Finally, it is my desire not only to be humble, but to be useful as well, and to bring forth fruits meet for repentance. If spared to this life, I shall, with the help and sincere prayers of my friends, work for God and the salvation of souls as never before; for this is nearer my heart than all else in the world.

"Unto thee, O Lord, do I lift up my soul.

"O my God, I trust in thee: let me not be ashamed, let not mine enemies triumph over me.

"Yea, let none that wait on thee be ashamed: let them be ashamed which transgress without cause.

"Show me thy ways, O Lord; teach me thy paths.

"Lead me in thy truth, and teach me: for thou art the God of my salvation; on thee do I wait all the day."

CURRENT THOUGHT

Respect for Art.

When a young boy in India has decided to be a carpenter, potter, or adopt any trade that has to do with the creating of beautiful things, he is initiated into the mysteries of his profession much as a priest is received into a temple. He does not lightly decide to be a carpenter or a potter, but throughout his whole life has been led up to the day when he will choose his work. Sometimes he chooses his father's craft; sometimes he launches boldly in a new direction; but in any case his choice is celebrated with a religious ceremony, and he takes a vow: "To create only that which is beautiful and useful." This vow is as earnestly adhered to as any made by a priest. It is this devout respect for art that makes the work of India stand supreme in exquisiteness of detail and in fineness of form.

It is not usual here in America to find as reverent a spirit put into work. Our young people are apt—alas!—to enter a trade or profession because of the wealth and power to be gained therein, rather than for the delight and privilege of creating something that is useful and that will add to the beauty of the world.—The Touchstone.

Christians may learn from the above statement how important it is to bring up children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. There is no art so beautiful nor yet so useful as being a simple Christian. From infancy a child's training and thought should be turned in that direction. If respect for art can make the work of India "stand supreme in exquisiteness of detail and in fineness of form," then respect for Christ's service can make that service the greatest accomplishment in the world. When one confesses his faith in Jesus Christ, the Son of the living God, he not only honors the greatest Leader, but espouses the greatest cause. That confession should be more than a religious ceremony. It should mark the beginning of a new life that will become resplendent with noble deeds humbly performed in the name of Jesus. "Finally brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things."

Ennobling the Sexual Instincts.

The sexual instinct at first sight appears to be incapable of being raised to higher uses. It is an instinct which is necessary to the race for the purpose of reproduction. But, like fear, it has a far greater "affect" or emotional tone than we need for this purpose, and therefore its lavish expression apparently needs to be suppressed. On the other hand, the suppression of this instinct causes a very large number of the nervous ills to which men, and still more women, fall victims. But the sexual instinct, which naturally expresses itself as admiration for personal naturally expresses itself as admiration for personal beauty, is probably at the basis of all the higher forms of art and may well be sublimated to this end. Further, this instinct is very closely associated with the maternal and paternal instincts, and seems almost to form a harmonious complex with them. The true lover is not only moved by the sexual instinct, but almost always associates with it the maternal or paternal instinct, and desires to "have some one to care for." Many a woman has married an invalid man simply in order to gratify this maternal in-stinct in caring for him. Unmarried women, in whom the sexual instincts are strong (and let them never be ashamed that these instincts are strong), may transform them into the maternal instinct in caring for children, " mothering The sexual instincts, dethe lonely, or nursing the sick. based to the uses of fleshly lust, kill the soul and stifle all noble thought and feeling; but from the same soil there may spring the stainless flower of love, whence comes all that is pure and holy in human life.-J. A. Hadfield, in The Spirit.

A great deal has been written of late on the sex problem. It is a subject that appeals not only to the thoughtful, but to the curious and to the lewd as well. No one will gainsay the fact that the sexual instinct is God-given. We must, therefore, conclude that it must have a noble, God given purpose. The best safeguard in the matter is to read the Bible and learn what God teaches on the sex question. There we may find all the teaching needed as related to expression and suppression of the instinct. The editor does not know just how closely connected is this instinct with the paternal or maternal longings, but he does know that this should be a "harmonious complex" with God's will. If we are not moved with the desire to please God, we will certainly fall into trouble. The Bible invariably associates the sexual instinct with honorable marriage. So far as expression is concerned, it is limited to husbands and wives and within proper bounds. In all other relations there must be self-control. When God's laws are observed, "the bed is undefiled."

Just Like One of Us.

An old minister was pastor of a rural church on a hill a few miles out from a university city. He was poor. His salary was a pittance. His clothes were much worn and some of them were secondhand; but his heart was warm and tender and his sympathy was given freely and abundantly. He had a genius for compassion and lovableness and fellow feeling.

It happened that a death occurred in the college town in a poor family.

Instead of seeking one of the city ministers, they called the old gentleman from the hill. He came and ministered to the family in their deep trial, entering into their affliction most closely and sympathetically and leading them into the larger hope.

After the funeral service was over and he had become, it a short time, like an intimate friend, he asked the family a question: "Why did you call me? Why did you not invite one of the pactors in the city near by?"

invite one of the pastors in the city near by?"

The reply was this: "Why, we feel you are just like one of us. We are ordinary folks and haven't much money and cannot dress very well. You understand us and are just like one of us."

The old minister, in speaking of the incident, looked down and, brushing with his hand his threadbare coat, remarked: "I haven't as good clothes or as much culture as my city brethren, but I rejoice that there are places where my ministrations are acceptable, where even plainness and poverty help to bring me into closer touch with the people."

Is it not herein that the strength of Jesus lies? He came to earth. He was made "like unto his brethren." He was "born of a woman." He came in by the door of human birth. "He was tempted in all points like as we are." He was poor and powerless—a babe in swaddling clothes in a manger. "He knew what was in man." He came near to the race because he got down to it. He inscrted himself at the lowest point—"the common people heard him gladly."

He that would raise the world must get under the world. Jesus lifted the race because he submerged himself beneath it. He was "just like one of us."—Homiletic Review.

It is a good thing to remember that Jesus Christ was just like one of us, with one important exception. He did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth. His enemies criticized him harshly because he received sinners and ate with them. This Jesus did not deny; but no enemy could ever point to a time or place where Jesus sinned against anybody or with anybody. We should not only follow Jesus' example in being friendly and sociable with everybody, and especially with poor sinners, but we should also strive with all the powers of our being to imitate him in the exception of keeping ourselves from sin. Some preachers deceive themselves in trying to be "one of the people." With this idea uppermost in their minds, they make it a point to join the leading clubs and fraternal orders, appear at popular gatherings, and act "like one of the boys" on all occasions. Plainly the effort is to be like the world, rather than to get close to sinful man in his poverty and temptations. In connection with the importance of coming near to the race socially, we should never forget that Jesus said to his disciples: "Ye are not of the world, even as I am not of the world." If we lose sight of this point in our endeavor to be like the people, we miss the real strength

John B. Cowden's New Book.

BY J. W. BRENTS.

Recently I was in Nashville, and upon meeting up with my near kinsman in the flesh, John B. Cowden, I was presented a copy of his book, "Christian Worship," issued from the Standard Press, Cincinnati, Ohio. There is much in this book that is exceedingly profitable, and one will be benefited by perusing its pages. He has, however, one chapter devoted to praise in Christian worship, which to me seems sad and even tragical. John B. formerly stood with the people who reject humanisms of every kind; but by and by, like so many, he "bowed the knee," "waxed fat and kicked," and is now preaching for a people who in a large measure have surrendered the principles of the Restoration movement. He makes a plea in this chapter for the use of instrumental music in the worship, or, rather, restates some he made in a tract some months past, and which were so completely demolished by the lamented G. Dallas Smith and M. C. Kurfees that it is a mystery to me how he ever managed to gather up the fragments and rearrange them and insert them in a book; in fact, to my mind, some of them are fearfully and woefully distorted until yet.

The use of instrumental music in the worship can no more be justified by the Scriptures than the burning of incense or infant baptism; in fact, the same arguments can be made for each. Instrumental music in the worship has not been the only barrier between Christians and those people with whom Brother Cowden is now aligned, and he and the last mother's son of them know it is not the only difference. Those who use it know it has a more farreaching effect than outward appearance. They say it is a little thing; but when once introduced, they know a new epoch begins with that church, and that is exactly the reason they make it a point to introduce it; and for no consideration—no, not for unity, which our Savior prayed for, nor a brother's conscience, brotherly love, or anything else—would they give up that little trifie.

Those who oppose it and have opposed it ever since it split the church in St. Louis when first introduced know it is a beginning of an apostasy equal to that of Israel when they clamored for a king. It is the beginning of attempts at church federation, the vagaries of up-to-date evangelism, worldly methods of entertaining the populace, centralization of church government, women preachers, and the Hyde Park method of accepting the pious unimmersed into the "sitting membership." Those who have gone as Brother Cowden has gone, when challenged to defend their practice, have sarcastically branded honest religious discussion as "pugilistic methods" and have said that the "days of pugilism are over." It would be interesting to know if Brother Cowden considers those days over or not. On page 142 he states that "it is a fact that hardly permits denial that the churches which have given most prominence to music have lost most in spirituality, and the professional musician has little desire to worship." Exactly so; and why is it that the people with whom Brother Cowden affiliates go so far as to even hire sectarian singers and players, and even sinners, to make their music? No wonder the president-moderator of the Texas State Convention of "Disciples of Christ" a few years ago said: "If Mr. Campbell were living, he would not even claim to be one of them." Some one has written a song, "Were Washington Living To-day," what would be think of all our modern improvements, inventions, etc.? Well may we say: 'Were

Mr. Campbell living to-day, what would he think of the nodern methods of the Christian Church, with all their man-made machinery and human desires to propagate the work of the Lord?" Surely he would be among the first to start a reformation. Don't come saying: "This is a modern age, and we need to keep up with the age." We need no new gospel or new methods of doing the work of the Lord. The Lord sees the end from the beginning.

The book is dedicated "to Hiram F. Leonard, scholar and teacher, the faithful and able instructor of my boyhood and young manhood, who laid in me the foundation for what I am, and gave me a vision of life here and hereafter that has been an abiding inspiration to me in all my undertakings and accomplishments." Here is another tragedy to me. It was at old Cane Creek meetinghouse that this noble man of God, Hiram F. Leonard, with B. F. Hart, Billie Dixon, Dr. Brents, and others, taught and labored for years to implant in the people of that community the true principles of Christianity, and who were as firm and irresistible as Gibraltar against any departure from God's plan of work and worship. Just how it was, when or where, the sainted Hiram F. Leonard laid in John B. Cowden the foundation for his pursuing the course he has is a mystery to me, and, I am sure, to many of the people about Cane Creek and Petersburg.

Well do I remember the last time I ever saw Hiram F. Leonard. It was at the Talley graveyard. My father had died, and it was this hoary-headed sage and lifelong friend of my father's family who preached his funeral. That was the grandest speech I ever heard in many respects. Hiram Leonard never made anything but great speeches. He spoke at length of the departures of the people with whom Brother Cowden is now affiliated, and warned me as Paul would Timothy against these departures. This advice will follow me to the grave, given under such a circumstance. Surely it was Hiram Leonard that kept Brother Cowden out for years, for it was not until this grand old man of the cross was laid in his grave that Brother Cowden took the fatal step he did.

It is to be hoped that Brother Cowden, together with Dr. Cowden, may yet return to their "first love." I love them both. It was none other than Dr. Cowden that only a few weeks past, with that skillful knife of his, saved one of my sisters from an untimely grave. May I not relate an incident for their benefit and that of all others who have departed from the New Testament order? One of the best generals the South ever had was John B. Gordon. It was he who led the last attack at Appomattox Courthouse that Sunday morning in 1865 when General Lee surrendered his entire command to Ulysses S. Grant. General Gordon afterwards became a candidate for the United States Senate, One of the old veterans who had served under him had become estranged from him for political reasons, and, being a member of the Legislature, he vowed he would do everything in his power to defeat him. He stormed and raved against his old commander on every occasion; and when the day of the conventior came, he walked resolutely down the aisle to the ballot box with an anti-Gordon ballot in his hand. But there on the platform sat his old commander, with a face that had once been handsome all disfigured with the scars and wounds of battle, and as the old veteran saw him the memory of other days came back. He tried for a moment to nerve himself, but it was no use; the sight of the old general was too much for him, and the tears began to roll down his cheeks. And suddenly turning to the convention, his frame shaking with emotion, he cried aloud: "It's no use, boys; I can't do it. Here goes my vote for John B. Gordon. It was all up with me, boys, when I saw that scar and that tattered uniform. Forgive me, General."

May we not ask Brother Cowden to stop long enoughand all others, as to that matter, who have departed from their "first love"-to let their minds go back to the past, Let us hear once more the voice of Campbell, Scott, Stone, McGarvey, Lipscomb, and Franklin, pleading against the very things Brother Cowden has embraced. stentorian voice of the lamented Hiram F. Leonard, pleading for the old paths and the cutting down and rooting up of all names, customs, traditions, and even instrumental music in the worship, should be enough to cause Brother Cowden to say: "It's all off, boys: I can't do it. Forgive me. Here goes my all for the old paths." The seed sown by the people Brother Cowden is now associated with has done nothing but cause strife, discord, division, and has broken the hearts of some of the noblest souls on earth, Who would not be touched by the prayer of David Lipscomb, "the noblest Roman of them all," when seeing the departure of his brethren coming, he, like Samuel of old, prayed all night that the fatal step might not be taken?

But if recalling these incidents to mind is not enough, let us go back beyond the strife and confusion, beyond the years as they have hurried onward, treading in their haste on one another's heels, to crufixion day, see the bruised and bleeding form of the Child of the skies, and remember his prayer just before he drank the bitter cup, pleading that his followers might be one; and surely this is enough to cause Brother Cowden and all others who have departed from the New Testament plea to return and lay aside the things which caused the sad, sorrowful division.

People who introduce into the body of Christ unauthorized and ruinous opinions and divide this spiritual body are committing a greater sin than those people who bruised and stabbed his fleshly body. Departures from his spiritual body and treason to its truth is more offensive to God than treason to his Son while he tabernacled in the flesh.

Brethren, let us press the claims of the Lord. Time has proven that the methods of these brethren are failures. Recently we read in one of their papers of more than thirty empty church houses in East Tennessee. This is the condition all over Texas. Their houses are empty. There is only one place where digression can flourish—viz., in the larger towns and cities, among those who love Dame Fashion more than they love God and their brethren.

Don't Beeloud the Christian's Faith.

BY FLAVII. HALL.

Thomas E. Watson, an eminent editor and classic author, who is coming into the lime light in the polity of government; who has the interest of the common people at heart, I believe, as few politicians have; who has rightly exposed the corruptions of men who delude the people and plunge them into an earthly hell—this man of renown has some queer things to say in an issue of his paper—the Columbia Sentinel—about some portions of the Bible, the genuineness, integrity, and divine inspiration of which are as the Rock of Gibraltar. He has often flayed the Roman Catholics for not following the teaching of the Bible, and has in some of his writings, as I thought, tried to sanctify the truths of the Bible in the hearts of his readers. But—alas!—it seems now he is jumping upon the flery coals of destructive criticism.

In decrying prejudice against the Jews and showing the unwarranted fears of some that they are trying to get the reins of political power in America in their hands, he says: "Who wrote the story of Adam and Eve, and the garden of Eden, and the serpent that beguiled our common mother? A Jew wrote it, or at least copied it from the Oriental fable, which was never intended to be anything more than an ailegory."

I may misunderstand him; but whether I do or not, his divine inspiration of Moses and his writings, whereas Jesus (whose divine Sonship the honorable gentleman does not call in question) quotes those writings as divinely recorded truth and as authoritative under the dispensation with which they had to do. His quotations in Matt. 19: 4, 5 and John 8: 44 have to do with the story of Eden and the devil's lie to Eye.

The Babylonian and Assyrian accounts of creation, the "serpent of evil," and the flood (antedating the period when Moses wrote), which bear a striking likeness to the Bible account, are on tablets which the ravages of time for thousands of years have not effaced, and which are now preserved in the British Museum. Is an account thus recorded, which required so much time and toil, to be regarded as only a fable? We see many tablets of historic fact in the United States. Will they ever be regarded as fables?

The sage should be careful how he reflects upon the divine inspiration of Moses, lest he, in this respect, make of himself what he sometimes calls others—a chimpanzee. Have not the men of knowledge and observation been beholding the fulfillment of the prophecy of Noah, recorded by Moses (Gen. 9: 25-27), in all ages since the distinction of races became an established fact? Has not a curse rested upon the Hamitic nations? Have they not been cursed with abominable idolatries and vices? Have they not been "servants of servants," abject servants to others. Think of Egypt and her ruins, and of Africa, the Dark Continent.

Did not God dwell "in the tents of Shem"—his descendants, the Israelites—in that he providentially cared for them, committed to them his oracles in the Mosaic dispensation (Rom. 2: 2), recorded his name in the tabernacle and temple, manifested his glory there, and chose a virgin of Israel to be the mother of the Messiah? (Upon this latter fact Senator Watson expatiates in a pleasing manner.)

Is it not a fact that God "enlarged Japheth;" that he had seven sons, whereas Shem and Ham had five and four, respectively; that Japheth's descendants have had the largest territory?

Who can thoughtfully read the prophecy of Moses in Deut. 28 concerning the final overthrow of the Jewish nation and then read from Josephus the exact fulfillment (which was more than fifteen hundred years after it was recorded) and not be profoundly convinced that Moses only by the inspiration of Jehovah could have accurately fore-told those momentous events that transpired fifteen centuries later? Kind reader, he who reads said chapter, then reads Josephus' account of the fulfillment of that prophecy and ponders the history of the Jews in the light of the prophecy can but wonder at the strangeness of a mental giant representing anything in the Pentateuch as copied from some fable. Other prophecies and their fulfillment could be noticed, but the foregoing is sufficient for the present purpose.

Senator Watson further says: "Who wrote the Decalogue, the Ten Commandments? A Jew was the scribe, and we believe that he wrote at the dictation of Jehovah."

He writes like he has wisdom equal to, if not above, a man directly inspired of God; for this it would take to determine what Moses wrote by the dictation of Jehovah and what he copied from a fable, if he did both kinds of writing in the Pentateuch. It is ruinous presumption to claim to be able to make any such a distinction in the books of Moses.

Usually those who reject the Mosaic account of creation and the fall of man hold the donkeyish Darwinian theory of the origin of man, which takes him through the ape back to "a group of marine animals resembling the (minute tadpole-like) larvæ of existing ascidians." (Universal Dictionary of the English Language.) I am glad we have rock-ribbed evidence of the divine inspiration of Moses (as words are such as to becloud the faith of Christians in the has been pointed out), which exalts man as a being made in the image of God, the infinite and benevolent Creator, and gives him the only origin that could have ever made possible his reasoning powers and capabilities. And I am glad not to be akin to the tadpole nor to the chimpanzee. If the "sage of McDuffie" has something better to offer than the tadpole theory of the origin of man, since he rejects the Mosaic account, let him divulge it. He will be wise enough not to answer.

After making an exhibit of his profound wisdom (?) about where Moses got the account of creation, and giving honor to the mother of Jesus, he says: "His [Jesus'] teaching was entirely by word of mouth, and what we get of it comes from hearsay, reduced to writing some eighty years after the crucifixion. For instance, the Gospel of Luke, who was not a disciple, is entirely made up of hearsay and naturally quite different in many respects from the other Gospels."

Here are some of the wildest and most inconsiderate statements I have ever seen from the pen of a man of genius. Luke was a celebrated Christian, and every Christian is a disciple (Acts 11: 26), but he says Luke was "not a disciple," He means he was not an apostle, but his mistake shows how wide of the mark one can hit when he shoots in the darkness, not knowing the facts. Luke was long the companion of Paul, and the latter calls him "the beloved physician" (Col. 4: 14), and writes: "I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand. . . . Only Luke is with me." (2 Tim. 4: 6, 11.) Bible scholars are sure that Paul again refers to Luke when he writes of a brother chosen by the churches to travel with him as one whose "praise is in the gospel throughout all the churches." (2 Cor. 8: 18, 19.)

Such a Christian could not have been ignorant of the facts concerning the birth and growth of Christianity in his day. One did not have to be an apostle before the New Testament was written to be divinely inspired of God. Multitudes of Christians besides the apostles (among whom were some women) were thus inspired with knowledge. In fact, it is evident that every one who did the work of an evangelist was supernaturally qualified for this work; and so, whether orally proclaiming or writing the truth of the gospel, the hand of divine guidance was with them.

Luke "traced the course of all things accurately from the first," with which his writings have to do, and received them from "eye witnesses and ministers of the word." (Luke 1: 1-4.) How easy was this possible, and well might an eminent editor write: "Mary, our Lord's mother, might furnish the most of the early documents used, and all might be selected and stamped by divine inspiration and authority."

That Luke's Gospel differs from the other Gospels, in that it has been called "the Gospel for the Gentiles," and "leaves out many of the words of Christ and of the incidents of his life which had particular reference to the Jews" and presents other things peculiar to itself, is noted with interest by Bible students. But that it contradicts the other Gospels, no reputable critic will undertake to show, for it cannot be done.

"Eighty years after the crucifixion" would have been at least one hundred and ten years after the birth of Christ, and our reckless scribe (in this matter, but not in things general) says it was about that time before the New Testament oracles were written. In a table before me "exhibiting the different views of eminent writers on the chronology of the books of the New Institution," no one gives the writing of the books in their respective order later than A.D. 64, 65, 64, 97, 65, 58, 57, 58, 53, 62, 65, 62, 52, 52, 64, 66, 65, 62, 64, 61, 64, 65, 80, 85, 70, 97. This makes the earliest about twenty-two years and the latest about sixty-seven years after the crucifixion. I have given the latest dates. The most of the writers give earlier dates.

How careful should one be not to inveigh against the Book of books, which has stood the trials, the battles, and the storms of the ages, and which is the beacon light for every storm-tossed mariner upon life's ocean who will rise above the brute, above the carnal things of earth, and "walk by faith, not by sight." Its truths, sealed by the blood of those who gave them, can never perish.

The Tent Meeting and the Flood in Colorado.

BY E. C. FUQUA.

My first tent meeting of the season, though a week old, is not advanced appreciably, though the few who have attended are greatly impressed. Rain has fallen almost constantly for ten days, and yesterday the water rose a foot deep under the tent, as it is near the river; but, clad in rubber boots, we hauled the tent out of the water on to the higher ground, and as soon as the rain ceases we expect to resume the meeting. The pure word of God has never been preached in La Porte, and for a while we expect the people to be stubborn, but from the interest developed before the flood rose we predict a good hearing will be enjoyed. Colorado is suffering from the worst flood in her history. At Pueblo alone the estimated loss of life reaches from five hundred to fifteen hundred souls, while more than ten million dollars property loss is reported; and it is still raining. The whole State, from Fort Collins to the New Mexico State line, is horribly wrecked, and this devastation reaches east to the Kansas State line, according to available reports. Most bridges are out, homes washed away, crops ruined, and thousands of lives, it is estimated, are sacrificed to the floods of Friday, June 3. Of course our tent work must suspend a few days till conditions get better. We all hope that the present estimation of loss is overdrawn; but the catastrophe is decidedly greater than the San Francisco flood, earthquake, and fire of a few years ago, even according to known conditions. Fort Collins escaped almost miraculously, but every city south, even Loveland, thirteen miles south, is a great sufferer; and the end is not yet, as rain is still falling all over the State, and the numerous reservoirs, already full, are breaking and threatening other sections. One near here, the water of which covers eight hundred acres and is seventy-five feet deep, is hourly expected to collapse; but citizens are working day and night to try to prevent a break. May the Lord save us from a further scourge.

Salvation by Faith, No. 4. BY W. L. REEVES.

"He that believeth not shall be damned." (Mark 16: 16.) There is a negative to every affirmative. The passage above gives the negative to the subject of this series of lessons. As damnation, destruction, eternal punishment, etc., are the opposites of salvation, this passage teaches that faith is necessary to salvation as strongly as any affirmative one can teach it. "How shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation; which at the first began to be spoken by the Lord?" (Heb. 2: 3.) This salvation is equivalent to eternal life. Christ said: "If a man keep my saying, he shall never see death." (John 8: 51.) Again: "And whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die." (John 11: 26.) Christ here promises life eternal upon both faith and keeping his sayings. Which one of these statements must I leave out? If I teach that man is saved, and so has eternal life, by faith, without keeping Christ's sayings, I leave out the one which promises life eternal on keeping them. This is just as certain as certainty itself.

But let us try again. "He that believeth on me hath everlasting life" (John 6: 47.) Christ "became the author of eternal salvation [life] unto all them that obey him." (Heb. 5: 9.) He became this when made perfect, and he was made perfect through sufferings (Heb. 2: 10), immediately after which he stated: "All power is given unto me in heaven and on earth. Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." (Matt. 28: 18, 19.) Mark says: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." (Mark 16: 15, 16.) Under this commission Peter was asked: "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" And "Peter said unto them, Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." (Acts 2: 37, 38.) Jesus told Peter to preach repentance and remission of sins in Christ's name. Did Peter violate the will of Christ when he told the Pentecostians to both repent and be baptized? He did, if he had no authority to do so; but every Bible reader knows that Christ told Peter to tell them, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved," and Peter did what Christ said: for he said: "Repent and be baptized for the remission of sins." Faith without works is dead. (James 2: 20.) Now I ask, what works is it that quickens the faith of man, if he is saved immediately upon believing? Such faith is certainly without works, consequently is dead; so, according to the theory of Baptists and many others, man is saved on a dead faith. How can it be otherwise? The repentance which they teach is not of a saving faith, for they place repentance before faith, and contend strenuously that one is saved at faith before it works.

If a man is saved immediately at faith, what about love, confession, prayer, etc., we often hear the Baptists talk about? It is certain that one cannot be saved without confessing Christ. (Matt. 10: 32.) Baptists contend that one must pray earnestly before he can be saved. "How can they call on him in whom they have not believed?" (Rom. 10: 13-17.) This shows that one cannot call on the name of the Lord before believing. To fit the theory, you have man praying without faith, or you have him saved without calling on the name of the Lord at all; for as per the theory, he is saved at faith before it prompts him to do one thing. Prayer must be of faith to avail; so if a sinner cannot be saved without praying, away goes the Baptist theory of salvation by faith alone, or before it works.

We now notice the importance of the confession. This confession is the word of faith; "That is, the word of faith, which we preach; that if thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved. For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness; and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation." (Rom. 10: 9, 10.) I am sure that language cannot make it plainer that salvation is predicated upon the confession. Again, we read: "Whosoever shall confess that Jesus is the Son of God, God dwelleth in him, and he in God." (1 John 4: 15.) Now for a negative on the proposition: "And every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is not of God." (1 John 4: 3.) It is of faith, and does not come before faith; therefore, man cannot be saved instantaneously after faith. "Let us hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering." (Heb. 10: 23.) From the foregoing it is invincibly evident that man must confess his Lord before he can be saved, and most certainly he must have faith before he can confess faith. Then it follows that the confession is after faith, but before salvation. Philip had the eunuch confess faith in the Lord Jesus as one of the prerequisites of scriptural baptism. (Acts 8: 36-28.) The confession is made unto salvation. Salvation is in Christ. The apostles baptized people into Christ. "For as many of you as were baptized into Christ did put on Christ." (Gal. 3: 27.) "Go ye therefore, and make disciples of all the nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit." (Matt. 28: 19.) In the English language, where an imperative is given, followed by a participle, it shows how the thing to be done is done. "Go, make disciples, . . . baptizing them." The farmer says to his son: "Go, clean the crop, plowing it." The boy would not do what his father told him if he went and hoed the crop. The mother says: "Daughter, clean the floor, washing it." The daughter sweeps the floor, but does not do what her mother told her to do, because that participle, "washing," is included in the thing which is to be done; or, in other words, it tells how the thing is to be done.

But to the confession and baptism. Above it is shown that the confession is "unto" salvation; but baptism is "into Christ," where all men are saved. "If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature." (2 Cor. 5: 17.)

All the above goes to show that confession and baptism both are after faith and before salvation; therefore, man is not saved at faith before it obeys the commandments of Christ Jesus.

Christian Leadership.

There are those who are dismayed because at such a time as this no great leader stands out head and shoulders above all others in the church. Perhaps we sometimes forget that the strength of a democracy is less likely to be found in this type of leadership than in a multitude of leaders scattered through every walk in life and found wherever men dwell and walk together. The leadership of the Christian church will doubtless in these days be found not in one man, but in the many. The remarkable readjustment of our nation to the new conditions imposed by war was made possible because of just such leadership in every part of the nation, and in so far as the Christian church can bring into activity just this type of leadership, just so far will it be able to build its principles of living into the new social-economic order.—H. N. Shenton.

The sins we older people commit against children are legion, and they grow up to the standards we have set before them. The truth had little chance to develop in the child who was taken to the stores by her mother, and the next day given a note to the teacher: "Please excuse Mary's absence yesterday, as she was sick." Or the child who was "four in the street car, five at home, and six at school."—Exchange.

The Never-Old.

They who can smile when others hate. Nor bind the heart with frosts of fate, Their feet will go with laughter bold The green roads of the Never-Old.

They who can let the spirit shine And keep the heart a lighted shrine, Their feet will glide with fire-of-gold The green roads of the Never-Old.

They who can put the self aside And in Love's saddle leap and ride, Their eyes will see the gates unfold To green roads of the Never-Old.

The "Church Pig."

A man in China bought two little pigs, promising to give one to the church—or, rather, to give the proceeds of it when it had grown to be a big pig. A missionary tells the story:

As the days went on, the pigs were seen to be good, healthy specimens, enjoying life according to the law of their kind, little dreaming of the future in store for them. The "church pig" was unusually fat and flourishing. The man began to wish he could have it for his own and quietly pocket the sum it would bring. The feeling grew, so that when the pigs were fully developed all desire to give it to the church was gone. Thus, indeed, it is when we "give place to the devil," instead of being overcomers by the Lord's grace.

The day came when the pigs were to be sold. The man started for the market driving the pigs in front of him. Now the "church pig," as a rule, was a most docile creature and had never given any trouble; but that day it behaved in a most extraordinary way, persisting in disappearing up various alleyways. Finally, to the man's dismay, when they reached the riverside where a bridge had to be crossed, the "church pig" took to its heels and ran, as pigs do when they are in earnest. The poor man was indeed in a dilemma. Here was his own pig which needed careful watching, and there was the "church pig" fleeing for its life. To make matters worse, the streets were crowded with people, each like himself hurrying to market on his own business and with an eye out for gain. What likelihood was there that a fine, fat pig running loose, far from the eyes of its owner, would ever be found again or restored if claimed? At last he was forced to move on, finally reaching the market, where he was successful in getting a fair price for the remaining pig-his own.

Later in the day he was wending his way home, sad at heart, and feeling that God had been punishing him for breaking his promise, when, passing the little chapel where God's name was so faithfully proclaimed Sunday after Sunday, what should he see lying calmly in front of the steps but the old "church pig," as much as to say: "Here I belong, and here I mean to stay." After that the matter was settled and the gift given to the church without a murmur.—Exchange.

The House With the Golden Windows.

There was once a farmer who, having had a prosperous season, promised his son that at the end of the season he could have a holiday or go wherever he wanted to. When the time came, the boy said he wanted to go to the house with the golden windows, which stood on a hill not far from his home.

His father granted the wish, and the boy set out on his journey. He went down the hill to the valley, crossed the river by a bridge, and climbed up the other hill till he came to the house. In answer to his knock, a lady opened the door.

"Please," said he, "I've come to see the house with the golden windows."

"Come in, come in," replied the lady, "and glad I am to see you."

He was taken into a room, and presently a little girl came in.

When her mother told her what the boy wanted, she said: "I am so glad he has come to see me." She showed him the cows, horses, geese, pigs, and so forth, and then the boy asked to see the golden windows.

"O, there is the house with the golden windows," said the lady, pointing to his own house, where the golden rays of the setting sun shone upon the windows.

The boy then started off homeward, down the hill, across the valley, and up the hill, till he reached home.

"Well, my son, what have you learned?" said his father.

"Father," replied the boy, "I have learned the greatest lesson of my life—that the house with the golden windows is home."—Exchange.

A Parable of a Prodigal Father.

A certain man had two sons, and the younger of them said to his father: "Father, give me the portion of thy time and thy attention and thy companionship and thy counsel which falleth to me." And he divided unto them his living in that he paid the boy's bills and sent him to a select preparatory school and to dancing school and to college and tried to believe that he was doing his full duty by the boys.

And not many days afterwards the father gathered all his interests and aspirations and ambitions and took his journey into a far country, into a land of stocks and bonds and securities and other things which do not interest a boy; and there he wasted his precious opportunity of being a chum to his own son. And when he had spent the very best of his life and had gained money, but had failed to find satisfaction, there arose a mighty famine in his heart; and he began to be in want of sympathy and real companionship. And he went and joined himself to one of the clubs of the country; and they elected him chairman of the house committee and president of the club and sent him to Congress. And he would have fain satisfied himself with the husks that other men did eat, and no man gave unto him any real friendship.

But when he came to himself he said: "How many men of my acquaintance have boys whom they understand and who understand them, who talk about their boys and seem perfectly happy in their comradeship of their sons, and I perish here with heart hunger! I will arise and go to my son, and will say unto him: 'Son, I have sinned against heaven and in thy sight; I am no more worthy to be called thy father. Make me as one of thy acquaintances." And he arose and came to his son. But while he was yet afar off, his son saw him and was moved with astonishment; and instead of running and falling on his neck, he drew back and was ill at ease. And the father said unto him: Son, I have sinned against heaven and in thy sight; I am no more worthy to be called thy father. Forgive me now and let me be your friend.' But the son said: 'Not so; I wish it were possible, but it is too late. There was a time when I wanted companionship and counsel and to know things, but you were too busy. I got companionship and I got the information, but I got the wrong kind; and now-alas!-I am wrecked in soul and body; there is no more heart left in me, and there is nothing you can do for me. It is too late, too late, too late," -Exchange.

II AT HOME AND ABROAD

Q

F. W. Smith reports one baptism at a regular Lord's-day service at Franklin, Tenn.

Will J. Cullum preached to good audiences at Reid Avenue, this city, Sunday morning and night, and at the Powder Plant in the afternoon.

Paul Slayden began a meeting with the church at Savannah, Ga., on last Lord's day. O. W. Rawlings gives a good report of the work in this section.

- A. C. Walker, of Huntsville, Ala., writes to tell us that T. B. Thompson, of Avon Park, Fla., has agreed to begin twelve months' labor with the Randolph Street Church at Huntsville, beginning on October 1.

Thirty-two charter members have enrolled for the new congregation at Columbus, Miss. Brother Cayce preached the first sermon in the newly purchased house on Sunday. He is now in a meeting at Sturgis, Miss.

Beginning on June 20, the church at St. Louis will meet at Hall No. 4, Eagles' Home, corner of Lafayette and Jefferson Avenues. This change was made necessary on account of the sale of the hall at Cherokee and Texas Avenues.

From M. S. Mason, 1851 Broad Street, Springfield, Mo., June 7: "I have the last week in June and first week in July I would be glad to place somewhere. This is caused by the meeting being called off at Huffman, Ark. First come, first served,"

From J. H. Horton, East Florence, Ala., June 6: "Twentyone were baptized here last Saturday. Two restorations and two confessions Lord's-day night. The meeting will centinue this week. J. H. Morris, of Tuscumbia, is conducting the song service. Pray for us."

R. E. Wright, of Wartrace, Tenn., began a promising meeting with the brethren at Griffin, Ga., on June 5. There are only a few members at this point, but they are zealously going forward in the Master's service. Brother Wright has time for a meeting or two in September and October.

Walter L. Brummett writes: "The church at Brownsville, Tenn., is moving along very well, but not as well as we would like. S. P. Pittman, of David Lipscomb College, is to hold our meeting, beginning on the third Sunday in July. E. L. Whitaker, of Henderson, Tenn., preaches for us every fourth Sunday."

The Potter Orphan Home, at Bowling Green, Ky., will hold its annual all-day meeting on Wednesday, July 6, and a special invitation is extended to the readers of this paper. The exercises will include a reunion of old students of Potter Bible College. Hugh Potter is superintendent and treasurer of the Home.

From J. W. Brents, Rogersville. Mo., June 4: "We have just closed a fine meeting here. There were eleven additions to the congregation. The house was too small to occommodate the crowds. I am to return for another meeting next May. I go from here to Springfield for a meeting, then back to my home—Athens, Ala."

N. W. Proffitt, now in Nashville, reports: "The meeting at Twenty-second Avenue, North, continues with unabating interest. Five added to date. The meeting will continue for two weeks yet. On the fourth Sunday in June we are anticipating the beginning of a meeting at Number One, five miles south of Gallatin, on the Nashville and Gallatin Pike."

From J. S. Daugherty, Kirbyville, Texas, June 6: "I closed the meeting at Wiergate, Newton County, last night, with three baptisms and many others interested. One of those baptized was a young single woman, from the Baptists; two were men past fifty years of age, neither of which had heard God's truth before. I am to begin at Lufkin on Sunday, June 12."

From C. G. Vincent, 2813 Linden Avenue, Knoxville, Tenn., June 7: "We had four to take membership with us last Lord's day. The Broadway Church is always glad to welcome visitors and any who move here. The meeting-house is located at 1124 North Broadway. Either the Fountain City or Broadway car will bring you to the door. I will have time for a meeting this summer. Address me as above."

From T. H. Matheson, Guymon, Okla., June 7: "The meeting at Happy resulted in one baptism. Hindered by rain. Too, we dismissed two days to attend a debate at Tyrone, over the college question, between Brethren Elkins and Sears. Our schools scored several points in this debate, and I am sure the anticollege brethren could not have put up a better fight than through M. R. Sears. I am in a meeting now at home."

From W. F. Hall, Booneville, Ark., June 6: "This is the first report I ever made to the Gospel Advocate. I have been preaching since 1911. I went to the County Line (Ark.) school in 1911-12. I have held many good meetings in Oklahoma, Arkansas, and Texas. My success has been far above the average man. I have had several joint discussions. I have some protracted-meeting work this season, and some valuable time to offer some congregation."

From Earl M. Hodson, Moulton, Ala., June 8: "I. B. Bradley, now of Avon Park, Fla., has just been visiting his wife's people, and conducted for the congregation at Moulton a meeting from Sunday, May 29, to Sunday evening, June 5. During the week he preached only at night. The meeting was a very helpful one to our little congregation. While there was but one baptism, that of a young woman, a member of the Sunday school, all members and many not members were blessed. The sermons were in the main to the church."

Financial assistance is needed at Sylvester, Texas. Read what B. M. Dickey says: "We are a small body of Christ's followers, but we are in good working order. We have no house in which to worship. We have a lot on which to build, but we are not able financially. We have some mcney, but not enough to build. We ask all who read this to send us a little help, which will be thankfully received and highly appreciated, that we may build before winter. Send all checks to W. K. Dickey, Box 84, Sylvester, Texas, who will have it properly applied."

Jack Meyer, of Murfreesboro, Tenn., is a good song leader. He wishes to lead the song service in a number of meetings this summer. Any one wishing his services should write him at Murfreesboro, Tenn. He has attended the Da vid Lipscomb College for two years, and wishes to return next year in order to graduate in that institution. His return to the institution for graduation next year will depend on funds received during the summer. He is authorized to act as an agent for the Gospel Advocate. We hope that the churches will remunerate him liberally and also encourage him in his work for the Advocate.

From F. M. Little, Enterprise, Ala., June 7: "Last Lord's day was a fruitful day for the church of Christ in Montgoniery. Six persons placed their membership with us, and one made the good confession who will be baptized next Lord's-day evening. In addition to the regular contribution, two hundred and sixty dollars was pledged and given to help the congregation at Selma make their first thousand-dollar payment on the house of worship which they recently bought of the Cumberland Presbyterians. I am now at Enterprise preaching to interested audiences. There is more work than we can do. More preachers are needed."

James E. Scobey writes: "On the first Sunday in June I was at Hopkinsville, Ky., and preached both at the morning and evening meeting of the congregation. It had been a year since I had been there, and the numbers present at the meetings were greater than I had heretofore been accustomed to meet. The brethren there, and the sisters as well, seem to be earnestly devoted to the work of the Lord Last Sunday I was at Woodbury, Tenn., and preached at 11 A.M. and 3 P.M. Woodbury has, as I perceive, a well-settled and substantial membership. They are well taught and appreciate a sermon which carries the truth. Their protracted meeting was announced for the second Sunday in August, the preacher to be Price Billingsley. I am to be with my home congregation—Lawrence Avenue, in Nashville—next Sunday, and the fourth Sunday at Columbia."

From J. V. A. Traylor: "H. M. Phillips and I are in a good meeting here at Decherd, Tenn. No additions up to this time, but great interest is being manifested."

W. A. Austin, in sending in his renewal to the Gospel Advocate, says: "Financial matters are rather hard with me just now, but I must have the dear old Advocate continue to visit my home, even if the price should double what it now is."

From R. D. Smith, Denton, Texas, June 6: "Our meeting started yesterday with a very large attendance and showing the best interest we have yet seen in the work in Denton. F. B. Shepherd, of Amarillo, is to reach us to-day and continue over the third Sunday. A great meeting is expected."

James E. Laird, Piggott, Ark., writes, June 10: "I am now in an interesting meeting at Hayti, Mo. I am conducting this meeting under our new tent. I am expecting a good meeting. Owing to some changes in my plan for meetings, I have the last two weeks in July I can arrange for a meeting somewhere."

From Hiram Thomas, Kanima, Okla., June 2: "The meeting at this place, conducted by L. E. Stewart, of Dustin, Okla., came to a close on Sunday night, with fourteen baptized, three restored, and much good done. Brother Stewart preached the truth without compromise. No church will make any mistake in securing his services as a gospel preacher."

From R. A. Craig, Louisville, Ky., June 6: "Last Sunday I was at Campbell Street Church, morning and evening. I went to Shelbyville in the afternoon. Campbell Street Church is up and doing under the leadership of M. C. Kurfees, and is moving onward and upward. If you come to Louisville, visit the Campbell Street Church. They will do you good."

From R. E. L. Taylor, Decherd, Tenn., June 8: "I am now in a good meeting at Algood. Large crowds at each service, and the house packed full at night. Two have been baptized to date. This is a prejudiced town, but it seems that we have about removed most of the prejudice. This is the home of E. G. Collins. He is doing a good work here. Every one seems to love him. He is leading the song service."

From R. L. Colley, Camden, Ark., June 6: "Yesterday marked the beginning of the meeting at this place with very much encouragement. We had the largest crowd last night we have ever had in the history of the church in Camden. We are bending every effort to make the meeting a success. Remember us in your prayers. The disciples here want to extend their sincere thanks to all who have helped them to buy a place of worship."

From J. Oscar Paisley, Metropolis, Ill., June 11: "L. E. Jones, of Troy, Tenn., closed a very successful meeting with the church at this place last night. The meeting continued twelve days, and six persons confessed their faith in Christ and were buried with him in baptism. One of them was an old lady, seventy-seven years old: two of them are blind. The church has been greatly strengthened through Brother Jones' earnest, zealous, godly efforts in love."

From J. S. Dunn, Ardmore, Okla., June 8: "The meeting at Longview resulted in two added and the church aroused to greater activity. I am now at this place, with good interest and hearing. Five added to date. The brethren here have the best church house we have in the State of Oklahoma. An active evangelist is needed to spend all his time here, and the congregation will support a good man for such work. I go next to Gainesville, beginning there on the third Sunday in this month."

From A. J. Lowe, Box 806, Ardmore, Okla., June 7: "Not seeing any report from here, I feel like a few words would be appreciated. Last Lord's day was the beginning of a protracted meeting conducted by J. S. Dunn, of Dallas, Texas, in our new house. Interest good and large crowds. Three additions last night. Some visiting brethren are present. The brethren all appreciate Brother Dunn and are working to have the best meeting for the cause of Christ. All is well and all are working."

From J. A. Hudson, Oklahoma City, Okla., June 9: "Last Sunday was an enjoyable day for us. We had two excellent services at the Tenth and Francis Streets Church, this city. For the first time since I began work here nearly two years ago we had more people than we could seat at the morning hour. There were four additions. Our new church building is going up as per contract. It will be a commodious structure with an auditorium that will seat six hundred people, full basement for Sunday-school work, rest rooms, vestibules, etc."

From J. G. Allen, Muskogee, Okla., June 7: "Our protracted meeting began on May 15 and continued two weeks, with four baptized and three taking membership with us. The tent would not hold the people at times. This meeting was held in the neighborhood where we will build our house soon. William Whaley did the preaching, and did it well. Brother Whaley is a fine teacher and a godly man, free from any hobby, which is indeed refreshing in this age of hobbyism. We are using the tent given us by the Nashville brethren, as represented by S. F. Morrow and my son, James A. Allen."

Thomas E. Milholland writes: "The meeting at Tioga, Texas, closed with thirty-one added to their local strength—twelve by baptism. This was a great meeting. I was told that three hundred people were turned away, unable to get in the house. Eight months ago on this same spot the writer urged the faithful few to believe God and take hold of his promises. Then we were under an old show tent; now we have a splendid new house, worth, perhaps, thirteen thousand dollars. The little band, led by Willis, Kreager, has made a very great sacrifice to do this work. V. O. Tedlie was our song leader. He is a fine leader. We thank God and take courage."

From D. B. Whittle, Palmetto, Fla.: "John Hayes has just closed a meeting here in Palmetto, with no additions, but the best of attention by those who came to hear him. We are making arrangements to meet here on Sunday afternoons for Bible study with our friends and a few members of the church who find it difficult to go to Bradentown for the morning worship. We will also have preaching as often as possible, and hope to soon have a small congregation established here. I will also state that the congregations at Bradentown, Manatee, Cortez, and Oneco are all coöperating with us in this work, and we know we will soon be able to make a big showing for the cause of Christ here."

From Earnest C. Love, Fresno, Cal., June 6: "Our tent meeting is now in its fifth week, and this is the last, as we expect to close on June 12. We had a good day again yesterday. Three services and basket dinner in Roeding Park. There was one confession and baptism, which made really four services. This is the last week of the Fresno Home and School for this term. We had to abandon our program, as there was so much to do—irrigating, building, plumbing, printing, etc.—that we simply could not get up a program without neglecting something more important. For the benefit of our friends, we are glad to say that our well and pumping plant seems to be an unqualified success. We seem to have plenty of water for the ten acres. We will have something definite to announce in regard to buildings for the Home and School in a short time."

From Andrew Perry, Kosciusko, Miss., June 9: "I preached again at Cork Schoolhouse, near Ackerman, on Saturday night. On Sunday we had an all-day meeting, with dinner on the ground. Five additions by membership. Members were there from Ackerman, Sturgis, Reform, and Shady Grove. I preached three sermons, also again on Monday night. On Tuesday I came to Sturgis, where I remained till this morning. I listened to three good sermons by M. C. Cayce, who is holding a tent meeting there. Brother Jeffcoat is looking after the song service. There are nine members now at that point, and we have hopes of there being several additions there. There are between fifty and seventy attending the day meetings, and many more than can be seated under the tent at the night services. The attention and preaching is excellent. I am tow here at Nial Schoolhouse, where I intend to preach each night and over Lord's day and on till Wednesday night next."

Tice Elkins sends the following report of Brother Elam's meeting at Fort Worth, Texas: "The protracted meeting at Southside church of Christ, Fort Worth, closed on Sunday, June 5. Brother Elam, of Tennessee, did the preaching, and his lessons were powerful and edifying to the church. There were none baptized, but we think the teaching put forth will lead to that in goodly numbers later. This meeting followed the Central Church revival, which was also a great and good meeting in many respects. We all love Brother Elam, and believe his work here will live long. The following preachers attended the meetings from time to time: C. J. Robinson, D. F. Draper, W. K. Rose, T. W. Phillips, Claud McClung, Ben West, H. W. Busby, N. L. Clark, J. F. Morrow, G. W. Newman, J. E. Black, W. E. Morgan, J. C. Cask, Fred Killian, M. G. Bryant, Dr. Lowery, Ncble McKillip, M. H. Moore, Ed. Stewart, R. L. Whiteside, and many others whose names I failed to secure. Brother Elam endeared himself to all, and we live in hopes of hearing him again. The writer had charge of the song work at Southside."

BY J. C. McQUIDDY.

Mrs. James Tankersley, Prattville, Ala., wishes an explanation of Luke 16: 8, 9. The passages read: "And his lord commended the unrighteous steward because he had done wisely: for the sons of this world are for their own generation wiser than the sons of the light. And I say unto you, Make to yourselves friends by means of the mammon of unrighteousness; that, when it shall fail, they may receive you into the eternal tabernacles." Faithfulness of the unjust steward is not commended, but his wisdom. He had used the means in his hands so as to make friends to help him when he no longer had his office. So we are urged to so use our means as to be helpful to others and in such a way that Christ and his Father will receive us into the eternal tabernacles. Some day all of our earthly treasures will fail. They can do us no good when we come to die. They will not enter us through the pearly gates into the city of our God. So we should be wise in the use of our means in this world, so that when we die Christ will receive us into glory. Unfortunately, many men use mammon in a way that is not righteous, and so when they come to die Christ will not receive them into glory. We are not to understand that money is not righteous, but most men handle it in an unrighteous manner.

Blaine Speer, of Buckhorn, New Mexico, asks the following questions: "(1) What does it take to constitute fellowship as mentioned in 1 John 1: 7? (2) Does "the blood of Jesus" mentioned in that verse have reference to the wine in the communion service? (3) When a Christian commits sin, and repents and prays God to forgive him, does he receive pardon then, or must he wait until the next Lord's day and partake of the bread and wine before he receives forgiveness? (4) In Col. 3: 3 we find the following language: 'For ye died, and your life is hid with Christ in God?' What does it mean?"

- 1. The passage in 1 John 1: 7 reads: "But if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus his Son cleanseth us from all sin." "Fellowship" means communion. All Christians who walk in the light have fellowship one with another, have communion one with another and with the Lord Jesus Christ. It is only those who walk in the light that have fellowship one with the other. Those who do evil and are disobedient do not have fellowship with the obedient.
- 2. The blood of Christ in this passage does not refer to the wine used in the communion service. The fruit of the vine is symbolic of the shed blood, and, therefore, represents it.
- 3. Whenever a Christian does what God requires him to do in order to be forgiven, God forgives him. He certainly does not have to wait until some future time in order to be forgiven.
- 4. In obedience to God the believer dies to the love and practice of sin. This death is a reason for his not loving earthly things. Christians die to the world and crucify the lusts of the flesh. The life of a Christian is hid with Christ in God. The world does not see his true life, the eternal principle within. His life is in Christ and can never be fully manifested until he shall be manifest. The tree in the winter is not dead, but its life is hidden. When the spring comes, its life shows itself in glory. Even so it is with the Christian. "For the earnest expectation of the creation waiteth for the revealing of the sons of God."

W. J. McAlister, of Fayetteville, Tenn., sends the following to the Query Department: "I have been believing that we would know each other in heaven. Some preachers write like we would, and others say we will not. Let us hear from you through the Gospel Advocate." We should be far more concerned about getting to heaven than we should be about whether we shall know each other there. If we are so fortunate as to reach heaven, we will be perfectly satisfied with things as we find them. In heaven there will be joy and a peace that passeth all understanding. The great fight of the Christian to-day should be to overcome the world, the flesh, and the devil, so as to be prepared to enter heaven, which is a prepared place for a prepared people. All should do the will of God and knew each other here, and should be kind, gentle, and forbearing with each other in this life, as this is absolutely necessary in order to enter heaven. There are evidences in the Bible, however, that Christians will know each other in heaven. The rich man knew Lazarus in Abraham's bosom. Moses and Elijah were recognized on the mount of transfiguration. The seventh and twenty-fifth chapters of Matthew bear incontestable evidence that we shall in the future state know who we were and what we did in this life. This teaches us that we shall know with whom we worked and with whom we associated. The rich man in torment remembered that he had five brethren back in this world. This all goes to show that we will know with whom we associated here in this life when we reach the future state. To do this, we must know ourselves; and if we know ourselves, we will know those with whom we associated.

W. N. Abernathy, Westport, Tenn., sends in the following: "In the church here there is quite a strong sentiment against the sisters taking any part in the services, except to sit and listen to what is said by the men and to partake of the emblems. My position is that woman's relation to the church is the same as her relation to the home. In the home she may enjoy all the privileges and perform all the duties that her husband may perform, so far as her ability allows, so long as she remains in subjection to him. If the husband be dead, then she becomes the head of the family, as there is no man over whom she may usurp authority. In the church, if there is no brother who can or will teach or look after the business, it is her duty to do this herself. If some sister is able to instruct, and the elders call on her to do so, I think it is proper for her to do so in a quiet and modest way. Please give us your understanding of the matter'

Here is what the Bible says on the subject of women keeping silence in !! thes: "Let the women keep silence in the churches: for it is not permitted unto them to speak; but let them be in subjection, as also saith the law." (1 Cor. 14: 34.) "Let a woman learn in quietness with all subjection. But I permit not a woman to teach, nor to have dominion over a man, but to be in quietness. For Adam was first formed, then Eve; and Adam was not beguiled, but the woman being beguiled hath fallen into transgression: but she shall be saved through her childbearing, if they continue in faith and love and sanctification with sobriety." (1 Tim. 2: 11-15.) The teaching that is forbidden is public teaching, or that teaching that usurps authority over man. A woman is permitted to teach a class of children so long as she does it in a modest way. Elders in the church that would call on the sisters to do the teaching should apologize to the church for permitting themselves to be called "elders." Elders are to be apt to teach. They are to tend and feed the flock. I certainly think such elders should get out of the way and give the sisters a chance. So long as the church has scripturally qualified elders, I do not think that they should call on the sisters to teach in public in a modest or quiet way. The elders need to be taught, rather than to encourage the sisters to teach.

The Annual Meeting.

BY J. C. M'O.

Another annual meeting of the Directors of the Tennessee Orphan Home has come and gone. The last meeting was undoubtedly the most harmonious ever held, and more was accomplished than in any preceding meeting. Many visitors cheered the directors and the management of the Home by their presence. A number of good suggestions were made by the Advisory Committee. The directors will adopt the suggestions and make needed improvements in the Home as rapidly as the funds at their disposal will permit.

It was learned from the treasurer's report that two hundred and forty-three children had been cared for in the Home during the last four years. Seventy-four orphans are now in the Home. The children in the Home are well fed, well clothed, and are happy. Any man with a soul in him will take delight in feeding and caring for orphans, if he will only visit these orphans and see how well they are cared for. What a great and noble work it is to give a home to the homeless, to feed the hungry, to warm the cold, and to give the thirsty drink! Before turning a deaf ear to the cries of orphan children we should remember that our blessed Master, who spent his days in doing good and in blessing others, in feeding the hungry, in giving sight to the blind and hearing to the deaf, and whose whole life was devoted to destroying sin, was so poor that he had no home of his own. We hear him exclaiming on one occasion: "The foxes have holes, and the birds of the heaven have nests; but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head." (Matt. 8: 20.) I repeat, what a blessed work it is to care for orphan children! Will you not reflect for just a short time what may be the great results coming from the housing, training, and educating two hundred and forty-three children? Many of these children have been placed in ideal Christian homes. In these homes they will have the very best of attention, care, and training. In this life we can never know just what the result of this work will be. Thousands of thousands of ransomed souls may hymn praises to Jehovah throughout eternity as the result of the good that has been done. The man who never engages in such work must think meanly of his own existence. Every one is put here for some purpose and has some work to do. Our sweetest joys and happiness come to us from doing just such work as this. I wish I could arouse all people to care for orphans who are now turning a deaf ear to the cries of orphan children. Some of the very children now in this Home will in all probability make preachers of the gospel. Some will probably make teachers; others, physicians; and it may be that some will become rulers in our country. It is certain that the responsibilities which now rest upon our shoulders will rest upon the shoulders of these boys and girls grown to a useful manhood and a noble womanhood.

The readers of the Gospel Advocate have been very liberal in relieving the distress of suffering children in Central Europe, Armenia, and China. While we have not one word of discouragement for the work done in this respect, yet we would like to emphasize the importance of doing more work at home in taking care of helpless children. The directors of this Home are determined to use the funds committed to their trust wisely. They have been economical and have secured the very best of results with the means placed in their hands. During the last four years the Home has been paid entirely out of debt and an endowment fund of nine thousand dollars has been provided and invested in bonds. It is thought that the value of the Home is new something near fifty thousand dollars. Of course this includes the farm (which is being improved), the stock on the farm, the building itself, and all furnish-

While the directors and matrons of the Home are to be congratulated on the work that has been done, yet we all feel there is room for improvement. No man should ever be fully satisfied with what he has accomplished for humanity. Every one should be reaching out after a better, more useful, and more noble life. "It is always better further on." The Advisory Committee of sisters, all of whom are splendid housekeepers, have recommended a number of needed improvements, all looking to the health and proper care of the children. More bath tubs and commodes must be provided. A laundry for the Home appears to be absolutely necessary. Single beds would be far better than double ones. Children are brought here from all parts of the country. While a physician's certificate of health is required, sometimes children will get into the Home that are not healthy. Care should be taken to see that the health of the helpless is protected. In order that improvements may be made, it is necessary for liberal contributions to be made by those who are interested in the work. We can hardly expect a man who has no interest in such work to make a contribution, but we have learned from experience and from the liberality of Christians that all the necessary means will be provided. We would hate to believe otherwise. Every time a man gives fifty, one hundred, or five hundred dollars to such work as caring for the orphans, he is laying up treasures in heaven. How much better to lay up treasures in heaven than to lay up treasures on earth, which may be swept away in a moment! Treasures laid up in heaven will never fail.

It was deemed advisable by the Board of Directors not to raise money by means of festivals, tag days, or any other human invention for the Home. A resolution was unanimously spread on the minutes by the directors commending our vice president and treasurer, John W. Fry, for calling off the tag day that had been proposed. It was understood that the Board of Directors of the institution would not be a party to tag days, but that if the world or the denominations wished to have a tag day of their own entirely independent and separate from the management of the Home, they were at perfect freedom to do as they liked. If they saw proper, after raising such funds, to present them to the Home, the directors would accept them and use them for the care of children. There is no sectarianism in feeding or taking care of orphans. Every man should engage heartily in such work. In this Home we have children from the various denominations. The directors, however, must see that what they do, and what they ask the churches of Christ to do, is in harmony with the will of God. We should purpose in our hearts to give, and to give cheerfully as the Lord has prospered us. Tag days have been so abused that a man who is usually tagged does it out of courtesy to the young ladies and with no thought of giving to the Lord. Many a man gives a quarter and is tagged simply to get rid of the taggers. Such gifts are not pleasing to the Lord. God requires a man to give cheerfully and in a way that will honor and glorify him. I am sure that tag days have been overworked; yet I have no desire to try to control the world, the denominations, or anybody else who is determined to proceed in such a course. I can only teach the truth and be responsible for my own actions. I am not responsible for the way that other men make and handle their money, but I am responsible for the way that I make what money I have and for the uses to which I put it. I am glad to say that the Home is in a flourishing condition and that I believe that its condition is largely due to the efforts of our vice president and treasurer, John W. Fry. His whole soul appears to be in the work; he thinks about it and likes to talk about it. If we only had a dozen people interested in it as he is, the good work that we are doing in the Tennessee Orphan Home would be increased a hundredfold.

We are asking Christians to make a liberal contribution for the Home on the first Lord's day in July. We believe all that is necessary is to call the attention of the churches and Christians to the fact that more funds are needed for improvements in the Home. A liberal contribution now will be doubly helpful and appreciated. Send all contributions to the Tennessee Orphan Home, Columbia, Tenn.

Regard for the Word of God.

BY E. A. E.

Last night (June 1) after the sermon in the meeting with the South Side Church, Fort Worth, Texas, Brother J. P. Sewell, being present, was requested to say something of encouragement or warning or anything edifying as he saw fit. He emphasized the power of the word of God and the need of preaching it. Afterwards, as we walked down the aisle together, he repeated with emphasis the crying need of preaching only and simply the gospel, the sad failure of many to do this, and said that he was doing all in his power to impress all students in his school who preach with the great importance of preaching and teaching the word of God-" all things that pertain unto life and godliness," and not theories and speculations on the word of God and not the dogmas and wisdom and learning of men. And we agreed that, with all the learning preachers may possess, the only salvation now for the church as well as for the world is the gospel of Christ; hence, the sin of failing to preach it and of preaching something else is great.

Many students, both young men and young ladies, attend this school at Abliene every year; and when they go from there deeply impressed with the power and the all-sufficiency of the word of God and with the fullness and completeness of the church as God's building and workshop, temple and kingdom on earth, they will prove a great power for good.

But I have heard recently a story like this: A countryman and brother of some age and experience, of a practically good education, of some general information, of true piety, and a long-time student of the Bible, offered some information and correction of a mistake a young educated (!) preacher had made; but—0, no, said the young man; he knew; he was not to be corrected; he was educated, and was right. He was not truly educated, or he would have humbly heard this brother's suggestions and sincerely thanked him.

A fine and devout young man, anxious to accomplish the greatest good, desirous to preach, once asked Brother E. G. Sewell what university in England he should attend in order to become the best equipped for preaching. Brother Sewell replied: "The power is in the word." This young man was my schoolmate and related this to me. What help that was to him, I cannot say; he never preached. It has been a great help to me.

For I am not ashamed of the gospel: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek." (Rom. 1: 16.)

The anathemas of God rest upon any man or even an angel from heaven who would preach any other gospel. (Gal. 1: 6-10.) The man who, in the face of this, would dare preach any other gospel, or even pervert the gospel of Christ, courts destruction and seeks to destroy others.

Just here, too, Paul declares that if he were still seeking to please men and to gain their favor he could not please God. These two things can never go together. Let all preachers, educated or uneducated, old or young, learn this. The very fact of seeking to please men and to gain their favor is displeasing to God.

On the other hand, it seems sadly true that the less education some men have—the less of grammar, of the proper meaning and pronunciation of ordinary words, of historical facts and characters, and especially the less of the Bible and God's dealing with men they know, the more they think they know. Ignorance is no virtue; it may be a crime. Egotism, self-assertion, self-conceit, and devotion to one's opinions are not faithfulness to God, but the reverse.

Let preachers know all the science possible, all the languages they can learn, all the mathematics they can take, and all the psychology in the world; but with all this, let them determine to know nothing, "save Jesus Christ, and him crucified."

Yea verily, and I count all things to be loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord: for whom I suffered the loss of all things, and do count them but refuse, that I may gain Christ, and be found in him, not having a righteousness of mine own, even that which is of the law, but that which is through faith in Christ, the righteousness which is from God by faith: that I may know him, and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings, becoming conformed unto his death; if by any means I may attain unto the resurrection from the dead." (Phil 3: 8-11.)

That which Paul counts loss and even refuse, preachers must not count the main or principal thing. All this he gave up "for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ," his Lord; and this excellent "knowledge of Christ" cannot now be exchanged for that which Paul counts loss and refuse. The one thing with Paul was to so live and work, to so preach and pray, as to be saved at last (read Phil. 3 entire), and in this way to save others.

On the other hand, with all of a preacher's ignorance of literature, history, the sciences, dictionaries, grammars, etc., let him not show his denseness by decrying true education and great learning; but let him in meekness and modesty, honesty, and frankness, humility and becoming piety, unpretentiously "preach the word," and God will turn his Christian virtues into greatest good.

Then, with little or great learning, let none preach themselves, but Christ Jesus as Lord, and themselves servants for Jesus' sake. (2 Cor. 4: 5.) Let none mistake ignorance for faith or learning for the gospel.

All the machinery of the world, from the child's tricycle to the finest automobile, from the dump cart to the mightiest locomotive, was not made in order to use grease ("lubricating oils," if one prefers); but such oils are used to preserve the machinery and to enable it to accomplish the more. All machinery well oiled will run more smoothly, run faster, endure and accomplish more, and last longer; but the machinery was not made for the oil, but the oil for the machinery. The oil is not the machinery, and it imparts no strength to the material parts of the machinery. Even the paint is not the machinery. It may sometimes hide the defects of the machinery. Education in its ordinary meaning is not the man. It does not change him any more than oil and paint change the material and purpose of machinery. There are ignorant thieves and educated-well-oiled and polished-thieves; there are ignorant scoundrels and educated ones. So there are ignorant good men and most highly educated and learned good men. Education brings out what is in a man; it oils the machinery and enables him to run more smoothly, "to get there" quicker, and to accomplish more of whatever he undertakes. The heart must be right in the sight of God before an education can be used to the greatest advantage.

It is important to teach the young how to make a living, but it is more important to teach how to live after making a living. Just so, it is far more important to teach the young how to use an education, after they have become educated, than it is to educate them.

The Young Man's Problem of Higher Education.

BY F. W. SMITH.

Under the above topic, Z. T. Sweeney, in the Christian Standard of January 20, 1920, had the following contribution:

Dear Brother Abbott: I am inclosing you herewith a letter which is a fair sample of many that I receive from time to time:

"Dear Brother Sweeney: I am twenty-two years old and will graduate from — school next June. I am anxious to receive a little more of higher education than the school here affords. I wish to be prepared for a useful ministry and would like to attend some school of higher instruction where I can receive an education in harmony with all modern science and discovery, and yet without impairment to my faith in Christianity. Do you know of such a school, and if so, will you recommend it to me?

Fraternally yours.

From the number of such letters received, I presume that a great many of our young men are animated by the same motives as the writer. I wish to say to such that I do know of a school that will answer all such requirements, it is located in New England and has a large corps of professors, all wide-awake, learned in their several departments, and having done much to develop the great field of Christian scholarship. There are twenty-four such instructors and professors, all concerned with the great task of giving a thorough training to young men and women who are looking forward to various types of Christian service. These teachers have all been carefully selected, are thoroughly competent, scholars in their several departments, are all earnestly devoted Christian people, giving their lives to the cause of Christ and the training and preparation of ministers and workers in the great fields at home and abroad. They face all the problems of modern life, but do it with a deep, abiding Christian faith.

In addition to the teachers, the school has one of the largest libraries in the country and one of the best organized, within its field, that is constantly growing and being developed so as to allow the best of advantages to those who are preparing for service in all parts of the world. The school has always had the reputation, and still maintains it, of being deeply faithful to the fundamentals of the Christian faith on all the essential elements of the gospel. It stands for what is known as the evangelical system of belief. I regard it as far superior to either Yale or Harvard in preparing young people for Christian service.

Any young man or woman desiring further information concerning the institution can address me at Columbus, Ind., and I will see that they have full information furnished. I can arrange for special financial assistance to a number of young men preparing for the ministry that will greatly aid them in the expense connected with their attendance at the school. I am not caring to advertise the school to the general readers of the Christian-Evangelist, but I hope to reach those interested by this letter. All you have to do is write me a letter, inclosing no postage nor incurring any other expense.

Sincerely and fraternally,
Z. T. Sweeney.

Under the heading, "In the Book World," in the Christian-Evangelist January 20, 1921, we have the following:

HEBREW LEADERS FROM MANASSEH TO JOHN THE BAPTIST.

Prof. Henry Thatcher Fowler, who holds the chair of Biblical Literature and History in Brown University, has written this volume for the "Great Leader Series," which aims to meet the needs of "moral and religious secondary education." Prof. E. Hershey Sneath, Ph.D., LL.D., Yale University, is the general editor of the series.

The analysis of the great leaders of Hebrew history is brief and clear. Any boy in the adolescent period will be able without much difficulty to grasp the meaning. Take this paragraph on Job's hope of immortality, and note how clearly it sets forth Job's wavering feelings on the subject:

"Job longs to see God face to face; he is sure that if he could come before him he could clear himself. In this longing he reaches a momentary faith that after death he will be able to find him. From this high hope he falls back to his earlier conviction that the world of the dead is only a place of oblivion where suffering will be over. A clear faith in immortality, a belief in a heaven where the wrongs of this world will be righted, had not yet come into the Jewish religion. Job comes nearer to expressing this faith than any previous character, but it is not yet a clear and constant hope. He does see that if he could believe in a future life, he could endure all the suffering and sorrow here. He ends protesting his innocence and not understanding why God punishes the guiltless."

While Job did not succeed in solving the mystery of the government of the world, his experience sets its seal of approval on a man who honestly questioned what had been believed about God and who tried to know and understand God for himself, and to such a one was vouch-safed "a vision of the wisdom and power of God that satisfied his eager, longing soul." The writer sets forth the mistake of Job's friends in this clear paragraph:

"The idea held by Job's three friends that a peculiar misfortune is a judgment sent by God for peculiar sin dies hard. It was still held by the Jews in Jesus' day. thought that for a man to be born blind was a judgment for sin. Jesus taught that those whose blood cruel Herod mingled with the sacrifices and those on whom the tower of Siloam fell were not sinners above other men. Yet, even down to the present day, many sincere Christians judge life as Job's discredited friends judged it. The great prophet who wrote the poem of the Suffering Servant saw that God's true servants suffer for the sins of others more than the sinners themselves. Our Lord Jesus, the supreme Suffering Servant, is ever the final refutation of the idea that long life and all earthly prosperity are the natural rewards of virtue. It is true that to live up to the general moral standards of the community in which we are usually furthers prosperity, but it is equally true that those who rise far above the standards of their fellows are made to The sure reward of virtue is not health nor suffer for it. wealth, but the peace of God that passeth all understanding, a peace that may be found in sorrow and suffering and may be lost in prosperity."

As for the book of Jonah, it "seems to be an allegory in which Jonah is Israel, the whale Babylon, and the great thought of the whole is that God cares for all peoples, even the most wicked, and that he desires his people to share his purposes of mercy to all mankind." In this view it ceases to be a narrative of ancient wonders, or merely a silly tale that is told, but a vehicle for covering truth "that lies above the level of almost all the rest of the Old Testament." The author regards it as the forerunner of those wonderful parables of our Lord, such as the good Samaritan and the Prodigal Son, "with their lesson of a compassionate God and a broad and generous humanity."

This is not only a good study for boys in the adolescent period, but for those of riper years as well. It frequently happens that what is simple enough for the understanding of boys can also be understood by adults!

Under the title, "Logical Sequence," the editor of the Western Recorder, a Baptist journal, gives to his readers this:

We have been criticized for asserting that any one who doubts any part of the Bible will quite likely, sooner or later, discard the entire Bible. The following from the Christian Century (Disciples of Mr. Campbell) is a case in point and quite pointed:

in point, and quite pointed:

"No one ever reads all these books, except the technical scholars, and they are a hindrance to popular knowledge of the volume. The major portion of the books of Numbers, Leviticus, Deuteronomy, Chronicles, Ezra, Nehemiah, Esther, Ecclesiastes, and Ezekiel, and much of the books of Exodus, Judges, Joshua, Proverbs, Lamentations, Daniel, Joel, Nahum, Habakkuk, Zephaniah, and one or two portions of the New Testament, could be left out with advantage."

So, then, according to this ecclesiastical Ishmaelite, practically one-third of the number of books of the Bible should be omitted from future editions. The Century fails to tell us how much of its remnant Bible is inspired.

Really we are not surprised at this piratical profanation, upon the part of the Christian (?) Century. There is but one logical conclusion for the destructive critic—the unqualified rejection of the Scriptures. This, perhaps, is what a large majority of the higher (destructive) critics have done, and they would doubtless confess the fact were it not for the monthly stipend they filch from denominational treasuries.

All too long have the denominations tolerated this traitorous tribe, and that, too, to their own undoing. When a man declares that Genesis is a myth and that the Bible is only inspired in spots, the hand of church fellowship should be promptly withdrawn. These leeches, who despise the blood, are sucking away the lifeblood of the churches. Let them be to us as a publican and a sinner.

With such onslaughts against the Bible in the house of its professed friends, is it to be wondered at that a young man who has respect for God and his word is perplexed on the subject to which an appeal was made to Z. T. Sweeney? There are the fewest number of colleges and universities in the world to-day that are not honeycombed with this most dangerous species of infidelity. Note this: "As for the book of Jonah, it seems to be an allegory in which Jonah is Israel, the whale Babylon, and the great thought of the whole is that God cares for all," etc. The author says: "In this view it ceases to be a narrative of ancient wonders, or merely a silly tale that is told," etc. If it is a "silly tale," then Jesus Christ was unable to detect it: for he told it as a fact, and not as a myth. "For as Jonah was three days and three nights in the whale's belly, so shall the Son of man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth." (Matt. 12: 40.)

While this journal fully indorses the Western Recorder's condemnation of the Christian Century's infidelity in whittling away the Bible, it must utter a solemn protest against the Recorder's misrepresentation of Alexander Campbell in that the Recorder terms these destructive higher critics "Disciples of Mr. Campbell." If Mr. Campbell ever had a disciple, he was not of the class to which the Christian Century belongs; for Mr. Campbell was a devout believer in, and a powerful advocate of, the divine inspiration of the Bible from beginning to end. Whose disciples are those higher-up destructive critics in the Baptist Church, Brother Porter? When you discover that fact, you will also have discovered whose disciples the Christian Century folk are, too.

I close this warning to parents regarding the schools to which they send Their children with a splendid tribute to the Christian religion by the renowned Henry Watterson:

Surely the future looks black enough, yet it holds a hope, a single hope. One, and one power only, can arrest the descent and save us. That is the Christian religion. Democracy is but a side issue. The paramount issue is the religion of Christ, and him crucified; the bed rock of civilization, the source and resource of all that is worth having in the world that is and that gives promise in the world to come, not as an abstraction, but as a mighty force and principle of being. If the world is to be saved from destruction, it will be saved alone by the Christian religion.

Mr. Chenault's Gift to the David Lipscomb College.

BY J. C. M'Q.

In order that our readers may know the exact conditions on which the gift of fifty thousand dollars was donated to the David Lipscomb College, we publish in full the paper presenting the gift and also the paper presenting the conditions on which the Board of Directors accepted it. The directors congratulate themselves on receiving the services of E. A. Elam as teacher in the Bible chair during his life, or so long as he is able to teach. It is sincerely hoped that he may add much strength in teaching the Bible in this institution. It is more important to study and know the Bible and to practice it than any other book in the world. In fact, no man can go wrong or can make any blunder by taking the word of God just as it is and living in harmony with its sacred precepts. The directors realize that more and more attention should be given to teaching the word of God. The man who knows and practices the word of God makes the best farmer, the best merchant, the best physician, and the best citizen.

These papers very clearly show that the David Lipscomb College has not received any immediate help from this gift other than receiving the services as teacher of E. A. Elam without charge. The present wants and needs of the institution are not relieved by this gift of fifty thousand dollars. The institution is as much in need of funds to-day as it has ever been. It is hoped that our readers will readily realize this and that many will make liberal donations in order to successfully carry forward the great work in which the institution is engaged.

But here is the paper stating the donation and the terms:

February 12, 1921.

Mr. A. B. Lipscomb, President, Board of Directors, David Lipscomb College, Nashville, Tenn.

Dear Sir: It is a great pleasure to me to donate to the David Lipscomb College, formerly the Nashville Bible School, located at Nashville, Tenn., the sum of fifty thousand ($50,000) dollars, to be paid as follows: Ten thousand ($10,000) dollars on March 10, 1921, and ten thousand ($10,000) each succeeding month until July 10, 1921, which payment shall complete the donation.

This donation is made through my profound respect for the Bible as the will of God, and my desire to aid in this way in teaching it to the young; and is for the purpose of endowing a chair of the Bible in the said David Lipscomb College, to be known as the E. A. Elam chair, the proceeds of which donation are to be used in the support of teachers of the Bible and studies connected with the study of the Bible in this college.

However, this donation is made upon the condition that it shall be used always in harmony with the present deed and character of said David Lipscomb College, in which the Bible is taught daily as a textbook to all pupils alike, and without theological opinions and doctrines of men, without any phase of infidelity and what is now called "higher criticism," and without any innovations upon the work of the church of the New Testament or the worship of God as set forth in the New Testament.

Through my confidence in the integrity and faith of E. A. Elam and his ability to teach the Bible, I place this donation in the hands of the directors of the David Lipscomb College, to be invested and applied according to his approval, the proceeds of which I wish to be used for his support in teaching the Bible in this college during his lifetime, either while in active service or emeritus, unless in his own conscientious convictions he sees he can serve God and men more effectually in some other way. In that case, the directors of said college may use the proceeds of the endowment to fill the chair with some well-qualified man, or use it in supporting different teachers of the Bible in this college, according to their best judgment.

In case the David Lipscomb College shall ever be diverted from the purposes set out in its deed and charter and the conditions of this endowment, then, and in that event, this endowment is to go to that part of the school which still stands for the purpose as set out in said deed and charter; and in the event there is no such remaining part of the David Lipscomb College, this endowment is to go to the nearest school which teaches the New Testament, together with the whole Bible, as set out in the third paragraph of this letter; and in case there is no such school, then this endowment is to go to the churches of Christ in the city of Nashville which teach and practice the Bible as above stated, and is to be used for the promotion of the gospel according to the wisdom and discretion of the elders of said churches. Yours very truly, N. B. CHENAULT.

Acting as agent for, and by the authority of, the Board of Directors of David Lipscomb College, this donation is accepted by me in highest appreciation and sincerest thankfulness.

E. A. ELAM, Agent,
Board of Directors, David Lipscomb College, Nashville.

Tenn.

Below we give the conditions on which the Board of Directors accepted the gift of fifty thousand dollars:

Resolved, That the gift of fifty thousand dollars tendered by Mr. N. B. Chenault, of Wichita Falls, Texas, in letter of February 12, 1921, be accepted with gratitude, with the understanding that Brother E. A. Elam is selected as the teacher of the Bible to fill the chair of Bible study endowed by Mr. Chenault, and with the further understanding that he be subject, as other teachers, to the constitution and bylaws of the David Lipscomb College. It is further understood that in the event any difference should arise between Brother Elam and the trustees as a body that should result in his discontinuance as a teacher, the income from the Chenault donation shall go to him during his natural life as intended by the donor, but at his death the endowment, with the income, shall go actually into the hands and control of the board to be used as set forth in Mr. Chenault's letter of February 12, 1921. It is further understood that while the endowment is in the control of Brother Elam the Board of Trustees shall not be financially responsible. Neither shall Brother Elam be held financially responsible to the board for the handling of this fund.

State of Tennessee, Davidson County.

We, A. B. Lipscomb, president, and C. A. Moore, secretary, do hereby certify the foregoing is a true and correct copy of a resolution adopted and passed at a regular meeting of the Board of Directors of the David Lipscomb College held on the 16th day of April, 1921, as appears on page — of the minutes of said college, same having received a unanimous vote of all members of the Board.

This the 22d day of April, 1921.

Mr. Chenault accepted the modified conditions presented by the College and made the gift in accordance therewith, and so the matter is closed.

A Shepherd Song.

When God sought a King for his people of old,
He went to the fields to find him;
A Shepherd was he, with his crook and his lute,
And a following flock behind him,

When God looked to tell of his good will to men, And the Shepherd-King's Son whom he gave them; To shepherds, made meek a-caring for sheep, He told of a Christ sent to save them.

When Christ thought to tell of his love to the world, He said to the throng before him, "The good Shepherd giveth his life for the sheep"—And away to the cross they bore him.

When God sought a King for his people, for aye, He went to the grave to find him; And a Shepherd came back, Death dead in his grasp, And a following flock behind him.

O love of the sheep, O life from the dead,
O strength of the faint and the fearing;
A Shepherd is King, and his kingdom will come,
And the day of his coming is nearing.

They do not want to shine in the world, or to be rich or popular, or to have their own way and assert themselves, or to enjoy the relish of success. . . With all simplicity their hearts are bent on moving, doing, suffering, as the spirit of Christ in them may will. They have done with worldliness: they have done with self-seeking; they do not look for an easy life in the world where Christ was crucified. . . MISCELLANY

There will be a four-days' debate on the church question, at Cloverport, in West Tennessee, twenty miles south of Jackson, beginning on Tuesday, July 26. It is believed that this debate will be largely attended. J. D. Tant will represent the church of Christ; Claude Cayce, Primitive Baptist

W. H. Lawson writes: "The Turkey Creek High School, in Moore County, Tenn., where I have been teaching, closed on May 27, having seven to graduate. This year has been a very pleasant school year to me, and great interest was manifested among the students of this school, who desire to live the life worth while. The commencement sermon was delivered on May 22 by J. V. Armstrong Traylor, of Smyrna, Tenn., who has been preaching for the Hoover's Chapel congregation, near this place. An excellent sermon on the subject of 'Influence' was enjoyed by a large audi-

A news-dispatch from Columbia, Tenn., reads: "Perry P. Taylor, aged ninety years, one of Maury County's oldest and most highly respected citizens, died on Monday afterroon, June 6, at his residence at Neapolis, after an illness of only two days with congestion of the brain. Mr. Taylor was born, reared, and spent his entire life in this county, and had a large acquaintance. He was a member of the Christian Church and a splendid citizen. His wife pre-ceded him to the grave more than twenty years ago. The funeral was conducted Tuesday at the home of Tom H. Taylor, a nephew, on Knob Creek, by Elder W. S. Morton." Brother Taylor was a stanch friend of David Lipscomb College, which he remembered in his will.

Matthew C. Cayce writes from Columbus, Miss., May 31: "Our meeting here closed on Sunday night with a larger crowd in attendance than we were able to seat. With the four baptized, we leave a congregation of thirty members who will begin at once keeping house for the Lord in the building purchased from the Cumberland Presbyterians. We believe that many more are almost persuaded and that the seed sown will yet bear fruit. Among those baptized are two prominent business men of high standing, both of whom are thoroughly converted. They are now leaders in the business world, and are going to make leaders and workers in the church, for they are in dead earnest. The tent was shipped on Monday morning to Sturgis, where I am to begin a meeting next Lord's day. We have no congregation in Sturgis, but hope to establish one."

In connection with I. B. Bradley's meeting at Moulton, Ala., Earl M. Hodson writes: "One of the blessings Brother Bradley brought with him along with his sermons and songs was the visit of Sister Sarah Andrews, now home from Japan. She was prevailed upon to talk to us about the work in that far-off land. Without any exercises on Thursday evening, after a brief introduction by Brother Bradley, Sister Andrews told much of the manners and illustrated many of the customs of the Japanese in a talk that lasted more than an hour; she also showed many articles brought with her from the Flowery Kingdom. The house was filled with interested men and women and boys and girls to hear her, and many a one was filled with admiration at her earnestness, simplicity, and devotion to the cause of Christ. I would not have it thought that Sister Andrews went beyond what Christ would have her do. It was nothing more than a talk to tell men and women what men and women do not apparently believe-that is, that there are millions of people who know nothing of Christ. Brother Bradley preached a sermon with missions as the subject on the last Sunday evening he was here.

Called to his old stamping ground at Celina, Tenn., to preach a commencement sermon, M. L. Moore, of Bowling Green, Ky., found an unexpected opportunity to preach the gospel under the most favorable circumstances and with fine results. We rejoice in his report of this visit, which follows: "I went to Celina, my old home, to preach a com-We rejoice in his report of this visit, which folmencement sermon in May, and at the close of the sermon one made the good confession. So, at the earnest request of the church, I remained from Lord's day till Wednesday night, and fifteen were baptized and six returned to the fold. We were filled with joy and thanksgiving. We lost a brother, Willie Clark, during the meeting, his funeral occurring on Monday. There seems to be a splendid interest there in both church and school. J. D. Smith is in a meeting there now, and I do pray that many others may turn to the Lord. John Arms was with us for one service. It is always a blessing to see him. Words that are at my command cannot tell how I did enjoy the renewal of the ties of love that bind our hearts together. There shall ever be a place in my heart for the people of my childhood home. May the Lord bless them, and may they serve him with reverence and fear. I hope to return to the county of Clay for a meeting in August. Four were baptized here on the night of the fifth Lord's day in May."

With forty-seven graduates, including the high school and special departments, David Lipscomb College completed its thirtieth annual session yesterday. A very large crowd was in attendance for the final event.

Dr. J. S. Ward, formerly a member of the faculty and professor of science for a number of years, made the graduation address, emphasizing true education as a preparation for a life of service, and asserting that graduation with a college diploma is not to be considered an end in itself, but a means to an end.

Other numbers on the program were as follows: Salutatory, Miss Camilla Yarbrough; retrospection, "The Senior Boys," Miss Ferrell Kirby; oration, "Life's Mirror," Morton Shearer; retrospection, "Senior Girls," Clarence D. Massie; Class Will, Miss Pauline Allen Lynch; valedictory, J. Ridley Stroop.

The graduates were as follows:

Bachelor of Arts: James J. Reynolds, J. T. Rivenbark, Willie Rogers, Fred Senter, and J. Ridley Stroop; Misses Millie Sue Williams, Delmo Donoho, Helen Gardner, Mary Howard, Ferrell Kirby, Pauline Allen Lynch, Emma Lee McPherson, and Velma Lee Parton. Bachelor of Science: Joe Boswell, William Dean, George

L. Dunn, Clarence O. Massie, Morton Shearer, Howard Stubblefield, and Robert A. Watson; Misses Camilla Yarbrough, Helen Gilbreath, and Temple Gilbreath. Expression: Misses Minnie Jordan, Sarah Elizabeth Pettus, Ferrell Kirby, and Evelyn Wells.

Piano: Misses Helen Gardner, Elizabeth Pettus, and Evelyn Wells.

Commercial Department: Cleo Harris.

High School: Noel B. Cuff, Ethan Dunn, Gustus Albert Dunn, Jr., Cleo Harris, James Johnson, Clark Mercer, Joe T. Priestley, Rupert B. Watson, and Clarence A. Wilson; Misses Mary Alice Craig, Kathleen Greer, Grace Jones, Nona Jones, Minnie Jordon, Susie Mobley, and Sarah Elizabeth Pettus.

The presentation of diplomas was by Prof. Horace S. Lipscomb, dean of the college.

Charles F. Hardin, of Springfield, Mo., writes us a letter in which he conveys his impressions of Brother Cayce's evangelistic work and influence. He says: "Truly the Lord has been good to me in directing my way to labor with our dear brother, Matthew C. Cayce, in a mission meeting at Columbus. Miss. It is not necessary to report in detail the results of the meeting, as that has already been done; but I should like to say, brethren, that if a request is made for help there, to you personally or through the papers, I want to indorse it, and insist that you do your full duty as our Father sees it. I have known of many worthy calls, but the Columbus call is the most worthy one I have ever known. Brother Cayce is indeed a hero in the kingdom, a brave soldier in the fight of the cross. He has a marvelous influence over all who hear him. He presses the work of the Master with whole-hearted earnestness, inflexible faithfulness, sleepless energy, and a patience that knows no tiring, He has a simplicity of style and an accent of speech that twines the hearts of his hearers around the cross, all the time remaining transparent and invisible as If I ever saw a man that had more of the real spirit of the Master than Brother Cayce, and who preaches because his heart is full of the blessed story, I do not recall him. My heart grows tenderer each time I think of him as 'a voice crying in the wilderness' of sin, in the State of Mississippi. To be with him is but to resolve that you live better, give more, pray more, sing more, visit more sick and lonely, to preach the 'sweetest story' to those who have never heard, with more zeal and love. His every sermon is preached as though it were the last one he would preach and the last one we would ever hear. A person cannot hear him preach and go away not feeling his responsibility to God. Personally, he is a man of the sweetest spirit, the strongest faith, the most active zeal, the kindest manners, purest life, and the firmest convictions of any man If ever met. If he has a weakness or a fault, I did not discover it. I was too busily engaged admiring and loving him to look for it. I thank God for such noble and untiring men. My life was made better by our association. We are to be together another year in Mississippi.'

"Vanity of Vanities."

BY JARRATT L. SMITH.

"Vanity of vanities, saith the Preacher; vanity of vanities, all is vanity. What profit hath a man of all his labor which he taketh under the sun?" (Eccles. 1: 2, 3.)

The general drift of the book of Ecclesiastes is peculiar to itself. It gives us an estimate of life which, to a certain extent, reappears in our Lord's teaching, but which is, generally speaking, in the background throughout the Old Testament. This passage of scripture is the keynote of the book. The word "vanity" occurs thirty-seven times in the Bible, and it means, properly speaking, a breath of wind; and thus it comes to mean something fictitious and unsubstantial. The vanity of life and of that which encompasses it has been brooded over by the human mind under the influences of very different moods of thought. But it was neither subtle pride, nor weary disgust, nor a refined mysticism, that prompted this language of Solomon.

The Preacher does not ignore the circumstances and duties of this life, while he insists that this life does not really satisfy. The true lesson of the text before us is that this earthly life cannot possibly satisfy a being like man, if it be lived apart from God. The reason is threefold. First, all that belongs to created life has on it the marks of failure. Man is conscious of this. The warp and weakness of his will, the tyranny of circumstance, the fatal inclination downward, of which he is constantly aware, tell a tale of some past catastrophe from which human life has suffered deeply. And nature, too, with its weird mysteries of waste and pain, speaks of some great failure. Secondly, life and nature are finite. The human soul, itself finite, is made for the infinite. God has set eternity in the human heart, and man, as man, has a profound mistrust of his splendid destiny. Thirdly, all that belongs to created life has on it the mark of approaching dissolution. This is a commonplace, but commonplaces are apt to be forgotten from their very truth and obviousness. Personality survives with its moral history intact; all else goes and is forgotten.

"What profit hath a man of all his labor?" The answer is: No profit at all, if he is working only for himself; but most abundant profit if he is working for God and eternity. Christ has passed his pierced hands in blessing over human life in all its phases. When death is near, we read this verse with new eyes, and realize that this world is a world of shadows—that the real and abiding is beyond.

Preparation.

BY N. W. PROFFITT.

"The preparation of the heart in man, and the answer of the tongue, is from the Lord." (Prov. 16: 1.) "Prepare to meet thy God." (Amos 4: 12.) In the preparation to meet God in peace, God has wisely provided the means of our salvation. Every one who will look into "the perfect law of liberty "-the gospel-can find precisely the sure way of life. As the preparation is from the Lord, any individual would be exceedingly unwise to apply to man to obtain the means of his preparation. God tells us: "Be ye not unwise, but understanding what the will of the Lord is." (Eph. 5: 17.) The Christ says: "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." (John 8: 32.) Hence we see that Jesus, our Lord, expects us to have this divine means of our preparation of heart. Where, then, shall we go to find it? Listen: "Whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work. this man shall be blessed in his deed [or, in his doing]." (James 1: 25.) This forever sets aside the old theory of waiting God's good time; for he says: "Now is the day of salvation." (2 Cor. 6: 2.) God has made ample provision, and he is expecting us to use it. God feeds the birds that flit away through space, but he does not throw the crumbs into their mouths; but he places food where they can pick it up. God has so graciously fixed the divine plan of salvation that the greatest thing for us to do is to accept the plan just as it is, then we will be prepared.

Is There Need of Two or Three Orphan Homes in Texas?

BY MRS. JENNIE CLARKE.

As this question is now being discussed by those who as yet have but little experience in the orphan home work, I think it just and right for me to give my views on the matter, since I have about twenty-two years of experience. During all of these years of endeavor and sacrifice I have never refused to receive a really dependent orphan of eligible age and condition, and have extended aid when necessary where a parent is living; but in the latter case we were always careful not to receive children that would be cared for by parents or relatives, in order that the contributors might not be imposed upon. For this purpose we have a blank application form which we require applicants to fill out for our consideration before passing on children, and it appears that this precautionary method caused the Canadian Orphan Home to develop. When the application was made for some children who had a father living to be received from Canadian, our secretary replied, but left out the blank by mistake. A reply to this letter stated that they understood from the letter that they were to fill out a blank form, and to please send it at once; and if we could not receive the children, they had decided to start a home for them at Canadian; but the letter expressed the hope that this would not be necessary, if we could take the children. I gave the matter personal attention, inclosed a blank to be filled out, and sent it to them, indicating that we might receive the children. The blank was never returned, and no further explanation was made; and the home was launched as described in the Firm Foundation, with an article copied from the Canadian Record, a secular paper, stating that the church of Christ and their minister tried to place some children in some orphan home, "but found that there was no place for them." We have room for Panhandle orphan children, or from any other section of Texas. We recognize no sectionalism when it comes to caring for orphan children. We have some from Arizona, Arkansas, California, and other States. We trust that the Panhandle brethren will continue to send their children to this institution, and that they may still give us their hearty cooperation. which they have so kindly rendered for many years, and which has had our highest appreciation. It would bring sadness to our hearts to strike your familiar name from our record book.

Now we wish to kindly refer to the zeal manifested by Brother Tackett in behalf of the welfare of orphan chil-

SOUTH IS TURNING AGAINST GALOMEL

Mr. Dodson, the "Liver Tone" Man, Responsible for Change for the Better.

Every druggis' in town has noticed a great falling off in the sale of calomel. They all give the same reason. Dodson's Liver Tone is taking its place.

"Calomel is dangerous and people know it." Dodson's Liver Tone is personally guaranteed by every druggist who sells it. A large bottle doesn't cost very much but if it fails to give easy relief in every case of liver sluggishness and constipation, just ask for your money back.

Dodson's Liver Tone is a pleasanttasting, purely vegetable remedy, harmtess to both children and adults. Take a spoonful at night and wake up feeling fine; no biliousness, sick headache, acid stomach or constipated bowels. It doesn't gripe or cause inconvenience all the next day like violent calomel. Take a dose of calomel today and tomorrow you will feel weak, sick and nauseated. Don't lose a day.

Shave, Bathe and Shampoo with one Soap.— Cuticura

dren, which is very commendable; but he is laboring under a mistake when he thinks there is need for two or three orphan homes in Texas, and especially in North Texas. It is his desire to combine an orphan home with a home for aged people; but he will find this not practical, and that December and May will not unite harmoniously, I have had brethren time and again to urge me to start a home for old people on the ground at Belle Haven, but I always turned it down, and gave my reasons, as I have had a little experience in keeping a few old people on the grounds who came in contact with my children daily, and they did not always bring to them sunshine and cheerful messages. I believed then, as I do now, that a home for aged people should be set apart as a distinct work. Brother Tackett also stated that he "did not wish to injure the Luling Orphan Home, but that North Texas needed an orphan home." Why does it need one? We receive children from North Texas, and they are supported by North Texas congregations; and as South Texas has but few strong congregations, we can readily see that the orphans of Belle Haven may be reduced to want, if one is started in North Texas. Can you afford to do this, when the welfare of a band of orphans is in jeopardy? We do not feel the responsibility so much for those whom we have not gathered into the fold. We must realize that we are the keepers of the children of Belle Haven, and that we promised them food, raiment, educational and Christian training through the medium of this Christian institution. If we fail, we have offended "one of these little ones," and it "were better if we had a millstone around our necks, and were drowned in the depths of the sea." Let us reason together for the good of orphan children. If the Panhandle will still decide to cooperate with Belle Haven, and Brother Tackett will concentrate all of his efforts in establishing the old folks' home, we will not divide and weaken our forces, and cause one home or all to fail to accomplish permanent good. "In union there is strength, and in division there is weakness." Belle Haven is now one of the most beautiful homes in Texas, with ornamental shrubbery and evergreen trees as far as the eye can see, with one of the bestequipped and most picturesque playgrounds for the children. We have about all the accessories necessary to make it an ideal and well-equipped home. We still have room for more children; and by the time we are full we hope to have a fund on hand that will justify the erection of the new permanent brick building for the school purposes, and with extra rooms for more children. Let me continue to hope for the undivided support of the brethren and sisters to this end.

Preaching the Gospel in North Carolina.

BY J. D. TANT,

My last letter was written from Statesville, N. C. I closed my meeting there and started for Warner's Chapel, sixty miles away, Brother Foster, our faithful gospel preacher, carrying me in his car. On our way we went near the land of Canaau, through Jericho, then in two miles of Jerusalem, and stayed all night in Ephesus, and came out through Alpha and Omega on to Warner's Chapel.

It was once asked: "Can anything good come out of Nazareth?" Yet something good did come, for Jesus, our Savior, came from there. When I saw Jericho, to my mind one of the poorest countries and backwoods of all North Carolina, I saw the house wherein cur noted M. C. Kurfees was born and reared, and saw the church house where it is said that for more than twenty-five years Kurfees has found time in the busy rush of city life to come back once a year and preach to his kindred and friends. I thought, what wonderful ties and memories the old homestead leaves on a boy's mind, and how essential it is to make the old home the very house of God! I also thought of the instruction the Lord gave the man when he told him to return to his own house and tell what great things the Lord had done for him. (Luke 8: 39.) If our boys and girls could only know and see the country out of which so great a man as Kurfees has come, it would, no doubt, give them courage to try to pull to the top.

I am now preaching the gospel at Warner's Chapel, Brother W. L. Reeves, one of our ablest preachers, is with me. He has persuaded an extra fine girl of this church to be his wife. The grand old gospel preacher, E. Hansbrough, of Austin, Texas, set this congregation in order in 1886. Since that time W. L. Butler, of Tennessee; Andrew Perry, of Illinois; J. C. White, Harding Nall, Charlie Smith, Luther Willman, and X. W. Morgan, of Texas, have all held meetings here. But, with all the preaching that has been done here, there seems to be a lack of zeal and system and coöperation among the little congregations in this part, to work together and support some man in the field all the time to preach the gospel.

I am here from Arkansas, Brother Green is coming from Tennessee, Brother Kurfees from Kentucky, and perhaps other preachers from other points. If these brethren could only be taught that we are only men and that we all preach the gospel, and that the gospel is God's power to save, and not the wisdom of men, and if they would by their messengers learn the conditions that surround each little congregation and put some man out, not only to preach the gospel, but to water and cultivate the seed after it is sown, they could do grand scriptural work here, and could raise up some young man who knows these people and who would not require so much support to go in and out before them, and in a few years have Bible congregations all over this country. One great trouble with most brethren is, they have gone preacher crazy instead of gospel hungry, and think more about the man than the truth he preaches.

I call to memory that in the long. long ago six little congregations in Texas cooperated with me and kept me in the work all the time during 1887, 1888, and 1889. I baptized seven hundred people during these three years, held fourteen debates in that territory, set to work twenty-one congregations, and several boys are out preaching now who obeyed the gospel. During these years I lived among the people and preached the gospel from house to house, never preaching less than five nights each week, and often every night during the week. I was then a little preacher, not big enough for churches to call me; yet I preached the gospel and did some of the best work of my life. Eternity only can tell the results. And these people of North Carolina can do far better if I can only get them to try.

The Bible I have proved to be the very life of my life, because in it is enshrined my glorious Master and only Savior Jesus Christ. "Whereas I was blind, now I see"—like that humble man of old, whose eyes were opened by the good Physician. I would not exchange my experience for all the learning and honor in the world; and in the last analysis it is most solemnly true that experience is all.—Troop.

Interpret the universe through the idea of God, place God and man in living relations to each other, and there will be consciousness of an order sub-limer than any nature reveals—an order which not only has room for the resurrection, but demands it, to the end that grace may reign through righteousness unto the glory of God.—Selected.

OBITUARIES

Werly.

Brother Monroe Werly was born on January 7, 1821, and died on March 17, 1921. He lived one hundred years, two months, and ten days. He obeyed the gospel so long ago no one could tell the date. He was one of the few men that lived above reproach. Old people who knew him all their life say they never heard anything against him. He was born in Hickman County, Tenn., was reared there, obeyed the gospel there, and died there. After services conducted by the writer, he was laid to rest in the home graveyard.

MORRIS M. BEARD.

Goins.

Mrs. Anna Goins was born on March 21, 1887. She was married to Brother Chame Goins on August 6, 1911, and to this union were born four children two girls and two boys. Sister Goins obeyed the gospel in 1908 under the preaching of the lamented W. W. Barber. She fell quietly asleep in Jesus on May 22, 1921. She leaves a husband, four children, father, mother, four sisters and three brothers to mourn their loss. She ever lived true to her confession until death. After services conducted by funeral the writer, her remains were laid to rest in the Jenkins graveyard, near her home, in Hickman County, Tenn. To her loved ones I would say: Weep not, for she is done with trials and temptations. She has gone to her reward.

MORRIS M. BEARD.

Allen.

Mrs. Lucinda Allen came to the end of her mortal existence on the evening of May 29, 1921. She was born on December 6, 1844, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Southerland, who resided in Floyd County, Ind. She was sided in Floyd County, Ind. She married to John D. Allen in 1865. Allen family came to Riverside about sixteen years ago. She is survived by her husband; three daughters —Mrs. Florence Ball, Mrs. Emma Ridgeway, and Mrs. Irvin Rich; and two sons-George D. and Joseph Allen. As a wife and mother, she was faithful. As a Christian, her life speaks for itself. Her implicit faith in Christ. her obedience to him and her devotion to him, have won for her a place of happiness. She had prepared, not to but to live again. As a future abiding place, she made choice of the beautiful city of God. First a babe, then a pretty maiden, a wife, a mother, a grandmother, a great-grandmother, then the end of her earthly pilgrimage. Her body was buried in Evergreen Cemetery, Riverside, Cal. A large au-dience attended the funeral services, conducted by the writer.

E. M. BORDEN.

Canter.

Charles E. Canter, son of William B. and Lucy Canter, was born on October 29, 1879; was married to Belva H. Clark on September 8, 1904; yielded primary obedience to the gospel in September, 1905, under the preaching of J. D. Gunn; lived a zealous Christian until death, which occurred on March 3, 1921, after a lingering illness of Bright's disease. His body was laid to rest in the cemetery at Gallatin, Tenn., after funeral services conducted by E. A. Elam. He leaves a wife and four children, a father, mother, three brothers, one sister, and a number of friends, who mourn his death. Charley had a kind word, a welcome smile, and a willingness to help others. He was a devoted husband, an affectionate father, and a good neighbor. Believing the end near, he called each of the members of his family to his bedside, admonished them to at all times take Christ as their Savior, submit to his will in all things in order that all might be reunited in a land where sad partings are unknown. We weep not as those who have no hope, but get comfort from the belief that he is among the dead in Christ and will have part in the first resurrection; on such the second death has no power.

J. H. SHOULDERS.

Scott.

Susan Smith Scott was born on September 14, 1856, and died on May 4, 1921. She married James A. Walker on October 27, 1872. To this union were born eight children, five of whom survive-Mrs. Etter Cathey, Mrs. Glenn Blackwell, and Miss Nona Walker, all of Nashville, Tenn.; W. L. Walker, of Hugo, Okla.; and Robert S. Walker, of Chicago, Ill. Her suffering, which ended in death, lasted only five days. All the surviving children, except one, were with her when the end came. The greater part of her life was spent in Marshall County, Tenn. At an early age she became a member of the body of Christ, in which body she remained faithful until death: hence, she had the promise of a crown of life. (Rev. 2: 10.) The great gathering of people at the funeral service showed the high esteem in which she was held by those of her old home section. The writer spoke words of comfort and cheer to sorrowing ones and words of warning to all present at the funeral. Let all of God's children be comforted in the thought that God has promised a home beyond this vale of tears more beautiful, sweet, and lovely than a home in this world, and to this home all faithful ones will go when the time that pleases God comes to take them T. C. Fox. to this home.

Dodd.

Sister Emma Sewell Dodd, wife of Brother S. L. Dodd and daughter of our venerable brother, E. G. Sewell, was born on February 23, 1855, and died on April 23, 1921. She was the only daughter of Brother and Sister E. G. Sewell. She was married to Brother S. L. Dodd on September 18, 1879. Two daughters were born to Brother and Sister Dodd, both of whom live in the West-one in Okla-homa and the other in Texas. Sister Dodd had five brothers to survive her, her aged father and mother, and her They always made their home with Brother and Sister Sewell. and it seems strange to me that she should have been taken and these dear old people left without their daughter. They are both so old and it appears they need her so much. Of course Brother Dodd also misses the association and love of such a devoted Christian companion. He has two lovely Christian girls and their families to comfort him, and few men have stronger faith in God or a better knowledge of his word than Brother Sam Dodd. Sister Dodd was a faithful, Christian woman who looked on the bright side of every question. She cherished no enmity in her heart toward any one, and had a sweet, forgiving spirit for all. She always counseled toward mercy and forgiveness. Her husband, her family, and her friends could always take her advice and be guided by her forgiving, sweet She was a quiet, unassuming woman, and had so many good traits that one hardly knows_which one to emphasize. Her devotion to her husband and children, to her father, mother; and brothers, and to her God and his cause, is truly commendable; her sweet, forgiving disposition, her cheerful spirit, and her Christian life could well be followed by her family and The Lord deal gently with friends. her aged father and mother, her heartbroken husband and children, her true and loving brothers, and her innocent grand children. There will be a happy reunion in the glory world in the not very distant future. It is with a sacred pleasure that I write these few lines in memory of a faithful sister in F. B. SRYGLEY. Christ.

Christ managed to like all sorts of people. Think—all the common people; the sick, the mad, the sinners; publicans, outcasts (the sinner woman), Samaritans, Pharisees (Nicodemus), Roman soldiers (at the crucifixion), and the dying robber! And how many more that we have never heard of!—Exchange.

Among the Colored Folks

Report of Work.

On the first Lord's day in April I was with the church at Obion, Tenn., and we had two very interesting services. This congregation is small, but they are buying them a house to worship in, and they are planning on doing some mission work this year. 1 am to labor with them in a two-weeks' meeting in September. From Obion I went home (Nashville, Tenn.), so as to be in the meeting there.

On the second Lord's day in April I went to Ashland City. Brother O. E. Williams, a white brother, called me there to preach to my people. Brother Williams is greatly interested in getting the gospel to my people. He is a man of faith. There are some colored brethren and sisters at Ashland City, and they are meeting now on the first day of each week. I promised Brother Williams that I would come back in the fall and hold a meeting for them.

On the third Lord's day in April I visited the White's Chapel congregation, near Fosterville, Tenn., and I am glad to say I found them faithfully keeping house for the Lord. I will begin their meeting on the first Lord's day in August.

On the first Lord's day in May 1 began a meeting at Tuscumbia, Ala I agreed to labor with the brethren and sisters there two or three weeks. but the interest was so good that they asked me to remain a month. One lady made the confession, but was prevented from being baptized by her relatives, and one was restored. This was my second meeting there. The tent was packed at almost every service. The white brethren have assisted the colored brethren in purchasing a nice lot, and the tent was on this lot. I thank the white brethren and sisters for their cooperation in this meeting. Brother Phillips, the white preacher, gave me all the assistance that he possibly could, and he and Brother Morris made some encouraging remarks one Lord's-day afternoon. I have agreed to hold a meeting there next year. The colored brethren and sisters did all they could to make my stay among them pleasant. They now meet each first day of the week in the Odd Fellows' Hall. This is a fine field, a Baptist stronghold; but if the Christians continue faithful to God, we will overcome.

I am now in Birmingham, Ala. If there is a colored member of the church of Christ here, it is unknown to us; but the colored people are here in large numbers. The white brethren have me here to preach to my people, and they have told me to preach the gospel and they would stand by me. Thank God for this great interest that the Christians are now manifesting in getting the gospel to my race! I went over on Lord's day and met with the white congregation so I could take the Lord's Supper, and I heard Brother Pullias' preach a strong sermon. These people treated me kindly and in a Christian way, and I pray that I may conduct myself always so as to be worthy of such blessings. According to our present arrangements, I am to be here one month, and I hope to have an encouraging report to make. The harvest truly is great, but the laborers are few M. KEEBLE.

FIELD REPORTS

Muskogee, Okla., June 2.-My meeting with the Thirty-third and South Benton Streets Church, in Kansas City, Mo., closed on Sunday night. though we did not accomplish as much as I had hoped for, the meeting was far from being a failure. Three were baptized and one added to the congregation by membership. One of those submitting to baptism was an old lady, seventy-seven years old, who had been a Methodist all her life; another was a young married lady, who had been a Presbyterian all her life; the other was a splendid youth of about fourteen years. There are some splen-did characters in this church. Wife and I enjoyed to the fullest extent our stay among them. The brethren asked me to hold their spring meeting next year. Brother Clayton Gall is to hold a meeting for them this fall. Brother Roy Bixler visited with me a few hours one evening of the meeting. was favorably impressed with Brother Bixler, as well as with Brother Henthorn, Brother Gray, and other preachers whom I met for the first time on this trip.-W. L. Oliphant.

Caruthersville, Mo., June 6.—A tent meeting was started here on the third Lord's day in May and closed on the fifth Lord's-day night. The preaching was well done by Brother F. L. Pais-ley, of Memphis, Tenn., a very gener-ous young man and a good gospel preacher, who promises much to the world. Brother Goodman, of Memphis, was really the promoter of the meeting. He is an untiring worker and wields a wonderful influence wherever he goes. May the Lord bless wherever he goes. May the Lord bless him. We were also assisted by Breth-ren J. Oscar Paisley, James E. Laird, and Brother Thurman, Some ten years ago Brother A. O. Colley came here and started the cause. The breth-ren built a house, and put the restrictive clause in the deed, but by some hook or crook the "digressives" had that clause changed and took the house. But in the face of all that, we found some fourteen who said they would come together and keep house for the Lord. This is a great mission field and should have attention immediately. As a result of this meeting, one very promising young lady was baptized, and in this we were greatly paid for all our efforts. The singing was conducted by the writer. this meeting closed I went out some five miles west of here and preached one night at Pierce's Chapel, and they insisted on my coming back in the near future. I think much good can be done in Southeast Missouri if we will put out the effort and go to it. What do you say, brethren?—A. B.

Huntsville, Ala., June 3.—Things in a religious way are moving along nicely here in Huntsville. Brother R. E. L. Taylor's meeting with the West Huntsville church continued for two weeks and a day and resulted in quite a number of additions. There seemed to be quite a religious awakening, not only among the people of this particular congregation, but the three other churches in Huntsville seemed to profit by the meeting. During the last week Brother J. Pettey Ezell was with the Randolph Street Church, which arrangement could hardly be avoided; but both meetings were a success. Brother Taylor is a hard work-er, preaching about all day and night. too. I think the people at West Huntsville, and possibly one or two other churches in Huntsville, have arranged with him to return here next year. Brother Taylor endeared himself to n any people here. Brother Ezell is also a consecrated Christian, a good preacher, and an effectual worker. Brother Ezell believes in work-hard work, constant work, systematic work. I go over to Albany to preach for the church there between the first and second Lord's days in this month. am expecting a great time visiting with Ezell and the church there. We are to be in Ezell's home, a pleasure worth anticipating. I am to "dedicate" the large tent which they have lately stretched on a prominent lot in the heart of the city of Albany, and the next "big" event will be Brother Grover Brewer's meeting, which will follow soon. The church here has decided for me to return to Huntsville the first of October for a twelve-months' siege against sin and wickedness. Brethren, the job is a big one, and I covet your prayers. I go out for seven meetings, beginning the fourth Lord's day in June.—T. B. Thompson.

"First Things First."

BY HARVEY W. JONES,

The following short, pointed article, under the above heading, by Z. S. Hastings, of Effingham, Kan., appearing in the Christian-Evangelist for April 21, is so good and timely for that ultraprogressive "journal of Christianity" that I want to "pass it on" to the readers of the Gospel Advocate, and to other religious papers, too, if they will publish it:

A Christian is a member of the church Christ built. He need go no further. Here is enough. The Son of God is both Lord and Christ. Here is

With freedom did Christ set us free, to go everywhere, in his name, with his holy religion, to do good and to preach his gospel to the whole world.

But to attend conventions, congresses, world-wide movements, national meetings, State meetings, district meetings, county meetings, etc., we are not autherized to do: for our Lord and Mas-ter never calls them. They are called by leading, influential men of the churches. Why they are called, I know not. The intentions may be good; but the fact is, the results are

These meetings lead to ecclesiasticism and divisions, which are wrong. We are already divided because of such meetings; some are conventionites and some are congressites, etc.

I remember, away back, when I was young, because of these kinds of meetings, the churches were divided. Some were called "progressives," others were called "antis."

O shame, shame; pity, pity! We are not getting the church restored very fast; nor are we helping to answer our dear Lord's prayer for unity very

My contention is, no society of any kind should domineer over the church by legislating, substituting, modifying, adding to or taking from the word of God. We must always conform to the principles, precedents, and precepts of the New Testament.

We must never forget that Christ is Lord and head of the church. There are too many programs, propagandas, entertainments, etc. "What shall we do, then?" you ask. Do? Go preach the gospel everywhere. Go about doing good. Go to the Lord's Supper every Lord's day. If you do not know all the things toucht, an to the Now. all the things taught, go to the New Testament and learn them. They are there.

Well said, Brother Hastings, and here's to you my hand and heart as a token of love and esteem for one who writes such good common sense and with such high regard for the teaching of holy writ. Come again, and "stay with 'em" longer.

> Do all the good you can, By all the means you can, In all the ways you can, In all the places you can, At all the times you can, To all the people you can, As long as ever you can.

STIRRING UP THE MEMBERS

[The elders of the Williams Chapel congregation have sent to this office a copy of a "Heart-to-Heart Talk" which they have used to a fine advantage in creating a better interest. Believing that this circular will help other congregations, we pass it on to our readers.—Editor's Note.]

Dear Brother or Sister: We find that our church register contains about one hundred and sixty names. Some of these members are meeting regularly and working faithfully; some are lukewarm, and while they seem to hold on to the profession of faith which they have made, they are not willing to make the effort and sacrifice characteristic of the true children of God; and some have become cold and careless and have ceased to manifest any interest in their own spiritual welfare. Among the latter two classes are some who are living good, moral lives, which is commendable; but many who make no pretensions of a religious profession do that.

Now, dear reader, to which of the three classes mentioned are God's promises made? To which class do you belong? Are you living as you promised yourself and your God that you would live when you enlisted as a soldier in the army of the Lord? Do you want your name on the church book when you realize that the world looks upon you as a hypocrite? Do you wish to live so that others will lose respect for the cause that you vowed to uphold? What would become of the church if every other member were living as you are living and were giving as you are giving? If you were to die as you are living—and you will die as you live—could you hope to stand with the redeemed in judgment? If so, may not at least all good, moral people hope to be saved?

It is not the purpose of this short circular to teach you your duty—you already know that. It is our purpose to persuade you to do your duty if you are not doing it. If you are doing your duty, you will assist us by trying to save some other soul from destruction.

Perhaps you cannot attend regularly. You can write a letter showing that you are interested. You can send your contributions by mail. You can ask the church to meet with you at your house. If the church were a bank and you had money deposited there, you would manage some way to look after it. The church is your spiritual bank, and Christ is the Cashier. Are you making any deposits? CURRENT THOUGHT

All Things to All Men.

An American firm manufacturing a brand of pills which had enjoyed a wide sale in America desired to introduce them into the Chinese market. But it was evident that they could not be sold in this market by means of the same advertising message which had made them so popular in America: for here they had been advertised as especially beneficial to people who were "yellow, run-down, and anemic," and it was evident that Chinese normally look yellow, run-down, and anemic. The problem was finally turned over to a Chinese comprador, who devised quite a different appeal. Taking advantage of a growing distrust of the native doctors, he played up the marvelous cures wrought by the wonderful foreign doctors in other lands. Now he said, it is impossible for every Chinese to have the advantage of personal attention from these marvelous foreign physicians, but only neglect and ignorance can keep every Chinaman from having in his home at all times a box of the pills which these great healers use to work their cures! And the little pills have been selling in China by the ton ever since. Did not Christ say something about the need of our imitating the wisdom of the children of this world in our work for him? The shrewd Christian worker needs something of that insight into human nature and that capacity for the patient study of human weaknesses which the good advertiser displays in effecting the sale of bls goods, varying the appeal to the psychology and need of the person.-Exchange.

What Jesus actually said is this: "The children of this world are wiser in their generation than the children of light." His statement followed the parable of the unjust steward, who protected himself against misfortune by crooked dealing with his lord's debtors. I do not believe that Jesus meant to convey the thought that the children of this world would always be wiser than the children of light. The preaching of the gospel through the centuries and the gradual absorption of our Savior's teachings should have changed the verdlet by this time. Yet it is true that we may always learn some valuable lessons from the world on how to do our Master's business especially in point of efficiency. Certainly Jesus did not intend to teach that his evangelists should use duplicity in selling the wares of the gospel as one might sell pills to the unwary Chinese. Here we do not need to misrepresent or exaggerate the worth of the article. It is the power of God unto salvation in China, Africa, Japan, Russia, and in the uttermost parts of the world. The symptoms of spiritual diseases and the need of a cure are everywhere the same. For "all have sinned and come short of the glory of God."

The Bondage of Fear.

An infant in its mother's arms cries and shrinks from a face unknown. A child will shrink and shriek when left in darkness. A youth feels an unknown power creeping into his adolescent life and has fear at himself. A maid is frightened at the new rose tint on her cheek—and wonders. Man and woman enter the holy relations of wedlock with a subconscious sense of fear. Man of maturity fears that the sea of finance may be unsafe, that some sudden riffle may grow into a wave of mountain-like proportions, and that his bark may be lost. A mother guides the steps of her children with fear and doubt. And we all are anxious concerning the unknown truth that awaits us on the other side of the grave. Thus, man, with his finite mind, is a pathetic figure wandering on in boundless space and time.

Scientific philosophers tell us whence we have come, but fail in that they have not yet discovered whither we are going. This does not discourage us, however, for we keep moving on while each new experience brings us to the brink of the unknown. Reason tells us that we must not allow to-day to be unprofitable by the uncertainty of to-morrow. As we trace the records of our own minds we discover evidences of fear which has held us back and has made us servants of superstition.

Can we not picture ourselves climbing up the stairway of life, while around us is the darkness of midnight? And are we unlike the boy who, as he fears to enter the darkened upper chamber of his father's house, shrinks back in fear? We are victims of superstition and fear, and all along the great stairway of life we shrink from each newly found thought; each newly revealed truth. The boy knows he is in his father's house. He knows there is nothing within his father's house which would injure him; yet he fears the unknown, the thing that his reason tells him does not exist. We, too, know that we are within our own Father's house. We, too, know that we should be brave, but few of us ever take that bravery through life with us.

Columbus was one who trusted the unknown and launched out into the deep, believing that his ship would land, on another shore beyond the infinite depth and breadth of the sea.

We call ourselves apprehenders of knowledge; yet, when we take stock of the things of which we really know something, we find that our stock of knowledge is sadly overdrawn and that there is no balance in the treasury of our own minds.

There is upon every life, upon every soul, an excess impediment, caused by the demon, "Fear," and we shrink back with a nameless dread that holds us back, oftentimes from the very "borders of the infinite."

Knowledge and truth and the acceptance of them are the redeemer from fear. We know that there is nothing in the darkness of the room which would harm; but unless we accept that knowledge and the truth which it embraces, we are still in the bonds of fear. When we throw off the impediments—fear, superstition, and uncertainty—the clouds will pass by and the sun-rays of knowledge will usher in a newer, brighter, and more glorious day.—Homiletic Review.

The writer of the above article has drawn an impressive picture of an indefinable something that fills the breasts of most mortals. Only those completely dead to sin are free from some kind of fear and they are often moved by superstition. It should be noted that the fear that fills the Christian's heart is different from any other. He has no servile fear. His fear of God embodies both love and reverence. It never crushes nor bears him down. His fear leads to obedience, and where there is obedience to God there cannot be uncertainty nor superstition. When we read the lives of the heroes of faith contained in the Bible, we do not find a single one who became a "servant of superstition." "Servant of God" and "servant of superstition" are irreconcilable terms.

Job is the typical spokesman of the Old Testament when he cries: "I know that my Redeemer liveth." Paul becomes the greatest exponent of New Testament on the fear question when he exclaims: "I know whom I have believed, and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him against that day."

Doing Good For Evil.

Every the should be careful to see that he harbors no hatreds against people; that he avoids the dangerous effort "to get even," and that he acts from the constructive motive of redemption instead of from revenge. Destroy your enemy by converting him into a friend. Anything otherwise will make matters worse. It is at this point that the victor nations are in danger. Atheism, anarchy, Bolshevism, and their ilk, cannot last. They will break themselves upon the rocks of order and truth. But if the nations act in the spirit of revenge toward each other, the "red flag," though unseen, will prevail in the soul, keep the wounds of the world red, and drive the innocent and helpless to despair.—Christian-Evangelist.

Nations as well as individuals should not cuitivate a spirit of revenge. We should seek to destroy the enmity that others may bear us by overcoming it with good. Instead of rendering evil for evil, we should render contrariwise blessings. We should bless and do good to those who persecute us. The man who possesses such a spirit and does good for evil will surely overcome his enemies and make them his friends. If we are persecuted for righteousness' sake, we should rejoice and be exceedingly glad, knowing that great is our reward in heaven. No man can really harm us and do us an injury so long as we are true to God and to ourselves. No Christian should ever cultivate a spirit of hatred: neither will he labor in order "to get even" with his brother. His chief effort will be to save sinners, to convert the erring from their errors, and to lead a holy and unblamable life,

A Good Mixer.

BY R. L. WHITESIDE.

So often the announcement runs about as follows: "We are anxious to secure a preacher. He must be a good mixer, and—" But no matter about the rest. Anything else is of secondary importance, whether the call comes from Goose Creek or from Progressive Hollow. No others need apply.

And what is a good mixer? Can't define the term? No matter; every one knows a good mixer when he sees him in action. A person may be very courteous and in every sense a gentleman without being a "good mixer."

The Bible gives us an account of one good mixer, only that is not what the divine historian calls him. This man, the son of the favorite king of Israel, had led a rather wayward life. He was selfish, devoid of sympathy for others, and without interest in their welfare. He killed his brother Amnon, and fled to Geshur, where he remained in exile three years, David finally brought him back. Now this man Absalom was more than a good mixer; for "in all Israel there was none to be so much praised as Absalom for his beauty: from the sole of his foot even to the crown of his head there was no blemish in him." (2 Sam, 14: 25.)

Absalom had a big, selfish purpose to accomplish. He set his heart on dethroning God's anointed king, his own father, that he might obtain the kingdom for himself, even if he must murder his own father to accomplish his purpose. But he could never do this without first winning the people. He knew the value and utility of being a good mixer. He formulated a plan. "And Absalom rose up early, and stood beside the way of the gate: and it was so, that when any man that had a controversy came to the king for judgment, then Absalom called unto him, and said, Of what city art thou? And he said. Thy servant is of one of the tribes of Israel. And Absalom said unto him, See, thy matters are good and right; but there is no man deputed of the king to hear thee. Absalom said moreover, O that I were made judge in the land, that every man which hath any suit or cause might come unto me, and I would do him justice! And it was so, that when any man came nigh to him to do him obeisance, he put forth his hand, and took him. and kissed him. And on this manner did Absalom to all Israel that came to the king for judgment: so Absalom stole the hearts of the men of Israel." (2 Sam, 15: 1-9.)

Of course he kept his purposes in the dark, while by the arts of flattery and deceit he was working himself into the good graces of the people. He made them believe he was so kind, so sympathetic, so unselfish—such a good man! When they came to believe him to be the best man in the kingdom, they were then ready to support him in a move to gain the throne, even if God's king and his own father must be murdered to accomplish the purpose. Thus Absalom, the finest-looking man in the kingdom, was also the best mixer in Israel, and—the basest scoundrel!

But is it not strange that a man could be so selfish and base, and yet be the most idolized man in the kingdom? It is not strange that he practiced the arts of flattery and became so good a mixer. That was a part of the game, without which he could have made no headway. But the people love to be flattered, and they love a good mixer; and Absalom knew it. In that line he was an artist. I never read a call for a good mixer without thinking of Absalom; and if he were living, I would recommend him for the place. And would he not make a great showing as a modern paster, or "located minister?" He was such a fine-looking man, so entertaining, seemingly so unselfishly interested in every one's welfare, that he would have captured the whole town or city. And had he discovered that the elders were growing suspicious of him, how easily he could have stirred up his enthusiastic supporters, deposed the old elders, and appointed some who would retain him as their preacher and be thoroughly submissive to him.

Be courteous, of course-truly, genuinely, sincerely courteous. H a man loves God and man, neither bigotry, impudence, self-will, nor any of the other unbecoming traits of character will find a place in his heart. He will be considerate and forbearing, gentle and forgiving, kind and sympathetic, toward all, rich and poor. But genuine love will prompt one, when, occasion demands, to do a thing that, under ordinary circumstances, would not seem courteous. To recue a child from immediate danger may require you to snatch him in a way that under ordinary conditions would seem extremely rude. And to rescue a man from sin may require you to rebuke him in such way as to destroy your reputation for being a good mixer; but genuine love, true courtesy, requires it. A physician will not flatter one concerning his prospects for a long life and good health, when he knows that a serious operation is the only means of prolonging his life; only a quack would console him into the idea that he needed only a mild treatment

Some people are naturally more demonstrative than others. Extreme friendliness seems to be a part of their nature. It is not strained and professional. They have a fluidity of spirit that mixes in easily with others; and, for that reason, they cannot be leaders. A good mixer mixes easily and gracefully with his surroundings, and catches the spirit of the crowd. How, then, can one possessing such fluidity of spirit have sufficient boldness and concentration of spirit to lead others? He is more likely to be affected by them. As Brother D. Lipscomb said: "A good mixer is easily mixed." You would have to change human nature for it to be otherwise. But it is certainly no sin to be naturally a good mixer, though this trait so highly prized by some may really be a liability instead of an asset. Neither is it wrong to cultivate a friendly, sympathetic disposition. In fact, love for man creates sympathy and a desire to be helpful. If genuine love masters a man, he will be kind and courteous to all, neither fawning on the rich nor patronizing toward the poor, recognizing that all are God's creatures upon whom is engraven or may be engraven the image of the divine nature. This is true courtesy.

But let us not forget that courtesy may be put on as a cloak. There is such a thing as professional courtesy. What may be genuine fruit in one may be merely artificial trimmings in another. And here is the danger. The preacher who is a good mixer is in demand. Seeing this, a young preacher may cultivate it as an ornament, as a means of making a success in his calling. Hence, he flatters that he may please, and seems interested when he is not, because both contribute to his success. He shakes hands with everybody in his own meetings; but when he attends another's meeting, he does not. Thus he makes courtesy a professional matter. Such a course is rotting to character and makes one the basest of hypocrites.

Flattery, an essential trait of the professional good mixer, is insincere praise, and is a product of selfishness. No one ever flattered another for the other's benefit, but for his own. Hence, David classes the flatterer among his enemies. (See Ps. 5: 8, 9.) And no wonder, for the flatterer seeks to use others for his own selfish ends. I like true courtesy; but when a new acquaintance is too sweet on me, I wonder what he is priming me up for.

Flattery is an evil, a great sin, and is severely condemned in the Bible. And yet a young preacher said; "People like flattery and being bragged on, and I am going to give it to them." All such should read and ponder the following: "Help, Jehovah; for the godly man ceaseth; for the faithful fail from among the children of men. They speak falsehood every one with his neighbor: with flattering lip, and with a double heart, do they speak. Jehovah will cut off all flattering lips, the longue that speaketh great things." (Ps. 12: 1-3.) "A flattering mouth worketh ruin," (Prov. 26: 28.) "And in his place shall stand up a contemptible person, to whom they had not given the honor of the kingdom; but he shall come in time of security, and shall obtain the kingdom by flatteries." (Dan. 11: 21.) "And such as do wickedly against the covenant shall be pervert by flatteries; but the people that know their God shall be strong, and do exploits." (Verse 32.) Rather than be a contemptible flatterer, let us follow the example of Paul: "For neither at any time were we found using words of flattery, as ye know, nor a cloak of covetousness." (1 Thess. 2: 5.)

"Meet it is I set it down, that one may smile, and smile, and be a villain." (Shakespeare.)

Is This the Cause of the Difference?

Some months ago I had something to say about the difference in the results obtained in the days of the apostles and now. "The Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved." (Acts 2: 47.) This shows that the first congregation that was established was daily feit for good. It also says: "And believers were the more added to the Lord, multitudes both of men and women." (Acts 5: 14.) It also says: "A great company of the priests were obedient to the faith." (Acts 6; 7.) And I think I cited the scripture in which those early workers were spoken of in the following words: "These that have turned the world upside down are come hither." (Acts 17: 6.) It also speaks of the conversion of "the devout Greeks a great multitude, and of the chief women not a few." (Acts 17; 4.) The question was raised: Why this great difference in results then and now? And it was also suggested that instead of having such results to-day, if some church gets ready for a meeting and invites a good man to come and help them, and then, by working and praying continuously till the final service, have a hundred or a hundred and fifty additions, some one is ready to say the preacher is a "shaker," a "sensationalist," and sometimes to accuse him of using hypnotism. Of course these criticisms are due, to a large extent, to the fact that we have not been in the habit of succeeding; and when we do succeed, it causes comment and wonder.

But recently the solution to my problem came to me in the mail. It is this: In the days of the apostles they worked miracles, their work was attended by miraculous manifestation; but it is not so to-day; hence the difference, Well, I have thought of this myself, but have been unable to pull myself into believing it. I think God is just as able to work miracles now as he was then, and that he loyes souls now as he did then; then, why did he not let miracles continue to accompany the preaching of the word from then till now, and on till the days of grace shall have ended? You had better think a little before pressing this too far as the solution. It is a fact that miracles are not performed to-day, the claims of some to the contrary not-withstanding.

There Is Something Greater Than Miracles.

We come now to the consideration of one of the most fundamental questions for the child of God and the church to-day-viz., there is something greater than miracles. You ask: "What is it?" It is that church, that teaching, that religion that makes saints out of depraved souls, that was brought to the world by the Holy Spirit and confirmed by miracles. The word of God, the Book says, was confirmed by the signs that followed. (See Mark 16: 20; Heb. 2: 1-4.) Which is the greater-the thing confirmed or the miracles that confirmed it? Which does the saving-the thing confirmed or the power that confirmed it? If you say the former is the greater, then I ask: Why did not God just give us the miracles and leave the word off? We have, my dear brethren, the very thing the Holy Spirit brought and confirmed by signs and wonders, and it is this that saves, that takes the soul and establishes in it the very nature and spirit of our God. In speaking of what the Spirit would do when he came upon the apostles, Christ says: " He shall glorify me: for he shall receive of mine, and shall show it anto you." (John 16: 14; read also verse 13.) Which is the greater, and which do we most need-the Holy Spirit as an inspiring monitor, or that the Holy Spirit took of Christ -his word, his teaching-and gave to the apostles to give to us? Think on these things.

In Heb, 4: 12 it is said: "The word of God is living, and active, and sharper than any two-edged sword, and piercing even to the dividing of soul and spirit, of both joints and marrow, and quick to discern the thoughts and intents of the heart." And now read the verse that follows, and see if it does not sound like the very presence of our all-seeing God is with the word: "And there is no creature that is not manifest in his sight: but all things are naked and laid onen before the eves of him with whom we have to do."

But I want to come to direct proof that there is something greater than miracles, and that this something is that which the word of our Lord establishes in our souls, called "love" and also "pure and undefiled religion." Will you please listen as I read slowly: "If I speak with the tongues of men and of angels, but have not love, I am become sounding brass, or a clanging cymbal." There is something better and greater than speaking with tongues as they did in the days of the apostles, is there not? "And if I have the gift of prophecy, and know all mysteries and all knowledge; and if I have all faith, so as to remove mountains, but have not love, I am nothing." Something greater, then, than that miraculous faith that could actually say to the mountain: "Remove hence to yonder place, and it shall obey thee." Something greater than miraculous knowledge and the ability to tell future events, is there not? This settles it. You say if we had miracles as they had them in the days of the apostles, we would have as great results as they then had. But the above scripture proves to a certainty that we can have something greater than all miracles-viz., love-that love that is the very heart andsoul of the religion of our Lord. This religion we claim to have, but this love we have not; hence, we will take positions that put the blame at God's feet for not continuing miracles when he has given us something better and greater -viz., a gospel, a doctrine, which, if indeed received and lived, will make us to be felt with a power unknown to miracles.

Christ says: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do; because I go to my Father." (John 14: 12.) Of course he was talking here to his apostles and meant them. But the "greater works" that they were to do were not miracles. They were to do these, but they were also to do something greater, and the reason for doing these greater works was because he was going to the Father. They never worked any miracles greater than our Lord himself worked while here. If so, what miracle was it? They were to do such works as he had done, but were to do something greater than the works he did, and do it, too, because he was going to the Father. What did the apostles do along with their doing the miracles that Christ had done? I ask again, what was it? They did absolutely nothing in addition to performing miracles as great as those Christ did, except to inaugurate the kingdom of God's dear Son on earth, to establish his church, and place in it a doctrine which, if we will indeed take it into our souls and let it have its own way with us, will establish that love in us that is greater than miracles. Brethren, we can have this. Will we not have it, but that, since we can, we must and will have it?

That was a great revival over at Cleburne, Texas. May I say, brethren, God bless you! And if I ever go to that town and see that church, I shall expect to find some laving like we are taught to love. Perhaps you do not yet love like our Lord wants you to love. If you did, your meeting would have been greater. So, I am not ready to say, "Brewer is a 'shaker' or a 'sensationalist,'" but that he loves God and was backed with a church that loves God; hence the great and glorious results. Where shall the next great meeting be? You need not tell me that the doctrine of Christ is not the most wonder-working power on earth to-day, for it is. If you will take it and first live it, then preach it, the devil will suffer a defeat in us, to say the least, and this will lead to his being defeated in others.

Heaven.

The world has lost sight of heaven and things heavenly, Religious people talk very little concerning the glory land. This is a sad indication of a sadder condition. He who thinks little of heaven is not likely to go there. Just here a story from antebellum days is illustrative. "I hope your master has gone to heaven," said some one to a Southern slave in the bygone days of slavery. "I'se 'fraid he has not gone dar," replied 'Rastus, " for I nebber heah 'im speak of dat. When he go to de North, or to de springs, he allus be gittin' ready for weeks ahead ob time; but I nebber see 'im gittin' ready for goin' to heaben or talkin' 'bout it." Exactly so. There is a great weight of wisdom in the homely philosophy of this old slave. He who does not "set his mind on the things that are above " (Col. 3: 2) will never inherit them; "for as he thinketh within himself, so is he." (Prov. 23: 7.)

Notwithstanding the fact that men as individuals do not always keep the glories of the better world ever before them, yet, as a race, they have carried everywhere and through all times some conception, or misconception, of heaven

The ancient Egyptians, the primitive torchbearers of civilization, expected to sall the limitless ocean of the air in a mystic sky-boat with the sun god or else walk with unwearying feet the happy "Field of Peace." The Scandinavians dreamed of a green paradise awaiting them beyond the gates of death, with fields of waving flowers, singing birds, and musical streams flashing in the resplendent light of a sun that would never set. The old Iberians had visions of magnificent castles and chateaux of gold and ivery, where sweet strains of enchanting music forever filled the air. The heaven of the Teutons was a land of pleasure, fullness, and frultage, where every desire could be satisfied to the soul's contentment. The North American Indian looked forward to his "Happy Hunting Ground,"

"Where game is always plentiful.
And winter knows no cold:
Where trees will bear perennial fruit,
And squaws will never scold."

A belief in a future state of bliss has characterized the religions of all nations. All have had their

"Island valley of Avilion
Where fall not hall or rain or any snow,
Nor ever wind blows loudly."

These heathen conceptions of heaven have been crude, sensual, and untrue, to be sure; but they are the voice of universal man crying in the night of superstition and despair for the light of a nobler clime. These ideas of a future state are man-made, and they cannot rise above man—they are simply creations of his own genius or lack of genius. The true revelation of heaven must come from on high.

The Christian conception of heaven is as much higher than the heathen as the heavens are higher than the earth. Heaven is said to be a building: "In my Father's house are many mansions." (John 14: 2.) A kingdom: "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." (Matt. 25: 34.) A paradise: "To him that overcometh, to him will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the Paradise of God." (Rev. 2: 7.) A city "which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God." (Heb. 11: 10.) Some one bas said. "Heaven is a city never built with hands, nor hoary with the years of time; a city whose inhabitants no census has numbered; a city through whose streets rushes no tide of business, nor nodding hearse creeps slowly with its burden to the tomb; a city without griefs or graves, without sins or sorrows: without births or burials, without marriages or mournings: a city which glories in having Jesus for its King, angels for its guards, and saints for its citizens: whose walls are jasper, and whose gates are pearl," A city whose temple is "the Lord God the Almighty, and the Lamb;" a city which "hath no need of the sun, neither of the moon, to shine upon It; for the glory of God did lighten it, and the lamp thereof is the Lamb." (Rev. 21: 22, 23.) A city in which we shall see and adore the King in his beauty. This is the everlasting Canaan.

"Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city." (Rev. 22: 14.) "They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more: neither shall the sun light on them, nor any heat. For the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall feed them, and shall lead them unto living fountains of waters: and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes," (Rev. 7: 16, 17.)

"Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honorable, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; think on these things." (Phil. 4: 8.)

"Obedience is better than sacrifice:" but the man who never makes a sacrifice never obeys.—Exchange.

The Let-Alone Theory of Gamaliel.

BY JAMES E. CHESSOR.

The speech of Gamaliel (Acts 5: 34-39), delivered in the Sanhedrin which had convened to try Peter and John for speaking "in the name of Jesus," is one of the most remarkable addresses in Acts of Apostles. Although uninspired in the sense that it did not come from God or receive his indersement, nevertheless it is brief, pithy, temperate, and convincing. Its prudent worldly advice respecting the treatment of the followers of Jesus of Nazareth was not received merely by that turbulent council then, but to-day is accepted by many as defining the correct attitude of God's people toward the various religious movements, doctrines, and sects of the time. I desire to look into this counsel of Gamaliel, and I invite the reader to consider earnestly the analysis here given.

Gamaliel, grandson of the distinguished teacher, Hillel, was a zealous Pharisee and a member of the Sanhedrin. He was in his day the most celebrated doctor of the law. He taught in Jerusalem, where for a time Saul of Tarsus sat learning at his feet. (Acts 22: 3.) He was "had in honor of all the people"—more, I take it, on account of his prudence and learning than for any superior virtues. He seems to have possessed a spirit far more tolerant than the mass of the Jews of that age and a poise that stood him in good stead as a leader in the council. He is said to have lived some fifteen years after this scene in the Sanhedrin.

If Gamaliel survived Pentecost fifteen years, he was witness to the remarkable growth of Christianity in Palestine despite Jewish prejudice and persecution. He must have known of the first persecution that arose against the church in Jerusalem, when the disciples "were all scattered abroad throughout the regions of Judea and Samaria" and "went about preaching the word." He lived long enough to see the wisdom of his counsel vindicatedthat opposition to Christianity, however concerted and determined, cannot overthrow it nor long retard its progress. He survived long enough to see his distinguished pupil, Saul of Tarsus, fight against the new religion, only later to embrace it. Had the Jews uniformly observed the advice of their great rabbi, the first century would have been spared the blood of the apostles and Jewish persecution of Christians. Gamaliel was no ordinary Phar-

The occasion of the speech was the second arraignment of Peter and John before the Sanhedrin following the healing of the lame man at the Beautiful Gate. healing of the cripple, conceded by the enemies of the apostles to be "a notable miracle," had aroused Jewish jealousy and led to the first arrest. Peter and John were threatened and charged not to speak in the name of Jesus of Nazareth henceforth. Of course they disobeyed this order. The preaching of the resurrection seems to have caused the second arraignment. The Sadducees had a hand in it. The apostles faced the council on the technical charge of disobeying the order of the high priest not to teach in the name of Jesus. The reply of the apostles precipitated a crisis: "We must obey God rather than men." The Sanhedrin took deep offense at these words. The bigoted and infuriated judges were minded to slay the apostles. Then it was that Gamaliel arose and interposed his counsel.

Gamaliel, before beginning his address, commanded that the apostles be "put forth for a little while," The following is Luke's account of the speech: "Ye men of Israel, take heed to yourselves as touching these men, what ye are about to do. For before these days rose up Theudas, giving himself out to be somebody; to whom a number of men, about four hundred, joined themselves: who was slain; and all, as many as obeyed him, were dispersed, and came to naught. After this man rose up Judas of Galilee in the days of the enrollment, and drew away some of the people after him; he also perished; and all, as many as obeyed him, were scattered abroad. And now I say unto you, Refrain from these men, and let them alone: for if this counsel or this work be of men, it will be overthrown: but if it is of God, ye will not be able to overthrow them; lest haply ye be found even to be fighting against God." (Acts 5: 35-39.) Gamaliel's counsel prevailed.

It will be noted that Gamaliel advises caution and deliberation-"take heed to yourselves as touching these men, what ye are about to do." He then assigns two reasons for counseling moderation. First, if these teachers are impostors or seditious persons or victims of a harmless delusion, their movement will come to naught. One Theudas and one Judas of Galilee initiated short-lived insurrections, and were slain and their followers dispersed. Hence, if this movement is of men, born of personal ambition or factional spirit, it will certainly be overthrown. If these men prove to be factious disturbers of the peace, they will be dealt with summarily by the Roman authorities. The second reason is more weighty-namely, if this work is of God, you cannot overthrow it. Gamaliel was not a believer in the new teaching (he died a Pharisee, according to the Talmud); but evidently he was impressed with the possibility that the apostles might be sent of God, and he was of no disposition to be found fighting against the God of the Jews, Gamaliel knew that fanaticism and imposture, even when supported by insurrection, are of short duration; but in the teachings of these men he was not so sure that he detected either fanaticism or imposture. Might there not be something more than appears at present, some gleam of revelation that shall shortly proclaim these men the messengers of Jehovah? In this reasoning lies the wisdom of Gamaliel. His logic is worthy of consideration.

I do not think that Gamaliel's plea was so much a pleafor systematic tolerance as for temporary caution. Tolerance and long-suffering were lacking in the Pharisee character; and while Gamaliel unmistakably was more liberal than his sect, yet it is not likely that he would have advocated a permanent passive attitude toward a religion so hateful to the Pharisees. He was urging that these men be let alone at present. There was time, he thought, to wait and watch development of the new fraternity-tosee whether it should grow into a formidable menace to established religious forms. To interfere with it in its inception might lead to needless embroilment between the people and the Sanhedrin. A little patience would save trouble and indicate the course which later should be pursued. Gamaliel was sufficiently clear-sighted to have observed that the fire of a foolish fanaticism ordinarily dies out if neglected, but is fanned into fury by premature opposition. Gamaliel reasoned well, and he hit upon the right course. I am not surprised that he carried with him so blind and so narrow a body as the Jewish council.

In short, then, Gamaliel's speech set forth the let-alone theory. There can be no mistaking his teaching: "Refrain from these men, and let them alone." Aye, the letalone doctrine! Let them teach and have their way and do their utmost. Leave them severely alone. As a temporary precaution, I do not object to Gamaliel's teaching; but let us consider it as a general principle. Shall we apply the let-alone theory to the various religious movements, doctrines, and sects of to-day? Is it a correct general principle, defining the attitude of God's people toward false teachings? Is it a scriptural working rule? Does Jehovah enjoin upon his people such a let-alone attitude—the attitude of disinterested aloofness and noninvolvement? Is Gamaliel in harmony with Christ and Paul and Peter? Another question: Shall false religions come to naught if let alone? Take Mormonism to illustrate the point. It has had a small beginning. Should God's people let the institution alone-not cross its path. not expose its claims-that it may, peradventure, die a natural death? What is God's answer to these questions?

No doubt you have observed that this doctrine of noninterference is one of the most popular doctrines in the religious world to-day. Those of doubtful opinions must not be jostled. All sorts of odd teachings must be sugarcoated and passed up, regardless of how subversive of Scripture they may be or where they may lead those who indorse or follow them. It is of small moment that the blind should guide the blind. They must all be let alone. It is considered a sure token of ill-breeding, a breech of good manners, and a pitiful and wanton trampling upon sacred feelings to argue with any one about his religious convictions. He is entitled to his private interpretation of Scripture, and an effort to "proselyte" him smacks of pharisaism. If he is in error, as was Apollos, you must not follow the example of Aquila and Priscilla, but you must follow the advice of Gamaliel—let him alone!

I arraign this principle as preposterous, dangerous, subversive of truth—as a rule of action that pleases Satan well enough, but grieves God. I object to it because, in its general application, Gamaliel's teaching seems to assert that the success of a religion-its mere weight of numbers-is a sufficient test of its truth. If that were so, Mohammedanism would supplant Christianity, Catholicism would supplant Protestantism in the realm of truth. Moreover, the religion taught by Christ, so slow of growth was it during his earthly ministry, would have succumbed to Judaism instead of uprooting that institution. But the religion of the Nazarene "came not with observation;" and its enemies were not able to overthrow it, because they were found fighting against God. The masses usually are wrong in religion, as well as in politics. It has always been so. God's peculiar people to-day, as always, are greatly outnumbered by errorists; but I do not despair of the ultimate triumph of truth.

I arraign this let-alone doctrine on the ground that truth must war with error, and to the death; there can be no compromise. Truth, indeed, crosses the path of error at right angles. You cannot teach truth without combating error. To fail to do so is to cringe and compromise. If you love truth-if you love God, who is truth-you will be drawn into controversy often, just as often as you encounter men who dare join issue with you, calling in question the truth you are bound to defend. Christ was a great controversialist; he encountered the errorists of his day. So did Paul and Peter. If you champion right and truth and stand like a Gibraltar, you will find much in the examples of our Lord and his apostles to encourage you. They let nothing alone that opposed the truth of the gospel. Faithful men are solemnly com-manded "to contend earnestly for the faith which was once for all delivered to the saints." This is a fearful responsibility.

Such a principle, then, is at variance with both the precepts and the examples of Christ and the apostles. It is, therefore, false and dangerous, and should be repudiated. As applied by Gamaliel, it perhaps was expedient, and it worked well; but it is the modern use of the doctrine that I object to. If Gamaliel actually meant to set forth a general principle, as some contend—that God's people must let false teachers promulgate error without a word of protest—I say to you that the Holy Spirit did not move the famous rabbi to utter it, but only moved Luke to record it. It is not of God. Gamaliel was no representative of God. Peter spoke for God on that occasion. He stood boldly for the truth.

I would not be misunderstood. I believe in preaching the gospel in love. I possess little of the combative spirit. I have little patience for the "fretful-porcupine" type of preacher—the "ripsaw" that delights in lacerating human hearts. But the simple truth of the gospel, brethren—let us contend for that. Summon tact, humility, long-suffering; arm yourself with truth and love, and, with God's assisting grace, win the deluded from the error of his way. Woo him with love and win him with truth.

The Son of Man.

He had no place whereon to lay his head, his life begun; No room for him, save in a manger-bed—a borrowed one.

He had no place whereon to lay his head, his lifework done: A cross his pillow and his graveyard bed a borrowed one.

Sin's suffering borne, he freely offers men in heaven a part: Yet stay! He asks one resting place again, 'tis but my heart.—F. D. DuPuis.

I had a pleasant visit home, and am now at Butler, Mo., with Charles F. Hardin as song leader, in a very interesting meeting. The brethren are striving hard to build up the cause in this place. My next meeting will be at Breckenridge, where the cause is very weak."

J. M. Dennis writes from Ravenscroft, Tenn., June 13: Our meeting which began here on June 5 still continues, with good interest. The largest crowd during the meeting was present last night. Three persons have been baptized, and others are expected before we close. I will close on Friday night,"

From W. N. Carter, Dalhart, Texas, June 10; "I am here in my eighth meeting. Our crowds are very small; they always are at this place. I have never preached to so small a crowd. But we have here in the way of a congregation the best bunch who ever lived and fought for the Lord. They are true to God and his word."

From T. B. Clark, Childress, Texas, June 13: "Our meeting, which began on the fifth Sunday in May, closed on the second Sunday in June, with forty additions to the church. Only two restorations. Most of the additions were married people. Only seven services during the entire meeting that were not hindered by rain. Sometimes we were rained completely out. W. D. Bills, of San Antonio, did the preaching, and to say he did his work well puts it rather mildly. He will be with us again next year.

James E. Scobey writes: "Last Sunday I preached for the Lawrence Avenue congregation, in Nashville. This is my home congregation, where I preach on the third Sunday in each month. The congregation was not quite as large as usual. One reason was that part of our membership attended the opening meeting for worship in the Baplist church building recently purchased from them. Dr. Ward preached both at the morning and evening meetings. I shall preach next Sunday (June 26) at Columbia, Tenn."

Andrew Perry writes from Greenwood, Miss., June 17: "I closed my short meeting at Nial Schoolhouse, south of Kosciusko, night before last. I preached eight sermons. At Smyrna, some six miles away, I preached once. Fine and attentive audiences attended all the services, not as large during the week nights as on Lord's day. I go today to Stover to begin a meeting to-night. I am with a noble brother, J. A. Hackworth, recently from Alabama, who is now living here. I am well pleased with him and his Christian wife and their pleasant family."

- F. O. Howell writes an open letter to the brotherhood, which follows: "The harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers are few; pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he will send forth laborers into the harvest." I am writing this to inform weak congregations and scattered brethren of the fact that I am in touch with several very capable and worthy young preachers who will be glad to hold meetings for them. Already one congregation has agreed to help me in this work, and I think others will. I want these young preachers to go in pairs, or two together, and they will do great good. If you want a meeting, write me at once at 128 West King Street, Jackson, Tenn., and we will try to arrange for your meeting."
- G. W. Jarrett writes from New Smyrna, Fla., Box 1137, under date of June 12: "I began a meeting last night at Maytown. I go from here to the northern part of Florida. The first of July I am to go to Clark County, Ala., where I lived about two years, for some meetings. If any congregation on my way to Dyersburg, in West Tennessee, wants my service the fourth and fifth Lord's days in July, please write me soon as you can. As God is kind and loving to us, and Christ loved poor sinners enough to give all, even his life, we ought to give as we are able to have the gospel carried to them. I am willing to go. Who will give me the first opportunity? I am to begin a meeting near Dyersburg on the first Lord's day in August. I want to put in all the time I can in Tennessee."

Flavil Hall writes from Largo, Fla., June 18: "In my article, 'Don't Becloud the Christian's Faith,' in your issue of June 16, I wrote: 'I am glad we have rock-ribbed evidence of the divine inspiration of Moses (as has been pointed out), which exalts man as a being made in the image of God, the infinite and benevolent Creator, and gives him the only origin that could have ever made possible his reasoning powers and capabilities.' A line from another paragraph at the beginning of the third column occurs in this quotation, which is very confusing to the reader. In another place I wrote: 'I may misunderstand him; but whether I do or not, his words are such as to becloud the faith of Christians in the divine inspiration of Moses and his writings, whereas Jesus (whose divine Sonship the honorable gentleman does not call in question) quotes those writings as divinely recorded truth and as authoritative under the dispensation with which they had to do.' But a line of this quotation is moved from its place from the second to the beginning of the third column, which causes the reader to lose the connection."

William F. Faulkner, Alcalde, Ky., writes: "The Lord willing, on June 28, at 10 A.M., at Somerset, Ky., Pulaski County, on the Southern Railway, there will begin a four-days' discussion between Evangelist J. L. Davis, of Houston, Mo., and Elder H. B. Taylor, of Murray, Ky., on the following propositions: (1) 'I, H. B. Taylor, affirm that the church of which I am a member, known by me and my brethren as the Missionary Baptist Church, is scriptural in name, origin, doctrine, and practice.' H. B. Taylor affirms. (2) 'I, J. L. Davis, affirm that the church of which I am a member, known by me and my brethren as the church of Christ, is scriptural in name, origin, doctrine, and practice.' J. L. Davis affirms. No doubt some of the readers of the Gospel Advocate are acquainted with both these men. Both have had considerable experience, and the friends of each seem to be willing to leave it to them to produce the proof that will decide the issue. The 'mountain evangelist' and friends are expecting another great victory for the truth. (See John 17: 17.) Let all Christians pray for the success of the 'one body.' (Eph. 4: 4.)".

Thomas H. Burton writes from Union, S. C.: "Our meeting, which began on May 17 and closed on June 5, resulted In seven baptisms and several others almost persuaded, and many heard the gospel for the first time, H. M. Phillips certainly did some good preaching, and T. A. Nicks did his part above criticism in the song service. These brethren are untiring workers, and they decided while here that These brethren this is no place for rheumatic workers or any other kind who are not willing to suffer hardships. We distributed about four thousand tracts and handbills during the meet-In the midst of our meeting the denominations allied themselves and began a meeting within a block of us, taking it night about preaching. One of the preachers told me that they were in opposition to us. I am sure that we are the only people that they have ever had to stand aloof from It seems that they have agreed to disagree until they have about broken down the wall of distinction. pects are good for the summer's work. I am sadly handicapped by not having a helper. It takes two to do the work that is to be done in a field like this. I really believe that we will have a continual growth in this town. Pray for us.

Joe L. Netherland, Box 253, Miami, Fla., writing under date of June 7, says: "The cause of Christ is moving forward in this city. One more baptized on Sunday night. This city is located on the extreme southeastern coast of Florida, and is strictly a tourist town. The population increased 440 per cent the past ten years. We now have a permanent population of about forty thousand, and our winter population is over one hundred thousand. There are only a few congregations in this State, and only about two or three on the east coast. This congregation has been using me the past few Sunday afternoons at Homestead, thirty miles south of here. We began our efforts there in a private home, but have been successful in starting a congregation of about eleven members there. They are meeting at the present in the school auditorium. We also purchased and equipped a large tent, which is being used at the present in mission work on the west coast. We found that our building here would not accommodate our audiences, so we began a few days ago to make preparation to build an auditorium. We do not have a large member-ship, and most of us are among the small wage earners, yet we have already raised a nice, substantial amount to be applied to the building fund. This congregation believes in doing all it can at home before asking the brotherhood at large to assist. We cannot say as yet just how the building will be financed, yet we feel sure that by the beginning of another season we will have the building well under construction. I will remain with the work here another year, giving a large portion of my time in trying to plant the cause in the east-coast towns. This work will be supported by the Miami church."

Biblical Interpretation, With An Inquiry Concerning the Nature of "Emblems" and "Symbols."

BY M. C. K.

From the class in Hermeneutics in the Freed-Hardeman College at Henderson, Tenn., I received some queries sometime ago which I now place before our readers, together with the reply which was then sent to them in the way of a private letter. In view of the erroneous use often made of the science of interpretation by the denominational world with its different and conflicting systems of theology, these queries touch upon principles of vital importance to all students of the Bible. The queries and reply then submitted were as follows:

Henderson, Tenn., December 8, 1920.—Mr. M. C. Kurfees, Hotel Watterson, Louisville, Ky.—Dear Brother Kurfees; I wish to take a little of your time to consider what seems to me to be a close point in the exegesis of some scripture.

It is concerning the "symbol." On page 349 in Dungan's "Hermeneutics" he begins the discussion of this figure, and from his discussion we get the idea that he means to say that a symbol is retrospective. Is this true? In studying this we are mindful of the contention of some on this point to sustain a theory; but if a symbol is ever retrospective, we want to so accept and teach and have nothing to lose by the fact.

While the Lord's Supper was instituted before the facts it "symbolizes," is it, as a symbol, retrospective now?

And if baptism is a symbol of the death, burial, and resurrection of Christ, and thus looks backward, we are still lacking proof that it symbolizes a "past salvation." I state these points that you may get my meaning and difficulty.

Is the Lord's Supper a "symbol" or "emblem," or is there any real distinction?

Our class in Hermeneutics will appreciate a personal reply; and then you may, if you see proper, use this query in the Gospel Advocate. At any rate, we are asking wholly for information.

Thanking you for your assistance and hoping that you can help us out of the difficulty, I am,

Sincerely,

[Signed] F. L. PAISLEY.

Louisville, Ky., December 17, 1920.—Mr. F. L. Paisley, Henderson, Tenn.—Dear Brother Paisley: Your inquiry concerning the nature of "emblems" and "symbols" is received. I wish to say, first of all, that the field of study covered by such terms in the theological world, while entirely legitimate and proper, is, nevertheless, unless ex-plored under proper safeguards, somewhat dangerous. I will, therefore, state some general facts and principles which you and your "class in Hermeneutics" will, I think, do well to keep constantly in mind.

In dealing with the language of an author, whether figurative or literal, but preëminently in either case with the language of the Bible, the student should be well versed in what are really the essentials of Hermeneutics and then stick to them, else he is liable, sooner or later, to find himself adrift upon the uncertain sea of speculation. This is where many a bark goes to pieces on the rocks. Hermeneutics and Exegesis, the former the science of interpretation and the latter the correct application of its principles, are entirely legitimate as applied to the Bible; but the student should never overlook the fact that proper exegesis, as the term signifies, is merely the drawing or leading out of what the author of a document puts into his words and stopping there. With many religious teachers to-day, especially with those who attempt to deal with In dealing with the language of an author, whether figers to-day, especially with those who attempt to deal with prophecy, instead of exegesis there is a vast amount of eisegesis—that is, putting into a passage what the author did not put into it. Even the term "interpretation," with the coloring given to it by the theological world, is itself sometimes misleading; and hence much that is called "interpretation" is not interpretation at all, in the true sense. but merely speculation or the inculcation of human opinions. In fact, strictly speaking, the term "interpret," as used in the New Testament, means the translation of ideas from one language into another. (See Matt. 1: 23; 1 Cor. 12: 10; 14: 27, 28.) And hence, when we have an exact translation, we then have what the author said; and this, with proper information as to the current meaning of words in the language into which the translation is made is all the interpretation that is needed. This specmade, is all the interpretation that is needed. This suggests the very appropriate and pointed language of the International Standard Bible Encyclopedia: "The moment the Bible student has in his own mind what was in the mind of the author or authors of the Biblical books when these were written, he has interpreted the thought of the Scriptures." (Vol. 111, page 1489, Article Interpreta-

Furthermore, speaking in general terms on the inter-pretation of language, whether literal or figurative, it should be borne in mind that the meaning of an author cannot be properly understood and appreciated, in some instances, without due consideration of the historical cirinstances, without due consideration of the historical circumstances, such as the time and place of composition, the persons to whom or concerning whom the document was written, and the author's design in writing it. In Milligan's treatment of Hermeneutics, "the general law" concerning figurative language in the Bible is thus given: "All words and sentences should be taken and construed literally, unless this would imply some absurdity or incongruity, or involve a meaning which is inconsistent with the nature of the subject, or the plain and obvious meaning of other portions of Scripture." ("Reason and Revelation," pp. 393, 394.) For example, of Herod, Jesus said: "Go and say to that fox." (Luke 13; 32.) Again, he said: "He that eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood hath eternal life." (John 6: 54.) To say that "fox" and "flesh" and "blood" are literal in these passages would involve an absurdity, and hence it is proper to construe them figuratively. strue them figuratively.

But your query directly concerns symbols and emblems. Neither the term "symbol" (Greek, symbolon) nor the term "emblem" (Greek, embleema) occurs in the Greek New Testament; and yet the ideas which these terms convey in present-day English are contained in other words or combinations of words in the New Testament. For example, when the Lord appointed bread to represent to menhis body and the fruit of the vine his blood (Matt. 26: 26-28), and when Paul used the term "cross Christianity (1 Cor. 1: 18; Gal. 5: 11), they both did and said all that is meant in current English to-day when we call the Lord's Supper a symbol of his death and sufferings, and the cross a symbol of Christianity.

As to your question, "Is the Lord's Supper a 'symbol' or 'emblem,' or is there any real distinction?" it is proper to say that, in current English, the two terms somewhat interlap each other, each having something in common with the other precisely as they both have the same Greek origin with different prefixes, and these points of identity properly range both of them under the generic term "sign." Webster's description of the two terms is in point here: "An emblem is a visible object representing another by a natural suggestion of characteristic qualities, or by a habitual or recognized association; as, a cir-cle, having no beginning or end, is an emblem of eternity, cie, naving no beginning or end, is an emblem of eternity, the dove is the emblem of peace, a flag is the emblem of its country. . . . A symbol may be entirely arbitrary or conventional (as in algebraic, astronomical, typographical symbols, and the like)." The Standard Dictionary gives an additional idea: "An emblem resembles, a symbol represents. An emblem has some natural fitness to suggest that for which it standard is a symbol reset that for which it standard is a symbol reset. represents. An emblem has some natural fitness to suggest that for which it stands; a symbol has been chosen or agreed upon to suggest something else, with or without natural fitness." Hence, the large and learned work on "Biblical Hermeneutics" by Milton S. Terry, discussing the difference between types and symbols, says: "Types and symbols may, therefore, be said to agree in their general character as emblems, but they differ noticeably in worked and design. Adam, in his representative eral character as emblems, but they differ noticeably in special method and design. Adam, in his representative character and relation to the human race, was a type of Christ. (Rom. 5: 14.) The rainbow is a symbol of the covenanted mercy and faithfulness of God (Gen. 9: 13-16; Ezek. 1: 28; Rev. 4: 3; comp. Isa. 54: 8-10), and the bread and wine in the sacrament of the Lord's Supper are symbols of the body and blood of Christ. There are also typical events, like the passage of the Red Sea (1 Cor. 10: There are also 1-11), and symbolico-typical actions like Ahijah's rending his new garment as a sign of the rupture of the kingdom of Solomon (1 Kings 11: 29-31)." ("Biblical Hermeneutics," page 334.)

Accordingly, because of the "habitual or recognized association" of the Lord's Supper with the Lord's death, the former, in harmony with Webster, may be called an "emblem" of the latter; and because it "has been chosen or agreed upon" by the Lord "to suggest" his death and promised coming, it may, in harmony with the Standard Dictionary, be called a "symbol" of both. According to popular usage, it is more appropriate to speak of the elements, the bread and wine, as "emblems," and of the institution as a "symbol."

You further ask whether a symbol is even "retrospec-

You further ask whether a symbol is ever "retrospective." Most assuredly it is. Of the Lord's Supper the Lord himself said, "This do in remembrance of me" (Luke 22: 19); and Paul said: "As often as ye eat this bread, and drink the cup, ye proclaim the Lord's death till he come" (1 Cor. 11: 26). Both of these significant declarations distinctly make the symbolic institution

Finally, the New Testament says nothing to the effect that baptism "symbolizes a 'past salvation,'" but it does say: "We were buried therefore with" the Lord "through baptism into death; that like as Christ was raised from the dead through the glory of the Father, so we also might walk in newness of life." (Rom. 6: 4.) Again: "Having been buried with him in baptism, wherein ye were also raised with him." (Col. 2: 12.) The evangelical prophet said: "Hear, O heavens, and give ear, O earth; for Jehovah hath spoken" (Isa. 1: 2); and this, with numerous other inspired declarations, presumoses man's ability to other inspired declarations, presupposes man's ability to understand as far as Jehovah speaks and explains, beyond that sacred limit there should be no speculation. And hence, let us never forget that proper reverence for the sacred word and for its divine Author will always prompt men to attempt no interpretation beyond this limit. The great truth here involved is a solemn reason for the preacher's inspired charge: "Preach the word." (2 Tim.

