment, and be remembered forever. It involves the highest responsibility, will reward the greatest labor, and will condemn all that trifle with its sacred contents. It is also the begetter of life, the comfort of sorrow, the promise of the future, the escape from temptation, and the strength in weakness.

Woodrow Wilson said on one occasion: "I am sorry for the men who do not read the Bible every day. I wonder why they deprive themselves of the strength and of the pleasure?"

The Bible is the greatest book, and it is as much greater than other books as the Author is greater than other authors. We read about the greatest characters in the Bible. Therefore, if you are impatient, sit down and talk with Job; if you are getting weak-kneed, take a good look at Elijah; if there is no song in your heart, listen to David; if you get chilly, get the beloved disciple to put his arms around you; and, above all things, if you are losing sight of the future, climb up the stairs of Revelation and get a glimpse of the promised land. Therefore what is home without a Bible?

> "Monday comes and goes, and Tuesday Comes and goes, and Wednesday, too; Thursday, Friday, Saturday, Sunday— Book forgotten whole week through."

Salvation by Faith. No. 1.

BY W. I., REEVES,

The Bible is the book of God. There are two covenants recorded in it. Paul calls them the "old testament" and the "new testament." The law of Moses is contained in the Old Testament and the law of faith is contained in the New Testament. The law of Moses has been abrogated, blotted out, taken away, so that the "new testament" could come into force. This was accomplished by the death of Christ. (Read Heb. 10: 9, 10; Col. 2: 14; Heb. 9: 16.)

We are not saved now by the deeds of the law of Moses—such as eating the passover, keeping the Sabbath, etc. (Rom. 3: 20; Col. 2: 16, 17.) But we are sanctified, after which we stand justified by that system of faith which Paul preached after he was redeemed from the curse of the law of Moses. (Rom. 8: 2; Gal. 3: 13.) For that old law contained the terror of immediate death for those who broke it, hence, it is called "the law of sin and death." (Rom. 8: 2.) To break the Sabbath day resulted in death. (Num. 15: 32-36.) Hence, Paul and all others who accept Christ were made free from keeping that old Sabbath day.

Jesus Christ was crucified "for our offenses, and was raised again for our justification." (Rom. 4: 25.) In the next verse (Rom. 5: 1) Paul says: "Therefore being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ." Most certainly Paul means we are justified by "the law of faith" (Rom. 3: 27); for Paul was justified or made free "by the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus" (Rom. 8: 2); and as God is no respecter of persons, we all must be justified by the same means. We are made free from sin when we obey "that form of doctrine" which is taught to us in the New Testament. (Rom. 6: 17, 18.) We are not under the law of Moses. As proof, I offer this: "But now the righteousness of God without the law is manifested, being witnessed by the law and the prophets." (Rom. 3: 21.) The expression, "witnessed by the law," shows that Paul most certainly is talking about the law of Moses as the one by which we are not now justified. "Even the righteousness of God which is by faith of Jesus Christ unto all and upon all them that believe." (Verse 22.) Believe what? Believe that system of faith of which Christ is the author, and which Paul preached when he preached "the faith" (Gal. 1: 23); "for there is no difference" (Rom. 3: 22).

When it is said that Paul preached "the faith," is the same thing meant as when he said he preached the gospel? (1 Cor. 15: 1-4.) In this passage he told the Corinthians that they were saved by the gospel which he had preached unto them. It would be impossible to reconcile the New Testament Scriptures, if Paul preached one thing when he preached "the faith" and something else when he preached "the gospel." It is clear that when it is said, "even the righteousness of God which is by faith of Jesus Christ," Paul includes all that he preached elsewhere in the New Testament on the subject of salvation. He preached by pen that Christ "became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him" (Heb. 5: 9); that "circumcision is nothing, and uncircumcision is nothing, but the keeping of the commandments of God;" and "faith which worketh by love" (1 Cor. 7; 19; Gal. 5: 6). James (2: 20) says: "Faith without works is dead." It is certain that man is not justified by a dead faith. Man knows, believes, and obeys from his spirit. (1 Cor. 2: 11; Rem. 1: 9.) Let Paul fell us how the faith in a man's spirit is made alive: "And if Christ be in you, the body is dead because of sin; but the Spirit is life because of righteousness." (Rom. 8: 10.) Christ dwells in our hearts by faith (Eph. 3: 17)—not by means of a dead faith, of course, but by a faith that is made alive by works; for James has told us that "faith without works is dead," and Paul has told us that it is "faith which worketh by love" that counts in Christ Jesus. So, then, it is clear that our salvation from sin is not by faith alone, but by a faith made perfect by obedience to "the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus"—namely, faith, repentance, confession, and baptism. (Mark 16: 16; Gal. 3: 27.)