Hoping this will be of some assistance to you, I remain, Yours most fraternally,

M. C. Kurfees. [Signed]

I take occasion to add that many of the most mischievous errors that have been propagated in the theological world were set forth and defended by their authors under the guise of Biblical interpretation. The Arian controversy of the fourth century, the interminable battle over | him, and let him go up." (2 Chron. 36: 22, 23.)

Trinitarianism and Unitarianism, and the countless other speculations that have disturbed the peace of the church in both ancient and modern times, have all taken shelter under the high-sounding and alluring name of "Biblical interpretation." No matter how absurd may be some fanciful opinion born in the school of speculation, its author puts it forth as merely his "interpretation" of the Bible, to which he says he has the same right that other people have to their "interpretation," and in this he is right; but the fact is, no one, in the capacity of a teacher of God's word, has the right to teach human opinions under this or any other guise. After the word of God has been faithfully translated into the language of a people, the main thing it then needs is that it be preached, not interpreted. Surely the Lord is as capable of expressing himself in terms to be understood as some self-appointed interpreter of his word.

Finally, let preachers and teachers of the word of God everywhere remember the inspired injunction which has been recorded for their guidance: "I charge thee in the sight of God and of Christ Jesus, . . . preach the word." (2 Tim. 4: 1, 2.)

God Seeth Not As Man Seeth.

BY J. C. M'Q.

"God works in a mysterious way his wonders to perform." One thing is certain, God does not think and act as do men. The prophet Isaiah says: "For my thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways. saith Jehovah. For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts." No man has ever been able to explain just why all life comes out of death and suffering and just why the just should die for the unjust. Neither would I attempt to explain why God selected Cyrus to build for him a house in Jerusalem. Just why he chose to work through this idolatrous king, no one is able to explain to his own satisfaction. Yet we know God did this. Jehovah "saith of Cyrus, He is my shepherd, and shall perform all my pleasure, even saying of Jerusalem. She shall be built; and of the temple, Thy foundation shall be laid." (Isa. 44: 28.) Not only does the prophet tell us that Cyrus was God's shepherd, but he also tells us that God anointed him. "Thus saith Jehovah to his anointed, to Cyrus, whose right hand I have holden, to subdue nations before him, and I will loose the loins of kings; to open the doors before him, and the gates shall not be shut: I will go before thee, and make the rough places smooth; I will break in pieces the doors of brass, and cut in sunder the bars of iron; and I will give thee the treasures of darkness, and hidden riches of secret places, that thou mayest know that it is I, Jehovah, who call thee by thy name, even the God of Israel. For Jacob my servant's sake, and Israel my chosen, I have called thee by thy name: I have surnamed thee, though thou hast not known me. I am Jehovah, and there is none else; besides me there is no God: I will gird thee, though thou hast not known me; that they may know from the rising of the sun, and from the west, that there is none besides me: I am Jehovah, and there is none else." (Isa. 45: 1-6.) Thus it is clear that while Cyrus did not know God, yet God anointed him and chose him as his representative and stirred up his spirit to make a proclamation throughout all his kingdom, which reads: "Now in the first year of Cyrus king of Persia, that the word of Jehovah by the mouth of Jeremiah might be accomplished, Jehovah stirred up the spirit of Cyrus king of Persia, so that he made a proclamation throughout all his kingdom, and put it also in writing, saying, Thus saith Cyrus king of Persia, All the kingdoms of the earth hath Jehovah, the God of heaven, given me; and he hath charged me to build him a house in Jerusalem, which is in Judah. Whosoever there is among you of all his people, Jehovah his God be with God is more concerned about the message than he is about the messenger, so we find that he has at times used wicked men to carry out his purposes. God overrules the wickedness of men for his own honor and glory and for the good of the human family. Man frequently considers more the messenger than he does the message. If God required perfect messengers to deliver his perfect message, it would not be delivered to-day. There has only one absolutely sinless, perfect Being lived on the earth. Christ was perfect, brought a perfect message, and made a perfect delivery. No man from his day until the present has done likewise. Through Christ, God brought a perfect message of wisdom and love to a lost and ruined race. The great throbbing, beating heart of the Almighty has exhausted the resources of heaven and earth in order to bring this message to a fallen race. Because his messengers are fallible, weak, and sinful, he will not permit his word to return unto him void. The seed is the word of God, which is sown in the heart. When the word is sown in the heart, it will germinate, spring up, and bring forth fruit. "Cast thy bread upon the waters; for thou shalt find it after many days." (Eccles. 11: 1.)

God has given his servants a perfect gospel to preach. He will not allow any change or modification of that gospel. The anathemas of heaven rest upon the man who makes any addition to or subtraction from it. Even an angel in heaven is not allowed to make such a change. God forgives and overlooks the shortcomings and weaknesses of his servants, but he will not permit them, without punishment, to make any change in the message of love which he has given a fallen race. We learn that one of his servants, the great apostle Paul, rejoiced whenever the gospel was preached. "Some indeed preach Christ even of envy and strife; and some also of good will: the one do it of love, knowing that I am set for the defense of the gospel; but the other proclaim Christ of faction, not sincerely, thinking to raise up affliction for me in my bonds. What then? only that in every may, whether in pretense or in truth, Christ is proclaimed; and therein I rejoice, yea, and will rejoice." (Phil. 1: 15-18.) Even though some men preach the gospel through envy and strife and some in pretense, Paul rejoiced just so it was preached.

No one should lose sight of the fact that the preacher has a perfect law to preach and an imperfect nature with which to contend in its proclamation. He is a very poor preacher who cannot preach better than he practices, This is not written to excuse sin, but to encourage men to subdue their sins and rise above them to a purified and nobler life. I have yet to see the man who practices all the sacred precepts that he teaches the people. God does not have one standard for a preacher and another for the lay member. The world has two standards, one for the pulpit and one for the pews; but God has not. God has no double standards. God has not only made allowance for the sins of his subjects, but he has made provisions through which those sins may be blotted out. He tells us that, while no one of us is sinless, if we confess our sins, he is faithful and righteous to forgive us our sins and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness. "If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us. If we confess our sins, he is faithful and righteous to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." (1 John 1: 8, 9.) But men sometimes act as though they did not believe it. I rejoice in the belief that God is able and that the blood of Jesus Christ has sufficient efficacy to cleanse from all sin. How dark and dreary would the world be without such belief! We read of God's forgiveness. He tells us: "Their sins and their iniquities will I remember no more." (Heb. 10: 17.) He says: "As far as the east is from the west, so far hath he removed our transgressions from us. Like as a father pitieth his children, so Jehovah pitieth them that fear him." (Ps. 103: 12, 13.) In tender mercy he casts our sins behind his back. (See Isa, 38: 17.) That we may not give up in utter despair in the midst of our sins and follies, he says to us: "Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool." (Isa. 1: 18.) He holds out to us the precious promise of complete forgiveness in order to encourage us to loathe and hate our sins and turn away from them. No man is able to do more than this, and God has never required any being to do more. To require more is to shove a man downward to hell. When a man, in contrition of spirit and in genuine repentance, has done all that God demands of him, what right has frail man to require more? We all need to get down in the very dust of humility; we must humble ourselves in order that God may exalt us. So long as we think more of the good opinion of the world than we do of the approval of God, he will not and cannot save us. God loves the contrite and humble spirit. "For thus saith the high and lofty One that inhabiteth eternity, whose name is Holy: I dwell in the high and holy place, with him also that is of a contrite and humble spirit, to revive the spirit of the humble, and to revive the heart of the contrite." (Isa. 57: 15.) Again, the prophet says: "For all these things hath my hand made, and so all these things came to be, saith Jehovah; but to this man will I look, even to him that is poor and of a contrite spirit, and that trembleth at my word." (Isa. 66: 2.) When a man has humbled himself, is penitent and trembles at the word of God, what right has any man to demand of him not to exercise his gifts in the way that he can best serve God? If God has cleansed a man, what verse in the word of God is there that warrants telling him to take a back seat instead of in humility and contrition doing the best that he can to honor God and wipe out the evil that he has done? Paul was insistent that the church at Corinth should withdraw from the man who had his father's wife, when the man had truly repented, he was just as insistent that the church confirm its love toward him and comfort him, lest he be swallowed up with his overmuch sorrow.

We have seen how God forgives sinners; and the Holy Spirit, through Paul, admonishes us to forgive each other, even as God has forgiven us. "And be ye kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving each other, even as God also in Christ forgave you." (Eph. 4: 32.) When God forgave David, he did not tell him to get down off the throne and take a back seat. After Peter had cursed and denied his Lord, Christ did not take away from him the keys of the kingdom of heaven, nor when he had acted a hypocrite was he told to take a back seat. When a man is truly penitent, and is proving every day that he lives that he is, there is not one sentence in the Bible that encourages us to demand of him that he cease to work for the Christ. To do so is to encourage and not discourage sin. If we cannot strive for more active, purer, and better lives because we have sinned, we will all sink down to a hopeless grave of darkness and despair. There is not one of us without sin, and our only hope is in the atoning blood of the Lord Jesus Christ. Our ideas of expediency and propriety should not compel us to desert the truth. When the truth is on one side and public sentiment on the other, we should always take our stand with the truth. We have a beautiful example of the Father's love and forgiveness in the example of the prodigal son. When the prodigal returned to his father's house, his father saw him afar off, and, moved with compassion, ran and fell on his neck and kissed him. When the prodigal humbly confessed his sins and pleaded to be as one of his hired servants, "the father said to his servants, Bring forth quickly the best robe, and put it on him; and put a ring on his hand, and shoes on his feet: and bring the fatted calf, and kill it, and let us eat, and make merry: for this my son was dead, and is alive again; he was lost, and is found. And they began to be merry." (Luke 15: 22-24.)

Thus he was not only completely restored to favor with his father, but also to his former position in the family, except with the self-righteous elder brother. So should we rejoice when men who have been lost in sin have discovered their sins, have learned to hate and loathe them, and have confessed them and turned away from them. Angels rejoice over sinners that repent. Why should we not do likewise, and show our rejoicing by helping them to a better life?

No Regard for the Word of God.

BY E. A. E.

Hear, O heavens, and give ear, O earth; for Jehovah hath spoken. (Isa. 1: 2.)

It is distressing to see so little regard paid to the word of God. Never before as now for the past half century have people generally, both in the church (as the saying goes) and out of it, given such little attention to the teaching of the Bible.

The Pharisees and lawyers rejected the counsel of God against themselves in refusing to submit to John's baptism. (Luke 7: 29, 30.) Do not all to-day, who refuse to obey God in any other way or at any other point, do the same? To set aside God's order of things at any one point is to become guilty of all. (James 2: 10, 11.) Instances:

- 1. The children of Israel rejected Jehovah as their King when they turned away from his order of judges and asked for a king to judge them "like all the nations." This rejection of God brought in the end the most fearful destruction. (1 Sam. 8.) God has ordained elders with scriptural qualifications and duties in "every church." To reject his order of church government and work here is to reject him. So long as it is necessary to teach the will of God to the church-babes in Christ and others; "to feed the church of the Lord which he purchased with his own blood; " " to tend the flock of God," protecting it from false teachers within and wolves without (Tit. 1: 9-11); to "labor in the word and in teaching" (1 Tim. 5: 17); and, above all, to set a good example (Acts 20: 28; 1 Pet. 5: 3), the work of scripturally qualified elders will be necessary. This work and, therefore, elders-overseers-bishops-are as permanent in the church as preaching the gospel and teaching the truth. To set aside scripturally qualified elders ar 'their scriptural work is to set God and his order of thu aside. Is it not a sad and woeful fact that in many pla olders or bishops or overseers and their qualifications work have been altogether ignored? It is a fact that berever this has been done, it has been done either in i unce or in willful disobedience to God.
- 2. King Saul refused to obey God in usery destroying the Amalekites and all they possessed; yes presumed to worship Jehovah in his own way at Gilgs. Samuel declared that God has not as great delight in sacrifices and burnt offerings as in obeying his voice, and that to obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken to him than the fat of rams. Saul's act was pronounced stubbornness and rebellion, equal to the sin of witchcraft and idolatry, and a rejection of the word of Jehovah. For this he was rejected from being king. (1 Sam. 15: 1-23.) How much better are the ones who, while they work and worship, refuse to obey God and persist in going their own way?
- 3. All should know the scriptural qualifications of elders, and should strive by God's help to have no other kind of elders—or so-called ones. In places these qualifications are not regarded and God is openly disobeyed. A "novice" is no more of an elder than a babe is a man; he cannot be. God plainly says "a novice" must not be selected as an elder, and gives his reasons. (1 Tim. 3: 6.) Yet, in places, in utter disregard of all this, novices are selected and called "elders."
 - 4. Back of all this is greater stubbornness and rebellion. Some man, or set of men, desiring to carry a certain point, which itself may be wrong, maneuver so as to have novices and others appointed as elders in order to get a majority vote in "the board of elders." Men who have any regard at all for the word of God and the church cannot do this. In other words, all who do this have lost all respect for honesty, themselves, the truth, the church and God. This is worse than the dirtiest politics of the lowest-down city wards, because it is done in the name of Christianity and ostensibly for the peace and good of the church. I write as plainly and as clearly on this point as it is possible to do, in order to arouse the church of God in all its strength against such worldly and wicked practices.

- 5. The work of elders is as plainly taught in the New Testament as what to do for the remission of sins. Is this work done, or is it disregarded? Is any effort worthy of the name being made to bring the church up to this work? Does not some preacher, especially some modern one, publishing himself as "the minister" of the congregation, assume all charge and control, or, at least, charge or control above the nominal elders, and proceed to rule it as suits him? He puts on his spurs, gets into the saddle, takes the reins into his own hands, and rides the congregation in the direction in which he wants it to go. He has no regard for what Paul says to Timothy and Titus in regard to elders and their proper treatment. If the elders do not rack according to his gait, he deposes them and has others elected by a popular vote of the babes and less informed in the church who will. The man who has no higher conception of the church of God than that cannot preach the gospel, or would not if he could. Satan has never discovered a more powerful and effective way of destroying the peace and usefulness of any congregation of saints.
- 6. The church of the New Testament can never be restored so long as the scriptural qualifications and work of elders are disregarded, or so long as the church makes such poor efforts in general to fulfill its mission.
- 7. God did not establish his church at such wondrous cost in order to furnish preachers some place to preach, or a job; neither did he make it a plaything for preachers. However, some preachers do make it a plaything. God did not qualify, call, and send out preachers to take charge of churches. God did not qualify, call, and appoint elders in every church in order to place them as a board in some preacher's hands to do his bidding.
- 8. Preachers have no regard for the word of God when they encourage congregations to divide over themselves. Paul would not allow the church at Corinth to divide over him, Apollos, or Peter (1 Cor. 1: 10), and said that all who are ruled by strife and jealousies are carnal and "walk after the manner of men" (1 Cor. 3: 1-9). In another place he declares that he could wish hintself accursed from God in order to save others. It seems that some preachers would have the church accursed rather than lose a job.
- 9. To refuse studiously and prayerfully to avoid all questions which God teaches should be avoided, for the reason that they gender strife, and to refuse, on the other hand, to declare likewise the whole counsel of God, is to disregard the word of God.
- 10. To decline to study and to teach all the will of God on unity and peace—being of one mind, one heart, one soul, of the same love, speaking the same thing, each counting the other better than himself (Phil. 2: 1-11), and to fail to "give diligence to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace," spring from not regarding the word of God. In this respect some seem to have no regard whatever for God and his word.

But to this man will I look, even to him that is poor and of a contrite spirit, and that trembleth at my word. (Isa. 66: 2.)

It All Depends.

BY F. W. SMITH.

The accumulation and bequeathing of money is a very dangerous thing, and few there be who do either to the glory of God and the good of their souls. Hence, it all depends upon certain principles founded in the revelation God has given to man; and before proceeding with the development of certain facts, I wish to submit the following from the Christian-Evangelist:

THE WISDOM OF MAKING A WILL,

There is a fine, brave kind of dignity in making a will. It is the revelation of a thoughtful, earnest soul.

It is not, as some think, an attempt to control money and property with a dead hand for living people who know best what they need and want in a changeful world

The will of a good man who has been successful in life The will of a good man who has been successful in life makes his memory blessed. It relieves uncertainty and prevents strife among those who are conscientious and generous. It educates the public and gives a precedent likely to be followed by others, if the will is a righteous one. Giving money for worthy purposes enables one to continue to be a force for good long after his "lisping, stammering tongue lies silent in the grave."

The hour is rapidly approaching when the memory of the wealthy and even well-to-do will be a reproach, if he has left no gift for the service of mankind. Men of the

has left no gift for the service of mankind. Men of the latter day are learning to give while they live, and also to leave gifts to be used after they have gone hence. Rarely does a wealthy man fail, in these days of better conceptions of the duties of wealth, to designate something for religion, benevolence, or education in his will.

Mr. Jacob Schiff, the wealthy New York banker, who has just passed away, left $1,300,000 for charity and education, mostly among his own people, the Jews. This was a small sum, comparatively speaking, for he was "worth" $30,000,000. The will does not compare in liberality with that of Mr. T. A. Cary, whose gifts to education we commented on sometime ago. Mr. Cary's fortune was $900,000, and he gave $578,000 through his will for religion and benevolence. It is related that when his will became benevolence. It is related that when his will became known it was the chief topic of conversation for some time in religious gatherings, in clubs, and at parties. One man said: "Most men leave their money behind when they die; Mr. Cary took his with him." Another declared; "I'm going right home and alter my will." A shroud has no pockets. It needs none. But there is a way to take the real riches, in money, into the life beyond. When it is transmuted into spiritual power through support of those who labour to wall the model have it will be laid to see the labour to wall the model. who labor to make the world happy, it will be laid up in heaven beyond the reach of rust and thieves.

Take the first sentence: "There is a fine, brave dignity in making a will. It is the revelation of a thoughtful, earnest soul." The "fine" and "brave dignity" in the matter depends upon how the goods were accumulated and for what purpose they were bequeathed. Usually colossal fortunes are made through oppression, graft, or political trickery, with unfair methods as the taproot. The lamented F. D. Srygley once said in substance that he did not believe a man could accumulate riches and discharge his duty to God and his fellow man, because there were so many places calling for and demanding money that it would be impossible to keep it and stand well with God. The thought impressed me very much, and years of observation in the light of God's word has strengthened me in the conviction that he was right in his statement. Men who accumulate great fortunes necessarily have but little time for Bible reading and the demands of Christian living, for their big business calls for about all there is in them. When the shadows of death or the infirmities of old age creep upon them, it is but natural for them to think of the beyond, and many of them seek to compensate for the loss of a life service to God with a death gift of their wealth to some religious or benevolent institution. Mr. Carnegie, it is claimed, once said, "It is a disgrace for a man to die rich;" and he might have added, "It is dangerous for a man to live in the possession of riches," for the Savior said: "It is hard for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of heaven." (Matt. 19: 23.)

men bequeath their wealth in their wills, to be distributed after their death, is, as a rule, a curse to mankind. Why do I say this? Because the institutions made recipients of these large gifts of money are honeycombed with infidelity, and "Christian education" has come to mean in many instances educated infidels. It would be infinitely better for men who make money to spend it as they make it for the glory of God and the good of mankind, rather than bend their energies to accumulate it with the thought of leaving it in bulk for some one else to manage when they are dead and gone. Nine times out of ten the "benevolent institutions" to which they leave their money are rivals of the church of Jesus Christ, robbing the church of the glory that should go to ker. These gifts to schools and benevolent institutions commercialize them, furnishing big salaries for men, which become plums for designing men to obtain through political wirepulling.

The author of the excerpt given above says: "A shroud has no pockets." True enough; and it is also true that neither the everyday nor Sunday garment should have pockets "lined with gold," unless there be a rent through which it flows into the hands of the helpless and needy. "Honor the Lord with thy substance, and with the first fruits of all thine increase." (Prov. 3: 9.)

Are rich men sinners above all others? By no means, They can be a blessing to the world by a timely and proper distribution of their money. It is one of the failings and faults of both men and women to classify sin and magnify sins where God has not. Of course all kinds of sin are wrong, and no apology can or ought to be made for any sin; but while this is true, we find men and women lifting their hands in holy horror at some unfortunate man or woman who has fallen from fleshly passion, while they behold, without a word of protest, an old idolater (covetous man) sitting on the front seat, singing: "Amazing grace-how sweet the sound!-that saved a wretch like me." Mistake! He is not saved; and accepting the Bible as true, he is bent in another direction. "Now the works of the flesh are manifest, which are these; Adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies, envyings, murders, drunkenness, revelings, and such like: of the which I tell you before, as I have also told you in time past, that they which do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God." (Gal. 5: 19-31.) Inspiration here draws the picture of the covetous man and swings it on the wall side by side with all other works of the flesh. Again: "For this ye know, that no whoremonger, nor unclean person, nor covetous man, who is an idolater, hath any inheritance in the kingdom of Christ and of God." (Eph. 5: 15.) This puts the covetous man in company with the grosser sins of the flesh; and yet the church makes a broad distinction. Even preachers are not free from a spirit of covetousness, and sometimes preach and write eloquently against the love of money, while they themselves love it better than a hound puppy loves "pot licker." Heb. 13: 5 is a fine text, provided a personal application is made of it-viz.: "Be ye free from the love of money." (American Revised Version.) But inconsistency gone to seed is seen when one who chases the dollar from morning till night, week in and week out, as well as year in and year out, undertakes to dictate to others as to how to run the kingdom of God. Preachers who are not covetous-and I believe there are many-should raise their voices in no uncertain sound against the spirit of covetousness in the church.

Largess bestowed as charity is no offset to wealth achieved by injustice. It is more blessed to give than to receive, and no class has a right to monopolize the greater blessedness of giving, leaving to others only the lesser joy of receiving, Selected.

Two Meetings in Fort Worth, Texas.

BY E. A. E.

The first one of these meetings was held by the Central congregation, beginning on the second Sunday in May and closing on the evening of the fourth Sunday. This is an earnest, faithful church, conscientiously working to build itself up in love and to extend in that part of the city the cause of the world's Redeemer. Its worthy elders, seeking the coöperation and good will of all, are endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. Brother M. H. Moore, for a number of years the superintendent of the public schools of Fort Worth, one of the most useful men in all the city and also one of the very busiest, preaches for this congregation. I think he is, too, one of the elders, laboring in word and teaching. There were one or two additions during this meeting. The audiences and attention were good.

On Monday night after the fourth Sunday in May I joined the Southside congregation in the meeting which had begun the day before. This meeting closed on the evening of the first Sunday in June. There were five Sundays in May. The audiences and attention during this meeting were likewise good. Not one was baptized, but I trust some in faith repented. This congregation is at work. During the meeting it held a most pleasant all-day meeting. Brother Tice Elkins preaches for this congregation, and is much liked by all. He is a hard worker. Besides his other work, he edits and manages a solid, good, small paper, called "Grace and Truth." His paper is growing in favor with the people.

Brother Elkins will make a full report of these meetings, giving the names of all preachers present. I had the pleasure of being with a number of young preachers, earnest and devoted to the gospel. It was encouraging to be with these strong young men, "free from envy, scorn, and pride," and clear and clean in their lives. The future growth of the church depends upon such young men. The good Lord guide, protect, and bless them! These men and these congregations know I love them all.

MINERAL WELLS

By an earnest invitation I spent one day and night with the congregation at Mineral Wells, Texas. This is fifty miles west of Fort Worth. I was urged to hold a short meeting here, and but for duties at home I should have been pleased to do so. This congregation numbers at least one hundred and twenty-five members. The elders are Brethren Woodard, Love, Branning, and Middleton. They are men of sufficient age and ability to serve as scriptural elders. I learned that they possess another qualification so necessary: they have a good report from those who are without. A president of one of the strongest banks in the place, and who is a Methodist, told me that any one of these men can borrow all the money he wants upon his own good name, and all of them stand high as upright and trustworthy Christian men. The congregation owns a good brick house of worship, recently purchased from the Presbyterians, situated on one of the best streets, and is as well located as could be desired. This congregation impressed me as a united, peace-maintaining. earnest and faithful band of brethren and sisters. Brother J. B. Nelson, of Dallas, not long since was with this congregation in a meeting, and I find that his report of the work of this church is correct.

I say this much with pleasure, because some few have spoken of this congregation as not being loyal and faithful to the gospel of Christ and the pure worship of God. Because it uses the quarterlies and other helps in studying the Bible, some would call it "digressive." It is indeed a sad misrepresentation to do that.

I am glad to say there is a church of Christ in Mineral Wells, with a neat and comfortable house of worship in a desirable location, and I pray God for its prosperity spiritually.

If God Be For Us.

BY A. B. L.

The assurance is given that God's friendship is the best insurance to be had against fallure or defeat. The question, "Who can be against us?" is rhetorical. The inference is that no one can be against us in the sense that he can prevail over us. In the final analysis all things must work together for the good and salvation of him whose fortunes are linked with God. But there are many who appropriate to themselves this promise who do not have it. They deceive themselves in believing that God is for them. To have God for us means that we have done and are doing the things that please him. Unless this be our attitude, it is mockery to talk about God being for us. A man cannot tie up with God and with the world at the same time. Jesus said: "Ye cannot serve God and mammon." Our Father will not stand for a half-hearted allegiance. "Know ye not that the friendship of the world is enmity with God? Whosoever therefore will be a friend of the world is the enemy of God." During the darkest period of the Civil War some one approached Mr. Lincoln and said: "Don't you think that if God is on our side we will win?" The great commoner replied: "Never fear about God; the main thing is for us to be on his side." God will certainly do the right thing, for he is eternally on the right side. The burning question is, are we on God's side? If not, we have no right to expect his help or protection.

Separation from the world is the price that must be paid for partnership with God. "Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you, and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty."

Lincoln was right. If we can just make up our mind to be on God's side, he will surely stand by us.

Many people have a wrong conception of how God shows his favor toward those who are on his side. "I don't see why God blesses that man so much," said a Christian woman. She referred to a man who had grown rich in this world's goods, but who had in many points forsaken God's law. "Good people are nearly always poor people" is another observation frequently made. But why assume that because a man is wealthy and his money comes easy. that God is for that man and against his poor brother? True enough, the man of wealth and distinction may be a useful and sincere Christian, employing his means for the spread of the gospel and the relief of the suffering. In that event. God is for that man, for the reason that he is making money for God. But this is the exception and not the rule. The average rich man is not for God, and God is not for him. The wealth he has accumulated becomes such a handicap that the true riches of the kingdom of heaven are almost beyond his reach. "And Jesus looked round about, and saith unto his disciples, How hardly shall they that have riches enter into the kingdom of God! And the disciples were astonished at his words. But Jesus answereth again, and saith unte them, Children, how hard is it for them that trust in riches to enter into the kingdom of Goo! It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God." Mark 10: 23-25.) Surely no one will contend that a man is especially blessed of God who stands in such a position that it is hard for him to enter the kingdom. I can see how God blesses a man when he permits him to fail in his ventures. For there is danger in the striving after riches before they are actually obtained. Paul said: "But they that will be rich fall into temptation and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts, which drown men in destruction and perdition. For the love of money is the root of all evil: which while some coveted after, they have erred from the faith, and pierced themselves through with many sorrows." (3 Pim, 6: 9, 10.) Away with the spirit of cant that envies the rich! It is the sign of ignorance and of weak faith. Every Christian who has felt the sting of poverty should be big and brave enough to echo Luther's prayer: "I thank thee, God, that thou hast made me poor." After all has been said, you have a better chance than had you been fed from a silver spoon." Hearken, my beloved brethren, Hath not God chosen the poor of this world rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom which he hath promised to them that love him?"

Commencement at David Lipscomb College.

BY H. S. LIPSCOMB,

The commencement of 1921 at David Lipscomb Collegemarks the close of the most remarkable record of its existence. The enrollment reached the high-water mark of two hundred and twenty-nine—the first time it has crossed the two-hundred mark—twenty-three of whom were in the graduating class.

The character of the work done in every department has been elevated and standardized. Students leaving or graduating from this institution enter any institution in the State now with full credit for whatever work they have completed at David Lipscomb College without further examination. The college is a member of the Tennessee Association of Colleges, in which each college accepts at par the work done by any student in any other college of the association. Students in all classes are subjected to formal, rigid examinations at the end of each term. Records of these are systematically kept. Promotion in every case is based upon the regular classroom work and these examinations.

The deportment of the boys in their dormitory has been the best in the history of the school. Rowdyism of every character has been eliminated by excluding from the school all who would not be subject to proper regulations. More than a dozen boys were sent home for such offenses as profanity, smoking, absence without leave, etc. In these cases the character of the discipline was positive, and yet so kindly administered that those who left did so with the highest admiration of their teachers.

The religious life of the boys has been unusually good. In addition to preaching to a number of surrounding congregations every Sunday, the boys have converted and baptized about twenty of their own number. This makes a most wholesome influence among the boys and girls of the school.

The commencement exercises were acclaimed by those who saw and heard them to be the best they had witnessed.

An Auditor's Plea.

BY R. L. WHITESIDE.

O man of God, when you stand up to preach to-day, I beg that you remember that I am in your audience; and I plead for some small consideration. I come to you because I believe you have come into union and fellowship with God and his Son Jesus Christ, have grown into intimate acquaintance with them, and have found that relationship so sweet, so helpful, so satisfying, that there has grown up in your heart a consuming desire to bring others into that blessed communion. You have eaten of the bread of life, you have drunk of the fountain of the water of life, and they satisfy. You pity those who have not thus tasted of the Lord and found that he is gracious, and you would gladly lead them into this joyous experience. You are not a professional preacher, saying a perfunctory speech as a part of your professional service. At least, so I trust.

I hunger; I thirst; hence, I am here. Don't joke; don't resort to any of the tricks of the orator; don't try to sooth me with the grace of the accomplished platform speaker.

These things, in turn, might amuse, entertain, and please me, were it not that I am tormented with this awful hunger, this consuming thirst. Remember that, and give me bread, give me drink. My brother in the pulpit to-day, were you ever intensely hungry and consumed with thirst? If so, you know that nothing but food and drink will satisfy. Do not, then, indulge in jesting and tantalizing to-day—that would be cruel to one so hungry and thirsty as I. Remember, I sit in your audience to-day; and I am hungry. I am thirsty. Give me food; give me drink.

Q.

From J. Frank Jenkins, Owen's Cross Roads, Ala., June 13: "I wish to say that I enjoyed visiting the church of Christ at Bell Factory last Lord's day, with Dan Jones, of West Huntsville. Brother Jones is a faithful preacher. I enjoyed a visit for dinner with Elder G. M. Moore—a devoted Christian home. Brother and Sister Moore are blessed with ten children, who are all members of the church of Christ. Brother Moore intends to have a protracted meeting some time in the near future at Bell Factory, near his home, for the good of all. May God bless all his children everywhere."

From J. H. Morris, Tuscumbia, Ala., June 13: "J. H. Horton, of Haleyville, Ala., began a series of meetings with the church of Christ at East Florence, under a tent, on the fifth Lord's day in May and continued it two weeks, closing last night with thirty-seven baptisms and five reclaimed. The services were well attended, especially at night, averaging perhaps four hundred every night. The preaching was the very best, being edifying, uplifting, and inspiring throughout the entire meeting, thus strengthening and building up the local congregation. I conducted the song service throughout the meeting. We praise God and press on."

From A. A. Bunner, Cleveland, Ohio, June 13: "I am authorized to say that a few good, zealous brethren are endeavoring to establish the cause of Christ in the city of Warren, Ohio, a city of twenty-eight thousand inhabitants. They are now holding a protracted meeting in the McKinley school auditorium on Elm Street. If there are any loyal disciples of Christ in or near Warren, let them report to O. C. Julian, 143 Perkins Road, Warren, Ohio. These brethren will need the fellowship of the faithful in Christ in their work here. Any desirous of helping them in their effort can send to Brother Julian, whose address is given above."

L. Meade Williams has been on our list for fifteen years, and writes that he "could not get along without your valuable paper." Concerning the cause at Tulare, Cal., he writes: "The work is moving along nicely here. A splendid audience to-day (June 12). A sermon from Heb. 9: 27 was ably delivered by Brother Wyatt. On June 5 Brother West preached, and at the close of his sermon one noble boy came forward and made the good confession and was baptized immediately after the service. We are hoping and praying for great results in this year 1921. May we have a mind to work to this end, and to God be all the glory."

From S. W. Bell, Sedalia, Mo., June 14: "I filled my regular appointment at Berea last Sunday. F. H. Hanger was with them on the fifth Sunday, baptizing one, with one by relation. I. D. Ames was with them on the first Sunday. We never have large crowds at this place, but there are some of the very best people to be found anywhere in this church. I pray that God may continue to bless our efforts for good. We held our initial service under our tent to night. While we are sure that we have a hard fight to make in more senses than one, yet we believe that the Lord will bless our efforts for good. We ask that our friends keep their eyes on Sedalia and raise their voices to God daily for our success."

From F. O. Howell, Jackson. Tenn., June 14; "The congregation at Highland Avenue, this city, is growing rapidly. We are having to place chairs in the aisles to seat our congregations. We are planning the enlargement of our building in the near future to accommodate the growth. I am conducting night services in different parts of the city, with very satisfactory crowds and good results. I preached to more than five hundred people at a tent service on Sunday night. There are no better people than these. Perfect peace and harmony prevail among the entire people, Brethren, any time you are in the city on Sunday, do not fail to worship with us. We hope to be able to report great things for the church here in the near future."

W. D. Bills writes from Dallas, Texas, June 13: "I closed at Childress, Texas, last night, with excellent interest. Thirty-seven were baptized and three were restored. Rain hindered a great deal through most of the meeting, yet we had large crowds and interesting services. The church at Childress is among the best and is wide-awake to her opportunities to accomplish good. They treated me well in every way and paid me well for my work. T. B. Clark is the preacher, and is held in the highest esteem by the people of the entire town, both in and out of the church. He seems to be decidedly the most popular preacher in the city. He knows about all the people, and seems able to call most of them by name. I de not know of a place in the entire State where a preacher has done more for the church. His work accounts for much of the success of the meeting; and if we could have had pretty weather, we should have had a wonderful meeting. I promised to return again next June. I aim now at Osli-Cliff, Dallas, for a few nights, and will go from here to Valiant, Okla., for my next meeting."

From Earnest C. Love, Fresno, Cal., June 13: "The tent meeting, conducted by the Fresno Street church of Christ, which began on May 9, closed on June 12, with the tent filled to its capacity. There were two baptisms, one came from the Baptist Church, and the church was edified and strengthened. We had another good meeting at Roeding Park in the afternoon of June 12. The subject, 'Hell Fire,' drew a good hearing from the large crowd present, Our school closed on June 10. We had to leave off our program (n account of not having time to prepare it without neglecting something of more importance. We are pleased with the results accomplished during the year; considering our move from Santa Rosa about the beginning of the second semester. There is a great deal of work to be done to get ready for the opening of school in September. From present indications the attendance will be large, and the buildings will have to be started soon.

From J. L. Hines, Monticello, Ky., June 7: "I closed a three-weeks' meeting at Mullintown, this county, which resulted in five believing and being baptized. The church is in good condition there now. For the gratification of those who know the conditions that exist in this field, I will say that the churches of Wayne County are cooperating in the matter of doing evangelistic work in the county. Our work this year, so far, has resulted in the house in Monticello being painted inside and out, a baptistery installed, cork carpet covering the entire floor, and the installation of operachairs. The contribution has more than doubled, and the attendance at the Sunday school has about doubled. All of the churches in the county are in very good condition. There have been eleven added, and the building of two church houses is to start shortly. I am to begin a meeting here next Sunday, but we are looking forward to one to be conducted by C. R. Nichol, beginning on October 2."

We are grieved to learn that U. G. Wilkinson, of Comanche, Okla., is seriously ill, being under the constant treatment of a physician. Brother Wilkinson writes: "It is a heavy trial, but the Lord in his wisdom knows just what is best. I submit in all things to his will. I need the prayers and fellowship of the brethren. They have all been so kind and good to me that my heart melts in gratitude to them. May God bless them all. I have given all I had to give in this service, and can only depend upon them for means to meet expenses. I cannot think whal would have become of me without their loving friendship." It is to be hoped that thoughtful Christians will make a quick response. Brother Wilkinson's health has been broken in fighting the good fight, but he may yet regain it with the help of God and his brethren. His two books, "In the Great Conflict" and "Infidelity Against Itself," are well worth reading. Price, fifty cents each. Write to Brother Wilkinson at Comanche, Okla.

The following is addressed to loyal disciples everywhere by the church of Christ at Cove, Rockcastle County, Kv.: We are a small church, and have been worshiping in a schoolhouse most of the time for the last fifteen years, At one time we were locked out of it. During the time that we were locked out we worshiped in a mill house. In a short time we were permitted to go back to the schoolhouse, and are continuing our Lord's-day meetings there. In a schoolhouse where any one is allowed to preach who wishes to, the church of Christ cannot expect to prosper as it would in its own building. We have, therefore, decided to build a house in which to worship. We have purchased a nice site on which to build, and have the restrictive clause in the deed. The membership is small and poor in this world's goods. Therefore, we appeal to all the faithful ones in Christ to help us in our efforts in this worthy undertaking. With a fund of from fifteen hundred to two thousand dollars we can erect a modest house in which we may meet to worship God as the New Testament requires and in which the gospel can be preached in its purity. We will thank you for your fellowship with us in this undertaking, We hope to be able to begin our building in August. So please help us at once. Send all donations to Elder J. W. Riddle, treasurer, Orlando, Ky."

FIELD REPORTS

Bedford, Ind., June 13 .- The church here began a series of meetings yesterday. with the writer doing the preaching. The house was crowded at both services, and the hearts of the audience seemed to be full of love and zeal. Brother O. W. Scott, of Borden, Ind., preaches here twice a month, and he is dearly beloved by the church for his earnest and effective work. This is the home of Brother A. L. Dalton, one of our faithful preachers.-J. E. Thornberry.

Baird. Texas, June 6,-1 am at Baird yet, doing my best in preaching the word. I understand that a few of the members are not attending, but the brethren tell me that more of the other church people are hearing me than had ever attended our meetings here before. O, if our brethren just would always be at their post of duty and help in the "Father's business," how much more good the preacher could do in a protracted effort! Brethren, if we do not lay down our little petty notions, the cause of Christ can-not prosper. The Master's work needs, right now, as perhaps never before, a united effort and a concerted action upon the part of all who love the Lord. Brethren, pray for me.-D. S. Ligen.

Algood, Tenn., June 14.—Last Lord's day I preached morning and night to attentive crowds at Tyree's Chapel, in Simpson County, Ky On the first Lord's day in June 1 preached at Bethel, in the same county, to large audiences, with fine attention. On the fifth Sunday in May and on Saturday night before I preached at Dunmor. All of these services were well attended. The meeting at Algood, with Brother R. E. L. Taylor doing the preaching, will probably close to-night. We have had good attendance and attention throughout the entire meeting. Eight have been baptized to date. My first meeting is to begin on Thursday before the fourth Sunday in July at Sulphur, in Overton County, Tenn. This is a mission meeting.-Allen Phy.

Texarkana, Ark., June 10.—I recently spent two weeks on the coast in South Texas, preaching a baccalaure-ate sermon at Sinton and several nights to large and attentive audi-ences which the house would not hold. I had the pleasure of meeting two ven-I had the pleasure of meeting two venerable preachers of righteousness—Brother C. W. Sewell, at Corpus Christi, and Brother J. P. Whitefield, at Sinton. These great men began telling the sweet story of Jesus and his love in Tennessee half a century ago. A great field is open in that country for a wide-awake minister who is not afraid to work, but free of hurtful hobbies and petty jealousies. The local work with the Central congregation grows steadily. Brethren. Isaac Tackett and S. C. Cox took care of the work during my absence.-J. E. Wainwright.

Sedalia, Mo., June 9.—Brother Roy H. Lanier reached us to-day and preached at the church house to-night. On account of the rainy weather, we have not pitched our tent yet. We look for Brother W. W. Slater to join us next Tuesday, and hope that the weather conditions will be such by that time that we can begin under our big tent. Those who expressed themselves are well pleased with Brother Lanier's singing and preaching; so, when we all join in our efforts against sin, we hope and pray that we may able to accomplish much good. Please do not forget that the few who live here are not able to bear the burden alone. Any help, from one dollar up, will be greatly appreciated in this effort against sin. With God's help through his children, we expect to keep on battling against sin till we win. Pray for and with us, and aid us all you can.—S. W. Bell.

Abilene, Texas, June 7.—I preached at Peter's Chapel, north of Abilene, Sunday, May 29. No visible results. In the afternoon I went to Lueders with Brother G. W. Harvey and family, A. large congregation was assembled under the tabernacle. The singing was good, and Brother J. D. Harvey preached a good sermon. I remained overnight and preached for the con-gregation, with a large audience and good attention. I spent a real pleasant night in Brother Harvey's home. He is a good preacher and a godly man. His influence is good among the people. He has a splendid wife who is a helpmeet indeed. I was at Bowman meetinghouse, in Archer County, Sunday. As usual, the "faithful few" were present. However, the service was good. There was an unusual thing about this place which is worthy of mention-namely, a meetinghouse. Through the zeal of a few, funds were raised and a real nice meetinghouse was built. It is sufficient to accommodate a large audience, is seated with nice opera chairs, and four large lamps are suspended from the ceiling. The example of these zealous people is worthy of emulation. Why not others show their zeal as these have done?-W. G. Black.

Ousts Rheumatism.

Here it is. Those awful pains of rheumatism so common during the cold, rainy weather are completely forgotten, and the rheumatism is expelled from your system, by the very simple treatment of taking Renwar Salts, which neutralizes the uric acid in the blood, and Renwar attacks the very cause of this malady and expels the uric acid from the system. Renwar is entirely dependable. It does not in any way injure the stomach or affect the heart. It is prescribed by the best physicians, and your money is refunded if Renwar fails to relieve you of rheumatism. Give Renwar a trial, and you will never regret it. Mr. Benagh, of the Nashville Reliway and Light Company, says: "Within two or three days after using Renwar my rheumatism disappeared." Periods of Life.

BY H. C. FLEMING.

From our first recollections in life, in after years our minds revert to the events of the past that have slipped by unheeded in their effects upon ourselves and others, Among all these events are many that have been full of joys and pleasures, but with the most of us the sad ones have had the supremacy. Both the pleasant and the sad have come to us by conditions and influences of our earthly affairs. When we glance backward over these, the pleasant ones still give us happiness, and we love to dwell upon them; but how different when we think of the effect of the evil ones upon ourselves and others! In old age these cause us sad memories and fearful thoughts of the consequences that may follow after we are done with the affairs of this life.

Thoughtlessness in the careless use of our words and actions has been the cause of many evils. The impulse of the moment has often caused us to say or do things that in old age we regret with sincere sorrow; but, like the scattered feathers, they can never be recalled. If in our younger days we could have realized these facts, how different would have been our condition and the influence of our lives! But sighs and tears are of no avail for past actions. The only consolation we can have is through the promise of forgiveness of God by the mercies of our Lord Jesus Christ in obedience to him. Eliminate this promise from the plan of salvation, and who, old or young, could have any hope for relief from the burdens of sin?

The periods of life—infancy, youth, manhood, and old age—come to us but once, and as they pass in succession they can never be recalled. Therefore, whatever evil we do must stand in the debtor's column until canceled by him to whom the debt is due; if never canceled, we must bear the results through a never-ending eternity.

For it is written: "As I live, saith the Lord, every knee shall bow to me, and every tongue shall confess to God. So then every one of us shall give account of himself to God." (Rom. 14: 11, 12.) "And that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father." (Phil. 2: 11.)

In view of the certainty of the foregoing quotations, we should learn the great importance, in every period of life, of doing all the good we can, and of avoiding the evil. There will be a great difference in confession and obedience to Christ in this life and at the judgment day when every knee shall bow and every tongue shall confess.

We in old age, having had the experiences of all the periods of life, rest satisfied with their own happy should endeavor to influence the young in all ways and manners possible to us, so that they may avoid, along life's journey, the mistakes that we have made, and thereby enjoy sweet happiness in this life and in that which is to come. In doing this we will bring to ourselves the greatest happiness possible in this life. None ever regret the good they have done, but many regret the evil which they cannot undo.

It is one of the most hopeful features of present-day Christianity that men are becoming sensible that they are not mere individuals, but are members of a society, and that they must bear the shame of the existing conditions of things in society. Intelligent Christian men now feel that the saving of their own souls is not enough, and that they cannot with complacency rest satisfied with their own happy condition and prospects if the society to which they belong is in a state of degradation and misery. It is by the growth of this sympathetic shame that reformation on a great scale will be brought about. It is by men learning to see in all misery and vice their own share of guilt that society will gradually be leavened. To those who cannot own their connection with their fellow men in any such sense, to those who are quite satisfied if they themseives are comfortable, I do not know what can be said. They break themselves off from the social body, and accept the fate of the amputated limb.-Dods.

Paul's Attitude Toward the Sects.

BY J. R. BRADLEY.

Read 1 Cor. 9: 18-23. Paul became all this, "that he might save some," Take the statement of verse 20: "And unto the Jews I became as a Jew, that I might gain the Jews; to them that are under the law, as under the law, that I might gain them that are under the law." He says in verse 22: "I am made all things to all men, that I might by all means save some." Before taking his son Timothy with him to the work, "he took and circumcised him because of the Jews that were in those quarters." This young man's mother "was a Jewess; his father was a Greek." (See Acts 16: 1-4.) This, as I see it, is one instance of Paul's becoming as a Jew that he "might gain the Jews." Another instance is recorded in Acts 21: 17-24. Remember, the elders indorsed and advised Paul to enter into this Jewish "vow," that these Jews might know that "thou thyself [Paul] walkest orderly, and keepest the law." Of course we know that Paul had been freed from all this when he obeyed "the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus." (Rom. 8: 2, 3.) See also Acts 18: 18: "And Paul after this tarried there yet a good while, and then took his leave of the brethren, and salled thence into Syria, and with him Priscilla and Aquila; having shorn his head in Cenchrea; for he had a vow." I cannot think for a single moment that "the great apostle to the Gentiles," the apostle who did more solid gospel preaching than all the other apostles, ever did. In all his association with the different sects of the Jews, sacrifice a particle of the gospet ground on which he stood. See how he "preached Christ in the synagogues, that he is the Son of God" (Acts 9: 20-22), immediately after his conversion. See his masterly sermon in Antioch, right in the Jewish synagogue. (Acts 13: 14-41.) He also " so spake, that a great multitude both of the Jews and also of the Greeks believed." (Acts 14: 1.)

Now, then, I ask, does not Paul's attitude toward these "sects" (Acts 5: 17; 15: 5; 26: 5) show what our attitude should be toward the "sects"—not only the Jews, but also Methodists, Baptists, Presbyterians, and all "sects" among us to-day? Paul sacrificed no truth to do so; neither do we have to sacrifice any truth to do so, Paul did it to "save some." (1 Cor. 9: 22.) May we not do it to "save some?" Who are sectarians?

We dote upon this world as if it were never to have an end, and neglect the next as if it were never to have a beginning.—Fencion.

Living the True Life.

We live in two worlds-the physical and the spiritual. We are living two lives-the one putting us in contact with the material world and its daily duties and pleasures; the other charging us with duties and pleasures that are spiritual, which bind us to the world invisible. In the wilderness it was determined to which world man belongs, which is his true life. Character, virtue, integrity-moral elements -are definitions of manhood; these alone separate us from the beasts; and the more one lives in and among the invisible powers, so much the greater will be his lordship.

How are these results to be accomplished? Will any one reach them by going on in the same old round of occupations, by continuing in the same paths of pleasure, by thinking the same thoughts and doing the same thing? Never.

We must demand a half, shake ourselves loose from our surroundings, look carefully about us, search more deeply our hearts, examine with greater scrutiny our lives, "take our bearings," and break each cursed habit that brings us regret or shame, and make a new start.—Exchange.

Notes From West Tennessee.

BY JOHN R. WILLIAMS.

Most of the congregations of West Tennessee are still on the map; but unless there is a change for the better. when the map is revised, some of them will be left off. Let us hope for the herrer

Just now I am having quite a lot to do; am preaching for about six congregations and fighting infidelity and "Holy Rollerism," I have no way of knowing whether the fight against infidelity here in Hornbeak has done any good or not. I cannot get an expression from the people one way or the other. About all that the people are interested in now is the thing that seems to be scarcest-money. I hear a great deal more said about money than I do about the life that is to begin when the present life ends. A fresh infidel of Dresden, Tenn., has challenged me to defend the Bibleves, the God of the Bible. He thinks so little of God and of Christ that he writes their names "god" and "christ." In fact, he has just about as little useof the king's English as he has for the Bible. I am doing what I can for him in my feeble manner. Yes, a " Holy Roller " has challenged me, and calls on me to defend the Bible teaching on "miraculous gifts, healings, new tongues," etc. This fellow, who claims that the Holy Spirit enables him to speak in "new tongues," etc., spells it "wholy ghost." He, like the infidel, writes "God," "god." I believe if the Holy Spirit enables one to-day to speak in a "new tongue," he certainly would enable that one to speak correctly in the old tongue-the tongue wherein he was born.

Infidelity is manifesting itself in many forms in this country. I am sorry to say it, but duty to God and my fellow man compels me to say it: there is more infidelity in the congregations to-day than many think there is. If a man preaches faith, repentance, and baptism for the remission of sins, the sectarians will pass him upwill hear him no more. If he preaches that people should live soberly, righteously, and godly in this life, there are members ready to pass him up-hear him no more. "So then am I become your enemy, because I tell you the truth?" It is so very sad to see a person turn away from the truth and become angry with the one who tells him the truth. Financial interest is one of the greatest handicaps to the church and the conversion of the world. If they take a bold stand for the old Jerusalem gospel, that will render them unpopular and they will lose trade-thereby losing money. Rather than run the risk of losing money by a bold stand and constant contention for the truth, they hold their tongues or condemn the man who preaches the truth. A genuine, oldfashioned gospel preacher has but little encouragement to-day; fact is, it seems that he can do but little good, so many against him. Brethren, do not give up the fight, but go into it. boldly, fearlessly, and lovingly, and God will abundantly bless your labors.

If infidelity, Holy Rollerism, and other sinful influences do not knock me out, I may have some more to say of the work in West Tennessee.

How Many Were Baptized on Pentecost.

BY D PENNINGTON.

I see in the Gospel Advocate of May 19 a note from Brother Clifford Lumley, asking how many were added on the day of Pentecost by baptism. The editor's reply was: "The Spirit does not state that the three thousand added on that day were all baptized on that day. Probably they were, but We cannot certainly know that they were," Permit me to call Brother Lumley's attention to a few passages of scripture. Matt. 3: 5 says: "Then went out to him all Jerusalem, and all Judea, and all the region round about Jordan, and were baptized of him in Jordan, confessing their sins," In John 4: 1, 2 we learn that Christ "made and baptized more disciples than John." Christ sent out the twelve and seventy others, making eighty-two preachers, and these eightytwo preachers baptized more than John. Those baptized by John and the eighty-two preachers were all Jews; and as the day of Pentecost was an annual national festival, the Jews were there from Rome and all parts of the world. Is it not reasonable to conclude that those who had been baptized by John and the eigthy-two preachers were there (for they were all Jews), and that they constituted a part of the three thousand who were added? If those Jews who had been baptized by John and the eighty-two preachers took no interest in the events of Pentecost, then the preparatory work of John and Christ was a failure. Some may think that those baptized by John had to be rebaptized, because they read an account of twelve being rebaptized in the nineteenth chapter of Acts. Read Acts 18: 24-26, and you will see that those twelve were baptized unto John's baptism after it was out of date. These twelve were baptized twenty-three years after Christ had come, had been crucified and buried, had risen from the dead, and had ascended to the throne of his glory. Hence, their faith was a false faith, and they had been baptized upon that false faith.

hounds, have wrought for themselves a niche of eternal melody in the hearts of their country."

So states the author of this little book, which we present as the best product of the pen of DeLong Rice. Into one hour of reading he has gathered the strange and romantic story of the two most wonderfol political campaigns of Tennessee—the thrilling tale of the happy comradeship and the lifelong rivalry of the two famous brothers—a disclosure of the remarkable and heretofore unpublished incidents that attended the political division of the Taylor family—the wonder of "The War of the Roses" that attracted the attention of the world—and the truth about "OLD LIMBER," the peerless and now immortal fox hound that played the leading role of sentiment in the political campaign of last fall, from the Mississippi River to the Unaka Monitains.

With a "Cast of Characters extending from a President of the United States to a fox hound," the story touches a wide range of human sentiment; and through it all is the aroma of crackling camp fires and the music of the chase.

The Baptism of Jesus.

BY S. B. DRAKE.

We learn from Matt. 3: 13 that Jesus came all the way from Nazareth to the river Jordan to be baptized of John-a distance of about eighty miles. In all probability this journey was made across the country on foot, This shows the importance of Christ's submitting to the institution of baptism at the hands of John, the administrator.

The question is often asked by prominent teachers and preachers: 'Why was Jesus baptized?" If the answer to this question is not found in the New Testament, it cannot be answered. Jesus himself answered this question in reply to John's interrogation: "I have need to be baptized of thee, and comest thou to me?" Jesus replied to John in this way: "Suffer it now; for thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness"-or submit to God's method of constituting men righteous, (Matt. 3: 14, 15.) John's authority to baptize emanated from God. (Mark 11: 30.) Jesus declared that the people and publicans who heard John upheld the righteousness of God's law by being baptized of John; but the Pharisees and the lawyers rejected for themselves the counsel of God, refusing to be baptized of John: (See Luke 7: 29, 30.) John's commission was under a positive, divine law; he was sent to preach and baptize. (Mark 1: 1-5; John 1: 6, 33.) Jesus came to fulfill all righteousness; to complete, fulfill; to answer the law of righteousness by obedience. "Let my tongue sing of thy word; for all thy commandments are righteousness." (Ps. 119: 172.)

I am puzzled to know why the American Revision Committee should render the text in Matt. 3: 16, "went up straightway from the water," and in Mark 1: 10 (the same incident), "and straightway coming up out of the water." If Jesus was in the water when he was baptized, he would have to come up out of the water. He could come up straightway from the water without being in the water (river Jordan). The Authorized Version in Matt. 3: 16 reads, "went up straightway out of the water;" and in Mark 1: 10 it reads, "and straightway coming up out of the water," In the Authorized Version of Matthew and Mark there is no discrepency in the rendering of the text of the two ac-

The rendering in each is literal, and he did both-went up out of the water and then from the water.-EDITOR.]

In coming up out of the water Jesus saw the heavens opened, and the Spirit like a dove descended upon him. The word "straightway" is by some rendered "immediately," "forthwith." "Jesus saw the Spirit of God descending like a dove, and lighting upon "The Holy him." (Matt. 3: 16.) Ghost descended in a bodily shape like a dove upon him." (Luke 3: 22.) John "saw the Spirit descending from heaven like a dove, and it abode upon him." (John 1: 32.) Jesus prayed while being baptized, and the heavens were opened, and the Holy Spirit descended upon him as he came up out of the water, and a voice from heaven sald: "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." (Matt. 3: 17; Luke 3: 21, 22.) This act on the part of Jesus signified a complete surrender and consecration to the divine will and service of his Father. This marked the beginning of his ministry and his work in the redemption of the world. God by the descent of the Holy Spirit attested the divinity and Sonship of his Son, and it gave him such joy and pleasure that, in an audible voice, he bore witness to the world of Christ's divinity.

Notes From Holland, Ga.

BY J. A. PEROUE.

I have been in this section of the great State of Georgia for more than a month doing missionary work. I have preached several times at different places under varying circumstances, and, if the Lord wills, I shall hold down three or more mission points for some time to come. But I have not set up the kingdom a single time, neither have I preached a set sermon on baptism yet. As a subject, baptism is not taboo; in its place and at the proper time it is all right.

I attended a debate between a disciple and a Baptist one evening; and if I gathered a single thought during the discussion, it was that a good deal of energy and valuable information are wasted in these debates. Mr. Hoover says: "Food is ammunition; save it." The church is custodian of very valuable food—food that saves the soul; and the church could conserve it, shoot straighter, and do more effective work with less debating.

Two or three times since coming into this section I have called the attention of the brethren to the danger of eating "this bread" and drinking "this cup of the Lord" unworthily, They are wont to think if they are a right good sort, it is their privilege to commune; but if they think otherwise, they exclude themselves. I have tried to impress upon them the fact that it is not a matter of moral fitness, but that there is great danger of eating and drinking unworthily if they are careless and indifferent in observing this sacred feast; that it is a matter of motive rather than moral fitness, and the danger is that they will constantly, if unconsciously, eat and drink unworthily if they fail to properly discern the Lord's body and blood,

As many as three times I have given talks on "How to Study the Bible." For the remainder of the time I have been content to preach the word. That is what Paul did, and I feel that I am in right good company. At Athens he held forth, doing some excellent preaching; but he established no church, nor had any converts, so far as I know. Thence he went to Corinth, and en route, it seems, he decided thenceforth to preach Christ only. At least, he said to the Corinthians: "For I determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ, and him crucified." Result: "Many of the Corinthians hearing believed, and were baptized." And he charged Timothy: "Preach the word." Philip "preached Jesus" to the Ethiopian, with the result that he believed and was baptized. Peter preached Jesus and the resurrection at Pentecost, and a great number were obedient to the faith. At Philippi I

Paul and Silas preached Christ, and the jaller and his household obeyed the gospel. And so on through the apostolic ministry; and their success was marvelous.

Now our success is very meager. Is it because we preach around and about his word, our opinions, deductions, speculations? If so, let us try the apostolic plan. But whether you will or not, I shall preach only Christ -what he was, is, and shall be, according to his word: what he promises, threatens, commands, and says; and I shall succeed in sowing the good seed. No matter if some of it falls by the wayside, while other falls into stony places; a goodly portion will fall in fertile soil, and under the blessing of God will bring forth fruit abundantly. I shall preach only the gospel, which is the power of God unto the salvation of believers, and supplement my preaching with fervent prayer and simple, consistent living. If that does not succeed, nothing will.

This is rather a rough outline of what I am doing and shall continue to do. This work is being supported singly and solely by one man, Brother E. W. Moon. He is not doing more than he is willing to do, nor more than he thinks he should do. Save in faith, good works, and optimism, he is not a rich man; far from it. He is depot agent and telegraph operator combined, and has held down his present job for more than a quarter of a century; and between times, which is early morning and noon, he plows a crop. Through the entire day he is as busy as a bee, being bright and cheerful and apparently happy all the while. In a word, he is in many respects a remarkable man, well-known for his philanthropic spirit.

Brother Moon did not advise the writing of this; It is written entirely upon my motion without consulting him. I just wanted you folks to know what we are doing, preaching the gospel to those who have it not. Now, if any of you want to help us roll the gospel on by having fellowship with this good work, you can address Brother Moon or me at Holland, Ga.

The churches in this section are few and far between; the brethren are few in number, poor in this world's goods, and not very opulent in faith. While not lacking in love, they have not any more than they actually need, for God and one another. But they do need help. Will the brethren help preach the gospel in the waste places hereabouts?

Salt loses its savor by lack of contact. Our religion expresses itself best when it seeks contact both with God and our fellow men.—W. W. Bustard.

Fresno, Cal., June 10 .- The work at Nevada Avenue Church moves along nicely. Brother J. W. Ballard, of Texas, will assist us in a meeting this tall. Gardner and Felix Owen and Brother and Sister George Scott, of Graton, came home with me and spent the night in our home. For three years Brother Gardner was one of my teachers in the Nashville Bible School, and it was surely a treat to visit with him again. Brother William P. Walker deserves much credit for getting up this fine meeting and for the interesting and orderly manner in which it was conducted. Brother Walker has certainly done a great work at Dinuba, and we regret that Sister Walker's health was such that they thought best to return to Tennessee. On the fifth Sunday in May I preached at Hanford. We had good crowds and fine attention. This is the home congregation of the one and only L. D. Perkins, who lives at Armona, only a few miles away. I think it is all right to place flowers upon the graves of the dead, but I am also sure that it is proper to commend worthy people while they are "yet with us;" hence, I take this ere "yet with us;" hence, I take this occasion to speak of some of the good traits of Brother Perkins. Since he has been in California he has taken a real interest in every preacher and every worthy effort that has been put forth by the brethren. He has taken special interest in the work at Tulare and Hanford. He has preached more or less at Tulare since the work was started there, and he has helped them a good deal financially. While Brother Perkins has a large and thriving mercantile business and other business interests, he does not allow these things to take all of his time; but he finds time to preach a good deal, and always has time to entertain brethren and friends who visit his hospitable home. Before I came to California he wrote me encouraging letters and orged me to come. The first Sunday I preached in Fresno he was here to welcome me and bid me Godspeed in the work. His interest in me and my work has never waned in these more than four years I have been living in this State, and many, many times have I been welcomed into his home have I been welcomed into his home and entertained by him and his good wife. When I began my Insurance work, L. D. Perkins encouraged me, not only "by word of mouth, but in-deed and in truth." Often he intro-duces me to "good prospects," and in this way he has been a real help to me. May the Lord give us many more men like L. D. Perkins.-W. Halliday

THE UNEXPLORED REMAINDER

It is a significant fact that God has given to his creature man two vast provinces to explore—the created world and the inspired Word. All down the ages men have directed their energies to the knowledge and conquest of the earth. They have measured its continents, tried to fathom its oceans, and studied all its forms of life and the forces which determine its history. We have a similar task to accomplish with regard to the Bible. The work of the church is to traverse the whole realm of revealed truth, to sound the depths of its significance, and to develop the wealth of its resources, that its promises may lead us into a wealthy heritage, and that its precepts may shape our lives and direct them to a triumphant issue.

But in the conquest of earth and in the exploration of the inspired Word, though much has been accomplished, yet much remains to be done, and in both these realms there are vast tracts of territory which have not been appropriated by man.

In past ages the explorer has opened up unknown lands, and dark continents now dazzle us with the wealth and splendor of their resources. The scientist has discovered powers wonderful enough to startle the world. But results as vast, if not so startling, have been achieved in the realm of revealed truth. Every age, every church, every great teacher, and every humble worker has done something toward fathoming the marvelous depths of the divine Word.

But the tragedy of it is that men have turned the garden of the Lord into a wilderness of theology. The simple gospel of peace has become a tented field for wrangling, sects, and parties, and even in the so-called church men are found searching the Bible for missiles to fling at their religious opponents. May God speed the day when nobler ends shall be kept in view, when wiser methods shall be followed and richer results shall be gained. "Then shall the wilderr ess blossom as the rose."

But amid all the strife and turmoil much has been accomplished. We can never realize to the full what a debt we owe to the Bible. Every province of the Bible is pouring its treasures at our feet. The sublimest thoughts of Moses and David, Isaiah and Paul, daily contribute to our sustenance. In the hurry and bustle of the home or the market place we receive a constant inspiration from words which were uttered in thunder amid the mountain peaks of Sinai, and day by day our lives are cheered and comforted, guided and blessed, by truths that were proclaimed in the wilderness of Beersheba or amid the gardens and slopes of Galilee.

We see only the dim outline, while we are almost in complete ignorance of the rich and varied life of the interior. And if we are as willing to explore the Bible as our fathers were to go forth into unknown lands, the work will grow upon us with a fascination that will lure us on, and will enrich us with a treasure that is better than silver and more precious than fine gold.

One sometimes fears that we, as a people, have in the past been guilty of this neglect. Our vision has been too limited, and our ardent enthusiasm to call men to the Restoration Movement has forced us to travel along a narrow path, while there lie before us vast, unexplored tracts of Scripture which are practically an unknown land. As a people, our position among the many religious bodies is unassailable, because it is founded on the bed rock of divine truth; but we must beware lest we become engrossed in certain familiar and favorite passages, and do not get beyond, into those fields of revealed truth where lie the seeds, which may be waiting only for a turn of the spade to bring them into speedy germination.

History reveals the fact that for many generations the truths contained in that magnificent Epistle to the Romans exerted but little influence in the life and work of the church until Luther came and brought those hidden doctrines forth from their grave with a power that burst the bonds of Christendom and created the life and thought and enterprise of the modern church.

So there are still great creative truths hidden in the sacred Word—truths which may startle the church when properly expounded and understood. And when a new springtime shall arrive, it may be that it will develop forces which shall lead the church to an even more glorious Reformation. We hall with delight the advent into the churches of men and women who are seeking a large but exact and complete understanding of its teaching, and discovering a startling significance in passages which have been almost reduced to platitudes by unintelligent repetition.

We plead, then, for the larger view, that will enable us to comprehend with all the saints what is the height and depth and breadth and length of the sacred Scriptures of truth.

Let us, then, store it in the memory as a precious treasure, and strive to become familiar with all its highways and byways, seeking an exact understanding of its teaching, and applying its principles to the various demands of modern life, and allow it to sink deeply into the heart until the Word of Christ dwells within us richly with all wisdom. And if we do this we shall be constrained to say, as we go on from strength to strength and from glory to glory, like one of past days who was a Jew and a skeptic, yet after a day spent in the unwonted task of reading it ex-claimed: "What a Book! Vast and wide as the world, rooted in the abysses of the creation and towering up behind the blue secrets of heaven, sunrise and sunset, promise and fulfillment, birth and death, the whole drama of humanity are all in this book. Its eclipse would be the return of chaos, its extinction would be the epitaph of history."-Jesse Checkland.

The Wells' New Bible.

To the million and more readers of the Saturday Evening Post of April, Mr. H. G. Wells declares that our good old Bible has lost its hold. He admits very frankly the wender of its influence over the lives and minds of men in the past. It has held together the fabric of Western civilization. It has been the handbook of life to countless millions. It has created and sustained our modern civilization, and given moral standards and a conscience guide for the people of the world. But-alas! alas!-Mr. Wells an neunces "it has lost its hold, and nothing has arisen to take its place." And so as the self-appointed salvor of this disordered world he gravely proceeds to give his proposals for a new Bible of civilization; a Bible that every one will know, which will be grasped by the mind of every one, a universal book, a new standard for world culture. Then he tells us what this new Bible that is to be the salient factor in the salvaging of civilization is to be. But it is so extraordinary a conglomerate of sense and nonsense, of science and nescience, that one wonders as one reads whether Mr. Wells is nobly serious in his proposals. in a nutshell, is his new Bible. It is to be a very big book, two or three times as big as our Bible; that is, it probably would be a book of about four thousand or five thousand It would consist of five sections. (1) A cosmogony of the latest up-to-date science, as "the cosmogony of the Bible has lost its grip!" (2) A big and authoritative world (3) A world standard of hygiene, economics, and ethics, elucidating and solving all modern problems. An anthology of the finest poetical and philosophical maxims, the quintessence of the accumulated literature of the world! (5) And as the crown of the whole, a volume of forecasts, more reliable and up-to-date than the prophets and revelation of the Bible.

Now, the extraordinary thing is that Mr. Wells seems to fail to perceive that this Utopian Bible he dreams of is just the good old book that we have now, and it is just what he wants the new Bible of Civilization to be. The Bible is the only universal book. It has been translated into over seven hundred languages, and has a computed circulation to-day in whole or portions of over twenty-five million copies a year. Even if Mr. Wells' New Bible were to be published as the pompously heralded "Universal Book," it would probably be like Volapuk, the predecessor of Esperanto as the universal language, regarding which Punch had a cartoon that set the world a-laughing. represented two professors of German visage together, and the first said: "What is Volapuk?" No. 2 answered: "The universal language." No. 1: "Who speaks it?" No. 2: "Nopotty!" Then, again, the Bible is suited for all mankind. It applies itself to every phase of life, to every age of history. to every unit of every race. And it is never out of oldest book in the world, and the newest. It is not like a man's clothes, always wearing out: it's like a man's skin. fresh in his childhood, and outwearing a hundred gloves throughout life. It antedates and solves all modern problems, not by mechanical details, but by inspirational principles that cover all the most complicated sociological and international complexities; and, above all, it speaks with authority. And that is just where Mr. Wells' New Bible will go on the rocks. It would be a human book, and would be possessed of no more authority than any other book. Why should it? The first verse of the Bible ex-

That's the most marvelous thing about it. It is the plains its marvelous fascination for the human race, "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth;" and the first chapter of St. John, its everlasting magnetism for mankind, for it's all about God and his incarnate Son. It's God's word to man's soul. And throughout it speaks as never man dared to speak with its sublime declarations: "Thus saith the Lord;" "Hear the word of the Lord;" "The Lord said;" "The Lord spake." In short, to put it very plainly, it all comes down to this: Who is true, Mr. Wells or Christ? Mr. Wells says the Bible is passing away. Christ said: "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my word shall not pass away." Judging from its extraordinary hold upon this extraordinary age, we see that this extraordinary prophecy of Jesus Christ has been literally fulfilled. No We want neither a wan-made nor a man-reconstructed Bible. Dyson Hague, in Homiletic Re

Mr Hague's review of the proposed new Bible is pertinent and just. Fortunately, there is small chance of any such Bible being compiled and published. It is no more than the "brain child" of a gifted literary man, and that child will die "a-borning." There is nothing new in Mr. Wells' attempt to discredit the Bible, and those who read his articles noted that even in his new Bible he would preserve the choicest portions of the one our mothers read. The very fact that the Bible is constantly being attacked and discredited is but another proof of its genuineness and virility. If it were a dead book, devoid of influence, the critics would pay no attention to it; but when its circula tion is larger than ever before, we may expect just such effusions as those that appeared in the Saturday Evening

More than a hundred years ago Voltaire declared that there would not be a copy of the Bible on earth in a hundred years. Voltaire is dead, and one may barely recall the date of his death. The Geneva Bible Society is using the very printing press on which his infidel prophecy was printed. To-day four hundred million copies of the Bible in more than three hundred tongues are in circulation, like leaves of the forests, for the healing of the nations.

The Right to Strike.

The Philadelphia Public Ledger says on the right to strike:

"While the right of every man to be free from involun-tary servitude is fixed and forever, it is not true that any man has a right to quit his job at any moment. A man has no more right to abstain from any act, when the failure to act inflicts injury upon another, than he has to commit an act which directly inflicts a similar injury.

"A physician cannot 'strike' in the midst of a major operation. If he does, he ought to be hanged.

'A nurse cannot 'strike' at midnight when in charge of a patient whom it may be death to leave unattended.

"A soldier cannot 'strike' just before he is to go over 'A gang of laborers who have hoisted a safe to a thirdstory window with a crowd beneath cannot 'strike' without warning and let the safe fall. It would be penitentiary and perhaps 'the chair' for all of them.

"A pilot cannot 'strike' just as his steamship enters a dangerous passage.

"Plenty of other instances will occur to all of us. Every man has a right to quit work, but no man has a right unjustly to damage another."

Strikes in most cases are unconstitutional and contrary to the law of love. They are hardly ever in accord with the principle of the Golden Rule. Every worker has the inherent right to quit his job, provided his quitting does not work injury to the innocent. But the rights of the community are always paramount to the rights of the individual. In fact, it is a well-established principle of moral philosophy that the rights of the individual cease just when the rights of the community begin. My right to throw my fist around ceases where its exercise would come in contact with the noses of others who have a right to be in the vicinity. No one has a right to conduct a soap factory or a slaughterhouse in a place where it becomes offensive to hundreds who have no interest in it, but cannot help from smelling it. Many of the cities compel factories to provide smoke consumers in crowded districts. This is just and right. Christians should never be so thoughtless as to have the civil government compel them to do or to refrain from doing what God's law does not warrant.

The Ascension.

In the ascension Jesus stands on the firm shore, who when on earth had made the restless sea firm to his feet. He bids us estimate life from that standpoint. It will be the same Jesus whom we have known here. O, the joy to recognize him, and to know that all the while that we were doubtful he was there! - David Jenks.

God has given us tongues that we may say something pleasant to our fellow man,-Heine,

A Return to the Golden Rule Imperative.

BY C. L. MILLER.

"Every kingdom divided against itself is brought to desolation; and every city or house divided against itself shall not stand." (Jesus.)

Peace, plenty, and prosperity among men and nations are the result of adherence to principles. They are not attainable otherwise; for adherence to principle means right ecus living, and it is inevitable that wrongdoing means unhappiness. Now, as at the time it was given voice by Him who taught on Judean hillsides and on the shores of the Galilean Sea, the Golden Rule must be the basis of action by all-rich and poor, laborer and capitalist, great and small-if tranquillity and peace are to prevail. In the deliberation of all bodies having for their object the amelicration of human conditions, the principles enunciated by the great Hebrew Lawgiver and the Nazarene Prophet must enter. The Decalogue brought down from amid the smoke and fire of Sinai, and the eternal truths enunciated on the mountain side by the Master of ethics and righteousness, cannot be ignored by either individuals or nations, singly or collectively, without disastrous results.

There is no substitute for the Ten Commandments. There can be nothing which can take the place of the Sermon on the Mount. Something "just as good" as the Golden Rule does not exist.

Covetousness and greed cannot be made the basis of contention or action by individuals, organizations, or nations, without resulting in disaster. There is no side-stepping this consequence, no evading it, no escape from the results brought about by ignoring this fundamental cause. Equity and justice must be made the basis of all negotiations between labor and capital, between the governors and the governed, else dissension and strife are sure to enter and remain to a degree in proportion to the extent to which these virtues are absent. Greed is the Pandora box out of which emanate practically all of the sins and ills of life; and greed is caused by the belief on the part of the great majority of mankind in the power of material things to give happiness and comfort to their possessors. In other words, it is caused by man's worship of "other gods;" and we know that the worship of other gods has brought sorrow and suffering to the worshipers all down the ages.

Regardless of what may be argued to the contrary, lack of faith in God, disregard for his laws, indifference to the needs and rights of his children, are the procuring cause of what is now called the "social unrest" which is being manifested throughout the world-not in one country only. but all over the world. And this so-called "unrest" is being talked about and given too much power in the minds of us all. It is the phenomenon which those who think seriously will soon discover to be the natural accompaniment of the great military convulsion from which the world is endeavoring to recover; it is the mental condition which preceded the war in one phase and which is following it in another. Men cannot allow themselves to devote their time and talents altogether to the furtherance of ambitious schemes, or to the accumulation of wealth, or to the indulgence of material and sensual pleasures-in other words, to "forget God"-and not find themselves and those who are near and dear to them in the midst of turmoil and strife.

We may make innovations in our modes of locomotion, in our plans and methods, but we cannot make them in the eternal principles which are as permanent as He whose children we are.

However reluctant we may be to acknowledge these things and put them into practice, we must do it before peace and tranquillity can reign among men. The passage of laws, unless they are based on honesty and equity and include these in their provisions, cannot do more than a temporary service. All the laws on the statute books of all the States and nations on earth do not contain any more than is set forth in the Sermon on the Mount, of which the Golden Rule is a crystallization. So long as the principles set forth in this short sentence of the Golden Rule are ignored, man is destined to continue suffering. It is greed or covetousness which impels men to disregard what they know to be right, and at the bottom of such disregard is a love of the material more than spiritual. This thought was given splendid emphasis by the Master in the parable of the man who had great wealth and was at a less as to what he could do with it all. "And he thought within himself, saying, What shall I do, because I have no room where to bestow my fruits? And he said, This will I do: I will pull down my barns, and build greater; and there will I bestow all my fruits and my goods. And I will say to my soul, Soul, thou hast much goods laid up for many years; take thine ease, eat, drink, and be merry. But God said unto him, Thou fool! this night thy soul shall be required of thee: then whose shall those things be, which thou hast provided? So is he that layeth up treasure for himself, and is not rich toward God."

Instead of going about whimpering because of what we may see as the social and political situation, we should devote our time and energies to inducing our friends and acquaintances to do all possible to promote a return to the principles alluded to in this article, which principles must be adopted and applied before the conditions desired by all can come about—before swords can be beaten into plow shares or spears into pruning hooks, either materially or mentally.

"Righteousness exalteth a nation: but sin is a reproach to any people."

The King's Country.

BY A. ELLMORE.

A great multitude who lived in a sickly vale desired to emigrate to a more salubrious climate. A rich King heard of their sad condition, and he offered each of them a home free of cost, if they would change their mode of living and live a more sanitary and upright life.

And the King informed them that all who wished to emigrate should be ready at a certain date and he would send for them. Upon arriving at their place of starfing, they learned that their line of travel would be upon a beautiful highway, graded and graveled; the road was a perfect thoroughfare, bordered with shade trees and flowers; and the valleys were filled and the hills had been leveled. And the King gave them the following régime of life; Before entering this beautiful highway each one must take a bath, and, coming from the fountain, each one must change his suit and put on a garb, from head to foot, as pure as the falling snow.

And from the circumstances connected with this road no one need be misinformed or deceived. This highway is straight—straightened, indeed—all others are crooked; this is graded, others are uneven; this is smooth, others are hilly; all others are fraught with trials, but this is a highway of peace. And now, since these points of simplicity, how many guideboards do travelers need on this road? But one—the one at the beginning.

And for the benefit of the public, there are men along upon either side of the way who are prepared to receive travelers. And let none fear of being received. There is no caste, no respect of persons shown; all are known as one family.

But it becomes our duty to sound the note of warning to those who lack experience in traveling. Along upon either side of the way are secret bands of evil men and women who for pelf ply their vocation, proposing to travelers to take them to the great amphitheater just a short distance from the highway, in which they can find in session night and day various kinds of reveling, music and dancing, drinking and gambling; but, dear friends, beware of them and have nothing to do with them.

The Chief Executive has this to say: "Narrow is the way that leads to the city, and few there be who find it; while broad is the way and wide the gate which leads to destruction, and many there be who go in thereat."

Now, here comes the matter of inexplicable surprise: If the only way leading to the beloved city were one of the crooked roads coming up from the hills and swamps, we should not be surprised that so few find it; but such a highway as this, containing the character of the people who now travel it, and the assurance of entering into the beautiful country where they are assured of everlasting pleasure—we have no language to express our surprise that so few decide to go.

But there will be many wonderful things made known to the citizens over there. There will be no night there; there will be no clouds nor dark days; there will be no sickness, and no doctors will be needed there; there is no death, neither sorrow, nor crying; no undertakers will be heard of; citizens will never become tired nor grow to be old, but will enjoy a vigor and buoyancy never known in this life; there will be no dark forebodings, no fears of an evil to fall upon them. And seeing that the wicked have much sorrow here, and the certainty of deeper sorrow there, is it not strange that all cannot be induced to accept the King's offer?

A Word of Commendation.

BY F. W. SMITH.

I wish to most heartily commend the article from the pen of Brother J. W. Brents, in the Gospel Advocate of June 16, entitled, "John B. Cowden's New Book," The article is commendable from every point of view. It is logical, in fine spirit, and goes to the very root of things, It most certainly places Brother Cowden in a very inconsistent attitude and leaves him without the slightest ground for defense. The "tragedies" to which Brother Brents refers as having been enacted by Brother Cowden are not the only ones traceable to his course. Brother Cowden started out to preach organs into the churches; and making poor progress, he undertook to put them in through a tract. Failing through that method, he writes a book, hoping to accomplish his purpose in that way; but I predict that failure will again overtake the brother in what seems to be the most cherished desire of his heart. But worst of all is his charge against M. C. Kurfees in his book -viz., "adding slander to falsehood." He charges Kurfees with being guilty of these gross sins relative to his reference to some scholars. Any one with an ordinary mind can have no difficulty in seeing that Kurfees, did no such thing as charged by Cowden. Kurfees is, to say the least of it, fully as competent to understand what scholars teach as is Cowden, and 1 am sure he is as far from misrepresenting them as is Cowden. If Cowden's life depended upon it, he could not prove his shameful, unwarranted, unchristian, and uncalled-for misrepresentation of Kurfees. His friends should take him in hand and save him from him-

New York City.

I recently received a good letter from Brother Eugene L. Pearson, who is now living at 105 West Sixty-fourth Street, New York City. He is helping Brother J. M. McKee and those associated with him in establishing the cause of our Lord in that great city. I know Pearson, and know him to be a good man and one that hustles in the work. Brother Morgan H. Carter, too, is soon to be there. They are planning not only to secure a good house of worship, but to locate a good, sound, level-headed man there to spend the remainder of his days in that city. This is needed now.

Let these who have friends and relatives in that city send their names and correct addresses to Brother Pearson at the above address. Let those who wish to have fellowship in this work send checks or pledges to J. M. McKee, 105 West Sixty-fourth Street, New York.

Brother Pearson recently wrote the Firm Foundation, and Brother Showalter's reply is so sensible and practical that I give it with my statement. Here is what he has to say:

am giving the foregoing to our readers with the hope that it may stir an interest in the hearts of some. not had the pleasure of meeting this brother in the flesh. but have heard of him from others who know him and esteem him very highly in the Lord. I have read his reports and observed his work for a number of years. His call for New York should be heard. A great congregation of disciples could soon be assembled in a short time in that great city, if only a little effort is put forth. From every city in the South buyers go to New York from two to four times a year. Among these are not a few loyal Christians. From the various professions in our land and other lands men and women go to New York to continue a while. Tourists are there or pass there frequently. Among all these are found some of the true Israel of God. At times more than one of the members from Austin are in New York City. At the buying season this is likely true of fifty other cities. so that we may reasonably suppose that at times as many as two hundred loyal Christians are lodged temporarily in New York, with no place of worship on the Lord's day. leyal church of Christ well advertised would draw most of Texas should do this, and be delighted to have the opportu-Twenty-five congregations giving ten dollars a month would support the work, and there are that many who could do this in addition to the other worthy enterprises they are supporting. I almost feel minded to ask a line on a post card from twenty-five congregations or individuals that will undertake this work. If there are those who are willing to enter this promising mission field in this way, write me a card or personal letter. Do not send money. I would want card or personal letter. Do not send money. I would want first to know if there are enough to support the work. Then we will secure the man. Remember what we had at Washington a few years ago—nothing. Look now at the splendid hand of earnest workers there. Read what Brothsplendid band of earnest workers there. er Jesse Sewell said last week and Brother Long the week before in regard to this work. Why not go to the populous centers, like Paul the great apostle, and build for Look at Nashville, Fort Worth, Dallas, Houston, and San Antonio. Behold what has been accomplished at these places in only a few years because somebody went to work. Why not start in New York City new?

Now let me add the following:

1. Our big cities should be taken: they should have strong churches in them and used as radiating centers. Steps should be taken to pick up the waifs on the streets, put them in a good home and give them a chance in life. The church of Christ should do such work in every important city.

2. As Brother Showalter says: "Send a gospel preacher there, one who is known to be a good worker, and support him." To this I would add: One who is known to be a good worker at least six days in the week, and not one who preaches two little sermons on Sunday and does nothing the balance of the week.

3. Those who want to help may help with the assurance of success. The men who are pushing this work have the eternal God in their souls and know nothing about failure. May the Lord bless them.

A Sure Guarantee of Every Evil Work.

"For where envying and strife is, there is confusion and every evil work." The American Revised Version has it: "For where jealousy and faction are, there is confusion and every vile deed." (See James 3: 16.) Have you noticed what a vile deed is? Here is the definition: "Morally base, despicable, or loathsome; basely degraded; shamefully wicked; sinful; depraved; also odious; disgusting." Now remember it says every vile deed is to be found where there is envying or jealousy, where there is strife or faction. How much of the troubles that confront the church of Christ within are caused by this deadly weedjealousy and envy? Don't you suppose about nine-tenths come from it? Look at yourself, my brother; study carefully what you do, and see if you are allowing yourself to do things that are despicable, things that are base, things that are sinful and disgusting. If you find such in your life, then hunt around for the mother of these bad things you do-viz., envy and jealousy. It is not possible for any of us to be morally strong and at the same time carry envy and jealousy in our hearts. And as certain as you do it, it will tell on you, Don't forget: "For where envying and strife is, there is confusion and every evil work"—or, "confusion and every vile deed." Let the leaders of all our congregations, the editors of all our papers, see to it that this devil you call "envy" and "jealousy" exists not in their hearts; and if they will keep themselves free from this deadly adder, they will not have followers cursed with this deadly disease.

A Sure Guarantee of All That Is Good.

"If I speak with the tongues of men and of angels, but have not love, I am become sounding brass, or a clanging cymbal. And if I have the gift of prophecy, and know all mysteries and all knowledge; and if I have all faith, so as to remove mountains, but have not love, I am nothing. And if I bestow all my goods to feed the poor, and if I give my body to be burned, but have not love, I am nothing. Love suffereth long, and is kind; love envieth not; love vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up, doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not its own, is not provoked, taketh not account of evil; rejoiceth not in unrighteousness, but rejoiceth with the truth; beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things. Love never faileth." (1 Cor. 13: 1-8.)

It is an easy matter to know if love is reigning or envy and jealousy are reigning in our souls. Envy loves to hear of the failure of others, and is grieved over their successes. What kind of feeling do you have, my brother, when a fellow citizen with you in the house of God fails or succeeds? Jealousy rejoices when an object of its hatred fails, and is grieved when this object succeeds. Watch the emotions of your soul, my brother, as you observe the sins and victories of others. And those who do fall, let me ask that they study their hearts and see if some envy and jealousy existed not in their hearts; and if not, their weakened condition is not due to this. Study again what is said above about every vile deed following envy and jealousy. You can keep it hidden for a while, but not always. How exceedingly deceltful is sin!

Amid the orange groves and Magnolia forests of Southern Italy stands the renowned Vesuvius. Within the shade of its towering dome sleep two cities entombed in the silent chambers of death. I imagine that the populace of the doomed cities looked with pride on this regal structure of earth and granite which neither the corroding showers nor the countless succession of years had been able to tear down. I imagine the wild honeysuckle threw its mantle of verdure about its rugged cliffs and vied with the ivy in scaling its lofty peaks; that clusters of purple fruit hung in profusion on its fertile slopes; that its valleys, heedless of impending danger, undulated beneath the burden of golden grain or resounded with the tinkle of the lowing herds. I imagine its shaded grottoes and lilied boweries and copses of roses attracted the wealthy tourist. Who could have dreamed that a demon of destruction lurked in silence beneath such a vesture? Who could have fancied that the soil thus carpeted concealed the bolt that would lay waste its own beauty? But suddenly the earth heaves, groans, and trembles as the violence of an eruption rends the air with terrific thunder. Showers of molten lava and crashing bowlders boil forth from the bursting crater, thus spreading ruin and destruction where peace and prosperity reigned a short time before.

While this catastrophe has been handed down in history for the magnitude of its destruction, yet the eruption of the mighty volcanoes caused by envy and jealousy have entailed far greater woes and a mightier destruction than the one which entombed Herculaneum and Pompeli.

Happy is the man who passes this transient state and allows the embryo of evil to sleep in Lethean quietude. Woe to him that disturbs the slumbering giant of evil desire! And don't forget that we can advertise far and near of our interest in widows and orphan children, that we can make others think that our hearts are filled with love for suffering humanity, and at the same time have not that love that stands above the carnal and brute nature that is in us. Else what did Paul mean when he said: "And if I bestow all my goods to feed the poor, and if I give my body to be burned, and have not love, it profiteth me nothing?" If this cannot be done, why intimate such? Are there not those who take a great interest in the poor, apparently, that may be doing it to make themselves a name or a living for themselves? Have no such men fallen? Is there not such a thing as our loving our hobby to the degree that we would suffer our very bodies to be burned before we would let it go, and boasting of our loyalty to the cause of Christ and our tender-heartedness and love for the brethren at the same time? Think on these things. For soon the time will be upon us when wrongs cannot be righted and our willingness to let envy and jealousy go will avail us nothing.

Book Reviews.

BY F. W. SMITH.

"Nichol's Pocket Bible Encyclopedia," by C. R. Nichol and wife, is a most valuable work. It would, indeed, be almost impossible to compress in a smaller volume so much valuable information for the student of the Bible. It is not a book of sermons, but statements of biblical subjects, with a collation of scriptures bearing on the subjects. For instance, we take the subject, "Nature of Man." There is a simple analysis of man-body, soul, and spirit; then follows divisions of the subject with scriptural references. There are at least sixty subjects given, and suitable passages teaching on the different phases of the subjects are collated. The book contains one chapter on "Instrumental Music" that is clear and strong. This little volume is published by Mrs. C. R. Nichol, Clifton, Texas, from whom a copy can be procured for the moderate sum of fifty cents. Send for a copy, and you will not regret the possession of this valuable information.

The Garden of Eden.

BY R. P. CUFF.

In some country or section of country known as Eden, Jehovah had prepared a garden, where he placed Adam and Eve when he had created them.

As to the exact location of that garden, though of some interest to the thoughtful mind, it is perhaps neither possible nor necessary that we know. Various religious writers have bandied seeming proofs back and forth in an effort to establish with precision the original location. One contention says that the garden must have been somewhere in Central Asia; another, that it was near the North Pole; a third, that it was in Armenia; and yet another, in Babylonia. Efforts have been made to place it in Palestine, in Syria, in Arabia, Armenia, Chaldea, Persia, in the Island of Ceylon, on the Danube, and on the Ganges. Europe, Asia, Africa, and America are continents to which the garden has been assigned. In fact, there is scarcely a nation on the earth that has not been assigned the garden by somebody at some time.

No attempts will be made in this article to pass upon the merits of the different contentions. The treatise will not deal with the question of site, except to suggest that an appropriate way of approaching the study would be to consider that the description which Moses gives (Gen. 2: 8-17) was applicable after the flood; and to suggest also that the land of Havilah was likely named for Noah's great-grandson (Gen. 10: 7), and that the land of Cush probably received its name from the grandson of Noah (Gen. 10: 6). Both Havilah and Cush are postdeluvian persons, Now please read Gen. 25: 18; 1 Sam. 15: 7; Ex. 15: 22.

The word "Eden" means "delight." From its name, then, we get the impression that the garden must have been delightful. Every tree that was pleasant to the sight and good for food Jehovah made to grow there. (Gen. 2: 9.) The garden also contained the tree of life and the tree of the knowledge of good and evil (Gen. 2: 9), fig trees (Gen. 3: 7), and cattle, birds of the heavens, and beasts of the field (Gen. 2: 20.) The river Euphrates [literally, waters of the Phrat] ran through it. Eden must have had also an ideal climate.

Just a word as to the tree of the knowledge of good and evil. That this was a fruit tree is evident from Gen. 3: 6, which says: "She took of the fruit thereof." We have no means of knowing just what kind of fruit was borne by either this tree or the tree of life. Undoubtedly the fruit of this tree was beautiful, luscious, and luring, the tree having been placed in the garden apparently as a means of trying man. A prohibition was placed upon the eating of this fruit—a prohibition so simple that it could not be misunderstood. Eden's pair broke the prohibition by eating the fruit—violated the law under which God had placed them. In that violation, in that sin against God, man came to know by his experiment what sin is, and, therefore, to know the distinction between good and evil. Hence, it is clear that the tree had been appropriately named.

What was the object of the tree of life? For what purpose had God set it "in the midst of the garden?" The reader's mind should yet retain the aforementioned violation which comprised man's fall. A consequence of that fall was a bringing about a disruption between body and soul-the man must die. After the fall the curse was pronounced: "Unto dust shalt thou return." What had there been to prevent his return to dust? The tree of life. What had there been to counteract any tendency to decay and keep health and vigor rampant? Why was it necessary for the carrying out of the curse that man not be permitted to eat of the tree of life, that a flaming sword be placed to guard the way to it? Such questioning leads to the conclusion that Jehovah's design for the tree of life was that it avert the death of man and perpetuate his life as long as he remained obedient to God.

Long ago the garden of Eden was left desolate. The tree of life no longer grows its healing leaves and luscious fruits. The roots have died and the leaves have faded. Man cannot depend upon it to stave off hunger and thirst and pain. He must return to dust. But God be praised that finally the faithful will yet have opportunity to a tree of life when they are brought again from the dust. There will be no cherubim with sword of flame to guard the way to this tree of life. It will grow its leaves and yield its fruits forever and forever. There will be no more any pain, no more any sin. All will be life—glorious life! "Blessed are they that wash their robes, that they may have the right to come to the tree of life, and may enter in by the gates into the city."

Salvation by Faith. No. 5.

BY W. L. REEVES.

What is the source of the motive that prompts man to seek salvation in Christ Jesus? Abstract faith is not the source of such a motive. I say, without any fear of proven contradiction, that faith alone is not a complete motive in any matter. Faith has its place in the construction of a motive, but of itself, alone, is not the motive. Reward offered begets desire by means of faith; and as desire and love are inseparable, these two, combined with faith, fear, and sorrow, constitute the motive which leads men to obey Christ in order to be saved. All of these five are actions of the heart or mind. They are all produced by the instructions which the word of God gives. They are fruit which comes from the same seed. "The seed is the word of God." (Luke 8: 11.) From this it is evident that faith alone is not a motive at all. But to illustrate: A young man has a position in a bank. His pay is one hundred dollars per month. Another bank in which he has as much confidence, but no more, offers him seventy-five dollars per month for his services. He rejects the offer. On what ground? Does he lack faith? No, he has all the faith it is possible for him to have in the proposition, yet he does not cease his services to one and turn to the services of the other. The motive is not strong enough to prompt him to action. Make the reward greater, and the motive force will be greater. The second bank now offers him one hundred and fifty dollars-fifty more than he now gets. He at once accepts the offer, and ceases his services at the former bank and enters the services of the second. It was not any increase in confidence or faith that brought this change of heart and action, but it was the greater reward offered wherein lay the power to move him to accept. It was the thing seen by faith that was the motive, or the source of the motive, which moved him in both heart and service. But it is a noticeable fact that the reward is at the end of service; and just so it is in regard to salvation by faith. "Receiving the end of your faith, even the salvation of your souls," (1 Pet. 1: 9.)

From the foregoing it is evident that the plan of salvation is seen by faith; but the blessings promised therein, which constitute the reward, beget within the heart of faith the desire to come into possession of these blessings. Then by faith men are led to ask, as did the Pentecostians; "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" This question is very strong proof that these Pentecostians had trusting faith in Christ, "and him crucified," whom Peter had just preached unto them. It showed that they had a desire in their hearts, and this desire was for this very Christ whom Peter had preached unto them. And the record says: "When they heard this, they were pricked in their heart, and said unto Peter and to the rest of the apostles, Men and brethren, what shall we do?" Having faith in Christ, as they certainly did, repentance, baptism, and remission of sins were all yet before them; for Peter commanded them to "repent, and be baptized . . . for the remission of sins." (Acts 2: 37, 38.) This shows that re pentance does not come before faith, and that these are the requirements, or works, which faith must do to be made a living faith; for "faith without works is dead." (James 2: 20.) Again, he says: "Ye see then how that by works a man is justified, and not by faith only." (James 2: 24.) No matter what men may say, this should forever fix it in the heart of every one that man cannot be justified by faith alone.

Let us examine these: Faith, desire, attention, memory, obedience, and reward. This is the order of occurrence with these items in everything. The Pentecostians had faith; hence, they desired Christ. Peter told them what to do to possess him. They paid attention to what he said. They put it in memory, and obeyed what was told them to do, and were rewarded with the remission of sins. "Then they that gladly received his word were baptized: and the same day there were added unto them about three thousand souls." (Acts 2: 41.) The desire of man is produced by reward that is promised. Obedience is necessary, and brings man to salvation. Christ is the author of eternal salvation unto all that obey his commandments. (Heb. 5: 9.)

Who Shall Say About It? No. 2. By W. H. CARTER.

When I began the article preceding this, I thought of writing only one short article; but thoughts began to crowd into my mind, each demanding attention, so that I soon saw I could not get all that seemed to be needful into one article, and here we are with No. 2. I can but hope for a careful and prayerful study of these important things.

We closed the preceding article with the thought of the elders, their obligation to rule and watch for our souls, and our obligation to be submissive and obey them. I have talked to some preachers who had the idea that they had perfect liberty and were not subject to any one in the church. I have read of preachers who seemed to think they had authority superior to the elders, and would form a kind of ecclesiastical court composed of one, two, or more of themselves, and turn elders out and put others in their place. These are both extremes; and as to scriptural knowledge authorizing such proceeding, my mind is an entire blank. If the members of the congregation in any community are to obey the elders, and the preacher is a member, then he is to be subject, too. If he claims that his membership is "wherever he is," then he should obey the elders wherever he is. If the church of God is composed of the local congregations and one is not a member of any congregation, then how is he a member of the church of God? If we say, "There is no church larger than the local congregation nor smaller than all the saved," then how can one be in the church and not be a member of a local congregation? From my viewpoint, when one is scripturally baptized, that puts him into the local congregation, if it puts him into the church at all, and he becomes subject to the eldership. If he changes his location and obeys the laws of Christ, that will make him a member of that congregation, for he will not forsake the assembling. (Heb. 10: 23-25.)

This, as I view it, calls for a more serious and earnest investigation of the question of the qualifications, duties, authority, and obligations of the elders. Let us say just here that neither an elder, nor an evangelist, nor any one else, has authority from Christ to do anything, only as he can read it in the law of the Spirit. The point we are more particularly concerned about in this article is the authority of the elders. One of the qualifications of an elder, as given by the Holy Spirit through Paul, is, he must be "one that ruleth his own house well, having his children in subjection with all gravity; (for if a man know not how to rule his own house, how shall he take care of the church of God?)." (1 Tim. 3: 4, 5.) This shows that an elder must have this ability. And Paul further says:

"Let the elders that rule well be counted worthy of double honor, especially they who labor in the word and doctrine."
(1 Tim, 5: 17.) He is to be a ruler; he is to "take care of the church of God." How is he to do this, if not by ruling well? Then Paul says he must give account. (Heb. 13: 17.) Now reason a little. Why the charge to select a good ruler if he is not to rule? Why hold him to give account for that over which he has no control or rule? I cannot work myself up to the point to believe God would require the selection and appointment of good rulers, and then forbid their ruling, but tell them they "must give account." Give account for what, if not the way they rule?

The elder is commanded to "feed the church of God." On what is he to feed them? All say, "the word of God." He is to "hold fast the faithful word as he hath been taught." (Tit. 1: 9.) To the whole church Peter says: "As newborn babes, desire the sincere milk of the word, that ye may grow thereby." (1 Pet. 2: 2.) Then Paul says: "Remember them which have the rule over you, who have spoken unto you the word of God." (Heb. 13: 7.) The elder must be "apt to teach." (1 Tim. 3: 2.) Now, with competent teachers who teach "as they have been taught," and a church that desires the sincere milk of the word, we may well look for growth.

The elder is to be "apt to teach;" but we are not to understand that he is the only one who is authorized to teach. The evangelist is to teach (1 Tim. 4: 11), and all ought to be able to teach (Heb. 5: 12). But because we are authorized to teach, we should not conclude that we are also authorized to rule, for the elders only are authorized to rule, Here is where mistakes have been made and much injury done by people assuming authority that God has not given them. While the elders are made the overseers, feeders, teachers of the church, they become responsible to God for the kind of teaching the church receives. If they decide that certain teaching at a certain time, although it may be the truth, is not the thing needed and will do harm, they have the right to prevent it, and to rebel against their decision is to disobey God; for he says, "Obey them that have the rule over you." A failure to understand and observe this principle has caused much confusion. One may say, "I am not willing to be dictated to by men as to what I shall preach." In a sense that is true of us all; but we should all be willing to obey God. In this instance the elders are not dictating what one shall preach, but requesting not to preach on a certain subject. As to what we shall preach, God dictates that. He says, "preach the word," "preach the gospel," "speak as the oracles of God," "speak the same thing;" and the elders and the whole church have the right to turn any man down who does not do it. (See Rom. 16: 17, 18.) God in establishing his kingdom has so set these members in it, and has assigned to each one his duties. I regard it a fearful thing to meddle with it or disarrange it in any way.

A failure to follow these things and to walk by the divine rule is, in my judgment, the main cause of so much slackness and failure among the churches. But there is a medium of teaching that I know not how to get at and handle. I mean the papers. It seems that no one has control of them but the editors, publishers, and owners. I know of no scripture authorizing or specially governing them. Some of them are bearers of much error. They are scattered throughout the country. Members read them, and some fall in line with the erroneous teaching, and then trouble begins. While the elders may hold in check the preacher who would sow the seeds of discord, how are they to check the evil work of papers that are filled with the notions and opinions of men instead of the word of God? I am sorry to say it, but I am afraid religious papers have done and are now doing more harm than good; and I am not alone in this conclusion. They are often filled with the opinions of the editors and contributors. While we plead for a "Thus saith the Lord," it seems there are few who stick to it. Parties grow up from the teaching of papers, preachers take sides and say ugly things about each other, and the fire of iniquity spreads. While there are some good things in all the papers, the evil mars the good. But what is to be done, and who is to do it? That a reformation is needed, there is no doubt. Should the elders advise their congregations to "mark" those papers that "cause division, and avoid them?" The cause must be removed before the disease can be cured. Let the elders, as well as all others, look to their own responsibilities and obligations. Let's get back to preaching "Christ, and him crucified."

Now, I don't mean that the editors of the papers are had men, any more than the preachers are bad men, but they are men, and as liable to be wrong as other men. I have tried it and think I know. An editor is as liable to err as any other writer or good preacher; but his error does more harm, because it goes to more people, and there are so many who are willing to follow him because he is an editor, and they think he knows and is safe to follow. Paul says, "Follow me, as I follow Christ." But now I have done gone and said it, and maybe I have said too much; but judge ye what I say. What do you say?

"The Kingdom in Matthew."

BY E. M. BORDEN.

The above is the title of the fifth number of a series of articles on the kingdom question by the editor of a paper published in Louisville, Ky. That the reader may understand, this is a review of article number five. This brother believes that the kingdom of Christ is yet to come—that is, the kingdom spoken of in Dan. 2: 44 is yet to come. He believes it will be after the coming of Christ and the resurrection. It is my purpose to follow him in his arguments and see if there is any ground for his position.

Dan. 2: 44 is one of the strongest proofs I know of in favor of the fact that the kingdom is in existence now. "In the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom." The kings mentioned referred to the kingdoms represented in the image that Nebuchadnezzar saw. These kings have come and gone. Who can say, then, that the kingdom has not been established? It is true that this brother contends that these kingdoms will reappear when Christ comes again, and that during that time the kingdom will be established, but he does not prove it. Did Nebuchadnezzar dream that these kingdoms would appear again when Christ comes? No.

God had a kingdom a long time before Christ came. No one will deny that it was the kingdom of God. The expressions, "kingdom of God" and "kingdom of heaven," are used often in the Bible. Sometimes the expression, "kingdom of God," refers to the kingdom of Christ. The expression, "kingdom of heaven," sometimes refers to the church of Christ, and sometimes it refers to the future home of the soul. Nothing can be gained by an effort to prove that the "kingdom of heaven" is not the church. It is true that the kingdom of Christ" is the "kingdom of God." It is also true that "kingdom of God" can refer to the heavenly kingdom. There is nothing in any of these passages to show that the kingdom of Christ will be established when he comes again. The main question between us is: Is the kingdom of Christ established now, or will it be established when Christ comes again?

This brother uses the expression, "The kingdom of heaven is at hand," to prove that the kingdom of Christ will be set up when Jesus comes again. John the Baptist was the first one to use the expression. This brother seems to think that the Jews understood the nature of the kingdom of Christ. Here is his statement: "The promise of the Messianic kingdom, with all it involved—the appearance of the great King of David's line; the destruction of the Gentile world power, the deliverance and national restoration of Israel and her exaltation to earthly sovereignty; the promises God made to the fathers and the prophets' visions of the future glory of the people, the land, the city, and the kingdom in that day."

Now, if all the Jews understood the nature of the kingdom as well as this brother seems to think they did, there was nothing more for them to learn about it, provided this brother is right. How did this brother know that they knew so much? Just think of it! They understood "the Messianic kingdom, with all it involved." If they understood all that it involved, what else was there for them to learn? But listen. When this brother comes to the parables, he emphasizes the statement: "Utter things hidden from the foundation of the world." Then he says: "Never before then were these facts concerning the kingdom set forth in the parables, divulged; they were absolutely new." (Italics mine.) If they understood the nature of the kingdom with all that it involved, how could the parables reveal anything to them? What was set forth in the parables that they did not know, if what you say is true?

"Repent ye, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand," can not mean that the kingdom of Christ was to be established when Christ comes again. "At hand" does not mean "already here," and it does not mean thousand of years in the future; but it does mean "near by," "approaching." Mark 1: 14 we read that Jesus preached the "gospel of the kingdom of God," saying: "The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand." Think of it! The time had come. What time? There is only one answer, and that is that the kingdom of Christ was about to be established. "Repent ye." Why repent? "For the kingdom of heaven is at hand." Matt. 3: 1-10 is used to prove that the kingdom of Christ will be established when Christ comes again. I confess I cannot see anything in it to prove the position. "Repent ye, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand," does not prove it. Verses 10 and 11 show that the mission of Christ is above that of John the Baptist. If anything, it shows the reign of Christ from the beginning of the Christian dispensation. If the kingdom is not yet set up, why did not Jesus instruct his apostles, in the great commission, to say: "Repent ye, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand?" Why did that kind of preaching stop so suddenly?

This brother must be hard up for proof, for he uses the expressions in the Sermon on the Mount to give strength to his position. "Blessed are the poor in spirit: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven." And then: "Blessed are the meek: for they shall inherit the earth." After quoting these passages he says: "The kingdom thus promised is evidently not the church." Who said it was? It does not refer to a reign of Christ on earth at this time or at any other time, but it refers to our eternal home. "Inherit the earth" has reference to the new earth wherein will dwell righteousness. Matt. 7: 21 is also used: "Not every one that saith unto me Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." This also refers to the general judgment and to our eternal home. Jesus even specifies the class who will be permitted to enter. The very next verse says: "Many will say to me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name?" etc. "Then will I profess unto them, I never knew you." Who can fail to see that this refers to the general judgment and our eternal Who can read this part of the Sermon on the Mount and be so deluded as to think that it has reference to Christ's reigning over literal Israel?

But, at last, he has found one "kingdom of heaven" that refers to the church. It is Matt, 11: 11: "The least in the kingdom of heaven is greater than he," Is it, indeed, a fact that the church is the "kingdom of heaven?" Why should this refer to the church any more than some of the other passages that he has used? The next verse says:

"The kingdom of heaven suffereth violence." Will he say it has reference to the members of the church?

One of the main reasons I cannot believe that the kingdom of Christ will be set up when Christ comes again is because, among the things that Christ will do when he comes again, there is no mention made of establishing a kingdom. He will raise the dead (1 Cor. 15: 25); he will judge the world (Matt. 25: 31-46) and reward the righteous (Col. 3: 4); but I could not find where he would establish a kingdom. But the Bible does say: "Then cometh the end." If there is to be another epoch of time after Christ comes, why was the Holy Spirit not aware of the fact? Did he know better when he said through Paul, "Ther cometh the end?" But let us read all of the statement: "Then cometh the end, when he shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father; when he shall have put down all rule and all authority and power." (1 Cor. 15: 24.) When is the end to come? Paul says: "At his coming." When is he to deliver up the kingdom of God? Paul says: "At his coming." When is he to put down all rule and authority and power? Paul says: "At his coming." Could Paul have made a mistake in this? Certainly not. Then this theory that Christ will come to establish his kingdom and reign over literal Israel is not true. At the very time that this brother says the kingdom of Christ will be established, Paul says it will end. If the kingdom is to be established at the second coming of Christ. why should the Bible say: "Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father?" (Matt. 13: 43.)

The kingdom was to be established in the days of the kings represented in the great image of Dan. 2: 44. The Babylonian, the Medo-Persian, the Macedonian, and the Roman kingdoms are no longer in existence. No intelligent historian will claim that these kingdoms are yet in existence. Their day has passed. The kingdom was to be set up during their existence. Has it been set up? It has. Is this image still standing upon its feet? But this brother said that the image would appear at the time of the coming of Christ. Did he prove it? No, there was no proof to offer. Necessity is the mother of invention. It has to be that way to fit his position, for he knows it must be "in the days of these kings." But the fact is, these kings have come and gone and the kingdom of Christ is here. The little stone was to strike the image while it was upon its feet, and then it was to become a great mountain and fill the whole earth. The kingdom of Christ is that little stone. It began on Pentecost. Later it struck the image while it was upon its feet. The Image was destroyed and no more place was found for it. The kingdom of Christ is growing now and will continue to grow until it becomes a great mountain and fills the whole earth.

I do not see how Dan, 7: 13, 14 can refer to an institution yet to be established. Read it. "I saw in the night visions, and, behold, one like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of days, and they brought him near before him. And there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages, should serve him." The Son of man came "to," not "from," the Ancient of days. He did go to the "Ancient of days." "And a cloud received him out of their sight." Will he come to the Ancient of days when he comes again? It was then, and not at his second coming, when he received dominion, glory, and a kingdom. But notice. Why did he receive dominion, glory. and a kingdom? "That all nations and languages should serve him." Can all nations serve him now? Did not Christ rise from the dead that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem? Did not Jesus tell his disciples to "teach all nations?" Who can say that this does not belong to the Christian age? But enough for the present.

The Second Coming of Christ.

BY BATSELL BAXTER.

When the Savior ascended to heaven, two of the angels who had escorted him home came back and said to his disciples: "This Jesus, who was received up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye beheld him going into heaven." (Acts 1: 11.)

There has been much speculation as to the time of his coming. Every time there has been a world war, or a war such as the last one in which most of the nations have been engaged, a good many enthusiasts take it upon themselves to tell just when, or about when, the Lord shall come. It did no good to argue with those who made Armageddon out of the late war. They knew and we did not. So the rest of us just had to let them have it their way. But time proved that they were wrong. In every generation men see things that seem to indicate the speedy coming of Christ. It was so in the days of the apostles. The Thessalonians fell into the error; and when some of their members died and Christ had not come yet, they began to question. The apostle Paul wrote a letter delivering them from their error. The scripture says: "Of that day and hour knoweth no one, not even the angels of heaven, neither the Son, but the Father only." (Matt. 24: 36.)

On one thing the Scripture is perfectly plain, and that is about what will happen when our Savior comes again: "Marvel not at this: for the hour cometh, in which all that are in the tombs shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of judgment." (John 5: 28, 29,)

The time of our Savior's coming is clearly a time of separation. "He shall separate them one from another, as the shepherd separateth the sheep from the goats; and he shall set the sheep on his right hand, but the goats on the left." (Matt. 25: 32, 33.)

A Boy's Best Rule.

Be honest, lad, in word and deed,
In all you say and do:
Treat others in your walk of life
As you'd have them treat you!
Don't steal another's precious time,
Or blot a spotless name—
You may not think that stealing, 'tis
Dishonest just the same.

Be true—there's nothing half so grand As character of truth; Let never trace of falsehood stain The glory of your youth. Let every thought your harbor be As clear and pure as day, Sincerity of purpose gleam In every word you say.

Be brave—don't be afraid to stand Up boldly for the right, And evil firmly to oppose With all your fearless might; For real courage only fears What it is wrong to do— To live a hero's life, my lad, Be honest, brave, and true!

Bringing in the Bucket.

"O dear!" sighed Mary. "I really must write that letter to Mrs. Norton to-night. It's got to be done this week, or there'll be trouble."

"And this Saturday, if I'm not mistaken," said Uncle Jim, looking up from his newspaper. "In fact, Saturday afternoon. Why not postpone it till to-morrow, if I may ask?"

"Why, Uncle Jim!" cried Mary. "That from you! "Why not wait till to-morrow!" I should have expected you to say, 'Why didn't you write it before?'"

Uncle Jim hid a quizzical smile behind his newspaper. "Well, since you suggest the question, why didn't you write it on Monday—or Tuesday—or Wednesday—or—"

"O, Uncle Jim!" Mary interrupted him. "Do stop! You make it sound so terrible! I've put it off because I haven't felt a bit well this week; and it's an awfully hard letter to write, and I dread it no end!"

' O, yes." Uncle Jim was politely sympathetic. "Well, I suppose it's a great deal easier to do to-night, of course."

"What in the world do you mean? It's harder, if anything."

"Oh-h? Harder? Well, at any rate, I suppose you don't dread it so much?"

"I dread it just as much!"

Mary's voice showed that she was becoming a little annoyed; but Uncle Jim apparently did not notice, and kept on with his questions.

"Then you're feeling pretty well again, are you!"

"I'm feeling tired to death! You know I said so at lunch. What do you mean by all these questions, Uncle Jim? Are you making fun of me?"

But every trace of the quizzical smile was gone from Uncle Jim's face.

"I was just trying to find out," he said, quietly, "just why any sensible girl waits a week about doing something that grows harder the longer she waits, and that she dreads more and more. Besides, the delay makes her every day more and more tired. No, don't shake your head, Mary. You would have felt a great deal better physically as well as mentally if you had got that letter off your hands earlier in the week. Did you ever hear the story about the little boy who was sick with all the symptoms of overwork? The doctor asked how much work he had to do, And they said: 'To bring in a bucket of water every day.'

"'At any particular time?" inquired the doctor.

"'Well, he is supposed to bring it early in the morning, but he usually puts it off till the last thing at night."

"'And brings it in all day long!' said the wise old doctor.

You make him bring that water in before he has his breakfast, and he'll be all right."

"And he was!"

Mary laughed in spite of herself. "That's all very well for a small boy," she said, "but for a girl as old as I am it's different."

"How much older do you think you are than Mr. Howard Carpenter?" inquired Uncle Jim, with one of his surprising conversational changes.

"Older? Why, Mr. Howard Carpenter is as old as father! What do you mean?"

"Simply that he was the one who told me he used it for a watchword. I was asking him how he managed to get so much done without ever acting tired or showing strain as so many men do; and he said: 'I bring in my bucket of water the first thing in the morning.' Then he explained that for a good many years he had chosen the hardest thing in each day's work, or the thing he dreaded most to do, and had deliberately done that thing first of all—thereby losing neither time nor nervous energy in dreading it. I've determined to adopt the plan, Mary, and I respectfully pass it on to you. And now, since the sermon's over, how about a nice little walk through the woods?"

"Thanks, kind sir," said Mary, with a smile, "but that's no bucket. I'm going now to draw mine; better late than never."—Youth's Companion.

"Let Down the Net."

"Did you ever notice," said an old lady, smiling into the troubled face before her, "that when the Lord told the discouraged fishermen to cast their nets again, it was right in the same old place where they had been working all night and had caught nothing?" If we could only go off to some new place every time we get discouraged, trying again would be an easier thing. If we could be somebody else or go somewhere else, it might not be hard to have fresh faith and courage; but it is the same old net in the same old pond for most of us. The old temptations are to be overcome, the old faults to be conquered, the old trials and discouragements before which we failed yesterday to be faced again to-day. We must win success where we are if we win at all, and it is the Master himself who, after all these toilful, disheartening efforts that we call failures, bids us "try again." Those disciples who failed here in faith and power after Pentecost were filled with power for doing just what they had failed to do in the old days.—Sunday School Times.

God loves us all even when we are very bad. There would be no hope for us if he did not. He loves us just because we are human beings, and his children. A man named "Davidson" was once convicted and ordered transportation. Before he was sent away from England, his mother, who lived at Dundee, in Scotland, tramped five hundred and seventy miles, living on a pennyworth of potatoes a day, to see him in prison. On her awful journey she sold all the little things she had; but she managed to keep one present, which he had asked for, a Testament. She arrived nearly dead with exhaustion, but she kissed him and comforted him and gave him his present. God loves us more than any mother.—Selected.

QUERY DEPARTMENT

T. S. Humble, Pikeville, Tenn., asks for an explanation of John 14: 12, which reads: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do; because I go unto the Father." This evidently does not mean that the believer on Jesus would do greater miracles than Jesus had done, but his work would be greater and would have a wider influence than that which Jesus had done. Jesus had made only about five hundred disciples at the time of his ascension. The believer would be able to effect greater moral and spiritual revolution than Jesus had done. Jesus labored with his disciples while he was upon earth, and then went "unto the Father" and sent forth the things seen and heard on Pentecost, and the eleven apostles led three thousand to Christ in a single day. This, in number, was far more than Jesus had done in the way of making converts during his entire earthly career.

A sister, who requests us not to sign her name, sends the following: "(1) The Bible says: 'Lay up in store on the first day of the week as the Lord has prospered us.' Again, it says: 'Give as we have opportunity.' (2) Should a man and wife, if they are both members of the church, agree together to give to any worthy cause, or should each one give for himself and herself?"

1. In 1 Cor. 16: 1, 2 we read: "Now concerning the collection for the saints, as I gave order to the churches of Galatia, so also do ye. Upon the first day of the week let each one of you lay by him in store, as he may prosper, that no collections be made when I come." This refers to contributing on the first day of the week in the church. Every one is to contribute as he has been prospered. This indicates, fo my mind, that the husband should contribute, and also the wife. There is no scripture that says, "Give as we have opportunity." Gal. 6: 10 reads: "So then, as we have opportunity, let us work that which is good toward all men, and especially toward them that are of the household of the faith."

2. There is individual giving, as well as giving through the church upon the first day of the week. As the husband and wife are one, it seems that they might agree just what they are able to give and make a gift for both. Frequently it is not possible to call the church together in order to contribute to the poor and needy. The husband and wife, as such, should give for the relief of the poor. I can see no good reason for dividing the gift when one would serve the same purpose. It seems that Ananias and Sapphira agreed together just how much they should give. The Lord does not condemn the agreement, but he condemns their lying unto the Holy Spirit.

J. S. Holland, of Hanlin, Ga., wishes information on different creeds, or confessions of faith. "Creed" and "confession of faith" are practically the same. He says: "In reading 'History of So-called Denominations,' I find various named "Confessions of Faith," which does not explain what such confessions of faith really are. If not asking too much of you, I would be glad if you will give me an answer to the following: 'Arminian Confession of Faith,' 'Philadelphia Confession of Faith,' 'Westminster Confession of Faith.' Also, what is meant by the 'Nicene Creed?' The historian, in speaking of a certain kind of Baptists, says: 'Extreme Calvinistic views came to prevail in the Particular Churches, which discouraged all evangelistic efforts among the unconverted.' What are extreme Calvinistic views?"

There are five articles in the "Arminian Confession of These are: (1) Conditional election and reprobation, in opposition to the absolute predestination taught by Calvin. (2) Universal redemption, or that the atonement was made by Christ to all mankind, though none but believers can be partakers of the benefit. (3) That man, in order to exercise true faith, must be regenerated and renewed by the operation of the Holy Spirit, which is the gift of God. (4) That man may resist divine grace. (5) That man may relapse from a state of grace, in opposition to Calvin's doctrine of the perseverance of the saints. These tenets were condemned by the Synod of Dort, 1619, but have been widespread among Protestant denominations. The theology of the Wesleyans of Great Britain and the Methodists of America is Arminian. The doctrine of Arminianism, or man's free agency, is opposed to the doctrine of Calvinism.

The "Philadelphia Confession of Faith." The first Bap- . tist church in America was founded in Providence, R. L. in 1638, by Roger Williams, who had been banished from the colony of Massachusetts for advocating unsettling and dangerous views. About 1644 a second church was established in Newport, and in 1655 the First Baptist Church of Boston was organized. In 1683 or 1684 Baptist refugees from New England founded the first church in the South. near Charleston, S. C., and by 1740 there were Baptist churches in all the colonies. The most influential group of churches was in the vicinity of Philadelphia, which in 1707 organized the Philadelphia Association, to which the churches of the middle colonies, as well as those of Virginia and South Carolina, were later admitted. In 1742 this association adopted what has since been known as the "Philadelphia Confession of Faith," an adaptation of the confession of the English Particular Baptists, strongly Calvinistic in doctrine.

The "Westminster Confession of Faith," that body of doctrines proposed by the Westminster Assembly and adopted by Parliament in 1646 as the creed of the English Church, and now the doctrinal basis of almost all Presbyterian churches. A committee of about twenty-five members was appointed by the assembly to prepare matter for a joint confession of faith sometime near August 20, 1644. A smaller committee was appointed for digesting what the committee of twenty-five had prepared into a formal draft. After considerable changing and discussion, on September 25, 1646, part of the confession was finally passed, and on December 4 the remainder received the sanction of the assembly, when the whole was presented to the Parliament. That body ordered the printing of six hundred copies for the use of members of Parliament and the assembly and that scripture proof should be added to the confession, which was accordingly done. This confession in 1647 was approved by the Church of Scotland in the form in which it had passed the assembly, and it was afterwards ratified by the Scotch Parliament. It was passed in 1648 by the English Parliament under the title of "Articles of Christian Religion," but with certain changes.

The Nicene Creed, in its first form, was drawn up at the Council of Nicæa (325). It sprung from controversies, in which Arius and Athanasius took a leading part regarding the person of Christ. Besides the two directly hostile camps, there was a middle body larger than either led by Eusebius of Cesarea. In the council the point around which discussion chieflly turned was whether Christ was of the same essence with the Father (Homo-Ousios), cronly of like essence (Homoi-Ousios). Constantine favored the Homo-Ousians, who prevailed, and passed anathemas upon the opposite opinion and its teachers.

Different religionists have held modified Calvinistic views. Some have held extreme Calvinistic views of unconditional election and reprobation. Such doctrine is extreme Calvinism.

No miracle in all history is comparable with, or as convincing as, that of a holy character.

It is a spiritual law that grateful appreciation of such blessings as we have prepares the heart to receive in larger, fuller measure.

One of the fundamental laws governing our entrance into a rich spiritual experience is to let go every known wrong and every doubtful thing.

During C. R. Nichol's meeting at Houston Heights, Texas, Oscar Smith preached on Lord's day for the First Church. Two were baptized and one took membership.

Among our recent visitors were T. B. Clark, of Childress, Texas; T. B. Thompson, of Huntsville, Ala.; and K. E. Ball of Colfax, La. They are busy in the Master's service.

Four persons were baptized at Flint, Mich., at Lord's-day service, June 19. Leslie G. Thomas writes to tell us the interest is growing. His address is 615 West Fifth Street.

If we do a kindly, loving deed, and then talk about it, it loses much of its power to bless. Let us remember gratefully all kindnesses shown us, and forget quickly all that we render to others.

We shall come to know what to believe about the eternities and the infinities when we have begun to do what is right in the house in which we live and among the people with whom we daily associate.

We note with pleasure a good report from R. A. Craig, of Louisville, Ky., in which he states that sixteen persons cast in their lot with the congregation at Shelbyville, Ky., during his last visit. Brother Craig is "striving to make the cause of Christ felt in this part of Kentucky," and the Lord is blessing his effort.

A. S. Gill writes from Charlotte, Tenn: "J. V. Armstrong Traylor is conducting a series of meetings here, having large and attentive crowds at both morning and night services. The harvest is plentiful here, and we are hoping much good will be accomplished by the meeting. No additions up to this date."

A, G. Freed writes of the meeting at Covington, 'l'enn.: "Our meeting here is interesting. Audiences are large in attendance. The church is encouraged." He also says: "My next meeting will be at Marietta, Miss." Some years ago Brother Freed held a debate with Pigue at Marietta. The church there has prospered since the discussion. The meeting will begin on the first Sunday in July.

S. W. Bell writes from Sedalia, Mo., June 21: "Good audiences have been coming out to hear W. W. Slater preach the gospel. Sunday night the big tent was filled, and many could not get seats, so sat on the ground. Lanier is doing his part in the song services well. Sedalia is getting an opportunity that they have never had before—hearing good and strong men yoked in a single effort in preaching the gospel. We are not expecting any great results, and largely because this meeting cannot continue as long as it should. Slater says that he cannot stay longer than July 1. Lanier and I expect to keep the work moving as best we can almost all the rest of the summer. We have one or two other meetings to hold. I thank and praise God that some few of his children are aiding us in this greatest of all works—

Meeting at Cordova, Ala.: "I am just home from Cordova, where I preached on Lord's day and night to large and appreciative audiences. It had been six years since I had been with them, but I found them faithful in the service of the Lord. Quite a number came over from Jasper and other near-by congregations, which added to the pleasure of the meeting. I will be very busy until November in the field."—Frank Baker.

Meeting at Lenoir City. Tenn.: "I will write you an item of our tent meeting held in Lenoir City, May 29 to June 12, by R. C. White and singer J. D. Derryberry. We consider we had a splendid meeting, with fine crowds, and we were on adjoining lots with a Baptist meeting which continued up to the night our meeting closed. We never had any baptisms, but our little flock of about fifteen have banded together and are keeping house for the Lord in a rented hall. We had services this morning, with fourteen present. Some were out of town. We hope to report more next Lord's day."—Smith M. Lively.

Meeting at Athens, Ala.: "Our meeting with the Phillips and Evans Streets Church, Springfield, Mo., was a success in every respect. Large crowds, splendid coöperation from the other congregations in the city. There were fourteen additions to the congregation. A special feature of the meeting was the attendance and coöperation of so many preaching brethren—viz.: Young, Parker, Hardin, Wilkerson, Mason, Howard, Fields, Hindman, Moore, and perhaps others. I shall, the Lord willing, return next June for another meeting in Springfield. I go to Pursley, Texas, for my next meeting Friday night before the second Sunday in July."—J. W. Brents.

From C. C. McQuiddy, Forest Hill, La., June 22: "I closed an eight-days' meeting at Cypress Creek on Sunday night, June 19. Large crowds, excellent attention, and seven buried with their Lord in baptism. Included in this number was a son of our old brother, Beneit Johnson (pioneer preacher of the word), making the family circle complete in Christ."

Forthcoming Debate: "Beginning on July 11, either at Monette or Black Oak, Ark., I will meet W. C. Wright in public discussion. Wright is a member of the Christian Church, but preached materialism from the Christadelphian standpoint. We will discuss 'Nature of Man,' 'Punishment of the Wicked,' and 'Resurrection of the Dead.' The debate will continue at least three days and nights."—W. Curtis Porter.

James H. Morton, Lewisburg, Tenn., Route 9, writes to Brother McQuiddy as follows: "I am still in failing health, confined at home, rarely able to attend the Lord's-day meetings. If I should live to see another birthday, I will be eighty years old. The coming of the Gospel Advocate has been a great comfort to me in my affliction. It has been coming to my home fifty-five years. May God's richest blessings be on you and the dear old Advocate."

An encouraging report from Fresno, Cal.: "The Fresno Street Church enjoyed two good services on June 19. Our attendance and interest are always good. We had sixty-seven at our midweek meeting, June 15. Since our school closed we want to work all we can, and make as much as we can to help on our school buildings. On account of a little breakdown in our machinery, we have not been able to get our printing started yet."—Earnest C. Love.

C. E. Wooldridge writes: "I closed a two-weeks' meeting with the church at Terrell last night. Eight baptisms, four restored, and four added to the congregation by statement. R. H. Rogers labors with the Terrell church. He could be secured for two meetings in July or August, and would be glad to be called to Southwest Texas. Address him at 302 East Asylum Avenue, Terrell, Texas. I am to begin a meeting at Handley on Saturday, June 25, to continue over the first Lord's day in July."

T. W. Croom, of Center Point, Ark., writes: "I am to begin my summer's work on Saturday before the second Lord's day in July at Valdasta, Texas. I have another meeting at Blue Ridge immediately after this, going over the fourth and fifth Lord's days; then another at Moreland, embracing the first and second Sundays in August. I shall then come home for one week to attend the Teachers' Institute. From here I go to Ward's Chapel, near Farmersville, La., for two meetings, one a mission meeting supported by Ward's Chapel. Next I have a meeting at Colson. La.; then I go to my old home in North Arkansas for a short visit, which will finish my protracted-meeting work for the year"

From W. S. Long, Washington, D. C., June 24: "This has been a fine week for the church here. Our Bible classes were larger last Lord's day than usual, and a better knowledge of the Bible is being sought. The spirituality of the church is good, and all this means much. Two took membership who have come to us from Oklahoma. E. E. Joynes and Morgan H. Carter both made us pleasant visits this week. Brother Joynes preached Sunday night on 'The Book of Life—Is My Name Written There?' and Brother Carter preached Thursday night on 'The Art of Friendship.' Brother Carter has gone to New York City to take up the work with the little band in that city. Let us all remember him and those who are to labor with him at the throne of grace."

J. W. Grant says: "I have examined carefully 'Questions Answered,' by Lipscomb and Sewell, edited by M. C. Kurfees, and just off the press of the McQuiddy Printing Company. It is a grand book, and I would be glad that a copy of it be found in every home. So rich and full in its answers to the questions that so frequently come up in the minds of Bible readers, and those answers by these two godly Bible students, given in the forty years of their most active work in teaching the Bible to others. Sometimes questions answered by one, sometimes by the other, and sometimes doubtless embodying the best thought of both, it is indeed a rich treasure to the reader. Get a copy and study it carefully. It will add wonderfully to your stock of Bible knowledge."

From Dr. W. C. Stephens, Bagwell, Texas: "I have been thinking of sending you some reports from this part of North Texas. We have such a fine country here in Red River County. Climate mild. We never have a failure here in a crop, while other richer parts of Texas make some almost failures on account of the hot winds and dry weather. Land is cheaper here. We have good railroad facilities, and good water with a little effort. Health is reasonably good here. This country is pretty well supplied with reasonably good farmers on a small scale. The church of Christ is not doing as well spiritually as it ought to do. We have J. H. King, of Hugo, Okla., preaching for us once a month. He will hold a meeting for us the last two weeks in August. He is as good as the best."

From Will W. Slater, Fort Smith, Ark., June 13: "The Park Hill Church is rejoicing, and the meeting continues with great interest. We were to close last night, but the interest was too great. Brother Henley is one preacher that will not 'pull up stakes' and leave when the interest demands that he stay. I would to God we had more Henleys in the work. We are having the largest crowds in the history of this church. Twelve additions to date, and we are expecting others. I leave to-day for Sedalia, Mo., to assist S. W. Bell in a tent meeting. Brother Henley will continue our meeting a few days longer. My brother will lead the singing. Brother Bell writes me that he will need some financial assistance in carrying on the work in Sedalia. Send to either of us at 1824 South Barrett Avenue, Sedalia, Mo. Pray for us that we may succeed in the Lord's work."

W. S. Long writes: "It is the desire of the church in Washington to pay off the debt on the house of worship here at once, so as to turn our attention to mission work so ear restly calling for us east, west, north, and south of us. O. how much good we could do if our means, talent, and time could be devoted to the great field around! If all the churches in the nation will unite for one day to this end, we can raise every cent we owe in a single day. We can then stop talking about it and turn our attention to New York City and other destitute fields. Let every church set apart the contribution of Sunday, July 3; and if this is done, we can pay this debt off in one day, and not take years to do what we ought to do in one hour. Concentrate on this one place one day, and it will show us how things ought to be done. Send all contributions to E. L. Milis, treasurer, 2121 F Street, N. W., Washington, D. C."

From Thomas H. Burton, Union, S. C.: "Since my last report we have buried Sister Burnett and her five-months-This is the first death in the congregation here. Sister Burnett lived only about five weeks after being baptized, but she seemed to be real happy and very anxious to teach others the gospel. I have just returned from Columbia, where I visited Brother and Sister John L. Davis and Brother Roy Wells, who are located in Camp Jackson. are very anxious to secure the names of members who are located either in the camp or in the city of Columbia, as we want to begin the work there as soon as possible. planning to begin a meeting in Greenville next week. have one brother and one sister there, who are very anxious to get the cause started in that city. Any one knowing of any brethren in that city would do us a great favor by writ-We had about sixty in the classes last ing me at once. Lord's day."

Andrew Perry writes from Stover, Miss., June 21: "I came to this point, Brazil Station, near Stover, on Thursday last. Here I find a very small membership; and with the small number of white families around, there are a few very prejudiced Methodists and Baptists, and hence our audiences are very small so far. I will continue a few nights and see if we can get a few of them to come out and hear. In my report of the meeting at Cork Schoolhouse, published in the Gospel Advocate of June 16, it was said that 'five' were added by membership. It should have been 'two.'" In a late note (June 24) he says: "I have been here one week, but have had very small audiences. The working strength here is very small. Sectarian prejudice is strong, and the influence of whisky is strong against the truth. Yet I sowed all the seed I could. I will now go to Charleston for a few days while waiting for mail."

READY FOR SERVICE.

From Charles Williams, Batesville, Miss.: "My time is not all taken for meetings through July and August. I would be glad to hear from congregations desiring meetings. I must keep busy in the Master's work."

L. F. Mason is engaged for a meeting in West Tennessee in August and has time for two other meetings immediately following. Address him at Box 33, Whitewright, Texas.

T. H. Etheridge, of Marshall, Texas, will be glad to donate two weeks of preaching to any town in Texas or Oklahoma that does not have an organized congregation. Write him in care of Gunter Bible College, at Gunter, Texas.

The Church Is the Pillar of the Truth. BY J. C. M'O.

Christians are the salt of the earth, the light of the world. They should not put their light under a bushel, but on a candlestick. It is the business of the child of God to lead in every good work. Christians, Spirit-filled and Spirit-guided, will have a wonderful influence for good upon the world. Christ commanded the apostles, and through them commands the church, to disciple all nations, preaching the gospel to every creature. The same amount of money spent in preaching the gospel to the heathen that is spent in building battle ships and in munitions of war would go far toward the conversion of the world. How much better is it to lead men into the light of truth and make them Christians than it is to train them to shed the blood of their fellow man! War is of the devil and has never been approved by Jehovah. Christ came to teach all peoples to "beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning hooks," and to bring all nations to such a state of purity that "nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more." (Isa. 2: 4.) With the whole or even the majority of the race Christianized, it would be impossible for cruel wars to exist. While the church of God cannot and will not fail, yet many of the followers of Christ do fail, and fail so I grievously that they have no saving influence in lifting up humanity to the ideals of the Christian religion.

In times of peace we should educate against war. It is encouraging to note that all religionists are realizing that the reign of Jesus Christ is a reign of peace and that all who live perfectly under the reign of the Prince of Peace must beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks and learn war no more. Protestant, Catholic, and Jewish bodies united in calling for peace Sunday on June 5. This is encouraging, but it would be more encouraging if all Christians were laworing to bring about peace on earth and good will to men. But not only are religionists coming out for peace, but also leaders of war are supporting a reduction of armaments. General Pershing and Gen. Tasker H. Bliss, former Chief of Staff and a member of the American Peace Commission, and Admirals Sims and Huse are among the strongest supporters and advocates of the reduction of armament. Christians should not permit those engaged in carnal warfare to lead them in opposition to cruel war. The followers of Christ should by all means have taken the lead in a movement for universal peace. The New York World, a stanch supporter of disarmament, censures the church for lagging behind and remarks:

By all the logic of religious teaching they should have initiated the movement they are now asked to join. should have led the way, and their voice should have been the first to be raised and the loudest to declaim against the fallacy of great naval and military establishments as a safeguard against war. It cannot have needed the lesson of the Great War to disprove that fallacy in pulpits where peace on earth, good will to men, is preached.

But the important thing is the enlistment of all American religious organizations, Protestant, Catholic, and Jew, in a combined effort to remove the menace of militarism. There is influence more powerful in American life, and there is no national cause in the aid of which that influence can more properly be employed.

It is evident that preparation for war does not prevent war. Germany's thoroughness in preparedness for war did not prevent war, but led Germany to believe that she could whip the world. The bully who arms himself with a pistol becomes insulting and resorts to violence because he feels that he is able to take care of himself. Cowards and not brave men carry pistols. The principle is the same with nations. When nations are thoroughly prepared for war, they feel that they must show their superior training and efficiency in the use of arms, so with the slightest provocation they rush into war. Brute force never settles the right of any question. Jesus does not rule by physical force, but by spiritual force. He did not leave heaven to come to this earth to teach his servants to engage in carnal warfare. He came to teach them to lead the world up to a nobler and better life by inducing them to live lives of peace, self-denial, and godliness. Christ says: "My kingdom is not of this world: if my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight, that I should not be delivered to the Jews: but now is my kingdom not from hence."

Christ came to bring peace, not to one race alone, but to all races. It should be the constant endeavor of all Christians to bring about a reign of peace among all the races of the earth, as no nation lives to itself, neither can any live to itself. So it is absolutely necessary that all nations be Christianized before we can hope to have a reign of peace among them. As America is the strongest and most influential nation, the Christians of the United States should lead the world in an effort to bring about universal peace. So long as this country spends so much money for building battle ships and other munitions of war, we cannot hope for the religion of Jesus Christ to cover the earth as the waters cover the sea. The Administrative Committee of the National Catholic Welfare Council declares:

America should sound such a call; and we should do all in our power to make it known that such is the will of the American people.

That is the first necessary step. Without it, peace will be but a hope, not a reality. A congress of nations, called at Washington by the American government, backed by popular interest and appeal, will secure undoubtedly practical, effective measures for the promotion of enduring world peace. Thus shall America again show her leadership on the path of civilization.

Such a congress should be the object of our earnest brayers, our active work; for, in so working, we promote the gospel of the Prince of Peace upon earth and strengthen that message which our holy church has ever sought to declare unto the nations.

Christians should lead such peaceable, godly lives as to influence our legislators and rulers to give us such legislation as will be helpful. Christians cannot bring about a reign of peace by rushing into politics. Their mission in the world is to lead holy, godly, and unblamable lives. They accomplish the greatest good by supporting the truth with godly living. Christians should never lose sight of the fact that God is ready and anxious to take care of his own. The Christian must fight the fight of faith with spiritual forces and not with physical forces.

The Churchman (Episcopal) exclaims: "One more war and we will be reduced to what Russia is to-day," It continues: "Churchmen at conventions talk very solemnly about Christian leadership, yet"—

Where, in God's world, can bishops, clergymen, and laymen exercise finer leadership in this war-stricken world than by preaching the Christmas doctrine of peace on earth? And preaching it not as a counsel of perfection or a benign desire, but with will steeled with determination to help organize society upon a basis which shall not require wars to win markets. People outside the churches are organizing everywhere in this great movement to compel governments to heed the cry of the peoples.

Will the clergy lead in this crusade, the greatest since Christ was born? Or will they fold their hands and say: "It is a problem for experts, for statesmen and cabinets?" God pity us! Statesmen, cabinets, and experts have been leading us, and leading us by the nose, in this war-morality for generations. What moral gain have we to show for it: the world war, a score of others in the past fifty years, and civilization trembling over the abyss? Can we do worse if we follow Christ? If the churches cannot trust him, who then will?

If the Christian church could raise up in England, France, and America a thousand ministers who would be willing to suffer martyrdom to end this business of war, there could never be another war.

Governments cannot make war without the consent of the churches. The Christian church has never tested its power. The clergy consented unto this wicked thing. How much longer are we going to do it?

An Appeal for the Fanning Orphan School.

BY E. A. E.

The following report, while showing what many of the generous friends of orphan girls are doing for them, is also an earnest appeal for the school. Note carefully what Brother Trice says:

Nashville, Tenn., June 7, 1921.—Mr. E. A. Elam, president of the Board of Trustees of the Fanning Orphan School.—Dear Brother Elam: I beg to report donations to the Fanning Orphan School received from July 1, 1920, to the present date as follows:

From M. E. Woodward, $10; J. L. Waldrum, $5; G. T. Tompkins, $5; Miss Bessie Draper, $5; A. W. Wharton, $5; H. Z. Lipscomb, $100; E. L. Walker, $5; G. S. Moore, $5; J. Byron Martin, $25; Dr. E. B. Cayce, $10; Harlin Brothers & Willams, $75; J. W. Bainbridge, $2; E. F. Baird and wife, $50; J. H. Sutton, $25; D. U. Lipscomb, $100; Charlotte Avenue Church, $20; W. W. Perry, $25; N. N. Davidson, $100; A. S. Warren, $100; Washington Manufacturing Company, $250; Roy F. Williams, $100; G. N. Tillman, $100; Highland Avenue Church, $50; W. V. Davidson, $250, J. N. Hicks, $100; Ed. Cullom, $5; T. F. Bonner, $100; Lawrence Avenue Church, $25; H. T. Hill, $100; J. O. Cheek, $280; Russell Street Church, $100; Foster Street Church, $5; Burton E. Hill, $10; Føster Street Church, $10; N. N. Davidson and wife, $500; D. Lipscomb, superintendent, $100; Foster Street Church, $5—all of Nashville, Tenn.; H. H. West, Hopkinsville, Ky., $5; George W. Johnson, Franklin, Tenn., $100; P. P. Taylor, Neapolis, Tenn., $200; H. D. Lipscomb, Grapevine, Texas, $100; H. N. Mann, Riverside, Tenn., $25; C. B. Staggs, Riverside, Tenn., $5. Total collected to date, $3,197.

This and all other funds received have been used in the conduct of the school during the school year ended June 2, 1921; and, besides, an indebtedness of about two thousand dollars has been incurred. As you are aware, we have attempted for the past two years to carry the full capacity of our accommodations, which is about seventy-two pupils, and for the past year the number of absolutely free pupils was thirty-nine, some others being paid for direct to the superintendent by churches or individuals, and still others being regular pay pupils.

It was the purpose of the founders of this institution that it should be maintained for the education of poor orphan girls who had no way of paying for an education, and the work and prayer of the present board of trustees are to carry out this purpose just as far as finances will permit. But the school has not been supported in the past as it should be, and it has often happened that from fifteen to twenty applications for admission to the school have been refused because of a lack of funds to care for them. If the friends of the school do not rally to its support liberally, it will be impossible to carry the number of free pupils we have carried for the past two years. Churches and friends should see to it that the number is not cut down this time. I trust you can present these facts and conditions in a way that will bring action and the needed help to continue this good work without interruption.

Yours fraternally, A. N. TRICE, Treasurer for Fanning Orphan School,

Note that Brother Trice states that:

1. This school has been founded and maintained for the education—proper development of body and mind and heart for the greatest usefulness—of worthy, poor, orphan girls, who have, it may be, no homes, in the first place, or no way of obtaining such an education. Let the word "orphan" and the sad fact of being an orphan impress you, and then treat all such girls as you would be treated were you in their situation. What do you say?

2. "From fifteen to twenty" such poor, struggling, and worthy girls have been turned away from this Christian home and education for lack of funds. There is no way of helping such girls half so good as this way—that is, of teaching and training them in usefulness to help themselves and at the same time to become a blessing to others. This is similar to the promise God made to Abraham: he would both bless him and make him a blessing to the world. These girls are first blessed by all who donate to this school, and then are made a blessing to others by their training. Since this is true, who can fail to help this school or to continue to do so?

3. The more the donations to the school, the greater number of such girls it can educate and train. In their generous feelings toward orphan girls who are anxious to enter the school, and being grieved to have to turn any away, the trustees accept to the limit as many as the school can carry free, and sometimes a few more, hoping such good friends as the ones named above will furnish the means. This is why the school now owes two thousand dollars.

4. If the trustees could be content—that is, could satisfy their consciences and please God—to educate and train only about thirty such girls and to make no further preparation for the education and training of any larger number, no further appeals would be made for help.

5. "It is more blessed to give than to receive;" and a most encouraging feature in all this is that, while the donors to this school (a) bless these girls, (b) help to make them a blessing to others, (c) they are themselves greatly blessed; and they are themselves blessed in different ways.

6. Since the founding of this school almost forty years ago with between twenty and twenty-five thousand dollars —school home and lands and money, all told—it has steadily grown by conservative and good management to its present proportions and work. The number of its trustees has always been thirteen. They have always been conservative, Christian, business men. No institution has been more prudently and thoughtfully conducted or has run more smoothly for these years.

7. While the trustees have not sufficient funds to fill the building with orphan and needy girls, some congregations and some individuals have supported, or paid the way, of some girls through the school. This is an excellent way to help girls. Almost any congregation can support one girl in this school. If a congregation has no such girl in mind, the trustees have; and if a congregation will furnish the expenses, the trustees can easily find the girl.

8. While millions of dollars are being raised for different purposes by various religious denominations, this one appeal should secure enough money to fill the home of this undenominational institution to its utmost capacity—where the Bible is taught daily as a textbook to every pupil, and is taught fully as the revealed will of God and applicable to all duties and relationships of life; where all receive a literary education equal to the best; where all are taught all domestic arts—not simply "domestic science," but domestic principles and domestic practices in every day useful life. This is that which all who give to the school aid. Let us hear from you. Send all donations to A. N. Trice, 1212 Gartland Avenue, Nashville, Tenn.

Personal Responsibility.

BY F. W. SMITH.

"But let every man prove his own work, and then shall he have rejoicing in himself alone, and not in another. For every man shall bear his own burden." (Gal. 6: 4, 5.)

This portion of the holy Scriptures, as well as many others, deals with the intensely vital matter of personal responsibility in the service of God. Whatever else is involved in the statement, "For every man shall bear his own burden," this much is true-viz.; there are individual obligations in Christian service which cannot be shifted on to other shoulders. To be sure, all have not the same strength or capacity to serve, which the Scriptures fully set forth in many instances, as, for instance, in the parable of the talents. "For the kingdom of heaven is as a man traveling into a far country, who called his own servants, and delivered unto them his goods. And unto one he gave five talents, to another two, and to another one; to every man according to his several ability; and straightway took his journey." (Matt. 25: 14, 15.) The facts here to be emphasized are that in the distribution of his goods the master or lord did not give to each the same number of talents to handle, but to each one according to his ability to manage whatever should be intrusted to him. Furthermore, upon the return of this lord, when he reckoned with his servants, he dealt with them upon the principle of capacity for service. In the case before us is a clear instance of one (the man who failed or refused to handle the one talent) who shifted the responsibility placed upon him to the shoulders of others. If the interests of his lord's estate were to be increased, it would be done by his fellow servants without his aid or assistance. Had he been left free by his master, on his return, no doubt, this indolent servant would have rejoiced in the labors of his fellow servants over the increase of his lord's estate. But this is exactly what the Scriptures forbid; for we are told to "let every man prove [try, or test] his own work, and then shall he have rejoicing in himself alone, and not in another." Mark you, he is to prove his own work; but if he does no work, how can he prove it? Suppose this test were put to the average church, how many of the members could point to personal work with a feeling of rejoicing? Just at this point let me refer to a statement by W. E. Brandenburg in the Christian Standard of June 4:

The average meeting in a well-ordered and reasonably active church ought to increase the membership somewhere from twenty to thirty per cent. This means that we have one new member to each three to five of those older in membership. However, in the average church, so called, we know that less than fifty per cent of the enrolled membership is really active. We know, also, that not more than forty per cent would be enlisted actively in the average evangelistic meeting. We know, further, that not more than twenty-five per cent would continue to have any special interest after the meeting closes. So that the number to whom the minister and church must look as a conservation force after the meeting in many churches-I dare say, in most churches-would not exceed the number who are to be conserved.

Again, many of those who have felt the thrill of the evangelistic appeal, and who are first to see the need of conserving the results, are not among the church's regular and more efficient workers. Consequently, while seeing the need and being willing to do, yet they know not how or what to do. They remind one, many times, of those who first crowd into a home where death has occurred. They think something ought to be done. But they what nor how to do it. Where there is one who will see the dozen things to be done, and go quietly to the doing of them, there are a dozen who will sit silent as wax figures, making the situation worse instead of better. brethren, the members of a family would not act worse toward a newly born babe, if they should refuse to have anything to do with him until they were formally introduced to him, than I have seen members of the church act toward new converts.

The foregoing refers especially to conserving the results of a protracted effort in evangelistic meetings with churches, but the principles involved cover every phase of Christian work and service. Whatever meetings of the church-Sunday-evening services, prayer meetings, or business meetings of the church-should fall equally upon all the members of the church, and each one to the extent of his or her ability should feel a personal responsibility in the matter. The success of the church in every community should depend upon the activity and personal work and service of all its members, and not upon a few, as is the case everywhere. There are many in every church who rarely, if ever, attend either the Sunday-night services or the prayer meetings, that would not desire these services discontinued. What is this but shifting responsibility? Are these church members bearing their own burdens in keeping up the interests of the church and in the effort to save souls? There are many other duties concerning which the same inattention obtains. The financial obligations of the church are not evenly distributed as the Scriptures require. On this point the apostle says: "For I mean not that other men be eased, and ye burdened: but by an equality," etc. (2 Cor. 8: 13, 14.) Visiting the sick, comforting the distressed, and looking after "the stranger within the gates" are all duties which belong to every member of the church according to ability. To know that some one else has performed a duty which lies upon my shoulders should cause me to reflect most seriously. All the duties of the Christian life are simply the means of divine grace for our salvation in heaven; and when we refuse or neglect to perform them the best we can, we are turning away from the grace of God. Hence, each one should be exceedingly careful to neglect no opportunity to render service to God even in the smallest things, for "duty done is heaven won." If I shirk my responsibility, there will be no rejoicing upon my part in the judgment as I behold my fellow servants bending beneath their burdens with mine added. I may seek to be care-free and substitute the pleasures of life for the toil and labor in the vineyard of the Lord, but in the end there will be no one to say: "Well done, thou good and faithful servant: enter thou into the joys of thy Lord." Let my song be: "Work, for the night is coming, when man's work is done."

In creation God shows us his hand, but in redemption he gives us his heart.—Exchange.

The Meeting at Corinth, Miss.

BY JOHN E. DUNN.

The disciples of Christ in Corinth are divided into two congregations. One is known by the name "Waldron Street Christian Church;" the other, "Foot Street church of Christ." Several years ago they were a united people, but instrumental music was forced into the worship and societies to do church work were adopted over the protest of a part of the membership. The result was division. Last October I was invited by the Foot Street congregation to do the preaching in a protracted meeting. Many of the Waldron Street Church attended and manifested much interest in the preaching. I candidly discussed the music and society questions. After the meeting the Waldron Street Church proposed that the two congregations unite. They have met together a number of times. Brother Freed has preached to them. They have talked over their differences, and there is a strong desire on the part of a considerable number of Waldron Street to give up societies and instrumental music and come together on the Bible, and the Bible only, as the guide to all worship and work. I was called back for the first half of June in another meeting. Both congregations cooperated together in the meeting. The meetings were held in one house during the daylight and in the other at night. Brother Veteto led the song service. The audiences were large. The whole city became interested in the meetings. I delivered sermons on "The Underlying Principle of Acceptable Obedience," "Unity in Christ," "How Can We Unite?" and "Why We Do Not Use Instrumental Music in Our Worship." I also delivered a sermon on "The Unity and Success of the Jerusalem Church." This preaching was plain, pointed, and in the spirit of kindness and love. We cannot tell what the outcome will be. All deplore the division except a very few who love the ways of the world. If the two congregations would unite with the New Testament as their only rule of faith, teaching, and practice, they would be happier, please God, and accomplish a far greater amount of good in the world. The principles for which those stand who adhere to New Testament teaching in all work, worship. and service as churches of Christ were put before the people of Corinth in this meeting. People of all denominations and no denomination manifested much interest in these meetings. The daily paper featured the meetings every day on the front page. The brethren felt that through my preaching they did a fine piece of work, and with grateful hearts they leave the results to the overruling providence of God, still praying for the unity of the faith in the bond of peace. Four were baptized and one placed membership with those who aim to be guided by "what is written" in all things.

Work at Albany and Huntsville, Ala.

BY T. B. THOMPSON,

I have just had the pleasure of spending between Sundays with the church at Albany, Ala., where Brother J. Pettey Ezell labors in word and doctrine. I spoke five nights to large and enthusiastic audiences under the largest and best-equipped tent I have ever seen pitched by our brethren at any place. I delivered four discourses against materialism-"Life," "Death," "Rich Man and Lazarus," and "The Damnation of Hell." I found Brother Ezell to be held in the highest esteem by the church and all who know him. He, with the cooperation of the church, has accomplished great things indeed during the six years he has labored there. I found that if a visiting preacher would stand in the good graces of the church at Albany, he had better say something nice about their preacher. They show their appreciation for the visiting preacher and also tell him how they appreciate their local preacher. This is as it should be, and any congregation is to be commended that stands solidly behind the man who is rendering such valuable service as Brother Ezell is there. The congregation as a whole seems to be well informed, and there are several who are able to go to mission points and conduct services, even hold meetings if necessary. A Brother Kirby (photographer) is giving his services to a mission at Tanner, where a nice congregation is being built up. This Albany church has been parent to the churches at Athens, Hartsell. and other places, in all of which other churches would do well to catch the zeal and vision of real service to the cause which this church possesses. They have reduced their theory to practice. It was my pleasure to speak to as many as seven gospel preachers, including two "digressives." Our audiences ranged from about three hundred to about six hundred. We-wife, baby, and I-made our home with Brother Ezell and family, a treat which we will not soon forget. Any preacher can count himself most fortunate who has opportunity to visit Brother Ezell and the Albany church.

Next Lord's day (June 19) ends my present stay with the church in Huntsville. The Lord willing, I have agreed to return here the first of October for one year, at which time we expect to adopt a program of real earnest work, to the end that we may see what can be accomplished. It is not our personal choice to leave Florida even for a time, but it seems to be the Lord's leading, to which we will submit. If the work builds up here and some other good worker can be secured for this place, we may return to Florida after a year's work here. The will of the Lord be done. My wife and baby will return to Florida next week, and I will go into Kentucky and Tennessee for seven meetings as follows: Allen's Chapel, near Cumberland City, Tenn.; Oakwood, near Clarksville, Tenn.; Friendship, near Murray, Ky.: Calvert City, Ky.: Little Rock Church, near Lyle, Tenn.: Bradford, Tenn.: Chestnut Grove Church, near Viola, Tenn. After this I expect to make a trip to Florida to look after some business interests, then, the Lord willing, return to Huntsville the first of October. We are very much in love with the church in Huntsville, and have every right to believe that with the right kind of endeavor upon the part of us all much good will be accomplished for the Lord. There are some splendid spirits here whose coöperation we are assured of, and upon whose shoulders the work will rest in the main.

Work at El Paso, Texas.

BY W. A. SCHULTZ.

The church of Christ here purchased a tent and folding chairs to seat it. We pitched it on Government Hill, an addition of El Paso. I preached there three weeks. There were three that heard, believed, and were baptized, a few were restored, and much good was accomplished in putting the church to work in missionary effort. On last Saturday (June 18) we moved our tent to Manhattan Heights, a residence addition of the city, and got out a circular advertising our meeting, and held the first service last evening. We had a large crowd, more than we could seat. It is our intention to continue at this point for at least three weeks, and will then move to some other point in the city and centinue our open-air evangelistic work until cold weather drives us in. El Paso is a hard field. On yesterday the Roman Catholics had the celebration of Corpus Christi, and this morning's paper states that there were fifty thousand Catholics in the parade. Roman Catholicism is a heathen cult and a political power that teaches the basest idolatry and resorts to all sorts of dirty trickery in politics. Besides Catholicism, we have the various Protestant sects in El Paso. Then the Mormons, Millennial Dawnists, Christian Scientists, "Holy Rollers," etc, are all represented here. Then unbelievers of all classes and hinds in vast numbers out-and-out sinners. But we have some of the real "salt of the earth" in El Paso.

BY WILL J CHILDIM

This subject has been one of much discussion. That the division of sentiment causing this discussion is contrary to the teaching of Christ and his anostles is without question. In John 17 our Savior prayed that his children might be one, as he and God are one; and he gave as his reason for desiring this unity, that the world might believe that God had sent him, Many are those to-day who do not believe in Christ because of divisions in the religious world. The unity for which our Savior prayed consists of speaking (teaching) the same thing and being perfectly joined together. (1 Cor. 1: 10-12.) He who claims that we cannot see things alike, and hence cannot speak the same thing, is charging the Lord with praying for, and commanding, an impossibility.

If we are willing to let the word of God be our rule in deciding matters of controversy, and when God speaks let that be our decision, I am sure that there need be no question as to the action of baptism, or as to anything else that the Lord has required of us to do

In studying any Bible subject, in order to know or learn anything concerning it, we must turn to that part of the Bible that treats on that particular matter.

In learning God's will on the action of baptism, we will have to omit the entire Old Testament, as baptism is nowhere mentioned therein, the first mention being in Matt. 3. Here we find John the Baptist baptizing in the river Jordan. When Jesus was baptized, he "went up straightway out of the water." In John 3 we find that John was baptizing in Ænon, "because there was much water." In Acts 8: 28-38. Philip and the eunuch came to the water, "and they went down both into the water," the baptizing took place while they were in the water, and then they came "up out of the water." With all these mentioned, we still have no positive proof as to how haptism was performed; but enough, it seems, to disprove that it was either by sprinkling or pouring. Now, have we any means of knowing what act was performed while these persons were in the water? In Rom, 6: 1-6 the apostle tells us that "we are buried with him by baptism into death," and that we are "planted together in the likeness of his [Christ's] death." In Col. 2: 12 he says: "Buried with him in baptism, wherein also ye are risen with him through the faith of the operation of God, who hath raised him [Christ] from the dead." Now, summing up what we have learned, we find in Bible baptism the following: (1) water; (2) much water; (3) coming to the water; (4) going down into the water: (5) burial in baptism; (6) planted in likeness of Christ: (7) resurrected: (8) coming out of the water. There being but one baptism, could it be other than immersion, seeing that sprinkling or pouring contains only one item-viz., water, and a very small amount of it. If preachers and teachers would only read to their hearers just what is taught in the word of God, and not do as the old negro said, in giving the meaning of "exegesis"-"try to explain away the Scriptures" -there is no one who is in any way responsible who could not understand the action of baptism as taught in the Bible.

Which Road Will You Take?

"No man that warreth entangleth himself with the affairs of this life; that he may please him who hath chosen him to be a soldier." (2 Tim. 2: 4.) The "affairs of this life" seem to be the things of the world, the works of wicked men and women on earth—picture shows, politics, gambling on games, and many other things which are of the world—practiced, followed, or gotten up by the wicked for worldly gain and pleasure.

"If a man also strive for masteries, yet is he not crowned, except he strive lawfully." (Verse 5.) Under the law of the old Olympic games there were certain rules or commands to be obeyed by all who entered for a prize. Therefore, all who wished to enter to obtain a prize had to obey all of the things, or rules, embodied in the law of the race or game; if not, they were not entitled to the prize. The same principle is true in the law of Christ to all who enter the race under it for eternal life, which is the prize offered by him. The rules in the law of Christ, which all are to observe who enter the race for the prize, are: faith, repentance, confession, baptism, and obedience to all his commands unto the end of the race (death). The Holy Spirit, speaking through Paul, says this law of Christ is just and good, if a man use it lawfully. Then it is evident, and stands to reason, that one cannot use this law of Christ lawfully and at the same time not observe all of its rules, lest he fail to obtain the prize, or to be crowned; for if one is guilty of breaking one of the least of these commandments, he is guilty of all. It is to be greatly regretted that there are so many good, honest, well-meaning people claiming to be in this race, yet fail to comply with or obey all of the rules of the law by which they are to enter and run the race for the prize. There are two roads on which we can enter and run the race in this life. One is a strait and narrow road that leads to the prize (eternal life); the other is a broad road that leads to destruction. To enter the race in the strait and narrow road, one has to comply with the terms of entering (faith, repentance, confession, baptism) and live obedient to all things pertaining to or governing the race unto the end (death), to obtain the prize (eternal life). To enter the race in the broad road, one has to comply with the terms of entering (sin, and all kinds of wickedness and pleasures of the world), and live obedient to, or observe, all things pertaining to the race unto the end (death), to obtain the prize (destruction). Which road will you take?

HOW WOMEN AVOID SURGICAL OPERATIONS

Every Woman Should Give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a Trial First

Chicago, Ill .- "I was in bedwith a female trouble and inflammation and had four doctors but none of them did me any good. They all said I would have to have an oper ation. A druggist's wife told me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I took 22 bottles, never missing a dose and at the end of that time I was perfectly well. I have never had occasion to take it again as I have been so well. I have a six room flat and do all my work. My two sisters are taking the Compound upon my recommendation and you may publish my letter. It is the gospel truth and I will write to any one who wants a personal letter."—Mrs. E. H. HAYDOCK, 6824 St. Law-rence Ave., Chicago, Ill.

A Vermont woman adds her testimony to the long line of those fortunate women who have been restored to health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, after it had been decided an operation was necessary:

Burlington, Vt.—'' I suffered with female trouble, and had a number of doctors who said that I would never be any better until I had an operation. I was so bad I could hardly walk across the floor and could not do a thing. My sister-in-law induced me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and it certainly has helped me wonderfully. I keep house and do my work and have a small child. I have recommended Vegetable Compound to a number of my friends and you may publish my testimonial."—Mrs. H.R. SHARON, Apple Tree Point Farm, Burlington, Vt.

In hospitals are many women who are there for surgical operations, and there is nothing a woman dreads more than the thought of an operation, and the long weary months of recovery and restoration to strength if it is successful.

It is very true that female troubles may through neglect reach a stage where an operation is the only resource, but most of the commoner ailments of women are not the surgical ones; they are not caused by serious displacements, tumors or growths, although the symptoms may appear the same. When disturbing ailments first appear take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to relieve the present distress and prevent more serious troubles. In fact, many letters have been received from women who have been restored to health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound after operations have been advised by attending physicians.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Private Text-Book upon "Ailments Peculiar to Women" will be sent to you free upon request. Write to The Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Massachusetts. This book contains valuable information.

The philosopher, being asked in his old age why he did not give over his practice and take his ease, answered: "When a man is to run a race of forty furlongs, would you have him sit down at the nine-and-thirtieth, and so lose the prize? We do not keep a good fire all day and let it go out in the evening when it is colder; but then rather lay on more fuel, that wemay go warm to bed."

FIELD REPORTS

Berlin, Ga., June 13.—G. E. Claus, of Valdosta, was with us recently in a short meeting, preaching on the nights of June 10 and 11, also on Sunday morning and afternoon following. He baptized two young ladies before the afternoon service. We began the Lord's-day worship, which we mean to keep up. This is the second congregation in the county.—Adair P. Chapman.

Fort Smith, Ark., June 16.—Our meeting closed Tuesday night with eleven baptisms and four taking membership—fifteen in all. It was the greatest meeting in the history of Park Hill Church. Brother Henley is certainly a power, and we all love and appreciate him very much. I have sung for him in three meetings, and it seems to me that he keeps improving. May God ever bless him in his every effort for good. This leaves me in Sedalia, Mo., in a tent meeting. Brother R. H. Lanier, of Texas, is singing for me. This is a destitute field, and we are here trying to assist Brother S. W. Bell to permanently establish the cause in this city. We are having a very good hearing. Pray for us. May God bless the faithful.—Will W. Slater.