Friends of Long Ago.

BY MRS. NELLIE ELNORA SINGLETON.

Why do old friends seem nearer
When troubles 'round us well?
Why will our thoughts turn backward
On some loved friend to dwell?
When other friends forsake us,
As new friends ofttimes do,
How sweet to know that, somewhere,
Some one believes in you!

As we journey on life's pathway.
There's many a cruel thorn,
When those we trust despise us
And our true friendship scorn.
Tis then our thoughts turn backward
To friends we used to know;
It gives our hearts fresh courage
As on the way we go.

Be it o'er plain or mountain,
Or o'er the ocean's foam,
True friends are not forgotten,
Wherever we may roam.
Their love a beacon shining
When hope is ebbing low—
I hope in heaven to meet them,
Those friends of long ago.

Walking With God.

In the story of long ago Enoch stands out as in some respects the most wonderful character of all; he "walked with God." This does not just imply that Enoch had physical comradeship with God. It means that Enoch, in mind and affection, kept close to God. He had daily spiritual fellowship with God. It was the kind of a walk that every Christian to-day can take as he treads the sod or streets of earth.

The Christian, whatever his calling or temptations, commences his daily walk with God in prayer. Before his head leaves the pillow, the plans and duties of the day are laid before God. In essence he petitions: "My Father, be with me as I associate with others. Give me courage, patience, skill. Help me to bear my burdens. Watch over my business affairs to thy honor and for my good. Lord, send me light. My pathway is so often very, very dark that I need thy light to guide me more than I can understand. Above all, thy will be done!"

So he commences his daily steppings with God.

And God answers him. God drives into his inmost soul some richly sacred thoughts that abide with him throughout the day: "My son, I am thy light in the darkness. Keep close to me; be obedient to the simple teachings of my holy Christ; steady thy life with frequent thoughts of me. Do not run before me, for then thou shalt lose me; do not lag behind, else darkness overtake thee. Walk with me beyond the eventide until thy eyes are closed in sleep. More tenderly than the stars I will watch over thee; and through thee shall my perfect will be done."

So each of us—like Enoch in the old, old story—can walk with God.—William C. Allen, in Exchange.

Getting Ready for Brother Srygley's Meeting.

Brother Srygley has been engaged to conduct a meeting at West End Avenue, beginning on the second Lord's day in June. We do not doubt that Brother Srygley will do his part in this meeting—"preach the word." Just now we are concerned chiefly with our own part, our own duty, in this campaign for the winning of souls and the edificacation of the church. We want everything in readiness for Brother Srygley's coming. We desire that our preparation be such that the words of Cornelius would describe it: "We are all here present in the sight of God, to hear all things that have been commanded thee of the Lord." (Acts 10: 33.) To this end we are giving considerable attention to the following:

1. There must be in the congregation that "unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace" (Eph. 4: 3) which gives the church a mighty power and makes the world to "believe"—yea, to "know"—that Christ came from God. (John 17: 21, 23.) A divided church will never convert the world; a divided congregation will never have, in the true sense, a great meeting. The world still feels the age-long effects of the meeting on Pentecost. The disciples were one in that meeting. Immediately before Pentecost "these all with one accord continued steadfastly in prayer" (Acts 1: 14); on Pentecost "they were all with one accord in one place" (Acts 2: 1). We have a goodly and an unusual portion of unity, coöperation, and "brotherly love" at West End; but in these respects, as in all others, it is our purpose to "press on unto perfection." (Heb. 6: 1.)