Decherd, Tenn., June 22.—I have just closed a good meeting at Algood. Ten persons made the good confession and were baptized, a Methodist and a Presbyterian being among the number. The house was crowded at every service to the close of the meeting. This is the home of Brother E. G. Collins. He is doing a good work here. Every one seems to like him. I made my home with Brother and Sister Draper. They certainly cared for me while there. They are both good, live church workers. Among other good church workers are Brother and Sister Swallows. They never tire. Brother Kuykendall is also a faithful old soldier of the cross, being the oldest member of the congregation. I had some preaching brethren with me—Brethren Talley and Pendegrass. They are both good men. I go next to Bardwell, Ky.—R. E. L. Taylor.

Buffalo, W. Va., Box 81, June 16.—Since last report we have had one more addition here by relation. Thus it may be seen that we are still growing. Our meetings are doing fine, all things properly considered. If we had that two - hundred - and - twenty four-dollar lumber note paid, it would enable us to do more mission work in this section, and there is so much of it to do. It will be remembered that in order to get a house of worship last fall, three of us—all poor men—were obliged to become responsible for that amount; and as we have exhausted our resources in building, we are obliged to ask the brethren to help out on this. Please do so now, as we are tired of asking for help on the house. We want to be helping others, including our loyal papers. Please do send me your offering now, and please do send some additional help to enable me to secure effective treatment for my trouble. I am in bad condition physically. Address me at Buffalo, W. Va., Box 81.—F. P. Fonner.

Enterprise, Ala., June 21.—Brother Hamiter and I have just closed a meeting at Christian Home. We will begin a meeting at Keyton, three miles from Enterprise, to-night, to run a week. We are trying to get the churches in a working condition in South Alabama. We expect to have a meeting of preachers and elders to put the work on a more solid basis. The cause has been neglected here, and preachers are needed to move here and live and labor among these people. They will support a young married man well. They want one who is willing to work every day in the week, preaching and visiting the people. He must be of good report among the brethren where he comes from. These are good people. They have been imposed upon by tramp preachers. All such preachers will be turned down hereafter. Brother Hamiter and I will hold several meetings together. We hope to be able to do much good in this way. Why cannot some of the strong churches send a good man into this field and support him for one year? You can do it,

R. K. MORGAN, Principal Morgan School, Petersburg, Tenn.

Your Greatest Problem—That Boy of Yours

What kind of a man will he be ten, twenty, thirty years from now? You know, every parent knows, that it depends entirely upon the training he is getting right now, his associations, his ideals, his inspirations.

Mr. Robert K. Morgan, Principal of the Morgan School, Petersburg, Tenn., has been training boys for twenty-five years. He wants your boy. He recognizes in him one of the men who may some day manage big affairs, and he wants to train him for that end. His school has been built and equipped, and his instructors chosen with the first and only consideration of giving the boy the mental and physical training, the associations, with clean, highminded men, the ideals of character, the inspirations to ambition, which the world expects. Robert K. Morgan is a Christian gentleman of strong, wholesome, inspiring personality, and his school is the material projection of that character. Write Mr. L. I. Mills, Secretary Morgan School, Petersburg, Tenn., to-day, and let him send you a catalogue and tell you what this school can do for your boy.

and I assure you that the work is needed. Many of the towns and several districts are destitute of the gospel. Who will come to the rescue of these people? We are going to do our part, by the help of the Lord. Will you pray for us? Will you send words of encouragement?—A. S. Reynolds.

Warren, O., June 14 .- I am at this place trying to assist two good breth-ren-Brethren O. W. Allen and O. C. Julian-in an effort to sow the good seed of the kingdom and establish primitive Christianity in this city, a city of something like forty thousand inhabitants. Warren is the county seat of Trumbull County, and is a part of "all the world" in which the gospel is to be preached. But it seems as though many of the loyal (?) congregations seem to think that sinners can get along all right without the gospel—that is, their actions indicate that they think that the world does not need the gospel, as they are not only not trying to have it preached, but some even try to hinder the preaching of the gospel to the people. Our meeting here is being held in the auditorium of the McKinley School Building, on Elm Street—a nice room, well lighted and seated. But we have to pay electric-light bills and two dollars a night to the janitor; so that the janitor will go away better paid than the preacher, all because con-gregations that are able will not do their duty in the way of supporting the gospel in places like this. Any congregation that may desire to have fellowship in the work here can send its offerings to Brother O. C. Julian, House No. 143, Perkins Road, Warren Ohio. I desire to acknowledge the receipt of the following contributions and not only in my work, but in my affliction: Brother W. Squires, $5; Sister Muirhead, $5. They are both of Ohio and noble disciples of the one Lord. Any one knowing of any other loyal disciples of Christ in or near Warren will please report the names to Brother O. C. Julian.—A. A. Bun-

20.-Our Texas, June meeting with Brother F. B. Shepherd, of Amarillo, closed last night, after two weeks, with the finest interest I have yet seen in Denton. The meeting began on June 5 and continued over three Sundays. The singing was taken care of by home forces, and it is believed we have not had better singing than in this meeting. The meeting was enthusiastic from the start. The members were ready and did not need to be worked up to get them into action. They sang, they prayed, they worked and smiled. However, the enthusiasm was heightened by the live, wide-awake, and even vigorous manner in which Brother Shepherd presented the gospel story. It is quite certain that the church has not had a preacher whose teaching was stronger and better and more calculated to stir and stick. This man does not play to the gallery, and yet he is possessed of a courteous and polite man-He does not abuse people, and still he delivers the teaching in such a powerful manner that it is bound to drive conviction. He does not even hint at compromise. He does not seem to know the use of it. Brother Shepherd is a man of whom the brotherhood should be proud. He is an able teacher, is bold and fearless, and is full of zeal for the cause. In addition to this, he has impressed us as a man of pure life and one who can be trusted. May God bless him in his work, and may his people appreciate him and stand by him in forwarding the Master's work, for which he pleads in such a vigorous manner. Twenty-six were baptized, two were restored, and there were nine by membership, thus making thirty-seven in all. But this is not all the good by any means. The church is greatly strengthened and built up as a result of the meeting. This was shown in the fact that the contributions were the largest ever known here, there being near four hundred dollars placed in as freewill offerings for the three Sundays. The writer continues with the work according to arrangements already made, and there are plans for excellent work for the summer. We request the prayers of God's people everywhere that the Lord's work may continue to prosper to his glory. Brother McCurry, one of our elders, will start a meeting at Bolivar next Sunday morning, and the writer will join him after Sunday. This is what we intend to be the beginning of a number of meetings to be held by the church around Denton this summer.—R. D. Smith.

DELONG RICE

"ALF and BOB TAYLOR, with their eloquence, their fiddles, and their fox hounds, have wrought for themselves a niche of eternal melody in the hearts of their country."

So states the author of this little book, which we present as the best product of the pen of DeLong Rice. Into one hour of reading he has gathered the strange and romantic story of the two most wonderful political campaigns of Tennessee—the thrilling tale of the happy comradeship and the lifelong rivalry of the two famous brothers—a disclosure of the remarkable and heretofore unpublished incidents that attended the political division of the Taylor family—the wonder of "The War of the Roses" that attracted the attention of the world—and the truth about "OLD LIMBER." the peerless and now immortal fox hound that played the leading role of sentiment in the political campaign of last fall, from the Mississippi River to the Unaka Mountains.

With a "Cast of Characters extending from a President of the United States to a fox hound," the story touches a wide range of human sentiment; and through it all is the aroma of crackling camp fires and the music of the chase. Good Start at Columbus, Miss. BY D. N. BARNETT.

Visiting the church here, I find that Brethren Cayce and Harding have started a good work. The members seem very earnest and determined to stand steadfast for primitive Christianity. They have purchased a good, well-located brick building from the Cumberland Presbyterians for twentyone hundred and thirty-seven dollars and fifty cents. One brother closed the trade with one hundred dollars, his savings. Their first note will be due in about thirty days. Most of their thirty-one members are women and young people. Eight male members to shoulder the debt. Five of these are on salaries of two thousand dollars and less; one, between three and five thousand dollars; two farmers, and one claims he is heavi'v involved. These families have saved no money. Two hundred and seventy odd dollars is promised on first note, and some will have to borrow what they have promised. With help on first payment, they think they can make it all right; and help they must have, for this place has ten thousand five hundred inhabitants, with no congregations near it. This city should become a Corinth to sound out the gospel through Mississippi and Alabama. I hear business men say the lot is worth the money. I make this appeal because I believe the members are worthy of help and will sacrifice and put forth an earnest effort to meet their obligations. Mississippi is indeed a mission field for New Testament Christianity. We cannot afford to neglect it any longer. It is a sin to start a work and fail to get behind it until it can stand alone, So please send your donations to Brother B. E. Seal, Box 103, Columbus, Miss. I hear that some are saying the brethren will never pay for the building; but I hope and pray that we may show the world that some good, noble Christians are behind them, determined that apostolic Christianity shall succeed in Mississippi.

The Church at Pine Bluff, Ark.

BY V. M. ROREX.

The church at Pine Bluff, Ark., is now located in their new building, corner Twentieth and Elm Streets. This is the fruit of the labor of a small band of loyal disciples which began meeting in the homes of members in March, 1914. At that time there were three members of the church who began meeting on Lord's day. Since that time we have met in homes, in the courthouse, and in a hall. In 1919 we bought a lot and paid cash for it. About two months ago we put up a house, and have it in such a condition that it can be used; however, it is not completed, as we did not have enough money to complete it, and we are about two hundred dollars in debt to the contractor for the work so far done on it. We have invested now in the property nearly two thousand dollars. Most of this money has been contributed by the members locally, although we have received some help from the outside. There are now about fourteen members of the congregation here; and since we are in our own house of worship, we will have a better chance to grow. We need to spend one thousand dollars more on the house to complete it: and if there are any liberal Christians that read this, I will say that you could render us a great service and your money would be well spent if you would have fellowship with us in this work. The church at Pearl and Bryan Streets, Dallas, Texas, kindly sent Brother A. O. Colley to hold a two-weeks' meeting for us when our house was ready to be occupied, for which we express our thanks. Two were added to the church by his preaching. Brother J. L. Pummill, of the same congregation, was also an invaluable aid to us in this meeting. The following have sent contributions: Mrs. D. G. Smith's Sundayschool class and the church of Christ, Stevenson, Ala.; J. W. Fincher, Fort Towson, Okla.; C. G. Moody, Idabel, Okla.; Mrs. W. L. Jones, Mrs. J. Beasley, Mrs. Ida Hale, and the church of Christ, Waldo, Ark.; Warren Starnes, Dallas, Texas; S. T. Garner and Fred Hollis, Camden, Ark. We will gladly welcome visiting and traveling brethren who may be here on Lord's days. Our house of worship is located in a good residence portion of the city. To reach it, take Cherry Street car to Twentieth Avenue and go two blocks east. If you can help us, send contributions to V. M. Rorex, 1701 Olive Street, Pine Bluff, Ark.

Meeting in North Carolina. BY J. D. TANT.

I closed my last meeting in North Carolina with five baptized; then went back to Statesville, where I held my first meeting, preached one time, and baptized three more. Then I went back sixty miles east to Warner's Chapel and spent one night in discussion with Brother Campbell, a good man, but who, like all anti-Sunday-school preachers, misrepre-sented most of the church of Christ by claiming that we have discarded the Bible and substituted "literature." I showed the large congregation present that literature is only human helps to better understand the Bible; that it includes all translations out of Hebrew and Greek, all Bible maps, chapters and verses, also all references, as well as song books, and that no man can oppose one without opposing all; and that literature is either spoken or written-that when Brother Campbell gets up and explains a lesson, his explanation is oral literature, and if he writes the same explanation and sends it out for people to read, it is still literature. Brother Campbell agreed that it is all right for me or Brother Elam to ask questions on the Bible and let the students answer them; but in case we should write or print our questions and let others ask them, such would be unscriptural. This seems to be the contention of all anti-Sunday-school teachers who are opposing Bible study in class form. I talked to several outsiders who told me that many members had made themselves repulsive in their community by claiming that they would rather their children would go fishing or cut wheat on Sunday than go to Sunday school. I am glad to state that out of the four metings I held in North Carolina, I educated three churches out of their anti-Sundayschool ignorance, and now the young who loafed each Sunday have gone to studying the Bible with human helps, and I look for a better Bible knowledge in North Carolina. W. L. Reeves was with me the last night, and did much good in showing the people it was no departure from the Bible to use all Bible helps we can get.

Fear Not.

Jesus repeatedly urged his little spiritual family to be not afraid. He knew the loneliness of each heart while surrounded by the barriers of the flesh; he knew our fear lest we should fail of receiving the kingdom; he knew our fear that death might end all and usher us into the great darkness. So he constantly said, "Fear not," and urged us to "let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid." He indorsed his own utterances by showing a fearlessness which excited only wonder in those who saw it, and that fearlessness took its rise in his own certainty of relationship with the God whom he knew as his Father. Everything was in his Fathers' hands, from which nothing could pluck them. Everything was ordered by his Father, and against him no one could exercise any power which was not given by his Father. The cup of bitterness was given to him by his Father; and when the last moment came, it was still: "Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit." Knowing such a God as this was the secret of his fearlessness; and, of course, as a necessary sequence, it was in his Father's house that there were many mansions.

All through his earthly life it had been, "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work," because "I and my Father are one;" and when death was vanquished and the grave emptied, he said he would "ascend unto my Father." The reality of this unique relationship, with all that it implies for those who are in him, is indorsed by the resurrection; for is he not declared to be the Son of God in power by the resurrection from the dead?—Episcopal Recorder.

Mere continuance of personality after death is only the bare framework of the Christian hope. The revelation which Christ brought is a revelation of life rather than of existence. A life lived with Christ, nurtured by him, sharing in his fullness, drawing from him its energies—that is the Christian life. It is a life which death cannot destroy, but rather sets free for its true consummation.—Selected.

BY THOMAS H. BURTON.

For the lack of finishing, our house is damaging. We owe about fifteen hundred dollars for lumber and mill work, and the ones who have been so nice and patient with us are wanting and needing their money. I have tried many times to borrow enough to pay off the debt and to finish the house, and have made a flat failure each time. This being a cotton country, it is taking about all the surplus money for the farmers to make a crop on; and, too, we are strangers, and the people have no desire to help promote something that is against their religious inclinations, especially when money is so scarce. I have begged and pleaded for this through the papers, by letters, and in person, until it seems that "this one thing I do." I have given all that I had for this work and am determined to stay with it, but it does seem that there should be one in the brotherhood who could lend us the money to at least pay off the debt. The way we have neglected finishing this house is not a disgrace to the cause we represent, but it seems to me that it is almost, if not altogether, a disgrace to the ones who represent the cause, who are able to finish the house and will not do it. How many millions of dollars are there in the brotherhood, and still we say that we are not able to have one house in a whole State! Isn't it awful to be so poor?(!) Will a man rob God?" God says to such people: "Ye are cursed with the curse: for ye rob me, even this whole nation.' (Mal. 3: 8, 9.) To rob man is an awful crime; but what must it be to rob God? Isn't it likely, if some people who love riches so well were to get to heaven, that they would want to rob God of his rainbow-circled throne, tear the beautiful pearly gates from their hinges, dig up the gold-paved streets, and take the beautiful jasper walls of the city, and store them all up for their own personal use? Do you suppose that a man who robs God in this life would appreciate a home eternally with the

One whom he has robbed? Just think what we could do if the brotherhood would put into the treasury of Jehovah that which rightfully belongs to him! Where are your treasures? Brethren, please come to our rescue and help us finish our first house in this State. Surely there are some who are able and have not contributed to the work who are anxious for the cause to be established in this place. THE CHRISTIAN STANDARD OF SUCCESS

The world's standard of success and the Christian standard are very different. In the struggle of life the prizes that worthy men seek to win are on the material plane, whereas those which the Christian sets before him are on the spiritual plane. As Paul expressed it: "They do it to obtain a corruptible crown, we an incorruptible."

One part of the work of Christ is the redemption of life from material aims and ideals. A true Christian is one whose aims and ideals are spiritual—he subordinates the material to the spiritual and is ready to suffer the loss of outward things if only he can secure spiritual gain. Nothing is more urgently needed in the present day than a clearer setting forth of the Christian conception of life's true values, and especially a clearer conception of the Christian standard of success. In our popular magazines the standard that is generally held up is the monetary one. The young people of the land are told with endless reiteration how, by the practice of industry, thrift, and self-determination, they may climb the ladder of success, and from poor boys become multimillionaires. The attainment of great wealth is set forth as the goal of human ambition and the crowning evidence of human success.

The same standard of material success is alluringly held forth by many modern religious cults, which promise to their votaries "health, happiness, and prosperity;" and, as in our Savior's day, the multitude is drawn by the prospect of the loaves and fishes.

According to Jesus, a man's true life "consistent not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth." It consists in what he is, in the spiritual treasures which he has accumulated, and in the use which he has made of his earthly possessions in ministering to the world's weal. The most successful lives are often those which have been adjudged failures; they are lives in which the paradox holds good: "As poor, yet making many rich; as having nothing, and yet possessing all things."

The price which men have to pay for worldly success is often a heavy one. Not to speak of the gnawings of conscience, there is the gradual fading out of youth's golden dreams, until life becomes stupidly prosaic, and the soul is haunted by the bitter reflection that the heavenly birthright has been bartered for a miserable mess of pottage. The loudest laugh of hell is said to be the sin of dying rich, and that is true if the attainment of riches has not led to the enlargement of manhood and the enrichment of life.

In the text quoted above we are admonished to "covet earnestly the greater gifts," and the one gift which is to be desired above all others is that of love. To win love, as Mrs. Browning has said, is to gain life's highest prize. No one who has learned to love can be altogether a failure in life. The gifts of love are greater than gifts of-gold, and will do more to increase the world's happiness than anything else one can bestow. A full, rich, satisfactory life has been well defined as consisting of three things—"something to love, something to do, and something to hope for." Whoever has these has found life's highest fulfillment.

New Bible for the Blind.

The New York Bible Society has just issued the first book of a new edition of the Bible for the Blind. This is in the new universal system of raised type for the blind, called a revised Braille Grade One and a Half, in the King James Version. The Gospel of John is the first to be issued, and other volumes are in course of preparation and will follow closely, until the whole Bible has been printed.

It will be a source of great pleasure to many of the seventy-five thousand blind people in America to have the Scriptures in the new form. This new system of raised type in Grade One and a Half, which is becoming the universal system for the blind in this country, is much simpler and easier to learn than any of the older systems. It has only forty-four contractions, while Grade Two has one hundred and seventy-seven. This has prevented many from learning to read. The new type, which can be easily learned, is becoming the one system for general use. The New York Bible Society issues this at a low price and gives away large numbers of books to those who cannot afford to buy them. It is enabled to do this because of generous contributions, and it is suggested that many may be glad to provide free books, or the entire Bible, for one or more blind persons unable to buy.

A Blind Bible is different from one that people who can see are accustomed to, not only in raised type, but in the fact that much larger books are necessary. The entire Bible consists of from eight to fifty-eight volumes, twelve by thirteen inches in size, and the type is chiefly dots and signs embossed on a page so that the fingers resting upon them detect the letter or word represented. Editions of the Bible for the blind cost from twenty-five to seventy-seven dollars, according to the kind of type. Necessarily, in giving a Bible or portion of it to a blind person, that style must be furnished which the person can read.—Homiletic Review.

When Jesus was here on earth, he was particularly kind and helpful to the blind. This was in accord with prophecy: "He hath sent me to proclaim release to the captives, and receiving of sight to the blind." We are not surprised to read that "to many that were blind he gave sight." In giving instructions about feasts, he said: "When thou makest a feast, call the blind." I do not know of a more Christlike action than to perform a thoughtful deed or speak a kind word to the blind. There are none who appreciate kindness so much as this class of people. Yet we pass them nearly every day in our large cities unheeded. The New York Bible Society deserves commendation for its notable achievement.

Snobbery.

Some one has said: "Good Lord, deliver us from the snob." And, perhaps, this is a prayer which, though unexpressed, is in the majority of hearts. Yet the snob is ever with us—we see him on the street, in the public dining room, on the train, in the place of business, and sometimes at church.

For some reason, in his own imagination, the snob regards himself superior to most of his fellow creatures; nor does he hesitate to parade the self-conceit which makes him ridiculous in the estimation of well-balanced people. Perhaps it is not charitable upon their part; nevertheless, they call him a "highbrow"—and we are not inclined to censure them.

The snob in general society is to be deplored, but the snob in religious circles is the most reprehensible creature on earth—he wears the Christian cloak, but violates the greatest of all Christian graces, humility. It is doubtful if one could read a single chapter in the New Testament without running across something that rebukes snobbery.—Christian Standard.

One of the saddest things about the snob is that he does not know how poor and weak and miserable and blind he is in the sight of God, and how ridiculous he appears to sensible people. Everybody knows he is a snob, but he does not know it himself. On the other hand, his whole demeanor seems to say: "I thank thee Lord, that I am not as other men are." What a blessing it would have been to that self-righteous Pharisee if he had been like his neighbor in recognition of his littleness! The preacher-snob is the worst of the ilk. He is the high and mighty personage who believes that his logic is invincible and his ipse dixit settles the discussion. Like Diotrephes, he would love to have the preëminence. He would become the self-constituted "cock of the walk." The number of snobs in the world would make a great company. Sometimes I wish that they might be deported to some island and live entirely to themselves. Enjoying each other's talk would be about the worst punishment that might be inflicted. Perhaps it would be the best and quickest cure for their bumps of pride and self-conceit. But where on earth would you find an island big enough to contain them?

The Composed Mind.

This art of resting the mind and the power of dismissing from it all care and worry is probably one of the secrets of energy in our great men. It is generally said that Edison, the inventor, finds four hours' sleep sufficient for his needs and that he works for eighteen hours. If that is the case, I can conceive him as a man whose mind, in spite of the nature of his work, has the power of banishing all the problems and difficulties of the day. This, I understand, was also one of the secrets of the energy of Gladstone, and probably also of many other great men who have the power to free their minds entirely from the business of the day in dreamless sleep. Look into the face of Napoleon, and besides the cruelty there you will see that perfect composure and calm which stamps him as a man of great reserve power.—J. A. Hadfield, in The Spirit.

It is an easy thing to say to another, "Be composed, keep quiet, don't worry;" but sometimes it seems almost impossible to be composed. Edison may have worked out some plan whereby he can sleep as he works with clockwork precision; Gladstone may have learned how to free his mind from the business of the day; and even the great Napoleon may have practiced calmness along with his cruelty; but how can we lesser mortals learn the art of self-mastery? We must find our greatest help in learning to imitate the greatest of all examples, the Lord Jesus Christ. We should not only study what he taught on the subject of anxiety, but we should note especially how he practiced what he preached. "When he was reviled, [he] reviled not again." With the dark shadow of the cross looming across his pathway, he could attend to the Passover, institute the Lord's Supper, and engage in quiet, serious conversation with his disciples. Sleep does not always indicate perfect composure. Convicted criminals are sometimes the hardest sleepers. There may be the sleep of indifference and neglect. But doing God's will under the most unfavorable circumstances does indicate the true composure of life that we need. Christ alone can give us the blessing. "Peace I leave with you; my peace I give unto you: not as the world giveth, give I unto you."

The spiritual leadership of the church is still in the hands of Jesus. The right hand of God is the place of authority and power. From that exalted throne our Lord controls the destinies of his saints upon earth. His great designs are spread upon the man of the ages and his purposes are slowly but surely coming to a perfect fruition. From the excellent glory he watches the fight between right and wrong, and sends his angel messengers to help in the fight. God has committed judgment to him, and we are fast hastening to the time when from his throne he shall offer the final judgment upon the living and upon the dead. If we love him, we need not fear; for he is our Comrade in life, death, and the great hereafter.—C. E. Coles.

"From House to House." (Acts 20: 20.) BY S. P. PITTMAN.

There was a time in the history of the medieval church when very little stress was laid upon public preaching. Practical Christianity was based upon superstition, and public worship was almost totally ritualistic. Only occasionally pious preachers with fiery eloquence stirred men's souls with public proclamation and strong denunciation. Savonarola of Florence was a noted example of such extraordinary characters.

Later on the Christian world swung to the other extreme, and undue stress was laid on pulpit preaching. The errors incident to this extreme are obvious. The pulpit affords an opportunity for the professional preacher to ply his trade and to exploit his powers of rhetoric and oratory. It creates the impression, too, that the chief feature of the worship is to listen to the sermon. This latter idea is so strongly intrenched that attendance at services on the first day of the week is gauged by the presence or absence of the "minister," or by the popularity or unpopularity of the one who occupies the pulpit.

Public speaking is undoubtedly an important factor in evangelizing and Christianizing the world. At the inauguration of the church, a powerful sermon, preached by the inspired chest and auspicious opening, indeed. Subsequently there were public speeches made by the same apostle at Solomon's porch, and by the apostle Paul at Antioch, on the Hill of Mars, and on the castle stairs. Thousands during the apostolic age were led to obedience, and hundreds of thousands since, by public preaching. All this is admitted.

But neither the church nor the preacher should rely entirely upon pulpit preaching as a means of getting the gospel before the public. The Ethiopian eunuch learned the truth of the gospel through private preaching. A little group had gathered in a semi-public service when Lydia heard the word. It was in the private home of Cornelius that the Gentile was introduced to Christianity. Had they depended upon public preaching, probably neither the eunuch nor Lydia nor Cornelius would have known the joys of being a Christian.

ADVANTAGES OF PRIVATE PREACHING.

One of the cardinal principles of the religion of Christ is its universality. The invitation is extended to all. It is not an exclusive system. The alien must not be permitted to say: "It is for the public, I know, but not for me especially." When some one in love carries the "good news" into his home, he can say: "It is for me; Christ died for me; I know it now."

Again, personal contact in the home is good for both preacher and hearer. It is calculated to impress the idea of equality. Paul could never have become "all things to all men" had he not gone into the homes of men. It was his claim that at Ephesus he had taught them "publicly and from house to house." One of the greatest needs of the preacher, after purity of character and zeal for the cause of truth, is his adaptability. This can best be fostered by "house-to-house" work.

A third advantage, and one I wish to stress in this article, is that any Christian, man or woman, can do this kind of work. Priscilla as well as Aquila could and did teach Apollos "the way of the Lord more perfectly." With this in view, no sister should complain that there is nothing that she can do for the Master.

SISTER ANNIE TUGGLE.

The real object of this article is to get before the brotherhood the commendable work undertaken by our colored sister, Arnie Tuggle. Those who know this sister know her as a devoted member of the church of Christ, with a burning desire to accomplish something for the cause of her Master among her own people. It is useless a emphasize to Christian readers the importance of carrying the gospel to the negro race. It is equally unnecessary to sa, that we have sadly neglected that race—a race susceptible to correct impressions of truth and righteousness when presented in a simple, sincere manner.

It is evident, too, that one of their own color and kin can come nearer reaching them with the gospel. It is Sister Tuggle's aim to go "from house to house" among the colored people of Nashville, teaching lessons of morality and spirituality, and, as opportunity presents itself, dropping suggestions as to better domestic methods and better sanitary conditions.

She has been in Walden University-Preparatory Department-and desires to resume her studies in the fall. She is pursuing her literary studies, not to educate herself above or away from her people, but better to equip herself for the work of elevating and Christianizing them. This is a noble aim, and one that should appeal to every white reader. To those who love the cause, who see the need of more personal work, and who realize that the colored people have been neglected, I will say that a little contribution from each one will enable her to pursue her studies further and will sustain her in her present field of labor. Send all contributions to Annie C. Tuggle, 1039 Twentyfirst Avenue, North, Nashville, Tenn., and I feel sure they will be received with gratitude and acknowledged, and you will be more than repaid in the consciousness of a duty performed.

The Flood-Its Extent.

BY H. LEO BOLES.

There has been much trouble and confusion in the minds of many as to the extent of the Flood. Was it universal or limited? Was it universal with respect to man and partial with respect to the surface of the earth? Since man occupied only a small area at that time, why should the Flood be universal with respect to the surface of the earth? From whence came all the water, if it was universal with respect to the earth? Did our earth swing in space "like a single drop of dew in midheaven?" If the Flood was universal with respect to the surface of the earth, where is the water now? Were all that breathed destroyed? Were the fish and sea animals drowned in the Flood? How could the Flood drown fish? How did Noah catch all species of Were only the species of animals that were animals? found in the localities inhabited by man preserved in the ark? How could the ark with its given dimensions hold all species of animals? What was the freight weight of the ark?

These and many other questions have been asked; some of them to cast doubt upon the Bible account of the Flood; others are asked in ignorance of the Bible narrative. The account found in Genesis states that "both man, and beast, and creeping things, and birds of the heavens," were to be destroyed. Again, that "all flesh had corrupted their way upon the earth:" and again: "The end of all flesh is come before me; for the earth is filled with violence through them; and, behold, I will destroy them with the earth." Noah was told: "Behold, I do bring the flood of waters upon the earth, to destroy all flesh, wherein is the breath of life, from under heaven; everything that is in the earth shall die." Again, he was commanded to bring into the ark "of every living thing of all flesh, two of every sort shalt thou bring into the ark, to keep them alive with thee; they shall be male and female. Of the birds after their kind, and of the cattle after their kind, of every creeping thing of the ground after its kind, two of every sort shall come unto thee, to keep them alive." (Gen. 6: 19, 20.)

This result is recorded: "All flesh died that moved upon the earth, both birds, and cattle, and beasts, and every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth, and every man: all in whose nostrils was the breath of the spirit of life, of all that was on the dry land, died. And every living thing was destroyed that was upon the face of the ground, both man, and cattle, and creeping things, and birds of the heavens; and they were destroyed from the earth." (Gen. 7: 21-23.) No one can deny that the Bible description uses universal terms-"all flesh," "all in whose nostrils was the breath of the spirit of life," "all the high mountains that were under the whole heaven were covered." These and similar expressions show the universality of the terms used. It has been claimed that these expressions are mere figures of speech. Solomon used this expression: "I have seen all the works that are done under the sun." Again, we find in Gen. 41: 54-57 that the famine was "in all lands" and over "all the face of the earth," and that " all countries came into Egypt to buy grain." Again, we find the expression that "there were dwelling at Jerusalem Jews, devout men from every nation under heaven." (Acts 2: 5.) Again, Paul uses this expression: "That your faith is proclaimed throughout the whole world." (Rom. 1: 8.) We are told that "Jerusalem, and all Judea, and all the region round about the Jordan," went out and were baptized of John in Jordan." Many other universal expressions could be cited which are to be understood in a limited sense. Frequently universal language is used to denote a large number. We use the expressions, "everybody knows" and "the whole country was aroused," but no one interprets these expressions literally; they denote a large number without expressing totality. It is claimed that the expressions used in Genesis with reference to the Flood should be understood in like manner.

We do know that whether these terms are to be used in a universal or limited sense, that the Flood accomplished the purpose of God. The Flood may have been partial to the earth, though universal in respect to man and animals. The object of the Flood was the destruction of man and all that had corrupted the earth, and the Flood was extensive enough to accomplish this destruction.

Many think that the population of the earth had not spread beyond the boundary of Western Asia. However, we have no way of ascertaining to what extent man and animals occupied the face of the earth at that time. Recent discoveries claim to have brought to light remains of prehistoric man from all over the Northern hemisphere, showing that long before the time of the Flood man had become very widely scattered on the face of the earth. If these recent discoveries are true, and man thus occupied the whole face of the earth, we must conclude that the Flood was universal with respect to the earth as well as regards man. There is every reason to believe that this catastrophe was "coëxtensive with the human population of the world."

In every branch of the human family traditions of the Flood are found: and many of these traditions bear a remarkable likeness to the account given in Genesis. These traditions, so nearly alike, can be accounted for only by the origin of all being the same. If any one cares to investigate these traditions, he may find them in the literature of the different nations. They are known as "The Egyptian tradition," "The Indian," "The Chinese," "The Greek," "The British," "The American Indian," "The Babylonian," and "The Cuneiform Tablets." All of these are deeply imbedded in the literature of these different nations. Some of these traditions cannot be traced back so very far in the literature, yet these traditions have been handed down and help to verify the Biblical account. Of course, as is to be expected, these different accounts differ very much from the Biblical Deluge; however, they help to confirm the reality of that account found in Genesis.

We are told that the windows of heaven were opened and the fountains of the great deep were broken up; that the waters above and the waters beneath came together and deluged the earth. Scientists have tried to figure out the amount of water that would be required to deluge the earth, and they claim that there is not enough water now upon the surface of the earth in all the bodies of water to cover the mountains "fifteen cubits and upward." He who makes sphere to balance on sphere in the great system of nature can make one element check and control the rage of another in the subordinate economy of our little globe. The dominion of any one element over all the others would soon prove fatal to all the others. Jehovah has the power to blend elements and balance them, producing wonderful harmony, making this earth a delightful abode for man.

BY FLAVIL HALL.

I trust it will be agreeable with the editors and readers of the Gospel Advocate for me to be given space for a few words in regard to the Kurfees-Lewis Discussion.

The jailer and his house (Acts 16) means the jailer and his family. The house of God means the family of God, and the house of God is the church of the living God. The church being the family of God, it embraces all the children of God. The church of Christ, or church of God, in any locality embraces all the baptized believers of that locality who love the truth and who are strong walk in it, as the Lord has added all such to his church. (Acts 2: 47; Mark 16: 16.) This is Brother Kurfees' position, and to it I think Brother Lewis agrees. But it seems to me it is almost impracticable to always so designate the said class of believers among the Baptists, "digressives," etc., so as to embrace them in the use of the term "church of Christ" with the local meaning.

Since "ekklesia" (from which "church" comes) means a congregation, or assembly, may not "church of Christ" be applied to a congregation of Christians who accept Christ as their Head, following the teaching of the New Testament faithfully, as set forth in Acts 2: 42; Col. 3: 16; and 1 Cor. 15: 58; 16: 1, 2, without any denominational distinctions or paraphernalia-may not "church of Christ" be applied to such a congregation without going outside to try to embrace others with the said distinctions and paraphernalia? Since the latter class fall short of the teaching of Christ in some things and go beyond it in other things, we cannot tell who among them love the truth and who try to walk in it-that is, those who are not presumptuous and willful. I heard the lamented David Lipscomb say he was asked if there were not whole congregations of Christians among the Baptists in the favor of God. He said he had to answer that he did not know; that they did not practice all of the apostles' teaching and in various things they added to the said teaching; and as to whether there were some congregations that were not willful and presumptuous in such teaching he did not know; that there were some individuals among them who were not willful and presumptuous he doubted not, but he could not distinguish these from others as long as they continued with those who are something else than Christians following faithfully the Lord's teaching. Presumption disqualified them for membership in the church of God, whereas there was mercy and pardon to a degree for errors not committed in a presumptuous way, as to what degree Jehovah only knew. That this view is correct, I have not a doubt; and, with this before us. I wish to illustrate as follows:

I knew a family by the name of "Brooker," and for several weeks there were members thereof that I know nothing of, did not know of them as members of the family. Now, when I spoke of the Brooker family, I do not think the expression excluded those I did not know about, and yet I meant only those whom I knew. Did I do any violence to the Brooker family in my use of the expression? Likewise, does one do violence to the oracles of God or to the family of God in using the term "church of Christ," in which he means only a faithful congregation such as depicted above, who are manifestly subject to the law of Christ, which makes a congregation of believers manifestly a church (congregation) of Christ?

We often speak and write about "the disciples," meaning those who are disciples of Christ without denominational distinction and paraphernalia. Is there any violence done to the living oracles in this, though we believe there are disciples among those who are something religiously besides what the New Testament teaches?

It seems to me that such considerations as these should reduce the aforementioned controversy to a nonentity.

St. Catherines June Meeting.

BY O. E. TALLMAN.

The leaders of the church at St. Catherines sent invitations to brethren, both grouped and isolated, to meet them on June 11, 12, 13, for mutual edification and to worship God.

On Saturday at 3:30 P.M., with Brother H. Stevens leading, short talks were given from Bathurst, Fern Avenue, and East Toronto: Smithville, Jordan, Beamsville, Owen Sound, Cape Rich, Fenwick, and Pine Orchard.

At 8 P.M. Brother M. Watterworth delivered a splendid address-"As Unto a Light that Shineth in a Dark Place."

On Lord's-day morning, at ten o'clock, we met in the opera house (our meetinghouse would have been too small), where we listened to nine brethren make short speeches on the grand theme, "Brotherly Love." At eleven o'clock Brother Jackson, of Toronto, addressed the congregation, now seven hundred strong, on "The Efficient Church, Its Task and Program." Brother Jackson spoke with power.

Brother James Stewart, one of the oldest brethren present, presided at the Lord's table, using the words: "Whatsoever he saith unto you, do it." The fellowship was over two hundred and twenty-five dollars.

After the communion we adjourned to the park, where baskets were opened and the physical "inner man" refreshed.

Brother W. D. Campbell spoke to us at 3:30 P.M., "A More Excellent Way" being his subject, and again at eight o'clock on "Conversion to God." Brother Campbell's simple, plain, logical, forceful, but loving, presentation of the truth makes him a prime favorite among us all.

After the evening meeting there was a discussion regarding a more consistent living up to our plea of Christian unity, and progress made, we believe, in pointing the way to a scriptural unity of brethren.

On Monday morning Brother Helleyer, who was chosen by some of the churches to have the keeping of the funds they had contributed for evangelistic work in weak places, read his report to the assembled brethren (he will also send the report to each church directly), and arrangements were made for a larger work. In order to avoid the danger of building up an organization which would usurp authority which belongs only to the church, it was suggested that the churches in the Niagara Peninsula should administer their own funds, and likewise Meaford and vicinity would arrange for a helper in the work in that neighborhood, while Toronto and its surroundings will work together for the advancement of the Master's cause both at home and abroad.

Brother Gibson, of Toronto, made a strong appeal for more pronounced effort in support of the gospel in foreign fields, and we hope to see the churches doing more in the future.

At eight o'clock at night Brother C. W. Petch made one of the best efforts of his life—"The Everlasting Brother-hood."

Brother Rusnell, of Stouffville, announced that it was the intention of the church there to invite the brethren to meet with them next year sometime in June.

Brethren visited from most of the Ontario churches, many isolated brethren, and brethren from several States in the Union, and we could most heartily sing: "Blest be the tie that binds our hearts in Christian love."

Patience is by no means an easy virtue to attain. It is so hard to wait for what we desire; to be misunderstood: to be scorned and derided in our best endeavors; to fail, again and again, in our undertakings. It seems as if these things need not be, and we chafe against them with all our might. Yet Christ gave us the example of patience, not only with our sins, but with our negligences and ignorances, and we can do no less than emulate his example if we profess to love and serve him.—Waterbury American.

The Pomona Revival.

At this writing we are trying to close the Pomona revival. It was our intention to close on Sunday night (June 19), but we had out our largest crowd and four confessions. The meeting was announced for Monday night, and we had our largest Monday-night crowd, with three confessions, one from the Baptists, and one formerly a member in Texas who had moved into that town. So the good work goes on from night to night, with the intention of closing the first night we have no additions.

As has been stated before, Brother S. E. Witty is my helper in this revival; and I can say, in all sincerity, that he is unexcelled. Something was said in last week's issue on this page about the deadly effect of envy and prejudice on the souls of men. I have wondered if Witty could be envious and jealous. He is loved devotedly by the Ontario congregation, and to say he loves the church there is expressing it mildly. But he is just as interested in the work at Pomona, Riverside, Downey, and Los Angeles. loves all and is interested in all, and rejoices as much in the success of others as he does in his own. And who will say this is not the divine nature? May God help us to partake of this nature and "rejoice" with each other over our successes and "weep" with each other over our failures.

The Montebello Meeting.

Brother Riggs is now in his second week at Montebello, being assisted as song leader by Brother J. B. Ellmore. The tent was full Sunday night, and the attendance last night (Monday) was good. There has been one confession and baptism and one from the Baptists who had been scripturally baptized. The one baptized had been formerly a Baptist

Our house was filled at Sichel and Altura Streets last Lord's day, with three added by statement to the number of our local forces.

Some Mistakes.

1. There is no mistake that could hurt us more than to fail to forgive an erring brother when he repents and begs for forgiveness. If you will turn and read carefully Matt, 18: 21-35, you will see that it is not possible for those who will not forgive to be saved. God's forgiving us certainly depends on our forgiving others. In other words, as to whether God will forgive us or not is left with us. He will if we will. And it is just as certain that he will not forgive if we do not forgive.

2. It is a mistake for any one who claims to be a Christian to rejoice over the fall of a brother. The fact is, no man in whom the spirit of our Lord dwells ever does such a thing. If, on learning of the sins of any man, even my bitterest enemy, I should discover the slightest sensation of joy, I would know that I am as bad as, if not worse than, the brother over whose sins this sense of joy comes. It is easy to learn if God rules in your soul. Watch your emotions when you hear of others sinning and of others succeeding. That man who glories over the fall of a brother in Christ is worse than the fornicator. He bates his brother, and the Book says: "He that saith he is in the light and hateth his brother, is in the darkness even until now." (1 John 2: 9.) "Whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer: and ye know that no murderer hath eternal life abiding in him." (1 John 3: 15.)

3. It is a very, very serious mistake to say that the excessive loads we take upon ourselves produce physical weakness and make us more liable to sin. If this be true, then the ones whom we should expect to sin less in the church are those who take things easily and never overload themselves. I cannot believe that Paul, who "labored more abundantly than they all" (1 Cor. 15: 10) in the days of the apostles, was the one most liable to sin. I do not believe that taking on excessive loads in the service of our Lord, that have a tendency to wear the body out, weakens the spiritual nature and develops the carnal nature. No, a thousand times no! This is to make excessive labor for the Lord dangerous and a thing to be discouraged. It is contrary to every scripture in the Bible on the reward of true service and sacrifice and flies in the face of scientific facts about ourselves. The overworked man, bedily, is the less liable to sin. The weaker the body. the better chance the inward man has to rule and reign. The man most liable to yield to fleshly desires is the man who pampers the fiesh, feeds it well, and never overworks it. I think I have heard of doctors advising some who had difficulty in controlling the flesh to engage in most excessive manual labor. Hard and persistent and devoted service to our God is the best shield we have. You are never in danger while working hard for the cause of our Lord and Savior. So keep busy, brethren.

How Do You Think?

BY H. C. FLEMING.

"As a man thinketh, so is he."

Thoughts are the seeds from which actions spring. He whose thoughts are of evil seeds is sure to fall into wicked deeds. It matters not whether it is you or I, we will surely die, if we fall away. The abundance of thoughts have the control of the actions.- Actions bring results. If the mind is filled with good or bad thoughts, from them are the actions. If they are good, we cannot have too many of them; but if bad, we should cut out and reduce them-gather the bad together, cast them away, and thereby leave room in the mind for the good to enter.

Thoughts come to the mind through one or more of the five senses. If through the sight, the eyes must be blinded to the evil ones. "Ye have heard that it was said by them of old time, Thou shalt not commit adultery: but I say unto you, That whosoever looketh on a woman to lust after her, hath committed adultery with her already in his heart." (Matt. 5: 27, 28.) When such a thought comes to a man, he should turn his eyes away from the woman, lest his thoughts lead to the action with her or some other.

The feelings and sensations can be controlled by the will. If the mind is about to be overcome by these, we can assert the power of the will-cast them aside.

In hearing, the Savior admonishes: "Take heed what ve hear." (Mark 4: 24.) When smutty yarns and vulgar stories are being told, we have the power to turn away or

The range of hearing is very great. We may hear by reading; therefore, the matter we read should be pure and upright, instead of such as brings impure thoughts. Our actions will be, in a great measure, according to what we hear or read.

But what of tasting? Our minds may become so depraved by hearing evil words that we may become as fond of evil thoughts as we are of good things to eat. "Touch not; taste not; handle not." (Col. 2: 21.)

The decaying of physical substances is often very offensive, but no more so to the upright than foul, vulgar language. As we hold our noses and turn away from foul odors, so also should we do with reference to the impure talk of filthy minds.

"Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things." (Phil. 4: 8.)

God's Forgiveness and Ours.

BY A SISTER

It would be absolutely impossible to forgive some wrongs if we did not look at the matter from God's viewpoint and recognize his authority when he commands us to forgive "until seventy times seven."

Possibly the simplest and easiest way to understand God's manner of dealing with us is to consider his Fatherhood—how he is infinitely more loving and tender than an earthly father, and understands us better. He knows how it comes about when we fall to come up to the standard, how in times of physical suffering and disappointment we become discouraged, and then how easily Satan gets the victory. He knows also how we fail to love each other rightly, and even forget to stand together as Christians should and pray for each other, but, instead, find fault and criticize harshly.

"Oft we err in human blindness, and forget that we are dust, And miss the law of kindness in our struggle to be just."

We should understand, too, that God's forgiveness is complete, instantaneous; he cherishes no hang-overs to torture the soul of the penitent child. "As far as the east is from the west, so far will be remove our transgressions from us." And again: "Like as a father pitieth his children, so Jehovah pitieth them that fear him."

In the case of "the prodigal son," the best example of the way God deals with an erring child, the father not only forgives, but is anxious for him to come home, goes out to meet him, gives him the best robe, puts a ring on his hand and shoes on his feet. The selfish son who remained at home is a very good type of the average Christian's forgiveness one of another. No wonder David said: "Let me fall into the hands of God, and not into the hands of man."

There is no alternative left to us. All avenues of prayer to God are closed unless we are willing to forgive as we hope to be forgiven. "As," in this connection, is like a hinge which opens the door of God's forgiveness to us. If men were not so quick to judge harshly, no doubt more people would be willing to make confession of sins and ask for prayer and help. As Tennyson beautifully expresses it:

More things are wrought by prayer
Than this world dreams of.
Wherefore let thy voice
Rise like a fountain for me night and day;
For what are men better than sheep or goats,
That nourish a blind life within the brain,
If, knowing God, they lift not hands of prayer,
Both for themselves and those who call them friends?
For so the whole round earth is every way
Bound by golden chains about the feet of God.

Growing Old.

The days grow shorter, the nights grow longer; The sorrows thicken along the way; And life grows sadder, but love grows stronger For those who walk with us day by day.

The tear comes quicker, the laugh comes slower; The courage is less to do and dare; And the tide of joy in the heart falls lower And seldom covers the reefs of care.

But all true things in the world seem truer, And the better things of earth seem best; And friends are dearer, as friends are fewer, And love is all as our sun dips west.

Then let us clasp hands as we walk together,
And let us speak softly in a low, sweet tone,
For no man knows on the morrow whether
We two pass on or but one alone. —Selected.

There is always a great conflict being waged between the flesh and the spirit. The struggle on the part of the soul is to realize itself in the perfect joy of affinity with its Creator. The struggle on the part of the flesh is one of obstruction to the spirit—a struggle in which the baser passions try to dominate and to gain the ascendancy. This is what usually results when man lives apart from God, and, by so doing, fails to place a right value on his own soul—Henry Lowndes Drew.

AT HOME AND ABROAD

G. A. Dunn is in a good meeting at Amarillo, Texas.

Charles L. Talley, of Cookeville, Tenn., preached at the Russell Street Church, in Nashville, last Sunday.

Among our recent visitors was R. E. L. Taylor, of Decherd, Tenn. This faithful brother keeps busy all the time.

W. M. Oakley is in a meeting at Coopertown, Tenn. His efforts at Pleasant View resulted in two baptisms and three restorations.

Harvey Scott and Austin Taylor have closed a good meeting at Charco, Texas. There were three baptisms and three restorations,

- C. D. Crouch reports two good services with the church at Sixth Street and Waco Avenue on June 25. Two were added to the membership,
- T. W. Phillips, of Fort Worth, will begin a meeting at Clifton, Texas, on July 31. A cordial invitation is extended to all who are near enough to attend.
- T. B. Thompson reports a fair start in the meeting at Allen's Chapel, near Cumberland City, Tenn. People are behind with their crops in this section.

John Hayes is conducting a tent meeting at Lakeland, Fla. There are only feur or five loyal brethren at that point, but they hope to see the cause grow there.

The meeting at Palacios, Texas, was hindered by a gulf storm, but in his last report W. T. Hines advises us that the interest was increasing. One had been baptized.

At last report the meeting at Russellville, Ala., conducted by C. R. Nichol, had resulted in twenty-one baptisms. Brother Nichol began a meeting at Dukedom, Tenn., on July 1.

From Foy E. Wallace, Jr., Vernon, Texas: "The meeting at Holdenville, Okla., continued twelve days and resulted in thirty-seven additions—twenty-five baptisms. T. S. Teddlie led the songs."

J. S. Newman, of Clifton, Texas, has a meeting scheduled for Capitan, New Mexico, the third and fourth Sundays In July, and another at Grandview, Texas, for the third and fourth Sundays in August.

Miss Nellie Rives, a Christian lady living at 1429 College Street, Bowling Green, Ky., desires a position as commercial teacher in a high school located near a church of Christ in some healthful community.

Churches in Calloway County, Ky., have purchased a new tent and equipment to be used in the interest of primitive Christianity wherever the need may be. Coleman Overby conducted the first meeting at a mission point east of Murray.

- M. C. Cayce, assisted by Brother Jeffcoat, of Mississippi, recently closed a meeting at Sturgis. Miss., which resulted in fourteen baptisms. A congregation of twenty-four members were associated together in order to carry forward the work for the Master in that place.
- A. B. Barret, the home preacher, conducted the meeting at Murfreesboro, Tenn., with fine results. There were seventeen baptisms and several restorations. The meeting was well advertised, and the attendance justified the expenditure. Jack Meyer led the singing.

We were glad to learn that E. O. Coffman, of Lawrenceburg, Tenn., had conducted a splendid meeting at Columbia, Tenn. The meeting lasted fifteen days and there were twenty-seven additions. He began another meeting on July 3 at Liberty, in Maury County.

- L. L. Brigance began a meeting at Waverly, Tenn., on the second Sunday in June, which continued for two weeks. There were many things to hinder—picture shows, baseball games, two traveling shows, etc.; but in spite of these obstacles there was a good attendance and interest. Five additions.
- H. W. Wrye recently held a meeting at Bridgeport, Ala, in which twenty-seven were baptized and two restored. The meeting was very interesting throughout. He is now engaged in a meeting at the Powder Plant (Old Hickory) which will continue throughout the week. Up to last Friday night there had been four confessions.

A. M. Hale, who lives on Route 5, Petersburg, Tenn. was greatly pleased with a sermon preached by C. E. Holt at his home on Saturday evening, June 11. A group of neighbors were present. The editor commends the custom of preaching in homes. Would that there were more of such preaching as it was in the days of the apostles!

A small congregation near Del Rio, Texas, is anxious to locate a brother with them who could be of some help in their Lord's-day meetings. They would like to correspond with a Christian physician who thinks of practicing in a small town. There is no doctor nearer than thirty miles. Address all communications to Mrs. H. I. North, Del Rio, Texas.

L. F. Mason has moved from Whitewright, Texas, to Tennessee. For a while his address will be Box 1, McMinnville, Tern. Brother Mason has undergone two severe operations and is still in poor health, but expects to be in good shape for meetings shortly. He desires to locate with some church for part of his time in a community where there is a good school.

From Emmett G. Creacy, Albia, Ky., July 2: "I am here to begin a meeting to-night. It was my privilege to meet the 'mountain preacher,' J. L. Davis, and hear him defend the truth in a debate with Mr. H. B. Taylor at Somerset this week. At least a thousand people attended the discussion, many of whom never heard the truth before. After this meeting I will return to Southern Kentucky to take up my regular work."

- J. C. Mosley writes from Cave, Tenn., June 24: "I am having a fine meeting here. I have baptized some good people on this trip. Will baptize three to-day, if not more. Have established one church on this journey and put an old one to serving the Lord more perfectly. The 'Preachers' List' for 1921 shows fifty-eight white preachers in Nashville and eight colored ones, and four in Chattanooga, and not one in the city of New York. New York must be full of pride and style and society."
- P. C. Breeden, of Terrell, Texas, writes: "I consider the Gospel Advocate the best paper among our brethren. It has always contended earnestly for 'the faith which was once for all delivered unto the saints,' and has never side-tracked nor run off after something new and uncertain. I have read it more than half a century—read it when William Lipscomb and T. Fanning were editors. It has encouraged and helped me in studying the Bible and living the Christian life. I expect to read it as long as I live."

The Tennessee Orphan Home, Columbia, Tenn., is compelled to make needed improvements. The Home is short of funds at the present time and is depending on freewill contributions to make the needed improvements. We do not feel that it is necessary to urge the readers of the Gospel Advocate to contribute to such a noble work. "The Lord loveth a cheerful giver," and those who contribute to such a cause will bring themselves nearer heaven by so doing. Send all contributions direct to the Tennessee Orphan Home.

From J. H. Horton, Haleyville, Ala., July 4: "I began a meeting at Nauvoo, Ala., on June 17 and closed it on June 30. We had a good interest and attendance throughout. No one obeyed, but several were almost persuaded. The Nazarenes and denominations were especially stirred. The Nazarenes challenged for a discussion, and the Methodists set July 3 as the day to reply to a discourse I delivered on 'The Work of the Spirit in Conversion.' My brother was quite sick; so I was called away two days before the meeting closed. J. D. Tant finished the work for me. I am now at Lynn, Ala."

From Leland H. Knight, Booneville, Ark., June 28: "After so long a time I will break the silence for those who might enjoy hearing of the progress of the Lord's work with me as a humble servant. I have just closed two brief meetings in Atoka County, Okla. The first was conducted at Allison Schoolhouse, six miles south of Tushka, where the word had not been heard for years. I preached here one week. Six were baptized into Christ, and, with a few members who were there, have begun meeting as 'it is written.' For six nights I preached the word at Bentley, eight miles from Tushka, where H. D. Jackson was surrounded with knives last summer because of the testimony of our Lord, and where he later held a debate with the Baptists. I baptized thirteen here, despite threats of arrest because of preaching, and influenced three by the word of God to return from the erring way. There is now great rejoicing in that section, praising God for his unspeakable gift, fulfilling Isa. 35: 1: 'The wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad for them.'"

J. Bedford Beck reports that the work in Savannah, Ga., is gradually gaining ground. J. Paul Slayden's meeting is still bearing fruit.

Sister Gertrude Palmore advises us that F. L. Rowe, of Cincinnati, will hold the meeting for the church at Persimon, Ky., beginning August 21.

After continuing for two weeks, Aruna Clark closed the meeting at Daus, Tenn., without any additions. It was a very busy time with the members, but the attendance and interest were good.

R. P. Cuff, of Macon, Ga., will begin a meeting at Estill Springs, Tenn., on July 17, with Jim Grammer leading the song service. There will be two sermons on the first day, with dinner on the grounds.

If you know of any one who should be interested in the church in New York City, send the name and address to Morgan H. Carter, 105 West Sixty-fourth Street. He will call on them and extend a warm invitation.

A new congregation of fifteen members has been established at Butler, Mo., through the efforts of M. S. Mason. He is now in a meeting at Racine, Mo., with a good prospect. Next to Kenneth for a three-weeks' meeting.

Charles L. Speir writes: "I have just closed a good meeting at Porum, Okla., with one addition. I am now in what promises to be a good meeting at Canadian, Okla. Any one wanting me for a meeting in September, October, or November, please address me at Box 212, Checotah, Okla."

From Horace W. Busby, Dallas, Texas, June 27: "The meeting at the Pearl and Bryan Streets Church continues with great interest. Overflowing crowds yesterday. Brother Colley is doing a splendid work in Dallas, and is loved by all for his work's sake. My next work will begin at Georgetown the first Sunday in July. Austin Taylor will assist me there."

From Allen Phy, Algood, Tenn., June 27: "Yesterday I preached at Baxter, Tenn., to good-sized crowds. The attention was good. In the afternoon R. H. Askew and I went out four miles, where Brother Askew had an appointment. He insisted that I preach, which I did. One came forward and made the confession. Brother Askew is to baptize her Tuesday."

From N. B. Hardeman, Florence, Ala., July 2: "Our meeting here will close to-morrow night. Twenty-one have been added thus far. Brother Veteto has led the song service, and has done it well. This congregation, served by Ben Harding, is in splendid condition. I am to begin a meeting in Denver, Col., on Sunday, July 10. Mrs. Hardeman will go with me."

From Dillard A. Lynn, Whitleyville, Tenn., Route 1, June 27: "Yesterday was a fine day at Turkeytown, in Clay County. Willie Hunter preached in the morning, after which dinner was served on the ground. Marion Harris talked in the evening, after which I said a few words. After the morning talk by Brother Hunter, a lady made the good confession. The crowd was estimated at five hundred. Pray for us."

From Ira Wommack, Byars, Okla., June 28: "I am now in a meeting at this place. Have preached three times, and have taken two confessions, one of whom was an old lady who has been a Baptist for many years. We are having fine crowds. My home is at Sulphur, Okla. I moved there last month. A fine congregation is there, and they are doing a good work among the young people especially. Will M. Thompson preaches for them regularly."

From O. M. Reynolds, Madill, Okla., June ... The Lord's work in this (Marshall) county is moving along encouragingly. The Madill church is gladly spending and being spent and used that the rural communities may learn and obey the gospel. Lebanon Church, where we baptized twelve and restored fifteen, is doing fine. I closed a twelve-days' meeting in Powell community Wednesday, with seven baptisms, two of whom were Baptists and one a Presbyterian. The Gospel Advocate is superfine."

From E. P. Watson, Dickson, Tenn., July 4: "The church here has just closed one of the best meetings in the history of the church. H. H. Adamson, of Lewisburg, did the preaching; and he won the hearts of the Dickson people by his strong, forceful sermons and his many spiritual lessons. He will long have a warm place in the hearts of the people here. The meeting resulted in thirty-eight baptisms, five reclaimed, one from the Baptists, and one from the Methodists. One confessed her wrongs at the regular service last night."

From W. S. Long, Washington, D.C., June 27: "Yesterday was an interesting day for the church here. Two were added by membership and one made the good confession and was baptized into the one body. Eugene L. Pearson was with us, and gave an interesting lesson Sunday evening, and will speak again for us Thursday evening. Let those who feel a personal interest in the work here and want to have fellowship by paying some on the house or by giving us the names of some one here whom we may look up please address me at 1319 Harvard Street, N. W., Washington, D. C."

Commendation: "I wish to commend to the brotherhood D. C. Allen, a colored brother of Oakland, Cal. He is a preacher of more than usual ability, and is capable of doing much good among his race, of whom there is a goodly number in Oakland, if he is given the necessary backing. He has seven hundred dollars toward buying a meeting-house, and he wants about eight hundred dollars more. He thinks for this amount he can get a building that will meet the demands. He is entirely trustworthy. Please give this matter your serious consideration and let all who can do so have fellowship in this work. Address all communications to D. C. Allen, 421 Clay Street, Oakland, Cal,"—Earnest C. Love.

From R. D. Smith, Denton, Texas: "Last Sunday (June 26), the first since the close of our recent good meeting, was a fine test of the character of work the church has been doing. At the morning hour the attendance was even better than usual. The auditorium was well filled, and some chairs were employed that the audience might be comfortably seated. The Bible school was also well attended and showed great interest. The Sunday-night services are showing better attendance and interest than at any time since the beginning of the work with the church more than two years ago. Our people are working and praying and paying, and we ask the prayers of God's people everywhere in behalf of our work."

From W. L. Oliphant, Finley, Okla., June 30: "The meeting at Finley continues with interest. Largest crowds we have ever had at this place. W. C. Harrison is singing for us. He is doing his work well. My next meeting will be at Oilton, Okla. We are going to put up a tent in the heart of the town and attempt to reach the folks who are not in the habit of hearing preaching. Brother Martin, of Elk City, will have charge of the song service. We are hoping for a great meeting. This is a mission meeting. If you want to fellowship us in the work, send your contribution to J. N. Haynie, Oilton, Okla., or to me at 825 North H Street, Muskogee, Okla., and it will be thankfully received and promptly acknowledged."

James E. Scobey writes: "I was with the church at Columbia, Tenn., last Sunday, and preached both at the morning and evening meeting. There was quite a good-sized audience present in the morning, but in the evening the attendance was small. I was advised the interest in a meeting in South Columbia which had been in progress for a week or more would draw away some of the congregation of the Central Church. Brother Cawthon is doing the preaching at South Columbia with good success. I understood that there had been over thirty baptisms. The Lord willing, I shall preach at Bethlehem Church, east of Lebanon, in which my grandparents were charter members and where I obeyed the gospel when a youth of sixteen years."

From Mrs. U. G. Wilkinson, Comanche, Okla., June 26: "The meeting of George A. Klingman, with Paul J. Kimbrell as singer, which closed here last week, seemed to greatly strengthen the church. Five were baptized in all. They were hindered much by rain. Any church or individual will be better after associating with Brother Klingman. Will M. Thompson is to begin a meeting at Duncan, ten miles from here, next Lord's day. I fear we will not be able to attend much, as Brother Wilkinson is not strong enough, and the doctors say he must go to the mountains as soon as he can get away. He was just able to attend church to-day, but not strong enough to take much part in the services. G. S. Yates, one of the old-time preachers of this country, who used to preach so much here with Brother Wilkinson, but who has been in the Western States for several years, was at church to-day, he and his wife. He did much in the early days to help build up the cause in this country, and we are very glad that they are back again to make their home with us. We have received a few contributions from brethren, and one from one church, so far. Will report full amount later. We are certainly thankful to all for their contributions. We ask the prayers of all the brethren and sisters."

Confession and Forgiveness.

BY J. C. M'Q.

So long as there is sin in the world, and this will be so long as people are in the world, confessions will be in order, People sometimes write and talk about sinless perfection, but only one sinless Being has ever lived in the world. In all ages of the world God has used weak, fallible, and sinful beings in his service. While all men sin and come far short of the glory of God, a remedy has been provided through the wisdom and goodness of God for the cleansing of sinners through the blood of the Lord Jesus Christ. Christ says: "Every one therefore who shall confess me before men, him will I also confess before my Father who is in heaven. But whosoever shall deny me before men, him will I also deny before my Father who is in heaven." (Matt. 10: 32, 33.) If we would stand justified and cleansed, we should confess our faults one to another. "Confess therefore your sins one to another, and pray one for another, that ye may be healed. The supplication of a righteous man availeth much in its working." (James 5: 16.) This is encouraging: "Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool." (Isa. 18: 1.) Through confession of sin this blessed condition is reached. "If we confess our sins, he is faithful and righteous to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness," (1 John 1: 9.) We cannot doubt that the penitent sinner who confesses his sins is forgiven by a merciful Father. To doubt this promise is to doubt God.

GOD IS MERCIFUL.

The truth of this statement is assured by Luke 6: 36: "Be ye merciful, even as your Father is merciful." How is the Father merciful? For answer read Heb. 8: 12, which says: "For I will be merciful to their iniquities, and their sins will I remember no more." "Blessed are the merciful. for they shall obtain mercy." (Matt. 5: 7.) If we are forgiven, we must forgive. When a man sins, repents, and confesses his sin, and is forgiven by Jehovah, how long does God require him to bury his talent so that he may again be a target for the devil? Search the Bible, and search it as much as you may, you will never find a passage that war rants us in telling a truly penitent man not to be active in the service of Christ. God never told any man on account of his prominence to quit serving him. David was not told to get off the throne and take a back seat; Peter, the chief apostle, was not told that the keys of the kingdom should be taken away from him; neither was Mary Magdalene, out of whom Jesus cast seven devils, told not to exercise her talents in the service of the Master. We should be merciful as God is merciful. We should forgive as God forgives. If we should yield to public sentiment and tell a cleansed sinner to wait and not serve God and take a back seat, just how long should we tell him to wait? Would he be any cleaner at the end of six months or a year than he was when God forgave and cleansed him? Because we are merciful and help the erring is no evidence that we condone sin; for God is merciful, and yet he hates sin as no human being can do. We must obey God and not man. For expediency's" sake we should not demand a man whom God has cleansed to bury himself. "What God hath cleansed, make not thou common." The world will crown to-day and crucify to-morrow.

For the encouragement of all who love the truth, and because the truth has been so ably upheld by David Lipscomb, I quote what he said some years ago on "The Duty of the Church Toward Fallen Women," which is found in "Questions Answered," by Lipscomb and Sewell, pages 224-226:

"Brother Lipscomb: A young lady who is a member of the Christian Church went astray about a year ago, much to the surprise and grief of her many friends. She had always borne a good name and was highly respected. some of the members, including myself, are trying to induce her to attend Sunday school as she used to do before her downfall. She wants to go, but she fears that she will be looked down upon and perhaps insulted. If she goes, she will have to take her little child, a few months old, with her, as she has no one to leave it with who will take care of it for her. Now, the trouble is this: Several of the mem-bers say that if she comes to Sunday school and brings the child there, they will leave; that she is a brazen-faced thing, with no sense of shame about her, if she does so. I and some others cannot see it that way. We think she should have a helping hand and be lifted up. She is nowise 'brazer' as they term it, but feels her disgrace most bitterly, and as shed many bitter tears over the loss of her good name. We want you to tell us through the Gospel Advocate what you think is right. What should we do Should she partake of the Lord's Supper?

That woman's soul is as precious in the sight of God as the soul of any one of those who object to her attending church. She needs and is entitled to the help and strength derived through waiting upon God in his appointments as much as any other human being. The sin she committed much as any other human being. is no greater in the sight of God than many sins committed by others that are considered lightly. The sin she committed is no greater than the sin of those who deny her the right to repent and enjoy the privileges and blessings of the church of God. Jesus died to save that child as much as any other child living. It needs and is as much entitled to be brought up in the nurture and training of the Lord as any child living. The attempt or disposition to deny either shows a lack of the spirit of Christ and exhibits the self-righteous, pharisaical spirit that God despises above all others.

A case of this kind was brought before Jesus-the woman taken in adultery. taken in adultery. You know how others were ready to stone her. He said to them: "He that is without sin among you, let him first cast a stone at her." None did it, but, self-condemned, they slunk away in shame, because Jesus had laid bare their hypocrisy, and said to the woman: "Go, and sin no more." That case is before Jesus again. The church is the body of Christ to deal with this woman and al! other erring ones as Christ would deal with them. How does she act? These brethren and sisters, claiming to be possessed of his spirit and to represent him, instead of encouraging the woman, as Jesus did, to sin no more, join the hypocritical crowd in crying, "Stone her," and push her off from help to repent and leave her in the ways of sin. O, no! If the woman repents of her sin, she is not half so bad in the sight of God as those who refuse to forgive and encourage her to a life of holiness. The special mission and work of the church is to rescue and save such souls from sin.

Of course, a woman that repents of her sin would not be brazen and forward, and she must expect and be willing to bear reproach. The trouble is that the greater number of them are so abashed and discouraged that they allow themselves to be driven into sinful courses. It was in reference to just such a case as this that Paul said: "Ye should rather forgive him and comfort him, lest by any means such a one should be swallowed up with his over-nuch sorrow." It is no greater sin for a woman to fall in this way than for a man. I think it probable that Mary Magdalene, as tradition tells, had been a sinner in this direction. I think it probable because Jesus had cast seven Devils occupied only sinful hearts; yet devils out of her. she became one of the nearest and best beloved of the companions of Jesus. To her he first appeared after he arose from the dead.

I also quote from the same able writer some things he said on elders and their qualifications. ("Questions Answered," pages 198, 199.) The querist had objected to men being elders on account of their weaknesses and frailties. Brother Lipscomb says:

But our brother says they have none fitted for the work. If so, there are no Christians there. A number cannot live the Christian life and not develop the characters needed to do Christian work. It is frequently said nobody fills this bill, when it is not true. You occasionally find a wicked man who says there is no Christian; and it is just about as hard to find a Christian, according to the faultfinder's standard, as it is to find one fitted for an elder. the Holy Spirit requires qualifications, he specifies them as they develop themselves and exist among men, not as they exist among angels. The man who expects perfection among men is an impractical visionary. God does not expect it. When he says they must be blameless, he means they are blameless as weak human beings. Abraham was a model of God's men. We form visionary ideas of Abraham's excellence; but when we come to solid facts, he was a weak, erring human. Twice under fear of his life he He occasionally went without God's direction. and his family suffered for it. I have no doubt we have thousands of Christian men and women who are the equals of Abraham and Sarah in fidelity and trustworthiness before God and man. Peter was not faultless. He prevari-cated. I have no doubt our very exacting brethren, had they been in the days of Peter, would have said: "He is not fit to open the doors of the kingdom; he denied the Savior; he is not fit to teach or be a leading apostle." When the Jews came to Antioch, Peter dissembled and refused to eat with the Gentiles, although God had taught him by a miracle that he must receive and treat them as brethren. God accepted him as the leading apostle. God held him blameless as a man, with human weakness and infirmities, when as an angel he would have been blameworthy. It is not blameworthy for a human being to err sometimes. It is for him to persist in the wrong. I have no doubt we have thousands of men, probably some in that very church, who are or may be the equals of Peter in firmness and fidel-Inspiration gave knowlege, but not moral ity to truth. strength. When we dispense with the elders, we dispense with the work of God; and many Christians are in moral character the equals of Peter or Paul or John or James or Abraham or Isaac and Jacob. This faultfinding and depreciation of everybody else usually arises from undue exaltation of self. It is not a healthy state.

The old hypocritical sinner who stands off and carps at everybody in the church as wicked means to say he is very righteous and very perfect. He is usually a self-deceived hypocrite. The same spirit in the church belongs to the self-righteous. It is not healthy to be overmuch righteous nor to demand it of others.

Acknowledge your own and your fellow men's humanity your liability to err; get clear of the foolish idea that men with faults and human weaknesses are unfitted for ibe service of God. He adapted his service to and for weak men liable to err. Be willing to confess your faults when you do err. I have noticed it in men, I have noticed it in papers. When one starts out to be over sweet-tempered, to keep out all humanity, it becomes one-sided, unfair, and the bitterest and most intolerant of men and papers. They do not show goodness in an honest, open, human, brave way. A paper that starts out to have no controversies, to be overly peaceable, is as sure to be filled with unjust insinuations and innuendoes as that to-morrow's sun will rise. You cannot crush the humanity out of men. Do not look for perfection in human beings nor dispense with the work of God while pretending to be Christians. When you do the work, you fill all the offices of his servants.

Brother Flavil Hall's Communication.

BY M. C. K.

On page 636 of this issue we publish an article from Brother Flavil Hall, entitled "The Church." As it relates to the discussion in these columns which has been closed, it would not be out of order to decline its publication; but Brother Hall's aim, as the article itself shows, is not only to state the point at issue in that discussion, as he sees it, but it has the high merit of trying to narrow that issue to the smallest possible margin, and this is exactly what ought to be done in all controversies between brethren. On account of this merit, as well as others, we would regret not to publish such an article; but in doing so, it must be distinctly understood that, beyond this effort to narrow the issue, we are not reopening the discussion, which, in our judgment, has continued long enough for the present. Brother Hall writes in excellent spirit. In fact, in this respect, his article is a model of what discussions between brethren who differ should always be, and it is worthy of high commendation. Believing that his effort will do good, we gladly give him a hearing, and I take occasion to say:

- 1. When he says that "the church being the family of God, it embraces all the children of God," and that "the church of Christ, or church of God, in any locality embraces all the baptized believers of that locality," he not only states the true position as taught in the New Testament, but he states it clearly and forcibly.
- 2. His remark that he thinks it "impracticable to always so designate the said class of believers among the 'Baptists,' 'digressives,' etc., so as to embrace them in the use of the term 'church of Christ' with the local meaning," shows, as we shall see, that he here overlooks one important fact in the use of the term "with the local meaning." That fact is that the persons to whom he refers are no part of the church "with the local meaning"—are not in the territory covered by the phrascology used in that case, and therefore it is not necessary—yea, rather, it is impossible—"to embrace them in the use of the term" in such a case. This will become clearer when we look at the facts on the next point.
- 3. He asks: "May not 'church of Christ' be applied to a congregation of Christians . . . without going outside to embrace others with the said [denominational] distinctions and paraphernalia?" Certainly so, and it is entirely scriptural to do so—yea, "going outside to try to embrace" in the term anybody or anything that is not in the said "congregation of Christians" would be unscriptural. I think the same fact is here again overlooked by Brother Hall, and I will try to indicate it with an illustration. Let us suppose a city called "London" of one hundred thousand population, besides having a dozen denominational churches, has three which are strictly following the New Testament in all things, and worshiping respectively on First, Tenth, and Twentieth Streets. Now, each of these three churches is not only a church of Christ in the said city, but each of them is the church of Christ worshiping at a particular place in that city, and the term, as thus used, "with the local meaning," includes all the Christians worshiping at that place. Hence, when, in such a case, we speak of "the First Street church of Christ" in that city, surely all can see that the term "embraces" only those who constitute that local church; but it embraces all of them. There may be Christians with the Baptists or "digressives," to use Brother Hall's language, in that city-yea, some of them may even live on First Street-but we should not "try to embrace them" in our use of the term "church of Christ" as applied to those worshiping at that place, for the simple reason that they are not in that local church and are no part of it. Now, cannot all see that, while each of these three churches is a church of Christ in that city, and each of them the church of Christ at a particular place in that city, yet no one of them alone nor all of them together is the church of Christ in that city, provided there are any Christians in the twelve denominational churches that are in it. Of course, if those three churches were all the Christlans in the city, they would be the church of Christ in that city. When our phraseology or any term used embraces the whole city, we must embrace all the Christians that are in the city: but when it is limited to a specific number wor shiping at a certain place, we cannot include any who are not in the number, precisely as when the New Testament calls the Christians in a certain house "the church of Christ" in that house, it embraces none, of course, that are not in it.

- 4. Brother David Lipscomb's statement as to whether there were or "were not whole congregations of Christians among the Baptists in the favor of God," quoted in substance by Brother Hall, puts the case exactly as I aimed to put it in the late discussion. "That there were some individuals among them who were not willful and presumptuous he doubted not, but he could not distinguish these from others as long as they continued with those who are something else than Christians following faithfully the Lord's teaching." This is why I have repeatedly said in the Gospel Advocate and elsewhere that it is sometimes impossible to tell, in its entirety, except in the abstract. where "the church of Christ" in a given city is. We can say in the abstract it is exactly where all the Christians or children of God in the city are, but, like Brother Lipscomb, we cannot tell with certainty where they all are in the concrete. It would probably require the recording angel to do that.
- 5. Of the Brooker family, of some of whose members Brother Hall says he did not know, he says: "When 1 spoke of the Brooker family, I do not think the expression excluded those I did not know about, and yet I meant only those whom I knew." Exactly so; but when you "meant only those," you did not, according to your own statement, indicate "the Brooker family," except in part, by "the expression" used; and on precisely the same principle, when one uses the expression, "the church of Christ In Nashville," meaning "only those" Christians who have certain marks, but not including all other Christians in Nashville, the language includes only a part of the church and is contrary to New Testament usage. While you did not "do any violence to the Brooker family in" your "use of the expression," you nevertheless did not include the said "family" except in part.
- 6. He asks: "Does one do violence to the oracles of God or to the family of God in using the term 'church of Christ,' in which he means only a faithful congregation?" Most assuredly not, and it is entirely scriptural to call such a congregation of Christians "the church of Christ" at the particular place where it worships.
- 7. As to the term "disciples," the same principles which apply to the use of the terms "church of Christ," "church of God," or to any other designation of the church, apply to it. To speak after the New Testament style, the expression "the disciples of Christ" must include all the disciples of Christ in the locality to which it is applied; and whenever it is used to embrace only a part of them, such usage is squarely against the use of every such expression in the New Testament.

Finally, in a private note to our office, Brother Hall, referring to my editorial in our issue of June 9, 1921, says: "I believe every word of what Brother Kurfees quotes from Brother Lipscomb in his last editorial." This is exactly what I expected, and I merely add that continued study and reflection over all the facts in the case will, I devoutly believe, bring us all into perfect union, and, as he suggests, "should reduce the aforementioned controversy to a non-entity." May the Lord direct us to this happy consummation.

Why Seek to Disguise a Well-Known Fact? BY F. W. SMITH.

The following from the Christian-Evangelist of October 28, 1920, seems strangely out of harmony with well-known facts:

CHRISTIAN UNION SENTIMENT.

There are those who have been afraid that the Disciples of Christ were about to repudiate their century-long plea for the union of God's people on the foundation of the apostles and prophets. Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone.

This, of course, would be to deny our spiritual birthright and to turn back to the weak and beggarly elements of sectarianism.

That this tragedy is not in any danger of overtaking us was conclusively proved by the liberal and genuine enthusiasm for Christian union and by the large place the idea commanded among the delegates of the St. Louis gathering.

Any one who may have grown faint-hearted about Christian unity and its forth blossoming into union would have been mightily strengthened at our 1920 meeting.

The way of union is not entirely clear yet. Possibly we have not even discerned exactly what it is; but we know that it is Christ's will and that the world needs it. Millions are praying for it to-day, and we are sure that when we are fully ready God will clearly reveal the way. It is for us to see as far as we can, to follow as far as we see, and to be ready to enter in when the hour comes.

It has been demonstrated that our platform for union will hold us together. The person of our group who is willing for a division among the Disciples is not easy, perhaps is impossible, to find.

Within recent years great strain has been put upon the churches. Divisive dynamite seemed to be lying about everywhere. But the severest tests have been made, and we are still together in ideal and coöperative effort.

If an institution, method of work, creed or dogma were our center of gravity instead of Jesus Christ, we would have been exploded into fragments long ago.

That demonstration of the magnetic power of Jesus Christ has a very wide range of suggestion. One of its leads is that Jesus Christ is the reconciling personality to whom the peoples must look for personal, racial, national, and church salvation

While it may be true that no open rupture into separate and distinct bodies exists among the "Disciples" of Christ, yet it is a well-known fact that divisions of the most serious kind do exist among them, and no such documents as the foregoing can disguise it. There is an ultra advanced element among them whose chief organ is the Christian-Evangelist, and a conservative element whose mouthpiece is the Christian Standard. These journals with their respective constituents have for a long time been upon the very verge of an open rupture, and it seemed at one time that the breaking point had been reached. The Standard worked up a "congress" of preachers and "laymen" on two occasions immediately preceding conventions to protest against the ultra element who were about to run away with the wagon. I hardly think it was a scramble for the patronage upon the part of the Christian Standard, but was due to the fact that the Standard had a little too much of the old-fashioned gospel in its system to work in the same harness with the Christian-Evangelist. They are both still pulling; but if in the same direction, it is altogether unobservable.

The Evangelist's conception of "the union of God's people on the foundation of the apostles and prophets "seems to differ very materially from that of the Standard. They do not seem to understand this "foundation" alike, and here is where the trouble begins. The Evangelist makes the "foundation" cover entirely too much ground to suit the Standard. For instance, the Evangelist's foundation reaches to and stands under Lexington, Ky.-that is, the College of the Bible; while the Standard's foundation stops very far short of that hotbed of destructive criticism. But this is not all, by any means, that stands between those who adhere to the policies of these journals. What is called "open membership"—that is, the receiving of unimmersed people into the fellowship and membership of the churches of the "Disciples"-has by no means been buried, and the Standard is on guard with a watchful eye. The following utterance is a straw that indicates the course of the wind: "The way of union is not entirely clear yet." That sentence breathes the spirit of compromise on "the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone." To thus insinuate that "the foundation of the apostles and prophets" is not sufficiently plain for ordinary minds to comprehend and know when they are standing on it is to belittle the wisdom of God and the teaching of the Holy Spirit. The "foundation of the apostles and prophets" is but another way of designating the plan of salvation, and to say it "is not entirely clear yet" is to reflect upon the oneness of the early Christians. and a paving of the way to compromise the word of God. Any union that is not based upon the expressed will of God is not the union for which the Savior prayed and which is enjoined in the New Testament Scriptures.

The Evangelist speaks in enigmas. Note the following: "If an institution, method of work, creed or dogma were our center of gravity instead of Jesus Christ, we would have been exploded into fragments long ago." What are we to understand by the Evangelist's use of the words "Jesus Christ?" Is reference here made simply to the person of Christ as the divine Son of God? If so, is not that the "center of gravity" for every so-called "evangelical Where, then, can there be any church" in the world? plea for union, seeing that all have the same "center of gravity?" The only way to gravitate toward Christ as the center of man's redemption is by believing what he says and doing what he commands. I suspect the Evangelist's use of the word "dogma" is directed at the contention that the only way to obey Christ in baptism is to be immersed. Again, if the church bought with the blood of Christ, which is an "institution," is not involved in "Jesus Christ as the center of gravity," then I see no meaning in a number of passages in the New Testament. For instance: "And that he might reconcile both unto God in one body [church] by the cross, having slain the enmity thereby." (Eph. 2: 16.) Doubtless the Evangelist would be willing to have a union composed of all the sects and denominations in Christendom, labeled with the word "Christian," which would, indeed, be an "institution." There are hosts of men and women who are not designated as "Disciples" of Christ, but simply as "disciples," who cannot and will not join hands with the Evangelist on "Jesus Christ as the center of gravity" by ignoring what he taught and commanded men to do. They will never consent, for the sake of a union, to compromise the revealed will of Christ. They will never consent to set aside anything authorized by the Head of the church in order to please men.

Should Women Teach in The Church?

Some think that Brother McQuiddy, in his answer to my query in the Gospel Advocate of June 16, takes issue with me in regard to woman's teaching in the church. It may be that Brother McQuiddy and I do not fully understand each other; but as I take his answer, I fully indorse it. The reader will remember that my position is that woman has all the privileges that man has so long as she is subject to his authority. There is much work in the church and in the home, as well as in the State, that woman can do better than man. She makes a better nurse, and is often employed under men to care for the sick in hospitals. She is a better instructor of children and is fast supplanting man in primary work in the schools. In all this she is working under the authority of some man or beard of men. When she takes a class of children to some private apartment in the church building at the request of the elders and instructs them in the Bible, she is filling the sphere for which God created her. When she sits in the choir and with her melodious voice teaches in song, the angels certainly rejoice. If she is a good reader, and Elder Jones calls on her to read some passage in order that the class may get the thought more fully, she is honoring her Maker and the man for whom she was created by so doing. But when she launches out into polities or takes the pulpit, she is bringing the anathemas of heaven upon herself and dishonoring her sex. In all the Jewish economy we find only two women who held positions of public trust, and one of them was a usurper. In no age of the world has God ever called a woman and sent her out on a public mission. Her place is in the home to guide the house, where she is a queen of honor. In the church she is a true helper and a jewel of modesty.

The Greatest of All Kingdoms. BY BATSELL BAXTER.

There are a great many nations on this earth, and they have their causes for pride and their reasons for existence. They have their claims upon their citizens for service. But the greatest of all kingdoms is that spoken of by the prophet Daniel (2: 44): "And in the days of those kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed, nor shall the sovereignty thereof be left to another people; but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever."

"In the days of those kings," it is generally agreed, refers to the days of the Roman empire when the kingdom of Christ was begun. The Savior taught in the parables that the kingdom should have a small beginning like the mustard seed, the leaven, etc., and should grow in influence and power and numbers. He taught that the seed of the kingdom is the word of God; that the field is the world, and also (Matt. 13: 41) that at the end of the world the angels "shall gather out of his [the Son of man's] kingdom all things that cause stumbling, and them that do iniquity, and shall cast them into the furnace of fire." He also taught that the kingdom should have in it both good and bad, like a fish net (Matt. 13: 47-50), and that at the end of the world the angels should gather the wicked out from among the righteous in the kingdom and cast them into punishment.

We are also told that we are in the kingdom of Christ, that we were delivered "out of the power of darkness... into the kingdom of the Son of his love," (Col. 1: 13.) We are also told that Christ appointed unto his disciples a kingdom (Luke 2: 29), and that we have received it. "Wherefore, receiving a kingdom that cannot be shaken, let us have grace, whereby we may offer service well-pleasing to God with reverence and awe." (Heb. 12: 28.) Let us be diligent in the service of our King.

QUERY DEPARTMENT BY J. C. McQUIDDY.

J. S. Westbrooks, of Christiana, Tenn., is concerned about mixing the sacred and the worldly. He says: "If there is an appointment at any place for a public singing, and some meet to sing, some for entertainment, some for pastime, some to learn to sing, and some to worship—if in such a meeting there should be an organ and an organist to play, would this be Christian worship? In this meeting there are some Christians who are opposed to instrumental music in the worship. Can they consistently and conscientiously join in that singing?

Christians should not attempt to worship in such an assembly. The assembly clearly would be dedicated to the world and not to the Lord Jesus Christ. I do not find in the Bible any authority for communing with the world when the world predominates in order to worship God. If Christians wish to worship in song, let them come together in a spirit of worship and worship as the Holy Spirit directs. Unless Christians are meeting simply for self-amusement and entertainment, they certainly should not attempt to worship with such a diversified crowd. When people assemble with such motives as are assigned to them by the querist, I do not believe that it can be acceptable to God as a worshiping assembly. Christians should come out from such and be separate and distinct.

William Anderson, of Temple, Ga., sends this question: "If a person is baptized not having made the confession that he believes that Jesus Christ is the Son of God, does he receive the remission of his sins?" When we read the commission as recorded by Matthew, Mark, and Luke, we learn that in order to enjoy the remission of sins one must believe, repent, and be baptized. Of course his faith is in Christ, and he is baptized into the name of the Father, Son. and Holy Spirit. There is no formal confession required on the part of an alien sinner in order to scriptural baptism. We do not find an example of such a confession in Acts of Apostles. In the beginning, on the day of Pentecost, we find faith, repentance, and baptism, yet no formal confession. In Acts 8: 37, in the King James Version, we do find where the eunuch made a confession, but verse 37 is not found in the best manuscripts. However, the confession here was not made a condition on the part of the eunuch, but was made in order that Philip, the evangelist, might know that he had faith. The evangelist acts under the commission: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." When a man demands baptism at his hands, it it is very pertinent to know that the man believes with all the heart that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God. The best way for the evangelist to know this is to ask the direct question. However, if the evangelist should fail to do this and the sinner should be baptized without making any formal confession, it is evident that he has faith if he is sincere, for he would not be baptized unless he believed that God required it. The further fact that the sinner presents himself for baptism is evidence that he believes in the Christ. Hence, I believe that if he comes as a penitent believer to be baptized, he receives the remission of sins even though the preacher neglects to take any formal confession.

L. C. Zimmerman, of Lake Stearns, Fla., is concerned to know about division in the church. He says: "Is there a church in the world, fifty years old, that has had no divisions? I understand the church of Christ is teaching the same thing; but I refer to divisions, as the Christian Church; and now we have a rebaptism people, and we have a tithing people. Some of our best preachers are saying unless we pay tithes we are lost, when twenty-five or even ten years ago our good preachers condemned it in strongest terms. It appears to me many of us are going after new things, and it is taking the life out of the church. Let us stick to the old way—the Book."

While it is undoubtedly true that the church of Christ has always had diversity of opinions in it, yet such opinions are not to be made a test of fellowship. God requires men to abstain from teaching their private opinions, "The faith [conviction] which thou hast, have thou to thyself before God. Happy is he that judgeth not himself in that which he approveth." (Rom. 14: 22.) Again, the Holy Spirit admonishes Christians to speak the same thing. Now I beseech you, brethren, through the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfected together in the same mind and in the same judgment," (1 Cor. 1: 10.) Again, Christ prayed that his followers might all be one. "Neither for these only do I pray, but for them also that believe on me through their word; that they may all be one; even as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be in us; that the world may believe that thou didst send me." (John 17: 20, 21.) Again, the Holy Spirit warns us to "hold fast the form of sound words." A Christian is admonished to be faithful in "giving diligence to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace." (Eph. 4: 3.) There can be no unity of Spirit among Christians so long as some make private interpretations and opinions tests of fellowship. As to the fundamentals of salvation, there is unity among the members of the church of Christ to-day. Men should be satisfied to teach what is clearly revealed.

G. C. Mayo, of Milan, Tenn., (1) writes of a man who seems to be thoroughly out of harmony with the church of Christ. The elders of the church cited him to trial. He refused to be tried, but withdrew from the church and stayed out for years. After he withdrew from the church, then the elders of the church withdrew from him. This man stayed away from the church for a number of years. and then, without any acknowledgment for wrongdoing, came back to the church as though he had been a member in good standing; and when the elders inquired to know about his former conduct, he said he wanted to partake of the Lord's Supper, but he did not want to stand identified with the church. When asked why, he said that it did not suit him to give his reasons. This man is so clearly out of harmony with the spirit and teaching of Christ that it seems strange that he would even desire to partake of the Lord's Supper. Of course he is not in full fellowship and good standing in the church; and therefore, as the Lord's Supper is intended for Christians, he should have no desire to partake of the Lord's Supper. If he should meet with any congregation and partake of the Lord's Supper, this would identify him with that local congregation. There is no escape from this. The elders should show this man the error of his way, should seek to lead him to confess his wrongs and do everything possible in a spirit of meekness to restore him to the fellowship of the church, (2) He wishes also to know if a man who holds the office of school director and pays out money unlawfully, although he is out of the church at the time he does so, formerly having been a member of the church, if he must restore the money paid out unlawfully before coming back into the church. Repentance requires restoration in as far as possible. There are a number of questions involved in the man's paying out money unlawfully. Did he pay out this money by the authority and direction of superiors; or did he pay it out ignorantly, thinking he was carrying out the law; or did he do it of his own accord, knowing that he was violating the law of the land? If he did this knowingly and voluntarily, then true penitence would demand that he right the wrong, provided he is able to do so.

The Burden Bearer.

Over the narrow pathway

That led from my lonely door,
I went with a thought of the Master
As oft I had walked before;
But my heart was heavily laden,
And with tears my eyes were dim,
But I knew I should lose the burden
Could I get a glimpse of him.

O, friend! if the greater burdens
His love can make so light,
Why should his wonderful goodness
Our halting credence slight?
The little, sharp vexations,
The briers that catch and fret—
Shall we not take them to the Helper
Who never failed us yet?

Tell him about the heartache,
And tell him the longings, too;
Tell him the baffled purpose,
When we scarce know what to do;
Then leaving all our weakness
With the one divinely strong,
Forget that we bore the burden,
And carry away the song.

Enthusiasm.

History tells us that all men who have blessed the world with great inventions were men who faced many obstacles, but that their enthusiasm carried them along to success and victory, where, if they had not been literally saturated with it, they never would have arrived at their goal. When we read of these men, the very narratives cause us to feel the fire kindled and a strange warming within, which makes hope take root and grow within us and incite us to realize a force that when brought into being compels things to come to pass.

With enthusiasm it is easy to surmount difficulties and gain the hills of apparent impossibility. But without enthusiasm, it matters not how much capital we possess, the glory of victory will pale, our efforts will be imperfect, our endeavors but feebly put forward; and if success is attained, the result will be so unsatisfactory that we will take no pride in its fulfillment, we will reap no joy.

Enthusiasm does not consider defeat, else great men would have been cast down, have failed in their wonderful undertakings which instead they carried through for the good of all. No, enthusiasm rises above all difficulties. Its watchword is, "It can be done," because it is for the welfare and happiness of men; and since "as a man thinketh in his heart, so is he," to determine thus is to say, "It will be."

Christopher Columbus had it in its flower stage when he sailed away from Spain on his notable voyage of discovery. For we read in his diary as follows: "September 24—To-day we sailed due westward. October 2—To-day we sailed due westward." Over and over is the sentence repeated with a calm, determined, cold, and almost cruel sound. So enthusiastic was he, so persistently did this fire burn in his bosom and his heart and mind dwell on the land that he sought, that he forgot his comforts, his personal welfare, and even his own life.

But Paul had it in its greatest perfection. We hear him burst forth in his remarkable oratory, saying: "None of these things move me." And why not, pray, when he possessed the supreme enthusiasm that emanates only from the great white throne of God and embraces the cause that mounts higher than any other endeavor in the world? An answer to the question that has consumed the thought of men from Adam to this time will ever be the one of greatest interest to man: "If a man die, shall he live again?" Truly we would do well to give that question careful consideration while we yet have the opportunity, so that when we take our departure we shall enter into that great life prepared for us so long ago.—L. O. Waldsmith, in Christian Advocate.

Diamonds of Truth.

One day a man was walking along and found a little rock. He picked it up, and first thought he would throw it down, but finally decided to carry it along with him When he reached the house, he took a hammer and broke the rock, and among the shattered pieces he found enough diamonds to make him a rich man. So we, as God's children, when we pick up the word "blessed," if we will take the hammer of faith and break it up, we will find many diamonds precious to our soul. The key to the Beatitudes is the word "blessed." "Blessed are the poor in spirit:" "Blessed are they that mourn;" "Blessed are the meek;" "Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness;" "Blessed are the merciful;" "Blessed are the pure in heart;" "Blessed are the peacemakers;" "Blessed are they which are persecuted for righteousness' sake;" "Blessed are ye, when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely. for my sake," Here we find that when the word "blessed" is broken we can select a diamond to fit not only the hand of the rich, but also the hand of the poor, the hungry, and the meek.

Are we, as God's children, with the hammer of faith, knocking the diamonds from this word and letting them shine in the presence of others? Or, upon the other hand, do we leave the rock unturned when we find it? May God help us to let our lights shine.—W. C. Kicklighter, in Exchange.

Real Religion.

Real religion is the kind that Jesus exemplified when upon earth. It is the kind Paul found when he met Jesus on the Damascus road. It is the kind John had when he saw heaven on the Isle of Patmos. It is the kind described by the Golden Rule and the Sermon on the Mount.

Real religion is built upon the teaching of Jesus Christ. It is faith in what Jesus taught and in the reality of the spiritual experience which comes from believing what Jesus taught.

Real religion is built upon the teachings of Jesus Christ. Learn to hate the things that are opposed to goodness. The man who "walketh in the counsel of the ungodly, and sitteth in the seat of the scornful, and goeth in the way of sinners," has not yet found real religion.

Real religion puts within us a deep concern for the other man. We can never be really religious so long as we are indifferent to the sufferings and sins of others.—Exchange.

The ministry of the word is also our power against the worldliness of the church and congregation. Let the standard of the word be uplifted and pressed on heart and conscience, and the worldly devices and elements in our church life will fall away and die. The message of the word for holiness of heart and life will soon settle questionable methods of church finance, church life, and church work; and all this will be so because of its power to "edify" the believer. More and better Bible classes, more expository teaching in our sermons, more individual meditation and study and teaching of the word will soon have its blessed effects in the individual and congregational life.—W. H. Griffith Thomas.

BY A LOVER OF THEM.

So many thousands of books have been printed and so many thousands are being printed that it is difficult for the average man with only limited means to determine which books should be purchased. It is certainly true that much of the printed matter now on sale represents superficial thought containing nothing that is solid and enduring. For fear of spending their money for "trash," some people refuse to buy any books. Others are too prodigal in buying books. I take it for granted that the readers of the Gospel Advocate wish to equip their libraries with books that are worth while and with those that will never grow old. To help the hesitant book buyer reach a decision, I offer a few timely suggestions.

DEALING WITH BIBLE QUESTIONS,

Of course, in a big family like that of our readers, questions bearing on the Bible, the church, the Christian life, and kindred subjects, are constantly coming up. You need some good book to help you along this line. The new book, "Questions Answered," by David Lipscomb and E. G. Sewell, will be of great assistance to you. Those who have seen and examined it closely are highly pleased. W. A. Schultz, a very useful evangelist residing at El Paso, Texas, writes: "I have 'Questions Answered,' by Lipscomb and Sewell, compiled by Kurfees, and it contains more Bible information than any book I ever saw. I have all the works of Campbell, Milligan, Franklin, Errett, McGarvey, Rotherham, B. W. Johnson, and others of our noted preachers and educators, but none was the peer of David Lipscomb."

ANOTHER BOOK BY "AN OLD WAR HORSE."

While thinking of the legacies left us by the grand old soldiers of the cross who have gone on to their reward, we should not forget the work and influence of J. W. Mc-Garvey, who was an eminent Bible scholar and preacher. No one ever made a more gallant fight against destructive higher criticism than did this lamented brother. We are fortunate, indeed, in having "McGarvey's Sermons," covering the fundamental themes of the gospel. The first sermon in this volume, on "Inspiration," is in itself a treasure that makes the book worth while. With only three exceptions, these sermons were stenographically reported, which caused Brother McGarvey to say in his "Preface:" "Their imperfections of style will be as truthful as any other part of the representation which they will make: and if, on this account, they shall smell less of midnight oil, the reader may be compensated if they shall have some of the freshness of morning dew."

AN "EFFICIENCY" BOOK.

Any book that is calculated to stir up the leaders of the congregations to that point where they will actually try to create a more systematic, orderly, and efficient service along the lines of scriptural development is well worth having. I do not believe any thoughtful Christian can read G. C. Brewer's book on "The Model Church" without being moved to make things better than they are in the home congregation. The duties and qualifications of elders and deacons are discussed in a simple and forcible style, and the author's intent to "stick by the Book" is everywhere apparent. The chapters are arranged in textbook form for classes, comprising a two-weeks' course of study. If you would have a progressive congregation along truly scriptural lines, it would pay you to get this book.

A GOOD BOOK ON ADVENTISM.

The best short treatise to be had on Adventism has been written by J. Henry Monk. He was for eight years a follower of this cult, being a graduate of their Southwestern Junior College. He read much of their literature and spent several summers selling the same. He taught two terms in their schools, and is thoroughly familiar with their books. Besides, he was a licensed minister for two years, and preached the things he now condemns. Mr. Monk found his way out of the meshes of Adventism His book is authoritative on this subject. He gives a true statement of the views of Adventists and applies the Bible teaching thereto after the necessary generalizations. The book has been written in remarkably simple style. On this point he says in the "Preface:" "If at times, therefore, the matter may seem to be presented in an absurdly simple form, the reader will be calling in question, if he com plains, the one point at which the author aimed from the beginning." I can truly recommend this book as a discussion of Adventism from a systematic viewpoint and in an unbiased manner. The erroneous doctrine is rapidly spreading, and it is fortunate that we have such a clear-cut exposure of it. If you have a friend who is about to be entangled, send him a copy of this book.

A NEW WORK ON THE HOLY SPIRIT.

"Christianity is differentiated," says Z. T. Sweeney in the "Introduction" to his new work on "The Spirit and the Word," "from all the other religions by the fact that it offers its followers a spiritual dynamic in living up to its precepts. That dynamic is the Holy Spirit, that sets the word of God on fire, warms the church from coldness to enthusiasm, and strengthens the Christian with a power not his own in the great battle between the flesh and the Spirit." Proceeding upon this profound fact as a basis, the author has gathered the teachings of God's word around several important phases of the nature, mission, and work of the Holy Spirit. There is no hint of speculation in the treatise. He treats solely of that work of the Spirit which God has made plain. For a brief and concise statement of the main passages bearing upon this important subject, I do not know of a better or more useful book than Sweeney's. Let us give it a wide circulation,

OF SPECIAL INTEREST TO THE YOUNG.

The name and character of E. W. Carmack shines with greater resplendency as the years come and go. Among Tennesseeans there has never been a man who got any closer to the hearts of the common people than did this distinguished leader. His tragic death but served to intensify and immortalize his editorial utterances. If you are interested in giving a book to some boy or girl that would set before them in beautiful and understandable language the highest ideals of life, by all means secure a copy of "Character; or, The Making of the Man." It furnishes a gift that will always be highly prized. Every one who has seen it pronounces this to be the most elevating and uplifting of Senator Carmack's addresses. This is a book which should be in every home. It is a classic that will never grow old.

Nicodemus.

My father, J. H. Nicodemus, died on May 20, 1921, at the age of sixtyeight years. For many years we lived in Tennessee, Napier being the place where my mother died. My father came to this Western country about twenty years ago seeking health, which he gained, until about five years ago, while working in Imperial Valley, Cal., he was overcome with heat, and he never fully recovered. Although he had been quite active since then, that was the cause of his death. He and his family will be remembered as being great singers. He leaves six children to mourn his He leaves six children to mourn his death. Jones.

Another precious jewel has been taken from the home of Mr. and Mrs. Ollie A. Jones. Just five years ago they were bereft of their only son, Wyatt. This time, a darling little girl, Annie Will, whose sweet and gentle spirit took its flight into realms beyond. She was born on August 24. 1910, and went away on February 24, 1921. before the withering blight of sin had left its impress on her tender heart. Her frail little body now sweetly reposes in Rose Hill Cemetery at Humboldt, Tenn., where the flowers are blooming in profusion and song-birds carol their sweetest music. In her heavenly home, flowers will never fade and songs of the redeemed never Those who go are happier cease. than those they leave behind." ther, mother, and three sisters are sad because of this going away, but their darling will wait and watch for her loved ones to join her in the blissful home of the soul. ANNIE R. CASEY, Setliff.

On March 6, 1921, the gentle spirit of Mrs. Nancy Shaw Setliff entered the far-away home of the soul. Aged eighty-three years. She was the last of an old and prominent family, the widow of Dr. A. Setliff, and sister of Thomas Shaw, a pioneer preacher of this county. Six children, twenty-four grandchildren, and thirty-three great-grandchildren survive her. She was an active and consecrated member of She the County Line congregation. was a great sufferer for years, but bore her pain with patience and Christian fortitude. She was a devoted wife, an affectionate mother, a kind and obliging neighbor, a Bible student and long-time reader of the Gospel Advocate. She was what the Bible terms a great woman, modest, unassuming, self-sacrificing, a keeper at home, whose hospitality many preachers and others have enjoyed. Her chief pleasure lay in deeds of kind-ness. To her children the memory of an exemplary life becomes their greatconsolation and her Christian spirit an inspiration for them to emulate her life of service.

(Mrs.) MATTIE A. NEECE.

Meador.

On April 20, 1921, the death angel visited the home of Brother A. R. Meador, of Red Boiling Springs, Tenn., and took from him his beloved wife. Sister Meador had been in failing health for several months. By the advice of her physician she went to Nashville for treatment, where her husband gave some of his life's blood for transfusion, but all to no avail. The end came much sooner than was expected and was quite a shock to her relatives and friends. Sister Meador was born at Gamaliel, Ky., on September 29, 1879, where she spent her youthful days. She was the daughter of S. S. and Arabel Crawford. She became a member of the church of Christ early in life and lived a consistent member until her death. She was loved and respected by all who knew her. She was always ready with kindness and sympathy to aid and help those in distress. She was a regular attendant at church as long as she was able to get there. She is survived by her husband, three children, one brother, and four sisters. the funeral services, conducted by J. H. Arms, of Spivey, Tenn., Sister Meador's mortal remains were laid to rest in the Gamaliel cemetery. To the bereaved and sorrowing husband and relatives we extend our heartfelt sympathy, and would say: Weep not as those who have no hope, for your loved one is sweetly resting in that home prepared for those who faithfully serve their Lord in this life.

A PERSONAL QUESTION.

Why patronize a denominational or secu-lar school when you have one of your very own that can give you everything, including the fine Arts, that they can give you, and in a manner accepted as "A Plus" by the Association of Texas Colleges, and "First Class" by the State Department of Educa-tion?

MORE THAN SIX HUNDRED STUDENTS.

We enrolled six hundred and thirty-seven students last session. With our increased room, equipment, and faculty, we are sure to enroll more than seven hundred this year. There is not one thing about the institution, either in the boarding or administration departments, that is not being improved.

THE ASSOCIATION.

One of the finest things about Abliene Christian College is the privilege of assortation with a thoroughly Christian faculty and hundreds of the very choicest young men and young women, a vast majority of whom are Christians. We promise you faithfully you will not be called on to associate very long with any undesirable persons in Abliene Christian College. They will be eliminated.

How Will It Read?

BY T. PARK BURT.

"We must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ; that every one may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad." (2 Cor. 5: 10.) "I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God; and the books were opened: and another book was opened, which is the book of life: and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works." (Rev. 20: 12.) "Behold, I come quickly, and my reward is with me, to give to every man according as his works shall be." (Rev. 22: 12.) Jesus said: "The hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life: and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of condemnation." (John 5: 28, 29.) Just as sure as God is and the above scripture is true, my dear brother, you and I shall stand before the great Judge of all mankind some day, and will there be judged out of those things which are written in God's revealed will, and according to the way we have kept them. How will this momentous volume read, my brother, when the book of our life's work is opened before the great tribunal of justice and we are required to give an account of the things written therein? God said: "There is nothing hid, which shall not be manifested." (Mark 4: 22.)

Let us study, therefore, to show our walk, our talk, and, in fact, our every act of life, approved unto God. Knowing that only those who fear God and work righteousness are accepted with him (Acts 10: 35), how careful we should be as to the things written in this life book, which shall be opened before God for his approval or condemnation! "Fear God, and keep his commandments: for this is the whole duty of man. For God shall bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil." (Eccles. 12: 13, 14.) O, this voluminous book of our life! This momentous book of our life's work! How will it read when it shall have been finished? Life's book is a wonderful encyclopedia, which we are writing day by day and hour after hour as the years go by. Let us, therefore, examine the manuscript, as it were, and determine by God's law whether or not it will be approved of him in the final day when we shall be judged by the things written therein. When new matter comes in and we write it down in this great life book, it is usually read immediately by some one, and it wields an influence either for good or evil. Let us be very careful as to what we write in this book, lest the volume appear unseemly and we regret that we wrote it. Where is the man who would not blush with shame to look on this great volume when it shall have been finished, and behold its pages bespattered with some smutty yarn, lying, backbiting, or dealing dishonestly with his fellow men, or taking the name of the great God in vain, thereby setting a bad example before all who hear him, and writing a line or paragraph which will condemn him to everlasting destruction when life's book shall have been finished? Be very careful, dear reader, for all things will certainly come to light which you write in this life book. How will it read, my brother?

Evangelistic Work in Mississippi.

BY M. C. CAYCE.

Our meeting at Sturgis, Miss., closed on Monday night, June 20, with a moonlight baptizing. The attendance was large at every service, even to the close. At no night service could we seat the audience under the tent. Many times there were as many seated on crossties outside as were under the tent. Attention was perfect and no misbehavior even on the outside. We were to close on Sunday night, but had three confessions, one of whom wanted to be baptized the next morning; two were baptized by moonlight that night. On Monday morning, at the water, two men made the confession and were baptized, and, as already stated, Monday night there was one confession and moonlight baptizing. The interest was fine. Fourteen were baptized, seven of whom had previously been baptized into the Baptist Church. On two occasions man and wife were baptized together, and one entire family of four. These fourteen, together with ten members that were scattered about and had never met for worship, form a new congregation of twenty-four charter members that will begin at once keeping house for the Lord, meeting regularly for worship in the schoolhouse, which is a very convenient place, There are already three churches in the little town-Methodist, Baptist, and Presbyterian.

With the exception of two sermons preached by H. D. Jeffcoat, there has never been any preaching by our brethren in the county previous to this tent meeting. The teaching was entirely new, and those baptized, as well as others, had never heard it before. The plain New Testament teaching appeals to the people, and many of them have begun studying God's word that had never done so before, and I am sure seed have been sown that will yet result in the saving of many souls. Brother W. M. Ledbetter is well qualified and amply able to lead and oversee the congregation. Since being in Sturgis he has acted as superintendent of the Methodist Sunday school. I believe he sees clearly now the importance of giving his entire time to building up the one body and that he will from henceforth encourage only pure New Testament teaching. We are fortunate in having such a one to be left Brother H. D. Jeffcoat was my colaborer in this meeting, leading the song service and otherwise assisting. He is a noble, God-fearing, consecrated Christian, and endeaved himself to all the people. He has agreed to preach for them once a month, as soon as protracted-meeting season is over, and I am looking for grand results from the work begun there.

After taking down and shipping the tent, I drove through in the Ford to Jackson, arriving in time to be present at our Wednesday-night prayer meeting, where I found a congregation of twenty-five assembled, all of whom seem to be deeply in earnest, very much enthused over the work, and rejoicing greatly in having a house of our own in which to meet. To-morrow I will go to Vicksburg to put up the tent and get ready to begin our meeting there Sunday. This also is a very needy field, there not having been a meeting held there in the last ten years.

Let all who can send a contribution to help pay for the Columbus meetinghouse do so promptly, as the first payment has to be made by July 20. Send to B. E. Seel, treasurer, Box 103, Columbus, Miss.

FIELD REPORTS

Clarksville, Tenn., June 28.—Our two-weeks' meeting closed on Lord's-day night after being rained out three times. The church was almost dead, the men having failed to do their duty. I was sent there by the stronger churches of the county to help them out. Prospects for the church are better, several having promised to be more faithful. One young lady from a Methodist family was baptized. We have a splendid work started in this county on the New Testament order.—J. G. Malphurs.

Kirbyville, Texas, June 27.—1 closed the Lufkin meeting last night with twelve additions—one by relation, one restored, and ten fine young people baptized. Although rained out Wednesday night and hindered by late evening rains the remainder of the last week, the brethren were pleased with the meeting, made my stay pleasant, supported me well, and invited me to return. I am to begin a mission meeting in Hardin County on July 2, to continue two Sundays.—J. S. Daugherty.

Dallas, Texas, June 27.—The meeting closed at Runge on Sunday with all the people we could accommodate, and interest and attention great. The good people treated me royally. I promised to return for a longer meeting in November. I go next to Delta County for two meetings. My time is very closely arranged till nearly Christmas. The work at Lancaster, Texas, where I recently closed a meeting supported by the Pearl and Bryan Streets and Oak Cliff congregations and others, is growing very rapidly. The attendance has doubled in two weeks. Brethren from here assist them each Sunday.—J. I. Reagan.

Huntsville, Ala., June 26.—Brother Andy Largen, of Fayetteville, Tenn., has just closed a fifteen-days' meeting. with fifty-one baptized and eighteen reclaimed. Brother Largen has been coming to Huntsville for the past four years, bringing his large tent, and each succeeding year his audiences are larger than the year previous. This year his audiences ranged from twelve hundred to eighteen hundred at each service. Brother Largen possesses a wonderful magnetism and has done a great work toward the promotion of the cause of Christ in Huntsville. His services have been secured again for the months of May and June, 1922.-G. Moody Reed.

Fort Worth, Texas, June 28.—The hot weather has not killed the work at Southside Church, but we had large crowds last Lord's day, with one confession and baptism and one to take membership. I am in a revival or mission effort in South Fort Worth, preaching the gospel to good crowds. Two restored to-night, and prospects bright for a great meeting. The work is good in all the congregations in Fort Worth, and we are trying to press the battle in Jesus' name. There are several good song leaders in Fort Worth who are not doing much of that sort of work, and they ought to be used where they are needed. Brother J. W. Reed is open to calls for singing now, and would like to be busy at the work. Then there are Brethren Brister, Rickard, Farley, and a host of others. If you need a leader, call one of them.—Tice Elkins.

Vicksburg, Miss., June 28,—Our tent meeting here began on Sunday morning with a small attendance, but good attention. Paul Pullias, son of Brother C. M. Pullias, is leading the song service, and doing it well. This place needs the gospel. It is a worldly town. Shows and baseball and such like run on Sunday as on any other day of the week. One denomination advertised a dance, two dollars per couple, the proceeds to go to their organ fund. Another advertised rag-time music for Sunday night. There are many Catholics and not a few Jews. The congregation here is composed of five men and a few women, Hall on who meet in Odd Fellows' Sunday morning. None of the young people are in the church. We trust and pray for an awakening interest and ingathering. The "digressives" have a church here. I am making my home with Brother W. F. Hanes, 1201 First North Street .- M. C. Cayce.

Just following the service at Blair I spoke words of comfort and warning in the funeral service for Sister Helena Brooks at the same place. Sister Brooks lived some few weeks more than eighty-five years, and had been a disciple of our Lord Jesus sixty-five years. Brother Clarence Banks, one of our local workers, was at Plain View in the afternoon, teaching a Bible class and assisting the faithful few there in their efforts to "keep house" for the Lord. Plain View is a mission point where Brother Price Bankhead recently held a meeting. I am expecting to follow this work up with another meeting this fall, the Lord willing. We are just now finishing some repair work on our church building here, which work is a great improvement. Brethren, let us not forget that Jesus Christ is coming again, "lest coming suddenly he find you [us] sleeping."—S. E. Templeton.

Lord's days and then enter upon my meeting campaign for the summer. I should like to do more evangelistic work next year than for the past two or three years. The work with churches where I have labored as their preacher and servant has, with very few exceptions, always been pleasant, and, I trust, to some degree profitable. However, in comparing data on local work and general evangelistic efforts, I find that more people have obeyed the gospel, more congregations have been established, and more church houses have been built as a result of my assistance in the evangelistic field than in local work. Something near the same length of time has been given to each during the years I have been preaching the gospel, with more energy expended on local work. But I am thankful that our Heavenly Father has blessed me and that his people have used me and assisted in developing me to whatever success I may have attained. Possibly it shall all work for my good and the cause God's people love for conditions to have been as stated above. I am now receiving and answering meeting calls for 1922. It is not my plan to sever connection with local work, but I want to do more meeting work next year than in this. Address me at 122 East College Street, San Angelo, Texas.—T. M. Carney.

Paducah, Ky., June 16.—The Goebel Avenue Church of Christ has just closed what all agree to have been the most successful meeting in its history. N. B. Hardeman, of Henderson, Tenn., did the preaching, and it is believed that a recitation of some of the out-standing features of the meeting will be interesting to many of your readers. At the very first service Brother Hardeman was greeted by an au-dience of such proportions that it could not be seated, and this condi-tion prevailed throughout. From time to time other seats were procured and put under and around the large tent; still, at only a few of the services were we able to accommodate the people who came. Brother Hardeman, large in name, frame, and fame, is well known in the surrounding country; consequently there were visitors from Lowes, Wingo, Sedalia, May-field, Fulton, Murray, Benton, Sharpe, Bandana, Brookport, Metropolis, and Lynnville. There were nineteen baptisms, one restoration, and five per-sons convinced of the sinfulness of sectarianism and persuaded to lay such aside and be Christians simply and only. A peculiar matter with reference to those baptized is that of the nineteen, all except three are people well settled in life, one above seventy, and two above sixty. An analysis of these results will disclose the character of preaching done. Sincharacter of preaching done. Sin-ners continue in their sins, and sec-tarianism grows robust and rises high in its pride under the preaching of the mollycoddle. Deeply on our hearts have sunk the lessons our brother gave, and shall not soon depart.—C. M. Stubblefield.

How Coca-Cola Resembles Tea

If you could take about one-third of a glass of tea, add two-thirds glass of carbonated water, then remove the tea flavor and add a little lemon juice, phosphoric acid, sugar, caramel and certain flavors in the correct proportion, you would have an almost perfect glass of Coca-Cola.

In fact, Coca-Cola may be fairly described as "a carbonated, flavored counterpart of tea, of approximately one-third the stimulating strength of the average cup of tea."

The following analyses, made and confirmed by the leading chemists throughout America, show the comparative stimulating strength of tea and Coca-Cola stated in terms of the quantity of caffein contained in each:

Black tea-1 cupful___ (hot) (5 fl. oz.)

....2.02 gr. Green tea-1 glassful ... (8 fl. oz., exclusive of ice) (cold)

Coca-Cola-1 drink, 8 fl. oz. (prepared with 1 fl. oz. of syrup) _.61 gr.

Of all the plants which Nature has provided for man's use and enjoyment, none surpasses tea in its refreshing, wholesome and helpful qualities. This explains its almost universal popularity.

The Coca-Cola Company has issued a booklet giving detailed analysis of its recipe. A copy will be mailed free on request to anyone who is interested. Address:

Who Should Assemble?

BY S. WHITFIELD.

"And thou shalt rejoice before the Lord thy God, thou, and thy son, and thy daughter, and thy manservant, and thy maidservant, and the Levite that is within thy gates, and the stranger, and the fatherless, and the widow, that are among you, in the place which the Lord thy God hath chosen to place his name there." (Deut. 16: 11.)

This scripture teaches that the children of Israel, with all that they could reach, were to come together to rejoice before the Lord. It was right for them to do this, for all the good things they enjoyed came from God.

"When all Israel is come to appear before the Lord thy God in the place which he shall choose, thou shalt read this law before all Israel in their hearing. Gather the people together, men, and women, and children, and thy stranger that is within thy gates, that they may hear, an I that they may learn, and fear the Lord your God, and observe to do all the words of this law; and that their children, which have not known anything, may hear, and learn to fear the Lord your God, as long as ye live in the land whither ye go over Jordan to possess it." (Deut. 31: 11-13.)

All were to gather together to hear the word of God, to learn it, and to fear the Lord. This shows us that God wanted all to learn his will and become obedient to his commands. It also teaches us that God depended on his word to influence and draw people in the right way. He wanted them to hide his word in their hearts, that they might learn not to sin against him. The word of God, which is the seed of the kingdom, has power in it to move us in the way of life, if we will only allow it to direct our steps.

"And he wrote there upon the stones a copy of the law of Moses, which he wrote in the presence of the children of Israel. And all Israel, and their elders, and officers, and their judges, stood on this side the ark and on that side before the priests the Levites, which bare the ark of the covenant of the Lord, as well the strangers, as he that was born among them: half of them over against mount Gerizim, and half of them over abainst mount Ebal; as Moses the servant of the Lord had commanded before, that they should bless the people of Israel. And afterwards he read all the words of the law, the blessings and the cursings, according to all that is written in the book of the law. There was not a word of all that Moses commanded, which Joshua read not before all the congregation of Israel, with the women, and the little ones, and the strangers that were con-

"ALF and BOB TAYLOR, with their eloquence, their fiddles, and their fox hounds, have wrought for themselves a niche of eternal melody in the hearts of their country."

So states the author of this little book, which we present as the best product of the pen of DeLong Rice. Into one hour of reading he has gathered the strange and romantle story of the two most wonderful political campaigns of Tennessee—the thrilling tale of the happy comradeship and the lifelong rivalry of the two famous brothers—a disclosure of the remarkable and heretofere impublished incidents that attended the political division of the Taylor family—the wonder of "The War of the Roses" that attracted the attention of the world—and the truth about "OLD LIMBER," the peerless and now immortal fox hound that played the leading role of sentiment in the political campaign of last fall, from the Mississippi River to the Unaka Monntains.

With a "Cast of Characters extending from a President of the United States to a fox hound," the story touches a wide range of luman sentiment; and through it all is the aroma of erackling camp fires and the music of the chase.

versant among them." (Josh. 8: 32-35.)

Here again we learn that all had gathered together before the Lord, and all that God had spoken was to be read before them. God wanted them to hear all that he had said. Some people are willing to hear part of God's word, but are not anxious to hear it all. All people should hear all that God has said.

"Now therefore are we all here present before God, to hear all things that are commanded thee of God." (Acts 10: 33.)

Just as they were to do under the law, Cornelius had done here. All that could be reached were brought together before God to hear all the word of God. Just think of the good that resulted from this meeting!

"And all the people gathered themselves together as one man into the street that was before the water gate; and they spoke unto Ezra the scribe to bring the book of the law of Moses, which the Lord had commanded to Israel. And Ezra the priest brought the law before the congregation both of men and women, and all that could hear with understanding, upon the first day of the seventh month. And he read therein before the street that was before the water gate, from the morning until midday, before the men and the women, and those that could understand; and the ears of all the people were attentive unto the book of the law. . . . So they read in the book in the law of God distinctly, and gave the sense, and caused them to understand the reading." (Neh.

God wants his word read distinctly to all the people, and made plain so they can understand it.

Few or many may gather to hear God's word and do his will. A few may learn God's will, do it, and worship him in an acceptable way. Jesus taught that two or three might come together in his name and be blessed.

In this age of the world, with so many modern attractions, it is often difficult and sometimes impossible to get people together to hear the word of God. Almost anything else will interest them, but they cannot find time or place for the truths of heaven.

"Not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is; but exhorting one another: and so much the more, as ye see the day approaching." (Heb. 10: 25.)

It is our duty as Christians to gather ourselves together on the first day of the week to worship, as the word of God teaches. We need to do this to receive spiritual food, to keep interested in the Lord's work, to proclaim the Lord's death, and to keep up the work of the Lord.

It was the custom of Jesus to be at the synagogue on the Sabbath day. So we should come together on the first day of the week to engage in the service that we owe to the Lord.

John was in the Spirit on the Lord's day. So it is our privilege, and also our duty, to engage in spiritual things on the Lord's day.

When Jesus comes again, will he find faith on the earth? Should he come before we go hence, would he find us faithful and in our place?

Denton, Texas, June 27.—The meeting at Baird, Texas, closed on the second Sunday in June without additions: but I am not going to report that the meeting was unsuccessful beeause of this, for I know the gospel was preached; and when this is done, good must be done. The brethren told me that many people of the town came to hear me that had never been in our meetinghouse before. On the third Sunday I was at home; but I preached a few nights at Coppell, a mission point, where there is an open door for some effective work in spreading the gospel. I am now at De Queen, Ark. I preached out in the country Saturday night in a Baptist community by invitation of an old student of mine. I had a fair hearing, and all seemed to enjoy my talk. Sunday at eleven o'clock I preached at Smyrna Church. Here the little band had quit meeting, but I was able to get them to agree to go to keeping house again for the Lord. One young brother whom I had baptized two years ago said he would take the lead and do the best he could. At three o'clock Sunday afternoon I preached for the church here in town and gave them a word of encouragement which they seemed to appreciate. I am to begin a meeting on Friday at Sulphur, near Dardanelle, Ark. This is the place where I drove the picture show out of the Lord's house and got the church to work again. I hope and pray that we will have a great meeting there this year. On July 16 I am to begin my third meeting at Havana, Ark.— D. S. Ligon.

Limitations crowd in upon us. There are multitudes of things which in our hateful arrogance we thought we would do. We find we cannot do them. Limitations close in upon us-hindrances, disappointments, sufferings, pain. How are we to bear it all? Are we to become all the more querelous, resentful, irritating, or is each stroke of the divine discipline to be learning to us all a lesson, so that all the more, stroke after stroke, the soul, learning its limitations, is forced into the line of divine correspondence and made meek, is made effective? So it is with the proud and the impulsive Peter; so that late writing of his, that epistle of his, is full, as hardly any other book of the New Testament is full, of the rich power of the spirit of meekness; or Saul, the Pharisee, yielding at last with one blow to the divine claim and becoming, for all that Jewish pride of his, once and forever the slave of the meek Jesus. These are the meek of the earth; because they are meek, therefore, in the kingdom of God, the effective—the men who do fruitful things, the men whose work lasts because they are followers of Him who was meek and lowly in heart.—Selected.

THE IMMORTALITY OF GOODNESS

The scene is laid in a Bethany home. Christ and some of his disciples are assembled in the house of Martha and Mary, and are about to partake of a feast-the last formal feast of his earthly ministry. This meal was probably the principal one of formal feast of his earthly ministry. This meal was probably the principal one of the Sabbath day; and the company being large, Martha would be busy acting as hostess. Then, in front of the full company, Mary rises, and, approaching Christ with a box of costly ointment, so refreshing and exhilarating in the Eastern climate, pours it over his feet, and then, loosening her long tresses, wipes his feet with her hairan act implying deep humility.

We are not concerned here with her motive, nor need we discuss the covetous attitude of Judas; our keynote is Christ's declaration: "Wheresoever this gospel shall be preached throughout the whole world, this also that she hath done shall be spoken of for a memorial of her." The single act of love in that comparatively obscure house in Bethany is blazoned far and wide, and as far and as long as Christ's name is known and loved will the story of Mary's homage be told.

The history of the world is often thought to be the record of wars and conquests, but there are glorious victories and splendid military movements of which all token has passed away. Their memorial is perished with them. The explorer in the desert finds a half-ruined, time-worn column, with faint, almost unreadable inscriptions on it. Scholars gather round, and by dint of hard toil at last decipher a small portion, which states that some hero, whose name is unknown, has on that spot completed a magnificent conquest or slain in battle some thousands of his foes. The hero, permagnificent conquest or slain in battle some thousands of his foes. The hero, per-haps, thought himself immortal as he stood on the victorious field; but seen through the ages, he is nothing but a shadow. But the scene in Bethany is fresh and clear, and the act of adoring affection and the kindly words of Christ are remembered. though conquerors are forgotten.

But our Lord does not pass this sentence of perpetuity merely as a special reward for Mary's act. He rather affirms a principle. That principle seems to be that acts of goodness, kindness, and love are the acts which have the elements of eternity in them. Goodness defies the ravages of time. All that is merely strong or intellectually great is subject to decay. Men have pierced the mountains, carried new ways of transit beneath the sea and above the clouds, but their triumphs will disappear with the growth of time; while the power of goodness outlasts all that is merely great. The day is coming when we would rather have wiped away a tear than have captured a fortress; rather have visited the sick than have been the guest of emperors; rather have turned one soul to righteousness than have put to flight a host of foes; for every act done for Christ is not for a day, but for ever.

It may be that there will stand by the worldly-minded who will sneer at our mode of life and call it waste. But acts for the glory of God and the regeneration of society are not waste; nor is a life wasted which is devoted to the building up of the brother-band of mankind which Christ founded, and over which he still watches. The acts hood of mankind, which Christ founded, and over which he still watches. The acts of the noble army of martyrs and of great hosts of missionaries, evangelists, and teachers have been commemorated by art, and their lives enshrined in the widestread stories of the world, and, together with the acts of the vast unnamed throng who have done their best, are cherished where alone a worthy ambition cares to have them recorded-in the heart of God and in the smile and welcome of Jesus Christ.-A. F. Amann.

Reclaiming Weeds and Folks.

"I consider my most important contribution," said Mr. Luther Burbank, "the statement and recognition of the great principle in botany that a plant born a weed does not have to remain a weed, or that a plant down and out does not have to remain a down-and-out."

"That sounds as if it might apply to human beings as well?" I said.

"It does," responded Mr. Burbank, quickly. "It certainly does apply to human beings.

"Heretofore, in the plant world, when we have found a dwarfed or stubbed plant or a weed or a fruit that seemed to have degenerated until it was worthless, we have assumed that God meant it to remain so, or it would never have gotten into such straits. So we have allowed it to remain a weed—a useless down-and-out tramp; a parasite on plant life; an obnoxious, ill-smelling outcast; but I have enunciated and proved the principle that there is no plant so great an outcast that it cannot with skill and care be reclaimed."—W. L. Stidger, in Association Men.

Mr. Burbank has left the world a rich legacy. He has magnified the same principle in the plant world that Jesus magnified in dealing with men and women. The great naturalist became a miracle worker, not by giving his time and attention to perfect trees and flowers, but by devoting his energies to weeds and imperfect specimens. There is something infinitely better in this life than to be a lover of the beautiful, and that is to be a helper and developer of the weak and crippled. Jesus taught that the righteous did not need a Savior, but he came to call sinners to repentance. Long before he came to the world Isaiah prophesied: "A bruised reed shall he not break." He came to redeem man, who had degenerated from the ravages of sin. When the gospel of Jesus Christ transforms a poor, weak, worthless specimen of humanity into a splendid Christian character, then you have the greatest miracle:

A Programless Church.

"I don't know where I am going, but I am on my way," very fittingly marks the activity of a large number of churches. They have no aim, no purpose, no goal toward which they are striving. They are only "going round and round."

With this attitude, is it any wonder that many of our churches have not grown in the last twenty-five years? I heard of a congregation that, twenty-five years ago, had about seventy-five struggling members, and to-day it has about the same number, and is still having a hard time to exist.

The idea of a program is fundamental to growth and progress. This is seen in the business world, and the business man who does not plan his work will not increase his business. Political parties have a program. They plan their campaigns, and work them, too. Our great educational system is based on a program. The child in our public school is trained according to a plan, a program. Even Christ, the Savior of the world, when he launched his gospel, gave a program for his disciples to follow. Listen to his program to conquer the world: "Go ye therefore, and make disciples of all the nations, haptizing them into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I commanded you: and lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world."

Again, in Acts 1: 8 is found the program the early church was to follow when it was organized: "Ye shall be my witnesses both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea and Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth." Here, then, we face the fact that the church was given a specific program to follow through the ages. If our Lord and Master was so careful in the beginning to map out the plan of work and set a definite goal for the kingdom of God, does it not prove that a program is a good thing, and even necessary for the best development of his church?

It is the church that has set aims that is apostolic and alive. No church can die that plans its work and works its plan. The church that gives itself something to do, and then earnestly tries to do it, will go and grow and glow for Christ.

While it is not claimed that a church program is the panacea for all church ills, it is believed, however, that it will save many a struggling congregation and revive a large number of dead ones. If the church officers would meet, formulate a large program, and place before the congregation some high aims, it would prove to be the salvation of a host of perishing congregations.—Christian Standard.

The plea for a program in church work is pertinent. It is gratifying to note that the writer of this article does not look outside of the New Testament for the most efficient plan. The program outlined by Jesus Christ cannot be improved upon. The modern churches with all their various organizations have never equaled the primitive New Testament church in point of efficiency. In those days when "they that were scattered abroad went everywhere preaching the word" the program was written deep in the heart of each earnest disciple. I sincerely believe the best and quickest way to get church members to do more is to get them to study the New Testament. The noble Bereans never lacked for a program. The Christians at Thessalonica received the word in much affliction, and from them "sounded forth the word of the Lord, not only in Macedonia and Achaia, but in every place,"

The Peril of Popularity.

Is there not a danger to-day that the church striving after the prize of popularity pay at last too great a price for its possession? At all costs, we are urged, we must do nothing to loosen our hold upon the middle classes; we must win the workingman-in a word, at all costs the church must trim her sails to catch the breezes of popular favor. Nay, at all costs we must be true to God and loyal to the highest. Offend whom it does and please whom it may, we must proclaim the truth as it is in Jesus. must set our sails to catch the winds of God, even though we are driven into stormy seas, even though the crew mutiny, and others forsake us, and we are left desolate and alone. We are following One whom all forsook and left, and whose companions in death were two thieves, crucified with him that they might add to his shame. it is sufficient for the church that she be as her Lord.

This danger is likely to become even more real and acute in days to come. In industrial areas we are more than a little fearful of conflicts as bitter, as tragic, as devastating, as international warfare. However the problems are settled eventually, the church will have to take sides. She will not be able to content herself with the statement of general principles. She will have to insist on their application. She will sometimes be called to do the unpopular thing. Her loyalty to her God will mean the world's ermity, and she will not be able to escape or ignore it. She will have to dare to be unpopular if she would be true to God's leadership and to God's truth. She will have to choose rather to be in the right with two or three than to be on the wrong side with the multitude.

There is but one standard of success for men and for churches—faithfulness to God; and the measure of influence is the measure of faithfulness.—Australian Christian.

The writer of the above paragraph struck the keynote of duty when he stated that faithfulness to God is the one standard of success for men and churches. But he seems to intimate that such faithfulness may drive us to favor one side against the other in some great industrial war that seems impending. This does not necessarily follow. The church would do wrong to take sides. But it would do right to insist upon the application of the principles of the New Testament, and particularly the Golden Rule, by both sides.

The cocoa bean is one of American's gifts to the world. The world's consumption of chocolate is increasing constantly, and the plantations of tropical America are being enlarged to supply the demand. The tree was cultivated in Mexico and Peru centuries before the arrival of Columbus. Chocolate was first made in the United States in 1765, and has been used constantly ever since, with the demand constantly increasing.—Exchange.

The Sober, Righteous, Godly Life.

BY JAMES E. CHESSOR.

In his epistle to Titus, Paul gives Christians pertinent instructions as to how they should live in this present world. "For the grace of God hath appeared, bringing salvation to all men, instructing us, to the intent that, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly and righteously and godly in this present world; looking for the blessed hope and appearing of the glory of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ," (Tit. 2: 11-13.)

We are thus taught or instructed to live the sober, righteous, godly life. This language, indeed, is tense with the idea of living—how Christians should live and what they should live for. It is the program or outline of a successful and happy Christian life. The three comprehensive relationships of life are embraced in the passage—(a) one's duty to himself, (b) his obligation to his fellow man, and (c) his relationship to God. Broadly speaking, these relationships and obligations are comprehended and defined in the adverbs "soberly," "righteously," "godly." In relation to himself, he must live "soberly;" in relation to his fellow man, he must live "righteously;" in relation to God, he must live "godly." Obviously, these terms overlap; fut, nevertheless, they add emphasis to the important relationships of life

To live "soberly" is to live within the strict bounds of self-control and reason. It is a duty one owes peculiarly to one's self. It cannot concern the other fellow so much as it concerns you. Other people will move along in the usual channel, regardless of the way you live; the world is little interested whether you live soberly or as the slave of unbridled passions. But it means much—it means everything—to you as to how you live. So much is at stake that you cannot afford to live otherwise than soberly, temperately, as becometh the child of God. Reputation, health, earthly success, eternal interest—all, all are involved, and they require of you that you be true to yourself. Cultivate a sense of genuine self-re:

"This above all: to thine own self be in a And it must follow, as the night the day, Thou canst not then be false to any man."

Self-control is one of the cardinal traits of Christian character. Simon Peter gives it emphasis by placing it in the list of seven fundamental attributes growing out of faith. "Yea, and for this very cause adding on your part all diligence, in your faith supply virtue; and in your virtue knowledge; and in your knowledge self-control; and in your self-control patience; and in your patience godliness; and in your godliness brotherly kindness; and in your brotherly kindness love." (2 Pet. 1: 5-7.) The apostle then adds this significant comment and exhortation: "For if these things are yours and abound [that is, if you cultivate these traits], they make you to be not idle nor unfruitful unto the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. For he that lacketh these things is blind, seeing only what is near, having forgotten the cleansing from his old sins. Wherefore, brethren, give the more diligence to make your calling and election sure: for if ye do these things, ye shall never stumble; for thus shall be richly supplied unto you the entrance into the eternal kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ." (Verses 8-11.) Self-control is an indispensable virtue in Christian character, and whoever lacks it will be "turned away from the beautiful gate."

Paul warned young Timothy to "flee youthful lusts." Let the young man be advised that nothing but remorse results from sowing wild oats. It is said of Benjamin Franklin that in youth "his private life was far from spotless," and that he "sowed a regrettable measure of wild cats." In old age, when he came to write his autobiography, he reflected with comparative satisfaction over his long life of usefulness and achievement. There was but one regret, the regret that sprang up with those wild oats. He points out the follies of his youth with characteristic candor, but adds that if he were privileged to live life over again, he should like "the advantage authors have of correcting in a second edition the faults of the first."

Alexander the Great mastered the world, but he did not master himself; he ruled rebellious peoples, but he did not rule his own spirit He was great in military science and statecraft, but he was not great in self-control, nor strong. At the age of thirty, at the height of worldly glory and power, he drops into an untimely grave, a slave to gluttony, drink, and insane excesses. In marked contrast with Alexander's death is the passing of Moses, the leader of Israel. Moses died on Mount Nebo at the age of one hundred and twenty years-an old man and yet a young man "His eye was not dim, nor his natural force abated." His eye retained the luster of youth, and his physical man was filled with the vigor that had sustained him for forty trying years in the wilderness leadership. Why was he an athlete at this advanced age? He had lived soberly, temperately, had cultivated the virtue of self-control-that is all. When asked some years ago why he looked much younger than he was-why his years had left so few marks upon him-the venerable E. G. Sewell replied: "Why, a clear conscience and good behavior keep one young." This was said in pleasantry, but it is the essence of truth.

To live "righteously" is to allow right to dominate in our lives and define our attitude toward others. The Golden Rule becomes our working rule, "And as ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise." (Luke 6: 31.) This is the duty that I owe to my fellow man as well as to myself-to treat him eminently and strictly right, always. I must have a care to do unto others as I would have others do unto me. Now, my brother's interests are comprehended in (a) his property. (b) his person, and (c) his reputation. These constitute the sum of his assets, and he is bound up in them. I must treat him right, then, in respect to his property, his person, and his reputation, just as I would have him treat me right in respect to my property, my person, and my reputation. In his adversity I am to lend him a helping hand; in his prosperity I am to rejoice with him. No turn of fortune's wheel in his favor should cause envy in my heart. Nor must I look upon his goods covetously. must spurn the sharp practice of the money-mad world and cultivate instead common honesty and fair dealing. I must substitute candor for duplicity, and generosity for

The mere fact that a human being is made in the image of God should secure for him the respect of every other mortal, and this irrespective of "race, color, or previous condition of servitude." The human body is a marvelous mechanism, "wonderfully and fearfully made." I do not think that the body in which a human soul tabernacles is a "vile body," nor do I care to dub it a "worm of the dust." Hamlet's tribute to man is more fitting: "What a piece of work is man! how noble in reason! how infinite in faculty! in form and moving how express and admirable! in action how like an angel! in apprehension how like a god! the beauty of the world! the paragon of animals!" And our brother's person, his health, is by far a more precious asset than his possessions. We must minister unto his wants when he is sick, nurse him and pray for his recovery. Jesus, the great and good Physician, who went about doing good, healing all manner of diseases, is our Exemplar. He sympathized deeply with sufferers.

But a man's reputation is his priceless asset. By reputation I mean character. What is property in comparison with character? What are health and the earth life when compared with reputation? "For what shall a man be profited, if he shall gain the whole world, and forfeit his life? or what shall a man give in exchange for his life?" (Matt. 16: 26.) "And be not afraid of them that kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul: but rather fear him who is able to destroy both soul and body in hell." (Matt. 10: 28.) His property may be swept away in calamity or misfortune; his "earthly house of this tabernacle" may be dissolved; but his character goes with him into eternity as an asset to save or condemn. Hence, we should be deeply concerned about the character of our brother. We should guard his reputation jealously. We must not do anything to cause him to stumble, but we must bear his burdens and strengthen him against temptation. We are we must be-our brother's keeper.

To live "godly" is to be Godlike in heart and deed. We were called out of darkness that we may manifest to the world the Godlike virtues. "But ye are an elect race, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a people for God's own possession, that ye may show forth the excellencies of him who called you out of darkness into his marvelous light." (1 Pet. 2: 9.) Godliness stands us in good stead in this life and blesses us in eternity. "And exercise thyself unto godliness: for bodily exercise is profitable for a little; but godliness is profitable for all things, having promise of the life which now is, and of that which is to come." (1 Tim. 4: 7, 8.) God's people must grow into his likeness in this life or be debarred from his society in eternity. Nor do I think the ungodly would be happy in heaven were they admitted. Shall they not, in the last day, hide for shame in the rocks, and beseech the mountains to fall upon them, to cloak them from the glorious appearing of the Holy One? Because such characters cannot dwell with the saints, they are to be "punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power." When the rich man lifted up his eyes in Hades, he saw "Abraham afar off," and between the two there was "a great gulf fixed." There can be no fellowship between righteousness and iniquity, and no communion between light and darkness. The ungodly must suffer everlasting banishment.

Finally, we must live scherly, righteously, and godly in this present world. It is thus that we look for the "blessed hope and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ." It is thus that we earnestly desire and hasten "the coming of the day of God," or the return of Jesus. There is no second chance. That damnable doctrine is refuted a dozen times over in the Bible. It is our sovereign duty to live as directed here. Our all depends upon the performance of that duty.

What They Said.

BY W. H. CARTER,

In recent issues of the Gospel Advocate a kind of "round table" has been going on, in which, from my viewpoint, many notions and opinions have been expressed and much conjecturing has been done. Some things helpful and some otherwise have been said. One peculiarity of most men is, when they take a position, being confident they are right, they catch on to everything, no matter how rare it may be, that they think favors their position. This is a weakness that the most scholarly are not free from. Another thing is, editors and leading writers rarely ever acknowledge they were in error. I do not mean they are dishonest, but that, after all, they are men in the flesh. Most of us are liable to go to extremes. While an extreme may be right, it is possibly more often wrong. We all agree that it is honorable to acknowledge an error; yet but few of us ever do so, because we become too blinded to our theory for one to show us our error. I do not believe any honest, sincere person will say hurtful things purposely. We should not impugn the motives of others, nor should we accept a thing as true just because some one says it.

Brother Paisley, in the Advocate of April 28, reports an incident concerning two Baptist preachers that is rare indeed. It is not often we hear of such from Baptist preachers. But did they preach the whole truth declared in the gcspel as the apostles preached it and as it is recorded in the New Testament? If so, they told them to "be baptized for the remission of sins." How much error will God put up with in accepting one's obedience to the gospel, and where will we find the information? If we fail to find it in God's Book, then who has the right to say? This, to my mind, is a question about which we should be very careful and go as slowly as possible.

On the question of obedience mixed with error, we have some very plain teaching. In the case of Saul, the first king of Israel, we have a forceful lesson. Saul was to "go and smite Amalek, and utterly destroy all that they have, and spare them not; but slay both man and woman, infant and suckling, ox and sheep, camel and ass." But "he took Agag the king of the Amalekites alive. . . . But Saul and the people spared Agag, and the best of the sheep, and of the oxen, and of the fatlings, and the lambs, and all that was good, and would not utterly destroy them," etc. When Samuel came to meet Saul on his return, he very positively said: "I have performed the commandment of the Lord." (See I Sam. 15.) Here we have an example of obedience mixed with disobedience—error. Did God accept it? He did not. Saul was rejected.

Another example is that of Nadab and Abihu. "And Nadab and Abihu, the sons of Aaron, took either of them his censer, and put fire therein, and put incense thereon, and offered strange fire before the Lord, which he commanded them not. And there went out fire from the Lord, and devoured them, and they died before the Lord." (Lev. 10: 1, 2.) This is another example of the mixture of obedience and disobedience—error—which shows the estimate God places upon it.

Other examples might be shown, such as Moses smiting the rock, and the young prophet (1 Kings 13) who obeyed in part and disobeyed—erred—in part; but these serve the purpose to warn me not to say anything to encourage any one to rely upon an obedience that is mixed with error. While I cannot look into the heart and tell what the purpose was when the baptism took place, neither can you. If I judge that they will not be accepted and you judge that they will, we are both judging, the one the same as the other. If it is wrong for one to judge, it is also wrong for the other to judge. If not, why not?

I have the idea that there is but little ground for misunderstanding and error in the plan of redemption. It is plain and easily understood. There are five essential things: (1) Hear, (2) believe, (3) repent, (4) confess the Christ, and (5) be baptized. These were preached by Peter on Pentecost, and were understood by those who "received his word." They were told plainly to "repent, . for the remission of sins." I fail and be baptized . . to see how they could "gladly receive his word" unless they understood him. People understand it now, and openly deny it. Then where is the trouble? It is in erroneous teaching. As is the teaching, so is the faith. If the teaching is erroneous, the faith will be correspondingly erroneous. Now, as to how much error God will allow here, he has not told us. This we have to guess at. I am afraid to guess. I had rather "speak as the oracles of God" and say: "Repent, and be baptized . . . for the remission of sins." That, all agree, is what the Book says—that is safe.

There may be, for aught I or any one else knows, some among the denominations who have obeyed the gospel, but I risk not the building of a theory on that. There is one thing we all know and agree to; and that is, those who believe the gospel, repent of their sins, confess Jesus before men, and are baptized for the remission of sins, do obey the gospel. That is safe. I have preached it for over forty years, and see no reason why I should not preach it to the end. My honest, careful, and unprejudiced judgment is, if all will preach and write only that which is written in the Book, controversy over this question will cease and more people will obey the gospel.

1 Cor. 3: 9-15.

BY C. W. SEWELL,

Verse 9: "Ye are God's building." Here the apostle introduces the figure of a building—compares the church to a building. In verses 16, 17 he calls it a "temple."

Verse 10: "According to the grace of God which is given unto me, as a wise master builder, I have laid the foundation, and another buildeth thereon." "A wise master builder." This was Paul. But how? In the capacity of a preacher. "Another buildeth thereon." Who is this other man? The correct solution of the passage depends on this. How does a man build on this foundation? "Yea, so have I strived to preach the gospel, not where Christ was named, lest I should build upon another man's foundation." (Rom. 15: 20.) This shows that the building is done by preaching the gospel, and that the other man who builds does it by preaching. "But let every man take heed how he buildeth thereupon." Take heed to his preaching in some way.

Verse 11: "For other foundation can no man lay than that which is laid, which is Jesus Christ." When Peter confessed, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God," Christ said: "Upon this rock I will build my church." Thus Christ as the Son of God is the foundation. (Matt. 16: 16, 17.)

Verses 12-15: "Now if any man build upon this foundation gold, silver, precious stones, wood, hay, stubble; every man's work shall be made manifest: for the day shall declare it, because it shall be revealed by fire; and the fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is." What does this various material represent? One theory is that the gold, silver, and precious stones represents a Christian's good works; while the wood, hay, and stubble represent his evil works. "If any man's work abide which he hath built thereupon, he shall receive a reward." But his evil works will be burned up at the judgment, and that though he have nothing but evil works. "But he himself shall be saved; yet so as by fire." But we have seen that the man who builds is one that preaches the gospel, and that he builds by preaching. How does the preacher build on this foundation? One says the gold, silver, and precious stones represent the truth that he preaches: while the wood, hay, and stubble represent the error he teaches. Remember that Jesus Christ is the foundation. Can a man build upon-add to-this foundation by preaching error? cannot conceive of such a thing being possible. If it is true, I want to ask, how much error can one preach and yet be saved? It would seem from the lesson that all the wood, hay, and stubble will be burned up, no matter how much. .So it would seem that there is no danger in preaching error.

But we shall now examine the Book and see if we can learn what is built upon the foundation: "Now therefore ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow citizens with the saints, and of the household of God: and are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone; in whom all the building fitly framed together groweth unto a holy temple in the Lord; in whom ye also are builded together for a habitation of God through the Spirit." (Eph. 2: 19-22.) The saints at Ephesus (1: 1) are thus said to be built upon this foundation. They are the material out of which the holy temple was built on this foundation. Again: "To whom coming, as unto a living stone, disallowed indeed of men, but chosen of God, and precious. ye also, as lively stones, are built up a spiritual house." (1 Pet. 2: 4, 5.) These passages show clearly that Christians are the material built upon this foundation; and it seems clear to me that the preacher, when he preaches the gospel to sinners, converts them and baptizes them, builds them on the foundation. (Acts 2: 46, 47.) But how does the preacher receive a reward, or suffer a loss, as the case may be? "For this cause, when I could no longer forbear, I sent to know your faith, lest by some means the tempter have tempted you, and our labor be in vain." (1 Thess. 3: 5.) If his converts had been tempted and led astray, his labor would have been in vain; he, the builder, would suffer loss, because his labor would have been in vain. "For what is cur hope, or joy, or crown of rejoicing? Are not even ye in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ at his coming? For ye are our glory and joy." (1 Thess. 2: 19, 20.) "Look to yourselves, that we lose not those things which we have wrought, but that we receive a full reward." (2 John 8.) "That ye may be blameless and harmless, the sons of God, without rebuke, in the midst of a crooked and perverse nation, among whom ye shine as lights in the world, holding forth the word of life; that I may rejoice in the day of Christ, that I have not run in vain, neither labored in vain." (Phil. 2: 15, 16.) These passages make that point sufficiently clear. Another difficult point in the passage is the fire that is to try every man's work. If I have reached the proper conclusion, that it is the falling away of the convert that causes the builder's loss, then the fire that caused the loss must be the temptations and persecutions that causes them to fall. (See 1 Thess. 3: 5, quoted above.) The apostle Peter compares the trial of our faith by temptations to the trial of gold in the fire. (1 Pet. 1: 6, 7.) The Psalmist says: "For thou, O God, hast proved us: thou hast tried us, as silver is tried." (Ps 66: 10.) God said to the Jews through Isaiah: "Bahold, I have refined thee, but not as silver; I have chosen thee in the furnace of affliction." (Isa. 48: 10.) "But he himself shall be saved; yet so as by fire." This states plainly that the one who builds will be saved; but if you ask what "yet so as by fire" means, I frankly tell you I do not know.

Steps Upward.

Take the guide's strong hand and go,
Though his name be Sorrow;
Do not fear to climb with him
To a clearer morrow;
He can take thee where the night
Passes to divinest light.

Pain holds out a hand to thee— Take it, never shrinking; Lift thy feet and rise with him Higher than thy thinking. He who follows pain's behest Has at length most perfect rest.

God has heard thy prayers. Be glad Thou art in his keeping;
Morning songs may sweetest be
After nights of weeping;
Sad one, thou shalt sing again
In the sunshine after rain.

An Encouraging Letter.

The following good letter has just come from our dear brother, J. J. Horton, of Elora, Tenn. I am giving it, not because it is the only good letter I have recently received, but to make a few comments and give some good thoughts he inclosed with his letter. Along with the sacrifices I have been making here, I have been sending out letters to help with the work at Savannah, Ga., and mailed Brother Horton one of these letters, with a few extra copies inclosed for him to send to others. Here is his reply:

Brother Hall: I received your very welcome letter sometime ago, with your letters appealing for help for the Sa varnah work, which letters I mailed out at once with solicitations urging immediate help.

I hope you and your family are well. But I think you ought to take a little rest. Christ and his apostles retired from the multitudes, at times, for needed rest.

Mrs. Horton is wearing her dear self out, to give me the absolute quietude I have been forced to take to rest my almost worn-out heart; and we are rejoiced to know it is steadily improving. So we think I can hold from four to six meetings this summer.

I have just passed the sixtieth milepost, and wish to live ten or twenty more years to be able to save many more precious souls through the power of the gospel, which I delight, above all things, to preach.

Brother Hall, your zeal and push is a very great source of inspiration to me, and no doubt to others. I hope to soon see you back, to give your life's work entirely to the great work in Georgia. If I can get well enough, would like to rejoin you in the work there. Mrs. Horton joins me in sending love to you and family.

On the above, I submit the following:

1. I seldom publish such letters, and am doing this not because it is the best, by any means, that I have recently received, but because I think I can do so and do good to others, and especially because of our brother's saying I should rest. Brother F. W. Smith, the man who baptized me into Christ about twenty-nine years ago, has been writing me along this line of late, and he thinks he has the right to scold me when I need it; and I love his scolding, because I know it comes from a heart that loves. But it takes Hugh E. Garrett, one of Georgia's best workers, to shoot straight at a fellow. Here is the way he comes in a recent letter: "I am delighted to learn that the work is growing so rapidly. But don't you realize you cannot continue in such strenuous work and keep yourself mentally balanced but a few years? Look at our dear Brother Harding-too much work!" About this caution that comes from these brethren, and from many others, let me make just a word of comment. I know I appreciate their love for me and interest in me. But I must say to one and all that I have never worked in all my life hard enough. That is, I know I have never worked so hard as Paul and some others whom I read about in the Bible worked. I believe if all of our preachers would work a little harder, there would be less envy and jealousy among them, and not so many of them would be overtaken in some sin. But I take this occasion to let all of my friends know that it is my intention to change my work from local work to general evangelistic work, for a while, at least. This will give me all the rest I need. I see no need of a man's quitting work to rest; just change from one kind to another, and nature keeps at work and does her own resting, It was not too much work that broke our dear Brother Harding down. It was too much of the same kind of work persisted in for years. And God bless Brother Harding!

He is the sweetest old man it has ever been my pleasure to see. Brother Perdue said something in this paper, a few years ago, about "growing old gracefully." Well, Harding did this; and if I had no other evidence of the power of God's truth in the soul to make man's nature truly divine, I would know it from what I have seen in Brother Harding.

2. Brother Horton was my colaborer in Atlanta for one whole year, about ten years ago. We had him there the year my nerves came very nearly going to pieces on me. We often spoke of him as our "medical evangelist," because he had practiced medicine about thirty years and wanted to quit that practice and give his whole time to preaching. We thought this knowledge of medicine should not be wasted, hence paid him a regular salary to help me with the work, with the understanding that all the sick that we considered financially unable to secure the services of a good physician he would attend without charge. During that year he gave me special attention, and doubtless he is the cause of my being still in the glorious work of preaching the gospel of Christ to dying men and women. It was our desire to make that a permanent feature of the Atlanta work, but Sister Horton's health was such at the close of the first year that our brother thought it best that they return to their home at Elora, Tenn. I shall never forget that glad, happy year in my history. And I want to say to the Doctor that I have never worked with a man I considered so nearly flawless in character. If there was the slightest sensation that was unpleasant in his heart or mine toward each other, I hardly think we were conscious of the fact. Dozens and dozens of homes were visited that year where the sick and suffering were found, and they were administered to with our dependence as much on prayer to God for the sick as on our brother's ability to diagnose a case and give the remedy. Let me say to Brother Horton, since he has expressed the desire to rejoin me in the work, that I wish I could live and work forever with such men, and it may be that this joy shall be mine again before this life ends.

3. But Brother Horton is not only a most excellent physician, having studied this mortal frame of ours and having learned something of the causes of its ills and the remedies, but he has studied what the Bible calls the "inward man," and prescribes well for him also. And we all know that the man who can give the prescription that meets the needs of the maladies now cursing so many in the church is a physician to be praised of all men. I am giving our readers a little prescription the Doctor hands out in leaflet form to the churches where he works. I shall give it 'o our members here. Here is the way it reads:

THIS LINIMENT IS A PERFECT CURE.

One half-pint faith, half-pint virtue, half-pint knowledge, half-pint patience, half-pint temperance, half-pint godliness, half-pint brotherly kindness, half-pint charity, one good resolution, well shaken together, three times a day, with prayer, will cure the devil's rheumatism, evil eye, blasphemy, grumbling, backbiting, tobacco habit, deceit; kills the nerve of prejudice and purifies the blood; and if we can get the worst man there is to use this prescription, it will restore him back to manhood and respectability will God and man: it will make him love his own wife and children better, and he will want to put them under the same treatment.

Now, if we can get this remedy used in the homes of this country, it will cause the ladies to wear full dresses, stop theatergoing, cleanse your heart from inbred corruption and preserve your soul blameless; it will stop men's wives from joy-riding with other men.

Shake well before using: rub until it affects the heart; keep this up three hundred and sixty-five days in a year; and if it don't cure you, you can bankrupt heaven.

My father made a liniment that one took both internally and externally. This liniment Dr. Horton is handing out is just such; hence let me suggest that you both drink it, then rub it in also, and you will get quicker results.

I can hardly close without giving that thought-producing statement of the beloved John to Gaius: "Beloved, I wish above all things that thou mayest prosper and be in health, even as thy soul prospereth." (3 John 2.) These words express my feelings for Brother Horton.

Denver (Col.) Notes.

BY JOHN D. EVANS.

On Lord's day, June 19, the brethren at Colorado Springs had the opening service in their new building, which is practically completed. Quite a number drove through from Denver to be with them on the occasion. Among the number were Brother and Sister J. C. Estes, late of Dallas, Texas, now located in Denver. It was my privilege to deliver the "opening" address at the morning service, after which we drove out to Cheynne Canon for "lunch on the ground," At the afternoon session Brother J. C. Estes was the speaker. Brother E. C. Fuqua began a series of meetings at the evening service, to continue indefinitely.

It was a day much to be enjoyed by all. The brethren there are to be congratulated on the progress they have made in the short time since they began housekeeping. They have a will to work, and work with a will. I do not know of a single congregation that started and completed a nice new building in so short a time. In this connection I want to say that in order to complete the work they have had to borrow about fifteen hundred dollars, or about fifty per cent of the value of the property. This is to be paid in monthly installments. We feel sure that a number of brethren among the older congregations of the South would like to encourage these brethren by sending a monthly contribution to them. We do not want to beg you to do so, but suggest this as a splendid opportunity to help in a worthy cause. You may forward contributions to the writer or A. W. Von Boskirk at Colorado Springs. The brethren at Boulder will soon have their new building completed and will also appreciate your fellowship in taking care of their obligations. I will make more definite announcement in regard to that later. It is very gratifying to us all to know that two new buildings will be completed in the first half of 1921.

It might be well to state just here that in order to secure the initial fund to start the buildings at both points it was necessary for some one to put up in advance five hundred dollars each. This was done by one of the Colorado brethren, and the following congregations and brethren have agreed to join him in helping to take care of this amount: The church at Sellersburg, Ind., through Brother G. A. Leach, $5 per month; the church at Denver, Col., $30 per month; churches in Marshall County, Tenn. (through J. G. Stinson, Lewisburg; T. A. McAdams, Petersburg; Hugh Leonard, Lewisburg; N. C. Sanders, Talley; H. C. McQuiddy, Lewisburg; W. B. London, Cornersville), a fund of $25 per month.

If just a few more brethren will follow the example so worthily set, the entire obligations of both congregations may be properly taken care of without placing a heavy burden on any one.

To those of us who are on the ground this plan commended itself as the quickest, easiest, and most business-like way to build up the work. If we had waited until we had all the money in hand, it would have been possibly four or five years before these brethren would have had a home of their own. During that period of time, if you will stand by us, even with the preachers we have, we shall, the Lord willing, have four or five buildings where happy families may meet together to worship the Lord. What do you say, brethren?

We are very glad indeed to have Brother and Sister

J. C. Estes with us in Denver. Professionally, they will minister to the body "chiropractically." Brother Estes assures us also of his desire to help in every way possible to build up the work of the Lord. There is room for more. Come on, brethren.

We are expecting Brother N. B. Hardeman, of Tennessee, to join us in a series of meetings beginning on July 10. Our people are looking forward with much interest to the occasion in the hope that much good may result from our united efforts to revive the work of Christ in this city. All brethren who are in reach of us or who may be visiting Colorado are invited to be with us.

It was a pleasure to us all to have with us recently Brother and Sister Barnett, of Lawrenceburg, Tenn., and Sister Katherine Hooper, formerly of Tennessee, but more recently of Thorpe Spring, Texas. The latter will be at the Colorado University at Boulder for some special work during the summer.

Age Limit.

BY H. C. FLEMING.

Adam lived 930 years; Seth, 912; Enos, 905; Cainan, 910; Mahalaleel, 895; Jared, 962; Enoch, 365 (translated); Methuselah, 969 (longest on record). (For these ages, see Gen. 5: 5-27.) Noah lived 950 years. (Gen. 9: 29.) From this period declining age begins. Abraham lived 175 years; Isaac, 180: Jacob, 147; Moses, 120. (For these, see Gen. 9: 29: 35: 28; 47: 8, 9: Deut. 34: 5-7.)

These all lived many years; their lives were in deeds obedient to God, except the effects of sin from Adam and Eve's disobedience, and for this they heeded the law then in force.

In David's time the limit was from seventy to eighty years. (Ps. 90: 8-10.) So, in general, it remains to the present.

Look over the lives of these men and compare their deeds with the deeds of the so-called "great" men of the earth, such as Nebuchadnezzar, Hannibal, Alexander, Cæsar, Napoleon, and others.

Birth and death are important events in the lives of men, but more important are their actions between birth and death. (Eccles. 7: 1, 2, 5-8.)

Knowing that death must be the end of this life, why do we shrink from it? First, because we know our actions have not been such as they should have been. Second, because all we have ever known has been in this life; therefore, we dread to try the unknown. The future lies unrevealed, as a matter of knowledge, to mortal eyes; all else is by faith; and this faith is strong or weak as we accept or reject the testimony. Some can die in the triumph of faith; others shiver and shrink at death's approach. Thus it has been, and thus it will continue with man until the end of time. (Luke 17: 26-30.)

When the young die, usually there are many mourners, because their friends know that it is the last they will ever see of them in this life. Hope, then, if they have it, is as an anchor for life again in a purer state.

When the old die, there are few mourners, because their friends and loved ones have passed through death before them; but what few of these remain weep with sorrow mingled with joy—sorrow that they will see the dead no more in earthly form, but joy, if all were faithful Christians, in the hope of meeting again in the resurrection morn.

If we could live as many years as Methuselah and spend our time in wicked deeds, what consolation could we or our friends have in death?

> When the last good-by is said By the living to the dying or the dead; If there is no hope to meet again, How sad our thought will be then!

Georgia and the Far Southern Field By B. C. GOODPASTURE

Hope.

According to Webster, hope is "desire, with expectation of getting what is desired." One cannot hope for that which he does not both desire and expect to receive. The man dying in his sins does not hope to go to heaven, because he does not expect to, though he may desire to; nor does he hope to go to hell, because he does not desire to, though he expects to. In the absence of either desire or expectation, then, there can be no hope.

Hope differs from faith in that it looks only forward to future objects. It does not look backward, nor does it contemplate the present. Paul said: "Hope that is seen is not hope: for who hopeth for that which he seeth? But if we hope for that which we see not, then do we with patience wait for it." (Rom. 8: 24, 25.) That which one hopes for he waits for, and that which one waits for is future. Though there is a difference between hope and faith, yet the two are vitally related. "Faith is the substance of things hoped for." (Heb. 11: 1.) It is "assurance of things hoped for," or "confidence as to things hoped for." We do not hope for that which we do not be lieve is obtainable. Faith supports hope and lends confidence and a kind of reality to it. Again, hope, looking forward, desires and expects good, not evil. There is not one dark cloud, not one dark speck, in all the heavens of Christian hope

The elements of hope, desire, and expectation are always the same; but the things hoped for may differ. The poor man hopes for better times. The invalid hopes for the return of health. The condemned man in his cell hopes for respite, commutation, or pardon. The Christian lives "in hope of eternal life, which God, who cannot lie, promised before times eternal." (Tit. 1: 2.) This eternal life is in the future, because it is hoped for. Among men in general there are different objects of hope; but among Christians, as such, there is a common object of hope—the hope of eternal life with all its blessings. Paul said the Ephesians were called in "one hope" of their calling. (Eph. 4: 4.) The hope of eternal life is the prince of hopes. If this hope should be taken from men, the world would be ruined in darkness and despair.

There is no hope comparable to the Christian hope. The man of God may be storm-tossed on the restless waves of angry seas, yet he does not despair; for he has a hope which is "an anchor of the soul, a hope both sure and steadfast and entering into that which is within the veil" (Heb. 6: 19.) This "anchor of the soul" is cast within the veil, in the haven of eternal peace, where no storms rage, where no billows swell, and where no waves roll. If we contemplate the Christian as a soldier, as well as a sailor, then he has "for a helmet, the hope of salvation" (1 Thess. 5: 8.)

Finally, the question is:

"Will your anchor hold in the storms of life.
When the clouds unfold their wings of strife?
When the strong tides lift and the cables strain,
Will your anchor drift, or firm remain?"

News Notes.

Brother Srygley labored with us in a fifteen-days' meeting which closed on Sunday night, June 26. There were seven additions. Brother Srygley did some fine preaching in his own interesting and inimitable way. The plain, simple, powerful, gospel sermons he preached were heard by fine, well-interested audiences. We all esteem him exceeding highly in love for his work's sake.

Brother G. E. Claus and Brother J. E. Boyd recently closed a two-weeks' meeting at Manchester, Ga. There were fourteen additions. A little congregation of fortyfive members is now meeting there in a rented hall. Last Sunday Brother Claus began a mission meeting in Moultrie, Ga.

Brother J. J. Reynolds, who was graduated from the David Lipscomb College last spring, is now with us. He will labor with the West End congregation in the field this summer. Brother Reynolds is preaching for the South Pryor congregation in the absence of Brother Hockaday, who is in the West on a mission not unlike that which took Jacob to his Uncle Laban's in Padan-aram. (Gen. 28: 2.) We feel fortunate in securing the services of Brother Reynolds. He is making good at South Pryor.

One made the confession and was baptized at our prayermeeting service on Thursday evening, June 30. One took membership at West End yesterday (July 3).

Brother R. E. Betterton preached at Griffin yesterday.

The Congregation As the Body of Christ.

BY LEE JACKSON

"And he is the head of the body, even the congregation." (Col. 1: 18.) "And subjected all things under his feet, and appointed him head over all things to the congregation, which is his body, the fullness of him who fills all in all." (Eph. 1: 22, 23.) In Col. 1: 24 Paul says: "I now rejoice in sufferings for you, and fill up the remainder of the afflictions of Christ in my flesh, for his body, which is the congregation."

The foregoing quotations are from that version of the New Testament Scriptures as translated by George Campbell, James Macknight, and Philip Doddridge, and edited and published under the title, "Living Oracles," by Alexander Campbell. In addition to these quotations, I subjoin an extract from the Preface to an independent translation of the New Testament by Prof. A. S. Worrell: "' Ecclesia' should have been translated assembly or congregation: and this would have been a rebuke to those who would swallow up all local assemblies in a consolidated denomination, or ecclesiasticism. The concrete use of the word 'ecclesia' justifies nothing beyond a local, independent assembly of believers; as, the ecclesia, or assembly, at Jerusalem; the assembly at Corinth, Antioch, etc.; and the assemblies in Macedonia, the assemblies in Asia, etc. The largest body of Christians here on earth that can exist under the use of the word 'ecclesia' is a single assembly or congregation of believers; and all those bodies of Christians that have merged their existence into an ecclesiasticism, or organized denomination, have simply missed God's thought on the subject. The religious world has got into a fearful muddle, and is divided up into almost countless factions, largely through the failure to translate 'baptizo,' and to translate 'ecclesia' properly. The word 'church' is no proper translation of 'ecclesia;' and it should never have found its way into the New Testament Scriptures." (Preface to Worrell's Translation of the New Testament, published in 1904.) Before me there is also a translation of the New Testament from a Greek original. put forth by a representative of the people known as "United Brethren." and published by Loizeaux Brothers, New York City. From it I quote the eighteenth and nineteenth verses of the first chapter of Colossians: "And he is the head of the body, the assembly; who is the beginning, firstborn from among the dead, that he might have the first place in all things; for in him all the fullness of the Godhead was pleased to dwell." I make these quotations for the purpose of placing them before readers who may not be aware of the existence of any other rendering for the word "church" found in the passages cited. And this use of either "assembly" or "congregation" instead of the word "church" by independent translators is by no means a recent thing. It dates back to the time of John Wickliffe, who made his translation of the New Testament into the old English before the beginning of Luther's Reformation

As I am not intending to offer any extended ideas of my own in regard to the subject indicated by the heading of this article, I will now quote at length from an article written and published in the Gospel Advocate by our own David Lipscomb more than twenty-five years ago. It was written in response to suggestions which I had offered in regard to the meaning of the passages which I have quoted. Brother Lipscomb says: "No one can possibly doubt that they apply to the individual and local churches." This statement is made with reference to passages cited, and then Brother Lipscomb continues: "Col. 1: 18: 'He is the head of the body, the church.' 1: 24: 'For his body's sake, the church.' Our brother contends this shows it required all the churches to constitute the body of Christ, 1 Cor. 12: 27: 'Now ye are the body of Christ. and members in particular;' and he compared one member to an eye, one to the foot, one to the ear, the hand, etc., showing beyond all doubt that the church at Corinth was a complete body of Christ within itself and without reference to any other church or Christian in the world. He speaks of the 'whole church' at one place. We say sometimes man is erect. We do not mean by this that there is a being consolidating all the men in a State, nation, or the world, that is erect. But we mean erectness is a quality common to all men, and so we speak of man as a whole. Just so, when speaking of things common to all churches, we say the church is the body of Christ, not meaning that all the churches are consolidated together to make one body, but that each and every church is the body of Christ in its locality, and what is common to all is affirmed of the church as of one body. This style of speech is common. This can be its only meaning. There is no development of the church of Christ in the world save in the local bodies. Paul uses this same general language of the church being the body of Christ to the church at Corinth that he does to the Colossians, Ephesians, and others, but affirms: 'Ye are the body of Christ, and members in particular.' The church at Rome, the church at Ephesus, at Colosse, each was just as much 'the body of Christ, and members in particular,' as the church at Corinth." I presume that no one will deny that this reasoning of Brother Lipscomb is both logical and scriptural. There are those among us who are now contending for a "church of Christ" as a general institution, and they are setting up the claim that we as a party are that "one church of Christ." With such persons Brother Lipscomb's statements should have weight, and they at least should induce a restudy of the church question before we too confidently assume the prerogative of being the one general "church of Christ" as his one only body.

Concerning the congregation at Jerusalem, in the same article, Brother Lipscomb says: "The church at Jerusalem was a complete body of Christ before another church was established. It lost none of its completeness when other churches were planted. And every other church was as complete within itself as was this church at Jerusalem. Each church within itself was a complete body of Christ. without any reference to any other churches in existence." In conclusion, he further says: "God has given to us the local church as the only manifestation of his body. It is the only body ordained or recognized by God as acceptable to him. It is 'the pillar and support of the truth,' 'It is the body of Christ.' The body of which he is the head. ' From whom the whole body fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love." (Eph. 4: 15, 16.)

From these extracts it will be seen that while Brother Lipscomb holds to the word "church" as used in the Au thorized Version of our English Scriptures, yet he does so with the tacit understanding that this word can only scripturally represent the idea of a congregation. He thus makes the word "church" conform to the meaning of the word in the original, as used by Christ and the inspired writers. Brother Lipscomb was not only well acquainted with the meaning of the original word as defined by the lexicographers and by its usage among scholars, but he was also well informed as to the rules that govern the proper interpretation of language; and better than all of this, he was so well acquainted with the inspired writings that he knew how to determine the meaning of a word in the light of its Bible usage. With this store of information, he knew that the word used in the New Testament warrants no other meaning than that of "congregation," or an assembly of Christian worshipers, and that to attach more meaning to the word "church" as the body of Christ is to go beyond what was intended by the inspired writers. Those brethren among us who are talking about a restored "church of Christ" larger than a local assembly of believers are not only missing "God's thought on the subject," to express it in the language of Professor Worrell, but they are digressing from the purpose of such men as Lipscomb. Milligan, Tolbert Fanning, Benjamin Franklin, Lard, and others of the best minds connected with our plea for the restoration of the New Testament order. The purpose of these consecrated men, and the purpose of all other scripturally informed men connected with our plea during the first half century of its existence, was simply to preach the gospel in its purity and to establish worshiping and working congregations of Christians, patterned after New Testament models. Their aim was not to establish one general "church of Christ." but many "churches of Christ," like those of the apostolic age.

Forgiveness.

BY A SISTER.

"They that sow in tears shall reap in joy." (Ps. 126: 5.)

How great the heartache must have been Which caused that noble hand to pen A statement which so few would make! And surely 'tis a heart of gold That to the world would thus unfold The sorrows of a sad mistake,

And on no other lay the blame, But on himself put all the shame. And offer no excuse for sin; But, like him who denied his Lord, Repent and fight the battle hard, And seek again the souls of men.

But surely 'twas no greater sin
Than oft besets the paths of men.
But just a purer, greater heart:
Yes, greater spirit, mind, and soul,
Than those who truth would not have told.
Nor meekly bore a bitter part.

But Christ the Lord will surely bless The one who would his sins confess. Regardless of the consequence: And all who have been born again Will him forgive and love the same, And for him pray in earnestness.

And to this truth you will agree,
That none from sin are very free,
Who journey o'er life's weary way;
But, blessed thought, He will forgive,
And that in heaven we shall live,
If we shall turn from sin away.

And he who would no sin e'er hide,
O may the gentle Savior guide,
Until his humble life is o'er;
And from this day, this very hour,
Through Christ may he have greater power
To lead sweet souls to heaven's door.

Does God Allow An Honest Man to Be Lost?

At many places in my meetings I find good brethren troubled over the salvation of honest sectarians who are fooled by denominationalism. I have never yet made up my mind but what God creates around them conditions or opportunities to let the honest ones learn the truth and come out; and those who do not come out, I am sure, would not turn away from sectarianism if Jesus were here in person to teach them. I am confident there were thousands of Sadducees and Pharisees when Christ was on earth who were just as good and honest as sectarians are to-day, yet they would not give up their doctrines to follow Christ when they heard his teachings and saw the miracles he performed. A few examples may help us to see God's work with honest men.

Brethren Edwards and Fox, leading members of the church of Christ at Abilene, N. C., at one time were superintendent and steward in the large Methodist church at Salem. They both began to read the Bible to better prepare them to teach Methodism, but soon learned that the Methodists did not teach the Bible, and they both quit the Methodist Church and began to study to learn the truth. For five years they kept up this reading, meeting once a week to tell what each had learned, and in the meantime they learned from the Bible that baptism is not only immersion, but for the remission of sins. They had never heard of the church of Christ, and often discussed whether it would be right, or accepted by God, for them to baptize each other. About that time Brother Foster went to that community to hold a mission meeting. Brother Edwards went to hear him, and the first thing before going home he went to Brother Fox's home and told him he had heard a man preach the gospel and was sure from his preaching that he would baptize them for the remission of sins. The next night both men went to hear Brother Foster, and after church they took him home with them, and, after learning much about the truth, next morning Brother Foster took the two men to the river and baptized them, and they are now teaching the church of Christ at Abilene.

Another example. Many years ago, near Hempstead, Texas, Brother and Sister Maxwell were leading members of the Baptist Church. Some trouble came up, and both quit the church and went home. They decided that the Baptists did not teach the Bible and that they would study to learn what it taught. They had no idea of a proper division of the Bible, and, like the eunuch of old (Acts 8), needed some one to guide them. For fourteen years they read the Bible and held family prayer each night, praying for God to send some one to teach them the truth. It so happened that George Harvey and Ed. Dabney passed through that country and stopped at a neighbor's one night and preached for the people who came to hear. Brother Maxwell, after hearing that one gospel sermon, going home that night, told his wife those men preached just like he read, and he felt that at last God had sent them that way to teach him the truth. They passed on to Willis. Brother Maxwell went to see his neighbor and to learn who they were and what church they belonged to; but the neighbors had forgotten their names, and did not know where they lived nor to what church they belonged. One year after that time Brother Maxwell was in Hempstead and related the incident, regretting that he could not locate the men. A stranger heard him and told him he knew the men well. and gave him their post office. So Brother Maxwell wrote to Brother Dabney, one hundred miles off, telling his trouble and experience. Brother Dabney sent him a date, went there and held a mission meeting, had fourteen additions, and started the church of Christ at Mossy Grove; and Brother Maxwell remained a faithful elder and teacher in that church the rest of his life.

With these examples and the statements of the Son of God that he gives those power to become the sons of God who believe on his name (John 1: 11, 12), I have but little fear about the honest man in any sectarian church being lost when he wants the truth. Again, Jesus says: "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself." (John 7: 17.) And when I call to memory the many peculiar incidents that have caused people to hear me and obey the gospel, I often feel like an unseen Hand is directing outside conditions to those who are willing to obey the truth, if they want to learn the same.

Let me but do my work from day to day,
In field or forest, at the desk or loom,
In roaring market place or tranquil room;
Let me but find it in my heart to say,
When vagrant wishes beckon me astray:
"This is my work, my blessing, not my doom;
Of all who live, I am the one by whom
This work can best be done in the right way.

"Buy the Truth and Sell It Not."

BY J. C. M'Q.

It is distressing to note the indifference to the truth. Some people act as though the word of God was of no more authority than any human production. Many men will say that the act of baptism is immersion, but that there is no necessity for being so particular to do just what God says do. Some years ago a gentleman said to me that the people who are known simply as Christians certainly teach the Bible, and that if it were really necessary to do just what the word of God says he would unite with the people known as "the church of Christ." It is strange that men will hold such views in view of the fact that people are justified through a belief of the truth and that many are lost because they have not the love of the truth. "And then shall be revealed the lawless one, whom the Lord Jesus shall slay with the breath of his mouth, and bring to naught by the manifestation of his coming; even he, whose coming is according to the working of Satan with all power and signs and lying wonders, and with all deceit of unrighteousness for them that perish; because they received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved. And for this cause God sendeth them a working of error, that they should believe a lie; that they all might be judged who believed not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness." (2 Thess. 2: 8-12.)

The "truth" mentioned in Prov. 23: 23 means the knowledge of God and his will concerning man in all of his relations to both his Creator and his fellow man. While the words "buy" and "sell" here used in connection with the "truth" are commercial terms, they by no means intimate that one may commercialize or make merchandise of the truth. It becomes an easy matter to corrupt or handle the word of God deceitfully for the purpose of selfish things. Hence, it becomes us all to look well to the motives which actuate us in all that we do. To buy or to acquire the truth requires a diligent and studious investigation of the holy Scriptures; for the duties and obligations of man are manifold, reaching out in so many directions that he cannot comprehend them all at a grasp. The word "buy" means to acquire the knowledge of God at all events; and in order to do this, too much industry and labor cannot be expended.

We must give something in return for the truth, but that something is not mentioned. Evidently it is not gold or silver, for gold and silver cannot buy the truth. It means that we must give our undivided attention to what God says, and then be willing to make every sacrifice and endure every hardship in order to possess it. Considerations of friendship, worldly pleasure, honor, or love of money should not induce us to fail to acquire the truth. "He that loveth father or mother more than me is not worthy of me; and he that loveth son or daughter more than me is not worthy of me. And he that doth not take his cross and follow after me, is not worthy of me. He that findeth his life shall lose it; and he that loseth bis life for my sake shall find it." (Matt. 10: 37-39.) Abraham had to offer his son in order to possess the joy and have the strength which comes through obedience to God. The children of Israel had to pay the price of a wilderness life, with its trials and hardships, to learn the lesson of providential care. The ancient worthies (Heb. 11) paid for the truth, or, rather, their loss of it, in pain. suffering, and death. No matter what the cost, every one should be willing to pay the price because of the home to which it leads when life is over.

We are admonished, "and sell it not," which means, when the truth is once acquired, let no consideration deprive us of it. We should cleave to it even at the risk of our lives. It is sad to think of the multiplied millions who, like Esau of old, sell this rich heritage for a mess of pottage-namely, the fleeting things of time. Some bargain the truth for the momentary gratification of their fleshly pleasures; others, for money; and still others, for the empty honors of this world.

But there is one obligation which truth imposes, to which I direct special attention and which I here presentnamely, our vows or promises to God and man. While the Bible tells man that his vows should be few (Eccles. 5: 2), it also tells him to pay his vows (Num. 30: 2). must pay them even at his own hurt, and change not. (Ps. 15: 4.) No man should vow to believe the same things ten years hence that he believes now, neither should he vow to teach the same things that he teaches now; for, if he is a close student of the Bible, he will find that he has been teaching some error. If one vows to do a thing which is right, and he finds the performance of his vow is to his hurt socially, financially, or religiously, he must pay it. When we make a promise to a fellow being, if we are honorable men, we will keep that promise if within our power to do so. If such promises to the living are sacred or binding, how much more so is a promise made to one who is dead-one who is beyond our reach and cannot release us from our obligations, no matter how much we might desire it. Those who would expect us to break such vows would certainly have a low estimate of our integrity, this being especially true if we were of the conviction that we did right in making the vow. more, if we should decide that our friend made a mistake in exacting the vow, still we would not be excused from keeping our vow. Men should cease to place a low estimate on anything that the word of God requires. It is important to obey God in all his commandments and requirements. Therefore, we should not sell the truth by being false to our vows to our fellow man, no matter what inducement may be offered us. To be true to such vows may bring upon us the censure and scorn of men; but the smiles of an approving God will be upon us, which, after all, is worth more than all the praises and honors that man can bestow. Man crowns to-day and crucifies to-morrow. God approves the right forever. "Let not kindness and truth forsake thee: bind them about thy neck; write them upon the tablet of thy heart; so shalt thou find favor and good understanding in the sight of God and man." (Prov. 3: 3, 4.)

There Can Be No Compromise Between Truth and Error. BY E. A. E.

Brother Sam Whitfield, of Ontario, Canada, has sent to me the following letter and resolutions:

Glencoe, Ontario, June 29, 1921.—Dear Brother Elam: I am sending you some propositions, which I would like you to call attention to in the Gospel Advocate at your earliest convenience.

You know considerable of the work in Ontario; you are interested in it; and the brethren here have confidence in you; and for these reasons, I think, the brethren will consider what you say regarding this important question. Pursuing the right course just now will mean much to the work here, and a mistake might lead to much trouble. Your knowledge of the word of God and your wide experience will help you to give the needed advice and instruction.

Is it not just as sinful before God to have instrumental music at a night meeting, prayer meeting, or Bible study, as it is in the breaking of bread? Are not such meetings worship to God? Are we not told what to do and what to have in these meetings? The question was brought up at the June meeting at Saint Catharines, but it was decided that that was not the place to discuss it and that they had no authority to do so.

These propositions were drawn up as a result of some talks that Brother O. H. Tallman had with these people in Owen Sound

Following is the latest decision that I have: "At the close of the evening service Brother O. H. Tallman made it known that our brethren differing in methods of service were desirous of coöperation and suggested that we choose five of our brethren to meet an equal number of them to discuss differences from the standpoint of Bible teaching. The matter seemed to meet with favor, and it was agreed that Brother Tallman and Brother W. D. Campbell, along with one brother from Saint Catharines district and two from Toronto, should be appointed by the churches to this important task."

This much was decided on Lord's-day night of the meeting. Your brother in the one cause.

S. WHITFIELD.

THE RESOLUTIONS.

The following series of resolutions, which originated among our conservative brethren in Owen Sound, will be presented and discussed on the Saturday afternoon of the convention.

It is with the sincere desire to further the cause of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ and his church that we present the following resolutions:

i. That we recognize each other as brethren in the Lord, and that we stand together in the hope of the gospel of Christ, and preach the same gospel, which is God's power unto salvation to every one that believeth.

That we desire a closer fellowship and cooperation in the work of the Lord in the Province and throughout Canada, as well as in the world-wide field.

That our preachers feel free and without any embarrassment to preach in any church whether there is or is not instrumental music used as an aid to singing in worship.

4. That we shall freely and without prejudice exchange church letters to members moving from place to place.

5. That we may with freedom cooperate with, and contribute to, any society organized for the sole purpose of furthering the cause of Christ, and that any individual or groups of individuals, or church or groups of churches, may do home or foreign missionary work in their own way.

That we cooperate in the establishment of a Bible college for the training of young men and women for the Christian ministry, both at home and abroad.

7. That we have one annual provincial convention, for the purpose of hearing reports from the fields and for the planning of future work, and such other business as may come before the meeting, and that each and all churches have the right to be present and to take part with as many representatives as they may wish to have.

8. That we recommend the full and free exchange of pulpits whenever and wherever possible, and we respectfully recommend that churches using instrumental music dispense with the same during the morning service.

 That our conservative brethren appoint a committee to inquire into the organization and purposes of the Ontario Board of Coöperation.

 That these resolutions be presented to each of the June conventions.

The resolutions to "preach the same gospel," to "stand together in the hope of the gospel of Christ," and to "desire a closer fellowship and coöperation in the work of the Lord" everywhere are scriptural and right and spring, we trust, from Christ's prayer that all his disciples for all time may be one, and from God's command to them to "give diligence to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace." Let us note:

1. There is but one gospel to preach, and it is always the same. It cannot be changed, perverted, or in any way modified. The anathemas of God have been pronounced already upon any man or an angel from heaven who attempts to preach any other. In Galatia there were some who troubled the churches of Christ and "would pervert the gospel of Christ," (Gal. 1: 6-9.)

2. There is but "one hope," and there can be but one way to stand together in that hope. This "one hope" is based on "the same gospel," the one unchangeable and "everlasting gospel" of Christ. There is a reason for this hope, which Christians must be able to give. (1 Pet. 3: 15.)

3. Christ prays that all his disciples for all time may be one, as he and God are one-"that they may all be one: even as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they may also be in us. . . . That they may be one, even as we are one: I in them, and thou in me, that they may be perfected into one." Just as Christ and God are one, Christ's disciples must be one. Christ prays for no other unity or union. There can be no other in Christ. There were no resolutions of agreement passed between Christ and God in order that they may be one; they are one as Christ states and in the way which he gives. They did not teach different things or practice different things. The way "to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace." to "be perfected together in the same mind and in the same judgment," to have "the same love," to be "cf one accord," "of one mind," is as plain and clear as the sun at noon upon a cloudless day in July or August. To refuse to follow this way is to turn back from following Gcd as did King Saul when he refused to obey God in utterly destroying the Amalekites, the sinners, and all that they possessed, but instead proposed to make a great sacrifice to God at Gilgal, which God never commanded. God commands all to "speak the same thing," to speak "as it were oracles of God," to "preach the word," to avoid all untaught questions, and to hold their opinions to themselves. To disobey God at these points is to "gender strife," to cause factions, and to rend the one body of Christ.

There can be no compromise between truth and error, or the way of God and the way of men. (Isa. 55: 8, 9.)

Denominationalism in its every phase and in every age of its existence has proposed compromising agreements to all who "contend earnestly for the faith which was once for all delivered unto the saints" (Jude 3), or the church of the New Testament with its simple worship and most efficient work. There is always a deception in these proposed agreements, unintentionally offered, it may be, and self-imposed, it may be; but a deception. It lurks in the thought that God's gospel and order of work and worship can be changed to harmonize with the opinions and ways and order of men-that a compromise can be made between that which is written by the Lord and taught by him and the teaching and practices of men in matters of religion. For instance, in many places now where so-called "union meetings" are held this deception is practiced, although it may not be intentionally done. The proposition is to "lay aside all doctrinal differences," or opinions of one's own, and "simply preach Christ," But those who make this proposition do not comply with it. One of their doctrinal differences is that "salvation by faith only is a wholesome doctrine and very full of comfort," and this they do not lay aside, but preach it with all their might in every sermon during the union meeting. If one should dare quote the commission to preach the gospel to the whole world in its completeness, telling sinners what to do to be saved, that one would be ruled out of the meeting.

There is that same deception in these resolutions sent · by Brother Whitfield, but in reference to other things. To accept and act upon them would be to make a compromise between the way of God in the work and worship of the church and the way of men. For, as Brother Whitfield says, if instrumental music can be used at all in the worship of God, or "in connection with" any act of worship, at any one time, it can be so used at all times. This is very clear to any one who would worship God "in Spirit and truth."

It is another deception to think "instrumental music" is "an aid to singing in worship." It is a hindrance to, and a perversion of, that worship. What does God command? Singing. Singing of what? "Psalms and hymns and spiritual songs." How? "Singing and making melody with your heart to the Lord" and "with grace in your hearts unto God." Besides this melody and grace in the heart, this lifting of the soul to God in praise and gratitude and prayer and spiritual worship, what else is to be accomplished by singing? "Speaking one to another," or "to yourselves" (margin); "in all wisdom teaching and admonishing one another," or "yourselves" (margin) (Eph. 5: 19; Col. 3: 16); singing "with the Spirit, and . with the understanding "-that is, in the language which the congregation understands, so that all may receive the benefits and blessings of the "psalms and hymns and spiritual songs" sung (1 Cor. 14: 13, 14). The musical programs of various musical instruments, the hired choirs of a few or many voices, while the congregation remains silent and is being entertained, is anything else but "an aid to the singing" or spiritual worship, or the worship of God in Spirit and truth. There can be no greater perversion of any order of God than this.

How to do what is now called "missionary work" is taught as clearly and as plainly in the New Testament as anything God has ever commanded. The church sent out preachers, supported them, and received their reports. convention was necessary. The convention perverts the way of God in these particulars.

The wise and good brethren in the meeting at Saint Catharines, of course, did the scriptural thing in declining to discuss these propositions and in deciding they had no authority to decide such matters.

All the churches of Christ can do is to continue to work and worship "as it is written" in the New Testament. They lose their influence and power when they do otherwise.

The one and only ground of unity and peace is the word of God-as Christ and God are one.

May the Lord bless and guide the good people of Ontario. I most assuredly love them as faithful brethren, am intensely interested in them as churches of Christ, and most earnestly pray for unity and peace and spiritual growth.

The First Duty of Life.

BY F. W. SMITH.

"But seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his right eousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." (Matt. 6: 33.)

Bible students will quickly recognize this statement from the lips of the Master as a part of that most wonderful discourse on the mount. He had given that beautiful and impressive lesson on the providential care of God, illustrating it by the Father's feeding the fowls of the air and clothing the grass of the field, and then impressed the lesson that God's children should take no anxious thought regarding food and raiment. But the thing about which they should be deeply and profoundly thoughtful is the kingdom of God and his righteousness. These the Savior exhorted his audience to seek first and foremost of all other things in the wide world. We should always bear in mind that everything Christ did for man and required man to do for himself is for man's highest and best good in this world and in the one to come. In the passage selected we have a plain command with a clear promise added: Seek the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all needed temporal blessings will be given.

THE KINGDOM OF GOD.

This evidently refers to that spiritual state or government over which Christ reigns as Head, or King, and which is entered by a spiritual birth-viz., a birth of water and the Spirit (John 3: 5.) This is the thing for all intelligent or responsible beings to do in the very morning of life; but-alas!-how many postpone it until late in life, after having given to Satan and his service the strength and vigor of their manhood or womanhood! In addition to the great loss sustained by themselves in the joy and gladness springing from a whole-hearted service to God and the blessed hope of life eternal, they rob God of that which justly belongs to him and bestow it upon God's enemy. There are abundant reasons why one should early in life seek the kingdom of God. The first and greatest reason is that God commands it. The second is that the wisest man that ever lived, one who had every means at his disposal for the acquirement of happiness by indulging the fleshly appetites, and who seems to have sought in vain through worldly channels for it, said: Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth, while the evil days come not, nor the years draw nigh, when thou shalt say, I have no pleasure in them." (Eccles, 12: 1.) Surely the experience and advice of such a man as Solomon was should weigh much with the youth of the world. He said what multiplied thousands of young men and young women are doing to-day is "vanity and vexation of spirit." Youth is the time to seek the kingdom of Ged, before habits of sin and evil become fixtures with us. It is much easier to extinguish a candle than a burning building, and it is much easier to pull up a sprout than a tree. Just so it is much easier to break off from habits of sin and evil early in life than it will be when they have taken deep root in our souls and grown with our years.

HIS RIGHTEOUSNESS.

God's righteousness and not our own is to be sought. The Pharisees had an abundance of righteousness, but it was their own, and not the righteousness that comes from God. The righteousness of God here is, I take it, that course of life that God would have us pursue-viz : a life of humility, self-denial, unselfishness, uprightness in all the dealings and relationships between men and men, prayerful devotion to God's service, and a willingness to suffer for the cause of Christ. There is entirely too much selfishness and esteeming oneself better than others among the professed children of God. Men and women, many of them, seem to be infinitely more concerned about their sons' and daughters' material and social interests than they are about their spiritual and eternal welfare. Boys have it drilled into them to make money, and are taught how to succeed in business, but not to seek the kingdom of God and his righteousness. Girls are trained to dress in fashion, how to entertain and move in society in harmony with all the modern conventionalities of the social world, but nothing much is heard of the kingdom of God and his righteousness. What is the harvest to be when the reaping time comes?

Prospect for David Lipscomb College.

BY H. S. LIPSCOMB.

David Lipscomb College bases its claims to the brother-hood for patronage upon its past, its present, and its future. Over thirty years ago David Lipscomb College was born in the mind of the man whose name it bears as an institution where the importance of the Word of God would be more fully appreciated. His idea was to found a school where the Bible would be taught every day just as any other subject. That that idea was sound has been evidenced by hundreds—yea, thousands—who have attended this school in the past, and other tens of thousands who have been influenced by them. It would be difficult to estimate the great good that already has come from the development of that idea. Of a truth did the prophet say of the word of God: "It shall not return unto me void."

This last year the enrollment was the largest in the history of the school. The curriculum has been enlarged; the character of the work has been improved and standardized. The arrangement of the work in three terms has helped very much by coordinating our work with that of local universities. This has been a great convenience to students as well as members of the faculty. At the close of each of these terms we have held regular, rigid, formal, written examinations on the work of the entire term. A record of these is carefully kept on file by means of the card system, so that when our students have occasion to go elsewhere a complete record of their work here is provided and presented in such a way as to get the best recognition. Our work has been further standardized by our institution coming into the Tennessee Association of Colleges, which guarantees to its members a uniform transfer, where full value for work done in any is granted.

The discipline of the school has been improved in many ways, chiefly in the impartial way in which it has been administered and the firm manner in which the rules have been enforced. We have sent home for disobedience of rules more students than any previous year in the history of the school. This is not written in a boastful spirit, for in one sense it is a pity; but it is the fact to show that the administration has carried out the promises made in the beginning. This discipline has been administered in such a gentle and patient way that those who were sent home went with the utmost respect for the faculty, and some are already anxiously awaiting the opportunity to come back in the fall and make good. In this connection two items of the rules and regulations in the catalogue should be emphasized. First, David Lipscomb College receives only students of high moral character; second, it guarantees to its patrons that their children will be associated only with that kind. In making good this guarantee, it has been necessary to send some students back home.

Too much cannot be said of the benefit of the religious life of the school—of the fruits that ripen from the daily study of God's word. You who have been strengthened and edified by attending services on Lord's day, think what a sublime influence it is on the lives of those who are here to have just such a service every day! Our daily chapel services are conducted in a spirit of reverence and devotion. A bymn, a scripture, a prayer—these serve to make the day right. At our prayer-meeting services about twenty of our boys and girls made the good confession and were baptized, under the teaching of their fellow students, during the current year. This, too, is a wholesome leaven at work in this school. Very few of the students leave the school without obeying the gospel.

Next year four experienced men will be added to the faculty-Brother E. A. Elam, Brother W. H. Owen, Brother B. H. Murphy, and Brother J. T. Rivenbark. All of these are well known to the brotherhood. Brother Elam has preached and taught and written for forty years, more or less, in our Southland. He will teach classes in the Bible. Brother Owen has been a teacher and preacher in West Tennessee for fifteen or more years. Brother Murphy has been in high-school work for a number of years in East Tennessee. Brother Joe T. Rivenbark has endeared himself to every one at David Lipscomb College for the last seven years, and is one of the graduates of 1921. Dr. J. S. Ward has been engaged as special lecturer. He will deliver a special course of lectures, accompanied by lantern views, in physiology and personal hygiene. These men and the others who have sacrificed and toiled for David Lipscomb College in years gone by make a capable corps of teachers for next year.

We receive daily numerous calls for catalogues. Our catalogue will be out now in a few days and will be mailed upon request to any address. The prospects for a wonderful year are very fine. Many of the former students have already engaged their old rooms. All rooms in the girls' dormitory and in the boys' dormitory are the same price. Those who send in their reservation fee now get the choice of the rooms. They are all good, but some are more conveniently located or have a better view out from the window.

At this time when you are thinking of the right place to send your boy or girl, just consider—is it safe to neglect their spiritual education by allowing them to go to a school where the Bible is ignored—yea, in some colleges despised and rejected? Will you not be held responsible if they grow up with worldly-minded associates in unbelief and indifferent to the religion of Jesus Christ? We believe you cannot afford to trifle in so important a matter. Remember David Lipscomb College, a place to get a thorough education, emphasizing Christian ideals.

Somebody's Birthday.

This is somebody's birthday,
Just as sure as fate;
Some little boy is six years old,
Some little girl is eight.
Some little boy is three to-day,
Some little girl thirteen,
Some little twins are exactly two—
Two apiece, I mean.

Some one is eating his birthday cake And laughing over the plums;
Some one is counting her birthday cake On all her fingers and thumbs.
Some one is bouncing his birthday toys Or winding his birthday watch;
Some one is not too wise or tall
For his birthday butterscotch.

Think of the beautiful birthday books,
Think of the birthday cheer,
Think of the birthday happiness
Every day in the year!
Every day in the year, my dear,
Every day we're alive,
Some happy child is one or two,
Or three, or four, or five.

The Parent As Teacher.

It would be exceedingly interesting to make a careful study of the home life of those who have made their mark in the progress of the kingdom as outstanding servants of the church. Certain shining examples occur to one immediately. It is probable that the great mothers of history have been not only strong in character and devoted in Irayer, but have also been faithful in teaching and training their children in religion.

That daughter of Levi who was providentially secured as a nurse for her own great son in the palace of Pharaoh occurs to mind at once. She faithfully instructed Moses in the elements of religion as she had received them from her fathers. It is only reasonable to suppose that Aaron and Miriam had received the same inestimable advantages, as they gave evidence along with Moses of the same devotion and character.

Augustine, the greatest of the church fathers, is associated in the mind of the church with his distinguished mother, Monica, who was a teacher as well as an affectionate mother and guide to her son.

Those who read the biographies of John and Charles Wesley cannot but be impressed with the value of the faithful instruction they received at the hands of their remarkable mother, Susanna Wesley.

One of the greatest preachers and most influential churchmen of modern times was Phillips Brooks. The following statement by his mother is quoted from the "Rellgious Education of Adolescents," by Norman E. Richardson, as a beautiful illustration of the place of the mother as a wise and understanding religious instructor of her children:

"There is an age when it is not well to follow or question your boy too closely. Up to that time you may carefully instruct and direct him, you are his best friend; he is never happy unless the story of the day has been told; you must hear about his friends, his school; all that interests him must be your interest. Suddenly their confidences cease; the affectionate son becomes reserved and silent; he seeks the intimate friendship of other lads; he goes out; he is averse to telling where he is going or how long he will be gone; he comes and goes silently to his room.

"All this is a startling change to the mother, but it is also her opportunity to practice wisdom by loving and praying for and absolutely trusting her son. The faithful instruction and careful training during his early years the son cannot forget; that is impossible. Therefore trust not only your Heavenly Father, but your son. The period of which I speak appears to me to be one in which the boy dies and the man is born: his individuality rises up before him and he is dazed and almost overwhelmed by his first consciousness of himself. I have always believed that it was then that the Creator was speaking with my sons; and that it was good for their souls to be left alone with Him while I, their mother, stood trembling, praying and waiting, knowing that when the man was developed from the boy I should have my sons again, and there would be a deeper sympathy than ever between us."-The Earnest Worker.

How Animals Bear Pain.

One of the most pathetic things is the manner in which the animal kingdom endures sufferings. Take horses, for instance, in battle. After the first shock of a wound they make no sound. They bear the pain with a mute, wondering endurance: and if at night you hear a wild groan from the battle field, it comes from their loneliness, their loss of that human companionship which seems absolutely indispensable to the comfort of domesticated animals.

The dog will carry a broken leg for days wistfully, but uncomplainingly.

The cat, stricken with stick or stone or caught in some trap from which it gnaws its way to freedom, crawls to some secret place and bears in silence pain we could not endure.

Sheep and cattle meet the thrust of the butcher's knife without a sound, and even common poultry endures intense agony without complaint.

The dove, shot unto death, flies to some far-off bough, and as it dies the silence is unbroken, save the patter on the leaves of its own lifeblood.

The wounded deer speeds to some thick brake, and in pitiful submission waits for death.

The eagle struck in midair fights to the last against the fatal summons. There is no moan or sound of pain, and the defiant look never fades from its eyes until the lids close over them never to uncover again.—Exchange.

The Child Jesus.

There came unto this world, long ago, a little Child; of a winter's night, and in a humble city among hills; in the garb of poverty and without state or splendors of any kind, save that the skies were for a few moments light near the place where he was born, and that watchers seemed to hear unearthly music above them, like songs from a better world than this. The little Child grew to be a Man; and the Man died a hard and bitter death; and he disappeared. But with that departure from among us, and immediately thereafter, came a vision; it was such as never mortals beheld before; it lit the earth as does the great sun when it stands above the hills and looks across the plain; it lit hearth and home, the cottage of the lowly and the palace of the knights; it lit up the dark souls of men and their weary eyes; in its radiance intellect grew and conscience revived; virtue was transfigured into righteousness, truth flourished once more upon the earth, and error and superstition began to crumble away. Let us note that men beheld in that vision-which, strange as it may seem, followed upon the advent of a humble Child-a calm and suffering Man. Ask not of others what may be seen in it; ask of your own hearts, for surely they can tell you better than any other.-Morgan Dix.

AT HOME AND ABROAD

J. D. Tant reports ten baptisms at Bear Creek, Ala.

F. L. Young will begin a meeting at Roxton, Texas, on July 15.

Twenty persons were baptized and ten added otherwise during L. S. White's meeting at Paris, Texas.

H. Leo Boles reports a good start in the meeting at Fruit's Chapel, near Hopkinsville, Ky.

The tent meeting at Vicksburg, Miss., continues with increasing interest. M. C. Cayce reports fourteen additions.

Alonzo Williams reports a fine meeting at Dexter, Ky., during which there were twenty-one baptisms and four restorations.

The Lindsley Avenue congregation, in Nashville, enjoyed two fine services on Sunday. Two were baptized in the evening. J. L. Jackson, evangelist for the congregation, will be away in meetings until September.

We rejoice with the Dallas congregation, at Huntsville, Ala., on account of their recent meeting. D. W. Russell reports that there were sixty-nine additions from all sources, and that R. A. Largen, who did the preaching, was at his best.

John M. Rice writes: "The meeting at Brooklyn Heights, Fort Worth, Texas, closed last Sunday night (July 3) Seventeen were baptized and two members confessed their wrongs. Fred Killion is their preacher, and they all love him."

The Gospel Advocate extends a message of sympathy to C. M. Gleaves and other relatives on account of their sadbereavement. Sister Gleaves died at a local infirmary on Friday, July 8. The funeral was conducted from the residence of her mother, Mrs. A. E. Clark, at Wartrace, Tenn. on Sunday afternoon.

From John T. Smithson, Louisville, Ky., July 5: "The meeting at the F Street Church, this city, closed on July 1. The plain, forceful, and logical presentation of the truth by H. Leo Boles strengthened the members and caused sinners to obey the gospel. Three were baptized, three were restored to fellowship, and one took membership."

If you know of any members of the church of Christ in St. Louis, Mo., kindly send the names and addresses to W. W. Moody, 3667 Botanical Avenue, St. Louis. They are trying now to find every member in that city. If you know of any one who is planning to locate there, please mention that one also. It is very hard to find some members without outside help. One sister said she lived in St Louis one year before she knew of the congregation.

From Ira Wommack, Sulphur, Okla., July 7: "I have just closed a meeting at Byars, Okla., that appears to have accomplished great good in many ways. Some excellent characters were baptized, among whom was one old mother who had been a Baptist for many years. We received the best and almost the first hearing the church has ever secured at this place. The brethren gave me their full support in every way. I will continue to meet with them once a month."

From H. F. Pendergrass, Louisville, Ky., July 1: "One week ago to-day I closed a very interesting meeting at Lone Ridge, Ky. Ten were baptized into the one body, two of whom had formerly been baptized into the Baptist Church. One took membership. There was good interest throughout the meeting, and I feel that much good was accomplished. The meeting continued twelve days. On the second Lord's day in this month, the Lord willing, I shall begin a series of meetings at Fairview, and on the first Sunday in August I shall begin at Fairmount. This will be my last meeting for this year, as I expect to enter the David Lipscomb College this fall."

From Earnest C. Love, Fresno, Cal., July 4: "The Fresno Street church of Christ enjoyed two good services yesterday, as usual. We had the evening service at the Home and School, and will continue to hold our Sunday-evening and nidweek services here for a few weeks, at least. We want to raise two thousand dollars by August 1 in order to begin on our school building. The prospects look good for a good school, if it can be properly financed. We appeal to our friends to help us in this the greatest effort of our lives to build up an institution that will be a credit to the brotherhood; and who can estimate the value it will be to the children who will come under its influence?"

Regarding the work at F Street, in Louisville, Ky., H. Leo Boles writes: "This is a small congregation, but some of the Lord's faithful children worship there. John T. Smithson labors in word and deed with this church, and it has had a substantial growth since he began work with it. Brother Smithson is a tireless worker and holds 'the pattern of sound words' in all of his teaching. Many from Campbell Street Church, Bardstown Road, and Parkland attended the services and helped very much by their presence and coöperation. Brethren Kurfees, Craig, Rainey, Pendergrass, Smith, Curtis, and Smithson assisted much in prayers and encouragement and helped to make my stay in Louisville pleasant."

From I. A. Douthitt, Sedalia, Ky., July 8: "I began a meeting at Lexington, Tenn., on June 26 and ran it over till July 6. We had large audiences at all the services, and the people seemed to be interested in the meeting. We closed the meeting at the water on Wednesday morning with eleven baptisms, and one girl came forward and confessed her sins and asked for the prayers of the brethren. We have a fine congregation of brethren at Lexington, and they are doing some fine work, but they, like many other congregations, could do much more than they are now doing. They need a man who is not afraid to work, one who is willing to show his faith by his works, to locate with them and live and work with the church."

From John Taylor, Waverly, Tenn., June 30: "L. L. Brigance, of Henderson, Tenn., began a meeting for the church here on June 12 and continued it till June 25. We all enjoyed his visit. He made my home his home while here. We were more than glad to have him with us. This was his second meeting with us here. He was here last year. F. L. Paisley, of Memphis, Tenn., was a welcome visitor in my home and in the meeting three or four days during the second week. At the request of Brother Brigance and myself, he preached one day. He delivered an excellent sermon. The meeting resulted in four baptisms, and one who had wandered away into digression elsewhere was taught 'the way of the Lord more perfectly' and placed her membership with the congregation here to worship 'as it is written.'"

From Otis J. Haynes, Hensley, Ark., July 8: "I am gradually regaining my health and strength. I am in destitute circumstances. My family and I have had a trying time. A few brethren have sent to my aid. I am doing all I can in preaching the word to the perishing; am busy every Lord's day; but this is a sectarian country, and I will have to do the work at my own charges. I am located nineteen miles south of Little Rock on the Iron Mountain Railroad. Any of my brethren who are satisfied with 'what is written,' living on or near the Iron Mountain Railroad between Little Rock and Monroe, La., if you should need some assistance on Lord's days, let me hear from you. I have no time for meetings, as I must get on my feet before I can hold meetings; but I am willing to sacrifice my time on Lord's days. I will also appreciate it if some congregation will send me a dozen or more song books."

A. G. Freed writes: "I am now with the church at Marietta, Miss. This is the old battle field of the Srygley-Honnell debate of many years ago, and also of the Freed-Pigue discussion of recent years. The church is alive. It is interesting to note that many of our best members were Methodists during these discussions. They learned the truth in the heat of debate and are now contending for the way they once persecuted. But the day of debates is passing. Many of our brethren have learned to please their hearers. They discourse long on the 'power of the blood' and 'nothing but the blood,' but never show the people how to reach the benefit of the blood. The meeting starts of with fine interest; audiences day and night are large; good singing, order excellent. My next is with Old Union Church, near Murray, Ky., beginning on the third Sunday in July. From there I go to Middleton, Tenn. This is another old battle field, the scene of the Freed-Penick debate and the Freed-Pigue debate. Here we have a splendid membership, and a neat, new house of worship, built since these discussions. The fifth Sunday in July is the day set to begin. Everywhere I go I meet the old students. They are a fine class of men and women, faithful and loyal. From every source there comes the question: Will you be in the schoolroom the coming session? I take this method of answering. The Board of Trustees of the Freed-Hardeman College, at my request, placed me in the field for the general good of the school as president. I will have no connection with the classes or class work in the college the coming session."

L. B. Jones is in a good meeting at Bay Minette, Ala,

Lee Warren, of Wills Point, Texas, has the second and third Lord's days in August open for a meeting.

- J. M. Gainer will begin a meeting for the Wells Hill congregation, near Fayetteville, Tenn., on September 4.
- J. H. McBroom, of Shelbyville, Tenn., called to see us last Saturday. He was en route to Little River, Ky., to begin a protracted meeting.
- R. V. Cawthon reports eighteen baptisms during the meeting at Tracy City, Tenn. He is now at Millertown, a mission point near Olmstead, Ky.
- W. T. Hines, of Palacios, Texas, closed a good meeting at Bayview, with eight baptisms and a congregation set in order. Many out in the world heard the truth.
- W. M. Oakley reports a growing interest in the meeting at Coopertown, Tenn., with four baptisms up to July 8. J. D. Derryberry is conducting the song service.
- O. W. Rawlings, of Savannah, Ga., writes that Paul Slayden had a splendid meeting in that city. Two came from the Baptists and took their stand with the church of Christ.

The meeting at Gainesville, Texas, lasted twelve days, and there were eighteen additions to the congregation. J. S. Dunn did the preaching. He is now at Garrett, Texas, and will begin at Era on July 17.

J. C. Pendergrass is in a meeting at Brimstone, Tenn. He will begin next Sunday at Pine Hill. Brother Pendergrass will have time for other meetings after September 1. Address him at Route 1, Moss, Tenn.

Conditions arose which led to the cancellation of a meeting by Charles F. Hardin for the last two weeks in August. He has this time open for song leading or preaching. Address him at 843 Phillips Street, Springfield, Mo.

The death of J. S. Cunningham, of Olmstead, Ky., on July 6, removed from this earth one of God's noblemen who will be greatly missed. A. B. Lipscomb conducted the funeral service, being assisted by R. V. Cawthon.

H. W. Wrye has just closed an interesting meeting at the Powder Plant. There were a number baptized, several restored, and a congregation of some forty or fifty disciples brought together to carry on the work of the Lord.

A small band of brethren and sisters at Graysville, Tenn., are trying to build them a house of worship, which is sorely needed. They would appreciate contributions for this work from the readers of the Gospel Advocate. Send to J. A. Black, Graysville, Tenn.

B. W. Davis, of Ashland City, Tenn., preached during the month of June at Sycamore, Petersburg, Greenbrier (Cheatham County), and Antioch (Dickson County), with a good interest at each place. He will hold a meeting for the church at Scottsville, Ky., beginning on October 2.

Many were pleased and uplifted by the first-page article, "The Unexplored Remainder," which appeared in our issue of June 30. W. J. McAlister, of Fayetteville, Tenn., pronounces it "as fine an article as ever appeared in print." The article was written by Jesse Checkland, who lives in Great Britain.

C. E. Wooldridge closed an eleven-days' meeting at Handley, Texas, on July 6. Five were baptized, several were "almost persuaded," and the church was edified. In regard to the preaching J. W. Hubbard writes: "I know of none more efficient or that loves the word of God better than Brother Wooldridge."

Our readers will please not overlook the fact that the Tennessee Orphan Home is needing funds with which to make improvements. We are contemplating building a new house on the farm, also making improvements that are much needed in the Home at Columbia. A liberal contribution will be appreciated just now.

Will J. Cullum had a good hearing at both services at Reid Avenue, this city, last Sunday. One confession and baptism. He will be in Mississippi one month, beginning next Lord's day. This is a mission work, and is being supported by the Reid Avenue and Twelfth Avenue congregations and by a sister at Ostella, Marshall County, Tenn.

L. F. Mason, of Whitewright, Texas, is critically ill at the Woman's Hospital, in Nashville. His faithful wife is with him. Brother Mason has undergone some serious operations and has spent his all in an effort to get well. He will greatly appreciate financial assistance at this time. We hope many kind-hearted, Christian friends will come to his aid.

J. S. Daugherty has sold his home at Kirbyville, Texas, and is now ready to move to a new field of endeavor, preferably some point in Northeast or Central Texas. Brother Daugherty has lived in Southeast Texas since 1911, during which time fifteen congregations have been established through his efforts. This is certainly a good record, and we hope Brother Daugherty and his wife will soon be pleasantly located in some field. He is now in a meeting in Hardin County, and will go next to Hope, Ark.

From E. Gaston Collins, Delrose, Tenn., July 2: "On June 28 we closed what the brethren thought was a good meeting at Dayton, Tenn., of ten days' duration. We had a good hearing throughout, and succeeded in breaking down some prejudice and arousing some of the brethren. We had two additions by primary obedience, a Baptist and a Methodist. J. H. Arrowood lives there. He preaches some. The membership is small and peaceful and respectable. They have a good house of worship."

For several years it has been the custom to remember the birthday of the superintendent of the Belle Haven Orphans' Home by sending an offering to be used in this good work. It has been decided to apply this year's offering to building a poultry house and securing better fire protection. A recent fire, during which the lives of the little ones were endangered, shows how badly such improvement is needed. Remember the date, July 20, and send your offering to Sister Jennie Clarke, superintendent, at Luling, Texas.

- R. N. Moody writes: "In the latter part of the week before the fifth Sunday in this month I shall leave Corinth, Miss., over the Southern Railway, for Athens, Ala., near where I am to begin a meeting on the first Sunday in August. So I will have the fifth Sunday in this month and the week following that I could spend in a meeting. If any one on or near that route would like to have me hold a meeting at that time, let him write me at Corinth, Miss., care of W. B. Brice. I think I could arrange to begin the meeting on Friday night before the fifth Sunday."
- J. S. Jones, of Senath, Mo., thinks R. H. Pigue "is on the run." Here is his explanation: "Pigue, the mogul of Methodism, came to our town on June 15 to preach his doctrinal sermons, but used the greater part of his time criticizing other people. I challenged him for a debate, but he refused. A burnt child is afraid of the fire. As he refused, we decided to follow with a meeting to expose his sermons. The meeting continued for eight nights, with great interest, good preaching, and fifteen added to the cause. J. P. Lowrey, of Paragould, Ark., did the preaching. It is needless to say that it was done well."

Horace W. Busby writes: "My meeting with the Pearl and Bryan Streets congregation, in Dallas, Texas, was one of the best meetings of the year. Large crowds, good singing, fine interest. The meeting closed with the house full and several additions at the last service. There were about forty added to the congregation through the meeting—more than twenty by baptism. Brother Colley is a great colaborer. He assisted much and did all the baptizing. I promised to return another year. This seems to be a great year for meetings. There were about two hundred and fifty additions from all sources through my meetings in May and June—more than one hundred and fifty baptisms. Austin Taylor and I are now in Georgetown in a splendid meeting. Large crowds are hearing the word."

From C. E. Holt, Florence, Ala., July 5: "The church of Christ at Florence has had a very enjoyable and successful meeting of fifteen days' duration, with N. B. Hardeman, of the Freed-Hardeman College, Henderson, Tenn., doing the preaching The preaching, of course, was of a high order as to scriptural soundness and the logical and attractive style in which it was presented. Our audiences were large and responsive and appreciative. A. J. Veteto was our "Sankey" in the meeting, except the last two days, when the song service was committed to that wonderful singer, Will Klingman, of Nashville, Tenn. Brother Veteto impressed us very favorably as being a very consecrated man, with his whole heart in the work. He is a member of the faculty of the Freed-Hardeman College. Sister Hardeman cheered us with her presence during the last few days of the meeting. The church of Christ in Florence is growing, not only numerically, but along other lines. Ben Harding, son of the illustrious J. A. Harding, is our regular preacher. He is, to use a style not classical, perhaps, but strong and emphatic, 'all wool and a yard wide.' He is very efficient and is highly esteemed by the entire congregation. Twenty-three persons came into the fold during the meeting.'

How Much Shall I Give?

BY H. M. PHILLIPS.

The question of this article is not, 'Shall I give to be accepted of God?" but, "How much shall I give?" Is there a definite answer to the question? If so, who is able to give it by a "Thus saith the Lord?" Some claim a tenth is what God requires; others say a tenth belongs to the Lord, and that we have not given anything till we give over a tenth. So It is a very much unsettled affair.

Abraham gave a tenth to Melchizedek (Gen. 14: 20); Jacob promised a tenth to the Lord (Gen. 28: 22); and the law to the Jews was to give a tenth (Lev. 27: 30-33).

There were four kinds of tithes binding: People to Levites (Num. 18: 21-24), Levites to high priest (Num. 18: 28), for feasts and sacrifices (Deut. 14: 22-24), and a third-year feast (Deut, 14: 28, 29). An oath or statement was made that the command was obeyed (Deut. 26: 12-15): and the offering could be changed to money if distance required it (Deut. 14: 25). This was under the old law, and, of course, does not apply to us unless it is clearly brought into the new. Where is it taught in the new law that a tenth is to be given? Who is able to answer?

Christ commended the widow who gave all the money she had (Mark 12: 42-44), and Zaccheus said he gave half of his goods to the poor (Luke 19: 8); but these were both under the law of Moses. After the church was set up, the disciples who had lands or houses at Jerusalem sold them and brought the price and laid it at the apostles' feet. (Acts 4: 34, 35.) Do we have to give all we have to be apostolic?

But we are told to lay by in store as prospered. (1 Cor. 16: 2.) We must have a willing mind (2 Cor. 8: 12), give cheerfully (2 Cor. 9: 7), as we purpose in our heart (2 Cor. 9: 7); there is to be an equality (2 Cor. 8: 14), and we are to give of our earthly possessions (1 Cor. 9: 11). This and more might be given, but as yet we have no definite amount ordered for us to give. How am I to know when I have given enough to be accepted of the Lord? If I go by my feelings in this, what else does the Lord so accept? If the old law is to be the guide in the amount, why not in other things as well? Could we very successfully meet the music question, or the Sabbath question, and hold to the tenth in giving? At Jerusalem they gave all they had. In Corinth and Galatia they were told to lay by in store. Thus it seems that from all to a little is accepted. If it is thus, will any one be condemned unless he fails to give any at all? If Brethren write much and preach long, and a great deal of talk in general is given on the subject of giving; but in it all, have we heard just how much one should give to please God? Brethren, is this question's answer in Babyion, and can we get it out? Who is ready to make the effort? I would like to see this particular question discussed. What is the meaning of "give as prospered?" How much of it must I give? How many of us really know we are giving as God wants us to? We have means to know whether we partake of the Lord's Supper as it is commanded or not; whether we have been baptized right or not; but are we certain about our giving, as we are about other things? The question is not, "Should I give?" nor, "How give, whether in basket or on table?" nor, "When give?" but, "How much shall I give?" to know God has accepted my giving?

If I should not make anything for a few weeks or months, is it all right for me not to give, as I have not been prospered? If the church would give a tenth, I am sure there would be many more dollars in the treasury than are; but would that be what is required? The more wealth one has, the more he can make, and the more he could give to God; but should he give most of his wealth to God and work with just a little? If I give a quarter with a willing mind and a dollar with a grudge, to be sure, the quarter is the one the Lord accepts: but am I justified in continuing to give the quarter? If I develop so as to give five dollars willingly, am I to stop at that? Where is the line to be drawn? Some willingly give all; others give just a small amount. Are both equally accepted if equally wealthy?

THE SHADOW OF CHRISTIANITY.

In former articles I have tried to lay the foundation for this study by calling attention to shadows in general. In this article let us study something of a more specific nature—"the first day of the week in the shadow."

Among the teeming millions of all this world's people, among the civilized nations, there can be found no more universal practice than the celebration of the first day of the week. Cessation of labor on this day is considered essential to good homes, good communities, and good nations. Any community or nation that has no regard for the solemnity of this day is an undesirable home for the intelligent masses. This part of Christianity is of practical use to all classes, whether skeptic, infidel, or Christian. Could we but ascend to heights from which we could view the cessation from labor every Sunday, our minds, no doubt, would ponder the cause. In watching the constant motion of machinery, the rustle of mechanics, the constant activity of business, the continuous file of human beings to and from labor day by day, and the steadiness of craftsmen, clerperformers. and professional workers, we would be impressed that not one hour could be lost. However, to our surprise, on Sunday mornings the wheels of machinery are stopped. business is closed, mechanics have taken a holiday, farms lie undisturbed; and our own anxiety urges, why this change? This silence is broken by a goodly number of all professions of life moving to the various churches for the worship of the most high God; others spend the day in pleasure; while those who on this day are compelled to labor are considered the more unfortunate of the human race. Such an influence in the world has certainly originated from some fountain that has spread itself to the hearts and lives of the weary masses as the waters have quenched and cheered the withering flowers. In fact, we cannot understand how we could live our allotted time without its ever-recurring season of rest and rejoicing. Among the many holidays, there is none so often celebrated as the day we call "Sunday." Though our celebrations of national holidays occur annually, and our devotion to them is unabated, we fiftyfold more vield ourselves cheerfully and profitably to the weekly holiday. While we Americans rejoice in the celebration of the Declaration of Independence on the Fourth of July, we devote but one day to so important an occasion; yet one day out of each week is an active expression of the greater importance of the celebration of the first day of the week. To determine the source of this day, whence came its celebration, we should seek its origin. Did it originate with God or man? Is it of Christianity or paganism? Is it incidentally connected with the service of God, or is it an essential feature of Christianity? It is just as much a part of Christianity as the priest and sacrifices, which were shadows of Christ's sacrificial and priestly relation to Christianity. This being true, it is necessary to show that the first day of the week is represented in the shadow.

FEAST DAYS OF THE LAW—FEAST OF UNLEAVENED BREAD.

The particular day upon which a sacrifice is to be made is as much a part of the shadow as the sacrifice itself. The passover of the Lord is set forth in Lev. 23: 4-8, and the day upon which it was to be observed was a part of the command as well as the thing done. The passover was a shadow of Jesus, our Passover, and Paul refers to its manner of being kept by Christians in the substance. (1 Cor. 5: 6-8.)

This passover always came on the fourteenth day of the month, and the days of unleavened bread always began on the fifteenth day of the month Of course it would come on one day of the week one year, another day of the week the next year. Thus far nothing is said of the first day of the week. But the seven days of unleavened bread included every day in the week. One day was specifically designated for the waving the sheaf of the first fruits. This the Lord said should be done "on the morrow after the Sabbath." (Lev. 23: 10, 11.) single sheaf was offered on a certain day-" on the morrow after the Sabbath." "The morrow after the Sabbath" was Sunday, the first day of the week. It made no difference what day the days of unleavened bread began, there would always be a Sabbath; and "on the morrow after the Sabbath" this single sheaf was offered. Whatever this sheaf foreshadowed, it was to be the first day of the week; and the shadow necessarily must represent that part of the body of which it is the shadow

This harvest was the shadow of the great harvest of the resurrection from the dead. Paul, speaking of it, says: "But now hath Christ been raised from the dead, the first fruits of them that are asleep. . . . Christ the first fruits; then they that are Christ's at his coming." (1 Cor. 15: 20-23.) Thus God's light was shining upon the resurrection of Jesus, the first fruits of the great harvest foreshadowed by a single sheaf. For fifteen hundred years the law demanded the Jew to offer a single sheaf on the first day of the week; but when Jesus was crucified, and rested in the tomb over the Sabbath, the shadow had reached the substance which it represented, and must needs give way to the glorious light of the gospel of Christ, as the shade of night is dispelled by the king of day. "As it began to dawn toward the first day of the week, came Mary Magdalene and the other Mary to see the sepulcher. And behold, there was a great earthquake; for an angel of the Lord descended from heaven, and came and rolled away the stone, and sat upon it. His appearance was as lightning, and his raiment white as snow; and for fear of him the watchers did quake, and became as dead men." (Matt. 28: 1-4.) Thus on the first day of the week is Jesus declared to be the Son of God with power by the Spirit of holiness by the resurrection from the dead. Hence, the first day of the week is shown to be a part of the plan of redemption and the wisdom and economy of God, according as his will shining upon Christianity placed it in the shadow.

In the next article I want to look at the day of Pentecost as a part of God's plan of salvation in the shadow. May the Lord help us to see more than endless rites and ceremonies in his great law; and when we do, a study of the Old Testament can be carried out with renewed interest.

FIELD REPORTS

Fort Worth, Texas, July 6.—I closed a two-weeks' meeting at Shamrock, Okla., with fourteen baptisms and two restored to fellowship, on July 3. Brother A. S. Hall, of Ada, Okla., had charge of the singing. He is one of the most efficient singers and helpers in the brotherhood. We are booked for another revival at Shamrock in 1922.—W. E. Morgan.

Albertville, Ala., July 1.—The tent meeting at Boaz closed last night. Five persons were baptized. The attendance and interest were good throughout the meeting. I regret that I could not continue the meeting longer, but other engagements called me away. I am to begin another mission meeting at Diamond (Guntersville, Route 1) next Sunday.—R. N. Moody.

Shepherdsville, Ky., June 28.—The meeting closed at Bedford, Ind., last Sunday. Twenty-three were added to the congregation there—six by primary obedience, two restored, two from the "digressives," and thirteen from other congregations took membership. The church there is at peace and doing much good work. I shall begin at Borden, Ind., next Lord's day.—J. E. Thornberry.

Gunter, Texas, July 5.—I held a meeting at Port Arthur, Texas, in the latter part of May, with no additions, but fair audiences. Brother C. D. Crouch has done a good work there, and has the confidence of the congregation because he both preaches and lives the gospel. I have just closed a meeting at Reese, Texas. Six were baptized and one restored. Excellent crowds attended the services. I go to Troy, Tenn., next.—T. H. Etheridge.

Lake City, Fla., July 5 .- On June 19 I began a meeting with the Evergreen Church, near McAlpin, and continued it day and night for eight days, with increased attendance and interest until the close, notwithstanding the fact that both the "Holy Rollers" and the Baptists were at work in the near-by neighborhood. In many ways the meeting was a good one, even the best for years, as the church was somewhat awakened from a slumber into which she had fallen, and now we hope that her light will shine out more brightly and that her usefulness will be more This is one of the oldest manifest. congregations in the State, and there are many good people there, and some few very faithful to God's law. There were two souls added to this body during the meeting. I am preparing propositions for a debate with a Missionary Baptist preacher, which is expected to be on sometime in the near future if everything developes as now expected and hoped for .- J. O. Barnes.

Sedalia, Mo., July 4.—The big tent meeting which we have been conducting in this city, with Brethren W. W. Slater and R. H. Lanier, closed last night. Brother Slater had to leave us Friday morning for other appointments. Three were baptized into Christ; others seemed to be "almost persuaded," but something seemed to be in the way. We took the names of many, and expect to visit them and try to bring them to Christ. Several of the Christian Church people have told me that they like the simplicity and scripturalness of our services and that they do not like the style of worship where they have been going. These, too, we expect to visit and otherwise keep in touch with, that we may be able to show them "the way of the Lord more accurately." Brethren Slater and Lanier have preached and sung the gospel well. We plan to move the tent into another part of the city and continue our efforts. Pray for us and with us, that we may be blessed.—S. W. Bell.

Selma, Ala., June 25.-The meeting closed at Enterprise, Ala., on June 10, having continued only six days, with three baptisms, and one young man decided to lay aside all unscriptural names and practices and be a Christian only. I am to return to Enter-prise in August, when I can stay longer. Services at the Catoma Street church of Christ, Montgomery, June 12, resulted in four baptisms, and one lady came out of the Babylon of sectarianism. On June 19 one young man made the good confession at the evening service, who is to be baptized to-Brother W. J. Haynes, of night. Grady, Ala., began a meeting at Selma on June 12 and preached six evenings. and one lady was baptized. Brother J. H. Miller, of Montgomery, preached to an appreciative audience on Sunday, June 19. I came to Selma on Monday, June 20, and have preached each evening to small, but interested, audiences. Selma is where we bought the Presbyterian meetinghouse for five thousand dollars. We have nearly nine hundred dollars of the first payment in hand now. Since we began to preach in the house the little congregation has increased three, numbering now fifteen. Brother Haynes will preach to-morrow night and continue the meeting. goes the good work!-Fred M. Little.

Union, S. C., July 5.—Rejoice with us! The work is moving along fine. Two were baptized on June 26, one on June 29, one on July 3, and one last night. Many others almost persuaded. Last Lord's day I went out into the country about ten miles where there was a Sunday school and preached to about one hundred souls, I have never seen people more anxious to hear the gospel than they. I could hardly get away from them. They were very anxious for me to come back at the first opportunity. I could not leave an appointment, as I have no way to go and am not able to hire a This work is badly handicapped on account of having no way of conveyance. I could preach to hundreds more in the run of a year if I could I could preach to hundreds only get to them. I hope some day to be able to have the necessary things to carry the gospel to all the people possible for one man to reach. I preached yesterday afternoon at the convict camp, where we had a nice audience besides the prisoners. I reached many people there that I would never reach elsewhere. We began a tent meeting on Sunday night about one mile from the meetinghouse, with a good crowd present. Last night we had a fine crowd, and better attention I have never seen. Several were out for the first time, One confession and baptism. We are expecting Brother G. F. Gibbs and his family to arrive this week to take up the work. We will certainly appreciate them and all other faithful gospel preachers who are willing to come to this field, for certainly the harvest is ripe and the laborers are few. Let us pray God to send forth laborers into the vineyard. We had above sixty in the Lord's-day school last Sunday. Pray for us. Twelve have been baptized this year.—Thomas H. Burton.

These enervating days are fraught with danger to people whose systems are poorly sustained. This leads the makers of Hood's Sarsaparilla to say, in the interest of the less robust, that the full effect of this good, old family medicine justifies calling it, not only a blood purifier, but also a tonic. It is sustaining. It gives strength, aids digestion, promotes refreshing sleep, and will prevent much sickness at this time of year.

Hood's Pills, which are gentle and thorough, may be taken with it, in cases where there is need of a cathartic or laxative.

Among the Colored Folks

A Great Ingathering of Souls.

BY M. KEEBLE.

On the fifth Lord's day in May I began a meeting at Birmingham, Ala., under a tent furnished by the West End church of Christ (white). This W. P. church, through Brother Graves, had me to come here and preach the pure gospel to my people. This meeting was a success in many ways. Interest grew in every service until there were more standing outside than there were on the inside. The first week I had to preach and lead the song service. brethren saw this was too hard on me; so Brother W. C. Graves led the song service the balance of the meeting; and when he was absent. Brother Mosley led. These white brethren were not ashamed to help us in every way possible. They paid my board with a Baptist family, and told me to just preach and not worry about anything. The Christian fellowship that these brethren and sisters showed me is the only way to manifest to the world that the gospel is to every creature. I preached about two weeks before any visible good could be seen. One night a Methodist preacher attacked the teaching that I was doing; but when I humbly answered him with God's word, a young woman came forward and made the great confession, and from that time on interest was high. Forty-five made the good confession. Forty were baptized while I was there, and the others are to be baptized later. Among the number baptized was a little band of what are called "sanctified" people. They were worshiping in a nice hall. When they heard the pure gospel and learned how to become really sanctified, they were all baptized for the remission of sins. So the hall where they worshiped was turned over to us, and the brethren and sisters will worship there until they can buy them a house in which to worship God according to his word. On the day I left we had baptizing at eight o'clock in the morning, and one old lady about seventy years old confessed at the water.

One encouraging thing about this meeting was that we left everybody reading the Scriptures. The brethren and sisters were to meet in the hall on Lord's day and take the Lord's Supper. Brother W. C. Graves was to meet with them and teach them how to keep house for the Lord. If we had more white brethren like Brother Graves and those whom he worships with at West End, my race would soon be lifted out of darkness. These brethren did not give their money and stand back somewhere, but they came to every service and rendered every assistance possible, and the results were a great ingathering of souls for Christ.

Brother Crum, one of the officers of the West End Church, is greatly interested in mission work among my people. I left them planning on buying a lot and building a house for the colored brethren and sisters to worship in. I would be glad if all the brethren and sisters who read this would be interested enough to send a contribution to Brother W. C. Graves (white), 1409 Tenth Avenue, South, Birmingham, Ala., to help buy a lot and erect a house.

While in this meeting, I also used God's word and brought fifteen "digressives" to the conclusion to take a stand with us and worship God according to the Scriptures. Two were restored. This gives a total of sixtytwo. Among them are two preachers. I have consented to be with them a month next year, if the Lord wills.

I am now at Martin, Tenn., in a tent meeting. We held three services yesterday (June 26), with one confession last night. The interest is good. The white church here is furnishing the tent, chairs, and support in every way for this meeting. A large number of the white brethren and sisters were present last night, and they seem to be highly pleased at the bright and promising beginning. A good many of the colored brethren and sisters were with us from Latham, Henry, and Union City, Tenn. This is a mission point, and I hope to have a favorable report to make when the meeting closes. I will be here two weeks, the Lord willing. "Praise God, from whom all blessings flow."

A Mission Meeting.

BY W. U. BENTON.

I am arranging with Brother C. G. Vincent, of Knoxville, Tenn., to hold a meeting for my race in Texas Valley, Ga., where the gospel is unknown. Save two or three discourses, there has never been an effort to give the bread of life to the colored people in this vicinity. I have a large family and am unable to support the work. so am asking for the fellowship of all who are disposed to help enlighten and save the negro. But I am willing to do all I can to advance the truth among my people; hence, I shall prepare a large brush arbor in a cool, shady place to accommodate the large crowd that will attend these meetings. and in other ways do whatever I possibly can to help in the work.

I have been preaching for a number of years for the Methodists; but recently, through the kindly efforts of some white friends, I was led to see the truth and was baptized into Christ, and the law of the Spirit of life in Christ is my rule of life. I am particularly concerned about the colored people of Texas Valley. It was here, as a Methodist, I industriously sowed the seeds of error, and it is here especially I am anxious to plant the truth. To this end, I am sure the Lord will help me; but I sorely need the fellowship of my brethren in the Lord, who want to see the word run and be glorified.

We expect our meeting to begin on July 17; and brethren, your help is needed and will be appreciated. My address is Route 1, Coosa, Ga.

FIELD REPORTS

Louisville, Ky., July 6.-Last Sunday I was at the Forks of Elkhorn and Shelbyville. The attendance at Shelbyville was the best on record, with three added. A mother, son, and daughter cast their lot with us to worship Jehovah as "it is written." I regret very much that some of our brethren in Shelbyville will not stand with us in our defense of the truth. Maybe the weak and beggarly elements of the world are more alluring than the word of God. We shall continue on without of God. We shall continue on without them. Every day I receive words of encouragement in this work. I am ready and willing to sacrifice my life for the cause I love. May the Lord speed the day when his people will defend his truth.-R. A. Craig.

Waldo, Ark., June 30.-I preached here last Sunday, which will be my last time before September. Brother Rue Porter, of Bristow, Okla., will hold the meeting here, beginning on the fifth Lord's day in July. Then he will hold the meeting at Bethel, near here, where he met W. E. Sherrill in debate last Christmas. We hope for much good to be done. I will begin a meeting at Maul's Schoolhouse, near Camden, Sunday Brother Hugh Hogg will lead the singing. Then I will go to Mississippi and Tennessee for some meetings. I will spend two months there in meetings before I return here to take up my local work again. work among the churches in this part of the State is continuing with interest.-R, L, Colley.

One of those baptized was a Methodist. Another man and his wife who are of the same belief came three times, and said it was getting so plain that they could not attend any more, because their parents lived and died Methodists and they wanted to do the same. The brethren at this place are few in number, but have a mind to work. I will begin a meeting at Ketner's, a short distance from here, to-morrow, and come back here later to teach a singing school. I have arranged to work in this part of the State until school opens at the Freed-Hardeman College, Henderson, Tenn., where I will return for another session.-J. E. Green.

BRYAN ON THE BIBLE

"I come to present to you the Bible as the word of God, and to protest against the enemies, open and secret, who would lift man from his knees, take from him his faith in God, and withdraw from his life the restraining influence of a belief in immortality. That is what I believe the Darwinian doctrine is doing. It leads people into agnosticism and pantheism, plunges the world into the worst of wars, and divides society into classes, fighting each other on a brute basis. It is time that the Christian church should understand what is going on and array itself against these enemies of the church, Christianity, and civilization.

"The Bible has come down to us through the centuries, and we find that along every line, except the one of which the Bible treats, there has been marvelous progress. But the line of which the Bible treats is the one line along which we have made no progress. That is the Science of How to Live. We go back to the Old Testament for the foundation of our statute laws, and we go back to the Sermon on the Mount for the rules that govern our spiritual development.

"The bright spots of my life are the days in which I learned that I had been a help in bringing men back to God. There is more happiness in bringing souls back to God than in three Presidential nominations.

"The atheist is like the man who blows out the light. I know what he has done, and I can light it again and express my opinion of him. But suppose he comes up and says: 'I beg your pardon; I am afraid that light is so near you that it will hurt your eyes.' He then moves it back and back until finally I do not see the light at all. This is the man I am afraid of. The higher critic moves the light away, a little at a time, and finally takes it out of sight.

"There are some honest friends of the Bible who count themselves higher critics. These men are trying to make the Bible suit the men who are criticizing it. But a head is worth little, except to find reasons for doing what the heart wants to do. Out of the heart are the issues of life. There is not a thing that a wicked heart wants to do that an intelligent brain cannot find a reason for doing. The higher critics who are trying to please such men are attempting the impossible task of suiting the Bible to a skeptical brain.

"Few men are brazen enough to call Christ a bastard, but that is exactly the belief of most of the higher critics, many of whom teach in our colleges. They say they do not believe in the virgin birth. They go through the Bible and reject everything they do not think reasonable. If we have to have a Bible that seems reasonable to every man who reads it, we must have a good many different kinds of Bibles to fit the different reasonings of different people—and of the same people at different times. It must at last be brought down to the mind that can least comprehend the Infinite."

CURRENT THOUGHT

The Question-Asking Fad.

Messrs. Edison and Ford have given a wonderful stimulus to the question-asking fad, and we might as well be caught in the swirl, especially since the torrid temperature of an abnormally precocious summer has rendered the popular mind unfit for the task of explaining Einstein's theory of relativity. We have before us a list of twenty questions which were in the recent Bryn Mawr Examination in General Literature. We select for our readers these questions, answers to which should be easy (we think) for Bible readers to give. There are only four of these questions, and they are as follows:

1. Who ate a book, and how did it taste?

2. What king became estranged from his wife because she made remarks about his dancing?

3. Who learned the whole art of healing in one lesson?

4. Who had not done anything but marry five men, and not exactly marry the sixth one?—Christian Advocate.

There is the danger of wasting our time and thought with feolish questions. Paul warned Timothy against those which "minister questionings rather than a dispensation of God which is in faith." Some were "doting about questionings and disputes of words." Foolish and unlearned questions were to be avoided. The inquisitiveness of the Athenians is often seen in modern times. They spent their time in nothing else but "either to tell or to hear some new thing." There are Bible questions that should be asked repeatedly, such as, "What must I do to be saved?" and, "What shall it profit a man, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?" Get these all-important questions into the ears and hearts of the people, and we will pass from a mere fad to the most solemn duty. of the hour. 0 0 0

What Persistency Does.

Mr. Lloyd George recently said in a public address: "How often have we crossed a common or a park on a Sunday afternoon, or watched a street corner, and seen little groups of fifty, one hundred, or sometimes three hundred or four hundred, and a socialist speaker expounding his doctrines—and thought nothing of it? . . . It was the pile-driving in the mud. . . . Now you see the pillars above the flood, and the thing is going up, up. It is the result of twenty years of continuous work and of thousands of meetings every Sunday. There is no other party that does that." Now, if these words of Mr. Lloyd George fail to furnish en idea for the man or woman who is wondering why the church seems to be making so little headway against opposing social currents, the case is truly hopeless for the church.—Christian Advocate.

The largest and most efficient congregation in the land can be traced to very small beginnings. We are to-day enjoying the fruits of the labors of faithful men who have gone long since to their reward. As the distinguished premier points out, there is not that persistent and undaunted spirit that makes success inevitable. People are persistent in their efforts to make money, but are very lax and indifferent in serving God. "But all things when they are reproved are made manifest by the light: for everything that is made manifest is light. Wherefore he saith, Awake, thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall shine upon thee." Let us catch the spirit of the pioneers.

"Set On Fire of Hell."

The apostle James says that the unruly, uncontrollable tongue "setteth on fire the whole course [or wheel] of nature; and it is set on fire of hell." The idea doubtless is that of a wheel in such rapid motion that its revolutions create heat and ignite a fire. In like manner, the swift and ungovernable actions of the tongue set the whole nature on fire—and it is the fire of hell. The term "devil" means traducer, deceiver, slanderer. In the beginning, Satan instituted the two chief diabolical uses of the tongue—he slandered God and flattered man. Set a watch on the lips!—Baptist and Reflector.

The scandalmonger is a moral filth collector, and he who allows him to pour his vile refuse into his ear makes of himself a moral garbage can. "Whoso keepeth his mouth and his tongue, keepeth his soul from trouble," says the writer of Proverbs. It is not always the lie that is most dangerous; for the most mischievous and destructive reports are those which are based on fact, which fact is of itself harmless enough, but when the social vulture connects it with lies and imputations it becomes dangerous. It is one of those bastard statements which resemble the truth just enough to cause those who are disposed to circulate slanderous stories to give them added life and stimulus.

The Human Wreck.

I know of no object of contemplation more sad than a human wreck. I can look upon death when it brings release to a happy soul, or even to a miserable body, with an emotion akin to satisfaction; I can contemplate a great calamity, when it involves no stain of honor and no loss of character, with equanimity—content that the hand of Providence is in it, and that good must consequently come out of it; I can read of great conflicts upon the battle field, where the atmosphere is burdened by expiring life and blood flows in rivers, and rise from the picture inspired by its heroisms; but I cannot look upon a human wreck, a lost life, a ruined man or woman, without being sick with horror or saddened into unspeakable pity.—Holland.

This old world is full of wrecks, physical and mental. But the worst wreck of all is described by the apostle Paul when he wrote of some who made shipwreck of their faith. It is bad enough to lose faith in men, but to lose faith in God and in the church and in the Bible is infinitely worse. A man may be physically perfect—he may, like King Saul of old, tower head and shoulders above his fellows—and yet have a weak faith. A woman may be ravishly beautiful, like Delliah, and yet be a pagan. On the other hand, one may be a physical wreck and exercise a glorious faith. Like Job, in sackcloth and ashes, he can exclaim, "Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him;" or like Paul, languishing in prison and awaiting the executioner, he may say: "I have fought the good fight, I have finished the course, I have kept the faith."

First Failures Not Fatal.

How often have we heard people say that if they had their lives to live over again they would do very differently at certain points! And, though we could see that they thought they meant what they said, we understood that they did not mean it very seriously, and that a second chance at life would probably not yield a much better result than the first one had. As a matter of fact not many of us have made such fatal mistakes in life that we have not had hundreds of second chances of overcoming very largely the handicap and disadvantage that they brought us. Indeed, the pathway of life for every man of us is strewn with second chances and new opportunities of making good. There is this to be said, however: a second chance may be a little harder to realize on than a first one would have been. But to say that a thing is hard is not to say anything about its possibility. A first mistake or a first failure may be bad, but does not decide a life unless we let it.-Montreal Family Herald.

When we are lost in the great maze of life and wander through the streets of this world feeling that the familiar path is gone; when we see no landmark of duty, no inspiring light of attractive work, and know not where we are; then, if our trust in God does not fail us, we learn lessons we should not otherwise gain. We learn self-direction or humility; we learn to cast our care on Him who cares for us; we learn to be grateful for every kindness that others can do us, and to respect all forms of life and call no man common.—James Freeman Clarke.

"The Tongue."

BY J. V. ARMSTRONG TRAYLOR.

One of the greatest responsibilities of life is keeping the tongue rightly employed. This is a very difficult task. It is indeed astonishing to see the horse, though so large and powerful, controlled by such a small thing as a bridle bit; and even the ships of the sea, though so weighty, can be turned many ways by a small rudder. However, such a small member as the tongue is even more difficult to control; but if it is controlled properly, the whole body can be brought into subjection.

"Keep thy tongue from evil, and thy lips from speaking guile." (Ps. 34: 13.) There are not many greater lessons to learn than the lesson of controlling the tongue. This is a subject to which the Scriptures often invite our attention. "I said, I will take heed to my ways, that I sin not with my tongue: I will keep my mouth with a bridle, while the wicked is before me," (Ps. 39: 1.) Unless the tongue be under the sanctifying influences of the grace of God, moreover, we are told by the apostle that our religion is vain; and that "whosoever offendeth not in word, that man is a perfect man." A good man out of the good treasure of his heart will bring forth a wise and useful conversation; but an evil man out of the bad treasure of his heart will bring forth only a stream of pollution and death.

"Put away from thee a wayward mouth, and perverse lips put far from thee." (Prov. 4: 24.) "Death and life are in the power of the tongue: and they that love it shall eat the fruit thereof." (Prov. 18: 21.)

The tongue is one of the most effective weapons of the devil; therefore it often stirs a world of sinfulness. We well know that it is capable of kindling anger and strife, as it was in the awful war in Europe, when sending messages back and forth to nations involved; and even sometimes just one word spoken incorrectly may bring forth war and cause many lives to be lost.

It seems that the words from an unruly tongue spread and multiply faster, also take effect quicker, than the words from a bridled tongue, because it is so easy for people to forget a good word spoken or a good deed which has been done; but let some one speak an angry word or perform some bad act, and it is astonishing to see how fast it surgeds.

"Behold, how great a matter a little fire kindleth!" (James 3: 5.) Fires are one of the saddest scenes of the mountain districts, and the ravages of the past are visible in almost every valley; and very often areas of living green are being swept by the powerful flames of fire and left a desolate wilderness. What a dark picture James is giving to those who do not have their tongues rightly employed! "If any man thinketh himself to be religious, while he bridleth not his tongue, but deceiveth his heart, this man's religion is vain." (James 1: 26.) The apostle tells us that he who does not control his tongue, and yet professes that he has religion, certainly is deceived; and if he does not have grace enough to rule the tongue, neither has he grace enough for salvation.

The ease with which a forest fire is started is surprising and astonishing. Moreover, when it gains a hold upon the trees, then the flames increase rapidly. You have observed that a single lighted match thrown carelessly upon the ground, or a shower of sparks from a passing locomotive, or even a camp fire spreading, may be its origin; and from this tiny cause, "how great a matter a little fire kindleth!"

Notice that the apostle tells us that the tongue is a fire, a world of iniquity; and he also speaks of the tongue as being a blessing to the children of men or a curse to man; hence, it is left to the individual which way to choose. The heavy responsibility is resting upon us of using the tangue properly and God-fearingly. Therefore, David said: "Let the words of my mouth, and the meditation of my heart, be acceptable in thy sight, O Lord, my strength, and my redeemer." (Ps. 19: 14.)

There is a day of judgment coming, and all nations shall be gathered together, and shall be separated one from another as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats. On that great day every knee shall bow and every tongue shall confess; and also the account shall be given of how the tongue has been used. "But I say unto you, That every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment. For by thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned." (Matt. 12: 36, 37.)

They who are truly walking with God, as did Enoch, certainly have a world of riches, and they have their riches stored away in a bank that cannot be broken open by any robber or thief. But the unjust do not have even a penny, because they have let their unruly tongues lead them astray. Moreover, we see very clearly that the tongue is a flame of fire: and the world of iniquity is like a wood, and a little fire burns great woods. So the world of iniquity is represented as inflamed by the wicked tongues of men, the world being the fuel and the tongue a fire.

"Let no corrupt speech proceed out of your mouth, but such as is good for edifying as the need may be, that it may give grace to them that hear." (Eph. 4: 29.)

Let me say that all sins come under the head of thought. word, or deed; and faults in word are most common. and often the most dangerous, for several reasons. First, because sins of thought only injure oneself, and give no bad example to others, and God alone sees and is displeased with them. Moreover, a loving and true repentance and ready turning to him blots them out. Sins of the tongue go further. The evil word once uttered can only be recalled by a humble retraction; and even then a brother's heart may have been poisoned by it. Hear Paul: "Let your speech be always with grace, seasoned with salt, that ye may know how ye ought to answer each one." (Col. 4: 6.) Secondly, notorious acts of sin are liable to public punishment; but evil speaking, unless it is exceptionally gross and slanderous, is subject to no check. Thirdly, sins of the tongue are specially dangerous, because people do so little in the way of restitution or reparation for them. "For every kind of beast and birds, of creeping things and things in the sea, is tamed, and hath been tamed by mankind: but the tongue can no man tame; it is a restless evil, it is full of deadly poison." (James 3: 7, S.) Many fishes have been tamed, so when they were called by their peculiar names they would come; also a vast number of animals come when called by their names. But the tongue can no man tame; it is full of deadly poison; and much of the mischief that vexes the world arises from words that come from an unruly tongue.

Sir Henry Sidney used these words in writing to his son: "A wound given by a word is oftentimes harder to be cured than that which is given with the sword; hence, be rather a hearer, and bearer away of other men's talk, than a beginner and procurer of speech. My son, think upon every word before you utter it, and remember how nature hath ramparted up, as it were, the tongue with teeth and lips."

"For he that would love life, and see good days, let him refrain his tongue from evil, and his lips that they speak no guile." (1 Pet. 3: 10.) May we, by controlling the tongue, show to the world that we love life.

The Work of An Evangelist.

BY I., D. PERKINS.

It is proper to efine the word "evangelist." The meaning of the word, then, is "proclaimer of good news." But most words have more than one meaning. The definition of the word as I have given it is the generic meaning. It therefore follows from this meaning that whoever proclaims good news is an evangelist. In the dispersion of the church at Jerusalem, we are told that "the church went everywhere preaching the word," I presume this included all the church, both the men and the women. It might be in order to state just here that the word "evangelist" is a Greek word, and has only been Anglicized, not translated. The word "evangelist" occurs only three times in the New Testament. The Greek word for "evangelize" is to be found fifty-four times. If the translators had Anglicized the Greek verb "evangelize" in place of translating it, we would have found the word "evangelize" in many parts of the New Testament. I am pleased to cite a few examples. "And many other things in his exhortation preached he unto the people." (Luke 3: 18.) Here it is declared that John the Baptist evangelized the people, but the Greek word for "evangelize" was translated "preached." In Luke 4: 18 it is stated that Christ had been appointed to evangelize the poor. In this passage of scripture the Greek for "evangelize" is translated "preach." "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach [evangelize] the gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the broken-hearted, to preach [evangelize] deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised." I might cite a number of scriptures to show this contention, but this is enough to settle the matter.

While I have shown that any one who proclaims good news or the gospel is an evangelist, and that both men and women did this, it is not necessary to assume that the women preached publicly, for such is not the case. If one sits down in the home and tells a sinner the story of Jesus and his love, he or she has evangelized. While this is true, I believe there is another meaning to the word, and that it is used in a more definite and official sense; for in Eph, 4: 11 we find the word classed with those who seem to bear a special name and appointment. "And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers." The question then arises, what is an official evangelist? This can be better determined by consulting the Scriptures as to what those who bore this title did in the apostolic days. Philip is first given this title. He proclaimed the gospel to the Samaritans with great success, converted the eunuch, and preached in all the cities from Azotus to Cesarea. Most of this work seems to have been what would be denominated public work." His business was preaching the gospel, and turning sinners from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan to God.

Next I would cite the case of Timothy. "But watch thou in all things, endure afflictions, do the work of an evangelist, make full proof of thy ministry." He was to "preach the word; be instant in season, out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort with all long-suffering and doctrine." He was to see to selecting and appointing elders and deacons, and was to labor earnestly for the edification and building up of the church. In carrying out this command, Timothy is found evangelizing in Asia Minor; then he goes to Philippi, and back to Corinth. Later along we find him at Ephesus, Thessalonica, and going to all the churches in Asia. He went with Paul to Jerusalem, and is represented as a fellow worker with Paul. He was with Paul while a prisoner at Rome, and still his fellow laborer. Then he went to Ephesus to set in order the things that were wanting and to see that none taught anything contrary to sound doctrine; that all things were done in love out of a pure heart, and of a good conscience, and of faith unfeigned; that prayers and supplications and thanksgivings be made for all men. He was to be a pattern to the believers, in word, in behavior, in love, in spirit, in faith, and in piety. He was not to rebuke an older man severely, but to beseech him as a father, and the young men as brothers, the elder women as mothers, and the young women as sisters, with all purity. But those convicted of sin should be publicly rebuked before all for the sake of warning. He should have a proper regard for his own health and physical comforts, and, above all, he should fight the good fight of faith, that he might lay hold on eternal life. He was not to be ashamed of the testimony of the Lord; to be a partaker of the afflictions of the gospel, to hold fast the form of sound words in which he had been taught, to commit to other faithful men who would be able to teach others also. He was to study the word of God that he might stand approved in the sight of God. He was to be a good soldier and to endure hardness; to keep the disciples mindful of the facts. precepts, promises, and threatenings of the gospel. I might cite other evangelists who filled the specific office, but I have cited enough to give a generally good idea.

How long was the office of evangelist to continue? Some have argued that it ceased with the apostles, but we might with the same logic contend that the office of pastors and teachers ceased also. There seems to be an idea that these offices were to continue until the church should come to the unity of the faith and of the knowledge of the Son of God. to a perfect man, even to the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ; but, in my judgment, he had reference to the supernatural gifts. These were to be done away "when that which is perfect is come." The apostles and prophets were necessary in the establishment of the church and the giving of the canon of the Scriptures; the second, to the power, completeness, and efficiency of the church. Until the Scriptures were written, elders, teachers, and evangelists possessed some miraculous power; but after the New Testament was completed and written, then they had no further use, but depended solely upon the written word, which was "quick, and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword." I believe that a clear distinction may now be seen between the office of an apostle and that of an evangelist: that of the apostles, for the purpose of giving us the written word and the establishment of the church; that of the evangelist, to enable the church to fulfill her mission in converting and saving the world.

The very fact that Paul says to Timothy, "The things that thou hast heard of me among many witnesses, the same commit thou to faithful men, who shall be able to teach others also" (2 Tim. 2: 2), leads us to believe that the evangelical office was to continue. In carrying out the commandments of Paul to Timothy, which I have called attention to, much depends upon the wisdom, discretion, and circumstance of each individual evangelist. But it certainly seems right and good for certain districts and States to have a meeting of the evangelists to discuss plans of coöperation in harmony with the word of God. religion of Jesus Christ from its beginning to its end is a social system. We are all members of the one body, and should labor together for the advancement of the cause for which our Lord and Christ died. I believe there was an agreement among the apostles as much as possible as to their fields of labor. I here call attention to a scripture which indicates this: "And when James, Cephas, and John, who seemed to be pillars, perceived the grace that was given unto me, they gave to me and Barnabas the right hands of fellowship; that we should go unto the heathen, and they unto the circumcision." (Gal. 2: 9.) There certainly was an understanding here. What a noble band of evangelists were found with Paul as his fellow laborers. and cooperating with each other in the work of the gospel! If it is a good thing for elders of a congregation to meet, consult, lay out work, and plan for the advancement of the local work—and it is—why is it not a good thing for evangelists to meet and do likewise? It certainly is.

Let us remember that preaching is evangelizing. How long a preacher shall stay at one given place is, in my judgment, determined by circumstances. He should remain at one place as long as he believes it is possible to do more good than at some other place, it being the decision of the church at that place. It is his duty to preach pub-, licly and from house to house. Suppose he preaches at the church place of meeting every day in the week; that is evangelizing. Then suppose he preaches from house to house six days in the week, and twice on Sunday at the local place of the church for worship; that also is evangelizing. The traveling from place to place has nothing whatever to do with him as an evangelist. I thought at one time when an evangelist located at a given place and preached from house to house through six days of the week and then at the place of meeting on Sunday, that he was what we call a "modern pastor," but my mind has been changed. I believe that a man may do either way, and still he is an evangelist, and not a pastor. This belief is verified by many scriptures and examples, and I am pleased to call attention to a few of them. "And when he had found him, he brought him unto Antioch. And it came to pass, that a whole year they assembled themselves with the church, and taught much people. And the disciples were called Christians first in Antioch." (Acts 11: 26.) Here it is stated that Paul and Barnabas spent a year at Antioch with the church. Are we to understand that they held what is usually termed an "evangelistic meeting?" I think not; but they lived there, and worked with the church, and no doubt preached publicly, and from house to house, and they were not what is called "modern pastors," Paul remained a year and a half at Corinth. "And he continued there a year and six months, teaching the word of God among them." (Acts 18: 11.)

Paul was located at Ephesus for three years. In giving the church there a warning, he said: "Therefore watch, and remember, that by the space of three years I ceased not to warn every one night and day with tears." (Acts 20: 31.) I know men in the church to-day who condemn evangelists for doing what Paul did every time the editors of our papers allow them space. If Paul had a right to stay at Ephesus three years-and he did-then any evangelist has that right, or the right to stay even longer if he can get along and do good; but usually a church is ready to turn almost any evangelist out after he has stayed three years, and many before. It is too true that many times this is done regardless of any other place for him to go for a support; but an evangelist must be a good soldier and ready to endure affliction. Seventeen years after Paul's conversion he visited Jerusalem, and found Peter, James, and John, who seemed to be pillars in the church there. (Gal. 1: 18; 2: 1-9.) James remained at Jerusalem so long that it was common for those coming from Jerusalem to be represented as coming out from him. (Gal. 2: 12.) It is quite frequently claimed that when a church has been established and elders appointed, that then the preacher should leave and let the elders do the teaching; but men who claim that will return and hold meetings for the church. But why not let the elders do that if they are the teachers? For preaching is teaching. I doubt if any man can find where any apostolic evangelist went to a place and held what we call an "evangelistic meeting" of a month's preaching of two or one sermon each day. Yet I am sure that is all right. Even some of our editors criticize, and allow others to criticize, evangelists who stay or locate with one congregation, yet they like for every member to take their paper; and thus the editors teach regularly as much so as do the elders of said congregation. Timothy was not to rebuke an elder or receive an accusation against him without two or three witnesses. This certainly indicates that he was preaching where there were elders. At the time Paul wrote the brethren at Rome the church was in existence, and Paul said: "As much as in me is, I am ready to preach the gospel to you that are at Rome also." (Rom. 1: 15.) To establish a church, and appoint leaders or elders, and then go away and leave it to die, which is usually the case, certainly is poor business to me.

There is another question of grave importance I must call attention to, and that is a doctrine known as "evangelistic assumption," a doctrine which assumes to have authority over and above the eldership of the church. This doctrine had its origin two thousand years after the canon of the Scriptures was closed, in the city of Indianapolis, Ind., and has been advertised in a journal known as the "Apostolic Review." It is an unscriptural doctrine, sectarian and denominational. Its blighting influence and division has been felt from one coast to the other. Its slimy trail starts in the State of Virginia and winds its way through West Virginia, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, Kansas, Iowa, Colorado, Arizona, California, Washington, and Oregon. It is divisive, unchristian, uncharitable-no mercy, no pardon. It is not from God; it is from Satan. Men who are responsible for it and its wreck and ruin in the body of Christ will suffer for it in the world to come, if not of a repentant heart in this life over it and its blighting influence. Evangelists are not to become entangled in the affairs of this life. "No man that warreth entangleth himself with the affairs of this life; that he may please him who hath chosen him to be a soldier." (2 Tim. 2: 4.) I believe that many an evangelist has lost his usefulness as a soldier in the army of the Lord by engaging in politics. His time should be given to the word of God as much as circumstances permit; and if that is done, he will not have much time to engage in the affairs of this life. He should realize that he has a fight to make, and that it is a good fight; that he has a course to run, and that it is the Christian race, therefore a good race; that he has a faith to keep, which is the faith of the gospel. Every evangelist must have a weapon to fight with. This weapon is the word of God, and is not carnal. "For though we walk in the flesh, we do not war after the flesh: (for the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strongholds;) casting down imaginations, and every high thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God, and bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ." (2 Cor. 10: 3-5.) He must be strong in the Lord, and in the strength of his might. He must put on the whole armor of God, that he may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil. He must stand with his loins girded about with truth, and must put on the breastplate of righteousness, and must have his feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace; and he must take up the shield of faith, with which he may be able to quench all the fiery darts of the evil one; and he must take the helmet of salvation, and the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God. He must not shun to declare the whole counsel of God, and must contend earnestly for the faith which was once for all delivered unto the saints. May God grant that all faithful evangelists may go forth conquering and to conquer until all the people may know a full gespel of Christ.

We change our point of view, but the mountains themselves change not. Whatever face they turn to us, whatever their appearance, it is always one of beauty. They are mere breaks in the crust—crushings of the earth shell—and by the same reckoning color is a mere break in the beam of light, but what a wonder work each of them spreads before us!—John C. Van Dyke.

"Something Greater Than Miracles."

Brother J. A. Craig, of Patterson, Cal., is pleased with some things that recently appeared under "Los Angeles Notes," and I here give our readers the benefit of what he has to say, because I think it greatly strengthens the arguments I tried to make. Here is what he has to say:

Brother Hall: I have been quite interested in your articles in the Gospel Advocate, and especially the one in the issue of June 23—"Is This the Cause of the Difference?" and, "There is Something Greater Than Miracles." The apostle says: "But covet carnestly the best gifts: and yet show I unto you a more excellent way." (1 Cor. 12: 31.) And then he proceeds to show that "more excellent way," which, as you have shown, is love. "For in Jesus Christ which, as you have snown, is love. "For in Jesus Christ neither circumcision availeth anything, nor uncircumcision: but faith which worketh by love." (Gal. 5: 6.) Faith which truly works by love is not ready to call a brother a "shaker," or "sensationalist," or "hypnotic," just because the truth is effective in converting souls. "For brethern ve have been called parts liberton. "For, brethren, ye have been called unto liberty; only use not liberty for an occasion to the flesh, but by love serve But if ye bite and devour one anone another. other, take heed that ye be not consumed one of another." (Gal. 5: 13-15.) In Bible times when the gospel of Christ was such a power to lead souls to Christ, I find that those who proclaimed the gospel "continued with one accord in prayer and supplication." (Acts 1: 14.) "They were all with one accord in one place." (Acts 2: 1.) "And all that believed were together, . . . continuing daily with one accord in the temple. . . praising God." etc. (Acts accord in the temple, . . . praising God," etc. (Acts 2: 44-47.) "And the multitude of them that believed praising God," etc. (Acts [the multitude had already passed five thousand men] were of one heart and of one soul." (Acts 4: 32.) "And they were all with one accord in Solomon's porch. believers were the more added to the Lord, multitudes both of men and women." (Acts 5: 12, 14,)

For a time the Savior's prayer as recorded in John 17 was answered by his followers, and surely the desired results obtained—viz., "that the world may believe that thou hast sent me." "O righteous Father, the world hath not known thee: but I have known thee, and these have known that thou hast sent me. And I have declared unto them thy name, and will declare it: that the love wherewith thou hast loved me may be in them, and I in them." (Verses 25, 26.)

How can the world "believe that thou hast sent me" and "that the love wherewith thou hast loved me" is in the professed followers of Christ to-day, with all the division and strife manifested, with all the "biting and devouring one another?" Echo answers: "How can the world believe?" Instead of faith, contempt is produced in the hearts of unbelievers.

But if all who claim to be "the one body" were working together with one accord," "of one heart and one soul," "perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment," having, as did the apostles, "the mind of Christ," with "no divisions among you [us]," being "new creatures" possessed of "faith which worketh by love," "keeping the commandments of the Lord," "and there come in one that believeth not, or one unlearned, he is convinced of all, he is judged of all: . . . and so faling down on his face he will worship God, and report that God is in you of a truth." (1 Cor. 14: 24, 25.) Yes, he will be convinced that God is in us, for we will manifest the Spirit of God instead of the spirit of Satan, which causes the unbeliever to say "that ye are mad." (Verse 23.)

Yes. Brother Hall, when we teach and practice that "more excellent way," the recorded miracles will suffice, and the gospel of Christ will still be "the power of God unto salvation unto every one that believeth," and "multitudes both of men and women" will be "the more added to the Lord."

The congregation at Madera has purchased a tent, and with "one accord" we are making some efforts to get the gospel before the people of the surrounding community. We ask for the prayers and supplications of all the saints.

J. A. CRAIG.

I want to thank Brother Craig very much for his letter, and commend what he has said to the prayerful consideration of our readers. I have seen a few congregations that claim to be churches of Christ, but I would very much dislike to write a description of them for our papers. The one crying need of the churches to-day is to arise and go back to apostolic love or primitive love, whichever you are pleased to call it. That the success of the early church was marvelous goes without question; but that this success grew out of the fact that they took the pure word of God and allowed it to make them indeed and in truth the very church and people God wanted them to be is a certainty. And we can do the same thing to-day. Others can do as they may; but for me and my house, it is do what the Book says do, else pull our banner down and stop claiming to be representatives of our Lord's cause. The latter we cannot afford to do; the former we must do.

Eastward Bound.

Shortly after the fourth Lord's day in this month my face will be turned in the direction that my heart has been for the last ten months-viz., toward the East. I think now that I shall stop at Santa Rosa, Cal., and see my friend, Felix Owen, and the splendid congregation he has said so much to me about. I hope to get there by July 31. Then I shall hurry to Ada, Okla., to see my wife's people, and to Altus, Okla., to see Brother Templeton and family. Brother Templeton was my colaborer for more than a year in Atlanta, and I have never worked with a better man. He has a namesake of mine in his home, too, that I want to see, since he is now old enough to begin to appreciate me more. From there I go to Farmersville, Texas, and am due to be there by August 21; and those good people cannot know how I long to see and be with them again. It was a good meeting I had with them on my way out, and it is a better meeting I am expecting to have on my way back. "Then from there I hurry to see the sweetest mother in Middle Tennessee and some old friends in and around Nashville; and from there to Savannah, Ga., with a short stop-over in Atlanta.

The Flood-Its Lesson For Us. BY H. LEO BOLES.

All things which are written in the Old Testament Scriptures are written for our learning; hence, the Flood has its lesson for us. In it we see God's completeness in his work; he does all things well. Jehovah is just as complete in the destruction of the wicked as he is in the salvation of the righteous. Noah and his family were not just partly, scarcely, and barely saved; they were completely and entirely saved. So the wickedness of the earth was completely and entirely destroyed. Not a moving thing on the surface of the earth remained alive, except that which was preserved alive in the ark. If any part of the sinful life should have remained, it would have sprung up to contaminate and mar the new life which was to be begun on the earth.

Although the children of men had been warned by Noah, yet they did not believe that the flood was to destroy them. They looked upon the first appearance of the flood as a farce. Nature was calm and the ocean tranquil; the windows of heaven were invisible to them, and the fountains of the great deep did not disturb them; the beginning of the storm, to them, was only a gentle breeze, and the sun continued to flame on the sky. "For as in those days which were before the flood they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, until the day that Noah entered into the ark, and they knew not until the flood came, and took them all away." (Matt. 24: 38, 39.) God's judgment appeared suddenly to them; his mercy had lingered for the last moment; his long-suffering had expired; his justice is now meted out; his work is complete; his warning to them falls with a fearful doom, and his promise to Noah is fulfilled. The night before the flood came the skies were as bright as before; "the sun went down in his primitive pride, and the stars twinkled on in the heavens, and the breathings of nature were peaceful and long." The sound of revelry was loud and the debauchery of sin unabated. "At length the sky became overcast, and the gentle rain descended—to Noah the beginning of the flood, to the world a welcome shower:" but as the rain continued, the agonies of the doomed and dying world began, and continued until "the last cry of human agony was hushed—and ocean met ocean in its flow, and the waves swept on without a shore."

The hand that shut Noah safely in the ark and protected him under its hollow was the hand that smote and destroyed the wickedness of the world. "Behold then the goodness and severity of God." (Rom. 11: 22.) Noah and his family were translated from the antediluvian world into the postdiluvian world. The things which God used for the destruction of the wicked were the means God used for the salvation of the righteous. "To the one a savor from death unto death; to the other a savor from life unto life." (2 Cor. 2: 16.) Peter compares this deliverance of Neah to baptism. "Being put to death in the flesh [Christ], but made alive in the spirit; in which also he went and preached unto the spirits in prison, that aforetime were disobedient, when the long-suffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was a preparing, wherein few, that is, eight souls, were saved through water: which also after a true likeness doth now save you, even baptism." (1 Pet, 3: 19-21.) The eight souls who were in the ark were saved by water; the water which saved them destroyed the others. In baptism, the penitent who believes in the efficacy of the blood of Christ is purged from his sins; figuratively they are washed away and he is raised to a new and clean life in Christ Jesus. In Christ the sinner finds shelter for himself and destruction for his sins.

The salvation and reward of the faithful are taught by the flood, and also the destruction of the wicked. As sure as God has promised to bless and eternally save the right-eous, he has also threatened with an everlasting doom the wicked. The flood has been made a type of the great judgment and doom of the wicked world, when the dead, both great and small, shall stand before the throne of God and be judged every man according to his works.

The Nature of Our Calling.

Taul, of Tarsus, with an appeal of inimitable pathos, wrote: "I therefore, the prisoner in the Lord, beseech you to walk worthily of the calling wherewith ye were called." (Eph. 4: 1.) It was "in the Lord" that he wore this heavy chain, brought upon him in the service of Christ and borne for his people's sake. Therefore, in beseeching the Ephesians to "walk worthily of the calling wherewith ye [they] were called," Paul did not ask them to do something which he himself was not at that time doing. If it were true that the early church furnished only one man who could effectively and consistently teach his fellow men how to live with respect to the "high calling of God in Christ Jesus," then Paul was that man. Peter exhorted the brethren of the Dispersion to "give the more diligence to make their calling and election sure." (2 Pet. 1: 10.) Certainly these exhortations indicate the divine nature of

1. It is a high calling. "I press on toward the goal unto the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." (Phil. 3: 14.) Instead of "high," the margin reads "upward;" then it is an "upward calling." It demans that we "seek the things that are above, where Christ is, seated on the right hand of God;" and that we set our "mind on the things that are above, not on the things that are upon the earth." (Col. 3: 1, 2.) The "upward" or "high" calling is of God; the downward, of the devil.

2. It is a holy calling. Paul admonished Timothy to "suffer hardship with the gospel according to the power of God; who saved us, and called us with a holy calling." (2 Tim. 1: 8, 9.) It is holy, because it came from God, who is holy; and he "called us not for uncleanness, but in sanctification." (1 Thess. 4: 7.) God's people in Corinth were "called to be saints." (1 Cor. 1: 2.) Saints, in respect to character, are pure, innocent, upright, unspotted, holy. It is a call to that "holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord." (Heb. 12: 14.) It is a calling which, when lived worthily of, will array one in "fine linen, bright and pure: for the fine linen is the righteous acts of the saints." (Rev. 19: 8.)

3. It is a heavenly calling. The writer of Hebrews said: "Wherefore, holy brethren, partakers of a heavenly calling, consider the Apostle and High Priest of our confession, even Jesus." (Heb. 3: 1.) It is a calling from on high; not a calling of the world, but a calling out of the world. It is a calling from heaven, which leads to heaven, and brings heavenly joys and blessings to all who hear and obey it. It is a summons to come apart for fellowship with Jesus (1 Cor. 1: 9); and fellowship with Jesus is heavenly partnership.

Finally, from the foregoing considerations it is quite evident that no greater responsibility could rest upon men than that of living worthily of the "high calling of God in Christ Jesus."

The Word "Church" Defined.

BY S. R. DRAKE.

Webster defines the word "church" thus: "Greek kuriakon, a temple of God; pertaining to a lord, or our Lord Jesus Christ; the Lord's house; to call out or call together. Literally, a body of Christians who have ebeyed the call to come out from the world and unite themselves to the Lord Jesus Christ, and promising allegiance to his service. A congregation of Christians in their collective capacity from the church of Christ. No class of persons can be considered as Christians and members of Christ's body who do not comply with the conditions of his form of government and laws of induction into his church." This is a very good definition of the church and is in harmony with the teaching of the New Testament relative to the church on general principles.

The undisputed authority and real definition of the church and its mission is to be found in the Bible, and more particularly the New Testament. Almost all orthodox denominations are in agreement upon the fundamentals of the church, or the conditions of entrance into the church—faith, repentance, a public confession, and baptism—these are regarded as necessary to the entrance into his church, or body.

"The great commission" embraces these fundamentals. Christ gave the law of pardon and admission into his church, or kingdom. He also gave to the apostles, through the Holy Spirit, the law by which his church should be governed through all time. (Matt. 28: 18-20; Mark 16: 15, 16; Acts 2: 37, 38; Rom. 10: 8-10; John 14: 25, 26: 16: 13-15.)

One cannot think of the church without thinking of Christ; it is founded upon the divinity, character, and life of the great Teacher of men. One purpose of Christ in building his church was that he might make known the manifold wisdom of God, or the "all-embracing" wisdom, the "innumerable aspects of God's wisdom," put forth to save man. (Eph. 3: 10.) As stewards of the grace and gospel of God, we are admonished to always speak in harmony with the oracles of God. If any one preaches, let hira utter God's truth. (1 Pet. 4: 11.) The oracles of God were sacred and guarded with special care by the Jews. (Acts 7: 38; Rom. 3: 2; Heb. 5: 12.)

Paul wrote to Timothy giving him instructions concerning his ministry and dealings with the household of God. The church of God is the pillar (stay) and foundation stone of the truth. (1 Tim. 3: 15, 16.) The greatest and most sacred trust the church has committed to it is the word of God. (Ex. 25: 16; Deut. 32: 36, 37; Acts 7: 38; Rom. 3: 2; Heb. 5: 11, 12.) It is through the sacred oracles of God that we obtain the knowledge of salvation through faith in Christ Jesus. (2 Tim. 3: 15-17.)

The Scriptures furnish a complete chart and compass for the ministry of the church in every emergency of life. The church that does not bear a complete and full message of the Christ is not the church of Christ. The church that has no Christ is a Christless church, and the Christ that has no church is a churchless Christ.

The church is known in the New Testament by its name and the message it bears to a lost world. It is "one," his "body." He is its Head. Not one head with many bodies. nor many heads with one body.

The idea of the choice of churches originated with manit is unscriptural and finds no place in science or reason.

It is known in the New Testament (1) as the church of Christ-"my church" (Matt. 16: 18): (2) the "church of the Lord" (Acts 20: 28); (3) "church of God" (1 Cor. 1: 2; 10: 32; Gal. 1: 13.) It is spoken of in Heb. 12: 13 as "the church of the first-born." All these names have one and the same meaning.

We read of "the churches of Christ," in the plural. (Rom. 16: 16.) There was at Jerusalem the parent church. The "church of Christ" is the indentical term in the plural number. The plural suffix "es" implies churches after the original pattern-church of Christ.

It is his by right of purchase. (Acts 20: 28; Eph. 1: 7-14; Heb. 9; 12.) The message of the church is the gospel of Christ. (Matt. 28: 18-20; Rom. 1: 16.) It embraces the life, death, burial, and resurrection of our Lord Jesus Christ. (1 Cor. 15: 1-4.) The message of the church embraces the whole New Testament as a rule of faith and con-

To speak of the Restoration Movement or the restoration of the church of Christ (to me) is unscriptural, and finds no place in the teaching of Christ and the apostles.

The all-absorbing theme of apostles and his disciples was "Jesus Christ, and him crucified"-his death, burial, resurrection, ascension, coronation as King, and his second

The greatest need of the world to-day is Christ-his gospel-the ethics and teaching of the Master,

There is no other theme or name through which a man can be saved; in no other is the great salvation to be found. (Acts 4: 12.) Why should man contend for anything more or less? The names "disciple" and "Christian" are individual names, and not names for the church. The name "disciple" or "disciples" was given because his personal adherents were under his tutorship and ministry. The name "Christian" had a broader and deeper signification or meaning than that of "disciple;" if not, why not just continue to call them "disciples" and not name them "Christians?"

The great apostle almost prevailed upon Agrippa to become a Christian (not a Christian church). (Acts 26: 28.) "If any man suffer as a Christian, let him not be ashamed." It matters but little what people may call one in division; the most important thing is to be a Christian in life and character, and all is well.

In speaking of the church of Christ, why add the word

"disciple" or any other name? "Christ is all! All in all! Yes, Christ is all in all!" The denominations love that name. The Interchurch Conference on Federation was perfectly willing to be known as churches of Christ while in this council; but as soon as they returned to their homes they became known as Baptists, Methodists, Presbyterians, etc. Do you wonder why?

> All hail the power of Jesus' name! Let angels prostrate fall! Bring forth the royal diadem, And crown Him Lord of all!

Can you join in singing this song, brethren? Now, all together-Jesus is Lord of all! Hallelujah! Praise God!

> Ye chosen seed of Israel's race, Ye ransomed from the fall: Hail Him who saves you by His grace, And crown Him Lord of all!

Let every kindred, every tribe, On this terrestrial ball, To Him all majesty ascribe, And crown Him Lord of all!

O that with yonder sacred throng We at His feet may fall! We'll join the everlasting song, And crown Him Lord of all!

The Name is the first step in uniting the people of God. "And she shall bring forth a Son, and thou shalt call his name Jesus: for he shall save his people from their sins. . . They shall call his name Emmanuel, which being interpreted is, God with us." (Matt. 1: 21-23.)

In the light of the New Testament no man can fulfill his obligations to God without membership in the church and publicly standing as a witness to the saving power of Jesus Christ. Whatever it takes to make a man a Christian makes him a member of the church of Christ-his

The Way to Be Happy.

Unselfishness is one of the purest, loveliest gems which shine in the soul of a Christian. I think every one recognizes the divineness of that charming grace. It is remarkable how unselfishness creates happiness for its possessor. I never knew a selfless person who was devoid of happiness. We even in this world save our lives by losing them. Let self-surrender be our constant principle; and do not let us exercise it gloomily, or ascetically, or self-righteously, but with sincere cordiality. Then, sure as God is true and history is true, we shall be pervaded with serene happiness. I am certain that many miss happiness by using ineffective methods of seeking it. They make self their first and everpresent consideration. But self-seeking and genuine happiress are mutually exclusive, and only by self-renunciation can we reach the heights of true happiness. By the grace of God it is possible to be utterly unselfish, and that grace abounds to all who ask it. It is in the imitation of Christ, by the power of his Holy Spirit, that we make sure of happiness .- Dinsdale T. Young.

To do a kindly deed or favor with any thought of return, or with the idea of putting another under obligation to us, is to miss the real joy of giving. Love neither counts the cost nor the returns.

A Child's Prayer.

God make me like the sun, To rise each morning with a smiling face, And as the day goes by

Help me to leave warm sunbeams every place, Till shadows softly fall

And on the wings of night I drift away, Still radiant to think

That I may wake with smiles the coming day. Selected.

BY A LOVER OF THEM.

In the selection of books for personal reading, we should endeavor to select those which will help us in the cultivation of our thoughts and at the same time lead to a better understanding of the great and fundamental themes of the Bible. Paul gives the true environment of the Christian's mind in this exhortation: "Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honorable, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things." The standard of our thinking may be very easily influenced and determined by the standard of our reading. Sometimes the question, "Where do our thoughts come from?" is made a question in psychology. From whatever other sources they may be derived, it is certainly true that our thoughts to a large extent are derived from our reading. It follows, then, as clearly as the day follows the night, that we should read such books as will produce pure and ennobling thoughts. The highest mental goal that the Christian can reach is that point where every thought is brought into captivity to Christ. It is true that evil thoughts may rise up and possess us more quickly than good thoughts. An old-time writer once wrote this experience: "It seems that my mind is like a filthy pond where the frogs and snakes multiply, but where the fish die easily." The best way to guard against evil thoughts is to fill the mind with good thoughts, that there may be no room for the other.

Two Thought-Producing Volumes.

Two of the best books for thought-producing purposes that have come to my knowledge are "Christian Treasures," in two volumes. In these two books the author has collected the best thoughts of a great many writers on important themes. There is a wide range of subjects covering every phase of the Christian life. But the most edifying part is that which brings the Bible to the fore. There are chapters on "Studying the Bible," "Teaching the Bible," "Applying the Bible," and "The History of the Bible." Here, too, you will find a splendid chapter on "The Wise and Unwise Course," and one of a practical nature dealing with 'Plans for Protracted Meetings." There is still another that treats of "Church Efficency and Evangelism." No one can read these two volumes and not be stirred up to better service in the Master's kingdom. The contents are saturated through and through with the gospel of Do. Those who secure the two volumes will come into possession of a little working library bearing upon the most important subjects and covered by an able and intelligent corps of writers.

A TREASURE HOUSE OF GOOD THINGS.

In his Introduction to "Salvation from Sin," David Lipscomb says: "The profession of the Christian religion is a vow and an effort to try to live as the word of God directs man to live." This brief statement covers the main purpose behind the long and useful career of this grand cld soldier of the cross. It also gives the keynote of his best book. In this noted volume you will find the essence of the best writing for half a century. The author stresses obedience to God as the supreme duty of man. Brother Shepherd, who collated the matter for this book, says: "I do not believe there is a man living to-day whose writings have been truer to God and which have exerted a greater influence for the advancement of apostolic Christianity than those of Brother Lipscomb, and for this reason it gives me great pleasure to put the matter contained in this volume in a permanent form, that the good accomplished may continue to grow long after his hand is still in death." This was, indeed, a real service. One will hardly find time to read all that the lamented editor wrote, but he will have time to read in this book the very cream of it all. Surely every old-time reader of the Gospel Advocate who has followed and enjoyed the writings of David Lipscomb will want this book, not as a mere keepsake, but as a treasure house of things good for the soul.

WHEN TWO EDITORS CLASH.

The chief advantage in a written discussion of religious issues is that time is given for careful preparation of articles and for revision wherever necessary. This is one reason why the "Folk-McQuiddy Discussion on the Plan of Salvation" is such an exceptionally good book. It is a discussion between two editors, both of whom were trained and experienced writers, and each an earnest advocate of the truth as he saw it. Both writers have a pointed style, and each is courteous and kindly disposed toward the other. There is editorial logic against editorial logic and wit against wit. If you are looking for a clean, clear-cut discussion of important questions concerning the gospel of Jesus Christ, you will need to get this book. In regard to the worth of the discussion both editors state in their Introduction: "The most momentous subject in the world is the plan of salvation. Upon it eternal destinies hang. It is a matter, therefore, of the utmost importance that people should know what is the plan of salvation. It would seem that if there is any subject in the world on which everybody would agree, it would be this one; butalas!-if there is any subject on which everybody does not agree, it is this one." You should have this book in your Hbrary for frequent reference.

A BOOK OF PERMANENT VALUE.

It is well that a remembrance of those who have labored for the good of others should be cherished. It is good to show an appreciation of those who have unselfishly devoted their lives to the salvation of men and to the service of God, and to hold them up as examples worthy of the admiration of the aged and the emulation and imitation of the young. In this utilitarian age of material development we are liable to overlook the religious and moral good, and to forget those who labor to spread the religious principles which lie at the foundation of all intellectual advancement and material prosperity. It was to cherish the work and influence of a grand old pioneer of the gospel that the "Life and Sermons of Jesse L. Sewell" was written. The book gives a very intimate glimpse of the social and religious conditions as they prevailed in Tennessee a century ago. It traces the career of Jesse L. Sewell from birth to death, and brings out the various influences behind his long and useful life. In addition to the biographical sketches, there are sixteen of the best sermons. This book, written by David Lipscomb, has a permanent value and should be widely circulated

A Bird Song.

A bird song in a starless night,
Forth gushing, like a crystal fountain
That finds its joyous way to light
From some dark cavern in a mountain—
O, sweet and clear and glad and true,
It cleft the heavy blackness through!

Was it a dream of dawn and dew,
Of home, of love, so joy-compelling
It woke you by its bliss and drew
Your whole heart out, in music swelling,
And gave to me this pure delight?
A bird song in a starless night.

The Easy Way.

Tourists sitting on the veranda of a hotel at a mountain resort were idly watching through glasses a little band of adventurous mountain climbers who were endeavoring to reach the summit of a lofty peak in that vicinity. Through the glasses they could be seen, mere black specks, faintly outlined against the snow-covered slopes. Suddenly there was a commotion. One of the figures, after an apparent struggle, threw up its arms and disappeared. A second followed, and then a third. The fourth struggled for a moment, and presently was seen standing alone upon the slope where his companions had disappeared.

A searching party was hastily organized and sent out. Late in the evening it returned, bringing with it the lone survivor. The others were lying, maimed and battered, at the bottom of a deep gulch. But to the anxious friends at the hotel it soon became apparent that the survivor was not popular with his rescuers. They seemed systematically to avoid him, and never spoke to him if they could escape his presence. Finally the explanation leaked out. When the rope was examined, the rescuers found it had been cut. Apparently the fourth man of the party had deliberately decided to save his own life at the sacrifice of the lives of his friends.

It was a dastardly thing to do. The man who deliberately saves himself at the expense of others is not a man to be admired or imitated. He has no place in the chivalry of a modern age. His place is back in that barbaric period when man believed he must look out for himself, no matter what happened to the others. Measured by today's ethical standards, one cannot sympathize with or approve of a man who saves himself at the sacrifice of others.

Yet such acts are not so uncommon as one might suppose them to be. Humanity is bound by invisible ropes—ties of social and business, moral and spiritual interests—and history discloses that we rise or fall together. One cannot fall without putting an additional strain upon his brothers or dragging down others with him. Conversely, we cannot rise to any honorable height in this world without lifting others by the power of our example and the inspiration of our courage and devotion.

It is to be regretted that, with this universal knowledge, in almost every Christianized community there should be so many who should deliberately choose to cut the rope that they may save themselves. It must be confessed it is the easier way. One who lives in daily contact with men and women who are struggling against great odds to save themselves from disaster, may, by simply cutting the rope, doom those unfortunates to destruction. That is one way; but is it Christ's way?

Yet this is what many do. There are missionary problems in almost every community. There are foreigners to be Americanized; there are social outcasts to be regenerated; there are men and women plunging daily over precipices to moral and spiritual ruin. The pity is that so many Christians, not realizing their responsibility, should deliberately cut the rope rather than take upon themselves the burden of pain and sacrifice that saving another naturally involves. Yet their hope of salvation is in One who gave His life for them,—Forward.

Studying Native Timber.

When we see a piece of furniture, or notice the inside finish of a house, we seldom give a thought as to the kind of wood we are looking at, or where it grew, or what conditions were necessary to produce the peculiar variety of wood.

The lumber business of our country is fast declining, and we are confronted with the fact that most of our best timber is gone. The forests are being cut and the timber used very rapidly, and substitutes are being invented and used very extensively.

An ordinary observer does not realize the great number of different kinds of wood growing in our country. A few bave made collections of different varieties, and these are very beautiful and interesting.

A person familiar to a certain extent with the different native woods can distinguish them by the bark, the foliage, the shape, and by the color, and even the odor, of the wood fiber, and this is considered an art or skill of rather rare accomplishment.

Different wood has a different growth, and, when it is cut or split, these different growths are used as a guide as to the value of the timber when it is converted into lumber.

Black walnut has been rather abundant in many parts of the United States, and it has been considered valuable for the manufacture of fine furniture. It has a beautiful grain, and when it is finished it is as fine as any wood that grows.

Oak is becoming very popular. It is quarter sawed, and the beauty of the grain is brought out very much better than when the logs are sawed in the ordinary way.

Hickory is a close wood, and very stout, and, if the trees are cut at the right season of the year, the timber makes excellent material for many things requiring strength.

Some wood will warp greatly when used in constructing dwellings and fences, and others do not seem to be affected by the elements. Gumwood will twist and warp so much that timbers will pull out of place.

Some kinds of wood will last when placed in the ground, and others are apt to decay in a short time.

Wild cherry is a beautiful wood. Locust has a very pretty grain, and it shows better if sawed quartering.

Chestnut is beautiful, but different from other timber. It is very open. When burning, chestnut snaps loudly.

Apple-tree wood is valuable, as it is excellent for making handles of knives and good tools.

Most timbers have a peculiar smell, and it is easy for some to detect different kinds in this way.

Pine and hemlock forests are fast disappearing. Some States compel the planting of timber for future use.

Locust, cedar, chestnut, and osage make the best fence posts.

In Eastern Ohio, fine black walnut trees were cut and split into rails for fences less than one hundred years ago.

Insects damage timber very greatly in recent years. - John T. Timmons, in Exchange.

The Cause of Christ at Gainesville, Fla.

BY M. C. K.

The following interesting communication from Gainesville, Fla., shows that the conflicting religious forces of that town have become sufficiently stirred up to be challenging each other's position and demanding that differences be adjusted and settled by the word of God. This is a most healthy and commendable indication, and I take pleasure in publishing the letter with certain queries called out by the situation there and submitted for consideration in these columns. The letter is as follows:

Gainesville, Fla., June 22, 1921.—Dear Brother Kurfees: We have recently been having some interesting discussions with the Christian Church people, who are trying to get organized here. A Brother Ingle has been holding a tent meeting here for some time. The local man is a young man from California, named Smyser. Several more or less informal discussions have been had, and last Sunday we had more of a formal discussion of differences, and I want to tell you about this and get information on the points referred to. I secured a copy of your latest book on the instrumental-music question and loaned it to Brother Smyser several weeks ago. Brother John P. Prevatt, who is located with us now in our regular work, has been carrying on the discussions with these men, and made the main argument Sunday afternoon. Ingle says that he disregards all secular history as to instrumental music, also disregards what Greek scholars say as to the meaning of the original of "psalm" and that he stands on the proposition and that he stands on the proposition of letting the Holy Spirit settle the question—letting the Bible settle it and interpret itself,

1. He affirms that "psallo" (Greek) always carries with it the idea of singing with the instruments wherever it is found in both the Old and the New Testament: that the Holy Spirit meant the same thing in both the Old and the New; that when the apostle Paul in Rom. 15: 9 refers to Ps. 18: 49, the instruments are necessarily implied in that connection.

2. He wants to know if the Holy Spirit did not mean the same wherever it spoke, without regard to the change in the meanings of words at the different periods to which you have called special attention in your book.

3. Smyser says in regard to that, that Paul was talking to people familiar with the temple music, singing with the instruments, psalming, and that it was not necessary to state that they were singing with the instruments when they say "psalm."

4. Is there any kind of proof that the early Christians used the instruments as were then in the temple and synagogues?

5. Is there any Bible proof that psalming, wherever mentioned, either in the Old or New Testament, always means singing with instruments? Of course the Holy Spirit does not tell me that I am to sing with the instruments, for instance, in Eph. 5: 19, for it says "speaking to yourselves in psalms," etc.; and the translators did not put the instruments in the translation in the New Testament, and they have put them in the Old Testament.

6. Brother Prevatt made the point that the translators of the New Testament, knowing of the condition of the church on the point of instrumental music, should have put the instruments in the translation, if by so doing they could have settled the question on that point; and since it is put in the Old Testament where it apparently should occur, they could have just as well put it in the New Testament when making that translation. He wanted to know why they did not.

7. Ingle said that there was no use for them to put the instruments there, for any of the encyclopedias or dictiona-ries of the day show that "psalm" carries with it the instrument; therefore the translators had no use to add the instruments in the New Testament translation. Is that the true and sound Bible way of looking at it?

8. Of the Corinthians Paul said: "When ye come together, each one hath a psalm." (2 Cor. 14: 26.) What would that passage mean in the light of Ingle's interpretation?

9. These brethren made us a proposition for a united church with three articles, one being independence in missionary work, not using the board or society, each one being responsible for what they did with their money. He stressed the autonomy of the local congregation. The stressed the autonomy of the local congregation. The most important article was that the united church use the instruments of music in the worship. Brother Smyser says much about his liberty in Christ, and that we ought not to make the use of the instruments a test of fellowship.

10. They say they can worship with or without the instrument. Of course, we cannot, in the light of our revelations at present; so Brother Prevatt suggested to them that they come and worship with us for six months on trial, and let us study this question together in the meantime, and see if they could not be satisfied. They have not said that they will do so. We want to progress, but we want it to be in the right way. I hope that there may yet be a union on the word of all the forces in Gainesville, and I wish you would answer these questions that may mean so much to the cause here.

With kindest regards, I remain, Yours sincerely, [Signed] B. R. Colson.

We will now consider in the order in which they appear the items of this communication calling for special atten-

1, According to this letter, Brother Ingle "affirms that 'psallo' always carries with it the idea of singing with the instrument." Now, while the proof is both abundant and clear that the brother is radically mistaken in this affirmation, yet, for the sake of fairness in argument and to show the reader the serious and fateful consequences involved in such a position, let us grant, for the sake of the argument, that the position is true, and then see what follows. First of all, one thing is absolutely certain, on which all parties to this controversy are compelled to agree-namely, whatever is in the word "psallo," that we must either do or be in rebellion against God; for, to express the verb in English form, we are distinctly commanded by the New Testament to "psallo." The word is used by the Holy Spirit to express the will of God, but Brother Ingle "affirms that 'psallo' always carries with it the idea of singing with the instruments." Very well; that being true, we cannot obey the command in "psalle" unless we have "the instruments." There is simply no es cape here. Those who depose thus on "psallo" are forced, by the inexorable demands of logic, to take this position, and they may as well come to it at once. Hence, according to Brother Ingle, any church that sings without the instruments is refusing to do what God has commanded to be done, and is, therefore, in rebellion against God. Is Brother Ingle prepared for this? He is completely shut in with no way of escape, and must either stand on this ground or recede from the position he has taken on "psallo." It is useless and worse than folly to talk here about having the instruments sometimes if we want them, and not having them at other times if not convenient to have them. As well might we talk about obeying the command in baptism by immersing folks sometimes if we want to do so, and not immersing them at other times if not convenient to do so. If immerse is in the word "baptize," then it follows as clearly as a mathematical demonstration that we do not obey the command in "baptize" until we immerse; and if the idea of the instruments is always in "psallo," as Brother Ingle says it is, then again it follows as clearly as a mathematical demonstration that we do not obey the command in "psallo" till we play the instruments. course, if this conclusion follows in the case of "baptize," then it follows in the case of "psallo." If not, why not?

2. As to whether "the Holy Spirit did not mean the same wherever it spoke," it is sufficient to reply that the Holy Spirit never used words at any time except in the sense which they bore at the time it used them—a simple fact which a schoolboy can soon learn without being far advanced.

3. When Brother Smyser says of those "familiar with the temple music" that "it was not necessary to state that they were singing with the instrument when they say 'psalm,'" he begs the whole question and assumes the very point in dispute. The word "psallo" in the New Testament and cotemporaneous literature meant to sing, and it did not then mean to play an instrument; and if the Holy Spirit wanted Christians to do the latter as well as the former, it was not only necessary "to state" the fact, but that is exactly what the Holy Spirit would have done. Moreover, if the word "psallo" meant "to sing and play the instruments" when the New Testament was written, that is exactly the way the translators of the King James Version in the seventeenth century and the translators of the Revised Version in the nineteenth century should have translated it; but it meant to sing when the New Testament was written, and the translators of both versions knew the fact and so rendered the word.

4. No, there has been no proof at all ever yet produced "that the early Christians used the instruments as were then in the temple and synagogue." As a matter of fact, instrumental music was not used in the synagogues of the New Testament time at all. It should be remembered, too, that the worship of the church was patterned after that of the synagogue; and the latter, not using instrumental music in its worship at all, has a significant bearing on the question at issue. The use of instrumental music in modern synagogue worship is an innovation upon the Jewish synagogue worship of New Testament times, and when it was first introduced into the modern synagogue it caused disturbance among the Jews, precisely as the introduction of it into the worship of the church caused disturbance among Christians. Antiorganists among the Christians and antiorganists among the Jews have waged a parallel fight on the question. For a discussion of this point, see the editor's work, "Instrumental Music in the Worship," pages 135-142.

5. No, there is no "proof that psalming wherever mentioned either in the Old or New Testament always meant singing with instruments."

6. On the hypothesis that the instruments are in "psallo," Brother Prevatt correctly says "the translators of the New Testament, knowing of the condition of the church on the point of instrumental music, should have put the instruments in the translation;" and this is exactly what they would have done, even if they had not known the said "condition of the church," if the instruments had been in "psallo." But the instruments were not in "psallo," and therefore the translators consistently and properly left them out of the translation.

7. Brother Ingle says that "any of the encyclopedias or dictionaries of the day show that 'psalm' carries with it the instruments," and "therefore the translators" did not need to give it "in the New Testament translation." Then. why should they give anything as its meaning "in the New Testament translation?" And why should they translate any other New Testament word, provided its meaning is given in the "encyclopedias and dictionaries?" Of all the resorts to prop up instrumental music in the worship, this one caps the climax. But the brother is mistaken in saying "any of the dictionaries show that 'psalm' carries with it the instruments." The very greatest Greek-English lexicon in the world to-day, that makes a specialty of defining New Testament Greek into English-the great work of Thayer-after giving the classical meaning of "psallo," just as Liddell and Scott and other classic lexicographers give it, as meaning instrumental music, distinctly declares that it means "in the New Testament to sing a hymn, to celebrate the praises of God in song."

8. Referring to Paul's statement to the Corinthian church that each of its members when they came together "had a psalm," Brother Colson asks what that passage would mean "in the light of Ingle's interpretation." I answer, it is quite difficult to tell what it might mean in that case. Since each of them "had a psalm," it must mean that each had a separate and different psalm; but Lrother Ingle says "psalm" always has the instrument; and in that case it would have to mean either that all of them used one instrument, or that they had different instruments, each being used by a number of persons, or that each one used a separate instrument, in which last case there would be as many instruments as there were members. But if all used one instrument, with each member having a different psalm, it would have been impossible to sing them with the instrumental accompaniment without having a musical Babel; and the same difficulty obtains, only on a smaller scale, if they had different instruments, each being used by a number of persons; and hence, to give them credit for not having an out-and-out musical Babel, it would be more reasonable to conclude, on Brother Ingle's hypothesis, that each one had a separate instrument as well as a separate psalm, and in that case, even if there were only a rew hundred members, it would have been a prodigious orchestral display.

9. The proposition made by Brethren Ingle and Smyser for "a united church" in Gainesville is a remarkable one under the circumstances. Let the reader ponder it carefully. It presents the following significant situation: A number of Christians are divided into two parties, one favoring instrumental music in the worship because they believe its use harmless and that Christians are at liberty to have it or not have it as they may see proper, and that in either case their worship will prove acceptable to God; the other opposing it because they believe its use to be sinful, and that therefore they are not at liberty to have it, but are compelled to worship without it if their worship is to be acceptable to God. Brethren Ingle and Smyser represent the former class, and by the course they pursue they virtually say to the other side: "We can worship either with or without the organ, and in either case we believe our course is acceptable to God. We also know that, according to your claim, you cannot worship with the organ without believing you are in rebellion against God; but, in spite of this fact, we ask you, for the sake of union and cooperation, to take your stand on our side of the question. We are aware that we could stand on your side of the question and do no violence to our conscience or to the will of God, and we are equally aware that, according to your claim, you cannot stand on our side even for the sake of union and cooperation without doing violence to your conscience and, as you believe, to the word of God; yet, for the sake of union and cooperation, we ask you to stand

Do such brethren expect right-thinking people to believe that they seriously want union and harmony in the work of the Lord when they persist, under such circumstances, in demanding that instrumental music be used in the worship? By every principle of consistency, they are under the most solemn obligation, according to their own words, to say to the other side; "We believe your position is unnecessary, and that it is all right, where all can unite on it, to use instrumental music in the worship; but you believe it is sinful thus to use it; and since we can worship without it and believe, at the same time, that our worship is acceptable to God, we gladly yield our preference at this point for the sake of cooperation, union, and harmony in the work of the Lord." This would be a plea marked by consistency and the spirit of the Lord, and it would not only be powerful and unanswerable, but would speedily win all properly thoughtful persons on all sides of the controversy.

10. Finally, the idea of Brethren Ingle and Smyser about "liberty in Christ" and making the use of instrumental music a "test of fellowship" is equally remarkable. No matter what others may or may not do, they assuredly make it a test of fellowship, so far as union is concerned. They have not only made instrumental music "the most important article" of the three they submitted as a basis of union, but they have so far virtually said: "If you will agree that instrumental music may be used in the music, we can unite and work together; if you are not willing to this, then we must remain divided." If that is not making instrumental music a test of union and fellowship in the work of the Lord, then it is difficult to see how it could be done. On the contrary, the other side is consistent in making it such a test, because they believe it sinful thus to use it and are compelled to refrain from it or violate their conscience, one or the other. According to their own statement of the case, there is one way open for Brethren Ingle and Smyser and those in sympathy with them to have union and cooperation in the work of the Lord in Gainesville. For the sake of the union for which our Lord prayed and for which an inspired apostle contended, will they walk in that way? May the Lord lead them to see the solemn importance of it.

The Effects of Sin.

BY J. C. M'Q.

God's hatred for sin cost him the death of his Son. He hates sin with an intensity that no man hates it. No man is able to portray the terrible effects of sin. All pain, all heartaches, all tears, all deaths, and all punishment result from sin. If we could hear and feel the pains and groans of the lost throughout all eternity, we would have but a faint conception of the terrible work of sin.

Men write and talk about universal happiness and salvation. Without the least pessimism, I am inclined to believe that one can take the Bible and come nearer proving universal suffering than universal salvation. The first breath the infant draws is a wall, and it suffers throughout life. All have sinned. Again, we are told: "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." There are many other scriptures that teach us of sufferings that humanity must endure. On the other hand, it is true that we have many moments of joy and sunshine. There are many hours spent in pleasure and joy. Neither extreme is the truth. Life is not all suffering, neither is it all happiness. As to whether there is more suffering or happiness depends largely on one's viewpoint and the life which one leads.

There is only one way to get rid of sin with all its terrible results. Time cannot wear out sin. A man murders his neighbor. The loss that his neighbor suffers is an eternal loss. The sin will be as great a thousand years after it is committed as when first done. The murderer may be absolved from the guilt of his sin by the pardon of the governor. but the loss suffered by the murdered man and the loss to his family still continues and is eternal. It is even so with the alien sinner. He sins and tramples under his feet the law of God. Time cannot blot out the terrible effects and results of his sin. His sin is held against him until it is forgiven by Jehovah. Through the shedding of the blood of the Lord Jesus Christ the Lord has prepared a way through which the sinner may be forgiven. When God forgives, he blots out sin and holds it against the sinner no more forever. The alien sinner is required to believe on the Lord Jesus Christ with all his heart, repent of his sins, and be baptized into the name of the Father, Son, and Spirit, in order to be forgiven. When he does this, his sins are blotted out. God has promised to forgive him when he obeys the law of pardon. A man may live a moral life, may do many good works so far as the world can judge, and yet he does not enjoy forgiveness until he humbly complies with the conditions of pardon. Like Paul, he may have been the chief of sinners, he may have done much to lead him down to darkness and despair, yet so soon as he is cleansed by the blood of the Lord Jesus Christ he is expected to be active in the service of Christ.

God also has a law of pardon for the erring Christian. When the child of God sins and comes short of the glory of God, there is only one way through which he can be cleansed from his sins. All the works of merit and all man's works of righteousness will not free him from his guilt and bring him to a state of acceptance with Jehovah. When Simon the sorcerer had committed sin, the Spirit of God, through Peter, commanded him: "Repent therefore of this thy wickedness, and pray the Lord, if perhaps the thought of thy heart shall be forgiven thee." (Acts 8: 22.) The beloved John also tells us: "If we confess our sins, he is faithful and righteous to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." (1 John 1: 9.) The blood of Christ is able to cleanse us from all unrighteousness. When the erring Christian is thus cleansed through the blood of the Lord Jesus Christ, he is as clean as he will ever be. No man has a right to tell him that he is too weak and frail to engage in the work and service of the Lord Jesus Christ. Men who forbid those who have erred. and who have confessed their sins and turned away from them, to engage in any service of the Master, are making themselves more righteous than was the Lord Jesus Christ. While Jesus had east seven devils out of Mary Magdalene, he did not afterwards prohibit her from becoming his close companion, and it was to her that he appeared first after his resurrection. The best way to keep the weak and erring from repeating their sins is to keep them busy in the service of the Lord Jesus Christ. In the performance of duty men have far less temptation to sin than they do in idleness. God wants his word sown in the hearts of men; and whenever it is sown there, it will germinate and spring up and bring forth fruit, provided the soil is not barren in which the seed is sown. The beloved John tells us: "I write unto you, my little children, because your sins are forgiven you for his name's sake." (1 John 2: 12.) John wrote unto his "little children" because their sins had been forgiven "for his name's sake." So we should encourage those who have been forgiven in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. If we demand more of them than God demands, we will discourage them and influence them not to lead a life of godliness. Such a course is to encourage and help sin. The only way to help a man to a nobler life is to bear with him in his weaknesses, seek to strengthen him and to build him up in every good work. When the man in the church at Corinth had his father's wife and had not repented of his terrible sin, Paul was very insistent that the church withdraw fellowship from him. He commanded: "In the name of our Lord Jesus, ye being gathered together, and my spirit, with the power of our Lord Jesus, to deliver such a one unto Satan for the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus." (1 Cor. 5: 4, 5.) The Corinthians were required to obey God and to withdraw fellowship from the guilty sinner, first, in order that they might save the man himself, and, second, to protect the church. The punishment inflicted by the many had the desired effect. In writing the second letter to the church at Corinth a few months later, Paul says: "Sufficient to such a one is this punishment which was inflicted by the many; so that contrariwise ye should rather forgive him and comfort him, lest by any means such a one should be swallowed up with his overmuch sorrow." (2 Cor. 2: 6.) Thus it will be noted that the entire church was commanded not only to forgive him, but to comfort him and publicly confirm their love toward him. Paul was just as insistent that they do this as he was in the first letter that they withdraw fellowship from him. The confirmation of brotherly love toward him protected the church then, and it will do it now. When a man has proved his penitence by his works, there is but one thing to do, and that is to help him to a better, purer, and nobler life. Any other course is rebellion to God and means to encourage rather than discourage sin.

N. A. Riggins On Baptism.

BY F. W. SMITH.

The following from the Cumberland Presbyterian of December 16, 1920, by N. A. Riggins, of Lakeland, Fla., has been placed in my hands for notice:

CONCERNING WATER BAPTISM.

I am very much pleased to see you take the definite position you have on the subject of baptism in our church. As the years go by, I have become more and more sure that the Cumberland Presbyterian Church has been committing a grave error by accepting into its membership people who have been immersed instead of being baptized, and a much worse error in permitting some of its ministry to substitute immersion for baptism on receiving a new convert into the church

From the beginning we should have been consistent with ourselves and with the teachings of the Bible and refused to recognize immersion as a baptism at all. We should have plainly told people who had been immersed that they had never been baptized and forced the fighting for the truth as hard as immersionists have fought for an error, Had we done this, we would have had a membership of more than a million united people to-day.

For years I have offered a thousand dollars reward for one clear case of baptism by immersion as a religious act, in all the Bible, in water or any other element. And that offer holds good to-day. My immersionist friends always fail to find a single definite case and are forced to beg the question by saying the word itself means to immerse, which is just as much true as that the word "go" means to walk.

There is a similarity between the meaning of the word "go" and the word "baptize;" and to find the meaning of one of them, you have got to proceed on exactly parallel lines to what you do in finding the meaning of the other. The word "go" means to walk; but when I tell my friend to go from New York to Liverpool, he finds the word "go" does not mean to walk, and to apply that meaning to it would make him talk foolishness, and he is forced to do his "going" by steamship, motor boat, sailing vessel, submarine, or air craft. When I tell him to "go" from Lakeland to Nashville, he has to discard all the ships, including the submarine or immersion mode of "going" to make this trip, and "go" by train, automobile, horseback, in a buggy, walk, etc.

The word "baptize" has as many meanings as the word "go," but in no case, in all the Bible, can one of its meanings—"immerse"—be made to properly fit the idea that was intended to be conveyed when the word "baptize" was used, and in many cases it would be as absurd to apply that meaning as it would to tell my friend to go from Lakeland to Nashville by submarine.

My friend who was immersed was never baptized at all. He missed both the object and the mode of religious baptism, and should be baptized for the right purpose and in the right mode before he is received into full fellowship into the Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

Several years ago I wrote a little sketch of the subject, "Is Immersion Valid Baptism?" which was published in the Cumberland Presbyterian and also in pamphlet form. I have a few of these pamphlets on hand which I will mail free, as long as they last, to any one who is interested in the subject.

The similarity between the words "go" and "baptize" is in the fact that both of them always mean a change. "Go," in every case, means a change of location or condition. "Baptize," without exception, means a change of condition or relation. In both words, the method of change must be found outside of the word itself. To illustrate: A man "goes" from one town to another—a change of location; a man "goes" blind—a change of condition; John preached the "baptism" of repentance—a change of condition produced by repentance. The children of Israel were "baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea"—a changed relation that came to them and Moses by the experience of passing through the sea and being led by the pillar of cloud. And so the change is what is referred to in every real "baptism," and water baptism is used without exception to symbolize that change. In every case of real baptism the party baptized remains haptized. Jesus asked James and John if they were able to be baptized with the baptism that "I am baptized with "—not was. but am. If we symbolize the mode and not the fact, then immersionists should be able to say at all times, "I am immersed"—not was immersed.

After the above fashion does Mr. Riggins write to the editor of the Cumberland Presbyterian, in which he flies into the face of the scholarship of the world. The man evidently knows but little of what scholars have said on the subject, or else cares not for his lack of fairness to state what he should know to be well-authenticated facts regarding the action of baptism. He speaks of "a grave error" having been committed by the "Cumberland Presbyterian Church" by "accepting into its membership people who have been immersed instead of being baptized." Of course no one at all familiar with the Bible would call in question the right of the "Cumberland Presbyterian Church" to impose any condition of admitting people to membership in it, for the simple reason that the Bible knows absolutely nothing of such an institution, and consequently makes no provisions at all for any living mortal to become a member of it. Hence, if Mr. Riggins wishes to reject one of the blood-sealed appointments of the Lord Jesus Christ for membership in the church of God, and institute one of his own to initiate people into something of which God is not the author, he can do so, but there are multiplied thousands who will reject both his man-made institution and its human law of induction into it.

He proceeds to say: "For years I have offered a thousand dollars reward for one clear case of baptism by immersion as a religious act, in all the Bible, in water or any other element." Thus he makes a distinction between "baptism" and "immersion"—a thing the greatest scholars that ever lived failed to do. He should know that the word "baptize" is not a translated word, and that in order to arrive at the meaning of the word "baptize" we must go to the original, "baptizo," which is Greek. Since our friend seems to be in a splendid financial condition, offering rewards of a thousand dollars at a clip, if he will deposit that money in a safe bank, to be delivered upon presentation of the proof for which he offers it, I will relieve him of his financial burden. As I need a little spare change, no time will be lost in taking down his reward. Now, in order to give our friend something to do, and as a stimulant to spur him to diligence, a few friends of mine will give him one thousand dollars to find, "in all the Bible, one clear case of baptism" performed, "as a religious act," by either sprinkling or pouring water on the subject.

But this friend of ours makes a most wonderful display of logic when he says: "There is a similarity between the meaning of the word 'go' and the word 'baptize;' and to find the meaning of one of them, you have to proceed on exactly parallel lines to what you do in finding the meaning of the other." Indeed! Does Mr. Riggins not know the difference between generic and specific words? The word "go" is a generic term, including every method, mode, or manner of getting from one point to another; while the word "baptize" is a specific term, excluding everything except the one specific act denoted by the word. If he had used the word "walk" in his illustration, which is a specific term, he could have reached an entirely different conclusion.

For fear that Mr. Riggins, in his great distaste for the Bible meaning of the word "baptize," has overlooked what one of the very greatest authorities on the meaning of the word in dispute has to say, I submit the following: "Baptisma, tos, to (baptizo); a word peculiar to the N. T. and eccl. writ., immersion, submersion, (1) used trop., of calamities and afflictions, with which one is quite overwhelmed; (2) of John's baptism, that purificatory rite by which men, on confessing their sins, were bound to a spiritual reformation, obtained the pardon of their past sins. and became qualified for the benefits of the Messiah's kingdom, soon to be set up; (3) of Christian baptism; this, according to the view of the apostles, is a rite of sacred Immersion, commanded by Christ. Bapto: (a) to dip, dip in, immerse, followed by a genitive of the thing into which the object is dipped (because only a part of it is touched by the act of dipping); (b) to dip into dye, to dye, color." (J. H. Thayer's Greek-English Lexicon of the New Testa-

If, in the face of this lexicographer, admitted by scholars the world over as one of the very best, our friend is still anxious to rid himself of that one thousand dollars, he can mail to my address, care Gospel Advocate, his check for the amount. I impose but one condition—viz., that it be a certified check, for I do not desire the burden of anxiety in waiting for a check to go through all the clearing houses before knowing whether or not it is good. I shall watch the mails.

A Cheerful Singer.

The brown thrasher is a beautiful bird both in the coloring of his body and in his song. On head and back the bird is of a delicate and refined reddish brown, and below white with black spots. But it is his song that is particularly pleasing and musical. Unlike some other birds, he does not seem to care whether he is being watched or not as he sits on the topmost branch of a tree in the meadow and pours forth his energetic and fervent song, which sounds as if he were telling the farmer to "hurry up, hurry up; plow it, plow it; harrow it, harrow it; hoe it, hoe it;" and so on through a list of similar happy instructions.—Exchange.

The Heavenly Theme.

BY ADELIA S. MARTIN.

Sometimes there are moments when hearts awake
To a throb and thrill, as a musical strain
Will pulse and swell till it almost break
In the fullness of joy or agony of pain.
Like the glorified song as the last note dies,
Though born of earth, it uplifts to the skies,
This heavenly song of Jesus!

Sometimes to the soul, as in moment of prayer,
Some direct inspiration from heaven is given—
The radiant glory! it seemed as it were
A dear hand lifted a window in heaven.
A gleam of a star, though seen through tears,
To brighten our path through oncoming years,
So sweet is the theme of Jesus.

O soul as uplifted, inspired by the gleam
Of faith grown strong in the loving quest;
The hope, the prayer, a life's short dream
Of peace, sweet peace, and rest, sweet rest,
As the stars are one with heaven's broad blue,
As the Spirit-filled life or life made new
In the beautiful life in Jesus.

Lord, guard and keep in thy safe control,
To the sanctifying or setting apart:
To oneness of spirit and soul and soul—
And nearness to thee, O heart of my heart!
As years pass by and worlds roll on,
One, as the Father is one with the Son.

Jesus! Jesus!

- From W. Halliday Trice, Fresno, Cal., July 11: "Even though the weather is hot, interest in the Lord's work at the Nevada Avenue Church is growing. On Sunday, July 3, one person was baptized; and at the same service another lady made the confession, and was baptized Wednesday night. Last night five others were baptized."

Wanted—A lady with office experience who can take some dictation and use typewriter; at least high-school education is desirable, and must be a member of the church of Christ. None other need apply. Salary fifteen dollars per week to begin with, and opportunity of advancement. References exchanged if desirable. Address "Insurance," Box 256, Columbus, Miss.

From A. S. Gill: "J. V. Armstrong Traylor, of Smyrna, Tenn., has just closed an eight-days' meeting with us at Mount Olivet, near Chariotte, Tenn. Forceful sermons and much interest were manifested throughout the meeting. This is the best meeting we have had here in many years, and the church was edified by Brother Traylor's preaching. The meeting resulted in ten baptisms and three restorations. He has promised to be back with us next year."

From W. M. Oakley, Nashville, Tenn., July 15: "Our meeting at Coopertown closed at the water this morning. The meeting was well attended and interest grew to the close. Nine were baptized; one from the Freewill Baptists, who was satisfied with her baptism, was admitted to membership by the elders of the church; one restored. I go next to (Bethel) White's Creek, Route 1, where we begin next Lord's day."

Our readers have shown much interest in the welfare of the Tennessee Orphan Home. Just at present the Home is in need of funds to make improvements. Will you not make a liberal contribution to help make the orphan's comfortable? No one doubts that it is service to God to remember the widows and orphans. It will be delightful at the judgment to hear the great Judge say: "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of these my brethren, even these least, ye did it unto me."

A. G. Freed writes: "The meeting at Marietta, Miss., closed on Tuesday night, July 12. It was a great meeting in many ways. The audiences were large and the interest fine. There were twelve young men and women baptized and one restored. The church is at work and at peace among themselves. I made my home with Brother and Sister Pharr. They know how to treat a preacher by letting him do as he pleases. We have many faithful members at Marietta. My stay with them was a pleasant one."

The church in Miami, Fla., has already begun the construction of a new building, which will be completed at the cost of about fifteen thousand dollars. Over seven thousand dollars of this amount has already been contributed by the small congregation there. The property is thoroughly protected by a restrictive clause in the deed. Any congregations or individuals desiring to have fellowship in the building there may send contributions to Herbert Flowers, Miami, Fla.

- From D. S. Ligon, Little Rock, Ark., July 15: "I am now in this city having some dental work done. I heard W. F. Lemmons preach last night. It rained just before night, and hence the crowd was small. The meeting out at Sulphur Springs, near Dardanelle, Ark., closed on Tuesday night with five baptisms and a number restored. I hated to close the meeting, as the interest was the best I almost ever saw; but I had to have some work done and then get ready for the meeting at Havana, Ark., which begins tomorrow night. Let the good work go on."
- F. O. Howell writes: "The church of Christ at Jackson, Tenn., is enjoying an era of prosperity in spiritual things. We had five additions to the congregation on July 10 as the direct result of preaching six nights under the tent of the Volunteers of America last week. This is a great field and ready unto harvest. I will begin a meeting in Bradford, Tenn., on the fourth Sunday night in this month, and one at Trenton, Tenn., on the first Sunday in August. I am in close touch with some young preachers and can arrange for some more meetings for them. We have already arranged for three meetings. Write me at Jackson, Tenn."
- N. W. Ware, one of our oldest subscribers, who lives at St. Augustine, Texas, sends us a very interesting thumb nail sketch which reads: "I was born on February 25, 1831, in Tuscaloosa County, Ala., and came to Texas in 1839. My father died in 1840. On February 24, 1856, I married Mary J. Smith. March 5, 1862, I left home for the war. I was wounded at Franklin, Tenn., on November 30, 1864. I got back home on May 29, 1865. In 1867 I was elected Justice of the Peace. I taught school several terms. I have been preaching about forty years. My wife never had but one child, but we raised and partly raised about ten orphans. I am now in my ninety-first year, getting very feeble."

Van A. Bradley writes: "I began a meeting with the congregation at Elton, Ala., on July 10. We have been hindered with rain and sickness, yet the crowds are reasenably good and very attentive. I shall begin next Monday night in a mission field. I will preach just as long as I can stay there. I hope to do some good. After this I go to Liberty and Christian Home for meetings, then back to North Alabama. This is a needy field. Men who preach here do it at a great sacrifice. There are only a few brethren in this country able to share the expenses of a meeting, and thus it is hard on the preacher, yet I have never regretted my fourteen years' successive work among these folks. I have done some hard work here, and am still at it."

From Mrs. W. J. Hogan, Speigner, Ala.: "A. D. Dies, of Oakman, Ala., began a meeting at Cold Springs on June 26 and continued it until the night of July 4. This was one of the best meetings we have had at this place for many years. Three were added to the little flock. One was baptized, and two took membership with us who had moved in from another county. But still we have no leader. The people manifested more interest in this meeting than they have for some time. Large crowds every night. Brother Dies is a splendid preacher, and has promised to be with us another year. Brethren, pray for us in this work that we may hold out faithful to the end, and be able to get a congregation established in this section that will work for their Master at all times."

Wanted—A number of farmers with families, who are members of the church of Christ, can find splendid homes, at reasonable prices, close around Glendale, Ky. Glendale is a thriving little town situated in a splendid farming section of the State, on the Louisville and Nashville Railroad, about fifty miles south of Louisville, with a church of Christ and a graded school. It is a good town. Any brother or sister who desires to locate near a school will be welcomed into our midst and his presence at church will be appreciated. We will be glad to answer any inquiry and help you locate in this section. Remember, we are not land agents, but brethren in Christ only,—B. B. Brooks, Elizabethtown, Ky., Route 6; G. A. Charles L. Spier reports a good meeting in Canadian, Ark., with nine baptisms and two restorations. He is now in a neeting at Springfield, Ark.

W. N. Ferguson reports two good meetings—one at Cherokee Park, with eleven baptisms and nine restorations, and the other at Dog Creek, in this county, with two baptisms.

L. L. Brigance is in a fine meeting at Centerville, Tenn. Two baptisms were mentioned in the first report. This is the seventh meeting Brother Brigance has conducted for this church.

The brethren at Palmer, Tenn., are planning to build a house of worship to accommodate two hundred and fifty people. They are few in number, and would appreciate assistance. Address George B. Thorn, Palmer, Tenn.

From Ben West, North Fort Worth, Texas, July 11: "Large crowds at Northside Church yesterday. Two strong men confessed Christ and one woman identified. Three confessions and eight baptisms at the hour of prayer last week."

From C. E. Holt, Wilson, Okla., July 14: "Our meeting at Wilson is running smoothly, and prospects are very good. This is a great field. We have some good brethren here. Some very good preachers live at Wilson. G. W. Thompson has done a good work here."

From J. S. Dunn, Dallas, Texas, July 11: "I am at Garrett now in a good meeting. Six added to date, and five of them were Baptists. Rain and mud are hindering some. J. W. Webb is leading the singing. We go to Era, Cooke County, July 17, for our next meeting."

J. C. Mosley writes from Spencer, Tenn.: "I am here teaching and preaching and baptizing. I baptized the cashier of the bank and one girl from Maryville, Tenn., and one girl to-day, and others expected before we close. I go from here to Hebron to stay about two weeks. I baptized eighty-six in Calfkiller and Caney Fork River."

T. B. Thompson writes: "The meeting at Allen's Chapel closed at the water on July 9, with twenty-two from all sources; sixteen baptisms. Eight were baptized at the last service. I believe the church expects to inaugurate a forward move. A Nazarene preacher cast his lot with the church during the meeting. There are many splendid people in this locality."

Do not forget the Gospel Advocate Sinking Fund. We have received some funds for the purpose of sending the Advocate to people who are not able to pay for it. This fund is almost exhausted. Many people have been helped to read the paper and thus made happy by the contributions of some thoughtful friends. Anything you may send to this office will be properly applied.

From J. H. Horton, Haleyville, Ala., July 15: "I began a meeting at Lynn, Ala., on July 3, and closed it on July 14, at the water. Twenty-two souls were obedient to the faith. The church seemed greatly encouraged, and they promise to do better service to our Savior. J. C. Franklin lives at Lynn, and he is doing a good work with them. I go next to Lawrence County, Tenn., for two meetings."

From L. R. Barkley, Cleveland, Ohio: "A few disciples of Christ on the west side of Cleveland have banded themselves together to meet for the worship of God and the study of his word every Lord's day at 10 A.M. at 2236 Richland Avenue. Take a Bridge and Madison Avenues street car, marked 'Lakewood,' and get off at Brent's Road. We hope to secure a more suitable place to meet this fall."

The brethren at Colorado Springs, Col., have just finished a new meetinghouse, located at 1915 West Pike's Peak Avenue. E. C. Fuqua conducted a meeting for them, and was much impressed with their congeniality and readiness to work. Visitors to Colorado Springs should note the convenient location of the new house and worship with them. Brother Fuqua is now in a tent meeting at Fort Collins.

From E. L. Cambron, Wartrace, Tenn., July 18: "I have just closed a successful meeting in Huntsville, Ala.; and while we had some opposition and hindrances by rain and sickness, there were nineteen additions to the Merrimack congregation, and the congregation was much strengthened. I am booked for a meeting at Union Grove, Ala., near New Market, beginning on the fourth Lord's day in this month. I will report to the Gospel Advocate all my meetings this year. I have not been doing this, but think I will do so from now on."

Marion Harris, one of our veteran readers, now living at Gainesboro, Tenn., sends us a highly appreciated note, which follows: "I have been taking the Gospel Advocate for forty years or longer. I have passed my seventy-second year, and have been able to fill all of my appointments. I rode horseback yesterday twenty-two miles and baptized a lady, and met with a brother that was ninety years old. I asked him if he was taking the Advocate. He said his time was out and that he had neglected to renew. After discussing the matter and agreeing that it was one of the best papers that is published in the brotherhood, he gave me two dollars and fifty cents for his subscription."

From Earnest C. Love, Fresno, Cal., June 27: "The Fresno Street Church held two more good services yesterday. Our midweek service was hindered somewhat by an electrical storm, something very unusual in this part of the country. The apricot harvest is now in full swing, and we are all very busy. We have our print shop in operation again. We got our first paper out June 24. In connection with our school work in Fresno, I wish to state that I am now working with and preaching to the congregation worshiping at the A. O. U. W. Hall on Fresno Street, and some of the congregation are backing our home and school. Some of this congregation drew out from the Nevada Avenue congregation sometime ago over personal troubles, and not over any doctrinal question. Some have feared that this point would not be understood, so that is the reason this statement is made."

From A. O. Colley, Fulton, Ky., July 4: "I am now at this place, my old home town, for a meeting. We are starting off nicely—a well-filled house at each service. We have just finished a great meeting at Pearl and Bryan Streets Church, in Dallas, Texas. Horace W. Busby, of Fort Worth, Texas, did the preaching. The work was well done, as his work is at every place. The church there advertized and helped him in every way they could. He stayed there only twelve days, but each service, both day and night, was well attended. Brother Busby's unwavering faith in God's word, his plain way of presenting it, and his lovable disposition make him one of the very best men I know for a real reviving of Christians and stirring sinners to obey the Lord. There were about forty-four additions to the congregation—about twenty-five baptisms. The church has given me one month's leave. I will be in and near Fulton during the time."

Glasscock.

Ella Catherine Glasscock was born on March 13, 1876, and died on April 14, 1921. She was married to James W. Glasscock on November 29, 1899. Her maiden name was "Bills." She leaves a husband, one daughter, father, and six brothers. She was a patient sufferer for several years. She obeyed the gospel at the age of fifteen. The writer has known her from childhood. She was good and kind to every one. She was true in all the relations of life. Hence, her people have a strong and bright hope. that if permitted to enter that happy home, I will meet Ella there.

B. F. HART.

Harris.

Sister Susie Moore Harris, daughter of Brother and Sister J. E. Green and beloved wife of David Harris, departed this life on June 21, 1921, aged thirty-seven years, four months, and twenty-eight days. She obeyed the gospel in 1899, and the beautiful life which she lived in Christ was spoken of by all who knew her. She was mar-ried to David Harris in December, 1917. Besides her husband, she leaves a father, mother, two sisters, and one brother to mourn her death. Funeral services were conducted by the writer at the Forest Hill Cemetery, Ashland City, Tenn., where her body was laid to rest. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them."

Coplin.