2. Prayer is a mighty force for the church; it moves both God and man. Pentecost was preceded by a season of prayer (Acts 1: 14); and a little prayer meeting, conducted by some devout women on the river's brink, in Philippi, furnished the first soil prepared for the gospel in Europe (Acts 16: 13-15). In a prison in the same city Paul and Silas prayed at midnight, and baptized the jailer and his household before the break of day. Paul, while preaching in Corinth, wrote to the Thessalonians: "Finally, brethren, pray for us, that the word of the Lord may run and be glorified, even as also it is with you." (2 Thess. 3: 1.) If the prayers of a congregation do not contribute to the success of a meeting, why did Paul ask for them? If they do, why not pray? Again, he said: "Continue steadfastly in prayer; . . . withal praying for us also, that God may open unto us a door for the word. to speak the mystery of Christ, for which I am also in bonds." (Col. 4: 2, 3.) Paul associated the victories of the gospel with the prayers of the saints. In our regular prayer meetings, cottage prayer meetings, and all our prayers, we shall "strive together" (Rom. 15: 30) for the success of the meeting.

3. The power of the preached gospel is greatly augmented by the scriptural conduct and godly living of Christians. It is necessary that our manner of life be "worthy of the gospel of Christ" (Phil. 1: 27), to the last man. When the church in Jerusalem increased its services in behalf of the neglected widows, "the word of God increased; and the number of the disciples multiplied in Jerusalem exceedingly, and a great company of the priests were obedient to the faith." (Acts 6: 7.) On the other hand, the sins of one impenitent man in the church may bring defeat upon the army of the Lord. Achan sinned secretly at Jericho, and the wickedness of his unrepentant soul robbed Israel of a great victory at Ai. (Josh. 7: 1, 4.) Ai was not taken until after Achan and his family had been stoned and burned in the valley of Achor. It is an awful and a fearful thing to bring reproach or defeat upon the "way of Zion" through one's sins. The godly living and the irreproachable character of the membership of a congregation are its great assets—not only in a protracted meeting, but at all times.

The Meetinghouse in Savannah.

At last the brethren in Savannah are meeting for worship in their own house. This is a great victory for the church. There is no new field in the southeast with greater prospects than Savannah. The following from Brother Beck is self-explanatory: "The fellowship of brethren in other parts of the country has given new life and zeal to the cause here, and now all are going into the work with a determination and love that will win. The help received from the brethren has made it possible for us to meet the first payment on our house. For this we are grateful. We commend to all the spirit that prompted these in helping us to open the way for greater work. We have another payment of three thousand dollars to make six months from now, and have a part of that subscribed already; but we lack a considerable amount yet. We are working and praying to the end that the brotherhood may not forget us in this last payment in which we are asking them to help us. We are to take care of the balance ourselves. I have just returned from a visit in Tennessee in the interest of our work, and I must say that the churches I visited, with but few exceptions, are doing more mission work, or have planned to do more this year, than ever before." To the foregoing it may be added that the meetinghouse cost ten thousand dollars; the brethren have already paid one thousand; three thousand will be due in six months. The little church in Savannah is not asking the brotherhood to buy them a meetinghouse, but very reasonably and conservatively asking the churches to help them meet the first two payments. Brethren, we cannot afford to disregard this worthy appeal. Let us help them meet the next payment, and then watch them grow. West End Avenue is giving five hundred dollars this year to the Savannah work. Send all contributions to J. Bedford Beck, P. O. Box 1530, Savannah, Ga.

Local News.

Brother Don Hockaday, of Granite, Okla., is in the midst of an interesting meeting at South Pryor Street.