Lonnie Coplin (née Raines) was born on February 3, 1884, and died on April 22, 1921, at her home in Humholdt, Tenn. She was the daughter of W. Z. and Mary Elizabeth Raines. She was married to James R. Griggs in April, 1904. He died in May, 1907. To this union were born two children, both dying in infancy. In October, 1911, she was married to Dr. W. L. Coplin, with whom she was living at the time of her death. Lonnie leaves a father, mother, brother, husband, and stepdaughter, besides a host of other relatives and friends, to mourn her untimely departure. She was bap-tized by the writer when fourteen years old, was married by him, and at the funeral he tried to comfort the sorrowing and warn the living. Sister Coplin lived her religion. She spent much of her time and means looking after and caring for the sick and poor, thus laying up treasures in heaven. Truly one of God's noble women has left us, for "by their fruits ye shall know them." We hope to meet again just "over there," where partings will be no more. J. L. HOLLAND.

Smith.

Sister Virginia Cliff Smith was born on October 12, 1867, and departed this life on April 25, 1921. She was mar-ried to James William Smith on January 14, 1886. She was baptized into Christ in October, 1893, under the preaching of Brother Elam. Her par-

SYMPTOMS WOMEN DREAD

Mrs. Wilson's Letter Should Be Read by All Women

Clearfield, Pa.-" \fter my last child was born last September I was unable to do all of my own work. I had severe pains in my left side every month and had fever and sick dizzy spells and such pains during my periods, which lasted two weeks. I heard of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound doing others so much good and thought I would give it a trial. I have been very glad that I did, for now I feel much stronger and do all of my work. I tell my friends when all of my work. I tell my friends when they ask me what helped me, and they think it must be a grand medicine. And it is. You can use this letter for a testimonial if you wish."—Mrs. HARRY A. WILSON, R. F. D. 5, Clearfield, Pa.

The experience and testimony of such women as Mrs. Wilson prove beyond a doubt that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will correct such troubles by removing the cause and restorbles by removing the cause and restoring the system to a healthy normal condition. When such symptoms develop as backaches, bearing-down pains, dis-placements, nervousness and "the placements, nervousness and "the blues" a woman cannot act too promptly in trying Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound if she values her future comfort and happiness.

Ira B. and her dear husband and companion survive to mourn the loss of a darling wife and mother. Sister Smith was a mother indeed, ever watchful for the well-being of her household, kind and considerate to those about her. Industrious to a marked degree, her life was a life of service. Even when racked with pain she still maintained that thoughtful consideration for the comfort of others. Many hearts have been warmed by her kindly ministrations and their lives blessed and bettered by her gracious influence. The sudden death of Sister Mattle C. Grigg, at her home in Nashville, Tenn., on June 29, 1921, occasioned grief and sorrow not only among her relatives, but among a wide circle of She was born on October 31, 1863, being the daughter of John G. and L. M. Burke. She was married to Brother William A. Grigg on February 2, 1886, and, besides her husband, is survived by one son, Harding Grigg. Sister Grigg obeyed the gospel when but a girl of tender age, and since that time had proved herself to be an earnest and loyal disciple. She was a woman of many fine talents, and used them all for God's glory. Her influence in the home and in the social circle was marked. have I seen such devotion to husband and child and to friends as she manifested. For many years the family lived at Mount Juliet and worshiped with the church there. Her work as a teacher in the Sunday school will bear fruit for years to come. A little more than three years ago Brother Grigg's business brought them to Nashville, and during their residence here they have worshiped with the Russell with the Russell Street Church. Wife and mother will be greatly missed, but our God has the power and goodness to make even the graves of our loved ones blossom with the flowers of eternal peace. May he do this and more for our sorrowing A. B. LIPSCOMB. friends.

Scott.

The congregation of disciples at Henning, Tenn., has lost a valiant soldier of the cross and heaven has gained a valuable addition in the passing of Brother Thomas Fletcher Scott. He was born at Brownsville, Tenn., on December 2, 1836, and died at his home, at Henning, Tenn., on June 4, 1921. A letter from one of his daughters informs us that "his passing away was like his life had beenperfectly glorious; a constant sunshine." It was an inspiration to be in his home, he was so full of love, and talked the Bible every opportunity. To quote again: "He was fed by Brother David Lipscomb's writings, and through him he learned and loved the Bible." "What a glorious day Friday [just before his death] was, when he was trying all day to tell us, as he would point upward, that had fought the fight, kept the faith, and was ready to go!" "When we asked him how he felt, he said: 'Better, better.'" On Saturday it was eviter, better." On Saturday it was evident that he was "better," when his bodily frame was borne to its resting place by the strong arms of his four manly sons and two grandsons, while he himself was "safe in the arms of Jesus." What a glorious thing the religion of Christ is!-a religion that guarantees a calm, serene life, and a triumphant death, and that takes away the bitter sting of separation, leaving sad, sweet thoughts to the living, and opens up eternity's heaven to those who "die in the Lord."

"ALF and BOB TAYLOR, with their

"ALF and BOB TAXLOR, with their cloquence, their fiddles, and their fox hounds, have wrought for themselves a niche of eternal melody in the hearts of their country."

So states the author of this little book, which we present as the best product of the pen of DeLong Rice. Into one hour of reading he has gathered the strange and romantic story of the two most wonderful political campaigns of Tennessee—the thrilling tale of the happy comradeship and the lifelong rivalry of the two famous brothers—a disclosure of the remarkable and heretofore unpublished incidents that attended the political division of the Taylor family—the wonder of "The War of the Roses" that attracted the attention of the world—and the truth about "OLD LIMBER," the peerless and now immortal fox hound that played the leading role of sentiment in the political campaign of last fall, from the Mississippl River to the Unaka Monntains.

With a "Cast of Characters extending from a President of the United States to a fox hound," the story touches a wide range of human sentiment; and through it all is the aroma of crackling camp fires and the music of the chase.

FIELD REPORTS

Lawrenceburg, Tenn., July 14.—On July 3 I began a meeting at Mount Zion, near Florence, Ala., and closed it on the night of July 13. We had good crowds and interest throughout the entire meeting. Ten were reclaimed and eleven were buried with their Lord in baptism. Every one seemed to be well pleased with the meeting. I shall begin a meeting next Lord's day in Giles County, Tenn., about twelve miles from Leoma.— J. C. Hollis, Bardwell, Ky., July 10.-1 am now in a good meeting at Bardwell. While the weather is very hot and the prejudice very high, we have built up our crowds until our house is just about filled. We have had five additions. The meeting is just a week old. The church divided here a few years ago. Those on the organ side seem to be very stubborn, but several of them have come out to hear us. This is the home of Brother Joe Ratcliffe, who has been contending for the truth for many years.—R. E. L. Taylor.

Bardwell, Ky., July 14.—On July 13 Brother R. E. L. Taylor closed an eleven-days' meeting with the church at Bardwell, which resulted in eight baptisms and much good otherwise. We think it was one of the best meet-ings in the history of the church. Brother Taylor is a great preacher of the gospel, and we hope to have him with us again. Brethren, you will make no mistake if you send for him to work for you. I will begin my third meeting with the church at Cardwell, Mo., next Lord's day.—Joe Ratcliffe.

Muskogee, Okla., July 14.-1 closed the meeting at Finley, Okla, with the finest interest. About six hundred people present at the last service. In some respects this was one of the greatest meetings of my life. The in-terest was so great that we absolutely killed the moving-picture show. Two or three times they advertised their picture and failed to show it on account of a lack of anybody to show to. Seventeen were baptized and two restored. Among those baptized were some of the most prominent people of the town, several of whom were prominent members of sectarian churches. Quite a number of the leading members of the Methodist and Baptist churches promised to give up their sectarian doctrines, but wanted a little more time to study before obeying the gospel. Brother W. C. Harrison had charge of the song service. He did his work well. We promised to be with them again next year,—W. L. Oliphant.

Some ten or twelve members were added to our rapidly growing number. The writer worked with the thriving congregation at Roswell in a meeting not long since. The work there is doing well under the leader-ship of an efficient eldership. Brother Speck has been working with them for almost a year. The Roswell church of Christ is bound to succeed. I recently closed a meeting for the brethren in a small community about twenty-five miles north of Clovis. As a result of this meeting, the members decided to do more and better work for the Lord. Five were baptized and some nine or ten were restored to their "first love." May the Lord help us in this needy field. We are going to work for greater things. Our vision is not limited; our courage is strong; our faith is in the Lord Jesus Christ. -G. F. Mickey.

Union, S. C., July 11.—Our tent meeting moves along nicely. We meet in the house for the Sunday-morning services. Two were baptized yester-day, one of which is the head of a family and a very fine man. His family adds eight to our audience. I baptized his mother-in-law a few days ago, and will baptize his wife soon. We also had one to come forward and make his acknowledgment. Prospects are good for additions any time. Brother G. F. Gibbs and wife arrived Friday to take up the work in this State, and we are so rejoiced to have them with us to help gather the harvest. The congregation at Lawrenceburg, Tenn., is supporting them in the work. Just think what could be done if we could get the preachers into such places as this and then get the brethren to support them. will we do when we are called upon to lay our sheaves at the Master's feet? Will yours be nothing but leaves? The poet has well said: "Nothing but leaves! The Spirit rieves over a life of wasted years."
Truly the harvest is plenteous and the laborers are few. Let us pray the Father to send forth laborers into his vineyard. Brother Gibbs preached at the morning service to an audience of more than sixty. In the afternoon he preached at the convict camp to above a hundred who had gathered for various reasons. Here we reach people who would never hear elsewhere. In the afternoon I went back to the schoolhouse where I was the Sunday before and preached to about one hundred hungry listeners. They are very anxious for us to hold a meeting there; and this we shall do, the Lord willing. Several went out from town with me. We have fine roads, and there are a hundred who would hear the gospel gladly if we could only take it to them; but, handicapped as we are, it is impossible to get to them. Pray for us that we may live long and be able to reach all the people possi-ble in this country. Do not forget that our house needs to be finished as soon as possible.—Thomas H. Burton.

Freedom.

Freedom is a spiritual state. It is a state of mind even more than a state of body. A man may be in his legal status a slave, and yet be free in spirit, and he may be ever so rich and not be free. When the soul domi-nates the body, then a man is free. When the body dominates the soul, then he is not free. When you see a bull grazing in the field, please notice that he usually has a ring in his nose. That is the condition of a great many men whose bodies dominate their souls, and the fact that the ring may be a gold ring does not help it .--Harper's Magazine.

Denver (Col.) Notes.

BY JOHN D. EVANS.

Yesterday (July 3) was a good day with us. Brother E. C. Fuqua preached at the morning service, the writer in the evening. At the evening service there was one confession and baptism. Brother J. C. Estes did the baptizing. We are getting in good working order for the series of meetings to begin next Lord's day, with Brother N. B. Hardeman to assist. Notwithstanding the great excitement in the city over the reputed healing of hundreds by Mrs. Aimee Semple McPherson, the "miracle woman," we hope to reach some with the old-fashioned gospel. Hundreds of men, women, and chiloren, afflicted with all manner of diseases, crowd each "healing" (?) meeting, waiting to "touch the hem of her garment" or the "magic" touch of her fingers. The largest auditorium in the city is filled to overflowing at each service. Extravagant claims are made as to the wonderful power exercised. She claims to have "saved the souls" of thousands, yet not one single gospel sermon has been preached, nor has one single soul yielded obedience to the commands of the gospel. It is history repeating itself-Satan himself "transformed into an angel of light," "deceiving the very elect." Those who believe all that the Bible teaches are made to wonder why God would select one through whom to manifest his miraculous healing power that had never accepted or announced the terms of pardon upon which is conditioned the salvation of every responsible man or woman, even granting that the age of miracles has not passed.

Freed-Hardeman College.

For twenty-five years this school under different names has been preparing young people for useful and honorable careers. Multitudes have come and gone with broader visions of life and higher conceptions of duty. The careful and thorough training they have received has enabled them to make good in whatever line of work they have undertaken. The school is seeking to be guided in all things by "Reason and Revelation."

It is positive, aggressive, and uncompromising in its stand for certain great principles. It opposes "organized athletics" with its match games, rowdyism and gambling, but allows games among its students for exercise and recreation; it opposes all kinds of suggestiveness, indecency, and extravagance in dress, but believes in neat, clean, modest, and hygienic apparel for all; it stands opposed to all kinds of frauds and cheats in the matter of grades and promotions, but believes that good, Lard, honest work and real merit should be the only ground for advancement. In short, it believes that the great principles of the Christian religion should apply to our educational "affairs." just the same as to any other "affairs."

The school proposes to teach thoroughly and well all the literary branches up to and including junior college work. In addition, it maintains well-organized departments of Bible, Business, Shorthand, Typewriting, Music, Expression, Domestic Science, etc. It gives certificates or diplomas for the completion of certain courses of study in the various departments, but confers no degrees, except in the business department.

The school has recognition as a junior college. It emphasizes "thoroughness" in all its work. The Bible has the most prominent place in the curriculum, there being more classes tauzht in it than any other subject. The majority of our students take it.

Many bright and consecrated young men are being taught and trained to preach the gospel of Christ. They know nothing but "Christ, and him crucified." They are not ashamed of, nor afraid to contend for, the gospel of Christ. No "fads or fancies," hobbies or isms are taught or learned. You never heard of a hobby or speculative theory originating in Henderson. The school and church here have no patience with such things. We are perfectly content to walk in the "old paths."

Perhaps this school has made fewer faculty changes than any other in the brotherhood. For many years A. G. Freed has been president and N. B. Hardeman vice president, and most of the other principal teachers have long terms of service.

FIELD REPORTS

Dallas, Texas, July 13.—The meeting closed at Cooper with fine interest. We had fourteen baptisms and one from the "digressives." This was my third meeting there, and the best. I go next to Rattan, and will be in revival work till November. I can hold some winter meetings. Write to me at 108 East Ninth Street, Dallas, Texas,—J. I. Reagan.

Dardanelle, Ark., July 12.—The meeting near here, out at Sulphur Spring, continues with much interest. I aimed to have closed Sunday night, but preached last night and will preach again to-night. Three are to be baptized to-day. A number of young men who had been out of duty have been restored to the fellowship. Many are hearing the gospel as found in the Book. I am to begin at Havana, Ark., Friday.—D. S. Ligon.

Sedalia, Ky., July 11.—I began a meeting with the Lebanon congregation yesterday, and the prospects are favorable for a good meeting. I am to begin work with the David Lipscomb College at the opening of the coming session, and look forward to a pleasant year's work with that great school. I have some time for meetings from now till the opening of school. My address for the summer is Pocahontas, Tenn.—W. H. Owen.

Algood, Tenn., July 14.—Last Lord's day I preached twice to large crowds at Symrna, near here. The attention was excellent. On Wednesday night I preached at Cookeville, where I had been called for the purpose of doing some baptizing. We had a fairly good-sized audience, and attention was good. At the invitation a young lady made the confession and was baptized, I shall begin a meeting next Thursday night at Sulphur, in Overton County.—Allen Phy.

Howe, Okla., July 7.—I have just closed a meeting at this place, with three confessions and baptisms and much good otherwise. The interest and attendance were the best we have ever had here, and the outlook for the cause is flattering. I leave to-day for Little Rock, Ark., to begin a meeting on Saturday. From there I go to Clarksville, Ark., to begin on July 23; to Silver, Texas, August 6; Robert Lee, August 20; Utica, Miss., September 3. I can arrange for other work in Mississippi or Tennessee after that time. If you are interested, address me at Beaumont, Texas, General Delivery. Let us labor and pray that the building up of the walls of Zion may advance.—W. F. Lemmons.

Oklahoma City, Okla, July 11.—Yesterday was a good day for us at the Tenth Street and Francis Avenue Church. There were two additions at the morning service. The attendance was good. Our new building will be completed in about a month. Total expenditures will approximate twenty thousand dollars. Three years ago, or about that length of time, we had nothing. The membership was about thirty-five. Now we have some splendid property, with the old building and the new, and a membership of about three hundred and fifty, and

> If you could take about one-third of a glass of tea, add two-thirds glass of carbonated water, then remove the tea flavor and add a little lemon juice, phosphoric acid, sugar, caramel and certain flavors in the correct proportion, you would have an almost perfect glass of Coca-Cola.

In fact, Coca-Cola may be fairly described as "a carbonated, flavored counterpart of tea, of approximately one-third the stimulating strength of the average cup of tea."

The following analyses, made and confirmed by the leading chemists throughout America, show the comparative stimulating strength of tea and Coca-Cola stated in terms of the quantity of caffein contained in each:

Green tea—1 glassful______2.02 gr. (cold) (8 fl. oz., exclusive of ice)

Of all the plants which Nature has provided for man's use and enjoyment, none surpasses tea in its refreshing, wholesome and helpful qualities. This explains its almost universal popularity.

The Coca-Cola Company has issued a booklet giving detailed analysis of its recipe. A copy will be mailed free on request to anyone who is interested. Address:

still we grow. The work here has been offered me for another year—that is to say, until September, 1922. I shall stay, for I have learned to love these good folks with all my heart.—J. A. Hudson.

Louisville, Ky., July 11.—On Sunday, June 5, I was at the Forks of Elkhorn and Shelbybille. We had three to cast their lot with us at Shelbyville—mother, son, and daughter. Last Sunday I was at Harrisonville and Shelbyville. Two young girls came forward at Shelbyville, and were baptized that afternoon at six o'clock. We are rejoicing in the Lord that this work is bearing fruit. This is our second attempt to establish the work in Shelbyville. On account of my illness a few years ago we were forced to postpone the work, but now I feel that everything will move right along. So many are so tired of division and confusion that the pure gospel of Christ seems to satisfy, just as pure, cold water slakes the thirst. My life is in the Master's hand. If he will use me in this work to glorify his name, I shall be made stronger for other hard places. Brethren, pray that we may succeed.—R. A. Craig.

The Fresno Home and School.

Our campaign for funds to erect permanent buildings for the Fresno Home and School is now on. Below is a copy of an appeal which is being sent to many of our friends. We certainly hope and pray that this work may succeed.

We are asking you, dear friend, to do what you can to help us put this through. If you can spare us a donation, large or small, do not delay to send it in. We want to begin the fall term of 1921 in nice buildings, so as not to bring reproach upon the cause for which we labor. The fact that officials of the county are to send their wards here in considerable numbers makes it imperative that we do our best. Will you help us?

There is no greater work before the church to-day. Every dollar we receive will be put to good use in advancing the cause of Christ by educating, feeding, clothing, and sheltering the needy and pitiful. Can anything be greater? Can anything bring in greater reward in the "sweet by and by?"

There is no question about the pupils. Present indications are that we will have more pupils than we can care for. There seems to be no doubt about this work being a success, if we can arouse the brethren to the importance of financing it properly. That is the intention of this letter. Please do not turn a deaf ear to our appeal.

We want this work to be supported by freewill offerings. We do not want any one to send a cent who cannot send a prayer along with it for God's blessings upon this work.

The best way is for churches to take up this matter and see that this work is supported. If, however, the whole congregation cannot be persuaded to get behind the work, let our friends, as individuals, stand by us, and, with God's help, we will succeed.

Let individuals and churches do all they can by donations. Let our friends speak to others about the needs of our work. Let preachers mention the matter to the people they preach to and come in contact with. Let all pray to God for his blessings upon this work, and it will succeed. Our brethren have put more into one meetinghouse than it would take to fit us up for good work. Help us now, my brother; a dollar now will do more than ten dollars later on. Send all donations to Earnest C. Love, 925 Thorne Avenue, or George H. Byars, care First National Bank, Fresno, Cal.

THE MAJESTY OF THE LAW

We shall not see the full majesty of the law until all of our people respect the law. The nation that reaches the highest degree of development will be that nation which has established righteous laws, and whose every citizen not only observes and respects these laws, but gives his best service in seeing that they are properly enforced.

We have come upon a time when all of our people must recognize that ours is a government that stands for the application of law to all conditions. The public detriment arising from violation of law, followed by immunity from prosecution and punishment, can hardly be overstated. It is foolish to enact a law which, because of conditions that cannot be changed, is incapable of enforcement. Our legislatures make our laws, but the people are responsible for their enforcement. The constant violation or neglect of any law leads to a demoralized view of all laws, and such disrespect for law rapidly spreads in a community where the sacredness of law does not exist. It is distressing to me that mob violence in the form of lynching can continue in our nation. I deplore it because it often results in the death of innocent persons and because it makes chaos of our government by law.

I do not for a moment agree in the view that everything is corruption and that our people are growing worse. I believe in our constituted law, both State and Federal. I am greatly encouraged with the response which is coming from our people in all sections of the country for the enforcement of our laws. I believe better days are ahead.

And when our already good laws are supported by a united and enlightened public opinion, based on the fundamental doctrines of democracy and the fear of Almighty God, we shall realize what we must all now desire to see—the law in its majesty.—William H. Taft, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States.

CURRENT THOUGHT

"How Readest Thou?"

The proof reader of printed copy must give attention to typographical errors in the proofs which he reads; he is not looking for anything but mistakes, and hence he does not see anything else, so that his reading is not beneficial to him. He cannot attend to the sense when he is detecting mechanical defects in a piece. The man who reads the Bible for the particular purpose of finding errors in it will never understand what he reads, and the real sense of the Scriptures is beyond his reach. He may find what he thinks are inconsistencies in the word of God, when they actually exist only in his own mind under a distorted purpose and a fixed determination to find what he is looking for. As one has well said: "Let the Bible say what it wants to say and mean what it wants to mean." Read it; do not read into it. Understand what it says, no matter how it says it. "How readest thou?"—Baptist and Reflector.

When Philip saw that the Ethiopian treasurer was reading from Isaiah, the prophet, he asked: "Understandest thou what thou readest?" The Ethiopian replied: "How can I, except some one shall guide me?" Because this reader had no knowledge of Christ further than that revealed in the prophecies, he needed a preacher. It was a comparatively simple task for Philip, with his knowledge of Christ, to explain the prophecy and to preach the gospel to this interested reader. The Ethiopian was not seeking defects, but was doing his best to unravel and understand the mystery before him. When a man reads in this tryingto-understand spirit, God will help and bless the reader. is only when we approach the word of God in a careless, indifferent, or hypercritical spirit that our reading is vain. Start your reading with the fundamental belief that it is God's eternal truth, continue and persevere with that idea uppermost in your mind, and you will not only find it to be a truly wonderful book, but, like the Ethiopian, will do exactly what it teaches you to do. Let those who guide the reading impress the fact that it is God's truth that must be brought out, and not some human doctrine or opinion.

Attention, Suffragettes!

A mother, during an address the other day, related the incident of her little boy having hurt his foot. He came to her with the injured member, and, as all mothers would, she washed it carefully and then wrapped it up. When this process was done and the blood was all out of sight and the pain somewhat allayed, the little fellow looked up into her face and said: "Mother, it seems to me that you would find me more trouble to you than I am worth." What did that me more trouble to you than I am worth." woman do but gather the child up close to her heart and try to tell him how much he really was worth. But she was a wise mother, wise enough to know that there was a greater value hidden in the boy than she alone would ever realize, and so she told him as best she could how much he was worth to her and to the world and to God. What an enhanced appreciation of motherhood that reveals! The little woman was nourishing the child that was dearer than life to her, but in so doing she was preparing a man for the world and her God. The sore foot would become well again and the pain be forgotten, but the lesson which the injury gave occasion to impress will not be forgotten so long as life remains in the heart of that child. That boy who is thoughtless and perhaps disobedient, causing pain to some motherheart, has in him values upon which the world needs to realize. Motherhood presents an opportunity to help the boy know his own value.-Exchange

This little story with its moral should be gotten before the suffragettes and those women who are inclined in that direction. There is a disposition among some mothers to chafe under the cares and responsibilities of the home and to break into politics or club life. If they only knew it, they have right at home the greatest of all opportunities to do something good and great for humanity. Instead of turning their children over to others for guidance and training, they themselves should assume the responsibility and perform it faithfully in the fear of God. There would be small chance of seeing their names emblazoned in the public prints, but the great task would be fulfilled, God would be honored and humanity blessed. The great Creator of all things did not restrict woman's sphere of usefulness when he made her a keeper at home. He gave to her the biggest and most fertile field of endeavor in existence. Great men and great women know this. Like the Wesleys, they are ready to say: "I owe all to mother."

Women Required to Dress Modestly.

The Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad, through its woman's welfare service, has started to check the follies of its women employees. It has decreed that there shall be no more peekaboo waists, skirts shall be of modest length, there shall be no more rolled hose, sheer hose, no more rouge, and little powder. The dress shall be for business and not for display. This is because the style of dress worn by the three thousand women employees had become embarrassing to the working morale.—Arkansas Methodist.

It will, perhaps, have a good moral effect to enforce these rules among the three thousand women employees of a great railroad, but the reform should also be made in the "higher up" social circle. As a matter of fact, styles of dress are determined by what is worn by actresses and by the wealthier classes. It comes with poor grace for these officials to say that the working girl is immodest, when their own wives and daughters are setting the pace. Women have no moral right to dress immodestly or for display in offices or in the drawing-room or anywhere else. God does not make the fine distinctions that men and women make in such matters. The working morale is no more important in his eyes than the morale in other spheres. When these working girls see the picture of the boss's wife or daughter clothed in a modern bathing suit given a prominent place in the Sunday newspaper, shall we blame them if they exclaim in disgust, "What hypocrites they are!" It is not fair. What is sauce for one kind of a goose is sauce for another. The great danger now, it seems, is not in the putting on of apparel. It is found in the ruthless taking off of apparel without regard to the consequences.

Robbing the Living to Bury the Dead.

The State's attorney of Chicago is after the funeral trust The grand jury has been asked to find a true of that city. bill against fifteen officers and directors of the alleged funeral trust. The practices of the organization are declared to be "the most atrocious and outrageous of any ever investigated." The organization arbitrarily five funeral trust. with a minimum of sixteen dollars and fifty cents a car and a maximum of thirty-nine dollars a car. Fines ranging from fifty dollars to five hundred dollars are assessed against members who fail to exact the association prices. Black lists of undertakers and liverymen are prepared monthly for the guidance of members. Prices not only unreasonable but outrageous are charged for caskets and other services in connection with funerals. Crimes of this kind are not confined to Chicago. All over the country advantage is taken of people in distress, and they are all but robbed by funeral directors. Our righteous indignation and wrath have been stirred again and again over these practices. There are some good, honest Christian men engaged tices. in the undertaking business. They deserve the patronage of Christian people and the indorsement of the ministry, Others of their type should be encouraged to go into the business.-Christian Advocate.

There is no class of business men who have quite so fine an opportunity to mix kindness and sympathy with business as undertakers. Some few deal with poverty and distress occasionally, but the undertaker deals with such conditions constantly. If he is a Christian, he will see to it that his sympathy is not affected so as to become merely a part of his stock in trade, but it will be genuine and whole-hearted, such as Jesus would show on occasions of bereavement and sorrow. True enough, he cannot begin to do what Jesus might do, but he can at least manifest his spirit and perform even the smallest ministry in his name. Certainly there is no time when a Christian can afford to be dishonest, and least of all can he afford to take advantage of those in distress.

Salvation by Faith. No. 6.

BY W. L. REEVES.

The Lord Jesus Christ is man's Savior, and he does the saving; but he has appointed the things for man to do before he will save him, or before he will forgive his sins.

Christ said: "Except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish." (Luke 13: 5.) This proves that man cannot be saved unless he repents. So it proves that he is not saved by faith alone; for repentance is not faith. But some say that repentance is naturally connected with faith. I would like to know what a natural connection has to do with a spiritual question. But it is contended that they are scripturally connected, and this passage is given to prove it: "Repent ye, and believe the gospel." (Mark 1: 15.) This certainly does connect them. All are forced to admit this fact; for if we deny it, we deny the Bible. But let us try again. Christ himself said: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." (Mark 16; 16.) Here we have faith and baptism connected in the same way. Why accept one and reject the other? Is it not a fact that such a course is a rejection of the word of God? If not, I would not know how to reject it.

King Saul did this way. That is, he accepted and did part of what God told him to do, and stopped before he did all: so God killed Saul and gave the kingdom to David. (1 Sam. 15: 28; 1 Chron. 10: 13, 14.) Relative to this case, Samuel uttered words which cover the whole scope involved in man's relations and duty to God. He said: "Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams." (1 Sam. 15: 22.) To obey is all man has to do to be saved; all he has to do to be born again; all he has to do to be benefited by the blood of Christ. The New Testament teaches this just as strongly as the law of Moses required obedience to its demands. Proof: "Christ became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him." (Heb. 5: 8, 9.) The Romans were made free through their obedience. "Ye have obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine which was delivered you. Being then made free from sin," etc. (Rom. 6: 16-18.) "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved, and thy house." (Acts 16: 31.) "But wilt thou know, O vain man, that faith without works is dead?" (James 2: 20.) It is certain that a man's faith cannot be made alive by works which he has done before he has faith; for "without faith it is impossible to please" God. (Heb. 11: 6.) Again: "Whatsoever is not of faith is sin." (Rom. 14: 23.) Yes, I believe that a man must believe, just as strongly as I believe he must do all of the other things which Christ has appointed for the unsaved to do, in order to be saved from his allen sins. To those who have faith enough to call on the name of Christ he said: "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." (Matt. 7: 21.) When one is in the kingdom, he is saved. Here are parties spoken of as calling on the name of the Lord, and certainly they had faith. Paul teaches that they had to have faith before they could call upon Christ. "How then shall they call on him in whom they have not believed?" (Rom. 10: 14-17.) We see that these characters of Matt. 7: 21 had faith, but had not done that part of the will of God which was necessary to bring them into the kingdom.

If one is not in the kingdom, he is not born again. We have found some who believed, and yet were not in the kingdom. Therefore a man is not born again at faith only; but it is evident that those who have faith must be born again. This is corroborated by John 1: 12: "But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name." John (3: 5) further says: "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God."

Philip preached to the eunuch. The eunuch believed, and, according to John 1: 12, had the power to become a son of God, or to be born of water and of the Spirit. "They came unto a certain water; and the eunuch said, See, here is water; what doth hinder me to be baptized? And Philip said. If they believest with all thine heart, thou mayest. . . And he baptized him." (Acts 8; 36-38.) Christ sa'd: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." (Mark 16: 15, 16.) The eunuch confessed his faith in Christ (not his feelings), so had the right or power to become a son of God, or to be born again. Having this faith, his heart was pure. "Purifying their hearts by faith." (Acts 15: 9.) He had drawn thus close to God, "Let us draw near with a true heart in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water." (Heb. 10: 22,) The eunuch evidently had done all this but to have his body washed with pure water when Philip told him he had the power or right to be baptized into Christ, in answer to the eunuch's question, "What doth hinder me to be baptized?" After he was baptized, he went on his way rejoicing. Now the sectarian world claims that feelings, rejoicing, is proof that one is saved, has the spirit shed abroad in the heart: but such is not proof that any one is right. It only proves that one has believed that he is right; for as is man's faith, so will his feelings be, relative to a religious proposition. If his faith is wrong, his feelings will be wrong. I can change a man's feelings as often as I can change his faith. Feelings are produced by evidence. They are not the evidence. It is all right to feel good, to rejoice, and every man will who believes that he is saved from sin; but because a way seems right to a man does not make it right. God's Book says: "There is a way that seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death." (Prov. 16: 25.) It is certain that baptism is of Christ, was commanded by him, was given as one of the requirements of the commission to all the world.

"Grace and truth came by Jesus Christ." (John 1: 17.) Then baptism is either grace or truth. If it is of grace, then man cannot be saved without it; for he cannot be saved without the grace of God. If not of grace, then it is truth. Christ said unto those Jews that believed on him: "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." (John 8: 32.) Peter says: "Seeing ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth through the Spirit." (1 Pet. 1: 22.) So this is how the truth makes the believer free from sin, how it purifies his soul. "Ye see then how that by works a man is justified, and not by faith only." (James 2: 24.) So let none who love the truth as taught in the New Testament conclude that the alien sinner can be justified by faith without obedience to Christ, for faith that worketh by love is all that will count with Christ Jesus.

The Blessing or the Curse of Greatt Wealth.

BY ALFRED ELLMORE.

The Bible has much to say against the hoarding of earthly wealth. But before condemning, wholesale, the honestly making of a living and a little more for necessary uses, let us consider the many and various talents loaned to man, and the great object thereof. There are comparatively few Zaccheuses, but the number of Lazaruses is legion. Indeed, there are very many who are not able to accumulate as much as a good living, and many of these are honest, industrious men; but the ability to accumulate was not given them. Let us inquire as to the design of these precious gifts, and, for example, let us consider Brother Greatheart.

Some ask how he, possessing such a variety of great powers, was caught in the gospel net. We reply that he was not caught a great man in the gospel net, but a poor little boy; and having in his combination the heart and the brain sufficient, when developed, to make a powerful man, and, furthermore, having been born of spiritual stock on both sides and the family being his first school, he received the proper training at the proper time, and he became a great Christian. And what a misfortune that the people of God have not been able to see that through these two divine families—the home and the church—man is offered all the help he needs between his cradle and his grave! And as surely as he goes to the world for instruction and help, that sure he will bring in some nettles and tares.

It is said of Brother Greatheart that, when a boy, he was kind to his playmates and liberal with his means; and when he was a young man, his associates were few and select. When invited to dinner among the poor, he left secretly a tip under his plate. While children of the affluent went often upon excursions to places of amusement, Brother Greatheart was quietly working or studying at home. He made frequent visits, but usually they were among the poor. While the loitering were spending time and money joy-riding, he was in private reading. Commingling much with the poor and seeing their great need, this had a tendency to increase his benevolence. He accumulated seemingly with little effort, but withal he was very humble. He had learned that it was God who furnished the capital, and it is man who develops it, and that a kind Providence bestows the blessings.

Are we not told that God hath chosen the poor rich in faith, to be heirs of his kingdom? Let us thank God for all the rich-poor we have, and pray for more of the same kind. These can be reached with the gospel, and they furnish to abler classes the opportunity of laying up for themselves treasures in heaven. Let us haste; our time is short.

The Problem of Educating Our Children.

With free public schools in every town and village, with high schools in every county, and with universities in every State, it would seem that the problem of educating our children has been at last solved. But this condition only meets and obviates one difficulty. The problem is not solved. A half century ago, in the South, schools were few and poorly equipped. State schools were almost unknown. Even twenty-five years ago schools were few, and the problem of educating his children was a big one with every father. Men frequently sold their homes and at a great sacrifice moved to another section or even to another State in order that they might put their children in school. But to-day conditions are very different. Schools are numerous. and any parent can now keep his children in school until they are through high school, and with little expense he can give them a college course. But we need to make a distinction between schooling and education. Any boy of twelve to day has had more schooling than Abraham Lincoln ever had, but who would affirm that such a boy is better educated than was Lincoln? Whether or not schooling will ever educate a boy depends entirely upon the charter of the schooling. One may be schooled in crime, in chicanery or trickery. Likewise one may be schooled in unbelief and in radical tendencies, ideas that strike a deathblow at our American institutions and destroy the foundation of all civilization.

It is no trouble to educate our children to-day, in the common acceptation of that term; but there is a wide divergence between the modern idea of education and the idea expressed by the terms "Christian education." If the word "education" were allowed to have its primary or etymological meaning, the adjective "Christian" as applied to it would be redundant. It is derived from "e" and "duce"-or "educere"-which means to draw out of, to lead out; and, as applied to mental development, it means the drawing out of possibilities, the cultivation of latent forces. It would also mean the leading of the individual out of ignorance, out of superstition, out of immorality, and out of hurtful habits. It would, therefore, include knowledge, breeding, culture, and refinement. Is that not exactly what the word once meant in our vocabulary? say in that day that a man was educated meant that he had risen above the coarse, the vulgar, the boorish, the boisterous, and the profane. It meant that he not only had knowledge of certain books and principles, but also that he was gentle, cultured, courteous, and refined in manner and correct and chaste in speech. But to-day to say that a young man is educated may, and too often does, mean that he is "sophisticated;" that he is worldly-wise; that he is informed in the athletic code and versed in the slang of the diamond, the gridiron, and the prize ring.

But granting that our present-day institutions for the educating of the young impart "knowledge," that they discipline the mind or train the intellect, and the fact yet remains that they do not cultivate the entire man. They do not impart moral culture and spiritual good. The important side of the character is not touched, and no education is worthy of the name that does not train the moral and spiritual side of man's life. No training is worth while if it does not develop character. But these defects in our educational system are being recognized and pointed out by some leading educators,

However, to the Christian, the man who believes the Bible, there are worse faults; there is a more alarming condition. Our colleges and universities are full of infidelity—atheism. The theological schools are teaching "higher criticism." In almost all universities the Science Department teaches evolution and disbellef of the Bible. The Philosophy Department teaches materialism—atheism. The Economic and Sociological Department teaches Bolshevism, sovietism, free love, and promiscuous sex cohabitation. Of course some of them are worse than others, and some teachers of these ideas are more guarded, more vague, and more covert than others. But these things are true, and they can be verified. The disease is here. The plague is abroad.

Some leading statesmen are beginning to recognize and to fight this evil that, like a foul spirit, haunts our college halls. In the Delineator for June, 1921, there is an article by Mr. Calvin Coolidge, Vice President of the United States. under the caption, "Enemies of the Republic," that should be read by every father and mother in this country. In this article the Vice President points out that there is an insidious propaganda being carried on through our colleges, especially women's colleges; that many college professors are simple propagators of radical ideas, disseminators of German socialism and of Russian sovietism. He says these ideas will cause the republic to "perish from the earth;" that they will destroy our civilization. Mr. Coolidge's articles led the editor of the Delineator to say that it would be better for our daughters to grow up to be domestic servants, to be hewers of wood and drawers of water, than to have them imbued with such teaching.

Recently I was in conversation with a young-lady student of the University of Texas, who is a member of the church and whose father is an elder in the church. In the conversation the young lady was asked if a certain professor in the university does not teach socialism and free love. She said frankly that he does, and asked in a spirit of banter: "Why not?" Indeed, why not! No further evidence that that young lady had been contaminated was asked for or sought.

Another young lady said in reference to the same professor: "He is a radical, an evolutionist, I—I don't reckon I agree with him; but—O!—he is so smart, and he has such a wonderful personality!" She had been under him but a few months. Wait till she is a senior.

In May of this year (1921) I preached a sermon at the University church of Christ at Austin, Texas, before an audience in which there were several students of the State University, all of them from Christian homes. The subject of the sermon was, "God Is." The chief point was, there must be a Creator. The present order of things could not have come by chance. There is no other way to account for the origin of life. The theory of spontaneous generation was overthrown by M. Pasteur. It has been abandoned. Whether things were made in one week of twenty-four-hour days or in seven million years matters not. Life must have begun by miracle. There must be a Creator. At the conclusion of the sermon a young-man student, a member of the church, said to me: "Well, you made an earnest talk, but I don't agree with you."

O, beloved, the half has not been told. "There are more things in heaven and earth than are dreamed of in your philosophy." Better wake up, Christian parents, and guard your children against these evil influences. You would better put them under Christian teachers and surround them with Christian influences. What are a few dollars compared with the welfare of your child? What is the world compared to his soul?

All that is true—all demonstrated truth—in science and philosophy will be taught your child in a Christian college. Only the false conclusions, only the attacks on the Bible, only the banter and braggadocio of blatant infidels will be admitted. The teachers in our Christian colleges have been through the big schools, the State schools, universities and all, and they could hold positions in them. They have the same qualifications that the infidel teachers have, minus the infidelity. Would it not be the part of wisdom to put your children under them?

Men of mature minds, of firm faith and fixed habits of life, may be able to go through courses taught by infidels and not be ruined by them; but my heart bleeds when I think of young boys and girls, whose characters are not formed, whose minds are receptive and impressionable, being exposed to such insidious and almost overpowering influences.

May God grant us grace to see the danger, to feel our responsibility, and to do our duty.

Activities of Nashville Churches.

The Nashville churches have enjoyed a season of prosperity since the first of the year. One hundred and fifteen were added to the Grandview Heights congregation during the meeting held by Brother Cawthon. Brother Nichol conducted a successful meeting at Foster Street, resulting in over fifty additions. Brother Pullias preached to overflowing houses during his meetings at Belmont Avenue and Lawrence Avenue. Both congregations were strengthened spiritually and fifty new members were added. Brother Wrye's meeting at Eleventh Street, in East Nashville, resulted in some thirty-five or forty additions.

A house of worship located on Granny White Pike, formerly owned by the Baptists, has been purchased by the brethren. This property was bought at a bargain for two thousand nine hundred dollars. It is a neat, commodious, brick building, which would cost probably ten or twelve thousand dollars to erect at present prices. It is located about halfway between the Belmont Avenue and Lawrence Avenue congregations and will be known as the Waverly-Belmont Church.

The Charlotte Avenue congregation is building a new house of worship that will cost approximately twenty-five thousand dollars and seat a thousand persons.

The missionary spirit is being manifested in a number of congregations and men are being sent into adjoining States to establish the cause. Brother Cayce is being supported by Nashville Christians in his splendid work in Mississippi. He has succeeded in getting together a few earnest, enthusiastic disciples at Jackson, and a splendid frame house, located on a lot worth the purchase price, has been bought for two thousand dollars. Brother Cayce has also succeeded in getting a band numbering about thirtyfive together at Columbus, and a substantial brick house, abandoned by a sectarian congregation, has been bought for twenty-one hundred dollars. He is now in a meeting at Vicksburg, and thinks the prospects most encouraging for planting a congregation. Twenty have been added to the church during this meeting. Brother Phillips has recently closed a good meeting at Union. He was assisted in the song service by Brother Tom Nicks, of this city. Brother Thomas H. Burton has been laboring in South Carolina for some time, being supported by one of the Nashville churchcs. The work has progressed nicely with one exception. They are in need of fifteen hundred dollars to pay off a present indebtedness on a house of worship which has been started, and another one thousand dollars is necessary to complete the house and prevent deterioration of what has already been done. This is the only piece of property owned by the brethren in the entire State of South Carolina.

In order to complete the house in Union, S. C., and free it, we are going to ask as many Nashville Christians as will to contribute one day's pay—that is, an amount equal to their average salary for one day—to this fund on the fifth Lord's day in this month. It will be appreciated very much if you will bring this matter to the attention of your congregation.

We rejoice to know that the Nashville churches are in such a prosperous condition, not only spiritually, but in respect to having commodious places to worship, and that our mission work in Mississippi is proving so successful. We certainly cannot afford to let South Carolina, one of the oldest States in the Union, where there are so many opportunities for growth and development, suffer. We know of nothing that will further the cause more in that State at the present time than to complete the meetinghouse at Union at once.

The Russell Street congregation has been liberal in furnishing Brother Cayce in Mississippi with a tent complete, with financial help "once and again." Trinity Lane has built a nice house, costing $5,000 or $6,000. Highland Avenue congregation will begin at once, the good Lord willing, to build a new house to cost $8,000 or $9,000.

The Belmont congregation has pledged $100 to the fund for Union, S. C., from their contribution on the fifth Sunday. Eleventh Street promises $100. One brother is giving $250 and another $300. This start makes us believe that the full $2,500 will be raised on the fifth Sunday. Contributions should be sent direct to Brother Burton at Union, S. C. It will be worth much to this effort for you to have personal talks with as many church members as possible. If you already have some other plan for your fifth-Sunday's contribution, it will be all right for you to set aside some other Sunday's contribution in the near future.

Bird Outruns a Horse.

Any one who has traveled through Western Texas becomes familiar with the mesquite tree, or, as it sometimes grows, a shrub. In some places where it may grow to be thirty or forty feet high, it is commonly known as the chaparral. Here it is scrubby and masses into dense clumps, it being the home of that famous bird, the "road runner," or chaparral cock, and other interesting species. It is a form of big ground cuckoo that only takes to flight when hard pressed, while on open ground it can run so fast that an ordinary horse cannot keep up.—Exchange

"Let Us Not Be Weary in Well-Doing."

In Gal. 6: 9 Paul gives us a most timely admonition: "And let us not be weary in well-doing: for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not." There is a cause for every statement God has made to his children. Many such exhortations as this were given because of the immediate needs of the disciples. The Galatian brethren had once run well, but at the time of this epistle they were being hindered by false teachers. Note the following words of Paul: "O foolish Galatians, who did bewitch you, before whose eyes Jesus Christ was openly set forth crucified? This only would I learn from you, Received ye the Spirit by the works of the law, or by the hearing of faith? Are ye so foolish? having begun in the Spirit, are ye now perfected in the flesh?" (Gal. 3: 1-3.) "Ye were running well; who hindered you that ye should not obey the truth?" (Gal. 5: 7.) The better thing to do is just to pick up your Bible and read the whole epistle. The "churches of Galatia" had been well established, well started, but were in danger of falling away at the time Paul wrote them. Every congregation we establish should be impressed with the importance of continuing, ever growing and expanding, and exhorted to never let the thought of even slowing up in the work enter their hearts.

With this timely admonition of Paul before us, I now sub mit the following:

1. What is well-doing! Negatively considered, resolving is not well-doing. Some are ever resolving and never doing, but such is like the morning clouds that soon vanish away. Resolving merely does not feed the hungry and clothe the naked, and never has a church house been built and kept filled with worshipers with only good intentions. That we all would go to heaven if resolutions were all that was needed, I think, is a certainty. But it takes more than this. There must be some doing, not simply resolving, if we are ever saved and live that life that makes us a blessing to others. It is also true that professing is not doing. "But what think ye? A man had two sons; and he came to the first, and said, Son, go work to-day in the vineyard. And he answered and said, I will not: but afterwards he repented himself, and went. And he came to the second, and said likewise. And he answered and said, I go, sir: and went not. Which of the two did the will of his father?" They say, The first. Jesus saith unto them, Verily I say unto you, that the publicans and the harlots go into the kingdom of God before you," (See Matt. 21: 28-31.) How many there are who make no profession that excel some of us in doing the very things that God commands us as Christians to do! The profession is all right, and we must have it, but it will never save unless we hold it fast by not neglecting to do what it demands. Here study Heb. 10: 23-25. And it is also true that feeling is not doing. Many of us feel sorry for the wrongs done others; but this feeling can never take the place of confessing our wrongs to the ones we have sinned against. Mere regrets for mistakes made do not right them. A feeling of sorrow for the hungry and naked does not feed and clothe them. It is what we do that counts. Knowing is not doing. We can have a knowledge of God's word, can understand it and ably present it to others, but this is not doing it ourselves. James (1: 21, 22) says: "Receive with meekness the implanted word, which is able to save your souls. But be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deluding your own selves." How many of us have deluded ourselves into the idea that we are God's most faithful because of our knowledge of the truth, when, if we would look at ourselves from the standpoint of actual practice, we would see "whited sepulchers" like unto the scribes and Pharisees! Does not Christ tell us that unless our righteousness exceed theirs we cannot be saved? (See Matt. 5: 20.) And does he not tell us that their trouble was in saying and doing not? (Matt. 23: 1-3.) But let us now look at the positive side and see what well-doing does demand. No one can be clothed with well-doing unless he is profoundly interested in his own salvation. This demands that he be a Christian, for no one can be said to do well in sin. It is not possible for Christ to say "Well done" to those who live and die in their sins. We are not doing well, then, unless we have gotten out of our sins and are striving to live the Christian's life. The publicans and harlots referred to above excelled the professing Jew only because they, when they heard John's preaching, turned from the evil of their way, while the professing Jew went on in his sins. (See Matt. 21: 32.) All the prayers of all the saints that have ever lived can never save us from our sins unless we turn ourselves from the evil of our way and do God's will. Never, therefore, can it be said of us that we are doing well if we remain out of Christ and do not the things he tells us to do to be saved. Then, after we ourselves are saved, it is not possible for us to ever be regarded by our Lord as doing well unless we are continually interested in the salvation of others and the extension of the cause of Christ in the world. Have not many of us grown weary in well-doing along this line? If so, does not our salvation depend on our repenting of our sins of omission and doing the things the Christian's life demands?

2. The danger of growing weary. The exhortation presupposes the danger. Some are naturally wavering and need to be continually exhorted, lest they grow weary. Doing implies toil, and we love ease. There are difficulties in the way as we strive to push onward and upward. The flesh had rather not overcome them, hence the danger of our quitting the fight. Well-doing demands sacrifices continually, and we are prone to selfishness. Often our labor seems in vaiu, and there is danger of becoming discouraged. God knows us, brethren, and we should take the medicine he prescribes, that our souls may ever be kept in perfect health. Here let us remember that it is our duty to do well. God has given us the ability to do well, and we owe it to ourselves. The purpose of our regeneration was that we might live unto God. It is inseparably connected with our safety. We are doing ourselves a miserable injustice when we build on the sand, when the rock is before us on which to build; and, remember, we build on the rock by "hearing and doing," and not by merely hearing and learn ing what the will of God is. It is the only life we can live and be really happy. It is the only life we can live that transforms the setting of life's sun into the dawning of that one eternal day of joy and peace. How foolish for us to fail to live such a life! This life of well-doing associates us continually with the higher order of beings-viz., with God, with Christ, with the Holy Spirit, and with the angels. Yes, all of this now and the unending day of joy after leaving this old world.

ant zephyrs that shall be borne to our listening ears by the breath of his lips. Then our reward shall be graciously abundant and infinitely above our due and expectations. It is absolutely certain. The promises of Jehovah and the intercession and worth of Christ render it irrevocably sure.

Bits of News.

Brother Riggs closed his meeting at Montebello on Monday night (July 11). Three were baptized, and one who had been scripturally baptized cast his lot with us.

We had a full house at Sichel and Altura last Lord's day (July 10), with one added by statement. We are looking forward with pleasure to our all-day meeting next Lord's day.

David's Sin-Its Consequences.

BY H. LEO BOLES.

The Bible is a book of instruction to the human family for all ages. It abounds in examples, illustrations, facts, and principles which are always appropriate and profitable for our study. Sometimes certain biblical instances are overworked and thereby made to teach something which was not intended. It seems that David's sin has suffered this fate.

After David sinned, and had made several unsuccessful efforts to hide it, and while reposing under the illusion that it was hidden, God sent his prophet to David and in a tactful way caused David to pronounce condemnation upon himself. The prophet then informed David that he was the sinner under consideration. Like a thunderclap came the distinct accusation: "Thou art the man!" When David was brought face to face with his sin, he said: "I have sinned against Jehovah." He makes full and frank confession of his sin and is truly penitent, and Jehovah forgives him. The forgiveness is freely bestowed and Jehovah loves him as before. Nathan announced to him that, while his sin was forgiven, the punishment could not be wholly averted; the eternal law of God must hold; he must still reap as he has sown.

So often the sin that a man commits will plague him and others long after it has been confessed and pardoned. The natural consequences remain unaltered, and other punishments are often needed to clear away the moral stain. David, all Israel, and the world must learn that no sin can be committed, and though it be pardoned, without reaping the dire consequences of it. Sin is awful and its consequences fearful. The only comfort and consolation that one can get out of the history of David's sin is that God will pardon sin.

The consequences of David's sin and its retribution came with awful exactness as predicted by the prophet. Listen how the prophet recites the catalogue of results which are to follow David's sin: "Now therefore the sword shall never depart from thy house, because thou hast despised me, and hast taken the wife of Uriah the Hittite to be thy wife. Thus saith Jehovah, Behold, I will raise up evil against thee out of thine own house; and I will take thy wives before thine eyes, and give them unto thy neighbor, and he shall lie with thy wives in the sight of this sun. For thou didst it secretly: but I will do this thing before all Israel, and before this sun. And David said unto Nathan, I have sinned against Jehovah. And Nathan said unto David, Jehovah also hath put away thy sin; thou shall not die. Howbeit, because by this deed thou hast given great occasion to the enemies of Jehovah to blaspheme, the child also that is born unto thee shall surely die." (2 Sam. 12: 10-14.) Notice these specific results: First, "The sword shall never depart from thy house;" second, "I will raise up evil against thee out of thine own house;" third, "I will take thy wives before thine eyes, and give them unto thy neighbor;" fourth, "Thou hast given great occasion to the enemies of Jehovah to blaspheme;" fifth, "The child that is born unto thee shall surely die."

The Bible record shows that all of these were fulfilled; David spends the remainder of his life bent under the weight of these consequences; humbled with a broken, contrite heart; taking his punishment submissively. The remainder of his life was spent under the shadow of the consequences of his sin. Penal suffering dogged his steps henceforth; the wheels of his life dragged heavily on; the bitter fruits of human woe were eaten by him. David's name has become almost a synonym for suffering for personal sins.

David, as an adulterer, was condemned to death by the law of Moses. "And the man that committeth adultery with another man's wife, even he that committeth adultery with his neighbor's wife, the adulterer and the adulteress shall surely be put to death." (Lev. 20: 10.) The law made no provisions to save the life of even a king who transgressed its precepts. However, it seems that the mercy of God stayed off this legal penalty; for the prophet said: "Thou shalt not die"—thou shalt not die that temporal death. Jehovah revokes the sentence of the law or dispenses with its execution; Jehovah grants him reprieve for the rest of his days.

No, God did not remove David from the throne, neither did he prevent his serving him; but remember that he did not escape the sufferings entailed by his sin. The retribution came with awful exactness through the misery and mourning over the sickness of his child. The child dies. Jehovah forgave David, but he did not give back his child from the grave. The dark tragedy of the defilement of his daughter by her brother is a part of the result of Jehovah's bringing evil against him. God forgave David, but he did not wash away the stain and guilt of this domestic pollution and make David's home as it was before. The rebellion of Absalom, with its hideous dishonor and his death, was a result of the evil brought upon David's house. Yes, God forgave David, but he did not withhold the humiliation that came upon David in his fleeing from his son Even after David returned to his throne, his court became the scene of constant intrigues, of plots and counterplots. Amnon, his son, is dead, and Absalom, another son, is dead, and his son by Bath-sheba is dead. God forgave David, and David continues faithful to Jehovah, but his sons are not restored to him; he is a bereft father the remainder of his life. His ten concubines were openly defiled and David's household was brought into reproach before all Israel as a result of David's sin. David, all Israel, and all the people of earth to-day need to learn the lesson which Jehovah here teaches.

Georgia and the Far Southern Field By B. C. GOODPASTURE

The Evils of An Unbridled Tongue.

"If any man thinketh himself to be religious, while he bridleth not his tongue but deceiveth his heart, this man's religion is vain." (James 1: 26.) "The tongue also is a little member" (James 3: 5), one of the smallest of the human body; but though small, it is capable of getting the mastery and exerting a pernicious influence over the whole life. If not restrained and guarded, it will ruin all the religion that one has. Like the little rudder, it turns the big ship whichever way it will, even in the midst of adverse winds and waves. Like a little flame of fire, it can kindle a great matter, start a conflagration, and do an incalculable amount of mischief. Ill-chosen, indiscreet, idle, meddlesome, malicious, untrue words may separate chief friends, breaks up happy families, inflame a whole district, or rend in two a congregation; because the tongue is a "fire," the "world of iniquity among our members," a "restless evil," and "it is full of deadly poison." (James 3: 5-8.)

It is like a wild beast which no man can tame, and is "set on fire of hell." The tongue, then, being such a powerful and unruly member, must be bridled, like an unbroken colt. The conditions which immediately follow indicate an unbridled tongue, and involve the necessity of a proper restraint.

1. If it is a babbling tongue, always at work letting out all its own secrets as well as those of others, and ever engaged to its fullest extent with all the gossip and scandal and slander of the neighborhood, it needs bridling. Solomon well said: "Where no wood is, there the fire goeth out; so where there is no talebearer, the strife ceaseth. As coals are to burning coals, and wood to fire: so is a contentious man to kindle strife." (Prov. 26: 20, 21.) The talebearer "soweth discord among brethren," and "Jehovah hateth" him. (Prov. 6: 16, 19.) The slanderous tongue is equally venomous. "Whose privily slandereth his neighbor, him will I destroy." (Ps. 101; 5.) The citizen of Zion must be one that "slandereth not with his tongue, nor doeth evil to his friend, nor taketh up a reproach against his neighbor." (Ps. 15: 3.) Paul wrote: "Women in like manner must be grave, not slanderers, temperate, faithful in all things." (1 Tim. 3: 11.) The poet has well characterized slander:

Tis slander;

Whose edge is sharper than the sword; whose tongue Outvenoms all the worms of Nile; whose breath Rides on the posting winds, and doth belie All corners of the world; kings, queens, and states, Maids, matrons, nay, the secrets of the grave This viperous slander enters.

Much of the trouble and strife to which the race is heir comes through the tongues of gossipers and "go-betweens." When Eve took the apple, there was a tempter concerned; when the Philistines took Samson, there was a Delilah involved; when Saul slaughtered the priests, there was a tongue (Doeg's) concerned. The slanderous gossiper is an apostle of evil who preaches the gospel of discord and strife. Paul voiced his disapproval of those who "learn also to be idle, going about from house to house; and not only idle, but tattlers also and busybodies, speaking things which they ought not." (1 Tim. 5: 13.)

2. If it is an angry tongue, and speaks het, cutting, and uncontrollable words of anger, and cools down only when its wrath is expended and its mischief done, it must be controlled. "He that is soon angry will deal foolishly" (Prov. 14: 17), and that usually with his tongue. "An angry man stirreth up strife; and a wrathful man aboundeth in transgression." (Prov. 29: 22.) "A soft answer turneth away wrath; but a grievous word stirreth up anger." (Prov. 15: 1.)

3. If it is a promise-making, and at the same time a promise-breaking, tongue—if its "yes" does not mean "yes" and its "no" does not mean "no," and if its word is not as good as its bond-it also demands attention. We must live "soberly and righteously and godly in this present world." (Tit. 2: 12.) No one can be godly without being like God, and no one can be like God without fulfilling his promises. The Hebrew Christians were assured that "he is faithful that promised." (Heb. 10: 23.) No one was ever disappointed through trusting in, and relying upon, the promises of God. One should not make a promise which he knows he cannot fulfill; to do so is to deal falsely. To break a promise which one can fulfill is to act dishonestly. Of course, some promises are made in good faith which, on account of some unexpected turn in affairs, cannot be made good; but such are not now under consid-

4. If it is an "idle tongue," and has its play sometimes in punning and jesting on the Holy Scriptures, or by talking lightly and carelessly of deep and holy things, it should be guarded. With reference to all such, Jesus said: "Every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment." (Matt. 12: 36.)

5. If it be a hypocritical tongue, and has the habit of quoting Scripture in secular and daily business for sinister, secret, and selfish purposes, perhaps at the same time engaged in some fraudulent transaction; if it flatter for personal gain and popularity, it demands restraint. "By thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned." (Matt. 12: 37.) "Lie not one to another; seeing that ye have put off the old man with his doings." (Col. 3: 9.) "A flattering mouth worketh ruin." (Prov. 26: 28.) "Jehovah will cut off all flattering lips." (Ps. 12: 3.)

6. If it be a foul tongue which glories in the telling of impure jokes and obscene stories, it certainly should be bridled; and the bridle should be strong, equipped with the best of bits. In condemnation of all such, Solomon said; "Put away from thee a wayward mouth, and perverse lips put far from thee," (Prov. 4: 24.) On this subject Paul wrote: "Let no corrupt speech proceed out of your mouth, but such as is good for edifying as the need may be, that it may give grace to them that hear." (Eph. 4: 29.)

Finally, we should have ever before us the petition of David: "Let the words of my mouth and the meditation of my heart be acceptable in thy sight, O Jehovah, my rock, and my redeemer." (Ps. 19: 14.)

O. D. Bearden preached at Adairsville yesterday (July 17.) Hugh E. Garrett has just closed a fine meeting at Union, near Valdosta, Ga. There were seventeen additions from all sources.

Last night we began a tent meeting on the corner of Mc-Lendon Avenue and Elmira Place. J. J. Reynolds conducts the song service, Don Hockaday teaches a Bible class in the afternoon for the children, and I do the preaching. The meeting begins with good prospects.

Don Hockaday, who preaches for the South Pryor Street Church, of this city, and Miss Anna Lee Baxter, Director of Music in Harper College, Harper, Kan., were married at the residence of Batsell Baxter, in Abilene, Texas, on June 30. Batsell Baxter officiating. Heartiest congratulations. "Whose findeth a wife findeth a good thing, and obtaineth favor of the Lord." (Prov. 18: 22.)

Divine Forgiveness and Punishment.

BY J. C. M'Q.

Design is the order of the whole universe. It runs like a strand of gold through all the works of God; and whatever God does for man or requires man to do for himself, he has a purpose or design in it all. The proper use of punishment is right; the abuse of it is the most blighting and withering curse that has ever fallen on church or world. This abuse has grown out of the single thought that there is a purifying influence growing out of it; that it is a great factor in reforming moral nature; that it is disciplinary as applied to mind and heart. The idea that punishment purifies was conceived in hell; the devil is its father and sin its mother. If punishment purifies, then we should praise our redeemer and shout glory to the penal fires of hell. Punishment may control action until uplifting moral influences and teaching may be brought to bear on the heart of the transgressor which will lead him to hate and loathe sin. All purifying power is in God, Christ, and the Holy Spirit. They purify our hearts by entering in and dwelling there; and they enter by faith, not by punishment. It is faith in God and his word in the heart of the transgressor that leads him to confess his sin; the hardened sinner who has no faith in Christ is not conscious of sin and has no thought of confessing guilt for a violation of the law of God. Punishment does not reach the heart. The heathen on his post, the monk in his cell, wrapped in his hair clothing, with sharp-pointed tacks to pierce the flesh, with all their fastings, flagellations, and macerations, their hearts are not as pure as they would be if they mingled with their fellow men and sought to do them good in the discharge of life's active duties. All the punishment God inflicted upon Pharaoh did not purify his heart. God did not mean to make him love his people, but to control his action, and this he did. Christ, who was pure, suffered; Joseph, who was guileless and innocent, suffered; the sinless infant suffers.

All God's punishments are beneficent, looking to the good of the one punished. No earthly father who really loves his child has any thought of purifying his child by the use of the rod, but simply aims to control his action until he can fill his heart with principles that will lead him to hate wrongdoing. If the use of the rod purified, the wise father would use it on his child until he was sinless. God is not a tyrant, inflicting punishment simply to appease his anger, but he visits punishment on his children to bring them to a state of mind that they may see sin in all its hideousness and be influenced by his word to loathe it with all their hearts. David tells us the effect of affliction on his heart: "Before I was afflicted I went astray; but now I observe thy word." (Ps. 119: 67.) David again impresses the thought that through an understanding of God's precepts he was led to hate sin: "How sweet are thy words unto my taste! Yea, sweeter than honey to my mouth! Through thy precepts I get understanding: therefore I hate every false way." (Verses 103, 104.) That it is faith in God and not punishment which leads to reformation is clear from Amos 4: 6: "And I also have given you cleanness of teeth in all your cities, and want of bread in all your places; yet have ye not returned unto me, saith Jehovah." Not one was reformed. It was even so with the children of Israel when they were afflicted for forty years in the wilderness. Our only hope is in the gospel, which is God's power unto salvation, and not in punishment.

I have heretofore referred to David's sin and God's dealing with him. I sought to establish two facts, and only two facts-viz., God forgave David and retained him in the exalted position of king over his people. No proof of these facts is needed more than the simple narrative itself, and most certainly no wrong use has been made of the divine record in showing how God treated one guilty of a heinous crime. In so far as the effects which followed David's sin in the way of trouble in his family and otherwise are concorned, they in no way alter the two facts that God wiprd out his sin and kept him on the throne. If a bad example was set before the young men of Israel in retaining David on the throne, just remember that God himself set the example and forever banish the thought of being more righteous than God. The naked facts are that in many cases the consequences" which follow one who has violated God's law and has been pardoned emanate from man and not from God. These "consequences" are often due to a lack of forgiveness upon the part of man where God has forgiven. No doubt we are often more concerned about what the public will think than we are about the attitude God sustains to one he has pardoned, and thus we erect public sentiment as a standard of action toward one whom God has forgiven. When God pardoned David, was he not in "good standing" and fellowship with God? If the pardoned sinner is not also in "good standing" with us, we are out of harmony with God and, therefore, not in "good standing" with him. The one who has been pardoned of God is in "good standing" and full fellowship with all God's children, regardless of what the world may say or do. What privileges in the kingdom of God does Jesus Christ deny one who has been forgiven and cleansed from sin? Where is the law on the subject? Unless we know that some privilege is denied by the Head of the church to such a one, will we not be making a law where God has made none, and is not such a course a dangerous thing? Should we make a law and label it "expediency" when there is no greater support for it than public sentiment? Shall public sentiment lead us to assume a different attitude toward a sinner forgiven than God himself sustains toward him? Is the denial of any privilege in the kingdom of God any part of God's design in the punishment for sin? I do not so understand the matter, so for this reason I hesitate to follow a course simply because public sentiment demands it. If repentance and reformation do not establish one in the grace, fellowship, and service of God, with all the powers and talents one possesses, then it seems to me forgiveness does not reach very far, because it is the use of man's talents and capacities in the service of God that enables him to overcome temptation and sin. While it is true that certain things were ordered of God to come upon David's household which caused him bitter grief, yet that is no proof that David's standing with God was not in every respect the same as it was before he sinned. Hence, whatever punishment may be inflicted on man for his sins, let it be inflicted by the Lord and not by man, especially by God's professed children. Let us strive to ascertain God's attitude toward a forgiven person, and then let that be our attitude toward that person. I verily believe that the subject of forgiveness needs to be studied and practiced more by professed Christians.

When I observe how universally gentle, kind, and merciful Christ was to the forgiven penitent sinner, I am afraid not to follow his example; and when I observe his terrible anathemas on the self-righteous Pharisees, I tremble for all who are pharisaical. The prodigal pleading to be as a hired servant, forgiven and restored to the favor of the father and the privileges of the family, stood accepted and approved of God, while the self-righteous elder brother did not.

The history of David's sin and God's dealing with him furnish ample grounds for comfort, consolation, and hopeviz., that God will forgive sin and retain the one forgiven in his service in the same capacity wherein he or she was a servant. David's writings furnish abundant proof that many did not forgive him and felt that he was lost beyond redemption: "Many there are that say of my soul, There is no help for him in God. But thou, O Jehovah, art a shield about me; my glory, and the lifter up of my head." (Ps. 3: 2, 3.) God is our comfort and our salvation.

How the Bible Is Lost To-Day.

BY E. A. E.

2 Chron, 34 and 2 Kings 22 tell of the beginning of the reign of Josiah, king of Judah, and the reformation which he wrought.

Among other things, Josiah, in the eighteenth year of his reign, ordered Shaphan, the scribe; Maaseiah, the governor of the city; Joah, the recorder; and Hilkiah, the high priest, to repair the temple.

Soon after Josiah began to reign he called for a collection of money in order to repair the temple. When the persons he had sent to attend to this matter "brought out the money" from where it had been stored, "Hilkiah the priest found the book of the law of Jehovah given by Moses;" and the margin says, "by the hand of" Moses. This, then, may have been the original copy of the law written by Moses.

Moses commanded the priest to place the copy of the law which he had prepared by the ark of the covenant (Deut. 31: 24-26), and the king was commanded to make a copy of it for his own use in order to "read therein all the days of his life," that he might fear and obey God and teach the people to do the same. (Deut. 17: 18-20.) Let us note here that the king first was required to read the law—first to practice the law, and next to teach it. The king was to set a good example and to lead the way in right-eousness and godliness.

Printing was unknown, the law had to be transcribed, and there were but few copies of it at any time, and fewer still during the times of the wicked kings, for they kept no copy of it for their own use. They despised God's law, desecrated his temple, destroyed the sacred vessels of his service, set his altar and the ark of the covenant aside (2 Chron. 35: 3), and worshiped and served idols. In all this negligence and wickedness the original copy of the law could have been lost easily, and this one found by Hilkiah may have been that one. However this may be, the fact remains that the word of God, "the book of the law of Jehovah," was literally lost. How long it had been lost, we have no way of finding out, and it is useless to conjecture.

Would not the people of to-day be considered in a most shameful condition and wicked plight could not a single copy of the Bible be found among the rulers of the countries of earth, in a single home on the globe, and in any one of the houses and temples of worship in the land? While there are multiplied thousands of copies spread broadcast over the world to-day, the great and general sin is not studying and obeying it.

But while there were but few copies of the law at any time during the period of which I write, God made provision for his will to be taught orally. The priests were commanded to read it at the end of every seven yearsthe year of release-during the feast of tabernacles, to men, women, children, and sojourners assembled for the purpose of hearing it, that all might understand it and fear Jehovah, and that those who had not therefore known it might learn and obey it. (Deut. 13: 9-13.) God strictly and solemnly commanded parents to teach his word daily and diligently to their children, to retain it in their memory, and to meditate upon it day and night. (Deut. 6: 6-9.) Jehoshaphat sent his princes and the priests throughout all the cities of Judah to teach the law to the people; but they carried "the book of the law of Jehovah with them" (2 Chron. 17: 7-9), and taught it orally. Having found it, Josiah taught the law to the people by reading it to them. (2 Chron. 34: 29-31.) Ezra taught it in the same way. (Neh. 8.) Since there were no copies of the law in every man's home from which he and his family could read at will, priests, parents and others were required to remember it and to teach it to those who knew it not.

This is the law that was "written and graven on stones," but the New Testament is the law of the Spirit written on the tables of the heart. (2 Cor. 3: 1-11.) Since God re quired his people to remember the one, how much more does he require them to remember the other? In fact, the law of God cannot be written upon the heart unless it is first studied and retained in the heart, directing the thoughts and actions. The Psalmist declares: "Thy word have I laid up in my heart, that I might not sin against thee." (Ps. 119: 11.) The same is required of the people of God to-day. "Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly." (Col. 3: 16.) "Receive with meekness the implanted word, which is able to save your souls." (James 1: 21.) "And that in the good ground, these are such as in an honest and good heart, having heard the word, hold it fast, and bring forth fruit with patience." (Luke 8: 15.)

There are Bibles now in every home in the land; yet, in a sense, the word of God is lost to many. Some never study or read it; some read it for its history and literature; some, to pick flaws in it; some, to try to establish their religious theory, but not to learn and obey the will of God; and some, to make out a case against and to condemn others. To all such it is lost. The New Testament plainly and clearly condemns all who "pervert the gospel of Christ" (Gal. 1: 7), corrupt the word of God (2 Cor. 2: 17), handle "the word of God deceitfully" (2 Cor. 4: 2), and make merchandise of the churches (2 Pet. 2: 3). The Bible is lost to-day to all "in whom the god of this world hath blinded the minds of the unbelieving, that the light of the gospel of the glory of Christ, who is the image of God, should not dawn upon them." (2 Cor. 4: 4.)

Josiah, having no copy of the law, was not familiar with the curses which it pronounced upon the rebellious and idolatrous people. He doubtless knew the general laws handed down from father to son. But the astonishment and great distress of the king upon hearing the law and the course he pursued show how little he and the people knew of the law and how far short they had come of keeping it. He realized the fearful punishment which must come upon the people as a result of departing from God. Shaphan must have read to the king Deut. 28 and other portions of the law setting forth the fearful consequences and punishment of sin. No one can read these now and the teaching of the New Testament in regard to the same without being made to realize how fearful it is to disobey God.

The way to find the word of God to-day is to purpose in heart and to will with all power of soul to do his will (John 7: 16, 17); to hunger and thirst after righteousness; to seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness; and to go forward in practicing the truth as fast as it is learned.

A Good Letter.

BY F. W. SMITH.

I receive a goodly number of letters commendatory of my efforts in trying to teach the word of the Lord by mouth and pen; and since the one which follows speaks of the good work of others, too, I will let our readers see it:

Chattanooga, Tenn., July 3, 1921.—Mr. F. W. Smith, Nashville, Tenn.—Dear Brother Smith: When a fellow sees or hears something real good, I believe he should tell it, that its effect may do others good.

I enjoyed the day very much in Franklin, Sunday, June 19. First, your good sermon, calling attention to the lives of many of the great characters of both the Old and New Testament with respect to their sins, and how God dealt with them, and the remedy for sin in this day and generation. I, of course, enjoyed the other services of the church. In a social way, I enjoyed the balance of the day, as my

In a social way, I enjoyed the balance of the mother, four brothers, one sister, two sisters-in-law all met me in Franklin, and Brother Will Thurman and Sister Nora joined Brother John Jewell and Sister Alla in giving this bunch a real feed at Sister Alla's home. We all gathered around the long table and helped ourselves in "picnic style" to mutton, chicken, ham, salads, pies and cakes, and all such good things that we do not have at home every day

Now what I have just related was my pleasure and isn't calculated to do anybody else much good; but on my return home I spent a week in Murfreesboro at work, and I had the pleasure of being with the church a few nights, as their minister, Brother A. B. Barret, was conducting a meeting. There were some features of the congregation that impressed me so favorably I wish to comment briefly on them. First, the song service began promptly at eight o'clock, and they sang those good, old, familiar songs, like "Tis So Sweet to Trust in Jesus" and "Jesus Saves," and they sang these songs just like it was really sweet to trust in Jesus and as they realized that Jesus saves. So often we hear such songs and others sung in such a draggy way that we wouldn't know whether it was sweet to trust in Jesus or not or whether we really think Jesus saves or not.

Brother Barret impressed me as a devout man and impressive speaker in both the sermons I heard him deliver. His subjects were "That Worthy Name by Which We are Called" and "God's Three Covenants with Abraham," both of which could have been dwelt on an hour or even longer; but Brother Barret, in my judgment, used wisdom by speaking only twenty-five minutes each service. I believe the speaker who presents his message in a brief, concise way does more good than the speaker who preaches a good twenty to thirty-minute sermon, and then reviews the same subject-matter about fifteen minutes, and then holds his audience about five to ten minutes to sum up the entire subject-matter. One reason for my appreciating the brief speaker is that I believe women with babies and smaller children should have this consideration (especially during the extreme warm weather).

Nours fraternally,
R. E. BAKER.

I am really proud of the author of this letter, and I will tell you why. A number of years ago "Rush" (as I still call him) went with me to Chattanooga to sing in a meeting with the Central Church; and, would you believe it, he got married. I knew that musical voice with his good looks and Chesterfieldian manners would sooner or later win the heart and hand of some fair daughter of Eve, and sure enough they did. And now he has an abundant use for that voice in singing midnight melodies to those twins. Yes, sir, he has two baby chairs, two baby plates, and has to use both of his knees as cushions when he sits on his front porch exhibiting his posterity. There is one thing in this letter that is cruel-viz., his description of that spread chicken, ham, etc., etc.; and I was not there. All right, Rush, come to see us again, and be sure to take me along when there is to be such a spread.

- D. Pennington, a veteran preacher, in changing his address from Downey, Cal., to Dallas, Texas, says: "I have been a reader of the Gospel Advocate for sixty-six years, and think it is the best paper published. I feel that I cannot be without it."

From Fred W. Chunn, Henry, Tenn., July 20; "I have just closed an interesting meeting at Puryear, Tenn. There were five additions to the church, and we trust that other good was done. This is a splendid little congregation, and its members seem to be working harmoniously together."

The following encouraging words come from one of our readers at Lawrenceburg, Tenn.: "The Gospel Advocate should be in every home. Brother McQuiddy's articles are fine, especially those on women entering politics and immodest dress. Long live the writers to contend for the truth!"

From J. G. Malphurs, Clarksville, Tenn., July 8: "The work in Montgomery County is doing well. T. B. Thompson begins a meeting at Oakwood on July 10. I am in a mission meeting at Grace Chapel, with good prospects, though the community is made up principally of Presbyterians and prejudice runs high in some families."

From E. L. Whitaker, Corinth, Miss., July 19: "I began a meeting at Water Valley, Ky., on the second Lord's day in this month, which closed on the third Lord's day, with one baptism and much good done otherwise. A. J. Veteto, of the Freed-Hardeman College, Henderson, Tenn., conducted the song service. The brothren were more than pleased with his work."

Willie Hunter, Route 1, Livingston, Tenn., writes that he will continue his evangelistic work in Tennessee through the month of October, and plans to go to Florida about the first of November. He would like to hold some meetings in that State. The editor commends Brother Hunter as a loyal and useful evangelist, and hopes that meetings can be arranged for him in Florida, especially since he is willing to labor in destitute places.

From R. H. Rogers, Terrell, Texas: "The church at this place and in this county seems to be doing well. I have been holding some mission meetings in this county. I was in a meeting at Hiram last week. I think we had some of the largest crowds I have ever preached to. I go to Myrtle Springs next week for a two-weeks' meeting. Then we are to begin at Hiram again and run two weeks. The meeting was postponed because of a Baptist meeting beginning at the same place. This was the Baptists' regular time for their meeting."

H. N. Mann, of Riverside, Tenn., furnishes a good example of how a Christian can most profitably spend a vacation. He writes as follows: "While taking a little rest from business matters at Red Boiling Springs, Tenn., I met with and preached for the brethren at their place of worship eleven o'clock, July 10, and again at eleven and eight o'clock, July 17, and also preached each night through the week out four miles from the Springs at a Baptist meetinghouse, known as 'Walnut Shade,' to good audiences and with good attention. Walnut Shade is near the home of C. H. Hagan, a son-in-law of the late Dr. Jenkins, whose life and influence were on the Lord's side and are yet speaking among his loved ones. I tried to do good in the name of the Lord, as well as rest some, on this visit."

Annie C. Tuggle, who is doing some very commendable missionary work among the colored people, sends us this very interesting report: "I feel greatly indebted to S. P. Pittman for his kindness in putting my work before his people, because I believe many of the white sisters and brethren have been waiting only for an opportunity in which to spread the gospel to the many thousands of my people who are yet in darkness and ignorant of the word of God. I should like to say just here that we realize that this work has been neglected, yet we do not wish to fold our arms and do nothing, but only ask you to help us help ourselves. Perhaps you would be interested to know that two precious souls have been translated from the kingdom of Satan into the kingdom of God's dear Son as a result of the house-to-house work, and these persons have had me to go out of the city at their expense to talk with their relatives concerning the way of salvation. There were no visible results, but I believe great good was accomplished. I hope some day in the near future that I shall be well prepared to go even to the most ignorant among us and enlighten his intellect, teach him the way of salvation and a good, honest trade, that he may be a useful citizen and inherit eternal life in the end. My address is 1039 Twenty-first Avenue, North, Nashville, Tenn."

J. H. Horton writes from Haleyville, Ala., July 13: "I should like to ask a few questions in the Gospel Advocate for the benefit of the churches of Christ in North Alabama. Why are the churches of Christ in North Alabama so careless about doing mission work? Will some congregations that are actually doing mission work tell us what they are doing, that others may be persuaded to follow their example in New Testament mission work? I know congregations that support their preachers while they are with them; but when the preacher cannot be contented to sit in a little town of fifteen hundred souls to preach just twice a week through the summer, when they could get out in meetings and perhaps lead hundreds to Christ in one summer, these congregations insist that they must make their own living while thus engaged. To get out, they sacrifice their living; to stay in they surely sacrifice their hope of eternal life. Brethren, what are those preachers to do? Should they secure schools to teach or entangle themselves in other work that will hinder them in the service of mission work while they see thousands die out of Christ? Something must be done, and that quickly, or many Alabama preachers are to be forced out of the field, and perhaps many congregations. to say nothing of the souls who are out of Christ, will perish. Let us hear from some of the congregations who are doing mission work, as well as from those who want to do it and have no preachers."

L. B. Jones is in a good meeting at Moulton, Ala.

Let all of his friends write to gladden Brother Wilkinscn's heart. He has been sick for a long time and both needs and deserves encouragement.

The death of J. M. Joyner, at Hartsville, Tenn., on July 20, removes from this earth one of the finest Christian characters. The deceased was eighty-five years old, and had been active in the church for about sixty years. He was one of the elders at Hartsville. Brother Elam con ducted the funeral services.

From W. M. Gammill, Carrollton, Miss., July 18: "I preached at Old Union, my home congregation, in Carroll County, last week, with ten additions. Will J. Cullum, of Nashville, Tenn., came on Saturday and will continue this week. We had a large crowd last night, notwithstanding three other meetings in opposition."

C. M. Gleaves, a faithful evangelist residing at Bellbuckle. Tenn., is greatly prostrated on account of the death of his noble wife. He wishes to express on this page his sincere appreciation of the many letters of comfort and encouragement that have come to him. Let us continue to pray for Brother Gleaves in his sad bereavement.

From C. W. Ing, Normangee, Texas, July 19: "I engaged Mr. F. L. DuPont (Baptist) in an eight-days' debate at Forreston, Texas, recently. The debate was well atended and all seemed to enjoy it. Mr. DuPont is a real gentleman in debate, and has probably had as many debates as any Baptist in Texas. I think there was much good done."

From J. W. Brents, Purdon, Texas, July 18: "I have been with the church at Pursley, Texas, in a two-weeks' meeting. Eight additions to date. Very large crowds in attendance. My next meeting will be with the church at Ida Lou, Texas. This is a splendid congregation, and I hope to do great good. Then my next meeting will be at Hartsville, Tenn., beginning on the first Sunday in August."

The following wedding invitation will be of interest to many of our readers: "Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Boedefeld request the pleasure of your company at the marriage of their daughter, Frances Virginia, to Mr. George Slaughter Bell, on Tuesday, the sixteenth of August, at eight-thirty in the evening, at their residence, 4708 Worth Street, Dallas, Texas. At home, 812 Waverly Avenue, Mount Auburn."

From U. G. Wilkinson, Comanche, Okla., July 18: "I am still at home; don't know when I will get away yet. I think I am improving in health. July 30 will be my birthday and wedding day. I will be fifty-eight years old, and have been married thirty years. Maybe some of the brethren will want to send me a birthday or wedding present. May God bless all his faithful children. Pray for me."

A. G. Freed writes: "The meeting at Union Grove, near Murray, Ky., continues with much interest. Two confessions last night. I am talking to the church at day and to the world at night. The house does not accommodate the people who are coming. I am here in a pretty country and among a fine people. I am under promise to be with the church at Middleton, beginning on the fifth Sunday in this month; at Gadsden, Tenn., the second Sunday in August; and at Henry, Tenn., the fourth Sunday in August."

From Earnest C. Love, Fresno, Cal., Joly 18: "The Fresno Street Church had two interesting and well-attended services yesterday. I go next Sunday to Chowchilla, where they will have an all-day meeting and dinner on the grounds. We have bought a house, in good condition, and will move it on the grounds very soon. In thirty days we have to raise seven hundred and fifty dollars, and would appreciate assistance very much. The house will have to be fixed a little before we can use it. There are some rooms that can be used for school and some for sleeping rooms."

From C. A. Buffington, Fort Deposit, Ala., July 20: "Last night marked the close of one of the very best meetings we have had in Fort Deposit. In spite of trying heat and much rain, splendid audiences assembled morning and evening to hear the plain, forceful, and logical gospel sermons presented by W. J. Haynes. These convincing sermons greatly strengthened the members and brought about seventeen additions—one from the Baptists and sixteen by confession and baptism. During the meeting Fred M. Little, of Montgomery, paid us a short visit. He took charge of the preaching service while here. We all learned to love him very much."

It has been suggested that a get-together meeting in the form of a picnic be held on the lawn of the Fanning Orphan School. Therefore an invitation is made by the Board of Trustees to the members of every congregation in or near Nashville to come and bring baskets of food and join in making the day a glad day and in becoming better acquainted with an institution that is, and of right ought to be, dear to the hearts of all good people. Old pupils of the school are especially invited to come and bring their children, husbands, or sweethearts. Friends from far or near will find a cordial welcome. The day selected is August 19. Route from Nashville; Out Second Avenue to Lafayette Street, then out Lafayette and the Murfreesboro pike four and one-half miles to the Couchville pike, then one mile on the Couchville pike.

From a member of the congregation at Macon, Ga., July 19: "The meeting of R. P. Cuff, with J. Bedford Beck, of Savannah, Ga., as singer, which closed here last week, seemed to greatly strengthen the church. Though there were none to make an open confession, still there were some that seemed to be greatly interested and became more enlightened to the true teachings of the Book of God. We had splendid sermons each night and very good attendance, considering the hindrance of rain several nights. The congregation here is not as large as some, but we always find the members coöperating together in trying to reach those who have never obeyed the gospel invitation. This year we had with us one of the strongest preachers that the church of Christ has—R. P. Cuff, from Nashville, Tenn. His work with the church has been fine."

From Frank L. Cox, Norman, Okla.; "I closed my work at Hollis, Okla., on the second Sunday in July. There were eight baptisms the last service. I did not like to leave that splendid church. They are without a preacher now. Some preacher would do well to locate there. I am coming back to Norman to work with the church and do some school work in Oklahoma University. I worked with the Norman church from February, 1918, until February, 1920. Brother Winterrowd has been with the church since that time. I am glad to say he has been doing good work here which will prove a stepping-stone for future progress. Let Christian parents who are contemplating sending children here to Oklahoma University please write me, that I may do what I can to assist the children in a spiritual way. Our protracted meeting will begin on the first Sunday in August, the Lord willing. My P. O. Box is 507."

From E. C. Fuqua, Fort Collins, Col., July 21: "I am now preaching under my tent in Fort Collins to fair audier ces, and after one more tent meeting here will take the tent to Colorado Springs for a campaign of indefinite duration, the Lord willing. The work in Fort Collins is now beginning to get in position to grow as it should. Last Lord's day we completed the things that were 'wanting' in appointing elders and deacons in the Fort Collins congregation. Brethren Cook, Brittell, and Wharton were appointed elders; Brethren Healey and Thomas, deacons. The choice was unanimous, and I forecast a full and pleas ant cooperation on the part of all the members. N. B. Hardeman is now preaching some powerful discourses in Denver. We hope to have him one night under the tent in Fort Collins. This is a most busy year in Colorado."

Texas-Oklahoma Department.

BY J. C. M'Q.

We are glad to announce that with this week's issue we begin the "Texas-Oklahoma Department" under the editorship of C. R. Nichol, of Clifton, Texas. He is an original and logical thinker and speaks boldly for what he conceives to be the truth. I think that our readers are to be congratulated on having such an editor to conduct the Texas-Oklahoma Department. T. W. Phillips and C. E. Wool-dridge will actively assist him in the work. This age stands as much in need as any of its predecessors of men who will boldly and fearlessly teach the truth regardless of consequences. It is the duty of the editor to teach the word of God and leave the results with Jehovah. While I am sure C. R. Nichol will not deal in unpleasant personali-ties and will keep his department free from such, yet I am just as sure that where the truth is involved he will contend for it regardless of public sentiment. This is what we want, and this is what we shall all endeavor to do. a man who does things. He is active in whatever he un-We are expecting him to accomplish much in the work and shall be very greatly disappointed if he does We bespeak for him the hearty support of the brethren in his field, and especially the support of the conservative, loyal preachers. Let us all work together to honor and glorify God and to extend the Master's kingdom on the

QUERY DEPARTMENT BY J. C. MCQUIDDY.

W

Janie Thomas, Kanima, Okla., wishes an explanation of Luke 18: 34-36. The passages read: "And they understood none of these things; and this saying was hid from them, and they perceived not the things that were said. And it came to pass, as he drew nigh unto Jericho, a certain blind man sat by the wayside begging: and hearing a multitude going by, he inquired what this meant." Verse 34 refers to the things that were prophesied in the prophets which must be accomplished at Jerusalem. It was prophesied that Christ should be delivered up into the hands of the Gentiles, treated shamefully, put to death, and arise again the third day. The death and resurrection of Jesus Christ are always connected. Verses 35, 36 are so clear that they do not need any comment.

S. R. Drake, of Columbus Junction, Iowa, in answer to a query, says: "I am obliged to you for the information concerning the text, Matt. 3: 16, in which you say: 'The revised Greek of the American Revised Version has in Matt. 3: 16, 'apo,' 'from;' in Mark 1: 10, 'ek,' 'out of.' The explanation seems to be reasonable, but a question still back of that is: Did not the translators of the American Version have as good opportunity to know the Greek as well as the American Revision Committee? I make no pretension to understand the Greek. I know of some affusionists who use this (American Revision) as a quibble. Sure, Jesus did go up "from" the water; but, according to the American reviser on Matt, 3: 16, there is nothing to show that Jesus was even in the water."

The Greek in all the texts I have examined in Matthew is "apo;" the Greek of Mark 1: 10 is "ek," "out of," in all Greek texts that I have examined. The Common Version gives this "out of," as well as the American Revised Version. On this point there is no difference. Of course, if he went up out of the water, he also went up from the water. He not only came up from the water, but he also came up out of the water.

W. G. Padgett asks for an answer from the "Query Department" of the meaning of the word "rock" in Matt. 16: 18. "What is the rock?" is the vital question in relation to the passage. Romanists take the position that the rock is Peter himself. Not only do Romanists believe that Peter was the rock on which the church was built, but they believe that every succeeding Pope of Rome has in turn succeeded in some way in getting under the church and becoming its foundation stone as was Peter in the beginning. The other view-and, I think, the correct one-is that the truth that Peter confessed, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God," is the rock on which the church is founded. To believe this truth with all the heart is to accept the truth of the Bible from the first word in Genesis to the last "amen" in Revelation. The word in Greek is not "Petros," but "Petra." "Petros" is masculine, while "Petra," the word used, is feminine, showing that it was on the truth, and not on Peter, that the church was built. Whatever the rock is, it is the foundation on which the church was to be built; this will not be questioned. It is also fair to presume that when the apostles went forth to found and build up the church, they would give prominence to the foundation, whatever it may be. When they went forth to preach, they did not preach Peter as the foundation of the church. They never required any one to believe in Peter, to confess him, or to be baptized into his name. They preached "Christ, and him crucified," and required men to believe in him, confess him, and be baptized into his name. This in itself should settle clearly and beyond dispute that the truth confessed by Peter, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God," is the rock upon which the church was built.

A brother, who wishes his name withheld, asks for information, as follows: "Is it right for elders in the church to settle every matter that comes up in the church without asking all the members of the church their views of it? Please give all the scripture on the subject."

It is the duty of elders to tend, feed, and oversee the church. Of course they are to rule, not as lording it over God's heritage, but in a spirit of humility, realizing that he who serves most serves best. "Take heed unto yourselves, and to all the flock, in which the Holy Spirit hath made you bishops, to feed the church of the Lord which he purchased with his own blood." (Acts 20: 28.) "Tend the flock of God which is among you, exercising the oversight, not of constraint, but willingly, according to the will of God; nor yet for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind; neither as lording it over the charge allotted to you, but making yourselves ensamples to the flock." (1 Pet. 5: 2, 3,) In all matters it would be well for the elders to know the sentiment and wishes of the congregation in as far as possible. Things on which God has clearly spoken and legislated must be decided, however, according to the word of God, regardless of the sentiment of the congregation. The whole church should be brought to recognize the clear authority of the word of God. We learn that when the church at Corinth obeyed the command of the Holy Spirit to withdraw from the wicked transgressor who had his father's wife, the punishment was inflicted by the many. cient to such a one is this punishment which was inflicted by the many; so that contrariwise ye should rather forgive him and comfort him, lest by any means such a one should be swallowed up with his overmuch sorrow. Wherefore 1 beseech you to confirm your love toward him." (2 Cor. 2: 6-8.) In matters of expediency the elders should learn the sentiment of the congregation, and then do nothing that would bring a division in the church. All Christians will be willing to yield their preference in an expediency not fundamental to salvation. Christians who are properly instructed in scriptural things and love the word of God will cheerfully accept the decision of the elders in such matters without creating any disturbance over things that are not essential to obedience to Christ.

J. S. Jones, of Senath, Mo., inquires to know the difference between the soul and the spirit. He says: "Please give me the difference in the soul and the spirit of man, if there be any. It seems that the soul of the wicked will die, but the spirit never dies."

I have never been able to make a clear distinction between the soul and the spirit. For the benefit of the querist, however, I am quoting the answer that Brother E. G. Sewell gave to this question some years ago, which appears on page 622 of "Questions Answered," by Lipscomb and Sewell. Here is the question and answer as given:

"Brethren Lipscomb and Sewell: I desire to ask you a question upon the following verse: 'For the word of God is quick, and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit.' (Heb. 4: 12.) This seems to me to imply a difference between soul and spirit. If so, what is the distinction?

We cannot undertake to tell with any degree of certainty what is meant in this passage by the word "soul." generally understood that in such passages as this the word soul" means the principle of animal life which is possessed in common with all animals, and that the word "spirit" means that part of man which does not die when the body dies. This is as good an exposition as we know on the subject; and, whether right or wrong, it will affect no man's salvation either to receive or reject the interpretation. If we obey all the practical precepts of the word of God, we need not be uneasy about the distinction of soul and spirit. The word of God is sufficiently powerful to separate soul and spirit, and that much we are called upon to believe, and beyond that we need not be uneasy about It is a blessing to us that the word of God the meaning. plainly reveals all we need to know and does not burden us by telling us what would not do us any good if we did know it.

The Secret of Success.

One day, in huckleberry time, when little Johnny Flails And half a dozen other boys were starting with their pails To gather berries, Johnny's pa, in talking with him, said That he could tell him how to pick so he'd come out ahead.

"First find your bush," said Johnny's pa, "and then stick to it till

You've picked it clean. And let those go chasing about who will

In search of better bushes; but it's picking tells, my son— To look at fifty bushes doesn't count like picking one."

And Johnny did as he was told; and sure enough, he found,

By sticking to his bush while all the others chased around In search of better picking, 'twas as his father said;

For, while all the others looked, he worked, and so came out ahead.

And Johnny recollected this when he became a man, And first of all he laid him out a well-determined plan; So, while the brilliant triflers failed with all their brains and push.

Wise, steady-going Johnny won by "sticking to his bush."

Studying Our Atmosphere.

When we look out in the morning to see what sort of weather we have, we seldom give the attention we should to our atmosphere.

The air we breathe is an envelope that surrounds the earth, and which is made up of many curious conditions, according to the seasons and time of the day or night, combined with other conditions caused by local surroundings.

We often speak of seeing a great many stars on a clear night, and some say more stars are in the sky than at other times.

The stars are not more abundant, but conditions make them more visible and much larger in appearance to the eye.

When we see lots of stars, the atmosphere is very free from clouds or mists; but there is a peculiar moisture in the air, and it usually indicates rain is not far distant.

When it is clear, and likely to be dry for several days, the stars are not so plainly seen, and they seem much smaller.

Moisture in the right condition will act as a lens and magnify to the human eye.

Our atmosphere becomes wonderfully disturbed at times, and this is the cause of severe storms.

When the barometer is low and the humidity is great, there is something brewing, and we may watch for some kind of a storm.

Storms vary greatly in intensity and extent. Some are general and cover a vast territory, and others are local and cover only a narrow territory and sometimes in spots.

Electricity plays a wonderful part in our atmospheric conditions; and when the terrible tornadoes and cyclones come, electricity aids in the wonderful destruction of property, and sometimes of life.

When we are out for a walk, it will be interesting to observe conditions closely. We may see some strange phenomena.

The writer, in company with a gentleman, driving in the country in a very hilly section, discovered a large whirlwind sweeping up across the fields toward the road being traveled. The horse stopped, and the whirwind crossed the road just a little way ahead. It was so powerful it had gathered up a lot of dead limbs from under trees, and these were thrown against a wire fence, and it produced a curious sound as these sticks were whirled and rattled on the wires.

A friend of the writer, walking on a road, saw a small whirlwind ahead of him, and it gathered up dust and formed it into a pear-shaped mass, and it produced a whirring sound, like a motor of some kind, and it rose straight up, and, when about fifty feet above the ground, burst with a loud report, and there was a bright spot or flash as it burst

Another whirlwind gathered up grass and leaves, and came down across a field, and stopped near the writer, and it bounced up and down, and sounded as if a lot of paper boxes were being beaten together. It suddenly started and formed a small cyclone that did considerable damage.

It is best to keep a safe distance from a whirlwind. They contain electricity. They grow in strength as they become larger.—John T. Timmons.

Bearing Defeat Gracefully.

All boys and girls like to play games, and, naturally, they like to win. It is impossible, however, for any one to be on the winning side all of the time. Sooner or later the best players and the best teams are bound to meet their match and to go down to defeat.

There are two ways, however, of meeting defeat. One way, and a way which is more common than it ought to be, is to get peevish when one is beaten, especially if he is beaten again and again. Who has not seen boys and girls become real down in the mouth and grouchy because the other side was winning at croquet or in some other game? Such boys and girls take it as a personal affront when an opponent can outplay them,

But there is another way to take defeat, and that is to meet it with a smile—that is, to congratulate the winner and to say: "You beat me fairly this time; but if you do it again, you've got to play harder than ever."

There is almost no way in which the real disposition and character of boys and girls is shown equal to that of the way they take defeat. Watch a boy or a girl playing games, see what they do and say and how they look when they have been beaten, and you know what the real inner life of the loser is. No one really likes a boy or a girl who does the baby act when defeated, but every one admires a good loser.

Over the gate of one of the New England athletic fields are these words: "May the best team win." In every game into which boys and girls enter this should be their desire: "May the best player win." It is possible to win on a fluke or mistake, but no one who is truly honest is satisfied to win that way. The player who has the real sportsmanlike quality in his make-up is the one who wishes his opponent to play his best, and desires to win only when he can clearly outplay him. Until he can do that he is willing to lose, but he is just as cheerful and good-natured in defeat as in victory.—The Visitor.

Social Responsibility.

The writer may be pardoned a concrete illustration out of his boyhood recollections. There was in the town a poor, motherless, demented boy who ran the streets in rags, swearing and screaming as other boys and some men would tease and torment him and laugh at his pitiful anger and agony. What were the preachers in that town doing in those days? They were preaching abstract theological doctrines and warning us boys against going to the circus; but not a minister or elder or church member ever took any action or thought he had anything to do about that boy. There was not enough social Christianity in that town to care for him or even think about him. Such a thing would now hardly be possible in any Christian town, because we have developed a Christian sense of social responsibility for the welfare of the community as a whole, and not simply of the church members.-James H. Snowden, in "Is the World Growing Better?"

All articles, reports, orders for Gospel Advocate, and books, from Texas and Oklahoma, should be sent to C. R. Nichol, Clifton, Texas.

Publishers and Subscribers.

What is the relationship the publisher of a religious paper sustains to his subscribers?

There are papers published among us which are by us regarded as exponents of the truth in its fullness. We often speak of such papers as "our papers." We subscribe for such papers, assist in circulating them, and then feel free to criticize them.

If the publisher does not give us "value received" for the subscription price of the paper, there is no obligation recting on me to continue to subscribe for the paper.

resting on me to continue to subscribe for the paper.

But why do I subscribe for "our" paper, rather than papers which are recognized as exponents of the Methodist Church? As contrasted with the teaching of the Methodists, there are certain fundamentals in religion which I have espoused, fundamentals which I think need to be emphasized. "Our paper" features such doctrines, and because it contends for such things as I believe I subscribe for it—it is "our paper."

The publisher is obliged to furnish me the paper through the life of my subscription, and morally he is obligated to see that the polity and doctrine of the paper does not change through the life of my subscription. Should the publisher change his doctrine and affirmatively feature Catholic or Advent doctrine in the paper, he would have made a radical change, and morally be obligated to return to me the amount he received from me for subscription in excess of payment up to the time his paper changed doctrine and polity.

If the publisher pays a man to edit the journal entirely or in part, and the editor changes his views, or doctrine, the only course open for the publisher is to dismiss the editor and secure a man to edit the payer who is in accord with the doctrine and polity of the paper. Indeed, the editor should have the fairness to say to the publisher: "I am not in accord with the doctrine which this paper has esponsed; your subscribers did not pay their money to secure such matter as I must, in meeting the demands of my con science, write, and for that reason you will be put to the necessity of securing some one else to edit the paper."

Do you ask if such ties the paper, and if it would prevent investigation and growth on the part of the editor or publisher? No.

It would be wrong for the publisher to secure subscribers on the ground that the paper advocates certain doctrines, and immediately become the exponent of a doctrine at variance therewith.

When I see the name of a man frequently appearing in "our papers" with favorable reports of work he is doing among the churches, I conclude that such man is in accord, not only with the churches, but with the doctrine taught by the paper as well, and is worthy of "our" support. If he is not, and the paper knows it, it fails to protect its readers.

Some years ago a man labored among "us" as an evangelist in Texas, meeting with marked success in his work. His meetings were reported through the papers and he was much used; but it developed after a time that he privately taught that the kingdom was not established, that Christians were not really children of God, that Christians will be born of the Spirit in the resurrection. In short, his doctrine was a mixture of the truth on some points with the errors of Adventists, Christadelphians, and Russellites on other points. Through his private work he made disciples, became emboldened, and then "by request" would preach on such subjects. Result: Divided congregations, strife.

What was the duty of "our" paper through which this

What was the duty of "our" paper through which this man had been reporting his work to its subscribers? Clearly, to warn the subscribers that the man was not in accord with the doctrine espoused by the paper and refuse to report favorably his meetings.

Again, if a minister—one of "our" ministers—should prove to be unworthy the confidence of the churches, and "our" paper is apprised of the fact, would the paper be warranted in reporting the work of such man through its pages?

In "our" papers I see the name of T. Q. Martin and his work reported favorably. I do not know Brother Martin personally, but I do not hesitate to recommend him to the churches for meetings. I do so on the ground of the favorable reports and commendations I see of him and his work in "our" papers. If he is not in harmony with "our" papers, and the papers know it, they should not have led me to think so, which they do by the favorable reports they publish.

There is an inter-relationship between the publisher and his subscribers. If you change your views, if you hold views not in accord with the doctrine espoused by the paper, you should not feel peeved if the publisher declines to publish your articles. You should remember I am paying for the journal because I believe the doctrine it has espoused, or because I wish to see articles presented in the defense of certain doctrine. I dislike to have other doctrine thrust on me.

Most religious journals graciously give men who may differ with them space to present their views, but they would not treat their subscribers right should they allow some man with other views than those the paper has espoused, and because of which it secured its subscribers, to occupy space continually, or be identified with the paper. The paper cannot rightfully thrust on its readers such doctrine, neither can it afford to give the man the prestige of its pages.

Should the time come when I differ radically with the things the Gospel Advocate has stood for through its life, the publisher will be doing his readers an injustice if he does not warn his readers and bring to an end my work on the paper.

In the Texas-Oklahoma Department there may at times appear things which I do not believe to be correct; but if there is that which I believe to be out of harmony with the great principles taught in the Bible, I will certainly criticize the article.

The Texas-Oklahoma Department of the Gospel Advocate is open for the criticism of any and all false doctrine. This will not be a spineless section of the paper. We are neither afraid nor ashamed to contend for the truth or criticize false teaching.

It is the wish of the publisher of the Advocate that the Texas-Oklahoma Department be made interesting as well as instructive, and to this end I wish to ask brethren in these States to lend me their assistance by sending to me reports of work as well as articles for publication.

Lee Warren, Wills Point, Texas, can be had for a meeting embracing the second and third Sundays in August.

J. W. McKinney, Ranger, Texas, has baptized three there since the meeting conducted by Cled E. Wallace closed in May.

W. D. Black, Holdenville, Okla.: "The meeting conducted here by Foy E. Wallace, Jr., resulted in twenty-five baptisms and seven restorations."

O. E. Phillips, Eastland, Texas, closed at Lovelady, Texas, with four baptisms. He reports that several preachers are needed in that section, as well as in many other sections.

K. C. Moser changes his address from Pritchett, Texas, to Wewoka, Okla. For the next year he will preach under the direction of the churches at Wewoka and Stuart, Okla.

George M. Rance, San Antonio, Texas, writes that the outlook for the establishment of a congregation at Poteet, Texas, is bright. He preaches for them once each month.

J. M. Childress, Bowie, Texas, baptized sixteen and restored fifteen at Healdton, Okla. In the meeting at Forestburg, Texas, there were three baptisms and one restoration.

J. W. Chism, Hillsboro, Texas, began a meeting in Lam pasas, Texas, with an audience of twenty, but at the close of the meeting the audiences filled the five-hundred-capacity tent. Two were baptized.

C. A Buchanan, who is being supported for all his time in mission work by the church in Cleburne, Texas, has assisted in five meetings since May where we do not have congregations. In the last meeting there were five baptisms. There are many congregations able to support a man in the home county, as does the church in Cleburne, Texas. They will. Before another twelvementh has passed we will be reporting such work from a dozen counties in Texas.

Darkness.

BY S. WHITFIELD.

Darkness prevailed in the beginning before God created light.

Darkness is associated with sin throughout the Bible and art confident that thou thyself art a guide of the blind, a light of them which are in darkness." (Rom. 2: 19.)

The world is in darkness, or sin, Even the majority of professed religious people, who think that they are walking in the light of the truth, are in darkness concerning many of the plain and important truths of the word of God.

"Who hath delivered us from the power of darkness, and hath translated us into the kingdom of his dear Son." (Col. 1: 13.)

The power of darkness is the great power of Satan or sin.

"And cast ye the unprofitable servant into outer darkness; there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth." (Matt. 25: 30.)

From this passage we learn that the abode of the wicked, at last, will be "outer darkness." To be banished from God forever is to be in endless darkness. God and Christ are full of light, and to be away from them is to be in darkness-gross darkness;

Sin is darkness, and many sins that people commit they are ashamed to practice in the day, or light, and hence they are done in the night, or in darkness.

"But the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night." (2 Pet. 3: 10.)

A thief likes to do his work in the night, for he can usually succeed better than he can in the day.

"Now from the sixth hour there was darkness over all the land unto the ninth hour." (Matt. 27: 45.) "When I was daily with you in the temple, ye stretched forth no hands against me: but this is your hour, and the power of darkness." (Luke 22: 53.)

While the Son of God, who was without sin and without guile, was dying from the hands of wicked men, from noonday until three o'clock there was darkness over the face of the earth. Such a terrible deed, while committed in the day by men, God showed that it belonged to darkness, or night.

'And this is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds were evil." (John 3: 19.)

Here is the secret why people love darkness rather than light.

"For ye were sometimes darkness, but now are ye light in the Lord; walk as children of light: for the fruit of the Spirit is in all goodness and righteousness and truth; proving what is acceptable unto the Lord. And have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them," (Eph. 5: 8-11.)

Those who are Christians were once in darkness and walked in darkness; but now, since we are children of God, we are to walk in the light, and have nothing to do with the evil works of sin and darkness. Let us walk in the glorious light of the gospel.

"This then is the message that we have heard of him, and declare unto you, that God is light, and in him is no darkness at all. If we say that we have fellowship with him, and walk in darkness, we lie, and do not the truth: but if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin." (1 John 1: 5-7.)

There is no darkness in God. He is full of light and truth; and to have fellowship with God, we must walk in the light; and our sins will be blotted out through the blood of

Now is the time to work; for the night will soon come, when we will not be able to work. So let us make good use of our time while the opporlunity is before us.

Report From Texas.

BY GEORGE W. FARMER.

The meeting at Scurry, Texas, began on Saturday night before the first Lord's day in July and continued over thirteen days. Rain and the busy work season in finishing up the crops and canning and taking care of the fruit and vegetables hindered the meeting very much. Some services were rained out entirely. Yet in the face of all of these obstacles, we had good attendance and a good interest. There were eleven baptisms and one restored to the fellowship of the church, and others seemed to be almost persuaded. There are many fine people at Scurry, and the church is gradually working out and away from some old troubles and annoyances and getting upon a good, safe footing. Brother C. H. Black lives at Scurry. and he and family are loved very much and have the confidence and esteem of the people there. He is having a good influence for the church there. He was away from home in meetings, so I did not get to meet him.

I am now (July 20) in a meeting three days old at Crandall, Texas, with good prospects. I go from here to Fairfield, in Bedford County, Tenn., to begin there on the first Lord's day in August.

"ALF and BOB TAYLOR, with their eloquence, their fiddles, and their fox hounds, have wrought for themselves a niche of eternal melody in the hearts of their country."

So states the author of this little book, which we present as the best product of the pen of Delong Rice. Into one hour of reading he has gathered the strange and romantic story of the two most wonderful political campaigns of Tennessee—the thrilling tale of the happy comradeship and the lifelong rivalry of the two famous brothers—a disclosure of the remarkable and heretofore unpublished incidents that attended the pollitical division of the Taylor family—the wonder of "The War of the Roses" that attracted the testention of the world—and the fruth about "OLD LIMBER," the peerless and now immortal fox hound that played the leading role of sentiment in the political campaign of last fall, from the Mississippi River to the Unaka Mountains.

With a "Cast of Characters extending from a President of the United States to a fox hound," the story touches a wide range of human sentiment; and through it all is the aroma of crackling camp fires and the music of the chase.

Echoes From East Tennessee.

BY GEORGE W. FARMER.

For the last two or three months I have been so busy with our work that I have not had time to report from this section, notwithstanding many of the brethren and sisters, interested in this gospel field, insist on our sending in the reports regularly.

After many months of persistent, prayerful efforts, hopeful and anxious waiting, and by the help resulting from the untiring efforts of our dear sister, Mattie Glenn, of Lebanon, Tenn., and our enthusiastic brother, Price Billingsley, of McMinnville, Tenn., it was made possible for us to have as good a tent outfit for this section as you will find anywhere. We now have it in use in full blast.

On the fifth Lord's day in May Brother R. C. White, with Brother J. D. Derryberry to lead the singing, began a meeting at Lenoir City, in Loudon County, a mission point. The meeting was carried over three Lord's days. As a result, seventeen brethren and sisters were got together and set to work and a hall was secured in which to meet. The same force then moved the tent to Niota, in Mc-Minn County, and held a fifteen or eighteen-days' meeting, resulting in two baptisms and much good done otherwise. Brother White is now in a tent meeting at Athens, Tenn. We hope and pray for much good to be done in this meeting.

On the fifth Lord's day in May I got off from the Cleveland church, and, accompanied by a number of the brethren and sisters, went to Mount Bethel, twelve miles away. Here we had a fine audience, with two services, and dinner on the ground. Here we, in the long ago, had a good congregation, but it has all gone down and the old house is tottering. We are hoping to "rebuild the breaches in the walls" at this place.

On the third Lord's day in June Brother C. G. Vincent, of Knoxville, Tenn., and I exchanged places, he coming to Cleveland and I going to Knoxville. The Cleveland congregation was delighted to have Brother Vincent preach for it, and I was pleased to go to Knoxville. It was very pleasant to meet with the Knoxville brethren. At the eleven-o'clock service one brother decided to give up a man-made church and a man-given name and be a Christian only and just a member of the New Testament church.

On the evening of June 22 I began a series of discourses with the Cleveland church and continued till June 29, preaching at night and at 11 A.M. on Lord's day. The audiences and interest were good throughout. Seven were baptized, and one came into the fellowship of the church from the Christian Church.

Brother Gaston Collins has recently held a meeting at Dayton, Tenn.

The brethren at Graysville are building them a new house, more centrally located in the town,

At this writing I am in a good meeting at Scurry, Texas. I shall be away from the Cleveland work for three months or more. My meetings are now on hand.

Many meetings are needed in East Tennessee, but funds are running low.

Dasher Bible School.

BY EARL C. SMITH.

In 1915 the brethren at Dasher, Ga., because they wanted the Bible as well as the common school branches taught to their children by Christian teachers, built a schoolhouse and teachers' home, employed two teachers, and thus launched a work that has increased daily.

From the beginning there has been a growing demand for accommodation for boarding students. Finally, this demand has become so great that the board of trustees have taken upon themselves to ask the cooperation of the brethren in building a boarding school of standard rank. The results of this effort have, so far, been encouraging.

The following men and women (all of them competent in every respect for the work that they do) have been employed as a faculty for the next session of school; J. P. Prevatt, president: Earl C. Smith, dean; J. E. Boyd, T. C. Wisenbaker, Mrs. F. W. Fogg, and Miss Urrie Copeland. One instructor is yet to be selected.

The material equipment of the school consists of eight acres of land, a school building large enough to care for one hundred students, a large cottage for a teachers' home, a chemistry laboratory sufficient for high-school chemistry, and a small library. A home for students is being built, which is expected to be ready for occupation by October 1. A home for President Prevatt will be built as soon as the workmen can get to it. We shall do work from the first grade through high school and such of the college branches as we are equipped for doing. Instruction in piano will be given those who want it. There will be no charge for tuition, except for piano. Board and room will be furnished at twenty dollars per month of four weeks.

We believe the brethren in this section of the country can have in Dasher Bible School just the kind of school they want. The Dasher brethren have all but "emptied" themselves for this work. So far we have not been disappointed when soliciting the support of others, nor do we anticipate any disappointment in working our plans for the future. We expect to have one hundred students this year.

For information, write Earl C. Smith, Lake Park, Ga., Route 2.

Remember Dasher Bible School in your plans for school, in your prayers, and in your offerings.

The South Carolina Work.

BY TOMMIE NICKS.

Having been personally in touch with the South Carolina work, I want to commend it to the brotherhood heartily. Time and space will not permit all known facts; but I must briefly say the rapid growth of the kingdom in that State is due to the untiring efforts of our faithful and beloved brother, Thomas H. Burton, and his good wife, who two years ago turned from home, friends, and all that was dear to them of fleshly nature and went into this country they knew not. In faith and love they have labored, and are still laboring. with an eye single to the glory and honor of God and the advancement of his cause.

Their efforts have been crowned with success. They now have a congregation of from twenty-five to thirty live, working members, not only for their daily bread, but earnest workers in the Master's vineyard; and a lot has been bought, located in the central part of the city. The house is nothing elaborate or expensive, but is neat as can be in every particular, and shows the work of an economic mind. This building lacks about twenty-five hundred dollars being completed and clear of debt.

Now, friends, I feel that we stand in open shame before God if we fail to rally to the support of this worthy man and allow winter to come before this house is completed and made comfortable, as it will indeed be when finished. The harvest is ripe, but laborers so few. Let us pray that the Lord of the harvest will send more laborers. But listen, fellow pilgrims to eternity, let us be careful that we do not pray from "lips out." Remember, praying for a thing and net willing to dig into your little bank roll to help support it would prove about as successful as hunting bear with blank shells. So the reason the prayer of the "righteous availeth much" is because it stirs him from head to foot, "old pocketbook" and

Let us be willing, then, to at least stand firmly by those that have gone boldly into the harvest, as Brother Burton in South Carolina, Brother Cayce in Mississippi, and others, that we may be able to hear the welcome plaudit, "Well done," in that great and final day.

Can a Bachelor Be a Scriptural Elder?

BY WILLIAM J. MILLER.

The knowledge of whether the apostle Paul was an elder, if, indeed be was one, should settle the question.

Paul was of the presbytery. He said to Timothy: "Neglect not the gift that is in thee, which was given thee by prophecy, with the laying on of the hands of the presbytery." (1 Tim. 4: 14.) Afterwards Paul said to Timothy: "For which cause I put thee in remembrance that thou stir up the gift of God, which is in thee through the laying on of my hands." (2 Tim. 1: 6.)

According to the two foregoing verses, Paul was of the "presbytery." Being of the "presbytery" was being of the "eldership." The term "presbytery" is synonymous with the term 'eldership." Therefore, Paul was an "elder," as he was of the "eldership." If, as is supposed, he was a bachelor, a bachelor can be a scriptural elder. The Greek word for "elder," in 2 John I, is "presbuteros." The Greek word for "presbytery," as in 1 Tim. 4: 14, is "presbuterion."

Following I will quote the first preceding verse from Wilson's "Emphatic Diaglott," also from Berry's "New New Testament," and from Waymouth's "Modern-Speech New Testament:

"Neglect not that endowment in thee, which was imparted to thee through prophecy with imposition of the hands of the eldership." (1 Tim. 4: 14, in the "Emphatic Diaglott.)

"Be not negligent of the gift in thee, which was given to thee through prophecy with the laying on of the hands of the elderhood." (1 Tim. 4: 14, in Berry's "New New Testament.")

"Do not be careless about the gifts with which you are endowed, which were conferred on you through a divine revelation when the hands of the olders were placed upon you," (1 Tim. 4: 14, in Waymouth's "Modern-Speech New Testament.")

An elder is not to have two or more wives, as was common under the law of Moses, but he can scripturally have one.

If a bachelor cannot scripturally be an elder, neither can a widower that has no children (Tit. 1: 6) scripturally be one.

Neither a childless widower, because of this situation, nor a bachelor, because of being unmarried, can be scripturally excluded from the elder-

Abilene's Greatest Year.

BY BATSELL BAXTER,

In practically every respect the greatest year in the history of Abilene Christian College was brought to a close with the commencement exercises on June 7.

There were twenty-three graduates from the college, the largest in its history. The enrollment for the year has already gone over that for any previous year. The enrollment for the winter term was five hundred and thirty-eight students. The summer school has brought the total up to a hundred more.

Not only was the year just closed the most successful in number of students and in influence of the school, but it saw the largest faculty the school has ever had. There were nine separate departments of college work, each presided over by a Christian man with a Master's degree, In the point of finances, too, the school has made remarkable strides. During the year more than fifty thousand dollars has been spent on buildings and equip-

The closing exercises were in keeping with the year, the fitting culmination of the banner year of the work here. The baccalaureate sermon was preached by Brother G. C. Brewer. The commencement address was delivered by Brother Carl A. Gardner, superintendent of schools at Bardwell. Texas. Both addresses were splendid. On Monday, June 6, was the homecoming. Speeches from old students featured the day. At noon a great barbecue was served to nearly two thousand people.

The school looks forward to the September opening with hope and pride. The faculty has been strengthened, new equipment has been added, and preparations are steadily going forward to take care of an increase in enrollment, such as has been a feature of every opening for the past eight years.

Ours must be a watchful and active repentance.-Keble.

Report From Mississippi.

BY M. C. CAYCE.

Our tent meeting in Vicksburg began on Sunday, June 26, and continued until Sunday night, July 17, with preaching every morning and night. Interest and attendance were extra good. Thirty-one were added to the one body, including four who came from the "digressives" and publicly took their stand with us. promising to be governed in the future by only "what is written." Some of those baptized had been Methodists and some Baptists. made the confession at our last service on Sunday night and were baptized on Monday morning. The closing crowd was the largest we had, and filled all our chairs and some extra ones besides. The brethren are negotiating to buy a meetinghouse, well located, from the Episcopalians. I think they will succeed in closing the trade this week. If not, they have all agreed to buy a lot and build at once. I believe all the members have taken on new life and are aroused to the necessity of activity in our Master's work. There have been a few members who have met faithfully for Lord's-day-morning service in the Old Fellows' Hall the past several years, but they were making no progress. These, I am sure, are revived and are now determined to do something. As near as I was able to learn, there were about sixteen members who had held things together, and even a part of them were indifferent and negligent. Now with one mind and one heart they are determined to grow and develop the new babes in Christ. Paul Pullias, son of Brother C. M. Pullias. than whom I believe there is none better, led the singing, and did it well. Paul, being a real Christian boy, exerted a good influence over the young people. I wish we had more like him. The meeting, as a whole, I believe, was one of the best it has ever been my privilege to be in.

Vicksburg is a well-known historic town, with perhaps the finest national cemetery and park in the United States. Many people come from distant States to visit, and all tourists' tickets allow stop-over in Vicksburg. The Catholics and denominations have possession, and pure Christianity is little known. It is too bad we have so long failed to see and know the importance of work in such places. I hope to be able to render them further assistance.

It is good to know that others are becoming interested in Mississippi. Brother Andrew Perry, of Illinois, is rendering valuable assistance in this State; and Brother Will J. Cullum, of Nashville, Tenn., is here now for a month's work. He is preaching now at Old Union, and then will go to Ridgeland for a meeting.

On Monday, after attending to the baptizing and taking down and shipping the tent to Pearl, Paul and I came in the Ford to Oak Ridge, about eighteen miles from Vicksburg, and preached last night to a small audience. We will be here the balance of this week, and then go to Pearl. Any mail sent to me at any time to 352 East Fortification Street, Jackson, Miss., will be forwarded to me.

Vainglory.

BY J. G. ALLEN.

"For there are many unruly and vain talkers and deceivers, specially they of the circumcision." (Tit. 1: 10.) Then Paul adds: "Whose mouths must be stopped, who subvert whole houses, teaching things which they cught not, for filthy lucre's sake."

I have been studying the Bible for more than thirty years with a sincere desire to learn its teaching, and am glad that I can truthfully say that I have no desire to preach anything else than what I can find written in the Book. I have been made to realize many times that it is quite unpopular to stick closely to the Book, but I have set my face firmly against everything else whether it is popular or unpopular.

Webster says "vain" means "fruitless, unreal, conceited, showy, vacant, worthless." Now, with this definition, the question arises: How much service do I render just to be seen? Then how we busy ourselves at times just to make a show! And sometimes we preachers will send in a report and tell what a fine sermon we preached and how the people complimented vs. Now, brethren, let us not be led away from the truth through flattery, but let us be humble and try to be of real service to others. Let us not become wise in our own conceit.

I recently read field reports from brethren in three different papers. Some of those reports caused me to feel sorry for the writer, because one could see but one item in the reportnamely, "big preacher," and no Christ. And when I see a telegram from some brother reporting his work, I am reminded of a saying I heard when ! was a boy: "That fellow is blowing his own horn." Brethren, let us not be guilty of vainglory; but let us, as the servants of Christ, deal in facts, and not give way to vain talking. The Lord says vain talkers' mouths must be stopped; and if you don't cease vain talk, you will die in unbelief.

Charles F. Aked says: "The best thing in this world is to preach to this world the gospel of Jesus Christ."

We have had twelve additions, and many more are expected. We will close here about July 28; then I go to Melbourne, Ark., with Brother Wilkerson.—Charles F. Hardin.

Wichita, Kan., July 14.—Last September I set in order the congregation at Rocky Ford, Col., where several active brethren located. They meet in Moose Hall. On the first Lord's day in August our tent meeting there will begin. We need help in this meeting in the matter of song service. Won't some good brethren spending that time in Colorado spend some time in visiting the meeting and thus add strength to the work and give glory to God? Remmel, Ark., July 18.—Brother S. C. Garner, of Bakersfield, Mo., began a series of meetings at this place on July 2 and closed it on July 14, with thirty-nine additions to our congregation. Twenty-eight were buried with the Lord in baptism; eleven confessed their faults and were restored. The church was greatly encouraged and edified. It was one of the greatest meetings we have had for years. Brother Garner surely did his work well, and we count ourselves fortunate in securing a promise for his return next year. Brother Wilson is now in a meeting at Johnstown, two miles from here. The interest and crowds from here. The interest and crowds are fine. There has been one baptism to date. Brother C. A. Northcut is doing a fine work just east of us. We think he will succeed in building up a good congregation over there, having had several additions to the one body recently .--W. R. Cox.

Sedalia, Mo., July 18.—The work in this city in many ways moves on well. We baptized another yesterday, this day being our of our busiest days. Two services at the tent (morning and night), one at our little mission church house in the afternoon, then the baptismal services at the water's edge. Good and soul-inspiring services at Berea, near Slater, on the first Sunday and at night. I got a letter to-day from Brother W. W. Slater, who is in one of the best meetings of his life at Atkins, Ark. If I could have had as faithful, God-fearing, self-sacrificing colaborers in the past as I have found in Brethren E. P. Watson, W. W. Slater, and Roy H. Lanier, God alone knows what we might have been able to do in this virgin mission field by now. I must not fail to refer to many dear souls who have aided us in a financial way. God is blessing me through all of these avenues. May he still bless!—S. W. Bell.

Buffalo, W. Va., July 12.—Within the last four months I have received personal support to the amount of $115. This includes all the help I have received here and from other places during that time, I am very thankful indeed. May God bless and prosper all my helpers. I have also received help on the meetinghouse to the amount of $105.06. This has been properly applied. Most of this was received sometime ago and was used in reducing the amount of our last lumber note. Please see previous copies of the Gospel Advocate. On account of my physical condition I am anxious to lift that note by the first of August at the very outside. Until it is paid, I cannot pay for treatment for my ailment. I am in a dangerous condition, and I certainly do think that I have friends enough to help me out. I would not ask this, but it is a case of absolute necessity. We have exhausted our resources in building the house. In sending money for the house, please add something for me personally. Address me at Buffalo, W. Va., Box 81. When we get through here, we mean to help those papers that have helped us in our distress. The Advocate has done nobly and well. It is one of our very best papers. I have carefully examined "Queries Answered," by Lipscomb and Sewell, edited by M. C. Kurfees, and no better book outside of the Bible was ever published. Order a copy and post yourself. Montgomery, Ala., July 17.—We have additions nearly every service at the Catoma Street Church, On Surday evening, July 10, there were four confessions, and three placed their membership with us. Some are to be baptized to-night. Our visible results for the first half of 1921 show fourteen added to the congregation by placing their membership with us and twentyeight baptized, making the congregation increased by forty-two. Our midweek prayer meeting is a means we have of developing the young men into public leaders and teachers. sisters are doing a good work by looking after the needy and visiting the sick. Now we are off to meet the semiannual payment of five hundred dollars and interest, which will require a little more than one hundred dollars per month. We are sure this will be taken care of. Fort Deposit, thirty-three miles south of Montgomery, is having a successful meeting, with Brother W. J. Haynes doing the preaching. Brother J. H. Hines, of Highland Park Church, was at Opp, Ala., last week. Brother Hines also spent three days preaching at Selma two weeks ago, to the edification of the little congregation there. I will be in a mission meeting near Wetumpka during the coming week. When everybody is busy, we are happier, and still there is more to do than we all can do. We need more preachers who have to preach, not more of the kind who are out of something to do. South Alabama is a great field.—C. E. Holt.

Loss of Vitality is loss of the principle of life, and is early indicated by failing appetite and diminishing strength and endurance. Hood's Sarsaparilla is the greatest vitalizer—it acts on all the organs and functions and builds up the whole system.

Do You Know-

That the Only Begotten keeps the begotten?

That the sun never wearies in shin ing, nor the fountain of flowing?

That in Christ Jesus alone is a hope that never disappoints and never fails?

That the only legacy which our first parents handed down to us, and which we all possess, without distinction, is sin?

That when we neglect God's word and God's worship it always results in decay and failure and sorrow for individuals as well as for nations?

FIELD REPORTS

Normangee, Texas, July 16.—I closed my meeting at Macey on Thursday at the water, with thirty-five additions to the congregation. Twenty-five were baptized, six were restored, and four who had been members elsewhere identified themselves with the Macey church. I began a meeting near Iola, Texas, last night, with a very good crowd, and we are hoping for a good meeting. This is the only congregation in Grimes County.—C. W. Ing.

Nashville, Tenn., July 21.—On the second Sunday in this month preached at Lynnville, Tenn. That congregation seems to be earnestly engaged in the work of the Lord. They have well-attended Bible classes. congregation assembled for worship was large, almost filling the house. They gave me good attention, and I hope to have impressed a good gospel lesson of love with a pure heart upon them, that may result in their growing strong in the Lord and the power of his might. In the years of 1890 and 1891 I preached many times for this congregation, which met them at old Lynnville, now called "Waco," Very few who heard me preach then this congregation, which met them at Lynnville these latter years. Nearly all have passed over the river. They rest from their labors, and their works follow them. During my stay in Lynnville I was most hospitably entertained by Brother R. L. Wagstaff and family. This is not the first time I have been entertained by them, and I wish it may not be the last time I may be permitted to sleep under their roof. One of my Murfreesboro pupils, who was Miss Ida Wagstaff, is a mem-ber of the family. The third Sunday was my day to preach at home-Lawrence Avenue; but I gave way to Brother C. M. Gleaves, who preached a very good sermon at 11 A.M. At the close of his sermon his only brother came forward, and, as soon as arrangements could be made, he baptized him, after which the Supper was attended to, and the congregation was dismissed. I preached at night .-James E. Scobey.

The Let-Alone Theory.

BY J. G. MALPHURS.

James E. Chessor's exposition of Gamaliel's "let-alone" theory in the Gospel Advocate of June 23 is timely and to the point. It should be read and re-read by the many good people who believe that the day of controversy is over, that debates are an injury. Brother F. W. Smith also had a splendid article about honorable controversy in the Advocate. We often meet with a brother these days who has complaint against a certain religious journal because of too much argument. It is well for us to note a few points on religious discussion,

- 1. Christ debated with the Jews, (John 8.) Not only did he argue with them, but he spoke in plain terms, at one time telling them that they were of their "father the devil."
- 2. Stephen not only debated with the Jews, but he accused them of being "stiff-necked and uncircumcised in heart and ears." This seems to be rather strong language, yet the church thrived well under it. If some "pussy-footed" brethren had been there, their sense of ethics would have been shocked.
- Jude strictly charged Christians to "contend earnestly for the faith which was once for all delivered unto the saints."
- 4. Christianity shines better when its truths reflect against error. Where would Protestantism be to-day had Luther been "tender-footed?" Is it not a fact, brethren, that the church thrived better when sectism had to meet in honorable discussion such men as Campbell, Franklin, Lipscomb, Harding, and others?
- 5. Occasionally we hear some complaining that there is too much disputing in the Advocate. That occasionally some brother does not use the best of words we do not deny, but that there has been too much honoratle controversy we dispute. Thirtyfive years ago the "digressives" thought that the Advocate was disputing too much about the organ in the worship, yet we who have remained scriptural in our worship must thank the Advocate for its stand. Where would we be to-day, brethren, had not the Advocate contended "earnestly for the faith?" Nashville and Tennessee in general would doubtless be far overwhelmed with innovations and doctrines of men, as the churches in Ohio and Cincinnati.

6. In conclusion, let me say that the church of Christ has no worldly attractions to draw the people, as the sects have; but we do have the gospel, which is God's power, and we must teach it, live it, and defend it (Jude 3), or we shall be swallowed up in sectarianism. When honorable controversy loses favor with the church, the devil is pulling his longest and best string.

THE TONGUE TO BE BRIDLED

THE WISDOM THAT IS FROM ABOVE

(James.)

For in many things we all stumble. If any stumbleth not in word, the same is a perfect man, able to bridle the whole body also. Now if we put the horses' bridles into their mouths that they may obey us, we turn about their whole body also. Behold, the ships also, though they are so great and are driven by rough winds, are yet turned about by a very small rudder, whither the impulse of the steersman willeth. So the tongue also is a little member, and boasteth great things. Behold, how much wood is kindled by how small a fire! And the tongue is a fire: the world of iniquity among our members is the tongue, which defileth the whole body, and setteth on fire the wheel of nature, and is set on fire of hell. For every kind of beasts and birds, of creeping things and things in the sea, is tamed, and hath been tamed by mankind: but the tongue can no man tame; it is a restless evil, it is full of deadly poison. Therewith bless we the Lord and Father; and therewith curse we men, who are made after the likeness of God: out of the same mouth cometh forth blessing and cursing. My brethren, these things ought not so to be. Doth the fountain send forth from the same opening sweet water and bitter? can a fig tree, my brethren, yield olives, or a vine figs? neither can salt water yield sweet.

Who is wise and understanding among you? let him show by his good life his works in meekness of wisdom. But if ye have bitter jealousy and faction in your heart, glory not and lie not against the truth. This wisdom is not a wisdom that cometh down from above, but is earthly, sensual, devilish. For where jealousy and faction are, there is confusion and every vile deed. But the wisdom that is from above is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without variance, without hypocrisy. And the fruit of righteousness is sown in peace for them that make peace.

CURRENT THOUGHT

The Preacher and His Announcements.

If you make your announcements in a low tone, it is tancalizing to the natural curiosity of people. If you are going to make announcements, speak so that you may be heard Use as loud a tone as you do in preaching. Some of my former parishioners are smiling at this, but I will say why. The preacher ought not to be required to announce. bulletin board or bulletin or secure an announcer with the voice of an auctioneer and good terminal facilities.

Some preachers and laymen evidently believe in eternity, for they take forever in making an announcement. They must announce about a number of things that do not need to be announced about. They must comment on the announcements. They are persuaded by officials of various organizations to give special emphasis to their important meetings. From the effort to emphasize everything, nothing is emphasized. The mere announcement of an affair should be emphasis enough; for if a matter is not important, it should not be announced at all. The worst feature of all is the frame of mind of your hearers when you do at last begin preaching. They have inwardly gnashed their mental teeth until they had rather devour you than the sermon.-Wesleyan Christian Advocate.

If all modern churches were enjoying the simple New Testament plan of worship with its freedom from cant and ceremony, the matter of making announcements would be a comparatively simple task. It would be only necessary to call attention to the work of the church itself, and proper omphasis could be made without being tedious. But there are now so many subsidiary and kindred organizations attached to the modern church that, to do them all justice, the real good of the church is often sacrificed. What, with "Ladies' Aids" and Christian Endeavor Societies and this and that and the other program to be featured, is left for the church to announce? Instead of the "tall wagging the dog," we should get back to the New Testament ideal, feature the 'pillar and ground of the truth," place its interests above all others. Then we may discover how easily announcements can be made decently and in order.

Psycho-Analysis and Hell-Fire Preaching.

Psycho-analysis is the latest fad among the sciences. Without discussing here its merits or its demerits, it is inceresting to consider one particular in which the psychoanalyst and the old-fashioned evangelical preacher agree, It pays to give attention to one's sins. The psycho-analyst says that so long as perverted desires are concealed in the bottom of our minds and half forgotten, they constitute a continual moral menace to us. If they are brought out into the light of day and given their just sentence, they will soon be robbed of their power. The old-fashioned preacher thought that it was worth while to preach against sin. Sinners in the past were made to tremble in the presence of an Too many modern preachers have thought that a true and adequate psychology of virtue lay in directing the thoughts toward the beautiful. Without knowing it, Without knowing It, many of these modernists have practiced Christian Science on sin, if not by denying its existence, then by completely ignoring it as a factor in indivdual and social life. It is forever true that the approach to the soul's deepest problems is only along the pathway of an honest facing of the sinfulness of the perverted instincts and desires. -Christian Century.

The fondness which some people have for high-sounding phraseology is remarkable. It seems that the only way in which you can get them interested in the great soul-saving truths of the Bible is to depart from the simple language used by Jesus and his apostles and to clothe those truths in a dress that smacks of worldly wisdom. Instead of lugging out some such confusing term as "psycho-analysis," David implores God to free him from secret sins. Even a child can catch his meaning. Long before the term "Chrislian Science" was ever heard of, Paul gave us a splendid rule of thinking in these words: "Finally, brethren, whatseever things are true, whatsoever things are honorable, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of goodreport; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things," (Phil 4: 8.) When Jesus would teach about sin, he called it "sin" When he would warn against hell, he called it "hell." All the psycho-analysis in the world can never take away from the solemn meaning of his words. His apostles wrote and spoke in plain language and steered clear of "great swelling words." Why can't we use common sense and do likewise? Not fads, but solid food for perishing souls is what the world needs.

Sergeant York Decides.

Not so many months ago we heard a great deal of Sergi. We have not heard so much of him of late. Alvin York. One reason is that the Sergeant is on a Tennessee farm, and there is also on the farm a good-sized mortgage. Sergeant is going after that mortgage with the same earnestness and the same faith in Almighty God that he took with him when he went against the German trenches and machine-gun nests. This is the way the Detroit Times puts the problem which presented itself to Sergeant York:

- "If you were living on one of the finest farms in Tennes-
- "If you had a wife and three-months'-old baby dependent upon you;
- "If you faced losing your farm through foreclosure of a twelve-thousand-dollar mortgage;
 - "And-
 - "You were the greatest hero of the world war:
 - "And-
- "You could make possibly enough to pay off the mortgage merely by showing yourself in public-"Would you?"

But if the matter troubles the Sergeant, he shows it no more than he showed fear where death was on every hand "I would rather lose my farm," declares the mountaineer here of Tennessee, "and go back to work upon it as a common day laborer than to commercialize the fame which was only incidental to an act of Providence." And so he is doggedly tolling from sunup to sundown in the face of an inhospitable crop prospect and a hungry mortgage. contracts and vaudeville offers are as unwelcome to the Sergeant as they were the day he stepped off the boat a hero for all time.

The Sergeant believes that the Lord that preserved him in battle can help him in time of financial stress, or make his spirit content with the lack of that material assistance from on high. Calm in that belief, he faces life as he faced death-unafraid, unflinching, and unspoiled,-Dalias News.

A good brother, who lives at Dallas, Texas, sent the above clipping to the editor of the Gospel Advocate with this observation: "The greatest hero to-day, I think, is the man who can turn down an opportunity to make a million dollars for the sake of a principle." Certainly Sergeant York deserves much credit for not commercializing his fame, His refusal to do so stamps him as a man far above the ordinary. But I dare say that the general public is misled in proclaiming York as the greatest hero-that is, if we are to see the matter as God sees it. There were hundreds of boys who refused to take up arms because they could not go contrary to the teachings of the meek and lowly Nazarene. They were not slackers, for they did what they could do conscientiously, performing the most menial tasks with uniform obedience and cheerfulness. But despite his humility and his cheerfulness, the sure-enough conscientious objector was misunderstood and in many instances he was mistreated. "When he was reviled, he reviled not again." He bore all of the reproach and calumny calmly and without malice for Jesus' sake. He chose to share ill-treatment with the people of God for a season rather than stifle his conscience, and esteemed the reproach of Christ greater riches than the huzzas of the populace. Perhaps, after all has been said and God's inventory is taken, we will find our greatest hero, like Joseph of old, languishing in jail, forgetten of man, but precious in the sight of the Lord.

"The Kingdom in Matthew."

BY E. M. BORDEN.

The above is the subtitle of article No. 6 under the heading, "The Kingdom of God." These articles are appearing in a paper published in Louisville, Ky. The first article under this subhead has been replied to in a former article. The writer had only gotten to the sixteenth chapter of Matthew. The reader will remember that the author of these articles is trying to prove that at the second coming of Christ the kingdom of Dan 2: 44 will be set up; that Christ will reign on this earth as David of old; and that the promises to Abraham with reference to the land of Canaan will be fulfilled. We believe that the kingdom of Dan. 2: 44 has been set up; that the promises to Abraham with reference to the land of Canaan have already been fulfilled; and that Christ is reigning now and will continue his reign until Christ comes again, at which time he will deliver the kingdom to God.

In the sixteenth chapter of Matthew we find Peter's confession and Jesus' promise to build his church; but I will not take time to discuss that. The writer of the abovementioned series of articles seems to think that he has proof in the statement: "And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven." This expression evidently refers to the "heavenly kingdom" mentioned in 2 Tim, 4: 18 and also the "everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ" (2 Pet. 1: 11). This passage cannot possibly refer to a reign of Christ over literal Israel, as this brother will say when he gets to that point in his articles. There is no mention of literal Israel in the whole connection. Only faithful Christians will be permitted to enter. If any of the Israelites enter, they will enter as Christians and not as Israelites.

Yes, when Christ comes again, he will come in glory; but what for? "For the Son of man shall come in the glory of the Father with his angels; and then shall he reward every man according to his works." Then, at his coming he will reward every man according to his works. This can refer to nothing but the second coming of Christ; but where is the proof in it to show that Christ will set up his kingdom at this time? There is none. But he will reward the righteous and punish the wicked when he comes. The righteous will enter "heaven," "the heavenly kingdom," "the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savier Jesus Christ." But this will be in eternity. It will be our everlasting home. It will be in the new heaven and new earth. There is no space for a reign of Christ on earth after the next resurrection, for Paul tells us that the end of time will come then.

His reference to the nobleman that went into a far country to receive a kingdom and to return does not help him any. It does not prove that the kingdom will be set up at the second coming of Christ. He correctly says: "The nobleman is Christ; the far country is heaven." He also says: "Having received the kingdom, returned." This is evidence on his part that Christ will have the kingdom when he comes. When did he receive it? It was when he went into a far country. When did he go into a far country? Was it not when he ascended in the clouds of heaven before the day of Pentecost? No one can deny that. Then he received the kingdom after he ascended. That forever destroys the theory that he must come to earth to have the kingdom. In punishing and rewarding, he will be exercising kingly authority. He will have that authority when he comes. In Dan. 7: 13, 14 we find that when the Son of man came to the Ancient of days he received dominion, glory, and a kingdom. We believe, like the Bible says, that Christ Is the nobleman; that he went to heaven before the day of Pentecost to receive a kingdom; and that he will return at the end of time to reward the righteous and punish those who would not allow Jesus to rule over them. So his return will not be to receive a kingdom or to establish a kingdom, but to finish his reign and turn the kingdom over to the Father.

In referring to Zeeh. 9: 9, 10, this brother admits the fulfillment of the prophecy In verse 9, but says that verse 10 "yet awaits fulfillment." "I will cut off the chariot from Ephraim, and the horse from Jerusalem, and the battle bow shall be cut off; and he shall speak peace unto the heathen; and his dominion shall be from sea even to sea, and from the river even to the ends of the earth." There is nothing in this to show that the kingdom of Christ will be set up when he comes again. "And he shall speak peace unto the heathen." When is that to be? Is it yet to be furfilled? He received dominion when he went into a far coun try. He has that dominion now. It is from sea to sea. None will be exempt from judgment at the last day. Before I leave this I want to call attention to John's account of this event. "Fear not, daughter of Sion: behold, thy king cometh, sitting on an ass's colt. These things understood not his disciples at the first: but when Jesus was glorified, then remembered they that these things were written of him, and that they had done these things unto him." What was there in the glorification of Jesus that brought this truth to their minds? Remember that he received dominion, glory, and a kingdom when he ascended to heaven. We are reminded again that he went to a far country to receive a kingdom and to return.

A wonder of wonders, if I should thus express it, the brother introduces Dan. 12: 1, 2. I cannot see what it has to do with the setting up of a kingdom of Christ at his second coming. He admits it is a judgment scene. That is true. Some will be raised to everlasting life and some to shame and everlasting contempt. Not one word about the founding of a kingdom. This is eternity, "Everlasting life" on one side and "shame and everlasting contempt" on the other side. There is a clear-cut separation. There will be no increase in the number of righteous in eternity and no diminishing of the number of the wicked in eternity. Then, how can the "little stone" of Daniel, that was to grow to become a great mountain and fill the whole earth, begin to be fulfilled at this time? How can the kingdom "break in pieces all these kingdoms," when nothing but eternity will exist? But in connection with this be refers to the twenty-fifth chapter of Matthew and says: "In the judgment scene in Matt. 25, the Son of man, returned in glory, is seen seated upon the throne of his glory, calling the nations of the earth to account on the basis of their treatment of his brethren, and rendering sentence and decision as to who should inherit his kingdom and who be cast out into everlasting punishment." I have no fault to find with the above statement. It is in my favor. The kingdom here has reference to the "heavenly kingdom." When he comes, he will reward the righteous and punish the wicked. This reward and punishment will be in eternity. It will be in the new heaven and new earth,

He next calls attention to the passion and resurrection. He thinks he can see proof of his position there, but I fall to see it. It is true that in mentioning the Lord's Supper, Jesus said: "I will not drink henceforth of this fruit of the vine, until that day when I drink it new with you in my Father's kingdom." This passage is no help to his position. We know that this ordinance was to be kept in memory of Christ. Where? In the kingdom, How long? Entil Christ comes. Paul says: "For as often as ye eat this bread and drink this cup, ye do show the Lord's death till he come." Then it is only to be observed until he comes again. It is not to be observed after he comes. Then this promise must be fulfilled before his second coming, and it is to be done in the kingdom. Then the kingdom is set up now. There is no way to get away from this argument. Will this brother say that we will observe the death of Christ in the new heaven and new earth after Christ comes again? I hardly think so.

As Matthew nears the close of his account of Jesus, he gives Jesus' farewell statement to his apostles just before the cloud received him out of their sight. "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth." The apostles were commanded to go into all the world and preach the gospel. They were not to go, however, until they had received power from on high. He took his seat at the right hand of the Father and began his reign on the day of Pentecost. His dominion was from sea to sea. It is not a kingdom of force. All can enter the kingdom. People enter it by obedience. It was very small at first. Daniel calls it a "little stone" that was to become a great mountain, or government, and fill the whole earth. Jesus spoke of it as a mustard seed when planted, but it grew to be a large plant so that the birds could lodge in the branches. All Christians are in the kingdom of Christ now. We have been delivered from the power of darkness" and have been translated "into the kingdom of his dear Son." (Col. 1: 13.) The Bible order of events is this: The first resurrection (Christ and the saints), the setting up of the kingdom, his reign until he has put all enemies under his feet, the second coming of Christ, the general resurrection, the judgment, then end of time, the delivering of the kingdom to God, then efernity. Do not forget that Paul tells us that time will end when Christ comes again. "Then cometh the end." At the very time that this brother claims the kingdom of Christ will be set up, Paul tells us that Christ will deliver up the kingdom to God. Where is there space for a reign of Christ after his second advent?

What Shall We Do About It?

BY JOHN T. HINDS.

In a recent issue of the Gospel Advocate Brother F. W. Smith has a splendid article on "Personal Responsibility," in which he quotes these words from the Christian Standard: "In the average working church, so-called, we know that less than fifty per cent of the enrolled membership is really active. We know, also, that not more than forty per cent would be enlisted actively in the average evangelistic meeting. We know, further, that not more than twenty-five per cent would continue to have any special interest after the meeting closes."

To this statement, which is probably near enough correct in the matter of percentages, we can add, I think, that not more than forty per cent of the converts will prove to be of any account as additions to the church. It is easy enough to see our failures and losses and to compute approximately the amount of our loss, but how to prevent or stop that loss is another matter entirely. Hence, I ask, what shall we do about it? That something should be done is evident. No business or institution can have such losses and be much of a success. When we add to this great loss the consequent loss of converts because of this nonworking membership, the matter is really appalling, and certainly demands some prompt and effective reform measures.

Probably the main thing in preventing such disastrous results is to save the saved; in other words, to keep and make efficient workers out of those who come into the church. As a rule, we can only keep them safely if they become workers. Personal work—bearing our own burdens—is the only road to genuine success. Any member of the church that neglects or refuses to work will be a failure and needs only a favorable opportunity for an excuse to suit the church. When we can plainly see that the success of the church and the personal salvation of its members depend upon their being workers, why is the matter so generally neglected? Would any great business keep from forty to sixty per cent of nonworking employees on its pay roll and say nothing? To do so would be to invite failure, Religious organizations are about the only kind that try to carry such burdens. There can hardly be anything the church needs as badly as an efficient working membership.

A pressing need cannot be met by just talking about it. Something has to be done. It will not meet the demands to build more and better schools, raise more money, or educate more and better preachers. All these things are good and desirable and will help, but the quickest way to get them is to have a working membership. The need for better preaching is not one-half as great as the need for better practicing; the demand for better qualifications is not half as pressing as the demand for a better use of what we have:

Regular attendance at all the meetings of the church, and especially the Lord's Supper, is imperative. This matter needs to be stressed much oftener than is usual and with much more force. Every one should be made to feel, if possible, that to miss this service is a distinct loss both to himself and the church, and little short of an insult to our Lord.

The helping to bear the financial burdens is important, but a less factor in the problem than personal attendance and personal service. If personal service is rendered, financial work will usually be done.

To my mind, the biggest factor in the problem is the matter of getting members to take part in the public services of the church. If this is done, the other things will usually follow. But how can the membership be developed into workers if a preacher and the elders do all the teaching, praying, and other work in the assembly? Is there much chance or inducement for a young man to become a preacher when he is never given anything to do in the public services in the home congregation? Why should the elders always preside at the Lord's table, the deacons always pass the emblems, or some preacher always do all the talking?

Can this be a zood way to make workers out of members, or make preachers out of available material? Why nor have different ones to read the Scripture lesson each Lord's day, and different ones to pass the emblems? Why not change them until in a short while every young man especially would have done some of this work? Why not teach every man in the congregation to wait upon the table? And last, but not least, why not, a part of the time at least, substitute for the regular eleven-o'clock sermon a service in which there would be from two to four brief speeches from different members on a chapter or lesson previously selected? If a preacher is present, he might be one of the speakers instead of the speaker. It is my honest opinion that if this were done half or more of the time, it would develop twice as much working talent and soon increase the number of preachers. I believe it will do more to make active workers in the congregation than any other one thing we can do.

Another great advantage I see in this is that such a plan would release the preacher for a lot of missionary work that the congregation can and should do, and which will not be done if the preacher's entire time is given to preaching to the congregation. I hope to see congregations give this plan a thorough test. I am sure it will make more workers in the church. More workers means more success and more saved. What we need is not some one to entertain us on Lord's day, but a chance to work and grow. What will we do about it? The elders can make it go it they try.

I look upon the Bible as a ringing challenge to creative living.—John M. Powis Smith.

"We Will Not Be Passing This Way Again."

To-day is ours with its precious hours, To-morrow we may not see; So let us live that our lives may give Incentive to all that's good. Let us live to better our fellow men; We will not be passing this way again.

A kindly word from a heart deep stirred With pity impelled by love May strength impart, till a fainting heart Shall rally to win at last. Let to-day be given to kindness, then; We will not be passing this way again.

A dreary road and a heavy load Our neighbor's lot may be; 'Tis ours to share a brother's care, Fulfilling the law of Christ, Let the deeds of to-day be helpful, then; We will not be passing this way again.

To-day is done with the setting sun, But charity faileth not; The flowers we lay on a brother's way, Will live in eternity. Let to-day be given to kindness, then; We will not be passing this way again.

Brother Sewell's Exegesis.

BY T. O. MARTIN.

In the Gospel Advocate of July 14 was published an article from the pen of Brother C. W. Sewell, giving an exegesis of 1 Cor. 3: 9-15.

The "foundation" is "Jesus Christ." This is the statement of the inspired apostle. So there can be no room for doubt at this point. The material built upon this foundation, some of which will abide "the fire" and some of which will be burned, come to naught, he believes to be persons, not the good deeds of the builder, not the true and the false teaching of the teacher or builder. This I sincerely believe to be true. The fire that tries the builder's work is, according to Brother Sewell's explanation, the fire of temptation, trial, persecution. This I most sincerely believe. The builder's reward when his work abides the fire test is the joy that comes to the heart of the faithful preacher, builder, when he beholds the faithfulness and usefulness of those whom he has built upon the one foundation. This is in perfect harmony with the language of the aged apostle: "Greater joy have I none than this, to hear of my children walking in the truth." (3 John 4.) The builder's loss when his work is burned is the loss of the joy mentioned above. All this I believe, and to all this I say "Amen."

Some one may say: "What, then, is left for you to criticize?" I answer, nothing. Brother Sewell may say: "Why, then, did you write, Martin?" Well, my good brother, I desire to point out to you how dangerously near you came to answering the question which you said you could not answer.

The last sentence in Brother Sewell's article is this: "This states plainly that the one who builds will be saved; but if you ask what 'yet so as by fire' means, I frankly tell you I do not know."

In the Holy Scriptures there are many statements that are absolute in form, but conditional in sense. (See I Sam, 23; 11, 12; 1 Cor. 1; 8; Ezek, 32; 13, 14.) The statements in this latter passage, absolute in form, "shall surely live" and "shall surely die," are seen in the light of the context to be conditional in sense. "But he himself shall be saved "is absolute in form; but when we take the expression, "yet so as through fire," in the light of the context, conditionality is brought into view.

Be it remembered that the builder himself is also material. He was builded upon that foundation by some, and he is to be tried by the same fire of temptation and persecution that tries the material which he builds upon the foundation. He will not be lost because little or much of the material which he has built upon the foundation is destroyed, but, if he abides the fire test, he may weep over the unfaithfulness of those whom he has induced to obey the gospel; yet, abiding the test, he comes out of the fire pure gold, and is finally gathered into the Master's great treasure house.

Who Are Sectarians?

BY J. B. BRADLEY.

In the Gospel Advocate of June 23, page 604, I have an article headed, "Paul's Attitude Toward the Sects." In this I head a short article with the question with which I closed the other article: "Who are Sectarians?" Allow me, please, to quote from "Queries Answered," by Lipscomb and Sewell, pages 591, 592:

"Brother Lipscomb: Is it right or wrong to ask a sectarian to get up and read a chapter in the Bible where they take a part with us in the Sunday school, and should they offer prayer after reading?"

I would say it is wrong to encourage sectarianism in any way, if we can tell which are sectarians; but my observation is it takes a sectarian to ferret out a sectarian, just as "it takes a rogue to catch a rogue." Unfortunately, all the sectarians are not in sectarian churches; and I hope some in sectarian churches are not sectarians. Things get badly mixed in this world. Sometimes people who wish to obey God are born and raised in sectarian influences. A man who loves party more than he loves God is a sectarian. A man who divides the church of God for a theory or teaching not required by God is a sectarian. A person who pushes an idea or practice not required by God, to the disturbance of the peace of the church, or that exaits a human opinion or practice to an equality with the commands of God, is a sectarian and a heretic.

There are some in nonsectarian churches who are sectarians, who violate the laws of God in order to oppose sectarians. They are sectarians in their opposition to sectarians. There are some in sectarian churches who will obey God and follow him in spite of the sectarianism of the churches in which they find themselves. As examples, there are persons in the Baptist, Methodist, and Presbyterian churches who were baptized to obey God rather than to please the sects. In this they rise above the sectarian spirit, despite the parties in which they find themselves. They ought to get out of the sectarian churches, but they see so much sectarianism in the nonsectarian churches that they think they are all allike.

Peter and John. Paul and Barnabas, all met with the sectarian Jews at their times and places of worship and participated with them, that they might find an opportunity to speak a word for the truth. I do not think it hurts any man, sectarian or sinner, to read the Bible anywhere or at any time. I do not think it hurts any one to hear the Bible read by sectarian or sinner at any time or place. The great end is to be true and faithful to the truth and at the same time kind and sympathetic with those in error. The nearer we can do these two things, the more like Jesus we will be, and the more sinners and sectarians we will save.

At another time I will, I think, make another quotation from the pen of our lamented brother and senior editor of the Gospel Advocate upon "communing with the sects." Now, then, if I meet with, pray with, and preach with denominational churches, but always and at all times preach the truth, am I not in company with good men—Peter, John, Paul, Barnabas, and that faithful, tried, and godly man, David Lipscomb?

In a sad hour I have seen, through the window, mounted on a rail back of my house, one of those curious-eyed little sparrows; and it was a better preacher to me than I am to you. It was winter, and there was not guaranteed to It one day's food, nor any protection, from any source in this world. It was wholly dependent upon its God. And yet it sang—sang for its own hearing, and sang for my rebuke, saying to me: "Are you not much more than I? And God thinks of me, and takes care of me." How much there is in the voice of nature, if we only knew how to interpret it!—If W Beecher.

Religious Cranks, Dupes, and Popes. By H. W. JONES.

A scribe in "the Herald of Light," official organ of the Pentecost Bands, writes a good article on "Sabbath breaking," excepting that he refers to "the Sabbath" (seventh day) and our "Sunday" as the same day of the week, when he ought to know that the old Jewish Sabbath, or seventh day, is our Saturday, and that our Sunday is "the first day of the week," the day "Christ rose from the dead" and the day "when the disciples came together to break bread" and to "continue steadfastly in the apostles' teaching and tellowship" and "in the prayers." (Read Matt. 28; Acts 2: 42; Acts 20: 7; I Cor. 11: 17-34; I6: 1, 2.)

How silly and cranky for "the Herald of Light" fraternity, "Pentecost Bands," to claim Holy Spirit baptism to-day like the apostles received on Pentecost day! Why do I say this? Because "they [apostles] began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance" (Acts 2: 4): but these modern "Pentecost Bands," claiming Holy Spirit baptism, can scarcely speak their mother tongue well, let alone "speak with other tongues" they never learned, as did the apostles. (See Acts 2.) Hence, these so-called "Pentecost Bands" are "cranky," deluded, deceived, and "not wise," to say the least of it. Remember this: Inspiration, "tongues," signs, and wonders followed Holy Spirit baptism; and no one, let alone "bands," can deliver these goods to-day, as each has served its divine purpose and been "done away,"

For a cranky religious cult, Christian Science twaddle, by Mrs. Eddy, is about the limit. She and her deluded followers say: "Matter is unreal, mortal error." According to that, God ereated "error" and things "unreal" when he made the body of Adam and all other material matter of the universe. Now, isn't it wonderful "science," to say nothing of its being "Christian," to deny the Bible thus? But "every word written by Mrs. Eddy was inspired and divinely authorized," quoth one of her adherents. So, with them, Mrs. Eddy's twaddle in her writings comes before Christ's holy teaching in the Bible. And to read in the Christian Science Sentinel a lot of "testimonies" by those who claim that they have been "healed" of influenza, headache, bowel troubles, hay fever, catarrh, boils, rheumatism, sprains, bruises, etc., by reading Mrs. Eddy's book, "Science and Health, with Key to the Scriptures," is enough to make men sigh and angels weep. Anyway, we know all such is "unreal, mortal error."

An article in "Our Sunday Visitor," a Catholic paper, tells "Why Catholics Call Mary the Mother of God;" and II is plain in said article that they "call Mary the mother of God" because "the Catholic Church boldly proclaims it" and because "Catholics frankly honor Mary as the mother of God," etc., and not because the Scriptures so teach. Yes, that is their authority for calling "Mary the mother of God"-because "the Catholic Church boldly proclaims it." Wonderful authority, indeed! What is "the Catholic Church," anyway, but a lot of frail, uninspired human beings? So their authority for this emanates from the Roman Catholic hierarchy instead of from the Bible, "But to believe Christ is truly God necessarily involves the acknowledgment of Mary as the mother of God," quoth said article. Now, let us see about that. (1) Christ is truly God," Catholics say. (2) "Jehovah, he is God; there is none else besides him." "There is no God but one." "There is one God, the Father, of whom are all things, and we unto him; and one Lord, Jesus Christ, through whom are all things, and we through him." "There is one God, one mediator also between God and men, himself man, Christ Jesus." So says the Bible. (3) Therefore, Catholics either deny these plain Scripture quotations, or else they say there is no God but Christ. Let them take either horn of the dilemma, and one of the two conclusions above is inevitable. There is no escape for them so long as they hold the . theory that "Mary is the mother of God." Who said, "Christ, who is God, freely chose Mary for his mother?" The Bible does not, but the Catholic Church does; so there it is in a nutshell—the Catholic Church before the Bible!

The same paper says: "Modern times have brought about a happy change. Hostility to the church has become more and more confined to the studios of ultra-Protestant professors, the pen has taken the place of the sword, and the attacks on Cathelicism-though bitter and inspired by the same old hatred, the same old prejudices-are neither pure nor in their effects much more than a dog's bark at the moon." Yes, "the pen has taken the place of the sword" with Catholics themselves, since they long since learned that their bitter persecutions from bygone edicts, infamous inquisitions, etc., reacted against them and promoted the growth of Protestants. And our "attacks on Catholicism" may not " effect much more than a dog's bark at the moon," but it sure does "make 'em howl" a lot to have no more "effect" than that. Anyway, the truth of God as revealed in the holy Scriptures will stand against them in the judgment, if they do not repent of their departures from the truth and come to "the simplicity and the purity that is toward Christ."

The place or state of the dead which Catholies call "purgatory," or "place of cleansing," is proved (?) by "logical conclusion" instead of by plain statements of holy writ. But that is good authority with Catholies, if only "the holy Catholic Church" teaches it. Let the pope teach it, and millions of dupes receive it. "It is a dogma of faith expressly defined by Benedict XII.," says a wild scribe in the same paper concerning a certain Catholic theory. Yes, there it is—the authority for much that Catholics teach and practice is from dogmas, edicts, etc., of "Lord God the Pope," instead of from our Lord Jesus Christ, Better "call no man your father on the earth; for one is your Father, even he who is in heaven. Neither be ye called masters; for one is your Master, even the Christ." (Matt. 23: 9, 10.)

"The Bible was not intended to be the textbook of the Christian religion," says "Our Sunday Visitor" in another place. No, for the Catholic Church "was intended" (by Catholics) "to be the standard work or infallible textbook of the Christian religion," and the Bible subsidiary to it, as a mere football to play with at will. Yes, they even claim to be "the divinely protected interpreter of the Bible," and that "without the backing of the Catholic Church the Bible would have no authority at all." Arrogant. audacity-" presumptuous sins "-does not begin to describe such absurd, haughty claims. For frail, fallible, uninspired human beings to claim that the Bible is subject to the teaching of the church, instead of the church subject to the teaching of the Bible, is about the limit, and looks very much like "the man of sin" Paul describes in 2 Thess. 2: 3-12. Turn and read it carefully, keeping in mind the arrogant, miraculous claims of the Roman Catholic hierarchy. They care not if the inspired apostle Paul does say: "Every scripture inspired of God is also profitable for teaching, for reproof, for correction, for instruction which is in righteousness; that the man of God may be complete. furnished completely unto every good work." (2 Tim. 3.) That does not sound like the Bible needs a "divinely protected interpreter," but shows that the Bible is our only infallible guide or standard in all religious doctrine and practice. The Bible itself is more easily understood than a human "interpreter" in the form of the apostate church. "They way of holiness," in the Bible, is plain; for "the wayfaring men, yea fools, shall not err therein." (Isa. 35: 8.)

True, "the Christian religion was widely established" and "thousands converted to Christ before the Bible existed as a whole," and "the apostles and their immediate successors never saw what we now call the New Testament;" nevertheless, the apostles and prophets preached the very gospel by inspiration of the Holy Spirit that we new have recorded in the New Testament Scriptures by the selfsame Spirit. And if "the printing press was not in vented then," yet they had the gospel imprinted on their minds and hearts and their memories refreshed by inspiration from on high, and thus they delivered it to the world just as we now have it recorded in the New Testament Scriptures. No one is inspired to-day; it is not needed. Paul said: "Whether there be prophecies; they shall be done away; whether there be tongues, they shall cease; whether there be knowledge [supernatural], it shall be done away. For we know in part, and we prophesy in part; but when that which is perfect is come, that which is in part shall be done away," etc. So the "perfect," complete will of God has come in the New Testament; hence, these miracles, signs, tongues, supernatural knowledge, prophecies, etc., which were necessary in the infant or "child" age of the church, have all been "done away." "But now abideth faith, hope, love, these three; and the greatest of these is love." Read 1 Cor. 13 carefully.

More About North Carolina.

BY J. D. TANT.

My last letter left me at Warner's Chapel, N. C.

I went from there to Boyer, a congregation forty years old. There I preached eight days, with no visible results.

From there I went to Corinth, held a week's meeting, haptized five, aroused the whole community to work, and started four classes to meet each Lord's day to study the Bible, using the best of human helps they can get to aid them in learning the Bible. I predict much good for this congregation.

From Corinth I was called back to Statesville, where I held my first meeting, preached one night, and baptized three more. I found the church greatly revived by my meeting there. They had started four Bible classes, using the Tant and McQuiddy literature, both being scriptural. They told me they were having the greatest interest and attendance at their Lord's-day meetings that they have had for the past eight years.