There was one restoration at the prayer-meeting service at West End Avenue on Thursday evening. Two more confessed their sins at the morning service yesterday (March 13). The outlook is promising.

Resurrection Day.

BY ADELIA S. MARTIN.

All earth and heaven uplift in sweet accord To sing the praises of our risen Lord, As fragrant lilles from the lowly sod Awake to offer pure white souls to God.

O love undying, stronger than the grave! He suffered on the cross our souls to save. On this glad day let men and angels sing, "All hail the power of Jesus and our King!"

Through darkest clouds that hide our heaven's blue Are rifts that angels may be stepping through; And dark misfortune, never understood, May be some greater blessing for our good.

A life goes out, and leaves our world in gloom. Why should we weep above the empty tomb? On this glad day the song in heaven must be: "O death, O grave, where is thy victory?"

There is small chance of truth at the goal where there is not a childlike humility at the starting post.—S. T. Coleridge.

"Is There a Real Need for an Old People's Home?"

"Is there a real need for an Old People's Home?" is the question Brother Isaac E. Tackett raises in the Firm Foundation of March 1. Some thoughts have been in my heart for a number of months that I wanted to express, and I shall take this as the occasion of expressing them.

1. While I want it distinctly understood that I certainly would not say it is wrong to build a home in which to make aged Christians comfortable who have not relatives able and willing to do so, it is a fact that in every local congregation that is indeed the church of Christ old people have a home, and the very best that can be had. But the sad thought to me is that we can find so few of these congregations that are indeed God's people. Any local congregation that would let one of its aged members be sent off to "a denominational and secular institution" should be ashamed of itself, and the preachers who preach for such congregations should spare them not till they do better. Our brother says: "I know of a number of old Christians now being kept by denominational and secular institutions because our brethren have no place to keep them." Now, there is such a thing as some aged member's living where he has not the care and protection of a local church in his own community; but every Christian should have a church home in the local sense. When our members leave us and move into a section where there is no congregation, they should be kept in touch with, and helped and encouraged to live the Christian life-provided, of course, they will let you help them. I am talking about faithful membersmembers who try to live in a way to honor the cause of our Lord, All such should ever have a home, and that home should be his "home church," as it is sometimes called. Any local church that claims to be unable to take care of its own poor and aged and decrepit is not worthy to exist as a church, and from such the "candlestick" has been removed by our Lord and it is disowned, (See Rev. 2: 4, 5.) They may have a name that they live, but they are dead. (See Rev. 3: 1.) What does Paul mean when he says, "every one members one of another?" What does he mean when he says, "whether one member suffer, all the members suffer with it?" (Rom. 12: 5; 1 Cor. 12: 26.) Yes, in every properly taught and organized local church the old people have a home, the young people have a home, and the widows and the orphans have a home. The crying need to-day is to convert those congregations claiming to be churches of Christ into what they claim to be. How can any soul be allowed to suffer in the local church when "brotherly love" rules and reigns there? "We know that we have passed out of death into life, because we love the brethren. He that loveth not abideth in death." Some of us do not know that we have passed out of death, I fear. "Whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer: and we know that no murderer hath eternal life abiding in him." Too many of our churches are filled with murderers. "Hereby know we love, because he laid down his life for us: and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren." We do not see this proof of love in many of the local churches. "My little children, let us not love in word, neither with the tongue; but in deed and truth." (See 1 John 3: 14-18.) Christ says: "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another." (John 13: 35.) How do we look in the eyes of the world, when our poor and aged are forced to apply to institutions of the world for succor in times of need? There is something wrong, radically wrong, when our members can lie and suffer for weeks and months, unwisited and uncomforted by those who say they are Christians; and, indeed, a more serious wrong when some worn-out and broken-down member, who accumulated nothing for old age and has no relatives to stand by him when he is too old to work, is forced to leave his home congregation and go even to one that our own brethren have built. For instance, let us suppose that the beloved E. G. Sewell, who has labored and worn his life out preaching for the cause of Christ in and around Nashville, Tenn., should have failed to provide for old age and had no relatives to care for him. Now he is too old and feeble to preach or do anything else in the way of service. The Russell Street congregation, formerly known as the "Tenth Street Church," has been his home church all of these years. Let us suppose that he were an object of charity. How would it look to bundle up the little he has and send him away off to Texas, Kentucky, or somewhere else, to what we will call a "Home for Old Preachers?" No, never! Let his last days be spent where his heart lingers most, where the scenes are familiar, and where he can be most contented and satisfied. Who does not know that in every home for old people there is more or less unhappiness because they are away from what is home to them? How I would rejoice if my own sweet mother were with me here! But if she and every child she has living were here, we could not make her happy. She would long to see the trees, the hills, and the scenery that she has learned to love, and to be near the hill in which her husband's body slumbers. Think on these things, brethren, and let us let the greatest, the sweetest, and the best thing in the world come to the front and have its way-viz., the religion of our Lord and Savior. When this is done, a home for our old members who cannot care for themselves is solved. Now, if a home could be built to care for those who have not a local congregation to care for them, and to take in, too, the poor and aged out of the church, it would not be amiss. But take none into that home who lives near a local congregation. Have that local church to do its duty.