From Statesville I was called back sixty miles to Warner's Chapel to meet in debate Brother Campbell, who had argued with them after I left that it was unscriptural to ask Bible questions on Sunday, provided these questions had been printed or written, as they then became literature and abolished the Bible. In this debate I showed them that literature is only human helps to enable the uninformed to better teach the Bible; that our translations. chapters and verses, song books, and preaching are all literature or human helps, and that human helps can be either spoken or written, and in either case they are not substituting the Bible, but only carrying out the divine cammission to teach all nations. In this debate Brother W. L. Reeves did much good, helping to combat the position of Brother Campbell and others in opposing all lesson helps. Brother Reeves is a fine man and an able gospel preacher, but had made some enemies by teaching the Bible along the line of gospel support. He had taken the position that a preacher has good sense and knows better than anybody else how much it requires to support his family, and that the church should pay a preacher enough to support his family

The four congregations I held meetings for, I did my best to teach them their duty along the lines of Bible giving. Bible teaching, and Bible living, and I hope they will be better prepared to support the next meeting they have.

Brother Miles Foster, who worked up these meetings for me, is a grand, gospel preacher. He worked with me in all the meetings, and he and his good wife carried me to ali places and helped me much. While Brother Foster has done much good in preaching the gospel, yet he has been a successful merchant and farmer, and was able to preach the gospel without support from the church, and along the line of scriptural giving he had not instructed the brethren; and many of them are auxious to have Brother Foster hold their meeting, because they say he is a cheap preacher and does not charge, and they can hardly realize that a preacher should be supported in his work.

Our religious opposition in North Carolina is mostly among the Moravians and Lutherans, yet there are thousands of good people there who never heard the gospel nor heard of the church of Christ; and if we could get fifteen or twenty churches to send their preacher to North Carolina for meetings and let Brother Reeves and Bruther Poster, who are already there and know the needs, help them locate places and establish the cause, there is no reason why North Carolina should not soon be filled with Bible congregations.

I found in all my travels only one of our religious papers. The churches there have no idea of the work of the churches of Christ, and know but little of our preachers or what the church is doing west of the mountain. But I hope, trust, and pray that the work will be continued in North Carolina until many thousands of those people will be brought to know the Lord.

Commendatory.

BY T. B. THOMPSON.

I see many things in the Gospel Advocate worthy of commendation from time to time. Just this morning my eye falls on a statement from the pen of Brother A. G. Freed in a recent report of his labors as follows: "But the day of debates is passing. Many of our brethren have learned to please their hearers. They discourse long on the "power of the blood" and "nothing but the blood," but never show the people how to reach the benefits of the blood."

There are many good and able brethren who, with Brother Freed, do not look with favor upon the passing of our strong and formidable ally—public discussion. The Reformation was rocked in the cradle of open discussion; error suffered and truth thrived in those contests. To be sure, there have been debates that should never have been, but that argues nothing against that class of religious discussions which have been conducted in a high-toned. Christian manner. I can easily understand how those who have espoused error can well afford to decry religious investigations, but that is the exact reason why I think those who hold truth cannot afford to do so. Investigation has ever been a friend to truth and a foe to error.

One of the chief reasons, possibly, for the decline of religious debates is that the character of our preaching is such that the devotees of error see no cause of opposing us. As Brother Freed says, there is too much preaching on "the power of the blood" without telling people how to reach the benefits of that blood. No use to describe a cool, refreshing spring of water to a thirsty man without showing him the path that leads to it. No use to describe the beauties and glories of heaven to people without also telling them exactly how to get there.

Brethren, don't forget that we must stick close to the indispensable fundamentals of the church of the living God; then don't be surprised that when you do you will beard the lion in his den. From the failure to contrast the truth and error, I find many people who stand identified with the Restoration movement who, nevertheless, know nothing of the peculiar principles for which it stands. I greatly fear that with the tendency to get away from those religious discussions which have contributed so much to keeping the church of God out of the amalgamation of denominationalism we will soon surrender everything for which the Restoration was launched and which now justifies our existence as a separate religious people. If the church is simply another contribution to sectarianism, then let us go out of business; but if it is the church of Christthe body of Christ-then let us surrender nothing that scripturally contributes to preserving her peculiar standing among religious bodies;

I appreciate this statement from a man of Brother Freed's standing and ability in the church, and am sure it will cause many to stop and think. Brother Freed has held a number of successful debates, and he knows their worth as affording a splendid opportunity for teaching the truth, an opportunity not afforded by any other means. Debates stimulate investigation, a thing for which the church of Christ has always pleaded. Brethren, all this talk of our not longer having need of debates is of the evil one and should be deplored and strongly opposed by every one who wants to see the church of God stand aloof from denominationalism.

BY A LOVER OF THEM.

Everybody has heard about Jonah, but not every one understands the importance of this short narrative in Old Testament history. Jonah's experience with the whale has been made the butt of many a joke, and it is the custom with most of the high-brow professors in theological schools to present it to the class-as a pleasing bit of allegory. But, as a matter of fact, belief in this Bible miracle involves belief in the divinity of Jesus. He who would repudiate Jonah repudiates the Son of God. It was the importance of the book coupled with the controversy that has waged concerning its authenticity that moved the scholarly J. W. McGarvey to write his vigorous defense and publish it in book form. He exposes the cavils of the higher critics in a way that leaves them no ground to stand upon. Those who do not have full confidence in the story of Jonah should not fail to read this able defense of its authenticity. One will see how foolish and irreconcilable with truth is that attitude which claims Jesus as the divine Teacher and yet admits that he may have been mistaken in some of his teachings. This is the shortest of the McGarvey series, but it is by no means the least interesting. The Preface is a gem of its kind. It was written by Prof. William Henry Green, of Princeton University.

A Good Man's Literary Monument.

Time will doubtless reveal the fact that the lamented G. Dallas Smith left his greatest monument in his "Outlines of Bible Study." This helpful textbook is coming more and more into favor with those who love to study the Bible. The author had but one purpose, and that was to write a book that would lead people to systematically study the one Book, and it is gratifying to see how its mission is being accomplished.

"Outlines of Bible Study" is not a commentary in any sense of the word. It contains but few comments. It is not "literature" in the sense in which many object to literature. It does not study the lessons for you, but rather guides you in an intelligent study of the Bible itself. It is just what its name implies—outlines of Bible study. It simply outlines your Bible study, making it possible for you to study it systematically and profitably.

The questions following out each outline direct the student, with but few exceptions, to the Bible itself for his answers. This forces him to "search the Scriptures" diligently to find answers to the questions, and leaves him free to frame his answers in his own language. In the very nature of things, this little book can never take the place of the Bible in class work; for it is absolutely useless and worthless without the Bible, to which it constantly directs the student. You do not study this little book, except to tamiliarize yourself with the plan of study; but you study the Bible itself, this little book serving you only as a guide in your study.

A Book For Saints and Sinners.

Some revival sermons are confined to first principles, like faith and repentance and baptism; some are designed to auvocate and defend denominational tenets; and some are designed to work upon the feelings of the audience, and, therefore, consist largely of records and stories of pathetic conversions, pitiful accidents, and heart-rending deathbed scenes. Such sermons may have their place in the preacher's library and be of service to him in his ministry. but "Soul-Saving Revival Sermons" were designed to occupy a different field and to serve a different purpose. As set forth by the author, John L. Brandt, the purpose is twofold-"to encourage and inspire Christians to engage with all their hearts in the divine mission of soul-saving, and to persuade the unsaved to accept Christ as the Son of God and the Savior of men. With this in view, it aims to deliver the gospel message in tenderness, simplicity, and love, It addresses itself to the head and heart, and to the will and conscience of man."

Proof of the Grandest Proposition.

The modern teacher who has sought a suitable textbook on the evidences of Christianity has discovered how difficult it is to find one suited to his wants. There are none that occupy the whole ground, since most writers have been content to follow out a single line of argument, while the time allotted to this subject in the usual college course is too brief for the reading of several works. Like all other textbooks of the same age, the older books on this subject are unsuited to modern phases of unbelief and methods of investigation. I think, however, that the careful student will find in "The Divine Demonstration," by H. W. Everest, the very book he is looking for.

In this volume it is assumed that if Heaven has announced a proposition which must be believed in order to salvation, and if it has given the proof of this proposition that men may believe it, then it is the part of wisdom to accept the proposition and the proof given. Now, the proposition announced by the Father and the Holy Spirit, which is to be believed and confessed by man, and upon which the church is founded, follows: Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God. The proof of this grand proposition is given, or men could not be held accountable for their unbelief. The proof consists of the testimony of the apostles, the character of Christ and of his religion, and the evidence from prophecy. The providence of God also determined the order in which these arguments should be applied for the demonstration of the proposition. The author aptly uses the term "Divine Demonstration" because the proposition, the proof, and the order of proof are divinely given. He also correctly calls it a "demonstration" because in moral or probable reasoning a proposition may be as certainly established as in mathematics.

God's Will Versus Man's Will.

BY K. C. MOSER,

The choice between God's will and our own is to be continually made. Every mistake, religiously, man has ever made has been the result of substituting his own for God's will. Sorrow, pain, and death are but the choicest fruit plucked from the tree of knowledge of good and evil. The earth itself, "subjected to vanity," "groaneth and travalleth in pain together" (with us), hoping to be "delivered from the bondage of corruption into the liberty of the glory of the children of God." Man's way resulting in "bondage of corruption" and God's way ending in "glorious liberty" constitutes the whole story, briefly, but forcibly, told. The will of man is the stamp of ruin and death; God's will, the surety of success and life.

Christ is the Christian's perfect model. No one has ever kept so perfectly the will of another as he. "For I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me." Again: "I seek not mine own will, but the will of him that sent me." This is the language of Him "who, existing in the form of God, counted not the being on an equality with God a thing to be grasped, but emptied himself, taking the form of a servant, being made in the likeness of men; and being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, becoming obedient even unto death, yea. the death of the cross. Wherefore also God highly exalted him, and gave him the name which is above every name." As in the case of Christ, so it is with us, true exaltation comes only through submission to the will of God. "Humble yourselves therefore under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you in due time."

Though Christ kept perfectly the Father's will, it was not without fear and effort. "Let us fear therefore." Christ dreaded his trials. At the beginning of his ministry "the Spirit driveth [expelled] him forth into the wilderness." This was not stubbornness, but fear in view of awful responsibility. Then, after more than three years of sacrifice and submission to God, in view of the cross, he prayed: "Father, if thou be willing, remove this cup from me." But in matchless submission to the will of God and out of love for lost man he immediately added: "Nevertheless, not my will, but thine, be done." The events of the cross are the last words in the lesson of submission to God's will.

When the will of God marks out paths strewn with flowers, it is easy to say: "Not my will, but thine," Too many of us, Jacoblike, say: "If God will be with me, and will keep me in this way that I go, and will give me bread to eat, and raiment to put on, so that I come again to my father's house in peace, then shall the Lord be my God." (Gen. 28: 20, 21.) But if there are sacrifices to be made, many at once seek excuses. How many, when forced to cry, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" can add: "Nevertheless, not my will, but thine, be done?" Or even with Job, who can say: "Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him?"

Conversion implies a surrender to the will of God. Self-denial is a fundamental principle of Christianity. Every life worth while is the result of thorough conversion. Paul is another good example of submission. He was ready not only to live, but to die for Christ. "Paul, a servant," simply means "Paul, a slave." Christ in all things the Master, Paul in everything the servant, enabled him to conclude his life in sweet anticipation of a crown. Glorious thought!

Though the way of the cross may lead over mountains of God." There all tears are wiped away, and pain and difficulties and through valleys of humiliation, it can but lead to heaven, "where Christ is, seated on the right hand of God." There all tears are wiped away and pain and death are strangers. "And the ransomed of the Lord shall return, and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads. They shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away."

There is nothing greater than submission to God. It means more than to be king over the whole world, and is of more value than all the treasures of earth. Any vintue without submission to the will of God loses its value. Many can sing, pray, and preach well; but "to obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams." Too many people concern themselves too much with the "fat of rams" and not enough with submission. A cup of water given in the name of Christ by a humble disciple is worth more than millions given by the proud. "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven."

Personal.

H. L. McCrary, Tenaha, Texas, closed a meeting at Mc-Kee's Chapel with one baptism.

W. T. Kidwill, 613 North Ewing Street, Dallas, Texas. has the following engagements for this fall: Alexandria, Tenn., October 2; Granville, Tenn., October 9; Defeated, Tenn., October 16-23; Cave, near Sparta, Tenn., November 6. Following these engagements he will be able to assist in meetings in Tennessee, Alabama, Georgia, or Arkansas.

J. G. Allen, Muskogee, Okla., preaches for the congregation which worships at the corner of C and Kankakee Streets, that city. This congregation has recently paid cash for a lot, and they have borrowed the money with which to pay for a house which they are now building Right. The house was needed. A congregation usually does but little in a city without a "church home." We can borrow money for our business or for pleasure. The cause of Christ is of the greatest importance; and if it is necessary to make obligations to advance the work, hesitate not. Brother James A. Allen, Nashville, Tenn., will assist this congregation in a meeting soon.

W. H. Crain, Houston, Texas, baptized one at Westfield. Texas, when with them last. He preaches for them once each month.

Tice Elkins, Fort Worth, Texas, reports the work with the Southside congregation pleasant and the congregation aggressive. He has recently closed a meeting in a section of the city where there is not a congregation. A number of such meetings will be conducted in the city this year.

D. S. Ligon, Denton, Texas, one of our most active men, closed his third meeting with the congregation at Havana. Ark., with six baptisms.

C. R. Nichol, Clifton, Texas, baptized three in a meeting at Dukedom, Tenn.

Mrs. Frank Carroll writes from Frost, Texas, July 28:
"Brother Foster, of Hillsboro, Texas, closed a twelve-days' meeting at Irene. He preached some very forceful sermons, and much interest was manifested throughout the meeting. This is the best meeting we have had here in several years. The church was edified by the preaching, and the meeting resulted in six baptisms. We hope to have him back with us next July."

From C. W. Ing, Hillsboro, Texas, July 27: "My meeting near Iola, Texas, closed on Sunday night with four additions to the congregation. We had fine crowds and good attention, and the brethren seemed to think that great good was accomplished. I am to begin at Donie, Texas, next Sunday."

The Divorce Evil.

BY J. C. M.Q.

Easy divorces are a direct stab at the home, God's oldest institution. In the beginning God made one man, and made one woman to be a helpmate for him. The divorce evil that is now so prevalent in our country is calculated to destroy the sanctity of the marriage relation, pull down the home, the church, and the nation. The family is the fountainhead; and whenever that is regarded lightly and held as a matter of little consequence, the whole fabric of society will be demoralized and corrupted. In the very beginning, when God had created man and woman, it is said: "And the man said, This is now bone of my bones, and flesh of my flesh: she shall be called Woman, because she was taken out of man. Therefore shall a man leave his father and his mother, and shall cleave unto his wife; and they shall be one flesh. And they were both naked, the man and his wife, and were not ashamed." (Gen. 2: 23-25.) When Jesus came to this world to redeem and rescue a fallen race, he attached the same importance to marriage in the home as the Father had done in the beginning. "But I say unto you, that every one that putteth away his wife, saving for the cause of fornication, maketh her an adulteress: and whosoever shall marry her when she is put away committeth adultery." (Matt. 5: 32.) The Savior also teaches the same important truth in Matt. 19; 9; "And I say unto you, Whosoever shall put away his wife, except for fornication, and shall marry another, committeth adultery: and he that marrieth her when she is put away committeth adultery." So long as the husband is faithful to the wife and the wife is faithful to the husband, nothing but death can break the marriage vow. There is nothing in the Bible that warrants the granting of divorces, save infidelity in the marriage relation. The courts of the land should be in harmony with the word of God on this point. No divorce should be granted on account of a lack of congeniality or incompatibility of spirit. Husbands and wives should be taught to sacrifice for each other, should be encouraged to live a life of self-denial and to make every possible endeavor to live together as the law of God reauires husband and wife to live. They should be given to understand that only infidelity in the marriage relation gives them a cause for a divorce. "For the woman that hath a husband is bound by law to the husband while he liveth; but if the husband die, she is discharged from the law of the husband. So then if, while the husband liveth, she be joined to another man, she shall be called an adulteress; but if the husband die, she is free from the law, so that she is no adulteress, though she be joined to another man." (Rom. 7: 2, 3:) Young and old allke should be given to understand that infidelity in the marriage relation leads to the destruction of the home, to the destruction of the family, and to the destruction of society. It must be admitted that a large per cent of both men and women who are divorced have little respect for the sacredness of the marriage relation. The breaking of their marriage vows leads them to care little for purity of life and purity of character. The divorced man or the divorced woman often ensnares others to ruin.

I have no disposition to overdraw the divorce evil. I would to God that there were very few divorced persons, if any, in our country. I see it stated, however, in the Literary Digest, that the number of divorced, including their children, is said to reach the enormous total of 5,585,696 persons in the United States in the last twenty years, or about one-twentieth of the total population. Let us hope that this is overdrawn and that there are not half so many. But if there be even half this number, the evil is very great, and we should labor to educate the people; we should teach them the word of God and bring to bear upon them all the influence of Christianity in order to cure this evil. The religion of Jesus Christ is more potent and powerful, if we will only apply it, to bring about a cure than is anything else in the wide world. Let every preacher of the gospel, let every Christian who loves the truth, come out boldly and fearlessly against easy divorces. The people should be given to understand that God condemns the practice and that no man has any promise of everlasting life who is guilty of adultery or fornication and of uncleanness. All such vicious characters will at last be cast into hell.

Secret marriages are vicious and, therefore, should be discouraged. They usually lead to evil, and only evil. No man with the proper respect for the marriage ceremony will be a participant in a secret marriage. As the law of God is intended for all nations and all peoples, if we conform to that, we can have but one divorce law, which will apply to every nation under the sun; but instead of this, here in the United States we have as many laws for divorce as we have States. An Episcopal bishop writing in the New York Times, and quoted by the Literary Digest, says:

At present there are forty-nine different codes attempting to regulate marriage and divorce in the United States. A man may be lawfully married in one State and a bigamist when he crosses the line into another. A woman may be a wife in one State, but, removing to another, she be Children are procomes neither maid, wife, nor widow. nounced born in wedlock or branded as illegitimate by a change of residence Property rights are imperiled or completely wiped out by a geographical line. Court records in literally thousands of cases, involving domicile, jurisdiction, legality of decrees granted in one State and not recognized in another, illustrate the confusion growing out of our present contradictory codes. The tragedy, heartbreak, domestic ruin created by the situation must be left to the imagination.

Congress has recognized the need of a uniform Federal law governing bankruptcy, income tax, and matters relating to property. It is inevitable that sooner or later marriage and divorce in the United States will be regulated in like manner.

It would be well to require parties to announce intention of marriage for at least thirty days before the issuance of marriage license. This would help to prevent hasty marriages. Parents could show their children why they should not form undesirable intended alliances. Such a course would expose fraud, give warning to parents and guardians, and give time for the exercise of caution and the influence of affectionate counsel. Such a course would be helpful in saving many young people from a lifetime of unhappiness and in preventing divorces.

If all preachers and other properly licensed authorities would positively refuse to marry divorced people, there would be fewer divorces. Ministers who marry divorced persons, who are divorced without a scriptural cause, are largely responsible for the magnitude of the divorce evil. Doubtless such ministers are led away by personal sympathy, forgetting the sanctity of the marriage relation and failing to consider the welfare of the home. It may be also that some are influenced by the prospect of a fee. So long as ministers are guilty of such conduct it will be hard for the church of Christ to bring much influence to bear upon the problem. Ministers should rise above any selfish considerations and should be so loyal to the word of God that no temporary reward will lead them to violate God's law of marriage. If divorced people could not get a minister, magistrate, priest, or governor to marry them, they would be much slower in divorcing their companions. I make a plea for the sanctity of the marriage relation, the home, and the family. I would rebuke vice and selfishness and hold up consistency and virtue as prizes to be sought by all. No man who respects God and his authority, no man who loves the truth above his own selfish interest, will give his influence to the divorce evil that is now so prevalent in our country. Unless we wish to destroy marriage, the home, and the nation, we must vigorously do all within our power to stop this divorce evil.

The Power and Influence of United Action.

BY M. C. K.

Among all the maxims of ancient and modern times there is probably no truer sentiment than that which says: "In union there is strength; in division there is weakness." The Kentucky State motto, "United we stand, divided we fall," proclaims a principle of far-reaching application whose value is variously exemplified both in religion and in matters of state, and it should often be emphasized and impressed upon the minds of the people. The principle involved is particularly applicable to churches and to all religious workers in all lines and under all circumstances, and it is its great value and importance in this particular realm that I wish now to consider. It is a great lesson alike for preachers, for elders of the churches, and for all other members, from the oldest and greatest down to the youngest and humblest member to be found in any church of God on earth. Let us give special attention to some instances that will illustrate and enforce this truth.

1. The value and power of this principle of united action among the preachers. To say nothing of the great importance of united action among all other Christians, its value among the preachers is beyond calculation. Just think what could be done in any community where there are from two to a dozen or a score of preachers, if they should present a solid and unbroken front and maintain united action in all their work. Such a phalanx of preachers in any community, when united for the defense and propagation of right principles, is not only a spectacle to be admired, but it is a veritable bulwark of strength to the cause of God. On the other hand, when from any cause they are divided and pulling against each other, they not only make no material progress in the right direction, but often become a gazingstock and an object of disgust to right-thinking people of a community. Wee unto the preacher who is responsible for such a baleful state of things! Nothing will excuse it, and preachers who are guilty may as well prepare to meet the condemnation of God in the judgment, because they are already under that condemnation.

2. How this condition may be maintained and promoted among the preachers. No matter from what angle the subject may be considered, nor how many theories men may adopt for the maintenance and promotion of unity among the preachers, the only effective remedy against division and the only guarantee of unity and united action is to give heed to the inspired apostolic admonition that "all speak the same thing." (See 1 Cor. 1: 10.) It would be impossible to have division among the preachers if they would all heed this admonition. Why do they not do it? I respectfully answer, because many of them are not sufficiently humble and self-abased to magnify the unadorned and unmixed word of God and to sink themselves and their own self-conceited opinions and views out of sight. Never was a motto more true, more timely, and more universally applicable than that of the Campbells over a hundred years ago; "Where the Scriptures speak, we speak; where the Scriptures are silent, we are silent." But-alas!-even some of their immediate successors did not remain true to the motto, but soon began to advance and advocate their "views" of certain Biblical passages, and thus to speak where the Bible does not speak and to refuse to be silent where the Bible is silent. But who needs their "views" or the "views" of anybody else, for that matter, save the views which are clearly and certainly expressed by inspired men? If these latter have not fully explained a subject, how can it help matters any for some uninspired man to give his "views" of it? His "views" will no doubt be promptly contradicted by the "views" of the next man that comes along, and then division begins, and the good Lord only knows where it will end. On one thing, however, all can count with certainty in such a situation-namely. there will be plenty of strife and contention, as Paul expresses it. "about words to no profit, to the subverting of them that hear" (2 Tim. 2: 14), and to a general hindrancto the work of the Lord. Any intelligent Christian ought to see the wrong of this, but it is astonishing that even preachers sometimes at least do not seem to see it. On the contrary, they fight and contend for their "views" as though the salvation of immortal souls depended on it. Such strife and contention are either directly or indirectly prompted by Satan, and the most effective work they accomplish is the advancement of his cause.

3. But is it possible for preachers all to speak the same thing? If we should answer this question, "No," then what conclusion would inevitably follow? Does not the reader see that it would then follow as certainly as the night follows the day that the New Testament has commanded an impossibility by requiring preachers to do what they cannot do? Listen to these clear and solemn words: "Now I beseech you, brethren, through the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing." (1 Cor. 1: 10.) There it is, as clear and unequivocal as language can make it; and preachers and all other Christians can either do it, or the New Testament has commanded them to do what they cannot do, one or the other. No other conclusion can here be properly drawn. The word of God has just as clearly and definitely required preachers and all other Christians "to speak the same thing" as it has required them to speak at all. Hence, I do not hesitate to say that they can do it: but they can never do it except by speaking when, where, and what the Bible speaks, and by being silent when, where, and on whatever the Bible is silent on. Let this divine rule be faithfully observed; let all speak what the Bible speaks, no more and no less, and then it is no more certain that two and two are four than that all will speak the same thing. And then preachers will exemplify the inspired admonition to the members of the Philippian church: "That ye stand fast in one spirit, with one soul striving for the faith of the gospei." (Phil. 1: 27.) This is exactly what the members of every church in all the world should be doing to-day, and whoever stands in the way of it is hindering the work of the Lord. With the New Testament as our only guide, this is God's way, and it is the only right way.

The Sin in Asking for a King.

BY E. A. E.

If we really desire to learn the lesson which our Father In heaven teaches from this sin of Israel's asking for a king; if we really hunger and thirst after righteousness; if we have willed to do God's will, we will study 1 Sam. 8 and 12 and other scriptures in reference to it.

Now these things happened unto them by way of example; and they were written for our admonition, upon whom the ends of the ages are come. (1 Cor. 10: 11.)

For whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning, that through patience ["steadfastness"—margin] and through comfort of the scriptures we might have hope. (Rom. 15: 4.)

Not a more important lesson can be learned than the one which we must learn from Israel's asking for a king.

The reasons for asking for a king are the fundamental principles of rejection of God, and should be studied most seriously. These are given in chapter 8. "Then all the elders of Israel gathered themselves together, and came to Samuel unto Ramah." They held a council, or "convention," to determine what in "their wisdom" was best to be done. Peloubet's "Select Notes" says this was "the national congress, or parliament." May we not call it "the national convention," "representing the brotherhood?" These "elders" did represent the people and are put for the people in verses 7, 10, 19, 20; but they did not represent God or his will. It is remarkable that an old, gray-haired man was the only one in that conference, or "convention," of "leading" and "representative" men who pleaded the cause of God. THE MAJORITY RULE.

There is a growing tendency now in the church in places, and especially with some young "ministers," to "the majority rule." If God's people are to be governed by human "brains" and "the majority rule," then old Samuel was in great opposition to God, for he was distressingly in the minority. God's order, or way, must be maintained. regardless of majorities, "representative men," and "human wisdom." I would rather be Samuel, old and alone, on God's side, than to be the greatest and most popular man of the great majority of "leading men" of the nation, against God. Majorities and "human wisdom" are not signs of right and faithfulness to God. "Thou shalt not follow a multitude to do evil." (Ex. 23: 2.) Many go down the "broad way," while few travel the "narrow way," etc. "Where is the wise? . . . hath not God made foolish the wisdom of the world?" (1 Cor. 1; 20.)

But the people composing this conference, or "convention," of "representative men" were of one mind. They were united, but that did not make their rebellion right, God's people are one, but they are one as Christ and God are one. They keep "the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace." These men had discussed this grave question of changing the form of government, had decided in mature deliberation, and had passed a "unanimous resolution" to have a king. They came in a body to Samuel, They gave three reasons for making this request—(1) "behold, thou art old;" (2) "thy sons walk not in thy ways; (3) "to judge us like all the nations." "To judge us "means not only to settle disputes; it means to rule over the people and to fight their battles. A king would organize and centralize them as a nation and give them a permanent, systematic, and successful government. With a king, a court, and a standing army, they would be ready at any time to put forth a successful "organized effort" against any foe. (1 Sam. 9: 16; 11: 3.) "And when ye saw that Nahash the king of the children of Ammon came against you, ye said unto me, Nay, but a king shall reign over us; when Jehovah your God was your king." (1 Sam. 12: 12.) To have a king would also give them prestige among other nations and make them respectable. They did not want a king because it was God's will for them to have one, but to be "like all the nations." God had foretold that they would ask for a king and had said that then they should set over themselves the one only whom he should choose (Deut. 17: 14-17), but this did not justify their desire and request for one and their rejection of God as King. The reasons these elders offered for wanting a king were only pretexts. (1) Samuel was old; but he was still mentally and physically vigorous and strong and lived nearly forty years after that. (2) His sons walked not in his ways; but they could have been rejected as were Eli's sons, and better men appointed. (3) They wanted a king to judge them "like all the nations;" but God had said they should be unlike the nations-" a peculiar people"-and that he would be their King. They should have remembered the wonderful deliverance God had given them from Egypt and the great victories he had given them over Sihon and the giant, Og, kings of the Amorites, "from the valley of the Arnon unto Mount Hermon." (Deut. 3: 1-17.) Og ruled over sixty cities. (Josh, 13: 30.) They should have remembered how God had turned Balaam's curses into blessings and had given them the victory over the Moabites and the Midianites. They should also have remembered how, through Joshua, God had conquered the nations in the land of Canaan and had given them the land by lot, and how, through such judges as Barak, Deborah, Gideon, Jephthah, Samson, and Samuel, he had always delivered them from their enemies. There were no people like them and none could stand before them. So long as they put their trust in God, one could chase a thousand and two could put ten thousand to flight.

The reasons that brethren now give for organizing missionary societies and other societies to do the work God has committed to the church and for uniting all the churches in one "national convention," or organization, are only pretexts. They want a king, "like all the [denomi]nations," but must have some pretext for making one. One of these pretexts is: "The church will not do the work," They have forgotten what the church has already done, and that the thousands of congregations which existed before the organization of a missionary society were planted by the church.

Samuel was a just and a good man. He knew the complaint against his sons was true, and at this he took no offense. "But the thing displeased Samuel, when they said, Give us a king to judge us." He felt that this was a rejection of himself as judge. "And Samuel prayed unto Jehovah." (Verse 6.) He laid the matter before God and sought his guidance. Samuel was troubled when the people did wrong, and he prayed over it. God answered Samuel and explained that this was a rejection of himself, and not of Samuel-that God "should not be king over them." (Verse 7.) This is a fearful sin. God was their King. (1 Sam. 12: 12.) The government under the judges was God's order: "He gave them judges until Samuel the prophet. And afterwards they asked for a king." (Acts 13: 20, 21.) To reject God's commandments (Luke 7: 29, 38), or his system of government, is to reject him.

GOD'S GOVERNMENT NOW-A LIKE SIN.

God now has his spiritual kingdom, over which Christ is King; his church, over which Christ is Head. This church he has set in order. It has elders, deacons, and other members. (Phil. 1: 1.) Each congregation has a plurality of elders and deacons. These elders are called "overseers," or "bishops;" "shepherds," or "pastors." Their qualifications and duties are clearly defined. (See Acts 14: 23; 15: 4, 6, 22; 26: 17, 18, 28, 29; 1 Tim. 3: 1-7; Tit. 1: 5-11; 1 Pet. 5: 1-4.) He did not centralize, or combine, the different congregations, or "churches of Christ" (Rom. 16: 16)as those at Jerusalem, Samaria, Antioch, Ephesus, Corinth, etc.-into one huge organization and ecclesiasticism. A simple church with its elders, deacons, and other members is all the organizing and centralizing God has ever done for his church. To turn away from God's church and church government now is to turn away from him; to reject these is to reject him. But what if the elders or the church will not do the work? Let it be remembered that Samuel's wicked sons failed to do their work; still, it was a rejection of God to reject his system of government, even when perverted by mean men. Why not "turn the rascals out" and select honest and righteous judges? The wickedness of Samuel's sons furnished a pretext for asking for a king, and a failure on the part of elders and the church now to do the work God requires furnishes a pretext to those not satisfied with the New Testament order of things for asking for a change of God's way This is a trick of Satan. He took advantage of the corruption and wicked practices of Samuel's sons to suggest a change of God's government. He doubtless pointed out to the elders of Israel the centralization and solidity of other nations under kings and how they had succeeded; that the Israelites, in their spasmodic and irregular way of opposing their enemies, could not succeed, and that "the Lord's plan would not work." So to-day when elders fail in qualifications and duties and the church drags along, Satan steps in and suggests a "change." He never suggests that the church should have intelligent, active, scriptural elders, doing a scriptural work. His special effort is to persuade the church that "God's way will not work;" that all the denominations practice the one-man pastor or one-man minister system, and the church must be like them and do like them or fail. Hence, frequently "a novice" (1 Tim, 3; 6)-a beardless youth-is installed as "the pastor" or "the minister" of the church. and the elders are practically "laid on the shelf." This is a dangerous practice. If proof is necessary, it can be given. When the church fails to "endeavor" to do the will of God in developing the young members, Satan, becoming at once very much interested in their spiritual welfare, never suggests that the church should be stirred up to the discharge of its duty, but proposes to "organize" an "endeavor society" which will do this particular work; when the church fails to "associate" as it should, Satan, becoming interested in Christian association, proposes the organization of an "association" which will do this work; when the church fails to do missionary work, old Satan, suddenly turning missionary, and shedding great crocodile tears over the poor heathen who are dying without the gospel, never suggests that the church should be taught and trained, as such, to do this work, but proposes to furnish an organization which will do it. To deliver the Israelites from their enemies at one time, in one way, by one judge, and to deliver them at another time, in a different way, by another judge. as God did, did not seem to them wise and sufficient. They thought they could improve on this. They preferred their wisdom to God's wisdom. The apostles and New Testament evangelists-and, therefore, the church-preached the gospel in twenty-five or thirty years in all the known world; yet the way in which they did it now seems to many people "unbusinesslike," haphazard, and inefficient. "Business in religion" is their cry. To organize one huge, central, national institution-not because it is God's will to do so, but because their judgment approves it—seems to them the most efficient way. Then Satan perverts into a central, ecclesiastical government these very organizations which were ostensibly established for spreading the gospel. No wonder he is called "the deceiver of the whole world." (Rev. 12: 9.) He "fashioneth himself into an angel of light." (2 Cor. 11: 14.)

THE REMEDY:

If these elders of Israel had not protested against Samuel's sons, they had not done right. If elders fail to do their duty now, the church should protest against their dereliction and, if possible, arouse them to a sense of their duty: if not possible to do this, then the church should raise up those who will do the work. We should never change God's order. If the church will not do missionary work, we should teach it and stir it up until it will; but we should never turn to any other organization. Let it be remembered that God did not justify the wickedness of Samuel's sons because the Israelites rejected him in wanting a king; and he does not justify the church in idleness, indifference, and covetousness because some do wrong. The only successful way to overcome error and wrong is for the church to do earnestly and faithfully the work God has committed to it. Doubtless these elders of Israel did not intend to reject God. Peloubet's "Select Notes" says: "'At the bottom of the people's desire for a king lay the delusion . . that the kingdom would be an aid in addition to God.' That very thought proved that they no longer held God to be their all-powerful and all-sufficient Ruler." When the Israelites made the golden calf, they intended it as an "aid" to the worship of God. (Ex. 32: 5.) So all these modern "aid" societies, missionary organizations, other human religious institutions, and modern "one-man pastor" or "one-man minister" rule, spring from the delusion that God's ordained church and church government bought with the blood of Jesus and filled with the Holy Spirit, is not sufficient to accomplish God's work. Humanity has ever committed the great blunder and sin of trying to supple ment God's wisdom, God's institutions, to "aid" him in his purposes and plans and to help him out of difficulties. This Is the greatest sin against God, because it is rejecting him. God told Samuel that as "the people" had forsaken him and served other gods ever since he had delivered them from Egypt, so they were doing then in asking for a king. (1 Sam. 8: 8;) They fell in the wilderness because of unbelief-because they did not think God's ways and means were adequate to accomplish his purposes. (Heb. 3.)

THE RESULT.

God told Samuel to "protest scientally unto them " and to show them what the king would do toward taxing and oppressing them. (See 1 Sam. 8: 11-18.) All this followed in its morally and spiritually corrupt and weak condition, and in its divided and contentious state, Hosea (13: 9-11) says: "It is thy destruction, O Israel, that thou art against me, against thy help. Where now is thy king, that he may save thee in all thy cities? and thy judges, of whom thou saidst, Give me a king and princes? I have given thee a king in mine anger, and have taken bim away in my wrath." To unite the churches of Christ in one huge, central, national organization and government may give them prestige and worldly greatness and glory among the denominations of the earth; but it has ever led to corruption, strife, division. humiliation, and destruction. This is true to-day. Brethren who organize societies and work through them are divided now.

THE PEOPLE'S DECISION.

After Samuel's warning and solemn protest, the people refused to hear him, and said: "Nay; but we will have a king over us, that we also may be like all the nations, and that our king may judge us, and go out before us, and fight our battles." Then God told Samuel to "hearken unto their voice, and make them a king." (1 Sam. 8: 19-22.) Why did God grant a king, since seeking one was a rejection of himself? Because when God sets good and evil, right and wrong, the true and the false, clearly before people, he then allows them to choose which they will do and whom they will serve. He could not do otherwise and hold them responsible for their conduct. When brethren are determined now to follow human wisdom, to attempt to improve upon God's order of things, and to go their own way, earnest protests and solemn warnings are trampled under foot.

Ignorance or Meanness-Which?

BY F. W. SMITH,

A paragrapher for the Baptist Flag paragraphed the following most remarkable bit of information that ever emanated from the pen of man: "Anybody that knows anything about Campbellite doctrine knows that Campbellites baptize in order to make a believer out of the candidate," This paragrapher by the use of the ugly and ill-mannered term "Campbellites" has reference to those who wish to be known religiously by the names God applied to the followers of Christ and who refuse to wear a human name in violation of the law of God as this paragrapher is doing. If he desires to set aside and trample under his feet the express prohibition of God on the subject (see 1 Cor. 1: 10-13), he can do so, of course, but it ill becomes him to snari at others who refuse to follow his example. He is wearing a religious name that was never applied to the people of God by any Inspired man, and speaks of his doctrines as "Baptist doctrines." "Calvary Church is certainly on the front row in pure Baptist doctrines and teachings in Colorado." Well, this is one "paragraph" in his list of paragraphs that speaks the truth, for the doctrines which he here mentions are not the doctrine of Christ, but Baptist "doctrines." If what this paragrapher says about the people he calls "Campbellites" is because of his ignorance, then he is to be pitied; but if because of a streak of meanness, then he should be censured by all fair-minded people. He says "anybody that knows anything about Campbellite doctrine" knows so and so. Well, the editor of the Baptist Flag, who published paragrapher's paragraphs, knows that those whom paragrapher calls "Campbellites" teach no such doctrine, because the writer as well as others has taught the editor better, and he should refuse to put such paragraphs in his paper without rebuking the paragrapher. This Baptist paragrapher could not, if his life depended on it, produce one line ever written by any one whom he calls "Campbellite" that comes within a thousand miles of what he claims-viz., "that Campbellites baptize in order to make a believer out of the candidate." What kind of a spirit do men possess who will thus falsify the teaching and practice of those who may differ from them? If they do not know any better, they should keep themselves out of print; and if they do know better, they should lay no claim to be followers of Jesus Christ. Is it any wonder that the minds of the people are poisoned against the truth where such men as this paragrapher goes delivering himself of such a false representation of those he falsely calls "Campbellites?"

The practice of this man is common among those who differ from the disciples of Christ, and yet there are those claiming to be disciples that do not want one word of refutation of such misrepresentation to appear in our papers. Valiant soldiers of the cross, indeed, are such opposers! Did Christ let pass unchallenged and unexposed the doctrines and traditions of men? Did the New Testament writers fail or refuse to expose and combat religious error wherever found? I verily believe that the most successful device Satan has invented against the truth is his success in getting men and women who claim to be Christians to oppose religious discussion. What this age needs more than anything else is a host of men with the spirit and loyalty that characterized Campbell, Scott, Stone, Creath, Raccoon Smith, D. Lipscomb, E. G. Sewell, Tolbert

Fanning, and many others whose work on earth is done. The cause of Christ is suffering to-day all over this land because there are not men qualified and willing to defend the truth against the doctrines and traditions of men, There is a kind of sweet, soft, and pleasing evangelism that is quite as acceptable to the sectarian world as that which emanates from any sectarian pulpit. This is not meant to convey the idea that contention for the truth must be done in a harsh, abusive, and intolerant spirit, but that the truth should be preached in love, with proper respect for the feelings of those who may hold contrary views; but it does mean that a preacher should not let his audience go away guessing at or wondering what the preacher meant. If infant baptism be the issue, call it by name, so the people may know what you mean. If it be sprinkling or pouring, say so; and if it be instrumental music or human societies; say so plainly. Do not be a moral coward. When circumcision was disturbing the church, Paul did not deal in vague generalities, but wrote about circumcision, calling it by name. You might preach all day to a church using an organ on worshiping God "as It is written," or according to his word; and if you did not specify the organ, they would actually believe you were indorsing what they were doing. Be kind, thoughtful, and considerate; but be plain, and let people know what you mean. Do not presume that people will knew what you have in mind without telling them. The prophet was told to shew God's people their sins (Isa, 58: 1), but he could never have done so by dealing in vague generalities.

Mountaineers.

BY T. B. LARIMORE.

Some scribe hath said "the mountaineers of Kentucky and Tennessee were never discovered till during the war," meaning the war of the rebellion. Be that as it may, they have certainly given an account of themselves, and I'm glad I'm one of them. I have neither right, reason, nor inclination to boast of anything, but I'm glad I'm an East Tennessee mountaineer.

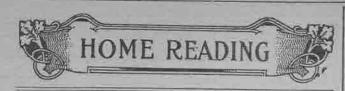

Much adverse criticism of the language of these primitive people has been spoken, written, and printed; but there are some fashionable linguistic abominations of which I have never known these braye and hardy people to be guilty. So far as I know, "aren't" and "weren't" are not in their vocabulary—a better vocabulary because of their absence—and I have never known one of them to use that abominable "Mutt-an'-Jeff" abomination, "gotta do it." Some of them do sometimes substitute "you all," or "yaw'll," for plural "you"—never for singular "you;" but they are not the only people who make that mistake.

Cæsar, writing of the inhabitants of a vast region he found it almost impossible to subdue, says "the bravest of these are the Belgæ"—the inhabitants of brave little Belgium. Americans have demonstrated their bravery on many a battle field and elsewhere; and, while I am not disposed to say the bravest of these are the mountaineers, I deem it perfectly safe to say the mountaineers are as brave as the bravest—Alvin York simply being one of the many. And they are not deficient in that higher type of bravery—moral courage.

Generosity has always been a characteristic of the truly brave, and our modern Kentucky and Tennessee mountaineers are not exceptions to this commendable rule.

Race suicide, one of the sins of modern fashionable society, seems to be unknown to these industrious, indomitable mountaineers, as evidenced by the swarms of healthy, hearty children seen in and around their happy homes. Of such is the kingdom of the truly great.

Better homes and better roads and better schools are badly needed among them; but, while it may have always been thus, I am sure it is not always to be thus. "It is better further on." So mote it be.

In the Garden of the Lord.

The Word of God came unto me, Sitting alone among the multitudes; And my blind eyes were touched with light, And there was laid up my lips a flame of fire

I laugh and shout, for life is good,
Though my feet are set in silent ways.
In merry mood I leave the crowd
To walk in my garden. Ever as I walk
I gather fruits and flowers in my hands,
And with joyful heart I bless the sun
That kindles all the place with radiant life.
I run with playful winds that blow the scent
Of rose and jessamine in eddying whirls.

At last I come where tall lilles grow,
Lifting their faces like white saints to God.
While the lilies pray, I kneel upon the ground;
I have strayed into the holy temple of the Lord.
—Helen Keller, in the Church Messenger.

Finding the Thief.

Toby was an old, old dog with stiffened joints and a curly black coar, but he never took anything that he knew did not belong to him. Sam was his master, and was very proud of Toby's honesty.

One day Sam's father sent him to the woods to pile stove wood. He took a great slice of cake along, for piling wood is hard work and makes a boy hungry in a little while. Of course, Toby went along, but all he did was to lie down on a nice pile of dry leaves and go to sleep.

Sam worked hard for a long time, then threw himself down in the shade and unwrapped the precious cake. Just as he was beginning to eat it a squirrel suddenly darted out of the bushes beside him. In an instant another followed, then another. Sam was so excited he forgot how tired he was, and, tossing the cake on the ground, dashed away after them.

Toby sat up and looked around in wonder. He was too old to even think of running after squirrels. Spying the cake, he limped questioningly over to it. When he had swallowed the last crumb, he hobbled back to his pile of leaves and went to sleep again.

Presently Sam came panting back and dropped down beside the empty paper. "Well, if that doesn't beat everything!" he exclaimed, looking under it and all about. "Toby, did you eat my cake?"

Toby's dumpy tail moved ever so little, but he kept his eyes closed.

"You're nothing but an old thief!" scolded Sam, and started home, half crying.

Toby rolled his eyes pitifully while Sam told his mother all about it. Had he been a boy, he would have told her how it all came about.

"There's no question as to whether there is a thief," said mother, "but do you think you can tell me who it is?"

Sam's mouth dropped open. He had thought that mother understood, but evidently she did not.

"Haven't you taught Toby that anything he finds on the ground is his?" she asked.

Sam nodded.

"When you rushed away after the squirrels and left the cake on the ground, it was just the same as giving it to him; then, because he ate it, you rob him of his good name by calling him a thief. Now, who is the thief?"

Sam hung his head a moment and dug his bare toes into a crack in the porch, then patted Toby's shaggy neck. "I guess, old fellow, if you're not ashamed of me, I'd better not be of you," he said, and walked away, thinking he would be more careful the next time.—Elizabeth White Ralston.

The Better Method.

We all recall the old alleged incident of the mother who told her child not to put beans up his nose during her ubsence—how the child received the suggestion as a new play, and how the mother, upon her return, found that "the worst had happened." This illustrates the negative mother.

The positive mother employs a different method. In leading her child over a muddy street, she says, "Let us step on all the high places," and they both reach the other side dry-shod.

The negative mother or teacher is so full of "don'ts" that she herself and the little ones under her become mystified and discouraged. It is like constantly knocking down blocks before anything has been built.

The positive educator constructs. A bit of honest praise for something well done builds up within the heart of a little child love for the one who praises, discernment and love of the right, confidence in the good that he can do and a great desire to do another good thing. Such no ments of recognition please even the grown-ups, and how much more are children helped! The mother says, "My child was generous to-day in sharing his toys with his visiting cousin;" and the child glows with joy at the words, pendering over them. Thus his character is being formed, and on the side of good.

Why should mothers and teachers ever fall into the fruitless, negative way, when the good fruit is all on the positive side of the fence?

If we are fired or worried, we cannot inspire our children. We ourselves must first seek inspiration and the calm and polse which it brings.

Froebel says:

If you would bind your little one to you, Bind your own soul to all that is high and true, And let its light shine clear through all you do!

Some people always meet us with a tale of woe and continue to talk negatives. We come away fagged. Others talk about the beautiful, seeing good all about us. We are then able to give something constructive to those we meet, especially to the children, who will surely grow through our recognition and nurture of every little impulse of good springing up within them.

If we look for good in our little ones, we will surely find it. Yet we must look searchingly with those wiser eyes of love, for—alas!—the negative things are far too easy to see.

So let us try for one day to emphasize the good in those about us, to recognize every good attempt in our children, however small, and we will find ourselves on the true highway of peace.—Henrietta W. Brown.

The Moral Risk.

It is a well-known fact that some men who have plenty of money are poor risks in a business way, while others who are limited in their resources enjoy an extended line of credit. The explanation is to be found in the fact that character counts for more than cash. This is a fine lesson for the young man just starting in business to learn. He may not have much money, and his chances of accumulating a fortune may seem small; but if his word can be absolutely relied upon and if his moral character is above reproach, he will find many a helping hand extended to him as he fights his way toward success. Good character is an asset that all men may enjoy, because it is conditioned upon what a man is, and not upon what he has. A sprightly writer in a recent number of the Credit Monthly, a magazine devoted to the interests of the National Association of Credit Men, uses Job as an example of the value of the moral risk in business-God could count on him in misfortune and poverty as in health and prosperity; and he "came back."-New Orleans Christian Advocate.

On the third Lord's day in July I began an eight-days' meeting at Boydsville, Ky., with fine interest and splendid audiences at night. Two made the noble confession and rendered further obedience unto their Master in baptism. I will labor with these brethren for another meeting in 1922, the Lord willing."

From H. D. Jeffcoat, Ackerman, Miss., July 30: "I am on my way to Hamilton, Miss., for a meeting. Brethren

Harris and Perry are at Reform. The meeting begins tonight. The debate at Stewart with the Old Baptist closed yesterday. We had large crowds each day. We hope some good was done. A Missionary Baptist came to me at the close and asked me to say when I could hold them a meeting. He said: We are all Baptists, but we want to get a man that can and will preach the Bible. I told them I would try to get to them the third Sunday in October."

From Bynum Black, Stuart, Okla., July 27: "I recently closed a meeting at Cove, Ark., with nineteen baptized. This is a fine congregation, and they are falthful. R. P. McKinley, of Mena, Ark., has been preaching for them monthly for five years, and they love him. He is preparing to move to Northeast Arkansas or Southeast Missouri. He bears the name of a sound man in the falth and is a strong man in the pulpit. Brethren in all that field should take notice and write him at Mena, Ark., and secure his services. I go next to Fairy, Texas; then to Prairie, Miss., then back to Oklahoma for a debate with Elder A. M. Baker, of St. Louis, Mo. This debate will be held at Henryetta, Okla., beginning on October 4 and continuing several days. Baker is a Mormon."

From Flavil Hall, Wayeross, Ga., July 22: "1 have just closed a meeting at Jennings Lake, Fla., near Trenton. This is an Adventist community where in 1919 I had a discussion with C. B. Stephenson, president of the Florida Conference of Seventh-Day Adventists. I stayed in the home of H. E. Harllee, who had been an Adventist for several years. He read the Bible much with me; and seeing the light, he acted accordingly, and is now in the fellowship of the true disciples and an earnest advocate of the truth. He is a leading citizen of the community. Two were baptized, one of them being an estimable young lady whose Adventist mother had threatened to deprive her of her parental home if she obeyed the gospel. Two who had been disciples accepted the invitation to erring Christians. Brother Harllee furnished us an old house on his place for the meeting. After we had continued seven days, Elder Stephenson and another Adventist preacher came, arriving, it seemed, just in time to save their cause at present from oblivion."

I am hoping that, by the help of God and my brethren, I will yet pull through and he able to be active again in the work as I have been for so long. have received so far about seventy dollars in contributions and several orders for books. May God bless all who have assisted me in my time of need and all his faithful children. I cannot see what would become of me without their Most of the help comes from those who seem to be least able, but are willing, and with their small help they send such messages of good will, love, and encouragement that it makes the assistance more precious than much fine gold. We had a fine service to-day. It was the day set apart for the Oklahoma churches to make their contribu-tions for the Western Oklahoma Christian College. We are certainly thankful to God that Oklahoma's Christian College is to again be open for work this winter."

From C. J. Griggers, Olathe, Col., July 25: "Willis G. Jernigan has been preaching for the last year for the church at Delta, also for the church at this place. Neither of these places has a house to meet in of their own. The reason for this is, the majority of the members are dead spiritually. They see the forget that they have to work to accomplish anything for the Lord; but, the Lord willing and with his help, we aim to have a house to worship in, in the near future, if one man has to bring this about, Brother Jernigan Is now in a meeting at the Coal Creek Baptist church house, about seven miles from Olathe. Baptist preacher is leading the singing for him. He is having large attendance and good attention. We are trusting and praying that there will be great results from this meeting. Some of them have already made the statement that they have never heard anything like it before. might add that this is strictly a mission point. Brother Jernigan hopes to hold five or six more meetings this summer and fall, provided the brethren hold up his hands in this work. I might add that his financial support for the last four months has not exceeded sixty dollars per month. If any brethren are interested in mission work, they would not make a mistake to contribute to this work. If any are interested, please send donations to Willis G. Jernigan, Olathe, Col., Box 97."

From M. D. Baumer, Winchester, Ky., July 25: "There were two additions to the church here last Lord's day, T. Q. Martin will hold a short meeting for us, beginning on August 31. 'This is the only meeting by outside help that we will have this year."

From E. L. Whitaker, Jackson, Tenn., August 1: "I began a meeting at Zion's Hill, near Paimersville, Tenn., on the fourth Lord's day in July and closed it on the fifth Lord's day, with eleven additions. A. J. Veteto conducted the singing. I promised to return next year."

T. C. Fox, of Nashville, Tenn., has been busy in the evangelistic field for several weeks. His meeting at Liberty Hill, in Moore County, Tenn., was well attended and two were baptized. He will hold another meeting for them in 1922. Another fine meeting was held at Union Grove, in Lincoln County. Brother Fox began at Salem, in Warren County, on August 1.

The seventh meeting conducted by L. L. Brigance at Centerville, Tenn., continued ten days, with fine crowds and interest, and closed with nine baptized. He is now in a union meeting at Clarksburg, Tenn. Roan's Creek Church and Clarksburg are only about two miles apart; so, instead of each holding a meeting separately, they have gone in together and are holding one jointly. Great crowds are in attendance.

We are grieved to report the death of L. F. Mason, which occurred at the Woman's Hospital, in Nashville, on July 28. Brother Mason had suffered much, but was hopeful and patient to the end. His faithful wife and brothers were with him. The editor of this page went to see him several times while he was in the hospital here and did all within his power to comfort and cheer him. The burial took place at Morrison, Tenn.

Notice.—A church in Texas, the locality of which 1 do not recall, recently asked me by letter to conduct a meeting for it some time in 1922. Its letter, received in the midst of hurried preparations for this preaching tour, was misplaced. If those concerned will write me again, care Watterson Hotel, Louisville, Ky., which has instructions to forward my mail, I will gladly give it due attention.—M. C. Kurfees, Mocksville, N. C.

Van A. Bradley recently held two short meetings in the neighborhood of Elba, Ala. These two meetings were practically at his own charge. One was held in a Baptist meetinghouse in Goodman, and the attendance and attention were good. He began on Saturday night with the Christian Home congregation, near Dothan. After this meeting he will go back to North Alabama for a few more meetings before he takes up his school work.

Leo H. Thurston, Hahn, Mo., says: "The Gospel Advocate has been a great help to me in my work. Its pages are full of instruction, food for thought and courage. I have not been able to find a paper its equal. It is doing a great work in evangelizing the world. The seed of the kingdom has been sown in this country, and it seems to me that the harvest is near at hand. People here of all classes are beginning to see the importance of a "Thus saith the Lord."

From Mrs. M. R. Saxon, Pryorsburg, Ky., July 27: "A ten-days' meeting closed at this place last night, in which five were added to the one body of Christ. Charles Sweatt. of Tennessee, did the preaching, which was wonderful in profound gospel teaching. He promised to be with us next year, the Lord willing. During these ten days the Methodists had a five-days' meeting, and then the Baptists began theirs, but we had large crowds without any decrease."

S. H. Hall writes: "On June 25, 1921, at the house of worship, corner of North Sichel and Altura Streets, Los Angeles, Cal., in the midst of flowers, beautifully arranged by some of the sisters of the congregation, Mr. Samuel E. Miller and Miss Ethel White were united in holy wedlock by the writer. The groom is the son of Brother and Sister J. T. Miller, formerly of Nashville, Tenn., and the nephew of E. A. Elam, and the bride is one of Los Angeles' most charming girls."

From T. H. Etheridge, Nashville, Ark., July 27: "I closed a meeting at Troy, Tenn., last Thursday night, with five baptized. Good crowds were in attendance, especially fine day crowds. I made my home with L. E. Jones, and I never want a better one on earth. He baptized me four teen years ago in McNairy County, Tenn. It was a great joy to be with him and his family again. I began at Blue Bayou Church, near here, last Sunday. Large crowds and fine attention, but no one added as yet."

W. L. Swallows, writing for the church of Christ at Algood, Tenn., says: "We wish to thank each and every individual and congregation who has contributed to the building fund at Algood for their support. We now have the building completed and seated, and same is paid for except two hundred dollars we still owe. Contributions from any who want to help finish paying off the debt will be appreciated. We now have E. Gaston Collins located with us, and he preaches for us once each month. He is a fine man and has an excellent family, and we feel that he is doing lots of good here."

From J. O. Biaine, Portland, Tenn., July 25: "We are now in a great meeting. Twelve precious souls have already been bern into the great family of God. Brother Brewer still knows how to handle the word of the Lord with power. Great crowds hear him at each service and great good is being accomplished at each meeting. As sure as the word of the Lord is the seed of the kingdom there will be a great harvest after a while, if not just now. But the church is not taking on a new life. Some of us took that on nearly seventy long years ago. I am sure we made a mistake in not taking it on sooner."

From W. M. Oakley, Nashville, Tenn., July 29: "Our meeting at Bethel Church, Joelton, Route 1, closed last night. The meeting was well attended from the beginning and the interest grew to the close. The house was too small for the people at our last service. While there were no additions, to my mind this was one of the best meetings I have been in for a long time. Much prejudice was removed, many from the leading denominations in the community expressing themselves as convinced that our plea is true, and some serious troubles among the members of the church (that hindered) were cleared up. I go next to Maysville, Ala., where I am to begin a tent (mission) meeting on the first Lord's day in August."

preached to the largest crowds that I have ever preached to-between five hundred and eight hundred every night except two rainy nights. Six were baptized and two confessed their wrongs. Many others were almost persuaded. I had to close too soon, as I had promised another meeting for Thursday night. I have promised so many I have to close my meetings too soon this year. The calls are many.—R. E. L. Taylor, Gainesboro, Tenn., July 22.-Brother E. E. Shoulders, of Franklin, Ky., and I exchanged pulpits on the second Lord's day in this month. great pleasure to me to preach at Franklin, as it was my home for a number of years. The congregation at Bowling Green (Ky.) express delight with the visit of Brother Shoulders, who is doing a good work at Frank-I am now in a meeting near Gainesboro at the home of our venerable brother, Marion Harris. It is a great pleasure to have him with us. We regret to have him go away. He is to leave for Windle to hold a meeting, beginning next Lord's day. He has just closed a giorious meeting at Butler's Landing, with more than twenty additions. Brethren, please remember the Lord's work in our hum-ble hands when you pray.-M. L.

Imboden, Ark., July 20.-I have just closed a good meeting at Prairie Schoolhouse, near Lake City, Ark. This is a mission point. I found ten who desired to worship as "it is written," and put them in the harness to help me through this meeting; and we had twelve additions—nine bap-tized and three reclaimed. The house was full to overflowing every night up to the close. People who have lived there for years tell me that we had the best attendance, attention, and interest ever known there. In this meeting I had the happy privilege of baptizing my dear old mother into Christ. She had been a member of the Missionary Baptist Church for about forty-one years; but she decided to obey the gospel, and asked me to assist her, and so I did. We put twenty-two to keeping house for the Lord. I promised to return there for a meeting in December. I am to begin a meeting at Duvall, near Hoxie, on Saturday night.-A. H. Porterfield.

St. Joseph, Tenn., July 23.—By working on the farm I have been hindered from my work as a preacher until recently. On last Sunday I be-gan a meeting with the congregation at Mountain Springs, in Franklin County, Ala. There were ten bap-tisms. I promised to begin their meeting next year on July 16. I have been holding the meeting here for a number of years. Brother Graham, of number of years. Brother Graham, of Sheffield, Ala., and Brother O. C. Dobbs will hold a meeting at Rock Creek and at Pleasant Grove, not far from Mountain Springs, Brother J. P. Ezell, at Mount Pleasant (a new church). not far away. I heard of Brother I. B. Bradley at Bradley's Chapel at the time I was at Mountain Springs. There are some fine people in these mountains, and lots of them are as good Christians as you will find anywhere. On June 26 Brother M. E. Gibbs began an eight-days' meeting with the Little band at Lone Cedar, Ala., where I live. He did the preach-ing and I assisted. There were twenty-six bantized and ten restored. Brother Gibbs is a sawmill preacher. Some of the boys who work at his mill say he is the first sawmill man they ever worked for who did not curse and swear. Let your light shine.-William Behel.

THE MONEY VALUE OF EDUCATION

During the abnormal conditions that have obtained during the past few years until recently, the ideal has been stimulated that an education was a sacrifice of money, and that idea has deceived a part of the recklessly thinking youth of the land. This was apparent when the janitor of the college university drew a larger pay check than the professor, when the demand for manual taborers was so great that the untrained fell to thinking that the supply of labor tacked so much reaching the demand that their service was worth much more money than that of the trained classes, and when the world was topsy-turvy in financial as well as political and social circles. Now the condi-tions are rapidly changing, and only those who are really able to "deliver the goods" are being sought and paid for. The following reliable statistics and estimates demonstrate somewhat the real financial value of an education:

About 85 per cent of the commissioned officers of the United States Army were coliege-bred men.

In a study of 15,142 prominent men, Dr Charles Thwing found that there were 277 times as many college-bred men who have amassed great wealth as noncollege-bred in proportion to their numbers.

In the same study it was discovered that, in proportion to their number, college-bredmen have become members of the national House of Representatives 352 times as often as those who are not college men; members of the Senate, 580 times as often; Justice of the Supreme Court, 3,027 times as often.

Of the more than 10,000 successful and prominent men in all branches of industry mentioned in Appleton's Encyclopedia of American Biography, 58 per cent are college graduates and 75 per cent have had some college (raining.

Less than I per cent of America's men are college graduates; yet this I per cent has furnished.—

55 per cent of our Presidents.

28 per cent of the Congressmen.

47 per cent of the Speakers of the House

62 per cent of the Secretaries of State.

67 per cent of the Attorneys-General. 69 per cent of the Supreme Justices.

Every day spent in high school is worth in actual money $9 to the high-school graduate.

Unedicated laborers earn on an average 3500 per year for forty years—a total of $20,000.

High-school graduates earn on an average $1,000 per year for forty years—a total of $40,000

This education required a total of 2,160 days. These days added a net increase of $9.02 each to the total income, or $20,000 in all.

The New York Bridge Department pays $982 in positions demanding only reading and writing and arithmetic.

In positions demanding high-school and commercial courses, $1,729.

In positions demanding high-school and two or three years in college or technical training $2,400.

Not only is there always room at the top; there is always a larger pay check for the fellow who gets there. Experience proves that the high-school graduate has 7 times she chance of reaching there that the uneducated one has, and the college graduate $00 times the chance.

Among the Colored Folks

Report From the Field.

On the fourth Lord's day in June I began a tent meeting at Martin, Tenn... under the direction of the white church at that place. This is a place where the white brethren decided to do some mission work among my people. Interest was good, and two precious souls obeyed the gospel of Jesus Christ-a woman and a man about seventy years old. It was a pleasure to meet these Christian white brethren, who cooperated with me in every way that was needful. Brother Winstead and Brother Smith were real brethren to me: in fact, they all showed me every encouragement they could, and I am stronger and more determined to live on for Christ and to preach his word. Brother Smith said that there were some white people who attended this meeting that would not go to the white church, and some of them said they will obey the gospel when their meeting is held. Brother T. J. Latham (colored) and several others who live out about twelve miles came in nearly every night and gave every assistance they could. Brother Latham has always encouraged me in my work. The white church has arranged with me to spend a month there next year.

On the second Lord's day in July I began a meeting at Newbern, Tenn. I have labored with these brethren in several meetings, but I believe this meeting was the best yet—at least, the brethren said so. Interest was good. The white people came in large numbers. I baptized three precious souls on Saturday morning. One made the confession at the water. I have promised to labor with them next year, These brethren certainly know how to entertain strangers.

I began a meeting at Henderson, Tenn., on the third Lord's day in July. For five years I have begun here on this date. Interest is good. Two confessions and baptisms yesterday, and four to be baptized this evening. I now think I will have an encouraging report to make about this meeting. The white people here always aid and encourage us in our work. They are attending regularly at each service.

I have been away from my family now about three months, and I yet have one more meeting to hold before I can be blessed with seeing them again. To be away from home and loved ones almost all the time is a great sacrifice; but when I think of the reward that is laid up for the faithful, I am willing to go on preaching the gospel of Jesus Christ.

M. KEEBLE.

A Christian Colony.

BY FRED M, LITTLE.

Two and one-half miles south of Wetumpka, Ala., there is a plantation of seventeen hundred and forty acres which was purchased by some brethren from different points in Middle Tennessee. A great portion of the farm is first-bottom land along the Tallapoosa River, which has growing on it a very promising crop of corn. The farm is well watered and has a great deal of commercial timber, with hundreds of acres of pasture land. As I walked over the plantation I was impressed with the graciousness of God, who provides so much for man to use while he makes the journey from the cradle to the grave, Twelve families live on this plantation, and every member of each family having reached the age of accountability is a member of the church. There not being a house of worship of the church of Christ in the community, these brethren converted one of the dwelling houses into a house of worship by taking out the partition walls and seating the room with folding chairs. Here this little band carries on the work of the church with all the zeal and earnestness of any congregation in any city. Any male member will lead in prayer, a number will lead the song service, and at least two of the number are good preachers. They have arranged to have a tent meeting by a colored preacher for the negroes in or near Wetumpka. They are also going out and holding meetings at mission points that are accessible to them. They are liberal with their means, and recognize the fact that God is entitled to a portion of their time and possessions. I preached for them five evenings during the week beginning July 17, and I never enjoyed a meeting more than this one. All love each other. They seem to very nearly have all things in common. Seven children obeyed the gospel. Truly it is a Christian colony.

Help Needed at Poplar Bluff, Mo. BY L. M. WARD.

If there was ever a place on the earth that needed the truth or an ouportunity to do good, Poplar Bluff certainly is such a place. Some three or four years ago we purchased from the Methodists their property for twentyfive hundred dollars, which sum we are paying in monthly payments, and at this time we owe approximately fifteen hundred dollars. Now, under present conditions, we cannot pay this debt and at the same time pay a preaching brother. We have only six or seven to bear the burden. There are also ten or twelve other faithful members, but they can help but very little in his way; while there are several lukewarm folks and some other prospects whom we feel sure would obey, if we could continue the preach-Brother C. B. Colvin has been working with us for a while, but just as we began to see some results we were forced to discontinue the preaching on account of our financial condi-

We would be glad to give any other information desired as to the worthiness of the congregation. We refer to Brethren T. B. Thompson, J. E. Laird, J. T. Hinds and C. B. Colvin. These brethren have been here and are somewhat acquainted with the conditions existing here. Brethren, will you kindly let us hear from you soon? Send contributions to the church of Christ at Poplar Bluff, Mo., in care of L. M. Ward.

Fine Meeting at Albany, Ala.

BY J. PETTEY EZELL.

On the third Sunday in July the church at Albany closed what was pronounced by all the best meeting in its history. The meeting was held in a large tent which the church had bought and pitched on their property in the very heart of the city. Brother G. C. Brewer, of Austin, Texas, did the preaching. This was his third meeting with the Albany church. He is held in the highest esteem in the whole community. His faith in God's word is unshaken and abiding. He is a bold, fearless, and uncompromising proclaimer of the Christ and his word. Thirty-two were added to the congregation, most of whom were baptized, ethers by letter, and others who came from the Christian Church and other denominations who claimed to have been scripturally baptized. Brother C. H. Woodroof, of Anniston, Ala., preached four excellent sermons in the beginning of the meeting. Brother A. L. Dixon and Hubert, his son, had charge of the song service the last two weeks of the meeting, and with their work all were pleased.

The church in Albany, though only eleven years old, has done, and is doing, much good. Its influence is being felt throughout the adjacent communities

We have been blessed by visits and preaching of many good men recently. Among the number was T. B. Thompson, of Huntsville, Ala. Brother Thompson is a new man in this section, but his labors are highly appreciated. He preached five nights the second week of July in the tent to large audiences. His sermons were directed against modern materialism and were presented in a masterly manner. During his visit we were blessed with a few-days' visit of Brother L B. Bradley and wife, who were accompanied by Sister Sarah Andrews. They aided much in the work.

Prof. James C. Dixon, of the Falkville High School, preached his first sermons last Sunday at Albany, and 1 have favorable reports from his efforts. He is destined to become a strong and useful preacher, and should have the encouragement of all Christians.

I am now in my third meeting at Springfield, Tenn., with good interest and two baptized to date.

Sunshine.

Nearly all of God's creatures need sunshine, whether in the field or factory, trees or towns. Mushrooms, of course, are an exception. A friend of mine found that by dedicating a large, damp, and unused cellar to the cultivation of mushrooms for market, he turned a liability into an asset. The less sunshine, the more mushrooms, But who wants to join the mushroom tribe? Roses, apples, and oaks need sunshine, and plenty of it; and so do folks-sunshine both outward and inward. We cannot grow healthfully in an atmosphere of gloom. We need smiles, songs, and joy, "A merry heart doeth good like a medicine. Few of the soul's most dangerous microbes can thrive in an atmosphere of Christian good cheer. Join the Propose yourself for happy band. membership if you cannot get any one else to hand in your name. Live where God can shine into you-plenty of sunshine. George C. Peck.

That in this day of the high cost of living we are invited to survey our Father's storehouse in the Glory? For it is full now, as it ever was, for his needy children. "Stretch forth thine hand."-Arthur Rehfeldt.

HOW WOMEN OF MIDDLE AGE

May Escape the Dreaded Sufferings of that Period by Taking Mrs. Block's Advice

Hopkins, Minn. - "During Change of Life I had hot flashes and suffered for

It has been said that not one woman in a thousand passes this perfectly natural change without experiencing a train of very annoying and sometimes painful symptoms. Those dreadful hot flashes, sinking spells, spots before the eyes, dizzy spells, nervousness, are only a few of the symptoms. Every woman at this age should prefit by Mrs. Block's experience and try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

If you have the slightest doubt that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will help you, write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass., about your health. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman, and held in strict confidence.

FIELD REPORTS

Havana, Ark., July 26 .- I closed the meeting here to-day at the water. Six baptisms during the meeting and much good otherwise done. This was my third meeting, and in many ways it was the best, as greater interest was shown than any time before. We had the largest crowds of any meeting, and almost every business and professional man attended. I go to Blaine, Ark., to begin on Friday night. Push the work .- D. S. Ligon.

Henderson, Tenn., July 27.—The meeting with the Union Grove Church, in Kentucky, closed at the water yesterday. The audiences at nearly all times were larger than could be accommodated, the order was almost perfect and the interest great throughout. Fourteen were baptized and two were restored. The church is deter-mined to do greater things in the fu-ture. The cause of the Master has many devoted members in this part I go to Middleton, Tenn., next.-A. G. Ereed.

Sedalia, Ky., July 25.—On the second Sunday in July I began a meeting at Sharon, Tenn, I was there only ten days and nights. The interest was good and the attendance was far better than usual for that place. We had real good crowds at each service, and two confessed Christ and were baptized. We were especially proud baptized. We were especially proud to see them come, for what they did is just a little out of the ordinary. Not many people ever obey the gospel after they are forty years old. This is what they both did. The man was in his seventy-fourth year, while the lady was about forty-five or fifty years old. I am now in a meeting at Antioch, Ky. We have had two services, and the house was filled at both services. I go next to Bethany, Tenn., for a meeting,-I. A. Douthitt, Bandana, Ky., July 28 .- A tent meeting was held recently in Badana by Brother Charlie Taylor, of Paducah. Ky., in which we believe much and lasting good was accomplished. While there was but one conversion, he being a man of ripened years with a wife and several children who had obeyed the gospel before him, the meeting was a great success, with much interest and thought by the large audiences who attended night after night and frequently asked questions regarding the facts of the gospel as presented from time to time. The meeting con-tinued over three Lord's days, and many attended from a distance. excellent preaching of God's word will tell in the future, and we trust that before long we may have another opportunity of hearing and having others to hear as forceful sermons from some faithful gospel preacher. Brother L. A. Wilson, of Westport, Tenn., conducted the song services in a splendid manner. Any one needing the services of either of these brethren will make no mistake in calling them. -L. H. Randolph.

Fort Smith, Ark., July 25.—Brother C. L. Bradley and I closed our second meeting at Atkins last night. Large crowds at every service, and on Sunday nights we had at least eight hundred people to hear us. Eleven were haptized, the church was strengthened, and much prejudice was removed Last year the other churches of the town began a union meeting in opposition to ours three days before we began, notwithstanding our meeting had been advertised for six months or more; but Brother Bradley and I conducted ourselves and our campaign in a way that won the admiration and love of the people, and we had a great meeting. So this year these churches, realizing their defeat last year, dis-missed all their services, except Sunday morning, and attended our meeting throughout. Brother Bradley and his good wife did their part well in the song service, and I did the best I could with the preaching, and the brethren all seemed to be well pleased with our humble efforts. Moulton, Ala., July 25.—Brother L. B. Jones, of Murfreesboro, Tenn., closed one of the best meetings last night that the Moulton congregation has ever had. The services were well attended, considering the fact that the membership at Moulton is not very large. The sermons were lessons so clearly taught that any unprejudiced listener could but accept—so simple that a child could understand, and yet so deep and clear that the wisest could but enjoy. There were, in all, five additions-one young man and four young women, all members of the regular Sunday-school classes. There were others almost persuaded who might have accepted Christ had the meeting continued. If the members at Moulton—those who were members long ago—would all live closer to Christ, the cause would be built up more easily. A building fund is being accumulated by small monthly contributions. Brother Jones promised to return for a meeting next year. Brother Bert Delashaw, of Nashville, who times his annual home-coming to be with us during the meeting, rendered a service very much appreciated by leading in the song service. Earl M. Hodson.

Union, S. C., July 26.—The tent meeting closed last Lord's-day night with the largest crowd of any time during the meeting. This is one place that we had the tent last year, but it seemed at the time that we did but little good: but this year we have reaped what we sowed last. We also had a much better hearing this year and realize that many heard that will obey later. One baptism Sunday night, two last night, and another to follow soon. Large audiences last Lord's day. Thirty in the advanced class. Brother and Sister Gibbs are the very type of workers we need in this field. The people love them devotedly. Last Friday I went on a trio among the scattered brethren near Woodruff. My first stop was with Brother Knighton. I found them getting along nicely. I preached to a very appreciative audience at night On Saturday I went to Brother Kelly's home in the neighborhood where they threatened to mob us two years ago. On Sunday morning Brother Kelly and I went about ten miles to visit Brother Wilson and family, and found them as sound in the faith as ever. In the afternoon we met in the home of Brother Kelly, also at night.

At each service we had souls who seemed very much interested. I heard of people in all these neighborhoods who are very anxious for us to pitch our tent their way. Brother Gibbs will begin a tent meeting in Union on Saturday or Sunday night. Fray for vs.—Thomas H. Burton.

How Coca-Cola Resembles Tea

If you could take about one-third of a glass of tea, add two-thirds glass of carbonated water, then remove the tea flavor and add a little lemon juice, phosphoric acid, sugar, caramel and certain flavors in the correct proportion, you would have an almost perfect glass of Coca-Cola.

In fact, Coca-Cola may be fairly described as "a carbonated, flavored counterpart of tea, of approximately one-third the stimulating strength of the average cup of tea."

The following analyses, made and confirmed by the leading chemists throughout America, show the comparative stimulating strength of tea and Coca-Cola stated in terms of the quantity of caffein contained in each:

Black tea-1 cupful......1.54 gr. (hot) (5 fl. oz.)

Green tea-1 glassful 2.02 gr. (cold) (8 fl. oz., exclusive of ice)

Of all the plants which Nature has provided for man's use and enjoyment, none surpasses tea in its refreshing, wholesome and helpful qualities. This explains its almost universal popularity,

The Coca-Cola Company has issued a booklet giving detailed analysis of its recipe. A copy will be mailed free on request to anyone who is interested. Address:

FIELD REPORTS

Huntingdon, Tenn., July 25.- I am here in a meeting which began yester-I will be here till about Tuesday day. night after the fifth Sunday; then I go to Rogers, Ark., and will be there two weeks; and from there I go to Providence, Ky., for about ten days, and then to Dry Creek, near Waverly, Tenn. I have moved to Henderson, Tenn. My work with the church at Waverly was pleasant in every way and we were at peace all the while. The meeting at Dry Creek is a mission meeting. The church at Waverly supports it, with the help of those who live near Dry Creek,-John C. Taylor.

Murray, Ky., July 26.—The meeting at Oakwood, near Clarksville, Tenn., closed on last Wednesday evening, with six accessions to the local congregation—four baptisms, one from the Baptists, and one from the Meth-odists. This was my second meeting there, and the best one. This is a splendid body of people, and I enjoyed my stay with them very much. This church is cooperating with other congregations in the county in supporting Brother Jasper Malphurs, who is doing a great work throughout the county. They have a tent and mean to have the gospel preached in every nook and corner of that part of the Lord's vineyard. The churches speak highly of Brother Malphurs and seem to be determined to stand by him. The Oakwood brethren spoke to me about returning for a meeting next year or in two years, but my time is so taken as to make it impossible for me to redate myself for even two years hence. The good Lord has always blessed me with plenty of work to do. God forbid that I should boast; but for the information of some, I am glad to say that I have never asked for a place to preach, nor had to have a letter of recommendation, since I have been trying to preach, and have always had all I could do, often more than I could do. This statement is not meant to cast any reflection upon any of my worthy brethren who have done both. Jehovah is a great deal better to any of us than we deserve,-T. B. Thompson.

Shall They Go?

BY F. B. SHEPHERD.

For more than a year I have retrained from writing about the African mission work because of the delay in getting permission from the British government for our missionaries to enter Rhodesia: but after much prayer to God and correspondence with authorities on both sides of the Atlantic Ocean, the desired ends have been attained, and word comes from Brother Sherriff that the High Commissioner has received orders to admit Messrs. Short and Gibbs with their families.

Still another obstacle must be over come which has arisen because of the delay and disappointment attendant upon this work of securing permission to enter British African territory as missionaries. The church that was expecting to assume responsibility for Brother Gibbs has turned its attention to other work, and we are accordingly facing the embarrassing situation of having a man ready for the work, the was opened up by God for his going, but necessary funds for his transportation and full assurance of support while on the field lacking.

I have on hand toward transportation some two hundred dollars, but it will cost nearly six hundred more to place these missionaries at their destination-Bulawayo. It is not much for a brotherhood of fifty thousand to raise, but it may mean lots to the cause of the Lord Jesus in South Africa to have these vigorous young Americans associated with the white and colored brethren already there, Will you have a part in sending the gospel to the Americans, Europeans, and natives of the still "Dark Continent?" Write me at 1409-A Jackson. Amarillo, Texas.

HOW ABOUT YOUR EYES?

Are you attempting to judge your brother? Would you criticize him or give him any advice as to his conduct? Then be sure that you are a man of clear, unprejudiced vision. Here is what Jesus says about motes and beams: "And why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye, but considerest not the beam that is in thine own eye? Or how wilt thou say to thy brother, Let me cast out the mote out of thine eye; and lo, the beam is in thine own eye? Thou hypocrite, cast out first the beam out of thine own eye; and then thou shalt see clearly to cast out the mote out of thy brother's eye." (Matt. 7: 3-5.)

In his Second Epistle, Peter, after enumerating what we call the eight Christian graces, adds: "For he that lacketh these things is blind, seeing only what is near." It is not our purpose to wrest this text, but to make it the basis of a practical word we think ought to be spoken—it suggests nearsightedness upon the part of many good people.

While we think good people should ever be optimists, we have personally known men and women of excellent Christian character who were pessimists. Pessimism is an affliction which undermines the happiness of the individual and likewise retards the progress of good causes. We think the most practical definition of pessimism would be "nearsightedness." The pessimist sees "only what is near." The physical malady, the bereavement, the financial strait, the evils of the community, the heresies in religion, the complications in church work, the unsettled world conditions—these things are immediately before him, they are black, and he cannot see beyond them. Hence his perpetual gloom, his downcast countenance, his hesitating attitude, and his doleful words.

Again, there are good people who are overoptimistic. They see, in a way, beyond that which is near, but they do not see straight—they see men as trees walking. In reality, they are nearsighted, but don't know it. They reckon not with the cloud that is like a man's hand—to them it is no larger than a man's thumb nail, and it is disappearing. People thus afflicted are visionary—they magnify and follow fads; and if they happen to be brilliant or of personal charm, as leaders in the State or the church or the community, they frequently, but unintentionally, bring to pass situations that are disastrous.

There is still another class, usually in the minority—people who take into consideration the philosophy of history, who have patience that is coupled with unshaken faith in the power of God to ultimately bring order out of chaos, who are content to work and pray and hope and wait. They have clear, straight vision, can see both near and far—and they generally see things as they are.

Pessimism is to be deplored, but not more so than overoptimism. The optimism which steadies situations, and upon which God depends, is long-sighted and clear-sighted.

CURRENT THOUGHT

Exact and Yet Lax.

It is not an obsolete custom to "strain out a gnat and swallow a camel." Some people will insist on being exact and nice in their observance of certain phases of the moral law and the proprieties of Christian living while they apparently accord themselves the privilege of being lax in others. They are not to be censured for practicing any part of their duty, but for their disregard of any part of it. A man is not to be condemned for seeing the mote that is in his brother's eye, but his guilt consists in his blindness or insensibility to the beam that is in his own. Christ said to the self-righteous scribes and Pharisees who tithed the anise and cummin, but neglected the weightier matters of the law: "These ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone."—Baptist and Reflector.

Excuse the pun, but the Baptist who "reflected" the above editorial paragraph gave out a very good and timely observation. The inconsistent and self-righteous class he describes is not confined to the Baptists by any means. This fact has been recently impressed upon the writer's mind. I am thinking of one man who did wrong and who made public acknowledgment of his wrongdoing to the church and to the world, leaving nothing undone in the way of confession. There is another man who also did wrong, committing a flagrant offense, and made confession to one preacher who was a close personal friend. And now this second party is trying to teach the first one some of the "proprieties of Christian living." This brought home to my heart the Master's burning words: "And why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye, but considerest not the beam that is in thine own eye? Or how wilt thou say to thy brother, Let me cast out the mote out of thine eye: and lo, the beam is in thine own eye? Thou hypocrite, cast out first the beam out of thine own eye; and then shalt thou see clearly to cast out the mote out of thy brother's eye.' (Matt. 7: 3-5.) 0 0 0

Reaching the Masses in a Unique Way.

Central Presbyterian Church, Denton, Texas, A. Reilly Cepeland, pastor, has a unique way of reaching the masses with the gospel.

The church has placed literature bags in prominent places throughout the city and elsewhere. These bags have thirty pockets each, and are filled with the best tracts that teach spiritual, patriotic, and educational truths, with emphasis on the spiritual.

For instance, in Denton, these bags are placed in the church, Sunday-school annex, schools (two State colleges), city hall, central office, courthouse, barber shops, hotels, cafés, mills, and the depot. Authorities gladly coöperate by giving permission.

In addition to this, Central Church has these bags in the depots along the railroads out of Denton, and plan soon to extend the work as funds permit. Funds are secured in a very simple manner. Mr. E. Hugh Egan, a layman, of Denton, is chairman of the work, and all offerings are strictly voluntary. This means free will in spirit as well as in name. Most of the funds come from members of the church, yet it is left open to any one who is interested in this program of work.

Mr. Copeland says it is marvelous how all classes read these tracts in great quantities. He thinks it is the most effective and the most economical form of evangelism known to the church to-day. It is purely an unselfish labor of love.

As this is an age of propaganda, it is a timely suggestion to pastors and church people to avail themselves of this method of gospelizing, which carries on night and day. Only evangelical tracts are used. The work is nonsectarian and interdenominational.

Any one desiring information as to how to put on the tract work, may write the Denton pastor, who will cheerfully give particulars concerning it. Any one can do it fully give particulars concerning it. Any one can do it.

A number of large publications in America and elsewhere have given news articles of this work as it is being carried on by this church. Since then quite a number of people in the United States have written the pastor about it. Interest is growing rapidly. Several Christian business men have suggested that it would be a splendid thing if Mr. Copeland could devote his whole time to the work as a tract evangelist and serve any church when called for that purpose, if interested friends would make it possible financially.

Tract messages reach all classes of people, because they can be secured in any language and can go anywhere. They are always polite and never talk back. Their impressions are permanent, and results are sure from these heart-gripping evangelistic truths. Each message is complete and the best of its kind.

In addition to the spiritual, patriotic, and educational features of the tracts, the church announcements can be attractively displayed on the space at top of literature bags, thus making a permanent advertisement for the church doing the work. The beautiful green canvas bag looks well anywhere.

Central Presbyterian Church also has a free book table in the vestibule, supplied with an assortment of the best ten leading subjects. These books are also paid for by voluntary offerings from those interested. Many read them and pass them on.

There are two book tables near the main entrance, loaded with a large assortment of orthodox books with printed prices on outside of covers. One can select books desired and leave money in the plate. This method is safe and satisfactory.

By these methods, the sermons and the church's ministry are increased a hundredfold. Mr. Copeland hopes to interest thousands in this effective way of spreading the truths of Christianity.

Mr. Copeland deserves credit for the origination of an effective plan of tract distribution, and he is to be commended especially for his desire to pass it on to others. He was so anxious that other churches should profit by his experience that he induced his own congregation to issue the above statement in circular form and to send it broadcast. The Gospel Advocate appreciates this courtesy and has given the matter this prominence with the hope that the churches of Christ may do greater things in the way of tract evangelism. No one has so grand a plea as the preacher of the New Testament plan of salvation. "I'll tell the world" should be his motto in the propagation of that plea.

Plows Do Not Sell-Autos Do Sell.

A news report from Indianapolis, Ind., says: "One of the greatest and oldest plow manufacturing establishments in the country, located at South Bend, Ind., and employing around four thousand men, has shut down entirely, and reports state that some $6,000,000 worth of unsold farm implements are awaiting better times in agricultural centers. On the other hand, one of the leading automobile manufacturing establishments in the country, located at the same point, and employing six thousand men, working full blast, has just paid off some $8,500,000 indebtedness, and has unfilled orders for some seventy-five thousand cars. Prosperity is also evidenced by steady work in one of the great corset factories and sewing machine plants of the country located at South Bend. A large mill at Mashatawa is working full blast, with demands for rubber boots and many kinds of woolen products declared to be greater than that of this time a year ago. Wholesale distributors of dry goods in the Chicago market report retail buyers are resuming active buying to a degree greater than last year." The big question is: "How long can these other industries prosper if plows do not sell?" The prosperity that is returning seems to be out of balance in some way.-Christian Advocate.

It appears from the above paragraph that the chief difficulty in our country, economically speaking, is not idleness, but unwise distribution of labor. It is a sad commentary upon any nation when we find its people more bent upon riding in automobiles and wearing corsets than they are in producing bread. We are reminded of James' remark about fruitless prayer: "Ye ask, and receive not, because ye ask amiss, that ye may spend it in your pleasures." The "back-to-the-farm" movement should be encouraged in every legitimate way. It is not only conducive to better health, but the very life of the nation depends upon its success. The world should be taught that he is a true philanthropist who produces bread for the needy.

Letter to J. W. Brents.

Nashville, Tenn.—Mr. J. W. Brents, Athens, Ala.—Dear Jimmie: I have read your article in the Gospel Advocate, entitled "John B. Cowden's New Book," and I cannot refrain from noticing some surprising statements in the same. It is surprising in many respects.

In the first place, contrary to the heading, it is a review of me instead of my book. It contains practically nothing about the book, but much about myself and others in no way connected with the book. A book is supposed to stand upon its own merits, and to be so reviewed without personalities. I regret, therefore, that you allowed personalities to come between you and the book. The book is an impersonal thing, and I resent nothing said about it; it either stands or falls upon its own merits; but I do resent your personal statements about myself and others, which are displeasing in the extreme. Personalities are the last resort of one that cannot meet the issues, and are sure evidence of a failing cause, besides being disagreeable and often damaging.

In the second place, your article is surprising in that you know more about these persons than they know about themselves. Although I have tried to keep a close watch on myself, you have told me some things about myself that I never knew before. I never knew before that I had changed my positions on some disputed matters and left a people with whom I used to stand. Not that I would hesitate to do this, if I saw that I was wrong; in fact, I have changed my views on many things as I received more light and truth, and I hope that I shall always be thus openminded to truth and have sufficient moral courage to stand for it, whatever may be my affiliations; but I have no recollection of having changed my views and positions with respect to the things which you mention in your article. There was a time in my early Christian life and ministry that I had no convictions as to these things, because I had not studied them for myself, nor heard them discussed. They were not an issue in my early life; but when they became an issue. I studied both sides of these questions with all the light that I could get, arriving at the views that I now hold, and so far I have not seen anything to cause me to change; however, I am still open to any new light upon these things, which, if you have, you might have given in your article instead of the many personalities, and might have thereby reclaimed me from the errors into which you say I have fallen and restored me to my "first love."

Furthermore, I did not know of the idolatry and way-wardness in me, as stated by you in these words: "He 'bowed the knee,' 'waxed fat, and kicked.'" This is a serious charge, if it be true; so please be specific and point out this idolatry and perverseness. Also, who are these people for whom I am preaching "who have in a large measure surrendered the principles of the Restoration movement?" If I ever preached for such a people, I did not know it; so I am anxious to know who they are. You make these scrious charges publicly against me and them, and surely your sense of justice and honesty will not allow you to refuse to prove your damaging statements.

As to the other persons mentioned in your article, those living can speak for themselves, but I must protest against your misrepresentation of the dead. I think that I have heard Dr. Brents and Billie Dixon preach much more than you, and I never heard either of them speak of these things, nor do I believe that you ever did. In fact, those who were closest to Dr. Brents (his children) tell me that he was not opposed to these things, as is evident also from his writings left behind, which contain nothing about these things. It is not possible for Dr. Brents to have been as bitterly opposed to these things as you say, and failed to have gone on record against them, because he always spoke out in no uncertain terms against things of which he did not approve. Though related to him, you have no right to misrepresent him. However, "though dead," "he yet speaketh" through others nearer to him than you.

As to Mr. Leonard's views. I went to school to him for years, and heard him preach continuously, and often talked with him privately about things religious, but I never heard him mention these things. Furthermore, his children tell me that he was not opposed to these things, except as they caused trouble in the church; and, in fact, he preferred the use of an instrument, which, he said, the meaning of "psallo" permits. Now, is it not strange that you know more about him than his own children?

However, if these teachers of mine had been opposed to these things, I would have to still be in favor of them, because I consider "the Scriptures inspired of God" of higher authority than the teaching and traditions of the fathers, notwithstanding my great debt to them and my deep reverence for their memory. This is one of the fundamental truths laid in me by Mr. Leonard along with many others of equal importance. He taught me nothing on the subject of instrumental music in the churches, because, I suppose, his time and attention as a teacher were given to weightier matters, for which I am profoundly grateful. I, therefore, take it as no violence to his memory, much less a "tragedy," that I should dedicate my book to him as an expression of my gratitude to him. Indeed, the "tragedies" of your article are that you seek to damage the living by your unwarranted statements and to misrepresent the dead by your false suppositions. I regret very much that you allowed your zeal for error, "a zeal not according to knowledge," to lead you so astray in your review of my-Yours very truly, John B. Cowden. self and others.

The Perfect Heart. No. 1.

BY JAMES E, SCOBEY.

When we consider the life of man, we find there is much for him to learn, which he must know, that will enable him to gain the largest degree of happiness out of it. God, throughout the ages past, has taught man the course of life which would afford him the greatest amount of good.

In this age of the world, while man has made wonderful discoveries and has sought out and accomplished more wonderful inventions in the physical world by his keen and incisive intellectual force in the investigation of the laws of nature, he has not been able to demonstrate the fact that he has discovered a single spiritual thought, or knows anything of the spiritual world, save that which it has pleased God to reveal. There is, therefore, only one source from which man may learn that or those things which can give happiness both for time and eternity; and these things are found in the revelation which God has made and which is recorded in the book called "the Bible."

Man is continually seeking to free himself from the burdens and exactions of the things which give him unrest. The gratification of the animal appetites and propensities, the indulgence of the lusts of the flesh, is largely resorted to on the part of the world to find the relief sought.

Man, under the influence of drugs, narcotics, and stimulants, may forget his ills, but his soul is still burdened and heavy laded. From this condition there is only one true source of relief for the soul. Jesus says: "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls." Rest to the soul gives satisfaction, which is genuine happiness in time; and if in immortality and eternal life it find rest, it will be superlatively happy.

The soul of man is the most important factor in his constitution. The soul is the true man, the inner man. The rest of the soul which Jesus promises to those who will take upon themselves his yoke and learn of him should be the most important object sought in life. Jesus said: "What shall it profit a man, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul? or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?" The saving of the soul can be effected in only one way, and that is by a man becoming subject to the rule of Jesus Christ and walking in harmony with him in the course of his life. The soul is all of man, save the body and spirit; but its function is to control the body, and, therefore, it is responsible for all of man's acts.

But there is more said in the Scriptures about the heart's activities than about the soul. Whatever thoughts one may have; whatever feelings, desires, or aversions he may manifest or indulge; whatever resolutions he may make, may all be referred to that function of the soul called the "heart." David, in speaking of the delinquencies of the Jews, said: "Nevertheless they did flatter him [God] with their mouth, and they lied unto him with their tongues. For their heart was not right with him, neither were they steadfast in his covenant." (Ps. 78: 36, 37.) If our heart is right with God, we will think God's thoughts, will speak his words, and will do his works. "For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath ordained before that we should walk in them." (Eph. 2: 10.)

The heart is the most important function of the soul. The heart may be pure, "Blessed are the pure in heart," said Jesus. We may have a perfect heart or an evil heart of unbelief. (Heb. 3: 12.) "The heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked," said the prophet. (Jer. 17: 9.) "Not that which goeth into the mouth defileth a man; but that which cometh out of the mouth, this defileth a man." (Matt. 15: 11.) "But those things which proceed out of the mouth come forth from the heart; and they defile the man. For out of the heart proceed evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, fornications, thefts, false witness, blasphemies: these are the things which defile a man." (Matt. 15: 18-20.) Therefore, the Psalmist, David, was moved to say: "Keep thy heart with all diligence: for out of it are the issues of life."

Solomon said to the people of Israel when he had dedicated the temple: "Let your heart therefore be perfect with the Lord our God, to walk in his statutes, and to keep his commandments, as at this day." The followers of Jesus Christ should strive day by day to have a perfect heart with God.

Asa, a king of Judah and a great grandson of Solomon, had a perfect heart all his days." (2 Chron. 15: 17.) When he succeeded his father as king, he attempted to destroy idolatry among the people, which his father had fostered. He destroyed the groves and overthrew the altars dedicated to the worship of Baal. He even destroyed the grove and altar of his mother and forbade her longer to be queen. He walked in the statutes of the Lord and kept his commandments.

Hezekiah was another king of Judah who walked with a heart perfect with God. He became sick unto death, and the prophet Isaiah came to him and said: "Set thine house in order; for thou shalt die, and not live." Hezekiah turned his face to the wall and prayed unto the Lord, saying: "I beseech thee, O Lord, remember how I have walked before thee in truth and with a perfect heart, and have done that which was good in thy sight." The Lord heard his prayer and extended his reign fifteen years.

But it might be asked: "What does it require to make or constitute a perfect heart?" From what has already been said, I think a logical deduction would justify us in saying that three things or conditions are necessary—(1) an understanding heart, (2) a feeling heart, (3) a willing heart. A man who understands God's will, what God requires of him, and feels that he ought and must do his will, and resolves to do all he can do to accomplish the will of God, has a perfect heart. "All these men of war, that could keep rank, came with a perfect heart to Hebron, to make David king over all Israel." (1 Chron. 12: 38.) To walk in the way of God with a perfect heart makes the perfect man. Such a man will be led by the Spirit and will be a son of God. "For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God." (Rom, 8: 14.)

Jesus said to his disciples: "Be ye therefore perfect; even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect." (Matt. 5: 48.) God is perfect because he never has violated a principle of his government. He has never done that which was wrong. No one, it seems to me, could have any respect for the religion of Christ, if the standard of character were less than that of perfection.

Jesus, in exhorting his disciples to be perfect, did not mean they should become immaculate—that is, to be for the rest of their lives entirely sinless. There are some people now claiming to be in that condition. I once heard a Holiness preacher say he had not for over twenty years committed a single sin; indeed, could not sin, because all the roots of sin had been plucked out of his heart. But John, the apostle, says: "If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us." (1 John 1: 8.) Which should we believe, the preacher or the apostle? The perfection of the Christian consists in his being directed by the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus. If he sins, he has an advocate with the Father; so that, if he confesses his sin, sincerely repents and, through his advocate, Jesus Christ, asks God's forgiveness, God will keep his promise to forgive.

Perfection of character is secured and maintained by a faithful performance of all the duties and responsibilities made incumbent on us by the manifold wisdom of God. Howbeit, many, very many, professed Christians seem to think they need not do all the things the law of the Spirit demands. They fail to go to the assembly of the saints on the Lord's day to engage in the work and worship of the congregation. They fail to show the Lord's death till he come by partaking of the emblems of his body and his blood. I fear that those of us who fail in duty shall fail to reach the mark of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus.

Let us keep our hearts right with God, that we may serve him to divine acceptance, glorifying him in our bodies and spirits, which are the Lord's. And by the grace of God, this we can do if we will.

Greatest of All Virtues.

Gratitude means that memory has come to the aid of purpose, and that praise is reinforcing prayer. Gratitude links the past with the future, the debt incurred with the duty to be performed, the service received with the service rendered. The question, "What ought we to do for others?" cannot receive a proper answer until pains have been taken to weigh and value all that others have already done for us. Benevolence is largely an affair of memory and of the gratitude that memory inspires. The benevolence that is most beneficent does not begin, as some moralists seem to think, in a desire to do good to other people. but in adequate recognition of the enormous amount of good which other people have done to ourselves. Ninetenths of what we have to give is a gift bestowed upon us, and only when this is realized does altruism rest upon its proper ground, or feel the full force of the motives which impel the individual to the service of others. Divorced from gratitude, all the social virtues would shrivel.-L. P.

Denver (Col.) Notes. BY JOHN D. EVANS.

Beginning on July 10, Brother N. B. Hardeman, of Henderson, Tenn., conducted a series of meetings in Denver. He was here over three Lord's days, and created musual interest, not only among the members of the church, but those who were on the outside. He preached the old-fashioned gospel with great power and "in love." The crowds, while not so large as Tennessee folks are accustomed to, grew from the beginning, as did the interest. As is frequently the case, the meeting closed too soon, but on account of other engagements Brother Hardeman could not remain longer. The visible results were five baptisms and one restoration. One young man from the Methodists made the confession the last night of the meeting and was baptized later. Last Lord's day four others placed their membership with us. Brother E. C. Fuqua and Brother Farrar, of Florence, Ala., were both with us during the early part of the meeting and rendered valuable assistance. Brother Davis, of Dallas, Texas, and Brother Roush, of Topeka, Kan., were also with us. Brother R. V. Robinson, of Stephenville, Texas, is at Tilden's Sanitarium here to recuperate. Brother J. C. Estes, who recently came to Denver from Dallas, Texas, was on the ground. So, all in all, the meeting was a feast to the preachers present and the whole church. It was the consensus of opinion that Brother Hardeman should be annexed to our Colorado forces for a permanency.

The meetinghouse in process of construction at Boulder will soon be ready for occupancy. It is a nice building, made of brick and stucco, conveniently located. Thus the work in Colorado goes on.

Brother E. C. Fuqua, who is now in the midst of a good tent meeting at Fort Collins, expects to "pitch his tent" in Englewood, a suburb of Denver, during this month. Brother Clayton Gall is to be in a meeting at Rocky Ford, Col. Brother Farrar, of Florence, Ala., baptized a number at his meeting in Routt County, Col.

Brother and Sister W. G. McConnell, of Dallas, Texas, and Sisters Hooper and Watson, from Thorp Spring, Texas, who were in Denver and Boulder to take special work in the Denver University and the University of Colorado, have returned home.

Every Lord's day we have visitors from several different States. They are always welcome.

The Porter-Wright Debate.

BY F. L. PAISLEY.

While I heard only one day of this debate, which makes it impossible for me to make a full report thereof, I wish to make a few observations of some things that occurred that one day.

This debate began on July 11 and continued three days, one day each on the following propositions. W. C. Wright, of digressive fame, affirmed the first and third days, respectively, "Man is wholly mortal," and, "Only the regenerated will be raised from the dead." The second day (the day I was there) Brother W. Curtis Porter affirmed, "Those who die in disobedience to the gospel of Christ will suffer everlasting punishment (eternal torment)." It may seem strange that a "progressive Christian" will debate such issues and contend for such doctrines, but it is simply "over the top" in the "progressive movement." Wright was driven to admit this last proposition, with the exception of the phrase "eternal torment." He would have been driven to admit that part, but his artful dodging saved him.

Just one of Porter's arguments do I wish to mention and Wright's escape. After the usual course on the passages teaching the punishment of the wicked, Porter pressed his final affirmative on Rev. 14: 9-12. Wright said that "worshipeth" is present tense, and the "beast" was the pope, and the "torment" lasted during the time that they worship the heast; that the expression, "they have no rest day and night," cannot refer to eternity, because there is no night in eternity, according to Rev. 22: 5. This put him in an embarrassing position when Porter called attention to the fact that while there will be no literal marking of time by day and night as we count time, yet, according to Rev. 7: 15, "they serve him day and night in his temple," which shows that the expression "day and night" is an accommodating term expressing a continuation of service in this last reference and a continuation of suffering (eternal torment) in Rev. 14: 11. Porter did a fine work just here in spite of his opponent's ridicule of a "burning, frizzling, frying hell." Wright allowed that "unquenchable fire" is fire that cannot be put out, but that will go out when no more material is added to keep up the flames. This made Porter curious to know just how the "smoke of their torment" could go up "forever and ever" after the material had all been burned "instantly" and the fire had gone out, as had been implied that it would. Yes, it made me wonder if there is not "a little fire where there is so much smoke."

The debate was to have been held in Monette, Ark., but some of the "better element," as Wright called them in ridicule, afraid of discussion, refused to allow it in town, and it was held about two miles out of town in a shady grove. This caused an interesting thing to occur. From the beginning Porter pressed Wright to meet some of us in debate on these and the music question in Caruthersville, Mo., Wright's home town, and where we used to have property, but which has been taken by the cunning manipulations of Wright's congregation. This challenge was ignored till Wright's last speech the second day. He explained (?) that the church in Caruthersville did not wish a debate there and had especially urged him during the writer's meeting there in May not to allow a debate to be brought there under any considerations. He spent the rest of his speech begging sympathy from the audience by his artful tactics, which he can use well when needed. In this speech he gave the people of Monette a cutting reproof for trying to put a curb on religious investigation and being self-appointed guardians for things of the kind. I was anxious to hear Porter call attention the next day to the fact that all he said about Monette very forcefully applied to his home congregation in that they also refuse to allow investigation of Wright's unscriptural doctrines and their unauthorized practices in Caruthersville, hence are doing the very things he charged on the people of Monette.

From the standpoint of deportment on the part of the speakers, this debate was first-class. Not a slur or personal reflection by either speaker. Each man is a good speaker and has his position well in hand. Wright has the advantage over Porter in a strong voice. This is the only way that I thought the truth suffered in what I heard of the discussion. Wright is prematurely gray, indicating no little study. Porter is only twenty-four, but shows a good acquaintance with the Book and the doctrines he is combating. He that meets Wright in discussion will have no greater task than meeting his artful dodging and play on the meaning of words. Yet no novice can well defend the truth against him.

Critics and the Bible.

Last eve I paused beside a blacksmith's door And heard the anvil ring the vesper chime; Then, looking in, I saw upon the floor Old hammers worn with beating years of time.

"How many anvils have you had," said I,
"To wear and batter all these hammers so?"
"Just one," said he; then said with twinkling eye:
"The anvil wears the hammers out, you know."

And so, I thought, the anvil of God's word
For ages skeptic blows have beat upon;
Yet, though the noise of falling blows was heard,
The anvil is unharmed—the hammers gone.

"John B. Cowden's Book."

BY J. W. BRENTS.

In the Gospel Advocate of June 16 there appeared an article from my pen under the above heading. On another page will be found a letter which was addressed to "Rev." J. W. Brents by my near kinsman, John B. Cowden, in which he takes me to task for some things contained therein. At the time the article was written I was in Alabama, and it was not convenient for me to see Brother Cowden and ask him in person just what I should say, and now he is seemingly very much displeased.

His first objection is that my article is entirely "contrary to the heading." Owing to the fact that the greater part of the book consists in duties to Christians which we all can agree upon, and, too, since Brother Kurfees and G. Dallas Smith had reviewed his arguments upon the music question, and since the book was dedicated to Mr. Leonard, who warned me at my father's funeral not to forsake the "old paths," the circumstances brought forth a necessity for my saying the things I did in said article. "What I have written I have written;" and if I was unfortunate in giving it a name. I have no objections to its being renamed; and, too, if I became too personal, I tried to do it in the spirit of Christ, believing the circumstances in this peculiar and extraordinary case demanded it. In fact, this may smack of presumption upon my part, but it was a humble effort "to take Brother Cowden in hand and try to save him from himself," as was suggested by Brother F. W. Smith in his commendation of my article.

Personalities! Who has been dealing in personalities? Sharp, bitter, unwarranted personalities; personalities recorded in a book which will be read not only by the present generation, but by future generations as well. Hear him in his strictures upon Brother M. C. Kurfees, "Adding slander to falsehood," and go ask again who is the guilty party. Well do I remember Lofton's great book, "Character Sketches," and especially an article on "The Pot Calling the Kettle Black." Perhaps it would do Brother Cowden good to read this great book. He should remember that bald-headed men do not make a great success when it comes to selling hair tonic. Brother Cowden should remember that "personalities are the last resort of one that cannot meet the issues, and are a sure evidence of a failing cause, besides being disagreeable and often damaging."

Surprising indeed was it to him that I told him some things about himself that he never knew before-viz., that he had changed his position on some disputed matters; and he proceeds to explain that in his early Christian life they were not an issue. In this statement Brother Cowden places himself in a very peculiar attitude to me. Twenty-five years ago (and Brother Cowden hasn't been preaching longer than that) the churches in Tennessee were in the greatest excitement they have ever been in over this very question. Jim Haddock, Scheffer, A. I. Myhr, and others were doing their best to put an organ in every church in the country. Since then it has been an issue, and Brother Cowden has preached for churches all over Middle Tennessee that never used an organ and who were forced to place the "restrictive clause" in their deeds to prevent these things being forced into the churches against their earnest protest and conscientious convictions. Would like to have some light just why it was not an issue! Has Brother Cowden been asleep all these years? If he has not changed his convictions, let him try to go back to his old home congregation and preach for them, being sure to secure their church house (and not a tent), and we will be convinced.

He tells me I bring a very serious charge against him when I say he has "bowed the knee, waxed fat, and kicked." Would I be perverse when I say Brother Cowden has made the organ his idol, and the placing of this idol in every church in the land the supreme motive and purpose of his life? Then I am guilty. Brother Cowden has indeed

"bowed the knee" to the organ, "waxed fat, and kicked" out of line of "the old paths" and "the distinctive plea of the Restoration movement." A greater than I makes this grave and "serious charge publicly," and my sense of "justice and honesty" demands that I "prove my damaging statements" by this "prince of Bible critics." Hear John W. McGarvey: "It is manifest that we cannot adopt the practice without abandoning the obvious and only ground on which a restoration of primitive Christianity can be accomplished, or on which the plea for it can be maintained. Such is my profound conviction, and consequently the question with me is not concerning the choice or rejection of an expedient, but the maintenance or abandonment of a fundamental and necessary principle. . . . I hold that the use of the instrument is sinful, and I must not be requested to keep my mouth shut in the presence of sin whether committed by a church or an individual. The party which forces an organ into the church against the conscientious protest of a minority is disorderly and schismatical, not only because it stirs up strife, but because it is for the sake of a sinful innovation upon the divinely authorized worship of the church; and inasmuch as the persons thus acting are disorderly and schismatic, it is the duty of all good people to withdraw from them until they repent. It is universally admitted by those competent to judge that there is not the slightest indication in the New Testament of divine authority for the use of instrumental music in Christian worship." (In Apostolic Times, 1881, and "What Shall We Do About the Organ?" pages 4-10.) From this same source of information I quote from B. B. Tyler: "The simple fact is that to the extent that brethren urge the use of the organ to the detriment of the peace and harmony of the churches of Christ, to that extent do they surrender this fundamental principle of 'our distinctive plea' and become partisans and sectarians before the world." Thus my charge is sustained.

As one blind, deaf, and dumb, he demands that I tell him "who are these people who in a large measure have surrendered the principles of the Restoration movement." he ignorant of all the extremes to which the so-called "progressive Christian Church" has gone? Do I need call his attention again to their attempts at church federation, the vagaries of its up-to-date evangelism, or its worldly means and prostitutions of Christian worship to the entertainment of the crowd, or in the shameful salary-hunting, money-standard professionalism so prevalent among some of its preachers in some places? Here I wish to give Brother Cowden a quotation from the Springfield (Mo.) Republican which I recently clipped while in a meeting in that city: "Jefferson City, June 16.—For the first time in its history the Missouri Senate was opened with prayers offered by a woman. Mrs. P. E. Fritts, in charge of the Christian Church at Barry, Clay County, took the place of the Senate chaplain, Rev. E. Y. Keiter, of Moberly." Time and space would fail me to tell of all the departures these people have made. Church whistlers, Sunday-school baseball, baby show, mock marriage, moving-picture show, selecting pastor on looks, old maids' convention, sock social, miracles rejected, joining church of choice, sprinkling accepted-surely this is enough. True, they have not all gone that far, and some have nobly protested against some of these excesses and extremes; but it is from a few conscience-stricken ones who shrink back from the natural and logical issues of the course they have adopted. They had as well attempt to stop the tide of the Atlantic or change the course of the Amazon.

Again, I am forced to meet the grave and serious charge of misrepresenting the dead. The Lord knows I would be the last man on earth to be guilty of such a thing. Since making these statements I have gone to considerable time and expense to make some investigations, and I have learned (?) the following: The contest between Dr. Brents and A. I. Myhr for the position of "State evangelist" of Tennessee was very exciting, Dr. Brents being an old man, it was thought best to select Brother Myhr, who was more "progressive" in his views, being broad-minded and genial, and who attended strictly to his own church's affairs, letting the "sister denominations" alone; only he would attend the pastors' association, he being president of this august assembly in his home town at one time. Dr. Brents being so humiliated over his defeat, never mentioned these things again. When the matter came up over at Cane Creek as to who would be the organist, Brother Dixon put forth one of his favorite nieces for the position, but she was defeated, and this broke the spirits of Elder Dixon, and he never mentioned organs any more. Pshaw! These men, with John D. Floyd, B. F. Hart, David Lipscomb, E. G. Sewell, and Tolbert Fanning, stood firm against ail departures from the Bible. And even though we have no written statement against these things, we, on the other hand, have nothing for them; and had they been "of faith," they who stood for the whole counsel of God surely would have spoken, for those who favor it never fail to make it known. As to the views of Hiram F. Leonard, I merely stated that he warned me against the things Brother Cowden has embraced. I do not claim to know more about him than his children or even Brother Cowden, but I do know that the man Brother Cowden dedicated his book to warned me against going into the progressive Christian Church, and this under very grave circumstances which will follow me to the grave. I know nothing of his peculiar views on "psallo;" I have no reason or desire to deny that he held to such an idea; but if he did hold to such an idea, he kept it as his private opinion, and did not try to force his private views to the disruption of the churches, "but gave his time and attention to weightier matters, for which I am profoundly grateful." Grateful indeed! What a wonderful example set by Brother Cowden's old preceptor-gave his time to weightier matters, for which Brother Cowden is very thankful! How thankful? Enough to buy and equip a tent and pitch it in the towns of Petersburg, Fayetteville, and Flat Creek, ground made holy by the footprints of Jesse Sewell, T. B. Larimore, and a host of God's very own, and under this same tent on this same holy ground undertake to disrupt these churches by placing an organ in them. Yet Brother Leonard devoted his time to weightier matters. talk about damaging the living by "unwarranted statements" and misrepresenting the dead by "false suppositions," and a "zeal not according to knowledge," when I have clearly shown I am not the guilty party, but remember the awful sin of rending the body of Christ. One of the things the Lord hates is the "sowing of discord among brethren."

In conclusion, I wish to say I have no desire in any sense to injure Brother Cowden; and if I have injured him, I repent and plead for forgiveness. Though he is pursuing a course I believe to be pernicious and sinful, I love him still. I hallow the memory of his father, who was my uncle. I hate the cause and course Brother Cowden is pursuing. I pray that some day he may see his error and repent and return to the "old paths."

[Brother Dixon baptized me, and we were associated together in meetings. I know he opposed instrumental music in the worship and all human societies. I also know that Brother Leonard heartily indorsed a sermon I preached against those things.—F. W. Smith.]

The Sympathetic Touch.

The touch of human hands,
That is the boon we ask;
For, staggering day by day,
Under our heavy task,
We need the comrade heart that understands,
And the warmth—the living warmth
Of human hands.

A High Day at Sichel and Altura.

July 17 was a great day for our forces at Sichel and Altura Streets. We had an all-day meeting, with basket dinner at Sycamore Grove. Our house was filled to overflowing, and we had some most excellent addresses by Brethren G. W. Riggs, S. E. Witty, C. C. Condra, D. W. Nay, P. J. Taylor, and others. At the close of the forenoon services Brother Reavis and wife cast their lot with us from the Figuroa Christian Church. He is a brother of our Brother Reavis who lives at Summerville, Ga. I wish time and space would allow me to give the gist of each speech, but this I cannot now do. Suffice it to say that it was a great day and much good was done. Brother Sewell, of the San Francisco congregation, made a good report of the work that is being done in that city, and spoke in the highest terms of the effectiveness of Brother Larimore's life and preaching to further the cause there. When I have the time, I may give an outline of some of the speeches. We had visitors from Ontario, Pomona, Downey, Long Beach, and Santa Ana, and they left us feeling happier and better for having come. 0 0 0

A Needed Rest.

For the first time in twenty-five years I am to take a real, "sure-enough" rest. The Lord willing, we will leave Los Angeles on Monday, August 1, with full camping equipment, for a two-thousand-mile drive in an auto to Ada, Okla., where my wife's people live. The trip can be made in nine days, but we will take about sixteen days for it. The main purpose is to get away from letter writing or work of any kind and rest. Nothing have I appreciated in my life more than the way the good people here have indorsed the idea of my resting and have helped me get ready for it. We are making no arrangements to get any mail along the way, but will expect some when we get to Ada. Our address at that place will be 816 West Sixth Street. After a few-days' stay at that place, I will leave Mrs. Hall and our son, and I will run over to Farmersville, Texas, to begin a revival, after which I go to Nashville and Chattanooga, Tenn., then to Atlanta and Savannah, Ga.

On Thursday night of this week (July 28) Mrs. Hall and I were agreeably surprised, when we reached the home of Brother A. A. Godfrey, to find a large concourse of brethren and sisters assembled there for a farewell meeting. After quite a number of soul-stirring songs were sung, Brother Riggs led us in a short prayer and Brother Andrews made a few appropriate remarks, then we went to the lawn in the back yard for ice cream and cake. It certainly was a great gathering, and one good sister asked me: "Will heaven be like this?" I felt too tired to go, and said to Mrs. Hall more than once: "I do wish they had left this off." But after I went, my mind was changed, for I returned home almost having forgotten all about being tired.

Brother Templeton's Anxiety.

A telegram and also a letter has just recently come from Brother Silas E. Templeton, Altus, Okla., telling us that Sister Grace had undergone an operation for appendicitis. Pus had formed and the appendix had burst when they got to it. We are anxious to know just what the outcome will be. In the meantime, let us not forget them in our prayers. I hope, while in Oklahoma, to run over and see them before my Farmersville meeting. There are no better people than Silas Templeton and wife. I have always thought Sister Grace as nearly a model as poor, weak human being can be.

Georgia and the Far Southern Field By B. O. GOODPASTURE

Obedience.

Under the foregoing caption I quote an article from the Old Path Guide of April, 1879. Though written more than forty years ago, the selection is readable and timely. It follows:

The spirit of rebellion now seems rampant in all the walks of life. You cannot take up a paper in which you will not find column after column taken up with descriptions of infraction of law, human and divine. Lying, stealing, robbery, murder, adultery, drunkenness, covetousness, idolatry—indeed, every sin mentioned in the Bible seems rife in the land. Truly, "evil men and seducers wax worse and worse."

Children disobey their parents, and it is very astonishing how soon this feeling manifests itself. The child can scarcely walk before it asserts itself in opposition to its mother's commands. By the time it is six or eight years old, that mother has often to speak three or four times to the child, and sometimes then has to take it by force to the obedience of her command.

Young girls from ten to twenty disobey their parents, or often obey them with a frown and a cross and bitter word, showing an unkind and cruel disposition to a loving and patient mother.

Young boys between the same ages struggle against restraint with the same ungrateful spirit, and feel that they know what is best for them far better than father and mother. They are like the silly moth, anxious to try its wings in the blaze which dazzles its eye, to find all too late that "the flame that dazzles may scorch the wing," and cast them out into the darkness, stung with pain and regret.

Our penitentiaries are filled with disobedient citizens. Many homes are desolated by disobedient wives, while disobedient husbands are strewing the ocean of life with wrecks innumerable.

The members of the various churches are rebellious and disobedient to their rulers, and treat their spiritual guides with indifference, if not contempt. Pupils are insubordinate to teachers.

Employees too often do not consider the interest of employers. The people revolting against the moral restraints of all law, hence communionism.

Truly we have fallen upon evil times. Cannot this state of affairs be remedied? We think it can, at least, partially. Let us begin at the fountainhead. We have in Eph. 6: 1:

Let us begin at the fountainhead. We have in Eph. 6: 1: "Children, obey your parents in the Lord: for this is right." "Honor thy father and thy mother; which is the first commandment with promise; that it may be well with thee, and thou mayest live long on the earth." A father and mother say that is all true enough, but how is it to be done? The next verse tells: "Bring them [your children] up in the nurture [instruction, discipline, correction, chastisement, training up] and admonition [warning them of the consequence of disobedience] of the Lord." You say: "I have tried this and failed." But did you not neglect the former part of the verse—"provoke not your children to wrath?"

I have seen many parents very good indeed to make their children obey, but very often doing it in anger, and displaying a temper and disposition incompatible with Christian character; and their admonitions and chastisements fall upon stony ground hardened by their own want of self-government. No one is fit to govern another until he can govern himself; and we have no keener or more accurate reader of our motives and actions than a child.

Finally, in the words of Samuel: "Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams."

Ten Ways to Kill a Church.

BY JESSE S. BILLS.

- 1. Don't attend regularly.
- 2. If you do, don't make any effort to be there on time.
- 3. If you feel bad, or the weather is bad, or you have company, don't consider going to church.
 - 4. Never take any leading part in the services.
 - 5. Criticize those who are doing the work.
- 6. If you have an opportunity to express yourself on any subject that may come up for consideration, don't do it then, but after the discussion is closed tell every one you see what should have been done.
- 7. Do as little work as possible; and when others make an honest effort to keep the work going on, complain that the church is being run by a clique.
- 8. Be careful not to give more than a nickel or a dime, but raise a great howl if the church should consider raising money for any purpose.
 - 9. Make no effort to get people to come into the church.
- 10. Make no special effort to live right yourself, but minimize the virtues and magnify the faults of those who do.

If it is your desire to kill the church for which Christ shed his lifeblood, the above suggestions will be helpful; but if it is our purpose to build up the kingdom of Christ and further extend it on the earth, we must certainly reverse the above order.

Giving God Glory in the Church.

BY O. W. ALLEN.

"Christ also loved the church, and gave himself for it: that he might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the word." (Eph. 5: 25, 26.) To sanctify means to set apart for a sacred or holy use. The Jewish temple and all the vessels pertaining thereto were sanctified, or set apart, unto religious or sacred use only. Likewise the members of Christ's body, or church, are all sanctified unto the Master's use only. If we love the world, we thus adulterate ourselves, as explained by James 4: 4, and become the enemy of God." "I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service. And be not conformed to this world." (Rom. 12: 1, 2.) "And whatsoever ye do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God and the Father by him." (Col. 3: 17.) I fear that some are so wrapped up in worldly organizations that they, in the ceremonies thereof, dare not give thanks by Jesus Christ. After being sanctified unto the Lord, they turn around and sanctify themselves unto the service of others who will not have the name of Jesus Christ in their rites and ceremonies, even at funerals of their members, though they use the name of God, and also tell us how the deceased has gone to heaven, etc. Such is of the world, not of Christ Jesus, because his name is purposely excluded from all their service.

Paul says: "Ye are not your own. For ye are bought with a price: therefore glorify God in your body and in your spirit, which are God's." (1 Cor. 6: 19, 20.) But how and where glorify God? "Unto him be glory in the church by Jesus Christ throughout all ages, world without end. Amen." (Eph. 3: 21.) God will not get much glory "in the church" if we members do much of our good works out in some other organization, will he? Since God has purchased us through Jesus Christ, we ought to be entirely at his disposal, with our means and talents "set apart" for him exclusively, so as to make the church a glorious church—the light of the world, the salt of the earth.

This sanctifying or setting apart for his use, with many, seems to be only in theory or form. But God demands it in actual practice. God wants our submission to him to be real and entire. This requires a daily self-denial-a daily dying. (1 Cor. 15: 31.) If he sees us choosing to gratify self, a looking out for the best for ourselves (1 Cor. 10: 24) and abnormal mindfulness of temporal things (Phil. 3: 9). a holding on to earthly things and grasping for more (Col. 3: 2; Matt. 6: 19), a seeking to please men rather than God (1 Thess. 2; 4), a doing of our good works out of the name of Christ and in other names, he is not well pleased, but displeased. Often it is that we have to choose between his will and our own, and we need to have it fully established in our hearts to say: "Not my will, but thine, be done." To the flesh this will be a hard law, but to the Spirit it is precious and glorious. There is infinite joy and happiness to be found in a life that is fully yielding unto God's will and ways. Therefore, be ye fully set apart unto the service of God; and whatsoever you do in word or deed, do all to the glory of God in the name of Christ Jesus, and thus make the church of Christ the most glorious body of people in the world, so that men will be attracted thereto and be saved therein, for there is no salvation in any other. (Acts. 4: 12.)

The Courage of Faith That Wins.

They had toiled all the night long for nothing. Their experience was an argument against further adventure. "What's the use?" They had tried and failed. Fishing had proven to be unprofitable business. Then the Master came on board the empty boat. Did he accept the verdict, based upon a night's fruitful toil? No, but into the deeper waters he bade them go once more with their nets. O ye of little faith! How easily discouraged and depressed! How often driven to despair! Throughout a single night we, too, have toiled for naught; but with every vain effort we have allowed ourselves to drift nearer the shore. The Master's voice is heard as on Galilee: "Out into the deep: to your oars and to your nets again!" Shall we not obey that challenge, even though last night's failure is written in statistics that cannot lie? Success lies in the way of all such obedience. Whatever the record of the past, the future holds rewards, for which we may be unprepared .-W. L. Goldsmith.

Put the Blame Where It Belongs.

A good many people have an idea that their weaknesses are the result of circumstances. The girl who has formed the habit of falsehood assures herself that it is because her parents are unduly harsh. The youth who is dishonest fancies that, if he were wealthy, his honesty would be beyond question. But the fact of the matter is that there are many liars who are not driven into falsehood by fear, and many who are rich and dishonest at the same time.

Our wrongdoings are not due to circumstances, but to weakness of character. The ill-tempered people are not, as a rule, those who have met with injustice and unkindness. They are just as likely to be treated with the tenderest consideration by their acquaintances. The gloomy are not necessarily the destitute. There are innumerable people who radiate dejection, who are, as far as any one can see, extremely fortunate; and there are others who, without a dollar ahead, go through their hard day's work with smiling faces.

Many a one besides yourself tries to make out that his misdeeds are due to inauspicious circumstances. But circumstances do not make character, though a good many times character is successful in modifying circumstances. Do not hold anything but yourself responsible for your shortcomings. Put the blame where it belongs.—Selected.

There is no hope for society apart from the kingdom of God, and no hope for the kingdom of God apart from the church, which is the divine instrument for realizing it here and now.—John McDowell.

Our Lord teaches that nothing is too little to be ordered by our Father, nothing too little in which to see his hand, nothing which touches our souls too little to accept from him, nothing too little to be done for him. Since the hairs of our head are all numbered, so is every throb or shoot of pain, every beating or aching of the heart. Every tear which starts is seen, and, if wept to him, is gathered up by him. Every secret wish and prayer he hears while yet unuttered or uninformed.—Dr. Pusey.

Why Young Men Shun the Pulpit.

BY J. C. M'Q.

The article below, copied from the Literary Digest, is worthy of our most serious consideration. While I have no apologies to offer for churches that neglect to support faithful ministers of the gospel, yet I feel constrained to say that faithful preachers will not cease to preach as an opportunity presents itself even if the churches neglect them. The apostle Paul teaches: "Not that I speak in respect of want: for I have learned, in whatsoever state I am, therein to be content. I know how to be abased, and I know also how to abound: in everything and in all things have I learned the secret both to be filled and to be hungry, both to abound and to be in want. I can do all things in him that strengtheneth me." (Phil, 4: 11-13.) Unfortunately, there are many preachers to-day who are not faithful. The immorality that abounds in the ministry is alarming. Preachers of the gospel should shun the very appearance of evil and should live soberly, righteously, and godly in this present world. If they are impure and unclean and live lives of ungodliness, they should not expect the churches to support them. However, there are still many earnest, sacrificing, and godly preachers. It is a shame that the churches do not adequately support such men. They should be supported while they devote all their time and talents to the preaching of the gospel.

Ten thousand Protestant pulpits are expected to be vacant next year because of the lack of students for the ministry. as displayed by records of attendance at theological semina-The situation, we are told, forms one of the gravest problems which the church has to face in the hour of its greatest opportunity, and religious leaders, even while they seek to minimize the effect a depleted ministry will produce, are seriously alarmed at the outlook. Added significance is lent to this condition by the fact that while the seminaries are failing to check their losses, all other institutions of higher learning have been put to it to accommodate the avalanche of students which descended upon them after the war, which would seem to show that men are deliberately shunning the pulipt in favor of other pro-The New York Evening Post, which has made a fessions. careful study of the situation, thinks the facts are of such grave import to the nation as to warrant serious attention and investigation. Chief blame for the unfortunate state of affairs is laid on the religious doubt engendered by the war and disillusionment caused by the discord and strife which followed it. In addition to this, and in some degree caused by it, we are told, are the economic handicaps of the ministry which have been aggravated by the war and postwar conditions. Financial sacrifices involved in entering the ministry have deterred many who otherwise might have enrolled in theological seminaries, and the stringency now is considered disproportionate to that in other fields. To be concrete, the writer for the Evening Post finds that-

"Attendance in Episcopalian thelogical seminaries decreased from 346 in 1916 to 193 in 1920; in all Presbyterian seminaries, from 1,188 in 1916 to 695; in Methodist, from 1,226 in 1916 to 976; and in Congregational institutions from 499 in 1910 to 255 last year. Roman Catholic seminary enrollment has increased rapidly, however, bringing up the entire total to an approximate prewar status, although the Protestant institutions have not recovered. Attendance in all theological seminaries-Protestant, Roman Catholic, and Jewish-increased very gradually from 3,354 in 1870 to 10,588 in 1915. Before the war there was a noticeable jump in registration to 12,051 in 1916, followed by a slump to 9,354 in 1917-18."

It will be noted that the denominations which show the most serious decrease are the Episcopalian, Presbyterian, and Congregational. This year the most liberal estimates for all the seminaries, we are told further, count on only 1,600 graduates, as compared with 1,800 last June, when the total was decidedly below normal. Just how formidable the general problem has become is indicated by Dr. Robert L. Kelley, secretary of the Council of Church Boards of Education in the United States of America, who is quoted by the New York daily as saying:
"Fully 5,000 Protestant pulpits are now vacant throughout the country, and another 5,000 will need ministers next year and thereafter. Yet the churches cannot count on all of the 1,600 seminary graduates this June, because some will go into foreign fields and others will continue study-

"Were the entire 3,200 graduates available for immediate ministerial duties, they would supply only about one-half of the present need. There are scarcely 5,500 students in all Protestant seminaries to-day. This should represent merely the graduation total, while four times that number should be in undergraduate attendance if the supply were to equal the demand.

An explanation of the shortage of theological students appears in the June faculty letter from the Harvard Divinity School, which The Evening Post quotes as follows:

"The decline in the economic status of the minister and the corresponding decline in his social influence are most important contributory causes, as are the changes of religious emphasis during the last half century, the decline of the religious life in the home, and the greatly increased attractions of many other professional opportunities which offer invitations to young men of the type who formerly went into the ministry. It is essential that ministers today who are concerned for the future of their profession should set the facts squarely before their parishioners and should point out to them that unless fathers and mothers think it worth while to encourage their ablest sons to enter the ministry the Christian church is certain to suffer a grave decline in influence through the lack of devout and well-trained ministers.'

Who Are One's Enemies? Who Are One's Friends? BY E. A. E.

We should all know what true friendship and real love are. We should all know what "anxiety for all the churches" (2 Cor. 11: 28) is; that this governed Paul, and should govern all Christians to-day. We should all know what "the unity of the Spirit" is, and should endeavor to keep it "in the bond of peace." We should all know what it is to be of "the same mind," of "one accord," of "one heart," and of "one soul." We should all learn to obey God in doing nothing through faction or through vainglory," and each to count "other better than himself." (Phil. 2: 1-11.) We should all know what it is to seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness-the good and peace and advancement of God's kingdom, the righteous life to be lived in this kingdom-and to teach and maintain and extend that righteousness-the just and true and godly principles and laws of this kingdom. We should all sing most fervently:

"I love thy kingdom, Lord,
The house of thine abode,
The church our blest Redeemer saved
With his own precious blood."

Aid still further:

"For her my tears shall fall,
For her my prayers ascend,
To her my cares and toils be given,
Till toils and cares shall end."

The church must be placed above our own comfort, ease, persenal interest, and chief joy. I repeat, as was stated in these columns a few weeks ago, the church of God, the body of Christ, is no plaything and must not be used to serve any man's personal aims and ambitions. Every work of God is high above any man's temporal interests. The church—its peace, unity, influence, power, and advancement—cannot be sacrificed to personal preferences or prejudies, human opinions and weaknesses, ambitions and passions. In all things the will of God must be sought and must rule, and the glory of Christ must be upheld. God is to be gorified through the church, as much in maintaining its unity and peace, purity and dignity, strength and spritual prosperity, as in not working through any other institution. (Eph. 3: 21.)

We ray all learn a valuable lesson from Ahab's coveting and obtaining Naboth's vineyard. These facts are recorded in 1 Kings 21. Ahab was the king of Israel, as we know. He was retulant, sulky, morose, covetous, and "sold himself to do evil." Jezebel, his wife, was one of the most, if not the most, ungodly, impious, and daringly wicked women wlo has ever lived. She filled the kingdom with witchcraft, idolatry, and other sins. Her name is a synonym of wickedness and rebellion. Ahab wanted Naboth's vineyard, which was "hard by" his palace in Jezreel, in order to make of it an herb garden. Ahab proposed to pay Nanoth in money for his vineyard, or to exchange for it a better one. Naboth declined to part with it because God's law forbade his disposing thus of the family inheritance. (See Lev. 25: 23-28; Num. 36: 7-9; Ezek. 46: 18.) Ahab returned to his home, rolled on his bed, pouted, and refused to eat. Jezebel, discovering the cause of this, bade him arise and be merry, for she would secure for him the coveted vireyard. She then laid a most diabolic plot to have the anocent and helpless Naboth and his sons falsely accused of blasphemy and stoned to death.

This, let it be said in Jassing, was a horrible conspiracy and murder most foul to gratify the whim of a deprayed character. What did this wicked, blasphemous Jezebel care for God and right? Many sins, like hissing serpents, already coiled together inher heart as a nest. A hypocrite, she used religion to enforce a lie and to commit murder. In this one case she was hypocrite, robber, liar, and mur-derer. In this charge of blasphemy, Naboth was as innocent as was Jesus when crucified upon the same charge.

This wicked deed having been performed, Jezebel said to Ahab: "Arise, take possession of the vineyard of Naboth the Jezreelite, which he refused to give thee for money: for Naboth is not alive, but dead." She had obtained it without money. Ahab then went to take possession of it.

While the news was going from Jezreel to Jezebel that her orders had been carried out, her black crimes were being told to Elijah by Jehovah. Jehovah directed Elijah to go down and meet Ahab in the very vineyard of the murdered Naboth and to say to him: "Hast thou killed, and also taken possession?" As Ahab stepped in to take possession, Elijah met him and said this. Elijah said further: "Thus saith Jehovah, In the place where dogs licked the blood of Naboth shall dogs lick thy blood, even thine."

This story has been related thus far that we may feel the force of Ahab's charging Elijah with being his enemy. "Ahab said to Elijah, Hast thou found me, O mine enemy?" Ahab had seen enough of Elijah before this—in the drought of three years and six months, in the contest on Mount Carmel, in the death of four hundred and fifty prophets of Baal, etc.—to dread his presence.

Before this Ahab had accused Elijah of troubling Israel, Elijah answered him, saying: "I have not troubled Israel; but thou, and thy father's house, in that ye have forsaken the commandments of Jehovah, and thou hast followed the Baalim." (I Kings 18: 16-18.) Next, Ahab calls Elijah his enemy.

From time to time most excellent articles have been written and most apt sermons have been preached on the question, "Who troubles Israel?" These articles and sermons have shown conclusively that the wrongdoers have always caused the trouble.

Wrongdoers, then, should not only repent of their personal wrongs, but they should deeply regret and sincerely repent of, and endeavor to repair, the almost unending trouble they have caused the church.

It is strange, too, that, like Ahab, the wrongdoers accuse the faithful servants of God of being their enemies and of causing the trouble.

If Elijah had not so boldly contended for the true worship of God and had never taught against the chicanery, intrigue, idolatry, licenticusness, and murder committed by Ahab and Jezebel, he never would have had to run for his life from them several hundred miles to Horeb, and he never would have been accused of troubling Israel or of being their enemies.

But the practical and righteous questions are, "Did Elijah cause the trouble?" and, "Was he Ahab's enemy?" No—"a thousand times, no," using Brother Hall's language. On the contrary, Ahab caused all the trouble and was Elijah's bitter, avowed, and determined enemy. Elijah sought Ahab's good, and the good and peace and salvation of the people. Elijah was willing to suffer reproach, to endure persecution, and to give up his life for the good of the people and the truth of God. His faithfulness to God and his love of right are seen in all he did.

To-day to reprove one of sin, to point out to one the good and right way, and thus to seek one's salvation, is the only way to show friendship and love, and the only way to seek the peace and harmony of the church. Too many, like Ahab, call him their enemy who tells them the truth and seeks their only real good. So people treated Paul until he asked:

So then am I become your enemy, by telling you the truth? (Gal. 4: 16.)

The following passages show true friendship and love:

Let the righteous smite me, it shall be a kindness; and let him reprove me, it shall be as oil upon the head; let not my head refuse it. (Ps. 141: 5, 6.)

There is a great difference between admiration and friendship; between personal preference and love; between a partisan spirit and the spirit of Christ; between fleshly emotions and the true worship of God.

Better is open rebuke than love that is hidden. Faithful are the wounds of a friend; but the kisses of an enemy are (Prov. 27: 5, 6.)

A friend-that is, a real and true friend-loves at all times, and under all circumstances seeks one's greatest good. (Prov. 17: 17.)

There is some reason in asking to be saved from one's seeming, but misguided, friends.

Let us learn the lesson, then, that it is a woeful mistake to conclude that he is our enemy who, in the spirit of Christ, reproves us, tells us the truth, points out the good and right way to us, and, above all, seeks the peace and harmony and advancement of the church. Far from it.

But let it be understood, on the other hand, that fault finding, picking flaws in one's character, and heresy hunting are not manifestations of friendship and love or faithfulness to God.

In different States to-day, through differences in opinions or over personal matters, some congregations are being torn asunder. I could mention one which, as I have heard, is having a lawsuit. Love never causes this. There is some thing wrong. The wrongdoers, not the innocent and faithful ones, have caused the trouble and are the enemies of the cause of Christ. The righteous are commanded to "contend earnestly for the faith which was once for all delivered unto the saints" (Jude 3); but for this reason they are no one's enemies or enemies of the church. Contending for the right in the love of the truth at all cost and seeking the purity and peace and high standing of the church, as a city on a hill whose light cannot be hid, at all hazards, is love for God and men. To fail here is to be come God's enemy.

God overrules all contentions, strife, troubles, wrongs, and divisions, and makes of them crucibles in which to try his people, to consume the dross and to purify the gold. (See 1 Cor. 11: 19.) Blessed are all who can endure the test, prove faithful to God and, therefore, to his church, and come out true metal. But God's woes are pronounced upon the ones who cause the trouble or become the cause of others, even the weakest, doing wrong. (See Matt. 18: 5-7.)

"Apostasy in China."

BY F. W. SMITH.

Such is the heading of an article appearing in the Baptist Flag of June 30. Inasmuch as the article deals with matters vital to Christian faith and hope, it is thought advisable to submit to our readers some of its contents:

Dear Friend in the Lord; My heart has been deeply grieved to discover the general condition of the church in China to be that so long ago predicted of "having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof," the Christ of God.

There are exceptions-the China Inland Mission, Christian and Missionary Alliance, the Brethren, Christians' Mission of Wingpo, Miss Barber's in Foochow, and a few other small, almost unknown bodies. Praise God, in every mission there are some who are standing faithful to the truth, the Lord's hidden ones.

Until recent years God has not given me liberty to expose the destructive criticism of the modern theologians and "Christian" teachers to my Chinese friends. I feared that in so doing I might be directing attention to the poison and doing harm to those who were weak in the faith.

But of late I have been constrained by the Holy Spirit to openly warn his children against this Satanic "gospel." recent investigation shows that more than half of the missionaries hold this modern theology, although it was not until lately that these critics openly professed their belief.

Most of the Chinese church members are yet untouched; but unless something is done at once to combat this teaching, there is a grave danger of the whole church being swept by it, as already some of the Chinese church leaders are being misled. From among the returned students, I think it is safe to say that ninety per cent are in favor of this new theology; consequently the pure word of God finds no entrance into their hearts.

Some friends of my own who went to America for theological study have returned with their faith wrecked. of them came back with no desire for spiritual fellowship with God's children such as he had had before going to America; another frankly confessed that his faith can never be the same as when he left China, but I Intreated him to refrain from teaching these errors. He is now pastor of a church, but report comes from different sources. that he has no power in his preaching and that he is a stumblingblock to many. How could it be otherwise? "Apart from me," said the Lord, "ye can do nothing."

Another very bright young Christian said to his school-mate, who was returning to China: "Don't fail to tell Dora Yu that I am studying the new theology, as I rather like it." He knew I did not He come book He knew I did not. He came back a few years ago and the change in this man was so marked that it grieved me to the depths of my heart to hear him speak.

Missionaries, especially on the coasts, are placing great stress on educational work. Of course education is needed, but the greatest need of all is the soul's salvation. Otherwise we simply produce polished sinners. The general aim of these missionaries (or rather educators) is to endeaver to bring the young people of China to the church, rather than to Christ, through education. If education should precede salvation, why did Christ choose ignorant fishermen and other uneducated persons to be his disciples?

In conversation with Nicodemus, he showed that it was not for lack of education on the part of this pious old gentleman that he was standing outside of the kingdom of God, for Christ himself called him "the teacher of Israel.

The Bible is taught in mission schools, but mostly as a subject of minor importance, and often with some higher critic's textbook which neutralizes the truth.

In many places, especially in ports and on coasts the churches are on special occasions turned into theaters, and students in mission schools are made actors and actresses. Bible stories are played, and even idolatrous worship acted. on church platforms, at school commencement (or dosing exercises of the term), and also to raise money for mission work, etc.

It is impossible to describe the deep poverty of the church and the disgrace that is being brought on the name of our Lord to have the so-called children of God begging money. as it were, from the hands of their Father's enemy. It has actually been said by some heathen from whom some Christian workers solicited a subscription: "If you church people have not enough means to carry on the work you started, do not apply to us for support of what we do not approve."

A "Shorter Bible" is being sold at the Mission Book Company! Some missionaries who have been sorely distressed over the matter vainly tried to get the Y M. C. A. secretaries to promise that they would not translate the book into Chinese. (Since this was typed, I am told that this "Shorter Bible" is in circulation in Chinese.

The author of the foregoing is Dora Yu, I take it, a missionary to China, connected with the Baptist Church. There are two schools of higher criticism, one destructive and the other constructive. Higher criticism within itself is a legitimate field of investigation, having to do with the genuineness of the text and the authorship of the books of the Bible. J. W. McGarvey was a prince among higher critics, and his book entitled "Deuteronomy" is worth its weight ten times over in gold. He was pre eminently a constructive higher critic, and since his pass ing away J. B. Briney has taken up his work and is rendering a very valuable service in contending for the Bible against the destructive higher critics. I am giving Miss Yu's article to show the danger abroad in the land. These wise (?) men and women are not satisfied with sowing the seeds of infidelity in this country, but must spread the slime of their rotten infidelity in leathen lands. The great carnal, unholy, and ungodly world war just ended is naught in comparison with the cuslaughts that are being made in universities, colleges, schools, pulpits, and the socalled "religious press" all over the land against the Bible. Let Christian parents look well to the institutions to which they send their boys and girls. Drill the word of God into them from the very cradle. Take this sentence from Miss Yu's article: "From among the returned students, I think it is safe to say that ninety per cent are in favor of this new theology; consequently the pure word of God finds no entrance into their hearts." This new (?) theology! It is but sugar-coated infidelity reaching back through countless ages, and now being spouted by men, women, boys, and girls who are absolutely ignorant of the Bible. Many of the most pronounced leaders among them-men who have written books on the subject-are ignorant of the plain text of scripture. It amused me to witness the way in which J. W. McGarvey used to expose the ignorance of their greatest men. I have a book written by an occupant of "the Biblical Chair" in one of the big universities who boldly says that no such characters as Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob ever lived—that these were simply names descriptive of certain people. Christ said many should sit down in the kingdom of God with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and that before Abraham was born he was. Whom shall we believe?

Make Plain Meaning of Christianity.

Many times it is true that the person whom you are trying to win to Christ does not understand what Christianity is and does not know the meaning of the words that you use. On this account you either fail to win him or you get him to make a profession that is not genuine. Perhaps a number of people are at fault, but we are thinking now of the Sunday-school teacher who does poor work. Brother or sister Sunday-school teacher, every member of your class ought to be taught the real meaning of Christianity. If you do not teach them this, there is a good chance that they will go out into eternal night for lack of this knowledge. But if you slight your work with your class and treat it as a matter of no importance, you will never cause your pupils to know the meaning of Christianity. If you do so neglect your work, shall we say that people went to hell because the Sunday-school teacher was too lazy to teach them the meaning of Christianity?-Baptist Advance.

The Ghosts That Met.

Three ghosts on the lonesome road Spoke each to one another:

"Whence came that stain about your mouth No lifted hand may cover?"

"From eating of forbidden fruit, Brother, my brother."

The three ghosts on the sunless road Spoke each to one another:

"Whence came that red burn on your foot No dust or ash may cover?"

"I stamped a neighbor's hearth-flame out, Brother, my brother."

The three ghosts on the windless road Spoke each to one another:

"Whence came that blood upon your hand No other hand may cover?"

"From breaking of a woman's heart, Brother, my brother."

"Yet on the earth clean men we walked, Glutton and thief and lover; White flesh and fair, it hid our stains, That no man might discover. Naked the soul goes up to God, Brother, my brother."

-Theodosia Garrison.

The Color of the Nuts.

"I am very glad that the nuts aren't red, Or the squirrels would find them all," Tom said.

"Now, if nuts were blue," thought the squirrel, "O, dear!

They never could hide from the children, I fear."

"If the nuts were bright," smiled the tree, "I know Not a nut would be left on the ground to grow."

So they all agreed in the wood and the town,

That the very best color for nuts must be brown.

When Jerry Filled the Church.

Snow lay in deep drifts all over the country and filled in the paths of the village homes. Grandfather looked up the street and shook his head.

"Small congregation to-day. Folks aren't going to plow through drifts to church," he said to grandmother.

Jerry opened the front door and looked out hard. He caught a glimpse of Mr. Saunders, the minister, standing on his doorstep.

"He doesn't like empty seats; and Mr. Saunders is the jolly kind, too. He was just like one of us boys at the picnic at Blue Beach. Wish I could fill up a pew or two for him," mused Jerry.

Then he turned and bounded into the kitchen, hunting for his rubber boots.

"Sonny, why do you leave the door open on such a wintry day?" questioned grandmother, shivering.

"Going right out again, Granny," laughed Jerry. "I'm going to dig some paths so folks can go to church."

"Well, I guess it won't be breaking Sunday to dig paths if it gets folks out to church. If it wasn't for my rheumatism, I'd go and help you."

"Better take the short-handled spade," advised grand-father.

How the snow did fly as Jerry's spade tossed it high on top of the dirt! Puffing, he worked a path through grandfather's gate across the track that village snow plow had made in the road.

Next door lived the Widow Spear, who had no boys to dig paths for her. Jerry remembered that she didn't get out to church very often on winter days, but he decided to dig her a path.

When the Widow Spear's path had been dug, he turned back to the sidewalk and ran down to the church corner, his spade leveling the drifted snow that lay heaped in gateways.

Right across the street lived dear old Aunty Frail. Jerry didn't believe that her girls, who took such good care of her, would let her go out of doors this cold day, but he was going to dig her a path just the same.

He looked up and saw the sexton widening the path through the churchyard. He wanted to dig one more path; so he bent over his spade and sent the snow flying out of Aunty Frail's path, then sped down the street to lame Peter's gate.

Soon Jerry was back at his own home path, and the bells were ringing for church. He had barely had time to hurry into his Sunday clothes, held ready in grandmother's bands.

"Grandfather says that we ought to be the first to go to church to-day, seeing the path is clear," she explained.

As they entered grandfather's pew, Jerry noticed that the church was already half filled, and as the last bell rang out more folks filed into the church. The minister walked to the pulpit, his eyes shiny as he looked down at the people. Then, after the sermon and when the last prayer had been said and all the people stood at the front door shaking hands with the minister, Jerry heard him say: "I can't tell you how glad I am that you all got out this morning."

"I'm glad I came," laughed the Widow Spear. "I woke up this morning and saw it was so snowy that I said, 'I can't go to church to-day.' But after that Jerry dug a path for me, and I couldn't stay at home."

"And I want to thank Jerry for digging such a nice, clean path so I could get out this morning," called out Aunty Frail, her face all sunshine.

"Well, when I saw Aunty Frail walking off to church this snowy morning, I said, 'If it's fit for her to be out, I guess I can go as well,'" laughed a neighbor.

"Aye, aye, when I saw the churchyard filling up this wintry morning, I decided that I ought to be in church, so I came also," spoke up a stranger.

"So you see, Jerry, how you filled the church to-day," exclaimed the minister, slapping Jerry on the back.

Jerry's freckled cheeks crimsoned as he stammered: "I—I—why, I didn't do anything but shovel two or three paths; that's all."—Exchange.

The Magic Word.

Bennie was cross. In the first place, it rained when he wanted the sun to shine; then he had cut his finger; and now he was hungry, and Jane wouldn't give him anything to eat.

"You've got to give me some bread and butter," he said.

"You go along and stop your noise," replied Jane.

So Bennie wandered out in the garden and found George playing with his ball.

"Give me my ball," he said, crossly. "You've had it all the morning."

"Don't bother me," replied George; "I have not finished with it."

Bennie turned away, half crying. Annie was sweeping the parlor. "I want you to put some salve on my finger and tie it up," he said. "It hurts."

"Wait a little," replied Annie. "I'm so busy now."

The tears in Bennie's eyes got bigger, and soon began to fall fast. He lay down on the sitting-room couch and sobbed, and there mamma found him a little later.

"Why, what's the matter, Bennie-boy?" she asked.

"Any one won't do a thing for me," he cried. "They just send me off instead of doing what I ask them to do."

"Perhaps you haven't used the magic word."

Bennie brushed away the tears and looked up. "Magic word?" he said.

"Why, yes. Didn't you know there was a magic word that would make people do just what you wanted?"

"What is it, mamma?" cried Bennie.

Mamma whispered in his ear. Bennie wiped his eyes, grinned, and then jumped down and ran to the kitchen. "O, Jane," he cried, smiling, "please give me some bread and butter."

"Of course I will," said Jane; and she put jam on it, too. Bennie sat on the doorstep to eat it, while he watched the clouds break away and let the sunlight through. Then he went out in the garden.

"Please, George, may I have the ball now?" he asked, smiling.

"Catch it," said George, tossing it to him. "I'd have let you have it long ago if you hadn't been so cross."

When he had grown tired of playing, he went and stood beside his mother, where she sat sewing. "Well, Bennieboy, how does the magic word work?" she asked.

But before he could answer, little May came in with a frown on her face. "You promised you'd make me a dollie, and you didn't do it," she complained.

Bennie laughed. "I think I'd better teach May the magic word, too," he said to mamma.—Exchange.

Salmagundi.

BY C. R. N.

Recently I was forced to spend a few hours in Chickasha, Ckla., waiting for train connection. In the railway station, conveniently and conspicuously arranged on the wall, I saw three wall baskets. On one was printed: "Catholic Literature." In this basket were papers, leaflets, and tracts " Catholic teaching the doctrine of the Roman Catholic Church. In another of the baskets was Christian Science literature, and in the third was to be found Methodist and Baptist literature. I appropriated a piece of reading matter from each basket, and saw other passengers secure papers, tracts, and leaflets from these baskets and read them. No, I did not find any of "our" literature. Make your own observations.

When I was a young preacher, I never went for a meeting that I did not have a supply of tracts with me, and from time to time, as the meeting progressed, I would announce the tracts, and brethren would buy them, read and circulate them among their neighbors. Thousands of people have been led to the truth by the written page. Other preachers I met in those days would have a supply of tracts, too. Recently I heard one of "our" preachers say: "It is beneath my dignity to peddle tracts while holding a meeting." I thought, too much dignity. I thought a number of other things, too; but why give voice to them?
Recently while in a meeting I was handed five small tracts, tracts written by Baptists and teaching Baptist doc-The tracts were being circulated in the town as free literature, and by the Baptist minister I was told that he had ordered a copy of each of the tracts for each family in the town, and a few extra ones for visitors. In the same town I was in the home of a brother who receives two daily papers, but I was unable to find in his home a book written by a Christian or a paper published by a Christian. Spread the news!

I am certain the young preachers know I am their friend; that I am ready and anxious to lend them any possible assistance, and rejoice that they do not have to meet with many of the inconveniences and labor in the "hard places" that fell to my lot when I was a "young preacher." I am persuaded, though, that should the necessity arise our "young preachers" would not falter; that they would labor the regions conditions at I found and resulting would under as adverse conditions as I found, and possibly would not feel the sting as keenly as I felt the hardships. I re-joice that living conditions are better than they were a few years ago; that brethren are more considerate of the minister's comfort. Lord, give us more Christian preachers preachers who are Christians.

How easy to see the mistakes of others, for they are open and before me; whereas my mistakes are behind mewhen I retrospect, I do not go forth on a tour of faultfind-ing with myself. There is something wrong with every one but me! Of course the speaker is always the "me."

If you are ever disposed to think of your sins as "little ins," spend an hour in contemplating and computing what it required to save you from sin.

It would be interesting to read an article, or dissertation, by some one, in which it is argued that anything belongs to Satan in his own right; that all he "owns" is not his simply by usurpation. By rights inherent he does not own one I am not forgetful of the theory of the Calvinists, thing. but their theory is indefensible. Neither am I forgetful that Satan contended that the kingdoms of this world were his. His power over man is not his by rights inherent. He is exercising only such power as he usurps. When he claimed the right to rule man, he lied. He has never hesitated to lie when he thought to further his aims thereby. Satan is a liar! * * *

Personal Notes.

T. B. Clark closed an interesting meeting in Krum, Texas, with eleven baptisms.

W. N. Carter writes: "In my fifth meeting in Thornton, Texas, with large and attentive audiences."

J. S. Dunn baptized seven in a recent meeting in Garrett. Texas. Six of the number had been members of the Baptist Church.

J. W. Denton recently closed a very successful meeting in Granbury, Texas, with five baptisms. All of those baptized were heads of families.

Coleman D. Nichols, with his son, Charles, leading the song service, has just closed a meeting at Noodle, Texas. Three had been baptized at last report.

J. Kearby Bentley baptized four at Brownfield, Texas, and two at Cottonwood, Texas, in recent meetings. He is at present assisting the church at Wichita Falls, Texas, in the absence of Brother Arceneaux.

Claude Kele has closed a meeting at "Rock Hill" with the interest very intense. There were ten baptisms, eight of the number being from the Baptists. In addition to the number baptized, there were five restorations.

J. H. Lawson has just closed a great meeting at a point in the country, in Victoria County, Texas. He is now at Huckabay, Texas. The first of September he will return to the work with the First church of Christ in Houston, Texas.

Ben West reports: "House filled at both services yesterday, July 17. Two hundred and nineteen in Bible classes. Two baptized at morning service, two added at midweek service. Audiences are as large in the hot weather here as in the cool weather."

Will W. Slater is in his third meeting at Spaulding, Okla. He writes: "All things considered, the other two were the greatest meetings I have ever assisted in. I have baptized fifty-four here, the most of them coming from the Methodist and Baptist churches. This meeting is only three days old and the interest is great."

A. C. Huff, McLean, Texas, recently established a congregation at Manchaca, Texas. Five were baptized. The congregation numbers fourteen, and the outlook is bright for a strong congregation, judging by the interest and number who attended the meeting. Doubtless the meeting should have continued for some days after it closed.

W. W. Freeman has recently spent some days among the churches in Ellis County, Texas, teaching along the line of the relationship and attitude of Christians to education, especially Christian education. Christians can do anything they want to do, within the bounds of the possible. Your child should be given the best possible education, and let it be under the influence of consecrated Christians.

U. G. Wilkinson, Comanche, Okla., writes: "We had a good service at church to-day (July 31); good attendance and interest. I was able to be present and assist in the services. But I have not been able to do anything and will not be until I rest a long time. This is the advice of the physician. I have lost about forty pounds weight. But I feel some better the last two or three days. By the advice of the physician I will go to the Ozark Mountains for a I want to get off in about twenty days. Mail addressed to Comanche, Okla., my home, will always reach me Pray for me." promptly.

F. M. Mathis, one of the elders of the church in Tyler, Texas, reports that the congregation, which has for a number of years been retarded in its progress as well as opportunities for doing good, from the fact that they were located at the extreme edge of town, has recently purchased a lot in one of the most desirable sections of the city, and will within a short time be located "in town." Located as they were, the growth of this congregation has been remarkable; but with such men as Cled Wallace with them in several meetings, and the efficient eldership, and the Todd brothers living in the town and assisting with their splendid ability as singers, they have made the city of Tyler know they were preaching the gospel. In their new location they will be so circumstanced that they can and will do a greater work. The congregation expresses regrets that they will not have with them another year Brother K. C. Moser, who has been doing such splendid work with them.

Statement.

Denton, Texas, July 19, 1921.—To the brethren everywhere -Greeting: We, the elders of the church of God in Denton, Texas, wish to state to the brethren and the public generally that Brother R. L. Whiteside is not responsible, either directly or indirectly, for the divided and deplorable condition of the church in Denton. When the trouble arose, Brother Whiteside was away from home, and had been away for several weeks, in meetings in Kentucky, Tennessee, and Alabama, and knew nothing of it till his return. We make this statement as a simple matter of justice.

J. S. DARNALL.

J. W. SHAW. J. T. SIMMONS.

A fine meeting is reported at Kennett, Mo., conducted by Charles F. Hardin and M. S. Mason. Forty were baptized and seven were restored. Brother Mason is now at Cash, Ark.

A note from S. E. Templeton, at Altus, Okla., informs us that Sister Templeton sustained an operation for appendicitis and is still very sick. He asks for the prayers of the brethren

From W. C. Baker, Duck River, Tenn.: "I have been a regular subscriber to the Gospel Advocate for about twenty years, and think there is no paper that surpasses or even equals it."

C. E. Holt closed the meeting at Wilson, Okla., on July 31. Twenty-five were added as a result of this meeting. The song service was ably conducted by Oscar Webb, a Freed-Hardeman graduate.

Francis Baker is in a good meeting at Macon, Tenn. Brother Baker says: "This is the old home of J. D. Tant, where he spent six years in building up the cause of Christ. Brother Tant is kindly remembered in this place by all."

I. A. Douthitt recently closed an eight-days' meeting at Antioch, Ky., which was well attended. The large house there would not hold the people that came to the services. There were eight additions to the church. Brother Douthitt goes to Bethany, Tenn., for his next meeting.

From F. L. Paisley, Halls, Tenn., August 2: "Our second annual meeting with my assistance, began at Antioch, near here, last night. Splendid audience, considering the beginning on Monday night. I will be away from the Memphis work during the month of August in meetings here and at Tupelo, Ark."

David Thompson held an eight-days' meeting with the Bethel congregation, near Mayfield, Ky. The interest and attendance were good all through the meeting. One of the most interesting features was a class of about twenty-five children to which he gave a twenty-minute lesson at each afternoon service.

From D. F. Draper, Fort Worth, Texas: "I am to be in Tennessee during the fall, and will have time for a meeting or two, and would like to arrange with churches for September and October. Write me at 2709 May Street, Fort Worth, Texas."

R. E. Wright writes: "I closed a meeting for Pleasant Grove and Brushy Ridge on July 31. Good hearing day and night. The people seemed interested in the old-time gospel from the first. Thirteen were baptized and five wanderers returned to the fold. The meeting closed much too soon."

Some years ago L. A. Wolff bought an old school building (a good two-story house) and got T. B. Larimore to come and hold the first meeting, which resulted in the establishment of a congregation at Avon Park, Fla. Brother Wolff recently made a deed to this property to the church of Christ, with restrictive clause.

From John H. Arms, Hermitage Springs, Tenn.: "I have closed an eight-days' meeting at Clementville, Tenn. Good attendance, fine attention, and one erring brother restored. The church proposed to coöperate with a few brethren at Corinth, in Monroe, Ky., and I shall go there at their suggestion the second Lord's day in August."

Willie Hunter, of Livingston, Tenn., reports two meetings since last report. The first was at Bethlehem, in Putnam County, during which there were fifteen baptisms. The other meeting was at Antioch, five miles from Cookeville. In this meeting there were two additions, one being a man seventy-six years of age. His next meeting is at Board Valley.

H. D. Jeffcoat writes in praise of the fine missionary spirit manifested by Sister Lena Johnson, of Hamilton, Miss. Through her efforts Brother Jeffcoat was secured to hold a meeting at that point, and a small band of Christians were gotten together for regular worship. The church at Cottontown, Tenn., contributed twelve dollars for this mission work.

The meeting at Hico Church, in Henry County, Tenn., conducted by Fred W. Chunn, closed on the fifth Lord's day in July, with seven baptized and three restored to righteousness and service. The meeting was well attended at every service. These brethren, though few, have recently built a nice meetinghouse, and, with little outside help, have paid for it.

The congregation in New York City has changed its place of worship to 308 West Fifty-ninth Street. The hour of worship is changed to 11 A.M. instead of 3 P.M. Those who go to the metropolis to buy goods are urged to worship with this growing band. Morgan H. Carter and Eugene Pearson are now conducting a meeting in West New York on the New Jersey side of the Hudson. There is a fine interest.

Morgan H. Carter writes: "The West New York meeting conducted by the church of Christ continues with interest. This is the third week. The coöperation of the church is manifest. The opportunities here are indeed magnificent. We shall deeply appreciate the prayers and coöperation of all. You can render a real service to Christ by sending us the names and addresses of any members or interested parties you know in New York or the Jerseys. Send to Morgan H. Carter, 105 West Sixty-fourth Street, New York City.

From David Thompson, Murray, Ky.: "On July 17 A. G. Freed, of Henderson, Tenn., began a series of meetings with the Union Grove congregation, which continued until the evening of July 25. To those who know Brother Freed it is useless to say that the truths of the gospel were ably presented. The day sermons were along the lines of practical Christian living and were well calculated to build one up in the faith. The last sermon of the meeting was on 'Instrumental Music in the Worship,' and was exceedingly plain. There were fourteen souls added to the body of the Lord during the meeting, and two who had gone astray returned to their 'first love.'"

When Paul went up to Jerusalem and essayed to join himself to the disciples in proclaiming our Lord's gospel, they were afraid of him and believed not that he was a disciple, until Barnabas assured them that he was and that he had spoken boldly in the name of the Lord. Many now are anxious to preach boldly in the name of Christ, but lack an introduction. L. H. Knight is one of this number. He desires to speak more fully for the Lord's cause, and can furnish letter of recommendation from A. G. Freed, of the Freed-Hardeman College, and can also procure another from the Park Hill church of Christ, Fort Smith, Ark. If you desire a meeting during August or September, write him at Booneville, Ark.

J. B. Allen, of Covington, Tenn., would like to get in touch with a preacher of the gospel "as it is written."

Earnest C. Love is making a short tour of Southern California, lecturing in the interest of the Fresno Home and School.

R. N. Moody closed the meeting at Ephesus (Athens, Ala., Route 1) on August 5, with an immense crowd in attendance. Four were baptized.

E. L. Cambron, of Winchester, Tenn., reports five baptisms and one restoration at Union Grove, Ala. These brethren are worshiping in a new house.

J. A. Craig has closed a meeting at Albermarle, Cal. Two were baptized and two gave up their denominational name, having learned the way of the Lord more perfectly.

J. N. Reed has closed a meeting at Old Boston, Bowie County, Texas. This was a fine meeting. Twenty-one confessed Christ and were baptized and a number were restored.

John C. Graham reports a meeting at Spring Valley, Ala., in which there were five baptisms. Brother Graham speaks in praise of the song service conducted by Brethren Sparks and Mills.

Wanted—A position as teacher in elementary school by a man aged thirty-five, who can assist some in church work. Can give references. Address C. H. Harper, Trenton, Tenn.

T. E. Milholland writes: "Our meeting at Wagner, Texas, closed with seventeen baptized and three restored. This is the home of that venerable soldier of the cross, T. N. Butler, through whose untiring labor and prayers the church there is what it is."

From Thomas H. Burton, Lebanon, Tenn.: "The meeting closed at Grissim's Corner on Saturday night. Ten were baptized and three confessed their sins. One of the latter is about eighty-three years old. I am now (August 8) in a good meeting at Bethlehem."

From J. E. Wainwright, 702 Mary Street, Texarkana, Ark., August 5: "Boyd results: Twenty-six baptisms, five redeemed, about thirty identified; congregation set in order, excellent leadership. Two additions at the Central congregation on Lord's day. I begin at Fenter to-night."

From R. A. Craig, Bohon, Ky., August 2: "Our meeting at Bohon is moving along, with excellent interest each evening. Four have been added to date. I go from here to Sedalia, near Mayfield, Ky. The work at Shelbyville continues. John L. Rainey was there last Sunday and made a good talk."

From J. H. Hines, Hugo, Okla., August 5: "I closed a twelve-days' meeting at Bearden Springs, near Hugo, with ten baptisms and the church left in fine shape spiritually. I am now at Detroit, Texas, on my way to Manchester, Texas, for a meeting. I will go to Bagwell, Texas, from Manchester."

A complete review of O. E. Payne's book, "Instrumental Music Is Scriptural," is being printed in the Christian Monthly Review. Editor D. M. Dougall is doing some very fine work in this review, and it should be read by all interested in the subject. Copies of this journal may be secured by addressing Brother Dougall at West Gore, Nova Scotia, Canada.

From Joe Ratcliffe, Bardwell, Ky., August 5: "On July 29 I closed a fifteen-days' meeting with the Antioch Church, near Cardwell, Mo., with three added to the one body. This was my third meeting there. We had the largest crowds we ever had, and the singing was the best. I have promised to return next year for a meeting. I go next to Bethany, near Trenton, Tenn., for a meeting, beginning next Lord's day."

From H. L. Meeks, Corinth, Miss., August 4: "I want to report a splendid meeting at Huffman, Ark. The meeting continued about ten days, ending on the morning of July 28 in a beautiful baptismal service in the Mississippi River. A. B. Baxley did the preaching, and presented in a clear and appealing manner the power of God unto salvation. O. D. Grimes had charge of the song service. Visible results of the meeting were eight baptisms and one restoration."

From J. F. Tomson, Coffeeville, Ala.: "The protracted effort at Jones' Chapel, by John T. Underwood, of Spruce Pine, closed last Lord's day without visible results, except one brother confessed his sins. However, we regard the meeting a success, as his instruction to the church was a feast of good things and a spiritual uplift to all believers in Christ Jesus. He also gave the young people a lecture, which they seemed to appreciate. Brother Underwood talks his religion and carries it out in his daily practice."

From J. Clifford Murphy, Sparta, Tenn., August 3: "I began a meeting in the western part of Maury County on the second Sunday in July and continued it eight days, with good interest all the way through, but no visible results in the way of additions. I am at this writing in White County, near Sparta, in the second meeting. I will hold one other meeting while up here, then go to my home in Pulaski for a few days to see my family, and then on again to Warren County."

A. B. Gunter writes: "On the fifth day of July I started a singing school in Totty's Bend, in Hickman County, Tenn., and continued it ten days, and I hope it was a success. Then out from Tennessee City, in Humphreys County, for a meeting, where much interest was manifested, and I think much good was done in the name of the Lord. One baptized. I am now (August 1) in Hardin County, near Savannah, Tenn., with a good meeting started and the largest crowds I nearly ever saw. The outlook here is fine. I go next to Charleston, Mo."

From R. H. Johnson, Cave Springs, Ark., August 3: "Since my last report I have baptized three at Blakemore, near England, Ark.; three were baptized at my last appointment, near Dover, Ark., and three at Haskell, Ark., in June; also three were baptized in the meeting at Choctaw in July. Seven added at Noland, Ark.—three baptized and four restored. I have been at this place since July 24. I will close out Friday. Fifteen have been baptized and one reclaimed. I will go from here to Baldwin, Ark., for a two-weeks' meeting; then to Center Ridge, Ark.; and will then go to Greenwood, Ark."

R. C. White writes from Wardell, Mo., August 4: "I began a tent meeting here last Lord's day. Interest good so far I am due last of next week at Finley, Tenn., where there is a weak band—one man and six women. The meeting at Lascassas, Tenn., was good, with a fine hearing from beginning and eight baptized. The East Tennessee work consisted of three meetings. Seventeen members were put to meeting at Lenoir City. Two girls were baptized at Niota during the eighteen days. We must build here to save the cause. Twelve days at Athens, but no additions. Lack of unity hindered this work."

George W. Farmer writes: "The meeting at Crandall, Texas, closed at the water last Monday morning after running fifteen days. There were ten baptisms, one confessed her faults and returned to the fold, three came into the fellowship from other congregations, and one decided to give up a man-made church and a man-given name and just a Christian only. This was a glorious meeting for the Crandall church, as they had had no additions for the last three or four years. There are many fine people at Crandall, and the church has a bright future. My next meeting will be at Fairfield, near Bellbuckle, Tenn."

From G. W. Hardin: "Who has a tent for use in a three-weeks' meeting at Hot Springs, Ark., beginning on the second Lord's day in October? Brethren Barber and Johns, both of Morrillton, Ark., preacher and singer, respectively, will conduct the meeting. These brethren will need pay for their services. Let the churches everywhere rally to their support. Especially let the churches in Arkansas and Texas respond. Mail contributions to Perry P. Evans, 1115 Thayer Avenue, Little Rock, Ark. There are only three or four loyal Christians in Hot Springs. This is a strategic point for the church. Address your 'tent' communications to G. W. Hardin, 1417 Park Avenue, Little Rock, Ark."

From L. Meade Williams, Tulare, Cal.: "We expect to have J. W. Ballard in a meeting with us about the first of November. Brother Ballard comes well recommended as a good man and gospel preacher. We are still praying that the Lord may put it into the minds of some brethren, who are able financially, to help us reduce our debt this year, The house needs a coat of paint before winter, but unless we can raise more money we will not be able to paint it this year. The prospects are bright for the cause to grow in this part of the Lord's vineyard. We have such men as L. D. Perkins and George W. Dickson, who are standing by and helping us with the means God has blessed them with. While we are yet weak in numbers, yet we feel that we are growing spiritually as we are endeavoring at all times to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace.' We ask the prayers of God's people while we strive to build up the work here."

Wheat and Chaff.

BY A. ELMORE.

We cannot wash away the crime, but what a blessing that we can wash away our guilt!

Christians should not be dying while they live, but they should be living when they die.

Our greatest joys in this life are often fruits grown upon trees which we planted while in our deepest sorrows.

I have never been anxious for a day about the Lord's work, but the work of the Lord gives me more concern than all earthly interests combined.

The inconsiderate moral man asks: "What have I done that I must be lost?" The faithful, loving Christian asks: "What have you done that you should be saved?" Salvation is an affirmative proposition. "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city." The foolish virgins were lost for doing nothing.

It is safe for a Christian to be poor in this world, but it is dangerous for him to be rich. Too much wealth has carried many into the way which leads to death. But it is possible for a man to possess wealth and still be a practical worshiper. If he obeys the gospel when young and poor and by industry and honesty obtains property, and clings faithfully to his calling, he may get through safely and become a blessing to the church; but beginning the Christian life when he is old and rich, it is dangerous and uncertain.

There are some men who preach as though the Bible, having been given by inspiration, is in all its parts and divisions applicable to all men in all situations and all conditions of life. They seem to know no difference between the law and the gospel, good men and Christians, morality and Christianity, the children of Abraham in the flesh and the children of Abraham in the spirit, between preaching and teaching. In their rambles, their precepts and preambles, they remind us of the story of the home doctor, who dug his medicines from the woods, and believing that nothing was made in vain and that each plant was good for something, and arguing that if a little would do good, more would do better, he would throw all his roots and plants into a large kettle, and, when boiled into a cordial, he would try it on his mother-in-law, and if it didn't kill her he would recommend it to others; but it nearly always killed her! So with these doctrines and dogmas of men.

SOUTH IS TURNING AGAINST CALOMEL

Mr. Dodson, the "Liver Tone" Man, Responsible for Change for the Better.

Every druggis, in town has noticed a great falling off in the sale of calomel. They all give the same reason. Dodson's Liver Tone is taking its place.

"Calomel is dangerous and people know."

"Calomel is dangerous and people know it." Dodson's Liver Tone is personally guaranteed by every druggist who sells it. A large bottle doesn't cost very much but if it fails to give easy relief in every case of liver sluggishness and constipation, just ask for your money back.

Dodson's Liver Tone is a pleasant-tasting, purely vegetable remedy, harmiess to both children and adults. Take a spoonful at night and wake up feeling ine; no biliousness, sick headache, acid stomach or constipated bowels. It doean't gripe or cause inconvenience all the next day like violent calomel. Take a dose of calomel today and tomorrow you will feel weak, sick and nauseated. Don't lose a day.

Gospel Work in Mississippi.

BY M. C. CAYCE,

The meeting at Pearl, Miss., began under the tent last Sunday morning. Thus far the attendance has been fairly good, notwithstanding the rain. Our tent is erected about midway between Pearl and Gatesville. The latter is a small railroad town. Pearl is a post office on a rural route, with one store, a sawmill, and three or four homes, and is the home of Brother J. J. Gordon, formerly of Tennessee. Paul Pullias is leading the song service. We hope for an increasing interest and a good meeting. Leaving Vicksburg on Monday of last week, we went to Oak Ridge, where I preached on Monday night and on Tuesday and Wednesday, morning and night. On Thursday I drove to Jackson, where I spent two nights and one day profitably and pleasantly. visiting our members and giving them words of cheer. We came here Saturday morning in time to help in putting up the tent. Oak Ridge is a place that needs preaching, and needs it badly. I wish more preachers could come to this State, for they are certainly needed. For the want of a leader the people of Oak Ridge have become discouraged and have grown cold and indifferent to their duty to meet for worship, there being only one man who even tries, and he does not always come, and only two cr three sisters who care whether there are any services or not. Where meetings have been held, a number of persons have been baptized and good houses built, and yet no workers. The house here has a leaking roof and blinds hanging off or sitting on the Brethren, when we hold meetings, let us follow up the work until it is established, and not leave the babes to die; for every congregation should become a self-edifying body, radiating the truth. Unless they become such, our labors are largely wasted. There can be no greater work than living and teaching the gospel. With increasing earnestness and zeal, let us renew our energies and "press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus."

Notes From West Tennessee.

BY JOHN R. WILLIAMS.

Last Sunday night (the last day of July) our camp meeting at Glady Hill closed, it being my tenth meeting in succession. The attendance, attention, and singing were the best we ever had at that place. As there was only one poor, wandering soul restored, I judge the preaching fell below former meetings. Brother Ben Swinney, of Greenfield. Tenn., led the | Cospel Advocate.

singing to the satisfaction of one and all. Two brothers and two sisters who believed in and practiced voting said they were done—that they would never vote again or take any part in building up worldly powers or institutions. I am sure the dear Lord has given to his people all the work they can do, and told them when and how to do it. "He sent them into his vineyard." Of one thing I am very certain: the church is not doing the work that God directs it to do, and some one is responsible for not doing it. Woman suffrage is turning the world upside down, but the prophet said: "As for my people, children are their oppressors, and women rule over them. O my people, they that lead thee cause thee to err, and destroy the way of thy paths." (Isa. 3: 12.) Parents are oppressed by their children, and the women are ruling the men. Here in Obion County a young lady who claims to follow Christ is canvassing the county asking the people to give her a public office. Christ never asked for an office, never voted; and if we follow him, how can we do these things? Next Thursday (August 4) is the day for the primary election, and I can hear tenfold more said about the election of certain candidates then I can hear of the salvation of lost souls. Brethren, some day we shall have to answer to God for the way we are doing in this wicked old world.

The Lord willing, Brother Swinney and I will begin a meeting at Jones Chapel, in Lake County, next Lord's day. This will be my eleventh meeting in succession at that place. Sorry to say the congregation is not what it has been in days gone by, for good. Who is responsible? Some one. "Lord, is it I?" Pray for us.

The Hot Weather Test makes people better acquainted with their resources of strength and endurance. Many find they need Hood's Sarsaparilla, which invigorates the blood, promotes refreshing sleep, and overcomes that tired feeling.

"ALF and BOB TAYLOR, with their eloquence, their fiddles, and their fox hounds, have wrought for themselves a niche of eternal melody in the hearts of their country."

So states the author of this little book, which we present as the best product of the pen of Delong Rice. Into one hour of reading he has gathered the strange and romantic story of the two most wonderful political campaigns of Tennessee—the thrilling tale of the happy comradeship and the lifelong rivalry of the two famous brothers—a disclosure of the remarkable and heretofore unpublished incidents that attended the political division of the Taylor family—the wonder of "The War of the Roses" that attracted the attention of the world—and the truth about "OLD LIMBER," the peerless and now immortal fox hound that played the leading role of sentiment in the political campaign of last fall, from the Mississippi River to the Unaka Mountains.

With a "Cast of Characters extending from a President of the United States to a fox hound," the story touches a wide range of human sentiment; and through it all is the aroma of crackling camp fires and the music of the chase.

ABILENE CHRISTIAN COLLEGE

Invites You to Notice Her Standing in the Educational World

Abilene Christian College has just closed her second year as a full college, giving four years of standard college work. As a junior college she enjoyed the highest standing possible for such an institution. It is a matter of no little importance that the first official report submitted to examining authorities brought to her the highest classification given colleges or universities in Texas, that of A-plus grade. So the first work given as a full college received full recognition and credit by other institutions of higher learning.

Many of her graduates have already taken places of responsibility. Some have entered universities for higher work. They are all bearing testimony of the efficient training given them here. Not one of them has been refused at least as much credit as he had here, on entrance for higher work undergraduates have been awarded credit for more than our records show. All of which confirms the fact that the educational world recognizes Abilene Christian College as a real college giving degrees meeting every requirement and standard of scholarship.

To the present, thirty-two standard degrees have been conferred, and scores of teachers' certificates have been issued upon the work done here.

ABILENE CHRISTIAN COLLEGE ABILENE, TEXAS The Cause at Palatka.

BY T. B. THOMPSON.

I am in receipt of a letter from our faithful brother in the Lord, Brother P. G. Millen, of Palatka, Fla., who informs me that the faithful few there are planning a meeting for August, with Brother Cameron, of Largo, Fla., to do the preaching. Heretofore their meetings have been conducted out in the country about two miles. Brother Willis H. Allen, of Jacksonville, Fla., held a meeting there last year with good results. Now they have moved their place of meeting into the town, and in so doing have exhausted their funds in fitting up the latter place. Our good brother writes me that they will have to have help to support this meeting. Brethren, from my personal knowledge, I can recommend this call as a worthy one. Brother Millen is anxious to build up the cause of our Lord in his home town, and that is the same cause you and I are interested in, and so let us express our interest in a substantial way. As churches or individuals, let us send an offering to this work, and do it right now. Send your offering to P. G. Millen, Palatka, Fla., and he will acknowledge receipt of same.

Lengthening Days.

This is due to the fact that the axis of the earth is not perpendicular to the plane of its orbit, but inclined at an angle of twenty-three and one-half degrees to the perpendicular. As the earth travels round in its orbit from its northernmost position the light is later reaching the same point on its surface for a time, but later on this is overcome by its coming nearer to the sun.—Exchange.

Not Feeling Much Better.

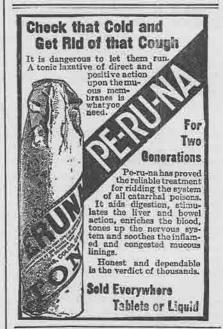

Many are not being benefited by the summer vacation as they should be. Notwithstanding much outdoor life, they are little, if any, stronger now than they were. The tan on their faces is darker and makes them look healthier, but it is only a mask. They are still nervous, easily tired, upset by irifles, and they do not eat nor sleep well.

What they need is what tones the nerves, perfects digestion, creates an appetite, and makes sleep refreshing; in other words, they should take Hood's Sarsaparilla. Pupils, teachers, and others generally will find the chief purpose of the vacation best subserved by this great medicine which "builds up the whole system."

If a cathartic or laxative is needed, Hood's Pills will give entire satisfaction. It is difficult to conceive of anything better for biliousness or constipation. The Day Christ Came.

This was Christ's last day in Jericho. Zaccheus did not know that, but so it was. It dawned like other days, but in all the calendar there was never such a day for Zaccheus and his house. They kept its anniversary every year after. No question about that. When he was an old man, leaning on his staff, his face would brighten and his heart carol a hymn at the memory of that happy day that fixed his heart on Jesus and his home in heaven.

Gray days, with no sign of splendor, dawn upon us, but O how full of opportunity they are! The chance of a lifetime faces us—an eternity of blessedness is begun in our souls.—Silcox.

OBITUARIES

Aldrich.

On Monday morning, June 6, 1921, the angel of death entered the home of Brother Jesse Aldrich and took away his beloved wife. Sister Myrtle Elizabeth Aldrich was born on October 6, 1889. She was married to Jesse Aldrich on November 26, 1911. She confessed faith in Christ and was baptized by Brother W. S. Long, Jr., in early girlhood, and was a consecrated and devoted woman, always anxious to do her duty in every way possible. For about two years she had been afflicted with tuberculosis of the throat following an attack of influenza. Funeral services were conducted Brother Alonzo Williams, after which the remains were interred in the Mount Pleasant Cemetery.

LORA SMITH.

Lipscomb-Caldwell.

On April 19, 1921, Mrs Henrie Z. Lipscomb passed away after many months of suffering; and two short months later her daughter, Jeannette Lipscomb Caldwell, left her grieving family. When we stand by the bed-side of our loved ones as the life-tide ebbs away, the question assails us: Where does the spirit go? Our Lord, as he surrendered his spirit on Calvary, committed it into the hands of his Father. Stephen, as he knelt before those who were stoning him, beheld Jesus at the right hand of God, and prayed: "Lord Jesus, receive my spirit." Paul, in view of what he spirit." Paul, in view of what he must yet suffer, after many years of testifying for the Master, said: "It is far better to depart and be with Christ." Death of the mortal body marks the boundary, beyond which mortal eyes may not see; but the eye of faith looks beyond and beholds Jesus, who at the price of blood redeemed us, and hope as an anchor will hold us fast till our Father in his own good time reveals to his saints the things which eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, and the mind of man hath not conceived—the things which God hath prepared through our Lord Jesus Christ for the faithful. our So let us rest in the assurance that the spirits of our departed are in the company of other spirits of the right-eous and in the care of their Lord and ours: M. L.

FIELD REPORTS

Mellette, Okla., August 1.—The meeting at Springfield, Ark., closed on Sunday night, with four additions. This was a mission meeting, and I believe much good was done. I am now in a meeting at Mellette.—Charles L. Speir.

Gadsden, Ala., August 1.—The work is progressing fairly well here, the interest and attendance growing with each service. I preach twice in Gadsden on Sunday, once in Alabama City. I preach at shops, in jail, and conduct Bible studies where desired through the week. I have no time for loafing.—J. H. Morris.

Kirbyville, Texas, August 1.—I closed a splendid short meeting three miles east of Hope, Ark., at the water, last night. The meeting was well attended throughout. Five were baptized and one by membership. The members arranged for me to be with them in a fifteen-days' meeting in 1922. My next meeting is to begin on August 6, in Shelby County, Texas.—J. S. Daugherty.

Coxey, Ala., July 31.—On the fourth Lord's day in July Brother Thornton Crews, of Rogersville, Ala., began a series of meetings at Mount Carmel, Ala., and continued to Saturday morning following, closing at the water's edge. The interest and attendance were good throughout the meeting. Fifteen were added to the one body by primary obedience and twenty-two were restored.—P. W. Ball.

Rogersville, Ala., August 3.—I closed a very good meeting at Oakland, near Athens, Ala., on July 23. We had two baptisms and two restorations. I began a meeting at Mount Carmel on July 24 and closed it on the following Saturday. We had fifteen baptisms and twenty-two restorations. This was one of the best meetings of my life. I am now at home, with Brother Boles, who is in what promises to be a fine meeting.—Thornton Crews.

Temple Hill, Ky., August 1.—On the second Sunday in July I began a meeting at Shady Grove and continued it two weeks, with three baptized and one reclaimed. On Monday night after the fourth Sunday in July we began at Pruitt's Knob and continued till the fifth Sunday, with one baptized. The interest at this place was fine. The brethren agreed to build a house for the Lord. I am now at Temple Hill for a three-weeks' meeting.—N. W. Proffitt.

Hornersville, Mo., August 1.—Brother Stanley Jones recently closed a two-weeks' meeting at this place. Nine were baptized and seven wandering children came back to the fold. This was the first Christian preacher to preach at this place. We have a hall rented over a feed store, and a few of us meet together on the first day of the week for prayer and to break bread. We hope to be able to build a house in the near future. Brother Jones will preach for us once a month.—R. M. McCaleb.

Lake Park, Ga., August 1.—We have just closed a fifteen-days' meeting at Dasher, Ga. Twelve were baptized and four restored to the way of life. The day meetings were attended better than I ever saw before. People from Quitman, Valdosta, and Savannah, Ga., and Miami and Gainesville, Fla., and Nashville, Tenn., were present at the services. The following preachers, besides myself, attended: J. P. Prevatt, J. E. Boyd, G. E. Claus, Jasper Copeland, and Brother Colson. We think the meeting was a harvesting of the seed sowing done by the faithful teachers of Dasher Bible School.—Earl C. Smith.

Lawrenceburg, Tenn., August 2.—
On the third Lord's day in July 1 began a meeting with the faithful band of brethren at Belmont, Miss., preaching day and night for twelve days. Large, attentive audiences were present at each service, and, as visible results, fifteen precious souls were buried with Christ in baptism, two were restored, and three left the Baptist Church and expressed a desire to be Christians only. I am now in a meeting at Salem Church, three miles west of Lawrenceburg, preaching day and night to large, attentive congregations.—J. T. Harris.

Murray, Ky., August 1.—On Saturday night before the fourth Sunday in July I closed an interesting meeting at Lebanon Church, near Dresden, Tenn. Eight were added. I was at Mount Pleasant, near Wingo, Ky., on July 24-31. We had a good meeting in spite of the political campaign that surrounded us. Eight were obedient to the faith. This was my fourth consecutive meeting with these good brethren. It was my privilege while there to hear Brother A. O. Colley, who was near by in a meeting. Brother Colley preaches the word with power. I began last evening at Green Plain, south of Murray. Prospects are good.—Coleman Overbey.

Blaine, Ark., August 1.—The meeting here began on Saturday night, and we had a very good hearing. There are but very few disciples here, and most of them are sisters. It is a great sacrifice for me to hold this meeting; but when the cry, "Come over and help us," comes, I do not know just how to refuse. Some one told me not long ago that they paid their preacher two hundred and forty-five dollars for holding the meeting, and asked him to come back next year, and he told them if they would pay him three hundred and fifty dollars he would come. How is that for the "love of money," "preaching for money," and making "merchandise of the gospel?" The brethren should do their duty in supporting the preacher, but the preacher should not make money his god. I hope to do some good here in establishing the cause of Christ in this town.—D. S. Ligon.

Berlin, Ga., August 2.—Brethren G. E. Claus and J. E. Boyd, of Valdosta, recently held a meeting in Moultrie, and came out to Troy Schoolhouse, near here, and preached on Sunday afternoons. The Lord willing, we will begin a meeting in Berlin on August 11. We will use the Missionary Baptist house. Brother Claus will do the preaching, and I suppose Brother Boyd will lead the singing. This will be our first meeting in Berlin, and we expect a large attendance. During the meeting I will distribute several hundred copies of "The Whole Counsel." Brother Fuqua's paper. During the world war the people here learned to hate German names and tried to rename their town. Now I wonder if they can be taught to dislike denominational names and division and will love the Lord enough to give up such. Our prayers are that they may.-Adair P. Chapman.

Ridgeland, Miss., August 2.—The π eeting at Old Union, Carroll County, Miss., began on July 10, with Brother W. M. Gammill doing the preaching, in the absence of Brother M. C. Cayce, who could not leave his meeting in Vicksburg. When I arrived at Old Union, the brethren had decided to close the meeting on Sunday night, July 17, as they had only been having meetings of one week's duration; but I prevailed upon them to continue the meeting, and after twelve days more the meeting came to a close, with twenty-eight baptized and nine restored, all grown people but seven. Twenty-two were fathers or mothers. Eight of this number obeyed during Brother Gammill's preaching, I am now at Ridgeland, and will be here about two weeks before going to Rockwood, Tenn. Brother Cayce is now in an interesting meeting at Pearl, Miss. -Will J. Cullum.

Carrollton, Miss., August 3 .- The congregation worshiping at Old Union has just closed one of the most successful meetings in the history of the church, not because of the many additions, but that the church has been greatly strengthened and has been taught its duty more perfectly toward God and man. There were thirty-seven additions—twenty-eight by baptism and nine restored. Five of those baptized were from the Methodists and four from the Baptists. There were others who were "almost per-suaded," but failed to renounce the sects of which they were members and do as the Lord directs. Brother W. M. Gammill preached six days; Brother W. J. Cullum, of Nashville, Tenn., twelve days. The attendance was good, especially at the night services, many times the house being filled. I never saw people give better attention, nor saw them as enthusiastic to hear the gospel.-Mrs. Ottie

Gadsden, Ala., July 25.—1 began working with the church of Christ here on July 17 for at least one month, and may continue regularly with them if the interest can be worked up to the point where the work can be made self-sustaining. The attendance has increased from about thirty at the day services on July 17 to about sixty-five at the day services on July 24. have in Gadsden proper about forty members, with perhaps thirty or thirty-five that can be depended on to attend regularly. We have several members in Alabama City where I am preaching in the afternoon in Dwight Hall on Sundays, but they are not meeting for communion services; but some of them came to Gadsden for the morning services. We have a small congregation meeting for regular worship in a hall in Attalla, but I have not met with any of those breth-ren yet. I have visited practically all the homes of the members during the past week, making personal appeals for regular attendance, and have placed placards in all the hotels, cafés, rooming houses, and railroad depots, advertising the location of the church and hours of all services. We hope for greater things for God in this great field.—J. H. Morris.

Reform, Miss., August 1.-I closed a meeting at a mission point out from Philadelphia, Miss., on the railroad from Neshoba, Monday night of last week. I preached seventeen sermons, with a very good hearing most of the time. One who had obeyed the gospel in the past, but who had been out of line, came back to duty and will now meet and worship with the congregation of five members. One other person, a woman, came forward one night and made confession of Christ, but then refused to be baptized, choosing to remain in sectarian darkness rather than walk in the light of God's word. Bitter sectarian opposition exists in this field, yet I think I am leaving a much better feeling toward the church of Christ than I found at the start. I then went to Stewart and put in three days at the debate near there between Brother Jeffcoat and his cousin, a Primitive Baptist, named Meese. Quite a good attendance was there, and we are very well pleased with the results. Brother Harris and I are now in a short meeting here at Reform. I may not stop much longer in this State on this trip, as people needing meetings are not ready, but want a man to wait some two or three weeks to begin same, and a preacher cannot do that. - Andrew Algood, Tenn., August 1.—The second Sunday in July Brethren Dave Knight and John Knight began a meeting at Netherland, near here. It was my pleasure to be with them some. The gospel was forcefully presented by these brethren. One was baptized. On Thursday before the fourth Lord's day I began a meeting at Sulphur, in Overton County, which continued one week. We had large crowds and good interest throughout the meeting. On Saturday Brother Marion Harris came to begin a meeting at Windle; but as our meetings were so close together, we consoli-dated the two, preaching at Windle some in daytime and at Sulphur at night. I also preached one day at Crawford Schoolhouse, near by. Sul-phur is a mission point. This meet-Ing resulted in one baptism, a man about seventy years old. Brother Harris is now in the evening of life, and has been preaching the gospel for many years. It was a great joy to me to be with him again. Brother Albert Roberts, a blind brother, led the singing, and did it well. Churches would do well to get him to sing in meetings or to train classes. Although his eyes are closed to the beautiful sights we daily enjoy, yet he is not a burden to others, but makes his own way in the world. He also can help by leading in prayer, is well informed in the Scriptures, and is strictly loyal to the truth. His address is Algood, Tenn., Route 1. I go next to Sykes, Smith County, Tenn.—Allen Phy.

CURRENT THOUGHT

But You Don't.

Tell me where you worship God on Sunday, and I will tell you the kind of a Christian you are.

You can worship God in your home on Sunday-but you don't.

You can worship God in the woods and in the fieldsbut you don't,

You can worship God on the lakes and on the riversbut you don't.

You can worship God on the road in the auto or in the buggy-but you don't

You can worship God in a different church each Sunday morning-but you don't.

You can worship God in your lodge and neglect the church-but you don't.

You can worship God by sending the kids to Sunday school and staying at home—but you don't.

You can worship God by going to church and taking the kids with you-but you don't.-The Baptist Reporter.

The teaching of the above paragraph is misleading and unscriptural and, in my judgment, will do more harnt than good. The author of it, no doubt, means well, but he misses the ideal of true worship by a wide mark. His chief thought seems to be that people can worship God almost anywhere on Sunday, but they fail to do it. Certainly the true Christian can maintain a reverent and worshipful attitude toward the Creator in the woods, in an auto, or on the lakes, but this does not mean that he was worshiping God in an acceptable way. The New Testament specifies not only a day of worship, but certain acts and items of worship that must be attended to. The Lord's Supper, teaching, preaching, prayer, singing, and the contribution are included. These things are done in the church, which is the pillar and ground of the truth. We cannot do them and forsake the assembling of ourselves together. Nothing is said in the New Testament about worshiping God in a lodge at any time. The statement that parents may send the children to Sunday school and worship God at home is opposed both to the teaching and example of the primitive church. It is just such slipshod methods as that indicated above that the worldling and the indifferent Christian are looking for. Shame on the man that encourages them! You can open your eyes and see the truth and teach it to others-but you don't.

I Am the Immigrant.

Since the dawn of creation my restless feet have beaten new paths across the earth.

My uneasy bark has tossed on all seas.

My wandering was born of the craving for more liberty and a better wage for the sweat of my face.

I looked toward the United States with eyes kindled by the fire of ambition and heart quickened with newborn hope.

approached its gates with great expectation.

entered in with fine hope.

- I have shouldered my burden as the American man of all work.
- I contribute eighty-five per cent of all labor in the slaughtering and meat-packing industries.

I do seven-tenths of the bituminous coal mining.

- I do seventy-eight per cent of all the work in the woolen mills.
- I contribute nine-tenths of all the labor in the cotton mills
 - I make nineteen-twentieths of all the clothing.
 - manufacture more than half the shoes. build four-fifths of all the furniture.
 - make half of the collars, cuffs, and shirts.
 - turn out four-fifths of all the leather.

I make half the gloves.

I refine nearly nineteen-twentieths of the sugar.

And yet I am the great American problem.-Home and Foreign Fields.

When I read the above paragraph with its remarkable claims for the immigrant, I thought immediately of the little band of loyal disciples who are trying to get a foothold in New York City. In no other city in the world are there such opportunities to sow the seed of the gospel as in this great metropolis. When Brethren Carter, Pearson, Mc-Gee, Williams, and others have rounded up the scattered Christians living there, it is to be hoped that they will make an earnest effort to reach those immigrant classes with God's saving word. "God is no respecter of persons," and every benighted soul is dear to him. If it be true that these people have added so much to our material prosperity, shall we not add something to their spiritual advancement?

Ten Reasons For Going to Church.

1. We like to please our friends. You have not a worthy friend who would not be pleased to have you go to church.

2. The sermon may help you. Daniel Webster said: "It is a mighty poor sermon that doesn't hit me somewhere."

3. It helps us keep in touch with the Eternal Verities. There is danger that God, our loved ones, and the future world will be crowded out of our thoughts.

4. It helps to keep our ideals fresh and high and stimulates us to live up to them.

5. It encourages an institution that stands for the best things, and that cannot live without friends and supporters.

6. It helps us to see things in their right proportions. We need the comprehensive view which takes in not only dirt and dollars, but also character and eternity.

7. The reflex action of worship is as inevitable as it is ennobling. One cannot help but grow like that which he reverences, loves, and adores.

8. Its service appeals to the best sides of our naturesthe music to the æsthetic, our friends to the social, the sermon to the intellectual, the worship to our oldest and deepest instincts.

9. The thought and speech on high themes, the noble hymns and dignified music are needed to offset the slang, profanity, and ragtime with which we are daily assaulted.

10. George F. Hoar says: "There is no more commanding public duty than attendance at church on Sunday. It would be impossible to maintain liberty or self-government if our churches were closed, and public worship of God is to be maintained only by attendance upon it."-H. S. Bradley, in The Congregationalist.

The above "ten reasons for going to church" are good enough in a way, but they are presented purely from the ethical viewpoint. There is one big reason why God's children should "go to church" (if I may be permitted to use this expression by way of accommodation), and that is because God has commanded it. If once this big convincing and compelling motive is grasped and appreciated, it is easy enough to find the teaching that lies behind it.

- 1. "Ye are my friends, if ye do what I command you." (John 15: 14.)
 - 2. "Whatsoever he saith unto you, do it." (John 2: 5.)
- 3. "Blessed is that servant, whom his lord when he cometh shall find so doing." (Matt. 24: 46.)
- 4. "Not forsaking our own assembling together, as the custom of some is, but exhorting one another." 10: 25.)
- 5. "Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly; in all wisdom teaching and admonishing one another with psalms and hymns and spiritual songs." (Col. 3: 16.)
- 6. "But he that looketh into the perfect law, the law of liberty, and so continueth, being not a hearer that forgetteth but a doer that worketh, this man shall be blessed in his doing." (James 1: 25.)
- 7. "And they continued steadfastly in the apostles' teaching and fellowship, in the breaking of bread and the prayers." (Acts 2: 42.)
- 8. "And he that keepeth his commandments abideth in him, and he in him." (1 John 1: 24.)
- 9. "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life." (Rev. 2: 10.)
- 10. "And why call ye me, Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?" (Luke 6: 46.)

Examples of Sin-Their Consequences.

BY H. LEO BOLES.

As creatures of God, we operate and function in the moral universe as free agents. Sin would be impossible if man could not choose. As moral beings, we are placed under moral law where sin is possible. A moral being could not exist without the power of choice; this expresses our freedom to obey or disobey. It is axiomatic truth in the moral realm that man could not be obedient where disobedience is impossible; there could be no righteousness if sin is not possible. As man is to be obedient to law, law is universal by its very nature; in fact, God is a universal God, and his laws partake of his nature. Sin by its very nature is personal, and the sinner is held responsible for his sin; the consequences of sin are often very general, affecting the innocent in many instances. This generality is due in a measure to the generality of the law which has been transgressed.

What is God's attitude toward the sinner and his sin? The answer to this question can be found in the Bible; it may be seen from the long catalogue of sins recorded in the Bible and important lessons learned therefrom. It must be observed by the thoughtful student of the Bible that Jehovah is "merciful and gracious, slow to anger, and abundant in loving-kindness and truth; keeping loving-kindness for thousands, forgiving iniquity and transgression and sin; and that will by no means clear the guilty, visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children, and upon the children's children, upon the third and upon the fourth generation." (Ex. 34: 6, 7.) In God's dealing with the sinner we see his "goodness and severity." All of God's dealings with the human family show his goodness and severity; all of his attributes harmonize; there is no conflict between the anger of Jehovah and his love, between his goodness and his severity, between his mercy and his chastisement. He who thinks God is good to one person at one time and is not good at another time has the wrong conception of Jehovah. In his punishment of sin may be seen his love, mercy, goodness, severity, and wisdom.

As we study God's attitude toward Adam, the first sinner, we behold his goodness and severity. Adam and Eve by their sin became unfit for dwelling in the garden of Eden and are removed; they are separated from it, yet they are permitted to continue to dwell upon the earth and fill their mission as husband and wife, father and mother. Bible says nothing about their repentance nor God's forgiveness. Their sin and its consequences have affected the whole human family. It may be hard for man, in his finite condition and short-sightedness, to see the goodness of God in dealing with the first sinners; yet our God is good. Man had exercised his freedom of choice and chose to disobey, and in this choice he unfits himself for further dwelling in the garden; he had rendered himself unworthy of the honorable station that was first given him, and it was never restored to him.

Reuben, the first-born of Jacob, was entitled by virtue of his birth to the birthright of Jacob; he had a right to a double portion of all that his father had; he had "the preeminence of dignity and the preeminence of power." He sinned, and, so far as the record shows, he had been forgiven; but because of this sin he had unfitted himself for the honor, dignity, and preeminence. So when Jacob was pronouncing, in a prophetic way, the blessings upon his sons, the birthright was given to another. "Boiling over as water, thou shalt not have the preeminence; because thou wentest up to thy father's bed; then defiledst thou it: he went up to my couch." (Gen. 49: 4.)

Miriam, the sister of Moses, was very prominent in the early history of Israel; she is called a prophetess, and led all the women in singing the song of deliverance of Israel from Egypt. "Miriam and Aaron spake against Moses because of the Cushite woman whom he had married. . . And they said, Hath Jehovah indeed spoken only with Moses? hath he not spoken also with us? And Jehovah heard it." (Num. 12: 1, 2.) It appears that she was jealous of Moses; it seems that she thought that she and Aaron might have a share in the government. This was a sin against Jehovah and Moses. Jehovah called for Moses, Aaron, and Miriam to come out "ye three unto the tent of meeting." They answered the call of Jehovah, and Jehovah rebuked Aaron and Miriam for their sin. Miriam was smitten with leprosy as part punishment for her sin. Aaron "said unto Moses, O, my Lord, lay not, I pray thee, sin upon us, for that we have done foolishly, and for that we have sinned. Let her not, I pray, be as one dead, of whom the flesh is half consumed when he cometh out of his mother's womb. And Moses cried unto Jehovah, saying, Heal her, O God, I beseech thee. And Jehovah said unto Moses, If her father had but spit in her face, should she not be ashamed seven days? Let her be shut up without the camp seven days, and after that she shall be brought in again. And Miriam was shut up without the camp seven days: and the people journeyed not till Miriam was brought in again." (Num. 12: 11-15.) Miriam was pardoned and cleansed, but had to remain isolated from the people seven days.

Moses and Aaron sinned against Jehovah while in the wilderness, at the waters of Meribah. Moses was the leader of God's people, yet he sinned against Jehovah; and Jehovah pardoned him, but he refused to let him enter the promised land. He was only permitted to climb up to the top of the mountain and look over into the promised land, but was not permitted to go into the land, "because ye rebelled against my word in the wilderness of Zin." It seems that Moses had asked permission to go in, after Jehovah had forgiven him, yet because of this forgiven sin Jehovah refused to let him enter the promised land. This privilege was denied him although he had been forgiven. He was in "good standing" and fellowship with God and with the people, yet because of this forgiven sin Jehovah in his goodness and mercy refuses to let him have the honor of leading the children of Israel into the promised land. "Behold the goodness and severity of God." The same may be said of Aaron, as he was a party with Moses to the sin. He also was refused entrance into Canaan.

Paul and Barnabas left Antioch on what is known as the first missionary tour. They took Mark with them. He accompanied them as far as Perga in Pamphylia, and there "John departed from them and returned to Jerusalem." When they got ready to start on their second tour, Barnabas wanted to take John Mark with them. "But Paul thought not good to take with them him who withdrew from them from Pamphylia, and went not with them to the work." Paul and Barnabas discussed the question, and, as Paul thought, it was not expedient to take him "who would, either through fear or love of ease, desert him in a trying hour." The question of expediency in this case had great weight with Paul, and John Mark was not permitted to enjoy the honor of accompanying Paul on his second tour. He and Barnabas went into another field.

Paul, in giving the qualifications of men who should be appointed to the office of a bishop, among other things, says: "Moreover he must have good testimony from them that are without; lest he fall into reproach and the snare of the devil." (1 Tim. 3: 7.) Though forgiven of all past sins, yet his manner of life, in a measure, unfits him for the office of a bishop.

Brother John T. Lewis and Baptism For Remission. BY LEE JACKSON.

In the Gospel Advocate of May 26, replying to what Brother C. E. Holt had written, Brother John T. Lewis says: "'That baptism stands related to remission of sins psychologically,' I know nothing about; but that 'baptism stands related to remission of sins' in the same sense that the shedding of Christ's blood 'stands related to remission of sins' is scriptural, and I suppose in a procurative sense, isn't it, Brother Holt?" In his replies to Brother Lewis, Brother Kurfees appears to have overlooked this statement, and because of its vital bearing against the integrity of our plea for the gospel in its purity this misunderstanding on the part of Brother Lewis should not be allowed to pass unchallenged. It is for the reason that some one should correct the wrong impression that it may make that I am calling attention to it.

It is to be regretted that Brother Lewis places himself on record as teaching that the blood of Christ and baptism stand related to the remission of sins in the same sense or meaning; and, as Brother Lewis wrote it, it is to be regretted that such a statement gets before the public in any paper claiming to stand for New Testament teaching on the design of baptism. I am certain that if Brother Lewis understood the vital principle of gospel teaching on this all-important subject, he would not go forth to the world telling lost men and women that baptism in its meaning holds the same relation to the remission of sins that the blood of Christ holds. Of course I have no means of knowing how many brethren of the class that Brother Lewis claims to represent make it their practice to teach that baptism and the blood of Christ are for remission of sins in the same sense, but, for the sake of the cause of Christ, it is hoped that the number is small. No one should attempt to preach the gospel who has not, first of all, learned that the shedding of the blood of Christ in his death is the meritorious cause of remission of sins. This is not true of baptism. It Is said in 1 Pet. 1: 18, 19, that we were redeemed by the precious blood of Christ, but it cannot be affirmed that baptism redeems us in the same sense that we are redeemed by the blood of Christ. And the saints are said to have been purchased with the blood of Christ (Acts 20: 28; Rev. 5: 9), but we dare not say that we purchase the remission of our sins by being baptized. Yet that is what is unscripturally said when it is claimed that baptism is for remission of sins in the same sense that the blood of Christ is for remission, and that that is a "procuring sense," as Brother Lewis states it. In Rom, 3: 25 Christ is said to be set forth as a mercy seat for us, "through faith in his blood," but it is nowhere said that that we secure God's mercy through faith in baptism. And it is nowhere said that an understanding of the design of baptism is meritorious to our salvation; but the Scriptures do teach that the blood of Christ in his death is meritorious. Faith that is obedient in baptism is a condition by which sinners secure to themselves the pardon of past sins; and yet there is nothing in this obedience that the sinner can claim as meritorious to his salvation. This obedient surrender to the will of the Christ is simply the active acceptance of the salvation which Christ in the shedding of his blood has made possible for us, and which is graciously offered to us upon condition of this obedient surrender. If there are many among us who hold this notion that baptism is for remission of sins in the same sense that the blood of Christ is for remission, and if this error cannot be corrected through teaching, then it can be truthfully said there are evil days ahead for the plea for gospel teaching and practicing in its simplicity and purity.

But it may be that Brother Lewis did not really mean to say what his language conveys. If so, he can correct it. What I have written demands no reply; there is no reply to be made to it. Therefore, no discussion is called for. If Brother Lewis simply wants to rebuke me for "jumping" in, he can do this, and I will stand rebuked.

[My reason for not replying at the time to that statement in Brother Lewis' article in our issue of May 26, 1921, was twofold. First, I felt sure, as Brother Jackson suggests, that "Brother Lewis did not really mean to say what his language conveys." Secondly, I did not think it best to leave the issue we were discussing and to divert attention to a new issue. Sticking scrupulously to the one issue in debate is always essential to clearness, and it is not best, as a rule, to mix it with side issues.

Taking the language in question to have been intended to mean what it really says, Brother Jackson has fully answered it, and, as he very properly suggests, "no discussion is called for." I feel sure that Brother Lewis will indorse Brother Jackson's article; and if he wishes to express himself on this point, or to present more clearly what he really meant by his former statement, we will gladly give him space to do so.—M. C. K.]

"Instrumental Music in the Worship," by M. C. Kurfees, is undoubtedly the most complete book ever issued on that subject. Whether for or against instrumental music in the worship, you cannot afford to be without a copy of this book. Send us $1,25 for it.

Have you seen a copy of "Sweeney's Sermons?" This is one of the best books of sermons published. John S. Sweeney could pack more into a sentence and more into a sermon than almost any preacher among us. His thoughts are clear, vigorous, and convincing. Send $1.50 for a copy.

Have you seen "Questions Answered," by Lipscomb and Sewell? This is a book that will be good one hundred years hence. You should order now so that your children and friends can read it. Many Bible questions are scripturally answered. No one who studies the Bible and wishes information on Bible subjects can well afford to be without it. Price, $3, postpaid.

BY A LOVER OF THEM.

Few people stop to consider how much of time and thought and trouble and expense are involved in writing and publishing books. True enough, some books are written and dashed off in a hurry-in a month or a week, perhaps-in these days of lightning execution. But the book worth while, the one that becomes standard and attains a permanent value, is not made in this rapid style. Such a book stands for years and years of toil, patient study, and devotion to the subjects that are to be illuminated. I do not know a better example of how much is required of him who would write a good book than a consideration of how Dr. T. W. Brents wrote "The Gospel Plan of Salvation." In writing his Preface, this author stated that he conceived the plan of the book fifteen years before and had been working on it ever since. He deemed it prudent to "hasten leisurely." He wished his book to live when he was "sleeping the years away." The author's dream has been realized. He has been "sleeping the years away," while his book grows in circulation and influence. It has already passed the eleventh edition.

In a Single Volume.

The theme of the book is one of transcendent importance. While others had written upon some, perhaps all, of the subjects treated in this work, it remained for Dr. Brents to put them all in logical, concise form in a single book. While it is directly addressed to the alien, showing him God's revealed plan of salvation, it will also aid the young disciple in obtaining a more extensive knowledge of the "form of doctrine" by which he was made free from sin. Young preachers will find it a valuable compend of argument and critical authority in the study of many subjects which they will find it necessary to examine. Were they compelled to get this amount of authority from the original authors, it would cost them much labor and money. Many of the works quoted from are out of print, so that only secondhand copies can be had at all, and these only by importation at fabulous cost. Dr. Brents paid as high as twenty-five dollars for works in order to obtain the definition of a single word. This will give our readers an idea of how much a good book costs in the making. What a blessing that we can secure a copy at a very small price!

How Much Is Original?

We talk much of "original speech," but, after all has been said, in expression alone is originality admissible in preaching the gospel. In matter we are driven to the same fountainhead. Furthermore, we are solemnly warned not to treach any other gospel than that which Paul preached. Hence, all faithful preachers speak the same things, the only originality being found in the manner of telling these things. Brother John S. Durst recognizes this salient point in the preparation of his valuable series of sermon outlines to which he gives the title, "Fifty-two Bible Subjects Examined." He candidly states that he has learned many things from his colaborers and has utilized them in his own way in the presentation of his series. The book is very helpful and suggestive. The alien, as well as the Christian, can be very materially assisted in arriving at truth. Young preachers may be assisted in the preparation of their discourses without laying aside their individuality. The fifty-two subjects selected cover a wide range. but deal chiefly with fundamentals. References are conveniently arranged in condensed form and in their proper connection. This little volume should be handed out in large quantities to those who are not Christians. If read thoughtfully, the alien may be led almost unconsciously and without prejudice to an acceptance of the truth. On the other hand, the Christian will have, in a condensed form, a scriptural presentation of the church, who the members are, what they are, their duties as members, and the reward of a life of faith and love. Brother Durst, the author, has been a preacher of the gospel for more than half a century.

"The Indiana Pulpit."

One of the best books from the press of the Standard Publishing Company, of Cincinnati, Ohio, bears the title, "The Indiana Pulpit," and is edited by W. H. Book, the well-known evangelist, of Columbus, Ind. It consists of twenty-two selected sermons, one each from that number of preachers who claim the "Hoosier" State as their habitat. For the most part, they are strong, virile presentations of the truth of God's word on important subjects. Of course there are, as in every book of this kind, some errors; but the good is uppermost, and the book may be read with great profit by those who read with discrimination. The writers and the subjects treated are as folows: "Constancy," Joseph C. Todd; "Christ the Way," Charles H. Winders; "Christ's Answer to Life's Greatest Questions," Guy Israel Hoover; "A Significant Conversion," W. J. Cocke; "The World's Great Common Denominator," T. J. Legg; "With All His House," George Watson Hemry; "My Master's Cross and Mine," Robert N. Simpson; 'The Democracy of Christian Faith," E. Richard Edwards; "The Vision of the Pure Heart," James Small; "Man More Valuable than a Sheep," J. A. Spencer; "The Plea of the Disciples of Christ," L. O. Newcomer; "An Old Love Story," W. T. Brooks; "The Birthday of a King," C. J. Sharp; "The Transforming Power of the Gospel," J. V. Coombs; "Man's Greatest Discovery," Commodore W. Cauble; "The Lion of the Tribe of Judah," J. C. Mrs. Tabby White Goes Shopping.

Mrs. Tabby White put on her new green bonnet and her best Paisley shawl. Then she took a notebook and pencil from her pocket.

"Let me see," said Mrs. Tabby White, "what must I buy to-day?"

First she wrote down: "New mittens for the three little kittens."

"They do soil them so quickly!" said Mrs. Tabby White. Next she wrote down: "Two bunches of catnip (very fresh); one jug of cream (also very fresh)." And last she wrote: "A box of herrings."

They will do nicely for tea," remarked Mrs. Tabby

Whereupon Mrs. Tabby White took her market basket, locked the door of her home, and started out for Peter Pumpkin's store.

On the way she met Mrs. Fuzzy Wuzzy.

"Where are you going, Mrs Tabby White," asked Mrs. Fuzzy Wuzzy.

"To Peter Pumpkin's store," said Mrs. Tabby White, "to do my morning's shopping. I am going to buy some new mittens for the three little kittens, two bunches of catnip, one jug of cream, and a box of herrings."

"O me, O my!" exclaimed Mrs. Fuzzy Wuzzy. "Is that so, Mrs. Tabby White? Are you, indeed? How I wish I had a bit of catnip! There's nothing my kittens like so well."

Mrs. Tabby White went on, and presently she reached old Dame Mouser's cottage. Old Dame Mouser was sitting in the front yard shelling peas.

"Where are you going, Mrs. Tabby White?" asked old Dame Mouser

"To Peter Pumpkin's store," replied Mrs. Tabby White, "to do my morning's shopping. I am going to buy some new mittens for the three little kittens, two bunches of catnip, one jug of cream, and a box of herrings."

"O me, O my!" cried old Dame Mouser. "Is that so, Mrs. Tabby White? Are you truly going to buy all those things? If only I had a jug of cream, I'd make a sauce for these peas. Creamed peas are very delicious, you know."

Mrs. Tabby White went on, and at the cross roads whom should she meet but young Mrs. Tiddle Cat out for a walk?

"I should like to know where you are going, dear Mrs. Tabby White?" said young Mrs. Tiddle Cat gaily.

"To Peter Pumpkin's store to do my morning's shopping," answered Mrs. Tabby White. "I am going to buy some new mittens for the three little kittens, two bunches of catnip, one jug of cream, and a box of herrings."

"Why, Mrs. Tabby White," laughed young Mrs. Tiddle Cat, "that will be splendid! A box of herrings is a great treat. I should like some myself."

Mrs. Tabby White went on; and, as she walked very quickly and followed her nose, she soon came to Peter Pumpkin's store.

"Good morning, Mr. Peter Pumpkin," said Mrs. Tabby White.

"Good morning, Mrs. Tabby White," answered Mr. Peter Pumpkin. "What can I do for you to-day"

"I have come to buy some new mittens for the three little kittens, two bunches of catnip, one jug of cream, and a box of herrings," said Mrs. Tabby White. "They must all be fresh."

"I can accommodate you, ma'am," replied Mr. Peter Pumpkin. "I stock up every day, and my prices are very low."

"That," agreed Mrs. Tabby White, "will please me greatly."

So Mr. Peter Pumpkin put into Mrs. Tabby White's basket some new mittens for the three little kittens, two bunches of catnip, one jug of cream, and a box of herrings, and Mrs. Tabby White started home again.

After a time she came to Mrs. Tiddle Cat's house.

"It's a shame," thought Mrs. Tabby White. "I don't suppose that poor, dear creature has a herring once a year. Really, I think I must give her these."

She ran into the yard and called: "Mrs. Tiddle Cat! Mrs. Tiddle Cat! Here is a box of herrings for you!"

Mrs. Tiddle Cat put her head out the window. "Why, bless your heart, Mrs. Tabby White!" she said. "Thank you kindly; thank you kindly."

Mrs. Tabby White went on. By and by she saw old Dame Mouser still sitting in the yard.

"It's certainly a pity," said kind-hearted Mrs. Tabby White to herself, "that old Dame Mouser never can get fresh cream. Really, I think I ought to give her this."

She held the jug of cream over the gate. "How would you like this jug of cream, Dame Mouser?" she asked.

"Very much, indeed," answered old Dame Mouser.
"Thank you kindly, Mrs. Tabby White; thank you kindly."

Mrs. Tabby White went on. As she drew near Mrs. Fuzzy Wuzzy's house she heard, "Mee-ow, mee-ow;" then she heard another "Mee-ow, mee-ow;" then she heard lots more.

"It's Mrs. Fuzzy Wuzzy's kittens," thought Mrs. Tabby White. "Really, she needs this catnip more than I do."

So Mrs. Tabby White went up the path and rang Mrs. Fuzzy Wuzzy's bell; and she gave Mrs. Fuzzy Wuzzy every single bit of her catnip.

Then generous Mrs. Tabby White went home, and all she had left in the basket were the new mittens for the three little kittens.

"Really," said Mrs. Tabby White, taking off her new green bonnet and her best Paisley shawl, "I must go shopping again to-morrow merning."

And Mrs. Tabby White did.—Susan Holton, in Presbyterian Banner.

Laughing Birds.

If you do not like being laughed at, I am sure you would not like a journey in an Australian forest. Perhaps you would suddenly hear a low cry of "Yah, yah, yah!" The cry grows louder and louder, and other cries join in, until you might think the forest was full of people laughing at you. But the sound comes from birds instead of people—queer birds called "laughing kingfishers."—Exchange.

Reflections on Sin and Its Consequences.

BY J. C. M'O.

God is absolutely pure and holy; hence, all sin is distasteful to him. In the very fitness of things sin cannot dwell in his presence any more than darkness can dwell in the presence of light. God loves the sinner, but not sin. God is so far removed from sin that sin cannot exist in his presence, but God so loved sinners that he gave his own beloved Son to die to redeem them. John says: "God is love." As God hates sin with all the strength of his omnipotence, so he erects a standard of perfection and admonishes all his children, "preacher and layman:" "Ye therefore shall be perfect, as your heavenly Father is perfect." (Matt. 5: 48.) I repeat, all Christians must seek to attain to a perfect standard; so the Bible does not warrant us in holding that a preacher must be more perfect than any other Christian. Every Christian is admonished to be perfect in a relative sense; so we must not insist on a double standard by demanding more than perfection of a preacher.

But we must not overlook the classification of sins set forth in the Bible, lest we become confused and misled on the subject under consideration. The sin of setting aside or modifying the law of God is a greater one in the sight of God than lying, stealing, or murder. One is an impeachment of the wisdom and authority of God, while the others are sins growing out of the weakness of the flesh. God took the kingdom from Saul, who set his law aside and instituted one of his own; while he pardoned and retained David, the adulterer and murderer, king of his people. If we would teach the truth on the subject of sin and its punishment, we must differentiate between the sin of treason against the government of God and the sins growing out of the weakness of fleshly appetites and passions. All sins of weakness, appetite, and passion are classified by the Holy Spirit together. The man who steals and confesses to one or two is as guilty a sinner as the one who commits adultery and makes a public confession of his sin.

Adam was placed under both moral and positive law, the positive law being not with reference to eating, for God gave him the appetite for food, but the eating of the fruit of one tree-viz., "the tree of the knowledge of good and evil." (Gen. 2: 17.) As punishment for this sin, God visited upon Adam death-yes, a twofold death-spiritual death, which was the immediate consequence, and physical death, which was the remote consequence, for he lived nine hundred and thirty years after he was driven from the garden. But why was he driven from the garden? The reason is clearly stated in Gen. 3: 22, 23-viz.: "Lest he put forth his hand, and take also of the tree of life, and eat, and live forever." Here the wisdom, love, and mercy of God are displayed only as God can manifest them. How terrible the consequences of this sin would be if man had been permitted to eat of the tree of life and live on forever in sin! The wisdom of God at once devised a plan, the love of God prompted it, and the will of God executed it. "God is love." He resolved to give his Son to redeem fallen man. He would restore him to a fairer Eden than the one lost. As the Bible is silent on the salvation of Adam, so I will be silent. The consequence of his sin upon his posterity is simply physical death.

The advantages of the birthright accruing to the eldest son were not definitely fixed in patriarchal times. We have no way of knowing that the birthright was the law of God. If so, God himself did not respect it in the case of Esau and Jacob. Joseph was indebted to Reuben for his life. The withholding of the birthright from Reuben by his father cannot be a punishment inflicted by the Lord for the sin of Reuben. If God had ordered Jacob to thus disinherit Reuben, then we would know it to be inflicted of God; but it appears from the record to have been withheld from him because he was as unstable as water. Like Esau, he was unfit for the position. The birthright was taken from Manasseh and given to Ephraim. Why? God only knows. The law of the birthright was later enacted by Moses without any penalty being attached.

Miriam's sin was one of rebellion against God, for which he and not man punished her. When she complied with the law of God for cleansing the leper, she was cleansed, and we read no more of the punishment of her sin. Who has intimated that God does not punish the impenitent and disobedient? God does the punishing, and not man. Vengeance belongeth unto me; I will recompense, saith the Lord." (Rom. 12: 19.) The law of God for the leper applied to those who had not sinned as well as to those who had.

Who knows why John Mark turned back from Perga in Pamphylia and returned to Jerusalem? Who can say he sinned in this? Who can decide who was right, Paul or Barnabas? It is certain that Paul afterwards thought well of Mark. This same John Mark is the probable author of the Gospel of Mark. He is said to have founded the church of Alexandria. Paul says of him: "Take Mark, and bring him with thee; for he is useful to me for ministering." Tim. 4: 11.) He writes of him in Col. 4: 10. If he made a mistake, he certainly did not cease to serve the Lord.

But I must not fail to write of Moses and his sin. His life was one of self-denial. He sinned by "speaking unadvisedly with his lips." He did not sanctify God before the people. He assumed for himself the glory due to God. He smote the rock twice instead of speaking to it as God had told him. What was the punishment put on Moses and Aaron for this sin? "And Jehovah said unto Moses and Aaron. Because ve believed not in me, to sanctify me in the eyes of the children of Israel, therefore ye shall not bring this assembly into the land which I have given them." (Num. 20: 12.) The punishment was physical and not spiritual. It was never remitted or pardoned. Neither Moses nor Aaron was permitted to lead the Israelites into the promised land. No other punishment was inflicted on Moses and Aaron for this sin. For two years after this sin was committed Moses continued the leader of the Israelites; and God revealed himself to him as of old, and told him to lay his hands upon Joshua to confer his spirit upon him. God loved him and preserved him, so that "his eye was not dim, nor his natural force abated, and took him to glory; for many years later he appeared with Christ in the glorified state on the mount of transfiguration. God kept him in the work for which he was so admirably fitted until he died. While he was denied the privilege of entering the land of promise, he was permitted to view its glories; then his earthly career ceased and he was ready for the glories of heaven. A fitting close to the life he had led.

I commend most heartily the spirit of the following letter written by H. Leo Boles to an unfortunate brother:

Nashville, Tenn., June 22, 1917.—Dear Brother Billingsley: I am now in receipt of your letter, dated June 21

My heart yearns to help you and comfort you and bless you and be in deed, as well as in name, a brother in Christ I pray that I may be guided in saying just what to you. I ought to say in this letter.

Our holy religion teaches us to "rejoice with them that rejoice, and weep with them that weep." It seems hard for us to weep with the sorrowful; yet if we are what we claim to be, we will shed the sympathetic tear, extend a helpful hand, speak an encouraging word, and open a welcome heart to a penitent, contrite, humble brother.

The more I study the Bible and learn of the goodness, mercy, wisdom, love, and justice of God, our Father, and the imperfections, weaknesses, and sinfulness of man, the more I am touched with the mistakes and blunders of my brethren and sisters in Christ.

I want to look at the erring and penitent and sustain such an attitude toward them as God, my Father, has taught me. He has taught me: "Brethren, even if a man be overtaken in any trespass, ye who are spiritual, restore such a one in a spirit of gentleness; looking to thyself, lest thou also be tempted. Bear ye one another's burdens, and (Gal. 6: 1, 2.) so fulfill the law of Christ."

We should never, through personal preference or favor, through misconceived friendship, through ties of kinship, or through popularity, sustain an attitude toward sin and wrongdoing that will encourage any one in sin, but must always sustain an attitude toward sin that will discourage and condemn it, regardless of cost and suffering on our We must not only sustain an attitude that condemns the sinner, but also an attitude that will. in love. mercy, and gentleness, restore the erring one; and when the erring one has been restored and God has forgiven him, then I must, to be Godlike, forgive him.

When God forgives him, God holds him in just the same tender love, has the same confidence in him, bestows upon him the same honor and blessings, and owns him as his beloved child, just the same as he did before that one committed any sin. Now, this is the attitude that God, our Father, sustains toward one who has sinned and has repented of the sin, confessed the sin, and prayed and obtained forgiveness for that sin. It is the attitude that all of God's people must sustain toward a God-forgiven brother. I must have the same interest in and love for him that God, my Father, has. I must have the same trustful confidence in him, and honor and respect for him, that my Savior has. If the God of all wisdom, justice, love, perfection, and purity can forgive and continue to love and bless weak, frail, sinful man, who am I, that I should refuse to forgive, encourage, and help my contrite, heartbroken brother?

O, how many, many times we sin in not sustaining the right attitude toward our brethren in Christ!

May the God of all power give us, his unworthy children, strength enough to help and encourage each other and to "bear one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ."

You see from the suggestions above my attitude toward you and all my brethren.

Our Father has the power to make all things work together for good to all them that love him. Out of all of our sufferings, sorrows, humiliations, shamefulness, disgraces, and unworthiness, God can and will deliver us, and cleanse, purify, forgive, love, trust, honor, bless, and save us.

The reader will note how strongly Brother Boles emphasizes this statement: "When God forgives him, God holds him in just the same tender love, has the same confidence in him, bestows upon him the same honor and blessings, and owns him as his beloved child, just the same as he did before that one committed any sin." This is one of the main points I have tried to bring to the fore in my articles.

Marriage and Divorce in the United States.

BY M. C. K.

The widespread divorce evil and its rapid increase in the United States in recent years is cause for alarm among all right-thinking citizens of every religious creed and of no creed at all; and while unwise legislation and the laxness of civil courts lie at the foundation of much of the evil. still the churches and religious teachers of the time justly come in for their share of responsibility for the baleful situation.

It is no part of my purpose in this article to enter into an elaborate discussion of the question, nor to consider it in detail at all, but rather merely to sound a note of alarm in the hope of impressing the preachers and churches of the day with the responsibility resting upon them. In its issue of July 9, 1921, discussing "How Marriage Can Be Saved," the Literary Digest says:

The "damaged goods" of divorce, including the separated and their children, are said to have reached the enormous total of 5.585,696 persons in the last twenty years, or about one-twentieth of the total population of the The rapid increase in divorces in this country has been noted recently in these columns. One writer on the subject, Bishop William Hall Moreland, of Sacramento, is not content with denouncing the "divorce poison" as responsible for "the wreckage of homes, the casting adrift of children, the unhappiness of millions of citizens, and the threatening of our moral ideals," or with asking, "Is marriage worth saving?" The Episcopal bishop goes so far, in an article in the New York Times, as to outline five remedies for the situation which, he says, have received the general indorsement of statesmen and students. They are: A Federal marriage and divorce law; delay in the issue of marriage licenses; a divorce proctor: education; and religious influence.

Let the reader seriously ponder the figures given in that extract. Just think of it-within the last score of years the victims of the divorce evil, "including the separated and their children, have reached the enormous total of 5,585,696 persons!" In the pulpit, in the press, and in the social circle much is said to-day about numerous abnormal things in these abnormal times; but surely in the long list there is no greater menace to morals and to society in general than in this widespread and crying evil of divorce. Speaking of the laxness of State laws and the need of reform on that side in dealing with the question, Bishop Moreland in the article just mentioned says:

At present there are forty-nine different codes attempting to regulate marriage and divorce in the United States. A man may be lawfully married in one State and a bigamist when he crosses the line into another. A woman may be a wife in one State, but, removing to another, she becomes neither maid, wife, nor widow. Children are pronounced born in wedlock or branded as illegitimate by a change of residence. Property rights are imperiled or completely wiped out by a geographical line. Court records in liter-ally thousands of cases involving domicile, jurisdiction, legality of decrees granted in one State and not recognized in another, illustrate the confusion growing out of our present contradictory codes. The tragedy, hearthreak, domestic ruin created by the situation must be left to the imagination. Congress has recognized the need of a uniform Federal law governing bankruptcy, income tax, and matters relating to property. It is inevitable that sooner or later marriage and divorce in the United States will be regulated in like manner. . . . Ten days' public notice of intention will expose fraud, give warning to parents and guardians, allow opportunity for the exercise of caution and influence of affectionate counsel, thereby saving many young folk from a lifetime of unhappiness and preventing wreckage of divorce.

After this very proper comment on the civil law in the case, this Episcopal bishop with equal correctness says that "religion is the most important agency in correcting the divorce evil," and then adds:

It not only rebukes vice and selfishness, holds up virtue, constancy, and faithfulness as first principles of family life. but it furnishes moral strength and personal fortitude to enable the individual suffering from hardship, disappointment, and lost happiness to stand firm and resist tempta-The home is God's own institution. Husband and wife are cooperating with the Creator for the future Therefore are they given grace to bear their len. Love, not passion, is the Christian law of the race. common burden. of the home. Not till passion is transformed into the calm, steady face of love is the will of God fulfilled. is greatly to be regretted that, generally speaking, Protestant ministers do not guard the sanctity of the Christian marriage bond as do the Roman Catholic, Episcopal, and Eastern orthodox churches. . Ministers who marry divorced persons are largely responsible for the magnitude of the divorce evil. Led away by personal sympathy, forgetting or ignoring the great issues at stake, losing sight of the welfare of home, marriage, and country, considering only the two pleading individuals before them, having no ecclesiastical authority to call them to account, and influenced by the prospect of a fee, these free-lance ministers make it practically impossible for the church to bring its The scandal of united influence to bear upon the problem, the situation is that not a single case of divorced persons seeking remarriage, no matter how notorious, filthy, or offensive to American nostrils, has failed to find an obliging Protestant minister to give the blessing of Christ to a union which Christ pronounced adulterous.

Evidently this picture is not overdrawn. Assuredly it presents a deplorable situation. Think of a minister of the gospel, a professed preacher of Jesus Christ, giving "the blessing of Christ to a union which Christ pronounced adulterous!" Not only should they promptly quit it and turn from it as from an iniquitous offense to God and to right-thinking men, but there should be more teaching on the subject in both the pulpit and in the home. Christian mothers and fathers should be aroused by the situation. The sacredness and sanctity of marriage vows should be emphasized and magnified and persons making these vows should be made to understand that it is for life. Let preachers everywhere scorn the practice of marrying divorced persons, except in case of the one legitimate cause. Let them faithfully preach the law of the Lord on the subject, and let the churches heartly stand by them. Then, in the language of the bishop herein quoted, "the whole conception of marriage will be elevated to a high position in the esteem of the American people."

"Corrupting the Word of God."

BY E. A. E.

Paul says many corrupt the word of God; that he himself did not walk in craftiness or handle the word of God deceitfully; that some pervert the gospel; and Peter declares that "the ignorant and unsteadfast wrest" the Scriptures.

We can see more clearly and feel with greater force the sin and fearful consequences of such practices when we contrast them with God's solemn charge to "preach the word;" to "declare the whole counsel of God;" to keep "back nothing that is profitable;" to "contend earnestly for the faith which was once for all delivered unto the saints;" to "know nothing, save Jesus Christ, and him crucified;" and to avoid all "untaught questions," "old wives' fables," and unrevealed things.

Let us study the passages which speak of corrupting the word of God," handling it deceitfully, perverting it, etc., one at a time.

But let us preface this study by calling attention to Jesus' declaration that, "if any man willeth to do his [God's] will, he shall know of the teaching, whether it is of God, or whether I [Jesus] speak from myself" (John 7: 17); and let us grant that all who join in this study desire most earnestly and will most strongly and most nobly to know and to do only God's will.

This is the divine key to the proper understanding of the will of God on any and on "all things that pertain unto life and godliness," and the strong and only, but all-sufficient, mainspring to humble and implicit obedience to God.

He who never wills to do God's will, will never learn what that will is and car never teach it.

With this will to do God's will, we will pray most devoutedly and in sublime faith, "'Thy will be done, as in heaven, so on earth;' and: "'Thy will, in all things and at all times, and not our will, be done." And let us remember that God's thoughts are not our thoughts, neither are our ways his ways; but as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are his ways and his thoughts about everything and every duty higher than our thoughts and ways. (Isa. 55: 8, 9.)

With this will, these principles, this spirit, and this reverence for the word of God, all can soon become of one mind, of the same judgment, of one heart, one soul, and of one accord. The church must be one. On all things the elders should talk all matters over with all, go by the Bible, and come to one accord. In places a congregation is split up over whims and notions or sins, and the ones who do it think they have done no harm.

In all these ones God must be obeyed as faithfully and as fully as in any other command he has given. Wherever this complete unity and peace do not exist, some have failed to obey God. When brethren differ widely over the teaching of the Bible in regard to duties and service, some have failed to obey God.

With a will, or a desire, or a disposition, or even an inclination to have the Bible to comply with one's own will, or emotions, or notions, or to sustain some theory of one's own, one has no assurance of help from God of ever knowing fully and clearly his will. It was Balaam who said he would see what Jehovah would speak to him more, or different from what had been so plainly said already (Num. 22: 19), and we know the dire results. To wish for some change in God's will, or to hunt for some passage which will contradict or modify some plain declaration of another passage, is a most dangerous thing to one's own soul.

The only ones in the four different classes of hearers in the parable of the sower blessed by the word of God are the ones who "in an honest and good heart, having heard the word, hold it fast, and bring forth fruit with patience." (Luke 8: 15.) The heart must be honest and good in order, having heard the word of God, to be benefited by it, and it must also hold it fast-the word of God, and not some theory or teaching of men, or some desire and opinion of its own-not something it wants the word of God to teachin order to bring forth the desired fruit; and this must be done with steadfastness. Nothing-no temptation, no worldliness and wickedness, no bitter persecution and fiery trials-must be able to turn one from the word of God in all its teaching or to shake one loose from this steadfastness, or "patient continuance in well-doing." An honest heart is a heart which is honest with itself-its own standing before God, and, therefore, with its own spiritual development on earth and salvation in heaven; honest in every way with the word of God; and honest with God. A heart which tries to make the word of God teach differently from what it does is not honest. A good heart is one which is right in the sight of God; one, like good soil clear of thorns and weeds, which is free from the love of money, worldliness, wickedness, and its own wisdom and opinions and theories; one that is willing to be directed by the Lord in all things at all times. The "honest and good heart" says, "Speak, Jehovah; for thy servant heareth" (1 Sam. 4: 9); and: "What shall I do, Lord?" (Acts 22: 10.) Their after lives show what Samuel and Paul suffered in order to do the will of God. "An honest and good heart" is a true and steadfast one, which never swerves and bends to suit occasions and circumstances; which never shrinks, "though pressed by many a foe;" which is preserved by integrity and uprightness and the grace of God through all wild and trying and corrupting times. Through all his misfortunes and miseries, sore afflictions and heart-rending bereavements, cruel comforters and the lack of faith and courage of his wife, when she told him it was enough and to curse God and die, Job held fast his integrity.

A heart which always turns to God, which is as true to God as the needle to the pole, which always prays that God's will and not its own be done, is the greatest possible possession man can have. Having this, one has all—a good conscience, clean hands, a holy life, and heaven.

Let us study the first passage referred to first.

For we are not as the many, corrupting the word of God: but as of sincerity, but as of God, in the sight of God, speak we in Christ. (2 Cor. 2: 17.)

Since many in Paul's day corrupted the word of God, is there not great danger of as many doing so now? There is no harm, but much good, in asking, "Is it I, Lord?"

First, then, let us be impressed most solemnly with Paul's conscientiousness and reverence for the word of God, love for the purity and peace of the church, and consuming desire for the salvation of souls. He says: "But as of sincerity, but as of God, in the sight of God, speak we in Christ." In 2 Cor. 1: 12-14 he appeals to the testimony of his conscience and declares "that in holiness and sincerity of God, not in fleshly wisdom, but in the grace of God," he behaved himself, and taught nothing but the truth. He had done so not "in fleshly wisdom "-with his own ease, comfort, pleasure, temporal interest, and worldly honor in view-or in cunning and craftiness of men; but "in holiness," or piety and reverence and awe for God, "and sincerity of God." In these passages we have the expressions, "as of sincerity," "as of God," and "sincerity of God," as well as "in holiness" and "in the grace of God." Think on these expressions and their meaning! They represent the highest aims, the most holy purpose, and the deepest and most earnest sincerity, unmixed with any duplicity and sinister motive, which God alone through the gospel can beget and keep alive in the soul. "In fleshly wisdom" is placed in contrast with "in the grace of God." "The grace of God" alone can produce and maintain the godly sincerity so essential to teaching the will of God.

In 1 Thess. 2: 5, 6 Paul declares that his "exhortation is not of error, nor of uncleanness, nor in guile;" but since he was intrusted with the gospel and approved of God, he speaks or teaches according to this holy trust, "not as pleasing men, but God who proveth our hearts." He further declares that he uses no "words of flattery," or "a cloak of covetousness," or seeks "glory of men," and says "God is witness."

Paul's conscientiousness, "holiness and sincerity of God," being "approved of God," teaching "in the sight of God," speaking "in Christ," holy living, and consuming desire to save souls are placed in strong and striking contrast with "pleasing men," "using words of flattery," "seeking glory of men," "a cloak of covetousness," "fleshly wisdom," "not of error," and "corrupting the word of God." Only as we are free from these latter motives [name them] and are governed by the high and holy ones [name them] which filled Paul's heart and governed his life can we be entirely clear of "corrupting the word of God."

But what is "corrupting the word of God?" "Corrupting" comes from a word which Thayer says means: "To be a retailer, to peddle; . . . to make money by selling anything, to do a thing for base gain." In the passage we are studying he says it is equivalent to "to trade in the word of God-that is, to try to get base gain by teaching divine truth. But as peddlers were in the habit of adulterating their commodities for the sake of gain," the word "was also used as synonymous with to corrupt to adulterate," and that on account of the context most interpreters rightly decide that this is the meaning in this passage. Paul received the word of God, or the gospel, pure from God, he kept it pure, and delivered it to us in its purity, unmixed with any inventions and theories of men. To corrupt it is to explain away its meaning, to break its force and condemnation, and to accommodate it to emotions, desires, and notions of "fleshly wisdom." Clarke's Commentary says: "The word [giving the Greek word] is used to signify any artifice employed to get gain by making a thing look more or better than it is; or mingling that which is excellent with that which is not so as to promote the gain of the adulterator." To soften the teaching of the word of God; to mix with it any theories, notions, speculations, or doctrines of men; to make merchandise of the gospel, is to corrupt it.

All passages of scripture on any given subject, for instance, and on all subjects, are true and in perfect harmony. Any attempt to lessen or depreciate the teaching and force of some passages and to make others teach more than God really teaches is to corrupt the word of God, and especially so when done for popularity's sake or for gain in any way. Nothing must be added to, nothing must be taken from, the word of God.

Let us be sure that we will to do God's will, and then to teach it only.

Questions and Answers. No. 1.

BY F. W. SMITH.

Brother W. Halliday Trice, of Fresno, Cal., makes the following request of the writer:

Dear Brother Smith: Will you please write an article for the Gospel Advocate, using the following questions and suggestions as a basis? Much has been preached and written on Christian union. Paul urged the Ephesians keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace." Master prayed that his followers might "all be one." the question is: In what way or to what extent did Jesus desire and expect his disciples to be one-in "the weightier matters, . . . justice, and mercy, and faith," or in every detail of doctrine, work, and worship? Must we all agree and "all speak the same thing" on the following disputed issues: The Bible school, the Sunday school, the individual cups. "rebaptism," unfulfilled prophecy, breaking bread at night? Our best brethren have differed about these and other questions, and too often they have disfellowshiped each other. Sometimes in the same city there are congregations that will not fellowship each other, and still each one claims to be "the church of Christ" and to do exactly what the Bible says in every item of doctrine and practice. In one town that I know there are two congregations on the same street, within a few blocks of each other, each claiming to be "the church of Christ," yet they do not fellowship each other! There are four or five facdo not fellowship each other! There are four or five fac-tions in what we call the "loyal" church of Christ, each one having no fellowship with the other, and in some cases they do not even regard each other as Christians or churches of Christ, Now, Brother Smith, how can I convince the world that the church of which I am a member is the one divine organization, and that it is scriptural in origin, doctrine, and practice, while others are making the same claim, and still we differ in doctrine and practice? sure that you and I agree on all the questions mentioned above, and, of course, we could decide that we are exactly scriptural on all those points, and those who differ from us are "unsound;" but I fear we could neither make those who differ from us or the world believe what we say. suggests this question: How far can an individual or congregation differ from me (or go wrong) and still be a loyal Christian or congregation? How far wrong may a congregation go before ceasing to be a church after the New Testament pattern and become a human organization? Who is to decide when a departure from the New Testament order takes place? Some think it very unscriptural to attend a Bible college, and others think it quite all right to promote Bible-school work, but consider it a grave departure from "the New Testament pattern" to use more than one cup in the communion. Some think it very important to teach the Bible in classes on Sunday and use printed helps in teaching, while others consider it very "digressive" to have either classes or use literature. Others differ about other matters; and so it goes. we must agree about essentials and use our judgment about incidentals will not suffice, for the good reason that we differ widely about what is essential and what is not. So differ widely about what is essential and what is not. to me the situation is rather confusing, and I desire light.

Fraternally, W. Halliday Trice.

I may not be able to answer the above questions to the satisfaction of any one save myself, but will do my best in the matter.

The disciples of Christ are to "be one" in faith; and since faith comes by the word of God, all who believe the word are one in faith. The word of God does not divide, but unifies all who believe and obey it. Faith is the way of unity, and the extent of the oneness is limited to those things commanded or required by the Lord Jesus Christ. A broad distinction must be drawn between faith and opinion, for the latter has no place at all in the worship and service of God. "For we walk by faith, not by sight." (2 Cor. 5: 7.)

- 2. We should all "speak the same thing" relative to the obligation to teach the word of God, for this we are commanded to do; but since there is no divine legislation as to any particular method of teaching or place in which we are limited to teaching the word, he who contends otherwise becomes a lawmaker in the kingdom of Christ and has usurped the prerogatives of the Most High God.
- 3. It depends altogether on what is meant by "Bible schools" and "Sunday schools" as to whether or not we should all "speak the same thing." If either is a religious institution founded to propagate religious truth, then the fundamental principle of unity—viz., faith—cannot apply, for the word of God knows absolutely nothing of either; but if by the use of "Bible schools" and "Sunday schools" is simply meant that the word of God authorizes the teaching of the Bible in schools or the local congregation, we all can and should "speak the same thing" relative to thus teaching the word. In other words, a child of God is at liberty to teach the word of God at any time and in any place that does not conflict with any other divine arrangement.
- 4. There are four things that constitute scriptural communion-viz.: the proper subject-a baptized believer; the proper elements-unleavened bread and fruit of the vine; the proper design-discerning the Lord's body and blood; and the proper day-the first day of the week. On these points the fundamental principle of unity-viz., faithapplies, and it here also stops; for since the word of God says absolutely nothing about how the bread and fruit of the vine shall be distributed among the communicants or as to what position they shall occupy while partaking of the emblems, he who insists on a certain position of the body and a certain number of cups, to the exclusion of all others, is a lawmaker in the kingdom of Christ and a rebel against God, making and binding laws where God has not. The word of God commands us to eat the bread and drink the fruit of the vine, and there is as much authority for four hundred cups as there is for four. The "cup" we drink is not a vessel, but the contents; and as to how many vessels shall be used in distributing "the cup," God has not

- 5. The disciples ate the Supper on the first day of the week, and we can eat it at any hour included in that day; and when one singles out a specific hour of the day and says that we cannot eat it at any other time during the hours comprising the first day of the week, he becomes a lawmaker in the kingdom of Christ and sins against God and his children.
- 6. The word of God knows nothing of "rebaptism." A person has been baptized or he has not, and it is useless to press into service Acts 19: 1-5 to sustain the idea of rebaptism. They were not baptized until they were immersed in the name (by the authority) of the Lord Jesus, for the reason that there was no other authority to baptize any one after the day of Pentecost. The apostles were told to baptize those they taught, and who believed, into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit. Now, the fundamental principle of unity, which is faith, must apply here as in all other matters. Whatever the word of God commands a believer in the Lord Jesus Christ to do relative to baptism must be a matter of faith, and we all can and should "speak the same thing" relative to the command to be baptized. As my space is somewhat limited, I will finish my answer to this last question and the others in another article.

How powerful and tender a friend is our Redeemer! He hath done all things well. He hath spoken peace to our souls. We sail indeed upon a rough sea, but nothing can harm us while the Ruler of the storm is with us, and sheds from behind the cloud which hides him from the world the consolations of his blessed grace and love.—Cunningham.

"Be ye perfect" comes to mean for us not a legal relation of conformity to authority, but wholeness, a perfect experience, an absence of mediateness and barriers and limits, a conscious participation in the All; only a drop in an Ocean of Love, a star in an Infinite Sky, a cell in the One Organism, but not annihilated or lost or swallowed up. Free, free, free, in spirit, in goodness, in beauty, in Love!—Selected.

We need some more contributions for our Sinking Fund, which is devoted to sending the Gospel Advocate to invalids, to the aged, and to those in destitute circumstances who crave the paper, but have no money to pay for it. If you could see some of the grateful letters received from those who are beneficiaries of this fund, we know you would respond more quickly. We will supply the names, or, if preferable, you can send them in yourself.

From W. S. Long, Washington, D. C., August 10: "Last Lord's day was a very enjoyable one to the church here. One young man made the confession at the morning service and was baptized without delay. The hearing was good at both morning and evening hours. All around us a vast field awaits willing laborers. How I wish Nashville or some of the strong churches in Tennessee and Texas would send one or two preachers to New York, Chicago, and St. Louis, in which cities there are ten million people who need to know the pure gospel of Christ! One brother has just written: 'I feel that the work at Washington and eastward is as important as it was in Jerusalem and Rome in the days of Paul.' D. S. Ligon writes from Hobart, Ark., August 13: "The meeting here began last night with a very good hearing for this country. After the Blaine meeting I went back to the Springs and preached one night to a good crowd. I have a son who is a good teacher, and I want to get him in a good high school where there is a congregation. Help me locate him. He wants to teach Latin and history. Address Arvy Ligon, Denton, Texas."

From W. Halliday Trice, Fresno. Cal., August 7: "L. D. Perkins, of Armona, preached at the Nevada Avenue Church last Lord's day. We are always glad to have Brother Perkins with us. Sister Perkins and her daughter came over with Brother Perkins, and remained in Fresno, visiting in our home and with other friends, till Thursday of this week. At our services to-day there were two confessions and baptisms. The work moves along nicely, even though many of our members are away on vacation. Among cur visitors to-day was Sister Odell, of Oklahoma."

L. W. Henson has closed a meeting at Salem Church, near Quorkers, in Lawrence County, Tenn., with eight confessions. Seventeen scattering members in that territory have established a congregation at that place. At the request of the brethren he agreed to go back later in the fall and hold another meeting for them. The church house at that place was built forty-five years ago and deeded to the public as a place of worship, and this is the first organization of the church of Christ ever started there. Brother Henson is now at Topsy, in Wayne County, in a meeting.

W. L. Oliphant writes: "I was forced to close the meeting at Lamar, Okla., on account of a severe attack of gallstenes. I am glad to report that my condition is not serious now. I was at Lamar only one week. The interest was great, and the crowds were the largest that have ever assembled in the town for any kind of services. Sixteen were baptized and four were restored. Most of those added were married folks, and all influential people of the town. I am now at Muskogee trying to sell my home here. I have resigned my work with the East Okmulgee Avenue congregation, this city. I will be in the evangelistic field til the first of next year."

From John Hayes, Bradentown, Fla., August 6: "The tent meeting at Lakeland began on the fourth Lord's day in June and continued over three Lord's days. The interest was good throughout, but the last week we were hindered much by rain. When I went to Lakeland, we found a few faithful brethren, who were meeting in the home of Robert Cherry. As visible results of the meeting, four persons were baptized and a congregation of thirty-five started in a rented hall. I left the work in charge of Brother Cherry, who is a faithful, earnest man and a good teacher. George Hoover, of Tampa, was present the last Lord's day of the meeting and preached at the morning service. He has promised to visit them from time to time and help them in the work. We are trying to secure a place in Sarasota to hold a meeting next month. Pray for us."

From J. C. Hollis, Lawrenceburg, Tenn., August 7: "I began a meeting in Giles County, with the Puncheon congregation, on the third Lord's day in July and closed it on the fourth Lord's-day morning. Five were buried with their Lord by baptism. On the night of the fourth Lord's day I began a meeting at a destitute point in Alabama, near Anderson. We had large crowds and good interest throughout the meeting; and three were added to the one body by baptism, two of these coming from the Methodist Church. We also found about seven or eight persons where already members of the church, and they promised to meet on the first day of the week, beginning last Lord's day. Ira Pryor conducted the song service in the two meetings. I began a meeting with the Antioch congregation, near Killen, Ala., on the fifth Lord's day in July and stayed until Thursday night. M. E. Gibbs closed the meeting on Friday night. Two were baptized."

L. R. Wilson writes from Pangburn, Ark., August 9: "I have been very busy for several weeks. My meeting at Bethesda, Ark., was a success. We had the largest crowds that ever attended a meeting there. Much prejudice was removed. I promised to return for a two-weeks' meeting next year. The meeting following, at Johnstown, was also a success. I baptized the last Baptist at that place. This was my second meeting at each of these places. I went next to Heber Springs. There we had much opposition and some strife among brethren, together with much bad weather; but we had a good meeting and baptized eighteen persons. I promised to return there next June for a three-weeks' meeting. Heber Springs is a health resort and attracts many people; but the reunion, picture show, and other attractions were against us. In my last three meetings 1 have had forty-eight additions. I began a very interesting meeting here last Lord's day. It seems that the people are more interested in the truth than ever before. I cannot begin to hold the meetings I have been called for."

A. O. Colley writes: "I closed my month's work in Tennessee last night, at Oak Grove, near my old home, and where wife and I both obeyed the gospel in our earlier days. I had A. B. Reavis, of Dresden, Tenn., with me as song leader. He did his part well. We held three meetings of ten days each—at Fulton, Ky., and at Sandy Branch Church and Oak Grove. I met many of my old-time friends in these meetings. My 'vacation' from regular duties with the Dallas (Texas) church was a very busy one, but a happy one. I had the pleasure of seeing many of my preaching brethren, who visited me in the meetings. E. C. L. Denton, of Memphis, Tenn., was with me through the Fulton meeting. I used to hear him preach as far back as I can remember. He still loves the 'old Jerusalem gospel' and gives his help in every way he can. There were twenty-six accessions, in all, to the churches here as visible reresults, Our crowds were estimated at one thousand for several services at Oak Grove. I return to Dallas to-day (August 4) to take up my regular work at the Pearl and Bryan Streets Church."

From T. B. Thompson, Calvert City, Ky., August 7: "The meeting at Friendship Church, near Murray, Ky., came to a close on Wednesday evening. Five persons became obedient to the faith, all adults but one. This is the place of my debate with Mr. Scott, a Primitive Baptist, three years ago. Since that debate I have held three meetings there, and I am asked to return for another next summer. quired to see if there were any hard feelings that followed in the wake of that debate, and they say absolutely none, so far as they can see or hear. The audiences are larger and additions have been more numerous since that discussion than ever before. Several 'Old Baptists' were in attendance during this last-mentioned meeting. I had five questions from our good 'Old Baptist' friends, to the answering of which I gave one whole service, and it is predicted that my treatment of them will provoke another discussion in the community. I feel that I have no better triends than these people in the vicinity of Friendship Church. My work among them has been rewarded splendidly in every way, and I have a warm corner in my heart for them.'

J. Pettey Ezell writes: "On the night of August closed my third consecutive meeting with the splendid little congregation at Springfield, Tenn. C. E. Coleman, whom all speak of and love as a good man, with his family, is a great asset to the work here. Twelve were added to the strength of the congregation, six of whom were baptized. Among the number baptized were J. A. Boyles and wife, a most lovable couple, seventy-five and seventy-three years of age, and who had been devout Methodists for near forty years. They were baptized together 'the same hour of the night.' The lights of automobiles were for waters of the near-by creek, so as to make it almost as light as day, while, assisted by their son, Dr. Ruby Boyles, a most excellent Christian man, this splendid old couple calmly and serenely walked down into the water and were buried with their Lord in baptism. Some who have never obeyed the gospel were heard to say that this was the most beautiful and impressive sight they had ever beheld. May Grandpa and Grandma Boyles live long and be instruments in the hands of the Lord to bring many others to Christ. A more faithful band of Christian workers cannot be found than the Springfield brethren.'

A Church With Too Much Money.

BY C. R. N.

I think there has never been a time in the history of the human family when money could be so advantageously used as just now in disseminating the truth and otherwise blessing humanity.

The modern printing press enables one for a few dollars to send the truth in printed form to many homes; modern means of travel brings to your door distances which formerly were too great to cover quickly.

What wonderful blessings money enables one to bring his fellows!

I hold that God requires you to earn every dollar you can honestly. You are responsible for how you use the money which comes into your possession. It is not a sin to be wealthy. Wealth is not the cause of sin, though it may be the occasion. Many of God's heroes were wealthy men. The consecrated child of God who has great riches can wonderfully bless the world.

The love of money is the root of evil, only.

I know a church which has too much money-for their good. One time there lived a good man; he was certain he loved the cause of Christ, and in his will he made provisions for the congregation where he held his membership by setting aside a certain sum of money, the interest of which was to be used by the congregation in its work. This congregation now finds that they are able to have their usual protracted meeting and other preaching and pay for the same from the income of the brother's gift, and they are not put to the necessity of making any sacrifice of their own for the work-and they do not. They are living solely on grace-if they can be said to live. If this congregation cannot be led to give of their means, to sacrifice for the work of the church; if they continue to use only the money left that congregation, and enjoy the same, with never a sacrifice on their part, this money will prove to be a curse to them. Of course each one who reads this will concur with the view I have expressed; but, brother, how much have you sacrificed to advance the cause of Christ? How much should I give to the work of the Master? How much should you give?

Little Things.

BY T. W. PHILLIPS.

I am delighted that we are to have the Texas-Oklahoma section in the good old Gospel Advocate, and I wish to assure Brother Nichol, who has, after much persuasion, agreed to edit this section, that he will have my full assistance in the effort to make this a profitable section of the paper. Those who know the Advocate know how fearlessly it contends for what its editors believe, regardless of what men say or think. Those who know Brother Nichol have not a fear—he will stand for the truth, and has no hesitancy in exposing false teaching. We have many such men in Texas and Oklahoma.

It seems to me that in many instances there has been a failure to expose false teaching; that at times there is the disposition to allow our love for the teacher to blind us to the false doctrine taught, even when it is known that his doctrine is dividing congregations. I shall strive to rise above personal feelings in my loyalty to the truth, and in assisting in this work on the Advocate it shall be my effort to quit myself like a true soldier of Christ.

I have no time to deal in speculations or preach my imaginations as to what may or may not be. I find all the subject-matter I can present clearly revealed, and to preach these precious truths is my desire. Lord, help us.

I may be the "least in the kingdom," but with that I am a child of God. The things I say and the acts I perform may be only "little things;" but the truth presented, regardless of the ability of the man who presents it, will never fail in doing good. Let us, then, preach the truth.

Recently I assisted in a meeting at Leona, Texas. As some measure meetings, it was a "little meeting," for there were only a few additions. Who can measure the result of a truth spoken or a life brought into the service of the Master? My little son, Thomas Wendell Phillips, is directing the song service for me in meetings this year. The Lord is blessing our efforts, and my wish is to exalt his name rather than parade my record as a sinner before the world. I am on the King's business, and he bids me preach the gospel. Who knows the power of a suggestion? Do not attempt to climb on the faults of others, nor to make a virtue out of your sins.

Short Cuts.

BY COLEMAN D. NICHOLS.

The Two Kingdoms. "Howbeit that was not first which is spiritual, but that which is natural; and afterwards that which is spiritual." (1 Cor. 15: 46.) From this statement we understand that the natural and spiritual kingdoms are analogous, or have some points or features in common. Let me assume that the similarity lies in their origin and perpetuity. If this be true, then to know how the first, the natural kingdom, began and is perpetuated is to understand the origin and perpetuity of the spiritual kingdom by comparison.

The natural kingdom had its origin in God's creative law, which produced a full-grown man and woman, fully rounded out in all their natural organism. This kingdom is perpetuated by procreative or birth law and growth and development. The creative law produced a full-grown man, a man matured in his natural powers; the birth law produces babes. There was only one creation in the natural—one man, one woman. There can be one only in the spiritual, if the analogy be true—that is, as the natural began with the creative law, and there was only one beginning by this law, so the spiritual kingdom began with creative power, and there will be but one beginning by this law.

The spiritual kingdom must have its origin in the exercise of spiritual creative law, producing a full-grown man in Christ, fully developed and rounded out in all his spiritual organism, and this kingom must be perpetuated by spiritual-birth law.

The process employed and exercised by the hand of Jehovah to produce a full-grown man in the work and service of Christ must be an exhibition of spiritual creative law. The baptismal outpouring of the Holy Spirit on the apostles on the first Pentecost after the resurrection of Christ produced of them full-grown men in the work and service of the Lord, and must, therefore, be an exhibition of the exercise of spiritual creative law. Thus God created the spiritual kingdom by the baptism in the Holy Spirit. The perpetuation of this kingdom is by spiritual-birth law; hence, Jesus said: "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." (John 3: 3.)

A. O. Colley recently closed an interesting meeting in Fulton, Ky. Brother Colley was reared near Fulton, and assisted in setting this congregation in order some fifteen They have had a steady growth since then, and neir own neat brick edifice. J. G. Allen writes: "I preached for the church in Okmulgee, Okla., on July 29. The congregation meets in a business college. They need a house badly. About thirty memters. We are making fine progress on our house at Muskogee, Okla."

O. M. Reynolds, who has been for more than a year with the church in Madill, Okla., is forced, on account of failing health of his wife, to seek a new location. Sister Reynolds suffers from asthma. The place where Otis locates is to be congratulated. Recently he baptized seven in Powell, Okla. Two of the number were formerly Baptists and one a Presbyterian. In a meeting in Lebanon he baptized two, and one was restored. A. E. Freeman has closed his third meeting with the church in Ada. Okla., with fifteen baptisms. A. S. Hall led the song service. Brother Freeman reports that the young people in this congregation are the most active he has known. Young people's societies were born because the churches did not give the young people anything to do in the church. Congregations which do not give the young people some work do them an injustice and rob the church of needed work. W. L. Swinney, minister of the church of Christ, Canadian, Texas, who is also secretary-treasurer of the Orphans' Home recently established in that city, writes: "The work here is moving along smoothly and, I believe, gradually getting on 'higher ground.' We are not in a meeting, but recently we had four baptisms at the regular services. whole church is moved to greater sacrifices and feels the thrill of a higher joy by the work the Orphans' Home is bringing to them. It is a great work, and our spiritual lives are enriched by it. There are now seven boys and twelve girls in the Home, and the Home is not yet five We are arranging now to move into larger months old. We shall need larger quarters, for several more quarters. children are knocking for admittance. Recently at a meeting of the Chamber of Commerce, when there were fifty-five of the leading citizens of our city present, a man, not a member of any church, publicly donated one hundred and twenty-two acres of land within one mile of the city, valued at one hundred dollars per acre, as a site for the Home. There are now plans on foot by which we shall be able to build a modern fireproof building that will accommodate one hundred children on that land. But neither of these gifts helps us right now. We need the fellowship of the Lord's people. The expense of keeping up the Home is the Lord's people. The expense around two hundred dollars per month. This will be much around two hundred dollars per month. You can confidently This will be much help in this work, for it is now, and will always be, under the control of the church of Christ in Canadian. This is a home for the children, not just a place to stay. Love is the regnant note in this Home. Meeting the Lord at the altar of prayer is a daily duty and pleasure in this Home, in which all the children join. If you cannot take these children into your own home, then help us."

Palmyra, Ind., August 9.—From July 3 to July 24 I assisted the church at Borden, Ind., in a meeting, during which time sixteen were baptized and one was restored. Brother B. F. Taylor preached one week in that meeting THE PURPOSE OF

The fundamental idea of Abilene Christian College is Christian service. Everything else is made subservient to this end; and this end is held in view in the outlining of every course of study, in the employment of every teacher, in the improvement of the material equipment; in fact, in everything that is done. Whatever does not lend itself to the accomplishment of this one purpose is rejected as un-

To accomplish this end, the Bible is exalted in the course of study, being taught each student in the institution from the first grade of the training school to the end of the special Bible course, three years in advance of the Bachelor of Arts degree. On the athletic field, in the chapel hall, in the classroom, on the campus, the Christ is held up as the only true ideal of Believing that only the most efficient service is worthy the name "Christian," the management endeavors to teach science, mathematics, English, philosophy, etc., more efficiently than is done elsewhere. Constant effort is made to give the student the greatest convenience, the best equipment, and the happiest environment.

The purpose of the institution is expressed by the motto coined by a former student: "Not the biggest, but the best"-that is, greatness, not bigness.

Do not squander your money and time in educational institutions where the purpose is less noble than this.

Remember also that Abilene Christian College is fully accredited by all institutions of higher learning.

This one was one of the best. We hope to have Brother Gleaves with us another year.—B. F. Hart

Columbia, Tenn., August 9.-We have just had a glorious meeting at Water Valley, in Maury County, with eight baptisms. Large crowds attended. They engaged my services for next year. The meetinghouse there was built by five different religious bodies-old Presbyterians, Methodists, Baptists, Cumberland Presbyterians, and the church of Christ; and when dedicated, a preacher was selected to represent each of these bodies. I am the only one out of the five who survives. We are the only people who meet for regular worship there now. We are the only people who F. C. Sowell.

Bremond, Texas, August 8 .- On July 6 I closed a splendid meeting with the church at Bishop, Texas. There were nineteen additions, eleven by primary obedience. I began a meeting at Bremond on July 9 and continued it for thirteen days. One person was bap-tized. At the close of the Bremond meeting I assisted the church at Boone Prairie, near Franklin, in a meeting which embraced the fourth and fifth Lord's days. Eleven additions in all, six by baptism. Pray for the work.—H. D. Jeffcoat.

Algood, Tenn., August 8.-On July 8 I closed a nine-days' meeting (the third one) at Center Ridge School-house, in Lincoln County. No addihouse, in Lincoln County. No additions. On July 10 the Fayetteville meeting began, to continue fifteen days. I conducted the song service, Brother George Klingman did the preaching. Five were baptized during the meeting. On August 4 I closed my part of the meeting at Corder's Cross Roads, eight miles from Fayetteville. Brother G. H. Oneal, who teaches there, was to preach on Friday night. One was reclaimed, one received from the Baptists. Brother G. W. Graves began a meeting at Smyrna, near here, one of "my" congregations, last Thursday. I am with him now.-E. Gaston Collins.

Pearl, Miss., August 3.-We have just closed a very successful tent meeting halfway between Pearl and Gates-Brother M. C. Cayce did the preaching. I have been with him seven weeks conducting the song service in meetings. He is one of the most earnest workers I ever saw. Brother Cayce has a good name in Mississippi, and the Bible says that "a good name is rather to be chosen than great riches;" and he speaks the word of the Lord so plainly and earnestly that it touches the hearts of We had thirty-one additions in the Vicksburg meeting and six in this latter meeting. From here I go to Ridgeland to join Brother Will J. Cullum, and Brother Cayce goes to Coffeeville,—Paul L. Pullias.

Union, S. C., August 8 .- The work in this State moves along about as usual. Interest seems to give day. The nightly meetings in the tent are proving of interest, and I am doing some of my best preaching to get men to see the folly of sin and the utter helplessness of men in sin, and to realize what the Lord Jesus has done for us in his sacrifice and the sending the message to the world through the gospel, endeavoring to show the necessity of the blood and that it is reached by walking even as he walked. Two baptisms to date, with fine crowds each night. Brother Burton is now in some meetings in Tennessee, but the work will go on, the Lord being our helper. We want to finish our building before winter and so continue working for the Master as hest we can. Continue your prayers. -G. F. Gibbs.

Winston-Salem, N. C., August 6.-I closed my second meeting in this part of the State on July 18, with the Ketner's congregation, near this city. The meeting continued two weeks. and the brethren said that it was attended better than any meeting ever held at that place. Two were baptized into Christ and much good accomplished otherwise. I then re-turned to the city, where Brother Reeves and I spent the remaining part of the week in cottage preaching. These services were well attended, and by some who had never heard the true gospel before. It was next my pleasure to be with Brother M. C. Kurfees at Mocksville for two weeks to assist in the song service, but am having to leave to-day to begin a meeting near In harmony with the Germanton. apostle Paul's charge to all preachers. MR. DODSON WARNS USERS OF CALOMEL Says Drug Acts Like Dynamite on Liver and You Lose a Day's Work.

There's no reason why a person should take sickening, salivating calomet when a few cents buys a large bottle of Dod-son's Liver Tone—a perfect substitute for calomel.

It is a pleasant, vegetable liquid which will start your liver just as surely as calomel, but it doesn't make you sick and can not salivate.

Children and grown folks can take Dodson's Liver Tone, because it is perfectly harmless.

Calomel is a dangerous drug. It is mercury and attacks your bones. Take a dose of nasty calomel today and you will feel weak, sick and nauseated to-morrow. Don't lose a day's work. Take a spoonful of Dodson's Liver Tone inatead and you will wake up feeling great. No more biliousness, constipation, sluggishness, headache, coated tongue or sour stomach. Your druggist says if you don't find Dodson's Liver Tone acts better than horrible calomel your money is waiting for you.

The Yanktonai Indians.

BY C. C. MERRITT.

The Yanktonai Indians of the Sioux nation are found in the Fort Peck Indian Reservation in Montana. This reservation "is about sixty miles wide by about one hundred and thirty miles long. There are about two thousand and ninety Indian landholders on this reserve and many that are not landholders. They are also connected in some way with the Fort Belknap Reservation." Of the seven tribes of the Sioux Indians, the Yanktonai is probably the oldest.

The Catholic and Presbyterian Churches have missions among them, It seems that only a few of the older ones hold to the Catholic faith. The Presbyterians have three missions, and each has an Indian missionary.

Sometime ago Brother C. C. Merritt made a call for volunteers to go to the mission work among American Indians. Brother E. N. Golphenee, of Andes, Montana, offered himself for the work among the Fort Peck Indians. He, with J. B. Golphenee and Sister Lula G. Golphenee, took a trip among these Indians to see what the opportunities were. They were made to rejoice to find the opportunity much greater than they had expected. The door seemed to be wide open. A brother (a teacher in the Indian schools) and his wife were found, to their joy. An Indian, Mr. Lavatta, who is superintendent of the Makaichu Indian Presbyterian Sunday school and president of both the standing committee of the Fort Peck and Fort Belnap Y. M. C. A. when he learned the business of the brethren, said: "It's an answer to my prayers," He seemed very anxious that the Bible alone should be taught.

The brethren found that the women (squaws) are "very reticent;" they are shy of men, and the men are shy of women. This makes it necessary that a man and woman be sent to this work. Brother E. N. Golphenee and Sister Lula Golphenee will take up the work at first, and later on Brother J. B. Golphenee, Sister Lula's husband, will join them. His farm work makes it impossible for him to do so now.

Brother E. N. Golphenee is a brother to Brother J. O. Golphenee, who has for some time been doing successful work among the white people of Montana. Those who have been helping in his support have nothing to regret. Others are now called upon to support the other Montana (Indian) work. Who will they be? Answer the question on your knees, and see what the answer will be. Write to C. C. Merritt, Davis City, Iowa, about the matter.

North Carolina Notes.

BY W. L. REEVES.

Our efforts in this needy field are still doing good. I wrote one of the students of the Freed-Hardeman College, Henderson, Tenn., Brother J. E. Green, and secured his assistance during vacation. He came and went to work in earnest, and has already done much good. He held the first meeting of his life here in the city of Winston-Salem. Seven were baptized, the church was edified, and splendid gospel lessons were delivered to members who had never heard the truth in full before.

On July 5 he began another meeting seven miles from the city, at Ketner's church. This is in a Moravian settlement; but many heard him gladly, and two souls were baptized.

The Moravian Church is very strong here in the city and generally all over this county and parts of adjacent counties. They make much more "to do" over Easter Sunday and Monday than they or anybody else does over Christmas. Long before daylight every Easter Sunday morning, rain or shine, many thousands of people of the various sectarian churches begin to gather at the "Home" Moravian Church, on old Salem Square, in order to be present at the "sunrise" ceremony and the grave decoration which immediately follows the ceremony. In reasonably good weather at Easter, as it was last Easter, there are about fifteen or twenty thousand people from far and near assembled by the dawning of the morning. On Easter Monday all banks and nearly all other business houses all over this whole section of North Carolina are closed, and the people everywhere have a good time autoing, visiting, fishing, and hunting. I teach the people that the idea of Easter is of pagan or heathen origin, is a very evil corruption to Christianity, and should never be observed by Christians in any way. Such is vain worship, as a matter of course. (Matt. 15: 9.) It is a survival of the old Teutonic mythology, and Paul certainly forbids our fostering, teaching, or observing myths or fables. (1 Tim. 1: 4; 4: 7; Tit. 1: 14.) These passages show that such things are not godly; that they do not edify, but turn people away from the truth. Read them

On July 24 Brother Green joined Brother M. C. Kurfees in a meeting at Jericho, near Mocksville, Brother Kurfees' old home congregation, where he has been holding annual meetings for about forty years.

We need a tent and help to work in this city all the time. I have worn out one tent since I came here. This field is large and there are so many who need to hear; but there are so few members in each given vicinity that funds to do the work each section needs are too scarce to meet the demands of the whole field. There are nearly sixty thousand people in Winston-Salem, and we have about eighty members, and a number of them do absolutely nothing to support the gospel. They were never taught in younger days that they should sacrifice to sound out the gospel to others. The youngest congregation in this field gives more than twice as much as any other. I built it up since coming here in 1915, and taught the truth on supporting the gospel. Brother Green is a splendid preacher and a good singer, and is proving to be one of the very best helpers I have ever had with me.

Brother L. D. Campbell, whom I baptized since coming here, is a splendid preacher and an elegant man. He recently held a meeting at Reedy's Creek, in Davidson County. There is one congregation in that county, but no preacher.

Let the good work go on! I will do my best.

The Pacific Christian Academy.

BY O. W. GARDNER.

For the benefit of any who may be interested in the progress and prospect of our work, I shall give a few notes at this time.

Our 1920-21 session closed in May with some very excellent entertainments. It is a little late now to give an extended "write-up" of the closing days, but I must say a few words at least. We had by far the best term of school I have ever had anything to do with and closed with a fine school spirit both among pupils and patrons. We enrolled something over eighty pupils during the term, and the percentage of attendance was wonderful. Very few who enrolled at the beginning of the term quit before the close. None, so far as we know, left school during the whole session, except through necessity. Pupils, teachers, and patrons tried to outdo each other in showing loyalty to our work. Not an incident occurred during the whole session to jar the harmony so prevalent. The progress of the pupils, as a whole, was pleasing. Some made remarkable progress. The most gratifying progress, however, was along spiritual lines and moral progress. I feel sure a more commendable moral and social tone could not be found. This, of course, is worth all other considerations combined, for it is for this influence the school is primarily maintained.

Prospects for the future were never brighter. While we have not advertised at all, our enrollment has steadily grown. A number of families who have children to educate have moved into our midst, and several others are making arrangements to be present this fall.

At a recent meeting of the Board of Directors, teachers, and patrons, Brother Frank Young, of Forestville, recently of Arizona, was elected to fill the unexpired term of Brother Max Langpaap as director. Brother Langpaap recently resigned to go as a missionary to Hawaii. It was also decided to open school on September 13. Make your arrangements to be present on the first day.

Arrangements have recently been perfected by which all who may wish to come into our town may have housing facilities. Our climate is most ideal.

Write us for particulars regarding the school, the country, or the congregation here.

Notes From Santa Rosa, Cal.

BY FELIX G. OWEN.

The church here is alive and doing good work. There were forty-five present at the midweek meeting tonight (August 3). This is possibly more than fifty per cent of the Sundaymorning attendance. When you remember this congregation is not supported by a school, that is good, and shows a good degree of interest, activity, and spirituality. Last Wednesday night the service was a very impressive and helpful one. The meeting was conducted by George Lowery, who is less than ten years old. He stood before the audience and really conducted the meeting, and throughout his part manifested a remarkable degree of thought and presence of mind. Last Sunday morning the attendance was a little better than usual. There was no regular sermon, but short talks from the brethren. The meeting was interesting, and warm with enthusiasm, spirituality, and devotion. This congregation is doing some good work also in looking after its members and others in a material and social way.

Steps are being taken now for the three congregations in this section to contribute regularly to the support of Brother Max Langpaap and family in their missionary work in Honolulu. These three congregations-Forestville, Graton, and Santa Rosa-meet together every Sunday afternoon for song practice. The third annual camp meeting held jointly by these congregations is to be at Santa Rosa this year, August 14-28. Brother G. W. Riggs, who has done such a great work in Los Angeles and Southern California during the past eighteen years, is to take the oversight of the meeting.

Brother Cunningham was one of the leaders in the Bethany congregation. near Olmstead, Ky., and it was here that his light shone the brightest, and he will be sorely missed. He married Elizabeth Brake on September 6, 1870. This good woman died a few years in advance of her husband. There are several children who survive their parents and who are now receiving sympathy and encouragement from their friends. Brother Cunningham was noted for his hospitality and kindness and integrity of purpose. He suffered many trials, but throughout them all displayed faith and courage that were truly remarkable. Hammonds.

The spirit of little Callie Francis Hammonds, daughter of William Elmer and Lucile Hammonds, of Bradford, Tenn., was called from its tem-ple of clay to its eternal home on Thursday, July 7, 1921, after a life of only four days, being born on July 3. Funeral services were conducted at her home by Brother J. L. Holland, of Greenfield, after which her little body was laid to rest in the Locust Grove Cemetery. Her few days on earth were sweet, but full of suffering, and seemed only to provide for us a brighter and more glorious hope. We may not be able to understand why God took her from us, but we know "all things work together for that good to them that love the Lord." The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord." She is only removed to that land above, where all is joy and peace and love, waiting to welcome her anxious parents and all those who loved her to the home where sad good-byes shall never be spoken, and where God has promised to wipe all tears away from our eyes.

Brooks, of Ten-In seven years after they nessee. moved to Tennessee with their family of three little children, where they spent the remainder of their days very happily. He preceded her to the grave about four years. She spent her widowhood years with her children. She was the mother of twelve children, ten of whom are still living. She lived to see all of them obey the gospel, and to see the fourth generation-one hundred and five living. She was faithful till the last, and never missed a Lord's day from the house of worship if she was able to get there. She was baptized when twenty-five years old by Brother Bob Trimble, in Hickman County, Tenn. She was buried in the old Sheboss field. Funeral services were held by Brother Will Morton.

Sister Sweat obeyed the gospel under the preaching of Brother McClelland, an Australian, a Bible student at Lexington, Ky., and was a faithful member of the church of Christ for thirty years. Especially during the last few years had she been very active in the cause of Christ. She will certainly be remembered for the help she gave the church at Tupelo, Ark., and will be greatly missed by the members there. As a wife, she was true, helpful, and loving; as a mother, she was kind and compassionate. She loved her home, her husband, and her children. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord." She is now at rest under God's care. She leaves a husband, a daughter, a son, two brothers, two sisters, and a host of friends to mourn her departure; but they weep not as those who have no hope. Funeral services were held at the home by the writer, after which her body was laid to rest in the Sand Hill Cemetery. Z. D. BARBER.

Building Jerusalem.

BY FLAVIL HALL.

With the zeal of Nehemiah in building the literal walls of Jerusalem, those sisters at Tyner, Tenn., have been steadily building Jerusalem (the church) at that place.

A letter from Brother Aruna Clark informs me that on the fifth Lord's day in July the first sermon was preached in the new house of worship there. He was continuing to preach each evening until Brother H. M. Phillips should arrive to continue the meeting several days longer.

It has been under trials and with resoluteness seldom known in the history of men and women that the sisters at Tyner have pressed onward and built up the true worship there and have succeeded in building their house of worship, which is a neat structure, with the restrictive clause in the deed. They have not the means to meet the expenses incurred in building the house and in having preaching done. Several hundred dollars more will be needed.

When at Largo, Fla., I called Brother W. A. Cameron's attention to the needs at Tyner. His answer was that the congregation at Largo had taken on themselves all the obligations they were able to meet and that Tennessee ought to take care of a work like that in her own State, and this seemed to be the impression at another place where I made a little speech about the faith of those sisters. The disciples in Middle and West Tennessee may think the congregations in East Tennessee should take care of such a work in that part of the State. But it should be remembered that the disciples in Chattanooga are endeavoring to build at Ridgedale, that the Central Church is endeavoring to pay for a house of worship, that the Ooltewah congregation is doing the same, and that the Athens congregation is in urgent need of a house.

Read the book of Nehemiah; and if your admiration is excited by the zeal of the people of God in building the walls of Jerusalem, then give expression of your admiration for such faith by sending a donation to Mrs. W. W. Major, Tyner, Tenn.

The Montana Work.

BY W. F. LEMMONS.

Sometime ago I made an appeal for the support of the mission work in Montana. Brother J. O. Golphenee, of Elmdale, Montana, has been very busy in this work. In the month of June he received about one hundred and fortyfive dollars, and the work has accomplished great good. In that month he traveled seven hundred miles in his "Ford," baptized nineteen souls, and was receiving calls from all over that country and from Canada and North

On July 16 I received a letter from Brother Golphenee, in which he informed me that a hailstorm had swept the country for twelve miles around and that the crops were destroyed, He said some even their gardens. were raking up the destroyed grain crops to gather a little hay for feed, and that he would be forced out of the field unless he received outside help, as the people could not help themselves, much less help him, Enough brethren have had this work at heart to contribute to it, and thus it has been kept alive, and Brother Golphenee has been constantly on the job. The work has grown from one small congregation in 1919 to several small congregations, and people are hearing the truth and obeying it. The possibilities are greater with every day's work. Brother Golphenee is on the field, has his car, knows the country and the customs of the people, and will likely do more immediate good than any two preachers could do without these advantages.

Brethren, I want to insist that you think seriously and decide right about this work. The lost souls of men and women hang trembling in the balances. You can reach them and save them. Will you? I believe you will. There is no greater possibilities in the United States than there is in the Northwest. Only two preachers in the State, and only one constantly in the work. Surely we can support one man in a big State. Send your contributions to J. O. Golphenee, Elmdale, Montana, who will report amounts and results. My address is Beaumont, Texas.

A Sister's Earnest Plea.

BY SUSIE HORRS.

This is to those sisters who are wishing to do something to build up the cause of Christ. For a long time I have wished some one would come to our rescue at Lineville, Ala. We have no church nor any one to lead us. So I come as a child to its mother, and ask you to help us build a small dwelling house to locate a preacher here. He can preach out in the country on Sundays and work here during the week days, and by and by, if we faint not, we can have a church. This house will cost about one thousand dollars. I have seventy dollars and the promise of one hundred more, and the brethren will do the building, thereby saving about three hundred dollars. So please consider me as a child and send a contribution accordingly. The property will be deeded to the church of Christ, with restrictive clause in the deed. Address Miss Susie Hobbs, Piedmont, Ala.

A New Congregation.

BY J. G. MALPHURS.

The tent meeting at Legate, near Clarksville, Tenn., is a success from every viewpoint. After three weeks a new congregation of forty-two members was set to work. It was strictly a mission point-only five members (scattered) when the meeting started. Twenty-eight were baptized, and nine immersed persons came from the Methodists, Baptists, and Freewill Baptists. These new members represent the best and most stable material of the surrounding country. The vast majority of the converts are married people, and the most of them own their homes. One lady nearly seventy-five was baptized. Hearts have been made to rejoice through obedience, old grudges have been buried, and the community is happy. But the meeting goes on, and I shall nurse them or see that they are rocked in the gospel cradle until they can walk. We shall put up a substantial meetinghouse. Brother William Walker deserves a part of the credit, because he held a meeting here last summer and got the people to reading.

RENWAR VS. RHEUMATISM.

RENWAR VS, RHEUMATISM,

It is certainly a pity that so many people suffer year after year the intense pains of rheumatism when it can be so easily expelled from the system by the simple treatment of taking Renwar Rheumatic Salts. Rheumatism is caused by uric acid in the blood; and in order to effect a complete cure, it is necessary to entirely eliminate this acid from the blood. Renwar is guaranteed to relieve, or your money refunded. It contains no injurious drugs. It is the one sure remedy, and it does not in the slightest degree injure the stomach or affect the heart. Mr. Joseph L. Boehmer says: "One 50c bottle has done me more good than all sanatorium treatments; and what it did for me, why should it not do the same for others? Should any one doubt the virtue of Renwar and the certainty of curing this malady, refer them to me." For sale by druggists; price, 50c; or by mail on receipt of price from WARNER DRUG COMPANY, NASHVILLE, TENN.

Vain Religion.

BY J. E. WAINWRIGHT.

James is one of the most practical writers. He holds up for our inspection plain and simple truths, leaving us to accept or reject. He defines "pure and undefiled religion." (James 1: 27.) We hear a great deal about this, publicly and privately, but we see it very little practiced. In verse 26 the writer introduces another kind of religion, which is rarely ever mentioned, but practiced abundantly. This dangerous malady is brought about by the misuse of the tongue, and is called "vain religion." This fearful disease often prevails while stoutly advocating "pure religion" without exercise.

The Lord plainly displayed his displeasure of such in the death of Ananias and Sapphira. (Acts 5.) But in the face of this severe example, we have in our midst an alarming number of similar characters, who seem to find much pleasure in reducing the value of truthfulness to the level of fearless prevarication. In fact, they did not care to continue their course and graduate with spiritual honors as outlined in verse 27, but have satisfied their conscience in being able to reach verse 26.

It is disgusting to be forced to listen to the unbridled tongue, and heartrending to observe its deadly effect upon the careless hearer who jumps to conclusions without investigation. It matters not how much good may have been accomplished by a religious journal, or the extent of prevalent righteous prosecutions, the "vain religionist" may be found in divers places with sleeves rolled up and ready to "knock." Summing up his reason, we find it to be so petty that it is not worthy to be compared with the smallest insect. Seldom do we mention the name of a grand old soldier of the cross, regardless of age, service, and sacrifice, but we find some ever ready to dip their ungodly pen in the slime of "vain religion" and endeavor to smear an ugly line through the noble life of a practitioner of pure and undefiled religion.

If a congregation does not embrace certain foolish and cranky man-made customs, it is branded disloyal. If the cause of Christ is prosecuted vigorously in an orderly manner, the prattlers shout, "Digressive!" As long as the preacher "skins" the other fellow, he is the "prince of men;" but when he turns the focus of God's eternal truth on local errors, he is immediately labeled "unsound" by the unbridled tongue. In short, it is either all good or all bad—better than the angels in heaven or worse than the devils in hell.

David said: "Rebuke a wise man, and he will love thee." The preacher or elder who shoulders this responsibility and puts it into practice is liable to land in the poorhouse or hospital nowadays. We rejoice to know that Israel has many brave soldiers who are not afraid of the treacherous attacks of the "vain religionists," but are bold to press the battle of righteousness against such spiritual wickedness in high places. We have preached very much against the "unknown tongue," and this is commendable; but the deadly poison is found in the "known tongue" that goes unbridled. In the closing chapters of Revelation it is plainly said that liars shall not inherit the glory land, Which do you choose? Shall it be verse 27, thereby saving yourself and others; or shall it be verse 26, a sure waybill to a devil's hell?

Did You Know-

That as Christians we ought always to side with the afflicted people of God, and not with the world?

That it is useless to go into the Lord's battle ground unless you go armed with heavenly weapons?

That usually when you find a spiritual bankrupt you have found a person who has not prayed for a long time and has not opened and read his Bible?

That our worst sin is the root of all our other sins, and victory over that sin will mean victory over our other sins, which will give joy at every step?

IF YOU WERE BUSY

If you were busy being kind, Before you knew it you would find You'd soon forget to think 'twas true That some one was unkind to you.

If you were busy being glad And cheering people who are sad, Although your heart might ache a bit, You'd soon forget to notice it.

If you were busy being good, And doing just the best you could, You'd not have time to blame some man Who's doing just the best he can.

If you were busy being true
To what you know you ought to do,
You'd be so busy you'd forget
The blunders of the folks you've met.

If you were busy being right, You'd find yourself too busy quite To criticize your neighbor long Because he's busy doing wrong.

CURRENT THOUGHT

Tell Him So.

"When a man is doing good work, it is a mighty good scheme to tell him so while he is doing it, rather than to wait until the work is finished. Encouragement and boosting from the side lines while the game is in progress are of a great deal more value than praise after the game is over, although both may be welcome. In this spirit I want to tell you." These are the opening words of a letter written to a man who was leading in a most difficult and important work. Think of the good this letter must have done the hard-pressed worker!

Now there are lots of hard-pressed workers who might be wonderfully helped by receiving good letters, and there are lots of people who could write these good letters if they cnly would. And it is such an easy, simple way of helping folks. Isn't it strange that more such letters are not written?

One of the largest avenues open to us all to render service is centered in the opportunities we have of helping others do things that are worth while—helping them by encouraging them. It is well enough, perhaps, to send flowers and to create or erect memorials when people are dead, or even to sing their praise after they have completed a difficult and worthy task, but how much better it is to help a worker in the midst of a hard job! And we repeat that one of the simplest and easiest ways of doing that successfully was adopted by the one who wrote the letter from which we quote, the letter of good cheer and encouragement.

"Only a longed-for letter,
And the writer little knew,
As she penned the loving message,
Of the good that it would do." —Exchange.

I number among my friends and acquaintances several men of wealth and distinction and a larger number of those who are poor in this world's goods. I have found some who are rich in faith among both classes. There is one man who draws a salary of twenty-five thousand dollars every year. He is truly one of the busiest men in the United States. And yet this friend told me that he found time every day to write at least one encouraging letter to somebody. He did not seem to think so much of the good he was doing to others as of the good it brought to him. He told me that this practice was the secret of his own cheerfulness; that writing this letter daily helped him in the performance of more onerous duties. Surely, when a simple practice like this is a good tonic to the writer and an immeasurable kindness to others, it is well worth taking up. The great Gladstone had such a heart. It was always a pleasure for him to do little things for those who were neglected by others. It is related that a London preacher once made a call upon a street sweeper whom he had missed from his crossing for several days. He found the poor man sick in an attic, but well supplied with the necessities of life. "Has anybody been to see you?" the preacher asked. "I have had only one visitor," the man replied, "and his name is Williame E. Gladstone."

You Never Can Tell Who's Looking.

Tom Bradley and James Connelly worked in the same office and had practically the same ability as stenographers. They worked in the office of an engineer in charge of the construction of an immense dam for a hydro-electric company, back in the woods, and lived at the camp.

For several days the engineer ate at the camp table, although he was provided with quarters of his own, up on the hill. Then he called James into his office and informed him that thereafter he was to be employed in the engineer's city office. In the city he would be expected to represent the engineer and to mingle freely with the officials of the company, in order to keep them informed as to progress being made at the camp.

Now, would it interest you to know just why James, instead of Tom, was chosen? I'll tell you the reason the engineer gave. "My secretary has often to dine with the president and other big men of the concern. I cannot be represented in such society by a young man who sucks his coffee and eats with his knife."

There you are. Does the shoe fit you? I hope not, If only Tom had known. Ah, yes! But—James ate like a gentleman, even though he was in a rough construction camp. A fellow never loses out by remembering to be a gentleman.—H. W. Correll, in Exchange.

The sure-enough Christian will not make the sad mistake Tom Bradley made. He is cognizant of One whose eyes are always upon him. This Presence educates, sustains, and comforts him. It leaves its impress upon every motive, word, and action. It determines his conduct in the drawing-room and in the rough construction camp. Undoubtedly it affects his table manners. It does not polish him after the shallow, namby-pamby ideals of the world, but gives him the culture of the true Christian gentleman. "Is there anything better in the way of character than a gentleman?" asked the teacher. "Yes, there is," replied a thoughtful member of the class; "it is the Christian gentleman." He knows that Jesus Christ is always looking.

Price Paid For Position.

"What is a slave but one who can be bought?" No boast of liberty can make a true freeman of one who sets a price upon his honor or his loyalty or his conscience. One who is honest until money or position tempts him to be otherwise is not honest at all. He is simply a high-priced criminal, the slave of a greed that can easily master him. As long as temptation can overrule faithfulness, we are not wholly masters of ourselves; but the old cynical statement that "every man has his price" is not true. All around us are strong, steady, upright lives, which waver not from lack of temptation, but because they hold that adherence to right is a man's highest possession, the one treasure to be guarded, whatever it costs. These are God's freemen.—Forward.

It makes no difference how large a following a man may have or how exalted a position he may occupy, he is a slave if he bought his place. The temptation that position offers is often greater than that of money. But when both position and money are involved in the goal one is striving for, the temptation is greatest of all. Only a truly upright heart grounded in faith and fortified by courage can withstand that temptation. It is always sad and disappointing to see a presumably strong man yield in such a case. One may preach all his life about honesty and integrity and write volumes about the subject of right living, and yet, when the great test comes in his own life, stifle his conscience, practice political chicanery, run roughshod over the rights of others, and even dishonor the dead, in order to gratify his own selfish ambition. Once his point is gained, there are always some ready to proclaim him as "the greatest man among us" and to fawn at his feet. But there are others who think of the price he paid and shudder.

A Trustful Heart.

A trustful heart, who that doth know
Hath wealth more worth than stocks bestow;
Hath jewel thief can never take;
Hath bonds in bank that will not break—
Estate secure from fear of foe.

Ah, not from gold doth gladness flow, Within the breast true treasures glow; And this from bane can blessing make, A trustful heart.

Thrice blest whose faith can undergo Fate's wildest winds and waves of woe,
Whose steadfast soul no shock can shake;
Who can like Paul and Silas wake
Dark dungeons' depths with praise, and show
A trustful heart.

At Home Again.

BY J. D. TANT.

After three months' preaching the gospel in North Carolina and Alabama, I returned home for one week; then off again for Tennessee, Alabama, and Texas until October. I rejoice to say that I found wife and the children well and all working on the farm helping to make a living, but am sorry to say that our fruit crop in Northwest Arkansas this year is a complete failure, and many will suffer as a result this fall.

My last two meetings were in Alabama. During the first one ten were baptized and two were restored. At this place envy, malice, evil speaking, evil surmising, adultery, whisky drinking, no love, and neglect of worship seemed to be the order of the day. No laying by in store upon the first day of the week, as God has ordained, was once thought of among them. As a result, they were unprepared to support the meeting and failed by half to fulfill God's command to support the preaching of the gospel. Some of my brethren think it no wrong to call a man six hundred miles from his home, hold his time for from twelve to twenty days, and then declare they would like to support him, but have not the money, and at the same time are buying their tobacco on mule credit; for, if they are not responsible for their debts, they will put a mortgage on their mules to buy tobacco; and thus acting, these brethren seem to think they are doing God's service and will get to heaven, but for such I have no hope.

From this place I went to Barnes Creek, where I preached ten days and baptized five persons; and one hundred members who had been running with the devil made a strike against him, confessed their wrongs, and came back to do more and better work for the Lord. One day during the meeting I went down to the White House congregation, eight miles away, and persuaded seventy-five members there to quit the devil, come back and confess their wrongs, and go to work for the Lord. I started them to work in a good Sunday school at each place, and each congregation hopes to have a Bible class taught this fall to learn more about the Bible, that they may be able to do more good. Never in life have I found as much ignorance in the Bible among my brethren as on this trip. Faith, repentance, baptism, and "skin the sects"—this seems to be all they know.

Barnes Creek almost doubled the other place in the support of the meeting, paying ninety-five dollars for the same. Brother Willcut and Brother Wyle, able preachers and among our best men, made this meeting a success by their continual work and help. Both live there, and not only gave their time and prayers for the meeting, but also contributed liberally for my support. Had the church supported the meeting like these two sacrificing preachers, the support would have been much better. Thirty-five years of practical experience has taught me that ninety-five per cent of all mission work is done by our preachers. A negro whom Brother Willcut taught the gospel and baptized, and who is studying the Bible to be able to preach, attended the meeting all the time and helped in supporting me.

In all the six meetings I held while on this trip the attendance was large. The meetinghouses were too small at least half the time. People were anxious to hear and know what we teach. I found the greatest drawbacks to people's accepting the gospel to be ignorance, inefficient eldership, want of church discipline, and ungodliness among my brethren: no Bible classes, no Bible teaching, no knowledge of the Bible among the members, few meeting for worship, no contribution upon the first day of the week as the Bible teaches, and a general impression that Bible teaching on Sunday is a Sunday school, and that it makes us like the . "sects" if we try to teach our children the Bible on Sunday.

If my preaching brethren could all be thrown out of the old channel we have been in for the past thirty years—that our greatness as a "big" preacher is measured by the number of additions we have—and all devote from two to five years in teaching churches practical Christianity, I am sure we would be a stronger people before the world and able to do more good than if we continue to drift and bring into dying churches great numbers of unconverted persons.

But I find that during the past fifteen years, since I have been spending more time in teaching my brethren the second part of the great commission, "teaching them to observe all things," that I have not been so popular with the churches nor wanted for meetings like I was when I preached nothing but baptism and "skinned the sects."

Would to God I could put it into the hearts of some of my brethren who have money and are nearing the last milepost of life that they cannot take their money with them after death, and could induce them to put some of their money to work for the Lord and help me to meet some of my debts! Then I would spend two years working only with the churches of North Carolina and Alabama to teach them the Bible.

I call to memory a certain brother, too covetous to do good, who died sometime ago and left seventy-five thousand dollars; yet in a short time it was all spent for whisky, gambling, and on loose women. Also another brother worth two hundred and fifty thousand dollars, who never held a mission meeting in his life, and left all of this money for his ungodly children to "blow in:" and now his wife can have no peace of mind, because two of these boys are carrying pistols for each other on account of their father's money. This man, by spending two hundred thousand dollars of his money in the service of God, might have saved himself and his children. I have no hope of a man's salvation who works forty or fifty years of his life to accumulate money for his children to spend in serving the devil after he is gone. We should serve the Lord with our time, our talents, and our substance in this life; and I fear many of my brethren will be lost for not so doing.

The Japanese Work.

BY I. B. BRADLEY.

For quite a long time I have said nothing of the work done by Miss Sarah Andrews and the condition and needs of that work at the present time. One reason for this long silence is: Sister Andrews has been in America since February, and I had funds enough on hand to take care of the work until this time. But I must place the matter before the churches again, for we will soon need more funds to support the work. This work is in a prosperous condition, or was at the time Sister Andrews left for her furlough the first of this year; and from reports received from Oiki San, her native helper, the work is going right on, the little band of twelve or more meeting regularly for Lord's-day worship and Bible study. There have been some baptisms since Sister Andrews left the work, and, from the reports she receives regularly from Oiki San, the work seems to be in very good condition. We have sent about two hundred dollars to the work this year, and will need to send another draft of seventy-five dollars in a short time. While I still have some money for this work on hand, I must have more if the support is kept up-and we cannot afford to let it lack for assistance. Funds have come very slowly; in fact, the contributions have been few and far between. Only about half a dozen have kept up their regular contributions. Now, I want to ask all the old supporters of this work to send me a contribution right away. We must not allow this work to stop for lack of support. Having begun a good work among the Japanese, let us carry it on to the day of the Lord Jesus.

Then, in addition to this, Sister Andrews needs something for herself. She has not, so far, asked for anything for herself; but she will need some soon. She has improved some in health since her return to the States, but is yet far from being strong and well. She has been trying to rest and get strong, but her many friends and new acquaintances are so anxious to hear from her the reports of the work that she can scarcely find time for any rest or recuperation. She contemplates spending next term in David Lipscomb College, if her state of health will permit, to be better prepared for her work when she returns to Japan about the middle of 1922.

Last, but not least, the work needs better facilities in the way of room to work. The work has been done in the town hall—the kindergarten work—and the Bible teaching and preaching "in her own hired house," which is very small, and they are cramped very much and cannot accommodate very many at their meetings. A permanent and more convenient place is needed for the work. Results have already shown that this is a field ripe unto the harvest, and that a great work can be done there if sufficient support and adequate facilities are provided.

What is needed is a house large enough for the school (kindergarten) and for the daily Bible classes, the Lord'sday meetings and other services of the church, with living apartments above for the missionary and her helpers. Sister Andrews desires to lease a plat of land large enough for the building, with a small yard in front of the building where the children may have recreation and gather for play, and where seats may be provided for passers-by to rest and read tracts and leaflets on Bible subjects, and build a house large enough to have an auditorium and about two classrooms on the first floor, with living apartments above. The lease and such a house will cost about six thousand dollars. This is a very modest sum to ask of the churches of Christ. Ten dollars from six hundred churches will make the amount, and is a very small sum; or twenty dollars from three hundred churches will fill the demands. May we not confidently rely upon the generosity of those who have supported Sister Andrews and helped start this work in Okitsu, Japan, to furnish this amount by the time she is ready to return-next year-about July or August?

Put this on your heart, remember the present need, and send me a contribution for the work, and also for the building fund, soon. She hopes to get the work on a self-supporting basis in another five years. "Every man according as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give; not grudgingly, or of necessity: for God loveth a cheerful giver." "He that giveth, let him do it with liberality."

I cheerfully give my most hearty indorsement to the above suggestions of Brother Bradley. Sister Andrews bears the reputation of being a most earnest, sincere Christian. She should be encouraged in the work and a suitable place should be prepared for those to worship who associate themselves with her in the work. The amount asked for is not a large one; so I hope to receive the good news in a very short time that Brother Bradley has in hand a sufficient sum to take care of the house and to carry forward the work of evangelizing in Japan.

The Increase of Skepticism.

BY BATSELL BAXTER.

One of the most alarming things about the present situation in reference to religious matters is the great increase in the number of those who are skeptical of religion and its divine origin. The time was once, even in the memory of some of us who are yet young, when a Christian preacher could go into a community and reap a great harvest of souls by showing people what the Bible taught. They wanted to know, With them the Bible was the absolute authority. They were glad to obey its commands.

But this is rapidly changing. A younger generation is growing up that does not care much what the Bible teaches. This is especially true among the educated. They have largely lost faith in the Bible as an authority of more weight that any other ancient and outgrow work. For this situation our educational system is at least partly responsible. The Christian Education Commission of the Methodist Church has published a little book called "Talking Points on Christian Education." Some interesting facts are brought out. Among others is the result of a questionnaire sent out from Bryn Mawr College. The answers showed:

- 1. Between forty per cent and fifty per cent of the students in the colleges answering are atheists.
- 2. Only fifteen per cent of the first-year students reject the belief in God. The percentage rapidly increases as the students advance in grade and rank. Think of it! About fifteen per cent of the students atheists when they enter college, and about fifty per cent when they leave! A terrible penalty paid for college learning!
- 3. The investigation showed that about sixty per cent of the professors answered that they had no desire for personal immortality and did not consider that the question had any influence on their conduct. About fifty per cent of the students made the same statement.

Some of the leading authorities in American education to-day teach that persons should be guided by their "natural instincts," and should not be influenced to observe our moral ideas, to have faith in Christ, and to serve God. A distinguished professor told the writer in the classroom one day that we ought to obey the present moral laws as long as they existed, but we owed them no more allegiance than that required of obedient citizens to the commonwealth; that all morality was a relative term and depended entirely upon the standard of the people.

Recently inquiry developed the fact that a teacher in a country high school that came under the observation of the writer was holding out to her classes the idea of what she believed to be the coming plan of ideal community life. Marriage and the home would cease to exist and mating would be somewhat after the manner of the birds and other animals. When children were born, they would be reared by the State. This would be more effective than the oldfashioned way now in vogue. This teaching had been going on for months before it was found out by the trustees. This teacher was called in question, and vigorously defended her teaching, quoting a distinguished professor in a great institution of learning as authority. The theory had been learned in college. Christian parents every year send their boys and girls to that great institution, and expect them to come back with reverence for God and the home.

The trend of a nation's life may be changed in a single generation by the wrong kind of educational system. Not only the home, but the State and the very foundations of our holy religion of Jesus Christ are being destroyed in the minds of our children by false standards of education. Christian colleges are bravely stemming the tide. We owe them our strongest support.

LOS ANGELES NOTES

By S. H. HALL,

2669 North Sichel Street,

House of worship, corner Altura and North Sichel Streets. Take North Broadway car to Sichel, then one block to left.

Notes of Interest.

These notes are being written at Mountain Air, New Mexico, August 8. We are now nine hundred and fortynine miles from Los Angeles, having camped at Kingman, Williams, Winslow, and Springerville, Ariz., and at Datil and Mountain Air, New Mexico. The trip has been, thus far, a most delightful one. We have gone over some bad roads; but with the exception of about one hundred and twenty miles, the roads have been reasonably good-just enough bad roads to make the good roads all the more enjoyable. The Gardner automobile we are driving has gone beyond our expectations. It seems to be running better than when we started. We have made an average of about twenty miles to a gallon of "gas" and a hundred and eighty miles to every quart of oil used. So the trip is not so expensive thus far.

Yesterday (Lord's day) was the most nearly perfect day I have ever experienced. The day closed with Bible reading, prayer, and the Lord's Supper observed by our little family. We spoke of the services at Sichel and Altura Streets at the hour we knew the good people of that congregation were assembled. We also remembered Downey, Ontario, Pomona, Pasadena, Riverside, and Colton, all in California, and did not forget West End Avenue, East Point, South Pryor Streets, and dozens of other places in Georgia. As we drove into Mountain Air last night, it began to rain; so we camped in a camping house controlled by Mr. C. L. Andrews. He, undoubtedly, is one of the kindest and most accommodating men we have met on the trip. At the supper table we were discussing him, and 1 asked: "What church is Andrews a member of?" My brother-in-law said he must be a "Holiness," as he had met a number in Oklahoma, and they were the most accommedating people he had ever met. I hoped deep down in my scul that he was a member of the church of Christ. And as I thought this I was made to feel sad to think that I have seen some who claim to be members of the church of Christ that made me doubt whether Andrews was a member of the church of Christ or not, just because he was so good and kind to us. Would it not be great if every member of the church of Christ could be easily and quickly known by his or her peculiar carefulness to "forget not to show love unto strangers" and to whole-heartedly do all that Christ commands us to do-to let our lights shine in such a way that people could easily and quickly see the difference in that religion established in the soul by the pure teaching of our Lord and the vain religion established by the doctrines of men? I know there is a difference. But, as a rule, those who sincerely walk in the ways of men are as happy as many of us who claim to have the genuine article.

Well, I just had to know about Andrews' religion. So, while writing this, he came by the door, and I said: "Andrews, I want to know what church you are a member of." And he said: "I am not a member of any church, but I love to treat all persons right when they are with me." I am so sorry he is not a Christian, but I am glad that the way we treated him made him say that he had never seen any one so appreciative and insist so earnestly that he take something for favors shown.

As we drove up to the camp grounds at Williams, Ariz., we were agreeably surprised to meet almost kinsfolk. There was only one car on the grounds, and as I passed I greeted them with a wave of the hand and asked: "How has it been with you all to-day?" A young lady in the crowd said: "Mamma, that is Brother Hall." It turned out to be the son of Brother J. K. Walling, of Texas, and a nephew of Brethren H. L. and J. D. Walling, of McMinnville, Tenn. The wife of this Brother Walling is a sister of our Sister Stivers, of Bell, Cal., and one of our best workers. We were so glad to see them, and they made us glad by the kindly way they treated us. They were on their way from Amarillo, Texas, to Los Angeles.

Time forbids more. I have sent these notes so that my friends everywhere may know the trip is resting me as nothing has for the last twenty-five years.

Pleasant Things Along the Way.

One of our most pleasant experiences along the way was our stop-over at Amarillo, Texas. Here we met our old friend and untiring worker, Frank B. Shepherd. He spared no pains in making our short stay there a most delightful one. And we had just "lots" to talk about; for instance, the Van Horns, who moved from his town to Pomona, Cal., last year, and who are now among our best workers, and the Walling family whom we met and camped with at Williams, Ariz., on their way to Los Angeles. Brother Shepherd hated to lose these good people, but we are so glad to gain them. Then he took me to the church house and showed me through one of the most conveniently constructed houses of worship I have seen lately. They had just finished an eight-thousand-dollar addition to their building. It was a great inspiration to me to see the building and talk with this good brother who believes in doing things for the greatest cause on earth. Some things we may forget, but we can never forget Amarillo and the pleasant hours spent there. That is a fine town and a great church.

At Chickasha, Okla., though dirty and tired and anxious to finish the trip, as it was our last day's run, we had to stop long enough to telephone Sister H. T. Ellis. She met us, with her brother and her baby, at the Citizens' Bank, with which Brother Ellis is connected, and we had a short visit without getting out of the car. The whole time was devoted to talking about the church of our Lord and Savior. Sister Ellis is one of the greatest women in the church of Christ, in my judgment. It was such a great pleasure to take her husband by the hand and call him "Brother Ellis." When I saw him last, he was in the banking business at Stuart, Okla. His home was mine, and I well remember how hard and carefully I preached for the sole purpose of baptizing him before the meeting closed, but I failed. However, I am going to claim him as a part of "my joy and crown" "before the Lord Jesus at his coming," cause I am sure I helped him in his efforts to see and understand the truth. (See 1 Thess. 2: 19, 20.) He is a most amiable man, is doing a fine work for the church at Chickasha, and is one of the trustees of the college organized some months ago at Cordell, Okla. It is so good to meet souls who love the Lord and are giving their best for the extension of his church in the world. It is heaven on earth! * * *

The Journey Is Ended.

Our camping trip from Los Angeles to Ada, Okla., in an auto, came to an end on August 12. We were twelve days on the road, using about two days of the time with stopovers. Our register shows we made a little better than one thousand and seven hundred miles. We used eighty-nine gallons of gasoline and seven quarts of oil, which made the trip economical. However, our only reason for coming this way was the outing feature. It was a most wonderful trip, and we all enjoyed it to the fullest. I feel that I can hardly wait to begin the revival due at Farmersville, Texas, next Lord's day. We again thank the many good people of Sichel and Altura Streets Church for the part they played in helping us get ready for this trip.

Reading the Bible.

BY J. C. M'O.

As God gave us the Bible, it is evident that it should be read and studied. An unread Bible will not guide to the throne of God. As God leaves men free to obey or disobey him, so he leaves them free to read or not read his word. Man is left free to elect to read the Bible much, little, or not at all. All who know and love the truth are glad to teach the necessity of reading the word of God daily. The Bereans were commended because they read the Scriptures daily: "Now these were more noble than those in Thessalonica, in that they received the word with all readiness of mind, examining the scriptures daily whether these things were so." (Acts 17: 11.) Christianity does not grow in ignorance. Christians are required to add to their faith knowledge. Zeal and courage without knowledge may be misguided. The religion of Christ is not something inherited from our foreparents, but it is something that must be learned from God. "It is written in the prophets, And they shall all be taught of God. Every one that hath heard from the Father, and hath learned, cometh unto me." (John 6: 45.) Men must learn of the love, goodness, and mercy of our Father before they will be led to repentance and drawn to God. "Or despisest thou the riches of his goodness and forbearance and long-suffering, not knowing that the goodness of God leadeth thee to repentance?" (Rom. 2: 4.) Men, to appreciate the love of God and the sacrifices of a bleeding, dying Savior, must meditate on them, read about them, and think about them. We are influenced by the things we think about. The benighted heathen is not influenced by the life of Jesus. The man in this country who does not meditate upon the truth day and night is not walking in the full light of God's word. The man who reads the Scriptures only once a month or a week is not hungering and thirsting after righteousness as he should be. The hungry and thirsty soul feeds on the word of God, and the righteous soul "delights in the law of Jehovah, and on his law doth he meditate day and night." developed, well-rounded Christian will be content with studying the Scriptures once a week. Those who are strong in the Lord will study the truth daily and in whatever place the opportunity presents itself. No place is a copyrighted place for studying the Scriptures. The truth is to be studied in the church, in the home, and anywhere and everywhere. Read where the Jews were to teach their children the precepts of the Lord: "And these words, which I command thee this day, shall be upon thy heart; and thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thy house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up. And thou shalt bind them for a sign upon thy hand, and they shall be for frontlets between thine eyes. And thou shalt write them upon the doorposts of thy house, and upon thy gates." (Deut. 6: 6-9.)

The Bible should be read and studied everywhere. I have seen it reported in the papers that Protestants read the Bible only twenty-six hours in a year of three hundred and sixty-five days. I know there is not the shadow of truth in the statement. It is argued that the Bible is read only one half hour in the "Sunday school;" and as there are only fifty-two Sundays in the year, only twenty-six hours are devoted to the reading and the study of the Scriptures. My own personal experience contradicts this. I teach a class almost an hour every Sunday. Getting ready to teach, I usually give many hours to the preparation of the lesson. Any good student gives more time to the preparation than to the recitation of the lesson. It would be no exaggeration to say that I give more time to the study of the Scriptures than anything else. Yet no account is made of the thousands who thus study the Bible. From such inaccurate premises, the Roman Catholics are accredited with studying the Bible more than Protestants. Strange way of calculating! It by no means follows that because Protestants devote a half hour to the lesson in the "Sunday school," that this is all the time they devote to the study of the Scriptures! It is unnatural to conclude that those who study the Scriptures in the "Bible school" do not study them at home. They probably study them more than those who do not study in school on Sunday. Many things are stated and published that will not stand the light of investigation.

Those who encourage people to study the Bible on Sunday also admonish and encourage them to study the Bible every day in the year. They would influence them to become members of the Pocket Testament League by always carrying a copy of the New Testament in the pocket and reading it daily. Those who read the Bible will be influenced by it, for it is not a dead letter. The truth, the gospel, is God's power unto salvation. The entrance of God's word giveth light. Instances have been known where men of prominence, regarded by their neighbors as wholly secularized and untouched by any thought of religion, have been brought under the power of truth without any preaching, but simply by reading the Bible. The influence of reading the Bible must not be discounted. As we cease to read the Bible we will sink down to ignorance and despair. In ignorance there is no hope for the world. Study the Bible systematically, periodically, and regularly. Study the Scriptures at home, abroad, in the field, and everywhere. If you are in love with truth, you will not be content to study it one day in the week. Our children are drifting downward, because they have ceased to read the Bible. "Ye search the scriptures, because ye think that in them ye have etcrnal life; and these are they which bear witness of me." (John 5: 39.) If we would be filled with heavenly wisdom, peace and light, we must read and know the truth. "Every scripture inspired of God is also profitable for teaching, for reproof, for correction, for instruction which is in righteousness: that the man of God may be complete, furnished completely unto every good work." (2 Tim. 3: 16, 17.

"Handling the Word of God Deceitfully."

BY E. A. E.

Therefore seeing we have this ministry, even as we obtained mercy, we faint not: but we have renounced the hidden things of shame, not walking in craftiness, nor handling the word of God deceitfully; but by the manifestation of the truth commending ourselves to every man's conscience in the sight of God. (2 Cor. 4: 1, 2.)

In contrast with the false teachers in Corinth, or anywhere else, as to that matter, and in contrast with all sinister motives and temporal and personal interests, Paul makes the declarations of this passage and other like passages in his writings. These incentives, motives, purposes, and strong declarations cannot be ignored or even neglected by preachers and teachers without either ignorance of the truth or "handling the word of God deceitfully." In either case such men are not qualified to teach.

Paul emphasizes the fact that he had obtained the mercy of God—that is, the forgiveness of his sins and all the blessings of the gospel. We should rejoice in the same mercy in like humility.

Not only so, but Paul had been intrusted with "this ministry"—preaching the gospel—as described in the previous chapter, and he felt most deeply his responsibility to God and men

Paul had endured all the persecutions mentioned in this chapter and in others without fainting. He had not acted cowardly or wickedly, but had himself "renounced the hidden things of shame "-things which corrupt men will not own and are ashamed to have known. Instead, his life was clean, clear, both righteous and holy, and an open book. Further on (2 Cor. 7: 2) he declares: "We wronged no man, we corrupted no man, we took advantage of no man." Paul took no advantage of these Corinthians to get any gain from them, he wronged not one of them in word or deed, he corrupted no one by his influence. His example was that of both a righteous and godly life. Can we say the same? In all our trading with people; in all our dealings with them in all ways; in all our conversations or talk about brethren and all others; in all our influence over the young and old; in all our treatment of others-our representation of their teaching and characters-what they have said or have not said-can we say that "we have wronged no man, we have corrupted no man, we have taken advantage of no man?" If, upon scrutinizing self-examination, we find we cannot say this, then will we try to so live from this time on that we can say it? Our salvation depends, not upon people's not wronging, defrauding, misrepresenting, slandering, defaming, and taking advantage of us, but upon our not wronging, defrauding, misrepresenting, slandering, defaming, and taking advantage of them. If we so treat others, we cannot be saved-that is, without repentance and reparation. We can be saved if they so treat us. Some are far more concerned, agitated, disturbed over misrepresentations and other mistreatment which they have received from others than over their own misrepresentation and mistreatment of others. Their grievous sins are motes, the sins of others are beams. Paul did not so view things. He said to the Corinthians:

But with me it is a very small thing that I should be judged of you, or of man's judgment: yea, I judge not mine own self. For I know nothing against myself; yet am I not hereby justified: but he that judgeth me is the Lord. Wherefore judge nothing before the time, until the Lord come, who will both bring to light the hidden things of darkness, and make manifest the counsels of the hearts: and then shall each man have his praise from God. (1 Cor. 4: 3-5.)

God is the Judge. Let us be careful and merciful, righteons and just. It will help us to see ourselves as God sees us. We do not stand or fall according to man's judgment. Paul lived his life through and did all his teaching "in the sight of God"—with God's eye ever looking into his heart, seeing and analyzing his every motive and guiding his every step. It is a blessed and wonderful thing to be able to call upon God as witness to one's pure motives, righteous purposes, unblamable life, and straightforward preaching of the gospel. He who does this has no fear of what any man may say to him or about him.

In contrast with "the hidden things of shame," "walking in craftiness," and "handling the word of God deceitfully," Paul by the manifestation of the truth"—that is, by teaching the truth in an open, frank, sincere way, concealing nothing, softening nothing, and without apologies and excuses—commended himself "to every man's conscience in the sight of God." Every honest and conscientious man would testify to his righteous and godly life and to his open and honest, sincere and manly effort to teach the truth and to save souls.

WHAT IS "WALKING IN CRAFTINESS?"

Clarke's Commentary says: "In subtlety and clever cunning, as the false teachers did, who were accomplished fellows, and capable of anything." Luke (20: 23) says Jesus perceived "the craftiness" of the Pharisees and Herodians. "The serpent beguiled Eve in his craftiness." (2 Cor. 11: 3.) Let us read Eph. 4: 14:

That we may be no longer children, tossed to and fro and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, in craftiness, after the wiles of error.

God "taketh the wise in their own craftiness." (1 Cor. 3: 19.) In this passage Thayer says "craftiness" is equivalent to "a specious or false wisdom." Paul resorted to no "specious or false wisdom." No true preacher of the gospel will attempt to do this to-day. To "walk in craftiness" is to resort to "specious or false wisdom," to use cunning, knavery, treachery, deceit, etc. To "walk in craftiness is as reprehensible, as shameful, as dishonest, and as much condemned by the Lord to-day as in Paul's day, and will always be. Nothing is right but a clean and open, righteous and godly life; nothing can be preached that is right except the truth, the word of God, the gospel of Christ; and no way of preaching is right except an open, frank, conscientious, honest, straightforward, heroic, and full presentation of the whole truth in the love of the truth and the spirit of Christ.

WHAT IS "HANDLING THE WORD OF GOD DECEITFULLY?"

It is mingling with it false teaching, which deceives people; it is trying to make it teach that which it does not teach or to break the force of what it does teach; it is to use it technically without its true meaning and spirit either to make out a case of wrongdoing against an innocent and good man or to soften or excuse or justify the course of a wrongdoer; it is to use it, not to teach the truth, but to accomplish some personal and selfish end. The following passage has some bearing on the subject:

Some indeed preach Christ even of envy and strife; and some also of good will: the one do it of love, knowing that I am set for the defense of the gospel: but the other proclaim Christ of faction, not sincerely, thinking to raise up affliction for me in my bonds. What then? only that in every way, whether in pretense or in truth, Christ is proclaimed; and therein I rejoice, yea, and will rejoice. (Phil. 1: 15-18.)

Then the word of God may be preached "in pretense," "not sincerely," and "even of envy and strife," If those who are prompted by such motives think God will accept them, they are deceived, whether or not this is "handling the word of God deceitfully." The devil quotes and uses the Scriptures, but for the most unholy purposes. The gospel must be preached of good will before the preacher can be saved.

Matt. 18: 15-18 has been handled deceitfully when it has been used to make out a case of sin against a brother in order to condemn and expose him, and not to reclaim him, granting that he has done wrong, and more so when he has not. To use this passage where it does not apply, or to overlook or ignore altogether its true lesson and spirit and love, is to handle it either ignorantly or deceitfully. I grant, too, that I may be ignorant of its meaning and love; but I know it is handling it deceitfully to attempt to so use it as to frame up a case of disobedience to God against any one. I am anxious to learn, if I do not know its meaning. I understand now that its teaching and love and spirit are to save the wrongdoer-one who has really wronged another; not one who has given some imaginary or supposed offense, but who has committed a wrong of which he must repent and be forgiven in order to be saved. The course which Christ commands to be pursued is to "gain" or to reclaim and save the real wrongdoer. If this course does not lead to his salvation, then Christ further teaches how he must be treated. There is nothing of a partisan, selfish, retaliative, and condemnatory spirit in this. Also, Matt, 5: 23, 24 makes the duty of a brother who is conscious of having really wronged another very plain. It is his duty to leave his gift at the altar and go to the one he has wronged and become reconciled-beg pardon and right the wrong-"and then come and offer" his gift. God makes this his paramount duty and essential to his acceptable worship, regardless of what the one he has wronged may or may not do. For the one who has wronged another to refuse to obey God in Matt. 5: 23, 24 and to claim that the one wronged has not come to him, as in Matt. 18: 15-18, and is for this reason the sinner, and that he himself is justified in his course, is to ignorantly or deceitfully handle the word of God and to demonstrate that he has no real ruling desire to obey God and maintain peace and unity, or to be saved.

God looks at the heart and deals with men accordingly. He deals with them according to their obedience to him in all things from their hearts—in sincerity, all honesty of purpose, and faith—and not according to mere outward and technical performances, and not according to what others do or do not do. There is such a thing as "holding a form of godliness, but having denied the power thereof." (2 Tim. 3: 5.) To use the "form" while denying "the power" is "handling the word of God deceitfully."

God did not give us his word-the gospel and church and Christian life-as a toy or plaything, to be meddled with and trifled with, to be used for the accomplishment of selfish purposes, or to be played upon as some lawyer deals technically with some laws to gain a point. Preachers and teachers of the gospel of Christ are not lawyers, practicing law in the church as a court, prosecuting or defending, judging and condemning or acquitting, consigning to heaven or the other place. They must seek the edification, peace, good, and salvation of all; they are to be godly examples and humble teachers of the truth in the love of the truth. Where the truth condemns or saves, they are not responsible. They must preach it regardless of consequences. The church as a whole longs for the truth, and the world needs it. It is true that there are partisans in the church and those who play politics; but the brethren generally love the truth and want the whole truth taught in the spirit of Christ, in reverence for God and to his glory.

On "handling the word of God deceitfully," Clarke's Commentary says:

Not using the doctrines of the gospel to serve any secular or carnal purpose; not explaining away their force so as to palliate or excuse sin. There were deceitful handlers of this kind in Corinth, and there are many of them still in the garb of Christian ministers; persons who disguise that part of their creed which, though they believe it is of God, would make them unpopular; affecting moderation in order to procure a larger audience and more extensive support; not attacking prevalent and popular vices; calling dissipation of mind relaxation and worldly and carnal pleasures innocent amusement, etc. In a word, turning with the tide, drifting with the mind of popular opinion, prejudice, fashion, etc.

Put "gospel" where this commentary has "creed," and we see what it says "handling the word of God deceitfully" is. Any man who uses the word of God to accomplish any personal or selfish end, who disguises any teaching of Christ, or softens it or keeps it back, because it is unpopular, is guilty of this sin.

In due course of time I hope that we all may study the question of "PERVERTING THE GOSPEL" and "WRESTING THE SCRIPTURES." What is it to commit these sins, and who are guilty?

Questions and Answers. No. 2. BY F. W. SMITH.

Continuing my answers to the questions propounded by Brother Trice, I ask, What has God commanded man to do relative to baptism? Or, in other words, what is involved in the "obedience of faith" as it relates to baptism? If we can ascertain this fact, we will have discovered the common ground of unity—viz., faith; because faith as an outward expression of obedience has nothing to do with baptism outside of what is commanded. Faith trusts in and enjoys the promises of God resulting from obedience in baptism, but faith never obeys a promise. Faith and obedience are inseparably connected in baptism as in all other matters of worship and service to God; but where the command stops, faith as an act of obedience also stops.

What, then, has God commanded man to do in the matter of baptism? (1) He has commanded the subject to be buried in water and raised up again. (Col. 2: 12.) (2) He has commanded the subject to be baptized "in the name of Jesus Christ."—that is, by the authority of Jesus Christ. (Acts 10: 48.) (3) He has commanded the subject to be baptized "into the name of the Lord Jesus" (Acts 19: 5, A. R. V.), or "into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit" (Matt. 28: 19). (4) He has commanded this to be done "from the heart"—that is, in sincerity, or with an honest heart. This is what the saints in Rome did. (Rom. 6: 18.) (5) He has commanded the subject to be baptized "into Christ." (Gal. 3: 27.)

Now, it seems to me that this about covers the ground in so far as the command goes, and I hesitate to add another. If one should be immersed by the authority of any other being in the universe than by the authority of Christ, it would not be obedience to God; and if one should be immersed into any other name or names than those of the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, it would not be obedience to God. Again, if one should be immersed without doing it from the heart, it would not be obedience to God.

But what about the "purpose" or "design" of baptism? Let me ask, whose purpose or design, God's or man's? For there is in baptism both a divine and a human purpose or design. That the design or purpose of God in placing baptism in the scheme of redemption was a condition of salvation, or in order to the remission of sins, does not admit of a doubt, and there is no promise of salvation in the gospel of Christ to any responsible being without baptism. This is God's design in instituting baptism; but what is or should be the design or purpose of man in submitting to baptism? It does seem to me that man's purpose in submitting to baptism should be simply to obey God-to do it because God commanded it. I can conceive of no greater faith in and loyalty to God than, like Abraham, the father of the faithful, to do a thing simply because God commands it. "By faith Abraham, when he was called, obeyed to go out unto a place which he was to receive for an inheritance; and he went out, not knowing whither he went." (Heb. 11: 8.) God had a grand purpose or design in thus calling Abraham from his land and people, which was not expressed to Abraham; but Abraham, actuated by a purpose to do what God commanded, received the blessing as if he had known all about it beforehand and had obeyed with that end in view. But the question may be asked: "Suppose one is immersed simply to get into the Baptist Church or into some other institution unknown to the New Testament, then what?" I do not believe they have been baptized at all, for God never commanded any one to be baptized into any such things. "For in one Spirit were we all baptized into one body." (1 Cor. 12: The "one body" is the body or church of Christ, (Col. 1: 18-24.) But suppose one is immersed with the feeling that baptism is a nonessential and that it has nothing to do with one's salvation, then what? Such a person has not been baptized in any scriptural sense of the word; for man cannot obey any command of God without recognizing that it affects his good in some way, although he may not know in what way. But suppose one is immersed with the impression that his or her sins were pardoned before submitting to the act, then what? I would say that it depends altogether on what motive or motives actuated that person in submitting to baptism. If he or she did it because God commanded it, and thus desired to please and honor God, I would hesitate to say that God withheld pardon, because I do not know 17. a neither does any other mortal know it. Of course a would mankly and freely admit that such a person had not been scripturally baptized, if it could be shown that an understanding of God's design in baptism-viz., "unto the remission of sins"-is involved in the command to be baptized. But suppose such persons were immersed "into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit," as God commanded them to be, and did it with that end in view, would they not be in the state where God bestows remission of sins? To contend that one cannot be baptized into the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit without understanding God's design and submitting to baptism with that end in view is not very clear to my mind.

Why, then, it may be asked, debate with the denominations, contending that baptism is in order to remission of sins? Because their leaders, preachers and editors, are continually propagating the doctrine that baptism is a nonessential, and that one can be saved as well without it as with it, and that it is simply a "door" into their humanmade institutions. Now, I find where two apostles told persons to be baptized without stating, in so far as the record goes, God's design in instituting the act. "And when they heard this, they were baptized into the name of the Lord Jesus." (Acts 19: 5.) Nowhere in the context is God's design directly or indirectly stated. Again: "And he commanded them to be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ." (Acts 10: 48.) To contend that Paul and Peter on these occasions stated God's design, or that those baptized already understood it, is to assume what is not in the record. Now, if it be true that these subjects obeyed acceptably the command to be baptized without understanding God's design in the institution, why cannot others do the same? will be admitted into heaven for doing things on earth without knowing they were doing them to Christ. (See Matt, 25: 34-43.) They did these simply and solely because they were commanded to do them, and the results were precisely the same as if they had known at the time to whom they were doing them and had that purpose in view. The I That ended that.

fact that Peter stated God's design in baptism on the day of Pentecost does not prove that the result-viz., remission of sins-would not have resulted to those who were baptized the same as if he had not stated it. If Peter had simply said, "Repent ye, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ," does any one doubt that those who did these things would have been pardoned? But they had asked, "What must we do?" evidently meaning, "What must we do to be saved?" True enough; and had they failed or refused to be baptized, they would not have had the promise of salvation. The same is true now; no one can have the promise of salvation without being baptized to obey God. If one is immersed for no other reason than that some church has voted him that privilege, and he has submitted to the act simply to please men, then the authority by which he was immersed and the motive prompting him were null and void. On the other hand, I give an actual case where neither human authority nor a desire to please men were in evidence, and yet the subject did not understand God's design when she was baptized. An intelligent girl became disturbed over having been sprinkled on for baptism, and sent for her preacher to talk the matter over. He failed to convince her that she had been baptized, and she said: "I want to be Immersed, and I may not know for what purpose, but I want you to pray with me that God will bestow on me whatever blessing he has for those who obey him in baptism," Does any one doubt that, with such a faith and desire to honor and obey God, he would withhold remission of sins because she did not understand God's purpose in the matter?