2. Just recently I had a lengthy discussion of this very question with two of our brethren. The statement was made that, as a rule, churches get tired of old preachers, and that even families get tired of father and mother when they get old and in the way. I answered that we should not think it strange for people of the world to do such things, but such should never be expected among Christians; and that when any man or set of men get tired of a preacher just because he is old and cannot serve as he once did, the religion of Christ has not accomplished in them what God intended it to accomplish. No one who is indeed a Christian could even think of getting tired of people just because they are old. Religion makes us love them the more tenderly because they are old. "O God, thou hast taught me from my youth; and hitherto have I declared thy wondrous works. Yea, even when I am old and gray-headed, forsake me not." (Ps. 71: 17, 18.) "Despise not thy mother when she is old." (Prov. 23: 22.) I think I have seen children get tired of their parents because they were old and feeble and in the way, and I think I have seen congregations get tired of some of their members just because they were poor and old and what some of the members call a "burden" to the local church. Now, that they are "burdens" to the hypocrites, I admit; but to a real Christian, never! They are the joy of those who live to love and serve our Lord and Savior, (See Matt. 25: 31-46.) 0 0 0

Everyday Life in India.

BY E. S. JELLEY.

When I was home last year, every one told me that India seemed like a myth; so I thought perhaps they would appreciate an endeavor to make it seem more real.

To begin with, we are all torn up, having moved here—Jwalapur, District Saharanpur, United Provinces—a few days since, and have not yet entirely straightened up the house. My writing desk is a sight, laden with articles of clothing, sheets of paper, books, a lamp, some bottles of medicine (for Mrs. Jelley and her young brother are suffering from bronchitis), a bicycle pump, and some communications written in strange characters which give joyful tidings of several baptisms.

Since beginning this letter I have been disturbed several times-once by a man who wished me to extract a tooth for him. I told him I deeply regretted that I had no instrument, as I have just moved in, and also I am a newcomer to this country. "Then when shall I come?" asked the man. Evidently he would rather wait some weeks (with the toothache) for me to get forceps than to trust his valued mouth to the doctor at the government hospital. Personally I believe he is wrong; but we must take the country as we find it, and we find that the public has an ingrained distrust of anything established by law. I suppose if we were to get the heathen religion established as the established religion of the country, the people would begin to flock to us to get their religion. At any rate, the people give implicit confidence to the worst of quacks; and when it comes to missionaries, they regard every one of them as an inspired healer.

There is Brother Watson of the Australian disciples' mission. (I do not know whether he has returned from furlough.) He seems to have been a compounder, among other things, at home; but here people have come one hundred and fifty miles or so to get cured by him, and his reputation has spread over the country as that of a remarkable physician who always cures. But Brother Watson did not come out to India to waste his time in alleviating the physical pains of the heathen. He came out to spread the gospel; and so while he was prescribing or turning a magnetic battery, he had a man sitting among the patients and preaching to them. The other day I asked a man who called for medicine: "Why do you not go to the hospital?" He replied: "They are no good; they do not care for the patient."