In another article I will deal with the remaining questions propounded.

Criticism.

BY T. B. LARIMORE.

Having been respected, if not revered, as a preacher and teacher in the church of Christ—the church mentioned in the Bible—more than half a century, possibly it may be possible for it to be permissible, if not prudent, for me to suggest an adverse criticism, my experience to the contrary notwithstanding.

But my experience forces me to approach the contemplated criticism with fear and trembling. A physician was kindly conveying me, in his own conveyance and at his own expense, to a place where I was booked to preach, when he handed me a roll of money, a favor of which I promptly expressed my appreciation. Then he said: "I never had any chance to be educated, and I'll be very much obliged to you if you'll correct any mistakes I may make in talking in your presence." I said: "If you can overlook my mistakes, I can certainly overlook yours; and it will not be necessary for either of us to criticize the other." He said: "I mean what I say, and I'll not be satisfied unless you correct every mistake you hear me make. Will you do it?" I replied: "I'd rather not promise to do that; but there is one little thing I am willing to mention, because I think my doing so may save you from embarrassment sometime. You are delightfully gallant and are exceedingly popular with the better and sweeter sex, and evidently derive great pleasure from introducing women and girls to me, which I always appreciate; but you seem to have the wires just a little bit crossed. You call the girls 'Mrs,' and their I think it would be mothers and grandmothers 'Miss.' some improvement to reverse that-call the girls 'Miss' and their mothers and grandmothers 'Mrs.'"

Immediately his countenance was fallen, and gloom shadowed the scene—and the silence—the significant silence. When the doctor succeeded in suppressing his indignation sufficiently to speak, he said: "I notice you butcher the king's English yourself." I said: "Yes, and I'll appreciate any helpful criticism you may suggest." That ended that.

A young preacher who had forgotten more than I knew, as he himself would have gladly testified, talked at the Lord's table about the spilt blood of Christ and the spilled blood of Christ, till I wished I was not there. After the audience was dismissed, I quietly, when and where none other could hear, suggested "shed," in that connection, for "spilled" or "spilled" or "spilled" or "spilled" or "spilled," as the Bible says Christ shed his blood, but does not say he spilled or spilt it, and since, as a matter of fact, so far as the record shows, he never spilt even one drop of blood. Well, the fat was in the fire—blazing—and I have no hope of that little preacher's ever forgiving me. Of course he never will. The offense is unforgivable, from his point of view, I am sure.

An editor presumed to cut "cholera infantum" out of an obituary notice of an estimable lady who had recently passed away at the age of eighty-seven, the author of the notice stating that the aged sister died of cholera infantum! The writer of the obituary resented the criticism and ordered his paper stopped immediately, if not sooner.

Notwithstanding such cases as I have mentioned are common, I shall offer the criticism that is in my mind.

Some of us have been frequently disturbed by the song leader's announcing, immediately before prayer—sometimes while some of us were in the very act of kneeling—"We'll sing number seventy-seven after prayer." I have never seen any sense in that, and I think it is a manifestation of lack of appreciation of prayer. If it means anything, it means, "While one of us prays, the others can turn to the song selected and announced, so we can sail into the song while the one who prays is saying 'Amen'"—and that is sometimes actually done. And I have heard people—people who claimed to be Christians—turning leaves in their song books while some of us were trying to pray. I have never had sense enough to see any sense in that. Why not wait till the prayer is ended and every Christian in the assembly has had time to say "Amen," and then announce the song?

I think the Bible says, "Let all things be done decently an in order," or words to that effect; but the thing I have just—and justly—criticized is in direct antagonism with that advice, in both letter and spirit. I believe absence of due respect and reverence for sacred things is responsible for much of our lack of decency and order in our religious work and worship. Indeed, irreligious church members sometimes make mockery of what should be sacred service.

At Blankville, Tenn., the irreligious leader of the song service—a member of the church—had a gang of giddy girls—also members of the church—immediately in front of him at each service. They evidently made a joke of the song service all the time. For instance, in season and out of season and between times they sang, "Will there be any stars in my crown?"—each girl looking at the leader and smiling sweetly while singing. Next they would sing, "No, not one," the leader smiling and the girls trying to look sad and solemn. That was a sample. Of course you will not wonder whether the meeting was a success. Of course it was not. It was almost a flat failure from beginning to end. Such contempt for sacred things should always be rebuked by failure, if not by something worse.

When a Tennessee church of Christ was contemplating calling me for a series of meetings, the music question came up for discussion. They finally agreed to leave the instruments out, if a certain part of the congregation was permitted to select the song leader. The man selected was an outspoken infidel who had no more respect for divinity than he had for the devil himself, and he was loyal to his party and principles all through the meeting, which was an absolute failure, from beginning to end, as it should have been. When, if ever, the church of Christ becomes obsessed with the spirit of Christ, then the millennium may be at hand.

A Joy Jingle.

When Trouble comes double and every Joy bubble Seems stuck by the point of a pin; Don't get in a flurry, but sluff off the worry, And chuckle, my boy, and you'll win.

For on the dead level, each little Blue Devil
Just thrives on a grunt or a groan;
So, when Trouble does hit you and tries to unfit you
Why, simply let Trouble alone.

And this isn't folly; be happy and jolly
In spite of the things that go wrong;
For life every minute has something fine in it
That goes to the happy and strong.

Making Friends With the Birds.

One day last spring a little girl asked me if it were true that robins liked to eat other things than worms. I replied that robins would eat fruit when they were thirsty if they could find no water.

"O, just when they're thirsty!" she exclaimed, in a tone of surprise. "Then I had better give them a basin of water, because father gets terribly provoked at the robins when he sees them in our cherry tree or in the strawberry patch."

I told her that in the strawberry patch robins were much more likely to bunt the grubs and cutworms that injure the roots of the vines than to eat the strawberries, but that they did like cherries. I asked her if she would like to make friends with the birds and fix a place in her garden where they could drink when they were thirsty or bathe and splash about in warm weather. She was delighted with the idea of making something useful and wanted to know how to build a bird bath. I gladly promised to help her make one, and accordingly I went to her home one morning soon after our conversation. Together we gathered several basketfuls of small stones from a vacant lot near her home, then we selected a spot in an open space in her garden where we set up a pyramid about three feet high. After we had finished it we filled a big flower-pot saucer with water and placed it on top of the pyramid

When the warm weather came, the birds used this bath so much that the water had to be changed several times a day. But the pleasure of watching the different birds that came to the garden to quench their thirst and splash about in the cool water more than compensated for the slight trouble of filling the bath. The other members of the child's family became as much interested in their feathery friends as the little mason who had built the bath, and the practical father observed with satisfaction that his fruit trees were less attractive to the birds.

Some of the other children in the neighborhood became anxious to befriend the birds, and one of the best results of their new interest was that the small boys were less tempted to rob nests for the sake of collecting eggs, which were perfectly useless to them, and they became more interested to care for the mother birds in the nesting season and to protect their young, for all the children had become anxious to have as many bird neighbors as possible frequent their gardens.

One of the small boys was an only child whose hobby had been the collecting of minerals and quartz. He decided to make a practical use of his most treasured possession, four hexagonal blocks which had been brought to him from the Giant's Causeway. With his father's help he piled these heavy blocks of basalt one on top of another and made a perfect column about two and a half feet high. On top of it he kept a large brown flower-pot saucer filled with water; thus the use of what had been a souvenir of questionable worth helped to make a refreshing bath for the birds and added a real ornament to his mother's garden. And what is more important, his parents were pleased to observe that the child's old desire to collect and possess mineral specimens was becoming secondary to an active, sympathetic interest in the beautiful little living creatures that enjoyed coming to the garden; and deeper love and greater consideration for all dependent creatures became evident. Thus the tender, cherishing instinct was developed in several children through a little girl's interest in the fare of robins.

Up in the Attic.

Martha said she wouldn't, and Arthur said he wouldn't, and Doris said she wouldn't.

But somebody had to. The great big pile of things in the attic had to be taken care of. Mother had said if they would clean up the attic they could have it for a play room, but—my goodness!—mother didn't realize how chock-full of old things that attic was. The basement wasn't so big, but Martha said she'd rather have it to play in than start in fixing up that old attic, even it was much nicer than the basement.

"Well, take the basement then," said mother, who was very busy getting Esther ready to graduate from grammar school and really didn't have time to go into the matter of play rooms very much. "Only, some one will have to fix up that attic pretty soon; and then, after it's all fixed up, you will probably want to play in it."

"I'll take care of it, mother," said Esther. "I can do it while you're sewing on my sleeves."

Then Martha and Doris and Arthur felt quite ashamed that they had not offered to do it instead of leaving it to Esther, who was busy enough getting ready for graduation. So they all looked at each other guiltily, and finally Arthur said: "Of course we could do it—"

"No, I want to do it," said Esther, eagerly. "You see, mother, our Junior Red Cross is sending old clothes to some poor children, and there are just stacks of perfectly good things up in the attic. I bet we could give more than anybody else in the whole school. Wouldn't that be great?"

"O, I want to give some, too!" exclaimed Doris and Martha. "Please, mother, let us clean up the attic."

Mother smiled at the sudden change of feeling, "All right," she said, "you can all go ahead and divide up the things so that each of you will have something to give."

"Just think how many things we can send," said Martha, picturing rows and rows of little refugees dressed in the attic's treasures.

"And think of what a dandy play room that attic will make," added Arthur, "when all of those things are out of the way. I guess that was just a pretty good idea of Esther's to get us to clean out the attic."

And Esther did not deny it.—American Red Cross (Juvenile).

Wrye the last two services of a good meeting at Rock Spring. There were eleven additions to the church. I shall resume my work at Lindsley Avenue, in Nashville, September 1."

From E. L. Whitaker, of Corinth, Miss., August 12: "I began a meeting on August 1 at Independence Schoolhouse, near Juno, Tenn., and closed it on August 9, with fourteen additions. The brethren have decided to build. Six hundred dollars was subscribed the last day of the meeting, with the promise of more as soon as this amount is exhausted."

From R. E. Wright: "I began a meeting at Stony Point, near Fayetteville, Tenn., on August 7 and continued it until the following Sunday night. Five were baptized and one was restored. We have some good brethren at Stony Point, but somebody there is wrong and will not confess it and ask forgiveness. Brethren, that is one of the things that hurts us."

From Fred M. Little, Enterprise, Ala., August 20: "I will close a fifteen-days' meeting here to-morrow night. The meeting has had good attendance. I preached once n the Methodist house at the invitation of the pastor; and preached four times at Macedonia, five miles in the country, in a Baptist house, to good congregations. As a result of our labors, the membership of the Enterprise church has been increased and five others have said they are going to obey the gospel."

From G. F. Gibbs, Union, S. C., August 15: "Yesterday's audiences were very encouraging at all of our services. The audience at the tent was an overflowing one, in spite of a threatening cloud. Two more baptisms the past week, making a total of four in the present tent meeting. Donations thus far received reach a total of $1,055.30. This more than two-thirds covers our present indebtedness. We would rejoice to get out of debt and then be able to finish before the winter months. We are expecting Brother Burton back in the next few days, and then we expect to be quite busy until winter in our tent and other work."

From W. M. Oakley, Nashville, Tenn., August 19: "Our meeting near Hurricane Bridge, in Madison County, Ala., of ten days' duration, closed at the water last night. Notwithstanding there were two other meetings in progress in the same neighborhood and much rain throughout the meeting to hinder, we had a good hearing from the beginning and the interest grew to the close, our last service being one of the best. The immediate results were six baptized and four restored. Brother J. D. Derryberry, in charge of the song service, assisted me greatly. Two came from the Baptists, and one sister who had previously gone with the Methodists returned to her 'first love.' I begin next Lord's day at Mandy's Chapel, Pegram (Route 2), Cheatham County, Tenn."

A sister writes from Portland, Tenn., as follows: "The meeting of the church of Christ at Portland, which was held under a tent in the park, with G. C. Brewer doing the preaching and Elam Derryberry leading in the song service, closed on Tuesday night, August 2, with twentythree baptisms and four restorations. In many respects this was the greatest meeting in the history of the church The largest audiences that ever listened to any here preacher throughout a series of sermons at this place greeted Brother Brewer each night. The attention was Brother Brewer's sermons along the lines of the perfect. fundamental principles of Christianity were strong, clear, forceful, and convincing. At the request of a goodly number of the brethren, he preached Friday evening on the Sabbath, and showed by many infallible proofs that the Sabbath was given to the Jewish nation. On Sunday night fellowing, Elder H. M. Holister, president of the General Conference of the Seventh-Day Adventists of Tennessee, was present, and spoke an hour in response to the sermon mentioned above, but that he fell short in his effort to answer Brother Brewer's argument was seen by the audience even before Brother Brewer's withering reply of twenty minutes.

- J. H. King closed a fine meeting at Manchester, Okla., with twenty-one baptisms and sixteen restorations. He has some time for meetings in October and November. Address him at Hugo, Okla.
- B. L. Douthitt held a ten-days' meeting at Marmaduke, Ark. Large crowds and good interest prevailed throughout the meeting. There were twelve additions. Ten of this number were grown people. Brother Douthitt is now at Walnut Ridge. The interest is good.

From Joe L. Netherland, Yuma, Tenn.: "The meeting at Fairview, near Milan, Tenn., closed with twenty-seven additions. Fourteen were baptized, several were restored, and some took membership. I am now in a meeting at Obion Chapel. Will leave next week to continue my work with the church of Miami, Fla."

From E. Gaston Collins, Algood, Tenn., August 20: "G. W. Graves closed the meeting at Smyrna, Tenn., on August 14. It was his sixth meeting with this church. It continued eleven days, with four baptisms as the visible results. I was with them most of the time. On August 14 I was at Livingston, Tenn., with only fair crowds."

The annual meeting of the congregation of the church of Christ will be held at Naish Springs, W. Va., beginning on Thursday night, September 1, and continuing over Lord's day. Those who intend to go by rail will please notify Noah Brothers, Willow, W. Va., that arrangements may be made for conveyance to the place of meeting.

Beginning on the fifth Sunday in July, Van A. Bradley was with the Christian Home congregation, in Houston County, Ala., eight days. This was a great meeting. The crowds were large and attention fine. Eight were baptized, one was restored, and three others decided to be simply Christians. Brother Bradley is now in a meeting at Benton, Ala.

From T. H. Kirkman, Newell, W. Va., August 15: "Our meeting at Watson is going along nicely, with one baptism to date. We began the meeting on the night of August 6, preached that night, Lord's-day afternoon and night, and Monday night, and on Tuesday night found the house locked; so we talked out in the open. The Board of Education opened the house for us Wednesday, and we have occupied it since, with a full house."

From Vernon Rozar, Watertown, Tenn., August 18: "The meeting at Commerce, four miles east of Watertown, closed last night, after eleven days' duration. Large crowds, excellent attention and behavior. All people were interested. One young lady and one man made the good confession and were baptized. The brethren said this was one of their greatest meetings. James Kidwill, of Watertown, led the song service. I have agreed, the Lord willing, to be with them again at the same time next year. I go from here to Nine Mile, in Bledsoe County."

From S. W. Bell, Sedalia, Mo., August 17: "The work in Central Missouri moves on slowly. Brother Lanier baptized another—a lady—Monday afternoon. I filled my regular appointment with the good people over near Slater, Mo., last Sunday. These good people have been aiding us more in our efforts in missionary work than any others. If we can get a few more who will stand by us, we can soon succeed in preaching the gospel throughout Central Missouri and maybe unto 'regions beyond.' Brother Lanier will soon have to leave us for his school work, but we hope to keep the work moving."

George W. Farmer writes from Tullahoma, Tenn., August 19: "The meeting with the church at Fairfield, Tenn., began on the first Lord's day of this month and closed at the water this morning, after running twelve days. Five young people obeyed the gospel, and we think much good otherwise was accomplished. There are many fine people at Fairfield, among whom are our beloved coworkers, Clyde Gleaves and R. E. Wright. Both of these brethren were with us in the latter part of the meeting and rendered valuable assistance. Other visiting preaching brethren were Will J. Cullum and R. E. Cuff. Thomas Nix led the singing. He is a fine coworker. I am to begin the meeting at Hoover's Grove, near Tullahoma, next Lord's day."

From C. M. Stubblefield, Paducah, Ky., August 16: "About September 15 Charley Taylor will leave here for Nashville, Tenn., to enter David Lipscomb College. We are rejoiced at his determination to finish his education and fit himself for more efficient service in the Master's vineyard, but we are pained at his separation from us. Some fifteen years ago Brother Taylor began preaching in Paducah and adjacent territory, and, for the most part, his entire time has been spent here. Knowing him, therefore, both as a humble Christian and a faithful preacher, it gives me pleasure to say that, should any congregation desire one to do the work of an evangelist, it will do well to confer with hint. The churches in this section will be glad to recommend him."

J. W. Brents writes from Hartsville, Tenn., August 19. "I have just closed the meeting at Hartsville. I was reared in Middle Tennessee, but this was the first meeting in which I have assisted in this section of the State. While there were no additions, I feel that in many respects it was one of the best meetings of my life. Some of the best people in the world are members of this congregation. They are supporting two young ladies in the Fanning School, assisting the work in South Carolina and Mississippi, and helping the sick and helpless in their own community. My home was with W. G. Lauderdale, and I can never hope for any better one. Large crowds were in attendance throughout. C. R. Nichol held the last two meetings and is held in high esteem by all. I am to begin at Culleoka next Sunday,"

I. B. Bradley writes: "I closed a fine meeting with the Clearview congregation, near Portland, Tenn., on August 12, with sixteen baptisms and six restorations; and after the services closed with three baptisms and I was ready to start to the train, one other brother who had not affiliated with the church for about a year voluntarily told me he was coming back to go to work with the congregation at once. The brethren think this was one of the greatest meetings they have ever had; that it did the church more good, in the way of practical lessons given to the church, than any meeting they have ever had. I am now (August 15) with the Antioch congregation, in Rutherford County, and the meeting starts off well. I go next to Lois, Tenn., for my third biennial meeting. I expect to be with the Charlotte Avenue Church, in Nashville, during the month of October, the Lord willing."

W. T. Beasley writes from Granite, Okla., August 14: "I held a meeting at Liberty, on the State-line road, in Henry County, Tenn, beginning on the second Sunday in July and continuing until the following Lord's day, with services day and night. There were no visible results. I went from there to Liberty, Greer County, Okla., where I began a meeting on the fourth Sunday. This meeting continued for two weeks, with services at night only, save on Sundays. Fifteen were baptized. The brethren there have 'a mind to work and treated me royally. I promised to be with them again next year. From there I went to Midway, Okla., and held a short meeting, beginning on the first Sunday night in August. One was baptized and one restored. I began a meeting on the Ozark Trail, about five miles west of Granite, this morning, and will be here over next Lord's day."

From T. B. Thompson, Lyles, Tenn., August 20: "I held a meeting from August 4 to August 12 at Calvert City, Ky., about sixteen miles north of Paducah. We had only two baptisms during the meeting, a man and his wife, both of whom had formerly sustained connection with denominations. This meeting was well attended from the very first, and both attendance and interest grew to the close. I found this to be a splendid young church. They are planning to employ a man in that section of the country to do the work of an evangelist, which is to be accomplished by the cooperation of four congregations. This work was established by Wylie Mathis, of Illinois, about five or six years ago, or possibly a little longer back. He has preached for the church monthly and held several meetings since the church was established. I have promised that in the event I can get a few days to visit my people in Paducah, I will drop down and hold another meeting for them next year."

All articles, reports, orders for Gospei Advocate, and books, from Texas and Oklahoma, should be sent to C. R. Nichol, Clifton, Texas.

From a Personal Letter.

BY C. R. N.

From one of my warmest friends I have the following: "How do you like the method of some brethren who close their protracted meetings by delivering a lecture on some popular subject in the largest church house in the town, when they will let them? Recently one of our preachers went to the Methodist church house and delivered a lecture the last Sunday night of the meeting. Will such a course permanently benefit the cause of Christ in a community?"

I am glad we have brethren with such splendid ability that they are heard gladly when they deliver a lecture on some theme which has to do with live issues pertaining to society and the State; but it does not smack loudly of a faithful presentation of the truth when, at the close of a series of sermons, a gospel preacher is invited to a sectarian house for a lecture.

The command of the Master is that we preach the gospel -it is the business of a gospel preacher to preach the gospel. The gospel must be preached for the salvation of people. In Paul's work as a preacher of the gospel he determined to know nothing more than "Christ, and him crucified." (1 Cor. 2: 2.) When he was invited to speak before the philosophers, he did not fail to preach the gospel. He was not so flattered by the invitation that he lost sight of his purpose in life-to preach the gospel. It may be that one can preach the full gospel and have the approval of sectarian churches; but it is not possible for me to do such, nor could the apostles. The gospel of Christ obeyed will result in the demolition of sectarian bodies, and to that end each faithful preacher of the gospel bends his efforts. When I hold a meeting, and the sectarians of the community indorse the sermons I have preached and then continue to be members and give their efforts to build up sectarian bodies, I will review the subject-matter of my sermons or question my ability to make clear the truth in my sermons. If one has preached the gospel, and can then have the entire town hear him deliver a lecture on some popular theme the last night, he may succeed in this way in leaving a "good taste" in the mouth of some of the people who otherwise might not have wished to hear him again, and in this way he may succeed in having a "return call" for a meeting. My experience has been that the last right of the meeting gives me the largest audience in the meeting, with interest at its highest point-people wishing to know what to do to become Christians. To me it would be a tragedy to spend the evening discussing some question which did not answer this question. To seek to please the people by a lecture at the close of the meeting smacks largely, to me, of a compromise.

Nehemiah met opposition when he worked to rebuild the walls of Jerusalem, and an effort was made to stay the work when he was invited by Sanballat and Geshem to cease work, at least temporarily, and meet them in some village of Ono for a conference. The reply is refreshing in the face of the method followed by some preachers to-day. Nehemiah replied: "I am doing a great work, so that I cannot come down: why should the work cease, while I leave it, and come down to you?"

The move which has even the slightest semblance toward a compromise with sectarianism will not benefit the cause of Christ.

I know a preacher who for several years faithfully preached the gospel. With an untiring zeal he sought to teach the people the truth, and warned them of the sinfulness of setarianism, and pointed out the error of the churches' wearing human names and subscribing to human creeds. In time his heart was filled with other matters than the simple gospel, he heard the words of flattery, and before him there danced the possibility of being hailed in each town he visited as some great one, with great audiences crowding to hear him, if only he would cease to preach "doctrine." He fell for the seductive methods of Satan and began to deliver sermonettes and lectures in which there was not enough gospel to save a soul-not enough gospel to identify him as a preacher. He stifled his conscience and for a time went to the bad morally. He came to himself-repentance was experienced by him-and to-day he preaches the gospel with more power than ever in his life. Show me the man who fills his heart with the word of God, and I will show you the man who has no time to throw bouquets at the false doctrine of sectarianism and will at every opportunity preach the gospel.

God's Covenant With Abraham.

BY J. W. CHISM.

Am I asked which one? Permit me to say I did not know that God ever made but one covenant with Abraham. Yes, I am aware that men sometimes speak of the three covenants that God made with Abraham; but I confess that, after years of diligent search, I have never found but one.

"To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them." (Isa. 8: 20.) Well, here it is. In Gen. 12 we have two promises, not covenants. These two promises were made at different times, possibly fifteen years between them. Promise No. 1, I will call it for reference, is recorded in Gen. 12: 1-3: "In thee shall all families of the earth be blessed." Later, after that Abram had come into the land of Canaan, God made the second promise: "Unto thy seed will I give this land." (Gen. 12: 7.) Then, after Lot was separated from him, again God said: "For all the land which thou seest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed forever." (Gen. 13: 14, 15.) In verse 16 we learn that the seed was not Christ, but the multiplicity of seed. Then, in Gen. 15: 18 it is said: "In the same day the Lord made a covenant with Abram, saying, Unto thy seed have I given this land." Note, please, each time before it was a promise, "I will;" but here it is a covenant, "I have." In Gen. 17 God brings up the same covenant, "The land wherein thou art a stranger, all the land of Canaan" (verse 8), and places circumcision as the token, or seal, of that covenant.

Note, please, in all this but one covenant was made, and that pertained to the land of Canaan. Note, too, that the promise to bless the families of earth in Abraham was not in connection with it, not one time. But promise No. 2 (Gen. 12: 7) is the promise on which the covenant was made, to carry out this promise. Now, Ps. 105: 8-11: "He hath remembered his covenant forever, the word which he commanded to a thousand generations. Which covenant he made with Abraham, and his oath unto Isaac; and confirmed the same unto Jacob for a law, and to Israel for an everlasting covenant: saying, Unto thee will I give the land of Canaan, the lot of your inheritance." This was the covenant made with Abraham. It was the same to Isaac (Gen. 26: 4), to Jacob (Gen. 35: 12), and to Israel, for an everlasting covenant. For full elucidation of this, see the book of Exodus. So the covenant that God made with Abraham was the conveyance of the land of Canaan, and was purely fleshly; it was not spiritual. But God had made a promise to Abram before he made the promise that became this cevenant. What became of it?

Now turn to Gen. 22: 1-18. Here God puts Abraham's faith to the test. And when Abraham obeyed, then God swore with an oath: "In thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed." This was not then a covenant, but a promise, confirmed with an oath, that in some future time it would be done, the promise would be fulfilled. But do you say that Peter said it was a covenant in Acts 3: 25? Beg pardon, but the Greek word is "diatheekee," 3 pers. sing. aor. 2, indicative Mid. of "diatithemal," and means "to arrange, to assign, "and such like; also, "to appoint;" while it may mean to make a covenant, for that a covenant in making is an arrangement. Also the word means "to pledge." Then the covenant which God pledged to our fathers, saying: "In thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed." This was promise No. 1. Now, promise No. 2, the land, was made after this promise, but became a covenant before this one. Promise No. 1 became a covenant in Christ, and was never made a covenant with Abraham, nor any one else in Old Testament times.

Giving.

BY J. M. DEVENY.

God's gift to us. "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." (John 3: 16.) Can the human mind conceive of a greater gift than this, embracing within it everlasting life? This has been called the "Golden Text of the Bible." Eternal life is also a gift, but a conditional gift, "through Jesus Christ our Lord," to "whosoever believeth in him," carrying with it the thought of obedience. "The gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." (Rom. 6: 23.) Do we appreciate such boundless, matchless love? Can we by our imaginative faculties think of anything more to be desired than blissful, unending life? "God commendeth his love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us." (Rom. 5: 8.) And: "He became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him." (See Heb. 5: 8, 9.)

Now, as so much has been done for us, what are we doing for others? Are we giving of our means to carry the message of salvation to others who have not learned the way of life? We can never make a gift so rich, so valuable, as the gifts above named; but in our sphere we can do all that our loving Heavenly Father requires of us.

How shall we give? We should give freely and cheerfully. "Every man according as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give; not grudgingly, or of necessity: for God loveth a cheeful giver." (2 Cor. 9: 7.) We should give with a willing heart. "For if there be first a willing mind, it is accepted according to that a man hath, and not according to that he hath not." (2 Cor. 8: 12.) Our beloved brother, Paul, made a mistake in not impressing more fully upon the minds of the Corinthian brethren the necessity of giving. Hear him: "For what is it wherein ye were inferior to other churches, except it be that I myself was not burdensome to you? forgive me this wrong." (2 Cor. 12: 13.) Have we not the gospel in its purity? Have we not the truth in its simplicity? Have we not exceeding great and precious promises? There is no clergy and laity with us; we are brethren, and we are all responsible to God for our giving. We live and walk by faith. Then, shall we be negligent in our duty of giving and sacrifices for the spread of the gospel, the salvation of men, the alleviation of suffering, and the glory of God?

But there are other ways of giving besides the giving of money. Jesus gave his life for us. Shall we not do something in a personal way for others? Can we not help to lift the fallen, support the weak, encourage the fainthearted, and help those who are sick and in distress? Brother, sister, do we know of some one to-day who may need the ministration of a human hand? Then let us go where Jesus wants us to go, and let us use our hands to minister to their wants, thus doing what Jesus wants us to do. Money cannot take the place of personal service when personal service is most needed. "We love him, because he first loved us." (1 John 4: 19.) Let us, then, manifest our love for him in our service to others; and in the end may it not be said of us, "O ye of little faith." Brethren, think on these things. I fear that many of us are lacking. The King's business demands haste.

TEACHERS!

Consider the Opportunities to Be Had in the DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION of the

ABILENE CHRISTIAN COLLEGE

From no other field to-day are the calls for trained men and women so numerous and so insistent as from the empty and poorly filled school-room. Abilene Christian College is making a strenuous effort, and a very successful one so far, to supply the efficient teachers so badly needed.

With the exceptions of the Bible Department, no department in college is given as much attention as the Department of Education. Prof. James F. Cox, Ph.D., heads this department. Mrs. D. B. Rambo, B.A., directs the Training School.

THE TRAINING SCHOOL.

In order that the students sent out to teach may have had the real experience of the schoolroom, a training school is maintained. This is taught by the students of this department under the direct supervision of experienced student-assistants and under the general supervision of Mrs. Rambo and Brother Cox. Here the prospective students meet firsthand the problems of the classroom and have the assistance of efficient and experienced instructors in solving them.

The school is conducted in a new, model elementary school building, separate from the main building. Here the air of a rural or small city school is prevalent. It is equipped with the best desks, boards, charts, etc., for the convenience of both teachers and students.

Upon the work done in this department the State Department of Education issues without examination to the students of Abilene Christian College the various certificates provided for by law.

WOMAN AVOIDS AN OPERATION

Hope Nearly Gone, but Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Saved Her

Star, N. C.—"My monthly spells gave me so much trouble, sometimes they would last two weeks. I was treated by two doctors without relief and they both said I would have to have an operation. I had my trouble four years and was unfit to do anything, and had given up all hope of ever getting any better. I read about your medicine in the 'Primitive Baptist' paper and decided to try it. I have used Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Lydia E. Pinkham's Liver Pills for about seven months and now I am able to do my work. I shall never forget your medicine and you may publish this if you want to as it is true."—Mrs. J. F. HURSEY, Star, N. C.

Here is another woman who adds her testimony to the many whose letters we have already published, proving that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Com-pound often restores health to suffering women even after they have gone so far that an operation is deemed advisable. Therefore it will surely pay any woman whe suffers from ailments peculiar to her sex to give this good old fashioned remedy a fair trial.

C. The Witness of the Spirit.

BY WILL J. CULLUM.

This is a much-debated subject, and demands some serious thought. That the Spirit bears witness with our spirit is admitted by the religious world; but as to how this testimony is given has always been, and still is, a matter of much discussion. These differences can be eliminated if every one is willing to let God decide the question. This is a subject that is plainly taught in the holy word of God; and by avoiding extremes taken in order to sustain a theory, we can arrive at the truth on this subject.

One extreme usually begets another, and I believe that this is true in regard to the witness of the Spirit. One does not have to know much about the Bible teaching on this subject to know that he is wrong who claims and teaches that the Holy Spirit in some direct way operates independently of the word in the conversion of sinners. There are two kingdoms -viz., that of the world and the kingdom of God's dear Son. So long as one is out of Christ's kingdom, he is beyond question in the kingdom of the world, and cannot receive the Spirit. (John 14.) All spiritual blessings being in Christ (Eph. 1), it necessarily follows that there are no spiritual blessings to be enjoyed by one who is out of Christ.

But the question to settle is as to how the Spirit bears witness with our spirit that we are the children of God, as is stated in Paul's language to the Christians at Rome. (Rom, 8.) It is to be observed that the apostle says that "the Spirit itself beareth [present tense] witness with our spirit [Christians], that we are [present tense] the children of God." apostle did not say in this connection that the Spirit had borne witness to our spirits what to do in order to become children of God, nor what we had done in becoming such. "There is one body, and one Spirit." This one body is the church. To be in the church is to be in Christ; and as all spiritual blessings are in Christ, the Spirit does not bear witness that one is a child of God until he is in Christ. But how? The body is the church; the church is the family of God; the family of God consists of the children of God; hence, the Spirit dwells in the children of God, and through them, and with their spirits, bears witness that they are the children of God. Peter shows clearly just how we become sons. (1 Pet. 1: 22, 23.) Paul tells us that because of being sons God gives us his Spirit. (Gal. 4: 6.) The apostles taught (Acts 5) that God gives the Spirit to them that obey him. Our spirits giving us natural life, the Holy Spirit giving the inner

"ALF and BOB TAYLOR, with their eloquence, their fiddles, and their fox bounds, have wrought for themselves a niche of efernal melody in the hearts of their country."

So states the author of this little book, which we present as the best product of the pen of DeLong Rice, Into one hour of reading he has gathered the strange and romantic story of the two most wonderful political campaigns of Tennessee—the thrilling tale of the happy comradeship and the lifetong rivalry of the two famous brothers—a disclosure of the remarkable and heretofore unpublished incidents that attended the political division of the Taylor family—the wonder of "The War of the Roses" that attracted the attention of the world—and the truth about "OLD LIMBER," the pecriess and now immortal fox hound that played the leading role of sentiment in the political campaign of last fall, from the Mississippi River to the Unaka Mountains.

With a "Cast of Characters extending man spiritual life, our every act in life being prompted by the condition of the inner man, the Spirit is bearing witness with our spirit, testifying or proving to the world what the will of God is, as we let our light shine before them. To my mind, there is no more convincing proof that we are children of God than the godly life of a child of God.

The Spirit beareth witness with our spirit, and not to our spirit. It appears to me that the word "to" is applicable, and not the word "with," if, as in the application often made by religious teachers, the Spirit says believe, repent, confess Christ, and be baptized, and in response we reply that we have done this. Is not this bearing witness what to do in order to become a child of God, or what we did in becoming a child of God, and not that we are the children of God?

I submit this for the consideration of all lovers of the truth, and not for controversy.

Mission Work in Cleveland, Ohio.

BY A. A. BUNNER.

During the hot part of the seasonand this has been an extremely hot summer-and taking into the account my physical inability, I find the Public Square in this city the most effective point from which to do mission work. Men are generally idle or out of work, and all classes during the hot days and nights collect together on the Square and are willing to listen while you talk the gospel to them, and seem glad to hear and to accept good literature, such as papers and tracts; hence, when I am able for duty, I go there and try to talk to the people and hand out good papers and tracts to all classes who can read English-white and black, Americans and foreignerswho assemble there. While I have not been engaged in this kind of work here for any great length of time, and much of the time not able to work, I have as yet seen no visible results in the way of converts, still I believe much good will be the final outcome of the work. I have faith in it. Tracts are silent missionaries, and the word of the Lord does its work silent-Iv and effectively, and the kingdom of heaven cometh not with observation or outward show. Any disciple of the Lord who may desire to have fellowship in this work can send his fellowship to me. Send good tracts or money with which to buy them, Send anything that will help on the good work. Patience.

The need for heroism in our daily lives may seem to be small, but surely calls for patience are numerous enough—patience with slow-moving circumstances, with the brother who does not see truth as we see it, with the unreasonable people who must be managed if they are to go forward at all. Last, most important of all, we need patience with our blundering, easily discouraged selves. After all, it may be that from a greater height and clearer vision than ours, patience itself may show as a heroic virtue.—Exchange.

Steens, Miss., August 17.—The seven-days' meeting at Millport, Ala., closed last Saturday night. Four were baptized. I came to this place on Sunday morning, to remain five days. The interest is growing, but the meeting will have to close too soon, as I must begin at Corinth, Ark., next Lord's day. This will be my seventh meeting with these good people.—R. L. Whiteside.

Tipton, Okla., August 10.—I closed my third meeting at Spaulding, Okla., on Sunday night, with thirty-two additions—twenty-six by baptism. It was a fine, successful meeting. I began here at Tipton last night, with a large crowd to begin with, and the finest, largest, most commodious church house I have ever preached in Brother Frank Grammar, who is conducting a singing normal here, will lead the singing.—Will W. Slater.

Nile, Miss., August 15.—Brother H. C. Harris and I are here in a good meeting. Large crowds and fine interest, and one confession to date. This is a fine field. We had two calls yesterday for meetings near here. I will get to one of them next Sunday; Brother Harris will stay here. I go next to Cleveland. Brother Andrew Perry is at Sturgis. I am very glad to have these good preachers with me in this mission work.—H. D. Jeffcoat.

Taft, Fla., August 14.—The cause of the Master here is growing and our audiences are increasing. Some are coming from Orlando, eight miles, and some from Sanford, thirty miles. The brethren are helping me to sound out the word. I have canceled three meetings in Texas on account of distance, and can accept meetings closer home for September and October. Will go anywhere, to congregations or mission points or destitute places where there is one Christian that will take care of me. Address me at Taft, Fla., Box 53.—G. B. Lambright.

Montgomery, Ala., August 16.—I have just closed a fine meeting at Greenville, Ala., county seat of Butler County. This was one of the best meetings I have held this year. The interest was good from the beginning. The members did what they could to make the meeting a success. Sixteen were added to the local congregation—ten by baptism, five by relation, and one restored to his "first love." Brother C. A. Buffington labors with this congregation, and assisted me in many ways. The Lord willing, I shall assist them in a meeting next year.—J. H. Hines.

Rogersville, Ala., August 16.—Brother H. Leo Boles recetly closed one of the best meetings that has ever been conducted at this place. The preaching was of the highest order and was greatly appreciated by all. There were ten baptisms and four restorations. I began a meeting at Pleasant Valley, near this place, the day the meeting closed here, and continued it six days. There were ten additions by primary obedience and one by statement. The work in this part of the Lord's vinevard is moving on very successfully. I am now in a meeting at Oliver, two miles from Rogersville.—Thornton Crews.

Hickory Flat, Miss., August 17.—On last Sunday I closed an eight-days' meeting at Quiver Chapel, near Ruleville, Miss., with twenty-five additions. From Ruleville I went to Tupelo for a short meeting. I am now in a meeting at Hickory Flat, with four additions to date. Only a short time ago the "digressives" regarded Hickory Flat as one of their strong points in the State, but now the organ is out of the house and the congregation is in no way connected with the State Board. O that we had more preachers in the State! There are many churches here that have become tired of innovations and need some one to help them to get away from them.—J. P. Lowrey.

Fort Worth, Texas, August 16 .-Austin Taylor and I closed our meeting with the Itasca congregation last Sunday night. The finest interest continued throughout. About fifty were added from all sources through the meeting. We spent the fifth Sunday in July at Desoto, with forty-four added as the visible result. has been an average of one hundred added from all sources each month since March in my meetings. The cause is prospering in Texas this year. People seem anxious to hear the plain 'gospel story.' We are to spend the next few days in the Hillsboro camp meeting, and go to Midlothian for the last two Sundays in this month. Horace W. Busby.

Texarkana, Ark., August 15.—Six additions were the fruits of yesterday's labor with the local Central congregation-one restored and one baptism locally; two restored and two baptisms at Boyd mission point. work with this congregation expires at the close of this month. I am accepting work at Sinton, Texas, in order to try that climate in trying to relieve throat and nose trouble. I expect to be back in Texarkana by spring, fully equipped for greater bat tles in Jesus' name. The sacrifices and untiring efforts of the Central congregation are certainly commendable and praiseworthy; the fruits of their labor are manifest on every hand. J. E. Wainwright, Flint, Mich, August 15.—The church of Christ at 1433 Mabel Avenue, this city, is now moving along nicely, after a genuine house-cleaning. Upon report of some of the members, Brother Newman, Brother Laster, and I made an investigation which resulted in many things being brought to light which had been kept secret for the past two and one-half years. Then by the preaching of some discourses on Christian living, the cooperation of the few that had remained faithful, and the strength that God gave us, we succeeded in getting the sin removed from among us. We are looking forward to a protracted meeting to begin on the first Lord's day in September, the preaching to be done by me.-C. B. Thomas.

Dyersburg, Tenn., August 6.—Leaving New Smyrna, Fla., I went to Palatka, Fla., where I met a consecrated band of disciples, whom I hope to meet again. From Palatka I went to Trenton, Fla., where I was received by Brother Milton and his family, and preached one time. Next I went to Perry, Fla., and began a meeting, which was almost rained out. I then went to Coffeeville, Ala., where we had a very good meeting. From there I went to Alamo, Tenn., where I was met by Brother D. W. Cook, who carried me to his home and treated me with genuine brotherly love. While at Brother Cook's I preached some at Cairo, where I preached fourteen years ago. I am now at the home of Brother Bob Fuller, near Dyersburg. I will be glad to hear from any congregation that wants a meeting. Address me at Dyersburg, Tenn.—G. W. Jarrett.

Rock Island, Tenn., Route 1, August 13.-Brother E. D. Martin began a meeting with the church at Eureka, in this (Warren) county, on the last Lord's day in July, which closed at the water's edge on Monday, August 8. Eleven were added. This was a glori-ous meeting, the first in our new church house, which was paid for without appeals through the papers, though we are few in number and not wealthy by any means. Our immediate neighbors helped us liberally, including brethren and sisters and friends in McMinnville. Ours is a young congregation, little more than a mission point, surrounded by strong opposi-tion. We are to have another meeting in September, the preaching to be done by Brother E. Gaston Collins, of Algood, Tenn. The elders of our congregation are R. L. Barnett and L. T. Hutcheson; deacons, Charles Hillis and H. J. Davis. Brother Hillis has been conducting a Sunday school and Lord's-day worship at Lone Poplar, and Brother Davis has been conducting Sunday school and Lord's-day worship at High Top, at both of which places there are a few Christians. We are proud of these young men and their work.-L, T. Hutcheson.

Monticello, Ky., August 13 .- Our meeting at Mullintown resulted in five being baptized and the church set in scriptural order, and they have been working faithfully since. The Monticello meeting closed with one being baptized and one coming to "us" from the Christian Church. The Monticello church is in fine working The condition. I held a two-weeks' tent meeting in Piny Woods, in Clinton County. Prejudice ran high, six tent ropes were cut, the tent and chairs were spit upon, there was some rough talking and swearing indulged in by some, threats were made, and many pistol shots were heard just behind the preacher; but the preacher slashed away with the "sword of the Spirit, refusing to be pulled into a word battle. Much prejudice was broken down and many people expressed their desire to become disciples as soon as they could "bring forth fruits meet for repentance." Brother O. F. Shearer and I have just closed a good meeting at Cooper, which resulted in three being baptized and a church of about fifteen or twenty set to work. I am to begin at Stop to-night. The outlook for the cause is very bright. All of the churches of Christ in the counare at peace and working.-J. L.

We enter heaven by a spiritual act, not by a natural act. We begin heaven here on earth, not by taking a journey from this world up through the air, but by taking a journey from that state of mind which is at enmity against God to that of humble, loyal, loving obedience to Christ.—Selected.

I am not quite so well as I was when I wrote last. I am not doing so much work on account of physical weakness. This is bad for me and the people. The "Holy Rollers" and the "Evening Lights" are doing much harm in this This is the worst delusion that ever struck East Buffalo or any other town. They have a tent here now, and they are continually poisoning the minds of the people against the truth of God. I need leaflets and tracts in order to counteract these evil influences; and as I cannot pay for literature, I wish my friends would supply my needs along these lines. Please send me any leaflet, tract, or book that can be used for this purpose. It would not hurt some professed Christians to order a supply sent to me from some one of our printing houses. Who will do this? Please supply me with the weapons of war. I am now a wounded soldier, but, like Leonidas and his three hundred deathless Spartans, I will fight until the final end comes. Please do not underrate my courage and devotion to the cause of truth. It is only the body that is weak. East Buffalo needs a few more earnest, devoted Christian families to help spread the word of God among the people. East Buffalo is an addition to old Buffalo, and has the advantage of having access to the new church house recently built. A blacksmith and general repair man would do well in this end of town We actually need a Christian merchant and a Christian physician here whose families are devoted Christians. Either one of these would do well from the start. We also need an evangelist to preach in near-by cities, towns, and villages; but it will be mainly at his own expense, unless we can interest the churches of Christ elsewhere in such work. Perhaps some really devoted young married man can arrange with other congregations for at least a partial support. If so, please write me. Any one interested in these matters should address me at Buffalo, W. Va., Box 81. There are some good, cheap houses for sale here now. I am not a land agent; I have nothing to sell; but I can help my brethren to find locations. I am deeply interested in the true cause of Christ in the Kanawha Valley. I would be glad to hear from all my friends.

Lodges and the Church.

BY R. A. CRAIG.

Never have true gospel preachers felt the need of defending the church as keenly as they feel it to-day. Temporal organizations, with their great numbers and wealth, offer inducements to church members which are hard to resist, and, as a result, many members of the church are devoting their time and influence to these manmade institutions. Many brethren, even preachers, are being caught in the meshes of these orders, all because they think it gives them prestige and a high standing with the world. It is very difficult to earnestly contend for the faith without offending some lodge member.

Not long ago, in a meeting, as is my custom, I delivered several discourses on the church. One night a brother became offended, got desperately mad, and refused to attend services any lenger, all because I had defended the church against all man-made orders. We happened to look that brother's record up, and found that in one year he contributed twenty-five cents to the church and twenty-five dollars to the lodge.

One Sunday morning I delivered an address to a very large audience. In that address I defended the church, which I love, against all man-made orders. A certain brother left in the midst of the discourse, refusing to take the Lord's Supper—mad at the preacher, mad at Jesus.

I visited two prominent professional men, members of the church, and invited them to help us in our effort to plant the cause of Christ in a certain town—their home town. So far they have failed to assist us in any way; but one of these brethren is popular in his lodge and keeps his dues paid up. I only pray that in some way their eyes may be opened.

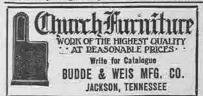

Brethren, how much lighter the load would be, if we all would do the Master's will! There is only one passage of scripture needed to put the exponent of the temporal institutions to flight-namely: "Whatsoever ye do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God and the Father by him." (Col. 3: 17.) All that we do should be done by the authority of Jesus. He has authorized us to do good in the church; and there is no other institution through which to glorify his name. My brother, why are you a lodge member? Is there something peculiarly good in the lodge that cannot be found in the church? Does your lodge give you a higher standing than the church? I would like to see every brother who has departed from the cause to work in the ledges return to his Father's house, where there is plenty and to spare. Brethren, think on these things. Every hour of my time that I spend doing good, I want to spend in the church which Christ purchased with his own blood.

Persuasion.

Vilification and abuse of anybody may have a place in the proclamation of the word of God, but it is not a large nor important one. It requires a discriminating mind and a loving heart to condemn the sin and yet embrace the sinner. Those who cannot do so, however, are not great soul winners. As a basis and background for preaching the love of God, the doctrine of sin must be proclaimed without fear or favor, but an appeal does not rest there-it goes on to announce the love of God as the final compelling motive. People are not dragged into the kingdom of God, and unsaved men naturally revolt against the veiled force that lies in unrestrained and wholesale abuse. Men must be drawn; and Jesus said that if he be lifted up, he would draw all men to him. If that does not work, nothing else will; if that is not true, nothing else is.—Selected.

The Oilton Meeting.

BY W. L. OLIPHANT.

About three months ago I received a letter from a brother at Oilton, Okla., asking me to visit his town and see if arrangements could be made to hold a mission meeting there. I visited the town and preached two sermons. I found the people anxious to hear the pure gospel. My time for the year was already taken, but I made arrangements with another preacher to hold a meeting I had booked for July. On July 8 I arrived in Oilton. 1 found the tent up and everything ready to begin the meeting. The crowd was large from the start. The "Holiness" folks were in a tent meeting when we began. We had carnivals, free shows, and almost everything of that nature to fight; yet we took the crowds. Brother L. F. Martin, of Elk City, arrived about the third day of the meeting and took charge of the song service. The crowds continued to grow till the close. The meeting continued nineteen days. The town was stirred as never before. Seventy-six souls were added, between forty and fifty of them by baptism. Money was raised to build a nice, little church house, Good corner lots, three blocks from the main street, were purchased, and building material was being placed on the ground when we left. The house will be ready for use in less than a month. Money was also raised to support a preacher full time for a year. The next proposition is to find a suitable man for the place. If no one else can be found, I shall work with them some myself, rather than see our labors lost. Some of those accepting the truth were among the vilest of the oil fields, while some were from the most influential class in the town. Quite a number of the leading members of the Methodist and Baptist churches became obedient to the faith. The Baptist paster was heard to say that he had lost some of his very best members. The little band of not more than a score of brethren who had been meeting from house to house are now rejoicing that they can be associated with a live congregation of more than a hundred members. We are expecting great things from Oilton. Many old congregations could profit by the example set by these babes in Christ. It took us only about ten minutes to raise the salary for a preacher. The Fairview congregation fellowshiped us to the extent of about one hundred and thirty-five dollars. The remainder of the money to support the meeting. build the house, and hire a preacher was raised in and around Oilton. Brother Martin did his work well, and I learned to love him very dearly.

It is said of Handel that, while composing the oratorio of the Messiah, he was frequently found in tears, and that one day, while sobbing bitterly, it was found that the words which had broken down his spirit were these three words of the prophet Isaiah: "He was despised."-Selected.

A Call to Repentance.

Our leaders are now getting afraid of declaring the whole counsel of God for fear of offending the "sects." The same spirit is sweeping over us that caused the separation of the digressive "Christian Church" from the one body. The devil laughs and rejoices in the meantime, while from our pulpit and press the doctrine that "we should preach the gospel and let the systems of error alone" is being proclaimed. All who will unite with me in a season of fasting and prayer that God may grant us recovery from this awful snare of Satan, before the brotherhood has apostatized beyond recovery, are urged to write me at once. Just Common Humanity.

The very serious trouble with most people is that they are human, like ourselves. They react in the same way under the same stresses. They also want sympathy, and are looking for a friend. They, too, heartily enjoy being appreciated or at least understood. Burdens that are heavy for us are heavy for them. It is as easy for them to watch other people at work as it is for us. They, likewise, enjoy picnics and parades.-Exchange, Despondency is not a state of humility. On the contrary, it is the vexation and despair of a cowardly pride; nothing is worse. Whether we stumble or whether we fall, we must only think of rising again and going on in our course.-Fenelon.

Fquipment, But the "Man, Not Makes the Difference

Every great school, college, or university has been built around the personality of some one man. The educated men of America who have accomplished great things and stand well in professions look back on their college training and attribute much of their accomplishments to the dominating personality of the school in which they were educated. The dominating personality of Morgan School is that of Prof. R. K. Morgan. His influence for good and better things does much toward the molding of morals and stimulating of broader ideals in the students who are so for-tunate as to attend Morgan School. Mr. Morgan has devoted his life to the training of boys.

The thoughtful, considerate parent feels that the school to which he sends his son must be equipped and its faculty chosen with the primary end of training the boy to become a man; to teach true, Christian faith; to develop manly independence and self-confidence; to inspire high ideals of life and service; to strengthen and develop mind and body alike.

Such an institution is the Morgan School, which has been built around the Christian character and wholesome, inspiring personality of Robert K. Morgan, who has been principal for twenty-six years.

A postal card to Mr. L. I. Mills, sec-tary Morgan School, Petersburg, Morgan School, Tenn., will bring you a catalogue and full information about this school.

"IN THY LIGHT SHALL WE SEE LIGHT." (Psalm 36: 9.)

Contributors Write Concerning Visions

Broader Conception of Duty .- L. L. Brigance.

I like the title of this special number. It strikes the keynote. It is just what we need-"a greater vision" of the Christian religion. We have altogether too small a conception of Christianity. It means too little to all of us, and especially to some of us. With so many who profess to follow Jesus, Christianity is not the supreme business of life, but only an incidental matter. The successful management of our human and temporal affairs-making a living, having a beautiful home, the acquisition of wealth, enjoyment of the pleasures of this life, rising in our profession, and a hundred other desires and ambitions-these are the chief concerns of life with us, while living the Christian life and going to heaven when we die are subordinate matters. We need to reverse our whole scheme of life. Fearing God and keeping his commandments, doing our duty, seeking first the kingdom of God, and going to heaven should be the chief business of life and all other things subordinate thereto.

But, to be more specific, I want to mention some particular respects in which our vision should be enlarged.

First, our interest in the cause of Christ has been too limited and local. We have not been able to see beyond the limits of our own immediate vicinity. Outside of the home congregation many seem not to be concerned for the progress of the gospel. Christianity is age-long and world-wide in its relation to mankind. It embraces all the tongues, tribes, and races of men. There is "neither Greek nor Jew, circumcision nor uncircumcision, Barbarian, Scythian, bond nor free." Wherever there are human beings "on all the face of the earth," there are souls to save; and unless we are interested in them and their salvation, our conception of the religion of Christ is entirely too small. We must be interested in planting the truth and establishing the cause in the adjoining counties and States as well as in our own. Some one said that "the limits of Christ's love have been so far-flung that no human being could ever travel beyond them." Our interest in the salvation of men should be just as wide as the love of Christ.

In our own beloved land there are hundreds of counties and many entire States where not a single church after the New Testament pattern is to be found. Why does this condition exist? Is it not because our conception of duty has been too small? Do you not think that if the "zeal of God's house had eaten us up," these desert places would have bloomed and blossomed as the rose long before this? Do you not believe that churches of Christ would have dotted the hills and valleys, the mountains and plains of this great country of ours as the "stars that tremble on the brow of night," if our missionary zeal had been as great as it ought to be? O, that we may have a "greater vision" of our duty in spreading the gospel over the earth!

Another instance of the narrowness of our vision is seen in the matter of providing educational facilities for our children, homes for orphans and also for the aged and infirm, and hospitals for the sick.

We are told that if we "train up a child in the way he should go, when he is old he will not depart from it." Again, parents are taught to "bring up their children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." It is surely the duty of parents to the extent of their ability to give their children the right kind of education. But what is the right kind of education? Nothing short of a symmetrical development of body, mind, and soul—the physical, mental, and spiritual nature. State, sectarian, and private institutions provide the physical and mental training, perhaps, as well as any; but what about the moral and spiritual? To say the least of it, the latter is surely as important as the former-I think far more so. What about those schools that give little or no attention to it? Had it ever occurred to you that our children spend forty or fifty hours per week in the study of those branches designed to develop the body and mind, and perhaps one hour on Sunday to that which develops the spirit? Not only do our secular institutions fail to provide for the moral and spiritual development of the young, but in many instances they poison their minds with infidelity and wreck their faith in the Bible. A good, Christian doctor told me recently that he spent three thousand dollars putting one of his boys through college, and now he would gladly give much more than that if he could get out of him what they put into him. I could give you the names of boys and girls who were faithful and true to the "old Book" and the church before going off to college, and who came back with their faith in the Bible shaken and their interest in the church destroyed. It is a fact beyond dispute that the majority of the teachers in our higher State and private schools are destructive higher critics, infidels, and atheists, and many of them are active and aggressive in teaching these doctrines to the young. Personally, I would rather have my children grow up in ignorance and believe in God and his word, and be a Christian, than to have all the intellectual culture the world can bestow and be a skeptic or an infidel. Christian parents, you are responsible to God and to your children for the way you bring them up, and it is high time you were awaking to the dangers to which you are exposing them. What is the remedy for this dangerous situation? To build and maintain schools and colleges of our own in which none but Christian teachers are employed and wherein the Bible is taught along with secular subjects.

Not only do we need such schools for the proper education of our own children, but we need them for the training and preparation of young men to preach the gospel. Think of the great good such schools have already done and of how much greater good they can do in the future if they receive the proper support! We need a much broader conception of our duty in furnishing the means with which to build, equip, and maintain such schools.

It is a part of "pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father" to "visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction." We are taught over and over again to feed the hungry, clothe the naked, help the poor, minister to the sick, etc. We are not told just how this is to be done; and perhaps there is no better way to do a part of it, at least, than by building and maintaining orphanages for helpless and dependent children, homes for the dependent aged and infirm, and hospitals for the sick and afflicted. But think how little of it we have done! Among all the churches of Christ throughout the world, I know of not more than eight or ten schools, all of which are small and poorly equipped, about three orphanages in the same condition, not a single home for the old, helpless, and infirm, and not a hospital for the sick. Surely we need "a greater vision" of our duty along these lines.

Finally, before it is ever possible to carry out the great and important work indicated above, we must have a broader, higher, and deeper conception of our duty in a financial way. We have been entirely too penurious, niggardly, and selfish in the matter of giving. The Lord has blessed us with the good things of this life—its comforts and its luxuries—and then we have doled out a miserable pittance to him. We have given dimes when it ought to have been dollars. Like the Jews of old, we have rebbed God. Christians are citizens of two governments—the State or civil government and the kingdom of heaven. To which one of these do they owe most? Which one of them brings the greater blessings? Jesus said: "Render unto Cæsar [the civil government] the things that are Cæsar's, and unto God the things that are God's." Unto which one of these governments do we contribute the most? If Christians would only give as much to the cause of Christ as they pay taxes, then would the money question become one of the least instead of one of the greatest. The church will never be doing its duty until every member is giving regularly and systematically a per cent of his income great enough to meet God's approval. Just what per cent that is, the Bible does not say. God demanded at least ten per cent of the Jews. Can any one show why Christians should give less?

All the things mentioned above can be done as individual Christians and as churches without a hint of sectarianism or unscriptural organizations. But it is one thing to talk about it and quite another to do it. "Ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them."

May the Lord give us "a greater vision" of our duty and help us to do it.

Looking Forward .- C. E. Holt.

One of the terse and true sayings of Israel's wisest king is: "Where there is no vision, the people perish." (Prov. 29: 18.)

A nation without definite ideas and ideals; without a vision into the future; without care or concern for unborn generations; without principles of government which will grasp and hold and apply and assimilate every instrumentality and opportunity which naturally arises under new and improved conditions—such a nation will soon find itself in a state of disintegration and decay, which will eventuate in its complete downfall and destruction.

When a nation ceases to be a factor in the progress and betterment of its subjects along all lines of utilitarianism and humanitarianism, along the lines of philanthropy and reciprocity which tend to the building up of all the interests thereof, along the lines of equity and justice to all classes of its citizens, it will lose its hold upon, and its power over, the people which compose it.

In a very important sense the same is true of the kingdom of God on earth. The churches of Christ, as such, have a mission not only unique, but of transcendent importance to not only the present generation, but to all generations yet to be. In the providence of God, as I verily believe, we came into the religious arena at the right time to save what is called Protestantism from itself. The great body of professed Christians which stood for the Biblethe sixty-six books of the Old and New Testaments-as the highest authority in the government of the body ecclesiastic and of the personal conduct of the individuals composing that body were rapidly destroying themselves by divisions growing out of unreasonable and unprofitable opinions which they exalted into conditions of salvation and of Christian friendship and fellowship in the work of the Lord. These conditions were deplored by Protestants and enjoyed by Homanists.

In the beginning of the nineteenth century the true Israel had a new birth and a new vision. With hearts aching and bleeding over the desolation of Zion caused by unholy dissensions and disgraceful disruptions, they threw themselves into the "gaps" of the confused and scattered forces and raised the flag of war and also the flag of peace. They raised the flag of war as regards making the opinions of men, whether in councils assembled or otherwise promulgated, tests of fellowship, rules of faith and conduct, or conditions of salvation. They raised the flag of peace in that they unfurled to the world the emblem of all truth and the insignia of all Christian perfection—namely, the Lordship and Kingship of Jesus, the Christ of God and the only hope of the world.

I say those men had a vision, a wonderful vision—a vision sublime coupled with a purpose true and noble and with motives pure and grand. Nothing sectarian, nothing of a partisan nature in this. Every item of faith and work and worship in the divine machinery is placed upon the highest plane of loyalty and love to God, and upon the highest and purest principles of philanthropy and good will toward mankind. It gave to the world a new view of Christianity. It was not a new Christianity, but the real and true Christianity of the apostolic age. It was the blood-sealed and Spirit-revealed Christianity of the New Testament, which had been buried in the döbris of the wreckage caused by the "man of sin," whose seeds of discord and apostasy were sown in Paul's day. Paul said: "The mystery of iniquity doth already work." (2 Thess. 2: 7.)

While the protests against Rome were righteous and were to be encouraged, still there were elements of weakness which rendered nugatory many of the principles which otherwise would have been powerful in their operations in restoring primitive Christianity.

First, there was an open declaration of independence for religious liberty in the free and untrammeled translation and reading of the sacred Scriptures; but there was also a determination on the part of the leaders to force their interpretations of the Scriptures upon the people. There was a period of what we might appropriately style "crystallization "-crystallizing around certain opinions as to what gospel truths should be stressed. Thus we had many human formularies thrust upon the people. Denominationalism as a result flourished, while the very principle upon which Protestantism was founded suffered severely. As already stated, it was at this period of religious revolutions that a number of men of faith and courage sublime, men of vision clear and strong, and men of learning, many of them, came to the rescue. The slogan of Protestantism was: "The Bible, and the Bible alone." But these same people had, in a large measure, supplanted the Bible with the decrees of councils and conventions of uninspired men.

Now began the work of religious constructiveness. Gradually the gospel message was relieved of the human excrescences with which it had been burdened and darkened for years. The light of the gospel began to shine as it had not shone for many centuries. The slogan, "Back to Jerusalem," was heard throughout the land. The work made unparalleled progress. Thousands of people threw off the shackles of denominationalism and came out into the full-orbed light of truth divine. All truth by the different religious bodies held was accepted, and all errors by them held was as promptly and as fully rejected.

It was not, and is not, the purpose of those who launched this great work, and those upon whom the task and responsibility of its continued propagation rests at the present time, to make another denomination. Not this, but to restore, in its fullness, the church of the apostolic age.

About the human instrumentalities that should be used in the execution of God's revealed will in evangelizing the world grave differences have arisen, and many of these are serious handicaps to the progress of the work. We should not, and we must not, allow these differences to become so prominent that the truth to be preached will be overshadowed and thus made to suffer thereby.

Every religious paper and every school among us should have one great vision—viz., the complete triumph of New Testament Christianity. Everything in which we engage should be made contributory thereto. Men may prove recreant, unfaithful, and untrue, but the principles of the "restoration movement" will never die.

There has not been a time since the Restoration was first launched that we were in greater danger of losing our vision. We must not crystallize, "Speak unto the children of Israel, that they go forward." (Ex. 14: 15.)

A Vision of Opportunity .- Annie C. Tuggle.

It would in some measure relieve me of a heavy burden if I could even in a slight degree feel myself worthy of the honor which the Gospel Advocate staff confers upon me by allowing a humble representative of my race to write an article on "The Negro's Need—A Vision of Opportunity;" for the negro, to a great extent, is yet in darkness spiritually and ignorant of the word of God.

It is impossible to estimate the far-reaching good that has been made possible through the kindly generosity of the white race in helping the black; and, judging from the standard that the truest test of the civilization of a race is a desire to assist the unfortunate, the white race, as a whole, has reason to feel proud of what it has done in helping to educate the negro intellectually and along industrial lines. Fisk University, Tuskegee Normal Institute, Tennessee State Normal, and other similar institutions of learning stand out as a memorial of the love and sympathy the one race has for the other. But this sort of training alone-of the head and hand-is not sufficient. The negro still stands outside the ark of safety, unprepared to meet his God, without even a knowledge of the teaching of Christ or what the Lord requires of him to inherit eternal life. Truly, there is an unlimited opportunity for those of the more fortunate race to help the negro by having God's word sounded out to him in its purity, which teaches him that, denying ungodliness and worldly lust, he should live soberly, righteously, and godly in this present world. When this is done, the prison bars will be less needed and the visitations of the mob will not be so frequent.

I do not wish to convey the idea that industrial training is not essential to the progress of my race, for I believe we are to reach our highest development by habits of thrift and economy and by way of industrial education; but an education that does not transform life and character into the likeness of the Son of God and instill into the mind the principles of justice and right is not profitable to any people seeking to please God and to better his country. The negro's heart needs training now, for out of it are the issues of life, and he does not even know it. Indeed, there is an excellent opportunity to prepare him for this life and the life to come by having the gospel (God's power to save) preached unto him.

Let every congregation of the church of Christ lend a helping hand in this great work, as those of Nashville, Birmingham, Henderson, Louisville, and others have done, and you will have a better community, a better State, and a better country.

Mistakes Are Stepping Stones .- Clara Cox Epperson.

It seems to me that the vision that can see beyond the mistakes, the disappointments, the sins, and the sorrows of this world, with the clear sight of faith, into the better world that lies beyond this, is truly the greater vision.

To be able to see that the mistakes of life are but the stepping-stones pushed aside for the time being by the stumbling feet of seeming failure; the disappointments, but the clouds so dark and gray that obscure the silver lining underneath; the sins, but the tests and trials of the soul that by being conquered bring forth that soul as from a furnace of living fire, purified by desires conquered and strengthened by temptations overcome; and the sorrows, only the mellowing influence on the heart, softening it and making it more humble, more sympathetic with another's woe, more understanding of another's grief—to be able thus to see all the dark passages of life clearly is, indeed, the greater, nobler, purer vision of God and his wondrous ways. 'Tis thus we reach the plains upon the hilltops of higher, greater vision; and far away beyond the hill crest we shall not only find the plains of peace, but as we look back over life and see God's unseen hand guiding through all the storms and stress of an unsatisfactory life, we will realize that we have reached the resting place of the Christian philosophers of old, who could with the truer, greater vision see through the mists enveloping the valley of shadow left behind in the past, then, turning toward the sunset of life and the setting of many dear, cherished hopes, could pierce beyond the veil that intervenes between that fair city and exclaim with faith: "God is in his heaven, and all is well with the world."

To be able to say,

"Know well, my soul, God's hand controls
Whate'er thou fearest;
Round him in calmest music rolls
Whate'er thou hearest.
What to thee is shadow, to him is day,
And the end he knoweth,
And not as a blind and aimless way
The spirit goeth"— is an example of the greater vision. And only through the greater vision can one rejoice in everything as the days go by—the days of rain and the days of pain, the days of loss and the days of gain.

"Yes, the new days come and the old days go,
And I the while rejoice;
For now 'tis the rose, and now 'tis the snow,
And now a sweet bird voice;
And now 'tis the heart of all that is sweet,
And then the shade of care;
And then 'tis a pain like the lightning fleet,
And then God's glory there."

Even our blasted hopes may prove our gain; so

"Count not loss the hopes that fall,
Like leaves in autumn, one by one;
Nor dream the light is vanished all
As the dark, dreary night moves on.
You shall know at last that loss was gain;
That through the weary, toilsome way,
As you saw the stars in your life sky wane,
The night was leading to heavenly day."

When we can see with greater vision, we will find also sweet places along the ways our feet must tread, in crowded highways or in quiet byways;

"For, looking backward through the year Along the way my feet have pressed, I see sweet places everywhere—Sweet places where my soul had rest. My sorrows have not been so light The chastening hand I could not trace, Nor have my blessings been so great That they hid my Father's face."

If you cultivate greater vision that comes only by greater faith—that sublime faith that can be guided by even one tiny star of hope on the darkest night of despair—you will be able to find good in everything, however bitter the grief may seem, and ultimately you will find God in everything, and you will also realize that

If a greater vision guides your steps
To higher paths, more heavenly ways,
Whate'er the stumblingblocks of time,
You will with triumph end your days.

A Vision of Youth .- J. Leonard Jackson.

"And your young men shall see visions." (Acts 2: 17.) It is obvious that the one thing young people need to-day is a scriptural vision of their duty to themselves and to their God. If the "Greater Vision" Number of the Gospel Advocate proves adequate to this necessity, inestimable will be its accomplishment. Cognizance of the indifference of young people who claim to be Christians prompts the lamentation, "What can the church of to-morrow be?"

Lest I should be accused of rushing in where angels fear to tread, I shall not speak of parental responsibility, but rather leave this phase of the subject to the experienced. Suffice it to say that all people who have the destiny of others in their keeping have also the destiny of the church in their keeping. Like the hewers in the Lebanon mountains, they are preparing material for the spiritual temple of God. They are planters of memorial trees, which will blossom and bear fruit long after the planter has gone the way of all flesh.

The days of youth might properly be termed "constructive days," the formative period of life. Constructive days are invariably dangerous days—dangerous because right and wrong are struggling for supremacy. In the reconstructive days of the Civil War there was a struggle between right and wrong—between the carpetbagger and the Ku-Klux Klan. Fortunately for the South, right prevailed. In the reconstructive period of the world war there was the same struggle between right and wrong—between Bolshevism and law and order. Fortunately for the world, law won the struggle.

Now, youth is the formative period of life. It is the time when the devil makes his greatest effort to seal man's destiny by gaining the supremacy over his soul. If the devil wins in this constructive struggle in youth, he is apt to be victorious in old age; for possession by Satan, in youth, is nine points in the law of destruction.

We have looked with disgust upon the drunkard in the gutter. But we should remember that once he was an innocent babe in his mother's arms, a fit subject for the home of the soul. But he sowed his seed in the morning, and the devil won the struggle for the supremacy of his soul.

It is because of a shortsightedness and weakness on our part that we give ourselves to the world in youth. The propensities of the flesh blind us; we allow them to dethrone common sense and to become enthroned. Older people may advise us, but we cannot see.

I have never been afraid of the devil in his true garb, as a roaring lion, as an old serpent. I know him then. But when he fashions himself into an angel of light, I know there is danger.

I remember reading once of a yellow spider which lives along the banks of the Amazon River. It is able to contort itself in such a way as to represent a beautiful flower. When the insect drops upon it for its nectar, there is no escape. May God hasten the day when the youth of our land will begin to discriminate between the devil and the daisies of modern times.

Seeing Things .- Noel B. Cuff.

Twenty-six centuries ago Solomon wrote: "Where there is no vision, the people perish." (Prov. 29: 18.) History indorses that utterance. The events that have occurred since that time verify the statement, so that those who question the anthenticity of portions of the Bible cannot deny that a visionless people are a dying people.

The apostle Peter brings before us the man who is blind and cannot see afar off. (2 Pet. 1: 9.) The word occulists use for physical shortsightedness is "myopia," which is exactly the Greek word the apostle uses when he says of this man: "He cannot see afar off." Then we wonder what is the secret of this spiritual "myopia." Occulists tell us that physically it is caused by too constant absorption of the eye in small things, in dim print, in threads, and in stitches, which things are only an allegory. When we allow our eyes to dwell too long on the material things of life, as eating, drinking, and reveling, so that the spiritual side is crowded out, our faith grows dim to the vision of the eternal, and in time we sink altogether into spiritual blindness. It is necessary that, as Christians, we be able to look back over the past and remember that we were purged from our old sins. We should also have a vision of the work that the Lord expects us to do for him.

Some one has said: "There are some men who can live up to their ideals and still drag the ground." So we must not only live up to our visions of duty, but in many instances we must enlarge the visions we have if we desire to accomplish anything worth while in the Master's vineyard.

The world must have its visionaries. Without our dreamers the world's progress would be arrested. America was not discovered until Columbus dreamed of discovering land by sailing westward across the Atlantic. Our country did not have a free government until some of the pioneer patriots had a vision of the future possibilities of a government, with the people making their own laws. Then they signed their names to the Declaration of Independence and went on record as being guilty of treason to their king. They went to almost assured death because of the vision they had. The church, as well as the world, owes many of the things worth while to seers of visions.

In the Old Testament we read about prophets who saw things that were actually to come. In the New Testament history visions also occupy a large place. When the seventy returned, Jesus saw a vision of "Satan fallen as lightning from heaven." (Luke 10: 18.) John on Patmos isle beheld a countless multitude, clothed in white robes and with palms in their hands, and heard them singing: "Salvation to our God which sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb." (Rev. 7: 9, 10.)

The visionless workers in a nation or the church have allied themselves with a dying people, and unless they are changed from the course they are following they will drfit into spiritual blindness.

Let us pray that our eyes be opened so we can see, and then actualize our visions, or they will be useless.

Stop, Look, and Listen!-M. Jane Floyd.

Stop, look, and listen to the voice of our Creator speaking through the medium of nature all around us, and then just think how weak we are and how much we need his grace and guidance each day in teaching us to have perfect faith in all his works and ways. He speaks through the growing trees, the flying clouds, the stars above us, the flowers, the piercing streak of electricity that wriggles through a dark and stormy sky, through the smiling face of an innocent baby, and through countless other wonders of nature which cease to be wonderful to us everyday folk because they have been with us so long that we have become used to them and they cease to be wonders to us.

God's great power shines out all around us every day and night. Then, if we look around us, we can see so many things undone that God would have us do if we only would go ahead and do them. We waste oceans of time on social duties, which embrace card playing, dances, midnight carousals, and Heaven knows how many other useless forms of amusement, when there are hundreds—yes, thousands—of needy who are dying by degrees for want of our work. They need food, clothing, medical and nursing aid, and lots of assistance, which we could give if we only would deny ourselves a few luxuries. There are the blind and crippled of the world war that need our money in training them for life so they can earn their own livelihood and be happy and comfortable. This is all God's work and makes up the greater part of a real Christian's life.

It is true that we all sin and fall short of the Bible standard, but God is good and merciful and ready to give us another chance and forgive us our sins.

We should stop in our mad rush for money and fame and consider the little things around us that God would have us do; then we can be more nearly happy in our earthly life. Eyes That See .- S. H. Hall.

In Matt. 13: 16 Christ says to his disciples: "Blessed are your eyes, for they see." There is such a thing as having eyes and not seeing, and this is the sad condition of too many of us who claim to be Christians. Our Father wants us to see, and his blessings are for only those who will use the God-given power to see. The following is Paul's prayer for the Ephesian brethren from the very day he heard of their faith in the Lord: "That the God of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of glory, may give unto you a spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of him; baving the eyes of your heart enlightened, that ye may know what is the hope of his calling, what the riches of the glory of his inheritance in the saints, and what the exceeding greatness of his power to us-ward who believe," etc. (See Eph. 1: 15-23.) We need a greater vision of this hope, a greater vision of the glory of our Lord's inheritance in the saints, a greater vision of the exceeding greatness of his power toward believers. By this I do not mean that we need greater revelations of these things, but that we should open our eyes and behold the wonderful revelation we already have. Too many of us are sitting around with our eyes closed, hence fail to get the inspiration that seeing ever brings into the soul. On our recent trip from Los Angeles it was wonderful to behold what seemed to us the boundless plains through which it took us days to pass. But certainly you can imagine the difference if we had kept our eyes closed. As Brother Shepherd, of Amarillo, Texas, led me through his splendid church building, it stirred me, it inspired me, as I beheld the splendid auditorium and such well-arranged classrooms and other conveniences. But you can imagine the difference had I given our brother my hand and closed my eyes and followed him thus through the building. But in this way too many who claim to be Christians are trying to let Christ lead them through this life. They think they have given Jesus their hand and heart, and said: "Lord, take me and lead me the balance of the way through life." But they, Instead of staying awake and beholding the beauties along the way, have fallen into a state of spiritual slumber, hence have no vision at all. They are not happy Christians, either, and will not be saved. To such Paul says: "Awake, thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall shine upon thee." (Eph. 5: 14.)

The really wide-awake Christian is a hit boastful, for he sees in his Father the wisest and the best Father that ever lived, and with David will sing: "I will bless Jehovah at all times: his praise shall continually be in my mouth. My soul shall make her boast in Jehovah; the meek shall hear thereof, and be glad. O magnify Jehovah with me, and let us exalt his name together."

Then we have in Christ an elder Brother and a Savior, and our vision of him cannot be too great. We should ever think of him as the living Savior-yes, a million times more alive than we are-and he is now at the Father's right hand to think of us every moment of our existence here on earth. Have you seen this? Let Paul give you a vision: "For Christ entered . . . into heaven itself, new to appear before the face of God for us," (Heb. 9: 24.) Do you see him there, my brother? And, too, we should not forget that he is there for us every moment, hence can save to the uttermost. Hear Paul again: "Wherefore also he is able to save to the uttermost them that draw near unto God through him, seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them." (Heb. 7: 25.) I shall not say more. But do we not need a greater vision of Christ? Or, better said: Do we not need to look with our eyes wide open at the wonderful vision God has given us of Christ? Do this, and hope, joy, and peace you may have.

Then the angels. It would be well for us to look well at the vision God has given us of them. "The angel of Jehovah encampeth round about them that fear him, and delivereth them." And the church of our Lord. Have we had the vision we should have had of this? If not, look at what our Lord says about it. Christ is the Head of it, and it is the very "fullness of him that filleth all in all." (Eph. 1: 22, 23.) Yes, we need to see these things as they are so fully revealed in the Bible.

But our eyes need to be anointed with the salve of love to the end that we may see. "But he that hateth his brother is in the darkness, and walketh in the darkness, and knoweth not whither he goeth, because the darkness hath blinded his eyes." (1 John 2: 11.) No, we are not seeing much if we do not love; hence, Paul says: "Being rooted and grounded in love, [we] may be strong to apprehend with all the saints what is the breadth and length and height and depth, and to know the love of Christ which passeth knowledge, that ye may be filled unto all the fullness of God." To be filled with all the fullness of God is wonderful. Let us be rooted and grounded in love, that this may be and that we may see as Christ prayed for us to see in John 17: 24. Turn to it and read it. May God help us to see. We have the greatest vision possible, if we will only behold it.

From "Glory to Glory."-H. Leo Boles.

The divine order of all things, as taught in nature and revelation, is to pass from one state into a still higher state. The wisdom and beauty of this order are seen by all who make a close study of the plans of God. The little rills and streamlets flow together and make the great, rolling river which swells the mighty ocean with its restless majesty. The dull leaden seed of the plant cast in the ground soon germinates and puts forth the stalk—"first the blade, then the ear, then the full corn in the ear"—with all the glory of the ripe fruitage of earth.

"Little drops of water, little grains of sand, Make the mighty ocean and the pleasant land,"

The dusty, unattractive worm develops into the beautiful butterfly; the heaven above us with its mighty dome at eventide is gradually transformed and made to declare the glory of God with its stellar beauty. When not marred by the ravages of sin, each step in the progress of nature has been from glory to glory.

One has said that " nature speaks to the eye, but revelation to the ear." At least revelation is addressed to the understanding of man. In the Bible we see God's order beautifully displayed in his ever-widening and expanding revelation of his will to man. There is progressive development from the obscure promise of the seed of the woman in the garden of Eden to the consummation of all things related to time in the glorious triumphs of a risen and reigning Redeemer in the kingdom of heaven. Each step is marked by added glory, and the vision becomes clearer as advancement is made. The starlit age or dispensation gives place to the moonlit age; and this, in turn, gives place to the sunlight age, with all the effulgence of its glory. As one climbs the mountains of faith, larger fields of vision open up before him, and the ever-widening circle of one's horizon expands until his vision is commensurate with the revealed will of God.

The human family began with the fresh dawn of creation, and has been retarded much in its progress by sin and its consequences; but there has been an upward tendency in this progress in proportion to man's faithfulness to God. Starting from Adam and Eve, the human family has multiplied until the present mass of teeming millions inhabit the globe; and it is to be hoped that the ratio of those who are faithful to God has increased. At first the few alters erected to Jehovah by his chosen ones were found in a small section of the country; but now in every nation, on every continent, on the isles of the sea, and on the bosom of the mighty deep may be found true worshipers of Jehovah.

The early conception of God by man was that he was a flesh-and-blood man; he walked and talked with men and blessed and cursed them; he had power as a great warrior to punish those who disobeyed. A little later man's conception of God changed. He now is pictured in Exodus as a terrible Being; there is no God like him in power; he smites the Egyptians with ten plagues. Even his chosen people cannot touch the mountain from which he speaks. He is ever victorious. The Old Testament conception emphasizes his power, vengeance, jealousy, with terrible justice and mercy. The New Testament conception emphasizes his justice, mercy, and love, together with his Fatherhood. His power and wisdom are used to love and save those who accept his Son. As one studies the idea of God as it is gradually revealed in the Bible, his vision ever widens and he passes from glory to glory, reaching the Idea of God as revealed through Jesus Christ, who is the image of the Father.

The Christian, when born into the family of God, is a babe in Christ He has learned to put his trust in God and knows some of his Father's will. He does not know it all. He is to grow in grace and the knowledge of truth; his faith is to increase, his love to grow more fervent; his activities, feeble as a babe at first, are to multiply; his love for the world is to wane; he is to grow from a babe to full maturity, "strong in the Lord and the strength of his might;" he is " not to be fashioned according to this world, but be transformed." Gradually he is passing from one state into a still higher; his vision of God, Christ, duty, and service is becoming clearer and wider as his consecration and knowledge increase. He does not look back to the world, but steadily looks up to God; forgetting the things that are behind, he stretches forward to get a firmer and larger grasp upon the things eternal. As he loves the Lord more, he is gradually transformed into the glorious image of the Son of God, showing forth more and more the excellencies of Christ and glorifying God in his body. This gradual transformation continues until death; then comes the glorious transformation, when he is given a spiritual bedy, sulted to the eternal habitation of heaven, where his joy and bliss are ever new and always enlarging, and every glimpse which he catches of his Redeemer shall expand his vision until it shall fill the heaven of heavens, then "the first full draught of immortality shall quench his thirst for fadeless glory."

Also, the church in its infancy began as a little stone cut out without hands and was destined to become a great mountain and fill the whole earth. The prophet climbed upon the mountain of faith and, with the telescope of prophecy, with the lens of inspiration, caught a vision of the church marching triumphantly from victory to victory and from glory to glory. This vision is being fulfilled as the church fills its mission. The church can fill its mission only as each member functions as the Head of the bedy directs. The fullest possible development of every child of God is contemplated and anticipated in the great purpose and mission of the church. When Jesus taught his disciples to pray for the kingdom of God to come upon earth, he taught them to commit themselves to the great task of transforming human life into its highest development and cooperating with God in bringing all men into harmony with the never-failing love and eternal righteousness of God. Each step in the progress of the church must be onward and upward until the Son shall deliver up the kingdom to the Father.

God is behind all.

We find great things are made of little things,

And little things go lessening, till at last

Comes God behind them.

The Thing Uppermost .- James E. Scobey.

There is nothing more important than to see and understand the end and object for which we labor. There are few men, if any, who have clear and distinct conceptions of the divine Providence in the redemption of man from the consequences of his folly. The minds of many people are filled with false ideas of God's ways; and they are groping their way through life in the fog of superstition and the haze of prejudice and prepossession, and have little vision of life that comes from the sunlight of God's revelation.

In the material world men generally know enough of the laws of nature to maintain an existence on the earth. Here man finds the laws of nature uniform, and he has made great strides in their application to the comfort, convenience, and contentment of the human family. In the spiritual world men generally have failed to see and to understand the positiveness and the uniformity of the spiritual laws which God has ordained in his spiritual realm, so far as they relate to man's good while he lives on earth, to say nothing of the happiness they assure him in the world to come.

There are two vast fields in which man's strength and energy must be exercised—the material and the spiritual. It is an unfortunate fact that most men are engrossed more with material things than with spiritual things. They are lovers of the world and the things of the world more than lovers of God. This class need most of all a greater vision of God's purpose in their creation and the possibilities of the attainment of the honors and glories of immortality and eternal life through the great atonement the Son of God made when he sacrificed himself and shed his blood on the cross, that man might become reconciled to God and have hope of the blessings of heaven.

Many, in order to obtain material blessings, must harmonize his efforts with God's material laws. If, therefore, he would enjoy the spiritual comforts and consolations of the gospel of Christ, he must harmonize his life with the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus. A failure to observe God's law in either case would result in disaster.

Whatever man undertakes to do, that is possible, he will accomplish, if he understands his business, has the tools, and harmonizes his efforts with God's laws; and this is true whether in the material or spiritual world.

From what has been stated, it may be readily inferred that the knowledge of God's laws is essential to success in both the material and spiritual world. All man knows of natural laws he has learned from the book of nature by experience and observation. All he knows of spiritual laws he has learned from the book called "The Bible." No man to-day has a spiritual idea or thought that is true, except that which has been revealed by the Spirit and recorded in God's word. God through "his divine power hath given unto us all things that pertain unto life and godliness, through the knowledge of him that hath called us to glory and virtue." (2 Pet. 1: 3.)

To do God's work requires more than human wisdom and human strength. One must "be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might," to withstand the allurements of the world, the flesh, and the devil. A man might be religiously inclined and strong in his zeal, but ignorant of God's ways, and in this condition he would be unable and fail to glorify God in his body and spirit.

The church, the body of Christ, needs now a higher vision of its mission. It is the fighting army of the kingdom of heaven.

If I were called upon to give an opinion, or reason, for the weakness of the churches in many places, I would unhesitatingly say: A want of spirituality; a want of devotion and consecration to the work of the Lord, guided and directed in all their ways by the teachings of Jesus, his arestles and prophets.

The Unfolding Vision .- John E. Dunn.

The Lord knew when he came into the world that he would inaugurate the Christian system in Jerusalem and have it spread all over the inhabited earth. Christ came to offer salvation to every creature in all the world. In his vision Jesus took in the whole world. Christ had in his mind the plan for the evangelization of the world. This work was to be done by individual Christians and by the churches as churches. Christians were to be the "light of the world" and the "salt of the earth." The churches were to be "the pillar and ground of the truth."

Christ did not outline his plan to his disciples at one time. He gradually unfolded it to them by degrees. They were slow to take in the true vision of the workings of Christianity. Man in his corrupt nature is a selfish being. He does not look beyond his own little circle. We to-day know the New Testament teaches that the gospel should he preached all over the world. We further know that God's order for us is that we preach the gospel to the people of all the nations, but we do not do it. Some of us play at it a little. Every now and then we do a little evangelizing in our own city, county, or State. Once in a while we make a dash into a neighboring city or State. To go at this work systematically, with a solid front, with all the Lord's forces, and to give the gospel to all the people of the world, we do not do it. Our vision of what the Lord wants us to do is so very narrow and limited.

When Jesus was baptized, he began preaching the gospel of the kingdom in the villages and cities nearest unto him. Very soon he began to call disciples unto him and commenced training them for service in spreading the gospel. Presently he sent these twelve forth. "Now after these things the Lord appointed seventy others, and sent them forth in companies of two and two." "They departed, and went throughout the villages preaching the gospel"—in Galilee and Decapolis and Jerusalem and Judea and beyond Jordan. In this manner things were got in readiness for the great forward movement that was inaugurated in Jerusalem on the day of Pentecost, and in a few years the gospel spread all over the world.

There are also certain sidelight instances of Jesus lifting the curtain and giving the disciples glimpses of the great vision of the world. For instance, note what took place as a result of his conversation with the woman at the well in Samaria. (See John 4.) "The woman left her waterpot, and went away into the city, and saith to the people, Come, see a man: . . . can this be the Christ? They went out of the city, and were coming to him." Jesus saith to his disciples: "Lift up your eyes, and look on the fields, that they are white already unto harvest."

The last words of Jesus before his ascension contain a concrete statement of the Lord's plan for evangelizing the world. "Ye shall be my witnesses both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea and Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth." "So then the Lord Jesus, after he had spoken unto them, was received up into heaven, and sat down at the right hand of God. And they went forth, and preached everywhere."

This movement began in Jerusalem on the day of Pentecest. The gospel was thoroughly established in this city. They next preached it throughout all Judea, then in Samaria, and on all over the then known world. This work was directed by the Lord from his throne in heaven, and those early disciples were guided by the Holy Spirit. Thus we see the Lord in his providence gradually unfolding his plan and the gradual enlargement of the vision before the disciples of the Lord Jesus.

Paul seems to have completely taken into view the vision of the Lord's plan. Paul as the great leader and with many others went out, being sent forth by the church at Antioch on a world conquest. He was a disciple of broad vision and abundant in labors. The following expressions reveal the spirit of the man; "Oftentimes I purposed to come unto you [at Rome], that I might have some fruit in you also, even as in the rest of the Gentiles. I am debtor both to Greeks and to Barbarians. . . . I am ready to preach the gospel to you also that are in Rome. . . . From Jerusalem and round about even unto Illyricum, . . . making it my aim so to preach the gospel, not where Christ was already named; . . . as it is written, They shall see, to whom no tidings of him came, and they who have not heard shall understand. . . . Having no more any place in these regions, and having these many years a longing to come unto you whenseever I go unto Spain." Paul went from city to city, from nation to nation, and from race to race. He saw the whole world as the field of activity.

Just at the time the men of the Restoration Movement of the nineteenth century for primitive Christianity were beginning to take into view the world as the field of operations, the movement marred in our hands. At a time when the whole world is in travail, meaning, crying, and dying for the lack of Christianity, we are torn to pieces and bleeding at every pore because of division, discord, and strife, and every manner of evil work.

What the world needs to give her a rebirth is the quickening power of Christianity. Nothing but Jesus Christ can bring peace to the stricken world and restore righteousness among men. Christ told his apostles to teach all nations, baptizing them, and after baptizing them to teach them to observe all things he had commanded them. Christ unfolded to view for the New Testament disciples a vision of the whole world. They saw the vision, and in less than one hundred years the gospel was "preached in all creation under heaven." "Yea, verily, their sound out into all the earth, and their words unto the ends of the world." Our vision should take in the whole world—a knowledge of the Lord for the world as the waters cover the sea.

A Better Vision of Home. - C. M. Gleaves.

Some one has said that the sweetest words in our English tongue are "mother," "home," and "heaven."

As we think of home in a broader sense, we also think of wife, mother, and heaven. The word "home" awakens a world of tender memories and sweet associations. So many of us think only of an earthly home. We set our affections on it; we sometimes almost worship it. But these earthly homes are all temporal.

One of three things happens to every earthly home, howsoever dear it may be to us—namely: either that home will be taken from us, or else we will be taken from that home, or all that makes it dear suddenly vanishes. Often we see reverses come. Debt gets heavy, and the dear old home finally goes to the highest bidder. Then we so often see death come, and persons are taken from the home to the "silent city of the dead." But so often something happens to that home, in the loss of loved ones, that robs it of every attraction. Going back to my humble home used to be the sweetest thought in the world to me. But now, when I go back,
I find an empty house. The sweetest face I ever saw in this world is gone from that home, the dearest voice I ever heard is silent.

But now I am thinking of another home, where I can see that dear face and hear that sweet voice throughout eternity. This home is a prepared place for a prepared people. (See John 14: 1-6.) This home is a very large city—larger, perhaps, than all the cities in this world combined. (Rev. 21: 16.) I have never heard of a city so fine; streets pure gold. I have never heard of such an ideal home. In this home there is no sorrow, no sin, no pain, and no death. If we miss this home, we miss all there is worth living for in this world. My better vision of duty is to cry to God for their ministers—had, as it were, risen and home, Intercongregational Activities .- W. W. Freeman.

There are Christian interests larger than any one church of Christ can satisfy, even for its own members. These interests are vitally related to the life and growth of individual churches and Christians. For the people of God to permit denominationalists to care for their orphans, Catholics to care for their sick, aliens to educate their children, infidels and skeptics to write their textbooks, and their religious neighbors to do their mission work, is deplorable and disastrous. Without this outside service, what would be the conditions? Does not the larger service they render open our eyes to the importance of building up interest and cooperation in these fields of Christian service?

If we have a hundred members in regular attendance and prompt in holding an annual meeting where others are baptized and begin the regular observance of the Lord's Supper, and giving to bear local expenses, what prospect for caring for orphans and the sick, for Christian education, and the evangelization of the hundreds of millions of lost souls in heathenism? Unless a leadership presents the place and power of Christianity in the social order and enlists such churches in systematic support of cooperative enterprises single congregations cannot supply, these churches as such and their membership as individuals must always remain victims of circumstances—a weakening, dependent minority, in due time to disappear. Shall it be so? With the rising generation hobbled in ignorance or else tutored in either denominationalism or materialism, what hope is there of a successful leadership? Even the local assemblies often vanish for lack of a single leader, learned or unlearned. This sad condition is no accident; it is the natural result of depending solely upon the weekly local meeting without the essential instruction and the annual meeting devoted to lectures on so-called "first principles."

Such conditions make it difficult to promote successfully the larger interests, for such people are not able to appreciate the importance of such work. Selfishness and indifference need but a suggestion of local needs or possible dangers or hard times to defeat the most worthy cause and reject the most helpful offer of service. They often refuse to allow a hearing that at least would inform and inspire them to greater local work. At times a supposedly strong church is denied the vision of this greater service by a bigoted and ignorant elder (?) or two. Shepherds often have not the remotest idea of what a balanced ration is; overseers manifest but the slightest ability to plan and execute the tasks through the workers. For lack of vision the cause fails and the souls perish. O for some more men and women with enterprise and executive ability! There are multitudes who want to do something to redeem the situation, but they are not invited to share in any challenging enterprise controlled properly that promises success. The dozen such efforts have been developed almost solely at the price of a few individual lives and have been given a little help, not as constructive investments, but as objects of charity. It is true. Think of this! Will you?

Christianity, "church work," has never meant much to many of us. In placing specific restrictions on "church worship," perhaps, we have been led to limit "church work" or Christian service to the four walls of the meetinghouse and, perchance, an occasional sick room. This conception finds a semblance of justification by looking to the early missions among people of a heathen political and social status or environment and by ignoring the fields of service and the principles of action set forth in the letters of Paul and in Jesus' teaching. We might as well bind ourselves down to the limited service of our India congregations and declare their social order, including schools and other social institutions, to be satisfactory and sufficient. Can we not see that Christianity should touch every phase of life so far as possible? Do we not know that the first century closed without having seen every desirable result brought about? Every local church, with all its members, had infinite room for truly Christian growth, and many fields of practical service had been scarcely touched. Seed thoughts, principles, and a forecast of growth are found. They were voiced by Jesus and penned by the inspired seers. It is our task to interpret, uphold, and apply these ideals in every social service to-day and for the future.

God has never seen fit to allow his people to follow the lines of least resistance. He has never permitted them to adopt foreign standards simply because they were current and cheap. He has always required his people to support his cause. They have never been licensed to permit their children to be tutored by foreigners or outsiders. Parents in covenant relationship with God are divinely obligated to provide such righteous social environment as tends best to right living.

To-day there is serious need for individual Christians to see the great issues involved and to awaken the churches to proper cooperation in providing the greater facilities of Christian service.

The place of vision is at the cross. It is the focal point of faith, the pivotal place of hope, and the center apex of divine love. It is the place where Calvary interprets the incarnation. But the place of vision is not an end; it is a means to an end. Visions reveal occasions. They clarify the new and whitening horizons. They summon us to resolution. When vision affects the mere visual organ, it is as a spectrum or a mirage, and as such is apt to be monoculous or astigmatic. The vision of the cross with the uplifted Christ, pointing his bleeding fingers as far as the east is from the west, in the putting away of sin, is the vision that leads, inspires, moves men to follow the gleam, sees the redemption clear and beautiful, and goes on its way turning the unseen into seen. This is vision actualized. . . . O, that God would take our great, wealthy, strong, educated, and privileged brotherhood to some mountain height, or to some valley of humiliation, and show to us, as a people, under the penetrating search light of a new and spiritual vision, what we really are in his own holy sight and estimation! We should have one clear vision of Jesus Christ. We should read afresh, with a cleansed vision and a new dedication of all we have and are, the meaning of the great commission, and thrust ourselves into its service with all the expulsive power of a new affection.-W. Remfry Hunt.

"Bless the Lord, O My Soul."-John H. Arms.

"O Lord our Lord, how excellent is thy name in all the earth! who hast set thy glory above the heavens." (Ps. 8: 1.) "Kings of the earth, and all people; princes, and all judges of the earth: both young men, and maidens; old men, and children: let them praise the name of the Lord: for his name alone is excellent; his glory is above the earth and heavens." (Ps. 148: 11-13.) "Bless the Lord, O my soul: and all that is within me, bless his holy name." (Ps. 103: 1.)

When we read in God's holy word of his wisdom, majesty, might, and power, let us fully realize that to him we owe all homage, through Christ Jesus our Lord. In his wisdom he set in order all of his creations, and they are kept in order and upheld by the power of his might. In his power over all things in heaven and in earth, he united them in destroying the wicked and saving the righteous by the flood. (See Gen. 6.) Thus, then as now, he worked "all things . . . together for good to them that love God, to them who are called according to his purpose." (Rom. 8: 28.) Now, brethren in Christ Jesus, if we are truly children of God, then we are also "the called according to his purpose. Now we, brethren, as Isaac was, are the children of promise. (Gal. 4: 28.) So we feel assured that all things now, as then, work together for the good of them who truly love God. Let us not love in word only, but in deed and in truth; neither as being forgetful hearers, but "doers of the word." (James 1: 22.) "He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me," (John

Let us not be like Israel-conclude that God's government is not sufficient. While Israel walked in God's statutes, kept his precepts, and fully trusted in him, did they need any arm of flesh to protect and preserve them. or any wisdom of man to guide them? No! God was able, and did watch over, protect, and keep them through all their journeyings, and delivered them-the faithful onesinto the land of promise. Then, so long as they kept his commandments, all was well with them; but when the customs of the nations around them and the glamor of kingly power and earthly glory blinded them and led them to forsake God's way and demand an earthly ruler-a king-to help God (?) govern them, they forsook God's rule and became "conformed to this world." Then he allowed them to have their own way and granted their demand for a king. (See 1 Sam. 8.) Now see the result. Under their mixed rule instead of God's ordained rule their government reached the pinnacle of its power and fame under its third king, Solomon, and he wrote over it in indelible words: "Vanity of vanities." (Eccles. 1: 2.) Then he warns all concerning earthly things and concludes with this solemn injunction: "Fear God, and keep his commandments: for this is the whole duty of man. For God shall bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil." (Eccles. 12: 13, 14.)

It was vain then-how much more vain now!-to look to or lean upon an arm of flesh, or in any way mix humanism with God's way. How vain now for his children to feel the need of an arm of flesh to aid or preserve them! Listen to Paul: "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me." (Phil, 4: 13.) "But my God shall supply all your need according to his riches in glory by Christ Jesus." (Phil. 4: 19.) Like God's true servants of old, let us be satisfied with his kingdom, honoring our King, Jesus, by heartily complying with his law of liberty. When we do this, we honor God and at the same time live above any law of any government beneath the sun. "For the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death." (Rom. 8: 2.) How? By lifting me onto so much higher plane that, in complying with its sacred obligations, I need not fear any law enacted for punishment of evildoers.

The gospel-the divine law-"is the power of God unto salvation" (Rom. 1: 16); and therein is revealed "the righteousness of God" (Rom. 1: 17), "All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness: that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works." (2 Tim. 3: 16, 17.) Jesus, our Savior, says to us: "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you." (Matt. 6: 33.) Again, he says: "Fear not, little flock; for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." (Luke 12: 32.) Paul says: "Wherefore we receiving a kingdom which cannot be moved, let us have grace, whereby we may serve God acceptably with reverence and godly fear: for our God is a consuming fire." (Heb. 12: 28, 29.)

All humanisms are, at the instigation of the devil, a usurpation of God's original and rightful authority to govern man; but God overrules them and so controls them as to make them work for the good of them who truly love God.

Dear reader, Christian or alien, if we would get a "greater vision of God, Christ, the Bible, and our duty to our fellow man," we must look only through God's telescope—his holy, divine Revelation. Let God's holy word be your all-sufficient guide; "and be not conformed to this world: but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God." (Rom. 12: 2.)

The "Man of Sorrows."-B. C. Goodpasture.

The church needs a greater vision of the "Son of man" as the "Man of sorrows," So long as men are born and buried, they will suffer, sorrow, and sigh, and long for sympathy. The world is full of sad-eyed, broken-hearted men and women, many of whom have burdens shared by the Lord alone. But the human heart yearns for human sympathy. Even the Master himself took three of his bosom companions with him into the garden of Gethsemane. There is much in the world to discourage and destroy that phase of living which "weeps with them that weep." The doctrine that "might makes right," the evolutionary doctrine of the "survival of the fittest," exalts hate rather than love and encourages contempt rather than sympathy for the weak and sorrowing. This age needs training of the heart rather than schooling of the head.

Jesus has shown us how to bear "one another's burdens" in times of trouble. A home in Bethany was plunged in woe: Lazarus was dead, (John 11.) Martha and Mary had sent to Jesus, saying: "Lord, behold, he whom thou lovest is sick." They did not ask Jesus to come and heal Lazarus, nor did they beseech him to send forth his word from his abode beyond Jordan and cure their brother; they simply informed him of their plight, trusting that, if only he knew, he would help. But Lazarus grew worse and died; "he had been in the tomb four days already" when Jesus came. The sorrow of Martha and Mary had become despair. Not till three days had passed was hope abandoned. Commonly "it was believed that for three days after death the soul hovered round the sepulcher, fain to reënter and reanimate its fleshly tenement; and stories, very credible in view of the fact that in that sultry climate immediate interment was necessary, were told of buried men awaking and coming out of their tombs. For three days the mourners clung to hope, and would visit the grave, if haply they might find their dead alive. But on the fourth day decomposition set in, and, when they saw its ghastly disfigurement upon the face, their hope perished, and, returning home, they abandoned themselves to unrestrained lamentations." Hence, the bereft sisters were in the nethermost depths of their sorrow. When Jesus saw them weeping, "he groaned in the spirit, and was troubled, and said, Where have ye laid him? They say unto him, Lord, come and see." The Master's sorrow could be restrained no longer; "Jesus wept." Think of it! Jesus, the Son of man, the Son of God, the Lion of the tribe of Judah, here wept (literally, "shed tears") with the relatives of a dead friend! What tenderness, what manliness, in the Savior's tears!

Why did Jesus weep? Was it for the loss of one whom he loved? That could hardly be the cause; for Jesus knew that he would restore Lazarus to life. Did he not say to his disciples: "Our friend Lazarus is fallen asleep; but I go that I may awake him out of sleep?" Could it be, as some suggest, that, as he was about to raise him for his own glory, he wept for him, almost saying: "One that has sailed within the haven, I am calling back to the billows; one that has already been crowned, I am bringing back to the contests?" It is further insisted: "If Paul had the desire to depart and be with Christ, since it was very much better, what marvel that Jesus, who knew the felicity of heaven, should grieve to summon Lazarus thence and bring him back to the strife and sorrows of this mortal state?" Be this as it may, the outstanding cause of Jesus' tears was his tender sympathy; he felt another's sorrow and woe. He did what Paul enjoined when he wrote: "Weep with them that weep." (Rom. 12: 15.) The sympathy and tears of the Savior stand forth in bold relief against the dark background of stoic indifference to human emotion. The world can laugh with them that laugh, but Christianity alone can "weep with them that weep."

Finally, when the church has a greater vision of Jesus as the "Man of sorrows," it will grow "in favor with God and men;" and we shall see at last what all peoples have tooked for from the first—the unburdening of the hearts of men.

The "Judgment to Come."-J. C. Estes.

When Paul was living and giving his time and talent preaching the gospel in many destitute and mission fields, he saw visions and "greater visions." The one great vision he saw was a man standing and saying; "Come over into Macedonia, and help us." As Paul and his company were passing from city to city delivering the decrees of the apostles, he would have turned aside here and there to preach, but the Holy Spirit would not allow it; so he passed on to where he saw this great vision, and in obedience to which he went over into Macedonia and began one of the greatest mission works, if not the greatest, mission work, that has ever been carried on in the history of the world.

His visions enlarged and grew from time to time, and he pressed on and on into other fields as he was driven through persecutions by those who were enemies of the cause of Christ. Through these visions he carried the gospel into Macedonia, a Roman province lying to the north of Greece, the first country of Europe in which he preached the gospel. (Acts 16: 9-12.) He began this work at Phllippi, which was a colony and chief city of that part of Macedonia. Here is where he met Lydia and converted her and her household to the truth of Christ; where he met and cast a spirit of divination out of a certain damsel who was in the employ of a company of men, telling fortunes for many who were desirous to hear them; where he and Silas were beaten with rods and cast into the inner prison and their feet fastened in stocks; where they preached the gospel to, converted, and baptized the jaller and his household; and where they first established the cause of Christ in Europe. From place to place Paul went preaching and teaching the word under the most obscure and trying conditions a person could endure. Some who were with him at times could not endure it as Paul, and turned back. Through floods and flames he pushed on, telling the gospel story of salvation, until at last his head was chopped from his body at Rome. His life's work, after his conversion, is the greatest example of the most effective mission work that can be told or given in the history of the world.

Did any of the congregations of the church of Christ fail to do their duties in helping him? Yes. Because they failed to do their duties in belping him, dld he fail to do his? No. When he was not supported in his work as he should have been, he worked with his own hands and made his own support; but this did not lighten the obligations of churches, or congregations, he had established. Did any congregation of the church of Christ help him in this work? Yes. Did he receive and indorse their support and commend them for it? Yes. Did he ever rebuke others for not doing so? I certainly think so. Did he ever impress any with greater visions of eternity and eternal things? The Jew, the Greek, the Gentile world generally, the poor, and the high in authority were all most wonderfully impressed with "greater visions" of greater things by Paul. View him, though a prisoner, as he stands before thrones and makes them tremble as he reasons of righteousness. temperance, and "judgment to come," giving them greater visions of these things. Hear him when he causes King Agrippa to cry aloud: "Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian." Listen again at him, saying: "I am bound, but the word of God is not bound."

Do we have the right vision of preaching the gospel when we, like many of to-day, start out hunting an easy job where some strong congregation can and will pay us a large salary, furnish us a nice home in which to live and a nice car in which to go, with all the other desirable things that might be mentioned, and keep us busy sounding the gospel in a most magnificent bullding to a congregation who knows but little, if anything, of multiplied thousands in our own homeland starving for the gospel while being fed sectarianism from every viewpoint? But few such congregations are ever imbued with the love of sounding out the gospel into such destitute fields as Colorado and all these Western States. Are our boys of to-day filled with the idea of going and preaching the word anywhere and everywhere they can get any one or more to hear, regardless of circumstances, as Brother Harding used to pound it into many? But some then would not "get the idea," But I can cite you to a few who did get such an idea. again, there are those who wish to travel from place to place, and take advantage of little, weak congregations along the way which they wish to go, asking for appointments to preach a few times, get expense money, and pass on, and call that "mission work."

There are many conditions existing to-day with both congregations and preachers which, it seems, are almost altogether prompted by selfish motives, rather than by true leve for the cause of Christ. Many, many strong congregations with their support and training could encourage young men to go into these destitute fields and give their time and strength doing mission work in our home lands, if they would do it. Many of the older ministers who are preaching regularly to strong congregations could teach them to do this, were it not for a selfish motive on their part. Some have the idea that if they encourage their (?) congregations to help do mission work in other fields, it would take from their support; therefore, they will not teach their (?) congregations to do anything in mission work. Others have the idea that if they do any mission work at all, it must be foreign mission work-distance lends enchantment and gives greater prestige, you know. Selfish idea again. To do our unquestioned duties in the cause of Christ, we must get selfishness out of the way and be like Paul when he said to his Jewish brethren: "I could wish myself accursed from Christ for my brethren's sake" -or, for their salvation, if nothing but that would save them and if that would. Let us get self out of the way and be ready with a "greater vision" to do what and all we can to save our fellow men, carry the gospel to fields where the other fellow will not—the fellow who is waiting for some one else to plant the cause, get it self-sustaining, and then call him to hold a few meetings, or that in his travels he may pass by that way, preach a few times, get expense money, and pass on to others who will help him on his way. Congregations which can get the big idea of true mission work and can inculcate that idea into the minds, hearts, and the very lives of their mentally and physically strong young men, send them into such fields as this Western country, and then stand by them, are such congregations and preachers as are needed to do true mission work —not allow our young men as they come up to get the idea to make merchandise of the gospel.

From the Book: Our Visions .- Earl M. Hodson.

No glorious sunset vision comes to those who refuse to lift their eyes at eventide to western clouds and skies; no soul-bestilling peace and joy possesses those who will not rise at dawn to see the first of day; and so there comes no vision of God the eternal, of Christ his Son, of the Spirit, and of our duty to God and service to man, to those who fail to read the Book that alone can give the visions of life and tell us all that is known of the origin of time and its end, of eternity, with its happiness or its sorrows, according as we choose to take.

Even as we need at dawn the vision of the new day to guide our minds to duties that beset our material way, so we need in early life to read the Bible to get the vision of eternity that can come only to those who early form the habit of daily reading of the Book. O, that parents would daily teach their children in quiet reading and prayer the habits that would ever keep before them the presence of God! Once fixed in childhood, the visions of the Bible would become the realities of middle life; and when the eventide of years hangs heavy with care or the sunset of life casts its glow over the end of a well-spent life, then, indeed, would the visions of the Book be truly the source of divine joy and content.

From the Book we get our visions of God, and in moments of joy our hearts cry out with David: "Bless the Lord, O my soul: and all that is within me, bless his holy name." And when with repentant hearts we turn again, with David we cry: "Create in me a clean heart, O God; and renew a right spirit within me." Or, in sorrow, we bow at his feet, as it were, and cry: "In thee, O Lord, do I put my trust: let me never be ashamed: deliver me in thy righteousness. Bow down thine ear to me; deliver me speedily: be thou my strong rock, for a house of defense to save me." Then in the Book we find him the Creator, who cares for us; who guides us, if we desire it; who lets us go our own way, if we will, until we learn too late that it is the way of death. Though our daily tasks be numerous and our minds be much occupied with toil, yet, if we have committed ourselves to his care, he does not forget; and when the work is done, we may turn and speak again to him, and he hears and cares.

In the Book we may climb the mount with Moses and return with our hearts aglow with the knowledge that our God is "merciful and gracious, long-suffering, and abundant in goodness and truth; keeping mercy for thousands, forgiving iniquity and transgression and sin;" yet one who "will by no means clear the guilty; visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children, and upon the children's children, unto the third and to the fourth generation."

Through the Book we get our visions of Christ, the Son of God, our Savior; we hear him, we obey him, we love him and serve him; through him we become the children of God and through him we speak to God, our Father; for his sake we refuse to wear man-made name or subscribe to man-made creed; for his sake we stand as Christians only in his blood-bought church and in loving fear refuse to do the things he has not sanctioned; in his church we bow in prayer with contrite hearts or sing in spiritual songs the praises due his righteous name and know the joy that comes from simple heartfelt worship of God and his Son; and, with Paul, we learn to be content in whatsoever state we are and to feel in faith, "I can do all things through Christ who strengtheneth me."

Through the Book we learn of the service we may render to man, as well as the duty we owe to our God. It is all summed up in the rule the Master gave that day as he sat on the mount and talked to the multitudes: "All things therefore whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, even so do ye also unto them: for this is the law and the prophets." Were I in prison, I would be glad to have men visit me; were I sick abed at home, I would rejoice that friends came to see me; were I hungry and thirsty or weary and naked, I would rejoice that there are those who for Christ's sake would give me food and drink or soothe my aching limbs and clothe my naked body; were I to do wrong, I would crave the forgiveness of fellow men and a friendly hand to lift me up; were I to have blessings more than my neighbors, I would share these blessings with them, that I might enjoy them myself; yet in all these ministrations others and I would but be filling the rule from the Book. Finally, were I to know the story of God the Father, Christ the Son, and the Spirit "that maketh intercession for us with groanings that cannot be uttered," and not hunger to send that message to every man in every clime, to every man of every tribe, in homeland or in foreign land, then ought I to have my own name blotted out of the book He has written.

Greater Vision of the West .- John D. Evans.

Of all physical afflictions I can think of, none is greater than complete loss of vision. Next to that, perhaps, would be that defect in vision known as "myopia," in which the sight is limited only to "that which is near." We are informed that such a condition is usually the result of our failure to give our eyes a "chance at long distance;" that where there is no far-away vision the optic nerve becomes atrophied and eventually perishes, the penalty of nature's violated law. This accounts for the fact that you rarely see a "nearsighted" man or woman whose whole life has been spent in the Golden West, where the natural eye can flash upon the rugged, snow-capped mountains a hundred miles away.

Great as is this physical affliction, it it is not to be compared with that condition to which the apostle Peter refers when he says, "He that lacketh these things is blind, see ing only what is near"—afflicted with "spiritual myopia"—men who like quadrupeds go about with their eyes riveted to the ground, which "shadows the permanent, blots out the stars, and hides the throne of God."

When the soul is wholly occupied with "that which is near," the little and the low, it is gradually perishing for want of a wider outlook. It is just as true now as when the wise man gave it utterance centuries ago, that "where no vision is, there the people perish." No life amounts to anything until it becomes absorbed in some aim which carries it out of and beyond itself.

That self-centered policy that keeps our minds continually upon our "own things" and not on "the things of others," that includes in our missionary program only "me and my wife, my son John and his wife," will constitute an insurmountable barrier to the success of either home or foreign missions.

More than at any other period of the world's history does the church need men of vision, men of faith, men of dauntless courage. More than ever do we need Christian ministers who have caught the spirit of the One who said: "Say not ye, There are yet four months, and then cometh harvest? behold, I say unto you, Lift up your eyes, and look on the fields; for they are white already to harvest." (John 4: 35.)

This is the hour for great ventures of faith. To every generation there is a demand for eyes that see a fresh morning. The plans of God are going forward. We are a part of them. He does not save men directly, but through the instrumentality of men of light and vision, men of prophetic mold—men who, having eyes, "see things" that to others are invisible. This treasure has been "committed to earthen vessels." The salvation of the world, humanly speaking, is not dependent upon angels, but men. We are "ambassadors for Christ,"

As I look over the list of gospel preachers in the United States and note their tendency to gravitate to old and thoroughly cultivated fields, I wonder if they have not misinterpreted the spirit of the great commission and the instructions to the apostles to "tarry in Jerusalem" until they were "endued with power from on high." They are still "tarrying" at Jerusalem. The divine missionary program was to "begin" at Jerusalem, then in Judea, then in Samaria, and then "unto the uttermost parts of the earth." I greatly fear that there is among some professed Christians the feeling expressed by a member of the Massachusetts Legislature, who, when that august body was discussing the question of sending the gospel to the heathen, said: "We have no religion to spare from among ourselves." He wanted to keep what they had for "home consumption." He had not learned-and many of us have not-that the only way to keep our religion is to use it, to share it with others.

"There was a man, the people called him mad, Who, the more he gave, the more he had."

In apostolic times, in order that the Gentiles might hear the gospel, it was necessary for the Lord to interpose with a miracle to convince Peter that other folks besides Jews needed to be saved. In order to give Europe the gospel and Christianity, it was necessary for a "man of Macedonia" to appear before the apostle Paul in a vision, with an appeal from dying men to "come over, . . . and help us." Is it possible that the host of young gospel preachers who "buckled on the armor" and vowed allegiance to the "Captain of their salvation," to "fight on till death," are walting for a repetition of such visions? The days of miracles are past, but the Macedonian call still comes sounding down the ages. It means you!

The few of us who for more than a dozen years have kept busy "sowing the seed of the kingdom" in the great State of Colorado are made to wonder why our "fathers in the gospel," whose lives have been spent in the Southland, so spiritually blessed, have not, like the mother eagle, "stirred up the nest" that the young "fledglings" may trust their wings to the air and go out into the world to face its responsibilities. Why not tell the young men what God told Abraham: "Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and from thy father's house, unto a land that I will show thee," Send them as pioneers "out where the West begins." Inspire within them a desire to cultivate a field all their own, where the surface of the soil has hardly been scratched. Tell them the only men who have ever succeeded in such fields are men who are willing to "endure hardness as good soldiers." It is no place for weaklings or "job hunters." Tell them of the wonderful possibilities of a State which is an empire within itself, a miniature world, where within the range of human vision the whole gamut of life is sounded; "a land where the races of men congregate-the "melting pot," as well as the "playground," of America. If you have a burning desire to carry the gospel to the heathen, you do not have to "cross the ocean and the heathen land explore;" you can come to Colorado and "find him at your door." Within its borders are our little brown brothers from the land of the Mikado, our "yellow-skinned brothers" from the Celestial Empire, our "brothers in red" (the American Indian), the "man from Mexico" and "Sunny Italy"—all jostling together on the streets of our cities. Why not convert them in America and send them back as missionaries to their own countries? It is the quickest and most economical way to save the heathen and incidentally save the rest of us.

Colorado is no longer an "outpost of civilization," few hours' ride across the "Great Divide" and we are in the "land of the setting sun." Rapid strides are now being made to build up the cause in California, at which we rejoice. Geographically speaking, Colorado is the connecting link in the transcontinental gospel chain. If it were thoroughly evangelized and Christianized, it could Christianize the great Southwest. The two great States of Texas and Tennessee could make this possible within a few short years. The opportunity is an open challenge to their faith. Will the call pass by unheeded? Will those gospel preachers who in response to our call invariably reply. "Awfully sorry, but pressing engagements at home prevent our acceptance," repent and pray God that even the thoughts of their heart may be forgiven them? Did it never occur to you that your congregation needed a rest? Did you ever ask them to send you out into the land "where the world is in the making" to preach to men who have never heard?

There are, I believe, more than thirty active congregations in and around Nashville, Tenn. When you come together on Lord's day for a gospel feast and fervently pray that the gospel may be "sounded out" unto the "uttermost parts of the earth," do you really try to answer your own prayer? Does it ever occur to you that in all the State of Colorado there are just two or three gospel preachers busy trying to hold up the "banner of the cross," and that they sometimes become tired and discouraged, waiting for reinforcements from the Lord's standing army of Christian soldiers? Does your conscience rest easy? Is it of no interest to you? Are you content to rest upon your past achievements? Are you suffering from a defective vision, 'seeing only what is near?" "Lift up your eyes, and look on the fields!" If you cannot go, give. The other man's salvation depends upon you.

> "Can you whose souls are lighted With wisdom from on high— Can you to men benighted The lamp of life deny?"

Not long ago one of the leading bankers of our country, widely known for his charities, was called into the land beyond to give an account of his stewardship. Before his death he ordered these words graven upon the marble that would mark his grave:

What I spent, I saved: What I kept, I lost; What I gave, I kept.

There will be no pockets in our shrouds. Better invest in heaven's securities to-day. To-morrow may be too late. Besides, we want "fruit to be abounding to our account." Now, our heirs might not invest as wisely as we. God grant that we may all, with one accord, one voice, one will, surrender what is selfish, narrow, and exclusive, and merge all that we have and all that we are into one common cause which has for its object, purpose, and aim the salvation of the souls of men!

Unless a man believe in something far brighter than himself, something infinitely purer and grander than he can ever become—unless he has an instinct or an order beyond dreams, of law beyond his comprehensions, of beauty, goodness, and justice, beside which his own ideals are dark, he will fail in every loftier form of ambition, and ought to fail.—Bayard Taylor,

Preach the Word .- Van A. Bradley.

Paul's charge to Timothy was: "Preach the word." He gave as his reason for such a charge; "For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine." Surely the time is here. Men are pleasure-bent, moneymad, high-headed, and stout-hearted-"lovers of pleasure more than levers of God." Men are not as receptive to the truth as in the early days of Christianity. Within the first century of the Christian era the gospel had made a progress that is altogether unexampled and without parallel. In less than a single year after its Founder was accused as a malefactor, and on the very soil where his blood was shed, its converts had amounted to nearly ten thousand; in less than two years it had overrun Judea; and in one-third of a century it had penetrated the then known world. (Col. 1: 23.) There was a reason for this. Christianity was a unit, and men preached Jesus. The unity for which the Bible contends and the preaching which Jesus authorized can be productive of but one result-"almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian." Preachers need to return to "the old paths" and preach Jesus. That is sufficient.

God said: "My word shall not return unto me void. It shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereunto I sent it." The longer I live and the more I study the Bible, the more am I convinced that it is of divine origin and that it is abundantly sufficient for the evangelization of the world.

I wish to make a few observations as to why the Bible should command the admiration of the world. The redemption of the human family and the means by which this redemption was accomplished are thoughts far too great ever to have originated in the narrow conceptions of any human brain. These are thoughts that could have originated only in the counsels of heaven. The union of the divine and human natures in the world's Redeemer is a fact that would never have been thought of by man. There is no fact of history more amazing, more wonderful, than this supernatural conception. It is a fact so far beyond the uniform laws of nature that the idea itself could never have floated in the impure imagination of man. Nor is this all. Jesus was spotless and pure-a Lamb without blemish from the cradle to the grave. His vile betrayers could not impeach his sinless character. Even in the eyes of infinite purity was he without sin. Heathen writers have described no such character; history has none like it; tradition has none; deception and imposture have none. Poetry and romance have never been able to portray a character like that which the Bible gives of Mary's Son. Nor need we stop here. If from the supernatural conception and life of Jesus we advert to the catastrophe of the cross, our convictions are confirmed that this is no human tale of woe. Jesus came to earth to suffer and to die-to lay the foundation of his kingdom in his own sufferings and death.

Again, the single fact of the resurrection of the body is a thought too wonderful for the human mind ever to have originated. In John 5: 28, 29 it is declared: "All that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth." Next to the conception, this, to me, is the wonder of all wonders. What scenes will be disclosed when the curtain is drawn upon the opening ages of the coming eternity! The dead shall be called from the grave to appear at His bar who expired on the cross. The attending universe shall stand spectators of scenes in which they themselves have been and are the actors. The God of salvation shall be glorified in his saints, and then shall the end come. The wicked shall go away into everlasting punishment and the righteous into life eternal.

Do we look for goodness? God is love. The Bible is no more too great a book to have come from the human intellect than it is too good a book to have come from the human heart. His intelligence renders him great; his goodness bespeaks him amiable and lovely. The great stream of God's infinite love burst forth in the morning of time from the great heart of God and found its full expansion when Jesus died on the cross; and even yet God's great love flows in rivers of life from that eternal, immense ocean of kindness which no line can fathom and which is bounded by no shore.

For the present this is sufficient. They are not human thoughts, nor do they come under the range of human powers that are revealed in the Bible. Books multiply and libraries accumulate through man's capacity and toil; yet is there this one book which transcends the highest effort of man's giant intellect. His severest toils have never penetrated so deep, his loftiest powers have never soared so high, as this immense ocean of thought. The works of man bear no more comparison to this great work of infinite intelligence than a particle of vapor does to the ocean or the flight of a moment to eternity.

In the beginning of this article I called attention to the rapid spread of Christianity. The means which God chose for the propagation of truth excited the wonder of the imagination. He chose unlettered Jews to contend with the intellectual refinement and subtle philosophy of the Augustan Age and to preach Jesus Christ to men who sought after wisdom. He chose humble fishermen of Galilee to encounter the pride of Grecian and Roman philosophy and to meet the scoffs of the lawyers of the Areopagus and to tell the story of redemption to the world. But they were clothed with a divine commission; and even though they were Galileans, this gospel made its way through the world; and, contrary to all the forebodings of its enemies and all the laws of a merely human probability, it became the religion of the lofty and the humble, of provinces and kingdoms, till it effected the most extraordinary revolution in human affairs, was reverenced by the common people, and enthroned in the palaces of princes.

Precious Bible! Let us love it, learn it, heed it. There is nothing it does not offer, nothing it does not give to the man who feels his needs and seeks its bounty. Here are truths that never grow old, riches that never decay, pleasures that never fail, and a crown that is never tarnished.

Greater Vision of the Word .- H. W. Jones.

By the above heading I mean that humanity should have a greater appreciation of, a greater regard for, a more abiding interest in, and a more earnest living by the Bible and things divine than now obtains in the world generally. We certainly need a wider, deeper, more earnest, and more persistent study of the word and a more faithful living up to the teaching thereof than we now have generally. And the church needs awakening along this line, first, in order that "through the church the manifold wisdom of God" "might be made known" to the world "according to the eternal purpose which he [God] purposed in Christ Jesus our Lord." (Eph. 3: 8-12.) "Awake, awake; put on thy strength, O Zion; put on thy beautiful garments, O Jerusalem, the holy city." (Isa. 52: 1.)

This is a fast age. There is a strong tendency to run off into "higher criticism," so called, or into doubtful agnosticism, dark infidelity, or awful atheism. Lord, help us to avoid such a dark abyss of endless despair! But—alas!—many religious people are on the road to ruin and do not seem to know it. Many have cut loose from divine revelation in the Bible and are walking by sight, feelings, wild theories of men, or their own sense of right and wrong, instead of walking by faith, which comes by hearing God's word (see 2 Cor. 5: 7; Rom. 10: 17); many are led astray by pride, worldly lusts, etc.; and, worse, some of the rising generation even sneer at true religion and things divine. A young man of the modern "smart set," in talking to an aged saint about religion, said: "Ah, you are deceived! You only think you are a Christian. There is nothing in religion; it's only a fancy," etc. This shows the drift of humanity toward that awful maelstrom of modern infidelity. Indeed, "where there is no vision [of God's word], the people perish; but he that keepeth the law, happy is he," as Solomon says. Hence, I plead in this essay for a "greater vision" of God's holy word instead of "lying visions, divination, things of naught, deceit of their own hearts," etc. (See Jer. 14: 14; 23: 16.) Note the following quotation carefully: "The prophet that hath a dream, let him tell a dream; and he that hath my word, let him speak my word faithfully. What is the straw to the wheat? saith Jehovah. Is not my word like fire? saith Jehovah; and like a hammer that breaketh the rock in pieces? Therefore, behold, I am against the prophets, saith Jehovah, that steal my words every one from his neighbor. Behold, I am against the prophets, saith Jehovah, that use their tongues, and say, He saith. Behold, I am against them that prophesy lying dreams, saith Jehovah, and do tell them, and cause my people to err by their lies, and by their vain boasting: yet I sent them not, nor commanded them; neither do they profit this people at all, saith Jehovah." Read Jer. 23: 23-32, and see plainly that "dreams," "lies," "vain boasting," "deceit," etc., are to God's word as straw is to the wheat.

> Like a star of the morning in its beauty, Like a sun is the Bible to my soul, Shining clear on the way of love and duty, As I hasten on my journey to the goal.

Were it not for the divine revelation contained in the Bible, no one could ever know the one true and living God, nor his Son, Jesus Christ, our Savior, nor could we ever know our full duty to God, to humanity, and to ourselves. And our civilization and modern inventions helpful to humanity and all the good influences of "the powers that be" come either directly or indirectly from the good influences of the Bible on mankind. In countries where the Bible has an influence we find better people, better homes, more skilled workmen, better farmers, and better horses, cattle, hogs, poultry, etc., as well as greater freedom, better education, greater regard for human life, and more humanitarian principles in general. Then how absurd, silly, and out of place are the vague claims of modern skepticism, infidelity, and atheism! Let all doubters, infidels, agnostics, atheists, etc., of civilized countries migrate to heathen lands and see the ignorance, idolatry, oppression, filthy hovels, human sacrifices, etc., and be converted to the truth thereby. And, besides this general uplift from the Bible, the personal help, comfort, and cheer therefrom is beyond compare, as all Christians testify.

Blessed Bible—how I love it!
How it doth my bosom cheer!
What hath earth like this to covet!
O, what stores of wealth are here!

To have this greater vision of the word, we must consider it is God speaking to us through his inspired word, which is the God-ordained means of pointing us to "the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world." The Bible is the vision book of humanity, where we may look and see the only true God, the Savior of mankind, and our duty to humanity in general and particular. Let it be said of us now, as of certain Thessalonians of old, that we "received from" the apostles and prophets "the word of the message, even the word of God," and that we "accepted it not as the word of men, but, as it is in truth, the word of God, which also worketh in you that believe." (1 Thess. 1: 13.) Lord, help us so to consider thy holy word. Then we, as did David, can say to the Lord: "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and light unto my path." And, remember, without this "lamp" and "light" of God's word we would not know what steps to take in this dark world nor how to keep in the right "path" in matters of religion. Solomon said: "The commandment is a lamp, and the law is light; and reproofs of instruction are the way of life." As the good old songs says:

Sing them over again to me,
Wonderful words of life;
Let me more of their beauty see,
Wonderful words of life.
Words of life and beauty,
Teach me faith and duty—
Beautiful words, wonderful words,
Wonderful words of life.

Truly, as Dwight says: "The Bible is a window in this prison of hope, through which we look into eternity." And Wilmot, the infidel, when dying, laid his trembling, emaciated hand on the Bible and said solemnly and with unwonted energy: "The only objection against this book is a bad life." Then let us have "a greater vision of the word" and conform our lives to the teaching thereof.

And, further, we might say the Bible is humanity's looking-glass, in which we may see ourselves as we are, as we should be, and as we shall be in the future. Read carefully James 1: 21-27 and learn how to be "blessed" in the service of the Lord and how to avoid the broad way that leadeth to destruction. So—

A wonderful thing in the Bible I see. Is to reveal this awful self to me.

And, in the language of the singing poet:

I am so glad that our Father in heaven Tells of his love in the book he has given. Wonderful things in the Bible I see; This is the dearest: that Jesus loves me.

Then let us read the Bible daily; read it carefully; study it devotionally; pender over it prayerfully; let its divine precepts sink down deep into our hearts and bear fruit in our lives. "Hitch your wagon to a star;" for, truly, "we must aim high if we ever hit high." Lord, help us so to do, is our prayer.

Vision of Childhood .- Jennie Williams Douglas.

The fairest, sweetest, loveliest, purest thing on earth is a little child, and especially one obedient to its parents, loyal to its playmates, and eager to learn of God.

No grander theme is there for orator's tongue, no nobler topic for author's pen, no finer subject for artist's brush or sculptor's chisel than "Childhood."

O, glorious childhood days, when hours were golden with happy anticipation of the future; when the humble cottage was a palace, with father king, and the smiles of mother obliterated every trace of momentary grief! The bread and milk prepared by mother's hands were ambrosial viands; the new calico frock was a robe of shimmering satin; the nooks and corners in back yard, orchard, and meadow were fairy bowers where kindred spirits oft communed.

And-O!-the glorious Lord's day, the sunny first day of the week, when father and mother and tiniest child went to the place to worship Him who said: "I am thy God; none other shalt thou have!" (Paraphrase.) The sun shone brighter, nature seemed at rest, and the quietness of the unimposing edifice, with the kneeling occupants, brought awe and reverence to the youthful soul. And the walk back home through the noonday heat in summer, when the restful shade of the trees cast a checkered sunshine over the pathway! Or it was winter, and the air was bracing to active nerves, and exhilarating were the thoughts and scenes. Sometimes it might have been a drive behind the patient family horse. But always there was the Sunday dinner, steaming soups and choice meats in winter, cool salads and light bread in summer, and always cake and fruit.

How often should we thank our Heavenly Father for this happy period of our existence and strive harder to obey the divine command: "Except ye be converted and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven!"

- I. A. Douthitt closed a meeting at Bethany, near Cottage Grove, Tenn. Large crowds attended and twelve persons were baptized. One aged lady came from the Baptists. Brother Douthitt is now in a meeting at Hampshire, Tenn.
- J. T. Harris was among our visitors last week. He had just closed a good meeting with the Rock Church, in Dickson County, Tenn., resulting in thirteen baptisms, three restorations, and one from the Baptists. Brother Harris is new at Charlotte.

From Frank Baker, Glasgow, Ky., August 23: "Notwithstanding the continued rains, our meeting at Randolph, Ky., was a success in more than one way. There were three baptized. I premised to return for a meeting next year. I am now in a good meeting at Hickory Grove, near here."

From F. L. Paisley, Piggott, Ark., August 27: "The meeting at Tupelo, Ark., closed night before last with an overflowing bouse. It continued twelve days, with sixteen baptized. I was unexpectedly called here as second substitute for a meeting for a few days I can spare. I will be here only a week."

W. F. Andrews, Los Angeles, Cal., in renewing his subscription to the Gospel Advocate, says: "This makes thirty-seven years I have read the Advocate—thirty-seven years of perfect satisfaction with it. It has always been true to God's word in all its teaching. I only wish I could place it in every home in America."

Flavil Hall, of Trion, Ga., came to see us last week. He had just closed a good meeting at Mount Zion, near Hornbeak, Tenn., during which there were fifteen baptisms, one from the Methodists, and five by acceptance of the invitation to erring Christians. John R. Williams made Brother Hall glad by his presence at two services. Brother Hall is new in a meeting near Ashland City, Tenn.

G. W. Hardin writes: "You have read Brother Helm's appeal for help in the building of a meetinghouse in England, Ark. This is a deserving appeal. I know the people there. They are few and are not rich. Grandma Stiff and her daughter, Mrs. Dusenberry, have given the lot—a nice one. All contributions will be put into the house. Let the churches of Arkansas, Texas, and Oklahoma especially rally to the call. My address is 1417 Park Avenue, Little Rock, Ark.

An enjoyable reunion of the friends and supporters of the Fanning Orphan School took place on Friday, August 19. Interesting addresses were made by H. S. Lipscomb, S. P. Pittman, and E. A. Elam. These brethren emphasized the advantages of such a school with its splendid buildings and favorable environment. A. N. Trice presented a statement of the financial condition of the school, after which contributions and subscriptions were received to the amount of five hundred dollars. An excellent dinner was spread.

A very quiet marriage, consummated at Belmont church of Christ, this city, at five o'clock Tuesday afternoon, August 23, was that of Mr. E. E. Shoulders and Miss Johnnie Belle McCulloch. The ceremony was said by G. Mitchell Pullias. Brother Shoulders is one of our strongest and most earnest young preachers. He is now located at Franklin, Ky. He has chosen for his helpmeet a young woman equally earnest and sincere in the cause of Christ. She is the attractive daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. P. McCulloch, of Bowling Green, Ky. The good wishes of their many friends go with them in their life work.

From H. C. Harris, Tupelo, Miss., August 25: "Brother Jeffcoat and I closed a meeting at Nile, in Attalla County, last Sunday night. The meeting continued eight days. Ten additions. This was our third day with them. When we began, there was not a member. Two years ago there were four additions; last year, fourteen; and this year, ten We have always had large crowds at this place. They are expecting to build a house of worship before another year. This is a mission field. I have spent several weeks in this territory during the summer for three years. The work has to be done at a sacrifice. Brother Jeffcoat lives in the center of this territory and is doing a good work. I have several meeings and one debate yet."

V. E. Gregory writes: "Last Lord's day (August 21) was a happy day for the old Dunlap Church, at Duck River, in Hickman County, Tern. This church began its work more than a hundred years ago, I am told, and continued at peace among themselves until about six years ago, when they divided over the building of a new meetinghouse. One faction continued in the old house, the other went to the new, The two were in sight of each other. This, of course, was deplorable and sinful. I began a meeting in the old house the second Lord's day in this month, continuing over the next Lord's day. During this time I did an I could be next Lord's day. During this time I did an I could be suade them to drop their unkind feelings and differences and get together in Christ. This they did, I am glad to say. and last Lord's day they all met in the old house for the farewell service in this building, and in the future they will meet in the new one. There are some excellent Christians there; and now that they are together once more, I believe they will do a great work for the Lord. This church was formerly the home church of John D. Evans, of Denver, Col., and J. M. McCaleb, missionary to Japan. I cannot close this article without paying tribute to Sister Amanda Cathey, who formerly lived there, but who now lives in Dallas, Texas. She is almost fourscore years old, but, in spite of her years, she labored hard and successfully with me to bring about this reunion. May God bless her. There was one baptism."

- R. N. Moody will begin a meeting at Berea, in Cherokee, County, Ala., next Sunday.
- I. B. Bradley reports a meeting at Antioch, in Rutherford County. One was baptized.
- L. S. Thurmond closed a good meeting at Gooch Chapel, near Pocahontas, Tenn., with five additions.
- L. R. Wilson closed a good meeting at Pangburn, Ark., with twelve additions. He is engaged for another meeting next year.
- R. N. Gardner recently closed a meeting with the Croft College congregation, near Paragould, Ark., with twelve baptisms and four restorations.
- J. Clifford Murphy closed a good meeting at Findlay, near Sparta, Tenn., with one baptism. He is now at Grange Hall, near McMinnville, with good interest.

Balley Brooks reports a good meeting at Carthage, Tenn., with five baptisms. He also reports two additions in a meeting at Dixie. Brother Brooks will hereafter devote all his time to evangelistic work. Address him at Tracy City, Tenn.

The brethren near Paragould, Ark., have made arrangements to enlarge their school this year. All high-school and some collegiate studies will be included in the course of study. Tuition free, and board cheap. If interested, write R. N. Gardner, Nashville, Tenn., Route 7.

John T. Lewis, of Birmingham, Ala., will begin a meeting at Meade's Chapel, near Nashville, on the first Sunday in September. The church would be glad to have brethren of the city attend the meeting. Go out the Nolensville pike to Radnor Heights, then go three miles on Mill Creek pike.

Fred E. Exum and C. E. Barrick recently conducted a successful protracted meeting at East Tempe, near Livingston, Texas. There was good attendance and six additions to the church. Much credit for the success of the meeting is due to the good work of Sister Effic McClanahan, formerly of Nashville.

We believe all our readers will be more than pleased with the "Greater Vision" Number. Two more special numbers will appear this month. Remember, we will send the paper for the remainder of the year to trial subscribers for only fifty cents. Send their names in at once, that they may get the benefit of the special numbers.

From Leslie Vernon, Alamo, Tenn., August 27: "H. M. Phillips, of Tuscumbia, Ala., began a meeting with us on August 16 and continued it ten days. The results of this meeting cannot all be told, but, as a visible result, there were eighty-five additions. Of these, thirty-five were baptized, twenty-seven confessed their sins who were out of duty, and twenty-three placed their membership with us."

We have a very encouraging report of the Little Rock meeting, near Lyles, Tenn., which was conducted by T. B. Thompson, of Huntsville, Ala. The visible results of the meeting were fifty-five additions to the local congregation, including forty-three baptisms and twelve restorations. This was Brother Thompson's fifth meeting with this congregation. Large audiences and good attention were features of the meeting.

From C. E. Holt, Florence, Ala., August 23: "I have just closed a pleasant and, I trust, a profitable meeting with the I emalsamac church of Christ, in Dyer County, Tenn. This is the mother church of many churches in West Tennessee. In the meeting just closed quite a number were added to the membership of this grand old church. My home while there was with the grand old man, John E. McCorkle. The Lemalsamac community is one of the best I have ever visited."

From James E. Laird, Newark, Ark., August 22: "I closed a two-weeks' meeting at Enterprise, Ark., last Friday night. Fifteen were baptized, about thirty promised to meet, and plans were made to build a new meetinghouse. This was a mission meeting, partly supported by the Dodson Avenue Church, Fort Smith, Ark. R. L. Ludlam works with this church. I began a meeting at Mount Zion, near Newark, yesterday, and there has been one addition to date."

From F. S. Vance, Nocona, Texas, August 22: "I am now at home for a few days. I have done the preaching in five meetings this year in Oklahoma. I was called home when my last meeting was at its best. My meeting at Shadydale resulted in twenty-nine additions—three restorations and twenty-six baptisms. I will preach at home next Lord's day. On the first Sunday in September I shall begin a meeting at Montague, Texas. I have already baptized more people this year than in any year's work."

From J. G. Malphurs, Clarksville, Tenn.: "Last Lord's day I was at Legate, near Clarksville, with two additions from the Freewill Baptist Church. The Missionary Baptists have called in question my teaching, and it behooves me to 'contend earnestly for the faith;' hence, I will meet E. H. Greenwell in a three-days' discussion, beginning on September 19, at Legate. Apostasy, design of baptism, and close communion are the points to be discussed. Two sessions a day, beginning at ten o'clock. Bring dinner."

From E. L. Whitaker. Corinth, Miss., August 24: "I began a meeting at Minor Hill, Tenn., on August 14 and closed it on August 22, with thirty-five additions. Some were above seventy years of age. One had been a steward in the Methodist Church near forty years. I made my home with Brother and Sister George W. Warren, and it was a pleasant one indeed. On my return home I stopped at Pulaski and heard N. B. Hardeman deliver two fine discourses. I also met Brethren Clark and Murphy, of Pulaski. I am to begin a mission meeting near Wheeler, Miss., next Lord's day."

From Earnest C. Love, Fresno, Cal., August 22: "I have just returned from my lecturing tour in Southern California. There was great enthusiasm and interest in the Fresno Home and School shown everywhere, which is very encouraging. We still need about two hundred dollars to pay on the house. The Fresno Street congregation had two good services on August 21. I preached in the morning and L. D. Davis preached in the evening. We are expecting a good meeting on September 4, when we will furnish watermelons for everybody. On this day we are going to ask for a special donation for the Fresno Home and School, to fix up the house that has been moved in."

From Will J. Cullum, Rockwood, Tenn., August 27; "This leaves me at Rockwood, ready to begin a tent meeting here to-morrow. This will be the first time the loyal brethren have held a meeting in this town, which has a population of six thousand. I will be here about fifteen days; then to Hallsville, Mo., where I am to begin a meeting on the third Lord's day in September. Our two meetings in Mississippi resulted in twenty baptisms and nine restored. After returning from Missouri I will help the congregation at Reid Avenue, in Nashville, in a meeting, beginning on the second Lord's day in October. I am hoping to be able to devote my entire time to preaching the word in the future, and will, if the demand for my services will enable me to do so."

Fred W. Chunn writes from Springville, Tenn., August 30: "Our meeting at Mount Olive, in Calloway County, Ky., closed with thirteen additions. The results of this meeting show the power for good of well-attended Lord's-day services. Most of those who were baptized came from among the goodly throng who were accustomed to meet at church and study the Bible every first day of the week. After the Mount Olive meeting I conducted a two-weeks' meeting at Burris Chapel, in Lake County, Tenn. Here twelve members who had gone away from the church returned from their wanderings, confessed their sins, and determined again to do right. Three were baptized. I have held two meetings each for these two congregations and have promised to go back to each in 1922. I next go to Macedonia, in Weakley County, Tenn. After that meeting I will be permanently located at Henry, Tenn., in school work."

J. D. Tant writes from Guin, Ala., August 30: "I have just closed a meeting at this place, with two baptized. I found the Guin church different to any loyal church I have preached for this year in the following particulars: (1) They were ready for the meeting and did not have to go around and work it up after I got there. (2) The members all came, day and night. (3) They have a first-class Sunday school, and each member was called upon to give a verse from the Bible by memory each Sunday, giving chapter and verse. (4) They were reading from seven hundred to fourteen hundred chapters in the Bible every week. (5) The church had lived such a life before the town that even their religious neighbors respected them, and a leading Methodist went around and got all the twenty stores and banks to close for day services, which gave us an extra turn-out of the best citizens of the town each day. (6) As the church was at work, I did not have to do all the digging and pushing, as I generally do when I go among the anti-Sunday-school churches. Furthermore, they appreciate my gospel preaching and called me back for a meeting next year."

Decadent Country Churches.

BY JAMES E. CHESSOR.

"Wherefore, O king Agrippa, I was not disobedient unto the heavenly vision." (Paul.) The apostle could have been disobedient to this vision, or revelation of duty; but, instead, he immediately set about to perform his given task. The marvelous success that attended his unceasing labors is well known to Bible readers. As a matter of course, he could never have had any proper conception of his responsibility under God had he not received this revelation from on high. In like manner Christians must go to the Bible—God's revealed will—to learn what God has commanded of them, and, having learned the fullness of their duty, must have boldness to essay the appointed task.

Perhaps rural churches stand in need of a "greater vision" of their mission than ever before. I have in mind especially the thirty congregations in my home county, which are average country churches in Middle Tennessee. It seems to me that they, for the most part, have either lost sight of their responsibility as defined in God's word or are willfully remiss and disobedient. I have never before observed so many decadent churches in the rural districts as there are at present. The demoralizing effects of war, no doubt, had much to do with bringing about this waning religious interest and activity. Instead of signs of life and buoyancy, there is exhibited on every hand Laodicean apathy and indifference. Church attendance has dropped off perceptibly, and church buildings have been allowed to decay. Protracted meetings usually cause a flare-up of religious fervor that vanishes overweek. Now, these churches need to do something for Christ-to attempt some work, however small, in order to enlist zeal and inspire confidence within themselves. They can never regain momentum until they have overcome inertia. Lacking initiative and the courage to put forth studied effort, they are making, and repeating over and over, the irretrievable mistake of doing nothing. It is safe to say that they can never have a proper conception of their mission in the community and in the world so long as they recoil from the simplest tasks.

- 1. The country church needs a greater appreciation of the Sunday school as a means of edifying one another and teaching the young. There are comparatively few congregations that have well-organized Bible classes, and in many places the work has been abandoned. The eldership is weak, and there are few capable teachers. Instead of teaching and developing the youth of the community, they are allowed to just grow up, Topsylike, with very little religious training and ignorant of the simple facts and truths of the Bible. I can think of no more tragic mistake than this. Young men who, with proper encouragement and guidance, might develop into teachers and preachers, lose interest because never put to work by the elders. There is no midweek prayer meeting and rarely any service on Sunday nights. The great misfortune is that these country congregations have not realized that God has said to them: "Ye ought to be teachers." (Heb. 5: 12.0
 - 2. The rural church has not a scriptural conception of missions. The missionary spirit is utterly lacking in most places. Foreign missions are rarely mentioned, even by ministers. Brother J. M. McCaleb made a tour of my county, which is also his native county, a few years ago, and had something to say about Japan as a mission field; but it evoked no missionary enthusiasm. The idea of "sounding out the word" seems to be to support monthly preaching and the annual protracted meeting. The benighted may "come to the little brown church in the wildwood" to hear the gospel preached. But country congregations have a wonderful opportunity for propagating the religion of Christ right in their vicinity. There is an open door at practically every cross-roads schoolhouse throughout the country. Why not have the gospel preached at these vantage points? Let these rural churches thus work the home field and dot the hills and valleys with new congregations. By and by the larger heart for the larger service will lead them into greater undertakings for the Master. Ultimately they may come to realize that "the field is the world."

3. The country church has no adequate conception of charities. Few congregations make ample provision for the relief of the needy and the suffering. It does not reflect credit upon the local church when the authorities must be appealed to in order to help some indigent, but worthy, person in the community. The church, and not private or county beneficence, should do the alms of the district. But it is not always the case. I know a widow residing in the shadow of a church of Christ who pleaded in tears not to be sent to the county farm; but it was the generosity of individuals, some of them not Christians, and not the gift of the church, that provided her a cottage and a pittance of bread. It is a shame upon an institution calling itself "of Christ" in any community that allows worthy unfortunates to be carted off to the county "poorhouse." The trouble lies at the door of an illiberal, noncontributing membership. They have not been thoroughly taught to contribute liberally and have never accustomed themselves to give as they have been prospered. Hence, few churches maintain a treasury sufficient to support a regular charity or meet an emergency. The local church cannot, therefore, play the part of a good Samaritan, because it cannot relieve sudden and unexpected misfortune and calamity. This is why lodges spring up everywhere. The best way to combat the lodge is for the local church to care for the neighborhood poor. "The poor ye have with you always."

That the country church has other faults, I do not doubt, but those specified above in a general way cover the ground. I love the country and the country church, and what I have written I have written in love of that church, that she may be sensible of her mission in the community and in the world. The great need in the rural districts is for laborers. Here, indeed, there is a dearth of preachers—that is to say, preachers of heart, consecration, vision, aptitude.

Let the country church and the country preacher, let one and all, go to the Bible to get a proper conception of duty, and then may there be no disobedience to this "heavenly vision."

Confidence in the Pilot's Smile.

Robert Louis Stevenson has somewhere told of an experience that happened once to his grandfather. He was on a vessel that was caught by a terrific storm and was carried irresistibly toward a rocky shore where complete destruction was imminent. When the storm and danger were at the height, he crept up on deck to look around and face the worst. He saw the pilot lashed to the wheel, with all his might and nerve holding the vessel off the rocks and steering it inch by inch into safer water. While he stood watching, the pilot looked up at him and smiled. It was little enough, but it completely reassured him. He went back to his room below with new confidence, saying to himself: "We shall come through; I saw the pilot smile!" If we could only in some way catch sight of a smile on the face of the great Pilot in this strange rough sea in which we are satting, we, too, could do our work and carry our burdens with confidence, perhaps with joy.-Selected.

The worries of yesterday are already past;
And God did take care of you!
The worries of this day cannot last,
For God takes care of you!
The worries of to-morrow—new not so fast;
For God will take care of you.

A Correct Vision of the Church.

BY J. C. M'Q.

This is an age of schemes, societies, and endeavor organizations. It is not the purpose of this article to belittle the good that these different societies do, but to show that the good should be done in the church. It is intended to discourage every effort that tends to disparage or minimize the church of God. Any human institution or organization that does this dishonors Christ, the Leader of the church.

The church in its most comprehensive sense includes all believers of whatever age, sex, race, nationality, or color. Christ is the Head of the church in this broad sense. It has no organization and no offices, save that Jesus Christ is its Leader. Its union is like that of the vine and the branches. The bond of union is faith in Jesus Christ. Whoever does the will of God as laid down in the Scriptures is a member of the church in this comprehensive sense. There is another sense in which the word "church" is used in the New Testament. I speak of the local church, which is much more limited than the church universal. In the New Testament we read, "The churches of Christ salute you;" we read also of "all the churches of the Gentiles," " all the churches of the saints," and "the churches of God which are in Judea." This local association of disciples, with elders to oversee and serve, is the only church organization-if I may use that word-in the New Testament. Neither were these local churches associated together in any organic sense. They were entirely independent of each other, save that the members of all of them were spiritually under one Head, the Lord Jesus Christ, united by the bonds of common faith, hope, and love. The various societies and ecclesiasticisms of the present time are all younger than the church of Christ. No one who is a member of the church of Christ in its broad sense and is also a member of the church of Christ in its local sense should belong to any other religious organization for the purpose of serving God. There is no good work which one can do in the service of Christ that he cannot do in the church of Christ. Not a sigh can be heaved, not a prayer can be offered, not a good deed can be done, not a kind word can be spoken, not a cup of cold water can be given to a disciple that it cannot be done in the church and in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. It is sometimes argued that these institutions or aids are stepping-stones to the church. It would be better to stay in the church to worship God rather than to get outside on a stepping-stone. As Noah did not need aids or little lifeboats in order to make the ark a success, so we do not need aids in order to do the work that God has ordained that we should do through the church. We are admonished by the Hely Spirit; "And whatsoever ye do, in word or in deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God the Father through him," (Col. 3: 17.) We should be careful in all of our religious work and in all acts of service rendered to God to give glory to Christ through the church: "Unto him be the glory in the church and in Christ Jesus unto all generations forever and ever." (Eph. 3; 21.)

People in their mad craze to form human societies for doing the work which God has ordained the church to do should be careful lest they reflect on the wisdom and power of God. The formation of societies for doing the work that God has ordained his church to do belittles the atonement of the Lord Jesus Christ, belittles the work of the church, and reflects on the wisdom of God in unmistakable terms. If such societies had been essential to the efficient work of the church, God would have ordained them for such purposes; but as the Bible does not furnish us one syllable of information concerning such societies, we are led to believe that the church is effective and complete in itself and that the man of God who has faith in Christ and works through it is thoroughly furnished unto every good work. "Every scripture inspired of God is also profitable for teaching, for reproof, for correction, for instruction which is in righteonsness: that the man of God may be complete, furnished completely unto every good work." (2 Tim. 3: 16, 17.) Turning to human organizations to do the work of the church is a reflection on the efficacy of the blood of Christ, Christ certainly would not have died to establish his church, if that church was to be a failure and not to be sufficiently complete and efficient to save all the obedient for all time after its establishment. Christ spoke the truth when he said to Peter: "And I also say unto thee, that thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of Hades shall not prevail against it." (Matt. 16: 18.) The church is sufficient for the redemption of all men, provided they will only accept the authority of the Lord Jesus Christ and bow in meek, humble submission to it. Followers of the Lord Jesus Christ should never belittle the work of the church and its mission in the world by intimating that human organizations do more good in the world than the church. The man who does this reflects on his own Christianity and the wisdom of God. No humble, devout believer in the Lord Jesus Christ, who acknowledges Christ as supreme, will ever make any such insinuations. Of course the church cannot work itself without humble, faithful subjects; but if Christians will be careful to do nothing which is out of harmony with the word of Christ, if they will work as he directs and follow in his steps, they will find that the church is complete and effective for the salvation of the world. Instead of seeking to glorify ourselves and human organizations, let us give God the glory through the church and cling to him by working through the only divine organization that we have for the salvation of a lost and ruined race. How great and how wonderful will be the work accomplished, if we will only cling to the Christ and work through him, giving the glory to our Heavenly Father!

No Greater Vision Than That Already Given.

The phase of the above subject which I have chosen is that we—the human race—the wise and unwise—do not need and cannot have any "greater vision of God, Ohrist, the Bible, and our duty to humanity" than God has already given in his word. If we will not follow this, we grope in darkness and will be lost.

Any "vision" not from the Bible is no "vision of God." at all, but is some distorted, blurred, blinding "vision" of human wisdom, which seeks to depreciate God, to lessen his boundless attributes, and to destroy his will.

Our readers do not need to be taught that God's will has long since been revealed in its fullness and completeness and that it thoroughly furnishes the man of God unto every good work. "All things that pertain unto life and godliness" have been given already, and given, too, through the knowledge of God and Christ. (2 Pet. 1: 2, 3.) We are commanded "to contend earnestly for the faith which was once for all delivered unto the saints." (Jude 3.) There can be no "vision" beyond this knowledge and this faith. No man on earth, no angel from heaven, can preach any other gospel than that which has been preached through the apostles by the Holy Spirit sent down from heaven (1 Pet. 1: 12), and he who attempts to do so must suffer the anathemas of God (Gal 1: 8, 9). From the beginning to the end of the Bible, God pronounces his curse upon the man who would add to or take from or change in any way his revealed will. (See Deut. 4: 2; 12: 32; Rev. 22: 18, 19.)

No one can know God or know one word of the will of God outside of the Bible. The Bible places God before the world in his unbounded wisdom, unlimited power, and all other unfathomable attributes. He is light; he is love; he is righteous and gracious, just and merciful, good and severe. (See Ex. 34: 6, 7; Rom. 11: 22.) He is the Creator and Ruler of all things; he upholds all things by the word of his power, and is King of the universe. Heaven is his throne and the earth is his footstool. The angels are his ministers, and all the inhabitants of the earth with their rulers are his servants, and are not "a drop of a bucket" compared to him. He rules in the kingdom of men and gives it to whom he will; he sets up kings and deposes kings. He is "the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob;" "the God of our fathers;" "our Father who art in heaven;" "the God and Father of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ; the "I am that I am;" "Jehovah God;" the only true and living God. "Jehovah is his memorial name forever." From everlasting to everlasting he is God, the same yesterday, to-day, and forever; and eternity is his habitation.

On the other hand, to have a "vision" of any god except the God of the Bible is to create a god to suit one's wisdom and taste. Since Cain killed Abel human wisdom has been in the god-creating business. It has gods many and lords many. There is "the god of this world" that "hath blinded the minds of the unbelieving, that the light of the gospel of the glory of Christ, who is the image of God, should not dawn upon them." (2 Cor. 4: 1-5.) Some make a god of the belly, glory in shame, mind earthly things, and walk as "the enemies of the cross of Christ." (Phil. 3: 18, 19.) Some such gentlemen "with their fair and smooth speech" beguile "the hearts of the innocent" and become occasions of stumbling and cause divisions contrary to the teaching of Christ, serving "not our Lord Christ, but their own belly." (Rom. 16: 17, 18.) To serve one's belly, or to make a "god of the belly," is to follow the appetites, to be governed by the ambitions and passions and lusts of the flesh, to "worship and serve the creature rather than the Creator" (Rom. 1: 24-32), to make merchandise of the gospel, to turn Christianity into a cloak of covetousness, and to use the church of God to serve temperal and personal and selfish ends. Some make a god of money; covetousness is idolatry (Col. 3: 5), a covetous person is an idolater (Eph. 5: 15), and no man can serve God and mammon.

These passages and many similar ones show the great difference between "the vision" human wisdom and the passions of the flesh give of some god, a god, any god, the god of this world, gods many, and "the vision" the Bible gives of the only true and living God.

"Greater" introduces a comparison. A "greater vision" of God than what? Certainly not greater than God's revelation of himself and of his will in the Bible. That has been full and complete and unchangeable since the Bible was made. Yet there is an implication here and a danger. There must be no reading between the lines and no going beyond that which is written. (1 Cor. 4: 6.) Individuals may learn from the study of the Bible a thousand times more than they already know of God and his will, but they can never know more of either than has been revealed in the Bible. To know God is to obey him; not to obey him is not to know him. He who claims to know him while in disobedience to him is a liar.

And hereby we know that we know him, if we keep his commandments. He that saith, I know him, and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him; but whose keepeth his word, in him verily hath the love of God been perfected. Hereby we know that we are in him: he that saith he abideth in him ought himself also to walk even as he walked. (1 John 2: 3-6.)

As there arose another Pharaoh who knew not Joseph, so there has arisen a generation that seem not to know the God of the Bible. In his timely article in this paper of August 11, Brother F. W. Smith says:

The great carnal, unholy, and ungodly world war just ended is naught in comparison with the onslaughts that are being made in universities, colleges, schools, pulpits, and so-called "religious press" all over the land against the Bible. Let Christian parents look well to the institutions to which they send their boys and girls. Drill the words of God into them from the cradic.

All that Brother Smith says against the infidelity in schools, colleges, universities, and pulpits is worthy of our thoughtful consideration. Shall such teaching be continued?

No thoughtful Christian man can have aught to say against the college and university degrees and the very highest education, when that education is the right sort; yet, while this is true, the faithful practice of the Bible in all relationships of life is the very best and highest and greatest education one can have. There is a clamor in the rising generation of preachers for university degrees, which is not a good sign. The power is in the word of God. The gospel of Christ is the power of God forever to save all who believe it. Let preachers have all the education they can take; but, after all and with a long string of degrees, let them determine not to know anything save Jesus Christ, and him crucified (1 Cor. 2: 2), and to preach, not themselves, their learning and wisdom and exploits, but Christ Jesus as Lord, and themselves bond servants for Christ's sake (2 Cor. 4: 5).

The so-called higher education to-day of both men and women can never give "a greater vision of God, Christ, the Bible, and our duty to humanity" than the Bible gives: such is impossible, because water can never rise higher than its source and nothing can give that which it possesses not. Such education, as Brother Smith clearly shows, beclouds, obscures, and even destroys the teaching of the Bible. And all preachers who depend upon their education and learning, and not upon the word of God, do the same. There is an Lonest and earnest cry from the churches and people generally for the plain, simple and all-powerful gospel of God—the plain teaching of the Bible.

Schools built up as "Bible schools" by contributions of Christian men generally must not drift away from their original purpose after some "greater vision." God forbid.

A middle-aged, thoughtful Christian man and preacher of the gospel wrote me a few days ago from Washington City, D. C., as follows:

It occurs to me that in your article which appeared in the Gespel Advocate of August 4 your mention of preachers being subordinate to the elders or leaders of congregations was very timely. Perhaps if you would call attention to it again, it might provoke elders to feel more keenly the honorable and responsible position they occupy; also cause preachers to regard them as Heaven's appointed ones to direct by the word of God the work and worship of the church. It seems to me there is a growing tendency in congregations to have elders in name, but not in practice and authority, and such authority only as the New Testament gives. Let us hear from you again on the subject.

Was there ever so much of strife and contention, bitterness and bad feelings, factions and divisions, contrary to the "vision" God has already given of unity and peace, of being of one mind, one accord, one heart, one soul, and of speaking the same thing, as at present? Many elders do not seem to know the teaching of the Bible in regard to their work, to feel their responsibility, and do not endeaver to discharge their duties. Some young "ministers" are inclined to ignore the teaching of the Bible in regard to elders and their duties. They have received from some source a "greater vision" than that of the New Testament. This is human nature, but not "the divine nature," and leads to denominationalism and finally to ecclesiasticisms. Let us pray with the Psalmist: "Open thou mine eyes, that I may behold wondrous things out of thy law." (Ps. 119: 18.)

The greatest thing that people can do is to study the Bible from beginning to end, to believe it, and to implicitly obey it.

The only true "vision" we can have of Christ is that which the Bible gives; it gives wonderful and glorious "visions" of him. When we see Christ as the Bible presents him to the world, we know all that can be known of him. Our greatest need is to believe in him and to faithfully follow him. Our greatest duty to the world is to present to it the God of the Bible, Jesus of Nazareth, the Christ, the Son of God, the Prince of peace, the King of glory, and the Bible as God's complete and fully revealed will. Nothing can be known of the will of God outside of the Bible.

The same is true with reference to "our duties to humanity." All duties to God and men are fully set forth in the Bible. To love brethren with pure hearts fervently, to love neighbors as oneself, to love and pray for enemies, covers all duties to humanity. To love God is to obey him, and to love humanity is to treat all classes of human beings as the Bible directs. The Bible covers every duty in every relationship of life. We can have nothing more.

My Creed.

My creed is work; to follow duty's call However far it leads across the plains— Through trackless woods or ringing on the hills; To seek for pleasure in the realms of toil— Still ever striving for a larger self With which to do a service for the rest.

Man's Vision of the Things of God.

BY M. C. K.

A vision, as the word itself denotes, is something seen. Under divine inspiration, the prophets of God were enabled to see events rising one after another and transpiring, as it were, before their eyes. It was called "the vision which they saw." Thus, "the vision of Isaiah the son of Amoz, which he saw concerning Judah and Jernsalem," was the succession of events passing as a panorama before his eyes during the royal reigns of "Uzziah, Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah, kings of Judah." (Isa. 1: 1.)

The vision of uninspired man is liable to be clouded and mystified, not only by the bewildering and mystifying influences of sin in general, but especially by the tendency to inject his own thoughts, feelings, and preferences into the picture. In fact, even God's inspired prophets sometimes erred in yielding to this tendency and failing to stick exclusively to the message of God. Concerning such prophets, Jehovah said unto Jeremiah: "The prophets prophesy lies in my name; I sent them not, neither have I commanded them, neither spake I unto them: they prophesy unto you a lying vision, and divination, and a thing of naught, and the deceit of their own heart." (Jer. 14: 14.) Again; "Hearken not unto the words of the prophets that prophesy unto you: they teach you vanity; they speak a vision of their own heart, and not out of the mouth of Jehovah." (Jer. 23: 16.) This fearful arraignment of the prophets who dared to depart from the message of Jehovah is still further emphasized through the prophet Ezekiel: "Have ye not seen a false vision, and have ye not spoken a lying divination, in that ye say, Jehovah saith; albeit I have not spoken?" (Ezek. 13: 7.)