There are many interruptions in writing. The first of the day wife began grinding some grain for my breakfast; and as the millstone is heavy, I got up and took her place. Again, our baby girl (nearly four years old) fell into the gutter and got bedraggled with mud and urine from head to foot. You see, a gutter runs in front of our door; and as the landlord has failed to provide us with steps, we climb into the house over boxes. I got into the gutter in the dusk myself the day we were moving in, and wife once slipped from one of the boxes and got a tumble, but landed in the street. Another interruption was to let me know that Alethia (the baby) had torn Peter's kite-a serious matter, as kites cost about one-half cent each for small ones, and wife says they are too expensive. However, Peter's uncle is young, fortunately, and knows how to mend kites.

Some of this letter has been written by daylight, some by the touch system (for I have a good typewriter) in the dark, and some of it by the light of one of the old-time Bible lamps—a little earthen dish with sweet oil and a wick made of cotton removed from a bedquilt.

There are other interruptions, such as a journey on bicycle to the post office to send Brother L— a money order. I tried to send him one the day before, but, unfortunately, the clock pointed to four o'clock just as I got the form filled out, and the Indian postmaster here is a stickler for regularity. When we moved to Jwalapur, he refused to accept of my address on a post card. He told Brother Shripatrao I must send him a letter of instructions or he would keep my mail in the post office.

The post office is a nice little spin of ten minutes or so from here-not so nice, perhaps, in the four summer months, and impossible, probably, in the four months of rain; for the middle of the road is dusty and bad, and the great ox carts frequently occupy the whole roadbed and compel one to plow his way (if he can) through the dust bed at the side of the road. Then there are the pedestrians who do not seem to value their lives, and often allow one to ring his bell, unnoticed, a foot behind them. Then my bicycle chain has a habit of coming off just as I pass by some equipage; and when I dismount, the vehicle passes me with unconcealed delight. I always pass everything on wheels except motors, excepting only when the chain makes me dismount. The other day it made me get down while an aëroplane was flying about. It mortified me, for folks must have thought I dismounted to see the plane, as if I were not used to seeing them.

But this letter is long enough now. Later I will tell you how we came to move from Kankhal, and something about preaching the word. To-day I mean to build some steps myself, that we may have a safe entrance to our house.

"Queries and Answers," by David Lipscomb and E. G. Sewell.

It has been the conviction of the publisher for a number of years that just such a book should be in the hands of the reading public. As these men were so closely associated in life, it is eminently proper that they should be associated together in a book. The book would have been brought out earlier but for the fact that paper material and labor have been so high that it was delayed for a time in the hope that the cost of publication would decline. While the publisher was disappointed in this hope, yet he is selling the book, considering that it contains nearly eight hundred pages, at a prewar price. Greater importance and usefulness attach to the book because it covers a period of forty years of their joint labors. Another consideration that makes the book extremely valuable is that it treats of so many diversified subjects—subjects that are as much alive and of as much general interest to the reader as when the questions were asked. Furthermore, it is true, as is evident from the number of questions that are presented to the editor of the "Query Department" of this paper. that people to-day have a deep and abiding interest in the questions on religious subjects that were propounded to Lipscomb and Sewell for answer, which are published and answered in this book.

This book is substantially and handsomely bound, and will be an ornament to any library. No student of the Bible can afford to be without it. The small sum of three dollars, which is the purchase price of the book, should not deter any one from sending his order to the McQuiddy Printing Company, Nashville, Tenn., for a copy of the book. Every preacher in the church of Christ should have a copy. Any one desiring to take an agency for the book should write to the publisher for terms. The book has met a warm reception and is having a good sale.

I believe that wherever guidance is honestly and simply sought, it is certainly given. As to our discernment of 't. I believe it depends upon the measure in which we are walking in the light.—A. L. Newton.

The sense of the Divine Protector is at any moment sufficient to inspire confidence, but not to render effort unnecessary.—Westcott.

MISCELLANY

"Count that day lost whose low descending sun Views from thy hand no worthy action done."

J. Leonard Jackson reports a good hearing at Lindsley Avenue, this city, at both services last Lord's day.

Mrs. A. S. Allen, 605 Boscobel Street, Nashville, Tenn., in sending in her renewal to the Gospel Advocate, says: "I hope to always keep the Advocate in my home. It is certainly an inspiration and help in living the Christian life."

W. T. Hines, writing from Braman, Okla., March 7, says: "At Blackwell, Okla., three weeks ago, I baptized two persons into the one body, and yesterday another was baptized, and one came out of the Christian Church to stand on the true side. The Lord willing, I will conduct a tent meeting there."

Fred M. Little writes from Montgomery, Ala., March 7:
"The number who commune at the eleven-o'clock service each Lord's day has doubled since the first of the year, and the regular attendance has increased three hundred per cent, at Catoma Street Church, this city. However, we have not reported any 'additions' nor subtractions. To have both would be helpful. The church works harmoniously, and great results are sure to follow."

John B. Peden, writing from Avon Park, Fla., March 18, says; "Since January 1 I have preached from one to three times each Lord's day, baptized two persons, and received ninety-seven dollars and ten cents. I have no complaint to offer in regard to support received, as my work has been in new fields. We need more men who are not afraid to get out among the people. We have plenty of the self-righteous, money-hunting type. I have engagements for all my time until October."

Tice Elkins, Fort Worth, Texas, writes: "There is no better man anywhere, and but few better preachers, than John Gartin. Just now he and his family are stricken with smallpox; so he is not able to get out, and will not be able for weeks yet. They are poor, live among poor people, and far from a loyal congregation of Christians. They will suffer greatly if the brethren do not go to their aid at once. Brethren, read this, pity, and help, and send all you can at once. If you knew the Gartins like I know them, and the sacrifices they have made for the gospel in a land of sectarian opposition, you would give largely. Please do. Address your help to John Gartin, evangelist, Wewanta, W. Va."

W. W. Reed, Vina, Ala., March 5, says: "We have been reading the Gospel Advocate since before the Civil War. We were reading the Millennial Harbinger before the Advocate was published. It came to us at Fulton, Miss. I was in the Civil War. My wife and I are seventy-six years old. A few brethren meet at our house on Lord's day, read the Word, pray, and break bread. Our house and about all we had, except a few bedclothes and other things, was burned up last May. Lightning ran in on the switchboard and started the fire. There are four of us in the family—daughter and granddaughter. We keep boarders for a living. We owe two hundred dollars on the house we now live in The Haleyville brethren sent us a check for nineteen dollars. It might be that the brethren would help us out if they knew our circumstances. Reference: Whitt Sparks, postmaster, Vina, Ala."

Withholding the name and nost office of the writer, we give the following as representing many letters we are now receiving: "My subscription to the Gosvel Advocate has just expired. I would like to have the paper keep coming, but I am not able to pay for it now. Financial conditions are in a had shape in these parts at present. I have a hard pull to meet living expenses. We realized nothing out of our last year's crop, and prospects for a grain harvest this year are slim, owing to the rayages of the green bug. Now, if you see fit to continue the Advocate to me, I will pay for it just as soon as I can. I enjoy it very much, and get lots of good from its pages. I am doing very little preaching now, on account of having to put in all my time at work, not being able to hire any farm belo. I hope and pray that conditions may soon get better. May the Lord continue to bless the Advocate and all its host of readers.

S. W. Bell, Sedalia. Mo., writes as follows: "I filled my regular appointment Sunday in St. Louis with the church that meets in the hall, corner Cherokee and Texas. Although it rained almost all day, we had one of the largest and most attentive audiences to which I have ever preached
